Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I insist on being given the privilege of establishing that my motion is in order. That privilege was granted in the past to hon. members who presented similar motions, and I maintain that I should be given the same privilege.

I presented my motion and I was saying that since 1962 two motions for the adjournment of the house—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to the hon. member that he move his motion if he cares to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I proposed my motion. In fact, I have even sent you a copy and I am now trying to prove that my motion is in order today.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not wish to cut the hon. member short, but I do not think there is any particular difficulty in dealing with this matter. Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 100, paragraph 3 reads as follows:

> "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

On Monday of this week we had a supply motion and the opportunity was presented, I believe, to debate the matter at that time. That opportunity was not availed of, and at this time in view of the several departments up for discussion I do not see any particular urgency of debate. In my opinion the matter is not one coming under standing order 26.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is true that we could have debated this matter on Monday, at the time the supply motion was brought forward, but at that time we had brought forward, but either from the Prime Minister, or from the C.B.C. Now, I am of the opinion that there is as much urgency today as there was on Monday, but we do not have today the opportunity to consider that corporation's estimates which would enable us to discuss this matter of public and urgent importance for the whole house.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I know the matter is important, but it is more in the nature of a grievance than a matter requiring immediate discussion. In my opinion urgency sufficient for the proceedings of the house to be set aside so that the matter be discussed immediately does not exist at this time. An opportunity to debate it will be provided very shortly; therefore I do not see any occasion to set aside the ordinary proceedings of the house.

Orders of the day. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, in that case, could I—

[Text]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of order. You had already called orders of the day when the motion was made; therefore, to begin with, the motion was out of order. You called on me twice, and I hope now I will be allowed to ask my question.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, before the house met I sent you a notice to the effect that I intended to raise this matter today; now, here is my question of privilege.

After studying what happened in the past and more particularly, with reference to a precedent established when the leader of the official opposition or any other hon. member introduced a motion to adjourn the business of the house, I noticed that the Speaker always allowed the mover to put forward his argument to show that his motion was important and urgent.

Today you say that the matter is not urgent without even giving us an opportunity to put forward our arguments to demonstrate that the matter is urgent.

That is why I say your decision flies in the face of our privileges in not giving us an opportunity to put forward the proof that the matter is important and urgent.

Besides, I should like to refer to Beauchesne's—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Far from preventing the hon. member from making a statement, I think the Chair has been rather lenient. The decision still stands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

BROADCASTING

REAPPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF BOARD—POLICY RESPECTING MULTIPLE STATION OWNERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State possibly I should direct this question to the Prime Minister. In view of the completion by Dr. Andrew Stewart in the near future of his first term as chairman of the board of broadcast governors, has the government received any indication from Dr. Stewart regarding the question of reappointment; and has any matter been raised with him that there has been interference by the government in connection with the processing of applications for licences or transfers of licences?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. Some time ago I received a communication from Dr. Stewart in which he indicated that he did not intend to continue as chairman of the board of broadcast governors. It was a personal communication, but I would be very glad to inquire of Dr. Stewart to see whether it could be tabled, or a similar communication which would give an indication why he does not wish to continue for purely personal reasons.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I ask, as a supplementary question, has the government come to any policy decision, and particularly has it forwarded a recommendation to the B.B.G. that multiple station ownership of Canadian broadcasting stations is something to be encouraged? I ask this question because it may fit in with the question raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), and also because of the decision by the B.B.G. to give Mr. Stirling one more station for his multiple ownership?

Mr. Pearson: I shall be glad to look into that, but I think I can say there is no relation between the two questions.

[Later:]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question. In view of the fact that the Fowler committee is not holding public hearings, and in view of questions which have arisen both with regard to the decision of Dr. Stewart not to serve again as chairman of the board of governors and the apparent emergence of a privately owned radio network, would the Prime Minister consider setting up the House of Commons committee on broadcasting so these surprising developments might be investigated?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that I will be glad to give consideration to that question in the light of the observations made by my hon. friend.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LA MACAZA, QUE.—TREATMENT OF PEACE DEMONSTRATORS BY R.C.A.F. POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has yet reached any decision regarding an independent investigation into the disturbance which took place at La Macaza, Quebec, in connection with a peace demonstration held there some two weeks ago?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have consulted with the Minister of National Defence, who has been in touch with those concerned. An investigation is being made, and the minister will be in a position to make a statement in a day or two.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. Can I ask the Prime Minister whether any interviews are being held with those who have made complaints to the press that they were ill treated during this disturbance? It seems to me that a further investigation by the officials of the Department of National Defence hardly meets the situation. I would have hoped from the minister's reply more than a week ago that an independent inquiry would be made as to whether a full investigation should be conducted.

Mr. Pearson: An inquiry is being made by the minister, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the minister's report on the matter will deal with the points raised by my hon. friend.

NATO—NON-PARTICIPATION BY CANADA IN NAVAL EXERCISE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is Canada fulfilling her obligation to NATO by failing to participate in the NATO naval exercises that are now under way?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): My hon. friend knows that Canada is a country that has fulfilled its obligations to NATO.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a supplementary question. Has Canada some commitment to the United States that takes prior claim over her obligation to NATO?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As a former minister of national defence my hon. friend knows the answer to that is clearly no.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the Minister of National Defence, what is the nature of the naval exercises now being carried on by Canada in conjunction with the United States?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): They are naval exercises for the purpose of improving the co-operation which exists between our two countries, which has worked so well in the past and will work even better in the future.

Mr. Churchill: Why are we not joining in the NATO exercises?

COLD LAKE, ALTA.—CONTRACT FOR AIRPORT HEATING SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister tell us whether the department is about to make changes in the heating system at Cold Lake airport and, if so, if this work is being put out for tender?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Nugent: There is considerable apprehension in Edmonton labour circles that the department is negotiating this, and I think it would relieve public—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona was asking a question that we think is very important, which affects the same city I come from. Communications I have received from Edmonton indicate that a $2 million contract will be awarded in the next day or so to a contractor in the Cold Lake area, and that contractors in the city of Edmonton have not been given an opportunity to bid for this work. Surely we can expect an answer to a question as important as that on orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: I must say that I did not quite appreciate the urgency, and the matter of two days makes it reasonably urgent. Perhaps if the minister has the answer he could give it.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to see the Minister of National Defence has this drawn to his attention.

Mr. Nugent: If I might be allowed, when I was speaking and trying to explain the question, Your Honour started to say this was a question for the order paper; and while I was trying to explain the urgency Your Honour recognized someone else. I sat here for half an hour trying to get the floor while Your Honour recognized member after member further down the chamber. While I do not want to make an issue of this, it does seem to me that when it takes so long to get the floor Your Honour should give us some kind of recognition when we have a point.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the acting minister of foreign affairs in Cyprus announced today that within four or five days Russia will be signing an agreement whereby arms and military equipment will be given to Cyprus; and in view of the fact that we continually hear reports of meetings held by the United Nations but of no decision so far as the situation in Cyprus is concerned, cannot the minister give us some information as to what is actually taking place?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the relationship between the solution of the problem in Cyprus and the current meetings in the United Nations must be clearly understood. The proposal for a solution is one which rests with the mediator and is altogether independent of the discussions which are taking place in the security council. It is expected that the security council will reach a decision today regarding the renewal of the mandate, which has been the subject matter of discussion in the security council for three or four days now. The announcement regarding the purchase of arms from the Soviet union is something I would first like to examine before making any comment.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question. Could I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, in the process of renewing the mandate, Canada has made any representations to the secretary general of the United Nations asking for some commitment by all members of the United Nations not to sell arms to the government of Cyprus during this very troubled period, in order that the United Nations force may carry out its responsibilities with a minimum of friction?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We certainly have made representations along these lines, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us whether the Canadian government is now satisfied that the United Nations force in Cyprus does have genuine freedom of movement? I ask this as a supplementary question in view of the fact that the Cypriot government has apparently alleged that this problem has been solved. Is the minister satisfied that there is freedom of movement?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, sir.

[Later:]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which is related to questions asked earlier today concerning Cyprus. In view of a report from the United Nations in today's Montreal Gazette that the United Nations has given no indication that it in any way agrees with the statement of the government of Cyprus that the problem of the freedom of movement of United Nations troops has now been settled, does the Canadian government take a different view of the matter from that of the secretary general? As I understood the minister a few moments ago, he said the Canadian government was quite satisfied that the United Nations force had complete freedom of movement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have no reason to change my answer. I think my hon. friend has perhaps confused it with the statement made by the secretary general in the current debate on his report.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Has the Prime Minister been asked by the Canadian junior chamber of commerce to intervene in order to prevent la Fédération des jeunes chambres du Canada from being recognized on an international level?

If so, what was the Prime Minister's reaction?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I received no such request to intervene in this matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CONFERENCE TO ESTABLISH ECONOMIC PRIORITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I direct this question to the Prime Minister in his capacity of reporting to parliament on federal-provincial affairs. In view of the statement of the Minister of Forestry to the economic association of Montreal on Tuesday last, in which he said that the ten provincial governments, together with the federal government, must now establish goals and economic priorities, is it the intention of the government to press for a conference with the provinces as soon as possible in order to establish economic priorities and priorities in the field of social action?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already dealt with this matter in the reply which I made to the communication from the premier of Manitoba. I would add that in the conference which is to take place in a few weeks we will be discussing the establishment of a tax structure committee, and that will have a bearing on priorities.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How does the right hon. Prime Minister reconcile that with the concrete suggestion of the Minister of Forestry that it is immediately imperative that economic priorities be established with the provinces as soon as possible?

Mr. Pearson: I will be very glad to read the speech of my hon. friend, Mr. Speaker. It has not been brought to my attention up to the present time.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Can he tell us whether his colleague for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) finally convinced Hon. René Lévesque, of the Quebec government, of the merits of co-operative federalism?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that in a few days the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska will have won over every right-minded citizen to the cause of co-operative federalism.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Is the Minister of Justice suggesting that if the Quebec minister of natural resources is not convinced, he becomes, by the same token, a citizen who is not right-minded?

Mr. Favreau: It is not up to me to explain statements in public.

[Text]

ANNEXATION BY BRITISH COLUMBIA OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Have there been any communications whatever between a member of the government of British Columbia and any member of the government of Canada, or any officials of any department or branches of those respective governments, with respect to Premier Bennett's proposal for the annexation of the Yukon and part of the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I doubt it very much, but because I esteem my hon. friend so highly I shall make the inquiries he seeks.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I ask a supplementary question. When the minister inquires, I wonder if he would convey to Premier Bennett the suggestion that was made by the then sitting Liberal member, Mr. Simmons, that the Yukon extend her southern boundary to the 54th degree of latitude in the province of British Columbia.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CERTAIN GROUPS NOT INCLUDED IN PAY INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. In view of the fact that the pay increases for members of the staff of the House of Commons announced last week were said to be related to pay increases in the civil service, can the President of the Privy Council tell us why certain sections of the staff, notably the protective staff, the messengers and the tradesmen have not yet had any increases?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The reason is that the groups to which the hon. member has referred would be related to what is known as group D, under the cyclical pay review plan, which is a pay group of the civil service. They would presumably receive any increase in salary at the time the group D cyclical review was decided upon and made applicable to the civil service at large.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, can the minister say when that will be, and to what date any such increases will be retroactive?

Mr. McIlraith: It is very difficult at this stage to give a date when the determination will be made, but I would think that in the normal course it should be late this coming winter or early next spring. The group D pay changes are effective as of October 1, 1964; but I should add that some of the related groups in the House of Commons staff may have different effective pay adjustment dates. Therefore that pay date should not be taken as applicable to all the groups in the House of Commons; it should only be taken as the applicable date for the civil service.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the President of the Privy Council mind informing the house why on some occasions when he is asked questions about salary increases for the House of Commons staff he answers them, and on other occasions he indicates that it is not his responsibility to answer?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to do that. I can do so by reading to the hon. member citation 184 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads this way:

> Standing order 39 does not allow questions addressed to the Speaker. If however members write to the Speaker and inquire about matters placed under his control, he is bound to give the information required.

Bearing in mind that rule, I have tried not to abuse it; but the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was able, in framing his question, to sufficiently relate it to the cyclical pay reviews of the civil service, which is a matter of my responsibility as a minister, to put his question in order, and I therefore answered his question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: But these people will have to live a long while to get their increases.

QUEBEC ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING MEMBER FOR NOTRE DAME DE GRÂCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

Has the Prime Minister read the report of the royal commission set up by the provincial government in which the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grâce (Mr. Asselin) is accused of having realized an illegal and unreasonable profit out of a transaction with the Protestant school board of the city of Montreal?

Does the Prime Minister intend to carry out the recommendations contained in this report?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is out of order. It was ruled upon by the Chair I believe at least a month ago.

CONSIDERATION OF SHORT ADJOURNMENT DURING ROYAL VISIT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Prime Minister is in a position to give an answer, but in view of the fact that the Queen's visit will begin very shortly and naturally he and other hon. members of the house would be desirous of participating in welcoming the Queen in Prince Edward Island, in Quebec and also in Ottawa, has the government given any consideration to a few days of non-session by this house; or is it his purpose to continue the session right through?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, so far as welcoming the Queen is concerned, the fact that the house is in session will give more members an opportunity to meet and welcome the Queen than if the house were not in session. So far as a recess is concerned, I think we will have to wait and see what progress we make on the measures now before the house.

AGRICULTURE

APPLICATION OF P.F.A.A. TO WESTERN CROPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Not having received an answer from the minister to a series of questions I have put to him over the past few months with respect to the emergency application of the benefits of the P.F.A.A. to western farmers, can the minister now say, in view of the large scale damage to western crops due to frost and continuing rain, what is the government's policy with respect to the special application of this act similar to that taken by the former government in 1961?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, these things are all under consideration at the moment, and as soon as we have something definite we shall be glad to announce it.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF EASTERN FEED GRAIN AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. On September 22 I had a question for the Minister of Agriculture which I directed to the Prime Minister, who told me he would refer it to the Minister of Agriculture. So today I am directing to the Minister of Agriculture a question which I asked a year ago. My question concerns a feed grain agency for eastern Canada. At what stage are negotiations, and is it the intention of the government to go through with this as soon as possible this fall?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, eastern feed grains now come under the responsibility of the Minister of Forestry.

Mr. Langlois: I have a supplementary question. I hope when forestry comes under the minister's responsibility he will let us know about that.

REPORT OF EASTERN CANADA FARM SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture following a statement made by the minister of agriculture of the province of Quebec to a group of supporters last week, when he said that he was expecting a report from the federal government on the situation of agriculture in eastern Canada.

Could the Minister of Agriculture tell us whether the federal government intends to publish this report in the near future?

[Mr. Southam.]

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would mind repeating his question. I did not get it.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: My question arises out of the statement made by the Quebec minister of agriculture who said to a group of supporters that he was waiting for a report from the federal government on the situation of agriculture in eastern Canada before taking steps about agriculture.

Could the Minister of Agriculture tell us if such a report will soon be made public by the federal government?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, there are many programs in the Department of Agriculture involving forestry and redevelopment which we are discussing with all provinces. I suppose this is what the hon. member has reference to. When anything specific arises out of these discussions it will certainly be announced in the house at the appropriate time.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does that mean that the federal government will not make any specific report to the province of Quebec about eastern agriculture? I am thinking in particular about the kind of report the Quebec minister of agriculture mentioned over the week end at the congress of the Quebec Liberal federation.

[Text]

Mr. Hays: I would suppose that we were discussing problems with Quebec at the moment, in so far as ARDA programs are concerned. We are in consultation with them on some new legislation we are proposing, and if this is what the hon. member is referring to, this will be announced at the proper time.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): May I ask a supplementary question. In the light of the d.b.s. statistics which show that farm income for the first six months of the year has gone up in comparison with last year, would the minister inform the house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: —would the minister inform the house whether dairy farmers in general, and Quebec farmers in particular, have shared in this increase in revenue?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that, important as this question is, it requires a long and detailed answer and is not the type of question that should be asked on orders of the day.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think this question has been before this house quite a few times. We know the Minister of Agriculture is a busy man, and we have very few opportunities of asking this question. The Quebec government is waiting for a decision by the federal government, and we are trying to get it out of the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Forestry. If an answer can be given it would certainly be nice to have since we have been waiting for it for several years.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture a supplementary question dealing with the Canadian farmers' income which, according to the September 23 bulletin of the dominion bureau of statistics, shows a 13 per cent increase, which is a satisfaction for our friends opposite.

If the farmers' income shows an increase of 13 per cent for Canada as a whole, could the Minister of Agriculture tell us why the income of the Ontario and Quebec farmers has decreased by $46 million?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: This is not quite correct, Mr. Speaker. I suppose the hon. member got these figures from the d.b.s. report. I also read those particular figures. If I may, I should like to refer the hon. member back to page 3 of the d.b.s. report, which indicates that the income figures from dairying for 1963 cannot be compared with those in 1964.

What has happened is that the production data used for the 1964 income figures have been adjusted downward on the basis of the last census, but these downward adjustments have not been made for the figures for 1963 and preceding years. The d.b.s. had planned to show the adjustments for earlier years only in the year end statements of farm income.

The comparable figures for the two years, adjusting the 1963 production to the 1961 census as has been done for the 1964 data, are as follows; Quebec, 1964, $74.6 million; 1963, $72.6 million. The Ontario figures are, 1964, $100.4 million and 1963, $93.4 million. Possibly the largest reason for the increased income is the increased price of milk. As you know, Quebec has sold most of its cheese to Great Britain at prices in the neighbourhood of 37 cents a pound, which is 2 cents a pound more than Ontario cheese sold for in Great Britain.

Mr. Grafftey: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister still feel, in the light of those figures, that the dairy farmer is better off today than he has ever been for the last 15 years, a statement he made in this house a short time ago?

Mr. Hays: If the figures mean anything I would have to say yes, although we are not happy with the position and we intend to make it even better.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): May I ask a supplementary question. What would be the minister's explanation for the reduction in revenue of Quebec farmers in the amount of $9 million for the first six months?

Mr. Hays: I just might explain these d.b.s. figures, Mr. Speaker, but it will take some time. I shall be glad to do so, however.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Once more I must say this is the type of question which should be put on the order paper and not be asked at this time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR MEN TO BE LAID OFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Can the minister advise on the success of his department's efforts to find alternative employment for the workers of the Enamel and Heating Company plant at Charlottetown, whose work on defence production has now been terminated?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, in spite of our best efforts we have not been successful in finding alternative work for the Enamel and Heating Company workers at Charlottetown, or work in addition to that which they are now doing.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED REFUSAL OF ANNOUNCERS TO COVER ROYAL VISIT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Paul (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Secretary of State but as he is not here I will put it to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he ask the C.B.C. to have an investigation carried out regarding certain C.B.C. announcers who allegedly intend to refuse to cover the forthcoming visit of Her Majesty to Canada, and, when the investigation has been completed, have the results reported to the house?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be very glad to convey my hon. friend's question to the C.B.C., Mr. Speaker.

CONSULTATIONS WITH PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING FREDERICTION CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the house what consultations—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: I take it my hon. friends have missed me while I have been conferring with Premier Bennett and Governor Egan of Alaska about the Yukon. My question to the Prime Minister, sir, is will he inform the house what consultations took place between himself or any officials in his office and the C.B.C. with regard to the coverage of the recent Fredericton conference on national goals for Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): If my hon. friend had been here in recent days I think he would have found there had been questions about that matter, but there have been no such consultations in my office.

Mr. Nielsen: Is the Prime Minister saying he had no conversations on this subject with Mr. Norman DePoe of the C.B.C. two days after the second broadcast over the C.B.C.?

Mr. Pearson: I would indeed. I would have been very glad if the C.B.C. had given even more publicity than it did to this particular conference at Fredericton. It would have been in the interests of everybody to have heard what went on at Fredericton.

CANADIAN FLAG

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING TWO FLAGS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in connection with an article by Greg Connolley appearing in the Ottawa Citizen of September 22, entitled "Two flags to fly on Hill" which states in part:

> St. John's, Nfld.—Prime Minister Pearson hopes soon to see a distinctive new Canadian flag and the union jack flying side by side on parliament hill.
> He envisioned this historic event taking place in Ottawa as the culmination of the work of the Commons committee now studying a distinctive flag for the nation.

Is that a correct report of what the Prime Minister said in Newfoundland?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a concentration of what I said. I gave more details to my right hon. friend the other day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there was no detail given regarding the Greg Connolley article, and I am asking whether the Prime Minister in this cavalier way dealt with a matter that is before a committee, and whether he now believes that we will have two flags on parliament hill.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have already dealt with this matter, and not in a cavalier way.

Mr. Langlois: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like the Prime Minister to—

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has a question of privilege.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I now rise on a question of privilege, as I did two days ago, and as did the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam a week ago. I am under the impression that neither Mr. Pearson nor Mr. Diefenbaker want a Canadian flag at this moment in this country, as evidenced by their attitudes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that type of specious question of privilege does not deserve a reply.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no question of privilege in that respect.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have asked whether it is a fact that the Prime Minister said in Newfoundland that he looked forward to seeing two flags on parliament hill, the union jack and the so-called distinctive flag. Surely he can answer that question.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I answered the question the other day. I do not intend to debate the matter with my right hon. friend on orders of the day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not asking for a debate; I am asking for an honest answer from the Prime Minister as to why he says one thing outside this house and a different thing inside this house.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—ALTERNATIVE PLANS IF INCENTIVE PROGRAM DISCONTINUED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry in respect of something other than the flag. In view of the continuing press reports that the government's automotive parts incentive program is, in the words of one of the members of the press gallery "all but doomed", and in view of the widespread concern that such reports are creating in various business circles, can the minister on behalf of the government assure the house that the government has adequate alternate plans prepared to prevent any dislocation in the event the said program is upset by any decisions or actions taken in the United States?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member will recognize that his question is slightly unfortunate in that it presupposes that the case being considered now by the United States commissioner of customs will be decided in a manner adverse to Canada. We cannot anticipate lack of success in this field, and I can only reassure the hon. member that the government, and my department, are devoting considerable thought to all possible contingencies that might arise, and to the steps which might be needed in the future to meet them.

QUEBEC—POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL INCENTIVE PLANS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Industry. In view of the announcement made yesterday by the Quebec minister of revenue, Mr. Kierans, that the province of Quebec intended to grant special income tax abatements to the companies who would settle in the depressed areas of the province of Quebec, does the Minister of Industry intend to meet with his colleague in the provincial government in order to discuss with him, and come to an agreement about the areas that will be so designated to avoid having some areas designated by the federal government and others by the provincial government, which would certainly cause confusion?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, in short, the answer is: yes, we had talks on this matter during the last weeks with the government of the province of Quebec and we hope that both programs will proceed together and without any conflict.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—EFFECTIVE RATE OF INTEREST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement by Professor Shepherd of University College, University of Toronto, that the Canadian student loans plan is unsatisfactory in principle and ridiculously complicated in practice, does the minister not think the government should fulfil its 1962 and 1963 election promise in respect of 10,000 scholarships per year of $1,000 each so that students might have a choice?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did see the report in the Globe and Mail this morning, the substance of which seemed to be an accusation by one Mr. Gary Perly, that the rate of interest charged under the plan was greater than it was stated to be. I welcome this opportunity to emphasize that the interest rate payable by students under the plan is as stated, 5¾ per cent per annum; that is simple interest, payable only on the unpaid principal amount of the loan. This is clearly stated in the regulations under the act, in the loan agreement between the student and his bank, and in all official information, pamphlets and advertisements on this plan.

The writer of the article in question, however, has based his argument on what interest rate would be involved if $1,000 were repaid in 60 monthly blended payments. The example given for repayment in five years in our brochure, which was issued in connection with this plan, is calculated in fact on 54 payments commencing in the seventh month after graduation and thereby retiring the loan by a date five years after graduation. So I am grateful for this opportunity to clear up any misunderstanding on the substance of the article.

With regard to the specific question of government policy an announcement will be made at the appropriate time.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the repayment of a $1,000 loan is on the basis of 54 months, why was that not made clear in the literature? It certainly indicates here on page 3 that it is on the basis of 60 months. It says that on a $1,000 loan the repayment rate will be $21 a month for five years, and on a $3,000 loan it will be $46 a month for seven years. This is the literature that the department is sending out.

Mr. Gordon: I think the facts are generally understood, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question related to the subject matter of his answer. Has the minister been told of a racket that has developed among some students of borrowing money they do not need, buying government bonds with it, collecting interest on the bonds and at the end of the time paying back the loan to the federal government without having had to pay any interest on it? I say this in view of the fact that many students are talking about this technique, and I would think they should be warned of the dangers of fraud and all the other things that go along with it.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, under the act the provincial authorities are responsible for assessing the needs of a student before a loan can be granted, and I would not think any provincial authority would grant a loan to a student to indulge in the kind of fancy financial manipulations that my hon. friend has suggested. I think hon. members will appreciate that a great deal of work had to be done quickly in order to get the plan in operation in time for the beginning of the present academic year, and it is possible that in some provinces the forms, for which the province itself is responsible, may not have been as detailed and as complete as I am sure they will be once we have gained a little experience with the plan. I am sure there would be only a very few students, if any, who would try to take advantage of a plan of this kind. I think they are running the risk of interfering with a plan that is of tremendous value and has been very well received by the great majority of students in the country.

Mr. Hamilton: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the federal government through the Department of Finance planning to check with the provinces on their techniques of investigating any possible abuses?

Mr. Gordon: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. We have been in touch with them and we are in continuous touch with them. I am grateful for the suggestion, but I can assure my hon. friend that we are in touch now.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Having regard to the type of financial manipulation that is alleged, does the minister not think he should try to get these students into the Department of Finance as soon as they graduate?

Mr. Gordon: Judging by the author of the article, Mr. Speaker, they would fit better into my hon. friend's political party.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister not think these fancy manipulations are just a straight application of Social Credit principles?

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Surely it should be possible for a student who has obtained a $1,000 loan to invest the money in savings bonds or in any way he sees fit until he is ready to use the money. Will that not be the case?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at that question. The purpose of the loan fund is to assist students to pay for their university education and their living costs while there. It is not intended to assist them in the beginning of a financial career.

FINANCE

SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS FOR CENTENNIAL PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Finance in connection with the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. In view of the numerous requests by the Canadian people for the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials to be used in centennial projects, will the minister not give serious consideration to these worthy undertakings by the people and make it much easier for them to carry them out?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered questions of this character, and I would not like to start repeating myself in the house.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MEETING OF MINISTER AND S.I.U. OFFICER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to the Minister of Labour, and it is in two parts. Did he have an interview yesterday with the right hand man of Hal Banks, Mr. Heinikey, and would he be prepared to tell the House of Commons what was the nature of the interview that took place in his office yesterday afternoon, I believe?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did see Mr. Heinikey in my office for a few minutes yesterday afternoon, just as I attempt to see all representatives of trade unions.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was the question of election of officers of the S.I.U. discussed, and was that the purpose of the meeting between the minister and the man in question?

Mr. MacEachen: That was not the purpose, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: Was there discussion in that regard?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice having to do with a federal inquiry into juvenile deliquency which was set up in 1962. I ask this question on orders of the day because on November 20 last his parliamentary secretary indicated to the hon. member for Saint John-Albert that a report could be expected in April 1964. I am wondering if the minister can now say whether the report of this important committee can be expected soon?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I shall be pleased to inquire of the members of the committee and report to the house as early as possible.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

REFUSAL OF CERTIFICATES TO PROFESSED ATHEISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for either the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration or the Minister of Justice. Can either minister now make a statement with regard to the refusal of citizenship to a professed atheist?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on this question as to whether citizenship has been refused because two applicants refused to take the oath, I must answer that in fact there has been no such refusal. In the case of Mr. and Mrs. Bergsma the court declined to recommend to the minister the granting of an application because the judge found that on all the facts of the case, inter alia the fact that the person concerned—and I do not care to discuss the decision—was an atheist, that person could not be found to be of a good character within the meaning of section 10 (1)(d) of the citizenship act. Therefore the question of oath really has not arisen, because the oath is taken only at the time the minister decides to grant citizenship upon the recommendation of the court.

However, in relation to a second question that was put in relation to the same matter, as to whether in those cases statutory affirmation instead of an oath may be taken, my answer is in the affirmative. It is my own view that even in the case of applications for citizenship an applicant may choose to make a solemn and statutory affirmation, instead of an oath on the Bible, with the same consequences. This is my interpretation of section 15 of the Canada Evidence Act, and I must report to the house that I have now so advised the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): As a supplementary question, as a result of this decision would the minister consider allowing the Bergsma case to be reviewed before the normal time, which involves a waiting period of more than a year?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I think there is no discretion vested in the minister in this respect, although I must say I am sure my learned colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will want to consider the matter further. However, as to the purport of the decision itself, I know the house will agree that as a member of the executive it would not be proper for me to comment on the propriety or otherwise of the interpretation given to the statute by the judge concerned.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): For the benefit of those of us who are not legal experts, was the minister suggesting that there was any other reason but the religious attitude of the applicant which led the judge to make the decision he did?

Mr. Favreau: If I left that impression, Mr. Speaker, I must correct it, because I did not say there was necessarily any other reason than this one. All I said was that on the basis of that finding the judge came to the conclusion that in his opinion the applicant could not be said to be of good character within the meaning of the act; and I repeat, although I have my own personal and firm opinion as to the legal import of the section, that it would be improper for me to comment on its particular application in this particular case.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): Could the personal opinion of the judge not have been influenced by the atheistic feelings of the applicant in question?

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I must confess I cannot quite follow the minister's explanation. Is he telling us that although in his opinion the affirmation section should have no bearing on the ability of these people to receive citizenship, notwithstanding his view and notwithstanding the fact that a grave injustice may have been done to the individuals in question, there is absolutely no redress within the jurisdiction of the minister?

Mr. Favreau: All I said was that I do not think it would be proper for me to comment on the actual decision made by the citizenship court in this particular case. However, I said—and I know he agrees with this—that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will want to reconsider the matter and be advised thereon. I added that aside from the ministry—or at least I implied this—if there was any action that the person concerned wanted to take to have the purport of the section tested, there are surely judicial remedies such as certiorari. This is aside from the possibility of the minister giving further consideration to the matter.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Under the bill of rights isn't a person entitled to have whatever belief he wants to have? Isn't he entitled to hold whatever religious view he cares to have; and whether he is an atheist or an agnostic does not detrimentally affect his character within the meaning of the citizenship act.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear that I have not agreed or disagreed with the decision itself. As to the application of the bill of rights, I suppose the right hon. gentleman will have noted that what it purports to protect is the freedom of religion. It is a moot question as to whether under the bill of rights—I do not say under the decision of the court—the freedom not to have a religion is protected.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh?

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): Does this mean that a person only comes under the bill of rights after he has gained his citizenship?

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

REQUEST FOR INTERIM REPORT BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question which I should like to ask the Prime Minister. I wonder whether he can give the house any indication when we may expect an interim report from the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the commission in question hopes to make an interim report before the end of the year, but I will make inquiries to see if I can get more definite information.

HOUSING

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE EVICTIONS FROM VETERANS HOUSING PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that a large number of veterans in the Fraserview housing project in Vancouver have refused to sign new leases at increased rents and are requesting a public hearing, what action does the government propose to take?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of his question. I might say that I cannot accept his premise that a large number of veterans have not signed; a substantial number, yes, but a relatively small percentage of the total number of tenants. A similar question was asked of the Acting Postmaster General last Friday by the hon. member for Vancouver East, and even if I had not received notice of this question today I would have given this answer.

In my statement on August 25 dealing with the Fraserview project I stated that the effective date for the change in the rentals on the project would be October 1. Whether there will be any default will not be known until that date. If there is default, Central Mortgage and Housing will take its usual action having regard to the circumstances of each individual case.

I think I should also say I have been informed by the officials of central mortgage and housing earlier today that 85 per cent of the tenants involved have either signed, or have indicated their intention to sign before the end of the month, new leases at the adjusted rentals. About 40 tenants have purchased houses; so that out of 601 houses involved approximately 40 have been purchased, 462 renewals have been arranged, and nine tenants have given notice of intention to vacate. There are approximately 90 or less uncommitted tenants involved, and C.M.H.C. will deal with those on an individual basis after October 1.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COURT OF CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I am wondering whether he can tell us where we stand in connection with the Indian claims commission.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, two days ago I received the report of the Canadian council of Indians; it was the last major report on the amendments to be made to the bill concerning Indian claims.

We will consider those recommendations within the next few weeks with a view to ascertaining the amendments which could be made. We intend to put before the house the bill concerning Indian claims as soon as possible.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

1. Departmental administration, including grants and contributions as detailed in estimates, $1,159,000.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, as other hon. members have done, and as I have done in the past, I should like to laud the officials, scientists and administrators of the Department of Fisheries for the work they have done over the years, their attitude and devotion to their position and activities. I know the people in the fishing industry also have the same feeling of appreciation for the people engaged in public service who work in the Department of Fisheries.

At about the same time last year when we were considering the estimates of the Department of Fisheries I had occasion to make reference to the recent appointment of Dr. Needler as deputy minister, and I indicated the hope, with all due respect to his predecessor the late Mr. George Clark, that with the rise of Dr. Needler, a scientist, to the position of deputy minister there would be brought into play in the policy decisions of the minister and the government that depth of knowledge which can only come from one who has himself engaged over the years in scientific activities; and this appears to be the case.

Yesterday I listened with interest to the extensive remarks of the Minister of Fisheries concerning the variety of research projects, or research-type projects, being entered into by the Department of Fisheries either by itself or in conjunction with the various provinces. I myself think a great deal of the credit for this type of activity and work goes, and should go, to the officials of the department, and I hope it continues.

A great many people have had the thought that because a great number, in fact the vast majority, of the decisions of the Department of Fisheries are based on scientific knowledge rather than political expediency there is no need for a department of fisheries or for a minister of fisheries in the political sense; that we might better approach the whole question of fisheries from the biological or scientific point of view if we did not have a department with a political head, but instead have a board or commission charged with the responsibility of doing things in the most scientific way possible. However, I still wish to indicate on behalf of the many fishermen and people engaged in the fisheries industry their appreciation for the unstinting work and devotion of the people who work in the Department of Fisheries, especially those engaged in the biological field.

The other day I had occasion to come across a book which had recently been published entitled "Politics and Conservation", by one Richard A. Cooley. It is an historical account and analysis of the decline of the Alaskan salmon fishery, which as many people know has gone downhill year after year over the past few years. I highly commend the book to anyone interested in the fisheries of Canada, especially the salmon fishery on the west coast.

Without giving any quotations from the book itself, or any other references to it, I think the experiences of Alaska with respect to their salmon stocks could very easily be repeated, and perhaps in some instances may be being repeated, in the British Columbia salmon industry. This may give us some opportunity to learn by the mistakes of others. I know that with the astuteness of the Department of Fisheries they have knowledge of this work not only in its present form but in the form the various reports took before they were compiled by Mr. Cooley.

The essence of this work is, I think, simply that regardless of the political attachment the government may have to the theory of capitalism or the theory of free enterprise, it would be a most disastrous thing for our fishing industry if that industry were to be operated under the principles of untrammelled free enterprise. This is the experience which the people in the Alaskan salmon industry have had. So, Mr. Chairman, it is vitally important for us to have some control or some regulation over the operations of the fishing industry; for if we did not, within a very short period of time there would be that rapaciousness which is inherent in free enterprisers and we would very soon find our fisheries stocks depleted, our rivers and streams denuded or destroyed as far as fisheries are concerned, and the fishing industry gone downhill.

[Mr. Howard.]

I only mention this, Mr. Chairman, as a prelude to raising a question with regard to conservation. This is the thought which I am sure is uppermost in the minds of everyone in the Department of Fisheries; I am sure it is the guide post which the minister himself follows, namely the necessity of keeping a watchful eye regularly, day after day, on the conservation practices engaged in by the Department of Fisheries, and upon the exploitation practices engaged in by the fishermen or the companies in the industry itself.

We must guarantee that there are fish left for future generations. We must ensure that we only exploit the fisheries resource within the bounds demanded by conservation itself. This does not only involve conservation from our immediate nationalistic point of view; it also involves—and perhaps this is becoming more apparent as each year goes by—conservation from the point of view of international relationships. We are not the only nation engaged in fishing outside our own territorial waters or our own fishing zones, as they are now designated. More and more nations are searching the seas for foodstuffs for their own people, and more and more we are faced with the threat of other countries exploiting the fisheries on the high seas to such an extent that it interferes with the conservation practices which we may engage in at home.

This is one of the directions in which we must look if we are to have an economic, self supporting and progressive fishing industry here in Canada. There is not much point in spending millions upon millions of dollars in order to conserve the fishery ourselves when other nations might be able to steam within a few miles of our shores and exploit that fishery to the fullest extent possible, even to the extent of destroying it entirely.

When the bill to establish the 12 mile fishing zone was before the committee on marine and fisheries, the minister there admitted that the effect of the bill in so far as protecting, for instance, the west coast salmon and halibut was concerned was practically nil, because the fish themselves would not respect or even know about any arbitrarily designated 12 mile fishing zone. Their migration habits are such that they range far outside this line of demarcation; in the case of salmon, many thousands of miles out into the mid-Pacific.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it is vitally important not to place too much reliance or hope upon the establishment of the 12 mile fishing zone in so far as the protection of our fisheries is concerned. In fact I might say that the declaration by the parliament of Canada regarding a 12 mile fishing zone has in reality done more to protect the fishing interests of United States fishermen than it has to protect the fishing interests of Canadians; because within that 12 mile zone we are going to continue forever, as I interpret the attitude of the government as expressed by the minister, to permit United States fishermen, on the west coast particularly, to continue to fish within not only the nine mile fishing zone but even, in some instances presumably, within the three miles of the territorial sea which we will be declaring shortly, I hope.

I use these remarks to lead to the meetings which currently are taking place here in Ottawa between Canadians, Japanese and Americans. I believe this is the third series of meetings in recent years of the north Pacific fisheries commission. This is a meeting that is seeking to re-establish or continue in operation a tripartite treaty which was signed some 11 years ago involving Japan, Canada and the United States. This treaty concerns the salmon, halibut and herring fisheries in the Pacific ocean. We all know from public declarations that the Japanese government is demanding a relaxation of the abstention principle, or in other words an increase in the access of Japanese fishermen to the fishery stocks of halibut, salmon and herring in the Pacific when those stocks may be propagated in what we call our waters. In other words, Mr. Chairman, it is a demand of the Japanese fishing industry to fish our fish, as the saying goes.

They have made no bones about stating that; there has been no hesitancy on the part of the Japanese government to indicate that this is its desire. This is its sole purpose at the moment in entering into these discussions, namely to seek a relaxation of that abstention principle so the Japanese fishing fleet will be able to range further into the mid-Pacific and closer to our shores in order to fish the halibut, salmon and herring stocks which are propagated within what we consider to be our territorial limits.

Unfortunately the Canadian people do not know what has been taking place at these meetings, because the minister has been reluctant, unable, or has thought it unwise to communicate to parliament and the Canadian people what is taking place and what is Canada's position in respect of these meetings. I think we can assume that the United States and Japan are virtually deadlocked in respect of fishing for the so-called red or sockeye salmon in the Bristol bay area of Alaska.

Statistically and biologically I am sure the Japanese, by fishing for sockeye salmon in the mid-Pacific, have had a very detrimental effect on the conservation practices of Alaskan or United States authorities in respect of the sockeye salmon which propagate in Alaskan waters. I suggest there is perhaps even greater concern in this regard at this time than will be the case after the election is over, because this is a presidential election year in the United States. In fact, that may be one of the reasons why we may not be able to reach an agreement during this round of meetings in Ottawa. If there is any result from these meetings that is adverse to the United States, President Johnson will not publicize that adversity until after the election because it might damage his chances of re-election. If there is any result which is adverse to the United States it will be adverse as well to Canada, although to a different extent, because we have salmon stocks which propagate in our waters and intermingle in the mid-Pacific.

An article in this regard appeared in the Globe and Mail on September 30, 1963. It was a Canadian Press association dispatch from Tokyo, and in part states:

> The United States has proposed a substitute section to the international north Pacific fishery treaty to replace the so-called abstention principle that has had Japan at loggerheads with Canada and the United States over renewal of the fishing act.

Perhaps there has been a mistake made here, and it should say "fishing acts" rather than "act". The article then states:

> Japan had demanded that the abstention principle be removed from any new agreement and when the three nations failed to reach agreement at meetings in Washington in June new private talks were held here.
> Japan has argued here that the original convention was drawn up while she was an occupied country and that it was, in effect, an unequal treaty.

Another paragraph of this article reads:

> U.S. negotiators here have seen the merits of this argument and have agreed to drop all mention of Japan abstaining from fishing for salmon and halibut.

That article outlines a result which could very easily develop at the discussions now taking place. Uppermost in the minds of Canadians and the members of the commission, as well I presume as in the minds of the minister and the officials of his department, is the fact that after ten years any signatory to the north Pacific fisheries treaty can terminate it upon one year's notice. That ten year period expired last year. I am sure that the Minister of Fisheries, his officials and the officials in the United States are apprehensive about Japan stating that if she cannot get her way in respect of abstention she will not sign or participate in another treaty. Japan does not contribute, except perhaps to an infinitesimal degree, to the salmon stocks in the north Pacific, and if she does not volunteer to abstain from fishing these stocks, having free access to the high seas she may continue rapaciously and without concern for conservation to fish those stocks of salmon that we consider belong to Canada and the United States. This may have the effect of destroying this important fishery on the west coast.

That fear and apprehension was expressed publicly by officials of the Canadian government, which I think was an error in judgment because it will have an adverse effect in relation to the establishment of a line of demarcation in the mid-Pacific. However we will have to wait to find out what the results of the discussions will be. I hope whatever concession is given to Japan to get her to sign a new treaty will not be one that will have the effect of destroying the fishing industry in the Pacific as far as Canada is concerned.

There has been a marked failure on the part of the government or the commission, if the government does not wish to assume responsibility, in that one other major fishing nation, fishing in the north Pacific, has not been invited to participate in these discussions, and I refer of course to the Soviet union. The Soviet union has an extensive fishing fleet and it does carry out research work in the north Pacific. Their fishing and research boats have been sighted very close to our shores, off the west coast of British Columbia. There is nothing whatever in the way of an international agreement, or otherwise, to prevent the Soviet union from directing their huge fishing fleet right up to our 12 mile limit to scoop up all the fish coming to spawn in our waters. I feel that is a regrettable situation. The Liberal party promised the fishermen of Canada that the Soviet union would be invited to join any new north Pacific fisheries treaty that might be signed. I must now conclude that in reality that party does not consider it has to fulfil promises it makes before an election. I think this is an insult to the fishing industry on the west coast; but apart from that, the government should bear in mind that we can only conserve this important fishery by international agreement. In view of the rapid growth in the population of the world, and the increasing demand for high protein foods, resulting in greatly increased fishing activities, this fishery is virtually doomed unless we can negotiate an agreement among the major fishing nations of the world. I think it is a gross failure on the part of the government not to have invited the Soviet union either to take part in these current discussions, or to sit in as an observer.

During the course of the meetings of the committee on marine and fisheries, I moved a motion to the effect that the estimates of the Department of Fisheries be referred to that committee for study. I postponed pressing that motion to a vote because I and other members of the committee were given the assurance—I am not going to indicate by whom and do not want to—that this was going to be done in any event. We were told that discussions were being held with the minister which were proceeding favourably, and that he was in agreement with the idea that the estimates should be referred to the committee. So we did not push the matter to a vote. I think it is regrettable that the committee was misled and did not press the opportunity to ask formally that the estimates be referred to the committee. However we have them before us now and I suppose there is not much we can do about the matter.

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member wish me to comment on that point now? The hon. member has said that he was told the estimates of the Department of Fisheries would be referred to the standing committee. I must admit that some weeks ago it was my intention to refer these estimates to the standing committee on marine and fisheries. However, in view of circumstances which have arisen since involving the length of the deliberations now taking place on the north Pacific treaty, to which the hon. member has just referred, and the number of meetings we face in connection with the 12 mile limit it was decided it would be impossible to have the senior officials of the department appear before the standing committee. I must add that we have other commitments with the provinces involving committees to study fisheries matters and these will take us well into the month of December. I do not want to apologize but I want at least to state the facts and explain to the hon. member why these estimates were not referred to the committee this year. I also want to give the undertaking now that at the next session of parliament it is my intention to have the estimates of the department referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries.

Mr. Howard: The minister's statement is appreciated. I hope that next year nothing will interfere with the minister's desire.

Mr. Robichaud: I hope so too.

Mr. Howard: When I say "nothing" I am excluding the possibility of an intervening election and the defeat of the government, because I would not want to assume that he would be the minister after the next election or that the present government would still be in office. Apart from that, I hope that nothing else interferes with the intention of the minister.

You will be aware, Mr. Chairman, that for a variety of reasons not only the Department of Fisheries but other departments of the federal government have been given only a very cursory examination by parliament in the last few years. I would say this is not the fault of anyone. It is certainly not the fault of the Minister of Fisheries. We will recall that there was a federal election in 1962. Elections interfere with the operations of the government and, in fact, the government stops thinking policywise for at least five or six months at such a time. There was also an election in the spring of 1963 which likewise interfered with the thought processes of government. In fact, I doubt very much whether their thought processes have got back on an even keel yet. Nevertheless, there was interference with what is considered to be the normally responsible way of considering and inquiring into the estimates of expenditures of any department, and of course the Department of Fisheries was so affected.

Last year in fact there was a very earnest desire on the part of members of the house to rush through the estimates, because it was then October. The hope was that if we could get last year's estimates out of the way quickly enough we would be able to get back on an even keel and be able to study the current year's departmental activities in a better way than had been the case in the past. Unfortunately, however, we now find ourselves nearing the end of September, and we are still in the midst of the estimates even though more than half the money has already been spent. Again there is a desire on the part of members to rush through the estimates and get these expenditures out of the way, because after all the year is almost over. This is a regrettable state of affairs.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether you looked upon the intervention of the minister as being an interruption in the speech I originally started to make and whether I am now embarking on another 30 minutes but in any event I have no intention of doing so.

When the minister introduced his estimates yesterday he gave a very glowing report about conditions in the fishing industry. If one were to accept his statement he would think that we really do not need to think about these matters at all, because things are so excellent in the fishing industry that there is no need for us to express our views. However there are a number of matters I should like to leave with the minister in closing on which I should like him to comment, and perhaps explore in a bit more detail as we proceed through the estimates item by item.

At the United Nations conference on the law of the sea held in Geneva from February 24 to April 27, 1958, four vitally important fisheries conventions were adopted, one on the territorial sea and contiguous zones, another convention having to do with the high seas, a third convention having to do with fishing and conservation of the living resources of the high seas and a fourth convention concerning the continental shelf. I may not be correct but I understand that Canada is not a signatory to any of these conventions and has not taken the formal step of adopting, endorsing or ratifying them, whatever the formal step may be, to indicate that Canada is in agreement with them. I should like to know why we have not taken action to endorse the principles contained in these four conventions, particularly in view of the importance to Canada of fisheries activities on the high seas and on the continental shelf.

The salmon industry of British Columbia has been in difficulties for some years. If one wants to boil things down, I suppose the problem is too much gear, too many fishermen and not enough fish. Proposals have been made for licence limitation. A study was made by Dr. Sol Sinclair a few years ago about which nothing has been done so far as I know. This year however we discovered that gillnetters on the coast had taken out trolling licences. They did so because in past years they had found that their gillnet activities had yielded a very low return. They were only able to get up to a four day fishing week and they wanted to go trolling as well. So we have had an invasion of the trolling industry by gill-netters.

This resulted in the Pacific trollers association writing to the minister on August 20 last to complain about the duality of activity of gill-netters in becoming trollers and interfering with what they considered to be the traditional activities of the salmon troll fishery on the west coast. We would like to know something about what is happening in this regard. I see you are about to rise, Mr. Chairman. I have a few other questions I should like to pose to the minister but I shall leave them until later.

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member will have the consent of the committee to complete his remarks. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: That is very kind. I express my appreciation and I will not in any way abuse the generosity of the committee. On October 18, 1963 a price probe committee consisting of three federal and three provincial federal civil servants was established. Could we have some indication of what the committee is doing and how it is getting along? Has it made a report and if it has not will its report be made available when it is made?

There is also the question of dogfish on the west coast. The dogfish is a predator. At one time there was a dogfish liver subsidy in effect. On March 31 of this year the minister wrote to the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, and indicated in his letter that discussions would be held between representatives of the industry, the fishermen and scientists of the fisheries research board to look into the development of a dogfish fishery on a commercial basis. I would appreciate having some information about that.

There is the vitally important question of river and water pollution in British Columbia. We are on a kick now about building pulp mills, and where they are going to be built. I understand there is to be one at Houston in northern British Columbia. In that area there is the Morice river and Kidprice lake which are important salmon spawning areas. We are certainly interested in what pollution control is going to take effect there. A pulp mill is contemplated in Kitimat, and this is also a fish river. Then there is the one at Prince George in the area of the Fraser, which is a fish river. We should like to have some indication of what is to take place there.

We should like to know what the Fraser river board is doing about the proposal for flood control in the upper reaches of the Fraser and the Stuart lake area, which are also salmon spawning areas. We should like some indication of what program exists in connection with the rehabilitation of salmon streams. I have particular reference now to the Queen Charlotte islands, but I should like some information generally about the rehabilitation of former salmon streams on the west coast. I look forward with anticipation to a favourable response from the minister in connection with all these things.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I see there are a few of us left here, a few of us fisher folk. The problem of the fisheries, Mr. Chairman, is not necessarily restricted to those people from the maritimes. You know, I come from the riding of York East in the heart of industrial Ontario. However, there are none of us here who pass the time of day talking to other members, especially those from the maritimes or the west coast, who do not recognize that there are serious problems in connection with our fishing industry. This is rather a tragedy, I think, considering that this industry is the producer of food, which will become more and more precious as time goes on.

If you consider what is called the population explosion as we all have, I think you will recognize how very important food is going to become. I have considered this problem, and I have talked to many members. I have lived in the maritimes for a time. It is a tragic thing that these men engaged in fishing cannot make a decent living. Is it possibly the result of a lack of resources? Is it a lack of fish? Well, Mr. Chairman, foreign fishing vessels from all over the world come to our shores to gather this harvest. Is it because we are not hard working men? This of course is not so. There is no one, no class of people in Canada, who works harder than the fishermen. I admire these maritimers who are so rooted to the land that they will stay there, knowing there are much greener pastures elsewhere. There is something that keeps the maritimer tied to the soil, and that is a wonderful thing.

What is the answer? The minister will recall that about a year ago on a television broadcast he used a word that caught my imagination. He said he was going to "nautilize" the fishing industry. In my opinion the minister has not pursued that course. As the hon. member for Skeena pointed out, we have seen factory ships come to our shores. I have seen factory ships the like of which most members would never believe. These foreign vessels have on board office equipment that would compare favourably with that in an insurance company office. They have freezing plants, drying plants and canning plants. I even saw one ship that contained a factory to make the cans right on board. These factory ships sweep our seas like giant vacuum cleaners, taking everything there is. What de we do? We send out small boats to try to compete against these fantastic vessels.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the fault is not necessarily the minister's. I believe one of the members opposite pointed out that this department seems to be the orphan of all our government departments. It should not be so; it should be the most important department. The Department of Fisheries and the Department of Agriculture are both great departments. The fault is largely ours. We seem to be satisfied with having a mediocre fishing industry. We cannot imagine that we can do better. It is up to the minister, up to the members, to take the lead and convince ourselves that we shall have the greatest fishing industry in the world. We must convince ourselves that we shall harvest more fish and have a more efficient industry than any other nation in the world. We shall pay the fishermen the highest rates. We have to convince ourselves of these things. Is there any reason why we cannot do this? Of course we can. However, without that conviction, without this minister and this department taking the lead in a vigorous, enthusiastic approach toward this industry, we will get nowhere. We will sit here with this department as an orphan of all departments.

I would just remind the minister that it was he who coined the word "nautilize". I hope he continues with that vision. We should put every effort, all the money that is needed, all the research that is needed, all the resources at our command, into developing this fishing industry into the greatest fishing industry in the world.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Minister of Fisheries will be surprised to see a member from an inland province like Saskatchewan rising to speak on these estimates. In my area fishing is only conducted in some of the lakes and the biggest one we have out there is lac La Ronge in which we fish for trout. This is good for the tourist industry.

However, my reason for rising at this time is that, being so far from the sea, we are not really given an opportunity to enjoy delicious salt water fish. I should like for this reason to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that there should be more publicity in these inland provinces with regard to salt water fish. I think the fishing industry would benefit to a large extent and the consumers would benefit by enjoying salt water fish. I do not mean the minister should think of commercial displays, but we have the C.B.C and I am sure the C.B.C. could give information concerning the preparation of some of these fish dishes. If this were done I am sure the people in these areas would benefit greatly from it.

I have been told, as the previous speaker pointed out, that our fishermen are in a desperate position so far as their incomes are concerned, but I believe if the minister pays attention to what I have said, and follows my recommendation, our fishermen will be in a better position.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, for over 450 years the fishing industry was the mainstay of the economy of my province, Newfoundland, and though in recent years it has been surpassed in dollar value by the paper industry and some mining enterprises it is still one of the most important factors in the provincial economy, and from the standpoint of the number of people employed it is the most important.

Some 75 to 80 per cent of my constituents depend upon the fishing industry for their livelihood, and I would be very remiss in my duty if I did not stand in my place today and make a few observations about it. Yesterday the minister referred to the poor fishery Newfoundland has had this year. He expressed the hope that the fall fishery would compensate for it somewhat, and that this year's increased prices would make up for the loss of production. I think we must keep in mind that not only is the fishery poor this year but it was poor last year and the year before that. As a matter of fact we have had poor fisheries for the last three years.

While it is true that the price of fish is higher than ever, due to the effect of supply and demand, this year's price is not so much greater than last year's, and a 10 per cent increase in price cannot compensate for a 50 or 60 per cent fall in production, which is the case in many parts of my riding. Furthermore, under the system we have of providing stamps to fishermen for unemployment benefits, because the amount of fish caught this year is so small this will prevent many fishermen from qualifying for unemployment benefits this winter. The fishing season is now well advanced, and in about three or four weeks the shore fishery in most parts of Newfoundland will be pretty well at an end.

We are all conscious of the fact that the fishing industry is capable of playing a much more important role in the national economy than it does at present. We are all conscious that, in comparison with the fishing industries of other countries, ours is rather puny, particularly in view of the great advantages we enjoy with such a tremendous coast line and with such great fishery resources on our very doorstep, resources from which the fishing fleets of other nations are able to reap more advantage than we do ourselves. Here is a problem that is crying out to be solved and we must find some satisfactory solution to it.

A national conference on fisheries was held last January, the purpose of which was to lay the foundation of a national fisheries development program to be developed along lines parallel to the national policy which we have for agriculture. We hailed that conference as the dawn of a new era for the fishing industry.

In his opening statement the minister dealt with a number of individual projects which he associated with this national development program, but as I listened to his recital I got the impression of a list of isolated projects, rather unrelated, instead of a coherent, integrated program with goals to be achieved in progressive stages. In other words he seemed to be travelling along the same old beaten track that we have been travelling for the past 20 years and longer. This is borne out by the estimates themselves. Even taking into consideration the $913,000 in the supplementary estimates for fisheries management and development, this only gives a modest increase of $424,000 for fisheries management and development in the current fiscal year.

We are only kidding ourselves if we have the idea that we can initiate a national program of fisheries development without a substantial increase in expenditure. I feel we should be thinking in terms of an increase in expenditure of not less than $50 million, and perhaps up to $100 million, over a period of five to ten years. It is useless to think about fisheries development on a national scale unless we are prepared to break away from the old established pattern and start out on a wholly new path, with new thinking, imagination and daring. In this respect I believe the minister is the most fortunate member of the cabinet because no department offers greater scope for bold, new, imaginative thinking than the Department of Fisheries.

The January conference envisaged a national fisheries policy along lines parallel to that of agricultural policy, but if we accept present agricultural policy as a national policy then I believe we are starting out with a false premise because, as I see it, we have no national farm policy. What we have is a policy for western agriculture, and it is only now being forced upon us that our agricultural policy, though it has benefited western farmers, has been of very little benefit to eastern farmers.

The same is bound to be true of the fishing industry. While we may be thinking in terms of national goals and possibly national agencies, any policy decided on will eventually boil down to three separate and specific programs—one for the Atlantic seaboard, one for the Pacific coast and the third for our inland fisheries. These are three separate industries with very little in common, for each of which a separate solution must be provided. If we take one of these programs, for example the program for the Atlantic coast, that in turn would be broken down into specific programs for production, processing, marketing, transportation, conservation and research. I could speak on each one for a full 30 minutes but in the few remaining minutes left to me I should like to concentrate on the need for research.

In the past ten years, and more particularly in the past five years, fishing activity on the Grand Banks has been greatly intensified, and I think that the time has now come when we should have a research man look into the effects of this intensification. It seems to me that in the past we have proceeded on the premise that the fishery resources are inexhaustible; that the amount of fish taken by man is so small compared with those destroyed through natural and other causes that we do not have to worry about conservation. However, this intensification of activity is a fact, and as we look back over history we see that the shore fishery has disappeared from the Atlantic seaboard. It has disappeared in Nova Scotia, and the fishermen there have had to go farther and farther afield for fish.

Now it seems the same thing is happening to the shore fishery in Newfoundland. We have had three or four poor catches in a row and many people are beginning to wonder whether this decline in the shore fishery is due to the increased intensification which is taking place on the Grand Banks. We should not wait too long before we look into this problem and begin to think in terms of international agreements to establish quotas and to secure agreement on the kind of equipment to be used. Because while the dragnet is a very efficient way of catching fish, it is also a very destructive way. As the net drags along the bottom it scoops up fish of all sizes, among which are a large number of small fish of no commercial value. In winching these fish up to the surface the pressure of the sea kills them, and this is a waste which should not be permitted. We must think in terms of equipment which will reap the same harvest without killing and wasting young fish.

Yesterday the minister spoke about research in the herring industry. To my mind this is typical of what has gone on in the fisheries department over the years. I remember that when I came to this parliament in 1949 I urged on the government very strongly the fact that there were great schools of herring in the ocean not far off Newfoundland which we were not reaping at all. After a couple of years of nagging the government did institute a program of research into this area, but it was on such a tiny scale that it was useless and after a few years reported a failure. But the herring is still there. Our ships are passing over schools of herring, some of which schools are 40 to 50 miles long and one mile wide—millions of tons of them. We should be able to reap that harvest, and I look forward to the day when the herring fishery will be more important to my riding than the cod fishery. We have to find those herring and know where they will be at a certain time, as is the case in the North sea. We must also learn to fish them in deep waters. This will require a sustained program of research, not a sporadic effort where a little ship will go out and do research for only one or two years.

We also have huge halibut grounds. I can remember when as a boy I saw United States bankers, as we called them, fishing for halibut right off the shores of my native village; but today there is very little exploitation of that resource. Off the west coast there is another halibut ground which could be exploited. We need a research program to find our halibut grounds and the best way of exploiting them.

About four years ago the provincial government of Newfoundland initiated a program of using nylon gillnets to take fish. These nylon nets proved so successful that many fishermen who had formerly used cod traps gave them up and started to use the nylon nets instead. However there was a fear in the minds of the fishermen that because these nylon nets captured the larger type of fish —called mother fish—in time the fishery would be depleted. There is now evidence that those fears are being realized. Whether this is due to the use of gillnets or not no one can say, but that is a question which should be looked into.

I should also like to ask the minister to bring about a change in the legislation which will enable foreign draggers to land fish for processing in Canadian ports, particularly in my riding. These draggers are catching the fish anyway, and at the moment I do not see that this particular piece of legislation serves any good purpose. What it is doing is depriving us of employment in the processing of fish in our ports. If we do not process it somebody else will, so I cannot see why we should not have the benefit of processing this fish ourselves. There was a Japanese firm which was quite interested in establishing a fish plant in my riding, but owing to this legislation the whole thing fell through.

With respect to the shore fishery, if we are going to have a development program we must have both a long term program and a short term program. The long term program, as I see it, should be integrated with the ARDA program. In this way we can centralize people from small, uneconomic communities into larger centres where they will be just as close to the fishing grounds and can perhaps catch even more fish and have the benefits of a centralized population.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I want to bring to the minister's attention the fact that in my riding there is a hydroelectric development project that is now going ahead. When it is completed in about four years time there will be approximately 500,000 horsepower of electricity available for industrialization. There is no reason why this electric power should not be utilized in the fishing industry. It would benefit our fish plants which now have to depend upon diesel power, and it would enable the small fishing communities to become electrified. This electric power could be used in the utilization of parts of the fish that are now thrown away. In a fish plant practically the whole fish is utilized, because what cannot be filleted is made into fishmeal and other products; but this cannot be done in small fishing villages at the present time. If we had a good program of centralization carried out under ARDA there is no reason why in these small communities there should not be some small fishmeal plants put into operation. This would enable those parts of the fish that are now wasted to be utilized, to the benefit of the fishermen.

With respect to the short term program, Mr. Chairman, the most efficient way of giving assistance to the fishermen in my riding would be to provide them with a source of cheap credit. I have mentioned this matter a number of times and I am going to keep on repeating it. There are many good, hard working fishermen who could produce ten times as much as they are now producing and could make a much better livelihood for themselves and their families, but they are prevented from doing this because there is nowhere they can go to obtain cheap, long term credit. A fisherman—this happens quite often as a result of our heavy winter storms—has his whole fishing premises swept away; his fishing gear is lost, and even his boat. There is nowhere he can go to obtain the money with which to build up his business again. A man may build a boat for himself in the winter; he needs $700 or $800 to buy a modern diesel motor to put in the boat, but there is nowhere he can go to obtain this money. I believe this is the most effective type of assistance with which our fishermen could be provided under the short term program.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would remind the minister that whatever national goals we may have with respect to a national fishery development program, and however much money we may be prepared to spend upon it, it will still be a waste of money, time and effort if it is not geared to benefit the individual fisherman. We have already had too many programs which have benefited everybody else but the fisherman. This could very well happen with this national program that we hope will come. Unless he is the central figure, unless the whole program is built up with safeguards to see that whatever money is spent is to assist the individual fisherman, he may not benefit at all. In my province the provincial government has lent millions of dollars to the fishing industry, but the fisherman has benefited little, if at all. We must avoid the same thing happening under this program; because unless a fishery development program is going to benefit the fisherman, there is no point having it.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, in the short time left before five o'clock I should like to make a few remarks with regard to the fisheries and particularly as they are related to our inland waters. In the area in which I live we have one of the great inland waterways in the world. I would like to say first of all, in connection with the Atlantic and Pacific fisheries, that this is an industry that nets us $200 million a year, I believe, and we occupy third place in the world with regard to the sale of fish. I think Japan is first, Norway second, and Canada stands third. We have the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans, apart from all the inland lakes in this country. I believe we are sometimes inclined to forget our inland lakes. This is particularly true with regard to the northland, to which people come from the United States, pay a great deal of money for their trip, have their fishing and then go back home. This is a great source of revenue, but once the fish in these areas begin to be depleted we will lose this revenue. This is happening today in the inland lakes; I refer particularly to lake Ontario, lake Erie, lake Huron, Georgian bay, and lake Superior. This is a great problem.

If I may now deal with the biological problem, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister whether his department has found that harbour seals are carrying a parasite. If so, is this parasite transmittable to other fish that are used commercially? I do not know whether the harbour seal can be used commercially, but I would like the minister to tell us whether this parasite can be transmitted to other fish; in other words whether other fish can be host to it.

Mr. Chairman, I see it is five o'clock.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills; notices of motions, papers; and public bills.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, if the house would give unanimous consent perhaps we could carry on in committee with the estimates of my department. Would the house agree to this course being followed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, we are quite happy to accede to that eminently good suggestion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to the suspension of private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house will now resume the business interrupted a short while ago.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

1. Departmental administration, including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $1,159,000.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I was asking about the parasite carried by the harbour seal and whether this is a threat to commercial fish. Do other fish contract this disease? If so, how many other types of fish have this parasite? Then I would like to know what percentage of the research work done in the provinces is carried out by the federal government. How many research stations does the federal government have across Canada, and what percentage of the employees who work in these stations are scientists?

Have the officials of the department any idea why the fish population of the great lakes is decreasing? Is this depopulation the result of a disease or the result of pollution through pesticides or detergents? For some time the lamprey eels were attacking trout, particularly in the great lakes, and I am wondering whether the minister can tell the committee whether that problem has been solved? I understand the trout population in lake Superior and lake Huron is increasing.

Has the research activity of the Department of Fisheries included a study of the effect of detergents on fish population, and has there been any effort made to stop industries from polluting our waters by the discharge of detergents and other chemical wastes?

How often does the fisheries research board meet and where does it meet? How many members are there on that board, and of those members what is the ratio of scientists to laymen? Who appoints the members of this board?

Mr. Chairman, I have posed a number of questions for the minister and his officials rather than making a long speech, because I felt that perhaps a greater degree of information would be forthcoming. I should like to ask one or two further questions in respect of the 12 mile limit proposition.

Why is the 12 mile limit not reserved for Canadian fishermen, and why are fishermen from the United States, France, Great Britain, Portugal, Spain, Italy, Norway and Denmark allowed to fish in the fishing grounds within that limit? Is there some agreement in this regard? It is my understanding there is such an agreement but I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong. What do we get in return? What are the circumstances surrounding the use of chemicals to destroy fish that prey on other fish, and I am thinking particularly of smelt?

Mr. Chairman, those are all the questions I wish to ask at the present time, but I will ask more after the minister has replied, if there are any unanswered or not clear.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to endorse that portion of the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, dealing with the situation in respect of fishermen in Newfoundland particularly, in the past two or three years. What the hon. member has suggested in this regard has unfortunately been very much the situation in respect of approximately 60 per cent of the fishermen in the area of St. John's West.

The unemployment insurance which is now available to fishermen is not in itself an answer to their problems. Much criticism has been expressed about the inclusion of fishermen in this program, but at least the criticism expressed in Newfoundland follows two opposite directions, because the program does not fit the requirements of those fishermen. This insurance does act as a bonus to those fishermen who have a high catch but does not provide sufficient assistance to the fishermen who have laboured throughout the season and have met with failure.

It seems to me that we have really approached this problem backwards. It may be desirable to give some sort of stimulation by way of a bonus to our east coast fishermen particularly, because the average value of landed fish per fisherman there is between $800 and $900 per year. That is well below what the fishermen should receive in order to provide their families with even a half decent standard of living. I am not quarreling at all with the suggestion that under present circumstances those people should be given some sort of bonus, but I do suggest that it is more important at this time to consider a program of insurance which will offer some protection in years when the average yield is unduly low.

One other thing I should like to mention in respect of fisheries statistics relating to the past several years is that the size of fish caught by the inshore fishermen has been getting smaller each year. While the productivity per fisherman in 1956 was 41,000 pounds, this has decreased steadily each year, to the point where last year it was only 25,000 pounds. There are more fishermen now than in the past, so the total catch may be as good as it was; but I should like to remind the minister that the figures we now have in respect of the catch this year, which indicate that the situation is worse than it was last year, must be considered in the light of that increase in the number of fishermen. Unless there is a tremendous improvement in the fisheries in this area within the next month we will be faced with an even lower productivity per fisherman than last year.

I endorse the remarks of those speakers who have encouraged the minister to continue this admirable program of research, but perhaps the efforts in this field should be concentrated a little more toward determining the causes and remedies with respect to these smaller fish, as well as a study of the causes of the lower productivity per fisherman.

We in Newfoundland are heartened by the progress being made toward the establishment of the 12 mile limit, and we realize that there is a lot of water still to pass under the bridge before base lines are determined. We hope, however, that it is not too optimistic to suggest that the problems in respect of establishing this 12 mile limit will be solved before the 1965 fishing season. With reference to a suggestion made during a recent meeting of the committee on marine and fisheries, I suggested to the minister and his officials that certain conservation areas within Canada's territorial waters will have to be established. The inshore fishermen of Newfoundland, and of those areas of the maritime provinces where there still is an inshore fishery, are not unreasonable and certainly not agitating for the exclusion of Canadian draggers and trawlers from the 12 mile limit but they have a justifiable case in suggesting that certain areas, for example along the southern shore of St. John's West, which is straight for 60 or 70 miles, have not been properly considered in respect of the establishment of base lines. The base line theory does not mean anything because this is a straight shore, so whatever is resolved as far as base lines are concerned is not going to make too much difference to them. There are no large bays or other such bodies of water.

This 60 or 70 miles of coast line is very near the major ocean routes of trans-Atlantic traffic and many of the foreign trawlers and other vessels that go to the port of St. John's for supplies go down this shore. Right now they hover about the 12 or three mile limit as the case may be. This not only causes undue interference with the fishermen's gear but from what I have been able to learn about the situation it is undoubtedly having an effect on the inshore fishery in that area. It has been explained to me not only by biologists and other scientists but by the fishermen themselves, who in their own way quite often know more about the situation, that in years gone by there were traditional runs of fish that came at particular seasons; but now the trawlers and draggers know the approximate times of these runs of fish and they are there to interfere with the potential catch of the inshore fishermen.

Whatever other arrangements are made as far as Canadian territorial waters as a whole are concerned, I think it would not be unreasonable if areas such as the one I am talking about were classified at least for certain periods of the year as conservation areas, to the exclusion of all trawlers and draggers including our own Canadian draggers. When I brought this matter up in the committee I asked the representatives of the Canada fisheries council and the representatives of the industry whether they would have any objection to this and they replied that they would not.

I sympathize with the minister in this regard in that all of the coast line of Newfoundland is the habitat of the inshore fishermen. Perhaps not all of them are so severely affected as those on the southern shore of St. John's West or the northern shore of St. John's East, or part of the strait of Belle Isle where they are very near shipping routes. Perhaps there are large bays where it would not apply, but I certainly think that for some period of the year—it would probably have to be from May or June until December—these areas should be reserved exclusively for the use of the inshore fishermen.

I say again that these areas will be affected very little by any future decision as to base lines because they are primarily areas of straight shore and do not have large bays and the like. If this is done it will have some beneficial effect, I hope, on the inshore catch in Newfoundland.

While I am talking about the inshore fishermen, may I say I think we have to recognize—I think the minister has given an indication that he does—that in addition to these conservation measures we must also strive for greater mobility among the inshore fishermen. We are heartened by the news of the subsidy program for larger boats. I think we must have larger boats and more modern equipment for our inshore fishermen.

In Newfoundland we must also concentrate to a greater degree on our offshore fisheries. I was disappointed several years ago when a number of local fish producers in Newfoundland decided to go out of the offshore fishery business. I have not been able to understand the reason for that action. However, I believe that one particularly energetic and imaginative company is contemplating returning to the offshore fishery.

It seems to me, to be logical, that this would be a more efficient way for them to operate their business, rather than to depend solely on the inshore fishery.

One Newfoundland fishing company will be bringing to Newfoundland waters this November the first of four new factory ships. These ships will be floating fish plants. I was happy to learn from the president of Fisheries Products Limited that one of these trawlers will, it is hoped, be located in St. Mary's bay, St. John's West, next summer. I think this is a step in the right direction toward achieving greater mobility in one aspect of our fisheries at any rate, because these floating fish plants will be able to move into areas where the inshore fishery is better than in other areas.

My greatest concern in rising to speak was to stress the importance of these conservation areas, notwithstanding whatever other arrangements may be made concerning Canada's territorial waters. I think this is a most important step for the part of St. John's West about which I have been talking and I am quite sure it will be applicable to other parts of Newfoundland as well.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) on the intelligent way in which he has administered his department.

I wish to say only a very few words on this subject. As one who comes from an area which is greatly affected by the fishery I would point out that the fishing industry has meant $70 million a year to the province of Nova Scotia. It has provided a great deal of employment, and it is of keen concern to Nova Scotians that the fisheries on the east coast of Canada continue prosperous. In this direction we all know that more and more modern equipment and better facilities have resulted in those who go down to the sea in ships being able to pursue and catch fish more efficiently.

As has been emphasized by a number of speakers, much has been done but much more needs to be done with regard to obtaining a greater knowledge of the conditions under which fish will multiply and prosper and with regard to the amount of protection that will be necessary by way of international agreements in the years ahead, to assure that our fisheries are never completely exploited and used up with the result that the industry would disappear.

In this connection I should like to mention the fact that at Dalhousie University Dr. W. R. Trost, dean of graduate studies, has been appointed chairman of Dalhousie's aquaculture committee. This committee has proposed a $1 million aquatron. The name "aquatron" has been coined for this facility because it is a significant departure from any existing aquarium or aquatic experimental facility now existing. It is proposed to use the aquatron for the study of conditions under which fish and all sea life prosper, and the experiments are to be carried out in co-operation with the Bedford institute of oceanography. I submit that this type of development needs every encouragement from the national research council and the Department of Fisheries because it is only by acquiring greater knowledge of conditions in the sea at different depths and pressures that we can eventually turn the fishing industry from a hunting to a farming industry.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to delay my estimates. I feel I have already spoken long enough in introducing them but I am sure hon. members expect me to answer some of the questions they have directed to me and I want to try to do so as briefly as possible.

The hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) referred to the order in council passed on the 17th of July exempting certain countries from the application of the 12 mile fishing zone. I am sure hon. members will understand why this was done. It was done for those countries with whom we are negotiating, inasmuch as we could not expect to enforce the 12 mile fishing zone on those countries before the negotiations were completed.

The hon. member also referred to the protection of seals, particularly in the gulf of St. Lawrence. The only foreign country involved is Norway and we are at present negotiating with Norway in order to assure full protection in that particular area. The hon. member also asked for details with regard to the vessel replacement and building program for this year. In the Newfoundland area we are replacing the Cinderella at a cost of $110,000. In the maritimes area we are replacing the Hyperia and Obelia at a total cost of $57,000. In the Pacific area we are replacing the Rissa $10,000; the Bonilla Rock $10,000; the Branta, $20,000 and we have also a replacement for the Statistic at $16,000. In addition a start has been made on the provision of an additional deep sea patrol vessel of the Cape Freels type for the maritime area, and consideration is being given now to a similar vessel for the Pacific coast.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni referred to Canada's share of the world fishery, particularly in connection with F.A.O. I am pleased to report that in so far as the development of world fisheries, the resultant threat of depletion and keen international competition are concerned, the department is keeping in close touch with all these developments. Canada is active in every important international commission, as I have mentioned in my remarks, and is supporting the fisheries division of the F.A.O. in its attempt to cope with these growing problems of international conservation and development. In fact two of the senior officials of my department will attend an F.A.O. meeting in Rome next month as part of the Canadian delegation.

The hon. member also mentioned the possibility of limiting the number of salmon licences on the west coast. Reference has been made to this subject by several members, including the hon. member for Skeena and the member for Fraser valley. I am sure all hon. members are fully aware of the difficulties connected with implementing such a restriction. The matter is presently under very active study by the department, and it is our intention to take action in this field as soon as this study has been completed. However, we want to do it in an adequate and equitable manner. I am sure the hon. members who raised this question understand the complexity of the problem. I want to assure them it is under very active study by the department.

The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg referred to section 31 of the Fisheries Act. Here again, I want to assure the hon. member this matter is under consideration by the department. The matter is much more complicated than just withdrawing this section from the Fisheries Act. I should like to refer the hon. member to section 76 of the Fisheries Act which was introduced in 1961 and has some direct effect on section 31, particularly as it affects lobster fishing. It is true that certain states, such as the state of Maine in the United States, permit lobster fishing on the high seas. We must remember also that in those areas the lobster season is open the year round. They do not have the problem we have in our Atlantic provinces, where we have limited seasons, and different seasons in different areas. We are studying this matter which, as I have said, is also very complicated.

We are also taking into consideration the suggestion the hon. member made in connection with some research being done in this direction, particularly on the Grand Banks. In so far as oyster development is concerned, and I referred to this in my remarks, we now have an oyster hatchery in operation at Ellerslie and we are convinced it will be a great asset to the oyster industry of the Atlantic provinces.

The hon. member for Skeena has made a special reference to the third meeting which is now taking place in Ottawa between Canada, Japan and the United States in connection with the north Pacific treaty. I am sure that, as I stated yesterday, hon. members understand why I cannot give more details about the negotiations which are taking place. We would not have a third meeting of these negotiators if our Canadian delegation had not maintained a firm position. I want to assure hon. members that our aim is to ensure that we have full protection for the salmon and halibut fisheries of the Pacific. If we had not maintained this firm position, probably an agreement would have been reached long ago. I want to give this assurance, that it is our hope, and the hope also of the other two countries concerned, that this treaty should be maintained because this protection is essential to the salmon fishery for future generations in the Pacific area.

In so far as the committee appointed last spring to study the wage dispute and problems affecting the fisheries of British Columbia, I am pleased to report that the work of the committee has been completed and a report is now being prepared. This report should be submitted to my department within the next month or so. After it has been given study, it is our intention to make the report public.

With reference to the development of markets for dogfish, I may say that experiments are now being conducted in co-operation with the industry. It is true these experiments are at an early stage. I believe we took this decision in February or early March, and we have been in communication with the industry. This experimentation is now under way, and we hope that later this year or early next year we will have some results to report.

In connection with the pollution of salmon streams, I may say that this is a subject of intense effort by the department. We are asking for the co-operation of the industries concerned. The hon. member asked also why the government has not ratified the Geneva convention. The question of ratification is one for the government to take under consideration, and it is under consideration now. One of the main reasons for the delay is the decision of the government to proceed with the establishment of the 12 mile fishing zone. After our negotiations have been completed in this sphere, I am sure it is the intention of the government to give further consideration to the ratification of the Geneva convention.

The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale has asked whether more publicity might be given or better displays made in connection with our salt water fish. I want to assure the hon. member we are making every effort possible in this field. As the hon. member knows, we have test kitchens in Winnipeg and in Edmonton which are doing some work in this connection and we want to give publicity to our fisheries products.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo has mentioned many of the problems that affect particularly the fisheries of Newfoundland. It is true that at a federal-provincial conference which took place only eight months ago, a decision was reached to launch a national development program for the fisheries. We want to make sure every move we make in this direction is the right one. It is not a matter of giving money away or spending money without knowing it would be effective, and that it would reach the primary producer. The hon. member has mentioned the amount allocated to the estimates for research. I am pleased to report that this year we are spending over $1 million more for research than we did last year. There is much more research to be done and we are doing everything possible to accelerate the research program.

In connection with legislation to enable foreign draggers to land fish in Canadian ports, this matter is under study by my department in co-operation with the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and the Department of Justice, but I am not in a position at this stage to state what the decision might be in this connection. There are many factors involved, and we have to take into consideration that if we allow foreign vessels to land their fish on Canadian soil this will extend the fishing time for foreign vessels, because at present they have to return to unload at their home ports. We have to consider that if we allow them to land their catch in Canada, so much more fish will be taken out of the waters adjoining our coasts.

The hon. member for Simcoe East asked me a series of questions which I have tried to list, and I will try to answer some of them. I want to assure the hon. member that the inland fisheries are receiving close attention from the department. Since the federal-provincial conference was held, a federal-provincial committee has been established, with participation by the prairie provinces and Ontario. This committee has met on two, and I believe three occasions, and we are working on a program in order to develop further the inland fisheries.

The hon. member also asked me a question in connection with parasites in harbour seals. It is true that there is a certain parasite in harbour seals. Extensive research has shown that although it is evident in many species, it matures in harbour seals and not in other species of seals. For this reason the department has taken measures to reduce their numbers, especially by providing a bounty, though this may not be altogether in line with some of the opposition we have been having in the last month in connection with the seal operation.

The hon. member also asked a very important question concerning the number of research stations. The fisheries research board, under a special act of parliament, is appointed by the Minister of Fisheries and has 17 members, nine of whom are scientists, the others being representative of the industry in different sections of the country. There are five biological stations, five technological laboratories and two oceanographical groups. Of the total staff of 736 over 200 are scientists and about the same number are technicians.

At this stage I want to praise the work being done by the fisheries research board of Canada. It is recognized throughout the world. Canada is well advanced in the field of research, and at the federal provincial conference we gave an assurance to the provinces that we were prepared to take more and more responsibility in this field. In some cases this will be in co-operation with the provinces. For example the province of Ontario is playing a great part in fisheries research, but without going into the details I would say that about 90 per cent of the research on fisheries is done by the federal research board.

We know that pollution of waters by detergents emanating from factories is taking place. We are studying this problem, and have in some cases taken action against factories for polluting waters containing fish.

These are answers to some of the questions which have been directed to me and I hope I have satisfied, in part, hon. members who have asked questions.

Mr. Rynard: The minister missed one point in dealing with the effect of lamprey eels on trout and, second, I would like to ask why are the fish decreasing in numbers throughout the great lakes generally?

Mr. Robichaud: I am pleased to give a brief report on lamprey control. I am quite optimistic about the results which have been obtained in lamprey control by the experimental treatments in lake Superior. By the end of 1961 all known lamprey spawning streams, tributary to the lake, had been treated with specific lampricide. In 1962 the catch of adult spawning lamprey in the barriers dropped sharply from 54,000 to 10,000. Approximately the same number returned in 1963. The lake trout have reacted rather sensationally to this reduction in showing less wounding, a great increase in numbers of large trout over 20 inches, and in greater availability to fishermen's nets.

The plantings of trout have apparently been quite successful in that large numbers of hatchery fish now form the basis of the population. Our problem is to determine whether the costs of control will, in effect, be economically sound. In the meantime we are doing limited work in other lakes, since it is our opinion that a complete program should not be initiated until we are definitely convinced of its efficacy.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I want to revive a matter I raised earlier, and I hope the minister will not be offended when I say he rather glossed over the subject in his answer. It is the question of pollution of waters, which is a serious matter, and I can quote the minister's own words to stress the importance of it. In the communiqué dated January 24 of this year, following the federal-provincial conference, the minister said this:

> The problem of pollution was recognized as being one of the most serious facing the fisheries today. The need was emphasized for the development of efficient and accurate techniques for detecting and assessing pollution and for corrective measures. The importance of fisheries representation on pollution boards was generally agreed upon.

I think everyone would agree with that statement by the minister, and I just pose to him a thought about two pulp mills which are proposed to be built in the middle of the northern part of B.C., each of which is to be located at or near salmon spawning streams. One mill is to be built at Kitimat, and the Kitimat river is a salmon river. The other mill is proposed to be built at Houston, further in the interior, away from the sea coast, but none the less in an area which is highly productive of salmon in the Morris river system. I would like the minister to tell us what steps are being taken to ensure that these salmon spawning areas will not be destroyed by the effluence from these pulp mills.

We had a very sad experience in Prince Rupert with the Columbia Cellulose mill, in which the area surrounding it is now barren for productive purposes. In fact I question the possibility of rehabilitating it as a spawning area. It might be possible with an extensive investment by the company involved and by the Department of Fisheries, but we want to prevent such a thing occurring again. These new pulp mills are on the drawing boards and this question of the spawning grounds should be tackled now.

I also raised with the minister a question about the rehabilitation of former salmon spawning streams that had become barren, or destroyed due to a variety of reasons. I mentioned in particular the Queen Charlotte islands, and incidentally in passing may I say the recent order in council issued regarding salmon streams was a step in the right direction. By its terms the department is allowed to step in and prevent the removal of gravel from salmon spawning streams. Obviously there was conflict as to whether or not this was provincial or federal jurisdiction; at least that was the reasoning given to me by the people in the fisheries department. They felt they were powerless to proceed to prevent the scooping up of gravel out of salmon spawning streams because in fact that was a landed area, and consequently under the jurisdiction of the province. I understand there was a recent order in council amendment which gives the fisheries department authority, as I understand it, to prevent that sort of thing. However, we are interested in the rehabilitation of the streams there.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies to this question would he allow me to add a few remarks to those of the hon. member for Skeena. I think the minister is probably aware that one of the first comprehensive studies ever made by the department, as far as I know, of pollution as a result of pulp and paper mill installation was made in respect of the upper part of the Alberni inlet prior to the establishment of a pulp mill there. Many views have been expressed as to the success or otherwise of control measures which have been put into effect based on the fact finding of that study. Certainly it is evident that these efforts have not altogether been unsuccessful in view of, as the minister knows, the recent successful arrival of these new runs of pinks through the controlled spawning channels of Robertson creek. However, I should like to say that from time to time people do come to me seriously concerned about the evidence of mortality in fish as a result of the effluents of that plant right at the mouth of the Somass river system.

I am wondering whether the earlier investigations which were made have fully taken into account the tremendous expansion which has taken place in that plant since the original survey and planning was done. I know some of the local organizations, such as the Port Alberni and district chamber of commerce, have had this sort of question before them. If the minister has any late reports on how that program is operating I think it might be worth while to pass them on to the committee in reference to the consideration of this whole question.

The hon. member for Skeena raised the question of the proposed development of pulp mills on the main stem of the Fraser river system. Probably the minister has already seen the summary of the recent annual report of the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission which is contained in the August 24 issue of "Facts on Fish" published by the fisheries association of B.C., in which it is pointed out that this whole question highlights the recent annual report of the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission. This report indicates concern, even though adequate control measures may be planned, at the accidental spillages of highly toxic materials into the main stem of the Fraser, which at the wrong time could very well accidentally produce disastrous results.

I relate my question in connection with what may be planned in pollution control on the Fraser to the earlier studies which were made in the Alberni inlet and Somass river systems, for the definite purpose of suggesting that there is a very major difference in kind as to the problem which may have to be faced in connection with the avoidance of pollution on the Fraser to that which was based on the establishment of the pulp processing mills at the head of the Alberni inlet. I know that in at least one instance in my constituency the existence of a pulp mill has, according to information I have derived from discussion with fisheries people, ruled out the possibility of the continued existence of salmon. I am referring to the pulp mill at Port Alice on the Neroutsos arm in the Quatsino sound area. While I have been informed that no major part of the Quatsino salmon run has been involved in this, nevertheless I mention it because it has been put to me that it is either a question of having a pulp mill or having fish; there is no feasible alternative between the two. Fortunately in this particular instance no major salmon runs, as I understand it, were involved. The damage which has been done is that the residents of the area now have to travel a good many miles to do a bit of sport salmon fishing, whereas a few years ago when the plant was smaller and the volume of pollutants was lower they were able to go out after supper and catch themselves a salmon without too much difficulty. I think it is in the perspective of what has occurred in the past that some of us would like the minister to give us a pretty careful appraisal of just what may be involved in this proposal to establish a pulp industry on the main stems of the Fraser river and, as the hon. member for Skeena mentioned, in the Kitimat area.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the problem raised by the hon. members for Skeena and Comox-Alberni I would assure them that the problem of pollution is one of great concern to my department. It is a very important problem and I wish to thank them for bringing it to the attention of the committee. Pollution of our salmon streams is the subject of intense efforts by the department, and in most cases now pollution by pulp mills is kept at a harmless level because we have discussions with the companies in the early stages of the planning of a new pulp mill. This is also backed by the Fisheries Act itself. We insist at all times on adequate precautions. We co-operate closely with the provinces and the municipalities in this general field of pollution control. The two cases referred by the hon. member have been in the mind of the department, and I understand that discussions have already taken place in order to take the necessary steps at an early stage to prevent any pollution effect from their operation.

With regard to the rehabilitation of salmon runs in the Queen Charlotte islands, this is being attempted at some stage through regulation of the fishery, and we can say that we feel we are meeting with success.

Mr. Barnett: There is one other matter, Mr. Chairman, that I for one would like to raise on which I should like to invite any comment which the minister may care to make, while we are still considering the broader policies of his department. It is a matter which may be of more direct concern really to his colleague the Minister of Transport, and I may attempt to pursue it in a little more detail when we reach the consideration of the estimates of that department. The minister may have had drawn to his attention a question which was recently raised publicly by the Pacific trollers' association with respect to the operation of the coastguard on the west coast. As I read the substance of their complaint it was that both of the coastguard cutters had been put into operation on the straits of Georgia area, they claimed almost entirely for the benefit of pleasure craft. Therefore, they said, the main troll fleet off the west coast of Vancouver island was left without the kind of protection which the coastguard, they said, should be prepared to provide for them.

There was one aspect of their representation in which I felt they did not make a complete appraisal of the situation, because they linked their statement with respect to the idea of having both coastguard cutters operating in the inside waters with a rather critical reference to the existing lifeboat stations at Bamfield and Tofino.

I would urge the minister not to be moved too far by the statements they made in respect to the operation of these two lifeboat stations. It may be true that these people, thinking in terms probably of the troll fleet operating a good many miles offshore, are not fully aware of the value of those two lifeboat stations to the fishermen and others who are perhaps somewhat more closely inshore, and to the many other ancillary services in rescue that these lifeboat stations have rendered for many years. They claim that these two boats are outdated and are not properly equipped in the modern sense, which may very well be true. I would invite the minister to comment on this subject. I would also urge him to confer rather carefully with his colleague the Minister of Transport on this question, with particular reference to (a) ensuring that adequate coastguard protection be provided to the fullest extent for the fleet operating off the west coast, and (b) giving careful attention to the matter before any further move is made toward reducing the services—in my view, the very valuable services—that are performed from the existing lifeboat stations at Bamfield and Tofino.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I will bring this matter to the attention of my colleague the Minister of Transport.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I have only one question to put to the minister in regard to this famous water pollution.

We are wondering who is really responsible for this. The minister said a moment ago that he was highly interested in this matter. I can tell him that in our region we have been highly interested in this matter for over 30 years.

I am speaking of the Mistassini river, the best salmon river in the whole region. In the past 30 years, salmon has practically been driven away from the river because the refuse of a pulp mill have created a dam right across the river.

Last summer, I went to see for myself what was going on. Layers of white matter extending over a quarter mile could be seen. The fish, the salmon that feed on that are poisoned to death.

Various governments were asked to do something to eliminate such waste and also those accumulated on the bottom of the river. Some friends and I, in diving suits, inspected the bottom of the river. We found that there was from 8 to 10 feet thick of log wastage besides those floating islands of white matter that kill the fish.

We heard people say: "We are deeply concerned by that problem." And the minister said that the effects of waste from pulp mills are not so serious.

Mr. Robichaud: No.

Mr. Gauthier: I hope I misunderstood—

Mr. Robichaud: I certainly did not make such a statement.

Mr. Gauthier: I want to call the minister's attention to the fact that the waste product of the paper mills in my district are detrimental to our fishing waters and, more particularly, to the salmon run in the higher Mistassini.

I wrote to the federal and provincial governments and received only vague answers. I now seize this opportunity of asking the minister whether the matter of water pollution comes under a joint plan, or just under the federal or the provincial government, so as to find out which government should be approached in future to obtain some protection.

Mr. Robichaud: I shall answer my hon. friend that the administration of fisheries in the province of Quebec is under provincial authority.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to raise a matter involving a particular fishery, at the moment one in which primarily native Indians are interested. It is just a moment or two to six o'clock. The manner in which I intended to describe what is taking place with respect to pollution of one of the rivers which is highly productive of oolachan would not be conducive to a reasonably pleasant supper, so I will leave the descriptive part of it until we resume at eight o'clock, if that is satisfactory. It involves the oolachan fishery, and primarily the pumping of raw sewage by the municipality of Kitimat into the Kitimat river. By mentioning now what the subject matter is, this will give the minister an opportunity if he so desires, to refresh his memory over the supper hour as to just what has taken place there. As there are some other matters about which I wish to make inquiries of the minister, I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether we might call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I almost missed my opportunity to speak because I was giving some information, about which I wish to make reference, to the minister.

The oolachan fishery is almost exclusively a concern of the native Indian people of the west coast. It is one of their traditional foods and part of their regular diet. The oolachan is a small fish much like the smelt, and I think biologists would tell us that it is in fact a species of smelt, although there is some argument in this regard. I have given some of these oolachan to the minister and have some in front of me on the desk. You will see that they are relatively small, seven or eight inches in length at the maximum. Biologists do not know much about the habits of the oolachan because there has been only a small amount of research done in this regard.

The oolachan is an anadromous fish, as is the salmon, spending its growing years in salt water and running to fresh water to spawn in the spring, probably on a two year cycle. I believe they spawn in the silted bottoms of the rivers rather than in gravel, as do salmon.

The oolachan are caught by the Indians with the use of a very fine mesh net, as are herring and other similar fish. You will realize that because of their size a fine net must be used to catch them during their progress up river. These fish are cured by a smoking process and are sometimes bottled after being smoked, though very often they are dried or broiled. They are also rendered down by simmering in water to produce grease or fish oil. Oolachan grease or oil is of great importance to the native people. These fish are very oily and are often referred to as candlefish because, after proper processing, they can be used just as one would use a candle.

As a result of the development of the Aluminum Company of Canada project, with its smelter constructed on the Kitimat river a few years ago, a great deal of raw sewage from the community is being pumped into the river. I have seen this situation and have taken pictures of it, which I have forwarded to the Minister of National Health and Welfare because of the obvious health problem involved.

During the netting of oolachan, using these fine mesh nets, the Indians catch oolachan as well as everything contained in this sewage including human excrement, tissue paper —which is used extensively and discharged— discarded sanitary napkins, used and discarded condoms, and many other like articles. I only mention this fact because it is a fact that these things are discharged in the raw sewage and are caught up in the fine nets used by the Indians to catch the oolachan.

An extremely serious health problem exists in this area as a result of this situation, and Dr. Paul Woolacott, of Kitimat, was of the opinion that two people nearly died early this spring as a result of gastroenteritis contracted by eating oolachan which had been contaminated as a result of this raw sewage.

While the oolachan fishery may not be of importance in a commercial sense, it is of vital concern to the Indian people, as I am sure the minister is aware from personal experience or from advice he has received from the officials of his department. If the raw sewage from the community of Kitimat is to continue to be discharged into the Kitimat river, resulting in this pollution, while it may not interfere with or destroy the oolachan it will undoubtedly continue to interfere with the fishery as far as the Indian people are concerned. The spring of the year is the traditional time when these Indians harvest certain sea products, but they must maintain their harvest of oolachan because it forms a very important part of their diet. If this health hazard is to continue they will have to discontinue catching the oolachan, thereby losing a staple and traditional part of their food.

This question has been kicked around by the Department of National Health and Welfare, which appears not to be too interested in it and does not seem to grasp the importance of the problem. The B.C. provincial government authorities also do not appear to be too interested. The municipality of Kitimat, which might engage in the installation of a sewage treatment unit, has not proceeded so far because from their point of view the installation of such a sewage treatment plant would be financially prohibitive, having in mind the relatively small population of Kitimat compared to the cost of installing such a plant. So far the Department of Fisheries has not to my knowledge done anything extensive in attempting to correct the situation.

However, somewhere along the line some government agency has to start the ball rolling by offering some help. Maybe it will require a contribution from the Department of Fisheries to the municipality of Kitimat to assist in the installation of a sewage treatment plant. Perhaps it will be a joint effort of the Department of Fisheries, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the provincial government, especially in view of the rapport that exists on fisheries matters between the federal authorities and the provinces. Somewhere a start has to be made, and I appeal publicly to the minister, knowing his sense of fair play, his desire for the preservation and conservation of the fisheries and his desire to protect at all levels the interests of all those who live off the fisheries on the west coast.

I am merely asking him to undertake a study and to look at the situation to see if some proposal cannot be worked out. Perhaps this is being done already. There are five or six months left before the next oolachan run comes along in the spring of the year and if we start to work on the problem now we may be able to come up with some satisfactory solution by that time so that the natives at Kitimat can continue to catch their traditional fish. I notice that the two or three fish I left with the minister a moment ago have been consumed, undoubtedly with some relish, and from this sample the minister will appreciate how important and necessary it is that the native people, whose traditional food this is, continue to have the opportunity to catch and consume it without placing their lives in jeopardy in the process. If the minister would care to make some comment I would be very happy to hear it.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. I wish to thank the hon. member for bringing this situation concerning the oolachan to our attention. I note that this small fish acts like the smelt in that it comes from salt water to spawn in fresh water. The problem he has mentioned is well known to my department. We have made some surveys and have done some research concerning the situation. We have found out that the oolachan are not affected by the condition of the water and we are unable to act with respect to the matter because it does not come within the scope of our jurisdiction. It is a local problem which needs the co-operation of the provincial authorities, who are responsible for health matters, and also the local municipal authorities. In view of the remarks made by the hon. member I want to assure him that we will again take up the matter with the authorities concerned to find out if something cannot be done to improve the situation.

Mr. Howard: Just as an adjunct may I say it is undoubtedly true that the oolachan is not adversely affected by swimming through the sewage area.

Mr. Robichaud: They are immune.

Mr. Howard: It is the opinion of Dr. Woolacott that the trouble arises from the fact that when the native people catch the oolachan and take them out of the water they cannot spend the time scraping the muck and guck off each fish before hanging it up to dry and to be smoked, and in the process some of the dissolved solids cling to the fish. All fish have some degree of slime and this matter just sticks to them and makes it that much worse. I know the minister is conscientious about this matter and we would appreciate something worth while being done.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, I have one question to ask the minister. On January 14, 1964 a college of fisheries, navigation, marine engineering and electronics was opened in Newfoundland with Dr. W. F. Hampton as president. I am sure this college will prove very beneficial to our fisheries in Newfoundland. Dr. Hampton has worked as a control and research chemist with industry and has also served on the staff of the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations with headquarters in Rome. He also played a very important part in the development of the product now known as fish sticks. As a matter of fact, I believe he was primarily responsible for this development. Would the minister advise if his department provides grants for such colleges as the one recently opened in Newfoundland and whether these colleges have an integral part in the program of fisheries management and development of his department? Also, do they have a distinct role in the program of national fisheries development?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the hon. member that we are cooperating very closely with the work being done at the new fisheries college recently established in Newfoundland. We are contributing technically, but so far as financial assistance is concerned that comes under the vocational training program of the Department of Labour.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I have a few brief remarks and questions regarding vote No. 1 of the fisheries estimates. I congratulate the minister on his elevation to his important post in the cabinet. I listened with interest to the rosy picture he painted of our national fisheries industry. However, Mr. Chairman, I am not rising completely to that bait.

The federal Department of Fisheries seems to be principally interested in ocean fishing. I point out to the minister that in his speech he completely overlooked the great expanses of inland fresh water. I refer to the great lakes, lake Superior, lake Huron, lake Erie and lake Ontario. Each of them is a contributor to our international balance of trade through the fresh water fishery.

As I said, the minister painted a glowing and optimistic picture of the industry over which his department presides. I would point out to the minister that this is at variance with the latest commendable studies and work of economists. I happened to have in my office a book I obtained from the library some time ago. It is by Caves and Holton, economists of Harvard University and is entitled "The Canadian Economy". At page 560 they state:

> The fisheries of Canada take the prize for slowest rate of growth of any of the major Canadian industries, with output rising only slightly more than 0.5 per cent annually since 1926.

So, we have nothing of which to be very proud, except the fact that the product of the industry is of great value for the sustenance of millions of people, especially in the United States.

I return again to the great lakes and the importance of the great lakes fisheries, Mr. Chairman, to our balance of trade. The principal market for fish from our district, that is the shores of Prince Edward-Lennox, is the New York market. As a result of what I believe to be the very serious condition existing in the great lakes, especially lake Ontario, which is the lowest of the lakes in the chain and thus receives all of the pollution that comes into the other lakes, the fishing industry is in serious condition. I have here, Mr. Chairman, a communication from an experienced fisherman who has devoted his life to the fishing industry in the county of Prince Edward. He sets out very briefly the conditions that exist, and I quote:

> This will be my twentieth year in the commercial fishing business and during that time I have worked in just about every phase of the commercial fishing business. My company has been active in both catching and processing fish for human consumption. We have sold both packaged fish and live fish to wholesalers in Canada and the United States. About five years ago we noticed a decrease in some species of fish and at that time in order to substitute for this shortage we started to prepare fish for biological studies. Since then we have supplied such companies as Borealis Science of Cooksville, Ontario, Wards Science of Rochester, New York and Carolina Science of Burlington, North Carolina, with both fish and fish eggs that we scientifically prepared for biological studies. This sudden scarcity of fish in this part of lake Ontario is a real tragedy for many fishermen as fishing is all that many of them have ever done and there are 240 licences issued in this area for taking fish commercially. Many of them are wondering if this is the end of the business, and if so what to do from here on. We know that in the past some species of fish disappeared but they made a comeback but this time nearly all species are going and not even our top-notch biologists can tell us why. I feel that much research must be done—

This is true, if the commercial fishing industry in lake Ontario and the other great lakes is going to survive. I point out to the minister the clear and vital need for his department devoting their utmost to the study of this situation. We are living in a fool's paradise because pollution of our lakes and streams is allowed to continue. I believe things are not well with the industry over which this department presides because I note the hon. member for York East has pointed out some places in which there are problems connected with the industry.

We have one family among many in my area who have been fishing for a living for many years. This family reports to me that they own approximately $100,000 worth of first class fishing equipment, including a tug, and many nets. They cannot now make a living from commercial fishing, even with all the gear they have accumulated because of the reduction in the available catch. They are going out and coming in with nearly nothing. They are losing money on their investment. It would be well for the federal-provincial committees the minister has mentioned, and the international joint commission, who have a certain amount of jurisdiction over these international waters, to study this situation of pollution on the great lakes. Pollution sounds the death knell of commercial fishing on these lakes unless we do something about it. We are, in fact, befouling our own nests. Last summer, in fact, the pickerel were floating dead by the millions on the bay of Quinte and along the shores of Prince Edward county, that is the northern shore of lake Ontario. The whitefish have been killed off by the lamprey. We have not even conquered the lamprey eel as yet, although I will admit that progress has been made along this line. We have a long way to go yet. The lake trout are practically extinct in all the lakes except lake Superior.

This matter deserves the attention of the government, first, because of the employment factor; second, because of the food processing factor which adds to employment in the secondary industrial field. Third, the transportation factor, which is very important and the international balance of trade which I mentioned earlier, deserve our attention. In other words, the fresh water fishing industry has a favourable impact on Canada's international balance of trade. The factor of future economic stability is also worthy of note, to say nothing of the advertising factor. The fresh water fish from the great lakes have made a good name for Canada abroad and in the United States. The minister has said that we should, in our educational programming, encourage greater consumption of fish. I commend him for that statement and for his work along this line. Another part of this program should be directed toward conservation and better national housekeeping. There should be greater liaison and co-operation between the United States and Canadian governments, and through the international joint commission, in relation to the abatement and prohibition of pollution of the great lakes. I ask the minister to use his influence and that of all other bodies that have jurisdiction over these lakes, to bring about an improvement in these conditions which are certainly nothing of which we can be proud at the moment.

Mr. Fisher: There are only a few points I want to touch upon. I gather that my colleague has already made a similar suggestion to the one I made in connection with the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, when I argued this was basically a scientific department. I believe this argument applies also to the Department of Fisheries. It seems to me that one of the considerations this government should be giving is to a complete reorganization of the ministries and having, generally, a minister of science, particularly in terms of the applied sciences. Of course, we can think of all sorts of reorganizations. Obviously we will have to do something with the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Industry clustering in each other's fields. It seems to me that fisheries, forestry and mines are three departments with which one could start, because their activities are primarily scientific and investigative rather than being in the political sphere or where they have political connotations in terms of the requirement of immediate political action. I think this should be seriously considered.

Some people may say, "It is all very well for you to make such a suggestion with regard to fisheries when you don't come from the maritimes and you don't have all this squid cutting and all the other problems in connection with the hand lines and so on," but I am not convinced that the maritime people, or the people who still depend on fishing for their income, would really be bereft or deprived of something if they stopped having a minister to report to, and instead had a general scientific agency to which to report, because it seems to me that aside from a rather small amount—and what appears to be a disappearing amount—of subsidies through various programs, the actual activities that touch the fishermen in any political or in any other way that starts up partisan controversy are largely disappearing.

It has been notable that our friend who is the minister, when he was in opposition was one of the most bristling and aggressive of the members of the opposition. When he became a minister you would have expected him to be the same way, but the plain fact of the matter is that his portfolio does not give him the opportunity to be so. We can all remember our very affable friend over here from Prince Edward Island when he was minister of fisheries. In essence the role, so far as it was a political one in the House of Commons, did not really give him an opportunity for the general cut and thrust and the general political responsibility that I suggest attaches to a minister.

My feeling is that this is one more of those departments we should consider when we take a look at the old traditional attitude, and see if we cannot re-arrange them under a general ministry of science, and possibly wipe out one or two portfolios, or perhaps provide portfolios in other areas and other fields which might merit them. If you judge by the interest in the questions in the house, broadcasting alone would merit a minister much more than fisheries, mines and technical surveys or forestry. It seems to me the thing to do so far as ministerial things are concerned is to adjust to the positions that are considered important, relevant and current among the people in politics.

One of the questions I would like to ask the minister relates to the advice that was given by the scientists of the Department of Fisheries to the other departments, and particularly to the Department of Transport, with regard to the question of opening up the Trent waterways. As the minister knows, game and fishing associations in Canada have made this somewhat of an issue, and I know my hon. friend over here from up in the Orillia area has been actively interested in this. I have a couple of fishing and game groups who have seen what has happened with the lamprey eel on lake Superior, and they are of the opinion that steps should be taken or plans made to go ahead with supporting a program that would offset the entry of the lamprey eel into lakes following the opening up of the Trent waterways. They feel this would be a most retrograde step, and I understand the decision to go ahead has been taken. Because of that I would like to know if advice was sought from the Department of Fisheries, and what advice was given.

The second point I want to ask about is whether the minister's officials have considered doing an economic study in relation to the fisheries situation on lake Superior. As the minister knows, the fishery, so far as trout are concerned, has been almost wiped out because of the lamprey. However, we assume that because of various control measures that have been taken the trout are coming back, though not with tremendous speed. It seems to me at this time, particularly when the number of fishermen on the Canadian shores is very low, it might be a good time to go ahead with our United States friends and make an economic study of the future of the fisheries on lake Superior. This is especially important, because more and more use is being made of lake Superior which is littered with campers, U.S. fishermen, and of course, Canadian fishermen, and when I say this I am thinking of sports fishermen rather than commercial fishermen.

It seems to me there may be a case—I am not supporting it particularly—that as lake Superior comes back it should not be opened up again or not turned back to the trout fisheries on a commercial basis. Rather, it should be exploited for sport by Canadian fishermen. This should be particularly interesting if the stories I hear from my acquaintances in provincial fish hatcheries are true, and these stories are to the effect that landlocked salmon are adjusting very well to planting experiments in lake Superior.

I suggest to the minister this might be a place where his department could play a role in an economic study, undertaken jointly with the provincial department of lands and forests and the United States wild life service, or one of the other U.S. agencies that operate in connection with the lamprey control program.

The last matter I want to question is whether it is true that the lamprey control program has been successful in cutting out the reproduction cycle so far as the streams are concerned, and whether it is true there is now strong evidence that the lamprey is turning to cycles on the flats and beach areas along the shores of lake Superior. I am told this particular eel is adapting to the control program, that it is taking defensive steps, I suppose in a way by instinct, to survive the control program. If this is so, means of control are going to be tremendously expensive, and I would like to have a comment from the minister on whether this is true.

I would also like him, not during the debate on these estimates but in his annual report, to give a clear analysis of the amount of expenditure on the lamprey program by all the various agencies. I do not mean the contributions. I want to make a distinction, and I would like him to show where the money came from for the program as a whole, and then how the money was spent by the various agencies. I appreciate the information that is available in his report, but I would like to get a complete picture of how all the agencies, those of Canada at the federal and provincial level, and those of the United States at the state and federal level have responded and co-ordinated in this program, because from what we can see it has been an example of fruitful co-operation and co-ordination.

That, Mr. Chairman, sums up the remarks I want to make on the Department of Fisheries. There is one other matter I would be interested in, but again just as something prospective. I would like to know whether the minister or his officials are aware of any work being done in so far as exploiting the fisheries on the shore of Hudson bay are concerned, up north of Winisk, particularly with reference to the Indian population. I raise this matter because this is part of my constituency—a very hard part to visit, as it is about 500 miles from the main population centre—and recently I have received information that the Indians in that area, because of their association with the D.E.W. line work and the attractions of airport life, have gradually lost a number of their traditional skills that enabled them to support themselves. It has been put to me that one of the things which could make their life more attractive from an economic point of view would be if they were staffed and fitted and given a training program to exploit the fisheries along Hudson bay shores. I do not know what merit is in the suggestion, but I would like to know whether the minister is aware of it.

Mr. Robichaud: I shall reply briefly to the questions which have been asked by my hon. friend from Port Arthur. First of all, I want to tell the hon. member that there is so much work to do in the Department of Fisheries which requires so much of my time that I cannot devote more time to my work in the house, as the hon. member suggested.

He asked about the opening of the Trent waterways. Let me assure him that my department is well aware of the effect it could have on the movement of lampreys from one area to another, but we are now investigating that matter. So far as lake Superior is concerned we agree that trout have virtually been wiped out, and it is recognized that this has been partly due to the effect of lampreys. In this regard joint studies are being made to find out what is the economic effect of the money spent on control of lampreys to date. As the hon. member knows, the federal government has been spending from $500,000 to $600,000 yearly on this program which is shared by the United States government on, I would say, a somewhat larger scale. We know to some extent, as I reported before the dinner hour, what effect the lamprey program has had on the lakes, but we want to find out if it is effective economically. We are not yet sure, but this does not mean that we are going to cut down this program. We are working jointly with the great lakes commission and hope that we will be able to solve this problem.

So far as exploiting the fisheries on the shores of Hudson bay is concerned, I know this is of main concern to the Indian population of the area. We have conducted some studies particularly in relation to marine mammals. As I mentioned in my opening remarks yesterday, we are building near Ste. Anne de Bellevue a new laboratory which will look after the problems of the Arctic. I am sure that once we have this laboratory in operation we will be able to look more closely after the problems of that particular area.

Mr. Fisher: May I just develop the lamprey question a little further. Is there any indication that the lamprey cycle is adjusting to the measures which have been taken to poison the streams? There is evidence now that they are using the beaches and shallow waters in the bays for the larvae stage of the cycle.

Mr. Robichaud: We are aware of this, Mr. Chairman, and what we are trying to find out is whether the amount of lampreys using the beaches and shallow waters are increasing compared to the years before we introduced this program. I do assure the hon. member that this matter is under investigation now, but I am not in a position to make a definite statement on the effects of the spawning which is taking place.

Mr. Fisher: Just one other point in connection with the economic study. To paraphrase the minister, he said the economic study is in relation to the amount of money being spent on the control program. What I am interested in is an economic study, in co-operation with the United States and the departments of lands and forests, which would consider seriously lake Superior in future being a lake which will exploit sport fishing rather than commercial fishing. I do not mean to discontinue commercial fishing altogether. I would assume that fishing for whitefish and herring would still continue, but as far as trout is concerned I would assume that in future lake Superior would be of greater economic advantage to the communities along its shores in terms of tourists and sporting groups than in terms of commercial fishermen. It seems to me that it is worth looking at this matter, in view of the tremendous increase in the number of people using the north shore route and pouring into that part of the country to enjoy its natural beauty.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, we will take note of the suggestions made by the hon. member and discuss them with the other authorities of the province of Ontario.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, I have been listening to a lot of talk about fisheries but I have not heard anyone say anything about the lowly sardine. I maintain that you cannot read a book, go to a play or to a moving picture but that the word sardine is mentioned; and if you do not believe that, Mr. Chairman, look out for it in the future and see whether what I say is not true.

The sardine is principally produced down in Charlotte county and Passamaquoddy. Why the sardine comes to the Passamaquoddy no one knows, but it has been coming there for 80 years or more. The sardine industry distributes $6 million to the county, yet no research work has been done by the government to investigate the type of run we will have, whether it will be big or small or anything like that. We know all about the salmon and the halibut but know nothing of the lowly sardine. I think it is about time that the fisheries department took more interest in it and did some research work to find out about these runs which we have. They have told us that they spawn on the southern coast of Nova Scotia and then come over, and so forth, but the pattern changes from year to year and is never the same. Today we might have a very short pack on the coast, but we do not know why. Next year we may have a big pack. It does seem to me that some research work should be done to find out why we have a big pack or a small pack, because sometimes hundreds of thousands of cans are purchased and piled up and we find we have nothing to put in them. Somebody said to me that it was all on account of one man. One of my colleagues told me: "You have established this industry and gone along with it, so it is your problem". So I said to him that when I came here to Ottawa I resigned as treasurer of my company. I am no longer a director of it. The company has nothing to do with me, except in helping to promote the industry.

In the Passamaquoddy area the United States wants to dam the waters to develop power, and so on. As far as I am concerned I am getting along in years and will probably never live to see this power developed, but I do want to see the industry protected for future generations. For my part I have gotten along all right. When I came up here to Ottawa I told my constituents that they would not have to pay me because I would assign any money I received from Ottawa to the provision of scholarships in my constituency, and this I have done. I resigned from my company. All I am interested in is the protection and the future of the industry.

I think that the fisheries department should provide more research. I know the minister is interested in this and I know the deputy minister is too, but I do not know about his department in general. The sardine people, the people in whom I am interested, do business in 60 countries. This money flows into Canada and it certainly helps in regard to our balance of payments. If we knew there was going to be a big year, we would provide for it. We would buy the tinplate in Hamilton and this would provide a lot of work in Hamilton. We would buy hundreds of thousands of cases of cans and hundreds of carloads of tinplate from Hamilton. But we do not know. We wish they would tell us what is likely to happen, the same as they do in the salmon industry. They say, "We are going to have a big year this year; a small year next year". If we knew this, we would know what to do. But we do not know what to do in our industry. This has been going on for the last 70 or 80 years, and we should know something about it. Investigations have been carried out, and it is said, "We think so-and-so will happen". But nobody has said, "This will happen", or, "That will happen", and so on and so forth. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we do not know what to do.

This Passamoquoddy project is coming up. I do not think it will ever get under way, because I think the power will cost 16 mills, whereas they say it would cost 4 mills. But I am not bothered about that at all because that is at the head of the bay, and with Shepody you can get three times the power.

If the Americans wanted to develop Shepody they could get three times the power. They could afford to throw in the Chignecto canal. There is $100 million there with the Chignecto canal, and they could afford to throw that in and yet develop the head of the bay; because they have tides there up to 60 feet, and down in Passamaquoddy we only have 16 feet at the head. They could get three times the power at the head of the bay with about two thirds of the cost. So I cannot see that it is reasonable to develop Passamaquoddy from a power standpoint. But, Mr. Chairman, that is neither here nor there.

However, I believe we should know why these small fish come there. That is the most important question. You could understand it if from year to year there was a certain pattern of fish coming in there; you would know they were spawned in a certain place and drifted in, and so on, with the tides. But this is not so. Sometimes they come in small, sometimes they come in large, and then they come in small again. This type of fish has been coming there for a thousand years, I suppose, and nobody knows why. All we ask the fisheries department to tell us is why they come there; then we will not oppose power or anything. We want to know why the fish come there; why from year to year they come there small, and then large, and so on and so forth. At the present time in our companies I suppose we have 300,000 or 400,000 cases of large fish packed up in what we call 13 ounce and 7 ounce. We have to go out in the world markets and sell these fish. In the sardine industry you have to pack the fish as they come along; you cannot just pick and choose. We are no good to the fishermen unless we take what they bring in; and we have to pack what they bring in, large or small.

This year they were running large, and we have hundreds of thousands of cases of large fish which we have to go out in the world markets and sell. Next year perhaps they will run small and we will have to go out and find markets for small fish. We do not know what size they will be; but if we knew through research what we were going to have from year to year, we would know what we had to go out and advertise and sell in the sardine markets. This industry has grown from a few thousand cases to over two million cases. At the present time in the sardine industry three to one tins of sardines are packed in Canada. That is the proportion. In this country we pack more than the great United States; we pack more than Norway. So, Mr. Chairman, this industry deserves some attention and some research.

Another subject upon which I should like to touch is the clam situation. We told the fisheries department 15 or 20 years ago that they were not going to have any clams unless there was some conservation in the industry. Today we have no clams in New Brunswick. Why? Because conservation was not practised. The scientists in the fisheries department said, "No; it is the green crab", or something, "that is destroying the clams". I will tell you, as a practical man, what destroyed the clams. It was the fishermen; because you cannot sell a clam unless it is two inches long. The clam digger goes along and digs a row. He takes the two inch clams out and sells them. But where he takes a barrel of two inch clams he probably exposes four barrels of smaller clams, and he does not do anything about them; he is not going to bury them again. What happens? The gulls and crows take over. According to the scientists a gull cannot eat a clam because a clam has a shell on it; but I think the gull has probably a little more sense than the scientist, because he takes the clam up in the air, drops it on the rocks, the clam opens, and the gull comes down and eats it. That is what happens. Today our clam beds have been exhausted. We have told, not only this government but other governments, about the clam situation and they have not done anything about it.

They should do something about it. We should conserve our clams down in New Brunswick. I think we should conserve the beds and do something for the future; because I remember the day when we had clam factories all along the coast—and today there are none. There is no reason for this situation; there is no reason why we should not have more than one clam factory; in fact, we should have a dozen. But, as I say, we haven't any. In my opinion we need more research in this matter and perhaps a little more common sense in the fisheries department. I know the minister has all kinds of common sense, because he was born and bred in the fishing industry in New Brunswick. I served on the fisheries committee and heard the deputy minister, and I know he knows all about the fisheries. But they want to use some common sense in this matter and we want more research.

This research is needed if the sardine industry is to progress. It has grown. I would say it is something like Topsy—it just grows. But they have their setbacks and there is no reason for them. This industry should go ahead all the time from year to year because it provides a great deal of employment. At the peak of the season 2,000 of our people are employed in this industry. Normally there are 600 people working the year round; but at the peak of the season 2,000 people are employed. Six million dollars are being paid out, and money is being brought into this country from all over the world. This industry has to be considered. People should think about it; the fisheries department should think about it and some research should be carried out for this industry.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have a little something to say about draggers. I have heard a lot of talk about monopolies in farming, and syndicates and how the syndicates were going to promote monopolies, and all that sort of thing. I represent a constituency that is concerned with farming. If the government wanted to lend me money to start farming, I would say no; I would keep away from it. I do not want any money for farming. We lost $150,000 during the last 15 years so we do not want any money for farming.

I have heard it said about fishing that we have a monopoly, and a company goes out in the springtime and catches all the fish. We cannot sell this product in Canada because there is not a sufficient market. If we produce 15 million or 20 million pounds of fish there is no market for that amount and we have to sell it to the United States. The purchasers there say we must sign a contract for 500,000 pounds of this, and 500,000 pounds of that. They tell us that we should give up using small draggers in the bay of Fundy and obtain large steel draggers, and go down as far as Georges bank, because we will be able to bring in between 100,000 pounds and 300,000 pounds. As a result of this suggestion we obtained large steel draggers, went out in the bay of Fundy and caught a great deal of fish, but by the time we sold them, considering that they had to be processed, we only had about 30 per cent left. The fish are gutted at sea and the livers and everything is thrown away, and all we have left are the clippings. I do not think the large monopolies are making any money in this industry, but rather that the small operator is making money. When we were small and used the small draggers in the bay of Fundy we were making money. I think in respect of every pound of fish we sell this year we will lose money.

An hon. Member: That is the Liberal government for you.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): I assure you that we are losing money.

An hon. Member: I do not believe you.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): You should have a look at our balance sheets if you do not believe me. You do not know anything about the fishing business or you would not question my statement, but would pat me on the back and state that I am right.

I have nothing more to say, Mr. Chairman, except to repeat that more research should be done in respect of this industry.

When a producer buys a fish in the raw he may pay five cents per pound for it, but when you buy the same type of fish at the market it likely will cost 40 cents per pound. To understand this situation you must realize that only 30 per cent of the raw fish is marketable. People are inclined to suggest that the monopolies are making a great deal of money because they have to pay 40 cents a pound for fish at the market. They should keep in mind that the same fish is sold in the raw for perhaps four or five cents a pound. I bring this information to your attention so that when you go to the store and have to pay that much for fish you will not complain because you will be aware of the situation, and realize that the fisherman is not making a lot of money.

At this time there is a very serious scarcity of fish and I do not believe the processors are going to make any money this year. We must have more research in respect of the sardine industry. You might suggest that this is a very lowly industry, but I point out that it amounts to $6 million in my county alone, and the products are sold all over the world. One can go to any foreign country in the world and mention the word "sardine" and the people there will understand what you are talking about, whereas you may mention wheat, or any of a variety of foodstuffs or products and the people are just as likely not to know what you mean. I repeat that we must have more research in respect of this industry, not that it will mean anything to me personally, but it will mean a great deal to a future generation in my county in the province of New Brunswick. I suggest that the fisheries department should pay more attention to this particular fishery.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we have all listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Charlotte who has given us some information about this very important sardine industry, and has referred to the need for research in respect of the mysteries of that particular fish. As the hon. member was speaking I thought that he was at least in a more fortunate situation than I, in that one of the fishing industries in British Columbia has completely disappeared. The sardine, whether large or small, is still in existence, but one of the unsolved mysteries on the west coast is the complete disappearance of the pilchard. The pilchard used to swarm in very large numbers, but to my knowledge no one has seen even one for a number of years.

I am very pleased that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is in his seat tonight to listen to the discussion we are having in respect of the Department of Fisheries. I am sure he was interested earlier in the evening when my colleague from Skeena was talking about the oolachan, which is of importance to many of the native Indian people on the west coast. In view of the situation the hon. member for Skeena described as existing at the mouth of the Kitimat river, I think perhaps I should explain that the oolachan which he presented to the Minister of Fisheries came from the Nass. I suggest the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, in his capacity as superintendent general of Indian affairs, should not lose an early opportunity of sampling these small oolachan, a sample of which I am sure the hon. member for Skeena would be pleased to provide.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about a matter in which I think the superintendent general of Indian affairs and the Minister of Fisheries have a common interest, and perhaps the remarks I make in respect of this particular item during our discussion of the fisheries estimates will serve to shorten the remarks I might otherwise make during our consideration of the Indian affairs branch. I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to some interesting comments which appear in a book entitled "The Indians of British Columbia" by Hawthorn, Belshaw and Jamieson, and which I believe is still considered to be a basic work as far as a survey of the situation in respect of Indians in that province is concerned. This information is now old but it was produced at the instigation of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration in an attempt to provide a social and economic survey of the Indians of British Columbia. Perhaps I might refer briefly to chapter 10 which is entitled, "The fishing industry", the first paragraph of which states:

[Mr. Barnett.]

> The fishing industry is by far the most important field of employment and livelihood for Indians in British Columbia. As shown in table III in chapter 7, more than 2,000 Indians derive their main source of livelihood from various branches of fishing itself, and another 1,000 or more, the vast majority of whom are women, from fish canning or processing.

The chapter goes on to describe the historic pattern of the industry as it has affected the livelihood of the Indian people. I think it is apparent that since the incursion of the white man into what was originally the basic means of livelihood of the native people of British Columbia the pattern has had its ups and downs with, unfortunately, a good many more downs than ups. I think it emerges rather clearly from a study of this chapter that the developments taking place at the time this work was produced and which have been proceeding at an accelerated pace since 1958 have tended to remove more and more Indian people from their proper status within this industry. On page 112 there is this reference to recent developments:

> There have been a number of other important developments in the fishing industry of British Columbia in recent years. In different branches of the fishing industry and in different areas of the coast they present a somewhat confusing picture, in which it is difficult to assess accurately the present and future status of Indians in fishing and canning employment.

Then it goes on to refer to the rapid technological changes that have been taking place both in the fishery and processing sections of the industry. If the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will refresh their minds with the outline contained in this chapter of the book it will become clear to them that one of the problems the Indian people have been and are faced with is that they have been pushed into a poorer and poorer economic position relatively speaking, and that by and large the relative efficiency of the type of fishing gear they have been able to acquire and use has declined in relation to the kind of gear used by the whites and by the Canadians of Japanese ancestry. This is presenting a most serious problem.

The book makes clear that many of the Indian people today are in the position of being marginal fishermen. At the conclusion of the chapter on the fishing industry as it affects the Indians there is an attempt to make some recommendations. The authors suggest that in some respects it may perhaps be better if many of the Indian people would move into other industries. I should like to refer to the last paragraph in this chapter because I think it has particular point in view of what has happened since the book was written. On page 123 the authors say:

> One saving feature in this situation is that those coast bands who seem to face the greatest threat of mass displacement from fishing, particularly in the Skeena and Nass areas and on the west coast of Vancouver island, live in heavily timbered areas in which intensive logging and lumber processing operations are likely to be under way in the fairly near future. The whole problem, however, requires further surveys and investigation, particularly of the employment and income potentials of timber resources accessible to Indian bands in each major district.

I realize that my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena, is much more familiar with the Skeena and Nass areas than I am, but with respect to the west coast of Vancouver island, where many of the fishermen have been pushed into a very marginal position, the fact of the matter is that in spite of the statement that there are large timber resources on the west coast of the island, which is correct, the economic opportunities in that field which have opened up to the Indian people since this book was written in 1958 have been very limited indeed. One reason for this has been the kind of policies that have been adopted at the provincial level in respect of allocating the forest resources for harvesting.

I should like to refer to one particular community of Indians, Ahousat, whose reserve is located on the seashore in the midst of a tremendous area of forest resources. In spite of a number of years of intensive effort on the part of the member of the provincial legislature for Alberni to have steps taken leading to the development of employment opportunities in the logging industry for the people of Ahousat, the fact is that most of them at the present time are in a very marginal economic position and are living under conditions which I am sure the minister, if he is aware of them, would have to agree are completely disgraceful. A forest management licence for the whole area has been granted to one major forest products concern. Some of us have attempted to argue that an economic log producing unit should be established to provide employment opportunities for these people, but so far no such steps have been taken.

The fact remains that the Ahousats, like most of the people on the west coast of Vancouver island, are historically a fishing people and would like to be able to continue to fish. However, because of the change brought about by the removal from the west coast of Vancouver island of the many fish canning and processing plants which existed there, because of the fact that technological change has resulted in fishermen from other areas being able to range far and wide into areas where the Indian fishermen cannot go in their small boats, because of the fact that the plenitude of fish close inshore has dropped to the point where they find it difficult to fish in a way which will return an income above marginal level, these people in fact are really not in the fishing industry in the way that they were. In days gone by they were known far and wide for their skill in fishing. The Ahousat people at one time played a large part in whaling and sealing. They have a long tradition in the fishery and it is their most natural occupation.

The Minister of Fisheries will recall that not long ago the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration announced the beginning of a community development program for the Indian people. I suggest that here is an area where there should be the closest co-operation between the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the Department of Fisheries so that a realistic program of community development can be initiated along the west coast of Vancouver island. I suggest that one thing that is needed is a program which will enable the Indian people in these smaller west coast communities, of which I have used Ahousat as an example, to compete efficiently in the fishery.

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration knows that there are certain funds available to his department to assist the Indian people in obtaining fishing vessels and gear; but these funds are completely inadequate, and the arrangements under which they can be had are completely unrealistic so far as putting the fisherman in a competitive position with other fishermen is concerned. I should like to suggest to the Minister of Fisheries that the role his department should play in this field is to see that these people are being treated fairly and receive the same amount of attention in respect of credit arrangements for modern fishing vessels and gear as any other citizen in any other part of Canada. This is simply not the case at the present time.

So, Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to express, as briefly as I can, what I feel is a very important aspect of the fishing industry and a very important concern so far as the superintendent general of Indian affairs is concerned, at a time when both ministers happen to be in the house.

I hope both ministers will take note of this situation and work together to do something about it.

Mr. Howard: Before we proceed to pass item 1, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a series of questions relating to expenditures in the past year for a variety of items and programs, with a division of those expenditures as between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. I should like to start with the Newfoundland bait service. I would assume from the name of it that the moneys spent are spent mainly on the Atlantic coast and that none of this money is available for the Pacific coast because Newfoundland does not extend that far, even though I am sure some Newfoundlanders think it does or would like it to. Can the minister tell me with respect to the Newfoundland bait service the amount of money that has been spent during the past year?

Mr. Robichaud: If the hon. member wants an immediate answer, I would say that last year we spent for the Newfoundland bait service—this includes the construction of the new Arctica—$1,148,000. Normally, the total expenditure for a year is about $400,000. This amount is just for Newfoundland because it is provided under an agreement under the terms of confederation.

Mr. Howard: Can the minister tell me also with respect to the operations under the Fisheries Prices Support Act, what have been the expenditures on the Pacific coast and the expenditures on the Atlantic coast?

Mr. Robichaud: Under the prices support board, as I mentioned in my earlier remarks, the administration expenditures this year have been moderate, namely, $62,866. There was no direct support given last year. This year we expect to have about $25,000, I believe, for the Magdalen islands, and about $60,000 was set aside for support for the sauger fishery in the prairies. This is as a result of a lack of markets for smoked fish.

Mr. Howard: Would this be the first year of operation for the Fisheries Prices Support Act in the prairies?

Mr. Robichaud: No, it has been effective in that area in the past.

Mr. Howard: There have been no expenditures under this act on the Pacific coast?

Mr. Robichaud: Not last year.

Mr. Howard: Can the minister indicate to me the amount of money that has been expended by way of subsidy under the so-called fishing vessel construction program, again dividing it as between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts?

Mr. Robichaud: As the hon. member knows, the subsidy program is only applicable to the Atlantic coast. The amount spent last year was approximately $500,000.

Mr. Howard: Can the minister tell me the expenditure in connection with the salt subsidy program, and whether or not that is exclusively expended on the Atlantic coast, or whether the Pacific coast is involved as well?

Mr. Robichaud: The salt subsidy program also applies to the Atlantic coast. The total expenditures last year were slightly over $600,000.

Mr. Howard: There is an item in the estimates for grants to the Nova Scotia fisheries exhibit at Lunenburg, which is exclusively a matter for the Atlantic coast, of $3,000. I wonder if the minister can give me a breakdown of the grants to Canadian universities as between universities on the Atlantic coast and universities on the Pacific coast?

Mr. Robichaud: The grants to universities are as follows: St. Francis Xavier, $51,700; the social economics service, Ste Anne de la Pocatière, $27,100; University of British Columbia, $11,200; Memorial University, St. John's Newfoundland, $30,000.

Mr. Howard: There is an item referred to in the estimates as development and demonstration of fishing vessels and gear. I wonder if the minister could tell me the expenditures under that item, again divided as between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts?

Mr. Robichaud: This answer, Mr. Chairman, would require detailed study if we were to separate the amounts. The total expenditure amounted to $195,000, and I would say that a large proportion of this was spent on the east coast although some demonstrations have taken place in the great lakes area and in British Columbia.

Mr. Howard: There is another item following that with regard to development and demonstration facilities for processing, packaging, storing and transportation. I assume that perhaps I will get a similar answer from the minister, that it would be difficult to break down the expenditures.

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, it would be difficult unless we had notice that a detailed study was required.

Mr. Howard: Could I at this stage ask the minister if he would be kind enough to make that study and communicate by letter whatever information is available?

Mr. Robichaud: I will be pleased to do that.

Mr. Howard: Will the minister communicate also with respect to the amount of money paid for the destruction of harbour and grey seals, divided as between the east and west coasts?

Mr. Robichaud: I do not have the exact figures, but I can tell the hon. member that the larger proportion if this expenditure was on the west coast. In fact we had a shortage of funds there about a month ago, because all our appropriation was expended.

Mr. Howard: Am I correct in assuming that the bait freezing subsidy is also limited to the Atlantic coast or is the Pacific coast involved as well?

Mr. Robichaud: The bait freezing subsidy applies to the Atlantic coast, and the main reason is that this is the area where there is a requirement for bait because of the type of fishing which is practised there. The total expenditures last year were $22,670.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, these are helpful figures and it is helpful information. What I was trying to do, perhaps, was to substantiate the argument I have put forward in various speeches, namely that there appears to be an imbalance between the expenditures by the Department of Fisheries on the Atlantic coast as compared with the Pacific coast. I hope no one will misinterpret what I have said. I am not in any way decrying the fact that expenditures are made and services are provided by way of subventions for salt, subsidies for the purchase of squid for bait, for fishing vessel construction, and so on. I do not know the Atlantic coast fisheries, but I am quite sure there are a lot of grants for the Atlantic coast and the maritime province of Newfoundland that are quite well justified, and necessary to preserve the fishing industry on the Atlantic coast. However, there appears to me to be an inordinately large amount of preference given to Atlantic coast fisheries by the department, as compared with that provided for the Pacific coast fisheries.

I know that fishermen at home in B.C. on the west coast make inquiries from time to time about various assistance programs. They want to know about this bait freezing subsidy. They do not freeze bait on the Pacific coast but they could get some assistance in this way. We do not salt fish on the west coast, but the fishermen there ask, especially in difficult years when prices are low, such as last year and the year before, why there cannot be some provision made to assist or subsidize some section of the industry on the west coast, so that the fishermen there could get a little better opportunity to make a more decent income than they do now. There is this concern about the heavy weighting of consideration for the Atlantic coast fisheries vis-à-vis those on the Pacific coast.

I was waiting for the minister to make some comment about a telegram which I hope has been forwarded to him, dealing with this very question. It involves the fishing vessel subsidy and the order in council which sets out that this is exclusively for the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. The Pacific coast is specifically excluded from the operations of the fishing vessel subsidy, and on August 28 Mr. Guy Williams, who is president of the native brotherhood of B.C., sent a telegram to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration which I think I should read. It said:

> Forward to Minister of Fisheries, Hon. H. J. Robichaud. Request you act on behalf of native fishermen in B.C. to be included in extension of fishing vessel assistance regulations as in five provinces. Minimum length of 35 foot boats ideal for combination gillnet-troller and longline operation.
> No less than 100 fishermen need immediate assistance first year. Ninety five per cent of small Indian fishing boats in state of ill repair and not suitable for required mobility of today's operations. Detailed letter at later date on above.
> Guy R. Williams

This is an indication of the concern that fishermen have on the west coast. They ask themselves this simple question: Aren't we Canadians too? Why can fishermen on the Atlantic coast, in the maritime provinces and in the province of Quebec, qualify for the 25 per cent or 30 per cent subsidy for the building of fishing boats, when we are excluded from that? This is a very serious question that concerns the people in B.C. For many years there has appeared to be an orientation of the federal government toward the east, toward in some respects—

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard: Very happily.

Mr. Nicholson: Have the fishermen on the west coast made serious attempts to take the benefit of the subsidies that go into the building of these ships? I hope the hon. member can enlighten me on that because I have tried to get that information over the last 18 months.

Mr. Howard: The minister has not exhausted himself if he tried for 18 months and has not been successful. Undoubtedly he was one of those who, on June 11 of this year, participated in passing the order in council with respect to the fishing vessel assistance regulations which sets out that these regulations apply only to the province of Nova Scotia through the fishermen's loan board, to the province of New Brunswick through the fishermen's loan board, to the province of Prince Edward Island through the fishermen's loan board, to the province of Newfoundland through the fishermen's loan board, and to the province of Quebec through the minister of industry and commerce.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member answer my question? What representations have been made by the fishermen on the west coast? Plenty have been made on the east coast, but what representations have been made by the west coast fishermen?

Mr. Howard: Perhaps I may tell my hon. friend this is due to the failure—which I think is a ruddy shame—of his own party, which I understood was to treat Canadians as equals. It may be due to the failure of members of his own party. Not one single member of the Liberal party from B.C. has participated in the discussion so far today or yesterday, on the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. This is a shameful thing.

What sort of representations have been made by them? Isn't the minister himself a member from B.C.? Doesn't he know himself about these things? Where was he when the cabinet passed this discriminatory order in council that discriminates against B.C. fishermen? Was the Postmaster General in on that cabinet meeting? Why didn't he speak up and say something?

What about the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister? What about the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, a home born British Columbian? Isn't he interested in the fishermen of B.C.? Did he not have the intestinal fortitude to speak up and object to this discriminatory order in council when it was passed by the cabinet on June 11 this year?

Perhaps if the Postmaster General searched his own party and his own concern for the welfare of the fishermen at home he would find the answer, rather than standing up and exhibiting his ignorance, asking me questions about what representations have been made. Here is a telegram that was sent by Guy Williams, president of the native brotherhood of B.C., making reference to this matter and asking for something to be done. What has happened since then? Is anything to be done? Are these people at home to continue to be looked upon as second class citizens, unworthy of equal treatment by this department? This is a very serious question, and perhaps the minister would like to answer me.

Mr. Robichaud: So far as expenditures are concerned I realize the hon. member has brought to light some programs provided for the Atlantic coast, but I would like to refer briefly to the Nanaimo station where the research board is spending close to $2 million, to the $210,000 we are spending on the international Pacific halibut commission, to the $295,000 we are spending on the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission. These are only some of our expenditures on the west coast.

So far at the telegram which the hon. member read is concerned, it was only brought to my attention this morning through correspondence with my colleague, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I understand the telegram was supposed to have been sent to me, but we have no record of its having been received at my office, and following a letter I received from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration I asked him to send me a copy of that telegram which, as I say, was brought to my attention this morning.

Mr. Howard: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Robichaud: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, you do not expect me to take a decision within 24 hours. We are certainly going to study the problem, find out what the situation is and find out what can be done.

Mr. Howard: It is correct, as shown in the main estimates, that $1,885,000 is to be spent on the biological research station at Nanaimo, $323,000 on the technological research station in Vancouver and $204,000 on the oceanographic group in Nanaimo, making a total of about $2,300,000 or $2,400,000 expenditure on the Pacific coast by the fisheries research board, but the minister has failed to mention that the total amount to be spent by the research board is over $6 million, the bulk of which goes to the Atlantic coast.

Mr. Robichaud: And the prairie provinces, and also an additional $250,000 to the Vancouver aquarium.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries management and development—

5. Operation and maintenance including Canada's share of the expenses of the international commissions detailed in the estimates and of the costs of programs and projects shared jointly with the provinces and industry, $12,949,100.

Mr. Danforth: I have listened to the discussion with a great deal of interest and I can assure the minister after listening to the last speaker and the argument he raised about whether or not more money is spent on the east coast fisheries than the west coast fisheries that we in Ontario in the inland fisheries would be tickled to death to accept either one as our allocation in the matter of fisheries.

Mr. Howard: You should get the Postmaster General to argue for you.

Mr. Danforth: I would bring to the minister's attention the fact that I do not wish to deal in detail with the troubles of management and research into the fishing industry in the great lakes because I am sure the minister and his department are quite familiar with the main problem which has been brought out, namely the matter of pollution in the lakes. Underneath the surface of lake Erie there is a mass of insoluble sludge and slime, no one knows exactly how many feet deep, coming down the Detroit river and rolling out over the bottom of lake Erie, and when the fishermen on the lake drop their nets they become covered with this slime. This makes fishing a terrible job and is causing many fish to die. The lake is becoming a terrible place to fish. It has become so contaminated that bathing beaches are being closed down. They are talking of it as the dead lake and people are asking me whether I realize that lake Erie has now become a dead lake. The boats which go out on the lake and return to shore are covered with an inch or so of this slime all over their bottoms and keels. The condition is getting worse and the fishermen there want to know whether anything can be done, and if anything is being done now.

Commercial fishing in lake Erie is now confined to two main species, smelt and perch. Only a few years ago hundreds of thousands of pounds of other varieties were taken out of the lake. It seems sad that those who fish on lake Erie are within reach of a 24-hour refrigerated truck service which can supply perhaps 30 million people in Canada and the United States with fish. We have a market for the products of the lakes, which have found a ready favour in both the United States and Canada; but now we are faced with a depletion of the fish in the lake. We have an entire industry geared for production, and we now find the fishermen in most parts running into dire economic straits, abandoning their ships in many instances and looking for other types of work. This is a sorry situation, and these men are asking that something be done right away. They are not concerned with who is responsible, but what they are concerned with is what steps are being taken, when they will be taken, and how effective they will be.

The minister spoke about federal-provincial committees. The fishermen in the area are sick and tired of approaching over the years provincial governments and federal governments, going back and forth seeking an answer to their problems. They have always received sympathetic consideration and have always felt that the officials they approached have seriously tried to do something about their problems. But somewhere there seems to be a breakdown in communications between the federal and provincial governments, which has meant that the fishermen did not receive the consideration which they felt was necessary. I would ask the minister whether it is his opinion that this federal-provincial committee will now provide the necessary pipe line to enable these fishermen to get the immediate help they so desperately need.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena because our problem is exactly the same as his. We in Ontario want to know why our fishermen cannot get the same sort of insurance on their boats, and the shipbuilding subsidies, which the fishermen in the other five provinces receive. Our fishermen build boats which vary in length from 55 feet to 65 feet and are valued at anywhere from $30,000 to $90,000 each. But they need help with new boats, nets and supplies and they are anxious to know whether any money will be made available to them. Will there be any new legislation so that these fishermen can insure their boats to the degree necessary under the conditions they fish today? Are they going to get the necessary money to provide new equipment and new boats? Is this going to be provided, now that we have a new federal-provincial committee?

Another matter I wish to mention is one which I am sure the minister is well aware of; it has been brought to his attention on various occasions and representations have been made to him. It is the formation of a co-operative for the fishermen on lake Erie. The fishermen on lake Erie are not only faced with the fact that the fish in the lake are being depleted, but also the price of the fish varies from 1½ cents a pound to 18 to 20 cents a pound, depending on the amount of fish on the market at the time. I am sure the minister is aware that one matter which is standing in the way of the formation of a co-operative is the legislation block, which has been brought to his attention. The fishermen have approached the province on the matter and at this point I should like to quote from a letter sent to me by these fishermen. They say, in part:

> Accordingly the farm products marketing board of Ontario is of the opinion that the proposed lake Erie fish marketing plan would be of little value until the necessary federal legislation is enacted and is withholding any further action on the request of this association—

I am sure that this was brought to the attention of the minister, and his answer to them on July 27—and I do wish to thank him for the courtesy of his consideration and his proper reply—he pointed out that a new committee was being set up to study this entire program, and that a local member of the association was secretary of the new committee.

According to a newspaper article dated July 20, in Winnipeg the federal-provincial study committee recommended the establishment of a prairie fish exports marketing board, and I am wondering whether there would be the same value in an Ontario board. This newspaper went on to say that the three major fish buyers in Chicago and Detroit could set the price which will be paid for Canadian fish in the United States. I hope that this is why a co-operative is being established—to combat the setting of prices in the United States rather than to further the setting of prices.

They are the problems which I bring to the attention of the minister and I hope he will have the answers that these fishermen need. It is purely a question of economics. The fish seem no longer to be in the lake. What is being done at the London research centre and at other local research centres to see why these fish are being depleted, and what can be done to put them back? What is being done to enact the right legislation in order to make it possible for these fishermen to form a co-operative if they so desire? What is being done to put our fishermen on the same basis as the fishermen on the east coast, and even those on the west coast, who have more money, subsidies and legislation to enable them to further their business? As I am sure the minister and his departmental officials are well aware, it is simply a matter of pure economics. If the fishermen can make more money they can stay in business. If they cannot make more money the industry is going to fail. Surely we in Ontario especially cannot afford to let this multi-million dollar industry fail without making desperate efforts at the federal level to try to see if it cannot be established on a paying basis.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I should like you to tell me which vote we are on at the moment?

The Chairman: Vote No. 5. Shall the vote carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two questions I want to ask the minister on vote No. 5. As the minister is probably quite well aware, the Shell Oil Company has been conducting certain explorations off the west coast of Vancouver island, operating from a base at Ucluelet. In the course of their oil explorations they have been carrying out certain tests which involve the use of explosives, in underwater explosions. A great deal of concern has been expressed from time to time as to the effect of these explosions on the fish population in that area.

I understand that the matter has been under observation by the Department of Fisheries and I wonder whether the minister has available and could give to the committee for the record the fisheries department's knowledge in this regard and just what has happened in respect to the destruction of the fish population.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, this operation by the Shell Oil Company on Vancouver island is under close observation of the officials of the department. If at any time we find it affects the fish population, we are prepared to order that the operation stop until we can study the matter further.

Mr. Barnett: Has the department available a detailed report on this matter? I noted in the recent publication of the fisheries association of B.C. certain statistics which they say come from the Department of Fisheries; it was some report of the Department of Fisheries. I must say that I have not seen that report issued by the department. I was wondering whether the minister has it available and can put these statistics on the record; or if not, can he indicate how that information is officially available from the department?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, we have no official report to give. We can certainly prepare a statement to that effect and make it available to the hon. member, and I will do this.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, there are two or three questions that I want to ask the minister—I will try to be brief—regarding the new regulations which he spoke of with regard to seals. I think he said he had discussed the matter with representatives of the S.P.C.A. I believe he has been written to by the Audubon society also, and I presume he has discussed this matter with them. They have expressed keen interest in this matter, and I would like to be assured that these representations are being considered.

Under this item, Mr. Chairman, I would refer to the latest figures we have for revenue from the north Pacific fur seal treaty. These are for the fiscal year 1962-63, which show a revenue of almost half a million dollars. I wonder whether the minister could conveniently give us the revenue, either gross or net, for the last fiscal year, 1964, if that figure is available. Also, is the minister in a position to make a brief statement about the conclusion to which his department has come with regard to the effect that the Mactaquac dam may have on salmon migration in the Saint John river, especially with regard to the effect this dam would be expected to have on the Tobique run, and all the runs that migrate above that location on the Saint John river.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I would reply briefly to the questions asked by the hon. member. In so far as our contacts with the S.P.C.A. and the Audubon society are concerned, I cannot confirm at this time whether we have had representations from the Audubon society. I believe we have. We will certainly make an effort to contact them and make them aware of the amendments we have in mind.

The return on investments for seals amounted to $466,989, and the proceeds from the sales were $176,758. In so far as the Mactaquac is concerned, we have made a thorough survey of the project and have come to complete agreement with the province of New Brunswick to build in this connection probably one of the most modern and efficient hatcheries in the world. We are combining the knowledge of our scientists and the knowledge of the Swedish scientists in this regard. We can give the assurance that when this project is being proceeded with the salmon population of the Saint John river will be fully protected; in fact, we intend to have enough production from this hatchery to supply not only the Saint John river but other rivers in New Brunswick.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister could supply some answers to the questions I posed a few minutes ago?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I can reply briefly to the points raised by the hon. member. So far as pollution of the lake Erie area is concerned, we are well aware of the situation. It is a very complex problem which affects not only the provincial government and the municipalities but all the industries along the lake shore area. It is also an international problem. The hon. member mentioned the federal-provincial committee, which is studying this matter further. We are also looking into the matter of the co-op marketing plan, which requires legislation as the hon. member says; but it requires provincial legislation. We are now in the course of discussions with the provincial authorities in order to determine what can be done in this sphere, not only for that particular co-op but for a marketing board in regard to the whole production of the inland fisheries.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I have just one question on vote No. 5. There is an item on page 148 which refers to community fishing stages, in the amount of $25,000, compared with $50,000 in the previous fiscal year. I wonder whether the minister could tell us what this item is for. What are community fishing stages, and what is the explanation in regard to the decrease?

Mr. Robichaud: Community stages are being built, principally in Newfoundland; in the outposts of that province, in very small areas where there are no facilities, no fishing company to buy the fish and where the fishermen have to process their own fish. We are providing for them what we call a community shed, in which they can store their salted fish until the buyer calls in the fall for their production.

Item agreed to.

15. Grants, contributions and subsidies in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the sub-vote titles listed in the details of estimates, $1,050,000.

Mr. O'Keefe: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of delaying these estimates, but I am anxious under vote 15 to congratulate the provincial government of Newfoundland upon its initiative, its imaginative initiative I might say, in instituting the new fisheries college. This is obviously a very forward looking effort on the part of the provincial government and its beneficial effects will be felt far outside the province of Newfoundland; indeed they will be felt in all Canada.

I would urge the federal government and the Minister of Fisheries to give earnest consideration to assisting this fisheries college in every possible manner. May I also support the hon. members who have spoken, especially those from my own province, and suggested that we spend more money on conservation and research. In that respect I am very happy that the minister said this afternoon that over $1 million more will be spent this year than was spent last year on research. I do not need to urge the minister to remember the fisheries college; I know he needs reminding only that this is a very worth-while effort, which not only deserves but demands, even commands, our enthusiastic support.

I cannot help at this moment suggesting to the hon. member for Skeena that when he is compiling his statistics on the fishermen of Newfoundland, whom he seems to feel are very well taken care of as compared with the fishermen of British Columbia, he should look up the average wage. He will find it is something like $800 in Newfoundland, v. $4,000 in British Columbia.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, this is what I was hoping would not happen, that any member from a constituency of one of the Atlantic provinces would think I was picking on him or the Atlantic fishermen. I had no intention of doing that. I was just pointing out the disparity that exists in respect of federal government assistance on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. The hon. member has talked about an average income of a fisherman on the Pacific coast in the amount of $4,000. I wish he would come out and tell some of the gill-net fishermen that their average is $4,000. I am sure he would get wet as a result of being thrown in the ocean.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Fisheries research board of Canada—

20. Administration, operation and maintenance including an amount of $75,000 for grants for fisheries research and for scholarships and authority to make recoverable advances of amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amount of the share of the international great lakes fishery commission of the cost of work on lamprey control and lamprey research, $5,865,000.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, if my understanding is correct this item has to do with the granting of money for the operation of the fisheries research board of Canada, and in view of the value of the work done by that board and the appreciation expressed by those of us who have knowledge and experience in this field I certainly think it would be a mistake to pass this item without comment. As far as I am concerned, I think a discussion in depth and in detail in relation to the operations of this board should be referred to the committee on marine and fisheries, as was suggested earlier. I certainly hope that in light of an earlier statement by the minister in relation to next year's estimates, that this is one of the matters we will have an opportunity to examine and discuss in that committee next year.

Mr. Robichaud: That is an undertaking, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to raise anything objectionable at this time, and I am not asking you to see the time, but it is now 10.05 and if we are to proceed past the normal hour of adjournment we should do so by unanimous consent, rather than as a result of inadvertence or blindness on the part of anyone.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Chairman, I think it is the desire of all hon. members to sit a little longer in an attempt to carry the estimates of this department. We have been discussing them for two days now and have given them full consideration. I think we can complete our consideration of these estimates in a very short time.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: That completes the estimates of the Department of Fisheries.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BOUTIN—FAILURE TO FLY QUEBEC FLAG AT ROYAL 22ND REGIMENT CEREMONY

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-André Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is based on an article published in the September 24 issue of the newspaper Le Droit and entitled:

VanDoos allegedly refused permission to fly fleur-de-lis.

Presumably, the incident occurred during the ceremonies which took place on parliament hill Wednesday morning, to commemorate the 50th anniversary of this army unit. According to the press report, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) would have refused to let fleur-de-lis flags—the fleur-de-lis is the flag of the province of Quebec—be raised between the red ensigns placed around the national war memorial.

If such is the case, Mr. Speaker, I want to protest strongly against that insult and that outrage committed against the members of the Royal 22nd, a regiment almost entirely made up of French Canadians from the province of Quebec, in refusing them permission to fly the flag of their province during those ceremonies.

The Royal 22nd regiment is not the sole victim of that insult. The whole population of Quebec was insulted on that day.

Men of the VanDoos always conducted themselves as heroes in the various conflicts in which they took part. The valour, bravery and heroism of those French Canadians were reflected not only on the province of Quebec, but on Canada as a whole.

Again, today, it is the Royal 22nd which is entrusted with the peace keeping operations in Cyprus.

Everywhere and at all times the Royal 22nd has been a credit to Canada. It has produced thousands of heroes. It deserves better from the Canadian government than the insult to which it was subjected by the Department of National Defence last Wednesday.

Mr. Speaker, that was also an insult to French Canadians from Quebec and the other provinces. If my compatriots keep on being flouted as they were last Wednesday, the Quebec separatist movements will be justified up to a certain point.

Consequently, I would like the Minister of National Defence or, in his absence, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to explain or justify the refusal to fly the fleur-de-lis beside the red ensign during the ceremony commemorating the 50th anniversary of the foundation of the Royal 22nd, and to present apologies to that unit.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to decide whether there is a question of privilege. This is an action which was taken outside the house. It does not affect the honour of the house nor the honour of the members of the house, and is more in the nature of a grievance. I regret that I see no question of privilege at all.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-André Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

Would the minister have an explanation to justify the refusal to fly the fleur-de-lis together with the red ensign at the ceremonies marking the 50th anniversary of the Royal 22nd regiment?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman is referring to the newspaper report I saw yesterday, it was not within my responsibility.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Following the question of privilege raised this morning by the hon. member for Dorchester, the Minister of National Defence stated his department is not responsible for that decision. Would the Prime Minister make an inquiry in order to find out who took that decision which prevented the Royal 22nd from hoisting the fleur-de-lis flag, and report to the house in due course?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will look into the matter, but of course the normal procedure that is followed in these ceremonies will be followed as it has been in the past on similar occasions.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

As the Prime Minister stated that my question of privilege this morning concerned the protocol division, for which the hon. Secretary of State is responsible to the house, could the latter answer the question of privilege I raised this morning, as well as the question asked by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) with regard to the Royal 22nd regiment being refused permission to fly the fleur-de-lis flag during the ceremonies commemorating its 50th anniversary?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, a short while ago the Prime Minister promised to study the question and, if possible, to give an answer next week. As far as I am concerned, I have nothing to add.

[Later:]

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Would the Secretary of State tell us whether or not this matter is a responsibility of his department?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, although I am not quite sure, I am under the impression that this matter is a responsibility of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Can he give us explanations with respect to the question of privilege I raised this morning?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will answer that question early next week, and the facts I shall establish will defeat the allegations the hon. member for Dorchester made this morning, because the members of the Royal 22nd were given a warm welcome.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

The hon. member can be assured that I will supply information which will clarify the point he raised this morning. He may be assured also, as well as all hon. members, that there was no discrimination whatsoever toward the Royal 22nd.

Mr. Boutin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is becoming a debate.

AIR TRANSPORT

PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO CRASH OF T.C.A. PLANE

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the house that the Minister of Transport has decided that a public inquiry should be held into the tragic loss of the aircraft at Ste. Thérèse, Quebec, on November 29, 1963, and that I have ascertained that Associate Chief Justice Challies of the superior court of Montreal is willing to undertake this inquiry.

In view of the magnitude of the accident and the great loss of life, it was considered desirable by the government that the inquiry should be conducted by a judge of the superior court, and I am sure there will be general satisfaction that Mr. Justice Challies is willing to act. The board of inquiry will be formally established and its terms of reference announced next week.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PUBLICATION OF JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

Mr. G. C. Lachance (Lafontaine) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-125, to amend the Criminal Code (restriction on publication of proceedings).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, this bill would prohibit, except in cases mentioned in section 151 of the Criminal Code or any other legislation, the printing or publication of the names, addresses, professions or occupations of all parties and witnesses in all legal proceedings.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM—WITHDRAWAL OF CANADA FROM CONTROL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is the intention of the government to withdraw from participation in the international control commission in South Viet Nam? I ask this question in view of various news reports in the press and on the radio this morning.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention of Canada to withdraw from the international control commissions in Viet Nam, in Cambodia or in Laos but, as I stated a number of weeks ago in the external affairs committee, we have noted the criticisms made of particular commissions, not of Canada's participation but of the commissions themselves. I stated then, and I repeat now, that Canada is not anxious to cling to this particular assignment. We have indicated to a number of countries that perhaps they would like to participate if this were acceptable to the 14 powers. It is not our intention to withdraw, but it is also not our intention to stay on against the wishes of those countries concerned.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Is it intended that Japan should take the place of Canada providing Japan receives the support of these 14 countries?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The decision as to which countries should compose the commission is of course a matter to be decided by the Geneva accord powers. The view of the government is that Japan, a great Asian nation, should play an increasing role in the affairs of Asia. While we understand the reluctance of that country to participate in certain situations we hope, nevertheless, that an opportunity may be afforded to Japan to play an increasing part not only in the affairs in the area which immediately surrounds her but in Asia as a whole.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As part of that increasing role, does the minister contemplate Japan being a member of this commission?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That would be a matter for the 14 powers, but Japan would certainly in our judgment be well qualified to play such a role.

Mr. Nesbitt: Was this matter discussed with Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge when he was here a couple of days ago?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We had a general discussion with Mr. Cabot Lodge on a wide range of matters having to do with the situation in Indochina, and the hon. member may assume that this was one of the subjects discussed.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could he tell the house whether discussions were held about the cruelty toward South Viet Nam Roman Catholics when Canada decided to grant a substantial assistance to that country under the Colombo plan?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the hon. member's question as notice and answer it next week.

[Text]

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the failure of the secretary general of the United Nations to obtain approval for the firming up of the authority for United Nations peace keeping operations on Cyprus, and in view of the critical situation which has developed since to the extent that the Turkish armed forces have cancelled all leaves for this present week end, can the minister give us some further details about what has taken place and what we may expect in the next day or two at the United Nations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not agree with the premise contained in the first part of the hon. gentleman's question. The security council is meeting this afternoon. It would seem now that it is not possible to have unanimity with regard to the kind of resolution some would like to see tabled in the security council today. It is thought that the particulars which were embodied in one of the draft resolutions being circulated informally would be such as to invite the exercise of a veto, and since this is not desirable it is more likely that the resolution finally to be placed before the council will be of a general character. But it will be of a nature which, in the opinion of the Canadian government and of other interested powers, will not preclude the conditions which the secretary general himself laid down in the report he circulated to the council about ten days ago.

Mr. Thompson: In view of the fact that the secretary general indicated that he would go ahead even without the approval of the council; and since Cyprus, supported by the Soviet union, has indicated she will not be in agreement, does the secretary of state feel there is reason for the optimism he has expressed?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think there is reason for the course I have suggested but I cannot, naturally, foresee the exact results of this afternoon's meeting.

[Later:]

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the proposal to keep United Nations troops in Cyprus for another three months at least, can the minister advise if it is the intention of the government to rotate the Canadian troops there completely; that is, replace the VanDoos, the R.C.D.'s and other supporting troops?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as we have already announced, if the period is extended and if the Canadian contingent remain they will be rotated.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, could I ask a related question. What is the estimated cost of maintaining our forces in Cyprus? An estimate was given last March of $2,600,000 for the three month period. Does that estimate hold for the succeeding three month period?

Mr. Hellyer: In reply to that question, Mr. Speaker, may I say I believe we gave a monthly figure for maintaining the force there, and I think it would still be valid.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF EASTERN FEED GRAIN AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, on September 22 last the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) asked the Prime Minister whether the government intended to form an agency to deal with eastern Canada feed grain.

He asked the same question again yesterday while I was in Montreal for the closing of the national week on forestry.

On June 24 the question of feed grain was referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization, and we are awaiting the report of this committee before taking a decision in that regard.

[Text]

HOGS—GRADING PRACTICES RELATED TO PREMIUM PAID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have an important question for the Minister of Agriculture but in his absence perhaps the Minister of Forestry might take it as notice. Is there any truth in the criticism expressed at the meeting of the Ontario hog producers marketing board that the premiums paid for grade A hogs depend strictly on the amount of money allocated by the government for such premiums? In other words, if the allocated sum in the fund approaches depletion instructions then go out to the graders to cut down on their grading. Could the minister take some steps to correct this improper grading method?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORAD—RETURN OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS ON TERMINATION OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister of Canada.

As it is now recognized by his government, and more particularly by the authorities of the Department of National Defence, that agreements concerning the defence of the North American continent will not be renewed on the same basis when they expire in 1967, and considering that nuclear warheads and rockets are mentioned in the agreements, is the Prime Minister in a position to state, since this whole defence program has now become obsolete, whether missiles and nuclear warheads will be returned to their previous owners when the agreement expires?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is far too large a question on defence policy to be dealt with on the orders of the day.

INQUIRY AS TO DISBANDMENT OF SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN REGIMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Further to my question to the minister two weeks ago respecting the possible disbandment of the South Saskatchewan regiment stationed at Estevan, Saskatchewan, can the minister now state that disbandment of the S.S.R. will not take place?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, I am afraid I am not yet in a position to make an announcement in respect of the reorganization of the militia.

COLD LAKE, ALTA.—CONTRACT FOR AIRPORT HEATING SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to a question raised yesterday by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona with regard to changes being made in the heating system at Cold Lake airport. The question was, if this is to be done, is the work being put out for tender? Strictly speaking, the answer is no. However, I should add that it is intended to convert the heating systems of some 850 permanent married quarters connected with the R.C.A.F. station at Cold Lake to natural gas with an estimated annual saving of some $150,000 for heating costs at that station. The gas is being supplied by the Cold Lake Pipeline Company, the only company in a position to do so in that area.

FISHERIES

REMISSION OF FINE AGAINST PORTUGUESE FLEET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, but in his absence may I direct it to the acting minister. In the September 16 issue of the Montreal Gazette the minister is quoted as stating that the $1,000 fine levied against the Portuguese fishing fleet when a man jumps ship will be remitted if such an offence takes place in the port of St. John's, Newfoundland. I should like to ask the minister on what basis he can make a concession of this type for the port of St. John's only, under what authority the fine is levied, and by what means is he able to provide the concession in question.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister, who is indisposed, I will bring this matter to his attention. I am sure he will be glad to do his best to answer this question on Monday or Tuesday.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE REDUCTION IN NUMBER OF PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

I should like to ask him whether, in view of certain statements made by political personalities at the provincial level, he does not intend to set up a commission which could look into the possibility of reducing the number of existing provinces in the country?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON CANADIAN WILDLIFE OF U.S. DAM CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. My question is based on information that has just come to me from the University of Michigan, to the effect that the university is undertaking a field study on the effect on United States wildlife of the building of the Rampart canyon dam, and that $25,000 was spent on the study this summer. In view of the fact that if this dam were built it would seriously affect Canadian interests, is any branch of the minister's department conducting a similar study?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that the Canadian wildlife branch of my department is thoroughly conversant, and has been for many years, with the implications of the proposed dam in that area. We have done much more than make studies; we have made representations. I think some of the representations that have been made as a result of studies that have been carried out over a number of years have brought support from interest in the United States which otherwise would not have been forthcoming.

HAINES CUT-OFF—U.S. OFFER OF WINTER MAINTENANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for either the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, since their responsibilities overlap in this regard. I understand that the government of the state of Alaska has made an offer to the Canadian government for the maintenance of the Haines cut-off during the forthcoming winter season. Has the government accepted that offer yet? If not, when does it intend to do so?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the hon. member that our officials have been in the area and have made a report to us. I have had discussions with Governor Egan of Alaska and Mayor Lester of Prince Rupert. The matter is under active consideration, and we hope that some sort of decision will be taken within a week.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of the time limit placed on the offer of the government of the state of Alaska, which indicates a great deal of urgency for action on the part of the government of Canada in order to provide economic maintenance?

Mr. Laing: Governor Egan of Alaska told me that both the efficiency and the cost would be favourably affected the earlier a decision was taken.

IMMIGRATION

TORONTO—STATUS OF PERSONS CONCERNED WITH NEWSPAPER STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has the answers to the questions which I posed to him a couple of days ago regarding the American strike directors who are in Toronto at the present time.

[Mr. Laing.]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I made an inquiry in this case and found that Mr. Robert Ameln and Mr. George Hogan, who were temporarily admitted into Canada, are continuing their activities in Toronto for the same purpose for which they were admitted. With regard to the few persons who came to Canada after that and who are working for the newspapers in Toronto, I am still waiting a complete report on the inquiry that is now in progress in Toronto.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question on the same subject, Mr. Speaker. I wonder when the minister will be in a position to report on the inquiry I directed to him through his office respecting the alleged use of strikebreakers by the newspaper publishers.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, as I said a few minutes ago, I have asked the office in Toronto to give me a full report concerning the admission to Canada of people who are supposed to be strikebreakers.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question. So far as these two men are concerned to whom reference was made by the hon. member for Melville, the minister stated that they came into Canada as negotiators. They are described as strike directors in a leaflet put out in Toronto. If they are strike directors do they come within the provisions of our immigration laws, and are they welcome in our country? I ask this in view of the apparent acts of violence which have been taking place with increasing regularity in the last two or three weeks since they arrived as negotiators.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, concerning these two persons, Messrs. Hogan and Ameln, as far as I know they have taken no part in any violent activity in Toronto, but I am still awaiting a complete report on these two chaps and others who came to Canada since then.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the minister consulted the mounted police with regard to these activities? I am not speaking specifically of these two gentlemen, but generally.

Mr. Tremblay: No, Mr. Speaker, I received my report from the immigration office in Toronto.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is really a question of privilege. A moment ago I asked the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether he had communicated with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with reference to the acts of violence that are taking place in Toronto. That was an error on my part; I should have said the city police force of Toronto. Has there been any communication with them, particularly in view of the fact that these two men entered Canada as negotiators on the 24th of August and there has been no negotiation since that date?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, the information I have received concerning Mr. Hogan and Mr. Ameln's activities came from the immigration office in Toronto. What I do not know is to what extent the immigration officers might have got in touch with the Toronto police force.

I shall be glad to ask my people in Toronto from what police force they received their information during the investigation.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—REPAYMENT BY MEDICAL STUDENTS DURING INTERNSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance regarding medical students using the student loan fund. Will the minister say whether repayment under the act will be required while the student is serving his internship and, if so, will the minister reconsider this aspect of the legislation?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, under the act the loans are repayable commencing six months after completion of the educational course. In this particular case they would be repayable during the period of internship. I would be very glad to consider this question, and if there is a good case for some change we will consider it when the act next comes up for review.

UNITED NATIONS

PROSPECTIVE OTTAWA MEETING ON STAND-BY UNITS FOR PEACE FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the secretary of state tell the house what developments have taken place in respect to the proposed conference which is to be called by Canada of nations which might be willing to contribute to permanent stand-by forces for international peace keeping?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was kind enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question. We hope this meeting on peace will be held in Ottawa during the week of November 2. Several governments have already informally indicated their desire and intention to participate. We are now awaiting the reaction of other governments.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question. I wonder whether the secretary of state could tell the house if the proposals contained in the memorandum of the U.S.S.R. regarding measures to strengthen peace keeping activities of the United Nations are being followed up in any way by this government, and about which the minister can tell us?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, they are.

REPRESENTATIONS BY U.S. RESPECTING COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to ask the Secretary of State of External Affairs. Is it a fact, as reported yesterday in the Ottawa Journal, that the United States, through Mr. Cabot Lodge, has strongly advised or cautioned Canada against recognizing mainland China or supporting her admission to the United Nations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there was no discussion of that subject.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there any foundation for radio or television reports to the effect that as recognition of China is a matter that should take into consideration the feelings of our allies, recognition is to take place after the month of November and early in 1965?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I know of no grounds for suggesting that this will take place early in 1965. No one can say definitely when a decision on this matter will be finally reached.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CONFERENCE TO ESTABLISH ECONOMIC PRIORITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry. When he suggested in Montreal this week that there must be much greater co-operation between the federal government and the provinces in planning priorities in the economic and social fields, was he indicating support of Premier Roblin's suggestion that a federal-provincial conference should be convened immediately to plan priorities in the economic and social fields, and has he made these views known to the Prime Minister?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, my speech was distributed to all members of the house, and if my hon. friend would read those parts of my speech found on pages 4, 14, 20, 21 and 24 he will see there is no relation between the request of Premier Roblin and what I had to say about economic planning in Canada.

TRANSPORTATION

LACK OF RAILWAY PASSENGER ACCOMMODATION, MONTREAL-VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address an urgent question concerning the lack of passenger accommodation on the railway trains between Montreal and Vancouver. I am sorry the Minister of Transport is not here, but perhaps the Prime Minister would care to comment on it or direct it to the attention of the minister. It has been almost impossible to get reservations on the C.P.R. trains during the past several weeks, and just a few days ago they removed all sleeping car accommodation from two of the trains they are operating. Would the Prime Minister bring this matter to the attention of the Canadian Pacific Railway and request them to provide at least sufficient service to meet the demand?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the Prime Minister is taking up this matter would he also look into the difficulty in obtaining accommodation experienced by railway union members as against fare paying passengers? I understand it is very difficult for employees of the railway to get accommodation on the trains. Would the Prime Minister also inquire into this matter?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I will do that also.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR OPPORTUNITY TO EXPRESS VIEWS ON AMENDMENT METHODS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as house leader. Will the minister be arranging for his estimates to come before the house prior to the conference of attorneys general next Thursday so that members of the house may express their views on methods of amending the constitution?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did say I would try to have my estimates entered. They are automatically entered now, and I shall try to arrange to bring them before the house for this purpose if at all possible.

Mr. Scott: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the words "if at all possible" in the minister's answer, in the event it does not prove to be possible will the minister assure the house that some other opportunity will be given the House of Commons to express its views on this subject prior to the conference?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, we shall try to arrange some kind of system to allow members of the house at least to express their views on the matter.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DORCHESTER PENITENTIARY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STABBING OF GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is the minister in a position to provide the house with information relative to the fatal stabbing of a guard at Dorchester penitentiary? And may I ask if this unfortunate incident is associated with overcrowding at that institution?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the immediate answer to the second part of the question with respect to overcrowding is no. I am not in a position to disclose all the circumstances connected with this matter at the moment, because I have not been able to ascertain whether a charge has been laid and whether the matter is before a court. I shall be in a position on Monday to relay to the house whatever information I can get.

MEETING WITH MINISTER TO DISCUSS PENAL REFORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I should like to ask him whether he has received a request from the Canadian correction association and associated organizations for a meeting with the hon. gentleman at which they can express their doubts about some of the policies which the department has announced. If such a request has been received, can the minister tell us whether a meeting has been arranged?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I am not sure whether I have received such a request. Either it has not been brought to my attention or I cannot recall the precise request to which the hon. member refers. However, it is my clear and firm intention, and I have so stated, that the officers of the Canadian correction association, like those of other bodies interested in penal reform, shall be consulted regularly about these problems in which they are so deeply interested.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

REFUSAL OF CERTIFICATES TO PROFESSED ATHEISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Does the minister propose to permit a special appeal in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Bergsma and to grant a certificate of citizenship to them, or does the minister contemplate that the Bergsmas should themselves take action to question the decision of the judge?

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): My estimates will be coming up after the orders of the day, and this is such a large subject I suggest to the hon. member that there will be an opportunity for the Minister of Justice and me to have a full discussion of the subject at that time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF DESIGNATED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Industry a question?

Is the minister now in a position to tell us when he will announce the designated areas for the coming year, and what standards will be used this year to designate these areas?

[Text]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, this question really is comprised of two parts. In respect of the first part, I think all hon. members will be aware that annually a review of the employment statistics in each of the n.e.s. areas is carried out. As a consequence of this review one can expect that some areas hitherto designated will cease, by reason of the improvement in their economic conditions, to be designated. It may happen also that some n.e.s. areas not now designated, as a consequence of deterioration in their conditions during the year, will come to be designated. This review is currently in progress, and since it covers the statistics for the summer months we hope that in the not too distant future we will be able to make an announcement as to which areas will be designated or will cease to be designated in the forthcoming year.

I am in a position to say that because of the substantial improvement in economic conditions in Canada during the past year, preliminary indications are that this program will have been successful in leading to the removal from the designated area list of certain presently designated n.e.s. areas. I am happy to be able to announce this, to indicate the success of the program and more particularly the general advance made by the Canadian economy during the year.

I should perhaps take this occasion to remind hon. members that this year an amendment was made to the act in respect of areas which may be removed from the designated list, to provide that enterprises which are now contemplating establishing in designated areas may, if prior to dedesignation they have filed with the area development agency a notice of intention to establish commercial production and if they proceed with reasonable dispatch to establish such a new enterprise, receive the same advantages as if the area had not been dedesignated. It is therefore incumbent on those who are looking at the possibilities of establishing in designated areas to make up their minds and take action in the matter.

In so far as the hon. member's question relates to an alteration in the objects of the program, as I have said on a number of occasions this is a large subject and we are addressing ourselves to it. I would hesitate to set a date for the termination of this review.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF NORTHERN ALLOWANCE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of a recent treasury board ruling which drastically reduces, and in some cases cancels, northern allowance payments to civil servants in some federal departments while in other federal departments in the same areas no reductions have been made in these payments, will the minister consider a review of this entire situation?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I will be glad to refer this question to the President of the Privy Council. I am sure he will deal with it at the beginning of the week.

HOUSING

CONFERENCES WITH PROVINCES AND MUNICIPALITIES ON AMENDMENTS TO ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Can the minister tell the house when a further meeting will be held with provincial and municipal authorities with regard to the implementation of the amendments to the National Housing Act; and if these meetings are held will members of this house in the regions affected be invited to be present?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): I am glad to be able to inform the hon. member and the house that the second of these conferences will be held in St. John's Newfoundland, on October 9 and 10. The two provincial ministers in the province of Ontario, the minister responsible for public housing and the one responsible for the field of urban renewal, Hon. Mr. Spooner, are coming to Ottawa with Mr. Soble, head of the Ontario housing association, for discussions here on October 6. At that time I hope we will be able to fix a date for a meeting in the Toronto area or perhaps two meetings, one in Toronto and one in Hamilton, to which interested members of this house will be invited as they have been in Halifax and in St. John's.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

WINTER BERTHING OF HYDROGRAPHIC SHIP "ACADIA"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Has the minister received a communication from the board of trade of Pictou, Nova Scotia, regarding the berthing of the Canadian hydrographic ship Acadia in that port during the coming winter? If so, has he made a decision on this important matter?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I have not yet received a communication this season. I did hear from them last year, but so far this year I have not seen anything cross my desk from the board of trade.

Mr. MacEwan: Will the minister check on that and advise me?

ROYAL VISIT

OMISSION IN PRESS RELEASE OF REFERENCE TO LEADER OF OPPOSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, based on the press release of the special committee for the royal visit which was distributed to members yesterday. Having read the communiqué quite carefully I notice there is no reference made in any of the official functions to the leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition. In view of the fact that the Leader of the Opposition is a member of the Queen's privy council and is an ex-prime minister of Canada I am wondering whether this, perhaps, oversight might be rectified?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition will be treated on this visit exactly in the same way as members of the privy council and former prime minister were treated in previous years on visits of Her Majesty to Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give notice that I wish to go into this matter further on Monday at 10 p.m.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. RESPECTING CANADIAN INCENTIVE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Industry which is prompted by a telegram sent on behalf of thousands of automobile workers in Canada, relating to the government's incentive program for automotive parts. Has the government of Canada received representations from the government of the United States, or anyone on its behalf, with respect to changes in the government's automotive parts incentive program? If so, what was the nature of those representations, and what response was made by the government of Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the government of the United States has, of course, drawn to the attention of the Canadian government the fact of the presentation of a petition by one of the motor car parts manufacturers in the United States to the United States government, urging the imposition of countervailing duties on Canadian automotive exports. The United States government has also indicated that this program has caused some concern in the United States, and to this end the Canadian government has been exploring possible ways of meeting this concern, at the same time pursuing vigorously the Canadian government's objectives of rationalization of the motor car industry in Canada and the expanding even further of the north-south trade directions in automotive parts.

Mr. Scott: In view of the fact that we all agree with the general objectives of the minister's department may I ask whether in these conversations or representations the United States representatives requested any changes in the present program and, if so, were any responses made?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, in the light of the petition presented to the commissioner of customs it is to be expected that the United States would suggest that the present arrangements are not entirely satisfactory. As I say, the Canadian government has been exploring possible alternatives which will have the result of achieving the same end objective, namely increased trade north and south in automotive parts between our two countries, in a way which will achieve that objective but which will not perhaps cause the same concern as the present method has caused.

Mr. Scott: As a final supplementary, in view of the general uncertainty in business and labour circles surrounding this whole program, does the minister feel he could consider this carefully over the week end and, at the beginning of next week, make a fairly comprehensive statement on the intentions of the government in this regard?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite certain I would agree with the premise that there is great uncertainty. This program to date has been remarkably successful. The expansion in the first five months of this year of both exports of automotive parts from Canada and imports of automotive parts into Canada has been such as to lead to a substantial increase in activity on the Canadian side in the automotive parts industry. Therefore I am a little at a loss to understand why there should be uncertainty.

I can reassure the hon. gentleman that if there are to be any changes in this program they will be in the direction of making it even more expansive, and even more likely to achieve the objectives sought through the present arrangements.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, in view of the uncertainty I mentioned I would like to give notice to debate this matter at the earliest opportunity, some night at ten o'clock.

FINANCE

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF MUNICIPAL BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Does he intend to comply with the resolution passed at the 43rd annual convention of the municipalities union requesting the establishment of a municipal bank? Does his department intend to give serious consideration to that resolution?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I would be expected to reply to a question of that kind on orders of the day.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO SMALLER OPPOSITION PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the request that has been made by certain hon. members for some broadcasting time on the C.B.C. I wish to announce that I have now been informed by the corporation that the C.B.C. is prepared to allocate a total of a half hour to the three smaller parties in the house. The C.B.C. is communicating with the representatives of the three parties in this respect.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. When will the legislation respecting the latest version of the Canada pension plan be on the order paper?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Well, Mr. Speaker, I imagine the resolution will be on pretty soon.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. It relates to the undertaking given to the house by the Minister of Justice on July 6, when he said:

> —the government undertakes to obtain the completion of the legislative process with respect to the Canada pension plan before the end of the session.

Does this undertaking still stand?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we still hope that will be done.

Mr. Knowles: Good.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. Favreau: For the convenience of certain members and with the concurrence of the house leaders of all parties I would ask that item 10, that is immigration, be called first. Afterward we shall revert immediately to item 5, which is citizenship.

The Chairman: Is that agreeable to the committee?

Mr. Howard: Before it is agreed, I think the Minister of Justice would be well advised to indicate for whose convenience this change is being asked. I have just discussed this with my deskmate, the whip of our party, and he tells me he did not agree with this change; he just noted it.

Mr. Winch: I should like to ask why this notification is being given to us now when I, and I presume others, have guided ourselves by the previous announcement that the first item would be citizenship. I came prepared to speak on the estimates of the citizenship branch, though I also wish to speak on the subject of immigration. However, I do not have that particular file with me at the present time.

Mr. Favreau: I think it is within the normal authority of the government to call items in any desired order. I thought it would be more appropriate, though, to advise the house leaders of all the parties, and I believed this morning that I had secured their respective concurrence. Possibly I misread the note which came back to me from one quarter of the house.

The reason I am making this suggestion for a change in the order in which the departments are to be taken is that there is a meeting of cabinet of which I am chairman which is supposed to sit at twelve o'clock. I shall not be able to be present here until 2.30 p.m. I know that certain hon. members have expressed interest is discussing, for example, the question of oaths with respect to applications for citizenship, and I know the minister of immigration would like me to deal with certain questions with which I am concerned in the course of my duties as Minister of Justice.

Before twelve o'clock, one of the members of the official opposition who has now left the chamber asked me whether we could not call that item after 2.30, because he had to leave and would probably not be back before then. I may say, though, that it was not this suggestion which prompted the proposal for a change; my note to the house leaders was sent before that request was made. Perhaps I could correct myself in one particular; the hon. member to whom I have just referred was not a member of the Conservative party but a member of the New Democratic party.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we begin our discussion with item 10?

Mr. Howard: For my own sake, I think the government should in future consider proceeding on its own initiative.

Mr. Favreau: We are prepared to take responsibility for this and proceed on our own initiative, but it seemed to me courtesy required that I should ask the house leaders for concurrence.

Immigration—

10. Administration, operation and maintenance, including transoceanic and inland transportation and other assistance for immigrants and settlers subject to the approval of treasury board, including care en route and while awaiting employment; and payments to the provinces, pursuant to agreements entered into, with the approval of the governor in council, in respect of expenses incurred by the provinces for indigent immigrants and $10,000 for grants to immigrant welfare organizations, $13,552,200.

Mr. Orlikow: I am sorry that at this late date, when the government has been in office for as long as it has, the present administration has as yet given no indication that it is prepared to move fairly quickly toward a basic rewriting or amendment of the Immigration Act.

It is not my intention today to reiterate in great detail the inequities and difficulties which have arisen as a result of the Immigration Act as it stands and, more important, as a result of the regulations made under its provisions. However, members of the committee will, I am sure, recall that this matter has been discussed on a number of occasions when detailed criticisms of the act as it exists today have been made and the difficulties which arise out of this legislation have been pointed out.

I wish to summarize some of these difficulties in order that the minister may be reminded once again of the reasons we believe a complete revision needs to be undertaken. For example, it seems to us that the regulations should be amended immediately to remove a continuing discrimination in respect to sponsored immigrants by granting applicants the right to know the reasons for exclusion, as well as a proper hearing and right of appeal when they are excluded. At the present time an administrative device is used to exclude people arbitrarily. They are refused visas. Reasons for refusal are denied the applicant, and the only appeal which is open to him is heard by an administrative board composed of former administration officials who, in turn, do not give reasons for their decisions.

Some of these matters were discussed in great detail when this house considered the situation of people who had entered Canada illegally and who were detained for long periods in Toronto and Montreal. Partly as a result of discussions in this house and as a result also of publicity and condemnation in the press, the government appointed Mr. Joseph Sedgwick to conduct an inquiry. I do not wish to interfere in any way with that inquiry. I do not wish to suggest to the government that they anticipate Mr. Sedgwick's recommendations, but I do believe the difficulties we have experienced indicate clearly that it is time for a basic revision of the Immigration Act.

It is widely felt that the act and its provisions are being used to discriminate against prospective immigrants to Canada on the basis of race, religion and colour. I know—and the minister, I am sure, would remind the house if I did not say so—that the situation is much better than it was. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, I can tell the minister that very important groups of people and very important countries are still extremely dissatisfied with our attitude in regard to this question.

I have in front of me a speech made by the premier of Barbados, Hon. Errol Barrow, to the Canadian institute of international affairs at the University of New Brunswick, Fredericton, on October 25, 1963. I want to read just a couple of paragraphs of this speech into the record, because I believe it is important to the house, to the minister and to the people of Canada to realize that some of our commonwealth partners have a very poor opinion of Canada's attitude toward them. It seems to me that if the commonwealth is to mean anything, if the commonwealth is to be more than just a name, surely the Canadian government, the Canadian parliament and the Canadian people ought to do everything possible to wipe out the inequities which exist. If such inequities and injustice do not exist, surely the minister and his department have a duty and a responsibility to get across to these countries what the actual situation is, so they do not think they are being discriminated against on the basis of race, colour, religion, and so on.

I wish to read just a couple of paragraphs from this speech because I think it is not only an excellent speech but it demonstrates how the peoples and the governments of the West Indies feel about Canada and our immigration policies. Here is what the premier of Barbados said, in part, on that occasion:

> And now I come to what is perhaps one of the more vexed problems of the relationships between your country and ours, and that is the question of immigration. The government of Canada is responsible for the policy of immigration into this country like any other government is. A government has to lead from in front; a government cannot wait to find out what the attitudes of little isolated groups of people in that community may happen to be in order to formulate its policy. And this is something on which I am very strong. Very often people in a country cannot appreciate the reasons or the motives behind the action of a government in implementing proposals or passing legislation; but a government has to be outward looking and a government has to lead from in front. And I am not satisfied that on the question of immigration the Canadian government has ever led from anywhere but far in the rear of public opinion. The truth of the matter is that the liberalization of the immigration policy around about January or February, 1962 allowed West Indian immigrants who have special skills or who have relatives in the Dominion of Canada to come into this country without any great formality. Formalities still exist, but they are not as rigorous as they were before. Despite this liberalization of the immigration policy of this country, we find that last year only 1,500 West Indians entered the Dominion of Canada out of a total migrant entry of some 75,000 or 77,000 people. We have approximately three and a half million people in the British Caribbean and in the same period 4,500 people went to the United Kingdom from Barbados alone and, subject to correction by the Jamaican high commissioner, about 12,000 Jamaicans went to the United Kingdom. Now it is much more expensive to get from the Caribbean to the United Kingdom than it is to get from the Caribbean to the Dominion of Canada. Furthermore, I think that the West Indian would much sooner endure the rigours of a Canadian winter than the vagaries of an English summer. I have never heard a West Indian working in this country complain too much about the winter, but in the middle of summer I have heard them make some very unfavourable comments about the English weather. Therefore the proposition would have to be that the West Indian would sooner come to Canada than go to the United Kingdom. Why then do we get from two territories alone something like 18,000 West Indian workers, despite the commonwealth immigrants act of 1962, going to the United Kingdom and only 1,500, including 250 domestic servants who come out under special visa arrangements, coming to the Dominion of Canada? To be brutally frank, ladies and gentlemen, there is a feeling that in the large influx of unskilled Italian and other European immigrants coming into this country, there is either tacitly or explicitly some element of discrimination against the West Indian immigrant.

Later the premier of Barbados said:

> And that is why I think that a government ought to stop hiding behind such shibboleths as housing problems and problems of accommodation, problems of integration and that kind of thing, and give the lead from in front and not trail so dismally behind.

I want to emphasize again that these are not the words of an ordinary immigrant, a person who comes to Canada and does not know what is going on in Canada, who does not know what is going on in Great Britain and does not know what are the problems of the West Indies. These words come from the premier of one of the West Indian countries. I think the people of Canada and the government of Canada owe it to the people of the West Indies, if the commonwealth concept means anything, if the democratic concept of equality of all people regardless of race, religion and colour means anything, to either correct this situation which the premier of Barbados says in his speech exists, or we need to do an educational job of explaining to the people of the West Indies why this situation exists about which the premier of Barbados has spoken.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to raise one other question with regard to immigration. We have not had as large an immigration into Canada in recent years as we had in earlier years, but the nationalities that have come here have changed very markedly. The number of people who have come from Great Britain and from the northern and western parts of Europe has dropped, certainly percentagewise, very substantially; and the number of people who have come to Canada from eastern and southern Europe, from countries like Italy and Greece, has increased very substantially.

I say this, Mr. Chairman, not in any critical sense, because I think it is obvious why the people who traditionally came here from countries like Great Britain are not coming now. I have mentioned the reasons before, as have other members. Naturally when they have full employment in western Europe, while until this year at least we have had for the last ten years substantial unemployment, people are not going to come here. Naturally people from countries like Italy, Greece and Portugal, which have a much lower standard of living than Canada, are going to come here as quickly as we permit and encourage them to do so.

This is what has happened, Mr. Chairman. I not only do not disapprove of this, I welcome it, provided the department, in co-operation with provincial and municipal authorities, recognizes some of the problems which have arisen and will arise as a result of this change and takes steps to help integrate the people who have come here so they may become what they want to become, namely law abiding, well adjusted, well integrated citizens of Canada.

I think they have done remarkably well. One can visit the new Canadian areas of any large city in Canada, whether it be Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg or Vancouver, to mention just a few, and see how well these people have become integrated. One must admit and be happy at the fact that the largest percentage of them have been able to find jobs, learn to speak English and do a better job of integrating into our society than they were able to formerly. But the fact is that for a large number of them this integration has been very difficult. In many cases it has not yet begun, and many difficulties still exist.

It seems to me that the department must have a much closer look at the kind of people who are coming here and at the problems which have arisen. I do not think the department must do this necessarily by itself, because I recognize that to a large extent these social and economic problems are the responsibility of the provinces and the cities in which these people live. But if the federal government is going to encourage people from Italy, Greece and Portugal to come here, it seems to me that it is the responsibility of the government and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration to do everything possible to see that they are integrated into our way of life as quickly as possible.

To a large extent the people who have come here from countries such as Greece, Italy and Portugal are people who do not know the language, and that is understandable. They are people who have lived under governments and regimes which were not democratic. Some were fascist, some certainly autocratic; and the knowledge of these people of democratic society, how people live under our kind of government, and their knowledge of institutions like trade unions and co-operatives is, to say in the least, very limited.

There was an excellent series of articles about immigrants in Toronto which appeared in the Globe and Mail in September of this year, in the course of which some of the problems these people face were dealt with. The fact is that many of them are mercilessly exploited just because they do not know our language, our laws and our customs. The Globe and Mail listed—I am sure it was not difficult to obtain a list because any trade union organizer in any city in Canada could provide one—dozens of cases where immigrants worked here, particularly those who did not understand English, for months if not years for wages which were less than the law of the province required.

It seems to me that to say that minimum wage laws are a provincial matter is just not good enough.

If we encourage people to come here, Mr. Chairman, to work in restaurants, laundries and the construction industry; and if there is evidence—and I suggest to the minister there is ample evidence—that they are being paid starvation wages and are being exploited, I submit it is the responsibility of the minister's department to work with the provincial authorities in order to make sure that the people who are encouraged by the government of Canada to come here receive the protection to which they are entitled.

A large number of people who have been brought to Canada are working as agricultural labourers. I know these labourers come under the jurisdiction of the provinces, and even if they did not one could not expect the minister to deal with labour problems, which come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Labour. But a large number of immigrants in recent years have worked as agricultural workers in rural areas, and like other agricultural workers they do not receive the protection of the minimum wage laws, the workmen's compensation acts, hospital insurance, and so on.

I do not think it is good enough for the department to say that all agricultural workers are affected by the same kind of situation, and it is a matter which has to be dealt with by the provincial ministers of labour and the other provincial departments concerned. After all, these people came here at the urging of the federal government. They came here because the federal department established means for encouraging them to come here. It seems to me we need to establish through the Department of Citizenship and Immigration agencies and offices to protect immigrants in the transitional period until they have an opportunity to learn the language, to learn the laws of Canada and what are their rights.

It has been suggested by people who have made special studies in this field that we need new agencies, either government agencies or voluntary agencies, established in areas where these immigrants live, staffed by people fluent in the language of the immigrants to act as a liaison between the immigrants and the community. They would be able to keep track of newcomers to the neighbourhood and provide them with advice and assistance which they will need if they are to become useful, happy citizens in this country of ours. There are some voluntary agencies working in cities such as Toronto, but the ability of voluntary agencies to handle this kind of complex and expensive undertaking is very limited, and certainly limited by lack of finances.

As I said, if this government is going to continue to encourage people to come to Canada, particularly people who are new to our language, our customs and our way of life certainly I will support them in this program, because I think people from these countries I have mentioned as well as other countries should be encouraged to come here. But it seems to me that if the government are to continue to do this, as they have for a large number of years now, in fairness to them the department must establish a means so these people when they come here receive the assistance they require to enable them to become useful and happy citizens.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I want to contribute very briefly to the discussion of the citizenship and immigration estimates. I wish to take part in this discussion in order to express a few personal ideas concerning the whole problem of immigration, even if those concepts may, in some cases, seem somewhat bold.

Mr. Chairman, I think that for the federal government immigration represents a moral responsibility as well as a social one. Not only with regard to Canadian citizens but to the citizens of the whole world.

Our country has immense resources but is still sparsely populated.

Indeed, there is certainly room for a very large population, and it should be recognized that the 19 million-odd people in this country are only a very small population for such a vast territory.

On this basis, it must be recognized that we have a double responsibility, that is to maintain a buoyant economy in Canada, and also to open our doors to people from overpopulated countries who are only too glad, at this time, to find some other place under the sun where life is a little easier.

But there are many problems connected with immigration, and the economic problem is not the least one, if we consider the fact that, at this time, the department of immigration is trying by various means to attract to Canada people from other countries so that they may work with us in the development of this country.

On the other hand, we recognize and deplore the fact that a very large proportion of our university graduates, technicians, and all those who have attended university, are crossing the border to the south, because they are attracted by better economic conditions in the United States.

We, in Canada, are trying by every means to raise the educational standards of our people. In the province of Quebec, more particularly, we see that the government is earmarking a very large part of its resources for the educational field, but, unfortunately, we find that in the end a very large proportion of our graduates cross the border and remain in the United States where they find greater advantages and greater possibilities of advancement.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Department of Citizenship and Immigration could not give special consideration to that problem because the exodus of our graduates to foreign countries constitutes an extremely serious loss for Canada which, on the other hand, is trying to attract citizens from other lands who, in most cases, do not have the technical know-how and who are not adapted to our culture and our economic and weather conditions.

I should like to call the attention of the minister on that particular point because I feel it is most important for us to make the necessary effort to keep our citizens, our brothers and our children but especially our university graduates whom we need so much and who will remain here if we can, within our economic system, offer them the same advantages as they would get in the United States, at this time, or at least comparable advantages. In my opinion, economics are closely related to the immigration policy we must follow in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, there is a particular problem I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. It may be somewhat delicate because it has to do with the previous traditional attitude of Quebec concerning immigration.

Yet, I think it is fairly easy to explain or, if you prefer, to justify the attitude French Canadians from Quebec had, in past centuries, toward the coming of immigrants.

I think we have to go back to the year 1760, when France left Canada as such and when England took over the control of the country, to understand what has been the situation of the French speaking Canadians in a Canada which was becoming an English colony.

Having decided they would remain a French entity on this North American continent, they had to settle in the back country, I might say, and stick to the land in order to survive. And during 100 years, they categorically opposed immigration because they knew that for them, immigration, in the situation then prevailing, was a threat to their very existence and meant assimilation sooner or later.

Since that time, 200 years have passed and during those 200 years, the French-Canadian group, as such, has laid strong foundations which practically ensure its survival. Indeed, I think that survival is no longer a problem.

What is a problem at this time is to maintain its percentage within Canada as a whole. I think that is where the federal government has a very serious responsibility, the responsibility to see about maintaining that percentage. That is not easy; it is even very difficult, I know, all the more so as my fellow citizens in the province of Quebec still have difficulty in understanding the problem, and especially in considering the solutions we may put forward in order to maintain that proportion of the French speaking element in Canada.

Personally, I have come to the conclusion that the people of Quebec should completely revise their philosophy concerning immigration.

Admittedly, if Quebec maintains its present position toward such immigration, we shall definitely see the percentage of French speaking Canadians diminish compared to that of English speaking Canadians.

In my opinion, the possibilities we have of maintaining that percentage are quite limited; we should therefore take full advantage of those possibilities if we really want to attain this objective.

Personally, after analysing the situation and scrutinizing the various aspects of the problem, I have come to the conclusion that the Quebec government should partake in the immigration policy of this country. Here, I would like to call the minister's attention to a positive suggestion I intend to make. The minister of education in Quebec, Hon. Paul Gérin-Lajoie, is, I believe a highly qualified and very broadminded man, and especially he is able to speak to the population of Quebec. By his initiatives, he proved that he had the ability and the qualifications.

It is very difficult to convince the people of the province of Quebec who are over 50 years of age that such a change is necessary in their attitude toward immigration; but it is not so difficult to convince the young people. If we want this mentality to develop in the province of Quebec in the matter of immigration, we must work among those who, tomorrow, will become French Canada, that is to say our young people.

There should be, and I feel strongly about this, the closest relationship between the Quebec minister of education and the federal minister of immigration, so that together they may arrive at policies liable to give the results we are all hoping for, that is the maintenance of the present percentage of French speaking people in Canada.

There are very specific reasons, Mr. Chairman, for the maintenance of such a percentage. One of them arises from the present grievances on the part of this group of Canadians in Quebec against confederation and in favour of Quebec's withdrawal from confederation. That grievance, that separatism, since you want to call it that, also originates in immigration. We are afraid, because we realize the possibility of assimilation and we cannot see any solution to that threat other than the withdrawal of Quebec from confederation, so as to form a French state, independent from the rest of the country and able to control and maintain at the present percentage the French speaking people on the North American continent.

I believe that, in view of the facts, we should try to foster the coming to Quebec of immigrants with a Latin culture. I realize it is very difficult to attract to French Canada, or any other part of Canada, French people from France, and I understand this, because France is not overpopulated—it is a country that could be compared to a garden where people live in economic and climatic conditions that are practically ideal; it is very difficult to make a Frenchman leave his own country.

Therefore, if we cannot rely on French nationals to come to Canada or to Quebec to complement the natural increase in our population in order to maintain our percentage of French speaking people in Canada, we must look in another direction. I can only think of one solution, and that is Italy. Italy is overpopulated particularly in the north. It is a Latin country. We have considerable cultural affinity with the Italians. I think that we, Quebeckers, should make a superhuman effort in that direction.

I would like the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to study the situation very closely in order to see to what extent we should bring Italian citizens to Quebec at the present time, because I believe that if they cannot be assimilated into the Canadian context, if they cannot be assimilated into the Quebec context, the French context as such, we should be prepared to make certain concessions. In my opinion, particularly in Quebec, we should be prepared to accept a very large number of Canadians of Italian ancestry in Quebec because, although we may not speak the same language, there is nevertheless a tremendous cultural affinity between us.

If we could attract a large number of Italian immigrants to Quebec, it would be the only really practical solution for us to offset the present trend indicating that the proportion of French speaking Canadians or those of Latin culture is decreasing in the country.

I hope that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will duly note those remarks. If he discussed this problem with the Quebec minister of education, both of them could include in the educational program of the province of Quebec, a subject dealing with immigration that would be taught in all Quebec schools.

I feel that in the Quebec educational system at present, emphasis should be laid on the need to increase Canada's population. I believe we should make it clear to our school children that the coming of immigrants to our country is not a threat to our economy, far from it.

I believe there is an urgent need to increase our population. It is a matter of prime importance at present, if we want to overcome those economic problems resulting from the fact that our territory is too large for our small population. This automatically causes serious transportation problems which affect production costs before reaching the consumers. Canada must increase its population. Since our neighbours have a population of 200 million people, as long as we compete with that country, we shall experience difficulties, being unable to establish secondary industries requiring large investments in order to achieve mass production which is only justified in itself by a large consumption.

Our immigration policy must be revised. Quebec was right to object, in the past, to the coming of immigrants into Canada. Today, however, Quebec must bow to facts and change its attitude because its very existence is threatened, since, in the first place, the percentage of its population will be reduced considerably year after year compared to the total population of the other provinces and, in the second place, its economy may fall in value proportionately to the increase of the population in the rest of the country. Quebec's economy will no doubt continue to improve, but at a slower pace than in other parts of Canada where immigrants are welcome.

I urge all my Quebec compatriots, who will perhaps hear about the speech I am making here today, to lay aside prejudices and any purely local reason they may have against the coming of immigrants into the country, and consider more objectively the problem facing us today.

Personally, I think the citizenship and immigration department should open a larger number of offices in Italy, especially in the north, where apparently there are 525 people per square mile. I do not know if my figures are correct, but I am told that Italy numbers about 250,000 new nationals every year. There is seemingly more Italians living outside Italy than in Italy itself. If that is the case, I think we should do everything we can to attract Italians to Canada, more particularly from northern Italy.

Why from northern Italy more particularly? Because living near the French border these people have more affinity with us than those living in the south. Also, because the northern part of Italy is economically and industrially more developed, it would be easier for us to find there people more qualified and able to adjust to our Canadian complex, from an economical and industrial point of view. Another reason for which I favour the coming to Canada of Italian citizens—it may not apply to everybody, but in Quebec I think that it is an important reason—is that Italy is the seat of the Catholic church and that a large majority of Italians are Catholics. For us, in the province of Quebec, this aspect is very important. Having made those remarks, I think—

Mr. Choquette: Are they practising Catholics?

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): My hon. friend is asking me if they are practising Catholics. I would not go so far as to suggest that they practise their religion more than we do in Canada. On the other hand, I cannot insult them by pretending that they practise it less. In any case, we in Quebec have only ourselves to blame if we do not practise more.

Mr. Choquette: Do you pretend that we do not practise our religion as much as they do?

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Unfortunately, I do. We must strive for perfection and, as far as I am concerned, I realize that the goal is still to be reached. I also think that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) finds himself in the same situation.

I should like to come back to the economic question, the sore spot in the objections of most people. I believe that here, in a nutshell, is Quebec's main objection: we now have 200,000 unemployed and, if we were to accept 100,000 Italians each year, would we then have 300,000 jobless people after two years and an additional 100,000 a year later?

I feel that, at this time, it is possible, through the publicity media available, to educate the population in regard to the economy, so that they may understand that the economy of a country expands with its population, and that the more the population of the country increases, the more the Canadian economy will be buoyant and prosperous.

In my opinion, the population of Quebec can understand this reality as well as that of the other provinces. All we have to do is use television, radio and newspapers to carry out an objective publicity campaign and to put forward these facts which will substantiate my statements.

Mr. Chairman, before I conclude my remarks, I must point out that we need a larger population to settle our huge territory.

We also have a responsibility to the population of the overpopulated countries, and in my opinion we must prepare ourselves to face this responsibility by offering reasonable economic conditions and by opening wider the gates of Canada to immigrants, so that we can develop our country and build here a truly Canadian industry, owned by Canadians and in a position to compete on world markets.

We must do that, while safeguarding the rights of the French Canadian minority in this country, giving it the assurance that it will survive, that it is in no danger of being assimilated and that it will always have the place to which it is entitled, from the point of view of its percentage of the total population as well as from the economic point of view.

Mr. Cantelon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say something about immigration from the West Indies, possibly on the same line as that taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. Immigration from the West Indies has been poor in numbers, and I suppose this is because we have imposed restrictions. I am sorry we have these restrictions, because in most cases West Indians speak at least one of our two official languages. They have the same ethical standards as ourselves, though I am free to admit they do not always observe them any better than we do; and, of course, they are members of the commonwealth. These ought to be sufficient reasons for us to remove restrictions on West Indian immigration. Of course I must also say we need to be careful not to remove all the restrictions, because there are many people in the West Indies who could not make a living in Canada and who would not fit into our society.

In 1952 when the present Immigration Act was passed, some 710 people came to Canada from the West Indies, and until 1955 the annual rate of immigration from that area ran at around that very low figure. In 1956 one restriction was removed and immigrants were allowed to enter Canada from the West Indies provided they were designated by the West Indian government as domestic servants. When that happened some 1,058 of them came to Canada, and during the next five years immigration remained in that range.

In 1962 the government decided it would be advantageous to remove that particular regulation and put in its place a restriction —perhaps I should not use the word restriction—rather, a regulation allowing people with certain educational standards, training and skills to enter Canada from the West Indies, and in that year some 1,480 immigrants came to Canada from the West Indies. Further, the then government sent immigration teams to the West Indies, and partly as a result of their work and as a result of the new regulation, in 1963 some 2,227 people came to Canada from the West Indies, still a very small number but at least those who came were able to fit into our society.

A total of 75,000 people left the West Indies in 1962, of whom only 1,480 came to Canada, but it is obvious there are many people in the West Indies who would like to settle elsewhere. I request the minister to review this whole problem carefully and introduce liberalizing measures which would allow entry into our society of more West Indians capable of making their living in Canada.

It would be unwise to open the doors wide and let them all flood in, because they are not accustomed to our climate and I am afraid some of them could not adjust to our system of living. However, the previous Liberal minister of citizenship and immigration said his government wanted to remove any stain of racial discrimination from the Immigration

Act. I would hope the present minister agrees with this and will review the whole problem of West Indian immigration so as to allow more of these people who would like to come to Canada to do so.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, I listened attentively to the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard). I agree with the main part of his remarks, especially when he talked about the immigration of Italians from the north. Of course I am for judicious immigration to Canada.

Since the hon. member for Lake St. John talks about immigration for the province of Quebec, I think the Quebec government should take the necessary steps to settle those immigrants there. The other provincial governments should do the same thing. Those who want to encourage strong immigration should see to it that immigrants are well settled and looked after so that they may adapt themselves to the Canadian way of life.

I wanted to stress the fact that Italians from the north would certainly be qualified to come to Canada as immigrants.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Peters: One o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Baldwin: This is the first opportunity I have had to speak while any matter of concern to the hon. minister was before the house and I wish to extend to him my best wishes in the administration of what I consider to be one of the most important departments of government in the country, particularly at this time.

Before I deal with the estimates I should like to take this opportunity to place on record my appreciation of the co-operation, the understanding and the assistance of all members of the hon. gentleman's department, from whom I have never had anything but the utmost courtesy in connection with the various incidents I have had occasion to bring to the attention of the minister.

We have heard some interesting speeches today and I think I can safely say that my views coincide with most of the views which have been expressed, because despite what has been said to the contrary it is still my impression that the concept of immigration in this country is very much the same as it was many years ago and that it will continue to be for years to come. I took the occasion during the lunch hour to look up in the library the beautiful inscription which appears on the statue of liberty—part of a poem by Emma Lazarus which is inscribed on a tablet there. I think these are words which the minister and his officials here in Canada could well bear in mind:

> Give me your tired, your poor,
> Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
> The wretched refuse of your teeming shore,
> Send these, the homeless, tempest-tossed, to me:
> I lift my lamp beside the golden door.

There are some who say this expresses a principle which no longer holds good. I deny that most emphatically, particularly because in the world today—and I have had occasion to speak on this subject before—we see approaching at a rapid rate numerous problems which will arise in consequence of the population explosion throughout the world. The expectation that the world population will double within 25 or 35 years must give us pause. We have in this country the area, the place, the opportunities, the resources. We have also a need for the people who will be cast upon our shores by reason of this population explosion.

I know there are some who feel there should be limits drawn on grounds of colour, race and religion. But I would point out that we are now rapidly approaching an age when the dropping of a nail somewhere in the deserts of Asia will have its impact in all parts of the world, and these divisions are not as valid as they were. I had occasion just over the last week end to fly to my constituency, a vast area stretching over the northwestern third of the province of Alberta. On Saturday in a small plane I flew north to a place called Hay Lakes which is along the route of the new Great Slave lake railway. Here I saw millions of acres of arable land. I flew low over tremendous forests waiting to be exploited. The railroad goes to the Pine Point area, a mine where a town will shortly be built. I flew over small hamlets which are rapidly becoming towns in an area where as a young lawyer 30 years ago I walked and rode in pursuit of my professional duties—an area with gas and oil, all that is needed to make a wealthy country, save only people; an area which could accommodate 5 million people with no difficulty at all. It seems to me that as time passes our statesmen will find it increasingly difficult to hold up their heads in council chambers of the world to which they will from time to time be called unless we now direct our efforts towards bringing about a complete immigration policy.

I have been looking at the statute. I may be wrong and if so the minister will correct me, but it is my impression that we still have virtually the same statute as was on the books in the revised statutes of 1927. True, there have been some changes, additions and deletions but generally speaking much of the wording remains the same. I do not place the blame for this upon the minister or upon his officials. This is something which we as a people have neglected. We have failed to turn our attention to it. In the Peace river area, and indeed in all parts of the north our requirement is for people. We wonder whether or not we are going to secure the immigrants we need to develop our country as we did in the past.

There is no doubt that in what might be called the good old days—or probably they were the bad old days—people migrated from east to west because of depressions and difficult times. There were some who were adventurous, but mainly they were people who wanted to move because they were compelled to do so to carve out for themselves a new home and a new career. This is what caused wave after wave of settlement both south of the border and north of the border between our country and the United States.

That situation no longer prevails. We have now brought into our economic system what one might call built-in shock absorbers through our social legislation, through all the various schemes that, I think wisely, we have thought fit to place upon our statute books. There will no longer be in our country any wave of migration such as I saw in my country in 1929, such as existed there in 1914, such as we saw throughout the west in the last century and was also witnessed in the United States. It seems to me that if when the first settlers came to this continent they had found unemployment insurance, old age pensions, family allowances and all those other social benefits, the west would never have been settled and the people who live on this continent would still be living in crowded misery east of the Appalachians and around the great lakes. So to settle this area in the west and north, to fill it with the population which it requires—and I think as a nation having these empty spaces we have a duty to make them available—we will have to attract and secure the entry into this country of people from outside these limits.

I am going to be very brief in my suggestions, Mr. Chairman. I suggest to the minister this will require a new concept of the problem of immigration. I wish to make this suggestion to the minister before I sit down. I understand there is under consideration a new act. All too often some act is formulated by a minister and his advisers, and when it emerges, it emerges as partisan legislation in the sense that it is ultimately offered by the government. I suggest to the minister that he should give serious consideration, before bringing forward any legislation, to the appointment of, or to asking the house to consider the appointment of a small select committee which could operate, possibly this year but certainly next session, to deal with this whole question of immigration, our approach to it, the question of what, if any, limitations we should place on the entry into this country of other people, the relation of our immigration policy to our economic and social problems, and in particular the necessity of settling that part of the country which lies to the north.

There is just one other matter I wish to deal with very briefly before concluding. Some other speakers have mentioned this question. I was on the island of Jamaica last winter during a very brief visit to the West Indies. Jamaica is a small island of some 3,400 or 3,500 square miles, with 1,800,000 people. It has a very small area of arable land; much of it is mountainous, much of it is unfit for cultivation and, as an hon. member said earlier, it is a country which is part of the commonwealth, a country which has many of the same principles, the same outlook and the same future as we have. This is an apt illustration of the problems which we face: To what extent should we, must we, give consideration to liberalizing our immigration laws so far as people from this area are concerned? It is my submission that this is a subject matter which lends itself exceptionally well to treatment by a committee of this house, a committee of members who are in constant touch and liaison with the people of Canada and who I think would be able to come up with some recommendations and advice to the minister at some time prior to the presentation to this house of a new Immigration Act. I conclude, Mr. Chairman, by asking the minister to give very serious consideration to this suggestion.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I have a great interest in the estimate which is now before us because, representing the constituency of Vancouver East, I have a riding in which there is a strong concentration of Canadians with varying ethnic backgrounds. Although the majority are what we might term British in origin, there are in Vancouver East many thousands of people whose ethnic backgrounds are Italian, Chinese, Germanic, Scandinavian and East Indian. It therefore follows, Mr. Chairman, that I receive and have to deal with a great many questions and problems with regard to the meaning and operation of the Immigration Act, our immigration policies our immigration regulations, etc.

Over the years certain factors have stood out in dealing with these questions and problems of my constituents. The first is one that was mentioned in the concluding remarks of the previous speaker, namely that a new Immigration Act is necessary. Mr. Chairman, it is now almost becoming an historic reference to make mention of a new Immigration Act. If you go back over the years you will find that every time a new minister takes over the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, the first or second speech that he makes in public, nearly always to an ethnic group somewhere in Canada, is to the effect that he is going to give priority to the overhaul of the Immigration Act and immigration policies, and will introduce a new act. Over the years I do not know of one minister going into that portfolio who has not done this within a week or two. Yet we still do not have that act.

In this respect, Mr. Chairman, the new minister is no different from his predecessors. He is kind enough to send to members of parliament copies of his words of wisdom as he spreads them across Canada in his speeches to ethnic groups. I have them. He, too, gives top priority to the need or necessity for a new act. Therefore, and rightfully so, under this estimate we can ask as top priority, will the minister tell us when the years of saying that this overhaul of the act is going to have priority are going to end, and the overhauled act will be introduced into the House of Commons for the consideration of its members? That is the first point, Mr. Chairman; because I think we have all agreed over the years—all parties and all ministers —that there is this need.

The second point is something with regard to which I believe I have considerable knowledge because of the ethnic background of the constituency of Vancouver East. Speaking from memory, over the years I do not believe I have ever raised an immigration problem with the minister or his predecessors that was not because of an approach made to me by a Chinese Canadian, an Italian Canadian or an East Indian Canadian in my constituency and dealing with the landed immigrant status of a relative. Whether it was a wife, child, brother or sister, it was a relative. Every time an application has been made on behalf of a Canadian in my constituency—and I have had many cases because I have such an ethnic stronghold, if I may put it that way, in my constituency—dealing with the landed immigrant status of a relative, be he from Indian, Pakistan, China or Italy, what has amazed me and continues to amaze me is the length of time it takes to process the application or to resolve the problem after it is brought to the attention of the department, either directly by the applicant or when the applicant comes to me as his member of parliament and I raise it for him. I could understand a matter of weeks or even three or four months would elapse, but my experience has been that month after month goes by, in some cases more than a year, before these matters are processed and resolved. That is not a good state of affairs. It is not good on the basis of public relations, international understanding, or for members of parliament who are trying to handle the grievances and problems in their constituencies so far as immigration matters are concerned.

If the minister were to tell this house that there is a shortage of staff at home and abroad, or a shortage of medical practitioners in Hong Kong or in our overseas offices, and were to ask this House of Commons for the required staff when he brought in his estimates, I can assure him that I would not be standing alone to back him and to see that he gets the required staff so that we can have an efficient processing of matters affecting immigration. I also think there are many problems caused by unnecessary red tape, and I sincerely hope that some examination is being made to correct the delay in processing due to unnecessary red tape.

I want to follow this up, Mr. Chairman, with another phase, one which I regret having to mention because the minister and his department must be getting a pile of files and correspondence between his department and myself concerning cases I have drawn to his and to the department's attention on behalf of my constituents. I regret having to say this, but it is my opinion that there is too much emphasis being placed in the department on trying to find some technicality, some regulation, some specific reason to turn down an application for landed immigrant status, rather than using a humanitarian approach in order to see whether or not it is possible to meet the desire of the applicant or to meet the proposals constructively presented by members of the House of Commons on behalf of their constituents. I say this particularly with regard to applications made by Chinese which come before the department.

I fully realize all the difficulties in the past and even some of the difficulties in the present. I fully realize the problems the department has had as a result of illegal entry, lies and confusion and contradictory statements, many of which have been cleared away now as a result of the policies regarding amnesty since 1961 or, in the cases of people who entered Canada after July 1961, the sympathetic consideration shown to them. I fully realize that these contradictions have occurred and these confusions have abounded but the more I deal with the Chinese the more I understand them. It is because these people themselves are confused and even scared. The reason for these contradictions and confusions is the fear that the ultimate decision will be a negative one. I should like to give two or three examples of this, as I think it is the best way to bring home what I have in mind. I will deal only with my constituents in Vancouver East.

After months of negotiation and the interchange of correspondence—I realize the minister had to deal with both his Vancouver office and Hong Kong and correspondence went back and forth—finally yesterday I was told that in the case of one application the answer was no, it would be rejected, and the reason was there was confusion in the mind of this old man as to the date when his son was born, etc. This applicant is an elderly Chinese Canadian for many years resident in Vancouver who operates a small business store in my constituency. His first wife was killed at the time the Japanese went into Hong Kong. Then he married again and his second wife is here. He had a child who was born in Canada and this child is at school. But he wants to bring over to Canada one son of his previous marriage. This man is old and not well. His wife is ill. She has just come out of hospital for the second time having undergone further operations, and he wants his son to take over the store and help keep his other boy at school. He made his first application 12 years ago and I am still fighting his case. But I have been informed that the answer is no because of this old man's confusion. He has been told that he cannot prove tnat this boy in Hong Kong is his son.

I am sorry that he cannot prove it, and frankly I do not know how he could prove it. But this is the point. If this boy is not his son, will you tell me, Mr. Chairman, why this Chinese Canadian who has operated a small grocery store for some 12 years in my constituency has been sending this man some $50 Canadian a month for his security and maintenance in Hong Kong? He has kept all the receipts, and I cannot conceive of an aged Chinese sending $50 a month to maintain someone in Hong Kong who is not his son. As I say, he made his first application 12 years ago and still wants this young man to come over. The authorities say that although perhaps there is some truth to this, otherwise he would not be doing it, the answer is still no. The authorities say that what he said 12 years ago and what he said two months ago do not jibe, so they have turned him down. It is this attitude that I cannot understand. Surely it is the milk of human kindness to consider these cases from the humanitarian point of view rather than look for technicalities; and surely the benefit of the doubt should be in favour of any applicant. That is just one example, but I want to give some others to drive my point home.

I have in my constituency another aged Chinese. How many years he has been in Canada I do not know but I do know that for 35 years he was the No. 1 boy—that is the term they use—of one of the most well known financial and industrial families in Vancouver. After 30 years as No. 1 boy he retired. He had saved his money and he bought an apartment block in Vancouver East which he is now running. He has only one child, a son born in Canada. That son has spent seven years in the R.C.A.F. and is still in the air force as a pilot. He is away from home.

His mother-in-law is in Hong Kong and she is very old and very ill. Admittedly she is old and ill. She has only one, two or three years of life left but she has been refused permission to come to Canada to see her daughter again and to die here. She can receive all the medical treatment she needs here. The man is prepared to pay her fare and to give her all the medical attention she requires. He will put up a $1,000 or $2,000 bond if the department requires it. But the answer is no.

With her is a nephew of this constituent of mine who at a very tender age was sneaked out of mainland China. He is one of five who were sneaked out and he is with the grandmother in Hong Kong. This constituent of mine who has a son in the air force and owns an apartment block would like to bring this boy over here along with the mother-in-law and raise him in Canada. What is the answer? The technicalities of the regulations. The department does not believe in splitting up a home or family. How in the name of heaven are you going to split it up any more than it is?

This tyke was sneaked out of communist China into Hong Kong. He is not going back and it does not look as if he is ever going to get out of Hong Kong. He has been there for four or five years now. The only one he knows is the grandmother. Yet the answer is that the mother-in-law cannot come because she is too old and medically unfit, and the little boy cannot come because the regulations or the law or the policy say that a family should not be split up. This may be the law, this may be the regulation, but if it is I say it is a stupid law, a stupid regulation, when the milk of human kindness cannot be exercised in cases such as these.

The minister knows I could give more examples but I have just given these two because for the life of me I cannot see any reason for this attitude on the part of a country that claims it is progressive and wants to help people. We brought in displaced persons who had no relatives in Canada, and the fact is that some of them had tuberculosis or other diseases. No regulation, no policy, no law of Canada stopped us from giving assistance to the freedom loving Hungarians. Yet when it comes to Chinese Canadians who have lived all their lives in Canada and who want to bring in a mother-in-law and a young nephew confusion is compounded and technicalities stand in the way. So the mother-in-law and nephew cannot come to this country although their transportation is guaranteed, their security is guaranteed and a bond would be posted before they came. But the department says no.

I ask the minister to take a second look at this type of case in which I am interested and let us see if we cannot give a demonstration of the height to which Canadian democracy can grow, and what it really means from the point of view of dealing with cases on the basis of need, on the basis of humanity, on the basis of sympathy, on the basis of sentimentality and not so much on the basis of law and regulations.

[Mr. Winch.]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, although I had no intention of taking part in this discussion about the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, during the next few minutes, I should like to add my own comments to those made by the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard), who, while giving us an intelligent review of the situation, did expound certain principles which did not quite excite me.

If one chooses to deal with the problem of immigration, one is doubly justified to do so if one happens to be a French speaking member, especially in view of the climate in which events are now taking place in the province of Quebec.

Another thing which leads me to take part in the present debate is the principle expressed at a meeting I had the opportunity to attend. I refer to the meeting of the Quebec Liberal federation, where the supreme authority there, Premier Lesage, stated that the Quebec government was the political expression of French Canada.

Mr. Chairman, it is clear that, at this time, the government of Quebec may be the strongest political expression of French Canada, but not its true political expression. I rather think that the political expression of French Canada is found in the French Canadian members sitting here in Ottawa. It should be the most important one, and it is precisely the one which has to discuss such a basic matter as immigration.

My hon. friend from Lake St. John said:

> We should try to maintain the percentage of French speaking people which now exists in this country.

I am not exactly excited over this principle, because I think that our objective, as French speaking members, should not be to maintain a percentage of 27 or 30 per cent, but, on the contrary, to restore a balance which was upset by a lack of any positive immigration policy on the part of the Quebec government, which has been inactive, apathetic, and even guilty, in the field of immigration, because it is evident that, however one looks at it, immigration has clearly been to the disadvantage of French speaking Canadians. Indeed, we have been constantly pressed back because of our immigration policy.

At this stage, we are not concerned with finding out who is guilty, but we want to find solutions. Consequently, the principle set forth by the hon. member for Lake St. John, to the effect that a certain percentage must be maintained, certainly does not excite or stir me. On the contrary, I believe that we should try to restore the upset balance and to increase the French speaking element in this country. We should make an inventory of all French speaking sources of immigration, to make the required selection and see by how much we would be able to reinforce the French speaking element and hence, Canadian unity itself.

In addition, if confederation continues to operate artificially as at the present time, a certain split may occur, and that should be prevented and avoided at all costs.

It is also necessary to establish a cultural interdependence among all Canadians, regardless of their ethnic origin. We should also have a Canadian ideal.

I am convinced that strengthening French minorities outside Quebec would contribute to create Canadian unity; a Canadian atmosphere and ideal would unavoidably be created and thus cultural interdependence among all Canadians would be greater. This is the ideal which I have in view and this is the reason why I wish to go beyond the thought expressed by the hon. member for Lake St. John.

On the other hand, my hon. friend had an excellent idea when he suggested that Canada should tap immigration sources in Latin countries. We have a better chance in Quebec to assimilate people with a Latin culture. The hon. member suggested northern Italy as a place where our country could go for immigrants, and I would say that he is perfectly right.

I do not feel I am straying from the thinking of the party I represent in this house by stating that such is the aim or intention of the Liberal party since we kicked those ideas around and decided that something should be done sooner or later—no date has been set—to open an immigration office in northern Italy, specifically to get immigrants of good stock, good reputation. Besides, the minister might have the opportunity to announce shortly the opening of an immigration office in Marseilles or Bordeaux.

As a matter of fact, his predecessor, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) had done so.

In this way, Mr. Chairman, our immigration policy would be sounder and more consistent.

I must add, in conclusion, that some will say: If you, French Canadians, complain of having been taken in with regard to immigration, it is surely your own fault.

It is true that at one time strangers were not welcome in the province of Quebec. This attitude was denounced by several people who were anxious to improve our political position in the field of immigration.

I should like to refer to a statement made by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) who once worried about the coming of Algerians. Imagine. A few French speaking Algerians were coming to the province of Quebec to take our farmers' places.

It is this archaic, old-fashioned and backward mentality that put us on the downgrade in the province of Quebec. That is the reason why our immigration policy always made us the losers.

This is the prototype of those narrow-minded people unable to understand that Quebec is in full development, that it must develop and needs immigrants to achieve this aim. The stronger the French element, the stronger Canada will be, because we are all interdependent.

This must be the goal of all members of the house.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: I would be very brave indeed if I were to continue in the vein of the last speaker. No matter which side of that particular debate I took, I think I might be the loser. The immigration policy of a country is, in my opinion, probably the most important problem, especially in so far as a country like Canada is concerned. Most segments of the economy consider we will have to increase the population of our country by immigration by at least 50 per cent or more in the next ten years to provide the opportunities that are available to the Canadian people. We need a vast number of immigrants in this country.

I believe it would be very difficult to decide in Timiskaming, in fact in any part of northern Ontario in which I have had the opportunity of living and working, who the immigrants were going to be. It would be difficult to maintain an ethnic balance in northern Ontario because the independent countries from which a large segment of the population came no longer exist. This is true of some of the Scandinavian areas, the Slavic and Baltic areas. These people have brought many benefits to northern Ontario from those areas, benefits that cannot be duplicated. I do not believe it is necessary for us to maintain a balance, particularly when it is something that was unplanned in the first place.

We should be embarking on an immigration policy which is designed to increase investment in the country and thus make it a better place for all citizens to live. In order to do this, Mr. Chairman, we have to have a fair, reasonable and internationally honest immigration policy. I have had differences of opinion with the officials of the immigration department in the past but, knowing civil servants, I am sure these officials are all very sincere. They are well aware of the problems facing them. I think the hon. member for Peace River put forward a suggestion that would eliminate some of the problems facing the senior civil servants when he suggested the appointment of a committee that would study what the government of Canada wanted to accomplish, what our aims were in connection with immigration. I know that if the Canadian people were able to decide at an election by referendum whether or not they wanted to bring in more immigrants to raise the population of Canada rapidly in the next ten years, the vote would be overwhelmingly in favour of that course. I know also that if you asked the people who they wanted to bring in as immigrants you would receive as many varied answers as there are ethnic groups. There has to be a set policy.

The minister must be faced with tremendous problems, because his predecessors were. Each one of them, upon going into citizenship and immigration, said that he or she would revise the act; that the things the hon. member for Vancouver East so eloquently expressed were facts. Certainly no minister who has any human tendencies at all would be able to read these letters without feeling strong emotions. This situation has resulted, over the years, in many orders in council which are really only an excuse, a legal method of doing something by way of exception that you cannot do in general. I am sure this minister is faced with the same problem. I am sure that every one of his advisers will tell him: You should do this but you cannot; you cannot do these things for the reasons that have been developed over the years.

I was sorry to see the former deputy minister, Mr. Davidson, go, because he had great understanding and an abundance of humanity which would, in my opinion, have enabled him to overcome some of the reluctance to look beyond what is honestly accepted by most officials of the department as being the facts. Many officials feel there is no way of changing the situation without creating a situation even worse than the one we are trying to correct. I believe if a committee were set up it could decide some of the ways in which our aims could be accomplished. I believe the minister is going to have to consider this committee set-up before he proceeds to change the act.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that I have not been here very long but I have heard every minister say, privately and publicly, that he or she intended to do something about the Immigration Act. I should like, just for a moment, to mention one problem that has faced us and with which we are running into the greatest difficulty now. I refer to the Asiatic immigration policy. I was shocked when I heard the minister say a few weeks ago that the amnesty order for Chinese would be off as of then. I do not believe that is possible. It is not possible for the simple reason that the officials of the department have not been able to get the Chinese population to believe their story. This is a problem for two reasons: One, the officials cannot speak Chinese, which is probably the greatest barrier and, two, there are not enough officials in the field who know the Chinese population well enough to have been able to establish a private relationship. There is no need to go into what happened six or seven years ago. All you have to do is look over the orders in council and you will find where the fault lies respecting many of these immigrants who came in illegally. They came in because of pressure groups. They were brought in by agencies and by people who wanted cheap labour. This was an organized thing to a certain extent, and I imagine that to some degree it still continues; but in fairness to the department, in most areas I know it has been cleaned up, including both the Hong Kong situation and that affecting the officials who operate in the Chinese communities in Canada.

However, we have not been able to convince the Chinese people. I spoke to seven or eight Chinese not long ago, and after I left them I was told seven of them admitted they should be applying under the amnesty order and that they were prepared to do so. We have not enough interpreters to handle the work under the amnesty order, and therefore I think the minister has to leave the order open, while at the same time making it plain that it will not last indefinitely, because if it does we will never be able to improve the Immigration Act sufficiently to stop illegal immigration.

Illegal immigration is a multimillion dollar racket. Every pseudo-gangster in the country wants to get into it because it is real big business. Recently I talked to a young Chinese boy who said he was brought in on a $30 a month basis under a five year contract. He had to pay his passage back, and the costs involved were $5,000; and during the five years of his contract he was paying $30 a month.

This is not a case of a kind old neighbour bringing one of his friends or relations from China. It is an organized machine, and the Canadian public should be told this machine exists. The public should be asked for support in seeing it is curtailed, and I suggest we should make it very plain both here and through our officials in Hong Kong that we are not going to tolerate it. The department should conduct a large scale advertising campaign to tell the Chinese people that if they go to these schools in China, from which they are sent to Canada, they will be deported.

Deportation should not apply to those already here. All I ask of them is to help us straighten the mess out, so that we will be able to decide who they really are, and clean up the whole rotten mess. Many of these people were brought here under highly criminal circumstances, and most of them have been the innocent victims of a machine that works to their disadvantage and to the disadvantage of the Canadian immigration policy.

I know the R.C.M.P. have information on many of these orders in council, but I also know that when they go into a file and discover an order in council they are told to lay off. This may be all right. I am not interested in having anybody prosecuted or persecuted, but I think it would be wise to go into some of these orders in council through the agency of the R.C.M.P. It is not good enough to ask a Chinese seeking the benefit of the amnesty to make a confession and disclose how he came into the country. He will not tell that; but we have other ways of finding out how the machine works and putting a stop to it.

Many Chinese who come to Canada are in their teens and they will make good citizens. It is only the rare exception who has turned out bad, and though it is true that in the main Chinese have not got involved in civic affairs, certainly they have always been willing to assume responsibility when called upon to do so. I have been very impressed with the Chinese I have met, ever since I became interested in this question. Four years ago when the amnesty was announced I did not believe fully in the sincerity of it, but the successive ministers since then have convinced me that it is solely for the purpose outlined, and so I have been very happy to work with the Chinese communities and with the immigration officers.

It is unfortunate when I find a senior civil servant not willing to co-operate. However this has not affected me and probably has not affected him. Certainly it has not affected the other officials in the department with whom I work. Those Chinese who are in Canada legally should ask questions of members of parliament. These Chinese are wondering if this is the proper time to come forward and declare themselves. A few weeks ago the minister scared the pants off them when he said the amnesty was coming to an end. Applications flooded in, but there are still some who are reluctant to come forward, and members of parliament could do a great service for them.

I suggest we make it perfectly clear to would-be Chinese immigrants that we will not tolerate future illegal entries. If we do this, and later a Chinese boy goes to a school in Canton, where he is given a new identity, shipped to Hong Kong and then transported to Canada, knowing full well he is breaking the law, then he will deserve to be returned to China. To do this the minister will have to undertake extensive publicity in Hong Kong and on the mainland to show that we are overhauling our immigration law to close the loopholes that have existed until now.

In my opinion the Conservative government and its ministers of immigration should be thanked for stopping the order in council system. That system was one of the worst ways of making exceptions to the law. The law should be changed, and I suggest members of parliament be consulted. I suggest a small committee should go into this matter and it should also give consideration to the problems of ratios which have been raised by members from Quebec. These problems will have to be met and we must devise an immigration policy that will facilitate the entrance of desirable immigrants.

I believe we will be obliged very shortly to consider the need to obtain increased immigration and we shall have to be very charitable in considering those countries from which the immigration will come. Why would anybody leave France to come to Canada? Why would anybody leave Germany today to come to Canada? Why would anybody immigrate from Holland to Canada? Why should people wish to leave most of the European countries, particularly those which are now prospering under the European common market and where the employment rate is extremely high? What do we ask of immigrants from those countries? We ask that they be highly skilled. Moreover they must be prepared to settle here and establish themselves without any assistance from the Canadian government. We shall have to be charitable. We shall have to accept people from countries which are less fortunate than those from which the bulk of our immigrants have come in past years. I do not think we will get as many immigrants in the future from Great Britain and other nations which have been the traditional source of our new settlers as we have in the past. We shall be forced to reconsider this present policy which, as everyone knows, discriminates, for instance, against people from the West Indies.

I am as aware as anyone of the problems which attach to bringing in immigrants from the West Indies. I had the experience of helping to bring in a girl for domestic work for a gentleman in Ottawa. When the girl arrived it was found she had never handled an electric stove and was in danger of getting burnt. She knew nothing about cooking as practised in Canada. Indeed there were many ups and downs in that household before one could call her a domestic servant. And once she was, once she had been trained, she wanted to do something else because she had increased her skill.

We know there are problems. We know the reasons for this reluctance to broaden our immigration policy. But we know also that in certain years, particularly in the peak period of migration to Canada, we opened our doors to arrivals from certain countries because of the need which existed at that time, and as a result of this charitable approach millions have come to Canada, helped to build up the fabric of our country and made a great contribution to our national life.

I must say I did not think the minister would be as broadminded on these matters as he has shown himself to be. I thought he would be a terrible minister of immigration. But I have found out since he took office that he has paid considerable attention to the problems which face him, as they have faced every minister in charge of this department. I pay tribute, too, to the attitude taken by the minister who preceded the hon. gentleman for a short while. This being so, I think there may be a chance of our getting some of the changes we desire. In his approach to this question I hope the minister will bear in mind that this is a house of minorities and that there may be reasonable men sitting in all parts of this chamber. If we could develop an immigration policy of which this parliament could be proud it would, I think, work for the good of the Canadian people for many years to come, enhancing Canada's stature as a land which took a humanitarian and advanced approach to immigration rather than the archaic ones we have at present.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Ricard: I did not intend to speak on the estimates now before the committee, but the fit of hysterics which the hon. republican member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) had a moment ago forces me to take the floor and set the record straight.

Some time ago when the house was considering, if I am not mistaken, the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, I said that the only solution which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) seemed to have in mind was to bring Algerian immigrants into the country and have them settled on farms. I stated then that, in my opinion, it was a very poor way of improving a deplorable situation, for workers should not be brought in to swell the members of those who suffer hardship because of the depressed conditions prevailing in that particular segment of our economy.

Anybody who refers to Hansard of that time will see that I said I was in favour of bringing in French speaking immigrants, that it was even desirable to give this matter more attention than in the past. I never said that I was against French speaking immigrants and, quite the contrary, I would like to see more French speaking immigrants come to Canada. I hope that the present minister will do his utmost in this connection.

Before I resume my seat I think it is important—besides, I feel it would be superfluous on my part to call the attention of the minister to this matter—to exert a close and special control in order to prevent subversive elements from being admitted in this country. The minister certainly has a practical experience of that and I know that he will give this matter all the attention it deserves.

In order to set at rest the mind of the republican from Lotbinière, I would like to repeat that I am in favour of a rational French speaking immigration, and I am confident that the judgment of the minister rather than the judgment of the hon. member I just mentioned will prevail and that this matter will be dealt with fairly and to the satisfaction of everyone, for the progress of Canada and especially of the province of Quebec.

[Text]

Mr. Brewin: I intend to make a speech notable for its brevity. I should like to endorse very heartily and warmly the suggestion made by the hon. member for Peace River. I believe the existence of a small parliamentary committee which could review all these immigration cases would, if adopted, be of great benefit to Canada. I think such a committee would assist the minister in the difficult task of administering this department and I urge that it should be adopted.

The other thing I want to say is this. The minister told us that in respect to various amendments of procedures which have been discussed earlier in the house and in this committee, he is consulting a lawyer from Toronto, Mr. Joseph Sedgwick. I do not suppose it is reasonable for us to expect that the details of possible changes in the act or in the regulations can be discussed until Mr. Sedgwick has given his advice to the minister. However, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he has yet received Mr. Sedgwick's report; if not, when he expects to receive it, and whether it will be made available to members of the house who are much interested in radical reforms in immigration procedures.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to add a few words in support of the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) concerning the administration and the work of citizenship and immigration officials.

I think there is something quite wrong with the department, especially since the present minister took over. One has the feeling that there is no close co-operation between him and his subordinates.

I am thinking of a case I handled in the riding of Sherbrooke where a certain Mr. Zago has been trying for over two years to get his mother, brother and sister admitted to Canada. At present, those people are in Lebanon and I have been looking after the case personally for more than a year, that is since August, 1963. However, the moment the new minister took over my case was dropped and no one seemed to look after it any more.

I had to write to the department and hand over all my previous correspondence with the officials. It was the same as if there was no file any longer. In fact, I learned recently that the file pertaining to Mr. Zago was in Vienna and that there was nothing more to do.

I did not intend to raise a particular case in the house, because I know that the minister has many of them to consider, but as there were no developments, I decided to do so.

In my opinion, these people are eligible for admission to Canada, because the person who sponsors them is a prominent citizen of the city of Sherbrooke, where he operates a flourishing business; he would like his mother, as well as his brothers and sisters to come to live in Canada.

I feel that this delay might be due to a lack of co-operation within the department. Should it be due to a shortage of staff, as the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) said a while ago, it would be a most opportune time to increase it so that the requests sent to the department should be reckoned with or at least dealt with in some way, for most of the time when we write to the department we have to wait months before getting an answer, even an acknowledgment.

Mr. Chairman, I wished merely to support the observations of the hon. member for Vancouver East, when he said that there was at present a lack of diligence or care in the Department of Citizenship and Immigration in regard to the requests we are sending them.

[Text]

Mr. Ormiston: Mr. Chairman, I hope I can be just as brief as the hon. member for Greenwood. I would like to thank the minister for the information he has given me previously in reply to questions I have asked. I know he has not yet secured all the information which he requires, but I would appreciate it if in his subsequent remarks he would tell me under what section of the Immigration Act the two American strike directors were admitted, or under what regulation, in order that I may pursue this matter if necessary.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few comments regarding immigration and ways to increase Canada's population.

Should Canada endeavour to increase our population? I think everyone knows the answer to that.

If our population increased we would have more consumers for, as we are all aware, there is no lack of production in Canada. As a matter of fact, the value of production reached $46 billion in 1963 and we barely consumed $3 billion worth. Which means that there is surplus production to be consumed and that Canada can admit additional consumers.

As for immigration, in my opinion the population should be in the first place increased within the country by encouraging families to have children. This should be done by means of social laws and every kind of special assistance that can be given to families.

It is a well known fact that in Canada the birth rate has been decreasing alarmingly. Of course, families could be encouraged to increase our population, within the country itself.

Mr. Chairman, judging from the facts outlined in the Canada Year Book for 1963-64, we find that the Canadian government policy has been to promote the population increase through selective immigration, taking into account the immigrants' adaptability to our North American way of life.

I propose to show that our immigration policy has been almost exclusively one-sided, that is, it has resulted in maintaining the nominal superiority of the English speaking population in most Canadian provinces, while giving the impression that the immigration policy of Canada was a sham to allow surplus population from Anglo-Saxon countries to settle here.

Our country has ignored for too long immigrants from the other countries of Europe, Asia and Africa, without mentioning South America. It is a fact that one of the reasons put forward was that it was impossible for several of these people to get used, for instance, to our northern climate. That is a fact which I recognize. However, a number of technicians and experts from those countries have found a haven in the New England states across the border. I have in mind the state of Connecticut in particular, which is one of the most highly industrialized sections of the United States and where the population includes a large proportion of ethnic groups coming from the four corners of the world.

Our immigration policies have not taken into consideration the need for the French community in the country to develop.

Some figures illustrate very well this statement. In 1960, 12,430 Germans arrived in Canada, as compared to 2,940 Frenchmen, that is almost five times more.

It is well known that Germans become an integral part of the English speaking community in Canada.

In 1961, for 2,479 French who entered the country, 15,088 Italians came in and increased the Italo-Canadian population. We are proud of the contribution of these new Canadians to the nation, but we urge the minister to revise his positions and to see to it that the French speaking population in this country receives a proportionate quota of immigrants.

On the other hand, from 1953 to 1962, 410,460 Canadians, or people whose last place of residence was Canada, left for the United States. If we consider that in 1962, 74,586 people arrived in this country, this means that we need five years of immigration, at the 1962 rate to compensate for such a loss of human resources, of which our country is in great need.

What is even more serious is that the United States drain our best brains, our best skills, and that, in fact, we are catering to the needs of American industry, our country being only a stepping-stone between the country of origin and the country of adoption. People spend some time in this country, and once they have realized our inertia and our lack of determination to take the steps necessary to ensure their future, they leave us for another country where pastures are greener and where unlimited funds are available for research of all kinds, and where promotions and a brighter career seem assured.

From 1953 to 1962, 51,011 Canadians who had settled in the United States came back to Canada. That is a back and forth movement which does not yield anything, except some travelling experience, while our country has to mobilize every effort, to use every skill at full capacity and cannot afford half measures.

This nation, Canada, is still to be developed. Such development will come true only if we have enough brains to put a stop to the erosion of the population. While it is quite all right to open the dam to let people in, at the outlets of the lake, you must have an effective plug to hold in those newcomers.

The level of Canadian immigration must be controlled, but in keeping with the proportions of the ethnic groups without allowing in future such camouflaged control of the French Canadian nation, otherwise the provinces will be justified in demanding exclusive control over immigration in their territory.

If we take a look at South America, at French speaking African countries, at Haiti, we will find people who are anxious to join us.

It is high time for the Department of Citizenship and Immigration to adopt modern methods and to do away with narrow ambitions. We cannot afford, in a country with a capacity to feed over 80 millions of men, to have a haphazard approach in this matter and to show once again a lack of understanding and realism.

Especially, must we find the means to keep our immigrants here. I am sure that the U.S. government does not need our services to attract worthy people.

Mr. Chairman, there is an alarming number of Canadians entering the United States. I did not have time to get figures because I just looked up this matter at the last minute, but I know that a large proportion of the people who live in my district emigrate to the United States.

We must find a way to keep our citizens in Canada before planning on bringing in immigrants.

If those Canadians cannot live decently in their own country, a better economic system should be set up so that they would not have to leave.

That is the point I wanted to bring to the attention of the minister and I would ask him to have an investigation carried out concerning Canadian immigration to the United States. I know that the number of French Canadians going to the United States is large enough for the minister to be concerned and to seek a solution.

[Text]

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to prolong this debate on the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. I listened very carefully to the minister's presentation on August 14 last on the subject of immigration and I was very pleased with what he said at the time; I am not going to refer to it although I have it before me in Hansard.

The only matter I would like to stress at this time is this. The department seems to have had the intention of bringing to Canada immigrants who are skilled, people with brains, ability and initiative, which is all to the good. But it is my opinion and also the opinion of many others in Canada that what should be done here is to give more opportunity to our own people to obtain such skill and ability, so they could make a better contribution to our economy. Three years ago the legislation we brought in to train the unskilled, and so on, was very helpful, but at the same time I should like to stress the point that the minister consider bringing in other classes of immigrants too. I particularly have in mind unfortunate people who come from iron curtain countries. Although these people may not have the skills the minister is looking for, I think nevertheless they would make good immigrants. From time to time we see press reports to the effect that some of these immigrants with skill and ability just use Canada as a stopover; but I am sure these people from iron curtain countries or even from other parts of Europe, although having no particular skills, would make good immigrants.

I was very much interested in the speech of the hon. member for Peace River, who listed all the contributions made in the past toward developing and opening up our country. We still have many of these areas in Canada which need to be opened up and developed. For this reason I should like to stress very emphatically to the minister that his department also give consideration to bringing into Canada more people who, although they may not have any skill or ability, still have a place in our immigration program and in our great country.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I should like to participate briefly in this discussion to deal with two points. First of all I should like to make some brief comments on the statement made by the minister in his opening remarks in connection with his visit to Hong Kong; and second I should like to indicate my support of the position advocated by my colleague for Vancouver East.

If I might deal with the second matter first, I noticed that in his earlier report the minister claimed a considerable improvement in the situation with regard to immigration to Canada from Hong Kong since the present government took office. I am not going to enter into any lengthy debate with him on the question as to how far those improvements have gone, but I do thoroughly agree with the contention of the hon. member of Vancouver East that there is still far too much impersonality and sheer inhumanity in the manner in which we are dealing with situations involving people and families so far as immigration from Hong Kong is concerned.

I could give some examples, as did the hon. member for Vancouver East, but I think that the particular examples which he gave were typical enough to illustrate the situation with which he and I as members of this house are confronted, so far as individual human and family situations are concerned. Therefore I will not take time to give any particular instances of my own, but I should like the minister to know that I feel the hon. member for Vancouver East was both factually correct and humanly correct when he advanced his earlier arguments.

I was very interested in the report the minister gave in his opening statement concerning his visit to Hong Kong. I should like to say that both arising out of the very brief opportunity I had of seeing something of Hong Kong last year when on my way to the parliamentary conference in Kuala Lumpur, and as a result of the many discussions I have had with people of Chinese ancestry throughout the years, I honestly felt that the minister had come to some rather sound conclusions and had made some rather sound observations during his visit to Hong Kong. Personally I wish to express my appreciation of the kind of observation he made about the situation. Having said that I certainly wish to urge that the minister really follow through with some action based upon the information he gathered during that visit.

Other members have dealt with other aspects of the matter of Chinese immigration from Hong Kong. I am not going to repeat their statements or arguments but I should like at this time to draw attention to one particular factor that the minister mentioned, and I quote from his statement as found on page 6822 of Hansard:

> A serious problem for immigrants in Hong Kong is the necessity to visit various offices for medical tests and examinations. This is tedious, causes long waits and is expensive for the migrants.
> I am discussing with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the establishment of a completely integrated "one stop" medical centre in our immigration office in Hong Kong. This would greatly benefit the immigrants.

Arising out of some of the experiences I have had in attempting to assist people with immigration problems I would say to the minister that this would perhaps be the most immediately useful step that could be taken with respect to bringing about some rationality in the arrangements for handling immigration applications in Hong Kong. I think the the minister was being very modest and discreet when he pointed out that as the process has been operated in the past it has been expensive for the immigrants. While the minister did not spell it out, I am quite prepared to suggest that part of that expense has arisen out of a lot of underhanded dealings that have gone on in respect of people being able to secure the necessary medical clearance. In other words, bribery and corruption have been very much involved in the problem of getting the right kind of medical clearance for our immigration authorities in Hong Kong.

Without going into particular cases I can say I have been told stories that I think would horrify any of us. They involve what has happened to some of the people who have tried to get the necessary medical clearance in order to come to Canada. I am glad that the minister has taken particular note of this problem and proposes to do something about it. If he does not get the fullest co-operation from his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, he can rest assured that he will find support in other quarters of the house.

Finally, before we conclude consideration of the estimates I should like the minister to report on a matter he did not touch on in his opening statement as far as I can recall. I refer to the question of immigration from our sister commonwealth nation, India. Some of us feel that here is one area where there still remain a good many unnecessary restrictions and discriminations. I should like the minister to report to us on his intentions in this connection and tell us what he feels should be done about immigration from that particular part of the world.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, there is one other facet coming under this estimate upon which I sincerely hope the minister will comment. The hon. member for Timiskaming referred to the policy in the past under which Chinese slave labourers were brought to Canada and which was sometimes referred to as the coolie contract system. We all hope those days are gone forever. However, I believe the minister is in a position to clear up certain allegations and rumours that have come to the attention of some of us. There is a rumour that a group of people in the lower mainland of British Columbia have toyed and are toying with the idea of trying to persuade the minister to allow them to bring in Chinese labour from Hong Kong under some kind of landed immigrant status for the purpose of doing backbreaking work in the lower mainland area of British Columbia. These individuals cannot get anybody in British Columbia to do the work, having regard to the conditions and the wages they are prepared to pay. It is further rumoured that a person or persons who should know better are directly or indirectly aiding and abetting the plan to introduce coolie contract labour into Canada. If this is so, I say it is a disgrace and it is disgusting.

I believe we should have an answer now. If these stories are mere rumours, then they should be immediately nipped in the bud, and that can be done by the minister stating whether or not this matter has been brought to his attention. If anything along the lines of the information which has come to my attention in the past few days has been suggested, I should like to know what kind of shrift such a suggestion has received from the minister and what action he has taken.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I would not want, on consideration of estimates relating to immigration, to give a detailed account of the lengthy statement I have already made on the urgent necessity of a progressive and dynamic Canadian immigration policy. I would not want to give a lengthy explanation of the administrative reforms already under way in the department to improve the efficiency of our various immigration offices around the world and also to set up new offices in order to bring into the country the immigrants we need so much.

Therefore, I will not go into the statement I made in the house on August 14 last when the first part of my estimates was considered. This afternoon I will only cover some of the points concerning especially certain hon. members who have suggested the setting up of a committee. First, I would like to say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that, like him, we recognize the need to make major amendments to the Immigration Act. It was said that one after the other all ministers of immigration assured the house of the need to amend drastically, even to revise entirely, the Immigration Act. And all the people of Canada, as well as the members of parliament, are still waiting.

If I add my voice to that of all the ministers of citizenship and immigration who preceded me, it is because I hope that, this time, major and essential amendments will be made to the Immigration Act, so that it will better meet the needs of the 20th century and enable Canadians to bring to our country even more immigrants than in the last few years and get them to benefit from the numerous advantages which will result from major amendments to the Immigration Act.

Some members, and in particular the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), have suggested that committees of the house should be set up, or at least a committee on which the various parties of the house would be represented, to study possible amendments to the Immigration Act. I am not going to make an immediate statement on behalf of the government regarding the propriety of establishing such a committee, but I would just like to tell the hon. member for Peace River and the other members who made the suggestion that I would personally like to receive, in one form or another, the suggestions or comments of all members, whatever their party, regarding the future policy to be followed for immigration.

It is my opinion that, in a field such as immigration, even if the government is responsible and should take the initiative of working out such a policy, the comments and suggestions of the other parties who may represent an important percentage of the population should not be overlooked. The hon. member for Winnipeg North mentioned, among other things, the problem of discrimination or alleged discrimination against the West Indies. In this connection, I can say that, contrary to what he thinks, there is no discrimination against the British West Indies. Those people have exactly the same privilege and right to apply for entry in Canada under the existing legislation, but since the same criteria of selection as for any other country in the world are applied, it often happens that people in those areas are unable to complete their studies and they find it difficult to meet the requirements imposed by economic conditions in Canada at the present time. Everybody agrees that in order to adjust yourself to the Canadian economy, which is highly industrialized, you need a minimum of capacity and knowledge. Thanks to that non-discrimination, we have considerably increased the number of immigrants we have been able to bring in from that part of the commonwealth. The number of immigrants from that part of the world in 1961 was 1,126; in 1962, 1,480 and in 1963, 2,200 immigrants.

There seems to be a tendency to increase immigration from that part of the commonwealth. I know that reference is sometimes made to the special program established in 1962 concerning domestic servants who qualify under that program to come to Canada. This should not be misunderstood. Immigration privileges granted to certain groups are over and above those we are offering all residents of other foreign countries. Our selective standards are lowered for special groups in order to help alleviate the shortage of domestics in Canada.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North mentioned the special problem of integration of new Canadians. Everybody will admit that, while contributing to preserve the heritage and identity of the various ethnic groups, we in Canada, whatever our nationality may be, will have to make a common effort to develop a Canadian feeling; and it is up to the citizenship branch to develop this feeling.

On the other hand, we may very well admit that each particular group wants to keep its own particular culture and, as far as our services are concerned, we shall keep up this policy.

I would now like to mention the magnificent speech made by the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard), in which he, first of all, stressed the need for a positive and dynamic immigration, which this government is applying at this time, and second, the need to help the French speaking areas of this country welcome immigrants who would feel more at home in that part of the country than in any other.

Therefore, while our efforts are directed towards several European countries so as to obtain immigrants, I may say that we are paying particular attention to the Italian immigrants, more particularly those who live in certain parts of that country, like the north, which has not yet been regularly covered by our immigration services. And, in the light of what may happen in the next few months, we hope to be able soon to decide whether we should open up a new office, possibly in northern Italy, so as to have some particularly qualified Italians in that area, either in the industrial or in the specialized agricultural fields, come to this country to join the others.

Therefore, I assure the hon. member for Lake St. John that his suggestions will be taken into serious consideration.

I should like to comment on the suggestion by the hon. member for Vancouver East to pay special attention to the very difficult cases that are called sponsorship immigration. The officials of my department recognize that it is essential to establish general rules within which the thousands of requests made by Canadian citizens to bring in their relatives from various countries may be classified and examined.

On the other hand, it is realized that we are dealing with human beings, that we are not dealing with quantities or figures, but with human beings entitled to all the respect due to them, who very often find themselves in special situations because they come from foreign countries or belong to foreign cultures.

Therefore, I can assure the house that the departmental officials will always endeavour to examine sponsorship cases with dispatch and, second to deal with those various cases in a human way.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) pointed out, as did some other hon. members, the special problem raised by Chinese immigration. As hon. members know, we have decided to put an end to the period that elapsed since 1960 in this country, which was called, in the department, the tolerance period for those who had committed infractions of the Immigration Act, but—and I insist on this because this afternoon, I think some hon. members did not quite understand the significance of the decision that was taken —we now have what is called the adjustment period and no date has yet been set to end this adjustment period.

We will decide later, in the light of future developments what action will have to be taken. We know that this adjustment period will have to end some day, but, in the meantime, all those who want to come to our office are free to do so and declare their true identity so that their status might be set straight.

Consequently, this period of adjustment goes on and I ask all hon. members who have contacts with Chinese communities to make all the required efforts so that the magnificent success we have had in the last few weeks, following the extension of the adjustment period will continue and that very soon all Chinese in Canada will be in good standing with the immigration authorities.

When we consider that sufficient time has elapsed, we will put an end to the adjustment period.

At this stage I wish to answer a question which the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) has already put to me. I must tell him that when this adjustment period is to be ended, a waiting period will be established. In this way, some time will elapse between the announcement of the date when the adjustment period will end and the moment when it will actually be terminated.

And now, Mr. Chairman, before I resume my seat, I wish to answer two questions asked by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

First, the hon. member asked me when one might expect to receive the report of Mr. Sedgwick on the procedures used by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration as well as by the various courts, with respect to people against whom deportation orders have been issued. I am not in a position to give a specific date at present, but it is hoped that within a month and a half at most, Mr. Sedgwick's report will be received and, as I have already promised, this report will be tabled in the house and made available to all members so that they might submit recommendations later with a view to amending the Immigration Act.

The hon. member for Melville (Mr. Ormiston) asked me under which section of the Immigration Act two persons had been admitted in order to carry on their trade in Toronto in relation to trade union activities connected with Toronto's two main daily newspapers. I must tell him that it is under paragraph "H", section 7, of the Immigration Act that those two individuals have been admitted on a temporary basis, in order to perform a specialized trade, recognized as an unprohibited trade, under the Immigration Act.

Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) asked me what the present situation was with regard to India, as far as immigration is concerned. Here is the answer. In 1963, 860 citizens from India came to Canada, that is an increase of 575 compared with 1962.

As far as sponsorship is concerned, immigrants from India are in the same category as those coming from several Asiatic countries where the extension given to bring relatives over here is more limited than in the case of other countries.

On the other hand, special arrangements have been made with India which provide for the coming to Canada of a certain number of relatives, outside the general established rules.

Now, I shall say to the hon. member that I received recently a group of Hindus from British Columbia who submitted to me a report on the immigration problem in their country. I will look into this problem very carefully.

Mr. Winch: Can the minister comment about the last intervention I made, concerning an allegation of an endeavour to import cheap labour?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Yes, Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for Vancouver East said, we did receive requests from a group of British Columbia farmers to bring over Chinese workers without applying our usual selection standards.

After giving serious consideration to the proposal made to us, I replied a few days ago to the promoters of this project that, while we recognized the real difficulty they encountered in recruiting personnel to operate their various farms, on the other hand, we did not feel justified to make a special exception and lower our selection requirements in regard to that particular group of workers. As you know, Mr. Chairman, although we are willing to assist all particular groups who are in need of manpower, we have always insisted that such workers should be sufficiently qualified to be able to find jobs in other places besides the one from which the request originated. Adequate training is essential because they might have to take on a new trade or adapt themselves to new ones, if need be.

Therefore, we felt that this particular project did not deserve special attention and that, if some Chinese people could come, under present regulations, and were interested in working on those farms, they could always do so. But we did not think that we had to give special attention to this request.

[Text]

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder if the minister would give consideration to the suggestion which implicitly I made earlier, but which explicitly I shall make now, that he meet with the premiers of the West Indian members of the commonwealth to explain Canada's immigration policy with respect to immigration from the West Indies?

It creates a bad image for Canada when the premiers of other commonwealth countries, like the one I mentioned previously, have the impression and belief that it is easier for people from southern, eastern and central Europe to come to Canada, even though they are not citizens of the commonwealth, even though in many cases they do not speak English, even though they have not lived in a democratic society, than it is for people from the West Indies.

In my earlier speech I said I was satisfied that the attitude of the department is now much better than it was previously, but it is a serious matter that the political leaders of West Indian countries believe this country still discriminates against them. I do not suggest that the minister meet with these premiers tomorrow, or next week, but maybe this house will have a recess some time, at which stage the minister could make a trip to the West Indies and explain our immigration policy to political leaders there.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I think this suggestion is most interesting, so much so that I have accepted to have lunch next week with the high commissioner of Trinidad, for the exact purpose of discussing the special immigration problems which this particular area of the commonwealth may present, with the idea that, on both sides, better understanding could be reached as far as immigration policies to be applied are concerned.

Item agreed to.

Citizenship—

5. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants and contributions for language instruction and citizenship promotion, $1,715,000.

Mr. Gelber: I should like to say a word about the problem of the adjustment of immigrants in Canada. According to the census of 1961, in the preceding 15 year period one and a half million immigrants came to Canada. Of these, 26 per cent settled in Toronto. I imagine that by now the number of immigrants in Canada must be in the neighbourhood of two million.

The particular problem which interests me is that of the adjustment of Italian immigrants in my own constituency in Toronto. Italian immigrants in my area come largely from small towns. There is not a great sense of community among them and we must always remember they have come to a country where both the customs and the language are strange. It is important that we should pursue an active policy designed to integrate them into the life of Canada. When one considers the history of immigrant communities, particularly in the United States in earlier periods, where problems of juvenile delinquency and crime caused by the failure of social adjustment have been so very serious, it is apparent that we have been fortunate in Canada inasmuch as immigrant communities here have been peaceable and orderly.

Nevertheless I believe we should be actively pursuing policies at the present time designed to integrate these newer elements into the life of Canada. It is important that a gulf should not arise between the children of immigrants and their parents. Children of course adjust themselves more quickly than older people, and if there is a disruption of the social pattern of the immigrant community there are bound to be social problems such as marked earlier years of this century in many immigrant communities.

It seems to me that schools could help in the integration not only of the children of immigrants but of immigrants themselves. The children should be made to feel that their parents are not centuries away from them. The strangeness of their parents to Canada should not be the means of creating a gulf between the generations. Parents should feel that the schools are sympathetic and happy institutions to which they can turn. I believe the department should encourage the provincial departments of education to give instruction particularly, I would say, in the Italian language and culture so that parents may feel that our institutions are sympathetic toward the country and the social background from which they came.

There are a number of institutions in my city which are helping to integrate the Italian community. Among these is the international institute of Toronto. I have here an interesting study put out by that institute and prepared by Edith Ferguson. It is called "Newcomers in Transition". The Italian community itself also has an association; the Italian immigrants aid society. The Italian community has grown ten times in extent in the last 15 years and the resources of that society are very modest indeed by comparison with the demands made upon them. Another organization which helps in this field is COSTI. Many immigrants require training, or re-training for special employment, particularly where some disability has prevented an immigrant securing employment in the normal way, and I am pleased that the province of Ontario is to make a grant to the work of COSTI.

This whole problem of immigration and the integration of immigrants would, it seems to me, justify the minister in issuing a white paper to give that leadership which many members of this parliament have urged. The hon. gentleman and his predecessor have given consideration to the problems I have brought to their attention. I was particularly pleased that the previous minister of immigration, now Minister of Justice, should have taken on his staff one of my constituents, Mr. Peter Bosa, a post-war immigrant. I think this is the first time in the history of this country that an immigrant of such recent date has been given responsibility in the administration of this government department.

May I say, in conclusion, that we should not consider the first generation of immigrants to be a lost generation. We should try to maintain cohesion between immigrants of the first and second generations and absorb them both as happily as we can into the fabric of Canadian society.

Mr. Rapp: I have a brief comment to make on this particular subject. I believe it is not sufficient for a new immigrant to know the language of the country when he applies for citizenship. I think it is important he should know a little of the history of Canada, particularly when there are two languages in this country of equal status.

Most people coming to Canada know there is freedom of speech and that a man can speak in any language he pleases. But they should know too that the English and French languages are in a special position and may be spoken on an equal basis. This information should in my opinion be made available to immigrants when they apply for their papers, possibly in the form of a pamphlet or brochure.

Mr. Brewin: We have heard a good deal about procedures in respect to immigration. I wish now to say something about procedures in respect to applications for citizenship. I want to urge the minister to look at the Canadian Citizenship Act and bring in amendments to it as well as to the Immigration Act.

It was said in a debate in the United Kingdom parliament that the test of a civilized country is its behaviour toward its citizens whatever their race, religion or colour. I suggest an even more searching test is the behaviour of a community toward aliens, particularly to those who are not legally or formally members of the community at all. Surely the time has come for us to scrutinize carefully the procedures by which aliens resident in Canada are admitted to the full privileges of citizenship. To refuse a person citizenship does not entail only legal disabilities. It involves in many cases a threat to livelihood; it might cause bitterness and lifelong resentment and place a stigma either real or imagined upon the character of the person to whom citizenship has been refused.

At the present time the procedures adopted under the Canadian Citizenship Act are in my view altogether unsatisfactory and give rise in many cases to unsatisfactory results. Section 10 of the act provides that an applicant for citizenship has a double barrier to overcome. First of all he has to satisfy a court—usually, I believe, a county or district court—of a number of things, including the fact that he is of good character. When he has done this and the court is satisfied in respect of these matters, he has the second barrier to overcome, namely that the minister under the act has an absolute, uncontrolled and unfettered discretion to grant or refuse citizenship, even if the court is satisfied about the applicant.

In refusing citizenship the minister does not have, because it is a matter of discretion, to state in any way the reason for his refusal. Those who have been familiar with these matters over the years—and I make no complaint about the present minister at all; it is the procedure I am complaining about—have had cases of people who have been denied citizenship and then not told the reason why. Then when they inquire into the matter they very often find citizenship has been refused because of some sort of misinformed police report. Perhaps there was a report of some earlier association with a so-called radical or subversive organization. This undisclosed reason is thought to be sufficient ground for depriving an applicant of citizenship.

I am not saying that if these matters came to the attention of the enlightened minister this situation would prevail; but because of the system this sometimes happens. We have all heard of many cases of these so-called security reasons being given as a basis for refusal of citizenship, when really they do not make any sense at all. I myself had the case of a gentleman—I will not name him here—who has since been granted citizenship by a predecessor of the minister. However, before that he was refused citizenship. This particular man was a world famous town planner; a consultant to two metropolitan areas; an adornment of the staff of one of our great universities. This gentleman was refused citizenship. He was not told why, first of all; but on the matter being pressed and an investigation being carried out it turned out that he had at one time been a resident of Soviet Russia, where he has carried out some of his professional work. In fact, he had been expelled from that country because he did not get along with the totalitarian regime there. However, when he came back to this country he was still a great believer in good relations between the U.S.S.R. and Canada and he joined some Canada-Soviet friendship organization; I believe he was a member of an organization called the Canadian Peace Congress and was active in that body. He made no bones about it; he was perfectly frank, open and aboveboard. This gentleman was for many years—not under the present regime—refused citizenship. I say in all fairness that the predecessor of the present minister reviewed the matter and changed the decision, with the good sense one would anticipate from the former minister and from the present minister.

But my point is that the system that was in effect excluded this man from citizenship for many years, and it was only after fairly forceful representations by a number of prominent citizens that this case was able to be reviewed. But what about the humbler person who is refused citizenship perhaps because he belonged away back to some labour union that was accused of having a communist tinge to it, or something like that? And what of a person who does not have the power or influence to deal with these things and seeks to have a decision reversed?

I suggest to the minister that the present process should be reversed and the minister and his officials should be given, in the primary instance, the responsibility of deciding whether citizenship should be granted or refused, as in the case of immigration. I suggest they should be required, in the course of normal and fundamental justice and the rights enshrined in the bill of rights, and so on, to give, if they are going to refuse admission, the reason for so doing. If it is some deep dyed security source, perhaps they do not need to disclose the source. We have discussed that before and I do not want to go into detail. If citizenship is refused, then is the time to go, by way of appeal, to some tribunal. It might be the same tribunal that I hope the minister is going to set up in connection with immigration; it could be an immigration and citizenship appeal tribunal.

Mr. Orlikow: It could be similar to the one for government employees, although I hope it would be better.

Mr. Brewin: Yes, this would be an independent tribunal. I am not satisfied that the county court judges are in themselves the best people to deal with these matters. We have just had an illustration of one county court judge whose judgment did not seem to be too sound in this sort of matter. But if you had a tribunal composed of people who were chosen by reason of their sympathy, experience and understanding of these matters, which would review not one case but all cases, if there was some reason to doubt the decision of the minister in his discretion and if the person refused citizenship wanted to question the minister's refusal, he could go to this tribunal. This would reverse the present procedure, which I suggest does not make a great deal of sense; it does not make any sense to have the judge give his judgment first with a regard to a limited number of things and then to give the minister power to completely disregard that judgment without any reason being given. I suggest that this basic section of the act should be looked at very carefully by the minister, and when he is considering amendments to the Immigration Act he should also consider amendments to the citizenship act.

[Mr. Brewin.]

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if time permitted I could give many instances of where this procedure would render a measure of justice that does not exist at the present time. I do not propose to take time to do that, but I believe that other members could tell the minister and his predecessors of many instances of refusal of citizenship where such matters should properly have been the subject of judicial review. My hon. friend the member for Hamilton South desires to question the minister in respect of a case that has received a good deal of attention recently. I refer to the Bergsma case in Hamilton. In that case, as we know, a judge apparently refused citizenship, or refused to say that a man was of good character because he refused to take an oath, on conscientious grounds as I understand it.

I would like to ask the minister—we have had some discussion of this case—whether he would like to make a statement to the committee as to whether the injustice to this individual is to be remedied, and what he suggests is a remedy that would see that this particular couple are not refused citizenship on grounds which have no substance whatever, and indeed are obviously inconsistent with the bill of rights.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I most certainly want to add a few words with regard to the question raised by the hon. member for Greenwood on one phase of this estimate. This is a matter about which I cannot speak in as restrained a manner as the hon. member, because I am really burned up about it. I refer to the granting of citizenship. Over the past few years I have had a number of cases and I have found there is absolutely no difference in policy under the present minister when compared with the policies of his predecessors. I think one of the policies of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration is a disgrace to so-called Canadian democracy and should disgust everyone who believes in democracy. I refer to the principle that allows a person to be found guilty without trial; to be found guilty without a hearing; to be found guilty without a charge being laid; to be found guilty without the applicant concerned even knowing what the charge is. That has been the situation in the past, and it is the damnable situation that exists at the present time.

Even this year I have been battling over the months with the minister with regard to the granting of two certificates of citizenship to people in my own constituency. Both were recommended by the court for citizenship.

Both applicants had resided in my constituency for many years. One was of European ethnic origin, and the other of Chinese ethnic origin who first went to the United States and then came to Canada and has resided in Canada for many years. Both have professional status but have been denied citizenship by the minister's department.

What happens, Mr. Chairman, when these people want to know why they are refused and are given no reason? They do what I think is the logical and natural thing to do—they take it up with their member of parliament. These two applicants got in touch with me and said: "We have been recommended for citizenship. We have no knowledge of any wrongdoing. We are told it is not going to be granted, or that there will be a delay for one year". As their member of parliament I take up their case with the minister's department and I ask why they have been turned down. Correspondence goes back and forth; the minister writes me, I write him back and on we go. Then finally I receive letters in connection with each of these cases which say they are being held over for a review in one year's time, and the letters go on to say: "Of course, Mr. Winch, you know we cannot tell you the reason why".

I think something is definitely wrong when in a democratic country like Canada a person who, as far as he knows, is completely eligible for citizenship, is told by the minister he is not going to get it, that it is going to be postponed for one year and then reviewed, and is not told why, or whether any charge is made against him. Not only the applicant but his member of parliament is also told exactly the same thing. Of course the constituent blames his member of parliament for not being able to solve his problem or to find out what is the difficulty. I maintain that this is and has been a disgraceful situation. A person should know the reason why his case is held over. If something is wrong, surely the person concerned has the right to say whether it is true or false, and if it is false to demonstrate it is false. But as it is it hangs over him like a shadow and he cannot be blamed for wanting to know what kind of democratic country he has arrived in.

Another case I have been handling for months now concerns a woman who does not even want her name mentioned. As a matter of fact, she does not even want anything more to do with the matter. But her neighbours are more incensed than she is and I am almost being deluged with letters from these neighbours who maintain that this applicant is a wonderful person, that there is none better, and they hold me responsible to do something about it or at least to give them an answer. But I cannot do so.

Now, Mr. Chairman, surely this is a wrong procedure to adopt and a wrong attitude to take. It certainly is not democratic and is an out-and-out totalitarian dictatorship policy, and the policy of a police state. I contend that it is absolutely incumbent on each and every one of us to exercise every bit of influence on the minister to have this despicable policy changed, and changed immediately.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, although these are not my estimates a question was raised in the house the other day which led to discussion between the minister and myself and I should like to deal with it very shortly at this point, if I may. It concerns the case of Mr. and Mrs. Bergsma, who are man and wife. The question was raised in the house yesterday by the hon. member for Hamilton South.

I think there is no question in the Bergsma case that an application for citizenship was refused because the Bergsmas refused to take the oath. What happened in this case, if my interpretation is correct, was that in the course of examining the two applicants the county court judge, who was sitting as a citizenship court, elicited from them an answer to the effect that they did not believe in God. Then presumably the county court judge said—I am not certain this is what happened but he probably said something like this—"If you don't believe in God then you won't be able to take the oath". However, the basis of his decision was that, in his opinion, because these persons happened to be atheists they could not be said to be of good character, which is a finding conditional upon which an application may or may not be granted by the minister under section 10 of the citizenship act. Therefore the matter never reached the minister, and will not reach the minister under the act unless some way is found to reopen the case in the citizenship court, or unless application is made after two years from date of refusal, which as the committee knows is the minimum period which must elapse between the denial of an application by the court and the filing of a new application.

As we are discussing this case in a very frank manner sitting as members trying to find the truth, may I say that it is my opinion, not as Minister of Justice but as a member of the bar—I am not giving any interpretation here of the meaning of a person of good character in section 10 of the act—that on the assumption that the judge was wrong in law in deciding that a person may not be said to be of good character under section 10 of the act if the person concerned is an atheist, the judge concerned, or more precisely the citizenship court, may be directed to apply the law according to the interpretation which a higher court seized with the case would say is the right interpretation.

Hon. members may know of the decision of the supreme court of Canada in the Leon Ba Chai case, where the wife of an immigrant was refused landing permission by an inquiry officer under the Immigration Act on the basis that, she being a concubine, and he having another wife, she was not a wife within the law of Canada. The supreme court stated that under the regulations as they stood at the time, a legal wife was one who was a legal wife under the law of the country of the applicant. It was found that in China, if I remember correctly, if a husband took full responsibility for a concubine and their children then she was deemed to be a lawful wife.

The Supreme Court of Canada ordered the immigration officer in making his decision to apply the law in accordance with the correct legal interpretation stated in the supreme court judgment. Assuming that the interpretation was wrong in this instance, and I do not pass judgment on that, this would appear to be a relatively similar case.

All I want to say before taking my seat is that if I had an opinion to submit as a private citizen or as a member of the house I would say that the fact of a person professing not to be a follower of one given religion or another, or of any religion, ought not to be taken as an indication that the person so stating or so professing is not a person of good character.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might comment on the minister's statement. I thank him for it and assure him that his words will reach the people concerned. I agree with his suggestions and views in the matter, and I would hope that if and when the case comes to be disposed of the representatives of the government who will appear in the case will be of the same view as the minister.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock shall I rise, report a certain resolution and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house, or later this day as the case may be?

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the committee would allow us to proceed in order to complete the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

The Deputy Chairman: If there is to be any discussion with regard to whether or not the committee should proceed beyond five o'clock it might be better procedure to do so with the Speaker in the chair.

Resolution adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the committee have leave to sit again, later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I think it is in order for me to report to you that by arrangement made with the house leaders of the various parties this afternoon private members' hour will be waived, and it would therefore be in order to pursue the discussion in committee of supply.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I am not objecting to the present suggestion, but I do want to say that I consider it is poor practice for members to continue to give up private members' hour. It is one of the few opportunities available to members to bring forward their bills and I hope this practice will not be continued.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house agree to go into committee of supply?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Citizenship—

5. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants and contributions for language instruction and citizenship promotion, $1,715,000.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I should like to rise at this time to add my voice to the opinions expressed by the hon. member for Vancouver East and the hon. member for Greenwood with respect to the subject of citizenship. I must say at the outset that I have not had the difficulties that the hon. member for Vancouver East seems to have had.

Last year I went to the former minister of citizenship and immigration with the case of a young man who had applied for citizenship, had been turned down by a previous minister and was applying again. Apparently he had been turned down because at the age of 18, some 15 years earlier, he had belonged briefly to a fraternal organization which has been classified as being sympathetic to the communist party. I am not going to discuss now the question of whether it was properly classified.

I made representations to the minister about the case. I submitted to the minister letters from people who had known the young man in recent years in which they made it very clear that for a number of years he had not had any sympathy with communist ideas. The former minister considered the matter. It was still being considered when the present minister took office. I am happy to thank the former minister and the present minister for the fact that this young man was granted Canadian citizenship. But, Mr. Chairman, surely it is not important whether a particular member of parliament, no matter to what party he belongs or where he may sit in the house, who has a problem brought to his attention, gets a favourable decision from this minister or any other minister.

Mr. Winch: I will give you all my cases from now on.

Mr. Orlikow: I am quite happy to have the hon. member for Vancouver East look after his own cases. It seems to me that the right to citizenship is a very important right and that there are principles involved which we need to look at very carefully in the light of present conditions. I am not certain that the government would accept the fairly radical proposal made by the hon. member for Greenwood a few minutes ago, that a person should be presumed to be innocent until the people who accuse him can produce evidence that he is guilty. I know this is a cardinal principle of British justice, but it is one which it seems to me we ignore more and more as the years go by. But it does seem to me that a number of very simple principles should be embodied in our citizenship law and regulations, and applied in the administration thereof.

It seems to me that a person who applies for citizenship and is turned down should, as a most elementary form of justice, be given the reasons why his application has been turned down. I know that sometimes security matters are involved, and I am not saying that I agree with some people who have said that not only should the person be given the reasons why he has been turned down but he should have the right to be confronted by his accuser. I think members of the house will know that I have some slight reservations about the work of the R.C.M.P. in certain fields, but obviously if they or any other security agency have secret sources of information it would be ridiculous to expect them to come forward and confront the person who is having difficulty.

But I see no reason, Mr. Chairman, why a person who is being turned down for citizenship ought not to have the right to be given a general reason, because there have been cases in which mistakes were made. There have been cases of mistaken identity and cases where important changes in a person's thinking, for example, have taken place. Unless a person knows the reason he is being turned down, he cannot correct the misinformation upon which the department or the minister may be basing a decision.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there ought to be an appeal procedure. This appeal ought to be to people who are not employees of the department, people who are separate from the department, and possibly people who have legal training. These people could look at the particular question in an impartial manner. I think it is only natural when a case goes step by step through a department for the departmental officials to lean rather heavily in favour of people who are working in the same department. It seems to me that there must be an independent tribunal established to hear cases, to get all the information and make a decision on that basis.

I should like to discuss one other point which I raised last year and which I know has been raised by other members. I do this despite the fact the people about whom I am going to talk have not come to me. I represent a constituency which, for many years, has had a large percentage of people who voted communist. It is a constituency in which a high percentage of people have come from eastern countries. They do not come to me very often with their problems because most of my political life, Mr. Chairman, I have been fighting communists. I do so now and I am sure that I will continue to do so in the future. I know that many of them in Winnipeg, in Toronto, in Port Arthur and other cities, having been here for more than 20 or 30 years, have applied for citizenship repeatedly and have been turned down. This simply results from the fact that they are, or even worse, Mr. Chairman, that they were at some point 10 or 15 years ago, members of the communist party or members of organizations close to the communist party, like the Ukrainian farmer-labour temple association—I think it is now called the workers benevolent association.

It seems to me ridiculous that we take this view. I am not thinking now of people who may be leaders in the communist party, because I am sure that the leaders of the communist party in Canada are all people who are citizens of or who were born in Canada. If a person were a member of the communist party 10 or 20 years ago, an ordinary person living in a city or town in Canada, and we turn him down for citizenship solely for that reason in 1964, it seems to me we only do so because we have very little faith in the basic strength of our democratic institutions. It seems to me ridiculous that this should continue. I urge the minister to give serious consideration to changing the standards or the principles which he uses in deciding this kind of thing.

I am not going to mention any names because they did not ask me to intercede for them. However I am thinking of two very prominent scientists, one in an eastern city and one in a western city. I am not going to be any more specific than that. They are eminent in their field and are doing very important scientific research which is very heavily subsidized by Canadian government agencies. They have been in Canada for much more than the required period of time and were landed immigrants, but up until this time have not had their applications for Canadian citizenship approved. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that this is, to say the least, pretty shortsighted thinking on the part of the department. It seems to me that if we are going to live by those principles of democracy in which all of us in this house profess to believe, we ought to have confidence that our democratic way of life has the strength to stand up against a few who may be in this country who do not believe in it, but who believe in a different kind of society.

I noticed the hon. member for Regina City asked some questions about a professor from the Soviet union who is teaching this year in, I think, Regina college. The Winnipeg Free Press, with which I do not often agree, had a very good editorial in which they discussed this matter and in which they pointed out, I think rightly, that one professor who happens to be a communist from the Soviet union will surely not poison the minds or change the minds of many Canadian university students. I think the same thing applies with regard to citizenship, Mr. Chairman. I do not believe that if a few communists or ex-communists who are not citizens, who have been in Canada a long period of time, apply for citizenship which everybody undoubtedly gets unless he has committed a serious crime, they are going to hurt our democratic society. I would urge the minister to give serious consideration to rethinking and changing the policy which we have had in this country for many years.

Mr. Olson: I only want to take a couple of minutes of the committee's time to draw again to the attention of the minister a problem that has been discussed at length by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I do not advocate that there should be such a change in security regulations, that is regulations respecting security in Canada, that we do in fact take action that we may regret later. I do believe there are some cases, and I have one in mind, in which there has been injustice done in rejecting the application for citizenship. I simply cannot find justification for the grounds which may have been used in rejecting the application for citizenship. I should like the minister to know I have written him again today a private letter giving the name and some of the conditions, as I see them, connected with this application. I also want him to know this application for citizenship has been approved for the fourth time by the district court, and I hope he gives it reconsideration and, perhaps, a favourable response.

One thing I fail to understand in rejecting this kind of application for citizenship is that if this particular individual were doing something against Canada's national interests, there are provisions in our laws whereby we could deal with him effectively whether he is a citizen or not. Some of these people have been in the country for 30, 35 and 40 years, and if through that period of time there has been no record of engaging in subversive acts and there is some question as to the validity of the substance of the allegations, this should be taken into consideration.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to intervene in this debate, except I heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North make a statement to which I hope the minister will reply. I do not want to misquote the hon. member for Winnipeg North, but I understood him to say that no serious damage would result if a university professor, who was an avowed communist, poisoned the minds of a few students under his direction.

Mr. Orlikow: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I of course do not have the Hansard of what I just said in front of me, but I do not think that I spoke so loosely that I said it would not be serious if a few minds were poisoned. I certainly did not intend to say that. What I intended to say, and what I say right now, is that I do not believe the fact that a professor from the Soviet union will be teaching at Regina college—with which decision I had nothing to do—will change the minds of any students at Regina college, or anywhere else.

Mr. Churchill: I did not know to whom the hon. member was referring. As I say, I hope I have not misquoted him, but I jotted down that phrase about its not being a serious matter if the minds of a few students were poisoned—or words to that effect. I hope the hon. member will check the Hansard record and make himself clear, because the real danger arises from what university professors might do to impressionable minds. I think the hon. member perhaps was not as careful in his use of language as he might have been.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I was sitting right in front of the hon. member for Winnipeg North while he was speaking and I am quite certain he did not use the words as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Orlikow: I would like to say I only used the illustration of the professor who will be teaching this year at Regina college to buttress my argument with regard to the citizenship rights of people who have been here for many years. Obviously the decision regarding the coming of the professor to Regina college was made by the university authorities at Regina. I do not know whether any federal agencies were consulted and gave their approval or not. I certainly knew nothing about it, was not asked for an opinion, and gave no opinion. In fact I did not express an opinion until he was on the job.

Even though I was not asked for an opinion I reiterate that I do not think a mistake was made by inviting him, because I presume a Canadian professor went to the Soviet union to teach in a university there. I have enough faith in the young people of Canada to believe that they will not suddenly become communist because one professor of economics, or a professor in any other field, is teaching at a Canadian university.

Mr. Herridge: Will the minister inform the committee why the applications for citizenship in the numerous cases that have been mentioned this afternoon are refused, when a former Liberal government gave Canadian citizenship to four French citizens who belonged to the German gestapo, who had been sentenced to death by the French courts, and against the protest of the French ambassador of the day?

Mr. Nielsen: To say nothing of Hal Banks.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote No. 5 carry?

Mr. Herridge: Would the minister explain the reason for the different approach to these problems?

Mr. Churchill: While the minister is contemplating his answer I would hope, Mr. Chairman, I could say with regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North that I was making no reference whatever to anybody who was being employed at any university. In fact he had not mentioned that case earlier. I was making no comment on that. I was simply commenting on his use of language with regard to impressionable students.

Mr. Howard: Maybe hon. members will wonder why we make reference to something that happened in 1935, but it is necessary to give us a background appreciation of the difficulties that confront people of Chinese origin in their relations with the department of which the minister is head.

In 1935 in advertisements in newspapers in Vancouver—and I have seen them—the Liberal party published as part of its election campaign a promise to the people of the west coast to stop the yellow hordes from China and other Asiatic countries coming into Canada. One of the members of the Senate, Hon. Senator Reid, was a Liberal candidate at that time and was elected as a member under that sort of promise.

Anybody now looking back to that would think it was a disgusting and disgraceful policy for a political party to have, namely a policy of a campaign based purely and simply on raw, naked, racial discrimination. That is only one of the contributing factors to the difficulties which Chinese people have had for the past few years, and still have in their attempts to get some reasonably fair treatment from the government and the department on their immigration problems and citizenship matters. I think there has been a very unfair and unkind harassment by the department of people of Chinese origin, both under the present minister and his immediate three or four predecessors.

A couple of years ago I made some inquiries about the number of people of Chinese origin who had had their citizenship certificates delayed in transmission to them after they had passed the appropriate examinations, and it transpired that there was an inordinately long delay, in some cases ranging up to three years, between the time these people had passed their examinations and the time the citizenship certificates were transmitted to them. Subsequent to that I asked for some information covering part of the period of time during which this government has been in office. I asked how many certificates had been granted to people of Chinese origin for each month since July 1, 1962—this was up to and including December 18 of last year—and what period of time elapsed between the passing of the examination for citizenship before a judge and the actual issuance of the certificate. In normal cases this is a relatively short period—a month, or something of that nature. But with respect to the Chinese people, during the period from July 1, 1962, to the end of September, 1963, there were 1,698 citizenship certificates granted, and one of these certificates had been delayed for a period of six years. Six years had elapsed between the time this person passed his examination and the time he received the certificate. Five of the individuals concerned had to wait more than five years. Seven of them had to wait for more than four years. Eighty five of them had to wait more than three years before certificates were given to them, and 42 per cent of the total had to wait for longer than a year before receiving their certificates. As I say, the delay is normally a matter of weeks or months.

The information I have just given reflects the extent of the harassment, the extent of the unfairness which is displayed toward people of Chinese origin, not only with respect to their attempts to come to Canada in the first place but after they have indicated their desire to remain in this country by applying for citizenship so as to become Canadians in the full sense of the word. Even after they have passed the examinations there is delay, further investigation and procrastination in the minister's department before these people are granted the piece of paper they have spent so many years seeking to obtain. I think this situation is a disgraceful blot upon the operations of a department of government which deals with human beings—a department which I for one would like to see eliminated at the earliest possible date.

I have drawn attention to the Liberal campaign policy of 1935 which was based on racial discrimination against people of Chinese origin merely to show that in the past, even before 1935, it has been the official policy of government to adopt a different attitude toward people who were born in Asian countries. This is one of the reasons why these people encounter the difficulties they now experience. It is one of the reasons the department appears to pay an undue amount of attention in a discriminatory way to people of Chinese origin. The minister's predecessor, who is now the Minister of Justice, received a brief almost a year ago to the day, on September 23, 1963, in the Hotel Vancouver in Vancouver, British Columbia—a brief from the Chinese Canadian citizenship association presented by Mr. Foon Sien who was at that time national executive secretary and special representative of the Chinese Canadian citizenship association. In this brief the association made extensive observations about the interpretation of the regulations as they existed then and as they exist now, pointing out that there is discrimination in the application of the regulations. This matter has been dealt with at great length by my hon. friend from Greenwood. The presentation also contained a request for a changed attitude by the government in relation to immigration matters.

I realize we are not dealing with this particular item at the moment so I will not discuss it further, except to say that briefs of this sort affecting people of Chinese origin have in the past been presented to governments on what is virtually an annual basis, each of them saying in effect the same thing, namely that the policy of the government as it relates to people of Chinese or Asiatic origin is different from the policy followed in relation to people coming from other parts of the world.

Even though I do not have any immediate hopes he will be able to accomplish this with the speed and alacrity many would like to see, I ask the minister to look into the citizenship section of this department and ascertain why it is that people of Chinese origin have had to wait in some instances for five and six years between the time they indicate their desire to become Canadian citizens and the time they are given the official document saying they have been accepted. One could discuss this question at great length. In essence, this discrimination exists and it has permeated all the activities of the department. The only person who could change it is the minister. I hope he has the desire to make these alterations. I hope he will announce at some early date in the future that the policy and the real practice in his department will be to treat all people of whatever origin on the basis of equality. If this were done it would not be necessary to go through the same discussion in later years that we have had this afternoon.

Mr. Orlikow: I tried to follow the explanation of the Minister of Justice as to what took place in the Bergsma case as well as a non-lawyer can. May I express the hope that Bergsma will take the necessary steps to acquire citizenship. I am concerned about the possibility that the same thing will happen again in the future and I wonder whether the minister will consider issuing a directive to the citizenship courts making it clear that the question of the religion or non-religion of an applicant is not a factor in reaching decisions as to citizenship, and second that it should not enter into a formulation of character.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I would have been interested to hear the minister make some comment on the matters just raised by the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Winnipeg North. However, apparently he does not wish to make a reply at the moment. I would like to recall to the minister's mind that when these estimates were previously under consideration I asked him a question concerning the part of the vote which I pointed out has the high-sounding title of grants for citizenship promotion. I mentioned then that it is proposed to increase this grant to $75,000 from the previous year's $37,000. I asked the minister whether this was the item in which was included provision for grants toward the establishment, maintenance and operation of Indian friendship centres; and if so, how much of it was proposed to be allocated for that purpose, and what amounts and in what ways other expenditures in the promotion of citizenship were to be made under this grant.

I did express the view that it did not seem a very large amount for the most important purpose suggested in the description of the vote. The minister said he did not have that information available at the time but that he would get it for me. I am wondering whether he has it now.

Mr. Tremblay: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have the information for which the hon. member asked last time. This sum of $75,000 is requested to provide: (1) $30,000 in sustaining grants to major national organizations working in fields most closely related to the aims of the citizenship branch, namely the Canadian citizenship council and the Indian-Eskimo association of Canada; (2) $20,000 for the payment of grants to voluntary organizations in the field of citizenship promotion; and (3) $25,000 for the support of community projects, mainly friendship centres, related to the integration of Indians off the reserve.

This sum does not include the work undertaken by the citizenship registration branch to promote citizenship with regard to newcomers to Canada and their application for citizenship papers, nor does it include the language and citizenship classes available in many evening classes throughout Canada.

Mr. Barnett: In that connection, Mr. Chairman, could the minister explain to us where in the estimates we find the amounts which are spent through the registration branch in these other fields of citizenship promotion that he mentioned? Is this specifically set out, or is it merely part of some other general vote?

Mr. Tremblay: There is no specific item on that, Mr. Chairman. It is the responsibility of each citizenship court, and it is under the item concerning citizenship courts.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to ask the minister a further question, Mr. Chairman. He mentioned, if I heard him correctly, that the allocation out of this amount of $75,000 toward the functioning of Indian friendship centres was $25,000.

Mr. Tremblay: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is $25,000.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to ask the minister whether this amount of $25,000 is designed merely to cover the federal assistance toward existing friendship centres, or is there any provision in this amount which would allow grants to be made toward any new centres which might be developed during the period of the fiscal year which this item covers?

Mr. Tremblay: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we have a certain amount that is not allocated to friendship centres which exist, and we have provision, if there are new requests, to give grants to such projects.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, the minister has not answered—or if he did, I did not understand the answer—the questions asked with regard to the Bergsma case. I did not think it would take very long to give an explanation in this regard, because as far as I can tell hon. members of all parties who have commented on this case are agreed that the difficulty that arose with regard to the Bergsmas should not have arisen. I have read editorials in four or five Canadian newspapers on the matter. All the Toronto newspapers carried editorials dealing with the case and they were all unanimous that the Bergsmas should not, on the basis of information which is available, have had any difficulty in getting their citizenship papers. It seems to me that the committee ought to have some simple statement from the minister as to the steps the department thinks it can take and what steps it will take to try to ensure that the same situation will not arise again in the future with regard to other people.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that I am just as concerned as he and other hon. members are with the problem raised when, through a judgment of the court, the Bergsma couple were refused the right to obtain their Canadian citizenship because they had stated they did not belong to any religion.

I am glad, therefore, in co-operation with my colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), to take all necessary steps so that persons who do not profess any religion in Canada may not find themselves in a situation where they could be refused their citizenship certificates, even if the application of such a policy, in future, should involve bringing certain amendments to the citizenship act.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would make some comment on the references to delays in transmitting citizenship certificates to people of Chinese origin after they have passed the examination. There have been complaints about the inordinately long period of time it takes to receive these certificates. I would also ask the minister to comment on this situation. It is my understanding that people who apply for Canadian citizenship and have their applications rejected are not given the reasons for such rejection. Would the minister tell the committee whether there is any intention on the part of the government to change this policy and give people the reasons why they are not acceptable as Canadian citizens.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I must tell the hon. member that there has been no question of racial discrimination in the case of applications for citizenship from Chinese people.

If, as the hon. member has pointed out, there have been fairly long delays in many cases where Chinese applicants were involved, that is because, as he very well knows, serious irregularities have occurred in the past few years where Chinese immigration is concerned; this frequently involves investigations that last for months on end before the status of some Chinese person who wants to get his citizenship certificates can be cleared up.

As far as the administration of the department is concerned, I can assure the house that I shall order my officials to speed up as much as possible the handling of individual cases. We have no intention of discriminating against potential Chinese immigrants.

Coming now to the extremely delicate problem of the final information the minister must secure before granting a certificate of citizenship I should like to say to the hon. member that since the present government has taken over, we have been actively considering all the implications of the final information the minister must get before granting either citizenship or the status of a landed immigrant, and I hope it will be possible to improve substantially the methods used until now in that respect.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, the other day as an aside the hon. member for Lapointe asked the Prime Minister whether or not it would be desirable for ministers to reply to questions in the same language in which they were asked, and the Prime Minister said yes, it seemed to him a reasonable suggestion. I would merely point out that that did not happen just now, and quite frankly I disagree with the contention of the Prime Minister that it was a reasonable suggestion. As far as I am concerned if any hon. member, especially the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, desires to speak in English or French then that is his prerogative and right and it should be respected. I think the Prime Minister was in error the other day in saying that it was a commendable suggestion.

Mr. Benidickson: I think he meant a written question.

Mr. Howard: There was no indication that it was a written question whatever. The suggestion was to answer questions in the language they were asked in order to assist members. Whether they were written or oral is immaterial. I think this just proves the point that the Prime Minister once again was wrong in being so ready to agree to something because it seemed the agreeable thing to do.

When I initially posed my question I did not indicate, or at least I did not intend to indicate, that the delays in transmitting certificates of citizenship to people of Chinese origin were based on an attitude of racial discrimination. What I said was that in the past there has been racial discrimination as the announced policy of the hon. gentleman's party, especially in 1935. Governments in the past have had an attitude toward people from Asia which is based purely on racial discrimination. Because this has existed in the past and was publicly announced as the declared policy of my hon. friend's party, albeit some 30 years ago, this is why Chinese people have the difficulties they have today in immigration matters and also in the granting of certificates of citizenship.

However, I do not imply that there does exist today an attitude of racial discrimination, and that this is why the certificates were being delayed in their transmission. It is merely the result of racial discrimination as the announced policy of my hon. friend's party some years ago, and also the result of the continued discrimination which exists in the citizenship regulations which the hon. member for Greenwood and others in this party have pointed out a number of times in the past.

Mr. Winch: May I say how pleased I am to hear the minister state a few moments ago that he hopes that marked improvements are going to be made in all phases of the granting of citizenship certificates. I sincerely hope that these marked improvements will be speedily brought into effect and that the first ones to be dealt with will be the cases he has been holding up which I have brought to his attention over the months.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Vancouver East I was very interested in the announcement of the minister that some changes are going to be made with respect to the approach toward citizenship applications. I would pose to him what might be described as a theoretical or hypothetical question.

Mr. Howard: You will get a hypothetical answer.

Mr. Barnett: Let me tell the minister that I will refer him to an actual situation regarding a citizenship application with which I had the unhappy experience of dealing a number of years ago when one of his predecessors was in office. I should like to ask the minister, if this case were brought before him today, what would be his attitude toward it.

This case is one where a woman had applied for Canadian citizenship. She had come to Canada as a young woman with one child from a part of the world which now is known as Yugoslavia. Her husband had preceded her here and after he had become established to the point where he was able to do so, he brought over his wife with their first child who had been born after he had come to Canada. The rest of their family were all born in Canada. The husband had applied for and had been granted Canadian citizenship. Under the mistaken assumption that when he became a Canadian citizen she also became a Canadian citizen she had never made any formal application for citizenship. All her children are Canadians. The point in time was reached when she had grandchildren who are Canadians. Yet when she discovered that actually she was not officially a Canadian she made application, and her application was rejected, not once but two or three times. In each case she had to wait for a two year interval to elapse before reapplying.

I should like the minister to tell us whether the change in attitude which he has indicated will take place will be such that this woman, the only member of the whole family not a Canadian and who has spent two thirds of her life in Canada, will have no difficulty in getting her citizenship certificate.

Mr. Tremblay: I will be very glad to take a decision in this case on Monday, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

Indian Affairs—

15. Administration, operation and maintenance including expenditures on works on other than federal property, grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, recoverable expenditures under agreements entered into with the approval of the governor in council with the governments of the provinces and territories and with local school boards in respect of social assistance to persons residing on Indian reserves other than Indians and the education in Indian schools of children other than Indian children, and to authorize the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to provide, in respect of Indian commercial activities, for the instruction and supervision of Indians, the furnishing of materials, the purchase of finished goods and notwithstanding any other act, the sale of such finished goods, $47,742,400.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I think we should call it six o'clock. This is a most important subject and I do not think we could conclude it today, even if we sat till midnight.

Mr. Tremblay: May I thank all hon. members for the close co-operation I have received from them.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting house leader what is the business for next week as far as he can go.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, as announced by the Solicitor General last night the first item of business on Monday will be resuming the debate on second reading on Bill No. C-121, to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates. That would be followed by item No. 49 on today's order paper, house again in committee of the whole on the resolution with respect to the Crop Insurance Act. The third item for Monday would be item No. 76 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill No. C-123, to amend certain acts administered in the department of insurance. The house leader informs me that if agreement could be obtained on Monday there might be a switch, in that Bill No. C-123 might follow the farm machinery legislation, and the Crop Insurance Act resolution would then be in third rather than second place.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

REMOVAL OF RAILWAY FACILITIES, TORONTO

Question No. 1,767—Mr. Ryan:

1. When will the railway sidings and rail loading facilities be removed from the area bounded by King street west on the north, Front street on the south, Simcoe street on the east and Spadina avenue on the west, in the city of Toronto?

2. What part or parts of the railway yards south of Front street, in the city of Toronto, between Yonge street and Bathurst street will be surplus to railway needs and be put up for sale?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. Concerning the area in Toronto bounded by King street west, Front street, Simcoe street, and Spadina avenue, now occupied by the Simcoe street freight shed facilities of the Canadian National, the question of whether these facilities will continue to be located in this block or will be relocated elsewhere is still under study. Relocation of the facilities now located in this block would permit removal of the present railway trackage there and make available the block for commercial redevelopment; however, whether this can be done would depend upon whether the shed facilities now sited there can be relocated elsewhere economically.

2. Concerning the area south of Front street between Yonge street and Bathurst street, now occupied for the most part by railway yards, the question of what alternative or supplementary uses of this property could be developed is at present under study by the three interested railways (Canadian National, Canadian Pacific and Toronto Terminals Railway Company). It is unlikely that portions of the area for which alternative or supplementary uses might be developed would be put up for sale, it being considered more likely that availability for such alternative or supplementary use would be through lease of the ground or aerial rights on a long term basis.

1. Has the government given consideration to the request of the Canada council for additions to its endowment fund to enable the council to extend its work along the lines set out in its brief to the government, dated March 3, 1964 and, if so, what decision has been made?
2. If no favourable decision has yet been made, is the matter still under consideration?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): This question is in two parts. The answer to the first part is yes, and the answer to part 2 is yes.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a question of privilege, how can "yes" be a satisfactory answer to the question "What decision has been made?"

Mr. Stewart: I will certainly have to ascertain how "yes" would be a satisfactory answer to the question as put.

[Mr. Pennell.]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, may I respond to the point of privilege raised earlier by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre concerning the answer to starred question 1,940. I now have had a chance to consider the suitability of the reply. I think if the hon. member will examine the two affirmative replies given, he will understand immediately.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question related to the reply just made by the parliamentary secretary. Since the question we are discussing, starred question No. 1,940, asks whether consideration has been given to certain matters, and then adds these words, "If so what decision has been made," how does he construe "yes" as a satisfactory answer to that? I should like to know what decision has been made.

Mr. Stewart: There are two parts to the question. The second part, as put down by the hon. member himself, reads:

If no favourable decision has yet been made, is the matter still under consideration?

The answer to the second part was "yes".

What was the latest statement of Canadian policy on the question of the creation of national nuclear forces within NATO?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In my speech to the Atlantic treaty association I made the following remarks with regard to national nuclear forces:

The fact of the matter, then, is that some western European countries feel that they should have a greater share in the military direction of the alliance. Some of these countries have tried to meet this problem by creating a national nuclear force. This is not, however, a feasible course for most members nor do we regard it, on balance, as a desirable course, certainly for us, to follow.

These are the actual words that were used in the speech to the Atlantic treaty association and are in accordance with established Canadian government policy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—EXTENSION OF TERM OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I heard over the radio that the Secretary of State for External Affairs intended to make a statement today with regard to the Cyprus force. I would ask him whether what appeared in the press, that there is to be an extension, is correct; and whether his attention has been directed to articles in the New York Times and other influential papers setting out contributions which various countries have made to the Cyprus force, together with promises for the future, but making not one reference to Canada, the one country which seems to be paying more for its whistle as a member of the United Nations than any other in this connection.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I fully share the right hon. gentleman's irritation over this inexcusable failure to note the contribution made by Canada in the Cyprus peace keeping operation, which, I think I may be allowed to say on behalf of the country, is a contribution exceeded by that of no other nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The United Nations security council, as the right hon. gentleman has just indicated, adopted a resolution late Friday afternoon extending the term of the United Nations force in Cyprus. Following receipt of the official request from the secretary general over the week end that Canada should continue to participate in the force for a further three months, the government has authorized me to inform the secretary general that Canada is prepared to do so on the same terms that applied to the Canadian contribution in the first two three-month periods.

As a result of this decision arrangements for the rotation of the Canadian contingent are now proceeding, and my colleague the Minister of National Defence advises me that the first flights left this morning. The first battalion of the Canadian Guards will be going to Cyprus to relieve the first battalion of the Royal 22nd regiment, the Van Doos, and a reconnaissance squadron of the Lord Strathcona Horse will relieve the reconnaissance squadron of the Royal Canadian Dragoons.

I am sure the house would wish me to take the occasion of the return to Canada within the next week of members of the Royal 22nd regiment and the Royal Canadian Dragoons to say how very proud the people of Canada are of the exemplary way in which the members of these famous units have carried out the difficult and delicate duties which have been entrusted to them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The words of commendation for the force which the hon. gentleman has used are, of course, worthy of the support of all hon. members and of Canadians as a whole. I think the commendation is all the more deserved because of the fact that this United Nations force has been hobbled from the start, and has about it only the veneer of effectiveness without the necessary powers to carry out its responsibilities.

I would ask the minister in this connection why it is that in all the press reports I have been able to read, in the New York Times particularly, there is no reference to any request on the part of Canada, which has the largest force of all on the island, for any increase or expansion of these powers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not agree with the right hon. gentleman that the force has been hobbled, or whatever the word was, because I am sure the evidence reveals that but for the United Nations force, in which Canada has played so distinguished a part, there would have been a deterioration that might well, both at the beginning before the force was established and afterward, have led to war.

As the secretary general said in the report which he circulated 10 days ago, the presence of the force was, in his judgment, vital for the maintenance of conditions that could lead to the avoidance of war and produce a situation that might encourage satisfactory results from mediation. I may say that last Friday I met with Colonel Amy, the officer in charge of the Canadian contingent, and from what he told me, as I am sure from what he has told my colleague the Minister of National Defence, there is no doubt that the United Nations force has, notwithstanding the great difficulties it faced, made an indispensable and necessary contribution in that troubled island.

My right hon. friend says he saw no reference in the newspapers to the added powers of the force.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; the request from Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): To the request from Canada. As my right hon. friend knows, the secretary general did make a statement in the security council in which he referred to the consultations he had had with participating governments, including Canada—which I may say has been very active in this regard—on the conditions which he laid down and which are embodied in the notation of the resolution passed by the security council on Friday last. The security council noted the secretary general's request for full freedom of movement for the force, authority to remove military installations, and authority to separate opposing forces and create buffer zones.

It is significant in this context that the security council resolution containing such a clause received for the first time the unanimous approval of the members of the council, including the Soviet union and Czechoslovakia. It should also be noted that in the course of the debate the secretary general received explicit support for his proposals regarding these conditions from a majority of council members and particularly that, in a statement he made after the resolution was passed, he reasserted his intention to continue to seek full freedom of movement for the force.

In these circumstances the secretary general will, in Canada's view—and we have been so advised by him—be justified in proceeding on the basis that the mandate of the force has been reinforced by the security council's deliberations on his proposals. He will now attempt to create more effective operating conditions for the force.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, after the removal of the words of lullaby I want to ask the minister this question. I have before me the resolution and the notation. Has there been any increase or expansion of the powers? That is the simple question that I ask.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be unduly severe with my right hon. friend, and I think I had better take his strictures in the spirit in which they have been offered. As my right hon. friend knows, there was a discussion among the participating countries for a period of four days regarding a resolution that would set out explicitly the powers which were sought and referred to by the secretary general in the report that he circulated some 10 days ago. It was not possible to get consent to this resolution without running the risk of a veto. Rather than run the risk of a veto, which would have meant there would have been no renewal of the mandate, the secretary general agreed to a resolution in terms similar in their generality to the resolution of March 4.

In this resolution of Friday last, notation was made of the report of the secretary general, particularly in regard to the enlarged powers sought by him. He likely takes the position, as he publicly indicated afterwards, that, as there was no opposition to this procedure, he is acting on the assumption that his mandate included these enlarged powers. This is a technique which has often been resorted to at the United Nations. It is the only technique that is available in the face of the potential use of the veto. I think it was a constructive course of action and I am sure the secretary general, backed up by all who support him, has done everything he can to deal with this difficult situation. I am satisfed that the right course has been followed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So the answer is no.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a further question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the fact that he announced that there was a rotation among the Canadian troops, does he intend to suggest to the United Nations that Canadian troops rotate with troops of other member countries, because, according to Maclean's French edition, the most thankless tasks were assigned to the Canadian troops, while the British, Finnish and other troops were there almost as tourists?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think that the answer might be in the affirmative, but I would like to examine anew the terms of the question which the hon. member just asked me.

[Text]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): A supplementary question. I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs could advise the house whether the problem of financing the peace keeping operations in Cyprus has been solved, and whether the Soviet union has indicated its intention to make any contribution in this matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the Soviet union has not indicated its intention to make any contribution. The governments of the United Kingdom and the United States are making sizeable, and the largest, contributions to the voluntary fund. Canada, as I indicated a moment ago, along with Ireland, is continuing to pay the costs of our contributions to the operation. The secretary general, however, was forced to announce—I regret that he had to do so, but it shows the state of international acceptance of United Nations obligations—that unless the fund was large enough he might have to withdraw the force before December 26. The financial situation of the United Nations is such that he had no alternative but to make this announcement. I would hope that other countries in the United Nations will follow the example of Canada and Ireland and other countries and assume obligations which under the charter are legally imposed upon them as well as upon us.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the commitment of Canadian troops to Cyprus for another three months, which makes a total of nine months, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he is prepared to give the house an estimate of the cost that will be much more accurate than his completely erroneous estimate of July 28?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend always clothes a fairly intelligent question with unnecessary abuse. The Minister of National Defence will deal with the question.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have been accused of unnecessary abuse. On a point of privilege I think I have to point out that on July 28 the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that the total cost of Canada's participation, including the airlift—and I quote his exact words from page 6063 of Hansard for that date—"would be around $2½ million for the year." On August 3 the Minister of National Defence said that up to that date the estimated cost had been $2,200,000. Therefore there was not any abuse on my part. The abuse of the privileges of parliament was exercised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in giving us erroneous information.

An hon. Member: As always.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I agree fully with you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Churchill: Can I not get an answer from the Minister of National Defence?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the problem is a matter of interpretation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Most of the minister's statements need interpretation.

Mr. Hellyer: On August 3 I tabled figures of the estimated cost up to July 30. The estimated cost to date of Canadian participation in the United Nations force in Cyprus, including initial and support airlift and certain costs recoverable from the UN related to Canadian personnel at UN headquarters in Cyprus who are not members of the Canadian contingent, is $2,810,000. This figure does not include the cost of the rotation of the Canadian contingent which began this morning. This is estimated at $190,000.

On the basis of estimated monthly costs of $305,000, expenditures for the next three months, including cost of material, food, other supplies, support airlift and services directly attributable to Canadian participation in the UN force, may be expected to amount to $915,000. This does not include possible costs of repatriating our Canadian contingent at the end of this third three-month period.

RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC DELEGATION IN PARIS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would he tell the house what decision has now been made with regard to the Quebec delegation in Paris and also whether the government has decided to grant the same privileges as those previously granted to the Ontario delegation in London?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the second part of the question, I must say that this decision does not depend on the Canadian government, but rather on the French government.

As far as the first part of the question is concerned, I must say that since discussions between the French government and the Canadian government are not yet completed, I am not in a position to give a final answer.

POSSIBLE MODIFICATION OF TREATY BETWEEN U.S. AND JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister participated in any discussions, or is he aware of any discussions that took place, when he was in Tokyo, when Mr. Cabot Lodge visited Canada, or with other United States officials which would indicate that the United States intends to modify its treaty with Japan to permit the establishment of regular armed forces; to permit rearmament, and to permit the deletion of the declaration against war clause in that treaty?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, sir.

MALAYSIA—INQUIRY AS TO MILITARY SURVEY GROUPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I wish to address two questions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the commission from Malaysia reached Canada and held conversations with representatives of this government; and second, has the military survey group from Canada left for Malaysia?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The military survey group, which had expected to leave for Malaysia last week, would have been on its way but for the fact that the team from Malaysia which was in the United States and later came here asked that there should be a delay so they could study certain information. We are now waiting to hear from the Malaysia authorities before the Canadian team departs.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can he tell us how negotiations are progressing between his department and the department of natural resources of the province of Quebec concerning the transfer of the administration of Eskimo affairs in that province, and can he also tell us if he expects that those negotiations will soon be concluded?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, there have been no negotiations at the official level in recent weeks. I rather anticipate that we will be having certain discussions with the department concerned in the province of Quebec in the next several weeks.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Since those negotiations rather seem to be at a standstill, and since the Prime Minister of Canada is known as one of the greatest diplomats and negotiators in Canada today, does he not intend to intervene in order to bring those negotiations to a conclusion as soon as possible?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member should be too impatient. I am quite confident that these negotiations will continue, and that a solution will be found.

HAINES CUT-OFF—U.S. OFFER OF WINTER MAINTENANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the government yet reached a decision on the offer of the government of the state of Alaska with respect to the all weather maintenance of the Haines road?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think it was on Friday last I indicated to the hon. member that the matter was under very active discussion. I am pleased now to tell the house that we have already offered to the state of Alaska to extend for another one year trial, the same amount of money that we paid last year, which was $127,050 U.S. funds. This offer has been communicated to the government of Alaska.

Mr. Nielsen: As a supplementary question, is this then a counter offer to the offer of the state of Alaska to maintain the road on the basis of $167,000? Is that not correct?

Mr. Laing: We have good reason to hope and believe too, that the payment which was made last year will be acceptable again.

TRANSPORT

PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATION AT BRIEFING ON RAILWAY LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, because of the indisposition of the Minister of Transport, I should like to address my question to the acting minister. In view of the notice that went out this morning to members to attend an informal briefing in connection with the railway legislation, would the government consider inviting to this meeting the appointed representatives of the interested provinces?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of the particular notice referred to, but I will immediately look into the matter and consider it.

Mr. Hamilton: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the acting minister, in making his inquiries, make reference to the implications of this act to the province of Quebec, so that province will be among those invited?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I have not indicated at this stage that any province would be invited, but I will look into the observations made by the hon. member.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

HULL, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Now that the 30 day delay requested by the Minister of Public Works is over, could the minister tell us what is the situation as regards the negotiations concerning the construction of federal buildings in Hull?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that I could announce today the construction of a federal building in Hull but unfortunately I am not yet in a position to do so.

However, I expect to be able to announce shortly the construction of two federal buildings, one in Hull and one in the city of Eastview.

[Text]

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister is prepared now to announce whether the new federal building for Kelowna, British Columbia is ready to be built?

TRANSPORTATION

LACK OF RAILWAY PASSENGER ACCOMMODATION, MONTREAL-VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Last Friday I asked him about the lack of passenger accommodation on C.P.R. trains between Montreal and Vancouver, and he indicated that he would refer this matter to the Minister of Transport. I am sorry to hear that the Minister of Transport is ill and may not be resuming his duties for several days. I wonder whether the Prime Minister has taken this matter up directly with the Canadian Pacific Railway and, if not, perhaps he can advise us who is doing so.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter has been taken up, but we have not as yet received a reply to our request for information. As soon as that reply is received it will be given to the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

RUSSIA—FURTHER WHEAT PURCHASES AND CREDIT ARRANGEMENTS REQUESTED

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I should like to ask the Prime Minister if there is any foundation for the newspaper article to the effect that to all intents and purposes no immediate future purchases of wheat will be made by the U.S.S.R.; and whether it is a fact that the U.S.S.R. has asked Canada, should it desire to extend its trade in the U.S.S.R., for credit arrangements extending between 10 and 15 years.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be discussing this matter with the minister on his return tomorrow, and perhaps he will be in a position to give an answer to the question. Of course he has already said in the house that there has been no definite information from the Soviet union as to whether they will or will not be importing more wheat from Canada.

So far as the latter part of the question is concerned, I have ascertained, as no doubt my right hon. friend has, that the Soviet union has been making statements of this kind to a good many governments in regard to providing credit terms.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the U.S.S.R. stated to Canada that it desires, indeed demands, credit arrangements of between 10 and 15 years in respect of any future trade?

Mr. Pearson: No, we have had no official demand or request of that kind from the U.S.S.R. in regard to credit terms.

POSSIBLE IMPEDIMENTS TO FREE TRADE BETWEEN PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of reports that the Manitoba government intends to bring in a program of special concessions to provincial manufacturers. In view of the impediment to free trade between provinces represented by this and other provincial programs, what action or plans does the government contemplate to deal with this and other similar programs being followed by various provinces?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen those reports. I shall be glad to look into them and see if any action or statement is required on our part.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

WINTER BERTHING OF HYDROGRAPHIC SHIP "ACADIA"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the minister from Pictou asked—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benidickson: —the hon. member for Pictou asked if I had received a communication from the board of trade of Pictou regarding the berthing of the Canadian hydrographic ship Acadia. I said, and it proved to be correct, that nothing of that kind had at that time come across my desk, although I had had representations the previous year. I find that late on Wednesday a communication was received from the board of trade of Pictou. I was away in Quebec city on Thursday, and my staff proceeded to make inquiries concerning plans for the berthing of this ship this winter.

I gave consideration to the representations that have been received from my hon. friend, from the Minister of Labour and others, and over the week end we have decided to continue the winter berthing of the Acadia at Pictou. It has been berthed at Pictou since 1945, although with the establishment of the oceanographic institute at Halifax there are some operational advantages in the ship being berthed in a port that provides a longer operational season. I assure my hon. friend, however, that the arrangement will not be disturbed this winter.

AGRICULTURE

CAPITAL GRANTS TO CLASS A AND B FAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has had any further meetings with the executives of class A and B fairs with regard to the capital grants that were frozen. Is it the intention of the government to continue the grants?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the last of the pilot projects which were initiated this year on the prairies and at the Western fair in London have now been completed. We are assessing them, and as soon as this has been done we will be calling in all the executives of both class A and B fairs as well as the ministers of the provinces to ascertain what we will do in connection with the capital grants.

Mr. Starr: When does the minister expect this time will arrive, when he will be in a position to call in these executives to thresh out this problem?

Mr. Hays: We are going to do this just as quickly as we can. When we have reached some sort of agreement I shall be glad to announce it.

HOGS—GRADING PRACTICES RELATED TO PREMIUM PAID

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): On Friday last the hon. member for Humbolt-Melfort-Tisdale referred to a report of a statement made at a meeting of the Ontario hog producers marketing board to the effect that the payment of premiums on grade A hogs depended on the amount of money allocated for such premiums at the beginning of the fiscal year.

In reply I may say that this suggestion is completely unfounded. Since 1961-62 the appropriation for the payment of quality premiums on grade A hogs has been so arranged as to allow expenditures to exceed the amount originally estimated. Prior to 1961 it was necessary to provide the additional funds required by supplementary estimates. Under the new procedure being followed since 1961 this is not necessary. As an example, $4,670,480 was originally provided in the 1963-64 estimates but the actual expenditure on hog premiums for that year totalled $7,479,484.

It is also interesting to note that over the past ten years the percentage of hogs on which quality premiums have been paid during the last four months of each fiscal year has been as high as, or higher than, the percentage on which payments were made during the first eight months of each fiscal year.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Has the minister given any consideration to withdrawing the hog premium subsidy and having it reflected in the price of the product?

Mr. Hays: There has been no consideration given to that.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

STEPS TO MEET PROPOSED ACTION BY MEMBER FOR YORK-HUMBER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Secretary of State, but in his absence I shall put it to his parliamentary secretary who is known for his aristocratic discretion.

Could he tell us how matters stand now in the quarrel between the C.B.C. and the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) in connection with station CJBC?

[Text]

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I want to thank the hon. member for reminding me of this question. I know the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue also has an interest in this matter. He asked a question about it on September 4. I am now informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that a writ of summons was served on the corporation on September 24, 1964. Moreover, I am informed that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation does not intend to change its plans for the operation of a French language station in the city of Toronto unless the court makes an order which necessarily requires some change to be made. The corporation intends to oppose and defend the action which has been commenced.

Mr. Choquette: I should like to ask whether the Canadian government will be represented by a lawyer in the case of Cowan v. C.B.C. case.

Mr. Stewart: I believe the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation would have full jurisdiction to defend itself in this action.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the parliamentary secretary tell the house who has been retained as counsel for the C.B.C.?

Mr. Stewart: I will ask the corporation.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

MONTREAL—REPORTED REFUSAL OF MEDICAL TREATMENT TO R.M.C. CADETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria, B.C.): I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has it been brought to the minister's attention that on the night of Saturday, September 26, 1964, two seriously injured cadets from the Royal Military College, Kingston, were taken to the Queen Mary veterans hospital in Montreal for first aid treatment, but were refused admission? Will the minister tell us if this action is in accordance with the rules of his department, and will the minister have the matter investigated?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I want to thank the hon. member for advising me at the lunch hour that this question was going to be raised. A partial investigation has been made, and the information received to date is that these cadets arrived at the main gate of the Queen Mary hospital around 1 a.m. Sunday morning dressed as civilians. They did not identify themselves as cadets. They were advised to go to the west gate for entrance to the admitting department.

On arrival at the west gate one of them placed a telephone call, and before the telephone call was finished they were met by the police who took them away. It is not clear why they left with the police or why they were not let in to the admitting department. We are continuing the investigation.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Can the minister say if he is aware whether these cadets were refused admission to any other hospital?

Mr. Teillet: I have no further information at this moment. As soon as I have it I will be able to report to the house.

RENT INCREASES IN VARIOUS HOUSING PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is the minister aware of the difficulties caused to tenants of some veterans housing projects as a result of rent increases, and would he look into this problem so that no undue hardship or difficulty may be experienced by the veterans concerned?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I will be glad to look into the matter.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FAILURE TO FLY QUEBEC FLAG AT ROYAL 22ND REGIMENT CEREMONY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Boutin) and the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) asked various questions concerning the arrangement of flags at the national war memorial during the ceremony commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Royal 22nd regiment.

Before the ceremony authorities of the regiment actually inquired about the possibility of raising fleur-de-lis flags between red ensigns around the national war memorial. Even though the public works department is responsible for flying the flags, no decision is ever made in such circumstances without first seeking advice from the protocol division, and this was done in this case.

Following various consultations with the protocol division, the officers of the Royal 22nd regiment were advised that the fleur-de-lis could not alternate with the red ensign around the war memorial but that it could be flown by the regiment during the ceremony.

The hon. members must realize that, in many cases of this type, custom, tradition and precedents must guide us; and I must add that the only flags that can alternate with that of Canada around the war memorial are those of foreign countries which, on occasion, pay tribute to our dead.

In this case the decision was taken in conformity with the policy followed in the past. I am among the first to regret that what is called "protocol" should be so rigid, but I am also among the first to recognize that it must be so. Therefore, one must not look here for any motive other than the usual custom to explain the decision made and it would be unfortunate to think otherwise, because the ceremony which took place in the capital last week was everything we had hoped it would be: a moving tribute from the government of Canada to one of its most gallant regiments.

Mr. Pierre-André Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question.

The Minister of Public Works has just said that the decision was taken by the protocol branch, which is under the secretary of state department.

Could the Prime Minister remind the Secretary of State that the protocol branch comes under his jurisdiction, because last Friday he did not seem to know it. He said then that the matter was the sole responsibility of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. I must point out to the hon. member that I did not say that it was up to the Secretary of State to make a decision in this respect, but that it was up to the Minister of Public Works to do so.

However, before making decisions in such cases we always consult the protocol division.

I would also mention that the Department of External Affairs and the Department of the Secretary of State both have a protocol division, but final responsibility rests with the Department of Public Works.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question so as to clear up the answer the Minister of Public Works has just given. The minister stated that in such cases the Canadian flag had to be flown. Could he tell the house to what Canadian flag he is referring?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the red ensign, needless to say.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Public Works seemingly based his answer on custom and tradition, could he tell the house how many cases of this kind have occurred in Canada since confederation?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I think I can answer this question by saying that since confederation the Canadian flag has never flown along with another flag at the war memorial, unless it was a flag of a sovereign foreign country.

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has this ever been asked by one of the provinces?

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Could the minister tell us what officer—and to which department he is responsible—supplied information on the protocol regarding the flags flown at the Canadian war memorial?

Could he also table in the house the text of the protocol which made it impossible to fly the fleur-de-lis last week?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This surely is a question for the order paper.

COLD LAKE, ALTA.—CONTRACT FOR AIRPORT HEATING SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he would clarify an answer he gave on Friday. He gave it so quickly I was not in the house when it came up. He said, as reported on page 8429 of Hansard—this is with regard to the conversion to gas at Cold Lake airport—that the contract was not simply put up for tender but that gas was being supplied by the Cold Lake Pipeline Company, the only company in a position to do so in that area.

Does that answer mean that the Cold Lake Pipeline Company is doing the conversion work normally done by heating and plumbing contractors, and was this work negotiated rather than put up for tender?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): The pipe line company is, I understand, installing the underground works necessary for the distribution of the gas. In the circumstances I believe this would have been a negotiated contract.

Mr. Nugent: My question concerned the conversion of the heating units in 850 married quarters. Has this work been put out for tender or was it negotiated, and is it being done by the same company?

Mr. Hellyer: I cannot recall for sure. I think I had better take that part of the question as notice.

POWER

REPORTED U.S. INTENTION TO CONSTRUCT DAM ON YUKON RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources concerning relations between Alaska, the United States and Canada. My question is based on reports of the plans of the government of the state of Alaska and the United States corps of army engineers for harnessing the hydroelectric potential of the Yukon river by the building of a dam at Rampart on the Alaska portion of the Yukon river.

Bearing in mind our knowledge of the United States doctrine that first in time is first in right, and in view of the warning by General McNaughton that once ratification of the Columbia treaty had been completed the United States would step in to take the Yukon power away from Canada, would the minister inform the house of the government's plan to protect Canada's rights so as to provide for the future development of the Yukon river by Canada in Canada?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I cannot at all accept the assumption that a great deal of progress has been made by the state of Alaska or by the government of the United States in plans or intentions to build a dam at Rampart. I think we have made it amply clear that at the present time the building of that dam and the transmission of power through Canada would not be in the interests of Canada.

Mr. Herridge: That is what we want to hear.

Mr. Laing: Moreover, the economic considerations involved in the transmission of power for well over 1,000 miles, as well as the fact that transmission would have to take place entirely through Canada would, I think, place us in a very strategic position.

IMMIGRATION

TORONTO—STATUS OF PERSONS CONCERNED WITH NEWSPAPER STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): I have a question for the acting minister of citizenship and immigration. Has the hon. gentleman any further information regarding the presence in Toronto of two United States strike directors?

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I will take the question as notice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It refers to a question I asked the minister last week with reference to question No. 1,744 on the order paper, to be found on page 27 of today's routine proceedings. This question has been on the order paper since August 20. It seeks information which must be readily available in the external aid office, and I asked the minister last week whether he would see that it was answered. The hon. gentleman was very gracious and reassuring, but no answer has been given as yet. So I should like to ask this minister this. Have any Caribou aircraft been delivered to India so far?

[Mr. Herridge.]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I shall see that this question is given the attention it deserves. I am told the answer has already been tabled. The hon. member does not give the department the credit he should.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL LABOUR CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Are the reports correct which appear to have been given to persons outside the house concerning the details of the proposed national labour code? May I ask, further, whether the notice respecting this legislation will be filed before six o'clock today so the item will be on the order paper by September 30, as the minister so solemnly promised?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I have no comment to make with respect to the first part of the question. When I indicated that the notice would be on the order paper by the end of September, I thought September had 31 days. With that qualification I will meet the commitment I made to the hon. gentleman.

FARM MACHINERY

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR PURCHASES BY SYNDICATES

The house resumed, from Tuesday, September 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hays for the second reading of Bill No. C-121, to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates.

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): I rise to speak in favour of Bill No. C-121 because of the view which has been expressed by certain members of the opposition, among them the hon. member for Macleod and the hon. member for Acadia, that the present bill is of no value to the small farmer.

As my hon. friend from Kings said the other day, this is a most important bill as far as the small farmer is concerned. It is something which the small farmer really needs, and it can do a great deal to help him. I think it is well known that every small farmer—

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question. I should like to correct a statement the hon. member made. We never made the statement that this would not help the small farmer; we said, the small wheat farmer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Roxburgh: I will accept that correction, Mr. Speaker, because I say that the small wheat farmer is equally as important as the small eastern farmer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roxburgh: I think it is very well known that the average small farmer, whether he lives in British Columbia, Manitoba, Alberta, the midwest, the east or the far east, has a very, very diversified business. He is concerned with growing crops, both grain and field crops such as potatoes, tomatoes, fruit and so on, as well as feeding livestock and poultry. Therefore he is given the opportunity by the bill to grow a much needed cash crop.

Take, for example, the farmer who might want to grow four or five acres of potatoes. To grow four or five acres of potatoes requires planting machinery; it requires spraying machinery; it requires harvesting machinery. It is utterly impossible for the small farmer to buy all the machinery that is needed to plant and harvest five acres of potatoes. Five acres of potatoes may not seem much to our big growers of wheat in the west. However, Mr. Speaker, five acres of potatoes, or tomatoes or whatever it may be, does mean a certain cash crop that is so much needed by the small farmer today to help keep him in business. By borrowing money for this type of machinery he can grow this type of crop.

With regard to a group of three or more farmers getting together to buy this type of machinery, the opposition has said this is a syndicate, that this smacks of communism. Don't tell me that three of your good western wheat farmers or three of our farmers in the east, or wherever they may be, are going to be put in the communist class if they get together to buy some machinery to better themselves in life. That is a really laughable suggestion.

I mentioned briefly that three or four farmers can use this type of machinery with which to grow potatoes. There are many, many types of machinery that will help the farmer, and the big farmer also, but I will mention only two or three individual pieces of machinery. One is the new pelleting hay machine. The average small farmer cannot handle one of these, but a group of three, four or five farmers can. I am a farmer myself; I admit that there are certain types of crops that it is very difficult to handle by means of co-operative machinery, but there are other types of crops that are quite easily handled in this way. I would mention the corn harvester, for example. Every farmer has a wagon and a tractor of his own, but with a corn harvester they can pick any time of the year and three, four, five or twenty farmers can get together and buy a harvester and so better themselves.

There is one thing, Mr. Speaker, that a great many people have not taken into consideration, but this has been proven in Europe. I refer to the high powered feed mill, for example. A group of farmers can get together and buy one of these mills with the aid of the finances provided through this bill. There may be enough farmers to enable them to put a man in charge of this piece of machinery and so save themselves $3 or $4 a ton. This saving alone may determine whether they are going to be successful and make money out of the operation.

I mentioned the syndicate arrangement earlier. It was mentioned by members across the way that farmers could not co-operate in this regard and therefore this arrangement would not work. Hon. members opposite who are farmers know much better than that. They know that farmers are the most co-operative group of people in the world today. I know this is so, not just because I am a farmer but because I have been concerned with the federation of agriculture and with farm groups, etc. I have worked with farmers all my life, and they are the only group of people in which this arrangement could really work.

I would like to illustrate how a group of farmers in any area can work together. There was a group of five farmers in my own community. Like every other group of farmers they wanted to buy the type of machinery that hon. members opposite have been discussing. They bought a piece of machinery, and John had it this week, or today; Bill had it another week; John broke something and Bill had to fix it. In other words it just did not work. However, being a group of farmers, did they get mad at each other and throw the whole arrangement up in the air and say it could not work? No; they used their intelligence.

I should like to tell the house what they did. Don't tell me this arrangement cannot work, because this group of farmers are living proof that it can and they are carrying on this arrangement today. One man of the group undertook to look after the machinery. There is hardly a young farmer today who cannot pull his tractor to pieces, or his combine or whatever it may be, and get it to work. They took one of the boys who loved doing that sort of work and put him in charge of this piece of machinery. He fixed this machine. He was paid so much an hour for every bit of work he did, not only on their farms but on his own farm, with regard to harvesting the crop. He looked after this piece of machinery. This group of farmers are still operating today under this arrangement. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, don't tell me this bill will not work among a group of farmers.

Today there is one thing wrong with us, and this is not just in farming. Today we are thinking big, too big. We are thinking big, and bigness is getting completely out of hand in the United States and Canada. We are getting away from small business, and small business is needed today as never before, not only to keep the economy of the country going but most important of all—and I know everyone will agree with me who knows anything about farmers or is a farmer himself—to keep in balance the heart of our nation, its people. This is what small business does, and it is what the small farmer is doing today.

One of the greatest obstacles to the development of a thriving farm community big or small is not only in the attitude of John Public himself but the attitude of the farmer. It is said that small business is doomed. If every one of us looked with this attitude at our businesses and at the businesses that are in our communities, and if we looked at our own lives with this attitude, we would be doomed. We all know that farmers are a group of people who have always been more satisfied with their way of life than any other group or industry, and rightly so. But we must remember that the fast changing world of today is affecting not only farm life but every walk of life. To keep up with this trend those who are in charge of business, be it farm business or industry, have to be quick to sense the need for change and adjustment. We cannot just sit and think of what our fathers did and be satisfied with that, whether it is in the farming business or any other type of business.

Because the farmer is satisfied with his way of life he has unconsciously been resisting these changes instead of using his energy and efforts to find a way of taking advantage of the changing circumstances. And this is not the case just with the farmers. I think if each hon. member in the house went back to his own community he would find this true of other industries as well. I can name a number of industries in my own constituency which were the very heart and soul of little communities but which are there no more. They are there no more because they could not sense the change in the times. At the same time other industries which did sense the change in the times are now employing more people today.

This farm machinery bill represents one of these changes. It is something new; it is a completely new line of thinking, and if taken advantage of and given the chance it will play a very important role in keeping the small farmer in business today.

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words on Bill No. C-121. First of all I must say that I am very pleased to see the Minister of Agriculture in the house today and to note that his many duties have not taken him away from the final day of discussion on second reading of this bill.

I have waited a long time for an opportunity to speak on this measure and to give the reaction to it of one who has farmed in Alberta for many years. I do not call farming an industry but rather a profession. I do not like being called a grocery grower or any other fool thing like that; I am a farmer and proud of it. I think farming is a profession. It is no longer the misfit who can go into farming. A farmer has to be able to manage his business and to have a proper outlook on life before he has a hope in the world of making a success of it. In this day and age people in all walks of life must be prepared to make a success of whatever undertaking they decide upon; and believe me, Mr. Speaker, one can be proud of being a farmer. No longer is he relegated to the business of farming just because he is a misfit at something else; that just cannot happen any more.

For some time we have been discussing loans of various kinds to farmers. I am one of those who still cannot see how any farmer can hope to borrow himself rich. The last time this measure came before the house was on Tuesday, September 22. Up to that time several measures had been discussed. All of them provided loans to farmers and amounted to a possible total loan of $55,000 from the Farm Credit Corporation and $15,000 by way of a farm improvement loan. Now we have a measure to make it possible for people in farm syndicates to borrow $15,000 each. Therefore it is possible for a farmer to borrow up to $85,000, and it would be his responsibility to pay it back.

I would not want anybody to think I had any idea that all farmers would be able to borrow that amount, but let us suppose that one farmer was able to borrow up to $85,000. If he paid only 5 per cent interest he would pay over $4,000 each year in interest quite apart from what he needed to live on. I do not think many farmers will be able to handle loans of that size, and each farmer must realize that he has no hope of being able to borrow himself rich.

The hon. member for Norfolk, who has just spoken, said in the course of his remarks that someone on this side of the house had said that farmers could not co-operate, that these loans could not possibly be of any use, and that if they did borrow they were communists. In the first place, I am sure no one over on this side of the house ever said that farmers could not or would not co-operate. We who come from the west know very well that the farmers are unable to co-operate in owning machinery no matter how much they would like to, because their operations are controlled by the weather, not by themselves. In the area in which I live the farmers have had pretty well four weeks of steady drizzle; I do not mean heavy rain like we had in Ottawa yesterday, but the sort of drizzle that makes harvesting impossible. The crops out there are swathed and lying in the fields, and no one can tell me that three, four or five farmers who owned one combine would be happy with that sort of arrangement instead of each being able to use the machine to harvest whenever the sun shone. I think there has to be a combine for each unit.

With regard to the allegation that they are communists, a communal farm is not composed of individual owners. Farmers on communal farms work for the good of the community. Those farmers do not own anything, so the hon. member is away off beam when he says that we on this side are calling people communists who would borrow under this kind of legislation. The only real communal farms in western Canada are those operated by the Hutterites. They are very hard working people, but none of them owns a thing and would not be eligible for a loan under this farm machinery syndicate credits act.

To my mind the only people who could really benefit from this measure—and here I am speaking entirely of the west, not of someone who grows five acres of tomatoes or potatoes in Ontario or eastern Canada—would be, say, a father who has two or three sons, each of whom could borrow provided he owned land. They could borrow money under this legislation for the purchase of farm machinery provided they worked together as a unit rather than as individuals. If they worked as individuals they would be faced with the old problem of doing certain things on their farms only when weather permitted.

It seems to me the only thing that could be satisfactorily purchased under the provisions of this legislation is heavy equipment such as a portable feed mill. If groups of farmers purchased portable feed mills and learned to operate them efficiently they would only suceed in putting another industry out of business. Surely it is obvious that local feed mill operators can do a better and more efficient job than can be done by farmers with portable mills. In the district of Canada where I live there is only one farmer operating a portable feed mill. With the exception of one report from that man's brother to the effect that this was a success, I have heard nothing wonderful about his operation. Nor have I heard of any farmer in the district other than the operator making use of that portable feed mill. This, incidentally, is not a syndicated operation.

At this time I should like to read into the record an editorial which is to be found in the Canadian milling and feed publication of August, 1964. This publication is the voice of the milling and feed industry in Canada. The editorial is signed by Robert Mercer, the editor, who says:

> A news item on the back page of the Financial Times of Canada states that the Minister of Agriculture plans to finance collective purchases of farm machinery. Only certain more expensive items of machinery are to be included, among which is the mobile feed mill. A large sum of money is being put aside for the financing of these purchases, and it is to be made available through the Farm Credit Corporation.
> We understand that the reason for including the mobile feed mill is in order to lower the cost of feed to the farmer. How a co-operative of local farmers, who should be within 30 miles of each other, hope to compete with an established mill, we do not understand.
> We suggest that if the minister wishes to aid the livestock feeder in the east or in the west that a more direct approach be taken. In our estimation the present course of action that is proposed, will give the greatest benefit to the machinery manufacturers. The progressive farmer has more to do than learn the complex workings of the feed trade. The organizing, operating, upkeep and financing of a mobile feed mill is no small problem. The knowledge required to use the mill to maximum efficiency, the knowledge required to mix uniform feeds for effective purposes and the knowledge required to choose the right supplements to complement the farmer's grains are not learned over night.

So what will happen? Either a drop in quality that goes with a drop in price, or some one member will take over as manager of the group and learn the business. If the latter is the case, then this new co-operative group is in direct competition with the local feed mill. It will now have many of the same overhead costs of a business organization and it will have fewer farmers to spread the cost across. A duplication of services often dilutes the efficiency of both.

If, as we suspect is the case, the problem is one where the minister feels the costs of custom grinding and mixing are too high, (which are usually billed below cost) then is this not the area for the assistance? Politically it is advisable to help the farmers, but in this case is it practical?

Feed is a costly and complex input item of a farm operation. However the cost is offset by its value. The efficiency of modern feeds can be seen from the price of eggs that has not increased in proportion to costs. Feed efficiency can only be fully derived when it is correctly formulated, correctly mixed, fresh and used for the purpose indicated.

We maintain that feed costs are not too high. A feed, or a cost in producing a feed may be too high. If this is the case, then it is better to pinpoint the area of concern and work to its correction, than it is to foster further purchases by the farmer into a field where the competition already undersells itself.

I am in complete agreement with that editorial, and I wonder what those people who will be put out of business will do in the event that such a thing takes place.

Other items of machinery have been mentioned, such as heavy grading equipment, levelling equipment and other things of that nature, but every county in Alberta has a complete line of heavy equipment which is rented out by the hour, along with an operator, to any farmer who desires to make use of this service. In that way the farmer is not responsible for the purchase or maintenance of this equipment and, furthermore, does not have to learn how to operate these machines. In that regard, I do not think the provisions of this legislation are feasible or advantageous to a farmer.

As far as the purchase through the provisions of this legislation of combines, tractors, plows and tillage machinery is concerned, I must point out that farmers, because of the very nature of farming and weather conditions, all have a need to use this type of equipment at the same time; therefore it would not be practicable to form a syndicate and purchase one of each.

This legislation appears to be directed toward vertical integration of the farming industry, and certainly in that part of the country in which I live will not be of any assistance to the small farmers. I should like to know who is going to benefit as a result of this legislation. Will the small farmers benefit? The only small farmers who will benefit, I suggest, are those in an area who are related and can operate their individual farms as a single unit. I gave an example of this in respect of a farmer and his several sons.

I understand that one third of the membership of any group or syndicate formed to take advantage of the provisions of this legislation may be comprised of individuals who are not engaged in farming. This is a very bad feature or premise to this legislation. Only farmers should be eligible for whatever benefits can be derived from this measure.

I cannot see any advantage to be gained by the small farmer through this legislation, unless he can, under the provisions of this bill, obtain a loan on the machinery which he has now mortgaged, in most cases to the bank or under the Farm Credit Corporation provisions. It may be of assistance to a big farm, providing that farm is operated by a father and sons, who are all owners but who operate their properties as one unit. So far as I can see, this is the only place where this measure would be of help.

As I mentioned at the outset, the initial cost of the machine is not the only consideration. There is still the interest, the bookkeeping, and so on. Somebody will have to be paid to keep the books, manage the repairs and other items that will crop up from time to time under an agreement such as this. I should like to see these loans insured. I understand that any one member of the syndicate is responsible for the whole loan. I believe the loan should be insured in the name of all the members of the syndicate, then one member would not be left to pay up the whole loan in the event of default because of death or for other reasons.

It would not be proper for me to criticize a measure such as this, unless I could suggest to the minister some means of getting around the fact that so much money will be made available to one section of the country by way of these loans. Farmers do not want to be borrowers. Every one of them is an individualist. He wants responsibility for conducting his own business, and he feels that is his own business.

Mr. Roxburgh: May I ask a question?

Mr. Fane: Yes.

Mr. Roxburgh: The hon. member mentioned that this measure would apply to only one section of the country. Would the hon. member delineate that section of the country?

Mr. Fane: Did I say that?

Mr. Roxburgh: Yes.

Mr. Fane: I was talking about the farmers. I said that they need help, and they need all the help they can get, but they do not want to be set aside as people who are always wanting to borrow money. They want to be on their own. They want to receive a proper price for their produce and they want that price to bear some relationship to the cost of the stuff they have to buy. The amount they receive for what they sell must bear a relationship to the cost of what they have to buy.

I can give an example, Mr. Speaker. In 1944 I bought a 16 foot selfpropelled combine. The price of that combine was approximately $3,200 which, at that time, equalled the amount received from 3,000 bushels of No. 3 northern wheat. If one were to buy the same combine today—I suppose it is a little nicer machine, a little more streamlined and perhaps handles the work a little faster or has more gadgets, such as a cigarette lighter or a comfortable seat—it would cost roughly $10,500 and that would be equal to the amount received from 10,000 bushels of No. 3 northern wheat. Is that right? The government of which I was a member was just as guilty of increasing loans to farmers. It is not too easy a job to tie the cost of production to the price received for the sale of a product. Why can we not work toward making it possible for farmers to get returns commensurate with the cost of production? I know the minister is going to laugh at that, but the only way any government can hope to avoid all this business of introducing special measures for loans to farmers is by following the course I suggest.

I am a farmer and I am proud to be a farmer. However you could not get me to sign one of these syndicate deals, even if you dragged me in with the biggest tractor you could find. I have had some syndicate deals, but they did not pan out. It was not my fault but was the result of the vagaries of the weather. I think perhaps I have given that thought to the minister, and I know he has received it many times from other members. I just wanted to tell him how I felt about it. I did not intend to take so much time this afternoon, but I felt that it was necessary. I am anxious to see this measure discussed in committee because then we will have an opportunity to discuss each section and ask the minister questions.

For example, one question I will have for the minister is, will the benefits of this measure be available to the residents of Indian reserves, those who are treaty Indians? They are the people who need help most. Will it only be available to those farmers who are well off and who can get money some other way? It will not help many young farmers. Again I say, Mr. Speaker, I am talking as a western farmer and one who has been a farmer all his life. I am just telling you how I feel this measure will or will not operate.

[Translation]

Mr. Patrick Tobin Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, over the week end I had the opportunity to discuss the legislation now before us with several farmers and farm organization leaders of my riding, and I simply wish to say that those farmers, who could be considered as small farm operators, wholeheartedly support the bill and asked me to join with them in commending the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) for his leadership in proposing this legislation to assist farmers.

The hon. member who just took his seat indicated that he spoke as a western farmer. For his information, as far as I am concerned, I may say that I speak as an eastern farmer.

Mr. Speaker, the farmers in my area are small farm operators and they asked me to congratulate the minister because they are convinced that this legislation, in enabling them to purchase farm machinery, will be of tremendous assistance in the development of their farm.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the remarks made by the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Mullally) and more particularly those concerning the rate of interest. I think the rate of interest should be fixed and not floating as now stipulated in the bill. And I feel there should not be a 1 per cent deduction for service charges. I think the measure would then be more beneficial to the farmers.

We will certainly have to bring some amendments to the legislation and I am asking the minister to take those suggestions into serious consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I think this legislation is part and parcel of a program that was to be based on a farm policy. I think it is very important for the agriculture economy as a whole, and we should look into the possibility of establishing a national farm policy which could bring about the development of our agriculture. I hope that the minister will consider these suggestions.

Mr. Speaker, the only reason I took part in this debate was to tell the Minister of Agriculture that the eastern farmers, and especially those in the eastern townships, give their unqualified support to his proposed legislation.

[Text]

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I am not going to agree wholeheartedly with the last hon. member who spoke, who got up ostensibly to congratulate the minister but at the same time pointed out a couple of ways in which he apparently felt there might be room for amendment or improvement in this bill.

I certainly have not risen to condemn the idea that is envisaged in the bill, but I do feel I would like to know a little more about it, and I do feel it is very important that the farmers of this country understand this measure much more fully than they can by just listening to statements such as those made by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Roxburgh).

I am sure there is no one in the house who is not ready, willing, and indeed anxious to do anything he can to help the farmers overcome the cost-price squeeze. We are willing to do everything we can to help them band together in their own interests, and we hope that in considering this one aspect we can work out something that will be most useful to them.

It is not just as a member of the opposition that I have a duty to look at this most critically. My background as a lawyer compels me immediately to look at the signs of trouble —where can the farmer get into trouble on this; where could he be led astray; wherein does this bill fail to achieve in its wording, its concept and its method the objectives which have been so loudly praised on the government side of the house?

I am afraid there are many signs here which indicate to me that the government has approached this from the angle that here is a measure which will, on the face of it, appear so helpful, where we are putting up 80 per cent of the money, where we are able to put such a good face on our desire to help the farmers, that no one will dare stand up and be very critical because he might be taken as anti-farmer. What I have just said, Mr. Speaker, indicates my first criticism of the bill.

There has not been sufficient thought put into this measure. It is a piece of show rather than a practical working instrument. It has been presented as a mighty helping hand to the farmer, and there has not been enough frankness with the farmer as to the loopholes or limitations and, in fact, the dangers there are in this system. It is true that farmers at harvest time have learned to co-operate with one another to quite an extent, and I am quite willing to concede that there will be many instances when small groups of farmers, even small groups of small farmers, could see in this bill a chance to band themselves together to buy some machinery, to obtain a degree of financing that they could not obtain individually and that they might not be able to obtain collectively without the assistance of this measure.

However, I think it is only fair to point out that there is nothing to prevent any small group of farmers getting together to form their own syndicate, their own little partnership—because that is what it is—for the purpose of purchasing farm machinery and of financing it in that way. The difficulty is that any partnership—and I would like to use that word instead of "syndicate," because I think it is the fairest warning to the farmer —carries with it the joint and several liability which is spelled out in this bill, and which is still so little understood by farmers who are not used to business dealings and are not used to forming partnerships.

After listening to the two hon. members who spoke on the Liberal side, particularly the last hon. member who said all his farmer constituents wanted him to thank the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and praise this bill, I am wondering if any farmers realize when they get into a syndicate, that even though each one puts in only $1,000—and we will suppose their friends in the syndicate put in a little more, and that 80 per cent of the money they require is borrowed—and they end up with a $50,000 feed mill or other complex piece of machinery, that each one is responsible for the full $50,000, despite the investment of only $1,000.

Does the individual small farmer realize the risks in any partnership involving a great deal of machinery? Does he realize that if the manager of the enterprise makes a mistake and fails to insure properly, or if the machinery should be ruined or lost by some hazard not covered by the insurance, that the partnership is responsible for the full value—not just the money they collectively put in but all the money advanced by the bank, which the government is guaranteeing?

Not only that, but I wonder if each one of those little farmers, who is at first glance so unhesitatingly enthusiastic about this, realizes that if he puts in only $1,000 and something were to happen to his partners, as a result of which they are unable to pay their full share or fair share, all his individual assets could be seized and that he could be liable for the full $50,000? This is the essence of partnership law and this, to my mind, is the greatest risk a farmer going into this syndicate idea can run. It is not just the risk of losing it all, but there is also the risk of what it does to his own borrowing ability in the interim. Once a farmer joins a syndicate he is contingently liable for the full commitment of that syndicate. Suppose he has put in $5,000 and the syndicate incurs a liability of $40,000 he is contingently liable for the sum of $40,000. If he goes to a bank to borrow some money to buy a new car, for example, or to buy a piece of machinery, his borrowing ability would be inhibited by the fact that a contingent liability for $40,000 was opposite his name. I wonder how many farmers who at first glance think this measure would be a lifesaver have given this point any consideration. In the past they may have had no difficulty in borrowing from the bank so as to buy more cattle or a new piece of machinery. It may well be that having regard to the contingent liability they would assume under this bill they would no longer be able to borrow the amounts they have been accustomed to borrow to help them in their normal operations.

I am not saying that this bill will cripple the borrowing ability of every farmer who takes advantage of it, but I am convinced that the ordinary farmer does not realize that this is a distinct possibility and I am not ashamed to say that I think this legislation should be referred to the committee on agriculture where this point could be gone into thoroughly, where it could be advertised and where members of this house could receive more instruction from farmers as to the possibility of these provisions harming their credit rating with regard to normal operations. Certainly, in setting up a scheme making it possible for farmers to expand we must take into consideration the fact that some farmers might be tempted to expand along lines they might not otherwise have considered. After all, it would take only a little money to get a big piece of expensive machinery and the people who are interested can see the tremendous potential which might be involved. I am not saying that the ordinary farmers of this country are not shrewd enough businessmen to decide whether they should or should not go into a new line. But I have had a great deal of experience of people who have found the over-ease of getting credit to be their undoing, and we should be neglecting our duty here if we tried not only to help the farmer but to help him in the best possible way. If we cannot do it in a better way than this, we should make sure that the farmers understand the limitations.

I have not tried to work out in detail a better way of doing what is now proposed but I suggest the government should consider the possibility of proceeding by way of private companies rather than syndicates. Instead of forming syndicates farmers might form small private companies whose articles of association would contain strict provision against a transfer of shares, possibly, in the case of death, for example, and providing also that membership should be limited to working farmers. Within this context it might be possible to evolve a scheme whereby each farmer could put up only the cash necessary to get started and be subject to call for the rest of the shares. He might, for example, put out $1,000 and be on call for $5,000 with the understanding that if the worst came to the worst $5,000 would be the extent of his liability. He would thus be assuming a limited liability which he could take into calculation. No matter what happened he would not be called upon to pay more. With farmers putting in this sort of money the government might work out a scheme of guarantees, guaranteeing if not 80 per cent of the loan then something fairly close to that figure. This I submit would remove the two basic fears I have. Farmers could no longer be called upon to pay the full extent of the contingent liability of the whole syndicate, and in the second place their credit ratings would not be inhibited by that contingent liability.

I have indicated that I can see ways in which small farmers could take advantage of this legislation by banding together and I do know that a great deal of co-operation is required among farmers at harvest time whether or not there is any question of a syndicate. But in the years I have been down here, remembering how much stress has been laid on the importance of the family farm and how much legislation we have passed to give such farmers a fair chance of earning a living, it occurs to me to ask how much consideration the government has given to the possible effects of this bill. My hon. friend from Vegreville (Mr. Fane) called it political integration. I was thinking more in terms of removing a farmer from farming. Under the terms of this legislation it is only required that one person in a syndicate should be a full-time farmer; the rest need only be engaged in farming operations. We know the absentee landlord has been the bane of farming for a long time. I do not think it takes too much imagination to see the trend here. A person wishing to set up an operation to do custom harvesting for his neighbours cannot provide the elaborate machinery required. This operation, by the way, would not run the same risk with regard to weather, or the extent of the crop, as a farmer normally runs; at least, it would not be affected to the same extent. I can understand there are those who feel that this is one part of farming operations which is bound to be profitable. The capital required is only 20 per cent of the whole amount. A limited amount of capital is raised among those they intend to serve. Thus, at the same time they get people to help put up the money, bind them as customers and take a fixed rate for the use of the machinery owned by the syndicate.

I am not at all sure this is the type of farming operation we wish to encourage in this country. I am aware, although I am not a farmer, that there may be areas in which small farmers feel a need for some outside help at harvest time or during specialized operations. I do not pretend to know enough about farming across this country to speak without reservation but I believe the combined experience of the farm members of this house is such that the minister could obtain the kind of information he needs and the government could obtain the kind of direction it must have in order to solve this problem in the best possible way, rather than in a way which merely puts the best front on it.

I was intrigued last week when one of our members, I think it was the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg), was asked a question by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt). The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) in what I thought was a most supercilious way said: "There go the experts, quoting one another". Having been a member of this house for a few years now, and having had the honour of serving with members on this side of the house throughout those years, having seen what they have done through their efforts in this house for the western Canada agricultural position, having some knowledge of how it came about, I have learned to respect the opinion of those members. If the Minister of Transport was being funny when he said the experts were quoting one another, I want to say very sincerely that those whom I consider to be the experts on agriculture in Canada today are the members in this house, who have demonstrated that they are experts in this matter.

It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that I feel so strongly that to avoid some of the pitfalls I see in this bill it should be sent to the agricultural committee. A little more knowledge about the subject is not going to hurt us; a little more opportunity for the farmers to learn a lot is certainly going to help them, no matter in what form this bill is finally presented. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul):

That this Bill No. C-121 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on agriculture for further study and report.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I propose to vote against the amendment which has just been made, because—

Mr. Kindt: It has to be seconded first.

Mr. MacNaught: It has been seconded.

Mr. Francis: I believe I am in order, Mr. Speaker. I propose to vote against the amendment which has just been made, because I believe that the legislation as it is before this house at the moment has received due and careful consideration. I believe, after listening to the debate and after reading the reports in Hansard, that it is legislation which will help the farmers of the riding that I personally represent. I intend to support this legislation and I do not believe it should be subject to any further delay, which I believe would be the result if the amendment which has been proposed were to be adopted by this house.

This is the time of year when the agricultural fairs, particularly the fairs of the Ottawa valley, are in full swing. Last Saturday I had the opportunity of visiting the Carp fair, where I discussed with a number of the farmers present what such a bill would mean to them and how it would affect them. Other fairs are now being held, and I am sure this is an opportunity taken by many members of the house to meet with their constituents and talk to them about just how such a bill would affect them and what it would do for them.

I know that the bill embodies a new principle, that of extending credit to a syndicate or a group of farmers to assist them in acquiring machinery which they need in order to be more efficient in their operations. I have listened with interest to the debate from the other side of the house and have noted that some hon. members have expressed very grave concern with regard to the principle of this bill. I am happy to note that the speeches today have not been in the same vein. The speeches by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) and the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg), for example, seemed to me completely beside the point when they suggested that legislation which permits farmers voluntarily to co-operate and improve their situation in joining together to purchase machinery is somewhat communistic or socialistic. I am sure no one, on sober reflection of the facts, would really think this is the case. I know that as far back as August 26 the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) pressed the government to bring this legislation before the house. He asked a question, which is reported in Hansard at page 7288, as to whether there would be introduced in the house a measure to provide loans to groups of farmers to enable them to purchase farm machinery in the most economical manner. The minister indicated that such a measure was coming forward. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition then said:

> So there will be no misunderstanding I say to the minister at once, put this resolution on the order paper and it will receive immediate attention—

I am sure many hon. members are concerned that this legislation should receive immediate attention and should be enacted at the earliest possible date. Last week end I asked a farmer in my riding about this legislation. I have a very high regard for the opinion of this farmer. He is not one of my supporters, but that does not in any way affect the personal friendship which has existed for some time between us. I said to him, "How will this legislation affect you?" His answer was, "I do not think it will really help me very much. Maybe it will help the western farmers." I said, "I am not so much interested in whether it will help western farmers, because they are ably and forcefully represented in the House of Commons. I am more concerned about what it is going to do for the small family farms in the east. Would you use it?" He said, "How could I use it?" I said, "What are you worried about?". We chatted for a while about this and then he said, "I would certainly like to get a backhoe to take care of the drainage problems on the farm my son is now farming, and my own, in order to deepen the ditches at this time of year. I do not think I will be able to hire enough help to do this".

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that a backhoe is an excellent example of the type of machinery that could be bought by a group of three, four or more farmers. This farmer's son could get together with his neighbours, purchase a backhoe, and they could use it very successfully. This machinery is not used exclusively at harvest time, and they could use it at slack periods. It would certainly help them to improve their operations. I have found in talking to farmers about this legislation—and I have not been talking to them in a partisan way—that they believe they could use it; they felt it was a good thing; they felt it was worth trying.

I realize the problems that have been raised in terms of the possible impairment of credit and the incurring of too much credit, misuse of the credit machinery, and so on. We all know that unwise people can misuse any good legislation or any measure to extend credit; but I am satisfied that the great majority of the farmers in the riding I represent—and it is a fairly substantial rural area—would be happy to see this bill enacted at an early date. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to support the amendment.

Mr. Rémi Paul (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Choquette: I hope this legislation will be passed faster than the flag resolution.

Mr. Paul: Once again, Mr. Speaker, we hear the echo from Lotbinière. Instead of such an echo we would prefer a contribution by the hon. member to the business of the house. In fact, if he took the time to look at the scope of the bill now before us, I would not be surprised to see him get up, like our hon. friends opposite, and tell us it is an excellent piece of legislation.

On the other hand, after listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Nugent), we readily come to the conclusion, once again, that the government, through this legislation, is only throwing a bone at the farmers to make them believe that it is concerned with the farm problem in this country although it takes no interest at all and the purpose of this measure, like all legislation introduced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), is to foster centralization, which, unfortunately, will mean the end of the family farm, of the ancestral land.

I listened with much interest to the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Asselin). I know he is a gentleman farmer. He said that during the week end, he met farmers in his constituency and discussed this matter with them. I also had the same opportunity, Mr. Speaker, and I have the honour to represent a riding where farm lands are among the richest in my province. Indeed, it is a well known fact that this area extending south of the Laurentian plateau, between Champlain and Lanoraie, has the most productive and the richest farm lands in Quebec. Over the week end I met the farmers of my riding, and, strange to say, those who normally should hope or wish for such legislation are indifferent in this respect.

While the farms in my district, in the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière, are the most productive, their owners are indifferent to the proposed legislation. They even asked me to suggest to the government the elaboration of a farm policy which would enable them to get a good revenue from their farms, rather than the possibility of borrowing, which creates neither markets nor additional income for the farmer, which would justify further facilities for borrowing, as provided by the legislation now before us.

As far as the short speech of the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe is concerned, I very much liked his disguised but rather alarming invitation to the Minister of Agriculture, when he told him that the government should base its program on a national policy.

This is very serious, Mr. Speaker. This was a cry of despair from the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe which he was unable to conceal. Even though, because of cabinet solidarity, he dutifully commended the Minister of Agriculture, he became, at one point, the spokesman of the farmers in his district, when entreating the Minister of Agriculture to enact farm legislation based on a national farm policy. That is what eastern farmers in the province of Quebec and those of my own riding are hoping for.

I feel that the bill now before us further contributes to the disappearance of the old homestead because, at the federal as well as the provincial level, there seems to be less and less concern for the small farmer, while the development of large farm operations is fostered, so that the farmer will not be master on his own land any more. And yet they used to tell us, in provincial politics, that one should be the master in his own house.

Ask the farmers if they are their own masters today. They have become the slaves of the feed mills and of the finance companies to buy machinery. And now the government introduces a disguised, camouflaged and ineffective piece of legislation which will supposedly save the farm economy in eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this legislation is highly disguised, as was so well pointed out by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent). Farmers must be warned against the dangers of such legislation. The Minister of Agriculture will tell us that it is an excellent bill since it enables small farmers to get greater financial facilities towards the purchase of machinery.

Mr. Speaker, if the farmer derives sufficient revenues from the sale of his products, if he is assured of stable revenues, if he is given appropriate outlets for his agricultural products, I do not believe that he will be obliged to belong to a co-operative, a syndicate or a group, in order to purchase the agricultural equipment which will enable him to obtain a maximum output on his farm.

There is a danger, Mr. Speaker, and I intend to ask the Minister of Agriculture several questions, because this is another attempt to intrude into the field of companies which come under civil law.

Once more the government is invading the area of civil law. Who will be responsible for the commitments and obligations of those who will form those syndicates? We do not know. Will the formation of those syndicates come under federal jurisdiction? For instance, in the province of Quebec, will it come under the act respecting professional syndicates, which requires a membership or participation of 20 persons to form a company? Is this legislation intended to settle the matter of civil law concerning companies? Besides, everybody knows, and it is well specified in the bill, as the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona mentioned a while ago, that each farmer will be personally and totally liable, jointly responsible, for the commitments he made or will make with his two other associates.

Mr. Speaker, is that a legislative measure likely to promote, stimulate and encourage agriculture, or is it not rather another means placed at the disposal of irresponsible farmers to obtain machinery? Suppose that three farmers living in a certain range in my riding, I shall not name them, but who live on a sandy farm where only potatoes grow, suppose those three farmers form a syndicate in order to buy machinery. They are quite insolvent, not because they are dishonest, but because the income from their farm makes them insolvent. They ask for a loan to buy farm machinery under the provisions of the legislation now under study. What will happen if they cannot meet their obligations? They will get deeper into debt in the hope of growing perhaps I do not know what, on their farms, and being influenced by an excellent vendor who will tell them about the advantages of soil changed by a certain piece of powerful machinery which will enable them to increase their production. Will such action help the farmer and his children? I say no, Mr. Speaker.

The proposed legislation is also dangerous, because the farmer would have to mortgage his personal assets in case his two associates go bankrupt or become insolvent; the farmer would then risk losing everything he has because of the commitments he would have made.

If the minister would tell us that this experiment was tried in other countries, that the setting up of syndicates for the purchase of farm machinery was effective, that it was tried and resulted in real advantages, that it increased substantially the income of farmers, then we might wonder if we are in error or if the government is sincere. But such is not the case. We are told: here is another means to help farmers. After all, it is only another means at the disposal of the farmer to get himself into debt, and nothing in the legislation allows us to believe that he will be able to benefit from this legislative measure and increase his income following the setting up of this co-operative.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the problems the government experiences in order to satisfy somewhat the needs of the farming class, since it had promised so much and it gives so little. It is not with a measure such as this that agriculture will be saved, and I shall say more particularly in eastern Canada, for, if agriculture prospers in western Canada, it has become an alarm and a worry sign for the eastern farmers.

Mr. Speaker, when we see, for instance, the Minister of Agriculture taking no interest in measures which could effectively assist agriculture, we are not surprised when he introduces a measure liable to destroy even more the family farm, the ancestral land where agriculture was flourishing, whereas, today, those who operate those farms are not farmers but agricultural merchants.

This is why I wanted to specify that this legislation should be analysed and scrutinized from the standpoints of yield and profit. I was therefore pleased to support the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. In the light of the information which may be provided by the agricultural experts and the farm machinery salesmen in the committee on agriculture and colonization, we may have more practical suggestions to offer to the minister before this legislation is passed, a legislation which by itself may be excellent but the administration of which may prove entirely inefficient and useless.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the previous speaker and incidentally, I was more especially interested as my hon. friend belongs to a school of public speaking made famous by the former attorney general of the province of Quebec, Hon. Antoine Rivard. If I am reminded of one of our most distinguished judges of the Quebec appeal court today, I congratulate him on his elocution and thank him for his comments.

However, at the earnest request of the hon. member, I wish to take part in the debate to tell him that this legislation, like any other farm legislation proposed by this government, is not meant to destroy the family farm, but on the contrary, to strengthen and to restore it as well as to promote its development.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière seems to fear the idea of a syndicate. In my opinion, we cannot urge enough farmers, more especially those of the province of Quebec, to co-operate. Selfishness or self-centredness should not be stirred up among our farmers. On the contrary, they should be encouraged to co-operate with each other, because even though a farmer is entitled to his farm and to his holding, he does not have to live in reclusion.

On the contrary, he should co-operate with all his neighbours. I feel that our Quebec farmers have shown a lack of community spirit, of co-operation, because they had a tendency to be rather suspicious. It is encouraging to see a provision which must necessarily urge them to co-operate with each other in order to extend their holdings. That is why we cannot do otherwise than to gladly welcome this legislation.

The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière is also a successful lawyer. He was so successful this afternoon that he managed to deliver a full speech without referring to the amendment he wanted to second, which proves he is an able lawyer.

Mr. Speaker, Conservative members are asking that this bill be referred to a committee. Yet the Conservatives accused us of being slow in providing assistance to farmers, especially eastern farmers. They accuse us of delaying our legislative program and of being slow to act. Now that we want to act, they practise obstruction. They want to put the bill off indefinitely, to refer it to a committee which will delay its passage when we are ready to act.

Where are those men of action? Where are those laggards who, for six years, put off giving eastern farmers an appropriate and adequate farm policy as claimed by them.

Mr. Speaker, it is asked to have this matter referred to the committee. I have very interesting statistics in hand. In January 1958, consideration was given to a piece of legislation called the Agricultural Stabilization Act. The opposition of that time, led by the present Prime Minister, asked that this measure be referred to a committee, and those who were then governing the country, those who are the Conservative opposition today, were opposed to referring this legislation to a committee for consideration.

Not long after, in 1959, the house had before it the Farm Credit Act and, at that time, the Liberal opposition asked that it be referred to a committee; but the Conservatives, then sitting on the treasury benches, objected.

A little later in the same year the Crop Insurance Act came before the house. The Liberal opposition of that time asked that consideration of this legislation, which was imperfect—since it was Conservative legislation—be sent to a committee, and the government of that time, now the opposition, objected.

In 1961, when the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act was being studied, the Liberal opposition asked that the legislation be sent to a committee, and then again, those on the treasury benches, those now in opposition, opposed that request.

Four times those who sit in opposition today objected to farm legislation being referred to a committee. And today they think they have to take the very opposite view, not to say an obstructionist stand, in order to try to stop the government from helping the farmers, and that for the sole pleasure of opposing the bill and asking that it be referred for study to a committee.

Mr. Speaker, the eastern farmers have waited and complained long enough; they have long standing grievances and today it is time to act. We want to act without delay, we want to meet their needs adequately and I fail to see why this bill which cannot but contribute considerably to the prosperity of all Canadian farmers should be needlessly delayed.

The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière says that what the farmers want is income and not credit. That is true but that is a somewhat fallacious argument because any man who wants to go into a business that will do well necessarily needs at the start enough credit so that his business can develop and expand.

Following modern technological developments, farm mechanization has become an essential need, a commanding necessity. With all the machinery they need, farmers can enlarge their holdings and, thus, get a higher income which is what the government wants them to have.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière also objected to the setting up of new corporations. The government does not intend to do any such thing, because we already have the Farm Credit Corporation which will be asked to look after farmers seeking loans.

However, I should like to bring one point to the attention of the minister. I should like the corporation to show more eagerness than it does at present, when it is asked for a loan. In fact, several farmers of my riding and some who live in the respective constituencies of my hon. friends rightly complain that the officials of the corporation take too much time to come and inspect their farms when they apply for a loan.

That is most unfair to farmers. The best way to speed up the processing of loans by the Farm Credit Corporation is to pass this legislation without referring it to a committee, since that would only delay its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I have other remarks to make concerning this bill. In my opinion, the federal government does not give enough publicity to its legislation. I am not so sure it is advisable for the government to insert full page advertisements in large dailies to call the farmers' attention to the advantages of such legislation; I feel that efforts in that connection should rather be concentrated at the local level, so that farmers may take advantage of whatever benefits our legislation may offer.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, even though I am against the amendment moved by the opposition, I felt I had to make these remarks and call on all hon. members to vote against the amendment, thus bringing this filibuster to an end.

The Canadian people long enough have had to bear the very futile discussions on the Canadian flag.

We now have the opportunity to do something for the farmers, after six years of inertia on the part of the Conservative government. Let us implement this bill promptly.

This does not mean that we must dismiss right off all the amendments that may be introduced, but of course this bill has been examined before, analysed in its different aspects, and it is also obvious that the amendment submitted by our friends opposite is simply a dilatory measure that must be defeated as soon as possible when we get the chance to vote on it.

[Text]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, while it is not my intention to oppose the passage of this particular bill I should like to draw attention to the fact that it seems as though much of our time in parliament is being spent, and has been spent, in discussing measures to get people further and further in debt. This has been something that has been rather disturbing to me ever since I had the honour of becoming a member of this house. Time after time we have been faced with this particular type of legislation. I suppose it is based largely on the fact that this has become more or less an accepted way of life for practically all of us. I suggest something must be fundamentally wrong with the economy when it has to be based on this particular type of legislation.

Thinking especially about the field of agriculture, I believe it would be acceptable if the facilities for credit were to be guaranteed to those who were just starting up in farm operations, the young people. This would provide an opportunity for them to get established. When it carries on and becomes an accepted principle, a continuing process, then I begin to question the advisability of extending it any further.

However, we are faced with this particular problem, not only in agriculture but I suggest in every other type of industry. Extended credit facilities are being granted and are being required to meet changing times and changing situations. It has been suggested that the measure which is currently before us is more or less a recognition of the fact it has become common procedure for farmers to get together and arrange to purchase machinery. I do not believe we are doing anything basically wrong. It has been pointed out to the house also that the number of times a farmer would use some of this machinery would not warrant his making the expenditure on his own. This is more or less a recognition of a common practice.

A question has been raised as to whether or not this legislation will assist the individual farmer to meet the competition of what can be called the company farm, or whether it will work out to the benefit of the company farm in opposition to the individual farmer and perhaps the family farm. This is something that possibly only experience will reveal. However, it should be borne in mind that there are dangers involved in this kind of legislative action.

Now, another question has been raised with regard to the liability of members of the syndicate in the event of one member dying or going bankrupt. I believe the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) the other day referred to the fact there should possibly be some type of insurance to cover such an emergency. I believe this is a suggestion that is worthy of consideration. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that an increase in production will tend to aggravate our problems unless the necessary attention is given to the distribution and consumption of the goods produced. I do not believe this aspect has been given sufficient consideration. If a farmer is assured adequate markets at adequate prices, then I believe the time will eventually come when he can take care of these additional expenses as they come up from time to time. I believe therefore we ought to have more adequate legislation or more consideration given to the matter of consumption in order that farmers will be able to obtain their fair share of the national income and be able to make provisions for expenditures on their equipment to meet their needs as they arise.

With reference to the amendment which has been introduced, I believe we should establish a principle whereby all legislation having to do with agriculture would be referred to the agriculture committee for consideration and detailed study. But as we are dealing now with Bill C-121 we must remember that extended debate has already taken place on it. I am not saying it has been too long a debate, but practically all the different aspects of the measure have been discussed. Questions have been raised, arguments have been advanced, and no useful purpose would be served by referring it now to the committee.

I understand that referring it to the committee at this stage would be tantamount to killing the bill, and I do not believe the farmers who are in need of this particular assistance would be very happy with any extended delay in the passing of this legislation. If the amendment had been brought in very early in the debate possibly we would have supported it and would have seen some advantage in it. However, at present I believe the people most concerned would be better served by passing the measure, giving time for experiment if necessary, and then bringing in amendments that might be required to make it more effective and more adequate to meet the needs of the agricultural community.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to delay indefinitely the passing of this bill, as I know that the farmers are waiting, but I want to say that the cat is now out of the bag.

The amendment that was just submitted by the official opposition, through the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent), would, if passed, kill this bill and the farmers would be deprived of it, which proves once more the strange interest shown by the official opposition for farmers throughout Canada.

Since the beginning of the session the opposition has been claiming on television, in this house and everywhere else that the party in power is doing nothing for the farmers. Just a few minutes ago the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière stated that we should rather be considering the establishment of a true farm policy. Now, the present government has introduced a bill to help the farmers and to facilitate the purchase of farm machinery which has become so costly today. This legislation is especially intended to help our farmers.

No later than yesterday I listened to farmers who told me they were satisfied with this bill introduced by the government. I was also told that the most serious problem which is facing the farmers today, and more particularly the small farmers, is the financial burden of the large investment required to purchase very costly farm machinery.

For instance, a farmer said to me: There are several machines that are used from time to time which farmers could use and pay for more readily if they were grouped together in a syndicate as provided in the bill.

The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière tells us that the family farm is on its way out. I would ask the hon. member to move with the times, to keep abreast of automation and present-day developments both in agriculture and in the economy as a whole.

At this stage I want to say that I shall vote against the amendment, and, as soon as possible. I urge all the hon. members to give the bill the Minister of Agriculture has submitted their strong support, so that our farmers, and particularly those in the east who need assistance at the present time, may be relieved of the burden that is weighing them down and hindering them from cultivating their lands since to do so they need expensive machines which are a constant burden on their budget, as every year they are obliged to make payments and meet heavy commitments so that in the end their income is $1,200 or $1,000, an income that is quite inadequate to maintain a farmer and his family.

One of my colleagues tells me that in the Gaspé peninsula, the Catholic farmers' union has launched a campaign to collect $50,000 in order to help farmers get the heavy machinery they need nowadays on their farm and which they cannot get individually because their income does not allow them to do so.

In my opinion, this legislation is a step toward the evolution of our agriculture and toward success for our eastern farmers, because it will enable them to get a larger income so that they can support their large families.

Mr. Pierre-André Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a few minutes to express my views on Bill No. C-121, now before us.

Just a few minutes ago we heard the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette). I must admit that his speech was rather eloquent and that it reminded me of those he made during the electoral campaign. I note, on the other hand, that what he promised during the electoral campaign he has not yet requested even once in this house, namely, the setting up of a department of agriculture for eastern Canada. Still, he did promise his constituents that, once in Ottawa, he would ask that such a department be instituted. The next time he addresses the house, I should therefore like to ask him to tell the house what he promised during his electoral campaign in this regard.

If the bill we are now studying constitutes a real find for the Department of Agriculture, I must say that in my opinion it is not much of a find. Indeed, the thinking behind this bill does not reflect at all the spirit of the province of Quebec or, perhaps I should say, that of eastern Canada's farmers.

I quite understand that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), being a member for a western constituency should be inclined to think and act as a man from the west; in short, he attempts to legislate in terms of agriculture in western Canada.

It is obvious that Bill No. C-121 will do no good to the agriculture of eastern Canada.

As pointed out by the member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul) a little while ago, this measure is just an attempt to eliminate family farms in eastern Canada. So we ask ourselves whether the federal Minister of Agriculture has not been advised by the minister of agriculture of the province of Quebec to the effect that 35,000 farmers in the province of Quebec should, within a few years, leave their farms in order to make room for larger units and, to this end, 35,000 farmers must abandon their farms so as to permit others to buy, enlarge and transform them into some kind of collective farms.

What I find strange in this bill is that in the second paragraph, for instance, we read:

> Where an individual has two or more major occupations, one of which is farming, the corporation may determine which of such occupations is his principal occupation for the purposes of this act.

There lies the danger. Anybody will be able to start farming knowing that if he declares that his main occupation is agriculture —even if he has another one—it will be sufficient to own a small farm to be declared a farmer, in short to be known as a person engaged in agriculture. So anybody will be able to avail himself of Bill No. C-121 to borrow from the federal Department of Agriculture or from the Farm Credit Corporation.

Under the circumstances, I do not think that this bill will prove useful to the farmers of the province of Quebec, because in that province agriculture is quite different from that in western Canada. I would be inclined to say that this legislation would be more appropriate to the western farmers, because they can join together to purchase heavy machinery, in view of the great size of their farms.

In that part of the country farming is not at all like that in the east where we have diversified agriculture. Moreover, the soil itself is more diversified. Our products are also much too diversified for farmers to take advantage of this legislation and purchase heavy machinery.

All production is not diversified. There is wheat, for instance, which may extend all over a province. The same is true for other crops. But it cannot apply in the province of Quebec, because we have too great a diversity of soil, products and crops. Therefore, I say that the legislation now before us does not apply at all to the province of Quebec, and will only push our farmers further into debt. We know that more than 98 per cent of our lands in the province of Quebec, are owned or operated under farm credit. How can our farmers get out of this economic depression in which they are today? Getting deeper into debt will hardly solve the problem.

We know that between 1940 and 1964, the prices of farm products remained practically the same, whereas during the same period, the prices for machinery or other equipment used for production has trebled. Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that it is possible to make a profit when prices remain the same while the cost of machinery trebles?

Mr. Speaker, even if the purchase of machinery were made easier, and the farmers were authorized to go to Ottawa, or Quebec, for the money required to buy equipment and machinery, while the government did nothing to market our farm production, I hardly think it would help our eastern farmers.

Mr. Speaker, there is an obvious lack of co-operation between the federal and the provincial departments of agriculture. In Ottawa, there is a certain partiality towards the agriculture of western provinces. If western farmers produce wheat or anything at all, they can count on the required sympathy of the federal Minister of Agriculture to market their production; if the minister does not succeed in disposing of all their wheat, he will pay them a subsidy even if there is a crop failure because of drought, rain, grasshoppers, etc. And what is done for the farmer in the province of Quebec when he has a crop failure? The Quebec department of agriculture is blamed for it. Yes, I find that there is a lack of co-operation between the department of agriculture of the province of Quebec and the federal department in Ottawa to assist the farmers in the province of Quebec. But I wonder whether that was the policy advocated by Hon. Jean Lesage when, two days before the 1963 election, he told the people of Quebec: "Vote Liberal in Ottawa and things will go well with a Liberal government in Quebec." We now have a Liberal administration in Ottawa and a Liberal administration in Quebec, and our agriculture keeps deteriorating.

An hon. Member: How were things under a Conservative administration?

Mr. Boutin: When we had a Conservative administration in Quebec as well as in Ottawa, it was no better, but we find that things are even worse now that there are Liberals at both places.

Mr. Grégoire: It is true.

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention here a formal promise made by the Liberal party, through the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), namely that if the Liberal party were elected there would be a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada. Many farmers were trapped and voted for the Liberal party in the hope that it would set up a department of agriculture for eastern Canada. Today we know the disappointment of farmers, indeed the disappointment of farmers in the county of Lotbinière.

Mr. Speaker, there is what I would call a western thinking on legislation introduced here, and I wonder if the best solution would not be to let Quebec look after its own agriculture. Some perhaps will shout "separatism" but I am not a separatist.

Because of its special agriculture, of the diversity of its soil, of its products and crops, why would the province of Quebec itself, and only itself, not look after its agriculture? Then the federal government might leave the administration of agriculture to the province of Quebec, since there is a complete lack of co-operation between both departments of agriculture? The provincial government does not want to ask the federal government and the federal government does not want to give to the provincial government. We always meet with difficulties. Would it not be better if the provincial government would look only after its agriculture and the federal government—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member will allow me to interrupt for a moment in order to remind him that the bill before the house is Bill No. C-121, an act to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates. Consequently, I would suggest that he limits his remarks to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Speaker, if you limit me to the principle of the bill, I shall be through with my remarks, since I see in it nothing good or special to assist the farmers in the province of Quebec. And I should state that even if I am not in favour of this bill, I shall support it.

An hon. Member: Be consistent with yourself.

Mr. Boutin: In two or three years it may be seen whether this bill was really favourable to the farmers of the province of Quebec, whether there has been an increase in profits for our farmers. Then our farmers may answer yes or no to the bill presently before us.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe, as I was saying a while ago, that to get the farmers even more into debt is a solution to get them out of the depression in which they presently stagnate.

I believe it would be preferable to find outlets for the products of our farmers in the province of Quebec instead of getting them even more into the red, as the Liberal government took pleasure in doing since it came into office.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much the statements the previous speaker made, with what is definitely a provincial and parochial attitude. I am not a farmer; I do not represent a farming constituency; but as a member of the House of Commons I have a great interest in, and I hope a knowledge of, the problems of farmers whether they be from western Canada, eastern Canada, from British Columbia or Quebec. A bill which is aimed at assisting many of the farmers of Canada, irrespective of the province in which they reside and operate, is most certainly worthy of the favourable consideration of this house.

In principle, sir, I am in support of the bill that is now before us, because it is an endeavour to meet one of the big problems of farmers in their operations in what is now an automated age. Automation hits farmers as well as industry. I am also in favour of the amendment which has been moved to have this entire question referred to the agriculture committee. It is basically on the amendment, in accordance with the rules, that I desire to speak.

Mr. Speaker, anyone who knows Canada and the problems of agriculture, the cost of machinery, the inability of an individual farmer to get machinery on his own, must know that in principle the bill introduced by the government is a step in the right direction; even if, as one hon. member a few days ago described the measure, it is creeping socialism. We have had creeping socialism for a long time, and as a matter of fact every progressive move is a move toward socialist principles. The principle of the bill is good; it is in fact excellent, and I commend the government for introducing it. But I also commend the official opposition for recommending that it be now referred to a committee. Why do I take this position, Mr. Speaker? It is because without any doubt improvements can be made to the bill in the interests of the farmers of this country, and on the agriculture committee we have representatives from all parties of those who are interested in agriculture; we also have practical farmers who know farming and its basic operation.

I am convinced that a reference of this bill to the agriculture committee, if it is considered—as I am certain it will be—on an unbiased and non-political basis, will result in the bill being referred back to the house strengthened with the advice of the all-party committee. It will be referred back to the house with the changes required to resolve the doubts that are in the minds of some of us at the present time. I refer for example to the question of the interest rate. As I understand the principle of the bill and as I have discussed it with hon. members of this house, I am not sure what is the interest rate and whether it basically means that farmers co-operatively working under the provisions of this bill will not be paying a higher interest rate than that actually charged by the banks. I have not found one member of the house with whom I have discussed this question who can make it clear to me that this will not be the case.

Perhaps of even more importance than that however—and this is a matter that will be discussed if the bill is referred to the agriculture committee—is a principle that is most involved and, unless clarified, most dangerous. I refer not to any clause but to the principle of the bill, whereby a number of farmers, each of whom individually cannot buy the machinery needed to work in the agricultural, automated sector, can get together in order to buy this machinery. Let us say that one farmer puts up $1,000, one $10,000 and one $20,000. Each one, including the farmer who puts up $1,000, under the bill as I read it is responsible for the entire cost of the machinery to be used in their co-operative operation. In other words, if a farmer puts up $1,000 and goes to a bank for a loan for something else, his commitment is not for $1,000 but is for the entire cost of the co-operative enterprise in respect of the purchase of this machinery. That is the way I read the bill. I am certain that is not what was meant to be the principle when the government introduced this measure. I am sure it was not intended that one farmer who is part of a co-operative ownership in order to build up the efficiency of his farm should be held individually responsible for the entire cost of the machinery purchased. I raise this question, Mr. Speaker, because I cannot read this bill in any other way.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) wish to reply to a question from the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis)?

Mr. Winch: Yes.

Mr. Francis: I think I understand the effect of the amendment, which would be to refer not the bill to a committee but the subject matter of the bill. Does the hon. member not understand that this would kill the bill?

Mr. Winch: Does the hon. member actually want to put that question to me? Is he saying that on second reading of the bill reference of the subject matter to a committee means that the bill is killed?

Mr. MacNaught: Absolutely.

Mr. Winch: I presume the government are going to pass the principle of the bill. If they are not, then why in God's name did they introduce it? If the hon. member wants to raise a technicality then that is all right. But I am saying that the bill should be referred to the committee on agriculture and that that committee, which is representative of all hon. members of the house and composed mainly of practising farmers, would then have the opportunity of going over the bill and making representations to this house. It is on that basis that I am discussing this amendment. I agree 100 per cent with the principle of the bill and I am glad the government has brought it in. I also agree that it should be referred to the committee, because I think it can be strengthened, and the Minister of Agriculture will welcome that. The committee will take care of the phases of the bill which disturb some of us. I am not allowed to make reference to any of the clauses, but hon. members who have read the bill will know the clause to which I refer. Therefore I hope that the bill will be referred to the agriculture committee and that the government will give consideration to the recommendations of the committee. In this way we will preserve not only the principle of the bill introduced by the government, but it will be strengthened in the interests of the farmers of Canada.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable discussion of this bill. The minister is well aware by now that there are some reservations to it and that some legal points have been raised. I believe the mover of the amendment in stating that there was a vast amount of credit tied up for the individual farmer which might go into these syndicates, stated a fact, but perhaps by some legalistic change in language this problem could be relieved. I would be prepared to support the bill and oppose this amendment if the minister would give us an assurance that the bill will go to the committee. I cannot imagine the minister would oppose that step. I know there would be a little delay, but this is one of the first pieces of legislation that the minister has moved and I believe there are serious reservations on this particular aspect of the bill.

It is unfortunate, our rules being what they are, that we are not allowed to do by motion what in fact we want to do. It is true that if we support this amendment in effect we kill the bill. I am not really worried about that because if the minister feels strongly enough about this matter he will reintroduce it in another form in such event. But if the minister would give us an indication whether he is willing to send this bill to committee it would save us a lot of grief and would also help the farmers who want to take advantage of it.

I do not think the minister is a lawyer and certainly I am not, but I did listen with interest to the point which has been made. It is not so much a question of liability because, as the hon. member for Cariboo said, we could insure against that. The difficulty is the tying up of a large amount of credit so that the farmer who takes advantage of these loans would not be able to get any credit from the bank to assist in other parts of his business.

It seems to me that what the minister is suggesting in principle—and I am in agreement with it—is that we make a loan available to allow farmers co-operatively to buy machinery above and beyond that which is purchased by, and is within the capability of, an individual farmer. If he does take advantage of it, then it does not necessarily mean that he has exhausted his capability in the normal sense. This legal point is so interesting that I personally would like to see the minister indicate that he is willing to send the bill to a committee for consideration, even with instructions to the committee.

I regret that our rules are so stupid that we cannot do by direct means what we want to do. Doing directly what we want to do will not accomplish in the end what we intend to do. This is a quandary which could easily be solved by the minister giving us this assurance, that the bill will be referred to a committee. I suggest this is not asking for very much because this is new legislation. As I read the bill it is mainly directed towards the purchase of heavy equipment, a field in which the farmer is not normally able to participate, and a few days or weeks will not be that important. I believe the success of this type of legislation is important enough that the minister should give that kind of assurance. If he does not, then I can only come to the conclusion that he is not interested in giving consideration to the arguments which I think have legitimately and honestly been raised.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I just wish briefly to say that the members of this group have expressed their support in general of the principle and purpose of this bill. But we have also expressed a desire to know more about what the clauses of the bill mean, how the legislation will be administered, and we also wish to ask many other questions. We do not want to kill this bill. Unfortunately, the amendment moved would have that effect because it simply reads:

> That this Bill No. C-121 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on agriculture for further study and report.

I am not sure whether the mover realized that if this amendment carried it would kill the bill. Therefore, in view of the criticisms which have been directed at the bill by members in all parties on the opposition side of the house, and their general desire for more information on the purpose of the bill, its administration and so on, I join with the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) in urging the minister to agree that this bill be referred to the agriculture committee for study and report after second reading.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, might I try to explain to the house what is the purpose of this amendment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) has already participated in this debate and under our rules cannot speak a second time unless there is unanimous agreement that the hon. member be allowed to participate in the debate for a second time.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. A point of order has been raised by inference as to the quality of the amendment which has been moved, and I think on this aspect of the matter the hon. member should be permitted to speak, as well as under the other heading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before an hon. member can speak a second time he must obtain the unanimous consent of the house. Has the hon. member the unanimous agreement of the house to speak a second time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, before unanimous consent is considered in respect of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) speaking a second time, I think we must very carefully consider the implications and ramifications of carrying the amendment. It seems to me it would have the effect of killing the bill.

I think there is some useful purpose to be served by referring Bill C-121 to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization for further study and report. However at the same time, if this bill continues through its normal course in parliament it will be considered by the committee of the whole house, at which time much of the discussion which would take place at meetings of the standing committee could take place. If it was desirable and possible to call expert witnesses in respect of the provisions of this bill, which certainly is the intent of sending it to a standing committee, that might be appropriate.

We all know there is provision for witnesses to be called before a standing committee of parliament and that it is not possible to call witnesses before a committee of the whole house. We must realize that the provisions of this bill to provide financing for farm machinery syndicates represent a complete and new departure from usual financing, and therefore as far as I am concerned, there are no experts as to how this could be applied. So who could testify before such a standing committee? Who could be called as an expert witness in this regard? Individuals could be called only for the purpose of obtaining their opinions of what might happen. This particular method of financing has not been used in the past, and no one could therefore have any idea of how it would operate.

Rather than accepting this amendment, and in effect killing the bill, I think it desirable that this house accept the principles of the bill, go into committee of the whole and take advantage of the opportunity afforded at that stage to cross-examine the minister on the various aspects of the clauses, following which it should be passed and allowed to enjoy a trial run of a few months or a year.

Many questions exist in my mind in respect of the usefulness of the proposed legislation, and I can anticipate many problems. There is no way in which we can obtain satisfactory answers to those questions, both in my mind and those raised by other hon. members, by calling witnesses before a standing committee.

We have heard a great deal of discussion as to whether farmers can obtain loans and purchase certain pieces of equipment to be used on more than one farm. I suggest this is something which must be decided by experience. Certain implements used for the harvesting of crops are of sufficient capacity that they can be used by different farmers during different periods of time, provided the harvesting period is of sufficient length. However, I admit that when crops are ripe for harvest it is difficult for a farmer, who may have a joint interest in a piece of harvesting equipment, to stand aside and watch his neighbour use that piece of equipment at a time when climatic conditions are favourable.

Many other pieces of equipment, such as heavy motor trucks, can be used without difficulty for short periods of time on different farms by co-operation. I think that sort of co-operation in the use of machinery could be very effective toward meeting the needs and demands of farmers holding an interest in the equipment.

At this time we are not aware of the kind of corporate structure these syndicates or co-operatives are going to have, and I do not believe we are going to know after calling witnesses before a standing committee. We are aware of provincial laws which provide for setting up small corporations or co-operatives, and while this proposed legislation may be sufficient to meet the needs of incorporation, so that such an entity could take advantage of the credit proposed in this bill, I personally think that those provincial laws are of such a nature they will require amendment. Perhaps the provisions contained in this bill, in light of provincial legislation, would require too complex a structure, and would involve a great deal of bookkeeping and organization. Perhaps we should ask the provinces to pass complementary legislation to simplify the structure of these syndicates, enabling them to qualify for this proposed credit.

Mr. Speaker, I think all these things will be clear after the bill becomes law and that law is subjected to a trial run. I think the farmers should be allowed to consider the law and test it to see what kind of problems will be created. Perhaps in a year or two after passage of this legislation it should be looked at again in light of experience and the knowledge of its weaknesses, and then amended. In the meantime I am convinced that we ought to accept the principles of this legislation, rather than adopt this amendment which could have the effect of killing the bill.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTION TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty pursuant to standing order 39A to inform the house that the question to be raised at ten o'clock on the adjournment is as follows: the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen)—royal visit—omission in press release of reference to leader of opposition.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

FARM MACHINERY

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR PURCHASES BY SYNDICATES

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hays for the second reading of Bill No. C-121, to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I had completed my remarks at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, perhaps with the exception of saying that we cannot accept the suggestion this bill ought to take the course the amendment indicates which would, in effect, destroy it before it is accepted in principle.

[Mr. Olson.]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have been invited by several hon. members opposite to intervene in this debate at this stage to explain—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to be clear that the minister is not closing the debate. I believe he is speaking to the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is quite so. In any event, the Chair is required under the rules to caution the house that the minister is closing the debate, and when the Chair does not the minister does not then close the debate.

Mr. Hays: I am more than pleased, Mr. Speaker, to accept this invitation to speak at this time. I think it is time I pointed out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all the farmers of this country just what is going on here. I know that this is legislation which all the farmers in this country, in eastern Canada as well as western Canada, need and want. Yet, first we have the Conservative opposition attacking this legislation as useless, as foolhardy, and even as communistic. Not only have the Tories delayed this legislation, but now they want to kill it. As every informed member of this house understands very well, the effect of the amendment moved this afternoon by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) would be to kill this bill right here. Of course it would also bring down the government and force another election on the Canadian people. Is this what the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) talks about when he says he wants to see some action in this house?

Since the amendment was introduced, Mr. Speaker, there have been suggestions that the hon. member who moved it did not really know what he was doing. However, I believe the hon. member did understand that this amendment, if passed, would kill this bill without any further discussion. I would point out that from the hon. member's own lips this afternoon we heard about his legal training; we heard he was a lawyer, and he was going to tell us how he would protect the farmers from falling into the trap which, in his legalistic mind he thought he saw in this legislation. Let us make no mistake about this. He knew what he was doing when he moved this amendment. If he did not, then that is an even worse reflection on his capacity to come in here and speak for the farmers of this country. In addition to that, he is from my own province.

I suggest that this amendment is typical of the attitude of the official opposition all through this session. I suppose I have been subjected to as much criticism from the Tory benches this session as any other minister. I have listened to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition condemn me for being an auctioneer, for travelling around the country trying to learn from personal experience and conversation with farmers what their problems are and what they need from this government. I have heard him say specifically that nothing is being done for the farmers: When are you going to bring in legislation?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Tell us what this legislation is going to do.

Mr. Hays: I have even heard him say, bring it in and we will pass it. I have brought it in.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): And we are in the process of passing it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; may I bring it to the attention of hon. members that the Minister of Agriculture has the floor and should not be interrupted?

Mr. Hays: Not only have the Conservatives delayed this measure with long, repetitious speeches, but now they would go all the way and dispose of this legislation, which offers a completely new approach to this most basic problem, the cost of essential machinery. They talk about sending this bill to the agricultural committee for answers to their questions, and then they try and kill it before giving me even the usual opportunity that is provided to answer these questions. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is an experienced member of this house. Surely, he knows very well that once the principle of this bill has been approved we would go into committee of the whole house, at which time every member can ask the questions he wants to ask. I am prepared now to answer the questions that have been raised so far.

First of all, I should like to say that I share the view expressed by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) that we should first give this legislation a try. This is new, experimental legislation. After it has been in operation for a year or so, if we find it needs amending I will be pleased to introduce those amendments and submit them to the agriculture committee. However at this stage I believe the farmers of this country would like parliament to pass this legislation. Let us get it into operation in time to help them plan for their spring operations.

Before I go into the questions raised at an earlier stage of this debate, let me refer to one raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. He suggested that this bill will tie up farmers' credit in syndicates and in machinery. This has not been the experience with the British farm machinery syndicates. In fact their experience has been exactly the opposite. They have found that when a machine is owned by several farmers, each will invest in it only his share of the purchase price. This will be a smaller investment than if he owned the same machine on his own, and may even be smaller than if he had owned a smaller or older model. The British experience has shown that this capital, which is not needed for investment in his own individual machine, will be available for investment elsewhere. In fact we found the large majority of British syndicate members considered the syndicates had enabled them to reduce the amount of their capital invested in machinery. For these farmers the British experience has shown that special credit to assist in the purchase of shared machines will, in fact, have the effect of increasing the amount of capital made available for other investments.

I have studied the remarks of everyone who has taken part in this debate, and studied them with great care, especially those who indicated they were either opposed to this legislation or not very impressed with it. I was disappointed to find not a single helpful suggestion or useful alternative proposal in any of the remarks of those who were most critical. The hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) had a suggestion to make which could be considered as worth while. He indicated he supported this bill, and I will refer to his suggestion later in my statement.

I was especially disappointed in the contribution to this debate by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner). He has spoken twice on this measure already—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I will speak twice more.

Mr. Hays: —but although he was extremely critical of it I could find nothing in his remarks that could be taken as a positive suggestion for some better way than this to relieve our farmers, especially our smaller farmers, of their high machinery costs.

I intend to give some specific examples in this statement, as to just how this legislation will help the small, family sized farmer improve his operation and increase his income. From my experience, they seem self-evident to me, but for the sake of those who either cannot or, for their own, I think, rather childish political purpose, will not see these advantages to the family farm in this legislation. I want to spell them out.

To be perfectly frank, Mr. Speaker, I can't help but think that the hon. member for Acadia, and others on the Tory benches, cannot quite decide what to do about this legislation, whether to support it in the obvious interests of the farmers, or to attack it for whatever partisan political mileage might be made. As I will show later on, in his first speech on the resolution, even while being critical as he thought it was politically safe to be, the hon. member for Acadia himself mentioned several beneficial uses to which this legislation can be put by farmers in his own area. In what I can only interpret as the cheapest kind of two-bit partisan politics he described this as one more example of the millionaire's approach to our farm problems. Then in his second speech he turned around completely, and suggested that this is a kind of communist approach to farm problems.

Mr. Speaker, I wish he would make up his mind. In his second speech, he suggested this legislation would not only undermine our farmers' independence, but would lead to a communist type of collective farming. What surprises me about this kind of attitude is that I know the hon. member personally, and find him usually a reasonable and fairly well informed person outside this house. As I listen to him make this kind of an attack in here, on legislation I know will be most useful to farmers in every part of the country, I can't help but think that sometimes there is more political chinook wind blowing in this chamber from that hon. member's place than we ever get, even in southern Alberta.

This legislation will substantially reduce the investment small farmers have to make in necessary equipment. It will enable them to farm more efficiently and profitably, at a lower investment in machinery than ever before, if they take proper advantage of this legislation and are not misled and confused about it by the partisan politicking of certain hon. members opposite.

I found a very similar pattern in the two contributions made by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden). Although he was critical of the measure at the resolution stage he did say, as recorded in Hansard on the top of page 8064, that he did not intend to indicate this is a useless measure, and further on listed specific items of machinery he thought could usefully come under this legislation.

But then we heard the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) who, of course, is a lawyer and not a farmer, and probably cannot be expected to understand these things. We heard him describe this, as recorded at page 8302 of Hansard, second column, as "ill-digested, ill-considered and completely insufficient".

Then we heard the hon. member for Rosthern sing a different tune. Then he decided this would be useless and not worth voting for, and that it is "foolhardy" legislation. Well, I am perfectly willing to let the farmers in his constituency decide where the foolhardy name really belongs.

As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, some hon. members have raised some questions about this legislation, about the way it will operate and its possible results. I want to answer those questions and remove whatever honest concern members really feel about this legislation.

Let me emphasize again that this bill was designed primarily to assist the family farmer to cope with the new problems he faces in modern agriculture, and in particular the mounting cost of the machinery he needs to make a decent living. The federal government, as informed hon. members know very well, does not have the power to control prices, except in wartime. So we could not try to control farm machinery prices directly, even if that were considered desirable, which I am sure most hon. members would agree it is not. Short of price controls, this legislation can have as beneficial an impact on farm machinery costs for individual farmers as any other action the government could take.

This legislation was developed from the experience of farm machinery syndicates operating in Britain. It has been designed to meet the needs of Canadian farmers, but I think some points from a study of the operations and advantages of farm machinery syndicates in Britain, prepared by the department of agricultural economics at the University of Reading, England, are worth putting on the record.

To the question: "What happens when everyone wants the machine at the same time?" the report has this answer: From a technical point of view, the problem of arranging a machine's program to cover several fields on several farms is not different from that of arranging a similar program covering several fields on only one farm. The distance between fields is likely to be greater when several farms are concerned, but with present day speeds of road travel, the time taken, even when farms are several miles apart, is negligible, and can often be done when the weather is bad or crops are not yet ready. The main requirement is that the total work load of each machine should be well within the capacity of the model chosen.

To ensure that each syndicate member has a fair share of the machine's use, specific provisions for sharing are spelled out in each agreement. But the British experience has shown that the general spirit of good neighbourliness and of give and take has proven a sufficient safeguard in itself.

What about disagreements among members of a syndicate? On this the British experience is that the risk of disagreement can be minimized, by ensuring that only those machines are selected which are able to deal comfortably with the total work load and the whole range of crops and soil conditions likely to occur.

What about loss of independence? The Reading University report says "sharing, by its very nature usually involves some loss of independence." Then it continues:

> Whether this constitutes a serious difficulty depends on whether the inconvenience and cost of any independence lost ... outweighs the advantages gained by the sharing.

The report adds:

> However, not a single member referred to loss of independence as constituting a difficulty. On the contrary, some who had previously been hiring or borrowing, said that by joining their syndicates, they had achieved greater control and certainty over specific operations.
> In some areas—

—the report continues—

> —it was claimed that good neighbourliness and co-operation generally had improved as a result of syndicates.

I have every confidence that these and other beneficial experiences of British farmers in the syndicate use of expensive farm machinery will also be the experiences of Canadian farmers who make use of this new legislation we are debating here today. I think the savings from co-operative ownership and use of farm machinery should be obvious to every hon. member.

To make it easier for farmers to co-operate in this way, the bill proposes the formation of syndicates. As the parliamentary secretary (Mr. Beer) indicated when he opened debate on the second reading of the bill, the syndicates as proposed in this legislation are, in effect, partnership agreements between three or more persons engaged in farming.

Some speakers, and in particular the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg) expressed fears that this would promote corporation farming. If you refer to the definition of syndicate, as contained in the bill, it will be noted that a syndicate is an association, formed by an agreement between three or more individuals who are engaged in farming. Because corporations are not individuals, it is apparent that corporations would not be eligible to be members of a syndicate. Furthermore as loans can only be made to syndicates, a corporation would not itself be eligible for a loan. However, a farmer who has organized his enterprise into a family farm corporation could, as an individual, co-operate with his neighbours, in a farm machinery syndicate.

The syndicate arrangement provides a simple and effective basis upon which three or more persons engaged in farming, in separate farm enterprises, may co-operate in the purchase and use of farm machinery. It does not involve formal incorporation, and it does not encourage or promote vertical integration, as has been suggested by some hon. members. It is a simple method for our individual Canadian farmers to join together in a co-operative venture, and in this way it will help them to compete against corporation farms. In this connection, I might refer any interested hon. member to the latest issue of the Family Herald and an article about the Knight family in the Lacombe-Stettler area of Alberta. It tells how a farmer and five of his sons run a very successful co-operative family farming venture and in one paragraph it makes this point:

> Such a farming venture has advantages for all partners, the machinery pool being perhaps the biggest one.

It goes on:

> The hired help situation has been solved as they pool work. The young Knights have been taught to keep their credit in good order and such security makes financing easier.

At another point the article says:

> Since the Knights avoid overlap in machine buying, they can afford some 'frill' machinery that the individual farmer cannot afford.

I would particularly like to recommend this whole article to the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) who described this legislation as "absolute nonsense" as shown in Hansard at page 8307. I would like to hear hon. members tell that sort of thing to the Knight family.

The hon. member for Kent (Ont.) (Mr. Danforth) has questioned the fact that all members of the syndicate need not be persons whose principal occupation is farming. I would like to point out that all members must be engaged in farming and the majority of members must have farming as their principal occupation. We think it would be wrong to exclude from participation in the benefits possible under the proposed legislation those farmers who find it necessary in the initial years of establishment of their farms to hold a full-time job off the farm. We think this is one of the ways to help them to develop and establish their farm units. Furthermore it may frequently be a real advantage to full-time farmers to co-operate in a syndicate with a neighbour who is farming but who has other employment and who may share in the use of the syndicate's equipment and in the cost of its operations. As the parliamentary secretary indicated in opening the debate on second reading, the bill provides for this kind of co-operation; but to ensure that full-time farmers are the chief beneficiaries the majority of the members of any syndicate must be farmers by principal occupation.

Some hon. members have suggested that the bill is a method of compelling farmers into co-operative ventures. This is just more political chinook blowing. There is nothing in this bill which would in any way limit the rights of any individual farmer to obtain credit from any of the sources presently available to him, including those two measures which have recently been amended and brought up to date in this session, the Farm Credit Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The bill does not propose to remove the opportunities for the individual to carry on by himself if he wishes. It provides however the opportunity for individuals to co-operate with their neighbours where they find it to their advantage to do so.

Some hon. members have questioned the provision of joint and several liability of syndicate members. This is not an innovation but is a regular feature of partnership agreements. It has many advantages in a program of this nature. It will ensure that each member of the syndicate has a personal stake in its successful operation and a personal interest in the proper maintenance of the equipment. It has been suggested that one farmer in the syndicate might be stuck with the entire liability, in the event that all other members default. Personally I have a high regard for the credit worthiness and integrity of Canadian farmers. I am convinced that the majority of them will meet their obligations and I believe they have sufficient business knowledge to refrain from entering into a syndicate agreement with the occasional individual who would not meet his obligations. Furthermore it must be remembered that all of the syndicate members will have an equity in the machinery and it will be in their own individual interests to meet their obligations to the syndicate.

The hon. member for Kent (Ont.) (Mr. Danforth) has questioned whether each member is to be assessed the same amount of the total debt. While the syndicate as a whole will be responsible to the corporation for the repayment of the loan, individual members may share this liability between themselves in whatever ratio they wish. For example, if a syndicate is made up of four members three of whom have 100-acre farms and one of whom has a 200-acre farm it may be quite natural for them to agree between themselves that the farmer operating the 200 acres of land will bear twice as much of the financial responsibility of the syndicate as each of the other members.

As I indicated, the syndicate agreement will be a form of partnership agreement. It is important to the successful operation of the program that these agreements between members be worked out to their satisfaction when the syndicate is being formed. Some of the terms and conditions which have general application will be prescribed by the Farm Credit Corporation. Many of the arrangements however, will be worked out in advance by the farmers themselves, to their mutual satisfaction.

Hon. members will appreciate that in a new program of this nature it is essential, particularly in the initial stages, to provide flexibility in the legislation so that the Farm Credit Corporation and the farmers who borrow from it can develop and improve the program as it goes along. While the corporation cannot prescribe any of the terms and conditions of syndicate agreements until after the legislation has been enacted, I can, in answer to the questions which have been asked, outline the general nature of some of the arrangements which are proposed.

The agreement will make it possible for a new member to join a syndicate with the approval of the other members, and the Farm Credit Corporation, on whatever terms may be mutually agreed upon at the time. A member will be able to withdraw with the prior consent of the corporation and the remaining members and may be relieved of his liabilities if he makes arrangement for their assumption by a continuing member or another farmer who may take his place. In other words, since he will have an equity in the syndicate's assets he will be able to sell it to another farmer if the other farmer is acceptable, as a member, or to the other farmers already in the syndicate.

Upon the death of a member the syndicate will not automatically be dissolved, but the opportunity will be provided for the remaining members to make mutually satisfactory arrangements with the personal representatives of the deceased member. In the only worth-while opposition suggestion I was able to discover, the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) suggested that these loans should be insured against the death of one of the participants. There are some obvious problems in working out such a proposal when we are dealing with several members, each of whom is jointly and severally responsible for the loan, particularly since life insurance normally would be expected to benefit the heirs of the deceased rather than the syndicate. I believe the suggestion has merit, however, and we will see if a suitable plan can be arranged. If so, it can be put into effect without amending the bill, since life insurance would, in effect, be additional security for the loan and this is provided for in clause 3(2) (b) of the bill.

Some hon. members have asked what would happen if one member does not meet his obligations, becomes insolvent, or bankrupt. Members will be required to agree in advance on a method for establishing the net value of such member's equity in the syndicate, so that they or a new member will be able to buy out his interest.

Most of the business arrangements of the syndicates will be worked out by the members according to their own local circumstances. They will make their own arrangements for maintenance, operation and storage of the machinery and how they will share the costs. They will agree in advance how they will decide who shall have the machine, if two members want it at the same time. While there may be several ways of doing this, one arrangement could be the annual rotation of the order of priority of the various members, with the added provision that no one farmer would be able to take off more than half of his crop at a time if another farmer was ready and waiting for the machine. As the British experiment has shown, the possibility of conflict will be greatly reduced by ensuring that the machines purchased by a syndicate have adequate capacity for the work they will be called upon to do. The farmers will decide the type and make of machines they wish to buy and whom they will buy it from. Their decisions will be made and incorporated in a local agreement which they can amend from time to time, if they wish, by resolution.

The hon. member for Kent (Ont.) (Mr. Danforth) asked whether, if a farmer had borrowed under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and had used his assets as collateral, the same assets would not be necessary for collateral for a loan under this proposed legislation. The primary security for loans under the proposed act will be the promissory note signed by the members of the syndicate. Collateral security will be taken where required on the machinery being purchased with the loan, but the corporation will not be taking security against any of the other assets owned by individual members of the syndicate. There should therefore be no conflict with the security requirements for loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

The hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) asked whether the syndicates moved be treated as co-operatives for taxation purposes and suggested that if so the legislation would discriminate against private enterprise. The syndicates will not be co-operatives but will be partnerships designed to reduce the operating costs of the individual members. Taxation laws which apply to co-operatives would not apply to syndicates and the individual members will remain subject to the same tax laws as they are at present.

Many speakers have raised the question of the type of machinery which may be included under the provisions of the proposed act. The definition of farm machinery is most difficult. Any attempt to list the items which might be included would, by itself, limit the definition by excluding any items which might be omitted from the list, or any new machinery which may be developed. Mr. Speaker, if hon. members will refer to the Farm Credit Act—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would permit a question at this point?

Mr. Hays: I have not much more to say, Mr. Speaker, and I do not have much time. I will be glad to answer the hon. member's questions afterwards.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): As soon as the minister is through, will he permit a question on this point?

Mr. Hays: If hon. members will refer to the Farm Credit Act they will note that parliament did not consider it necessary to define in detail in that act the items which might be considered to be farm machinery. Parliament in its wisdom recognized the necessity of providing a measure of flexibility in the definition by permitting it to be broadened from time to time by regulation, without the necessity of amendment to the act itself. I would like to assure hon. members, however, that it is the intention of the government, for the purposes of this act, to have farm machinery defined as broadly as possible so that it may include any item of machinery that a farmer can use in the development or operation of his farm unit. Farmers themselves know what they need and we want to be in the position to meet these needs.

Many hon. members have asked questions as to what sort of machinery might be purchased under this legislation. Several speakers have suggested items which they think should be considered. The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) has referred to tillage and harvesting equipment, including types of equipment, for specialized crops such as sugar beets. He has referred also to the need for heavy equipment which could break the prairie, prepare a seed bed and seed tame grass in some of the submarginal land.

Even the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden), while describing this legislation as useless and foolhardy was able to see how useful it could be in the co-operative purchase and use of grain handling and grain cleaning equipment. He said this at page 8065 of Hansard. The big brother of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner), the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Horner), was also able to see the usefulness of this legislation by suggesting it could be employed in the purchase of land levellers, caterpillar tractors, feeding and grinding equipment and land clearing equipment. And even the little brother, the hon. member for Acadia, while fussing and fuming about this legislation as only he can fuss and fume, saw this legislation's usefulness in the purchase of brush clearing equipment, large grass seeding equipment, portable grain mills and grain driers, portable grain cleaning equipment and seed cleaning equipment. In the speech he made before we were treated to the agricultural wisdom of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, he even indicated that he would like syndicates to be able to purchase their own pipe for watering livestock.

Mr. Speaker, as unworthy as I think some of the remarks of these hon. members were, I want to be fair and say that these are worthy suggestions, and in spite of their sources I can assure hon. members that the definition of farm machinery to be approved by the governor in council with respect to this legislation will provide for all these items. The hon. member for Kent (Ont.) (Mr. Danforth) has asked who will decide the type and make of machinery which will be bought. I can assure hon. members that as long as the type of machinery under consideration can be used in the development or operation of a farming enterprise and can be used co-operatively by the members of the syndicate, it will be the members of the syndicate themselves who will make this decision. As an example, take three farmers in the black soil zone of Saskatchewan, each with a half section grain-livestock farm with about 200 crop acres under cultivation. Farm management studies indicate that the investment of these farmers in a used swather and pull-type combine amounts to about $3,200, or $16 per crop acre. These three farmers might form a syndicate and purchase a good used swather and combine of a larger capacity for about $5,000, with a down payment of about $350 each. Their capital investment would be just over $8 per acre, or about half of their present investment. They could have a very efficient three-man harvesting operation with ample capacity to handle their 600 crop acres with a very substantial saving in investment and depreciation costs to each farmer, and by operating together might very easily avoid the need for hired labour at harvest time.

The same principle applies as well, or better, in eastern Canada. Dairy farmers in Quebec, for example, have much of their land in pasture and forage crops and might have only 25 to 30 acres in grain. It would not pay to buy a combine for such a small area. Three or four such farmers could join together and purchase a new eight-foot pull-type combine for about $5,000 with a down payment of about $1,000.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): An eight-foot combine? That must be wrong.

Mr. Hays: In this way, with an initial investment of $250 to $350 each they would have a combine which would quite easily handle all their work, and possibly do some for their neighbours on a custom basis. They would have effected a real saving in interest and depreciation costs. They could also cooperate in the purchase and use of a forage harvester and self-unloading wagons, a hay baler and possibly a large power unit. Their savings in machinery costs could be very substantial. They would have efficient machinery with the capacity to do their work in good time and thus would save labour.

Another possible use which farmers might make of a machinery syndicate in concentrated cattle areas in eastern Canada could be with feed mixing equipment. A farmer milking 40 cows would probably need to feed about 42 tons of grain, with added concentrate, a year. Most of this grain is home grown and the farmer now has to make arrangements to have it ground and the concentrate added. If 20 such farmers went together in a syndicate, the capital cost of a portable mill for the purpose would be in the order of $1,100 per farmer which, amortized over 10 years, would be $110 per year or 13 cents per hundred pounds as the capital cost of grinding and mixing the grain and concentrates for a 40 cow herd. To this, of course, would have to be added interest and operating charges. I think these examples should show just how wrong any member is who suggests that this legislation will not help eastern farmers or that it will help western farmers more than eastern farmers. The kind of co-operation envisaged under this legislation can be extended to farm operations in every part of this country. It can be used for the purchase of potato planters, sprayers and diggers in the Atlantic provinces, for corn pickers and sugar beet equipment in the central provinces and elsewhere.

In summary, let me say that I believe very sincerely that this is good legislation for all our farmers from coast to coast. It can be especially useful to the family farmer by putting him in a stronger economic position than he has ever enjoyed before in his competition to survive against the large farm or the corporation farm.

Some hon. members have suggested this measure will encourage vertical integration and threaten the independence of the family farm. This is nonsense. It will have just the opposite effect. It will provide a new buttress to support the independence of our family farmer by reducing the amount of money he has to spend on machinery. It can encourage better farming management through the conditions that will be required for qualification for one of these loans, and this can improve the income of our farmers. It can help to relieve some of the farm labour problems our farmers now face, including a shortage of farm labour in some areas, by making it possible for farmers to help each other.

The use of the latest machines can lead to work being done more efficiently from a technical point of view, more quickly and with greater timeliness. As a result, the risks of crop losses and damage can be diminished and the quality of such products as hay and silage can be improved. By being able to have the use of new and better equipment co-operatively that they could not afford on their own, individual syndicate members should be able to increase production of their crops or, as in the case of one farmer with a share in a potato harvester, to sell their products on an earlier and better market. The examples I have cited indicate the very real reduction in machinery costs this legislation can mean for individual farmers. I think it should be obvious by now that it will be of more benefit to the small farmer who cannot afford to buy all the machinery he needs on his own than to the big operators who can.

This is something brand new in Canadian agriculture. It is an experimental type of legislation and we will be ready to make whatever changes in its operation experience indicates. We may need more than the initial $25 million fund to keep it operating and if that is the case this government will not hesitate to bring forward the necessary amendments.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I listened with sympathy to the valiant efforts of the minister in the fight which his natural modesty and humility waged with political partisanship of the highest order in his desire to construct a political halo around his head. Alas, we must confess that that humility and modesty, earlier evident at the beginning of his speech, soon disappeared. There are one or two comments I think I must make about what was said by the minister. He indicated that in his view too much time had been taken on this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: I hear hon. members applauding, which only indicates that in their view the members of the opposition are not entitled to exercise their proper function of critically analysing legislation brought before the house. I would point out that on September 21 this bill was brought down for second reading. At that time the parliamentary secretary spoke, and I would judge that some 35 to 40 minutes was devoted to the second reading stage, practically all of which was occupied by the speech of the parliamentary secretary. Then on September 22 the debate was renewed and there was a particularly lengthy question period preceding it, occasioned as usual by the lengthy answers of ministers of the crown. The debate was also interrupted part way through by a statement on motions made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and replied to by members from each of the parties. Consequently, I submit that less than one full day has been devoted to the second reading stage of this bill, a bill which the minister has indicated is a very important piece of legislation and something in the nature of an experiment. I suggest that any intimation that time should be limited to less than one day on the second reading of a bill of this kind is completely improper and wrong. I think we would not be fulfilling our duty if we did not give to this bill the attention and the analysis it requires.

For example, Mr. Speaker, on the resolution stage I asked some questions. At that time we knew not what was in the bill. I asked what I thought were proper questions, but as yet the minister has not answered them. I referred, as did one other hon. member today, to the fact that legislation of this kind is probably the only way in which many of our native peoples—the Indians under the Indian Act and the metis under the metis colonies act of the province of Alberta—could have an opportunity to secure the type of financial assistance required for programs of this nature, which is denied them under other legislation owing to the fact that they do not hold title to their land, having only certificates of occupation. I hope the minister will take this matter up with his colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Tremblay), and I also propose to deal with it on the estimates of that minister and to ask him the same question. I think it is tremendously important to see that these people do have an opportunity, as do other people in Canada, of obtaining for themselves the benefits available under farm legislation.

During the resolution stage I also pointed out that under the Farm Improvement Loans Act approximately $100 million in one year alone had been made available for the purchase of farm machinery. I pointed out that under those conditions, using this as a yardstick, it was most unlikely that the $25 million would be sufficient for the job if it were to do the job which the minister said it would. I also pointed out that under the Farm Credit Act, which was passed by the previous government, there is provision for loans to co-operative associations for purposes covered by the act, including the purchasing of machinery.

I thought we were entitled to be told why farm co-operative associations had not made greater use of the facilities of that act before legislation of this kind was introduced. These were questions which I think were reasonable and moderate, which might well have been answered, and which I hope the minister may yet answer before the conclusion of this debate.

With regard to the amendment before the house, I do not think I could vote for it as it now reads; but that does not mean that the subject matter of this bill should not be referred to the agriculture committee. The minister said that this legislation is important and is breaking new ground. It is legislation which is a completely new concept. Surely, Mr. Speaker, under those conditions it would be but right and proper that this bill be referred to the agriculture committee, where it would receive not too lengthy a period of debate but representatives of farm organizations, who after all are the ones who have the greatest interest in the bill, not us, would have the opportunity of appearing and making representations and suggestions. It is for that reason I am convinced that the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) moved this amendment, because he thought that this bill would then have been likely finalized once it received second reading. I know the bill can be amended in committee, but once the house, and particularly the government, has given approval in principle on second reading of a bill there is a tendency for the matter to be crystallized and there is an unwillingness on the part of the government to accept any amendments. I think that is probably applicable to any government, and it is quite usual; but I hope to see in the future the subject matters of many more bills referred to committee for consideration before rather than after second reading.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, before I sit down I propose to move an amendment to the existing amendment which I submit would have the effect of permitting both these desirable results to be achieved. I am going to propose, first, that the subject matter of the bill go to committee, there to be considered and to receive representations from farm organizations, at the same time the bill not being given approval in principle in this house on second reading.

Before I go on to what I consider a very serious objection to this legislation as it now stands, I want to pay some attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), who in his usual inimitable style saw fit to criticize the previous government by indicating that several legislative proposals dealing with agriculture which we had introduced when we were in office had not been referred to a committee. May I point out to him and, through you, Mr. Speaker, to all hon. members that the value of that legislation has been well illustrated by the fact that the present government have taken these pieces of legislation which we dealt with, have accepted them and have made some minor improvements, indicating their wholesale approval of the agricultural legislation which the previous government enacted. I say that because I think this bill presently under discussion has some limited usefulness.

In the part of the country in which I live there are hundreds of thousands of acres of arable land waiting to be put under cultivation and this bill might well have some usefulness to new settlers for the purchase of the expensive machinery required to clear the brush and cultivate this vast area. Each hon. member is properly entitled to express his point of view, and perhaps does so through the eyes of his own constituents. Legislation which may be of value to one area of this country may not necessarily be of equal value to another. Merely because the hon. members for Acadia (Mr. Horner) and Athabasca (Mr. Bigg), as well as others, have quite legitimately and honestly seen fit to criticize the bill, or at least parts of it, as being not applicable to their areas, does not mean a wholesale rejection of the bill. I think that fact was made quite clear by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) (Mr. Danforth), who led off this debate on behalf of the official opposition.

While this act may not be too favourable, and I am quite sure it cannot be regarded as producing a very bright jewel, an emblem of which will be fixed to the diadem of agricultural legislation which the minister wears rather uneasily around his head, it might have some useful application in certain areas of the country. After this legislation has been exposed, analysed and been made the subject of constructive criticism in a committee I hope it will pass in an amended form.

I should now like to direct the attention of this house to what I feel is the most objectionable aspect of this bill. I am not in a position to move an amendment at this time, but I will give notice now to the minister that in due course, when this piece of legislation has reached the committee stage, having passed a parliamentary committee, I intend to move certain amendments in respect of clause 9, about which I have certain reservations.

Clause 9 of the bill purports to give regulatory powers to the governor in council and in that connection I should like to read certain remarks made in a speech delivered by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I am sure he realizes that on second reading one cannot discuss the individual clauses of the bill. Perhaps he will keep this in mind in the course of his remarks.

Mr. Baldwin: I have completed my discussion of the particular clause which I feel is objectionable, and am now proceeding to a discussion of it in a general sense, Mr. Speaker, in the same way the parliamentary secretary did when he spoke on September 21.

I should first like to make this observation. In the sense that this purports to create a new concept of agricultural legislation there are three basic facts. The first relates to a definition of what shall be farm machinery. The second relates to a definition of what shall be a co-operative association entitled to take advantage of the legislation. The third relates to the circumstances under which an association shall be entitled to take advantage of the legislation, and includes regulations restricting the association in its incorporation and dealings with the government through the Farm Credit Corporation. Those are the three salient features of the legislation. They are the pith and substance of the whole matter. This is the heart of the whole issue.

In respect of each of these three facts I have outlined the government has seen fit to permit the governor in council to deal with these matters rather than this house, which has that legislative capacity, and is thereby legislating by regulation. I find that situation repugnant and objectionable. All too often members have been inclined to sit idly by through progressive erosion of their functions, allowing them to be usurped by the executive. This is another example of that situation. Surely it is for us as members of this House of Commons, elected by the people of this country, to decide what shall be farm machinery, what shall be the circumstances and terms of these agreements, and how shall written arrangements be made under which syndicates are formed. Surely it is for us as members of this House of Commons to say what shall be an association under the terms of this act. We will be prohibited from doing so if the legislation in its present form is passed. In confirmation of that statement I refer all hon. members, through you, Mr. Speaker, to what the parliamentary secretary said as reported in Hansard at page 8280. That hon. gentleman said this:

> There will be authority in the bill to define farm machinery by regulation. We thought it best to do it in this way because we are entering into a completely new venture in which we will have to profit by experience—

The Minister of Agriculture repeated that fact today. I submit that if we permit power of this kind to pass from the hands of this legislating body to the hands of an executive body we may well be guilty of some of those deficits which have been ascribed to us and our functions in recent months. This situation goes to the very root of our duties as legislators. In this legislation, I submit it is for us to decide these important factors, rather than the executive.

The parliamentary secretary on September 21 then stated:

> The intention however would be to define farm machinery very broadly, so that the bill might apply to any item of machinery which a farmer might use in the development or operation of his farm, and leave it to the groups as they are organized to decide the items which they feel could profitably be owned and used jointly.

Therefore the circumstances in respect of the establishment of these syndicates will be circumstances in a form satisfactory to the executive, but not necessarily to this house.

The parliamentary secretary then said:

> Further, in the setting up of the syndicate there will be predetermined arrangements designed to settle in advance some of the problems which may later arise. There will first be some general provisions applicable to all syndicates, including such items as provisions for adding members, for reduction in membership, for the procedure in the event of death or insolvency of a member, and for the voluntary dissolution of the syndicate. There will also be provisions for such items as the appointment of a secretary, the maintenance of proper books of account, and so on.

The hon. member who seconded the motion which is now before the house made a very valuable contribution when he pointed out that this bill ventures directly into the realm of provincial jurisdiction. The provinces have legislation which defines co-operative associations, and sets out how they shall function and what their governing by-laws shall be. This legislation represents, if not a legal usurpation of the rights of the provinces, certainly a factual invasion of their proper prerogatives. That fact was properly pointed out by the hon. member, and I lend my support.

The parliamentary secretary then went on to state:

> Farmers forming syndicates will also be required to make arrangements in advance concerning their individual shares and responsibilities with respect to payment of capital maintenance and operating costs, and the responsibilities for operation, repair, maintenance and storage of the machines. They will need to agree concerning the priority of the right to use the machine in the event that two members wish to use it at the same time.

Those are the things which are to be determined by the executive, as this bill is presently worded. I submit with all the strength I can, Mr. Speaker, that these are matters which should be inserted and detailed in the legislation, which should then be brought before the agriculture committee and upon which farm groups in this country should have an opportunity of expressing their views.

Finally, before I leave the speech by the parliamentary secretary, I would point out that I think the minister was quite right in indicating that he does not expect too much from this legislation at the start. He suggests that this was based on legislation introduced in the United Kingdom. The figures which were given by the parliamentary secretary are most illuminating. Legislation of this kind was introduced, sir, in 1955 but developed slowly during the first few years. By 1962, only 293 syndicates had been formed. However, as a result of the program's successful operation it expanded more rapidly and since that time, in 1963, there were 341 syndicates and by August, 596 syndicates. After eight years of operation only 596 syndicates had been established. I suggest to the minister he should be most moderate in the claims he makes for this legislation if, in fact, it is based on the British system. This does not necessarily mean it cannot be of some value. I think we all accept the fact there must be a continual attack on all fronts of this agricultural problem. There is no one, simple, magical cure. Certainly, legislation of this kind by itself must be accepted in context as being narrow and not of too much value.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I indicated I proposed to move an amendment. I do make this final suggestion, particularly with regard to legislation of this kind, that when the government seeks to introduce and have passed legislation containing regulatory powers of this kind, the onus should rest upon them to establish beyond any reasonable doubt the necessity for, and the reasonableness of, the powers they seek. This has not been the case here. I for one could not see my way clear to vote for this bill as it now stands. I, therefore, wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh):

That the amendment be amended by adding immediately following the last word, the following: "Provided however that despite this motion the said bill shall remain on the order paper as an order for second reading, without prejudice to the right to proceed with a motion for such second reading."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate that the Chair would have some qualms about the legality of this amendment. Perhaps hon. members might like to indicate their views as to whether or not the subamendment is acceptable.

Mr. Baldwin: Before Your Honour does decide, I have some precedents to argue. However, I take it that the silence in the house indicates the value, legality and virtue of this subamendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the subamendment cannot be accepted as it stands because it contradicts the main amendment.

In fact, the subamendment would hide from the public the true consequence of the main amendment, which would remove from the consideration of the house the bill under discussion.

It is clear that an amendment to refer to a committee the subject matter of a bill is in itself a statement from the house to the effect that it is opposed to second reading and, therefore, to the principle of the bill.

In fact, the main amendment is a declaration made by the opposition—which it has presented as a motion—to the effect that the opposition does not accept the principle of the bill, does not accept the principle of a government guarantee for the financing of the purchase, joint or collective, of machinery by two or more persons. And the subamendment merely indicates, by way of an excuse, that although one is well aware that such will be the consequence, in fact one does not wish to see the bill killed as a result of that amendment.

[Text]

It is clear from the reading of citation 386 in Beauchesne's fourth edition, that once the subject matter of the bill has been referred to committee, and once the principle of the main amendment has been accepted, then there is no bill, in fact. I read from the second subparagraph of citation 386:

An amendment, urging the setting up of a select committee to consider the subject matter of a bill, might be moved and carried, if the house were adverse to giving the bill itself a second reading and so conceding its principle.

It would, therefore, I repeat be a clear declaration from this house that this house agreed with the mover of the amendment to the effect that the principle of the bill ought not to be admitted and that the house is adverse to second reading. This, I think, is just what the Minister of Agriculture has said, that under the pretext of forcing a further study of this bill, the main amendment only wants to deprive the house of the advantage of the possibility of thoroughly discussing the bill, giving it second reading, and then at the committee stage obtaining from the minister all the answers hon. members desire to elicit with respect to the application or consequences of the bill.

It is quite evident that a motion that denies that the bill must have second reading, and therefore denies the principle of the bill, is incompatible with the other principle, that the house retains the right to proceed with the motion for second reading. I therefore say that the subamendment is not consistent with or material to the amendment itself, that it is a clear contradiction, and that it is only an admission of the fact that the official opposition would like to have it both ways, to have its cake and eat it, to deprive the government from giving this important and useful legislation to the farmers and at the same time let everyone believe or think that in so doing they just wanted to serve the country. For these reasons I submit that the subamendment should not be admitted by the Chair.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, there are one or two other sentences that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) could have read from citation 386, but before I refer to them I would like to say that I have always held the opinion that this house ought to have the right to send a bill to a standing committee for consideration prior to the adoption of the principle of the bill. Unfortunately this is not the practice which has been followed, and if we are not prepared to change the practice we have to be consistent in the way we proceed.

We have also to recognize that there will be an opportunity on committee stage for specific amendments to be made to any clauses of the bill. We have to accept the fact that at this stage we are really doing nothing more or less than accepting the principle of the bill, and with that in mind we have to take into account the precedents. Further down in citation 386 subsection 3 says—and before I quote it I wish to say I do not believe the parallel and similarity between the incident cited and this one are exactly the same, but there are certain similarities. The subsection says:

> The house cannot both refuse to give the second reading and refer some provisions of the bill to a committee. It shall have to make its choice.

Therefore I believe we have to accept the fact that at this stage we are simply indicating whether or not we agree in principle with the provisions of the bill, and if we refer it to the committee we are denying giving our acceptance to the principle of the bill and so the practice of the house would be, as noted in citation 386 of Beauchesne, that we would in fact refuse giving our consent to the principle of the bill, and thus would in fact kill the bill.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise mainly to pose a question which I hope the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) will answer when he gives us the benefit of his study of this ingenious subamendment. It seems to me that the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) has stated the case very well. He has stated it well under two headings. First, he has indicated that there is a feeling on the part of many that a case could be made for having bills go to committee before we decide upon them in principle, but so long as we have standing order 77 that is impossible.

The second thing the hon. member for Medicine Hat pointed out is that under citation 386 we are told something that is awfully hard to accept in this life, namely, that there are some things we cannot have both ways. In other words, we have to decide whether we are in favour of the principle of the bill and then deal with the details in the way that is provided, or we have to take our stand as being opposed to the principle of the bill. I think that is what is behind the confusion that sometimes arises with respect to this matter. However, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) and the hon. member for Medicine Hat have developed all of this.

I merely want to ask the hon. member for Peace River if he has any precedents for the kind of subamendment he has moved, which are not based on unanimous consent. I recall that in the first session of this parliament there was a bill—maybe two of them—which had to do with the islands of the Northwest Territories that might possibly become part of Quebec, or vice versa—I forget which it was —and there was a strong desire to have that bill, or those bills, referred to a committee before the bill itself was discussed on the floor of the house.

I believe the hon. member for Peace River and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), who was then secretary of state, worked out an ingenius arrangement whereby this actually happened, whereby the bill, or bills, stayed on the order paper but the subject matter went to a committee for discussion. However, I believe that was accomplished on the basis of the unanimous consent of the house.

If the hon. member for Peace River can get unanimous consent for this tonight, the way he and the Minister of Transport got it then, we are away to the races, but if he cannot, I merely ask are there other precedents where anything of this nature was done without unanimous consent?

Mr. Baldwin: I must say that what has been said tonight, and I say this in the kindest possible way, Mr. Speaker, confirms the impression I have always had that within the four corners of the official opposition lies most of the progressive and forward thinking elements, because it is we who are prepared, when necessary, to break new ground and to try and work out what would be a sensible and reasonable arrangement.

Mr. Knowles: To break new ground? You mean break the rules.

Mr. Baldwin: However, I was deeply shocked to find I did not have the support I thought I would receive from hon. members who examine the rules. I believe this house should be master of its own destiny. First, dealing with citation 386, and particularly that part which appears in paragraph 3, it says the house cannot both refuse to give second reading—and I read that word "refuse" in an active sense. We are not, as a result of the combination of the amendment and my proposed subamendment, refusing to give second reading. It is not even implied in this.

The very terms of the subamendment do not imply refusal; rather, we say keep this bill as an order for second reading on the order paper. Surely this is the very opposite of refusal? I submit that is a plain, simple answer to paragraph 3 of citation 386.

I now want to refer Your Honour to citation 201 in Beauchesne's fourth edition, which I think should be taken into consideration. It is as follows:

> The object of an amendment may be to effect such an alteration in a question as will obtain the support of those who, without such alteration, must either vote against it or abstain from voting thereon—

I detected in the remarks of members of the parties who sit to my left a great inclination to vote for the reference of the subject matter of this measure to the agriculture committee. However, they felt that under the terms of the original amendment they were unable to do so. All I am doing in my subamendment is to make it possible for them to do so under the terms of the citation to which I have referred.

Before I go back to the interesting conversation which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and I had last November, I would refer Your Honour to the third paragraph in citation 119. This deals with the rules of debate and relevancy. Of course there might be a distinction made, but I think these are important words which should be in the mind of the Chair on all occasions when a decision has to be made.

> Relevancy is not easy to define. A wrong comprehension of it may have a serious effect on the freedom of speech. Members are often deprived of their right to speak on the pretext that their remarks are irrelevant when as a matter of fact they refer to matters perhaps remote but yet related, even indirectly, to the question under debate. In borderline cases the member should be given the benefit of the doubt.

I think these words can easily be applied to amendments as well. A paraphrase of this citation could be applicable. I submit that since it is the wish of all members of the house that this bill should not be killed and since it is equally the wish of what I think is the majority that it should be referred to a committee, it is my contention that this desirable result could be obtained by giving effect to the amendment as proposed.

Finally, in the Journals of the house for 1963 on page 559, appears the resolution which I worked out at the suggestion of the Minister of Transport and which he accepted as being in order. It does use the words "by unanimous consent".

> By unanimous consent, on the motion of Mr. Pickersgill seconded by Mr. Laing, it was ordered—That the subjects dealt with in bills C-83 and C-84—

Hon. members will notice that it is done here with respect to two bills. Now we are only asking that it be done in respect of one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin:

> —be referred to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters for consideration; provided however, that despite this motion the said bills shall remain on the order paper as orders for second reading without prejudice to the right to make or proceed with motions for such second reading.

The Minister of Transport and I are suspender and safety pin men. The words "by unanimous consent" were only put in there to give that extra degree of safety, to remove whatever doubt there might be. It is not to be presupposed that without them the motion would be out of order. The house accepted the principle that it was possible and that it was, in certain cases, desirable for the subject matter of certain bills to be referred to committees while retaining their place on the order paper. It is my submission, based on these various authorities and on the general principle that wherever possible Your Honour should hold to be relevant amendments which are proposed, that this subamendment is in fact in order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no further submissions to be heard at this time for the guidance of the Chair I am prepared to give my opinion as to the legality of the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

I am sure hon. members will recognize that the hon. member for Peace River has presented a strong argument for a case which is perhaps a little difficult. He himself recognized that he is breaking ground and this was perhaps an unwilling recognition that there is a difficulty facing the Chair. He drew attention to citations 201 and 119 (3) of Beauchesne which lay down the general principles by which we should be guided. Certainly the Chair is prepared at all times to take these general principles into consideration. But there are precedents, rules and standing orders which must also be kept in mind when dealing with specific cases. In this particular case, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has mentioned, there is standing order 77 to be taken into account. There is also, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) has mentioned—and this argument was further advanced by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson)—citation 386(2). I might be allowed to follow the lead of the Minister of Justice and quote in French from the French edition of Beauchesne:

I quote from Beauchesne, citation 386:

An amendment, urging the setting up of a select committee to consider the subject matter of a bill, might be moved and carried, if the house were adverse to giving the bill itself a second reading and so conceding its principle.

And the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) pushed the argument further by quoting subsection (3) of citation 386:

—the house cannot both refuse to give the second reading and refer some provisions of the bill to a committee. It shall have to make its choice. The amendment was ruled out.

[Text]

In other words, the difficulty we face is that there seems to be inconsistency between the amendment and the amendment to the amendment. This subamendment proposes at one and the same time to take the question out of the house and to keep it here. So we can visualize a situation where the house will proceed with second reading while at the same time the bill is before the committee, still under discussion. On this point I would like to quote Beauchesne, citation 203, which states:

(1) Every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed. Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the house the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

It seems to me this is the difficulty the house would face if the subamendment were to be accepted along with the amendment.

The hon. member for Peace River when challenged by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to submit a precedent, referred to the Journals of 1963 at page 559. The relevant extract, as he himself recognized, begins with the words "by unanimous consent". It is true the house did set a precedent of some sort in agreeing to do exactly what is now proposed by the hon. member, but of course it did so only by unanimous consent, and I have a suspicion that if on that occasion the house decided it was necessary to obtain unanimous consent before proceeding on that basis it was because it was felt that the rules precluded proceeding otherwise.

I feel that the procedure proposed by the hon. member for Peace River is definitely inconsistent with the procedures of the house. In view of the learned arguments advanced by several hon. members in opposition to the legality of the subamendment I must declare it out of order.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Baldwin: With the greatest deference to your judgment and in the hope that the house may seize this opportunity to remove the words "by unanimous consent" and break new ground, I must appeal Your Honour's decision.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those in favour of sustaining the Speaker's ruling will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is an appeal to the house from a ruling of the Chair.

To the motion for the second reading of Bill No. C-121, an act to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) proposed as an amendment the following:

"That this Bill No. C-121 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on agriculture for further study and report".

In amendment thereto the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) proposed the following:

"That the amendment be amended by adding immediately following the last words the following: 'provided however that despite this motion the said bill shall remain on the order paper as an order for second reading without prejudice to the right to proceed with the motion for second reading' ".

The Chair ruled the subamendment out of order as being inconsistent with the amendment; that the amendment proposed to refer the subject matter of the bill to a standing committee, whereas the subamendment purported to allow the house to proceed with the second reading of the said bill and subsequent stages. Whereupon the hon. member for Peace River appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the decision sustained.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the Associate Minister of National Defence. Had I voted, I would unfortunately have voted against your decision.

[Text]

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Middlesex East (Mr. Millar). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Otherwise I would have voted in favour of upholding your ruling.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I was paired. If I had voted I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house prepared to vote on the amendment to the main motion?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to speak on the amendment.

An hon. Member: It is ten o'clock.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to see that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Greenwood. Is the hon. member rising to declare a pair?

Mr. Brewin: No, Mr. Speaker, I was rising to speak on the amendment and motion now before the house, although I was going to bring your attention to the fact that it is now ten o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair was under the impression that the hon. member for Greenwood was rising on a different question. The Chair is now prepared to recognize the hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to note that the government voted against referring the subject matter of this bill to the standing committee for study. They suggest that this is new or experimental legislation, but by their actions they have indicated they do not wish to expose the provisions of this bill to close scrutiny by that committee. This bill could have been referred to that committee by unanimous vote in favour of the subamendment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May we have order in the house. The hon. member for Acadia has the floor.

An hon. Member: It is ten o'clock.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I can only assume those hon. gentlemen did not like what I was saying and attempted to drown out my remarks.

It is evident from the manner in which they rejected the subamendment that they do not want this proposed legislation subjected to close scrutiny by the standing committee on agriculture and colonization, in spite of the fact that, to use the minister's words, it is experimental legislation. That fact does not speak well for this legislation.

May I call it ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader to outline the business for the rest of this week?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, we will carry on tomorrow with the business as announced, in an attempt to obtain second reading of this farm machinery bill. It will then go to the committee stage, following which we will deal with legislation relating to the Crop Insurance Act. On completion of that we will deal with a bill relating to amendments to certain acts administered by the department of insurance. On Wednesday, in order to give members of this house an opportunity to express their views in respect of amendments to the constitution of Canada being made in Canada, I intend to have the estimates of the Department of Justice placed before the house, but only for that purpose. We will use whatever time available on Wednesday for that purpose. The estimates to follow are those of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Postmaster General, who is responsible as the minister in charge, for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation regulations. A consideration of those estimates will be followed by a consideration of the balance of the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and the estimates of other departments to be announced tomorrow.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, September 29, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

RECONCILIATION OF STATISTICS WITH STATEMENT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him how he reconciles the rosy picture of the economy which he gave a week ago yesterday with the latest figures issued by the bureau of statistics. These show that the total output of the Canadian economy for the second quarter of this year practically stood still; that capital formation was 7½ per cent less than in the first quarter; new residential construction, spending on new machinery and equipment have gone down; prices have gone up one half of one per cent, with an increase of 2 per cent on retail construction and more than 2 per cent on machinery. In this connection I might also refer to the balance of payments, which in the first six months shows that the deficit has increased over the same period last year by 14 per cent. Would the minister, with the usual alacrity that he displays, explain how he reconciles his picture with the actual facts?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it would give me great pleasure to reconcile the statements and explain them to my right hon. friend. Understandably, I have seen the release by the dominion bureau of statistics to which my right hon. friend refers. I think I explained a week ago Monday—I am sorry I did not make it clearer—that the tremendous growth in output in the first quarter, while it would be maintained in the second quarter would probably not show much of an increase over the phenomenal figures of the first quarter.

But perhaps the easiest way of clearing this up—and I am sure there has been some misunderstanding in the mind of my right hon. friend—is to point out that the gross national product in the first quarter of 1964 at market prices was 8.1 per cent higher than in the corresponding quarter a year earlier.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: The gross national product at market prices in the second quarter of 1964 was 8.2 per cent higher than in the corresponding quarter a year earlier. It is quite true that in the second quarter the increase over the first quarter of 1964—dealing with 1964 only—was only slightly higher than in the first quarter; and that is understandable because, as all hon. members know, no one expected the phenomenal growth of the first quarter to be exceeded substantially in the second quarter. This was predicted and expected. If we are dealing with one quarter of one year as compared with one quarter of another, it is safe to say that the rate of growth in 1964 has been maintained through the second quarter.

On the point about the balance of payments, current account, I think my right hon. friend quoted the figures for the first six months. If he would refer to the quarterly figures he would see that there was an improvement in the second quarter as compared with the first quarter, in fact quite a marked improvement. Therefore I think I am in a position to reassure my right hon. friend that the economy is doing fine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the decibels of applause from the government side of the house of course do not give an answer to the question. Would the hon. gentleman say why new residential construction dropped 25 per cent in the second quarter, why housing starts were down 26 per cent and completions were down 31 per cent?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, we all know that it was the policy of this government to try to shift some of the employment opportunities in housing from the summer months to the winter months, and this has been remarkably successful. The success of this policy is reflected in the very great improvement in the employment statistics during the winter of last year. If you shift business and housing activities from one quarter to another as was done, then understandably in the second quarter there must be some reduction.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: Understandably the government has to shift, too.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance concerning the remarks he has just made. Would he consider withholding the extra 3 per cent sales tax or removing it altogether so the $500 winter bonus would have some effect?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have answered that question on several other occasions.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

If national productivity is increasing, can the minister tell us whether the purchasing power of Canadians is increasing at the same time? Is there some balance between production and consumption in Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do think this question should be, shall we say, reworded.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DELAY IN ARRIVAL OF RUSSIAN PROFESSOR AT UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has a delay been caused in the departure for Canada of Professor Nicolaev of Moscow state university to take up his post as visiting economics professor at the Regina campus of the University of Saskatchewan, and have inquiries on this matter been made to the minister by Saskatchewan university officials?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the principal of the University of Saskatchewan was in touch with me yesterday. The professor in question will arrive in Regina on October 3. There has been no delay; there has simply been a requirement that the necessary formalities be complied with.

CYPRUS—FREEDOM OF MOVEMENT OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question concerning Cyprus to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of the minister's answer to me last Thursday that he was content that the problem of freedom of movement of United Nations troops on Cyprus had been settled, and in the light of his answer yesterday to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that the UN force is not being hobbled, I should like to ask him whether he still feels this way in view of the reports that the Turkish Cypriots continue to refuse to turn over the strategic Kyrenia-Nicosia road to the United Nations who, by agreement, are supposed to exercise exclusive control over the entire 18 miles?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when my hon. friend asked me that question last week the reply was one which I think fitted the situation. He is now referring to an incident. There will be other incidents. The fact that these arise does not alter the fact that the reply I gave yesterday and the reply I gave a week ago were, in the circumstances, the kind of replies that the circumstances warranted.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a supplementary question. I take it from the reply of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that his answers vary from day to day according to circumstances.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my replies vary depending upon the circumstances to which they apply and not on the sometimes insecure foundation of the questions put.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, is the secretary of state then suggesting there has been no interference with the UN force by the Turkish Cypriots?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is really too intelligent to persist in that question.

FINANCE

POLICY RESPECTING PREPARATION OF DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard: It is obvious that some of the members have been absent for some time.

Mr. Winkler: Not for three months.

Mr. Howard: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether it is the policy of his department or his government, in the compilation of estimates, to prepare them on a five year basis rather than one year, as has been the case hitherto?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be permitted to compliment my hon. friend on his floral decoration, which looks very nice. In answer to his question may I say that it is still the practice to prepare the estimates on a one year basis for presentation to the house, although I think it is helpful in the preparation of those estimates—and perhaps one day this will be the case in their presentation too—to take a longer look and a longer sweep.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question. As I remarked earlier, roses grow despite the fact that the Liberals are in office. I wonder whether the minister could explain how it is that his colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is able to write to the united fishermen and allied workers union in British Columbia in regard to that department's expenditures and tell them that "the departmental expenditures will be maintained at the same level at least during the next five years"?

Mr. Gordon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that is a perfectly reasonable prognostication for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to make. I have not seen the whole letter, but on the basis of that extract I would certainly support the statement.

Mr. Howard: It is not a prognostication, Mr. Speaker; it is a definite commitment.

REPORTED U.S. PRESSURE TO REVALUE CANADIAN DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance?

Following a report from the United States to the effect that the U.S. government was bringing or would bring pressure to bear on the Canadian government to have the Canadian dollar value set at par, does this government intend to do so, since everything seems to go very well, as was mentioned by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon)?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there has been no pressure of any kind, and there is no intention on the part of the government to change the value of the Canadian dollar.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND—PROPOSALS BY FRENCH MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance?

At the last meeting of the international monetary fund held in Tokyo, did the minister support the proposals of Mr. Valery Giscard d'Estaing, the French minister of finance, to improve the international payments system through abolition of the gold standard?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, Canada supported an expansionary move on the part of the international monetary fund. To the extent that the proposals of the distinguished finance minister of France included some novel ideas we were sympathetic to them; but on balance we felt that his proposals would be restrictive rather than expansionary.

[Later:]

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance following on his answer to the hon. member for Chicoutimi a few moments ago. I am interested in his statement that in the view of the Canadian delegation the proposals of the government of France would be restrictive rather than expansionary, because of the fact that many distinguished economists have been advocating similar proposals for some time to relieve the liquidity situation in connection with foreign exchange. I gather the French proposals were somewhat along the lines of those proposed by Dr. Triffin, and I wonder whether the minister could explain how the conclusion was reached that they would be restrictive rather than expansionary?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I could give a short, sharp answer to a question of this kind, but I would be glad to do so at the first available opportunity.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE USE OF FORMER R.C.A.F. BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. This morning the Prime Minister and some of his colleagues met with the mayor, aldermen and park commissioners of the city of Vancouver to discuss proposals for the redevelopment of downtown Vancouver and the disposition of the R.C.A.F. air base at Kitsilano. I am wondering whether the Prime Minister is able to report what progress was made and whether any decision was arrived at.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the discussions were very friendly and very helpful, and they are continuing this afternoon.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Has there been any decision on the part of the government not to give part of the Kitsilano air base to the C.B.C.? The Prime Minister will recall that the head of the C.B.C. when he was in Vancouver in June said "We are going to get this", and I am now wondering whether there has been any change in that situation.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the right hon. gentleman would not expect me to answer that question while the discussions are taking place.

EXTENSION OF FM BROADCASTING TO QUEBEC CITY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

In view of the fact that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has just announced its frequency modulation programs for the fall, could the minister inform us as to whether the corporation intends to extend these programs to the city of Quebec?

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the programs announced recently only concern the cities of Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and Ottawa.

I shall ask the C.B.C. about its intentions regarding the city of Quebec.

HOUSING

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE EVICTIONS FROM VETERANS HOUSING PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I should like to ask a question of the Postmaster General. Being responsible for C.M.-H.C., is the minister aware that certain of the members of the Fraserview veterans tenants and home owners association have today received letters from the local office of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation advising that tenants may remain if they send in a signed acceptance of the increased rents and pay the current rent to October 1; and can the minister say whether those who do not do so will be forcibly evicted?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a question for the order paper.

An hon. Member: That is effective October 1.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That is not a matter for the order paper. In spite of the fact that the Minister of Labour thought September had 31 days, today is the second last day of this month and this is a matter of great urgency to these people. There is only 24 hours in which they can possibly have an answer. I submit the government has played around with this question long enough and that these people have the right to know now what the answer is.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the government has not played around with this matter for a long time. The government has made a decision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is it?

Mr. Nicholson: The time limit does not expire until midnight tomorrow night, and already out of a total of 600 over 500 of the tenants have acquiesced in this decision. There is still time for some of the others to reach a conclusion, and no decision can very well be taken, as the right hon. gentleman should know, until that time expires.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if the government has been finally activated into getting together with these people I am very happy to hear it.

Mr. Nicholson: That is more than the previous government did.

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider delaying any drastic action until these people have had a chance for a public hearing?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, that question was answered on or about July 15 and again in the month of August.

AVAILABILITY OF APPLICATION FORMS FOR WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. When will the application forms for the bonus on winter built houses be available?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): September 31.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I will advise my hon. friend.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the reply of the minister, and I think this is a most urgent question. I have a supplementary question if I can get an answer to the original.

Mr. Churchill: What is your answer?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I answered my hon. friend, and I am sure he did not hear me because of the noise in the chamber.

Mr. MacInnis: Having acknowledged the fact that I did not hear the minister, would he now please make himself heard and not be arrogant?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be glad to make inquiries and advise my hon. friend as to the date when these application forms will be available.

Mr. Churchill: Check your calendar carefully.

Mr. MacInnis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the minister whether he would consider the fact that many prospective home builders now wish to put in basements before the frost sets in, and will this disqualify them from the bonus if they proceed with the building of the house during the specified time?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what potential disqualification my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. MacInnis: To clear it up for the minister, the potential disqualification is the fact that prospective builders who wish to put in basements before the frost sets in do not wish to disqualify themselves by so doing before the specified time of the bonus that is applicable. Is that clear enough?

Mr. MacEachen: I thought the question had to do with application forms; however, it has to do with the conditions of the program. These conditions are clearly set out. I do not think the case indicated by my hon. friend would constitute any disqualification.

LABOUR RELATIONS

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF PROSPECTIVE STRIKE OF U.S. LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the strike deadline set for tomorrow midnight by the United States longshoremen's international union and the distinct possibility that Canadian longshoremen in eastern ports may walk out in sympathy with this strike, can the Minister of Labour assure us this is only a possibility? If not, what action is the government prepared to take to avert this situation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make a comment on a situation that is still hypothetical.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION TO PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the responsible minister may I direct my question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether any agency of the federal government is negotiating with any agencies of the provincial governments with respect to the transfer of jurisdiction over the Indian people of Canada from the federal government to the provincial governments.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question has come up several times and has been answered. I suggest that my hon. friend put it on the order paper and he will get a written answer, or perhaps he could bring it up at ten o'clock this evening.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct this question to the Prime Minister. Are representatives of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration meeting at the present time with various provincial representatives in order to secure from the provincial representatives acceptance of responsibility over Indians? Right at this very moment are meetings taking place?

Mr. Pearson: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but if my right hon. friend had given me notice of this question perhaps I would have been able to get the most up to date information.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, possibly if the minister were in his place, where he should be, we would have an answer in the house.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if in fact the conference to which my hon. friend refers is taking place, perhaps the minister is at it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is some of his juniors.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, again respecting this matter of the Indians I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Have the Indians, their bands or tribes, been consulted by the government as to whether they would be prepared to be transferred from federal to provincial jurisdiction? Second, will the Prime Minister give the house the assurance that in whatever discussions are going on at the moment, of which he has said he has no knowledge, nothing will be done to deal with the transfer of Indians from federal authority without the consent of the Indians themselves; because I am sure he will agree that any other course would be to place them in the position of being chattels.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the latter part of the right hon. gentleman's observation. So far as the first part is concerned, I shall give a detailed answer tomorrow.

AIR CANADA

TRANSSHIPMENT OF CARGO FOR JAPAN TO FOREIGN CARRIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport. Can he advise the house whether it is the policy of Air Canada to transship air cargo to Japan by a foreign carrier rather than using the service of a Canadian air line that maintains a regular service to that country and has all the necessary facilities and aircraft based in Vancouver?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take the allegations in the hon. member's question as notice and try to get some information on the subject.

TRANSPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a question of the Acting Minister of Transport, who promised to look into the matter immediately and inform me whether the government would invite representatives of the provincial governments interested in the railway legislation to attend the meeting arranged for Thursday.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked me a question, as appears on page 8483 of Hansard, concerning the arrangement that had been made for members of the House of Commons to meet informally in private session to hear an explanation of the railway bill from officials of the Department of Transport, and to get background information on the subject. The hon. member asked that representatives of the provincial governments be invited to attend and I undertook to give the matter consideration.

The answer is that because of the nature of the meeting arranged for tomorrow it would be quite inappropriate to invite representatives of the provincial governments, particularly in view of the fact that most of the provinces most directly concerned with this legislation participated actively in the discussions after the MacPherson royal commission report was tabled and while the legislation was being drafted, and are already experts on the background information with regard to this complex bill.

Mr. Hamilton: As a supplementary question, is the minister aware of the fact that these provinces are of the opinion that they have received a pledge from the federal government that they will be considered, at a time when they can make some recommendations to change legislation before decisions are finally reached? It was on this point that I was directing my question yesterday.

Mr. McIlraith: I am thoroughly familiar with the understandings with the various provincial governments. I do not accept that they are in precisely the same form as the hon. member puts them forward, but the assurance was given the provinces that they would have an opportunity to present their points of view at the committee stage of the bill.

POWER

ONTARIO—LOCATION OF PROPOSED NUCLEAR PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry and ask him whether Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has yet reached a decision on the exact location in southern Ontario of the proposed new nuclear power plant.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is aware that primary responsibility for selecting the site rests not with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited but with the Ontario hydroelectric power commission. Further, the selection by the Ontario hydroelectric power commission is subject to approval by the atomic energy board of Canada, and to my knowledge the formal submission to the atomic energy control board has not yet been made by the Ontario hydroelectric power commission.

CANADIAN FLAG

INQUIRY AS TO CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Can the minister inform the house whether the government is ready to recognize the right of the provinces to be consulted on the flag issue, by placing the matter before the provincial attorneys general for their opinion?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is very important, but it does seem to me it is one for the order paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF NORTHERN ALLOWANCE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. Is he in a position to answer the question directed by the hon. member for Churchill to the Minister of Finance on September 25, which asked if the President of the Privy Council would consider postponing the implementation of drastic cuts in northern allowances to federal employees working in northern parts of Canada?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, an order was issued a few weeks ago graduating the impact of the change in the rate of allowances. The further point raised by the hon. member for Churchill had to do with time differences in implementing certain changes by various departments. The practice is that the treasury board makes an order which fixes the maximum allowance that may be granted, and the application of that order is left to the different departments, so it is possible for a difference to arise between departments as to applicability at any given time.

Mr. Rhéaume: As a supplementary question, would the President of the Privy Council give consideration to hearing representations on this important matter from the staff associations representing federal government employees in various parts of the north?

Mr. McIlraith: I do not know whether there would be any useful purpose served by that. They have already made their representations in the ordinary way, but if further representations are to be made, I will certainly be glad to have them.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC MINISTER RESPECTING REPATRIATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Justice a question.

Did the minister, or any minister of the crown, meet over the week end the Quebec minister of education, Hon. Paul Gérin-Lajoie, to discuss the repatriation of the Canadian constitution?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I did meet Hon. Paul Gérin-Lajoie, not over the week end but yesterday. We had several matters to discuss and of course I took that opportunity to bring up the question of amending the constitution.

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Would the Minister of Justice tell us if he intends to discuss tomorrow amendments to the constitution, even if Mr. Lesage stated, as headlined in this morning's Le Devoir:

Too early to discuss changes in the constitution.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the business of the house, as announced yesterday, remains unchanged.

Probably my hon. friend and myself do not give the same interpretation to newspaper headlines, because I understood, although I have not yet read Mr. Lesage's speech, that in his opinion the time was not ripe to make substantial changes to the very text or to the spirit of the constitution. In my opinion, he never said that the time was not ripe to repatriate the constitution.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Will the minister assure the house that the federal and provincial rights of all Canadians will be preserved in regard to equality and the propagation of true co-operative federalism fostered, at the forthcoming meeting of the provincial attorneys general?

SOCIAL INSURANCE

DISTRIBUTION OF BUSINESS CARDS BY TORONTO INSURANCE COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour a question arising out of a business reply card distributed by a life and casualty insurance company based in Toronto. The message on the card is:

Important—If you have received your social insurance number you can qualify for the federal social security plan—Pays for food—Pays for clothing—Pays for shelter—Even a guaranteed income to your family after death.

While the card has a certain amount of humour about it, it could create a good deal of confusion, particularly because of the reference to the social insurance number. Could the minister investigate this and see whether there has been any liaison or whether there is some relation between this and the Liberal social security plan we have all heard about since 1919?

Mr. Speaker: Surely the hon. member would take particular delight in putting this question on the order paper.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

MONTREAL—REPORTED REFUSAL OF MEDICAL TREATMENT TO R.M.C. CADETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria, B.C.): I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister had an opportunity to continue his investigation into the incident I described to him yesterday in my question about the injured cadets of the Royal Military College who were refused admission last Saturday to the Queen Mary veterans hospital in Montreal? If so, does he wish to make any amending statement to the house?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I cannot at this stage accept the suggestion that treatment was refused. I am given to understand that a full report will be brought in from the Queen Mary hospital this afternoon, and perhaps I shall be in a better position to reply fully tomorrow.

In answering a question yesterday from the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) respecting this situation I attempted to give the house the little information which had come to hand, while indicating that it was sketchy and incomplete. I am now informed that implications were read into my remarks, and I wish to correct them now. There was no suggestion in my observations that there had been any misbehaviour on the part of these cadets, and if anyone read this into my remarks, I apologize. Any such suggestion is totally unwarranted, and there is no evidence whatever that any misbehaviour had taken place.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO GENERAL AMNESTY TO COMMEMORATE ROYAL VISIT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Could he tell the house whether it is the intention of the government to grant, as it was done on the occasion of the last visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, a one month amnesty for each year of sentence to all prisoners in federal and provincial jails in Canada?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in that regard I must say that one of my predecessors in the Department of Justice, Hon. Davie Fulton, on the occascasion of the last royal visit, when the provisions of the Parole Act were just being implemented, announced in a statement made on behalf of the government of that time, that it was the last amnesty to be granted on the occasion of a royal visit.

I looked into the matter, as the government also did, and I must say that for the reasons then mentioned by Hon. Davie Fulton, it is also the opinion of this government that in view of the implementation of the Parole Act these last six years, it would not be proper that an amnesty be granted this year on the occasion of the royal visit, and that is the recommendation that will be made.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a supplementary question.

Could he tell us on what date such a decision was made?

Mr. Favreau: It was in 1959 and I believe the press release was issued two weeks prior to the royal visit.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister of Justice, but my question concerned this government's decision not to grant an amnesty.

Mr. Favreau: I do not know the exact date, Mr. Speaker, but it was made during a cabinet meeting held some time last week.

[Text]

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF PAROLE ACT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Paul (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, I would have a supplementary question to put to the Minister of Justice.

At his meeting last week on St. Helen's island, with the solicitor general of the province of Quebec, was the amending of the Parole Act discussed?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This surely is a question for the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DORCHESTER PENITENTIARY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STABBING OF GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice if he is in a position to reply to my question of last Friday concerning a report on the fatal stabbing of a guard at the penitentiary at Dorchester?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am now in a position to inform the house that yesterday Mr. D. M. McLean, regional director of penitentiaries for the Ontario region, was appointed as a commissioner of inquiry and is proceeding to Dorchester penitentiary to inquire into, and report upon, the circumstances of the alleged murder of Edwin James Masterton, a guard at Dorchester penitentiary. I think Mr. McLean's report will be in our hands within the next ten days. The young inmate named Colpitts was arraigned at court in the Dorchester county jail on Friday, September 25, charged with capital murder. He is being held in Dorchester penitentiary until such time as his case has been before the grand jury.

Mr. Coates: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister plan to take any special action to eliminate the inmate arsenals which the hon. member for Vancouver East indicated recently were a fact in federal penal institutions and can be pointed to as the prime cause of this fatal incident?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to receive the report and study it before answering that question.

SPORTS

REQUEST FOR GRANT FOR 1966 QUEBEC FESTIVAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a supplementary question concerning another matter. During his meeting with Hon. Paul Gérin-Lajoie, was there any discussion of the famous Quebec winter games problem, the solution to which is most impatiently awaited and urgent?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I think the same decision should apply to the hon. member for Lotbinière. Order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

REMISSION OF FINES AGAINST PORTUGUESE FLEET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): On Friday last, as appears on page 8429 of Hansard, the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria directed a question to the Minister of Transport concerning the deposit or fine levied against Portuguese fishing vessels after landing in harbour, and the changes in its application. By way of an answer to the question I would advise the hon. member that on Saturday, September 12, at a press conference in St. John's, the Minister of Transport announced that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration had agreed to restore the former system of requiring deposits of from $300 to $500 against the possibility of the desertion of fishermen from ships, in place of the higher deposit of $1,000. The higher deposit will continue to apply to merchant ships but the lower deposit is all that will be required of fishing vessels fishing off the coast of Canada.

This ruling will apply, of course, in all ports, not just in St. John's, as suggested in the question: but the reason for reverting to the old policy was the fear expressed in certain quarters that the higher deposit might result in the Portuguese fishing fleet moving from St. John's to St. Pierre as its main port for taking on supplies. It should be emphasized that the lower deposit with respect to fishing vessels applies in all ports, not just in St. John's, Newfoundland.

The hon. member also asked for the authority for the fine or deposit being levied. The authority is section 62 of the Immigration Act.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I thank the acting minister for his reply to the question I asked on Friday, and add that I am sure I speak for all members of the house when I say how much we regret the fact that the Minister of Transport is ill and wish him a speedy recovery and return to this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My supplementary question is this. Am I to understand from the minister's answer—I did not quite catch all of it—that no concession has been granted to the port of St. John's, Newfoundland, which will not be given, or has not been given, to the port of North Sydney or any other port in similar circumstances?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there has been no discrimination as between ports. The order applies to all ports equally.

TRANSPORTATION

LACK OF RAILWAY PASSENGER ACCOMMODATION, MONTREAL-VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): May I take this opportunity to answer a question which was asked by the hon. member for Medicine Hat on Friday last as reported in Hansard at page 8432, and again referred to yesterday, at page 8483 of Hansard, concerning the shortage of certain types of passenger accommodation on Canadian Pacific Railway trains between Montreal and Vancouver.

I have obtained the necessary information from the C.P.R. and the answer is as follows. Railway passenger equipment is used to capacity only over very short periods. Even in the heavy passenger months commencing in the latter part of June until after Labour day, there has been space available on Canadian Pacific transcontinental trains except for odd week ends this year as in past years.

However, as is normal in the heavy travel periods, some types of accommodation are often not available; for example, bedrooms or compartments. Passenger travel falls off drastically after Labour day, and accommodation is curtailed in accordance with demand. There has been sleeping car accommodation available on "The Canadian" every day over the last two weeks between many points, although special space, such as connecting bedrooms or drawing rooms, has not always been available.

The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary asked a related question concerning the difficulty experienced by railway union members as distinct from fare paying passengers in obtaining accommodation. The answer I have been given is as follows. During peak travel periods free transportation is not provided to employees on "The Canadian"; however, they can secure tickets at half the regular rate. Free transportation is provided on "The Dominion" during peak travel periods, and on "The Canadian" for sleeping car accommodation at other periods, restricted to advance reservations for upper berths only. Special arrangements are made for employees who, because of age or infirmity, require better accommodation.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

HAINES CUT-OFF—U.S. OFFER OF WINTER MAINTENANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether he has yet had a reply from the government of the state of Alaska to the counter offer of the Canadian government?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I informed the house yesterday that we had made an offer to the government of the state of Alaska in the same amount of money and on the same terms, namely one year's test for keeping the highway open this coming winter. I have a wire here, and I do not think I can do better than read the wire I have received from Governor Egan:

> Have received your telegraphic notification that your government ready participate with state of Alaska in winter maintenance of the Haines road between miles 48 and 94 on the same one year trial basis as the winter of 1963-64 providing for the payment of $127,050 in U.S. funds. As governor of Alaska this message is formal acceptance of agreement as stated in your telegram. We intend prepare for winter maintenance prior to signing written formal agreement as last year for signatures at earliest possible date.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask a related question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister whether he can state the view of the Canadian government on the statement of Premier Bennett proposing a plebiscite of the people of the Yukon for the taking over of that territory by the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This question has just dawned on me as the result of an answer given by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to an hon. member on this side of the house, which answer indicated that the government of Canada had been in direct negotiation with a state of the United States in regard to coming to an agreement.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs this question. Is not this a violation of the principles of protocol and a trespass upon his jurisdiction, when these matters should be considered between the government of Canada and the government of the United States and vice versa, and not between a government and a state or a province and a state?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows perfectly well that the relations between one country and another are normally undertaken through the foreign offices of both governments. But with regard to what has happened in this transaction, nothing has been done that necessarily ignores that situation.

Mr. Knowles: It is a precedent, though.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY PRODUCTS—CONSIDERATION OF EXPORT SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture which he may like to take as notice. In view of the reference by Mr. A. B. Williams, chief of the federal stabilization board of the Department of Agriculture, to the plight of the Canadian dairy farmer in his inability to compete profitably in abundant but low priced foreign markets, what consideration is the government giving to the fact that if Canada wants to export dairy products, subsidies will have to be paid to the producers to compensate for the lower prices that are essential for sales abroad? In general, when will the minister be announcing a new policy?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this on the order paper.

TURKEYS—REIMPOSITION OF QUOTAS ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Realizing that the minister has had recent consultations with the Canadian turkey producers in regard to their request for an embargo or curtailment of imports, would the minister say what his advice was to these people at that time?

Mr. Speaker: Is there any particular urgency in this question?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: If not, would the hon. member put it on the order paper.

Mr. Winkler: It has been a contentious question, Mr. Speaker, and I think the minister was ready to reply.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would be prepared to debate it at ten o'clock and give notice.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EQUALIZATION OF PAY FOR PREVAILING RATES EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council. Several weeks ago he promised to look into the question of the prevailing rate employees at Dana. Has he a report for the house now?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker, the information has not come back yet. The actual examination of the situation is undertaken by Department of Labour officials and then is dealt with by treasury board. A final report is not yet ready, but when it is ready I shall be very glad to give the information to the hon. gentleman.

COLD LAKE, ALTA.—CONTRACT FOR AIRPORT HEATING SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, referring to the answer I had given him last Friday, asked if the conversion of the heating units in 850 married quarters connected with R.C.A.F. station, Cold Lake, would be carried out subsequent to tender call. As I indicated in my reply of last Friday, under the arrangements made by the Department of National Defence the Cold Lake Pipeline Company Limited is responsible both for the distribution system and the conversion of furnaces at Cold Lake. This company is required to guarantee and service the conversion units and, in consequence, it is its responsibility to arrange such work to be done by competent subcontractors.

In reply to the hon. member's specific question, I am informed that tenders were called by the Cold Lake Pipeline Company for the conversion of the furnaces in the married quarters units and that the lowest tender submitted has been accepted by that company.

PROVISION OF NUCLEAR MISSILES FOR EUROPEAN BRIGADE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether newspaper reports are accurate, to the effect that nuclear missiles have been provided for the Honest John battery with the Canadian brigade in Europe; and if so, as of what date?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the battery is now operational. It is not the practice to give dates on which units become operational.

Mr. Churchill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask whether these nuclear missiles are being held in storage, or have they been placed in position on their rocket dischargers?

Mr. Hellyer: Under ordinary circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think they would be held in storage.

NEGOTIATIONS TO WITHDRAW FROM NUCLEAR DEFENCE ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister of external affairs, in view of Canada's more active participation in the nuclear club, whether he would give a report to the house on the progress of his negotiations to extricate Canada from her nuclear role, as promised by the Prime Minister?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend persists in asking this question week after week. There is only one thing to do, and that is refer him to the original reply.

IMMIGRATION

TORONTO—STATEMENT ON STATUS OF PERSONS CONCERNED WITH NEWSPAPER STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Melville asked whether any further information was available regarding the presence in Toronto of two United States strike directors. The hon. member was referring, of course, to Mr. Ameln and Mr. Hogan, about whom the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration made a previous statement in this house. During the orders of the day on Friday the minister advised the house that according to information received from the immigration office in Toronto these two gentlemen are continuing their activities in Toronto for the same purpose for which they were admitted and had not, to the minister's knowledge, taken part in any violent activity.

I can now say that in providing the minister with a report on the activities of these two men, the immigration office in Toronto checked all possible sources, including the city police in Toronto, and no charges have been brought against them. There is no evidence whatever to show that they are responsible for any acts of violence which may have taken place, or that they are in any way violating the conditions under which they were temporarily admitted to Canada. According to union officials they are still acting in an advisory capacity to the union. The fact that there has been no negotiation between the union and the publishers since about the end of last month does not in itself affect their status in Canada under the Immigration Act.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

INQUIRY AS TO COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice in his capacity as house leader. Would the minister tell me what consideration is being given to having the Canada Elections Act referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections before this session eventually ends?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this is one matter which I will take under consideration.

FARM MACHINERY

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR PURCHASES BY SYNDICATES

The house resumed, from Monday, September 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hays for the second reading of Bill No. C-121, to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Nugent.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, last evening I rose to speak to the amendment. In summarizing what I said last night let me say that we on this side were disappointed at the action of the government in not giving their unanimous consent to the subamendment. The only conclusion we can draw from this action is that the government were somewhat ashamed and afraid to let this bill go to the agriculture committee, where it could have received the close scrutiny which some of us feel it merits.

I was also surprised last evening at the action of the members of the other opposition parties, the smaller parties, who talk so long and loud about house reform, issue ten point programs and statements and so on. They are all in favour of house reform. In their arguments last night on a point of order which was raised they even said they were in wholehearted support of the principle of the subamendment.

Mr. McIlraith: Order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): But they voted against it because at that time they were not in favour of house reform. They issue ten point programs to the newspapers for publication, but when the question is put and the opportunity is given them to break new ground they are not willing to do so. Last evening clearly proved that they were not willing to do that.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that inasmuch as we are discussing the amendment we should stick to the amendment.

Mr. Olson: I should like to raise a point of order. The hon. member who now has the floor has no right to reflect upon a vote taken by the house. I also think he should clearly distinguish between breaking new ground and breaking the rules, which is what he is now doing.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Some hon. members are thin skinned. Last night the hon. member for Medicine Hat spoke on this piece of legislation and on the amendment, and what did he say at that time? As reported at page 8508 of Hansard he said:

> I think the farmers should be allowed to consider the law and test it to see what kind of problems will be created.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, he is saying that he thinks the farmers should be allowed to get into trouble, if they can, under this piece of legislation, and then come back to us within a year and we will try as legislators to bail them out. He is asking, why should we look at this bill? He says the Minister of Agriculture says it is good legislation and that it is good for the farmers; let the farmers get into trouble and then we will bail them out. I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that I am glad this party takes its responsibilities in this house more sincerely than that. We are prepared to look at the legislation and consider it.

Last night the Minister of Agriculture proclaimed that we in the opposition had asked for this legislation but that now we had it we would not pass it. He almost cried because the member for Acadia had spoken twice and had just blown a lot of hot air, or so he thought. He thought we were holding up this legislation because we wanted an election. I am convinced he thinks this legislation is so important that we might have to fight an election over it. Perhaps he was afraid that was the case.

Let us look at the facts. Our leader said "Bring in the legislation and we will proceed to pass it". That is what we are now doing. The minister should not be too concerned because we want to change the legislation slightly and improve it a great deal. He should not be alarmed because of the attitude taken by those members who feel their concern and responsibility very deeply. The minister was concerned that we should condemn this legislation on the one hand and observe that it had some beneficial aspects on the other. I suggest that is the situation in respect of an honest appraisal of any piece of legislation. Surely it is the duty of a member of parliament to point out his concern about a legislative measure. It is the duty of every hon. member to make known his fears and to point out those aspects of any measure which may be of some benefit.

As I sat and listened to the minister's remarks last evening I thought to myself that he is the Minister of Agriculture for Canada and the man to whom the farmers look for leadership. I listened to his speech in the hope that it would contain some answers to the questions which have been asked, but all it contained was a bunch of picayune political remarks about this brother and that brother, and about chinook winds blowing in southern Alberta.

The Minister of Agriculture did not rise in his place and defend this measure. This is a measure he could have brought in over a year ago, but he could not persuade his government to allow him to put it on the paper until this fall. He could not persuade his government to adjourn the flag debate and allow him to bring this measure before the house at that time. He could not persuade his government to allow us to debate this measure today and tomorrow, and perhaps pass it. No; tomorrow we must consider more estimates.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

An hon. Member: Why don't we pass it today?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Perhaps we will. Why did we not debate this measure last Wednesday rather than consider estimates? Who is holding up this measure? The government could have proposed this legislation a month ago and allowed us to debate it last Wednesday, at which time we perhaps would have passed it. I suggest this measure has been delayed as a result of the order of government business; or the lack of order, one might say.

Mr. Speaker, let us consider for a moment the leadership that is being given by the Minister of Agriculture. What do the farm publications say about his leadership? The minister referred last evening to the Family Herald, a well known and respected weekly farm paper. What does that publication say about the minister's leadership? What does the Country Guide, a monthly farm magazine, say about the minister's leadership? I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Country Guide in September, 1964. It states:

> One of the ways that the Department of Agriculture has of passing information along to farmers is through news releases directed to the farm press. A recent one surprised us. The information in it was about Hon. Harry Hays, Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Acadia is hardly addressing himself to the bill now before the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Timiskaming has indicated he wishes to speak on the same point of order.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to the remarks made by the minister last evening during his speech, which were very seldom in order in that they were not directed to the amendment or the bill, but were highly political. I suggest the hon. member for Acadia should be allowed to reply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have not heard the remarks of the hon. member for Acadia, so it is rather difficult for the Chair to decide whether or not they are out of order. I suggest he be allowed to continue at least for the time being.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the thin skin of the hon. member for York-Scarborough, who has travelled as much as he has. I should have thought by this time he would have developed a thicker skin, particularly in view of some of the places he has visited. I should like to thank the hon. member for Timiskaming for his support.

I should like to continue reading from this editorial which refers to the leadership given by the Minister of Agriculture. It states:

> This is authoritative; it is a sober, objective evaluation of a fledgling politician. It is made, and signed, by none other than the same Mr. Hays. It is part of an 8-page "news release" from Canada's Minister of Agriculture. It is at once an insult to that office and to the farmers of Canada who look to the minister for leadership.
> We quote further from the above document, so inaccurately entitled a news release. "Following his election to the House of Commons and appointment as Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Hays devoted his energy initially to mastering the intricacies of his vast department and becoming familiar with the ways of the Commons. His policy of thought before action led some of his critics initially to underestimate his capacity to handle his new career."
> Initially Mr. Hay's most frequent action was to put his foot in his mouth. Now through issuing propaganda missives so laudatory to himself, he is evidently trying to cram the other foot in too.
> A great parliamentarian once observed, "A man does not increase his stature by standing on his dignity." Neither does he increase his standing in the public eye by mistaking propaganda for information.
> The Minister of Agriculture holds his high office both by virtue of election to parliament and by appointment to cabinet. He is in a position of trust and of power. His job is an arduous one demanding of time and talent. If Mr. Hays wishes to devote his energies and those of his department to extolling his own alleged virtues, farmers will have to look elsewhere for leadership.

Mr. Speaker, that is what this well known and respected farm magazine has to say about the leadership we have received from the Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. members have expressed their fears and doubts in respect of this bill. Some of us have been concerned that any benefits to be derived from it will go to persons other than farmers. The minister has optimistically assured us that this proposed measure will be of benefit to farmers. At one time during the debate he rose in his place and said he did not want to embarrass the hon. member for Acadia, but that he thought all his questions would be answered. The minister exudes optimism. He even spoke of his own optimism in that famous Chicago farmers club speech when he said:

> To be the Minister of Agriculture, to be the mayor of a city, to be the auctioneeer of a good sale, or of a poor sale, you have to be a bit of an optimist and to show you how optimistic I am about the problems of the farmers and that sort of thing I'd like to tell you a story about an uncle of mine.

I am not going to tell you that story about his uncle.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear your decision as to whether the remarks of the hon. member for Acadia are pertinent to the amendment now before the house. In my submission they are not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would think that the point now made by the hon. member is well taken. I feel the hon. member for Acadia should restrict himself to the principle of the bill now before us. I know he perhaps feels he should reply to some of the statements made by the minister in his speech; but on the other hand—and I was in the chair last night—I feel that the minister was, generally speaking, relevant to the bill before the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore I would invite the hon. member for Acadia to respect the rules and limit his speech to the principle of the bill before the house.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, surely it is not agreeable to the house to have rules for ministers and different rules for members elsewhere in the house. I was here last night when the minister was speaking, and he made a political attack on several members on this side of the house. He made accusations against them that had no relation to the bill whatsoever. Surely it is open to us on this side to reply to those statements of the minister. We cannot have two sets of rules, one applicable to ministers and one to others.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is, of course, only one set of rules, and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre will notice that I recognized the right of the hon. member to reply to statements made by another hon. member on the other side of the house. That is why I feel the Chair has been lenient to this point in not interfering with the hon. member although to some extent, and I am sure all hon. members will agree, he was not strictly relevant to the principle of the bill before the house.

Mr. Nasserden: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A point of order was raised and—would the hon. member kindly resume his seat—it seems to me it would be conducive to the good order of the house if the hon. member for Acadia were allowed to continue his speech.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Thank you. I hope the timekeepers have duly noted the length of the interruptions. I was dealing with the manner in which we should receive the bill. The minister has an optimistic nature which we must bear in mind whenever he speaks on a particular piece of legislation. I pointed to the optimism he expressed in his Chicago speech as an example of the optimism that is characteristic of him, and we must bear this in mind in viewing this legislation and the principle of the legislation. He went on to say in his Chicago speech:

> —talk about the job at city hall being a tough one, this one is a lot worse. There are only about four agriculturalists in the whole Liberal party but they are all agriculturalists on the opposition side. So I get a good overhaul every day.

I am not going to quote further from his Chicago speech. It was a good one, but it provided very little leadership for the farmers of our country. I seem to have lost another speech by the minister to which I was going to refer, in which he dealt with the Department of Agriculture and the principles behind it. He felt he should not be called Minister of Agriculture but the food minister of Canada. He said farmers should not be called farmers, that they led a hard, lonely life and should not be known by such a poor name as "farmer". He would have them called food producers or grocery growers. That was what he thought in his Toronto speech, in which he expressed great concern about the image of the department and the minister and farmers generally.

I suppose this bill is meant to build up his image, because he has been raving about this legislation for some time. He told the farmers of the Lethbridge area early this year that they must wait for it, but that it would change the agricultural economy vastly. He was greatly concerned about it at that time. He claimed last evening that it was badly needed. He claimed that farmers needed it urgently.

When one looks at the Farm Credit Corporation report to see how much money they lent for the purchase of equipment, one finds that only 1.2 per cent of the total amount was lent for that purpose. The industrial development bank has also lent quite a sum of money to agriculture since 1960, when the agricultural industry became eligible for loans from that source. Last year they lent nearly $5 million to the industry. Many corporations applied for and received loans from the industrial development bank at 7 per cent for the operation of farm syndicates.

With regard to the need for this legislation I have before me the Country Guide for September, 1964, which contains an article entitled "What About Machinery Co-ops?". The article is written by two members of the Saskatchewan department of agriculture. They say that legislation to enable farmers to set up machinery co-operatives has been available in Saskatchewan over the past 20 years and only one a year has been formed. That shows that the urgency is not too great. I will quote further from this magazine as I proceed.

We on this side of the house must ask ourselves by whom is the legislation needed so badly, and for what purpose? We on this side have tried to find out what the minister has in mind with regard to the definition of farm machinery. Many members on this side have offered suggestions as to machines that could qualify. Last evening in his speech the minister said these would all qualify, but did he offer any suggestions of his own? Did he tell us how he envisages that the bill will apply? Not one machine did he suggest in his speech last evening. He O.K.'d some I had suggested and some that other members had suggested, but did not give us a glimpse of what he envisaged that the bill would do.

He did talk about combines, of how small farmers in Ontario could benefit from the purchase of an eight foot combine and how small farmers in Saskatchewan could benefit from a $5,000 combine. I am sure the farmers of the west, particularly since this fall has been so wet, would be very wise indeed to pay little heed to what the minister said with regard to pooling their efforts in order to purchase a bigger combine. I should like to see the minister as a member of a syndicate trying to get a combine out of a farmer's field when the farmer was half finished and the sun was shining and the crop was ready to cut. I think that farmer would be prepared to buy out the other members of the syndicate very quickly, because there is tremendous urgency for a piece of machinery like a combine when a man's labour for a whole year is bound up in that crop and the weather and the elements are against him in trying to take it off. He will go to great lengths to get his crop off in order to pay his bills and provide himself and his family with a living. I see very little help in this legislation with respect to meeting the needs of the average farmer or small farmer, or in particular the large farmer in western Canada.

The minister stated in his speech last evening that I had spoken twice on the bill already and had suggested no improvements. He stated I had been extremely critical but that he could find nothing in my remarks that could be taken as a positive suggestion with respect to lowering the high cost of machinery. I suggested at one point in my remarks that he could lower the cost of machinery by lowering the tariffs on a great many items used by farmers which are imported into Canada. Apparently he thought he should let that go by because it comes under another department, and though he is the Minister of Agriculture and supposedly the spokesman for the farmers in the cabinet, this still is not within his jurisdiction. He talked much about machinery and about the hot air which he attributed to me. I said that if this bill were in some way successful it would destroy some of the independence which the farmer treasures, and last evening the minister admitted this. He said the farmer would have to give up some of his independence.

Then the minister talked on about the family farm and made reference to an article in the Family Herald. In fact he advised us to read that article about the Knight family, but I had read the article myself. Now I have read it again, and it shows that this is a family enterprise. The minister quoted sentences from the article to show that a machinery pool was the answer to machinery costs, but he did not quote sentences from it to show that the Knights are not worried about who puts up their hay, because it is all in the family. He did not quote that part where they said they did not really mind who bought machinery because they exchanged it around and it was all in the family.

A family farm is altogether different from a syndicated farm. Members of a syndicate may have no blood relationship. They are strictly in it for the dollar, and they watch their dollars a whole lot closer.

Mr. Cashin: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No, I am sorry, I will not. The minister did not permit me one last evening as he said he had not much time. I don't think I have much time left, either.

The minister said he envisaged this bill as an answer to all machinery problems on farms today, but I have here an article written by two members of the Saskatchewan department of agriculture entitled, "What about machinery co-ops?" This article says how successful they are, but it points out quite clearly that the only machines on which farmers can co-operate are those that have no specific time use, no specific time at which farmers must use them in the cycle of their work, which is the very thing I said two weeks ago at the resolution stage.

It goes on to point out that some of the co-ops are not successful where members share the crops harvested. If you pool the harvest in a co-op, then it really does not matter whether your own crop is taken off first or your neighbour's down the road. The machinery will take off the best crop first. This article, however, does not point out the need for legislation such as this. I shall read just one sentence from it:

> One of the major drawbacks to many machine sharing arrangements is to get agreement on seeding and harvesting dates on the various members' farms.

This is one of the great bones of contention, and points out the folly of the minister's remarks about three families joining together to share machinery.

The minister also said we had offered no suggestions for improvements. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) spoke on this legislation, and he too thought it would help farmers buy their harvesting equipment. How will it? At present a small farmer can borrow $15,000 at 5 per cent interest under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. If he does that he can buy his own tractor, his own combine or his own threshing machine, which will take off his own crop, and it is reasonable to say that if the machine is used only on his own crop it will last much longer and require fewer repairs. Certainly the example which the minister gave had many holes in it.

Corporations can now borrow money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act if they are engaged solely in agriculture. Each corporation can borrow $15,000 at 5 per cent interest, and if the minister wanted to enlarge these corporations he could have done so by amending that act to allow each member of a farm corporation to borrow $15,000 from a bank, at 5 per cent interest. This would allow them to get their machinery much cheaper than under the terms of this bill.

What rate is going to be charged under this legislation? There is the cost of borrowing the money, a certain sum set aside for losses, and then a 1 per cent service charge. How often have you, Mr. Speaker, and all other hon. members condemned people for tagging on a service charge to the interest rate? Bills have been presented in this house and the other place, stipulating that the interest should be clearly stated as one item, without the disguise of a service charge. In years ahead if this service charge is not enough I suppose it will be increased to 1½ or 2 per cent. Why can't the minister say on this bill, "This is a good piece of legislation. It is an enlargement of the farm improvement loans. We want to help the farmers, not abuse them with something like a 7 per cent interest rate"? That is what the interest rate is going to be. Let the minister stand up and say if I am wrong.

Mr. Hays: Absolutely wrong.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Then how much will it be? I am prepared to sit down if the minister will answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Silence.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister says I am wrong, but when I ask him what the answer is he remains seated.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, when we get to the clause by clause examination of the bill we will be very glad to explain this. We have been waiting now for pretty near a month. The farmers have been waiting for this bill.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister again drags in this red herring about our having waited nearly a month. Why was this legislation not on the order paper a month ago? Why did he not break into the flag debate with it? His government would not allow him to bring it in. We asked for it every day—

An hon. Member: He was out auctioneering.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Maybe he was. You cannot blame him if he can make $40,000, as he did on one auction sale a year ago. It is great money. At that time he said he never collected it—he just turned it over to the Liberal party. The minister talks about our holding up this legislation. Why was it not debated last Wednesday?

Mr. Hays: Why do you not pass it today?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We may; we may.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister wants to put the blame on us for holding up this legislation, but in his speech last night he said:

> However, at this stage I believe the farmers of this country would like parliament to pass this legislation. Let us get it into operation in time to help them plan for their spring operations.

Is the minister confused, as the Minister of Labour was a few minutes ago, on what month it is? We are still in September. Spring may start as early as March in some parts of the country, but that is a little while away yet, and if we do not pass the bill today we can pass it tomorrow. This hocus pocus that the minister continually plays with does not hold him up as a leader of agricultural policy, as a leader for farmers across Canada to look up to and respect, to look to for leadership in their hours of need when they are caught in a cost-price squeeze, when they are caught in the land squeeze, as so many of them are today.

Last evening we proposed an amendment to refer the bill to the agriculture committee. There is no need to get this measure operational until next spring. We do not want to pass it until next spring. I have suggested its aim could be accomplished under the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The industrial development bank has been making loans for similar purposes for the last four years. Our party, in moving the amendment it did, was in full support of the principle but we wanted to take a further look at this proposal. We are completely in support of the principle but we would like to refer the matter to the agriculture committee. This was clearly stated by my hon. friend from Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent). I am sure the party to which I belong would be prepared, now, to withdraw that amendment if the government would give us an assurance that the legislation before us would go to the committee on agriculture. I should like to see the minister stand up now and give us that assurance. I want to see this legislation applied across Canada in the best possible form. I want it to apply to all farmers, rich and poor.

The minister has confidence in this measure. He has nothing to hide. Why does he not let it be examined, after hearing witnesses, by members of this party and of his own party? I am prepared to support the withdrawal of this amendment if the minister will make it clear that he has faith in this legislation and is convinced it will stand up to close scrutiny in the agriculture committee. That is all we are asking. I have said this bill will benefit only the large farmers. Let the minister announce that this measure will go before the agriculture committee where witnesses can be heard and these matters cleared up. What is he trying to hide? What is he trying to ram through the house by saying continually: You have held this measure up too long already. What is he afraid of? Is it the interest rates? Is it the definition of farm machinery? Is he afraid of the clause which provides for these promissory notes? Is he ashamed of that clause? Why should that clause be in the bill at all? Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act farmers have had the best record of all with regard to the repayment of loans; the loss has been less than one tenth of 1 per cent. Why does this particular provision have to be in the bill at all? Is the minister trying to muddy the good name of farmers, though most lending institutions respect that good name which farmers have built up over the years by keeping their word?

What is the justification for this provision that every farmer who enters a syndicate must become liable for the total amount of the obligation incurred? How many farmers would sign promissory notes to pay back possibly $50,000, while their own interest may be only one tenth of that sum? Let us take this measure before the agriculture committee so that we may find out what the experience of the industrial development bank has been with regard to loans to farmers. Let the farm unions come in and tell us what they think with regard to this proposal. These are organizations which have offered valuable suggestions in the past. Why is the minister trying to rush this legislation through? He has said himself that this is experimental legislation. Yet we are not supposed to say a word on it; we are supposed to pass it without question. To do so would be a poor discharge of our responsibility. The very fact that this is new and experimental legislation is good reason for referring it to the committee on agriculture for further perusal.

This whole business of corporations and partnerships could have been arranged, as I suggested earlier, under the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act which this house has lately revised. All that is offered in this measure could have been dealt with then and the whole matter could have been decided at the same time. The advantage would have been a 5 per cent interest rate on all machinery loans. The machinery would have been taken as the primary security, not a promissory note signing away a farmer's land, homestead and everything else against the total loss which might occur within a syndicate. Some hon. members have expressed the view that signing such a note would seriously impair a farmer's credit rating. What is more necessary to a farmer today than a good credit rating?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. I may say the Chair has taken into account the three minutes or so which were taken up with points of order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am sure the house would give me unanimous consent to continue.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Otto: On a question of privilege. The hon. member for Acadia in the course of his remarks and in the heat of the moment made a statement which is of concern not only to members of this house but to farmers as a class. Comparing farmers who had formed themselves into a syndicate, with the Knight family, he said they would have no respect for co-operation with each other, but only for the almighty dollar. I am sure the hon. member did not mean that, and that he would not like such a suggestion to remain on the record.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I will speak on that question of privilege for just a minute or so. I was trying to establish the difference between a family operation and a purely business operation, one in which a group of farmers had joined together. I said that a family operation, one where the father was watching over the son, was held together by a blood relationship and would be far different from one in which five or six businessmen were in business together. Their primary interest would be in seeing that the syndicate made a dollar. I know, of course, that if a company—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made an explanation of the statement which was drawn to his attention. I think that was necessary, but there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I do not wish to get into what I might call the verbal slugging match between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner). In fact I do not think I would qualify in such a league. But I do want to press the minister to answer the perfectly reasonable suggestion which was made by my hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and supported by my hon. friend from Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge).

They suggested the minister should indicate that after this bill had received second reading it would be referred to the standing committee on agriculture. It seems to me that this is a reasonable suggestion. Indeed, I cannot imagine anyone refusing it. Such a course would remove doubts about this legislation. It would I think shorten the debate at this stage, and surely the minister desires to shorten debate. He himself complained mildly in his remarks, that I thought were occasionally a little truculent, of lawyers such as the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) injecting themselves into a matter that is primarily a concern of farmers. Surely this is a very good reason why this particular matter should be referred to the committee in which most of the members are in fact experienced farmers and can go into this matter. It would be better to do that, and more appropriate, than to refer it to a committee of the whole.

The minister has told us this is a new type of legislation in Canada. If that is so, why should not the members of this house who are on a special standing committee to deal with questions of agriculture have the opportunity to question in a way and bring out things in a way that cannot easily be done in committee of the whole? It seems to me that as a matter of general principle that is a sound procedure. Surely we should be using the committees of this house more than we are doing; and it seems to me to be particularly appropriate to the bill that we are now considering on second reading.

I am no expert in agricultural matters, but I am concerned with questions of liability, responsibility and legislation. It seemed to me that two questions have been raised in this debate which have not been answered by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), or at least not adequately answered by the minister. I know this is not the stage to discuss the different clauses of the bill in detail; however, I think it was the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) who raised what seemed to me a very serious point that should be discussed, namely the fact that under one of the key clauses of this bill members of the syndicate or partnership are required to sign a promissory note for which they are jointly and severally liable. This may mean the assumption of an obligation with regard to, I think the figure was $15,000 but it may, for all I know, be more than that for certain types of equipment. The question is raised, and properly raised: Would this affect the creditworthiness of the farmer who joined this syndicate? The minister says it is a simple matter and only farmers can comprehend it. But the question of getting into partnership and assuming liabilities for large sums of money is something that farmers as well as everybody else are well advised to look into carefully and take advice on.

Before I approve this particular aspect of the legislation, Mr. Speaker, I would very much like to hear what bankers would say about this aspect of the signing of a note. I can think of the case where many other members of the syndicate, perhaps ten others, would perhaps only contribute $1,000 toward the syndicate; but you sign a note for $20,000. Would that in fact affect the creditworthiness of the farmer? We have not been told anything about this. It is the sort of point that surely could properly be considered in the agriculture committee.

There is another item in the bill that I wish to question. Again, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to discuss the clauses of the bill. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) described, in language which I suggest is entirely just and appropriate, the provisions of clause 9 which provide that the governor in council may make regulations defining the key phrases used in this bill. The hon. member for Peace River described that method of legislation as repugnant and objectionable. I second those terms; I suggest it is repugnant and objectionable to ask this house to pass legislation which does not even define the meaning of the key phrases it uses and says, "We will have someone else define them for us later". I suggest that is legislative and parliamentary irresponsibility.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it would be a very excellent thing if this bill went to the committee on agriculture. I do not profess to know what is the proper meaning of the term "farm machinery". I might not know one piece of farm machinery from another, but I know there are members on the agriculture committee who are well able to provide adequate definitions for the purposes of this bill. Why should they not have the opportunity to do so, so that when we legislate, our legislation is in proper form and is not repugnant and objectionable, as the hon. member for Peace River adequately defined it? This is not the way to do business in this parliament; this is not the way to legislate. This would be objectionable in any legislation, be it farm legislation or any other legislation.

We in this group have made it abundantly clear that we support the principle of this bill. We commend the minister and agree that he should accept the plaudits that have been offered to him for having introduced it. We have no objection to that; it is his right to do so. It is his right, also, to characterize the objections of the opposition in whatever truculent terminology appeals to him; he can do that if he likes. But I suggest to him that if he wants to get the early passage of this legislation, if he wants to get the support of this house, if he wants to get the backing of this house in putting this legislation through, and if he wants legislation to be improved by the parliamentary process and not just laid down and our being told, "Take it or leave it", he will accede to the suggestion that has been made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and repeated by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). I do not want to subscribe to everything said by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner); but he, too, said that if this reasonable step were taken, the amendment —which I simply do not support because I think it kills the principle of the bill, and I am in favour of the bill—would be withdrawn. I suggest that this be done, Mr. Speaker, so that we may get on with this legislation.

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have been very anxious—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Who is holding it up now?

Mr. Cashin: —for some time to participate in this debate.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Who has been holding you back?

Mr. Cashin: I have withstood, as have all hon. members, what began to be a mild chinook from Alberta which reached hurricane force. Then, of course, we had the pleasure of one of those regular, polite little sermons that come from our friends in the New Democratic party. I would like to comment on some of the things the hon. member for Acadia raised in this, his most recent participation in the debate. I am not telling hon. members anything new if I state that the member for Acadia was true to form and contradicted himself in his usual fashion today.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): When and where?

Mr. Cashin: However, Mr. Speaker, I would not want to put the hon. member to the embarrassment to which he was subjected some time ago by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Dupuis). I would say this to you, though, Mr. Speaker, that I did note that the hon. member for Acadia, of all people, if you please, was talking about feet in mouth. I would say to him that if the minister, who he felt was having some difficulty getting his foot in his mouth, had as wide a mouth as the member for Acadia, he would do it with great ease; and when his foot got there the minister would then have more brains in his mouth than the hon. member has in his head.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to the hon. member, as I took the liberty of suggesting to the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner), that the hon. member who now has the floor is not debating the principle of the bill. I would enjoin him to limit his remarks to the bill before us.

Mr. Cashin: I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that as a new member here I must apologize; I was probably following more the example of the member for Acadia, who finds it impossible to address himself to the merits of the legislation and be political at the same time. The minister of course was able to do this, to discuss the merits of the legislation and at one and the same time be political. When I have the experience of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) I will of course be able to do that. In the meantime I will have to content myself with being somewhat on the level of the hon. member for Acadia. Hope springs eternal in the human breast, and some day I may rise above this.

If I may refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Acadia on an earlier occasion when he addressed himself to this subject—and I think I am in order in so doing—as reported at page 8320 of Hansard he said:

> I have looked at the bill very closely, Mr. Speaker. I studied it over the week end and thought of it a great deal.

That may seem difficult for him, but he said that is what he did.

I am a practising farmer and I realize the important part that money plays in the agricultural world today.

That is an astounding statement in itself and undoubtedly will be subjected to great analysis by historians in years to come. However, in reply to those remarks I should like to say that since that speech he has spoken at least once more and has shown little or no indication that he has studied this bill, although that should not bother us too much. I would suggest to him as his own little centennial project that between now and 1967 he study this legislation, and perhaps when it comes up for review at that time he might be a little more enlightening than he was this afternoon or during his earlier interjections in this debate.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up the time of the house, but when I hear such high and mighty contributions as the last legalistic peroration I think it has gone far enough. I wish to reiterate that we on this side of the house make it very clear that our intentions are to have this piece of legislation placed before the standing committee on agriculture and colonization, and at this time we will terminate this debate in the hope that the government will take the necessary action to see that this piece of legislation is placed before that committee.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, I suppose I have an opportunity to close the debate?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister has already spoken on the amendment, and I have now to put the question on the amendment. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister would like to make a statement on referring the bill to a committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister has already taken part in the debate on the amendment and therefore cannot speak a second time.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): But his parliamentary secretary could.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, before Your Honour puts the question may I say that perhaps the minister was trying to rise to assure the members of the house that this matter would be going before a committee. If that is the fact there would be no need for a vote.

[Mr. Cashin.]

Mr. Hays: No.

Mr. Danforth: The minister says no.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Ormiston: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Favreau, for Mr. Hays, seconded by Mr. Sharp, moves that Bill No. C-121, an act to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates, be now read a second time. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion? Agreed. Carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

And more than five members having risen:

Some hon. Members: Too late.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, we would like to vote on it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am afraid the motion has been declared by the Chair as being carried.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is nothing before the house at the moment, and the Chair has to recognize a motion made by the government on the government's bill.

Mr. Hays, seconded by Mr. Sauvé, moves that I do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Obviously the hon. member cannot move anything now when there is nothing before the house.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair is now reading the motion put by the minister, who is the sponsor of the bill on which second reading has just been given. Mr. Hays, seconded by Mr. Sauvé, moves that I do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole on the said bill. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Some hon. Members: No; carried.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Carried on division.

Some hon. Members: No.

Motion agreed to on division and the house went into committee. Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Rosthern.

Mr. Nasserden: Does the minister want to speak first, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Order. May we please have order in the committee. There are conversations which prevent the Chair from hearing the hon. member for Rosthern.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, this bill is one of the most interesting ever to have come before parliament. A few moments ago someone across the way used the phrase, "the farmers' friend," and I want to say that he who is responsible for bringing this measure before parliament certainly cannot claim the distinction of being the farmers' friend, when one considers the proposals embodied in this bill to provide credit to farm machinery syndicates.

It has been said that this legislation is daring, and last night the minister invited some comment in that regard when he referred to the fact that I had said it was not only daring but foolhardy. I would like to refer the minister to Funk and Wagnalls new practical standard dictionary for the definition of the word "daring": bold, venturesome, audacious, presuming. And if we turn to the word "foolhardy" we find: "bold without judgment, reckless, rash". And so on.

I intend in the remarks I have to make on the subject of this bill to outline those aspects where this legislation falls far short of the objectives held out before the Canadian farm people by the minister during the last several months. First I would draw attention to the fact that during the debate last night the minister referred to the speeches made from this side of the house as being long and taking up far too much time. I should also like to refer to the fact that several months ago, at the time of the by-election in the city of Saskatoon, the minister was a distinguished speaker there. Referring to agriculture on that occasion he had this to say:

> Mr. Pearson has admitted quite freely that we have made some mistakes because we tried to do too many things too fast.

This is not one of the things they have tried to do too fast. It is several months since the minister first indicated to farm people and members of this house that legislation would be brought forward to do something about the cost-price squeeze which affects agriculture. Today we have witnessed an expression of arrogance on the part of hon. members opposite, inasmuch as once again they have sought to deny the committee structure of the House of Commons. They have refused us the opportunity to take a close look at legislation which is in the making. I know why they fear such an examination. It is because they have so few members who are willing or able to attend the agriculture committee in the House of Commons. Throughout this session when that committee has held its meetings—and I confess it has not held the number of meetings it should have held—there has been a notable absence of Liberal members from that committee, despite the fact that there are many names on the list of Liberal members prepared to take an active role with regard to agriculture matters. On more than one occasion we have had to wait over half an hour to get a quorum. I hear the President of the Privy Council saying this has nothing to do with the legislation before us. It has something to do with the government's refusal to place this legislation before the committee on agriculture for study and deliberation.

Last night we heard a tirade from the Minister of Agriculture. I really must say I enjoyed listening to him. I say this very sincerely. The hon. gentleman not only puts his foot into his mouth but he leaves it there. A number of things which he said last night were, in my opinion, noteworthy. One of them is as follows:

> It is a simple method for our individual Canadian farmers to join together in a co-operative venture.

He went on to say:

> The primary security for loans under the proposed act will be the promissory note signed by the members of the syndicate. Collateral security will be taken where required on the machinery being purchased with the loan, but the corporation will not be taking security against any of the other assets owned by individual members of the syndicate. There should therefore be no conflict with the security requirements for loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

The hon. gentleman could not have stated better the contention made by members speaking from this side of the house, that these provisions should have been brought forward as an amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act legislation rather than administered under the Farm Credit Corporation as is now proposed. It would have been very simple to have done this. If the minister were the farmers' friend he would bring legislation before this house to provide loans to purchase farm machinery at an interest rate of 5 per cent instead of the 6 per cent, 7 per cent and more which this money will ultimately cost under the Farm Credit Corporation. If the minister were the farmers' friend he would not load up the Farm Credit Corporation, which is already suffering from the weight it is carrying, with this additional burden. If the minister were the farmers' friend, and the taxpayers' friend, he would not bring forward a measure providing for the expenditure of $25 million when legislation by virtue of an amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act could have made provision for the banks to perform this service, while at the same time giving the farmer a more expeditious answer to his credit needs.

It was an interesting speech, I must say, despite the fact that the minister read every word of it. I hope the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) followed every word of it, because he is an authority on following those who read speeches in the House of Commons. The Minister of Agriculture said this:

> This is something brand new in Canadian agriculture. It is an experimental type of legislation and we will be ready to make whatever changes in its operation experience indicates.

Well, the minister can come into my riding at any time he wishes and tell the Mennonite people of my riding that this is a new departture. I recall when these people first came to Canada, with very few assets apart from their willingness to work hard to try to become a part of this nation. At that time they engaged in a good many co-operative activities—the pooling of machinery, the pooling of land on occasions, and similar arrangements. Over the years these people, who have proven to be some of the best farmers in Canada, have come to the realization that they get along much better by branching out on their own as individuals in order to build up farm enterprises and a place in the community. Having said this, I know there are many people who are in a limited way sharing in the cost of farm machinery today. But when I look at this bill and at the measures we already have on the statute books I cannot understand how a minister of agriculture who is trying to assume the role of the farmers' friend could bring into this house a measure providing for interest rates such as will be charged under these arrangements, as well as giving rise to the delays which must necessarily occur as a result of the exhaustive study which members of the Farm Credit Corporation must make in assessing the creditworthiness of each application. I cannot understand the minister doing this when all that is required is a simple amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act which would provide for the type of operation now contemplated.

Last night the minister said there was a demand that he should bring forward this legislation. Then he proudly said "We have brought it in" or "I have brought it in". But I ask the minister whether this is the type of legislation he promised the farmers of this country during the last several months. It is not, as I understand the statements made by the minister from one end of this nation to the other. Indeed, sir, if I recall correctly he started out by promising the farmers of this country some sort of rental arrangement under which they might secure farm machinery at rates conducive to the use of machinery on that basis. This measure, if it is anything, is a duplication of various other acts that are now on the statute books, acts that could have served the purpose just as well by a very simple amendment thereto. When we consider the bill itself and look at the financial provisions under clause 7, I would say that I never saw so much window dressing in all my life. I believe that if you look at the Financial Administration Act you will find almost word for word everything that is written into clauses 7 and 8 of this bill. If you go on to clause 11 you find something that is written into the present Farm Credit Corporation Act almost word for word.

We on this side of the house have certainly asked ourselves why the government has taken this very difficult way of implementing the desire that we believe is in the minds of all members of the House of Commons, namely to provide credit on a more comprehensive basis for all those who may need it. I recall the election propaganda issued during the last two election campaigns. On September 22, as reported at page 8313 of Hansard, I made some reference to this when I said:

> This pamphlet sets forth the basic problem. It is stated that the basic farm problem is the cost-price squeeze on the farmer's income. This is an important thing to remember when we are considering this bill, which is to provide credit for the purchase of farm machinery by syndicates. The other point that should be raised at this time, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that this bill provides for setting aside $25 million for the purposes embodied in the bill.

I compared that with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, which total some $140 million. I went on to say:

> This bill does not lower the price of farm machinery. When one considers that $25 million is being set aside by this measure, and when one thinks of all the other things that could be done for farm people—

And so on. That is one of the questions that we have to concern ourselves with here today. I believe it is not too late for the minister to give some consideration to making the provisions of this legislation part of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, thus eliminating the high cost farm people will be faced with in respect of this particular measure. If the minister does not do that, there is only one conclusion to which I can come, namely that this is one of those pieces of legislation that is comparable to the Gordon budget, that first budget, that abortive budget; it is comparable to the Canada pension plan, which wasted so many hours of the time of the House of Commons and today is still not before us in a concrete form in which we can deal with that particular matter. This legislation illustrates the same kind of carelessness that typified the introduction of the flag resolution by the Prime Minister himself.

Sir, I must ask you and the members of this house why our Prime Minister has let the minister bring this measure before us in such a thoughtless, careless way; careless of the time of parliament, careless of the benefits that could accrue to farmers, careless of the long term significance the encouragement of this type of legislation is going to give to a type of farming that many farmers in this country do not want to see develop. It is just another one of those acts of carelessness by the present Prime Minister. We had it first of all in the budget. Do you know, Mr. Chairman, why we had that budget? The Minister of Finance wrote a book, and he had to bring in the kind of budget that he brought in, abortive though it was. The Minister of Agriculture made a speech, and he had to bring in a bill such as this, regardless of the needs, wishes and desires of farm people. If we look at this bill, it says that the "minister" will be the Minister of Agriculture. Well, I hope he will be. Then it says:

> Where an individual has two or more major occupations, one of which is farming, the corporation may determine which of such occupations is his principal occupation for the purposes of this act.

Then clause 3 deals with the promissory note and other security required for the purposes of obtaining a loan. This security is almost identical with that required by the banks in regard to farm improvement loans at the present time.

I do not wish to take up any more time at the moment, Mr. Chairman, but I would ask the minister to tell us why the provisions of this legislation were not enacted by way of amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Also why does he think a higher interest rate is preferable? Why does he think the Farm Credit Corporation should be saddled with this additional load? Why does he think the banks cannot provide this service? If the minister answers some of these questions it will give us a better idea of what he has in mind. I have another question in regard to clause 9. We cannot help but ask the minister why we in parliament are not to be given the opportunity to deal with the regulations that will govern the ability of a farmer to secure assistance under this type of legislation. Why should that be left to the privy council, to someone else—I should not say "outside this parliament" because we hope they are in this parliament; but certainly they are outside the reach of the ordinary member of the House of Commons. I would certainly like an answer to some of these questions, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a few words with regard to this bill now before us in committee. I might say at the outset of my remarks that it is too bad that certain amendments that will be put forward in committee of the whole could not have been put forward in the agriculture committee, where I think a better atmosphere exists. I think once you are in a committee partisanship seems to fall away.

Mr. Fisher: What a dreamer.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You hear evidence from various witnesses who support proposed amendments, for example, or are opposed to proposed amendments. The question is simplified and ironed out much more quickly in the agriculture committee than is the case in committee of the whole house. I feel somewhat regretful that the government voted against—

Mr. Macaluso: Speak for yourself.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member for Acadia would not want to make reference to a vote which has already been taken in the house. I could refer him to standing order 35 at pages 22 and 23 of the standing orders, which states that it is not the practice in the house to comment on an issue which has been decided in the house.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, if I ran contrary to the rules. I had no intention of doing so but I did want to point out that in the agriculture committee various witnesses are called to present briefs relating to a given subject, amendments are put forward and substantiated by many interested parties attending the committee, and in this way a lot of the partisanship evident in the house, particularly of the kind apparent when the minister spoke last evening, disappears in the proceedings and the committee can get down to business in a much friendlier atmosphere, and proceed along legislative lines which will bring about the most beneficial results for the country as a whole.

It is evident from some of the remarks which have been made that some hon. members are concerned about this legislation. Even the title "Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act" is frowned upon by many farmers because they do not like the word "syndicates". Farmers value their independence and frown upon syndicated farming. They also frown upon non-resident farming. They have always valued the social relationship which exists where adjacent land is occupied by families similar to their own, which brings about a much friendlier atmosphere, one might say, to rural living. Therefore one must gather from this debate as it has progressed that many members are concerned about this legislation.

How it was devised I am not too sure; nor am I sure why it was brought in. The government have not allowed it to go to committee where briefs could be put forward by interested concerns. I think the industrial development bank could lend a great deal of advice and throw much light on this subject of lending money to farm corporations, which is what a syndicate is, in a sense. A syndicate is a corporation to some degree or other. The industrial development bank has been making loans for agricultural purposes for the last four years. In the last year they lent something like $4.8 million and made available 175 loans to corporations and groups of people who were interested in getting into the agricultural industry. True it is that some of these loans could well be made by marketing institutions rather than farming and productive institutions in the agricultural field.

I said in my earlier speech on the principle of the bill that as an active farmer I am now engaged in some five different machinery—I do not like the word "syndicates"; there is nothing formal or written down, but let me say five different machinery agreements. These agreements are not even all with the same neighbours, surprising as that may seem. But they are all machines which, apart from the snowplow, may be used at any time in the farm cycle. They are small machines which can be purchased outside of a syndicate. Some of them might well be purchased as a result of a farm improvement loan by one farmer, and other farmers have made contributions.

There are many aspects to this bill which, if we were able to meet them in the committee stage in as agreeable a form as possible and in as non-partisan a manner as possible, we might be able to improve, and even remove the word "syndicate" from the title of the bill, because I personally think it will be frowned on, by small farmers particularly. As I look at the bill from clause to clause I think it is only fair to say that perhaps some of the doubts I have I should put before the minister now, so that when we get into the various clauses themselves the minister will be able to deal with them quite fully. For example, what does the word "farming" mean? Clause 2 defines farming as including livestock raising, dairying, fruit growing and all tillage of the soil. Then again I observe that this act will be administered by the Farm Credit Corporation. The Farm Credit Corporation make no loans during the wintertime; they only lend money when the soil can be tilled. This bill is going to make loans to a syndicate of farmers, and farming includes any method which tills the soil. Are we to gather from that analysis that loans will only be made under this act during the frost-free periods in this country? That is one of the first questions that I ask from looking over this bill.

Farming also includes livestock raising, and I should like to know how comprehensive is that term. Does it include the raising of horses?

Mr. Cashin: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Yes; I have quite a bit of time now.

Mr. Cashin: My question is this. In view of the fact that the hon. member has received the maximum P.F.A.A. payment each and every one of the last five years, does he really feel so qualified to pontificate on these complicated matters facing Canadian farmers? Also in view of the advantages of that legislation, does he really feel justified in opposing this legislation?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I think if the hon. member looks a little further he could go back beyond five years, although I do not know what happened during the six years he was talking about. I think this fortifies my qualifications for speaking to the bill this afternoon. If I was able to collect such a payment as a bona fide farmer, it proves that I am qualified to speak as a farmer this afternoon.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Would the hon. member permit another question? Speaking as a farmer I wonder whether he would agree that the Farm Credit Corporation has personnel which are more competent to assess the borrowing potential of an individual farmer than is the industrial development bank of which he talked a few moments ago?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I would agree with that, yes. But then again I would say that perhaps a local bank manager might be more qualified still to appraise a new industry or a new invention on behalf of, say, 20 different farmers. He might be better able than the Farm Credit Corporation to appraise the worthiness of making a loan. Therefore while the hon. member may be right when he says that the Farm Credit Corporation is a better institution for this purpose than the industrial development bank, it still may not be as good as the opinion of a bank manager making loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

To get back to my trend of thinking with regard to the word "farming" and its definition in the bill, we see it includes livestock raising. Does that include the raising of horses? Some members on the other side say yes, it does. They know the answers.

One could perhaps go further and ask whether the raising of pleasure horses could be included in the definition of farming under this legislation. I refer to horses of the saddle or pleasure variety. Is the definition of farming wide enough to include the raising of race horses? Would race horses be considered as livestock under this legislation? If I or my constituents commenced to raise race horses could we apply for a loan under the provisions of this legislation?

One might also ask whether fur farming could be included within the definition of farming for the purposes of this legislation. Fur farming is considered to be farming, under the provisions of other legislative measures. Perhaps one might ask whether beekeeping could be considered farming for the purpose of this legislation. Perhaps bees could not be considered to be livestock, but the keeping of bees is considered to be farming for the purpose of certain legislative measures. One could go very far in projecting his thoughts along this line.

The Minister of Transport is an avid spokesman in support of the fishermen and I am sure that he would like to have fish farming included in this definition. Will these loans be available to fishermen? I am in a quandary as to exactly what kind of farming will be included within the category of farming as defined in this bill. We must remember that this legislation will be interpreted by the officials of the corporation, and a great deal of thought should be given to this question.

Last evening the minister pointed out that only individuals whose basic income is derived from farming will be eligible for membership in a syndicate for the purpose of obtaining a loan under the provisions of this legislation. If I am wrong in interpreting the minister's remarks in that regard I hope he will correct me before I proceed much further. The clause of the bill itself suggests that it is the majority of the syndicate whose principal occupation must be farming. However, last evening the minister said that all of the members of the syndicate must be farmers, and that the majority of them had to derive their basic income from farming. I hope I am interpreting his remarks correctly in that regard.

Those are some of the thoughts which entered my mind as I read this bill, and I think the time to raise these doubts is during the consideration of clause 1, when the minister and his officials are present to consider these questions, and perhaps provide answers when we deal with the bill clause by clause.

I am sure a number of members will have a great deal to say in respect of clause 3 which states that each member must undertake jointly and severally to sign a promissory note for the total amount of the loan. The thing about that provision which is of concern is that the loan is to be primarily secured by the promissory note, and second, by a mortgage on the machinery. I suggest that this is a departure from the principles contained in the farm improvement loans legislation, in respect of which the loan is secured primarily by a mortgage on the machine. Under that legislation, if a farmer defaults the bank can actually and physically seize his machinery, whether it be a combine or any other piece of equipment which is urgently needed. The farmer does not have to sign a promissory note under the provisions of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, yet, as stated by the minister last evening, under the provisions of this legislation loans will be secured by a promissory note signed by each member of the syndicate, and second, by an attachment on the equipment purchased. I suggest this is a vast departure from the principles contained in the Farm Improvement Loans Act. As a farmer and a legislator I do not like that provision and do not understand why it is necessary.

Is it the experience of the government in respect of loans to farmers that farmers are poor credit risks? Is that the experience of the Farm Credit Corporation? I do not think that is the case. Has that been the government's experience in respect of the Farm Improvement Loans Act? I suggest the facts indicate directly the opposite. Less than one tenth of 1 per cent has been lost by virtue of loans made under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I do not have comparable figures in respect of losses incurred by the Farm Credit Corporation. I do not know the number of foreclosures that have occurred as a result of default in respect of loans made by the Farm Credit Corporation, but I am sure that number is small.

Why is clause 3 necessary in its present form, making a promissory note the first security and a mortgage on the machinery the second security? I wonder who the financial wizard was who decided to include that provision in this bill. Who was the financial wizard who questioned farmers' credit to the extent he found it necessary to include this provision? Farmers' credit has been excellent over a period of years, particularly in respect of the purchase of farm machinery. That fact can easily be established.

Last year one of the local weekly newspapers reported that $228 million had been spent on new farm machinery in that year. The Farm Credit Corporation made loans available to the extent of $99 million. I suggest that every second piece of farm machinery purchased is purchased at least in part by money the farmers have received under the provisions of farm loan legislation, yet only one tenth of 1 per cent is lost in this regard. Why is this clause necessary? This legislation applies to a group of individuals who over a great number of years have established an excellent credit reputation, yet the Minister of Agriculture, the farmers' leader and spokesman in the government, suggests they are a bad risk. He indicates that belief by that provision of this bill, which says that each member of a syndicate taking advantage of the provisions of this proposed legislation must sign a promissory note to cover the total amount of the loan.

Perhaps we should consider clause 3 a little further. Supposing for example 20 farmers formed a syndicate and put up $1,000 each. Perhaps they would want $100,000 to purchase some farm machinery. They would then require $80,000. Let us assume for example they needed this money to set up a large feeding plant. It might be dirt moving equipment or anything else that might be envisioned under this legislation. Each farmer only has $1,000 invested in the purchase. There are 20 of them and they borrow $80,000 or $4,000 apiece. Why should each farmer have to sign a promissory note guaranteeing he will be responsible for the full $80,000? I cannot see it. Have the farmers been that bad a risk? Can the minister, our leader in farm matters and farm legislation, not trust us a little more? What small farmer is going to join with 19 others, put $1,000 into an enterprise and sign a promissory note for $80,000 when his whole farm and all his machinery, lock, stock and barrel, are not worth $80,000? Is he going to put his family into debt for years to come in this way? Is he going to enter into that kind of contract? I think not.

I am sure many members have many reservations with regard to clause 3 of the bill. Many members, particularly those who are farmers, are somewhat hurt that the minister would view our credit standing so poorly. We are somewhat hurt that the Liberal government would look on us as such a poor credit risk. I feel this deeply and I know other farm members feel likewise. Why should this be so? Is our past record with regard to machinery loans so poor that we have to be singled out for this heavy penalty? I do not want to dwell too long on that particular point. I know that when we come to this clause of the bill many members will be concerned about it and I may have something more to say about it at that time too.

Let us look at the interest rate. Clause 1 says that this legislation is to be known as the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. As I pointed out in an earlier speech, under the Farm Improvement Loans Act a partnership can borrow up to $15,000 at 5 per cent interest. The Farm Improvement Loans Act deals specifically with loans for the purchase of farm machinery. If we leave out the word "syndicates" this bill under clause 1 would be known as the farm machinery credit act.

There is one piece of legislation already on the statute books under which individuals or partnerships can borrow up to $15,000 at 5 per cent interest. This bill makes no suggestion as to the interest rate. It says that the interest shall be made up of the cost of borrowing plus a reserve against losses, plus a service charge of 1 per cent. I know that a great many people throughout the country feel the same way as the farmers do. One class of operator that farmers have looked down upon and despised to some extent is the non-resident farmer, people who live in cities or towns and live off the land by operating farms. Another thing we look down upon is service charges. There is a service charge added to too many things that people have to buy today.

When a person obtains a loan from a finance company and asks what the interest rate is he is assured it is a nominal charge. When he asks how they arrive at the total figure that must be repaid he is told that it includes a service charge. In this instance we as legislators are resorting to what I call a foul practice. Let us be bold and put the interest rate in the legislation for all to see, so that all will see what they are entering upon in obtaining the loan.

From time to time pieces of legislation have come before this house and the other place which, while they may not have been passed and placed upon the statute books of the land, have received wide acclaim. These pieces of legislation have sought to provide that in any sales contract the interest rate should be clearly stated. Why do we as legislators have to resort to saying that a service charge of 1 per cent shall be added to the loan? I would much prefer the minister to say that the interest rate will be the same as that charged by the industrial development bank or under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. If he really has the interests of the farmers at heart he will do this, and I know he will because he has told us he wants to lower the cost of farm machinery. If I or some other member propose an amendment to set forth an interest rate of 5 per cent in the legislation, which is the rate under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, I know the minister will not reject it and place a further burden upon the small farmers of Canada.

I see it is six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must also advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I will just have to make another speech.

The Deputy Chairman: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this day are as follows: the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), social insurance, distribution of business card by Toronto insurance company; the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), agriculture, turkeys, reimposition of quotas on imports from the United States.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to hold up the committee at any great length, but one of the things I think should be said at this time is that the viewpoint of the official opposition is that we will approve of anything that will help the farmer in the purchase of machinery and will keep his costs down.

At the very outset I must confess that I am no farmer, but I have learned one thing, that you can learn a lot by listening to farmers. For this reason I asked at the resolution stage if this matter might be put into a committee so that the viewpoint of farmers operating in the field could be brought to bear on the officials who could answer some of the technical questions.

Tonight I am going to repeat one of the proposals made this afternoon by the hon. member for Rosthern, as an example of the type of thing that intrigues me as a person who is interested in trying to provide policy that will meet the objectives in view. If I understand the hon. member for Rosthern correctly, he has posed the question as to why this new organization is attached to the Farm Credit Corporation, rather than using one of the vehicles already in operation.

At present we have two main credit agencies at the federal level. For long term mortgages we use the Farm Credit Corporation, and the primary purpose of it is to try and work with the farmers in planning together to give each individual farmer a unit of operation which is economically sound. If a farmer borrows money on this long term basis he hopes by so doing to build himself an economic unit that will make more money as a consequence of what he has borrowed. No one recognizes more than myself the tremendous contribution of new thinking on farm credit that the Farm Credit Corporation has offered to this country, and now we have a proposal that a new, supplementary agency be added to the corporation to handle these loans to groups of farmers.

The question that intrigues me is, why the Farm Credit Corporation? I am not an expert on these things but I would like the minister, who has the advice of experts, to answer that question. Why not the farm improvement loans operation? Let me recount some of the salient points.

First of all, the farm improvement loans operation is run and administered by the banks. They have demonstrated over a period of a good many years that they have been able to lend money, mostly on farm machinery, and for a loss rate so low that over 19 years all the federal taxpayer has had to pay is roughly one tenth of 1 per cent. This is a remarkable lending experience. The losses have been so low on loans to individuals that by a simple guarantee of 10 per cent from the federal government to the banks, the banks have been able to lend farmers, over these past number of years, $1.5 billion, mostly for farm machinery.

When you lend money to farmers under the Farm Improvement Loans Act the federal government is not required to put up capital. If this particular lending arrangement for the syndicates were put under the Farm Improvement Loans Act the federal government would not be forced to increase its debt by a nominal $25 million, and this point should be considered. Second, under the method of operation of the Farm Credit Corporation, with the responsibility resting on them to see that each particular plan is a good one, a great deal of time will be consumed in getting these loans processed.

One of the great advantages of the Farm Improvement Loans Act is that these matters can be handled in a few hours, because the bankers know the credit rating of the farmers in their areas, and if the agreements and deals worked out are satisfactory under the act the loans go through very quickly. There is no criticism here of the Farm Credit Corporation because it, as an agency of the federal government, must use all the protective devices to protect the public money, and it is answerable to the House of Commons for any mistakes. The bankers are in the business of doing this all the time, and if there is any particular loss it is transmitted to the federal treasury which pays out, under the act, 10 per cent of the loss.

We have a much more complicated arrangement under this bill, and I say that the Farm Credit Corporation on a time factor would take longer. That is the second reason I ask why the government picked the Farm Credit Corporation for the purposes of this bill, when we already had in effect legislative enactments which required very limited administrative machinery to supervise this work with the banks? Why could the banks not move into this additional field of lending money to groups of farmers?

The third point I would like to raise is that to my knowledge the Farm Credit Corportation is heavily overworked. One of the reasons for its great success is that it has kept its staffs small and well trained. It has a type of staff that is able to work easily with the farmer, and now the minister proposes to take a heavily overworked staff and put this additional burden on it. The only explanation the minister can give is that he intends to enlarge the corporation's staff and build up a brand new agency to administer this particular type of loan. I would like his answer to this argument, which was implied in the remarks of the hon. member for Rosthern.

The farmer knows that if he goes to the banks, under the Farm Improvement Loans Act he can borrow up to $15,000 at an interest rate of 5 per cent. Under this bill he will probably have to pay an interest rate above 6 per cent. If you take the lending rates currently in effect for this type of loan, and add on the 1 per cent service charge and the other charges, you are going to have an interest rate that is above what is available to the farmer under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

If you take the case of the 70 or 80 per cent of the farmers who are reasonably literate, they know they have available to them the Farm Improvement Loans Act under which individually they can borrow up to $15,000 at 5 per cent interest. Farmers are now faced with a new type of legislation. If three or four of them band together they can each borrow up to $15,000 with a maximum of $100,000 applicable to any group. For this they pay 6 per cent or 6½ per cent interest. What will they do? In connection with the type of legislation they are used to, usually the banker asks them how much cash they have in the deal. Let us say it is 25 per cent or 30 per cent. The banker then advances the balance at 5 per cent interest. Under this new scheme farmers have to pay a higher interest rate. What is to stop two or three of them getting together, each pledging his credit for the amount of the loan they need, and getting the money to buy this machinery at 5 per cent under the Farm Improvement Loans Act? Why should they switch over and go to a new agency to get the same amount of money on a down payment of 20 per cent at a higher interest rate? These are considerations which make us wonder whether there is not some truth in the proposals put forward by my hon. friend from Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden).

The test of the decisions which will be made by many farmers will no doubt be this question of interest rates. This will be the factor borne in mind when making a decision to form a syndicate and sign a promissory note for the total indebtedness of that syndicate, or else to use the arrangements now open to them under existing legislation. We should like the minister to give us the answers to these questions if he can, because if his answers are sensible and logical we can at least be satisfied that we have done our duty as an opposition in raising these matters. I do not intend to deal, now, with this matter of a service charge and the feelings of all farmers with regard to it. I think the same argument applies in this regard. However, for the reasons I have stated, I should like to know what advice the minister has received from his experts. Members of the opposition are not being allowed access to the expert opinion which is at the minister's disposal, because we cannot get this measure before the standing committee. What arguments can the minister put forward against using the machinery of the Farm Improvement Loans Act for the purpose envisaged by this bill? If the real purpose of the measure is to encourage farmers to work together, using the same machinery so as to reduce the unit cost of operation, what would be the advantages of operating through a new organization with a new staff as opposed to using existing machinery at lower cost? These are pertinent questions and much will depend on the answers the minister is able to provide.

I do not mind telling the hon. gentleman that we have an amendment ready to put forward on clause 1. Whether we do so or not will depend on his reply. If the answers he gives us are reasonably satisfactory and show there is a real purpose in using a new organization, duplicating the work of one we already have, then I think we would be prepared to drop our amendment. I suggest therefore that in the interests of facilitating the passage of this legislation at the present stage we should be given answers to what I think were sincere and penetrating observations by my hon. friend from Rosthern.

Mr. Hays: In reply to the questions raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the hon. member for Rosthern I can tell the committee frankly that when we first devised the bill now before us we gave these matters a great deal of careful consideration.

It was my feeling first of all that we could handle these arrangements through the provisions of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. We discussed the matter with all the officials concerned in the various departments, and as I have indicated this was our original intention. Later, when we had taken a look at the facilities available in the Farm Credit Corporation, the majority of our people thought the method now suggested was the better way of handling this problem.

As hon. members know, the rate of interest under the Farm Improvement Loans Act is 5 per cent. Inasmuch as loans made under this measure will have a short term of seven years, our thinking is that the interest rate will not be more than 6 per cent. Loans made under the farm improvement loans legislation, including loans for livestock and machinery, amounted in the last fiscal year of which we have records to between $133 million and $135 million. We know that farmers borrowed from other sources $245 million at interest rates of between 10 per cent and 20 per cent. This was the basis for our reasoning in doubling the amount of money available for farm improvement loans. I may add that investigations carried out by people outside the department indicate that the amount borrowed by farmers from other sources was nearer $400 million than $245 million.

The reason we wish to place the administration of this measure under the Farm Credit Corporation is that we have there the supervisory staff to put together the formal agreements which will make it possible for groups of farmers to borrow the money they need. The money will be paid jointly to the dealers and to the syndicates. Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act I believe the borrowers have to put down 33 per cent. Under the present proposal they have to put down only 20 per cent. After listening to all the arguments—and no doubt the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has listened to many such arguments, too—I was finally convinced that the approach now recommended to the committee is the proper one. We came to the conclusion that if we were to put the administration of this scheme under the Farm Credit Corporation we would be able to serve the farmers better than would be the case if it were handled under the farm improvement loans provisions. That is the main reason for taking the course we now suggest should be followed.

I think the hon. member for Qu'Appelle asked some other questions. I believe he asked whether we intend to use the same staff. We propose to do so, but of course it will be necessary to add additional staff. If there are any other questions on this clause I would be glad to answer them.

Mr. Hamilton: I think we could bring down what the minister has just told us to one simple answer. The reason the hon. gentleman has decided to use the Farm Credit Corporation machinery is essentially because of the value of the supervision—he contends that this makes it worth while for the farmer to pay the extra 1 per cent. After listening to all the reasons he has given I believe that is, essentially, the argument in favour of asking farmers to work with this new organization.

Mr. Hays: Yes.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before this clause carries I should like to say a few more words. Before dinner I expressed some concern with regard to the interest rate, with regard to the definition of the word "farmer" and with regard to the effect of a contingent liability upon a farmer's credit rating. Farmers, particularly small farmers, are and will be concerned about this clause.

I would like to say a few more words with regard to this piece of legislation before we get into the clause by clause discussion. This bill deals with farm machinery, and we must consider what will be included in this definition. I notice that the Department of National Revenue in certain rulings uses the general application in this regard—you might call it a rule of thumb—of determining whether any implement or machine a farmer uses has moving parts and—

The Chairman: I would ask the hon. member whether he is now on clause 1 or clause 2.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am dealing with clause 1 and the title of the bill, an act which may be cited as the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. If one is somewhat hesitant about using the word "syndicate", he might call it the farm machinery credit act. I think generally most small farmers particularly will view with some scepticism the word "syndicate" in this title, so I will in my remarks refer to it briefly as the farm machinery credit act. Enlarging upon that title in clause 1, Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal with the question of farm machinery and what types of machines it is envisaged will qualify for loans under the bill.

I was saying that the Department of National Revenue use as a rule of thumb this method of determining whether it is a farm machine; they say that an implement or a machine that has no moving parts is not a farm machine. This is the way in which the Department of National Revenue defines farm machinery. I wonder whether this is the definition that will be applied under clause 1, wherein it is said, "This act may be cited as the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act", or the farm machinery credit act as I would prefer to call it. Do the provisions of this bill apply only to machines with moving parts that are used on farms? One might say that all farm machines have moving parts, but this is not necessarily so.

This has been a subject of continuing interest to me. If one stopped and thought about farm machines, he could list any number of machines used on farms that really have no moving parts. Let us consider a silo. The minister has said this bill will apply to a feeding plant, as I call it; in other words, a co-operative set-up amongst a group of farmers to feed out, to finish, a bunch of feeder steers. This would include, particularly in eastern Canada, a silo, perhaps a silo filling machine, perhaps a silo unloading machine—if that is the right term for the automatic silo feeders. But the silo itself is what I am concerned with. The silo itself has no moving parts. In a feeding plant such as I envisage, which might well qualify under this bill, a silo would represent the biggest cost. The filling machinery would be costly; the automatic feeding machinery from the silo would be costly; but the steel, glass-lined silo might be the most costly item in that plant. Would that qualify under this bill? No moving parts are permanently attached to such a silo. These are some of the fears that occur to me in connection with this legislation.

One could project that thinking further. What does "farm machinery" mean? Would it include milking parlours? With regard to milking parlours, the stalls are taxable; there is a duty of 22½ per cent on their entry into Canada because they have no moving parts. Would they qualify under this legislation? One could list a whole host of farm machines and farm implements in this connection. Let us go back to the feeding plant. I mentioned the silo and the automatic unloading equipment attached to a silo. Let us suppose we are setting up a feeding plant for hog feeding and that we are doing it by means of self feeders. A system of self feeders has no moving parts attached to it. The grain moves and the hogs eat it; they get fat, and they move—but the self feeders themselves have no moving attachments on them. They are subject to 22½ per cent duty on entering Canada under the rule of thumb the Department of National Revenue applies with regard to the definition of "farm machinery". I ask the minister and his officials, would they qualify under this legislation, this farm machinery credit act? One could go further and deal with grain storage and the metal and steel bins that are built in such a fashion as to automatically empty into a feed mill. Let us suppose they are funnelled, with slots, with divisions. They are subject to 22½ per cent duty because they have no moving parts. Would they qualify as farm machinery?

One could go further in this regard. Let us consider barbed wire, a commodity that is very much used on farms in western Canada and, I would think, in eastern Canada. Let us suppose we are setting up a feeding plant and are feeding steers with a grass on grain operation in the summer, and straight grain in the winter. If we take this as an example, we are fencing a succulent pasture for these grass steers; we are fencing them with barbed wire. Would the cost of the barbed wire be included under the provisions of this legislation; would barbed wire fall under this farm machinery act? It is subject to 10 per cent duty on entering Canada, and it is subject to 11 per cent sales tax; there is a 21 per cent tax on barbed wire. It is a commodity used very extensively by all farmers in eastern and western Canada—in fact, all across Canada—and on the North American continent. Would barbed wire quality under the definition of "farm machinery"? Would it qualify under clause 1 of this bill?

Let us take another example. If one were in the milking industry and the dairy industry he would be concerned with the question of steel containers, such as steel milk pails, steel tanks and stainless steel tanks. All these items are subject to duty because they have no moving parts and do not fall within the rule of thumb applied by the Department of National Revenue. Therefore in many cases a duty of 22 per cent applies. The duty is 20 per cent on steel milk pails and 20 per cent on steel milk cans. Do these items qualify as farm machinery? Let us suppose we are starting a milk plant and are combining three or four dairy herds. We are going to do our milking together; we are setting up a bulk milking operation. Would this qualify as a farm machine? I refer to the purchase of bulk milk handling equipment, the stainless steel tanks, the stainless steel cans and milk pails in general. There is a duty of 22½ per cent on this machine. The Department of National Revenue do not consider it farm machinery, but does this bill?

I referred to silos at the commencement of my remarks, but one could project the silo contention a little further and look at buildings. When you set up a feeding plant you lay a concrete floor. Does that concrete in itself come within farm machinery under this bill? If you look at all the farm journals in the United States you will find that all the big cattle feeding plants, and many of the hog feeding plants have concrete floors. Laying a concrete floor 400 feet by 400 feet on which to feed two or three thousand head of cattle costs a lot of money, although it pays for itself in the long run. But would a concrete slab 400 feet by 400 feet fall under this definition of farm machinery? I hear some hon. members sighing, but these are some of the doubts I have in my mind. I know the minister is very experienced in cattle feeding and he knows that what I say is true. It pays for itself in the long run because your cattle are well up out of the mud, can be easily cleaned, and so on.

One can also project this line of thought into farm buildings. Once you have built a concrete floor, are the steel separations which are erected in a plant like this also included under this definition? There are no moving parts other than the gates. This may not qualify under the definition of the Department of National Revenue. One could also include the shed type of building. In a sense that is a farm building outside of a farm dwelling. Would that sort of building qualify as farm machinery. I think I have said enough in this regard to substantiate a strong argument for saying that farm buildings should be included within farm machinery.

The minister made a speech about how successful this sort of act was in Great Britain, but he failed to tell the house that over there farm syndicates receive grants from the government for buildings in which to house machinery. I think a strong argument could be presented to include them under this bill. If they are included I would ask the minister whether seven years to repay a loan for this purpose is long enough. The income tax authorities allow 5 per cent depreciation on farm buildings, which should last 20 years and in most cases do. I do not question that figure, but I do say that seven years is not long enough to repay a loan which has been applied to the purchase of farm machinery. The Farm Improvement Loans Act allows 10 years on certain types of machinery, so why are we so stingy? Is the farmers' credit so bad that they can only have seven years, so that they must rush and hurry and pay back the loan which has been used to buy long term investments? Let us add a rider and put the discretion with the Farm Credit Corporation. Let us say that for certain types of machinery the repayment period is 15 years. If a machine wears out in seven years then let them chop off the period for such machinery at seven years. But if a machine which will last 15 to 20 years is purchased, then why the seven year limit? Some hon. members may laugh at this but perhaps they are not farmers and do not know what value a farmer places in his credit rating.

Now I want to turn to another subject. Let me refer to the ranching business and the acquisition of purebred cattle, with which I know the minister is closely associated. I realize he has just come back from France after holding talks with the Charolaise breeders in the hope of bringing over some Charolaise bulls. Supposing a group of purebred breeders, whether they be breeding Herefords, Angus, Shorthorns or what-have-you, want to go to Europe or to Great Britain to buy a purebred bull with the intention of owning it jointly, would that bull qualify as a piece of machinery under this bill? The minister smiles, giggles and jiggles, but he is in the game and knows that in many cases in Canada this sort of thing takes place today. Farmers in all parts are buying the best bulls for sale in Europe, Scotland, Great Britain or any other part of the world. These animals are brought to Canada and some of them are owned jointly by groups of breeders. Would such a purchase qualify for a loan under this act? This group or syndicate of farmers would be improving their assets which they already hold. Many hon. members smile at this question but I put that actual case to the minister for serious consideration.

We have passed the second reading of this bill and accepted the principle; let us now join together in all parts of the house and make the best of the bill. Let us make as many people as possible across Canada benefit from it. The minister knows that the joint ownership of bulls in the purebred business is common practice and is a good practice. I submit it is a practice which could qualify for a loan under this bill.

As I said in my opening remarks on the bill, it all depends on how wide or how liberal is the definition placed on the words "farm machinery". Many farmers in my constituency take the position that land is a piece of machinery which they must work in order to provide themselves with a fair standard of living. Many farmers in my constituency have formed syndicates for the purpose of purchasing leases. Why cannot individuals do just that under the provisions of this proposed legislation? Surely several farmers could join together and purchase leases on land for the purpose of pasturing cattle. Perhaps a syndicate would purchase several thousand acres, and do so by forming a syndicate and taking advantage of the provisions of this measure.

The minister stated in respect of this bill that the widest definition possible for "farm machinery" would be adopted. For the purposes of argument let us adopt that widest possible definition. Let us assume that within this definition farm buildings could be included. Let us assume that any piece of machinery used on a farm for any purpose could be included. Most of the type of equipment I have in mind is being purchased today by farmers to help them improve their standard of living and fight the economic cost-price squeeze. If it is beneficial to several farmers to form a syndicate in order to be eligible for loans under this proposed legislation, perhaps they could do so for the purpose of purchasing a great variety of things to be used on the farm. Perhaps a group of farmers would like to purchase some grazing land. I suggest we should provide legislation which would enable them to do so.

I have listened to the two speeches made by the minister—or three, counting the one he made today—and I have yet to hear him define "farm machinery". Are we being asked to pass this bill blindly? I hope when the minister deals with clause 9, which I think covers the subject I have in mind, he will outline what he envisages by the term "farm machinery". I am not asking him to give a definition in exact terms, but to outline generally what will be covered by this legislation. A host of things could be included within a wide definition of that term, many of which the Department of National Revenue does not consider to be items of farm machinery.

As an example perhaps I should refer to a portable livestock scale. The Department of National Revenue maintains that there is no movable part to a scale and therefore it is taxable. Once in a while the indicator tip on the scale moves up and down, so it is a movable part, but farmers must still pay 20 per cent duty on the cost of a portable scale imported into Canada. Farmers must pay 22 per cent duty on the importation of lifts used in the growing of potatoes, as well as in the operation of an orchard. Where is the minister going to draw the line in respect of a definition of farm machinery for the purposes of this proposed legislation? What items will be regarded as farm machinery under this measure?

When dealing with a definition of this type, Mr. Chairman, one could also consider such things as antibiotics, and items of that kind used on farms. I do not intend to deal with this question in detail, but I should like to ask the minister to propose at least some general definition of "farm machinery", to be applied to the provisions of this bill.

Will electric livestock water heaters be considered to be farm machinery under the provisions of this measure? That is a very small item necessary to the raising of cattle, but will it be included? That item carries a 22 per cent duty when imported into Canada, and a farmer must also pay an 11 per cent sales tax. The department of revenue does not consider those items to be farm machinery because they have no movable parts, and they are subject to duty.

Under clause 1 of this proposed bill will electric fences be considered to be farm machinery? Electric fences are necessary in a grain or grass feeding plant, particularly in the dairy industry, as well as the beef raising industry, where a feed rotating procedure is followed in order to put the cows and steers on fresh grass. Electric fences are often used in this way. The department of revenue says there are no moving parts to an electric fence, therefore they are not farm machinery. I suggest that none of the officials of the department have touched an electric fence that was in operation, or else they would know that something is moving. A 22½ per cent duty is levied against these items on importation. They are also subject to the 11 per cent sales tax.

The minister has suggested that I have not referred to anything which would reduce the cost of farm machinery to the farmer, but I suggest that this could be accomplished by removing the duty applicable to the list of things to which I have referred in the last three minutes. By doing so I suggest he would reduce the cost of farm machinery.

Mr. Chairman, what does the minister mean by the term "farmer"? I suggest that that could cover a great many occupations. There are many things that could be done to alleviate the burden now borne by farmers during this period of cost-price squeeze. I hope the minister will give us some idea about what he thinks this legislation will accomplish in the way of alleviating this burden. It is about time the minister did let us in on his feelings, and I think he should do so during our consideration of clause 1 of this bill which, if I had my choice, would be entitled, "farm machinery credit act", leaving out the word "syndicate". I have left out the word "syndicate" because I am sure it will be distasteful to farmers. This act is in effect a farm machinery credit act. The minister has yet to present to this committee his view of what this measure will encompass. The parliamentary secretary has said that as far as he is concerned the interpretation of this act and its terms should be left to the officials of the corporation. I say that is not good enough because we as members of parliament would like an opportunity to examine and question the interpretations of these provisions.

Mr. Chairman, I wholeheartedly supported the suggestion that this measure be referred to the committee on agriculture and colonization because that committee I feel could have dealt fully with the provisions and interpretations of its clauses. That committee could have called experts from farm unions, who I am sure would have come willingly and presented briefs, and then examined that evidence and come to a reasonable conclusion in respect of the interpretation of the bill's provisions. I am sure witnesses of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture would have been pleased to attend the meetings of that committee in respect of this bill. Many organizations which are concerned with the welfare of farmers generally I am sure have taken a very great interest in this proposal. Representatives of those organizations might well have provided a broader explanation of the terms of this proposed measure.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I gladly rise to speak in respect of clause 2 of this bill, although I have no intention of delaying the passage of this bill. I feel we must give this legislative measure the fullest consideration possible, as responsible members of parliament. I am disappointed that the minister did not give us an explanation of how he interprets the term "farm machinery" during our consideration of clause 1.

Earlier this afternoon I asked several questions which could be related to clause 2, and I wonder whether the minister is now prepared to answer them. What does the word "farm" mean? My understanding is that included in farming is the raising of livestock, dairying, fruit growing and the tillage of soil. Let us concentrate for a moment on the term "livestock raising". I ask the minister point blank: Does this include the raising of horses?

Mr. Hays: Do you want me to answer now?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Yes, I should like you to answer right now.

Mr. Hays: In clause 2 we use the same definition in so far as farming is concerned as was used in the Farm Credit Act. It seemed to be best that we use that definition because it has been successful and there have been no amendments or changes. Therefore "farming" is defined in the same way as in the Farm Credit Act.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That does not quite answer my question.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): What about defining farm machinery?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The clause says that farming includes livestock raising. I put my point blank question again. Does that include the raising of horses?

Mr. Hays: "Livestock" is defined in the regulations and I think that horses are included, although I am not sure. It is exactly the same as in the Farm Credit Act. I can find out if you wish.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I understand the minister has officials of the Farm Credit Corporation before him. Perhaps they can help him out. I can think of many small farmers who are in the business of raising horses for pleasure. The minister will understand that term. It is the raising of horses for sale to people who want them for pleasure and other reasons. This is a big business in Canada today, particularly in Alberta, and as the minister comes from that great city of Calgary in the heart of Alberta I know he is very familiar with the situation. Perhaps he can give me a little better answer, having in mind particularly the part that horses have played in farming in years gone by. I am sure they would be included but I want a little confirmation.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Are they a farm machine?

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Hays: Race horses would not be covered but otherwise I think horses would be covered in that what we have in mind is horses used for tillage of the soil. I think that is the way it is under the Farm Credit Act. The hon. member also asked about machinery—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am asking about pleasure horses.

Mr. Hays: I would not suppose it would cover horses for pleasure, no.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): So raising pleasure horses is not farming? What is it?

Mr. Hays: I do not think they would be included, not unless they were used to hoe the garden or something like that—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I do not want to pursue the question—

Mr. Hays: —or tillage of the soil or on a hay rake, and so on.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I raise a few saddle horses and I do not use them to till the garden or on the hay rake. I use them to round up my cows. Would you call them working horses or pleasure horses?

Mr. Moreau: Will the hon. member permit a question? Will he tell the house what machinery he is going to need to raise these horses?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have asked a question that I hope the minister will answer.

Mr. Hays: Those horses would be included if you used them as work horses.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): But if I made it my sole occupation, and I know men who do and I know the minister knows men who do—

An hon. Member: E. P. Taylor.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am not talking about E. P. Taylor. I am talking about a lot of people who love good stock horses. The minister knows exactly what I mean. There are many people right in the vicinity of Calgary who raise stock horses. By that I mean working horses. Is this considered farming under this legislation, or is it not? That is my point briefly and succinctly. I want an answer or I am going to continue to speak.

Mr. Hays: If you are tilling the soil you are farming.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Oh, guff. There are many ranchers who never touch a plow.

Some hon. Members: Louder.

An hon. Member: Go and get your horse.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Liberal backbenchers are laughing and making jokes about a serious matter. They must all be Irishmen because they have a degree of wit.

Mr. Moreau: Will the hon. member answer my question? It was a serious question.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am sorry; I am busy.

Mr. Moreau: What machinery does he envisage would be required to raise a couple of saddle horses?

Mr. Danforth: Did you ever feed a horse?

Mr. Moreau: Plenty.

Mr. Danforth: Then you know the answer.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It is a serious question. I would not be a bit surprised if there are many persons living in the minister's constituency who are engaged in the business of raising pleasure horses and stock horses. I am lumping them together because many a good pleasure horse does not make a good stock horse. You do not know until you break the horse what he is good for. I am lumping the two of them together. You people over there talk about our holding up the debate. The former member for Assiniboia held up the passage of the Farm Credit Act for two days on the question of horses alone.

An hon. Member: He was defeated on that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Let us not get carried away. I am just asking for a simple definition of livestock, as used in clause 2. It has always been my belief that horses fall under the definition of livestock. I am specifying the types of horses in which I am interested, stock horses and pleasure horses. Many people right in the minister's constituency are engaged in the raising of both. There are not too many in my constituency but certainly there are in the foothills of Alberta and throughout the whole province. The pleasure horse has become big business in Alberta.

Some members may say: What machinery is required to raise pleasure horses? First of all you have to have brood mares and you have to have a stallion. You have to have hay and grain and a barn. You have to have pens. You have to have a show ring and many other things. I am not asking for a lengthy detailed explanation. The minister is a well known westerner, a former mayor of the city of Calgary and I ask him: What is Calgary noted for? Where was he when Calgary grew up and established the name it has all across Canada? All I am asking him to do is to stand up and say that certainly a working horse on a ranch does not have to till the soil.

That is all I am asking him to say. All I am asking him to say is that a person who raises ranch working horses can also raise pleasure horses. I am saying that these are livestock. Is the minister prepared to answer?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Acadia has raised a very serious point. To make it easier for the minister I should like to suggest to him that under this definition of farming I think the committee would be very glad to include livestock in its broadest generic sense. If a person is raising rabbits and is making money out of raising rabbits and needs machinery, he should be eligible for a loan under this legislation. I would suggest that any use of the land for any type of livestock out of which money is made should be included in the definition.

I think I can help the minister out by suggesting that if he stood in his place and said he would be glad to recommend to his officials that the wording "livestock" be broadened out to include any form of livestock used by a farmer for the purposes of profit, then I think the hon. member for Acadia would be satisfied, and so would any farmer who raises rabbits—if he wants to raise rabbits—

Mr. Moreau: White mice.

Mr. Hamilton: And white mice, if he can sell them.

Mr. Roxburgh: And cats.

Mr. Hamilton: Any of these would be legitimate livestock, and I think the officials would be very happy to say they would be glad to consider such a recommendation from the minister. In that way we would all be happy.

Mr. Hays: I shall be very pleased to accommodate the hon. member for Acadia by making that recommendation.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Can I take it, before this clause passes, that livestock will be understood in its widest generic sense?

Mr. Hays: The hon. member for Qu'Appelle said he thought this matter could probably be covered by my making a recommendation to our officials that all livestock be included, and I would be glad to do that.

Mr. Nasserden: Is beekeeping equipment and apiary equipment to be included in this definition of farm machinery?

Mr. Hays: We have not included it in this bill because it seems it would be very difficult to use this sort of thing co-operatively. Beekeeping is not included.

Mr. Nasserden: Apiary equipment is used co-operatively in some places and lends itself very well to co-operative use. It would be a very serious omission if it were left out and I would like to see it included, particularly for northeastern Saskatchewan which produces some of the best honey in Canada.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Does not the Farm Credit Corporation now consider beekeeping as an agricultural pursuit?

Mr. Hays: Yes, this is so.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, last night I vaguely and rapidly touched upon a matter which, in my humble opinion, is interesting and significant. I am happy to see my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), arrive in the house, because I think he might advise his colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), on the legal scope of the bill now before us.

I would like to call the minister's attention to paragraph (c) of clause 2.

Could you give the Minister of Justice a copy of the bill to enable him to follow my remarks?

Under paragraph (c) of clause 2, we read this:

(c) "Farm machinery syndicate" means an association formed (i) by an agreement in writing, approved by the corporation, between not less than three individuals.

Under this bill a syndicate is to be created for the purchase of machinery, and the text of this legislation once more ignores the basic principles of the civil law of the province of Quebec, which, in clause 984 of the civil code, provides some essential terms to legalize any liability resulting from a deal between an association of at least three persons on the one hand, and the Farm Credit Corporation, on the other hand.

Under the definition given to us, there is no mention of the legal capacity of people who eventually might transact business with the corporation.

What is going to happen, Mr. Chairman, if three minors—let us say 20 year old boys, the sons of good farmers in one and the same district—appear before the Farm Credit Corporation, to sign an agreement among themselves, some sort of written document, setting them up as a company?

At this point the company will be in conflict with the terms of the civil code. And what will happen if, incidentally, those three minors who are to be recognized as being able to enter into a contract under the definition given in subsection (a) are in conflict with the Farm Credit Corporation?

Is the corporation going to prosecute minors who will be regarded as of age under the act? Or, if the act is passed without full compliance with the legal conditions required to transact in the province of Quebec, we will have a completely worthless contract under the law, one that is worthless ab initio.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, the federal legislator is going to allow such interference in the jurisdiction of the civil code.

It looks as if the government, on the pretence of co-operative federalism, are disregarding the very basis of the important principles granted the provinces under the British North America Act. As a matter of fact, civil law is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces.

By virtue of what legislation, Mr. Chairman, are syndicates going to be established within the meaning of this bill? Is it under some provision of the revised statutes of the province of Quebec?

I would suggest that the Minister of Justice refresh his memory by taking a close look at chapters 117 to 123 of the revised statutes of the province of Quebec where certain basic conditions have been set down by the legislators.

We will find that for a farm corporation or an agricultural co-operative syndicate to have legal existence, and in no circumstances whatsoever are less than ten people recognized as constituting a legal partnership in the province of Quebec.

Now, our learned friends opposite will put aside this agricultural economy, which is recognized in our revised statutes of the province of Quebec, leaving aside the most imperative provisions of the civil code of this province.

I do not know the provisions of the civil code of the other provinces, but I speak as a lawyer from the province of Quebec. I ask the minister whether he submitted this text to the advisers of the Department of Justice when, without any right, in flagrant violation of the sacred right belonging to the provinces in the field of civil law, such a stand is being taken. By what right will the federal government now create agricultural corporations without respecting the required legal capacity of the contracting parties, so that there might be a legal act between on the one hand the farm corporation or syndicate, as provided by this legislation, and the Farm Credit Corporation?

I hope that the Minister of Agriculture, supported by his parliamentary assistant and learnedly enlightened by the Minister of Justice, as well as the other learned lawyers sitting on the other side, like for instance my good friend from Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), the hon. member for Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance)—

Mr. Choquette: Do not forget the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Paul: And also the Minister of Justice. I still remember a brilliant contribution on his part concerning coloured legislation.

Well, I hope that tonight they will give us further proof of their legal knowledge in order to enlighten my poor intelligence—quite confused in this matter—because I feel that this is another shocking intrusion of the federal authority in the field of the civil law of the province of Quebec.

I am waiting for your comments, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, may I answer at this time on the part of the Minister of Justice, because the speech of my hon. friend does not deserve the answer of a minister as distinguished and competent as the Minister of Justice. It rather requires a humble member like me to refute in a few words all the objections raised by my hon. friend, objections which do not surprise me since they come from a lawyer who has been practising law for so long.

The first objection of the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière is very easy to refute. He worries considerably for the minors. Now, the question of the minors is quickly decided. One has only to read clause 3 of this bill to see that the corporation may grant—it is not obliged to do so—a loan.

Let us suppose that three minors call on the Farm Credit Corporation. Knowing that under the civil code of the province of Quebec minors enjoy some special protection, the Farm Credit Corporation will of course, take all possible precautions in its transactions with these minors to ensure all the necessary protection.

Consequently, I do not see where the problem is. This is a totally useless objection since the Farm Credit Corporation is not required to allow the loan; however, it should grant it to responsible persons of age having the necessary maturity to meet their obligations.

As concerns the second objection raised by my hon. friend, this is not a real objection—

[Mr. Paul.]

Mr. Martineau: Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Choquette: Certainly.

Mr. Martineau: I would like to know if, in his opinion, it would not have been preferable to rewrite clause 2(c), substituting for the words "three individuals" the words "three persons with legal capacity"?

Mr. Choquette: I should let the Minister of Agriculture answer this suggestion. This does not mean—

An hon. Member: The question was put to you.

Mr. Choquette: If you want me to answer, let me finish. The point made by the hon. member is certainly very interesting. I will not dwell on details, Mr. Chairman, only I do not prize the useless objections raised by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière.

Second, the hon. member says: Does it not take ten persons to form a syndicate? And he goes on: We are not dealing with a professional syndicate as defined by the labour legislation of the province of Quebec but with a corporation wishing to borrow money; the English word is more precise: We are dealing with a "partnership".

Consequently, whenever a partnership applies to the Farm Credit Corporation to make the required loan, it can do so and I fail to see how the provincial jurisdiction is thus transgressed.

All the member has to do is to refer to the civil code; he may have not read it for some time but as for me, the recollection of it is still fresh in my mind as I was out of the university more recently than he was. Should the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière obligingly read section 1830 and the following ones, he will realize that this bill does not transgress in any way the provision of the Quebec civil code and does not represent in any way an infringement upon the provincial jurisdiction. We are dealing with corporations which are to be created and are going to borrow money while respecting at the same time the jurisdictions concerned.

In other words, the objections raised by my hon. friend are not objections, they are useless and dilatory as are all objections or obstructions from the Conservative party.

[Text]

The Chairman: I believe the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière has some further remarks to make on the same subject and it might be wise to hear him out.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Once again, Mr. Chairman, we find that legal knowledge is not learned by osmose. If the hon. member for Lotbinière has the great privilege of having a father who sits at the appeal court, I think that he himself could be a practising lawyer and then, he would not have dared put forward observations as weak as those he just offered.

First of all he said that clause 3 answers the arguments I raised because the Farm Credit Corporation may or may not grant a loan.

What would happen if the under age person declared he was of age? What would happen to the contracts entered into? What would happen, for instance, to the great many loans obtained by under age persons?

My learned friend refers to the partnership. So, according to him, because the English version refers to partnership, the provisions of the civil code are set aside. My learned friend refers himself to the civil code, to sections 1830 and the following, dealing with the corporation.

Therefore, I am quite justified to say that the federal legislator is asked to legislate in a field where civil law is involved. An attempt is made to bring forward a legislation without taking all necessary measures to prevent so-called legal acts which are useless in any case because of the legal incapacity of certain contracting parties. In addition, I shall point out—

Mr. Choquette: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Paul: Surely, if it is an intelligent one.

Mr. Choquette: Does the hon. member know the principle of civil law, stated in article 1005, which says that:

> A minor who is a...trader..., is not relievable for cause of lesion for contracts made for the purposes of his business—

If the occasion arises, would the minor not be a trader, and in that case, do you not know the principle of the civil code which says the "the minor who is a trader, is considered of full age for the activities related to his business"? It seems to me that you should know that; it is as clear as crystal.

Mr. Paul: It seems to me that in the remarks I made yesterday—would the hon. member for Lotbinière kindly listen to me if he wants an answer to his question? Yesterday, I did mention that this legislation is intended to destroy the small farm, the small farmer's land. This is so true that the hon. member for Lotbinière now mistakes the merchant for a farmer. Now, the farmer will become a merchant.

He refers us to section 1005 of the civil code. I wonder where we are going. A while ago when I referred to certain provisions of the revised statutes of the province of Quebec, chapters 118 to 123, I simply pointed out to the Minister of Justice that there are certain legal provisions in the province of Quebec to permit the creation of an agricultural syndicate.

I respectfully submit that the federal government now wants to set up an agricultural syndicate, putting aside the economy of the administrative law of the province of Quebec in that regard.

To merely say that the Farm Credit Corporation may or may not transact with persons on the ground that they are under age would protect the corporation from the danger of such transactions. And I respectfully submit that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) should insert a paragraph in order to clarify this clause, as my hon. friend from Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) was pointing out when he specified that the persons called upon under this act to transact with the Farm Credit Corporation should have the legal capacity to do so, as is stipulated in the various civil laws of the ten provinces of Canada.

The only purpose of my remarks is to protect the federal funds in preventing corporations from losing money through loans granted to minors who have no capacity to contract, and to see to it that the civil law, which is of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, is complied with.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) and the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul), even if they do not talk exactly the same language, both agree that the bill, as it stands at present, must respect the civil law in the province of Quebec and, in the other provinces, the common law, that is, the law which governs the parties in civil matters.

After listening to the statements made by both hon. members, I agree with them, and in order to reassure them, I can tell them sincerely that no illegality will ensue from the application of the act. On the other hand, may I be allowed to give some details which will be my modest contribution.

I must first point out that the purpose of this bill is not the creation of an agricultural syndicate or an agricultural co-operative within the meaning of provincial laws, for instance, in Saskatchewan and even less in Quebec. For the purpose of this bill, the word "syndicate" is used only to designate the groups which jointly and severally will contract a loan and undertake a pledge. Once more, I say that no provision of this bill tends to the creation of agricultural syndicates according to the technical meaning of those words. It is only the word that will designate the group of borrowers.

Mr. Grégoire: Will it be possible for those agricultural syndicates to form into syndicates within the meaning of the act?

Mr. Favreau: It is merely and solely a group. If more than three persons join together for the purpose of this act, we will call that a syndicate.

Mr. Grégoire: If those three persons wish to form a corporation, are they entitled to do so? Under the Companies Act, can they incorporate for the purpose of forming a syndicate for the purchase of farm machinery?

Mr. Favreau: In my opinion they could not take advantage of the provisions of this bill should they incorporate into a syndicate under the Companies Act, because its purpose is to protect the small farmer so that he may benefit from the prerogatives and advantages granted corporations or large groups, and that is the reason why they are allowed to pool their borrowing capacities and take advantage of the provisions of this bill without any infringement of the civil law.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question? Does that mean the only legality of the syndicate will be under the terms of this act?

Mr. Favreau: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Peters: Will they only be establishing the legal identity of a syndicate under this act, and in no other way?

Mr. Favreau: The act itself, of course, does not prevent the freedom of any individual farmer to join a group or a syndicate or to become incorporated. I said for the purposes of this act they are merely called a syndicate, but they remain three or four individuals, a group, for the purposes of benefiting or profiting from the advantages of the act. There is no question here of interference with any provincial act, as I see it, such as the farmers co-operative legislation of Saskatchewan or la société agricole du Québec.

[Mr. Favreau.]

Mr. Peters: My second question is, would membership in an organization, a co-op or a company be a bar to application for a loan under this act as a syndicate?

Mr. Favreau: No, Mr. Chairman; but they must contract, or make the agreement, as individuals. The fact that they are members of a syndicate under clause 2 does not prevent them from so doing, but they must act individually.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: And this is my last question: Does this mean that the incorporated syndicates will not be entitled to a loan under the present legislation, either as syndicates or as individuals?

Mr. Favreau: You are right, it is the object of this legislation to benefit the small man.

Mr. Grégoire: This would also mean that individuals would be unable to enjoy the privileges provided by the Companies Act to buy farm machinery under this legislation?

Mr. Favreau: Only as far as the legislation authorizes their incorporation. This is quite clear. For these people, the fact of benefiting individually or as a group under the present legislation does not stop them from availing themselves, for any other purpose, of the possibility to incorporate under some provincial act.

With regard to applying the civil code I can understand that the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière is worried. If I had the slightest doubt with regard to the legal capacity, in Quebec or any other province, either under the civil code, or the common law, being affected by that statute, I would worry too, as does the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière.

Mr. Martineau: Would the minister permit a question?

If he believed—

An hon. Member: Let him continue his remarks; wait until he finishes them.

Mr. Martineau: My question is quite relevant, and if the hon. member has some questions to ask, let him do so, but, as far as we are concerned, we shall exert our rights.

Therefore, my question is relevant and I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to call to order this hon. member who seems to disregard the standing orders.

Mr. Grégoire: He is never here.

Mr. Martineau: I am asking the minister whether in his opinion, minors without any legal capacity could obtain a loan under this legislation?

Mr. Favreau: I feel that the intervention of my colleague on this side of the house was quite justified, and that is why I presume that the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) grasped my intention. This is precisely the point I intend to develop.

I am satisfied, and I assume this responsibility as government adviser, that this bill affects in no way the contracting capacity of individuals to the extent where, in the province of Quebec, for instance, a minor is unable to enter into a contract, except, of course, as pointed out by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), when protected by the civil code in the absence of a burdensome contract and when a loan is granted in cases where only persons of full age may normally obtain a loan. This legislation presupposes the full application of the civil code of the province of Quebec, and the common law in other provinces. It seems clear that the legal capacity is not affected by this legislation. It provides, however, for standards which will guarantee to the crown the reimbursement of loans by stipulating in every case the joint responsibility of the commitment.

For my part I believe that nothing has been changed. Besides, it must be noted that in any legislation on farm credit, passed under any government, the administration thereof presupposes the capacity to contract, because under any act, if one borrows from a crown corporation, the loan will be controlled as concerns its validity, its legal competency, unless a statute is to the contrary—and here, the statute is not to the contrary, since normal laws concerning legal competency have been taken into account.

I do think that after this discussion the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière will be satisfied that there is no exclusion from application of provincial legal standards, and this is inferred from the act itself.

Mr. Paul: Would the minister allow me a further question?

Mr. Favreau: Certainly.

Mr. Paul: If, in clause 2 (i), after the words "between not less than three individuals", the words "having the legal capacity of contracting" were added, would that not make the text more intelligible? This is not obstinacy on my part. My interpretation of the civil code or the common law may be too narrow or too literal. If we added "having the legal capacity to enter into an agreement", that would not quite clarify the situation, as the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue said so rightly a little earlier.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I respect the views of the hon. member and the reasons which lead him to make that suggestion but speaking personally as a civil law expert, I would much prefer not to include it because I think it is paying a greater tribute to civil law to presume that it applies rather than to have the federal government interfere by including a clear reference to the capacity.

Besides, if we had a reference to the capacity to enter into an agreement, that might be taken in some quarters as a federal responsibility for having mentioned it, and failure to mention the other provisions which protect minors and adults in some other sections of the code, might be thought to be excluded.

I am not saying they would be, but personally I feel much more at ease with a statute which fully supposes application of the Quebec code and the common law in the provinces of British tradition.

I think that under the circumstances we can agree on that.

Finally, there remains only to mention the reference to co-operatives found in clause 2, subsection 1, paragraph (c) subparagraph (i) (A). If you read the text closely, you will note here also, that there is no question of interference in the organization of existing co-operatives. It is only a matter of stating clearly that, even if they belong to a co-operative, that is a group of people engaged in collective farming, the said members will be able to take advantage of the act if they agree to do so individually.

In other words, as the first part of the subparagraph refers to a person who independently engages in farming and may take advantage of the act, there is reason to fear that this will exclude those who operate farms as a group, that is, in agricultural co-operatives. It is stated that this may not be an independent operation, but as long as the member of a co-operative agrees to commit himself individually with the other members of the group, we shall nevertheless allow the man who is not an independent farmer to take advantage of the act.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, it is just a matter of making the necessary distinctions, but I think this has been a useful discussion, since it has enabled us to clear up some points that were causing concern.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the minister whether he thinks the words "and in accordance with the provincial statutes in such cases" could be added at the end of paragraph (c) of subparagraph (A)?

Mr. Favreau: With due respect for my excellent friend who has just made this suggestion, I must answer that here again there is no possibility of interference with the regulations of co-operatives as such.

It is only stated that the fact of belonging to a co-operative which has its regulations will not prevent a person from taking advantage of the act as an individual. The word "co-operative" is only used as a reference to those who engage in farming independently. That is the only reason.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Clause 2 deals with the establishment of those farm machinery syndicates, but it does not provide for cases where it would be advisable to dissolve such a syndicate, even though only made up of individuals. If, for example, three individuals buy some rather expensive farm machinery and one of them dies six months later his legal heirs are responsible for the total debt made by the deceased, but his wife is unable to continue to operate the farm because the children are too young. Then, the legislation should provide for the dissolution of such a syndicate.

Does any provision deal with the dissolution of a syndicate?

In other circumstances it may happen that three farmers disagree and that they wish to dissolve their syndicate.

Does a clause of the regulations deal with this matter? I am asking the minister if he intends to include such provisions.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, my attention has been drawn to clause 9 concerning the regulations to be passed and I am advised that pursuant to subparagraph (A) of clause 9, such cases will be provided for in the syndicate contracts so that, in case of death, the debt will be charged to the heirs who will not be compelled to pay immediately, the syndicate being, after all, reduced but not dissolved. This is provided for under the regulations.

Mr. Grégoire: Perhaps, but you say that the heirs will still have to pay. In spite of all the regulations you may set up they will have on their hands a debt equal to the full amount of all the machinery purchased if they do not intend to carry on.

In such a case there would be no regulation allowing an heir to withdraw from the syndicate.

Other things may happen. Let us say that such a syndicate is formed and that one of its three members is neglectful, misuses the machinery or causes damage at the expense of his partners, or let us suppose that, on the brink of bankruptcy, he removes some parts from the machinery. In such a case, the other two members would seek to break the partnership, but there is no provision in the legislation concerning the dissolution of a syndicate. Nothing is foreseen with respect to the responsibility of each member, if a syndicate is disbanded, nor concerning the equity each of them would be entitled to, considering that by then they would have an interest in the machinery.

Does the minister not feel that certain regulations should be established before the bill is passed in case the dissolution of a syndicate becomes unavoidable, necessary or advantageous for the farmers concerned?

Mr. Choquette: This is not a companies act.

Mr. Grégoire: The hon. member for Lotbinière says that this is not a companies act. It is so in the sense that all members of a syndicate are jointly and severally responsible for the whole company, so that if one member does not live up to his obligations, the other two are jointly and severally responsible.

If an individual dies, the heirs or the wife of the deceased, who do not want to continue the operation of a farm, are nevertheless still jointly and severally liable, under the will, unless they refuse to accept it. Or if one of the three individuals uses the machinery in the wrong way, the two others are still jointly and severally liable for the machinery as a whole. Nothing is provided to meet those conditions.

It is provided for the setting up of syndicates which are not real syndicates, since none of the three participants is protected. None is protected; the three of them are jointly and severally liable. If they want to withdraw from the company, they cannot do so either, unless they are still jointly and severally liable.

There is no regulation of the Canadian parliament, nor in any civil code of the various provinces, or in the common law which provides that heirs are held responsible for unattested commitments of the deceased or the testator.

I would ask the Minister of Justice to provide at least for those cases, because I feel the poor farmer does not always think of all those legal subtleties of which he is unaware and which might raise serious problems for him. All he wants is to obtain money in order to purchase the machinery he needs. It is all very fine, but he will not think of all that.

As legislators, it is our duty to provide for the future.

I admit that if the minister truly wants to have this legislation passed—naturally the Farm Credit Corporation is subject to the civil code of the province of Quebec like anybody else—I understand it is not absolutely necessary to include a special provision in the bill, but if a company or partnership is to be set up, at least let there be an appropriate provision authorizing the parties concerned to dissolve their partnership, or company; in other words, let us make such a dissolution possible since there is no provision in this bill for such a contingency, except clause 9 which foresees the establishment of regulations concerning such a possibility. But this clause 9 will only constitute a way out for all the objections which can be made in this house. The minister might as well say that clause 9 will provide for a regulation stipulating that the corporation will not be allowed to make loans to those minors who are not protected by their tutor; again, he might say that clause 9 will provide for a regulation which will answer the objection raised a while ago by the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau).

In all the bills submitted to the house, there is a clause corresponding to clause 9 in which internal regulations are dealt with. But we are now dealing with more than an internal regulation when, through a specific and explicit clause, the setting up of a so-called syndicate is provided for, which syndicate is compulsory and binding, and when the dissolution thereof is not even provided for.

I am asking the minister what he intends to do in such a case.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I think that the Minister of Agriculture will soon announce the projects of his department having regard to the provisions of the contract.

But I must simply say this: if we insist so much on keeping civil law in the province of Quebec and common law in other provinces, we must consider with composure the consequences of the administration of the legislation now under study.

In all cases where there is an agreement or a contract for the reimbursement of funds, the agreement or contract are entered into so as to protect the estate of the party to the contract, and this is quite normal. Then in case of death, the heirs are responsible for the indebtedness. There will always be a way for those who will decide not to go on with the farming business—and they might be the exception—to give up, as heirs, their share in the undertaking, and it is normal that the heirs who benefit from the legacy be still responsible for the debts, if any.

But what I feared a little earlier in this matter—and I thought the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) was talking about that—was the possibility that a loss be incurred through the obligation to reimburse as soon as the death occurs. That eventuality does not arise. In a little while the minister will explain how he intends to protect those who will take advantage of the provisions of the act.

I say it again; the situation, except for a few improvements that regulations might bring, is exactly the same as in the case of three persons who commit themselves in their own interest, as well as in the interest of those who some day will be their heirs.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, on this I would like to take up the Minister of Justice and remind him that when three persons, in the normal course of business, make an agreement, form a syndicate, or incorporate, they are liable for the sums subscribed to the company, and that leaves out their personal possessions, which are inexistent in the present case.

At the present time there are people who will commit not only what they have invested in the syndicate that has been formed or in the company, they will even commit their personal belongings, their estate, in brief, what they will leave their children or their wife. This cannot be compared to the case of which the minister spoke, where three people formed a legally incorporated company. Moreover, the Minister of Justice is fully aware of the situation.

In the case we are considering there is no legally incorporated company. It is just an agreement.

I heard the minister state a moment ago that it is an agreement aimed at protecting the inheritance of those who enter into it.

That is true. But there is an existing convention and it is legal only between the government and three individuals, or four and even more if necessary, but while those three individuals have to pass jointly and severally a convention with the Farm Credit Corporation or with the loan company, between themselves, there is no convention and they have no protection between themselves or one against the other.

There is no section in this bill to protect the participants. The minister said a while ago that when a farmer dies, it is obvious that his heirs will keep paying. But if there are no young people in the family, or if the heirs are too young, and if the mother cannot go on operating the farm, then, the widow or the heirs can sell the farm and go to live in the city. However, they will still have to keep paying for the part of the machinery for which the father has assumed the responsibility, while the two other partners will profit from the estate. That mother, a widow, being no longer on the farm to take advantage of the machinery, will still have to pay under this bill.

I see the Minister of Justice discussing with the Minister of Agriculture. The latter must realize that there is a problem for which a solution must be found before we vote. I am not against the principle of this bill. I do not oppose the bill and I do not wish to talk it out. In proof of this, I voted this afternoon with the Liberals on the amendment.

For instance, I was thinking that while in committee, after having told the minister that we were supporting the bill, we could perhaps help him to improve it. I have always said that I was not a member of the opposition but a member of parliament and as such, I was ready to vote along with the government whenever a proposed measure was sound. This, I have shown in the past. Whenever there is room for improvement, I am willing to help.

I think there would be room for improvement there, for instance in providing for accidental cases. The Minister of Justice is well aware that the words "accidental cases" are to be found in the civil code, that is, fortuitous cases which arise unexpectedly and which alter the course of events.

Now in those fortuitous cases which may present themselves, as the bill does not in any way provide for the dissolution of such a syndicate, which exists neither legally nor in any other way, but only by the will of the Farm Credit Corporation—the minister might perhaps add a clause to provide for the possible dissolution of such a syndicate. There may be some rules or regulations which could be set up, under which the Farm Credit Corporation would be committed to find a third individual to replace the one who died, if his heirs wanted to withdraw from the agreement. This is my suggestion. The minister could provide that in a case of demise or in cases like those I mentioned just now, or again if one of these three individuals would squander or misuse in bad faith what belongs to the three of them, the Farm Credit Corporation could undertake to find a third person to replace the deceased or the other who had dilapidated what belonged to all three. Thus, the three individuals would be protected.

But I think that before the legislation is adopted, the minister should provide for the case of an illegally existing corporation or syndicate that would have to be dissolved; such an accidental case may be due to chance. I should like to have the advice of the minister on this matter.

[Text]

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has posed a very good question. Perhaps I should outline first how this is handled under the British system, although we think there are ways of improving on this method. Under the British syndicate system when one of the members is deceased six months is allowed for the remaining members to buy out his share, or find a new partner. If that is not possible the syndicate is dissolved. I think clause 9 of their act covers this situation.

We realize that there must be quite a bit of flexibility in this regard. We feel the 20 per cent down payment should be set out. We must bear in mind that such a share is in fact an asset of the estate, and that if there were originally more than two partners it would be in the interests of those remaining to find a buyer. When we were debating this matter before the hon. member for Cariboo raised the point that possibly these loans should be covered by insurance. We are investigating this matter and it may be that provision can be made for coverage by insurance. If this is not possible, then the matter will be covered in the regulations. The farmer would pay 20 per cent down, the machine would be properly depreciated and his estate would have an asset. It seems to us that the estate would be able to sell the asset at its properly depreciated value and that there would be no loss.

The hon. member is assuming that there are only three people involved. There are quite likely to be more, so the interest of one farmer might be 25 per cent or 20 per cent or as low as 15 per cent. I have explained how the matter is handled in the regulations in Great Britain and we think we can set up machinery to handle it in a better way than the British do. I might also say that the British syndicates are not government syndicates. They were formed by the farmers themselves under the auspices of the farmers' union, and in the last few years the number of syndicates there has been doubling. They were able to hurdle all of these problems. So far as this point is concerned we think we can improve on the method of handling it in the regulations.

Mr. Baldwin: England has a unitary system. There is no division of powers there.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, several minutes ago I intended to ask for some clarification of what is meant by "an agreement in writing" in clause 2(c)(i). I should like some clarification of what the Farm Credit Corporation is going to accept as an agreement in writing. Perhaps I should read the clause to the minister so that what I am talking about will be completely clear.

(c) "farm machinery syndicate" means an association formed

(i) by an agreement in writing, approved by the corporation...

What I want to ask is, what kinds of agreements is the corporation going to approve? The Minister of Justice dealt with the matter partly when he said that any group of individual farmers who met the qualifications for being farmers under the act could in fact be recognized as a syndicate. However, in following his remarks I took him to mean, and I certainly hope I am wrong, that there would be no possibility of farmers organizing themselves either into co-operatives or into companies for the purpose of borrowing money from the corporation. It seems to me that this prohibits a very clear and tidy way of recognizing a legal entity so far as the government and the corporation are concerned.

To suggest that a co-operative as such, or a company formed by a number of farmers, cannot go to the corporation for a loan is severely limiting the function of the provisions of this legislation. In Alberta in the past few months, for example, the government there has made some progress in setting up what they call farm machinery pools or co-operatives. This legislation would be very useful in providing the credit that these co-operatives or machinery pools would need. But now we are told by the Minister of Justice that the individual members of these co-operatives or machinery pools already set up in a formal way and supported and assisted by the provincial government will have to proceed to form themselves into a syndicate or, in other words, set up another kind of entity for the purpose of obtaining credit under the provisions of this legislation.

It seems to me that the government is doing itself a disservice by ruling out the possibility of having the Farm Credit Corporation recognize farm machinery co-operatives as a legal entity to which they can extend credit. I was really disappointed when I heard the Minister of Justice make that statement because I think that the provisions of the bill for setting up these entities have been made flexible enough that it would not be mandatory for groups of farmers who want to avail themselves of the legislation to set up a co-operative or establish a corporation formally. Therefore the interpretation of "syndicate" is useful, but then to rule out the possibility of extending credit to these formal legal entities, if I may call them that, is, it seems to me, doing a disservice to the government and to the corporation which will be administering the legislation.

I do not believe an amendment is required to clause 2, subclause (c), to give effect to what I am suggesting because it clearly refers to an agreement in writing approved by the corporation. Therefore the corporation ought to have the right to approve the kind of formal agreement that is necessary for a number of individuals to form themselves into a co-operative. If we could have an indication from the Minister of Agriculture or from the Minister of Justice that they are going to accept as a proper agreement for the purposes of this legislation the very formal arrangements that are necessary to set up a co-operative or a corporation it would be a considerable improvement, because all of the other requirements are provided for in clause 2(c) (i) (A) and clause 2(c) (i) (B). Clause 2(c) (i) (A) uses the words "who are engaged in farming independently of one another" and clause 2(c) (i) (B) uses the words "the principal occupation of a majority of whom is farming". Therefore there are plenty of provisions to make sure that the membership of the co-operative or corporation is made up of bona fide farmers.

I really am disappointed, Mr. Chairman, and I hope that the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Justice will reconsider their stand in ruling out making credit available to legal entities that have already been established.

May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, of course we would be pleased to consider all these things. The bill is set up for the purpose of lending money to individual farmers. Co-operatives can use the industrial development bank to obtain loans, but this legislation is designed so that farmers may form a partnership which will be known as a syndicate. It will be composed of three or more farmers and they will be able to purchase machinery as a group. We considered co-operatives and other groups but we felt that the bill should be designed along the lines of the British syndicates and should deal specifically with individual farmers. Any farmer who belongs to a co-operative or limited company can still participate individually under this legislation with other farmers. This was the way the bill was designed. We would hope that hon. members would let the bill operate on this basis, and after we have had a look at how it operates for a year there would be no reason why the legislation could not be sent then to the agriculture committee so that amendments might be made in the light of the experience gained in the operation of the legislation for a year.

Mr. Douglas: Between now and the time the minister brings this bill back to the committee of the whole house, would he not consider sending it to the agriculture committee, as there are a great many defects in it which I am sure have not been fully considered by the department? I think we will spend a great deal more time than is necessary trying to discuss it in committee of the whole, and if in the interim the minister considered sending it to the agriculture committee he could probably save himself and the house a great deal of time.

Mr. Hays: I am sure the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam would like me to answer his question this evening. I was not a member of the house at the time the Farm Credit Corporation was formed. At that time my party was in opposition and thought that bill should go to a committee, but the then government did not feel so. The same thing happened with the farm stabilization act.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It went to a committee.

Mr. Hays: The then government also felt the ARDA program should not go to a committee. All these very important pieces of legislation did not go to a committee.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is not so.

Mr. Hays: They did not go to a committee, and I feel if I had been a member at that time I certainly would have supported that feeling, because there are many things we can iron out. We have been working on this legislation for nearly nine months. We have looked carefully at similar bills in other countries and we feel we have taken the best from all of them and incorporated it in this legislation. We would like to see it operate for a year, and then we would be perfectly willing to send it to a committee. At this point to send it to a committee would mean we would be threshing old straw.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before you call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman, could the minister not persuade his colleagues to bring on this legislation again tomorrow, so that we can quickly finish with it?

Mr. Hamilton: I do not know what the mood of the committee is, Mr. Chairman, but I think we are in a good working mood now, and I wonder if it would be agreeable to hon. members to continue with this debate until 10.30?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, we would not object to sitting after ten o'clock. On the other hand, I wonder if the Liberals are willing to continue until ten thirty o'clock. For some time the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) has been saying that he is anxious to leave. If the Liberals, and particularly the member for Lévis are agreeable, we will be happy to remain. The member for Lévis says that this is boring, but as far as we are concerned we are willing to carry on with our duty.

Mr. Guay: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to prolong the discussion. As usual, the member for Lapointe never gets things straight. I said that I was anxious to see this bill passed, and that this would be possible before ten o'clock if he would only cease talking.

Mr. Grégoire: The hon. member for Lévis knows very well what he was saying a while ago and he can surely repeat it without being embarrassed.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: If the committee is going to get anything done I think we should confine our remarks to the item before the house.

Mr. Baldwin: Are we still on clause 2?

The Deputy Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Baldwin: Then I want to—

Mr. Fisher: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, how can you continue to proceed when it is obviously ten o'clock?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader if the business for tomorrow will remain as announced last night?

Mr. Favreau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It was at the request of a great number of hon. members that I agreed to open up the estimates of my department tomorrow, so as to allow them to state their views on the matter of the consitutional amendment, otherwise referred to as repatriation of the constitution. I think it would be proper for them to be given a chance to do so, and for that reason there will be no change in the business as announced.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

SOCIAL INSURANCE—DISTRIBUTION OF BUSINESS CARDS BY TORONTO INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): The question I put to the Minister of Labour involves none of the normal partisan antagonism associated with questions asked on the orders of the day. But I am concerned by the fact that throughout Ontario the company I mentioned, the Federal Life and Casualty Company of 191 Eglinton avenue east, Toronto, Ontario, is circulating a business reply card which says:

> Just fill in the particulars and drop in the nearest mail box for free information on the federal social security plan.

The main message, on the other side of the card, begins with a bit of "jingles". It says:

> Free information. Do not delay. Fill out and mail today. Important! If you have received your social insurance number you can qualify for the federal social security plan. Pays for food, pays for clothing, pays for shelter. When you are sick, when you are injured; even a guaranteed income to your family after death.

Mr. Knowles: Everything but your farm machinery.

Mr. Fisher: The real crux of this deception is the insertion of the words "If you have received your social insurance number". What relation there can be between the social insurance numbers which were touted so thoroughly by the Department of Labour and what appears to be a private plan is beyond me, but obviously an unwary person getting such a card as this is almost certain to assume that if he replies he will receive some information with regard to a federal security plan which exists. While, as we know, there is a social security framework made up of various statutes and various funds, there is no such thing, to my knowledge as an overall social security plan which covers anyone who has a social security number.

Mr. Douglas: Playing with the word "federal".

Mr. Fisher: Of course; they are playing with the word "federal". If it were "dominion" then I suppose we would feel better. But since our compatriots in the Liberal party moved us on to the federal wicket a few years ago we have assumed that anything described as a federal social security plan is something sponsored by the government.

This kind of deception, it seems to me, should be met as soon as it is pointed out. I think there may be grounds for a warning from the post office authorities and from the Department of Labour. It is my understanding that it is a criminal offence to send deceptive advertising through the mail. I think a special responsibility rests upon the Department of Labour, because the whole basis of the deception in this blurb is the use of the phrase "social insurance number". All I am asking from the department is an assurance that they will check into this at once and see whether something can be done to put an end to it. It is apparent that a great many people in Ontario could be deceived, and if this company is operating all over the country it is possible there will be much misunderstanding and a lot of work for members of parliament trying to straighten out people who discover that the "federal social security plan" will cost them a great deal more money than they believed.

Mr. James A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) did not indicate earlier in the afternoon that this matter would be debated this evening. Therefore, it being almost six o'clock when I was informed that this question had been brought forward, there was very little time left for investigation. However, Mr. Speaker, I endeavoured to telephone the insurance company in Toronto in order to find out what the plan really is. I found they were not in the telephone book of last year, but they are listed this year. I was given a number at which to call the manager, and was informed at the house that they did not know anything about this person. I did ascertain that the Federal Life and Casualty Company is an old company, incorporated in 1906 in Battle Creek, Michigan. They have been operating in Canada since 1958.

There is no question that this is spurious advertising, when one examines the card. I have also been in touch with the superintendent of insurance, who informed me that up to the present time there have been no complaints in respect of this company. He would certainly like a copy of the card that is in the possession of the hon. member. If the hon. member would hand it to me I would be pleased to bring it immediately to the attention of the superintendent of insurance who would, I am sure, on examining the card advise the hon. member that this is not the proper type of advertising. They are taking particular advantage of their name "Federal insurance company" and are using our proposed federal social security measures in order to enhance their advertising capabilities. This matter will certainly be brought to the attention of the superintendent of insurance, and I thank the hon. member for bringing it to the attention of the Department of Labour.

AGRICULTURE—TURKEYS—REIMPOSITION OF QUOTAS ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that earlier in the day I raised a question in regard to turkey producers. I placed my question before the minister in this way: "Realizing that the minister has had recent consultations with the Canadian turkey producers in regard to their request for an embargo or curtailment of imports, would the minister say what his advice was to these people at that time?" I went on to say that this has been a contentious question and is of course very important to the turkey producers across the country. I was also prompted to raise the question because it had been raised on September 22 this year, as is recorded at page 8332 of Hansard, by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp), at which time there was no reply from the parliamentary secretary. I believe the minister would have answered the question today had Mr. Speaker allowed him to proceed. It may be the minister has not yet seen fit to meet these people, but I understand he did meet them.

It is my understanding that the importation of turkeys into Canada up to the end of August amounted to something in the neighbourhood of eight million pounds, whereas prior to this time, under the protection afforded by the previous administration I believe the total amount allowed into the country was four million pounds in one year. It is also my understanding that cold storage plants and the like are filled with turkeys and other fowl now, ready for the traditional Thanksgiving market, and the same situation will naturally prevail not too many months hence. It was also brought to my attention upon inquiry that the price of turkeys has dropped something like a cent and a half or two cents a pound since these imports have been allowed into Canada. This is a downward trend. I would imagine this would obviously result in a downward trend in other categories of fowl in this particular market for Canadian producers.

It seems to me I recall that about one year ago the chain stores had a method of using these particular birds as loss leaders, and the pressure of competition certainly made the purchase of such birds at this time of year very easy for the housewife. The producers are very concerned that the area covered by the embargo protection was lifted by the government, after it took many years prior to the change of government in 1957 to convince the government that such was necessary. But in 1957 the producers did succeed in this and we are now asking what advice the minister gave these people when he met them.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the situation as far as turkeys are concerned is this. I attended the annual meeting of the producers in Winnipeg and spoke to the executive there, and we went into the situation very carefully. I believe the original quota was put on in 1958. Eviscerated turkeys were coming in from the United States at a time when we did not have the know-how as far as evisceration was concerned. A quota was established of four million pounds. In addition to that there is now a duty of 5 cents a pound with 1½ cents a pound for the discounted dollar and 1 cent for freight. It is true that something over seven to eight million pounds of turkeys have been imported into Canada in the last few weeks, but this has dried up, as we hoped it would, as the turkey market in the United States firmed up.

These imports are tied in with a very wide policy of exports to the United States. At the same time as these imported turkeys came into Canada, 30,000 head of cattle were imported into Canada due to lower prices in the United States. They were able to move this way with all of their other meat products. There is about 20 to 25 per cent protection so far as turkeys are concerned and 5 to 6 per cent protection so far as other meat products are concerned.

It was the feeling of the government of Canada that with this protection the situation was still not serious enough to call for quotas because we had to consider the general agreement on tariffs and trade and make sure we committed no contravention as far as agriculture in Canada is concerned. In discussing this question with the turkey people, they informed me they would send me the resolutions passed at their annual meeting and would submit what they thought we should do about the situation. I have received only one communication so far, although I have written to them again and suggested that their requests should also be backed up by the farm unions and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, with whom they could have a frank discussion in connection with meat imports into Canada. They have not yet indicated whether they will be able to do so; nevertheless they did suggest that if we were able to impose a tariff consistent with value for duty at 3½ cents a pound on live turkeys they would be able to live with the eviscerated turkeys which came into Canada.

That is the situation at the moment. I am still waiting to hear from them but I can assure the hon. member that the government will be pleased to consider any further suggestions they have to offer.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.22 p.m.

3. Yes, the United States lake survey makes a monthly forecast of great lakes water levels. The latest forecast, that was made at the beginning of September, indicated that all of the great lakes would be declining in level during the coming months. For Superior, the forecast was for below average levels through the next six months; for Michigan and Huron, record low levels through the next six months; for Erie, levels below those of last year for the next six months; and for Ontario, levels below normal for the next six months.

4. While lower water levels in the great lakes have had repercussions which have translated themselves into hardships and financial losses, a considerable study would be required to estimate the extent of such losses with any accuracy. As has been announced, it is the intention of the government, acting jointly with the United States government, to ask the international joint commission to study measures which might increase the regulation of great lakes water levels. In the course of the commission's investigation detailed knowledge will be secured about the effects of low levels in the lakes.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister about two of the special committees which have been set up by the house but which have not been meeting. I am referring particularly to the committee on consumer credit which has not met since July 14, which I understand is now called for October 21, after an interval of over three months, at which 30 witnesses are to appear; and to the food and drug committee, which has not met since July 16 and has no date set, I am told, to meet again. These are important committees, and it seems to us that to refer questions to committees is a good way to deal with business provided that the problems are not swept under the rug by the committees.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of these committees is a joint committee of the house and the Senate. I would be glad to take up with the chairmen of both committees the question of an early meeting.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked for some information about a meeting of the food and drugs committee. I am informed that the steering committee of the food and drugs committee met and agreed to recommence the sitting of the committee on November 3 in order to conclude the hearings on the safety of drugs. My hon. friend may not have heard of that decision because I am also informed that the N.D.P. member of the steering committee did not attend the meeting.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Does he consider that November 3 is a reasonable date for the resumption of a committee that has not met since July 16 to conduct a very important investigation referred to the committee by the house?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not determine the procedure of committees. I suggest to my hon. friend that if his party's representative had turned up at the steering committee meeting, he might have been able to arrange for an earlier committee meeting.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—AGREEMENT WITH RUSSIA RESPECTING MILITARY AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the report at noon today that the Cypriot foreign minister has signed a no strings attached military aid agreement with the Soviet union, could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us whether Canada or the other countries contributing to the United Nations peace force were consulted or even informed of this very serious development by the Cypriot government?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Cypriot government is, of course, a sovereign power and has the right, if not, in the circumstances, the justification, to enter into such arrangements with other countries. The full nature of the accord between Cyprus and the Soviet union is not clear. In addition to certain kinds of weapons which were promised for a date which is not clear, there is also a question of economic assistance. I would want to know more about the agreement.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The main question I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs is, was Canada or other countries providing troops to United Nations forces informed or consulted in advance of this move?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think I have already answered that by the first part of my response, when I referred to the position of the government of Cyprus. Of course Canada knew, as did other countries, because this question has been widely discussed. I may say that only this morning the Prime Minister and I took occasion to point out to one of the parties that it would not be desirable to complicate arrangements of this sort.

CYPRUS—ARTICLE IN "MACLEAN'S" MAGAZINE RESPECTING CANADIAN FORCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Did he read the item published in the French edition of Maclean's magazine, which I mentioned last Monday, with regard to Canadian troops in Cyprus? Did he have the opportunity to check that article?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member suggested two days ago that I should read that article.

I have the article in question, but I did not yet have the opportunity to read it. However, I shall acquaint myself with it as soon as possible and reply afterwards to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Could the hon. minister tell us if "as soon as possible" will be after the next rotation of troops or at the beginning of the rotation?

Mr. Martin: I can assure my hon. friend that it will be before December.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—SUSPENSION OF LONGSHOREMEN BY INTERNATIONAL UNION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

Is he aware that the International Longshoremen's Association have arbitrarily, antidemocratically and illegally suspended until December 31, 1965, stevedores who wanted to change their allegiance to another union and that they will thus be losing the benefits they had accumulated under their pension plan?

What action does the minister intend to take to protect these Canadian stevedores from the dictatorship of the International Longshoremen's Association whose headquarters are not located in Montreal but in New York?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have made no investigation into the allegations made by my hon. friend. I will be glad to look into the matter, and if there is any authority under Canadian law to correct what he describes as injustices, action of that kind will be considered.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that the stevedores who have been thrown out of the International Longshoremen's Association and are deprived of the right to work in Montreal harbour are also being deprived of their unemployment insurance benefits? Is the minister aware of that?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I presume that if any members of the I.L.A. were expelled they were expelled under provisions of the constitution of the particular union, and there is no authority under our law by which the internal operations of any union are regulated by the Department of Labour. I cannot see, however, how any such action taken by any union would affect the benefit rights of any worker under the unemployment insurance law, but I will be glad to investigate any particular case my hon. friend has in mind.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I should like, Mr. Speaker, to direct another supplementary question to the Minister of Labour.

Does he know that these longshoremen were not fired by their employers in Montreal, but that it is the I.L.A. which is keeping them from working until December 31?

Consequently, according to the minister should these longshoremen receive unemployment benefits when they are kept from working not by their employers but by the I.L.A.?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has introduced quite a series of circumstances into his question, and I should like to investigate those circumstances in order to determine the benefit rights of the particular workers under the law. I would hesitate to give an offhand opinion on this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, about another supplementary question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has any further supplementaries perhaps he could put them on the order paper. This requires a detailed answer, and I do not see how the minister can be expected to answer on the spur of the moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, in all deference and with all due respect, I think that I should have the opportunity to ask the Minister of Labour some questions with regard to the situation now prevailing in Montreal.

I have only one other supplementary question to ask him so that he should know what detailed information to give the house. I do not want this information for myself, personally, but for all hon. members and the Canadian people as a whole, and more particularly the members of labour unions which are controlled and ruled by American unions.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put his last supplementary and we will finish with this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, this is my supplementary question. Is the Minister of Labour aware that the stevedores of the port of Montreal who wanted to exert their democratic rights and transfer to another union, have just been expelled from the international longshoremen's association, and by that very fact deprived of their right to work. Will the minister see to it that the law of this country is observed—rather than the law of the United States—our own law, which ensures freedom of union to all Canadian workers according to the standards set by our Canadian statutes?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that Canadian law with respect to the union rights of Canadian workers will be fully respected and fully observed.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

D.E.W. LINE—SITUATION RESPECTING LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister inform the house what is the situation with respect to the labour dispute on the D.E.W. line?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): If I may answer this question, Mr. Speaker, there have been lengthy negotiations between the parties, and last week end the only remaining issue was the wage dispute. With the assistance of the Department of Labour this issue has been referred to an independent arbitrator. We have appointed Judge Anderson of Belleville to arbitrate this final outstanding issue, and he will be meeting the parties this Friday in the court house at Whitby.

Mr. Lambert: A related question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of National Defence tell the house whether one of the proposals to deal with a possible strike was the flying in by the United States air force of American technicians to man the line if the Canadian workers walked off the sites?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be helpful for me to disclose any of the considerations that were entertained with regard to the possibility of keeping the line in operation in the event a strike had occurred. As I indicated to the house, some preliminary thought was given to that situation in advance of any developments.

Mr. Lambert: Will the minister agree that it is public and common knowledge, as clearly indicated in the Winnipeg Free Press, that this was one of the steps contemplated?

Mr. Hellyer: I am not in a position to confirm the accuracy of all of the information which is made public through the news media.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Labour. Is it true that prior to the union agreeing to the appointment of an arbitrator whose decision will be final and binding, the union members working on the D.E.W. line were told that unless they agreed to this they would be replaced by United States air force personnel?

Mr. MacEachen: I have no knowledge whatever, Mr. Speaker, that any such statement was made to the workers involved. My understanding is that the officers of the union itself had settled with the management all the other issues except this one, and both parties voluntarily agreed, in the absence of any intimidation, to submit this to the consideration of an arbitrator.

Mr. Lambert: May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister please inform himself on this subject, as to whether or not there was such intimidation or threats or alternatives?

Mr. MacEachen: I can certainly assure the hon. member that no such intimidation was employed by the Department of Labour. I shall be glad to inquire whether any such statements were made by other persons. I have no knowledge of any statement being made by any person to that effect.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to ask the minister this question. If he finds that these allegations are true, will he protest on behalf of the government of Canada against the armed forces of the United States being used as strike breakers in Canada?

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—REFERENCE TO ALLEGED ABUSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I wonder if his attention has been drawn to a letter which appeared in at least two Toronto newspapers, one of which was the Globe and Mail of this morning, from Mr. Robin Ross, registrar of the University of Toronto. Does the minister not feel this was an effective answer to the rather speculative and unfortunate stories that were being bandied about—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Moreau: —in connection with the student loan program?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I did see the letter, Mr. Speaker. Last week, after certain charges were made, my department got in touch with the authorities of the department of university affairs of Ontario, and I spoke to both the president and registrar of the University of Toronto. This letter makes it clear that, so far as the University of Toronto is concerned, they welcome the student loan plan and there is no evidence that has come to their notice of any abuses of the plan.

If I might I should like to take this opportunity to point out that under section 14 of the act there is provision for penalties against anybody abusing this plan. This section will be used if abuses come to light. However, the information I am getting from all over the country is that this plan is very successful.

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance with respect to student loans. What steps is the minister taking to correct the inaccurate schedules of repayment outlined in the brochure, and what steps has he taken to resolve the ambiguity which these schedules have caused? The minister said on Friday he was willing to consider exempting medical students from interest repayments during their years of internship. Would he consider exempting law students during the year in which they are articled?

Mr. Gordon: In answer to the first part of the question, I would think the discussion which has taken place and which has been reported in the press will pretty well clear up this difficulty. As to the second part of the question, I do not believe there is any great feeling that lawyers or prospective lawyers need this kind of financial assistance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: If they do, I will be glad to look into it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO TRAINING OF CANADIAN TROOPS IN GUERRILLA WARFARE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the type of fighting going on in the troubled areas of the world today, can the minister inform the house whether the Department of National Defence is training any of our troops in guerrilla warfare?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, they are not trained in guerrilla warfare as such, but they are given a considerable amount of training which would enable them to give a good account of themselves if they were called upon to act in that kind of environment.

COMBINES

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING AUTOMOBILE PARTS AND ACCESSORIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

Is the minister now in a position to answer the question I put to him on August 26 and 28, asking him whether he would deal with a brief presented to him by the national automobile products dealers association?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): This week, Mr. Speaker, I had an extremely interesting discussion with the national automotive association, grouping auto parts dealers in Canada and independent garage operators in Canada.

I must say that we discussed each and every one of the problems concerning them, particularly as regards the possible amendments to the administration of the Combines Investigation Act and I may say that a brief is already being prepared.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION TO PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can he can inform the house whether any negotiations are under way between anyone in the government of Canada and anyone in the governments of the provinces with respect to the transfer to the provinces of any part of the federal jurisdiction over the Indian people of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in my absence yesterday, while I was detained in Quebec by illness, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) asked the right hon. Prime Minister various questions concerning Indians in Canada.

I must, first of all, give the hon. members the assurance that there is no question of transferring the jurisdiction over the Indian people from the federal to the provincial governments. We intend, as a government, to maintain all the rights granted to them under the constitution on Indian affairs in this country. On the other hand, everybody recognizes that the Indians, being citizens living in various provinces, should benefit like any other citizen from certain provincial services. We feel that the extension of those services to the Indian people in the various provinces does not prevent in any way the federal government from maintaining its jurisdiction.

That is why, following the federal-provincial conference held in December 1963, it was decided, in co-operation with the various provinces, to call a federal-provincial conference which would deal only with Indian affairs in order to bring about a change in methods and to apply other and more appropriate methods so that the Indians might benefit from those provincial services; that conference was scheduled for the end of May. In view of the scope of the matter to be discussed, it was decided to postpone the conference until the end of October; it will therefore take place October 29 and 30 next in Ottawa.

As it so happens we shall be discussing measures that would enable the provinces to extend a number of provincial services to the Indians, on condition the federal government grant compensation. The very important problem of consultation on Indian affairs has been raised. I can assure the two hon. members and the entire house, that the present government will not make any major decision during this parliament before consulting the Indians themselves, as they are the first concerned in all these measures and, all the more so, provincial authorities.

I therefore think these various answers are such that both hon. members will be satisfied.

[Text]

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister would now answer the question I put to him, namely whether there are any discussions or negotiations under way now between anyone in the federal government and anyone in any of the provincial governments with respect to the policy matters described by the hon. gentleman in his reply.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I answered this question by saying that negotiations are now taking place between the federal government and the provincial governments, merely in order to extend provincial services to the Indians. There is no question of abandonment of federal jurisdiction as regards Indian affairs.

[Text]

Mr. Nielsen: One further supplementary question. Has the federal government held out to any of the provincial governments or representatives thereof any financial transfer to them in consideration of which they would take over these responsibilities?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, we are now discussing with the provinces compensation formulas for provincial services that would be extended to Indians. This is absolutely not a question of surrender of "jurisdiction" by the federal government. As hon. members know, such agreements exist in certain provinces, especially as far as education is concerned. Besides, that was the policy applied in the past by the Leader of the Opposition, and the present government is considering the extension of other services.

[Text]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Since the hon. gentleman has chosen to include a little fiction in his answer, I might possibly ask him this. Has this question of the provinces taking over responsibility for the education of the Indians or providing social welfare assistance been considered by several of the provinces, and have several of the provinces turned down the suggestion made by the federal government; and this within the last few days? Second, when the minister talks about the Indians being consulted, what consultation has taken place with the Indians? Are their rights to be bartered away without their being consulted in advance?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to have an answer, and if the hon. gentleman needs assistance from the Minister of Trade and Commerce it indicates how little he knows about the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I wish to state once more what I said a while ago that the government by no means intends to abandon its responsibilities in any matter falling under its jurisdiction. But the federal government wishes to make agreements such as those which presently exist with the province of Ontario and other provinces in the area of education. Under such agreements the provinces would extend the facilities provided for the whole population, in return for the payment by the federal government of a certain normal compensation.

Conerning the second question, I will tell the hon. Leader of the Opposition that no important decision respecting Indian affairs will be taken before the Indians themselves are consulted and accept it.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: That still does not answer the question. This dealing, or double dealing, has been going on for some time—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Would the right hon. Leader of the Opposition rephrase his question?

Mr. Pearson: He had better rephrase it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I suppose I should have said "This dealing between the federal and the provincial governments". Hon. gentlemen opposite have a fear of that expression "double dealing" which I never held. I want to find out the answer to this simple question. Have several provinces turned down the proposals made to them? Next, will the minister answer this. Have the Indians yet been consulted? Why does the government go ahead with this proposition without consultation in advance? That is what I want to know with regard to the Indians whose rights must be respected.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, no decision has yet been reached by the federal government. We simply engaged in preliminary talks before a conference which will be held at the end of October. This conference on Indian affairs will not be final, because no decision will be taken thereafter, by any government, and particularly by the federal government, before the Indians are consulted.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not seem to make myself clear. Have several provinces turned down the proposal? Will the hon. gentleman answer that question?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, it would be surprising if, before the federal-provincial conference to be held in late October I indicated which provinces will make a decision on a proposal they have not yet considered.

[Text]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a supplementary question too, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious the minister is being somewhat coy about disclosing—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the series of questions we have had on this particular matter, would the hon. member make his question short and to the point?

Mr. Howard: I thought I would be able to get away with at least as much as the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. In view of the fact that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is coy or evasive about answering questions—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Howard: —will he tell the house whether native Indian people will have the opportunity to participate in the federal-provincial conference at the end of October?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. Consultations at all levels will be held with the Indians after this federal-provincial conference and therefore, before any decision is made by the federal government.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Since the minister stated that he does not wish to disclose—and I quite understand that —what suggestions or proposals the provinces intend to submit, could the minister tell the house what is the position of the federal government at present and what stand it proposes to take concerning the Indians during the forthcoming conference with the provinces?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I explained it to the house in reply to previous questions.

[Mr. Tremblay.]

[Text]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister whether any provinces have proposed to the federal government that the federal government turn over the responsibility for administering Indian affairs to the provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: No, Mr. Speaker, not that I know of.

[Text]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING MEDICAL CARE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that rates under private medical programs such as M.M.S. in Manitoba and P.S.I. in Ontario are going up, will the government consider speeding up its proposed action on the Hall commission recommendation for a health charter for Canadians?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that the increase in rates of the doctor-operated medical plans in the various provinces is a matter which directly concerns me in my responsibility as Minister of National Health and Welfare. However, I should like my hon. friend to be reassured that I will do everything I can to speed consideration within the government of the recommendations of the Hall commission.

AIR CANADA

TRANSSHIPMENT OF CARGO FOR JAPAN TO FOREIGN CARRIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke asked the Acting Minister of Transport a question which appears at page 8530 of Hansard. In the absence of the acting minister I would advise that inquiries have been made of Air Canada and the following reply has been provided. Air Canada's policy is to transship via Canadian Pacific Airlines all cargo destined for Japan, Hong Kong and other points in the Orient.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Legal and other services—

1. Administration including the office of the superintendent of bankruptcy, grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, gratuities to the widows or other dependents of judges who die while in office and authority to make recoverable advances for the administration of justice on behalf of the governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, $2,109,600.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Chairman, I want to repeat here that if the estimates of my department are placed before the house today, it is because of my promise to allow hon. members to state their views on the way the Canadian constitution might be amended from now on, no longer by the United Kingdom parliament in London, but rather by the Canadian parliament itself, in other words, on the way to repatriate our constitution.

It has been agreed between the various parties, through all the house leaders, that there will be no general discussion today on item 1 of the estimates. The house will have the opportunity to discuss that in a fortnight.

How will it be possible to turn the document known so far as the British North America Act into a really Canadian document, by providing that the structures it sanctions might be amended exclusively in Canada? That is certainly the main legal question we are interested in as legislators.

The history of this undertaking includes already many episodes which have taken place during a long period. May I recall them briefly.

The first federal-provincial conference which discussed constitutional amendments was held in 1927. The then minister of justice, one of the great Canadians we have known, Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe, championed the cause and held the firm belief that the Canadian authorities should have the power to amend the British North America Act. At that time however, the opinions were much divided as to whether it was appropriate that this power should be given to us.

In 1935, a special committee of this house considered the problem but could not reach a definite conclusion. The matter was placed before a provincial conference during that same year, and in 1936, recommendations were prepared by officials. Once more, there was no agreement and it was impossible to act in a positive manner.

It was necessary to wait until after the war to resume the discussions. Following the amendments to the federative act in 1949, a constitutional conference with the premiers was called. A subcommittee of the attorneys general was set up. During two meetings they analysed all the aspects of the problem, but, once more, without reaching an agreement.

The attorneys general resumed the task in 1960 and 1961, in the course of four meetings. From these long consultations between the federal government and the various provincial governments emerged an amendment formula expressed in a bill. This bill was entitled: "An act for the amendment in Canada of the Canadian constitution". The bill was published in order that its principles might be discussed in all possible circles. However, last summer, after nearly three years, certain provinces were still reluctant about expressing a definite opinion concerning that formula, and others had expressed reservations.

Yet, one could see that everyone was truly desirous of reaching an agreement on an acceptable solution. That is why the prime ministers and premiers felt that they should go over the question once more during the federal-provincial conference held in Charlottetown early this month. The best way to report the results of the ensuing discussions is to read into the record the press release they issued following the Charlottetown conference.

I shall read from the official version in French but I have sent the official English version to the interpreters so that the text which will be read in either language will be exactly the same as the one which was approved by the prime ministers and premiers in Charlottetown.

The prime ministers and premiers affirmed their unanimous decision to conclude the repatriation of the B.N.A. Act without delay. To this end, they decided to complete a procedure for amending the constitution in Canada, based on the draft legislation proposed at the constitutional conference of 1961, which they accept in principle. An early meeting of the attorneys general of Canada and the provinces will be held to complete the amending formula devised by the 1961 conference, and to report to the prime ministers and premiers.

[Text]

The attorneys general have thus been given terms of reference for a meeting which is to take place in Ottawa on Monday and Tuesday next, and from which we hope to report to the premiers who will be meeting in the following week.

I do not think it would be appropriate for me at this time, in advance of the conference, to express my views as to how this long process of discussion and negotiation can be brought to a satisfactory conclusion. I am most anxious to hear the views and recommendations of members in all parts of the house. This is a matter on which we are all agreed as to the objective. As long as we cannot amend our own constitution there is a very real sense in which we lack an essential pillar in the structure of our confederation. There is, we all recognize, a deformity to be remedied.

It is equally clear from the history of the matter that the remedy involves genuine difficulties. Any satisfactory constitution requires in its amending formula a careful balance between the virtue of security, of constitutional safeguards, and the necessity of some flexibility in order to adapt to changing requirements. A federal constitution, of course, must achieve this balance within the framework of federal-provincial jurisdictions which are fundamental to the structure of the constitution.

Our predecessors have struggled with this problem for many years. I believe they have gradually moved us to a position in which we can look forward now to an agreed solution which will make our constitution Canadian. I know that is the wish of everyone in this house, and I can assure the house that the government will listen attentively to all the advice offered to it for this purpose, which stands far above any partisanship.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, the minister has said that our predecessors had struggled over this question, and I would admit quite quickly to this committee that I am joining in the struggle. However, the minister avoided a favourite term of one of his colleagues, the minister of defence. He did not use the words "new hard facts", which is one of the favourite clichés of the Minister of National Defence. So because we have no new hard facts to add to a most interesting constitutional development historically it makes an intelligent exchange difficult.

In the Rowell-Sirois recommendations there is what might be called a statement of purpose, and I think this would be a good place to commence my remarks:

> In the course of our work we have come to appreciate as never before the achievements of the fathers of confederation...By their achievements they laid the foundation of national unity and of the federal system, both of which our instructions enjoin us to respect. It is our hope, and we venture to say our confident expectation, that they accomplished these great things without laying on future generations the dead hand of the past and that they transmitted to us a constitution capable of development not only through judicial interpretation but through amendment as well, to meet the new situations and problems which were bound to arise...Canadians are so proudly conscious of the national unity which they have achieved and so respectful of the federal system that has made this unity possible that there may be some danger of their thinking of national unity and of the federal system in the abstract as having some special merits which make them desirable in themselves. We have endeavoured to keep before us at all times the goal of human welfare which should determine the character of both political and economic systems.

It is interesting to go back to statements which have been made, even though it was just over a generation ago, and try to recall the mood of the country at the time.

I am grateful for a chance to participate in this discussion, and I am also conscious, as anyone who has taken a look at the frustration, shall I say, or at the problems which have faced others through the years must be, that we today are joining in quite a company of greats. I am not going to catalogue them; the minister has mentioned one or two, and they include some of the great parliamentarians of Canada as well as some learned in the academics.

I feel that as a preliminary comment I might put this oft times obscure subject into perspective, or at least into my perspective. First of all, the British North America Act is a Canadian document. It was conceived in Canada and received a great deal of its impetus from conferences which we had 100 years ago in Charlottetown and in Quebec; and we, of course, are taking part in these celebrations. The B.N.A. Act was not imposed on a long suffering colony by an imperial master.

We are busy celebrating the anniversary now, and as the minister says, we are still debating how to detach the act from the statute books of the United Kingdom. I think the minister and most hon. members would agree that we should not be lured by simple or overly simple shibboleths, that all will be well in Canada if only the constitution is returned home. I have read this oversimplification.

The plain fact is that in 1867 when the act passed through its various stages in the United Kingdom parliament hardly a word was changed in the draft act submitted by Canada. At no time in the intervening years has that parliament objected to the policy involved or the subject matter of any amendment we have sought. Rather, plaintive cries have come out from the United Kingdom house suggesting to us that it is high time we performed our own amending functions. As a matter of fact, in reading the accounts of the passage of the British North America Act through parliament I came across a suggestion that several of the members were asleep. This fact, of course, would have no relevancy today. I also read that the subject succeeding the British North America Act in the United Kingdom house was on the taxing of dogs in the city of London.

I think it is safe to say that no one in this parliament, as the minister has said, objects to the plan to bring the constitution home. I hope it is safe to say that no one seriously thinks that merely by transferring the statute from one jurisdiction to another all our problems will be solved and we will usher in the promised land.

In passing it is interesting to recall that the move to call Canada the kingdom of Canada came particularly from the Quebec delegation. What a dangerous lapse into colonialism was avoided by the use of the word "dominion".

I have one or two questions I should like to pose to the minister. The opposition and the house is being asked to put forward views on a matter that really cannot be discussed constructively without a knowledge of the position of the government. The minister said that he wants to hear our views, but he will not give us his.

We have been told that section 91 is being examined. I want to ask, what is the government's stand on this section? Is the government prepared to surrender to the provinces powers allocated under that section to the federal parliament? If the government is not prepared to consider giving up powers, why is the section being examined? If the government is prepared to surrender certain powers, what powers does this include? I should like to know the government's position relative to section 91. I suggest that these are legitimate questions, without the answer to which parliament is placed in a very awkward position. I am aware of the communiqué from Charlottetown, but I am wondering what agreements were reached in Charlottetown in this connection.

Was it a condition of repatriation that section 91 should be looked into with a view to transferring certain powers from the government of Canada to the provinces, and did the government of Canada agree to them? Is the government preparing to concede certain jurisdictional prerogatives, or to accept prior recommendations from the provinces on matters affecting immigration, tariffs and monetary policy, as indicated in certain press reports? In short, Mr. Chairman, I want to know what is the government's policy. Is the government accepting the so-called Fulton formula in its entirety? How is it that what was not acceptable when the formula was first advanced, is now accepted, and what if any are the conditions of such acceptance?

The main problem we face, of course, as the minister said, is to find a formula for amending the constitution when it finally finds domicile here in Canada. I should like to recall that of the dozen or so substantial amendments since 1867, nearly all have come about because of the growth of the country and did not involve any infringement, in the narrow sense of that term, on provincial rights.

Sometimes a loose formula was used for consulting the provinces before seeking amendment. In law I suggest there is nothing to prevent this parliament from seeking and obtaining "any amendment whatsoever in the B.N.A. Act", to quote a statement made by Premier Jean Lesage in 1949. The accuracy of that statement was conceded by the then prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent, about that time. So this parliament could in law secure an amendment, or even repeal its sections guaranteeing the use of the French language, or provincial control of the schools. I am quick to admit that this is mere legal theory —in fact no government of Canada, I am glad to say, would dare abridge fundamental provincial rights in this regard. Most members would agree that this parliament should not possess the unilateral amending power it now has, but as a matter of political prudence it would not dare exercise.

The first task facing the meeting of the attorneys general is to agree on a definite and reasonable rule about consultations before seeking amendments that will become in every sense the Canadian constitution. As E. A. Driedger, the deputy minister of justice, said in the Canadian Bar Journal, volume 5, 1962:

> Our constitution, as in the case of the United Kingdom, consists in part of written material and in part of conventions and customs. The written material consists—partly of our own statutes and partly of United Kingdom statutes.

He then states:

The present situation may be represented by a circle divided into three segments. One segment represents the authority of the parliament of Canada to make constitutional laws. Another segment represents similar authority possessed by the legislatures of the provinces. The remaining segment represents the area of jurisdiction that is beyond the authority of parliament or the legislature; the sole power to make constitutional laws in this area rests with the parliament of the United Kingdom.

This is what we are trying to bring to an end. Then Mr. Driedger says:

In addition, the parliament of the United Kingdom has concurrent jurisdiction over the federal and provincial segments.

The problem of finding a suitable method of amending the constitution of Canada in Canada involves two things. First there must be transferred to appropriate legislative bodies in Canada jurisdiction over that segment of our circle that is now within the exclusive authority of the parliament of the United Kingdom. Second, we must remove from the parliament of the United Kingdom the jurisdiction it now has over this segment, and also the concurrent jurisdiction it now possesses over the areas included in the segments of our circle now falling within the jurisdiction of parliament or of the legislatures. At the same time, we must be careful to see that we do not now interfere with the powers that parliament and the legislatures have. We would not want, for example, an amending formula that would make it impossible for the provinces alone to amend their constitutions, a power they now possess under head (1) of section 92; nor would we want to take away from parliament the powers it now has under the various sections of the British North America Act that confer upon parliament power to amend the constitution of Canada in matters of purely federal concern. However, it should be pointed out——that there is some objection to the wide powers conferred on parliament by the new head (1) of section 91 and it is no doubt felt by some that if we do arrive at an acceptable amending formula there should be some change in the authority conferred by this provision.

This was made clear, I think, during the 1960 conferences.

In any discussion of such a subject it is important, I suggest, to distinguish between rights in a narrow or parochial or provincial sense and the basic rights of a culture or of a group. These latter rights, I suggest, include language, education and religion, to name but three. These are and must continue to be sacrosanct. The success of the early fathers of confederation, and I suggest they were successful, is, it seems to me, largely due to the fact that this difference was acknowledged both in the statute and, equally as important, in the mood and philosophy of the statesmen engaged in the task of making here in this land a viable nation.

If I may philosophize for a moment, I think this is the mood we have to have in Canada today, and if we have this mood nothing is impossible for us. Part of this mood was displayed recently in an extraordinary document. It is sometimes frustrating to think that some of the most interesting documents on the constitution and on the state of politics lately have originated not in this chamber but outside this chamber. I am going to recall the appeal for realism in politics published in May of this year in Cité Libre and the Forum. Among many other important things the authors say in considering the subject of federalism:

We believe in federalism as a political structure for Canada. However, we are not satisfied with the evolution of Canadian federalism in a number of areas. As this subject is being discussed ad nauseam nowadays, the mention of one typical area will be quite sufficient.

In those domains which the constitution has given to the jurisdiction of both Ottawa and the provinces, it is evident that plans must be developed jointly. Sharing could also be introduced, if necessary by constitutional amendment, in cases where the establishment of joint plans would permit the population to benefit from important external economies. But one thing is certain: the kind of haphazard political expediency which has inspired so many sharing schemes and federal subsidies for so long has got to stop.

Whatever may be the division of responsibilities between the provinces and the central authority, each must have a share of fiscal powers in proportion to the duties entrusted to it by the constitution.

I want to come for a minute to the so-called Fulton formula and in order to be accurate I shall list some of the main provisions quickly. One of the key provisions in the formula was that all 10 provinces must give their consent before the federal parliament could amend any section of the constitution dealing with basic provincial jurisdiction in the fields of education, language and property and civil rights. Another consideration was that sections dealing only with some provinces and not affecting others could be altered with the consent of the provinces concerned. The third proposal was that general amendments could be made with the approval of two thirds of the provinces provided those seven provinces represent at least half of the Canadian population. Parliament could enact laws in the jurisdiction of the provinces and vice versa provided there was agreement between both levels of government.

This brings to mind a topic that has been of close concern to me for some years. We must find a formula for a sensible delegation of legislation. The example I like to cite is one of very current concern in Canada. I do not think the chairman of the Toronto stock exchange would go as far as I am going to go but I believe that the 10 provinces should delegate authority over the transfer of stocks and bonds and so on. In other words, this country should be given the opportunity federally to enact the equivalent of the securities and exchange commission of the United States. This is the type of thing I think we have to be prepared to do if we want the discussions with the attorneys general when they are held really to result in something that will make the country work better.

In Le Devoir of recent date the great editor of that paper had something to say too about philosophy, and I think that in any consideration of constitutional matters it is worth while recalling his words to the house and putting them on the record. He said:

> There is...room for explicit recognition of the special position Quebec—in so far as it is the primary outlet for the French element in Canada—should occupy in the Canadian political organization. But the viewpoint here remains Canadian. One accepts Canada not as a makeshift thing from which one must free oneself, but rather as a political reality that has real value and that one wants to improve. This way of seeing is not unitary but federalist in nature. For it, the federal system is the one that best fits our geographic, historical, economic and political circumstances. Without wanting to preserve this system at all costs, the man thinking this way repudiates the defeatist and sweeping interpretations proposed by certain people to cover the history of the last century.
> This way of seeing things also takes into consideration the development that has taken place in Anglo-Canadian opinion during the last quarter century. Those who take this viewpoint believe it is possible and desirable to reform our federal system so that it will be efficient and acceptable for Canadians of both languages. They see this reform as the result of faithful conversations and agreements between the two groups. They'd like to achieve their objectives by way of objective dialogue rather than by means of the ultimatum. But they recognize, to begin with, that it is the Canadian order of things for which they are seeking a solution.

It would be presumptuous for me to say that I share this view. It is the view of one of the great moderates speaking in Canada today. But I accept wholeheartedly the premise and I think it should be said in this discussion involving the very heart of our country.

There is another suggestion I want to make, that when the attorneys general are meeting they consider a formula whereby the bill of rights of Canada, a very important document as it now stands, could become entrenched in the constitution. It should be incorporated into the constitution and it should be so entrenched that no change could be made without the consent of all the legislatures and the parliament of Canada. The bill of rights should contain the basic freedoms of religion, speech, press, assembly and association. It should also provide for freedom from discrimination on the grounds of race, colour or creed, freedom from arbitrary arrest and imprisonment and the guarantee of free elections within a stated period. I hope that when this is done, the day will come when concurrent legislation will be enacted in the ten provinces. Then this great formula will be very meaningful, in all the areas of our concern.

Technically and narrowly, Mr. Chairman, and I underline this, the easiest thing for a country would be to have one government or one superstate. However, we are not merely dealing with technicalities and a narrowly conceived formula. We are dealing with a way of life and all that that term implies in social, cultural and in the economic sense. It is for this reason the forthcoming conference which seeks to find this formula and not just bring a piece of paper back across the ocean—that can be done readily—must seek a formula in the same spirit as the men who got together in this country 100 years ago. I hope this does not sound maudlin, as I do not mean it to be. As I said earlier, if that is the type of spirit, and lacking ultimatums, lacking wildly extravagant charges and countercharges, lacking any blackmail or that type of thing, we can make this a viable land.

One of the great contemporary artists who has just completed his latest masterpiece, a new window for the United Nations, once said about his accepted task,

> There is so much work to do to get any result. To take a stained glass window and give it life, you have to embrace it, warm it up; you can't deceive God...Well, let's work; let's work.

I think that Mr. Marc Chagall's statement has application in the months ahead. We here, in this type of debate, a non-partisan debate, have a hard and serious responsibility and I suggest that we work, we work.

Mr. Brewin: I join with the hon. member for Royal, Mr. Chairman, in welcoming the opportunity afforded by this debate to discuss the vitally important issue of constitutional amendment. I agree with him that this issue, although it seems abstract to some people, vitally affects the human welfare of Canadians and may affect it for generations to come. We here in this party entirely agree with the objective stated by the Minister of Justice, the objective of repatriating the constitution of Canada and making it wholly Canadian. But this statement by itself solves very little. If we adopt the wrong methods in repatriation, and I believe we are in danger of doing so, we may seriously jeopardize the welfare of Canada.

I understand from the statements made by the Prime Minister in this house from time to time, that in the discussions that are to take place next week with the attorneys general of the provinces, the Minister of Justice representing the federal government will, to use the words of the Prime Minister, begin where the last conference left off. I remind the committee that the last conference left off when proposals were made for a formula for amending the Canadian constitution in Canada by the then minister of justice, Hon. Mr. Fulton, on December 1, 1961. This formula became known as the Fulton formula, although of course one should point out the formula was put forward by the administration of that day and supported by them.

This formula was, in fact, incorporated in a draft bill. This bill by section 2 provides, and this is the core of the proposal, that no amendment could be made to the constitution of Canada which affected any provision relating to the powers of the legislatures of the provinces to make laws without the concurrence—mark this—of the legislatures of all the provinces. If it is a fact, Mr. Chairman, that the government of Canada proposes to reintroduce this formula at the forthcoming conference with the attorneys general, then I say to this committee it is necessary to sound a solemn warning, at least a warning as solemn as I can make it.

The carrying out of this proposal has been described by Professor Bora Laskin, an eminent constitutional expert, as an unmitigated constitutional disaster. I adopt his language. Another picturesque phrase has been used to describe this proposal. It has been said, and I think rightly said, it would confine Canada for all time in a constitutional strait-jacket. The burden of my remarks today will be to urge, with all the force I can, that it is the duty of the government of Canada, representing all the people of Canada, to avoid this unmitigated disaster and to avoid unflexible provisions for the amending of our constitution.

To many people, Mr. Chairman, constitutions are inclined to be dull, legal documents. But it should never be overlooked that they constitute the framework within which all the activities of government are obliged to operate. They are particularly important in a country such as Canada where we have a federal state and where it is necessary to preserve a reasonable balance between adequate powers for the central government on the one hand, and adequate local autonomy to the provincial governments on the other. It is impossible for the wit of man to devise a distribution of powers and resources available to governments that will stand the test of time. As the first hundred years of Canada's history has clearly revealed, a series of problems have come within the purview of governmental action which were never even contemplated, and indeed could not have been contemplated at the time these constitutional provisions were made.

It is for this reason that an amending procedure in a constitution is absolutely essential, so that a constitution can be adapted to the changing needs of a growing society. We do not have a static society today. This was pointed out by Lord Sankey in a case in the judicial committee where he described the constitution of Canada as a growing tree and not a static document. He sought, by a judicial interpretation, in effect, to amend the British North America Act in the light of that view. But it is impossible to rely on a judicial interpretation as a means of amending the constitution.

A procedure of constitutional amendment which is absolutely rigid and is subject to the veto of small groups of people may condemn Canadian governments in the future to inaction and sterility in the face of serious problems. I remind the committee that in the last 30 years of our history it has been necessary to secure constitutional amendments to permit great social reforms and maintain reasonable standards of social security and a reasonable measure of equality across Canada. The British North America Act, for example, was amended in 1940 to add unemployment insurance to the list of items under section 91 that fall within the competence of this parliament. In 1951 the British North America Act was amended by adding section 94A which permitted the parliament of Canada to make laws in relation to old age pensions, although of course they had made some laws in that regard earlier. This provision confirmed that right. As this house very well knows, we have recently passed a resolution that seeks amendment of the British North America Act to permit the incorporation of survivor benefits in legislation with regard to contributory old age pensions. I should point out to the committee that none of these measures could have been considered or contemplated in 1867 when totally different social conditions prevailed. Yet had the formula which is put forward, described as the Fulton formula, been in effect and incorporated into law, the result would have been that the legislature of any single province could have prevented effect being given to the general consensus of all the other provinces in Canada in favour of such a constitutional amendment.

Let us take an illustration. I have nothing against the province of Prince Edward Island or its legislature. I understand it is one of the most picturesque and delightful provinces in Canada.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: Judging by its representatives in this house—and I know there is one applauding at least part of this speech—I believe the people of Prince Edward Island would be reasonable in their views about problems facing the people of Canada as a whole. But the fact of the matter is that in 1961 the total population amounted to 104,000 people, little more than one half of 1 per cent of the population of Canada. The total number of electors in the province is 57,000 out of a total number of Canadian electors of just over 10 million. The electors of the riding of York-Scarborough, in one municipal area of my province, number 162,000 or three times those of Prince Edward Island. The total population of York-Scarborough is 267,000 as compared with the figure of 104,000 which I have already given for Prince Edward Island. I am not trying to single out the province of Prince Edward Island. If I were discussing provinces which might present problems I certainly would not refer to Prince Edward Island. I am merely drawing attention to the complete absurdity of giving a veto over all constitutional amendments to the representatives of a province whose population is numerically less than that of some single constituencies in Canada. I think that even those with the greatest respect for provincial rights—and I myself have great respect for those rights—would acknowledge that it would be an absolute absurdity for a single constituency such as York-Scarborough, for example, to be given the power, by its votes, to veto a constitutional amendment for which a consensus of support had been secured across Canada.

I wish to make it clear, however, and in this I follow the remarks of the hon. member for Royal, that there are certain sections of the British North America Act and certain rights which could and should be entrenched in the constitution in such a way that their amendment except by the unanimous consent of the provinces would not be possible. These are matters which are truly fundamental to our whole confederation and with regard to which no change can reasonably be contemplated. I would mention, for example, section 51(a) which guarantees representation by provinces in this House of Commons; section 93 dealing with the right of provincial control over education; section 133 which deals with the right to use both the English and the French language in this parliament and in the courts. All these rights should be so entrenched that they could not be amended without the approval of the legislatures of all those provinces which might be affected.

To these rights should be added other fundamental rights which, unfortunately, are not embodied in our constitution and which I consider should be included before any process is finally accepted. I welcome and second the suggestion made by the hon. member for Royal that the fundamental rights and freedoms of individuals, most of which are to be found in the present Canadian Bill of Rights should be incorporated in the fundamental document of our constitution. I am sure that if the Leader of the Opposition, one of the main proponents of the bill of rights, were in his place now he would acknowledge that they are not part of our constitution at the present time. The bill of rights is merely a statute of this parliament which can be amended by this parliament; it does not control the activities of the provinces in any way whatever. I therefore join in urging the Minister of Justice to include in the proposals to be made to the attorneys general of the provinces a proposal that incorporation of these fundamental rights in the constitution of Canada itself should take place.

But despite the fact that these fundamental provisions which I have enumerated—and there may be others to be added to them—should be entrenched in our constitution with a real degree of rigidity, there are many other provisions with respect to the distribution of powers between the provincial legislatures and the federal government which are of such a nature that they may well require amendment in the future, and these should be amendable by a consensus of the provinces and the federal parliament. For example, there is section 92(13) of the British North America Act which, as the committee knows, gives to the provincial legislatures legislative power over property and civil rights. In this phrase "property and civil rights" there are no doubt included some purely local matters which particularly affect the local rights and cultures prevailing in individual provinces. But also included in this broad phrase "property and civil rights" are matters which from time to time require to be dealt with on the national level by the parliament of Canada if they are to be dealt with effectively at all. To give some illustrations, let me say there is a need for federal intervention so as to prevent fraudulent transactions in securities. Today the federal parliament has some dealing with this subject under the heading of the criminal law which falls within the federal power. There is also some provincial regulation. But there should be uniformity of legislation and administration across Canada in this regard. The hon. member for Royal has suggested this might well be done by delegation. I do not think we can rely on delegation. I believe an amendment is needed to deal with this problem.

Another aspect, one which is of urgent concern to farmers in particular, concerns the marketing of natural products. This, in some respects, is best suited to federal control especially with regard to commodities entering into export and import trade. Needed amendments in this field might well be prevented if there were a constitutional straitjacket such as is involved in what I call the Fulton formula.

We are expecting almost momentarily to have revealed to us the long awaited national labour code. I would point out to the committee that this code will be a national labour code in name only; it will apply only to industries which fall under certain of the specific heads of federal jurisdiction set out in section 91. It does not apply to nationwide industries such as steel and packing houses, for example. At the moment provincial governments and their agencies are forced to try to cope on a provincial basis with problems which are national in scope.

Another important aspect of our affairs with regard to which amendments may be required in the future is lack of legislative power in respect to the implementation of international treaties. The federal power in this respect is seriously limited under the terms of our present constitution. Our successors—and perhaps some of us who are here today—may well find it necessary to amend the British North America Act so that Canada may have full power to carry out the international obligations it assumes.

These are merely illustrations of matters which might prove forever incapable of adequate solution on a national scale if the inflexible form of amendment to the constitution is adopted. We all agree that the present provision for the amendment of the constitution is inadequate and out of date. We know that the only way to amend the constitution of Canada today, with the exception of certain matters covered by section 91(1) of the British North America Act, is by act of parliament of the United Kingdom. As long ago as 1926 the famous Balfour declaration was made after a conference, a commonwealth conference—I do not know whether they were called commonwealth conferences in those days. This declaration stated that the dominions were autonomous communities within the British empire equal in status and in no way subordinate to one another. We agree that since that day continuing reliance on the imperial parliament has been both anomalous and humiliating.

However, this form of amending process has at least one good thing to be said in its favour: It is flexible in its nature. It is a false and unwarranted doctrine that the British parliament would not act to amend the Canadian constitution without the consent of all the provinces. One just has to look at the recitals to the various amending acts to which the hon. member for Royal referred to see that in each case the act was passed by virtue of a resolution or request from the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in parliament assembled. There are no references to seeking the consent of any of the provinces.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I say that a suggestion that the British parliament would not pass any amendment to the constitution sought by the parliament of Canada is entirely without warrant; but—and this is the point I wish to make as clearly as I can—there is a grave danger that in removing this anomaly we will jump out of the frying pan into the fire. There is no reason at all why we should impose upon ourselves—and that is what we would be doing—the fetters of an unduly rigid amending procedure. The Fulton formula, as I see it, proposes this and even goes so far as to suggest that after we have locked ourselves up in this way we should throw away the key.

It is proposed that the amending formula, once it becomes law, can itself only be amended with the consent of all the provinces. I suggest that this is the doctrine of provincial rights run riot and it can only serve to destroy any truly workable federalism. After 100 years of living with a flexible constitution, albeit one amendable in another country, are we, in the name of deliverance from national bondage, to impose upon ourselves absolute rigidity in regard to constitutional amendment?

It is my view, and I believe it is shared by a great many Canadians, that the pendulum is swinging too far toward the assertion of provincial rights. It is perfectly true that under our federal system provincial rights are vitally important, and there may still be many fields in which decentralization is important and required. I have tried to make it perfectly clear that in our view these fundamental provincial rights and minority rights should be entrenched beyond the possibility of amendment without the unanimous concurrence of all the provinces. But the imposition of a veto for every province upon constitutional amendment of any significance whatever would be a damaging blow to a truly workable federalism and Canada's status as a nation.

There are two other main observations that I would like to make. I would like to know who are the government's advisers on this particular matter, because I think they have been receiving poor advice. Has the government consulted those people in our universities, for example, who have made a study of amending procedures in Canada and throughout the world? I do not propose to detain the committee by analysing the amending procedures of other countries. I merely assert—and this I believe is a fact—that the particular form of amendment proposed in the so-called Fulton formula is unprecedented anywhere in the world.

I have examined the amending formula in Australia, for example, where after an absolute majority in each of the federal houses it must be submitted to a vote of electors in each state. If in a majority of states—let us say, four out of six—a majority of the voting electors approve and if a majority of all the voting electors approve, then the amendment will take effect. But the point is that this is far less rigid than the formula proposed for Canada; it is far less exacting. But even so, it has been complained of by many constitutional experts as being unduly restrictive in practice in Australia. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we should have some witnesses from Australia to tell us how their amending formula is worked.

In the United States of America amendment may be proposed by a two thirds vote of both houses and ratified by the legislatures of three fourths of the states or by conventions in three fourths of the states. I have mentioned Professor Bora Laskin, an eminent constitutional expert. He made a proposal which I suggest should be very seriously considered by the government, namely that with the exception of the entrenched clauses of the British North America Act which I have already mentioned, a proposal for amendment should become effective when initiated by a two thirds vote in the parliament of Canada and by a vote of the legislature in not less than two thirds of the provinces, provided the population of the approving provinces exceeds 50 per cent of the population of Canada. Such a formula would provide reasonable flexibility and at the same time ensure that amendments could not be made unless the general consensus across Canada approved of them. I have looked at the constitutions of West Germany and India; they likewise provide for a consensus rather than a simple majority, and they do not give to the smaller units making up the federations the right to veto constitutional changes.

The point which I wish to stress is that before any formula for amendment is adopted, the advice of experts should be listened to. I call the attention of the government and the committee to a resolution that was passed by the association of law teachers in June, 1961, when they were considering the proposed conference of attorneys general to establish procedures for the amendment of the Canadian constitution. They urged that the conference should be requested to establish a procedure for public hearings, at which submissions and representations on an amending procedure might be offered, and which would provide for investigation and report on other federal amending systems. They pointed out in their brief that this was a matter of fundamental importance to all Canadians; and I suggest it deserves to be considered, not with a hasty, hole-in-the-corner approach but should be afforded the widest possible publicity and the widest possible consultation with qualified people.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, I wish to urge upon the government their responsibility in this matter. Constitutional reform in a great country such as Canada is not a matter of expedient policy at the moment; it is not something routine. Once it is adopted it is extremely hard to get away from. At the last conference a proposal was put forward by the federal government of the day which I have suggested, and others with more authority than I have, have stated, to be an unmitigated constitutional disaster. It seems to me that this formula is a basic surrender on the part of the government of Canada to some exaggerated views on provincial rights.

At the former conference the government of Saskatchewan, advised I believe by Professor Frank Scott, the former dean of the law school of McGill and one of the foremost constitutional experts in this country, opposed this formula. The government of Saskatchewan has changed, and my view is that the government of that province is not now so well advised as it was previously. I suggest that it is the duty of the parliament of Canada and the government of Canada to ensure that in our haste to repatriate the constitution and end the anomaly of its control outside Canada we do not make the grievous error of hamstringing future Canadians in respect of their constitution. I believe it is high time that the government of Canada started to stand up for the rights of Canada as a whole and sounded a less uncertain note in respect of excessive claims of provincial rights. I suggest that this conference would be a very good place to start doing that.

The government should repudiate the so-called Fulton formula and produce something much closer to what I describe as the Laskin formula, although I am quite sure that Professor Laskin would be the last to claim originality or finality in his suggestions. I therefore urge that at the forthcoming conference the Minister of Justice, representing the government of Canada, do a number of things. I will list them, Mr. Chairman. (1) He should propose to the attorneys general a modified formula which would provide for the entrenchment of basic minority rights but would enable amendment in respect of other matters on the basis of a general provincial consensus. I have explained more in detail what I mean by that. (2) He should propose to the attorneys general of the provinces that simultaneously with the repatriation of the constitution there should be the incorporation of a bill of rights in the constitution; and (3) that he should urge upon the conference the adoption of the proposal of the association of law teachers, namely that there be adequate consultation and public hearing before any formula be determined. Only thus, in my view, will we be able to use the words of what I hope will some day be the official national anthem of Canada. Only thus will we in Canada and this parliament be able to say that we have stood on guard for Canada.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member a question. I wonder whether he would elucidate this point of view. Does he consider the B.N.A. Act is a pact between the two founding nations, or an act which issued from a parliament which did not exist then?

Mr. Brewin: This is a matter very much debated, Mr. Chairman. I would say, legally speaking, that it is not a pact but an act of parliament. But certainly I concur in the view that it was an act which embodied the nature of a basic agreement between different parts of Canada and should be respected as such.

Mr. Valade: May I put another question. Does he not consider that the question of the future majority vote in the house is destroying precisely the spirit of the pact itself, which proves it was an act and not a pact? If you consider the argument of the majority vote, you are referring to the original pact as the act of a parliament which did not exist.

Mr. Brewin: I do not think the hon. member followed my proposal too carefully. I suggested that in addition to the two thirds vote of the parliament of Canada there should be the approval of seven out of the ten provinces representing at least 50 per cent of the population of Canada as a whole. I would point out to the hon. member that with that protection there would be reasonable flexibility; at the same time there would not be complete rigidity when any single province, no matter how small, could frustrate the general consensus among the people of Canada. I also hope the hon. member recognizes the point I made, that those fundamental rights with regard to education, religion, language and so on would be entrenched so that they could not be affected unless each one of the provinces agreed.

Mr. Valade: That is the letter but not the spirit of confederation.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I regret that I am not able to make such a scholarly speech as the ones which we have just heard from the hon. members who preceded me and who are experienced jurists. However, I should like to say a few words, first in the name of my party, and then in my own name, as a citizen of the province of Quebec.

The position of our party concerning repatriation of the constitution is not yet quite definite, except that we are 100 per cent in favour of repatriation of this constitution and that we believe all the provinces are able, among themselves, to come to an understanding which will permit the realization of this project in a friendly way and in a manner that can be accepted by the federal government.

Our party's attitude could be set out more specifically but, speaking as I do on behalf of our group, I shall limit myself to that statement of principle, because I am under the impression that we will have other opportunities this year to discuss this most important problem.

Mr. Chairman, a certain spirit was prevailing in Canada when, in 1867, a pact was signed by the various groups living in this country, but since we were not there, we do not know what that spirit was. However, anyone who does a little historical research will soon realize that it was some kind of spirit of compromise which was convenient for the parties concerned since, amongst other things, it enabled them to protect themselves against the immediate or remote possibility of invasion by the United States. The spirit which existed at that time must certainly have been such as I have just explained because, when things are considered logically, it is realized that, at the present time, Canada is a paradox, something irrational, anomalous and even absurd economically, socially and culturally. If Canada had wanted its own welfare, it could have made a decision at that time and I am convinced it would have decided to unite with our neighbours below the 45th parallel since, logically, it was an easy way to clear themselves of the prerogatives that had been granted their forefathers and which they had accepted. However, the citizens of the country decided otherwise. They decided to unite in a federation comprising various aspects which are considered more or less appropriate today.

If we listen to extremists, one side as well as the other, if we listen to those politicians who are interested in obtaining a vote rather than in settling a problem, it becomes obvious that the matter of repatriation of the constitution, just like the very existence of the confederation, is very complicated indeed. It should be divided into various points, but the participants always see it as a whole. Let me explain. The hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) asked if it was a pact between two nations, between two founding groups, or if it was instead a federal law governing a group of provinces. Well, in my humble opinion, what happened in those days does not matter. I feel that it would be in order to differentiate between the union of two nations and that of two ethnic groups, or of two founding groups or groups of provinces, which form part of this confederation. We cannot confuse both; we cannot say that the two equal groups must be dealt with on an equal footing. In my opinion, this is impossible from a human, geographical and even logical point of view. It is absolutely impossible to reach an understanding on a level of equality, because we are not equal.

On this point I would like to take issue with the comments the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) made when he spoke about Prince Edward Island. It is impossible to ask here that Prince Edward Island be treated on an equal footing with the rest of Canada. However, since the union of those provinces is a pact, or should be a pact, when the constitution is repatriated, or when it must be repatriated, then the provinces or the signatories of the pact must put forward their requests.

In the case of the province of Quebec, in 1864 and after that until 1867, when a confederation with the rest of the country was contemplated, the Quebec citizens were very reluctant, because they saw practically no advantage.

However, since it was at the same time a political action, the political leaders of that time decided to suggest a compromise which would be acceptable to the citizens of the province of Quebec as well as to the rest of the country.

That is why at that time mention was made of equality of languages, provincial control over education as well as a few other prerogatives granted to the provinces. Those were prerequisite conditions on the part of Quebec for a partnership in confederation.

If one considers the problem facing Prince Edward Island, one realizes that it was similar, without being identical. Prince Edward Island knew that because of its geographical situation and small population, it would be absorbed by the rest of the country if some particular points did not favour in a certain way, and perhaps at the expense of other areas of the country, the citizens of Prince Edward Island. In fact, it is only with the assurance and guarantee that those specific points would be granted them by the central government that the citizens of Prince Edward Island accepted to sign the agreement which resulted in confederation.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that one should not be, as suggested by the hon. member for Greenwood, a die-hard democrat. Specious arguments, such as the ones he advanced about proportional representation, should not be accepted, because the same vital interests are not at stake. The vital interests of a province, or even of a city such as the one represented by the hon. member, may extend to a metropolis, a region, but when a country as extensive as Canada is concerned, one should not, in my opinion, confine oneself to the purest form of democracy, but to a logical argumentation liable to satisfy most if not all parties concerned.

Mr. Chairman, some time ago my opinion was sought on the concept of two nations. Even today a party colleague asked me the same thing. A few months ago, at the request of a newspaper representative, I wrote a brief article on this subject. It goes without saying that this is my personal opinion which may be shared, but not necessarily, by others. This is what I stated at that time:

> This opinion is held by those in the van and, according to the reaction of the Anglo-Saxon group, it might well be prevalent in a few years. Should it so happen, it would most surely meet with the approval of the majority of French speaking Quebeckers.
> As for me, I feel that both nations should be fully recognized on the federal level. With regard to the relations which should exist between the various part of Canada now called "provinces", I feel our concept of the matter should change.
> I could easily see, in order to foster economic integration, the forming of five zones which, for practical purposes, could replace the provinces. These new economic zones would be: the maritime provinces, Quebec, Ontario, the prairie provinces and the western provinces.
> It is only under conditions of this type that the concept of two nations across Canada could really be considered as a possibility.

It must be obvious, Mr. Chairman, that I make a very clear distinction between the different objectives sought, at the present time, by the various provinces in confederation.

I can quite understand why all Liberal members are sometimes astonished by the attitude taken by the province of Quebec. As a matter of fact, we from the province of Quebec are astonished by the attitude taken, for instance, by Premier Lesage, which is contradictory to the lines he defended when he was in this house and when he was fighting for a political party rather than for an ideology. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I am convinced that today political interests have a more important bearing upon the opinions expressed by our leaders in Quebec than the specific interest of the province itself. At this moment it is great to be approved by certain newspapers, certain groups of intellectuals, certain pressure groups or even by extremists who are found mostly among teen-agers and students, who are a political capital which must be tended to in view of an electoral campaign.

An hon. Member: A federal election campaign?

Mr. Marcoux: A provincial election campaign. However, when it comes to setting out clearly Quebec's needs and demands, it is often obvious that even politicians find it hard to explain them or at a loss to do so. That is why we, of the province of Quebec, sometimes witness reversals of opinion which can only be explained by a certain amount of political ambition.

These remarks are not intended as a criticism. It is just that the more experience I get about politics, the more I realize that one has to have a minimum of ambition to remain in politics. Be that as it may, when the problems involved are as consequential as the ones we are dealing with now, I feel that the people of Canada should at least be told about them so that they may form an opinion as to Quebec's demands.

Mr. Chairman, earlier the hon. member for Greenwood spoke about the unanimity of decisions as it is set forth in the so-called Fulton bill. I have here the Fulton bill which does not seem quite in agreement with the opinions expressed by the hon. member for Greenwood.

It is said in that bill, that under certain circumstances, in order to amend legislation existing at present in the provinces, or the legislation or privileges granted to those provinces by our constitution the agreement of all the provinces will be necessarily required.

Section 3 of part I provides that when a piece of legislation affects one province more than another, or affects only one group of provinces, excluding others, it cannot come into effect without the consent of the legislature of each province to which that provision applies.

In my opinion this is a very useful concession made to the provinces which would like to take advantage of it.

When he speaks of the majority of the provinces and of at least 50 per cent of the population, he is merely referring to section (5) of the same part 1 of the Fulton bill which states—I shall skip some of the details of the clause—that no law enacted under the present part shall be put into force without the co-operation of at least two thirds of the provincial legislatures, which represent at least 50 per cent of the Canadian population, according to the last general census.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that these guarantees are sufficient to enable all the provinces, including Ontario, to sign a new confederation agreement or to agree to the constitution being repatriated.

When he speaks of the rights of the minorities I do not know to what rights he is referring. As far as I am concerned I have never recognized, and I still do not recognize, French Canada or French Canadians as being a minority.

At this point I should like to quote an opinion expressed by Mr. Eugene Forsey, who happens to be very friendly with the group of the hon. member for Greenwood. He said this:

> The actual recognition of the French partner is the price we pay to preserve Canada and if the English majority is not willing to pay that price, it is because fundamentally it does not really want a united Canada.

Personally, Mr. Chairman, I endorse this statement of a prominent English speaking Canadian and I point out that as far as minorities are concerned, any minority might be mentioned except the French Canadians. French Canadians are not a minority group. As I said earlier, their group must be on the same footing as the other one on the federal and the cultural level, maybe not necessarily on the economic level, because this is a field that comes under provincial jurisdiction and does not concern the ethnic group itself.

But the ethnic group in itself is equal to any other group in Canada, it cannot be considered as a minority.

As I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, it seems that Quebec's position is somewhat contradictory. In certain cases, however, it should be recognized that its claims are well founded.

The French Canadian group should not be recognized as a minority, but it is. Let us say that there is a French group and an English group in Canada and let us consider both as such, irrespective of their number. One realizes that they form what could be called monolithic blocks. We have two groups with different aspirations, a different conception of problems, and the conclusions they draw from their arguments are also different. This means that of 19 million inhabitants, 14 million think the same way, consider problems from the same point of view, while on the other hand, 5 million consider problems from an entirely different point of view.

As it will always be the same thing and as the only protection that the French speaking people could have with regard to maintaining their way of thinking and the concepts they consider in their best interest, this group wants a written guarantee in the constitution to the effect that the majority will never be able to impose any decision against the will of French Canadians.

This would explain the claims made from time to time by the representatives of the province of Quebec.

But there has been some proof, even quite recently, that it was quite easy to get around those claims in a dialogue with Quebec. When, as was stated just now, it was a matter of unemployment insurance, old age pensions, student loans, some agreement was always reached at the end of a discussion, which was perhaps not quite constitutional nor in keeping with the policy established in 1867, but which seemed satisfactory to everybody, to every province, to Quebec as well as to the federal government.

To my mind the decisions taken at that time tend to show that the province of Quebec has an open mind and is ready to co-operate. But this open mind wants, none the less, to maintain the standards for which it has fought over the years.

As I said, the reason why Quebec does not so much want concessions, but written terms incorporated in a statute, is simply the wish to have an additional guarantee and to be more particularly assured that, even if the good people of this parliament should disappear, whichever government be in power and whatever the scientific and ideological training of those who will succeed them, this guarantee will always have a place in a legal text accepted by the parties to the covenant.

Mr. Chairman, when a pact is signed by two parties and one decides to change some clauses of that pact, if it is intended that the pact be redrafted and that an agreement be possible, this agreement must necessarily exist between the two contracting parties.

If, in 1964, the province of Quebec entertains aspirations and demands different from those of 1867, it has the right to say so and refuse to sign a new contract as long as its demands are not met.

That is the reason why separatism exists at present. It is because the people of Quebec think that, if the other contracting party will not accede to the wishes of the French Canadian group, the latter will not sign or renew a confederation pact. Consequently, it will withdraw from confederation, or rather confederation will be formed without the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, I would not like to go any further today. I just wanted to try to explain certain stands taken by the province of Quebec. I repeat, I am not speaking on behalf of my party but in my own name.

However, there is one thing which must not be forgotten and which I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks, namely that Canada is in itself a paradox, if we consider it in the light of the presence of the United States. It is a complete paradox. While trade patterns are usually from north to south we have decided that they would be, in our case, from east to west; we have decided, with certain difficulties, to control a certain part of our economy; we are trying our utmost to live in a state of nearly continuous heroism simply because we want to maintain our own entity.

I think this is normal, and it is a very good thing for this country, Canada, to continue in the same direction. Otherwise, it would only have to lean toward the United States.

If this paradox is accepted, then the one concerning French presence within confederation must also be accepted, and you must accept that, while it will cost a little more, while there are a few more annoyances, while it is necessary in certain cases to make the debate a little heavier, we must continue to accept this paradox. It is the sine qua non condition for a persistent confederation, and I think that it will be one of the only reasons which will allow the celebration of the centennial of our Canadian confederation.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I should be vexed with myself if I did not join at this stage in the debate announced on Monday by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), when he stated, as reported on page 8524 of Hansard:

> On Wednesday, in order to give members of this house an opportunity to express their views in respect of amendments to the constitution of Canada being made in Canada, I intend to have the estimates of the Department of Justice placed before the house, but only for that purpose.

He was referring in the end to the possibility of discussing the amending or repatriation of the constitution governing at present Canada as a whole.

While the Minister of Justice announced the business of the house last night, I studied a statement made by one of his good friends, François Aquin of the "Fédération libérale du Québec".

Mr. Boulanger: An old acquaintance.

Mr. Caouette: An old acquaintance, as the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger), who is hiding behind the curtains says.

[Mr. Marcoux.]

The Minister of Justice, and the other members, became acquainted yesterday with Mr. Aquin's statement to the effect that he considers co-operative federalism as a formula to amend the Canadian constitution, a mere electoral "gadget".

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Justice champions the cause of co-operative federalism in the province of Quebec. When he speaks on co-operative federalism to the workers in his constituency, the latter understands neither the "a", nor the "z", nor the "b" of it.

Mr. Grégoire: That is true.

Mr. Caouette: That is true. What is co-operative federalism—

Mr. Chrétien: And Social Credit?

Mr. Caouette: I hear my hon. friend from St. Maurice-Laflèche say "Social Credit". If he learned about it perhaps he would be reasoning differently from the way he is now reasoning in the strait-jacket put on him by the Liberal party.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. What the member for Villeneuve has just said—

Mr. Caouette: Come now, there is no question of privilege.

[Text]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Temple): Order; the hon. member for Villeneuve has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we have to be taught any lesson by anyone opposite; on the other hand, I could teach them one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, for many months we have been hearing so much about co-operative federalism that people in the east or in the west do not understand anything about it. I would be remiss at this stage if I did not put on the record the exact meaning of co-operative federalism, according to my interpretation and according to people who understand something about it.

Co-operative federalism would consist of federal-provincial plans at all levels of administration, at all levels of the Canadian economic activity, which means a participation of the provincial and federal governments to all kinds of plans, in such fields as health, highways, the trans-Canada highway, the seaway, etc. Everywhere the federal and the provincial government would be involved. As far as I am concerned that is the meaning of co-operative federalism.

That is why Mr. Aquin was perfectly right when he said that co-operative federalism was only an election gadget.

And as my good friend the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) just suggested, the minister of natural resources of the province of Quebec stated that co-operative federalism is the abortion of the French Canadian nation in Canada. I think that the Minister of Justice agrees with the minister of natural resources on that. It is a fact. This would be the abortion or simply the elimination of French Canadians in Canada.

As the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) just said, French Canadians of the province of Quebec are not asking anything from others. It is an actual fact and if our Anglo-Saxon friends are not aware of it, they will realize it by seeing us in action. They simply ask for the opportunity and the privilege to develop as they see fit. We are not asking the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice or any other minister to grant us favours at the expense of others. No. We are simply asking for the right to act according to our views, our culture, our possibilities, our ability, in order to develop our part of the country called the province of Quebec, and nothing else.

There are always some sly ones who travel through Canada saying that Quebec wants to take away this or that from other provinces, that Quebec claims too much, and this and that, when they do not know the first thing about Quebec. As for us, we know what Quebec is. I am the first one to say, not only to the other provinces, but to my own province of Quebec, that if it is true that economically speaking we are lagging behind the other Canadian provinces, the English speaking people in Toronto, Winnipeg or Vancouver are certainly not to blame, and it is rather the fault of French Canadians in Quebec who, instead of serving their Canadian homeland, have been promoting partisanship ever since confederation in 1867.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Hail Duplessis.

Mr. Caouette: My hon. friend says "Hail Duplessis". What does he know about Duplessis? He has never met him in his life because Duplessis is dead. My hon. friend may die in the same way.

Mr. Howard: I am sorry I met you.

Mr. Caouette: Listen to what I am saying and you will understand that the French Canadians in the province of Quebec are not asking you for any favours. We are just asking for justice for our province, as you are asking for justice for your province.

An hon. Member: He is narrow-minded; never mind him.

Mr. Howard: Do not get excited.

Mr. Caouette: Do not throw Duplessis into the picture; Duplessis is not here today.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, we have had enough of those ill-willed interjections neither intelligible nor intelligent, on the part of people who do not even understand what is going on in the province of Quebec as well as in the other provinces. I say to my hon. friend, who comes from British Columbia, that if there are people who have at heart the development of the province of Quebec, there are others also who care very much for the development of the province of British Columbia, in spite of the C.C.F. and socialism which prevent Social Crediters from working in this regard at the present time, but who nevertheless succeed in spite of all that.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: You had better get back to your text.

Mr. Caouette: Do not interrupt me, then, and I will get back. I do not need to have a text. I can tell you without a text exactly what I think of what you are saying just now.

[Translation]

For many years now, Mr. Chairman, we have been hearing about co-operative federalism from various members of the government. We also hear of the repatriation of the Canadian constitution. I wonder if the Minister of Justice knows where that constitution is hidden. Everybody has been searching for it during the last ten years but nobody can find it. Is it hidden on some shelves?

[Text]

Mr. Fairweather: It is under the table.

[Translation]

Mr. Rhéaume: Yes, under the table.

Mr. Caouette: Is it in the London parliament? We do not know, and in this corner of the house we say: why rack your brains in trying to repatriate something which has never been accepted by the Canadian people?

Mr. Chairman, let us leave the constitution where it is. Do we need to go to London to know what we the elected members of parliament, the representatives of the people, must or can do here in Canada? Let us ignore the old constitution of 1864 or 1867.

I would like here to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice on this point. Let us leave that constitution to England and let us elaborate a new Canadian constitution, one that will take into account the current economic, political and social facts in Canada, the possibilities, the potential at all levels, in all respects, in this country.

But no, instead of adapting a truly Canadian constitution to the needs of the time, for a number of years it has been proposed to repatriate a constitution with which nobody is acquainted. This constitution, which, after all, is only an act of the British parliament, was never submitted to the approval of the Canadian people, and today, everybody agrees, Conservatives as well as Liberals, members of the New Democratic party, members of the Social Credit party and we the members of the Ralliement Créditistes, that this act has become obsolete and even prejudicial to the economic development of our country, to its sovereignty.

Mr. Chairman, under this ancient constitution, the intrusion of the federal government in the fields reserved to the provinces has become intolerable. For instance, in the field of education, we saw recently the government introduce legislation intended to help university students through loans of $1,000 per annum for a period of five years. The federal government is trying to invade the field of education.

Where highways are concerned, there is the trans-Canada highway. Where agriculture is concerned, the Minister of Agriculture plans federal grants to the provinces, whereas the provinces themselves should handle their program of grants to help agriculture. And in many other fields of our economy, of our economic activity, the federal government tries to interfere to assert its authority as we have seen recently. That is why I maintain that instead of manipulating, I repeat "manipulating", a constitution which is unfamiliar to us, which is in London, we should let London play around with the constitution of 1867 and work out our own constitution of 1964.

On the other hand there are people like the prime minister of Quebec, Mr. Lesage, who state, as he did in Le Devoir of September 29 last, that, in brief, the two nations must be equal, and that the political framework of Quebec should be provided with all the means required to develop the French Canadian nation. Not to the prejudice of the English Canadian nation, no, but to give to Quebec economical and political standards and provide it with all the necessary means to ensure the development of the French Canadian nation.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Today, right-thinking people throughout the country accept such a solution, but Mr. Lesage stated yesterday, September 29: "It is too early to discuss changes to be effected to our constitution", while his colleague, Mr. René Lévesque said: "We are late", and his colleague, Mr. Aquin: "The Minister of Justice is presenting us with an electoral gadget" and Mr. Gérin-Lajoie maintains: "The time has come to amend the constitution."

Mr. Chairman, the premier of the province of Quebec stated yesterday: It is first of all a question of the French Canadians having a status equal in all respects to that of the English Canadians. Some people will surely object. I have met provincial premiers both in western Canada and eastern Canada who claimed: "Quebec is only one of the ten provinces." That is not the spirit of the confederation pact of 1867, which clearly set out the equality of the two groups who signed that pact the French and the English. In my opinion, French speaking Canadians have held up their end of the bargain. French should become a working language within the federal civil service and be taught everywhere one finds a French speaking minority. My English speaking friends must admit, regardless of party affiliation, that there are no such school, municipal or provincial problems in Quebec between the French and the English. In the province of Quebec, the English speaking people definitely form a minority, but they enjoy the same legislation, the same privileges and the same treatment granted to the clear majority of French Canadians. We have no trouble in Montreal, in Sherbrooke, in Quebec city nor in Rouyn-Noranda between both groups. English speaking Protestants and French speaking Roman Catholics get the same grants from the government. McGill University, proportionally, gets even more than Montreal university.

Mr. Chairman, there is no discrimination in the province of Quebec; why should there be elsewhere?

Why are attempts made elsewhere to disparage French Canadians from Quebec, when in Quebec, we do not discriminate against our English friends?

In my own constituency there is a large number of English speaking people. However, we do not quarrel and there is no discrimination against them. Why should it be otherwise in Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and in the maritimes against French Canadian minorities?

When Mr. Lesage says: "To have French become a working language in the federal government and a language taught everywhere else where French minorities are found", he is voicing our hope.

In fact, for a long time now, three sessions, we have been claiming for the French minorities in the other provinces exactly the same treatment which is granted the English minority in Quebec.

According to Le Devoir of September 29, 1964, Mr. Lesage stated:

Second, French Canada demands a true decentralization of powers, of resources and of decision centres within the federal system: "Quebec, as I have often said (this is Mr. Lesage speaking), believes in the harmony created through consultation and discussion among equals, and not in the harmony which stems from uniformity imposed by an all-powerful central government.

No co-operative federalism, according to Mr. Lesage. I continue:

At the present time we believe that our political structures are sufficiently flexible, particularly if they are adapted to present circumstances, to enable all the means required for the development of the French Canadian nation concentrated within our borders to be centralized at the level of the Quebec government. These political structures, based on historic, geographic and economic facts, are sufficiently strong to ensure the continued existence of a country extending from sea to sea.

And Quebec will never avoid its obligations or the assistance it wants to give national understanding, to create a climate of national unity within the framework of our country, Canada. Quebec has never avoided its obligations.

Mr. Chairman, I have here the report of the Quebec economic advisory council. This report contains, not only concerning the province of Quebec but the whole country, a few directions concerning the Canadian constitution which, we hope, will be submitted to us as soon as the Minister of Justice will have conferred with provincial premiers or with representatives of provincial governments. In its report, the Quebec economic planning council expresses the following opinion:

The Quebec government has no control at present on certain important instruments of economic control.

(a) Currency; to the extent that economic activity depends on the existence of a universally accepted medium, such activity is under the exclusive control of the federal government. Since the central government has the authority to issue currency, (through the Bank of Canada, necessarily), or to control the variations of the money supply in circulation, it exerts a direct control on inflation (and on deflation at the same time) on the revalorization or the loss of value of currency itself.

The public or private debt of Quebec abroad, the long term commitments of Quebeckers to foreigners, may therefore change considerably, without the government of Quebec having anything to do with it.

We saw it illustrated when the authorities of the city of Montreal borrowed the amount of $60 million in the United States, in order to build a subway section. It is impossible to find the required financing within the limits of the province of Quebec, and then people come and tell us that this province is free.

I continue reading from the report:

(b) Customs tariffs: The government of the province has no right to keep a market for any industry by means of customs tariffs. On the other hand, the economic entity, which the province represents, may be seriously affected by the right exercised in this case by the government of Canada, for instance, where high tariffs protect an important product which is manufactured in Canada but which is not or cannot, for some reason, be produced in Quebec.

(c) Taxation: The constitution grants the province the right to collect only direct taxes. But this right also belongs to the government of Canada. The two governments share the tax potential with regard to their respective needs.

And that is where we can see the wonderful spectacle of double taxation in the province of Quebec.

And the report says further:

Historically speaking, the taxes collected by the Canadian government have increased much more rapidly than those collected by the government of Quebec, more particularly because of war, so that, at this time, the government of the province collects a minor part (16 per cent in 1962) of the total tax paid by individuals, and 22 per cent of corporation taxes, against 84 per cent and 78 per cent respectively collected by the government of Canada, excluding equalization payments. This distribution prevails, whereas taxes of all kinds have reached an unprecedented level, and its practical consequence is to freeze the freedom of the province of Quebec theoretically empowered to meet its needs directly. These needs exceed the revenues by far and are growing at a rate which increases steadily.

Mr. Chairman, as may be seen by reading the following article, the Creditistes are not the only ones to speak about credit control. In fact, the Quebec economic advisory council states in its report:

We are speaking here of the establishment of credit as an extension of the money instrument. To the degree where the economic activity depends on credit control by the Canadian banking system and to the extent where such a system is liable to be controlled, such activity is influenced only by the action of the government of this country (Ottawa) on the banks.

Here, as in taxation matters, the views of the Canadian government are not necessarily attuned to the evolution of a given regional economic unit. Such consideration applies particularly to the province of Quebec, the rate of expansion of which should henceforth be accelerated in comparison to the rest of the country.

The government of the province of Quebec can, however, remedy its present lack of control on the economy by taking initiatives likely to help it or the province of Quebec develop.

Mr. Chairman, before concluding my remarks, and as I pointed out at the beginning, I should recall that the province of Quebec requests no favours from the others. But we, the members of the Créditistes, in the light of the social credit theory, have asked for a change, improvements or amendments to the constitution.

We proposed four points. First, that the control of credit be given to the province.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has run out. However, he may continue his remarks if the house agrees.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I need only two minutes.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the house would agree to give a few minutes to the hon. member, so that he may conclude his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to my excellent friends for allowing me to conclude my remarks. Besides, I shall be very brief.

I want to mention what the Ralliement Créditiste suggested on January 26, 1964, in the light of the principles of the Social Credit.

First, give back to the provinces the control of credit. If it is called branches of the Bank of Canada in each province, we are in favour, but let the Bank of Canada help the provinces, or the province, to the extent of the development wanted by the province.

Credit should not be a hindrance to the economic development of a province, whether it is Quebec, Ontario or any other Canadian province.

Second, control of foreign and domestic trade, of imports and exports, namely what we sell to foreign countries in raw or manufactured materials.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Instead of selling the province of Quebec iron ore or instead of giving it to the Americans, as we are now doing, why not process that product in a new steel industry, in a secondary industry which would be set up in the province in order to sell finished products to the Americans, instead of selling them a raw material which they process and sell back to us as a finished product? Thus, American workers are benefiting from the natural resources of the province of Quebec and of Canada as a whole.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, we should control our imports and exports to know what goes out of the province and what comes in.

Third, the return of fiscal rights—I see the Minister of Justice is taking notes—of direct taxation which in any case belong to the provinces. Let us give unto the provinces that which belongs to them. We know, and the Minister of Justice is also aware of the fact, that it was the war which brought us to accept the federal government's intrusion into provincial fields of taxation. The rights the provinces granted the federal government should have been given back to them right after the war in 1945, or 20 years ago, but the federal government are still playing around in fields of taxation which normally, and according to the constitution, belong to the provinces.

Fourth, control over immigration. This does not mean that Quebec should stop Ukrainians, Poles, Italians or Irish immigrants from coming into the province, not at all, but the thing is to know who is going to come to our province.

Quebec has citizens of Polish origin, Ukrainian origin, indeed, people of all nationalities which are the pride of our province. However, it is painful for us to hear someone say to a Ukrainian at Wolfe's Cove, in Quebec city: "If you wish to earn a living in Canada, you must learn English instead of French."

Personally, I was glad to learn English and I readily advise those who do not know the language to learn it, but I would say to any foreigner who comes to Quebec: Start by learning French, since it is the language of the majority in this province. Afterwards you may learn English as a third language." That would make me happy.

I wish to know who comes into Quebec and who moves out. A number of French Canadians from the province of Quebec have left their homeland and gone to the United States and thousands of French Canadians are going to that country in order to earn a living.

Why, Mr. Chairman, are our people leaving this country to go to the United States? Because they find it difficult to earn a decent and honourable living in the province of Quebec.

Let us begin by creating economic conditions that will enable the Canadian workers as a whole, the Quebec citizens as a whole to earn their living in their own province, in their own country, in Canada. Then, I feel that we will have been very useful to our Canadian people, of whatever origin they may be.

I am saying this, Mr. Chairman, merely to state our position as regards the repatriation of the Canadian constitution, that has been in the dark since 1867.

We are in 1964 and in three years we shall reach 1967. As I said at the outset of my remarks—and I call the attention of the Minister of Justice to that point—let us forget about the old constitution and let us work out a 1964 Canadian constitution that each and every Canadian, of English, French, Ukrainian, Polish or Italian origin, will find it possible to earn a living in his country and to make Canada one of the most prosperous countries in the whole world.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I just heard someone say "Carried". I do not want to disappoint my own colleagues and members of my party; it was probably meant to be a joke. I simply wish to remind that today's debate is but the beginning of a general discussion on item 1 of the estimates of my department and that it will resume fully when the estimates will be again before the house, in a fortnight.

I wish to insist upon what I said earlier today; in view of the conference of attorneys general which will be held shortly, in view of the fact that I am president of that conference and also chief of the Canadian delegation, I do not think that it would be appropriate for me to take part in a discussion on this matter.

I wish to seize this opportunity to thank the hon. members who took part in today's debate. In clarifying and expressing the ideas which stem from their former research, they doubtless have given me and the cabinet some information which will help shape the policies of the government at the forthcoming conference.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could ask the minister a question before he sits down. What procedure does the government intend to follow with reference to these discussions with the provinces regarding the repatriation of the constitution? The reason I ask the question is that there has been a growing tendency during both last session and this session for the federal and provincial government to reach certain agreements and then for the federal government to bring them back to parliament. Members of parliament thus find themselves very much in the position of rubber stamps. These agreements have already been made and we are told from time to time that they cannot be altered because they have already been agreed upon with the provinces, and that it is impossible to go back to the provinces and ask them to change their position.

I think the minister is to be commended for giving this committee the opportunity today to express the views of the different parties with respect to the amending procedure in connection with the constitution, but will there be any opportunity for this matter to come back so that we know what is the thinking of the federal government, and what proposals they intend to pursue with the provinces? Or rather, is it the minister's thought that this matter will not come back to parliament until after an agreement has been signed, sealed and delivered, parliament then having no opportunity to do other than to accept or to reject it? It seems to me that this is placing parliament in a fairly difficult position, and I am wondering whether the minister can tell us what procedure he intends to follow in pursuing this matter of the constitutional discussions with the provincial governments.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I think I have fairly well stated the position which, at least at the initial stage of the conference, the government intend to take by limiting myself to a reading of the official communiqué issued by the Prime Minister and the premiers at the last conference in Charlottetown. It is quite clear that at this stage all of the parties, including the federal government, have agreed that the Fulton formula, as it has been called, Mr. Fulton being chairman of the conference at the time, which was achieved as a result of very serious and lengthy negotiations between the delegates of the provincial governments and the federal government, be accepted in principle as the basis for the discussions.

It is a known fact that in 1961 at least three of the provinces, for different reasons, stated that they did not wish to agree to the formula as reflected in the draft act submitted to them by their respective attorneys general unless they had an occasion to discuss the possibility of certain clarifications being made in respect of paragraph 1, section 91 of the British North America Act. All I can say at the moment is this, that these conferences have shown in the past that they are meetings where in fact a series of earnest attempts have been made to negotiate a formula for the repatriation of the constitution and subsequent amendment, which would be acceptable to the provincial and federal governments.

The conference which is called for Monday has been called for the purpose of attempting to finalize, or "suggest" would perhaps be more precise, to these prime ministers and premiers who will be reunited in a subsequent conference, a formula which might be acceptable to their respective governments. In other words, it is not the purpose of the conference of the attorneys general to finalize a formula and come to an agreement which would be a fait accompli. Certainly I am not authorized in that regard. Our mandate, as reflected in the communiqué of the Charlottetown conference, is to discuss the formula and then report on our discussion to the conference of the prime ministers, which will be called I believe for October 13, after the Queen's visit.

The prime ministers' conference, of course, is under the responsibility of the Prime Minister of Canada, and under his chairmanship, and I would prefer that any technical aspects as to procedures to be followed be discussed by him and reported on to the members of this house by him. If I were to state a procedure prior to the conference which I am charged with chairing, I think I would be exceeding the limits of my own function as the Minister of Justice. My only authority is to find out what are the suggestions, to attempt to be instrumental in arriving at a formula which I hope the conference will be able to report to the conference of prime ministers.

Mr. Aiken: I wonder whether I may be permitted to ask a further question, Mr. Chairman? This question was asked by the hon. member for Royal, but does the minister anticipate that this will accomplish anything beyond making the constitution a Canadian document? Is there any change in substance in the B.N.A. Act to be discussed at this time?

Mr. Favreau: As I stated a few minutes ago, certain provinces, particularly the province of Quebec, have stated that they wish to discuss possible modifications to section 91, paragraph 1 which, as you know, concerns the power of amending the constitution in Canada. That is the reason why certain governments would not accept the 1961 formula. I must say that this will be one of the factors involved in shaping the procedure of the conference. To date I have received no correspondence from the attorney general of any province concerning specific modifications which he has been requested to propose. I can visualize, therefore, that what will happen is what is common to this type of conference. Once the respective instructions given by the various provinces to their attorneys general have been set out at the opening of this conference, we will then know for sure what formula will be proposed. All of us in this house know that during these conferences various formulae are suggested at the commencement of the discussions, and then modified by the changing of a word or a principle. It is only after the conclusion of such a conference that we really are in a position to report on the collective position.

I should like to repeat, and I take responsibility for these remarks as being my own firm viewpoint, that it would be contrary to the best interests of such a conference, which was being carried out in earnest and with all frankness, that any of the parties should take a public firm position. It is my opinion that if the situation were otherwise it would be very difficult to have discussions which would proceed on a smooth basis and in a way likely to prove fruitful.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, may I ask one other question? As I understood the minister, the only question beyond the formula that might be considered would be a question in respect of section 91(1), which in itself relates to amending the constitution. Would the minister agree with me that this is one subject he has mentioned, and really does not have anything to do with changing of provincial and federal powers, but merely relates to amending the constitution itself? I understand the conference will only deal with a procedure to bring the constitution home and will not discuss any matters of substance as between the federal and provincial governments?

Mr. Favreau: As my hon. friend knows in this respect, there are conflicting views as to whether or not section 91 (1) ought to be part of an amending formula, or whether or not it is part of an amending formula. I know these views have been well expressed in the past, but the hon. member will also remember that in 1961 Ontario and Quebec at least felt that this was part of an amending formula.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit me one question? May I ask the Minister of Justice if up to this point there have been any discussions, or whether it is planned to have any discussions, on the way in which the final act would be taken, provided agreement on a formula and agreement on repatriating the constitution are reached? If I may put my question in another form, is it planned that the final act giving us authority over our own affairs will be taken by the parliament of the United Kingdom or will it be effected by an enacting body in this country, or perchance both? I am not asking for a decision on the matter; I am asking whether this phase of the matter is being discussed.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I must be very frank and say that in view of the background of the conference I have not considered that this particular subject would be one to be discussed at the conference of the attorneys general, because my view is that the conference of attorneys general at least will be concerned exclusively with the contents of the amending formula and not so much with the procedure of repatriation. I know my hon. friend has very personal and firm views on the possibility, once an amending formula has been devised, of making some kind of declaration or taking some kind of legislative action in parliament to state that henceforth this is the constitution of Canada. If I were to state my own personal views at present on this point I would say that I think it would be preferable that that particular thing be done as the last and final amendment to the constitution by the United Kingdom parliament, the authority which originally enacted the constitution as a statute reflecting an agreement between the provinces, rather than doing it the other way. But I must say I am very ready to consider the matter and to raise the point at the conference as it has been raised by my hon. friend. This once more goes to show how useful these discussions are.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, my short intervention this afternoon will not be made under any pretence of being an expert in constitutional law. While the discussion this afternoon has been inhibited from the point of view of a free exchange of ideas by the fact that the Minister of Justice indicated that he felt it would be rather difficult for him to disclose the bargaining position of the federal government at the forthcoming conference of attorneys general at this time, yet there have been indications of some ideas from the other side of the house. I do not think the debate has been as full as one would have hoped, and I think the minister will agree with me that if ideas have been advanced it has been a rather one-sided affair. After all, the present situation has prevented a free flow of ideas and to this extent the circumstances surrounding this afternoon's discussion are relevant.

With regard to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, it seems to me that this is only one more indication that we are far from being out of the woods in this connection. I think the best that can be said of the Charlottetown conference is that there was agreement on the desirability of repatriating the Canadian constitution, provided an appropriate formula could be found, and I put it to hon. members that the forthcoming conference is designed precisely for that purpose. In other words, its purpose is to find a vehicle or formula whereby there will be complete agreement on the formula under which the constitution may be repatriated.

But there is a further stumbling block, and I use that term perhaps because of a deficiency of our language. However, one of the obstacles or stages in the repatriation of the constitution involves the precise point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre as to what the method shall be as distinct from the formula, because there again there may be opportunity for disagreement. I hope not, but certainly we must not go into this matter starry-eyed and oblivious of certain of the pitfalls that surround such a difficult course of negotiations.

As I said, I feel that so far there has been a generally expressed desire to repatriate the constitution. There are two points of view. One is that we will get it home and then we will discuss the situation afterwards. In other words, it is said that the big objective is to get the constitution back in Canada and then we will look around and see what changes have to be made. This course has certain inherent dangers in that if the formula for amendment is not worked out beforehand and the constitution is brought home to Canada we may find ourselves, as has been said rather frequently, in a strait-jacket with no possibility of movement. I think it is also conceivable that consent to import or repatriate the constitution may be made a bargaining point with regard to the price for certain changes advanced by certain of the provinces. I say certain of the provinces, but the federal government might also be in the same position.

After all, so far most of the emphasis has been placed on changes to be insisted upon by one segment of Canada, the province of Quebec. I deny that emphasis because I think the situation goes far beyond that. In the evolution of Canada to the mid-1960's I think we have failed to recognize that in far too many sectors of the country there has been an evolution into regional developments, and in my opinion it is a mere illusion to think that we will be able to fashion a project of law that will affect all regions equally. There are regional interests, and when one province insists it is not a province like the others I say yes, but so are others different too. This is becoming more and more so. I suggest to hon. members that this is occurring in the evolution or the growth of this nation. Our coasts run from between 400 or 500 and 5,000 miles. I must not forget my hon. friends from the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I am sure they are going to have some pertinent questions to put to the minister as to where they are going to fit into this picture on the repatriation of the constitution. We must remember that we come from existing provinces, but these hon. members come from potential provinces and I think they have a right to be heard at this time. These regional changes must be taken into account. I think allowance must be made for them. Anyone who denies them, I think, has a rather parochial outlook in so far as the development of Canada is concerned.

Now, I do not want to go into any discussion of the merits, demerits or difficulties connected with any of the proposed formulas. Reference has been made to the so-called Fulton formula, which has certain proponents in this house as well as critics, such as the hon. member for Greenwood. However, I leave that to people who have made a deeper study of constitutional law.

[Mr. Lambert.]

However, there is one point in connection with the relationship between the federal government and the provinces, and between the provinces themselves, which should be discussed when these changes which must be made are discussed. I refer to trade barriers. I would put it to the minister that I think this is going to be part of the price of the conference, if not this one then the next one or possibly the third conference, before we are in a position to say that we have agreed. This is something which is becoming much more pronounced and is something which I consider to be, if not a breach of the letter, certainly a breach of the spirit of the constitution. As I have said, I refer to infringements on the free flow of trade between provinces. We have seen all sorts of incidents of this type, and they are always put on a special basis. There are always laudatory motives and good reasons such as the encouragement of industry.

I would put it to hon. members, however, that in so doing these provincial administrations—and this goes for municipal administrations as well—frankly are in breach of the spirit of the constitution in that they are imposing, perhaps not directly, but some of them almost directly, barriers to the free flow of trade between the provinces. I am not going to name names or I am not going to cite particular incidents because this would identify these so-called governments. There are practices such as allowing certain bonuses to tenderers if the products are made in certain provinces or if the tenderers are operating businesses within a province, and I think those practices are wrong from the national point of view. All you are doing is gouging out your neighbour's eyes, and hoping that you will profit thereby. I do not believe you are the gainer. You may be the temporary gainer, but if your neighbour loses his eye in the process what gain have you made, if both of you are united in a common cause for the development of this country? I cannot see it. These practices are being multiplied left, right and centre. I for one cannot see how by the manipulation of sales tax levels, credits and perhaps some other proposals for certain incentives under the corporate income tax within a province, we are going to benefit by trying to take away from one province for the benefit of another. Certainly, the robbing of one brother by another does not lead to any advantage.

I thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, in allowing me this digression. I wanted to put this on the record because it has been a very distressing development in our interprovincial and federal relationships over the past three years. If there are any changes to be made in the constitution, if there is a price to be paid for this repatriation, then I would suggest that one of the changes that might be made would be the reaffirmation of this freedom of interprovincial trade. There should not be tolerated any direct or indirect barriers to trade flowing within the country and we should do away with these narrow, regional interests which, frankly, lead only to divide our national purpose.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to make a speech. I should simply like to put a question to the Minister of Justice. I would like to ask him whether it is the government's policy or whether he believes it would be easier to find an amending formula for the constitution after its repatriation, or if it would be just as easy to find such a formula after it is repatriated? Would it not be the first thing to do? First, repatriate the constitution and then try to find an amending formula?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, if you wish to have my personal opinion—and I know that some disagree—I think that in order to protect the guarantees throughout Canada, some provinces do not have the same protection nor the same guarantees which certain provinces demand. In my opinion, it would be advisable to devise a formula to amend and repatriate the constitution adopting such a formula at the same time.

I think that we must first of all find an amending formula, proceed to the repatriation of the constitution, and include the amending formula therein.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the house leader the business for Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the business of the house for Thursday and Friday will be substantially what has been announced. There will be a slight modification which I am about to announce. We will begin with the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. We would then take the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, then those of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, followed by those of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

If there is some possibility of making an arrangement through the house leaders we may begin tomorrow with the motion to refer the question of the water levels to the committee on forests and waters so that this committee may begin its work as early as possible. I repeat, this will depend on whether an arrangement can be made.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Fourth report of special committee on defence—Mr. Hahn.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY—REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that when the estimates of the Department of Fisheries were before the house last week I promised that at the conclusion of negotiations which were taking place here in Ottawa among Canada, Japan and the United States for the revision of the north Pacific fisheries convention I might be able to make a statement to the house.

At the opening session of the Ottawa negotiations I expressed the hope on behalf of the Canadian delegation that this third meeting of the parties to the international north Pacific fisheries convention would resolve the remaining differences and would culminate in a successful conclusion of the protracted negotiations. Three weeks of uninterrupted negotiations have brought the parties very close to agreement, but it has not been possible to reconcile all the remaining differences, and the delegations have agreed to a recess in the discussions in order to study and recommend to their respective governments other approaches to the unsolved problems.

We had hoped that final agreement could have been reached for the revision of the existing convention which, of course, continues in force but which may be terminated upon 12 months' notice by one of the parties. At the same time we realize that the problems with which the delegations have been faced are very complex, and that all must be solved before agreeing on a convention which we hope will remain in force for many years. The frank and co-operative attitudes of the delegations have permitted much progress and encourage us to hope that we shall reach agreement at our next meeting.

I should like to give, for the information of the house, a very brief résumé of the Canadian position. The salmon runs to our streams are of the very highest importance to the fisheries of Canada's Pacific coast. We believe that through scientific study, strict regulation and positive fish culture methods we have maintained these stocks which would otherwise have disappeared. We believe that the salmon resource can be greatly increased by the application of scientifically based techniques which are now emerging. But this maintenance and increase of the runs require not only that we continue our intensive efforts in research, regulation and culture, but that we also continue, at considerable cost to our economy, the protection of our rivers from other uses which would make them unsuitable for salmon. To justify all these costs of maintaining and, we confidently expect, increasing the salmon resources the benefits must accrue to the Canadian economy.

During the past three weeks much progress has been made toward agreement which would meet our needs in an acceptable manner. It seems that, on the one hand, the basis for the Canadian position is now well understood and is given sympathetic consideration. On the other hand we realize that recognition of our special interests must be contingent on continuation of our special efforts to maintain and increase the salmon stocks and on continued full utilization by our fishery, and that the situation must therefore be subject to review by the commission established by the convention. We have been very close to agreement which would embody these essential points.

The greatest unsolved problem is concerned with conservation measures for those stocks of North American salmon which now are fished on the high seas. Although the problem applies especially to sockeye of Alaska origin, Canada has a potential interest in a solution which could be applied to other stocks fished on the high seas although to a much more minor degree. We are also concerned by the growing scientific evidence that the high seas fishing of salmon stocks which are intensively fished inshore may be wasteful.

It appears that we are close to agreement on a formula which would be acceptable in so far as the major halibut producing areas are concerned. This formula would recognize the long history of research and regulation by the international Pacific halibut commission on behalf of the governments of Canada and the United States, and the resulting successful restoration and maintenance of the important halibut fishery. We had hoped that similar protection could be extended to other areas where the stocks have been the subject of similar study and regulation and are utilized by our fishermen. This must now be a matter for further discussion.

Regarding herring, we hope that a satisfactory solution can be reached as herring is not of significant importance to Japan.

To conclude, I am satisfied that the Canadian delegation, to whom I am very grateful, has put forward its best efforts to bring about agreement which would provide the greatest measure of protection to those Pacific coast fisheries which are the mainstay of our fishing industry in British Columbia. I am also encouraged by the valuable progress that has been made toward the solution of the remaining differences, and hope that these may finally be reconciled at the next meeting.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, no doubt the house listened with interest to the rather lengthy statement of the minister on this very important subject. I regret that it was not quite as reassuring as we might have hoped it would be, because it is obvious that agreement has not been reached as yet on terms under which the north Pacific fisheries treaty could be extended for another lengthy or indefinite period of time. The minister neglected to say how long this recess in negotiations is going to be, but I hope it will not be too lengthy and that negotiations can be recommenced at an early date.

The problem is, of course, that there is a conflict of interest between Japan on the one hand and the United States and Canada on the other, because Japan depends on high seas fisheries and has very few streams which contribute anything to the stocks of salmon which are commercially exploited in the north Pacific. I would hope that the Canadian delegation, as they no doubt did, pointed out to Japan the possibility of Japan developing artificial spawning beds and other means whereby that country itself might make a worth-while contribution to these stocks of fish, based on methods that have been developed in Canada.

We will look with interest to the reconvening of negotiations on this treaty, and we assume there will be no possibility of any of the parties giving notice that they intend to withdraw. The minister did not specifically say so, but we would hope that these negotiations will be reconvened at an early date and that a satisfactory agreement will eventually be reached.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it will also be recalled that at the time the minister's estimates were before the house we predicted that there would be a postponement or delay in the progress of the discussions and that for a number of reasons, possibly the pending election in the United States, there would not be a desire to announce anything bad arising out of the discussions. I hope we are wrong. I hope our fears will not be borne out when the talks are reconvened, and that the results of the resumed negotiations will be beneficial.

The minister's statement as I heard it was very revealing in that he made no reference whatever to the abstention principle contained in the present treaty. This was the basic point of the treaty negotiated in 1953, namely that Japan would abstain from fishing for certain fish in a certain area of the Pacific ocean. Japan, of course, has objected to this, and it is the main obstacle to the course of orderly discussions that might lead to an agreement. I interpret the minister's failure to make any reference to the abstention principle to mean in effect that perhaps Canada has relaxed what the minister called the firm position of the government in these negotiations, and that if we finally get a treaty we may very well end up with one renegotiated in such a way that the abstention principle is watered down or adulterated or not referred to at all.

As the New Democratic party has consistently pointed out, there is no doubt that we must approach our high seas fisheries from the point of view of international cooperation to conserve those fisheries in order to ensure that fish remain for future generations, and to ensure that exploitation is carried on within limits prescribed by the principles of a scientific approach to conservation itself. It is also a fact that Japan is not the only nation bordering upon the Pacific ocean that fishes in those waters. The Soviet union has an almost rapacious demand for fish products, and in the past few years has expanded tremendously its fishing operations beyond the area close to their shores where it has traditionally fished.

I would reiterate the vital importance of this matter. To go back to the time before this government were elected to office, they promised that Russia would be drawn into the treaty. It is vitally important to make some approach to the Soviet union to ask that country if they will take part in the next negotiations, even if only in the capacity of an observer. I say this because it is important to have an international agreement among all the nations that are exploiting this particular fishery; and unless Russia does come into the treaty we could very easily see all our efforts toward conservation come to naught because of the expansion of the Soviet union into the high seas salmon fishery.

We shall look forward with great interest to the resumption of these discussions, even though the minister neglected to say when they would be resumed. We hope they will be resumed at an early date and will proceed rapidly to a successful conclusion.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we hope the length of the negotiations that have been carried on is an indication of the desire of the Canadian delegation to safeguard Canada's vital interests at all costs. I would not like to think it is an indication of failure. I prefer to think of it as showing that the minister and the Canadian delegation are determined to maintain our position and insist on the safeguards we have enjoyed in the past.

So far as the west coast is concerned, this is a matter of tremendous importance. The minister is aware of all the representations that have been made on this matter, and though he made no reference to the abstention principle that is included in the present treaty, I trust that at least the idea of it will be carried out even if it is not stated.

We in this party also regret that the statement has not been more conclusive and definite, but we look forward to the resumption of these talks in the not too distant future in order that these problems may be ironed out and a satisfactory agreement signed.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we have listened attentively to the remarks of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) with regard to international agreements between Canada, Japan, the United States, and probably with other countries later on, concerning fisheries in the Pacific.

On behalf of our group I hope similar arrangements will be made for the Atlantic so as to assist the fishermen of the eastern provinces and to find international markets for their products, which will enable them to enjoy the advantages our western fishermen are now enjoying or will be enjoying in the near future.

So it is our heartfelt wish that the Minister of Fisheries will look after our eastern fishermen as energetically as he is looking after our western fishermen at the present time.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he is able to say when the negotiations to which he referred will be reconvened, and where.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I am not in a position to say definitely at this moment when the meeting will be reconvened, but the United States delegation has expressed the hope of its government that the next meeting be held in the United States at a time and place to be determined by the three governments concerned, and I know the three delegations are hoping to meet at the earliest possible date.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NATO SECRETARY GENERAL

Mr. Speaker: I am sure hon. members will not object if I break into these proceedings in order to point out that we have in the Speaker's gallery a most distinguished visitor in the person of Signor Manlio Brosio, the newly appointed secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: At four o'clock this afternoon in the railway committee room all hon. members who are free to attend are cordially invited to come, meet and hear Signor Brosio speak.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MEASURE RESPECTING HOURS OF WORK, MINIMUM WAGES, ETC.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-126, respecting hours of work, minimum wages, annual vacations and holidays with pay in federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. MacEachen: The purpose of this bill is to establish a national minimum wage of $1.25 an hour, a standard eight hour day and forty hour week, annual vacations with pay and seven statutory holidays for works under federal jurisdiction. The short title of this bill is Canada Labour Standards Code. It breaks new ground in the field of labour standards not only in Canada but on this continent, I believe.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—TIME SPENT ON QUESTIONS ON ORDERS OF THE DAY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do so entirely on my own responsibility, but I believe that members generally will agree it is a point of privilege and that it concerns all of us as members and that it concerns the house itself.

On April 20 of this year the house, by unanimous decision, adopted certain provisional standing orders and certain guide lines respecting the asking of questions on orders of the day. The immediate result of that decision of the house on April 20 was that for the first few weeks that followed we cut in half the amount of time we had been taking with respect to questions on orders of the day. I think members will agree also that during that period not only did the asking and answering of questions take a shorter period of time, but it was a crisper and better period in every respect.

In recent weeks, however, to put it mildly we have been slipping. I have been keeping my own records, and I have checked with those who keep the official records. We are just about back to where we were before we made the changes on April 20. I have been tempted several times in the last couple of weeks to raise a point of order during the question period because I felt a certain member was abusing the rules by his question or a certain minister was abusing the rules by his answer. However, it really does not help to solve the problem by intervening in that way. I have therefore taken this opportunity to raise this point of privilege.

I suggest that both the house and Your Honour would like us to get back to the position we achieved immediately after April 20. There is no point in trying to put blame on particular persons. I think in the first place the responsibility and blame rests upon us as members, and that includes all of us. In the second place, I think Your Honour would not mind if I were to say that you have not been clamping down in recent weeks as you were immediately after April 20. You have been reluctant to enforce the rules and the guide lines which the House of Commons placed in your hands. Therefore, on this question of privilege, I believe the house would welcome Your Honour applying more strictly the rules and guide lines we gave you. We would welcome it if they were applied to party leaders and backbenchers alike; we would welcome them being applied to those who ask questions as well as to those who answer them.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): On this question of privilege, which I think is not a question of privilege at all, I should like to say that if each member of this house is to give instructions to the Speaker I would be inclined to suggest that questions of privilege should be valid questions; otherwise they should not be raised.

I do not see in what way this can be interpreted as a question of privilege. Had the rights and privileges of members been interfered with, there might be a question of privilege involved; but all the hon. member has done in this instance is draw attention to what he calls a question of privilege in an attempt to place the house in a straitjacket, according to his ideas, and restrict the privileges of hon. members to ask questions on the orders of the day. We have that restriction applied on Wednesday of each week and Mr. Speaker has rather carefully followed that rule. On the other days there has been no restriction imposed. It is only the hon. member's own opinion that conditions are less favourable now than they were in the last ten days of April; it is not an opinion shared by other hon. members of this house.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if we are to have bogus questions of privilege raised, as this one is, this destroys the effectiveness of the House of Commons. I think people who are raising questions of privilege of this nature should make very sure in advance that they have valid questions of privilege; otherwise I think the hon. member should be interrupted in the course of his remarks, which he has used on this occasion just to promote an idea that may reside within his mind and that of some of the members of his party, namely that restrictions should be placed on the House of Commons. The restrictions might very well start with the hon. member himself and members of his party.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INCREASES IN PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs based on a widespread demand expressed in correspondence I am receiving from veterans who, because of the rise in living costs and rentals, are asking for a needed and desirable increase in disability pensions and war veterans allowances. Would the minister, for the benefit of the house and also for veterans generally who are asking for this, let the house know whether at this session action will be taken so that those receiving these pensions and allowances may enjoy something of the increase that has come to so many in various positions in the last 17 months?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think at this moment I am not prepared to go any further than I went when I was asked this question a few weeks ago. I can say it is my hope that some time during the course of this month I will be in a position to bring forth recommendations with respect to pensions.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. minister a supplementary question? Does he know that the veterans of the first world war receive only $48 a month as a pension or allowance, and could he tell us if he is now studying the opportunity or possibility of increasing this pension to at least the present amount of old age security in Canada?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, I should first like to say that the first world war veterans' pension is not limited to $48 a month. Pensions are based on the degree of disability suffered during military service, and there is no discrimination between the two groups, namely that of the first world war and that of the second. As for allowances, they are based mainly on the financial status of the veterans concerned. I could add the same answer I gave a moment ago to the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), to the effect that this question is now under study and that I hope to be in a position to report on it soon.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REPORTED STATEMENT BY INDUSTRY MINISTER RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether his attention has been drawn to the statement made by the Minister of Industry in a speech yesterday in Montreal, in which he said:

> —the Canadian economy is not growing fast enough to provide sufficient employment opportunities for the growing labour force.

In view of this statement by the minister, and in view of the fact that for the second quarter of this year the gross national product, in real terms, has not increased—as a matter of fact, in the non-farming sector it has decreased slightly and at the end of the six months' period of this year the international deficit on non-merchandise account was $518 million, an increase of $86 million over the same period in the previous year—I ask the Prime Minister whether the government intends to bring down any specific legislation to deal with the problem which has been so graphically outlined by the Minister of Industry.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): There is, of course, a good deal of legislation on the order paper. In so far as the particular question is concerned, I have not had the opportunity or the pleasure of studying the text of my hon. friend's speech. I will be glad to look into it and read the observations which my hon. friend has made, in the context of the rest of the speech.

STEPS TO IMPROVE CONDITIONS IN MARITIMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the remarks that were made recently in Halifax by Mr. Dodge of the Canadian Labour Congress to the effect that poverty and destitution down east are twice as serious as in central Canada, and now that the minister is moving with other departmental legislation, can he tell us if there would be any measures that might help correct this situation in the near future?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): When the house has taken action on this particular bill which will make some contribution to the solution of the problem, then we may be in a position to bring forward other measures.

Mr. Bell: Specifically, and in a supplementary way, may I ask the minister whether he or his colleagues have under consideration changes in the method of encouraging industry which has been criticized so much by many organizations such as APEC, and which certainly is not working out in the way it was intended.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as has been stated by the Minister of Industry, the area development system designation is presently under review with the expectation that changes may be made to make even more effective than it is at the moment.

[Later:]

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the one asked by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. Has the Minister of Labour received a report yet from the Atlantic development board in regard to the unemployment situation in the county of Pictou? Has he referred this matter to the board, on the recommendation several months ago of the New Glasgow and district labour council?

Mr. Speaker: These are questions for the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—AGREEMENT WITH RUSSIA RESPECTING MILITARY AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the agreement that has been signed by the foreign affairs minister of Cyprus with the government of Russia, and the anti-NATO overtones which have accompanied its reception in Cyprus, can the minister today give us any more information as to the terms of this agreement and what effect it will have on our own relations in Cyprus in the peace keeping operation?

[Mr. Bell.]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this question was asked yesterday. I can simply say that although I have had an opportunity of seeing a summary of the communiqué, I have not seen the full text. It seems to be contrary to the spirit of the security council resolution of March 4, and it may be in violation of the treaty of 1961, but I would not want to give a final opinion.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO SMALLER OPPOSITION PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

Is the Prime Minister aware of an offer that has been made by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to the leaders of the smaller parties in the house for some broadcasting time on the television network following the allocation of time of the Liberal and Conservative parties? Does the Prime Minister know that this offer has been withdrawn by the C.B.C. within these last few hours, thus depriving the leaders of the smaller parties of broadcasting time after it had been offered to them?

Does the Prime Minister intend to intervene in this matter?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Of course I am aware of the offer, Mr. Speaker, because it was given to the house last week, I think, by the Secretary of State. I am certainly not aware that the offer has been withdrawn, and I will be glad to look into that matter.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In order to be perfectly fair to the C.B.C. I would say that the offer was made and as far as I know was not withdrawn. I understood that the hon. member for Villeneuve had declined to take part, and I notified the C.B.C. yesterday that I would not take part if it were to be restricted to a discussion of the flag question, since this matter has been sent to a committee. Speaking as far as I am concerned personally, to be fair to the C.B.C., the offer was not withdrawn. I for one said I was not prepared to take part in it with this restriction of the discussion being limited to the flag question.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in relation to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I must inform the house that last week Mr. Taylor of the C.B.C., informed me that a thirty minute period would be granted the three leaders of the third parties, which meant six minutes for each leader once the question had been asked.

Last week I received a telephone call from Mr. Benoît, an official with the French network of the C.B.C., who made me the same offer. And this morning the same Mr. Benoît telephoned my office to tell me that this offer of thirty minutes had been withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion it is absolutely unfair to grant us three only thirty minutes while the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition each got thirty minutes. I told the representative of the C.B.C. that I would accept a period of fifteen minutes, but that I would decidedly not accept a period of only six minutes.

[Text]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I do not intend to make this a debate, but I think in fairness to the C.B.C. something should be said. I am one who is often most critical of the C.B.C., and I also agree that this offer was not exactly a fair one. On the other hand the C.B.C. did consult me and I would substantiate the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that the offer was set aside because it seemed that any talk on the flag issue was irrelevant at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This discussion is out of order. This question is becoming a debate.

QUALITY OF FILM PRODUCED BY INTERVIDEO LIMITED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Secretary of State a question regarding the "Mr. Pearson" film produced by Intervideo Limited and Richard Ballentine. Would the minister inquire from the C.B.C. whether the half hour film shown on the C.B.C. last night at 10.30, produced by Intervideo Limited and Richard Ballentine, showed adequate technical competence?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will, Mr. Speaker.

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE USE OF FORMER R.C.A.F. BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, notice of which I have given. The question relates to the current discussions between the C.B.C. and the Vancouver parks board as to who is to control the former air force buildings and land at Kitsilano. Is consideration being given to a compromise which could see the C.B.C. occupying the buildings for a period of some years and the parks board becoming heir to the property, in the interests of public recreation, after that time?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper? If I am not mistaken this question has been up several times during the last few weeks.

WATER LEVELS

PROPOSED DIVERSION OF NORTHWESTERN RIVERS INTO GREAT LAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the minister received any formal objections from any Canadian organizations to the diversion of the waters of the northwestern rivers in Canada, particularly the Yukon, south to the United States or into the great lakes to raise their levels, as proposed by the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister at Prince George?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—INQUIRY AS TO WHEREABOUTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. Is the minister now in a position, after six weeks of delay, to give an answer as to the whereabouts of Hal Banks; and has the minister yet been able to secure information from the immigration authorities of the United States that this elusive gentleman crossed the line and when doing so left his name and address?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not yet in a position to give the house a precise answer as to the whereabouts of Mr. Hal Banks, although while I am on my feet I am in a position to answer a question put to me recently by the right hon. gentleman which asked when gross negligence in dealing with Mr. Banks first occurred.

I am now in a very clear position to state positively that if there has been gross negligence it started in 1958, when the Department of Justice asked the R.C.M. Police to investigate in order to determine whether Banks had been employing intimidation or violence in the furtherance of union activities. By the end of 1958 information had been obtained about the Walsh beatings. On February 23, 1959, when there was still time to look into the matter of whether Banks could be deported and deprived of Canadian domicile, there had been sent to the minister of justice a full account of the conspiracy to beat Walsh as related by the principal crown witness at the trial, Richard Greaves. On June 14, 1961 there had been sent to the minister, and therefore to the government, another report which included an account of the Walsh conspiracy of the other principal crown witness, Sheehan.

No action was taken against Banks, notwithstanding that this was a time when evidence relating to the Walsh incident was readily available and evidence relating to other incidents might also have been obtained. This was also the time when firm action might have prevented the deterioration in the situation on the St. Lawrence and great lakes system which culminated in the physical impasse on the St. Lawrence seaway in the summer of 1962, when the Welland canal was blocked as described in the Norris report.

Instead, a royal commission was appointed on July 17, 1962. Without detracting from the value of that inquiry it is a fact that an inquiry was not necessary to bring to light the evidence upon which the recent conviction of Banks depended. Thus, these proceedings could have been commenced five years before they were commenced.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have allowed the hon. gentleman to answer in a way quite out of keeping with the facts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I say at once that what the minister has stated is completely untrue as it related to the refusal of the former government to act. What actually happened was that the pampered pet of Liberalism was not proceeded against, and now the hon. gentleman is endeavouring to exculpate himself for his failure to act.

May I now ask him this question. Is it true that the minister has known for the last several weeks the whereabouts of Banks? I ask that question because Mr. Banks was apparently interviewed on a radio broadcast and stated that he has not been in hiding and that the government has known where he was all the time. I think the very fact he said this indicates the truth of what has actually taken place; that this government charged him with the one offence on which he could not be extradited and then let him go.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, in all my life as a practising lawyer and since the few months I have been in the government I would never have believed that such an implication would be made and put to me. Whatever is implied in the question is totally false.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the Minister of Justice tell this house that he has no information on the whereabouts of Banks? If he does I accept it. Banks, of course, will be able to tell the story as it is and relate the manner in which the government protected him.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Surely we have had enough discussion of this matter.

Mr. Herridge: Has the minister heard about an unofficial committee meeting of members of all parties of this house in 1956 at which seamen from Banks' union told us of beatings, car burnings and all that sort of thing, and that nothing was done although we tried to get something done?

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If it is a supplementary question I hope it is going to be a quiet one and of assistance to the Chair.

Mr. MacInnis: I should like to ask the Minister of Justice, who has concerned himself with detracting from the Norris commission report, whether this now means that in order not to further detract, Mr. McLaughlin is going to be prosecuted.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, this question has been answered much earlier by way of answers to previous questions referring to exactly the same matter, and I stand by the answers I have given.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question, and I might point out that this question has not been answered. The minister has definitely concerned himself—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member is entering into an argument with the minister I think I must remind him that it is well established custom in this house that the minister's answer should be accepted in the first instance.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of protecting the Norris commission report, with which the minister is concerned, is he going to activate proceedings against Mr. McLaughlin, as the Norris commission report recommended?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Paul (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): May I ask the Minister of Justice a question? Since Mr. Hal Banks' $25,000 bail was forfeited yesterday, could the Minister of Justice tell us to which department of revenue the proceeds of that forfeiture will be paid? Will it be to the Department of National Revenue or to the Quebec department of revenue?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that matter, as I said last week, comes under a rather vague provision of the code stipulating that if the cost of an action is to be borne by a provincial government, the money accruing from the forfeiture is paid to the provincial treasury and vice-versa, if the cost is borne by the crown the money falls into the federal treasury.

Apparently, in a case such as this one, where both parties contributed to the cost of the trial and investigation it is done through negotiation, but to date the matter has not been dealt with.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Considering that Mr. Hal Banks has not yet been arrested, will the $25,000 which will be turned over to the public treasury soon contribute to a reduction of the income tax?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ASSISTANCE TO MEDICAL SCHOOLS AND MEDICAL RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance, and in his absence to his parliamentary secretary. Would the minister consider instituting immediately a crash program to train more doctors to meet the present emergency, and to explore further the possibility of medical schools operating for a full term of 12 months rather than eight months?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving notice of this question. It will be brought to the attention of the minister at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to address to the Minister of Industry in his capacity of answering to the house in respect of the activities of the scientific secretariat. In view of what the hon. member has just said; in view of the fact that many qualified students are being turned down at our medical schools this fall, and in view of the fact that many people seem to think that research facilities are necessary—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If I understood correctly, this afternoon the house wanted to tighten up the rules. It seems to me that the first step in such tightening up should be taken by the hon. members themselves. I will look after the second step. Will the hon. member please pose his question as quickly as possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, when speaking of tightening up the rules, I can only point to the manner in which the Minister of Justice was allowed to depart so far from the rules.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: In all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the Chair that I spent a good amount of time drafting a proper question, and I was very briefly underlining the urgency of my question with some facts. I realize because of the atmosphere in the house this afternoon it is very hard to put across a question that is in order.

I should like to ask the minister, in view of the fact the national institute of health in the United States has seriously cut down its grants to basic medical research in Canada, is the government seriously studying this situation, and does the government intend to increase assistance to basic medical research in Canada in the very near future?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think the government agencies concerned in this field are seized of the urgency and seriousness of this question. I might, however, point out specifically to the hon. member that the decrease in national health service grants in the current year has been more than offset by grants by the Canadian medical research council.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DESIGNATION OF STAND-BY BATTALION FOR UN DUTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister now in a position to name the new stand-by battalion for United Nations duty?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that at the time of the establishment of the UN force for Cyprus last March the first battalion of the Royal 22nd regiment was designated as the stand-by battalion for United Nations duties, and in consequence this battalion was sent to Cyprus. With the despatch of the Royal 22nd regiment the first battalion of the Canadian Guards, stationed at Camp Picton, Ontario, was nominated as the stand-by battalion. With rotation under way in Cyprus this battalion is now replacing the Royal 22nd regiment.

This latest move has resulted in the necessity of naming another stand-by battalion, and it has been decided that the first battalion of the Queen's Own Rifles of Canada should be designated for this function. The first battalion, Mr. Speaker, is stationed at Victoria, British Columbia.

[Mr. Speaker.]

LA MACAZA, QUE.—TREATMENT OF PEACE DEMONSTRATORS BY R.C.A.F. POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to make a brief statement in reply to another question which has been outstanding for some time.

Some days ago the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, referring to certain allegations made by individuals who had demonstrated outside R.C.A..F. station La Macaza over Labour day week end relating to unnecessary use of force by R.C.A.F. guards in removing them from the roadway at the entrance to the station, asked the Prime Minister if a further investigation would be made into these allegations.

The Prime Minister asked my colleague the Associate Minister of National Defence to look into this matter and report to him on the feasibility of holding such an investigation referred to by the hon. member. As hon. members are aware, in reply to a question asked earlier the associate minister had stated that a report had been received from the commanding officer of the station, and that on the strength of that report he was satisfied that no unnecessary use of force had been employed.

Subsequently the associate minister personally interviewed the commanding officer of R.C.A.F. station La Macaza. He was informed by the commanding officer that strict instructions had been given to all R.C.A.F. personnel that the minimum amount of force should be used to remove demonstrators who were blocking entrance to that station and, as far as he and other officers and and non-commissioned officers were aware, these instructions had been complied with.

An hon. Member: A very short and crisp answer.

Mr. Hellyer: In order to carry out their stated intention to block traffic moving in and out of the station, members of the demonstration were instructed to sit and lie on the road. When R.C.A.F. guards attempted to carry them to the side of the road they went limp, thus purposely increasing the difficulties faced by the officials of the station. As a result, as was the case in a demonstration earlier in the year at La Macaza when no complaints of violence were made, individuals had to be forcibly moved to the side of the road, from where they immediately attempted to return.

No complaints were made at the time of the demonstration, nor was there any allegation then of injury sustained by any demonstrator. In fact the various charges of the misuse of force were not made until several days after the demonstration had been completed.

An hon. Member: Amen.

Mr. Hellyer: There was no restriction imposed or attempted on anyone taking photographs of the demonstration.

Further, immediately after the demonstration one of the leaders was quoted in the Montreal Gazette of September 10 as saying "There was no trouble at all, a number said goodbye and waved to the guards at the gate, but the guards did not respond".

I might say that the leaders of the demonstrators made it clear that they understood that they were trespassing on government property and that their objective was—

Mr. Grafftey: Why don't you get yourself a precis writer?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you would ask the hon. member opposite to stop interrupting.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the house is being subjected to long ministerial statements, and I recommend to the treasury benches that they hire a few precis writers in their departments. Mr. Speaker, what is taking place now is an obvious breach of the rules of this house, and I ask you to bring the minister to order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have listened to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi with a great deal of interest and, I hope, patience. The first long statement this afternoon was made in an attempt to answer a very serious charge. This statement this afternoon has been asked for by one member, and though it may be a little long—and I regret the length of some of the statements—the ministers must take their own responsibilities in that regard.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I regret the length of the statement, but I must say it is much better prepared than the rather imprecise statement made by the hon. member a little earlier.

I might say that the leaders of the demonstrators made it clear that they understood that they were trespassing on government property and that their objective was, in effect, deliberately to provoke an incident by preventing the free movement of vehicles going about their proper business, including the transportation of civilian personnel employed at the station.

It is felt that in the circumstances a further investigation would serve no useful purpose. The Prime Minister, who has personally looked into the whole question, agrees with this view.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask either the Minister of National Defence or the Prime Minister if this is what the government considers an independent investigation, carried on by the Minister of National Defence and the associate minister. It seems to me this is very much like asking a man who is accused of misappropriation of funds to audit the books.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member make his question short and succinct.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that my question will be much shorter than the previous answer by the minister. I should like to ask the minister whether any attempt was made to interview any of the four or five young people whose names were given in the press, particularly Miss Kathy Moses who claims to have been kicked between the legs, and a young lady who claims to have been beaten and dragged by the hair. I want to ask the minister if any attempt was made to interview these people and get all the facts, or is the minister's report based entirely on the report of the officers who were responsible for the conduct of the guards in question?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, we can only base our opinion on the facts we have available. The department has received no complaints from any of the demonstrators, and no claims have been made. I might quote to my hon. friend from a pamphlet issued by this organization entitled "Unique Action at La Macaza" in which it is stated:

> On Tuesday at 4.30 p.m. we precipitated a "crisis" for the military with their obvious policy of "no arrests and no draggings" by splitting into two groups and blocking a secondary entrance which the air force had been using for some important traffic. With the blocking of both entrances the base was genuinely sealed. We had taken a new initiative. Would the military respond, and if so, how?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister a supplementary question. If these young people were breaking the law were any of them arrested? Why were charges not laid against them?

Mr. Hellyer: They were not arrested, Mr. Speaker. On the other hand, if any of them had felt that undue force had been used I would have expected that they would have laid charges and used the due processes of law as laid down by our constitution.

Mr. Douglas: Did the minister use any of the due processes of law?

Mr. Hellyer: Quite so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Speaker, my question has been asked.

CONSIDERATION OF PURCHASE OF U.S. JET AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister inform the house whether the government has considered the purchase of $300 million worth of pure jet all purpose aircraft from the United States and, if not, when a decision will be made in this regard?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the house a few days ago, we have been studying our requirements for tactical aircraft for some time. A number of studies have been done but as yet no decision has been taken.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Should the minister and the departmental officials decide to move in the direction of acquisition of this type of aircraft, will the minister see that included in the plans will be an arrangement to have the aircraft manufactured in this country?

Mr. Hellyer: The urgency for making a decision, Mr. Speaker, is directly related to providing a continuing basis for the aeronautical industry of this country. Strictly from the standpoint of the Department of National Defence we could postpone a decision for some time, but in view of the urgency of giving support to the industry we have been giving early consideration to this matter and hope to be able to make a decision soon.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the news report last evening on television, can the minister state whether the decision of the government is imminent in this regard, having in mind the supplying of further defence contracts to Canadair in Montreal?

Mr. Hellyer: I would not say it was imminent, but I hope a decision can be taken as soon as we can arrive at what we believe to be the right conclusion.

NATIONAL PARKS

NOVA SCOTIA—INCLUSION OF COAST AREA IN SECOND PARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the fact that the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources is planning to establish a second national park for Nova Scotia in Queens county and the boundaries at present indicated do not include part of the sea coast, will the minister give consideration to adding a section of coast line either in Lunenburg or Queens county so this park will provide a greater attraction for our Nova Scotia tourist industry?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest this is a question for the order paper.

WORLD FAIR

REPORTED STATEMENT AS TO BENEFITS TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Trade and Commerce and it arises out of a report in the Montreal Star of September 28 of a speech delivered by the minister's parliamentary secretary, who is quoted as having predicted that among the results of the world fair in Montreal will be a 20 per cent increase in the gross national product and a benefit of $200 million to the national treasury. My question to the minister is this. Were these heartwarming if slightly stupifying predictions based on information supplied to the government by its economic advisers, or are they merely part of the Liberal mystique?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary secretary did not consult with me before delivering his speech, but may I say that the most optimistic and encouraging speeches are made by my predecessor in office Hon. George Hees.

TRANSPORTATION

LACK OF RAILWAY PASSENGER ACCOMMODATION, MONTREAL-VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Minister of Transport based on the reply he gave the house to an inquiry I made about the lack of accommodation on C.P.R. passenger trains between Montreal and Vancouver. In reply he said that every day for the last few weeks some accommodation has been available on The Canadian between many points. Could the minister ascertain from the C.P.R. between how many points there has been no accommodation available, and how many requests from the public for reservations have been turned down since the C.P.R. drastically reduced accommodation on The Dominion?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will try to get the information.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF EASTERN FEED GRAIN AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Forestry who is responsible for agricultural development.

On September 25, replying to a question of mine concerning the setting up of an agency to deal with feed grain in eastern Canada, the minister said that this matter was being studied by a committee since last fall.

Now here is my question, Mr. Speaker. When does the minister expect this committee to present a report or a release on the creation of an agency to deal with feed grain in eastern Canada? Has he asked the committee on agriculture and colonization to increase the number of its sittings with a view to submitting its report at the earliest possible time, so that this agency might be formed before fall?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch with the chairman of the committee who assured me that the sittings would soon be resumed to pursue the discussion of this problem.

Mr. Langlois: Could he also tell us the approximate date when those meetings will end?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I am told that we should receive the report of the committee before the end of November.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

Would the Prime Minister tell us whether he has looked into the statement made last Tuesday in Vancouver by the executive vice president of the C.L.C., Mr. Jos. Morris, and does he agree with Mr. Morris when the latter asks for "a social service and allowances system which will enable the unemployed to share the wealth of the community and to play an active part in it", so as to face up automation?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Surely this question, not being pressing and not requiring an immediate answer, should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe the question concerned a statement appearing in the press that is alleged to have been made by a private citizen. Surely I am not required to comment on all statements made outside the house by private citizens.

Mr. Speaker: I would say the point taken by the Prime Minister is well taken.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct a question to the Secretary of State, but in his absence I shall ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) to reply.

Does the participation of certain Liberal members of this house in the electoral campaign in Quebec constitute another form of that co-operative federalism which the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce is supporting?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order paper.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

SUBSIDIES TO CULTURAL CENTRES IN DORCHESTER COUNTY, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-André Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister?

Could he tell the house whether his government intends to grant subsidies to the many cultural centres promised by the Liberal party in Dorchester county during the current provincial by-election campaign? If so, is the Prime Minister admitting in this way that operation "agriculture" having failed in that county, it is now being replaced by operation "culture"?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I think this is a very urgent matter as there is going to be an election next Monday, that is, in four days, so that it is clearly too late to put this question on the order paper.

Throughout the county of Dorchester the Liberal party are promising cultural centres for the Dorchester electors. We would like to know whether before Monday, the day of the election, the federal government intend to pay for all these centres connected with the centennial of confederation in the Dorchester municipalities.

That is why an answer must be considered as urgent at this time.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the question should be put on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I must inform you that I intend to raise this question tonight at ten o'clock.

GRAIN

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—INCREASE IN ELEVATOR CAPACITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I might direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, and ask him if he has anything to relate with regard to the grain elevator at Prince Rupert, especially in view of the fact there was virtually a promise made about it on the eve of April Fool's day.

Mr. Speaker: This is another question for the order paper.

Mr. Howard: If I may be permitted, I should like to say that Your Honour has consistently permitted me to ask questions precisely in the same way I have just asked this question now, with the exception of the reference to April Fool's day.

Mr. Speaker: I would simply say to the hon. member that two wrongs do not make a right, and if I have been wrong in the past I am about to correct it now.

Mr. Howard: May I be permitted to hope you pursue that course diligently.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—ELIGIBILITY OF QUEBEC STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I wonder if the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance would take notice of this question for an answer as early as possible. Is it a fact, as I have been informed, that university students from Quebec studying, for example, at the University of New Brunswick, are disqualified for student loans for two reasons; one, to be eligible for a loan from the New Brunswick allotment they must have 12 months residence in New Brunswick; two, under the Quebec plan they must attend universities in that province in order to qualify?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): I am pleased to accept the hon. member's suggestion.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO TERRITORIAL PARTICIPATION IN CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): I wonder if the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration can say whether the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories will be participating as observers at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference on Indian affairs.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no decision has yet been made in this connection, but the hon. member's suggestion will be considered.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—SUSPENSION OF LONGSHOREMEN BY INTERNATIONAL UNION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I wonder if I might answer a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Villeneuve concerning the suspension of stevedores in Montreal. The information I am giving is based on press reports, and it would appear that the Canadian national trade union has been conducting organizing activity among longshoremen on the Montreal waterfront. Two members of local 375 of the international longshoremen's association were assisting the C.N.T.U. and, it is said, sought to enroll other longshoremen. As a result they were suspended from I.L.A. membership and this has affected their employment under the terms of the collective agreement between the employers and the union.

It would appear that the suspensions of the two men were made by the Canadian officers and members of the Montreal local and not by the international union itself. Under the constitution of the organization, suspended members have a right of appeal to the higher officers. Following procedure under the constitution of their organization, they could also have recourse to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and the courts, if it is still felt that their rights have been violated.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Labour a question following the answers he gave to the questions I asked yesterday.

It is understood that there is a collective agreement between the Montreal stevedores and their employers. The minister now tells us that those two citizens, those two longshoremen, were suspended from their jobs until December 31. What statute of this country, or what legislation under the Department of Labour can stop a longshoreman who is dissatisfied with his own union from working in favour of a different union, whether it be the CSN, as in this case or another?

On the other hand, will those longshoremen be paid unemployment insurance benefits? At this time they are barred from doing so.

Can the minister affirm that the longshoremen will, at least, have the right to receive unemployment insurance benefits, over and above ensuring them the right to affiliate with another union, if they want to do so. After all, we are living in a democratic country where the individual freedom of each citizen should be unreservedly protected.

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I regret having failed to add that I am still awaiting information with respect to the status of these persons under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Just as soon as I receive the information I shall give it to my hon. friend.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Will the minister inquire from the two stevedores who were laid off in order to find out whether the real reason of their suspension does not lie with the Montreal longshoremen's association, where a large group would like to become members of the CSN rather than of the international longshoremen's association? Efforts are being made to keep them from doing so, and that is a violation of the most sacred rights of freedom of union.

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: As I stated earlier, Mr. Speaker, if these persons feel their rights have been violated there are certain courses open to them, namely to appeal under their own constitution for further adjudication; and if they wish to seek recourse under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act they can make an application under it. They can also seek to have the matter determined in the courts. As can be seen from this, there are a number of methods open to these persons to have the matter determined without any action to be taken by the Department of Labour.

Mr. Grégoire: Is the minister suggesting they should appeal to a higher official of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have spent a great deal of time on this question and the minister has attempted to give a rather complete answer. I have allowed fuller questions than are usually allowed, in order to give some recognition to the rights of individuals, but

I do not think we should take any more time of the house on this particular matter. Hon. members should consult the minister privately, or else put their questions on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The Minister of Labour made a statement and we are trying to get detailed information. I think we surely have a right to ask the minister to whom these five stevedores must apply for appeal, so as to secure a hearing or submit their grievances.

Should they appeal to officials of the union, to a branch or an agency of the Department of Labour?

We want full particulars on this matter and I suggest that this is where we should ask questions and try to get the accurate details we most earnestly seek.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I am sure if the hon. member put his questions on the order paper once more he would get a very detailed answer, and he would also save the time of the house.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

D.E.W. LINE—SITUATION RESPECTING LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): In connection with the questions asked concerning the dispute on the D.E.W. line, I am advised by the Winnipeg officer of the department, who was the mediator in this situation, that to his knowledge there was no intimidation practised by anyone to influence the outcome of the dispute. It will be recalled that the parties had agreed on September 22, during their discussions before the entry of the mediator, that there would be no strike, and they proceeded to put this undertaking into writing. I think I should say also that the parties concerned in this dispute were very well aware of their responsibility to keep this vital defence line in operation, and that is why they reached agreement that there would be no strike and that any issues still in dispute at the conclusion of negotiations would be submitted to final and binding arbitration.

FINANCE

NEW TAX POLICIES FOR POTASH FIRMS USING SOLUTION METHOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, and his parliamentary secretary can take notice of it. On Tuesday morning, 30 miles west of Regina, the $50 million Kalium Chemical plant, the first in the world to successfully use solution mining for recovering potash from great depths, was opened. At a press conference in Regina that morning the premier of Saskatchewan said that "Gordon's tax policies" regarding this new industry are stupid and short sighted. Will this forthright statement of the premier of Saskatchewan prompt the minister to give bold and imaginative consideration to new tax policies to encourage further development in this new field?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is not accountable for the short-sightedness of the gentleman to whom the hon. member attributed this statement.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF GILL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to put a question to the Minister of Labour earlier, but because of the numerous questions that followed I retired from the field.

Is it the intention of the minister to study soon the Gill commission report on unemployment insurance and on unemployment now prevailing in Canada? This report was presented several months ago.

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): As I have stated on several occasions, Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the Gill committee are under examination, and the situation with respect to action on the report was outlined by the Prime Minister at the opening of the session.

Mr. Langlois: May I ask a supplementary question of the minister and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not see any particular urgency in this question, which has been raised frequently during the last few weeks.

Mr. Langlois: If I may put one short question, it may not be of urgency in one particular region but it is of particular urgency with respect to the unemployment situation across the country. We have had frequent answers from the minister that the recommendations are under consideration. I would like to ask under consideration by whom?

Mr. MacEachen: The government.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Langlois: As a supplementary question, isn't the Minister of Labour—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

General administration—

1. Departmental administration including fees for membership in the international organizations listed in the details of the estimates, $5,180,500.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Chairman, the Canadian economy is now in its fourth year of advance and is moving strongly ahead. The rise in Canada's gross national product this year surpasses even the 6.6 per cent increase of 1963. Employment so far this year is up 4 per cent from the same period a year ago. Despite a more rapid expansion of the labour force, there are fewer people without jobs.

The general advance has been widely diffused throughout all major segments of industry and all geographic regions. Output in secondary manufacturing industries has continued to grow, service trades and construction have been more active and substantial gains are also being realized in resource industries.

Canada's 1963-64 crop year, which ended July 31, was the most successful wheat marketing year in the nation's history. It was a record year for production, exports and income, in each case well above previous highs. It is a year that will be difficult to match.

A number of importing countries have harvested large crops this year. Nevertheless the outlook for wheat exports is favourable. Canadian wheat is ideally suited for blending with the indigenous soft wheats produced in these countries. Agreements concluded with mainland China and several eastern European countries assure a continuing heavy movement to these markets. Forward sales for the current crop year are encouraging. In short, 1964-65 is going to be a good year for exports of wheat.

Internationally, economic conditions remain generally good, with world production and trade moving steadily higher. Sales of Canadian products have been more than holding their own in international markets. Rising exports have played a major role in Canada's current expansion. For the period 1960 to 1963 Canada's merchandise exports rose by 30 per cent or nearly 10 per cent each year, and so far this year they are up by a spectacular 23 per cent from the same period in 1963. Even exclusive of wheat, exports are up by 17 per cent. Items contributing in a major way to this increase include lumber, pulp and paper, iron ore, base metals, aircraft and automotive products. Especially encouraging is the further growth in a wide assortment of manufactured goods which, as a group, are assuming increasing importance in Canada's export trade. Canadian manufacturers continue to break new ground in terms of both the broader range of products sold and the growing number of markets penetrated. A significant part of this growth in sales of manufactured goods consists of capital equipment sold under long term financing arrangements of one kind or another, either insurance or direct financing by the government under the Export Credits Insurance Corporation. All major foreign markets have absorbed more Canadian products this year. Exports to the United States are up by 11 per cent, to Britain and the rest of the commonwealth by 21 per cent, to the European economic community by 25 per cent, to Japan by 18 per cent.

The encouraging state of Canada's trade at present does not, of course, mean that those concerned with its promotion can now rest comfortably on their oars. There is nothing static about foreign competition for international trade, and in our promotion activities we look to the years ahead. Moreover, prosperity presents its own special challenges. It is, for example, anomalous but true that Canada's economy is perhaps more vulnerable to external imbalance in good times than in bad. I think the comment that was made today on the orders of the day, that there was some adverse change in our current account balance, was simply an indication that we were very prosperous.

This year's accelerated growth in the Canadian economy accompanied by sharply expanded capital expenditure programs has entailed a new upsurge in import demands. So far in 1964 merchandise imports are up by 19 per cent and payments for non-merchandise items are also up sharply. Thus, the virtually unprecedented rise in export earnings this year has scarcely been adequate to meet the rise in foreign payments. Consequently our current account balance, which last year showed the smallest deficit—about $500 million—in the last nine years, has shown no further improvement this year. Figures recently released by the dominion bureau of statistics show a current account deficit of $518 million for the first half of 1964 compared with a deficit of $452 million for the same period last year. A moderate improvement in the merchandise trade balance has been more than offset by higher net payments on non-merchandise items; in other words, the trade surplus has again grown fairly substantially but it has been offset by these invisible items. These developments illustrate how important it is, even in present conditions of mounting prosperity, to push resolutely ahead with programs to extend our productive capabilities on the basis of competitive efficiency and to develop new markets. It is against this background of solid accomplishment but continuous challenge that the department is pursuing its role of helping to pave the way and to stimulate an ever-increasing flow of Canadian products into the markets of the world, wherever they are to be found.

I would now like to say a word about international trade relations. We are in one of those periods of transition where old trading patterns gradually give way to new. No country can afford to ignore the currents or to lag behind in adapting itself to the changes that are taking place. Especially is this so in the case of Canada, where the further development of our trade and the growth of our economy require that we should exploit every opportunity to gain access to wider markets. Better access to the United States and other markets could, in many cases, provide the necessary incentives for longer production runs and increased specialization, which are so necessary to many of our secondary industries. Improved access would also open up possibilities for the development of new products and for the initiation of new export trade.

The intensive phase of GATT trade and tariff bargaining gets under way in November. While there was some lull in the preparatory work in August, meetings of experts are now being resumed in Geneva with the objective of clearing away remaining difficulties in time for the November 16 deadline. On that date the participating countries are scheduled to begin their detailed bargaining behind closed doors.

[Mr. Sharp.]

The Canadian tariffs and trade committee has now pretty well completed its initial task of receiving briefs and conducting consultations with various Canadian interests. The interest shown by the business community has been most encouraging. More than 400 separate briefs have been received by the tariffs and trade committee. The committee has been going non-stop all summer—like parliament—in receiving interested groups which have been asked for hearings. Our delegation, under the chairmanship of Mr. Norman Robertson, will be entering the negotiations in Geneva better briefed on the views and interests of the various Canadian groups than ever before. The tariffs and trade committee here in Ottawa, under the able and experienced leadership of Mr. Hector McKinnon, will be available as may be required to provide a vital and continuing link between our negotiations in Geneva and the Canadian business community. Some of our negotiating team has already left for Geneva for the final preparatory phase of the negotiations. We expect that the full delegation will be on the ground after the end of the year.

I would not try at this stage to predict the duration of these negotiations, or the final outcome. They will be of great importance to the international trading community and we can expect them to be long and difficult. The task ahead and the challenge the negotiations present fully justify the time and effort required. Special efforts will be necessary to ensure a meaningful negotiation in the agricultural sector. Canada's interests in the negotiations are positive and clear. It is through the opening up of markets on the broadest possible basis that our own trade and economic interests can best be served. In the process concessions will be required in return for benefits received. Our participation will be carefully developed in the light of the national interest and the opportunities presented. We shall be striving for maximum Canadian advantage. As I have said on some other occasions, we shall be tough but not reluctant bargainers.

A most important task of the 1960's is to reinforce the efforts of the less developed countries to improve the lot of their peoples and to reach the point of self-sustaining growth. The United Nations trade and development conference laid bare the magnitude of the task and the urgency of the demands of the less developed world. The conference also laid the basis for carrying the work forward through new international machinery devoted exclusively to the problems of trade and economic development. The Kennedy round of negotiations provides an early opportunity to assist the developing countries through better trade access. The major trading nations, including Canada, have agreed that maximum efforts should be made to open up trading opportunities for the developing countries. Special procedures are being worked out to ensure that the interests of the less developed countries are kept fully in mind.

The United Nations general assembly this autumn has the trade problems of the developing countries high on its agenda. The GATT countries will be having a special session this autumn in Geneva—I expect that my deputy minister will be attending as the chairman of GATT—devoted especially to possible changes in the international trading framework designed to take better account of the trade needs of the developing countries. Canada has played, and will continue to play, its full part in these endeavours.

It is no small achievement that during this period of pause, when the leading trading nations have been preparing themselves for further progress in the direction of international trade and economic co-operation, restrictionist pressures have on the whole been resisted by our trading partners. While some problems of access have been encountered, these have been the exception and Canada's exports to the United States, Britain, the European economic community and Japan have all been running at record levels.

Japan has now become Canada's third largest market and the prospects are for even higher import requirements for the years ahead. The pace at which Japan has been opening up its market to import competition may at times give rise to impatience. Nevertheless, Japan has moved a long way in the last several years. Japan herself has had trouble in gaining improved access to markets for its products. Of key importance is that the movement has been in the direction of freeing up trade and not away from international economic co-operation.

We have been doing well in the British market. Canned apples were freed from import controls in June, and very few of the United Kingdom post-war trade restrictions now remain. I am glad to see that my hon. friend who formerly had responsibility in this matter is smiling, because I know from his experience and from my own how many years it has taken to get rid of canned apples.

Mr. Nowlan: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: We are actively pursuing with the British authorities the question of better access for our fresh apples and pork products.

The department has of course followed developments in the United States with particularly close attention. Certain important sectors of our trade have been the object of protectionist pressures, notably oil and lumber, but restrictive measures have been avoided. We are frankly disappointed that the United States has, so far, not felt able to free up the trade in lead and zinc, particularly during this period when the market has strengthened. Lack of substantial progress in easing the United States restrictions on Canadian cheese is equally disappointing. And we are determined that the objectives of our automotive program should be achieved. It is easy to harp at the United States, and we have our problems. But it is important to keep in mind the extent to which new trade restrictions have been avoided and the great potential which exists for expanded trade and fruitful economic co-operation with our major trading partner, the United States.

In its external trade promotion work, the department is building purposefully upon the foundations established by past projects such as the national export trade promotion conferences, the regional trade promotion meetings, and the various sample shows. Those imaginative projects stimulated greater interest in exporting, identified opportunities and potentialities, and pointed to ways and means of capitalizing on them. They induced a gratifying extra momentum to the export activity of our business community.

Our task is always to service expanding interest in export trade, to exploit gains which have been made, as well as to broaden and diversify the base of our trade in continuing to seek new prospects and to avail ourselves of additional export possibilities as these are discovered. As the pattern of our trade develops, new methods must develop with it. The guiding work principle is "promotion in depth"—intensive, detailed, painstaking effort. In particular, attention is being paid to export development for secondary manufactures. Our export manufacturing base is widening in a most encouraging way. As instances of success at export multiply, more and more businessmen are gaining confidence in their competitive capacity in world markets.

Whether it be in our dealings with individual firms or with trade associations; in the bent of our trade missions program or the purpose of our trade fairs program; in the establishing of further regional offices within Canada or new trade posts outside our country; in special activity such as our efforts to encourage the export of Canadian consultant engineering services or our work in developing the export of Canadian-made components needed by overseas industries; in selling bulk or packaged foodstuffs and other agriculture or fishery products or in exporting industrial raw materials or manufactured products—in every area we are working intensively and with purpose. Canadian businessmen are responding to the opportunities and to the challenges in a most gratifying way.

The department's aim is to remain flexible, responsive to fresh opportunities. Prospects, trends and potentialities are kept under constant review. We are constantly adapting to new environmental changes, new developments, and we shall continue to do so.

In our efforts at external trade promotion we are co-operating fully with all provincial trade departments and I am glad to say they are reciprocating in like degree. In matters of mutual interest and concern there is sensible exchange of views at the planning stage, practical collaboration in the organizational phase, effective joint effort at time of execution. I am satisfied that much mutual benefit has already accrued. Indeed, when I first met with the ministers and my opposite numbers in the provincial governments I said I thought that this co-operation was a very good example of co-operative federalism. My officials and their opposite numbers in the provinces have developed intimate and effective relationships that augur well for the future.

In that other important sector of our promotion work, tourism, there is every indication that the Canadian tourist industry will achieve another record year in dollars earned from visitors to this country. The tourist bureau is working to a three year development plan designed to bring tourist earnings to a total of a billion dollars in 1967. This will require a very considerable effort and investment. Good progress is being made and I am confident that the imagination and determination being shown will yield results of which we as Canadians can all be proud.

Hon. members will be interested in the program called "Project Hospitality" which the travel bureau inaugurated through the Canadian tourist association. Project hospitality consists of a series of seminars and local hospitality conferences in every province aimed at the operator or service level. The objective is to raise the standards of reception and service provided to our visitors. Results to date are very encouraging.

Through the annual federal-provincial tourist conference to be held in Ottawa in November and by continual, almost daily, consultation with the provinces and the transportation companies covering all kinds of promotion activities, the travel bureau continues to provide leadership and a means of co-ordinating promotion of travel in Canada both at home and abroad.

As regards Expo '67, good progress has been made and the corporation advises that preparations are on schedule and prospects for foreign and domestic participation most satisfactory. Hon. members have had an opportunity to be briefed on the striking plans which have been developed for federal and provincial participation in this great centennial event.

A number of questions have been raised regarding the relationships between the Department of Trade and Commerce and the new Department of Industry. They were raised particularly on the estimates of the Department of Industry. There is no need for any confusion on this matter. Those relationships are precisely similar to those existing with the departments of agriculture, fisheries, forestry and mines and technical surveys. The prime responsibility for matters affecting export trade and trade promotion rests with the Department of Trade and Commerce. To the extent that the Department of Industry is successful in increasing productivity, improving the competitive strength of Canadan industry and expanding the range and volume of Canadian industrial production, it will develop new fields of opportunity for export trade development. Officials of the two departments are working in the closest collaboration; their efforts are complementary and mutually reinforcing.

As hon. members are aware, I have responsibility as Minister of Trade and Commerce for a number of boards, crown corporations and agencies which report to parliament through me, but which are not part of the department as such. When we come to the votes covering the estimates of these boards and agencies I shall be pleased to comment or to answer any questions. At this stage I should like to refer briefly to the operations of the dominion bureau of statistics and the national energy board.

Hon. members will be asked to approve a small sum to undertake preliminary work for the quinquennial 1966 census which will again be taken for Canada as a whole as it was in 1956. The questions to be asked for the population will be limited, as was the case in 1956, to some five basic questions—age, sex, marital status, relationship to head of household and whether living on a farm—plus a question on type and tenure of each occupied dwelling. For agriculture, questions will be asked about the number and size of holdings, type of farm, crop acreages, number of livestock and farm machines and limited information on expenditures.

Since I announced our national power policy to the house a year ago, the board has been engaged, directly and in association with other agencies, in various studies bearing on the implementation of that policy. As the house is aware, the board is also responsible for advising the government on the progress of the national oil policy. Earlier this year I expressed the view that average Canadian production of crude and equivalents should reach about 850,000 barrels a day in 1964. It now appears that this level will be very nearly achieved and that the industry will enjoy an increase of the order of 7 per cent over last year or more than 50 per cent above the level of average production in 1960.

The adjustments inherent in any such program require the constant participation by the board in discussions with companies in the industry, but I think the difficulties have so far been met by the industry and the board with a remarkable degree of success, both in terms of the adaptation of the patterns of the industry within Canada, and in terms of orderly development of the markets in the United States for Canadian oil. The process has not been painless and difficulties remain, but the industry is certainly to be congratulated on what it has so far achieved.

In closing my remarks I should like to stress again the need for Canada to respond appropriately to the basic shifts in the world trading environment that is taking place. Canada is a great trading nation. To maintain and improve our prosperity and our standard of living we must consolidate and improve our position as an international trader.

In the months ahead we can expect keener competition at home and abroad in our efforts to maintain and expand markets for primary products and for secondary manufactures. We should set our sights on meeting this keener competition, and on adjusting our posture and improving our efficiency to take advantage of broader markets. We must remain competitive if we are to maintain and expand our place in the Canadian market and in the markets of the world. I am confident that Canadian industry can and will respond to the new opportunities and new challenges.

Mr. Churchill: May I just ask the minister a question. Would he in concluding his remarks list the various agencies or crown companies for which he has responsibility so that we have them all together in his address?

Mr. Sharp: The Canadian wheat board—and this is not an agency but a responsibility, the corporation and labour unions returns act, which we were discussing this morning during the banking and commerce committee meeting, and the returns for which are collected by the bureau of statistics; the Exports Credits Insurance Corporation, the national energy board and the bureau of statistics. I also have responsibility for the Eldorado Mining and Refining Company and Expo '67.

Mr. Churchill: The board of grain commissioners is not included?

Mr. Sharp: No, it is not.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, it will be appreciated that it will be rather difficult to comment in detail on the minister's presentation. I am not complaining, but the minister's rate of delivery is rather rapid. I am not a shorthand writer and he has the advantage of a text, which he follows rather closely, copies of which we have not received. I again draw his attention to a request made by members on this side, as well as on all sides of the house, to the effect that if members of the cabinet are presenting statements and do so from a lengthy and involved text, they should exercise the courtesy of providing party leaders or representatives with copies. After all, the reading of a text by a minister in opening a discussion on his estimates is done with the tolerance of the members of the house and the Chair. Otherwise, if we want to follow the rules strictly, the minister would have to make such a statement spontaneously without a text. If you will permit me to digress slightly, Mr. Chairman, I think this is perhaps one area where things could be improved. Either we should accept the fact that a minister is going to make a statement from a text and have copies distributed, or the minister should follow the rules and get along without a text.

Be that as it may, I found the minister's statement this afternoon, at least at the beginning, to be rather generalized, and that it painted a picture in rather glowing colours. There was an unfortunate dearth of what one might call hard figures, comparing the progress this year with progress of the past. I should have liked to hear a great deal more detail about what he foresees for the future, and I will deal with that subject more extensively at a later time.

In following the minister's statement I made an attempt to compare it with a speech he delivered to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce annual meeting in Winnipeg on September 28. The two statements were made within a short period of time, and naturally the facts existing on the one occasion cannot be separated from the facts which existed on the other. These facts would not change. Therefore we find a similarity of thought expressed in both statements.

It is interesting to observe that the notes of caution I intend to make this afternoon may be in contrast to what the minister intended in the opening remarks of his statement. What I say is certainly not in the spirit of doom and gloom, which we have observed on the part of his colleagues who were formerly on this side of the house. Though the minister was not here then, I am sure he would blush if he heard or read some of the statements that were made then, in view of some of the things he said in his Winnipeg speech. I should like to quote from that speech, where he said:

> The Canadian economy is now in its fourth year of uninterrupted advance and substantial gains are being made this year.

It is too bad the hon. member for Essex East and a few of his fellow gloomsters of the past three years were not in attendance to hear this glowing report in respect of the nature of the economy as it stands today.

The minister has indicated a need for action in certain areas, and I think we should underline these areas. Certainly during the past six or seven years there has been a considerable increase in both exports and imports, but there is a question arising in respect of whether there will be a sufficient increase in exports to more than counterbalance the increase in imports. Is the increase in exports going to be sufficient to even keep pace with the vastly increasing payments on the foreign accounts, which have to be made on the non-commodity side, for interest, dividends and repayments? We know that from 1946 and 1947 to 1955 and 1956 there was a continuous and fantastic deficit on both the commodity and non-commodity side. There was a surplus on the commodity side I think in 1952, but that is the only exception.

Those deficits in international accounts were made up, so far as we were concerned, and this is what tended to keep the Canadian dollar at an artificially high level for a period of time. The deficits were actually invested in Canada but not necessarily in new investments. A good deal of the deficits were invested in other than new investments and we observed a good deal of purchases in industry made in Canada by foreign interests. These purchases were not all made by United States interests, but by other foreign interests as well. However, the more of this foreign investment there is as the result of a deficit in the international account, the more we must face up to the fact that we are going to have to repay this in some way in the future. Every time we borrow money on the foreign market we must take into account the fact that we are going to have to repay it.

Year by year we see this non-commodity item gaining on us. In fact, the situation is almost similar to a treadmill. This is the price we must pay for the progress that is being made in this country. I am not suggesting this is entirely wrong, but we must realize that this is a price we must be prepared to accept. If we ignore that fact I think we are guilty of very careless thought.

The minister referred to the export of apples from Halifax to the British market. Just as an aside, I should like to point out that I noticed a statement on one of the financial pages of a local daily newspaper which pointed out that the major processor of Ontario apples into apple juice is under British control. Instead of exporting our apples over to Great Britain they have taken over control of this processing industry and process them here.

I should like now to refer again to the speech made by the minister in Winnipeg. I have noted that from 1960 to 1963 exports on the commodity side increased by 30 per cent and that up to this time this year they are—in Winnipeg the minister used the word "whopping".

Mr. Sharp: Spectacular.

Mr. Lambert: Spectacular. I think we all realize that wheat and wheat products have a good deal to do with this, but there are other things. I hope that later the minister will be able to put on record the increase in sales of natural gas, because there has been quite a considerable advance. It has not been so much in the case of oil, although there has been good maintenance of that market. I intend to discuss the national oil policy.

With regard to the Kennedy round and GATT I believe my colleague, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, will be taking up that subject later. There are also other aspects of the minister's speech and responsibilities that some of my other colleagues will comment upon. Certainly the operations of Eldorado will come under the scrutiny of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona or I miss my guess.

I have the text here of the minister's speech in Winnipeg, and I think that the minister will agree, as will members generally, that there has been a very healthy development in that the increase in the volume of our exports, both as to quantity and as to price, has been in manufactured goods. I think it would have been necessary for us to pause and look at the situation much more closely if this had not been the case. If the increase were limited to basic or prime products then we would merely say that we were continuing and expanding our career of being hewers of wood and drawers of water.

I suggest to the minister that a good deal of the progress has been the result of the programs of really accentuated trade promotion that took place five or six years ago and extended into 1960 and 1961. I was a little disappointed that the minister, when speaking of trade promotion and trade conferences, did not indicate that there were any plans for a repetition of the very successful conference, confrontation, or whatever you want to call it, of our trade commissioners and members of Canadian industry. This took place on the largest possible scale in 1961 or late 1960. I think it certainly revitalized a whole section of the minister's department. I believe it has led to an entirely different atmosphere and has created a feeling of co-operation which has resulted in a large number of regional trade conferences between men in business and officials of the minister's department. It has led to greater co-operation between the federal Department of Trade and Commerce and the various provincial departments of trade and industry.

I would hope that the minister could announce that before long there is going to be another of these rather large gatherings, because as I participated in that conference I was able to observe the reaction of businessmen from western Canada, particularly from the province of Alberta, and many of our trade commissioners that this was the dawn of a new day. I do not say that conferences of this kind are necessary every year or every second year, but five years will soon have elapsed and I think another one is now called for.

Competition at the international level today is so acute that if Canada is not only to maintain its position but also to go forward there must be a really active, hard sell. People will not come here to buy. They will not walk in on their own. There must be aggressive selling. People can be brought here but they must be encouraged. I wish to congratulate the Department of Trade and Commerce and the minister for having maintained some of the momentum, but I do not think there has been quite the same momentum and I should like to see it picked up.

In Winnipeg the minister warned that unfortunately there has not been the same rate of progress from 1963 into 1964, that is, the same sort of optimistic upturn in our external accounts. There has been a great deal of capital spending which, as he says, has resulted in a resurgence of import demands. The fine increase on the export side has been matched by an increase in imports. If we leave wheat sales aside the 17 per cent increase on merchandise account is matched by a 17 per cent increase in merchandise imports.

But again I come back to the point that there has also been a very significant increase in the non-merchandise account, and it is the non-merchandise account that is most worrisome and the sector over which we have the least control. In the minister's address I noted the following sentence:

> It is not unusual that we should continue to experience a sizeable balance of payments deficit on current account in circumstances of rapid expansion such as now prevail. I have no doubt that a deficit of present proportions can be financed without difficulty.

Right away I ask: But for how long can we continue in this position and what has really been the price of past deficits? This is what concerns me. It may be that in a single year we can finance such a deficit without an undue drain on our foreign exchange holdings, but on the other hand it cannot be said that we can continue to do this. It seems to me that all too often we take the easy way out, like the man who is slowly going bankrupt and pays off his shortfall accounts by merely selling his assets. Eventually he will run out of assets and then he comes up against the startling reality that he is bankrupt. This is something we must guard against.

The minister indicated that the aim of his department was to improve and to extend the Canadian industrial structure, and to do this not by restrictive measures but by maintaining a suitable economic climate by the right kind of incentives and by the promotion of exports. Well, I am just wondering. We have noticed that this year, in the second quarter, there has been a levelling off. I am hoping that the minister has been discussing this levelling off with his colleague, the Minister of Finance. Every time there is an upward drive in the cost of production of manufactured goods, the problem of our export trade becomes more difficult.

I would say immediately that one of the restrictive measures involved in so far as export trade is concerned was the imposition of a sales tax on machinery entering into production. I have not at any time been able to see the justification for the imposition of this tax on production machinery when we are trying, with all our might and main, to drive up our exports. I do not know of any other country that has done this. Surely to goodness this is something that I hope the minister will be able to take care of in discussion with his colleague.

Mr. Sharp: I wonder if the hon. member, while he is making this point, would discuss the implication of the 43 per cent increase in exports in June, which is during the period to which he has referred?

Mr. Lambert: The increases are not looked at month by month because it takes just a mere accident of shipping or certain other things to influence the comparison on a month to month basis. I could perhaps say that the 43 per cent would be accounted for by the hurry to complete the wheat deliveries. There may be a number of factors. If the minister is talking about a 43 per cent increase in June of this year as compared with June of last year, then that is a short space because you can see increases or decreases of perhaps 100 per cent from one day to the next.

Mr. Sharp: I was just commenting on the statement the hon. member had made, that during this period there was some slackening of exports. I was pointing out that June was the largest monthly increase we had had in the whole year.

Mr. Lambert: I said there had been a sort of levelling off, not a slackening or a drop.

[Mr. Lambert.]

There is a levelling off. I should like to draw to the attention of the minister perhaps some of the conclusions that have been drawn from the reports issued by the dominion bureau of statistics, in so far as the gross national product is concerned and a few other things that perhaps go to counter balance some of the glowing statements the minister made at the beginning. I should like to cite from a commentary made on the situation which appears in this morning's financial press:

> A midsummer slump in business activity may have dimmed hopes for a balanced federal government budget this year.
> The gross national product showed no advance in volume in the second quarter, a 1 per cent increase in value, to an annual rate of $46 billion, being matched by a 1 per cent rise in prices. The non-farm output of goods and services dropped in volume by about one half of 1 per cent.
> The fall in non-farm production, the first since early in 1961, was accompanied by a slackening in consumer demand, a build-up of manufacturing inventories and a 1 per cent decline in corporation profits.

I am not saying we are on the eve of a disaster. However, I want to point out that there are certain things which we cannot ignore, and we must not go around with our heads in the clouds saying that all is well in the best of all possible worlds. There are difficulties.

If I may turn to another aspect of the minister's speech in Winnipeg—and I should like to apologize to the committee for concentrating on this—there was one aspect in which I can support him entirely. This is when he says:

> The fact that domestic trade takes place in a more familiar and predictable environment, and therefore with less conspicuous effort, should not be interpreted to impute an inferior role to this part of our commerce. On the contrary, the benefits accruing from the exchange of goods and services are equally real, whether achieved in a national or international framework. Canada's voluminous inter-regional trade flows are, in fact, a key pillar of our economic strength and the relative ease with which this movement occurs in no way detracts from, but rather adds to, its value. We would, I am afraid, become painfully aware of the tremendous contribution of inter-regional trade to our economic life were we to experience a serious disruption to the free flow of goods and services, and productive resources generally, across provincial borders. At a time when larger trading units are emerging throughout the world by way of customs unions and free trade areas, it is doubly important that we fully appreciate the value of our unrestricted domestic trade.
> I suggest that it should be one of the primary objectives of this chamber of commerce—

I think of all Canadian businessmen and of all governments, if I may interpolate.

—and of its members to resist the efforts that are sometimes made to hamper the free movement of goods within Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, yesterday afternoon I had the oportunity of making a short intervention in the debate, at which time I stressed a similar point. I should like merely to refer hon. members to the remarks I made there and not repeat them. However, I will not back away from them.

Now, may I turn to the national oil policy which was enunciated on February 2, 1961? The minister has told us that production now is about 850,000 barrels a day, and this includes both the domestic market and the export market. At the time the policy was enunciated, if my memory serves me correctly, production was about 630,000 barrels a day. As the minister indicated progress has been made, but not without some difficulty. This was anticipated both by the industry and the government. The attitudes of both were appreciated at the time and it certainly is to the credit of the industry that they have been able to continue this achievement.

The national oil policy was a prediction on a five year basis. We are now approaching the end of 1964, and I should like to hear a good deal more from the minister with regard to oil and gas. The mere fact it is more or less concentrated out in the prairies and in northeastern British Columbia should not detract from its importance. After all, petroleum is the most important mineral in Canada today, in so far as production is concerned. I have here, Mr. Chairman, a publication entitled, "What the mining industry means to Canada", published by the Canadian metal mining association. I received it today. It certainly has some very illuminating statistics at the back, and I commend them to hon. members, showing precisely what the mineral industry means to this country.

It must be remembered that oil and gas are minerals and they form a great part of our mineral production in each year. Now, in 1963, the total mineral production in Canada was valued at $2,976 million. Of this, mineral fuels, which are coal, natural gas, natural gas by-products and crude petroleum made up some $882 million.

It may not be realized that the province of Alberta produces the second largest amount of minerals in the country, on a dollar basis. In fact it produces 21.3 per cent of Canada's mineral production, exceeded only by the province of Ontario which produces 29.4 per cent. I admit this is primarily oil and gas. There is some coal, but when we look at the production of mineral fuels in western Canada, and what these fuels mean both to our domestic and foreign market then I feel sure the minister will agree that he needs to pay a great deal of attention to them.

The industry has problems. It is operating in a very limited sphere so far as the export of oil is concerned. This is one of the most competitive markets in the world, taking into account both the quantity of world production and the geographical location of our fields in relation to markets in Canada and the United States. I am a lot more confident about the export market for natural gas than I am about oil, because I do not think it will be subject to the same vicissitudes, and I would like an assurance from the minister that a very close watch is being kept on this.

Each time there was a suggestion in the United States press that quotas might be imposed on oil, those now on the ministerial benches used to rise in their places and try to badger the minister's predecessor with respect to the efficacy of the national oil policy. The performance of that policy over the last four years is ample proof it was a wise one. The government of the day followed the wise counsel of the national energy board, and I would like to pay—

The Chairman: I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, unless he is given leave by the committee to go beyond his allotted time. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert: I appreciate the courtesy of the committee in allowing me a few more minutes so that I may complete my remarks at this stage. Again with regard to oil and gas, may I point out that almost 72 per cent of our national production is produced in Alberta, 21 per cent in Saskatchewan and almost 5 per cent in B.C. We have a tremendous market for this product and there are pressures to sell more. We have approximately 15,000 producing wells which at present are producing at something like 55 per cent of their economic potential, and we also have the beginning of the development of the Athabasca tar sands in northeastern Alberta. These sands are just on the eve of massive development. Within three or four years we shall be seeing enough oil coming down the pipe line from the tar sands to keep one rather large refinery going, and this is only a mere beginning.

I have seen figures which show that the reserves of oil in the oil sands, sufficient for our requirements both in the export and domestic market, will last 1,040 years, which gives an indication of the vast potential of the area.

I would like to hear the minister comment on the national economic council, which was introduced with a great fanfare in 1963. There was almost indecent haste to replace the national productivity council with it, and I would remind the committee that the national productivity council was doing good work. Its name was changed to the national economic council and the government replaced its membership to a large degree. Since then there has been a great silence from the council so far as real, hard results are concerned. Listening to the devotees of economic planning who now occupy the government benches, we thought we were going to get the formula for the economic development and salvation of the country, but this seems to be the best kept secret of the year because we have heard nothing of any consequence from the national economic council. At least the government has kept very close counsel in this regard.

It is now five o'clock, Mr. Chairman, and I shall conclude my remarks for today, but will continue them on another occasion.

The Chairman: Do hon. members of the committee wish me to call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock I do now leave the chair so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Thursday, September 10, consideration in committee of Bill No. S-27, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada—Mr. Brown—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Number of directors.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, I have grave doubts that the amendment before the committee is in order. The bill asks parliament to enlarge the permissible number of directors of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada from 15 to 20. The amendment asks that three directors out of the 20 be appointed by the governor in council, and this is an innovation that goes far beyond the limits of the original act that incorporated the Bell Telephone Company of Canada and is, I submit, far removed from the scope of an amendment.

[Mr. Lambert.]

I would suggest to the hon. member who moved this amendment, which is so far reaching, that he withdraw it. An amendment of this type should not be brought before parliament except after careful thought, and at an appropriate time. It has been hastily drawn to meet this occasion and could have the opposite consequences to those intended. It would I think be chaotic if members of parliament, or retired members of parliament, or those deserving the favour of the governor in council were to be appointed directors of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. The governor in council is not a body to appoint directors of a company whose shares are owned wholly by its shareholders.

The mover has, I know, good intentions in his amendment; but I doubt that he or his supporters seriously expect the Canadian parliament to pass it. Its passage would undoubtedly lead to the greatest confusion and to ultimate chaos, turning or prolonging directors' meetings into a fruitless waste of time. Every group asking to be granted a charter might be asked later on, if their company had signal success, to provide for the appointment of directors by the governor in council.

In addition—and I need scarcely mention this—this is an infringement of property rights and the liberty of the subject. It is far different from nationalization, and subsequent compensation to owners and shareholders. It is an invasion of that field of legislation reserved to the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces under our constitution. It permits a wholly unwarranted intervention or intrusion by the governor in council into the private affairs of Her Majesty's subjects.

It is particularly significant that this innovation will affect the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, that most Canadian of all companies and a company which operates one of the most efficient telephonic communications systems in the world. The supporters of the amendment have stated that this type of interference by parliament is common in many countries of western Europe. I believe that France was mentioned as a country where some directors were appointed by the government and where the telephone system is partially owned by the state. I would ask any hon. member whenever he goes to France to endeavour to place a long distance telephone call in that country, a country where the government appoints a percentage of the directors. I would refer hon. members to the issue of Le Figaro Litteraire for the week of August 27 to September 2, 1964, and to read therein the article by Monsieur François Nourricier. It took him more than 27 hours to make an urgent telephone call into Paris from a distance of 50 miles away. Merely reading the story would be a salutary experience for many of us. Do the Canadian people want to risk losing the efficient telephonic communications system that it enjoys at the present time in order to experiment with the fanciful provisions of this amendment? I say not, Mr. Chairman; although I want to add that I respect the mover of this amendment and many of the other speakers.

I would remind hon. members that very shortly the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada is to review the financial affairs of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. This is the body that represents the Canadian public in its dealings with the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. Will its functions be aided one iota by a few directors being appointed by the governor in council as a political plum, or honour, if you like, to defeated candidates or even to members of parliament? I would think not. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is unrealistic; it is eccentric and ill-conceived, and will never meet its intended purpose. If it is not wholly out of order, it ought certainly to be defeated in committee.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words on this subject. I speak in favour of the amendment which would add public directors to the board of the Bell Telephone Company, and I speak against the original proposal which would add private members to that board. I think it is very timely that we consider that only two weeks ago, as the previous speaker mentioned, the board of transport commissioners virtually called the Bell Telephone Company on the carpet so that it could examine its operations. I think this would be a most untimely period for us to extend the private control of that organization, at least until the board has, as it has announced it will, reviewed the operations of the company.

I need only quote from the statement issued by the board so recently on this subject to explain why many hon. members in different parts of the house are opposed to the extension of the Bell Telephone Company private directors board. I quote from the board's statement:

> The periodic studies made by the board's staff and the information supplied by the companies from time to time showed that there had been certain changes in capital investment, revenues, expenses, debt charges, dividend payments and retained earnings of the companies.

This refers to the Bell Telephone Company and to the B.C. Telephone Company. The statement continues:

> It would appear to be in the public interest that the board should hold a review by way of public hearings to consider the capital investment, revenues and expenses, debt charges, dividend payments and retained earnings of the company and the permissive level of the company's earnings and the basis on which such permissive level may be authorized for telephone rate purposes.
> The board does not intend to inquire into the propriety of existing rates or any revision thereof that may be requested in consequence of the board's finding which will be reviewed later if necessary.

The other telephone company mentioned in the board's statement is the British Columbia Telephone Company, whose profits have risen by more than 100 per cent since 1958. In the case of the Bell Telephone Company, which would add to its directors under the original motion, the total dividends paid increased about 75 per cent in the seven-year period from 1957 to 1964, or from $35.4 million in 1957 to an estimated $61.4 million this year. In other words, the Bell Telephone Company is making over $1 million a week from supplying privately a service that should be, surely, publicly conducted for use and not expressly for profit. This is the basic reason why we in this party feel that if any addition is made to the board of directors of the Bell Telephone Company, it should be done by the appointment of public directors, especially at this time.

The Chairman: Before I recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming I might mention that when the hon. member for Brantford spoke a short while ago he raised a point of order which I had a chance to consider quickly while the hon. member for New Westminster had the floor. Certainly I feel the same way as the hon. member for Brantford, namely that there is some doubt as to the legality of this amendment, which is unique perhaps in some ways. On the other hand, there has been discussion and debate on it and I believe it would be most unfair to hon. members who wish to take part in the debate if I were to rule on the point of order now. I suggest we continue the debate on the amendment now before the committee.

Mr. Peters: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The remarks of the mover can be concurred in as far as I am concerned because I think this amendment may have been hasty, and is unique. We in Canada are facing problems which should have been discussed years ago. I agree with the hon. member when he says that the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, which serves 400,000 subscribers in Ontario and Quebec, is a worth-while, highly modernized and efficient operation; there is no question about that. We in Canada are very proud of our telephonic communications systems. It is true that in Europe and even in France the situation is such that it would be easier to walk and speak to your party than use the telephone, but I certainly did not say or intend to imply that the telephone communications system in France is operated by government appointed directors, because I do not know whether it is or is not. I do know that many enterprises in France are in that circumstance, but I would not presume to say that their telephone system was.

The board of transport commissioners have, in my opinion, listened to some very odd arguments from the Bell Telephone Company in the past and it is interesting to note they have now decided to review the rates to the subscribers in the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec. The board of transport commissioners should have looked at these rates a long time ago.

A chap came into my office the other day who had been doing considerable work in the field of government investment, and it seems governments have involved themselves in communications systems to a large extent. In a country as large as Canada, interlinked as it is with the United States defence system, it is normal that a large system of communications which is absolutely necessary to any type of defence of our nation would be inter-related with other existing communication systems. In most countries I am sure there is a division between private systems in operation, even the monopoly civilian systems, and national defence operations. Because the Bell Telephone Company respect the government and receive co-operation from the board of transport commissioners, they have been an efficient organization, able to supply services required and are able to provide a large amount of money. They are also in a position to take advantage of Canadian and United States defence contracts.

We do not own our own system or even the trans-Canada telephone system, which itself is a pooling of hundreds of telephone systems throughout the country. In 1962 these contracts to which I have referred—I am talking here of the public tender contracts, not the type given to the Bell which are of a classified nature—amounted to approximately $6,385,000, and in 1963 to $6,869,000 approximately. For the month of August of this year they amounted to $13,277,000 approximately. So that in the first six months of this year they were more than double of the two previous years. That is a factor which must be taken into consideration.

Great emphasis is placed on the fact that this company is a Canadian company, but I do not think it really exists as a company except in the minds of the shareholders. This company is the American telegraph and telephonic system, I am sure. On paper it may be Canadian owned, but there is the same kind of subsidiary in the United States, Western Electric, and in the north there is Northern Electric, a totally owned subsidiary which manufactures parts.

The province of Quebec is interested in doing something about this question. I saw an official the other day who was talking to me about the legality of the action of the Quebec government in taking over the Bell Telephone Company in that province. It is my opinion that if the Quebec government wants to take over Bell's assets in the province of Quebec, they can be expropriated, provided they do not interfere with the federal charter which allows the company to operate on a national basis and is a link between the government, through the board of transport commissioners, and the public.

I think the Liberals had better look at this matter and not hide their heads in the sand. Somebody has to do something about Bell because the rates are far too high. They are almost double what they are in the three prairie provinces which have, in the main, a rural operation. The operation in Ontario and Quebec is mainly an urban one, and in the northern areas of those two provinces other telephone companies operate, similar to those in western Canada. I think the Liberals had better think twice before they reject this amendment. I think the directors of the Bell Telephone at the present time will be happy to accept this kind of control and direction and allow the government to have some small say in its operation, rather than allow the government of the province of Quebec to take over their assets any time they wish to do so by means of expropriation. Many people have said to me: "Let us expropriate the whole of the Bell Telephone". Let us go further and expropriate all the telephone communications systems in Canada, because they are pretty vicious monopolies. It is impossible to conduct a conversation with a neighbour in a town, to operate a business in a community or to conduct any ordinary type of business without using the monopoly of the telephone company in any given area. In return for that there is some small measure of control by the board of transport commissioners. The board was not set up to look into telephone communications; they were set up to decide the tariffs of railways. They were not meant to decide whether the subscribers rate in Ottawa is $6.50 or $4.25 in northern Ontario, or $3.90 in the prairie provinces. That is not their function, and having talked to some of these officials I know they are not equipped to handle this problem. The public demands some control, and control along the lines suggested in British Columbia. Perhaps a federal charter should not apply and these companies should be forced to obtain provincial charters. If that were the situation I am sure that British Columbia would, by majority decision, expropriate and nationalize the provincial telephone system. I think that will happen in the province of Quebec earlier than the people concerned with this matter think. There is a great deal of interest in the province of Quebec in this possibility, and I can foresee a move being made towards the expropriation of the telephone systems in that province within the next two or three years.

Mr. Chairman, I want to be entirely fair in this matter and must say that it is not only the Bell Telephone Company that creates difficulty for the province of Quebec. I understand there are more than 150 telephone companies operating at the present time in the province of Quebec. Many of them operate very archaic exchanges, and rural systems badly in need of modernization. I suggest that will only be accomplished as the result of the Bell system being expanded in that province. I do not think a provincial system could accomplish this improvement unless it took over the large urban subscriptions, which would of course have an effect on the Bell Telephone Company.

The Bell Telephone Company vice president came to us several weeks ago in Ottawa and said in respect of this increased board of directors that one of the directors to be appointed would probably be a representative from a university. He said one of the directors would be a man now high in the academic field completely divorced from politics and business, but interested in providing the board of directors with some academic experience. He suggested that another appointment might be made from the industrial sector of the country and this appointee would provide information in respect of industrial aspirations in this field of communications.

Mr. Chairman, I had not heard a government member stand up and say, that if three appointments were to be made by the governor in council, they would be defeated political candidates, until the hon. member made that suggestion today. I had not heard a government member before say that these appointments would be political plums handed out on a patronage basis. I take off my hat to that government member. He has been much more honest and courageous than most members in discussing this very touchy and unique part of our political way of life. He says these appointees will be that type of individual.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the hon. member is correct in that suggestion. I do not contemplate such a development. I believe the individuals appointed in this way would be of the calibre and type the government has appointed during the last several years to sit on royal commissions. I think they would be exactly of the type suggested by the vice president of the Bell Telephone Company. One might well be appointed from the economic department of one of our universities. Another appointee might well be an outstanding banker from the Canadian banking association. Perhaps some man off the street would be appointed to represent the consumer. Such an individual could perhaps act as an ombudsman on behalf of the ordinary consumer. I am sure such a man would have experienced a disconnection of his service because he did not pay his bill during a time when he was away on holidays. Every member of this committee I am sure has experienced that situation. The telephone system of today has become so automated the companies really have little or no contact with the average subscriber. Perhaps we need an ombudsman in this field.

The government could appoint outstanding people, as both this government and the former government have done in the past. I am very proud of the fact that our governments in the past have seen fit to appoint men of high calibre to royal commissions and other like bodies. The majority of such appointments have not been made on a political basis, and the men appointed have not been unemployed politicians. The contribution which could be made by three outstanding members on the board of directors of the Bell Telephone Company could perhaps stave off the nationalization of the system. While that may not be the normal way of accomplishing this, I think if it were successful it would be an excellent thing.

I am shocked that most government members are opposed to the type of innovation suggested by the amendment. I think it embodies something that should be attempted. If the sponsor of the bill was instructed to oppose this amendment, then I can only believe he was not fully aware of the situation at the outset. Three new directors, to be appointed by the government are required by this company. Unless we receive a satisfactory reception to this suggestion I think we are better off to kill the bill and let the present board struggle on as it has done in the past.

A young university lad, who is very interested in this matter, asked me why the company needed more directors. I was unable to give him an answer because I honestly do not know. If the A.T.T.C. took over the Bell Telephone Company tomorrow—I am not sure it did not take over that company some years ago—I am sure it would demand representation on the board. The latest telephone system taken over by Bell Telephone Company was a small exchange in Newfoundland, and I am sure that company was not important enough in terms of subscribers, in relation to the systems in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to warrant the addition of five new directors to the board. I do not think the situation which developed in Kenora in recent days has had the effect of making five additional directors necessary. I have very seldom, if ever, heard of an increase in a board of directors that did not accompany a change in the financial control of the company.

How much is paid to the board of directors? I am sure it does not exceed $50,000. I do not think this company would have any difficulty in paying that extra amount. I understand that something in the neighbourhood of $13 million to $20 million is spent in communications in the field of national defence. That being so, the telephone company does not need individual subscribers. The company is able to profit from communications in respect of restricted fields such as NORAD and the radar systems. This company also provides services in respect of computer operations, telex and other teletype communications systems.

The sponsor of this bill should reconsider his position and his instructions from this company, in refusing to allow the bill to pass containing the proviso that three of the five members of the board of directors be appointed by the governor in council. This company is desperate. I am sure the sponsor is aware of that fact as I am sure the board of directors is aware of it. It is desperately in need of closer communication with its subscribers. Do you know what the vice president told us, Mr. Chairman? He said: The complaints you make are being investigated and the president of the company has insisted that every complaint come to his attention. Think about that, Mr. Chairman. What is the poor president doing these days other than answering his fan mail from his subscribers? This is not the kind of thing he should be doing. He has a multimillion dollar enterprise to operate and he cannot be listening to the beefs of the subscribers.

The three people who would be appointed as ombudsmen on behalf of the Canadian people could listen to these complaints and I would surmise they would need a very large staff to deal with complaints because you cannot find out anything from the local manager. He really does not know anything. The billing system is based in Montreal. He has no power to make a decision. He does not know what has happened because the computer has not told him. Most of these computers are short on words and long on action. The action is taken long before an explanation can be given and to put a tracer through the computer probably is a very tedious and sterile process when the results are finally returned. When they arrive on the manager's desk I imagine he faces a very confused situation.

If the Liberal government is sincere in saying as they have said in the past that all they want to do is to provide the things the N.D.P. wants to provide but to do so in a more calculated and studious manner after a great deal of thought, they will find that the appointment of ombudsmen to companies that come to parliament for their authorization so that these ombudsmen may make suggestions on behalf of the people of Canada and supervise operations will be a highly acceptable, although novel, method of counteracting the nationalization that will take place in this field if the government fails to act soon. I think that many Quebec members can stand up and say that the taking over of the Quebec section of the Bell Telephone Company has been widely desired in the province of Quebec and is currently under active study by the government of that province. All you have to do is to look at your telephone bill to know why they have been very concerned about this matter. If the government wants to protect the Bell Telephone Company the action of appointing ombudsmen may provide a safety valve for the subscribers that will be very effective.

In my opinion the governor in council will appoint reasonable, responsible and impartial people to the board of directors to act on behalf of the government of Canada and particularly on behalf of the governor in council and the general public in supervising the operations of the Bell Telephone Company. We must always bear in mind, Mr. Chairman, that this is a national monopoly. We have granted this monopoly to the Bell Telephone Company in a field where even the defence of our nation is involved and one failure might result in a disaster. Let me use an example because we must not be vague about this matter. I had the opportunity—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Walker: May I ask the hon. member a question?

The Chairman: With the consent of the committee, because the hon. member's time has expired. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Walker: Is the hon. member suggesting that the government should also have the authority to appoint directors to the other hundreds, as the hon. member stated, of telephone companies in the country?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would be out of order if I went very far in discussing other telephone and communication companies. This question is very pertinent to the whole argument and the vice president of the company asked me if we were prepared to do this to other companies. I have checked the situation and it would appear that the only time we can take such action is when a company comes before parliament asking for further authorization. If such action were successful in this case I believe that the government would take similar action in the case of all federal companies. We can only do so now in the case of the Bell Telephone Company which has a bill before us, but if this method proves to be satisfactory I see the government asking authorization from parliament to impose the same statutory provision with respect to other companies.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the method proposed this afternoon by the hon. member for Timiskaming but I do agree with the objective, and I think that in one of my longer speeches I should say so. I believe this matter could be settled with dispatch if the company would show good, modern social sense and ask the government to nominate three of the 20 directors. They were referred to as ombudsmen but in my view that is not a good term. They could be friends of the public on the board of directors of a company which enjoys a virtual monopoly. I think this would be the better approach.

I am surprised that a great company like Bell has not long since asked the government to nominate three of the 20 directors. This is not a very revolutionary proposal and if Bell would do this it seems to me that this bill would receive more rapid passage through parliament than it is getting. With regard to the last question, I think that any provincially incorporated company, if it has a monopoly, should accept representatives of the government on its board of directors. This is not an unusual thought. Some of these companies are controlled to some extent by public utility boards but it seems to me that there should also be nominees of either provincial or federal governments sitting on their boards as friends of the public. If Bell had displayed a sense of responsibility they would have asked for this and not left it to a committee to make them do it. If they ask for it I have an idea the bill will go through.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak on this Bill No. S-27 which has already been discussed for several weeks.

The purpose of Bill No. S-27 is to allow the Bell Telephone Company of Canada to increase to 20, from 15, the number of directors which they already have or which they are entitled to appoint. This bill was referred to a committee of the house. It came back and we are now discussing an amendment submitted by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the Bell Telephone Company gives good service wherever it is in operation, and I am wondering how the services it gives could be improved by increasing the number of its directors. I truly believe that it could improve its services on all its lines throughout Canada, and I know that it is already attempting to improve them. So, I wonder why vague answers are given to questions asked in the committee, or no answers at all are made, when it is wished to increase the number of directors.

Mr. Chairman, before taking a stand on the amendment now before us there is a point I should like to clear up. On several occasions I asked for the report in French of the committee which considered this bill and once again this afternoon, I was told that there was no French version. On the other hand, for several weeks, the English version has been seen going around, but the French text of this committee report is not available.

Mr. Chairman, I am hard put to study the bill itself or the answers made to the questions. If that report is not presented to us in French, I shall have to move an amendment or a motion to postpone the discussion of the bill until we have the French material we need.

Mr. Chairman, on the amendment before us tonight which was introduced, I think, on September 10, I do not agree with the hon. member for Timiskaming that three of those directors should be appointed by the government.

This amendment is as follows:

> The business of the company shall be managed by a board of not less than five nor more than 20 directors, as may from time to time be determined by resolution of the shareholders, and each such director shall be the proprietor of at least ten shares in the capital stock of the company, or such other additional number of shares, not exceeding 40 additional shares, as the shareholders shall by any resolution passed at any annual general meeting, or special general meeting, from time to time determine; and the said board of directors shall be elected and hold office as hereinafter provided; and a majority of the said directors shall be residents of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, in this Bill No. S-27 amendment we have a dose of socialism, a small dose, if you wish, but a dose just the same. I think the government has available legislation giving it power to investigate any Canadian company. There is the Combines Investigation Act enabling the government to take a look at the operations of those companies.

I must admit, however, Mr. Chairman, that this act or these investigations into combines are not too efficient, because they are not always given the priority they should have. The considerable increase in the price of sugar that followed the last general election has not yet been forgotten. We asked for an investigation into combines and we were told that one was under way, that it would take a very long time before we would get its report.

If an effort were made, these inquiries into combines could enlighten us as to the actual situation and we would know whether the company or any other company in Canada is providing reasonably good service to the Canadian public without obliging them to pay prices that are far too high.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment as it would enable the government to interfere directly in the company's business or in Canadian institutions.

Mr. Chairman, when the amendment is put to a vote, I shall have to vote against it for the reasons I have just outlined.

I will say no more about this because the debate is now on the amendment only. However, when we come to the various sections of the bill, I shall say what I think of Bill No. S-27.

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to participate in the debate, but in view of the various questions raised I want to mention that the discussion which has taken place with respect to Bill No. S-27 proves once more that when private industry —which we favour—becomes a monopoly or a trust, the government must take steps and assert itself.

The amendment now before us concerns the appointment of directors by the government. I am against this proposal for the same reasons my colleague from Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) mentioned a moment ago, since we favour private enterprise.

In my opinion, the Bell Telephone Company operates somewhat like a monopoly. Its rates are too high, especially if compared with those in other provinces.

For instance, in Quebec the monthly rate is $6.46, when the same service is available in Alberta for $3.50. As you can see the Bell Telephone Company really goes too far.

If we had the French version of the proceedings of the committee which considered Bill No. S-27, we would be in a better position to discuss it.

Once more I mention the fact that it is intended to appoint more directors, to whom very high fees will be paid which might entail increased rates.

Mr. Chairman, for all the reasons I mentioned I will vote against the amendment.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for question?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I was interested in the statement by the hon. member for Brantford with regard to the French telephone system. I do not recall anyone mentioning the French telephone system. I think if he were to look at the situation in the whole of Europe, he would find it had very little to do with public or private ownership. It has to do with the lack of subscribers to those systems. It is only in North America that you have these tremendous networks of telephone systems where virtually everyone has a telephone.

Like my colleague from Timiskaming, I was interested in the political plum aspect of the hon. member's discourse, and the rather cynical regard he has for his own government if he assumes they would appoint directors from the ranks of those who usually receive political plums. But, Mr. Chairman, as has been mentioned here, the company has never told us why they want five more directors. I was unable to get this information from the vice president in the course of a long conversation with him. All I got, to be rude about it, was windy nonsense about how they wanted to broaden the base of their directorate; they wanted to bring in people from the various walks of life, the academic and business world. It struck me as rather unconvincing and I am still unable to understand why they come before us for this purpose at this time.

For the life of me I cannot see that the addition of five members is going to make all that difference to them. On the other hand, the proposal made by my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming, that three of these should be appointed by the governor general in council, in the light of speeches a few moments ago, appears to have been received as the first sign of creeping socialism that is going to overwhelm the company.

I said when I spoke first, Mr. Chairman, that my, shall I say, more logical mind would have preferred to see an outright move for the nationalization of this company. I make no bones about that at all. It would appear to me to be the only logical course sensible people would follow, but I am well aware that we are not going to get that at the present time. In the meantime we need some measure of control and observation on behalf of the people of Canada.

I suppose the telephone business, more than any other type of business, is one that has been built up by its subscribers. It is a very different business from most large corporations producing goods, or even services. A telephone company is built—and the history of all our telephone companies is proof of this—by the contributions of its subscribers. The origins of most of the telephone companies in North America were extremely modest, with a very modest amount of capital originally invested and the assets of the company built up by the contributions of the subscribers—who are actually a captive group, because we cannot take our trade somewhere else if we do not like the telephone company. We have them or we have nothing.

For that reason it seems to me the telephone company is in a peculiar and singular position. It is a necessity for the operation of the modern industrial society. We just could not function without it, and that in itself appears to me to be one overriding reason why the public interest should be protected by the appointment of—and I have more confidence in this government than the hon. member for Brantford—the appointment of responsible people who would undertake their duties seriously, who would realize just why they have been placed in this position and would not consider it merely a plum for a defeated candidate or a reward for party service. Like the hon. member for Timiskaming I think that is a slur on this and previous governments because, while there have been such people appointed, there have also been some very useful appointments of this type.

I notice that there is great concern on the part of some members about the position of shareholders and the rights of shareholders in a telephone company, that they alone should have the right to appoint directors. No one seems to consider the rights of the subscribers or the rights of society as a whole, organized as it is today on a very complex basis and requiring the services of a telephone company in order to operate at all.

My hon. friend from Brantford was citing the horrors of the system in France. I do not know whether the telephone system there is publicly owned or not; I suspect it is but I am not sure. However, right in this country there are publicly owned telephone systems whose operations are in striking contrast to that of this multimillion dollar corporation, the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. In all the prairie provinces we have publicly owned telephone companies which operate in much more difficult and expensive areas as regards telephone service than does the Bell company, and in those provinces you will find just as good service as you get from Bell, and the price is less.

I see the hon. member over there shake his head, but I can tell him I have observed when I have taken up a phone in a city like Regina or Saskatoon that I get through just as quickly as I do when I pick up the phone in Ottawa. I have also observed something else, that when I have to use a pay phone in the province of Saskatchewan I have to deposit only a nickel in the slot, not a dime. If the hon. member is looking for comparisons between public and private enterprise in this field he should perhaps take that particular situation into consideration.

Seriously, Mr. Chairman, I think it is time that the parliament of Canada recognized the developments in the world today, and realized it is ridiculous to continue regarding a telephone company of the dimensions of the Bell company in the same light as we regard other corporate bodies in this country. There are many that should be regarded in the same light. In fact I recall when I was having this interview with the vice president of the Bell company he was very plaintive and he asked, "Why do you pick on us? Why are we the ones who are to be penalized in this manner?"

It was interesting to note he seemed to think that the presence of publicly appointed directors on the board of directors would be a penalty, and that the company would be penalized by that. I assured him I was not anxious to discriminate in any way, that I would be only too glad to propose the same or even more drastic proposals for other corporations in the country, but it was his company's misforture that they had been the first to pop their heads up and enable us to do a little bit of hair cutting on top of their heads. I assured him when others came up I would be there with my shears to do the same with them.

An hon. Member: You have got the hon. member for Edmonton West worried.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He has already been sheared. Seriously, Mr. Chairman, I would like to impress on Liberal members of the house who make claims, most of them I think quite sincerely and honestly, that their party is trying to keep abreast of developments in the modern world, that it is a flexible, pragmatic party that takes into account recent developments. This is one of the developments of recent years of which the party should be cognizant and taking action about, namely the development in our society of a privately owned organization which grew from very small beginnings and which now embraces not only this particular company but almost the bulk of the population of Canada in the services it renders.

For that reason I suggest the time is long past when this government, if it is going to do more than pay lip service to its claims, should be prepared to move into this field in the very modest way we are suggesting. If it had any courage I would suggest it move in much more drastically, but I am not going to suggest more than I think it is capable of doing. I believe members of the Liberal party should screw up their courage to take this minor step toward eventual public control of something which is essential to our society, something which should not be left without public control.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Walker: You are talking out your own amendment.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

General administration—

1. Departmental administration including fees for membership in the international organizations listed in the details of the estimates, $5,180,500.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply; estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965. Vote No. 1. Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, my colleague the hon. member for Danforth usually speaks for this party on trade matters, but he had a conflict of interest today; he is a member of the flag committee, and I hesitate to say which is the more important task. I shall comment briefly on trade policy and pose some questions to the minister; other members of the party will speak on particular votes of the department.

The hon. member for Edmonton West this afternoon said he would have liked a copy of the minister's statement before the minister read it in the house, so that he might be better prepared to speak on the estimates of the department. I would go a little further than that; I feel that a great deal of information is lacking to opposition members generally when they wish to speak on estimates. We have heard a great deal lately about the need for research assistance for members of parliament, and I think this is shown up very much at a time like this. The only resources we have are our own, and they are limited in some cases. But from reading the departments' reports and keeping files we can amass a certain amount of information on the departments in which we are interested. However, Mr. Chairman, I think the education of M.P.s should go further than that.

Quite a number of years ago I had a short and unsuccessful career in the Department of External Affairs, but there is one thing I do remember from it. When we came to Ottawa as a new group of officers, they did make some effort to educate us. The people from various branches of the government, treasury board, the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of National Health and Welfare were brought in to give us lectures. I think we were better people and had a better understanding of the government as a result. No efforts are made in this connection with new members of parliament. I suggest this could be done.

I was reminded of that this afternoon when we received notice that the members of the railway committee and other members interested could meet next week for a meeting on the new railway bill which is coming before the house. I think we could stand a briefing on the operations of a great many departments and we could do our job much better as a result.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to make some comments on trade policy. I understand that setting trade policy for a country like Canada is difficult at any time. There is only about one thing on which Canadians generally agree with regard to trade policy; that exports are good and we should have more of them. Aside from that there is very little agreement. We have our producers of primary products who are in favour of exports and low tariffs. We have the manufacturers of this country who by and large are tariff protected; they are not too interested in exports—at least, they have not been until quite recently. Also they are not interested in imports at all. In addition to that we have our regional differences. Some parts of the country are much more interested in exports than others, some are interested in low tariffs and others want tariffs to be maintained.

There are very great regional differences, and I think as a general rule the western and Atlantic provinces are export conscious whereas the central provinces are protectionist conscious. These differences which exist in the Canadian business world are reflected, I think, within every party in this house. At the best of times I think it is very difficult to establish a trade policy which satisfies everyone in the country; but at the present time I believe this is particularly difficult because there are so many uncertainties. The whole question of the United Kingdom and its entry into the European common market is uncertain; the election in the United Kingdom might make some difference to the possible outcome of those negotiations, if they resume. The whole question of the Kennedy round within GATT is uncertain. I suggest that the outcome of the elections in the United States might make some difference to those discussions. The United Nations conference on trade and development was inconclusive and I believe will be resumed; but, again, it is hanging in mid air. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, with these uncertainties it is no wonder that no Canadian political party—and I will include my own—has a really coherent trade policy.

Now a word about the Kennedy round. As I understand it, at the present time the various countries are carrying on discussions with the trade groups within their countries to determine which particular items they would like to put forward for tariff reduction. I understand that the government of Canada is carrying on discussions with trade groups in this country at the present time and that they will meet later and sit down to some more bargaining. I think generally most of us want the Kennedy round to be successful. Certainly the Minister of Trade and Commerce does, and he seems to be placing very great hopes upon these negotiations. If they are successful, I wonder whether the government and its policy-makers are working along the lines that I am going to suggest.

This party has advocated in the past that there should be some kind of trade adjustment act. Presumably if the Kennedy round negotiations are successful and we gain certain concessions in regard to trade with other countries, we will have to make concessions too; and undoubtedly this will affect our manufacturing industries. Some of them may feel hardship. I am wondering whether the policymakers within the government, in the Department of Trade and Commerce or any other department, are making plans for that particular day and have decided what is going to happen to the people who will be affected in the localities which may lose their tariff protection; what may happen to the workers in the industries that may be affected.

It seems to me we should be prepared for that day. If these discussions are successful, we should be prepared for the impact this will have upon Canadian industry. I should think central Canada would be particularly affected. I should like to mention one other point in connection with the Kennedy round: I think they all hope it will be successful, but has the Department of Trade and Commerce given any thought to the consequences if the talks are not successful. I know that the minister would probably prefer not to consider that possibility. However, it does exist. We must take into account for example such questions as the entry into the European common market of Canadian and United States agricultural products. We know there is great resistance in Europe to making concessions in this field. So far as I can determine from my reading, the president of France does not wish the Kennedy round any great success. It seems to me that if he could successfully prevent the type of result the late President Kennedy desired to obtain he would do so, as he prevented British entry into the European common market. It is likely that some of the problems facing the conference will be political as well as economic. As far as that goes, the success of the Kennedy round may be determined by which country has the greatest influence with West Germany—the United States or France. Failure is a possibility for which the minister's planners should be prepared. Are the minister's advisers ready with plans for a Canadian trade policy if the Kennedy round is not successful? I see the minister nodding his head; perhaps he could say a word about this question later.

I wish to turn now to discuss the resumed conference on the economic development of underdeveloped nations. I was at the United Nations session in 1962 when this question was under discussion. I know the developed countries accepted this conference with great reluctance; it was practically forced on them by the vast majority of the underdeveloped countries represented at the United Nations. I believe the developed countries were overwhelmed by the demands made upon them at that time. I believe there was a feeling that the underdeveloped countries were most unreasonable in their demands. This may have been the case. However, the need is very great. I hope Canada will show considerable sympathy for these countries and do what it can to make the resumed conference a success. This question came to my mind the other day when my hon. friend from New Westminster asked the minister a question about coffee prices under the international coffee agreement. My hon. friend showed some alarm at the increase in coffee prices in Canada and the western world generally. In reply the minister had this to say as reported in Hansard at page 8289, September 22, 1964:

> In answer specifically to the question as to whether Canada is satisfied with the operation of the agreement, I would say that this agreement can be improved; and it can be improved, I think, for the benefit of both consumers and producers. I would urge upon my hon. friend who asked this question that it is very much in the interests of all of us, including the consumers of Canada, that there should be reasonable prices for coffee, just as there should be reasonable prices for wheat.

I agree with the minister's sentiments in this regard. One of the problems which underdeveloped countries face is the great fluctuation to which the prices of the commodities they supply are subject. In past years they have often not had sufficient income to carry on the industrial and other types of development desirable. So it is in their interest that commodity prices should remain at a stable and reasonably high level. I cannot argue against that. The same considerations apply in the case of sugar, the price of which has been subject to severe fluctuation in recent years. I suggest to the minister that though there should be stability in the price of commodities supplied by underdeveloped countries the government should consider making some kind of subsidy so that prices do not rise too sharply and cause hardship to consumers in Canada. I know this is a form of taxation; it is another form of external aid; but it is something which I think is fully justified. I suggest that if the underdeveloped countries generally were to have commodity agreements covering their products it would lead to the stabilization of prices and the elimination of one of the greatest difficulties they face. On the other hand, if the price were so high as to work hardship on Canadian consumers the government should consider providing some relief at home. The two interests could I am sure be balanced.

While we talk a great deal about expanding trade not only with underdeveloped countries but with developed countries which buy a great deal more from Canada than we do from them, there are many inconsistencies in our practices. Japan, though not an underdeveloped country, is a nation which certainly has an unfavourable balance of trade with Canada. Year after year we continue to ask Japan to limit the export of certain commodities to this country particularly in the textile field. Speeches are made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and by his colleagues advocated more trade with these countries, while at the same time we are asking them to withhold exports to Canada. The question of textiles is an important one. Is any examination being conducted to find out what the future of the Canadian textile industry would be if there were general tariff cuts? There are presumably answers to these questions. If the tariff were cut by a certain amount, then a certain percentage of the industry in Canada would not survive. If the tariff were cut by a further amount, presumably the section which would not survive would be larger. It seems to me that such a study should be conducted because it does not appear reasonable to ask Japan to withhold exports to Canada at a time when that country is increasing her purchases from us. Not only is Japan increasing commodity purchases here but she is putting up a great deal of capital to develop mines so that the minerals she needs may be available to her. Certainly some group should be giving consideration to the impact of Japanese textiles on the textile industry in the future. I do not think there can continue to be too much protection. I think we shall have to accept more textiles from other countries. If it can be determined that there will be a serious effect on the textile industry, the kind of arrangement I mentioned earlier, a trade adjustment arrangement, should be made so that those who would lose their jobs would be helped during the transition period.

I suspect that our influence at these trade conferences, GATT conferences and United Nations conferences, is not very great. When the European common market on the one hand, and United States on the other hand, are bargaining I think we have to do the best we can. I am not convinced that Canada has a great influence on the outcome of these negotiations.

I gather from the minister's statements that our trade policy is simply to sell as much as we can. I do not know whether this is a sufficient policy or not. I pose the question, and I wonder if there is very much relationship between the internal monetary and fiscal policies of the government and its external trade policy. It seems to me there are inconsistencies at times. Perhaps we have still to determine what our goals are within the country. Perhaps these will emerge through the work of the economic council of Canada. If we knew where the Canadian economy was going we might know better what we want to see in the external trade field. I pose that as a question, Mr. Chairman, because there seems to be no relationship between the two.

Within the context of the trade policy of "try to sell as much as you can",—and that is the only policy I can observe at the moment—I think during the past year the minister and his department have done a good job. They have apparently successfully continued the selling job initiated by a previous minister of trade and commerce. There seems to be a great deal of activity on the part of the trade commissioners branch in promoting the export of both raw materials and manufactured goods. This export has increased, and I presume it will continue to increase in the future. In looking at the estimates and the budgets for those branches connected with trade promotions I note they have been increased.

We are pleased to see that this government has carried on the policy of the previous government, that of selling to all countries regardless of their international policies, and I am sure there have not been too many complaints on the part of the Canadian public or members in this house regarding sales to China, Russia, Poland and Cuba. We have been selling to any country that wishes to buy our goods.

In connection with Cuba, and I know the trade there is not too large, I should like to pose this question. Since that country has been cut off from United States markets in respect of a number of manufactured goods, is Canada doing everything it can to gain those markets? I notice that Cuba recently purchased a large number of motor buses from the United Kingdom and has also bought manufactured goods from West Germany. Could we in Canada have obtained any of that trade? The general policy of selling to all countries is a good one, but I think it is dictated by necessity. The trade figures for Canada last year were very good, but what would they have been had we not had fortuitous wheat sales to Russia and China?

The department has carried on a vigorous tourist campaign, and I should like to say a word about that and about the Canadian government travel bureau. I understand some efforts have been made to attract Europeans to Canada as tourists, and more recently to interest Japanese in coming here. I think these efforts are very commendable but I am sure the officials of this department realize that tourists from these countries will always represent a very small percentage of our total tourist trade, and that the greater part of our tourist income is derived from United States tourists.

In looking over the department's report, I note that the Canadian government travel bureau has offices in only four cities, New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles. This is one field of operations that might well be extended. There should be offices in cities such as Seattle, Portland, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Boston and many others. Perhaps the tourist bureau could have more than one officer in many of these cities, because the tourist potential is very great in that country of roughly 200 million people. I think the government must do a double job in this respect. It must attract United States tourists here and convince Canadians to take advantage of the tourist attractions in this country. We are losing the tourism balance in favour of the United States.

The final point with which I wish to deal is one the minister referred to this afternoon when he made reference to relations between the Department of Industry and the Department of Trade and Commerce. He indicated that in his view everything was just fine and that there were no problems. Some of us have the uneasy feeling that there may be a duplication of effort. For example I was checking over the commodity branches of the Department of Trade and Commerce and I noticed they have several divisions including a chemicals division, an appliances division, an engineering and equipment division, various other products divisions, a metals division and textiles division.

In looking at information supplied by the Department of Industry I note there is a chemicals branch, a textiles branch and a wooden products branch. Among the tasks of these branches is the supply of market information to the related industries, and import and export analyses. There is a very strong feeling that the Department of Industry has grown very rapidly and that there is a duplication in that department of the efforts of the Department of Trade and Commerce. There are internal branches in both departments having the same name, and both departments supply import and export information.

The Department of Industry has now been in existence for over a year and perhaps there ought to be an independent analysis of its operations, particularly as they relate to the Department of Trade and Commerce, to make sure there is no duplication and that Parkinson's law is not operating within this new department. There is reason to believe that duplication exists between the two departments and I think this should be avoided if at all possible.

Mr. Chairman, I conclude my remarks by summarizing some of the questions I have posed, and in respect of which I should like to hear the minister comment. Has the government any trade policy other than that of, sell as many goods as we can; and what is the relationship between the internal monetary and fiscal policy of the government and its external trade policy? Is the government carrying out studies to relieve the impact upon certain Canadian manufacturing industries if the Kennedy round of discussions is successful, and are they developing policies which can be used in this country if the Kennedy round of discussion is unsuccessful? I realize that these are questions of some magnitude. However, the minister is very competent, has a large department under his responsibility, and I am sure we will receive some answers from him in this regard.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I think the statement we heard from the Minister of Trade and Commerce this afternoon could properly be referred to as a bouquet of roses. He seems to think everything that has happened in Canada in so far as his department is concerned is good and that everything has been going along very nicely. He seems to think the increases this year, as compared to those of last year, or in recent years, are satisfactory. He seems to think that they have been so acceptable there is cause for exuberance in respect of the whole Canadian economy.

At the outset I should like to state that the figures supplied by the dominion bureau of statistics, and received from other sources in this country, bear out to a great degree the extreme optimism obvious in the remarks of the minister. He has indicated that our future outlook in respect of wheat sales is excellent, although those sales may not reach the levels we have enjoyed during the past 12 months. He has indicated that there should be no difficulty in selling this year's crop. He has indicated that our export prospects in respect of lumber and iron ore are favourable, and have been carried on at a reasonably high level during the past few months. The minister has indicated there has been a substantial increase in the export of manufactured goods. We are pleased indeed to hear of these things.

When the minister referred to the matter of our balance of payments he did not say very much. I suspect one of the reasons in that regard is that in this area, in spite of the tremendous increases in certain commodities for export, we are experiencing an even more unfavourable trade balance in so far as our current account is concerned.

I am going to deal with this in a few minutes, Mr. Chairman. There are a number of other things I want to say. I certainly cannot cover the entire operations of the Department of Trade and Commerce but my colleague, the hon. member for Chicoutimi, will be dealing with some other aspects later.

The minister also spoke of new trade patterns that are developing in the world, and said that Canadians generally ought to recognize that we have to modernize our thinking with these things in mind. But he simply left it there. He did not say anything about where these trade patterns were developing, whether they have developed to the point where there is a continuity to them, and in what way they are changed from the old traditional patterns. I should like him to elaborate a little more on these patterns.

The minister also referred to the Department of Industry, its growth and responsibility and some of the things it is charged with doing. I think he also suggested that the Department of Industry is primarily concerned with Canada's internal trade, if I may use that term. I believe he also added that the Department of Industry is primarily concerned with increasing Canada's productivity while his department is more directly concerned with finding markets for products. That would appear to delineate to some extent the responsibilities of the two departments.

The Department of Industry has been in existence for about a year and I have had occasion to make representations to the department on behalf of some of my constituents, and on behalf of some industries in the province of Alberta. I want to say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the response by way of action on the part of the Department of Industry as a result of these representations has been less than favourable. In fact, until and unless they begin to show that they are in fact able to do something to promote the expansion of the industrial establishment in Canada we believe that they are not serving any useful purpose at all.

May I say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that it seems to me that one of the functions of the Department of Industry should be to help Canadian industry to compete with certain imported products, at least in so far as taxation is concerned. The Department of Industry ought to assume the responsibility of seeing that the Department of National Revenue gives at least equal consideration to our own industries in so far as taxes are concerned, as opposed to products being imported from abroad. Some cases have been brought to the attention of the Department of Industry and the Department of National Revenue where there is in fact a much more favourable tax structure for the imported products. I will communicate the names to the department if they would like them although I think they realize that what is involved is bentonite or mud production in Alberta which is very important to the oil industry.

In addition, we have at least one potato dehydrating plant in Alberta that has been shut down for months and months. Repeated appeals have been made to various departments of government, and I might say that the federal government is involved because it is their processing patent, and the fact is, that problems with one of their patents are causing the difficulty. In spite of repeated requests to the federal government they have not shouldered any responsibility in regard to getting this very important plant back into operation by doing something to get around the litigation that is causing it to remain shut.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce suggested this afternoon that in the new tariff negotiations that are going on in Geneva and generally among many of the countries of the world Canada was going to be a tough but not reluctant bargainer. The minister has not indicated up to now whether or not any agreement has been reached between the participating countries in the GATT negotiations in so far as agricultural products are concerned. On May 11 a release was issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce in which the minister is reported as saying:

> When detailed negotiations have already been initiated with respect to wheat and other grains, the general rules and procedures for agricultural negotiations have yet to be worked out.

If they have not yet reached the stage where they know the basis upon which they are going to try to negotiate trading arrangements with respect to agricultural products, I suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that they have got a lot of work to do yet. We remember that only a few months ago France threatened to pull out of the European economic community unless some arrangement with regard to trade in agricultural products within Europe was reached. We also know that there have been repeated indications in press reports from the United States that the biggest problem in the Kennedy round of negotiations was what they were going to do with agricultural products. I think that Canada has got to pursue this matter. Certainly we need to reach some agreement soon and particularly to lay down the ground rules for how we are going to proceed.

There is another thing that disturbs us about Canada's attitude in relation to the GATT negotiations and that is the way we seem to act with respect to our trade with Japan. The minister says that it is going to have to be a case of give and take and that we could not accept the premise of 50 per cent across the board changes and so on. I agree with all that but in our reluctance so far as Japan is concerned we seem to carry it almost to the point of absurdity. In another press release on May 4 this year the minister had this to say:

> As was the case for previous multilateral negotiations in the post-war period, the Kennedy round will be taking place within the framework and under the aegis of the GATT. The GATT is a comprehensive multilateral trade agreement embodying contractual rights and obligations and providing detailed rules and procedures for the conduct of commercial policy. The basic principles of the GATT may be summarized as follows:—

[Mr. Olson.]

I am only going to read one of them.

> (b) Prohibition against quantitative import restrictions except in carefully specified circumstances.

That sounds very good until you apply it to Canada's attitude toward Japanese imports. I believe that we are in fact acting in a wrong way toward Japan. We know that we have had a very favourable balance of trade with Japan over the years. We know that we have a large potential market there for more agricultural products, more iron ore, more timber, for almost all of the commodities that are produced in western Canada for export. But, Mr. Chairman, how can we expect to expand these markets unless we are going to buy something in return? Japan is just as correct in her contention that she must sell to Canada to pay for her imports as is the argument we use with the United States. So, I hope there is going to be a change of attitude on the part of the Canadian government in their dealings with Japan so we do not continue this so-called tough policy in so far as quotas and quantitative import restrictions are concerned.

There is one other very serious problem that I think the minister perhaps brushed over a little bit, if I may use that phrase. It is this matter of our balance of payments. When he was in Los Angeles on May 21 of this year, the minister had this to say:

> In the past 12 months, Canada's current account deficit has diminished, thanks to increased commodity exports, to a level of about $500 million a year. But this improvement is partly due to a strengthened communist bloc demand for cereals which is unlikely to hold at recent levels; the basic heavy deficit remains. And what concerns us here, the major source of this deficit continues to be Canada's trade with the United States. For while Canada enjoys a current account surplus of some $640 million a year with the world outside North America, our current deficit with the United States runs to nearly $1.2 billion. About half of this deficit comprises net payments of interest and dividends for which no short term reduction is possible; and most of the remainder is a deficit in merchandise trade.

Well, Mr. Chairman, to get some of the exact figures I turned to the dominion bureau of statistics. As I said, I do not want to throw any cold water on the minister's optimism. In so far as our increased activity in international markets is concerned, the latest statistics we have available come from the dominion bureau of statistics and deal with the second quarter of this year. I will not read all these figures but during the period April to June, between the years 1963 and 1964, our current account had a net deficit increase of $175 million with the United States. In other words it was $346 million for the second quarter of 1963 and up to $521 million for the second quarter of 1964. The problem is, Mr. Chairman, in spite of the minister's optimism, that if we took away the unusually large shipments of wheat and flour to the U.S.S.R., these figures would look alarming. There is no indication at this time there is going to be a repeat order of that magnitude or indeed of any amount from the U.S.S.R. If all of these other things had remained equal, and leaving out that particular order, these figures would be alarming indeed.

So far as we are concerned, Mr. Chairman, we believe that it might not be possible to embark immediately on a policy that would require the United States to set up a trading policy that would give us the opportunity of selling to them as much as we are obliged to buy from them. However, I do not believe the Department of Trade and Commerce or the Department of Finance ought to be satisfied with anything less than the opportunity to sell in the United States sufficient goods and services to pay not only for our commodity imports from the United States but all of the interest, dividends and other commitments as well.

Now, it is all very well to say that we welcome foreign investment. It is all very well to say that this helps develop the country. But what has been happening over the years has been that we have been selling out more and more of our industrial establishment to pay for this. As I said, we believe that we ought to have an understanding with the United States that, on the one hand we be allowed to sell sufficient goods and services to the United States so that we balance, on the other hand, with the interest, dividends and cost of imports so far as Canada is concerned. There is only one conclusion that can come from carrying on the way we have been. If we do not have an opportunity to pay for the investments, whether it is money on loan, an investment in common stock or capital investment, the only other alternative is to sell out the ownership of our industrial establishment. In other words, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that our aggregate obligations to the United States should be matched by the opportunity to sell the United States raw materials or manufactured goods, because I do not believe any Canadian is very happy over the prospect of selling out our industrial establishment to the tune of several hundreds of millions of dollars each year.

I want to say a word or two now about this matter of wheat and flour. I join with the minister in his optimism respecting what has happened during the past 12 months. Even at the risk of repeating myself I should like to say I do not want to throw any cold water on the achievements in so far as these markets are concerned. I do not want to take anything away from this very good record. However, I should like to say to the minister the picture is not quite as bright as he indicated, particularly when we consider our position in relation to some other countries. For example, I have before me a publication from the Searle Grain Company Limited, dated June 25, 1964, and it gives an indication of what the United States has been doing during the past few months in so far as the export of grain is concerned. I quote:

> For some time now, we may have tended to minimize U.S. competition by suggesting that it largely represented "give-aways" against which we in Canada could not compete. It will be noted that this is no longer true to the same extent. Over-all commercial sales by the U.S.A. this year to date are almost three times what they were during the corresponding period last year, while non-commercial or "special program" sales are only slightly higher, by less than 10 per cent.
> Noted particularly should be the gain in U.S. wheat sales to such countries as United Kingdom...

During the period about which I am speaking, between 1963 and 1964, the increase in wheat sales through commercial channels from the United States to the United Kingdom was 495 per cent; to Japan it was up by 115 per cent; to the Netherlands, up 119 per cent; to Belgium, up 373 per cent; to West Germany, up 54 per cent. These are not give-away programs, Mr. Chairman, these are sales of wheat that are going through commercial channels and for which these countries are paying.

When you look at the figures of United States regular commercial wheat sales they make our own sales of wheat and flour look a little less attractive. Again, I do not want to take anything away from the minister's achievements, but another point is that our over-all figures have not gone up as rapidly as those of the United States. Included in our expanded exports are the deals with the U.S.S.R. which we will not be able to repeat, or that at least apparently we will not be able to repeat.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, again I voice the anxiety that we in this party have expressed on a number of times in the past. The tremendous sales we made to China and Russia are all very well, but will they take away from our efforts to expand our regular commercial markets? If all our expansion of wheat sales are channelled into China and Russia and then are suddenly cut off, where does that leave us in relation to other friendly nations with which we should be expanding our wheat sales?

The indications of the past 12 months have shown that other nations are expanding in our traditional markets, and this is something of which many Canadian farmers are not aware. I want to repeat that I am not against the selling of wheat to communist countries, but let us not reduce our efforts to the point where other countries take over our traditional markets.

Our sales of wheat and flour to Japan have increased substantially, but we should look at what some other countries have been doing. I quote again from the Searle Grain Company report, this time from the issue of July 8:

> While Canadian spring wheat continues to be the principle ingredient in Japanese bread, U.S. hard winter is gaining wider acceptance, accounting for almost half the total U.S. wheat sales to Japan last year. In 1960, before U.S. promotion began to emphasize hard winters, exports of this wheat type were insignificant.

Here again we see some of the promotional and salesmanship efforts of the United States to gain part of our traditional markets, and I hope we will not relax our efforts to build up these markets.

Turning to the production of flour, I want to compliment the minister and the government for the action they took approximately a year ago when between 29 million and 30 million bushels of the Russian wheat order were delivered in the form of flour. This was one of the greatest boosts the Canadian flour milling industry had since the end of the second world war. A year ago approximately 50 per cent of the Canadian flour milling industry was shut down, and the amount of the wheat order delivered in the form of flour was approximately the same as the total unused capacity of the industry, and its ability to turn it out during that period of time. The industry appreciated that, but at the end of July the order was fulfilled. The milling had all been done and all the ships had been loaded.

Where do you go from here? Mills are again shut down. At this point it is not particularly distressing because some maintenance work had to be carried out in the mills. A lot of back holiday time was due to employees, and I expect some of the mills have been working to restore inventories in Canada to a reasonable level. However, we need some statement from the minister on future prospects for flour sales.

On a number of occasions the minister has told us he has had meetings with spokesmen for the flour milling industry. Each time we have asked him about these meetings his answer has been the same, that they were discussing the matter and were hoping to announce something soon. So far I have not seen any positive announcement which would indicate there will be any expansion of flour orders.

For years Canada has enjoyed a good flour market in Africa and southeast Asia, but now the United States with its give-away programs and foreign aid, has moved in and dried up many of Canada's traditional markets for flour. Something ought to be done by our government to convince the United States that the subsidies it is paying for exporting flour, even into commercial markets, are unfair and unjust so far as its large neighbour to the north is concerned. It is difficult for our mills to compete with the United States treasury, and in closing my remarks I would impress upon the minister that we would like some positive statement regarding prospects for the Canadian flour milling industry.

We would also like the minister to make a statement on the government's policy concerning our balance of payments with the United States. It should impress upon the United States authorities that we will not be satisfied unless we are allowed to export in commodity trade to them sufficient goods so that we can pay, not only for our imports from the United States, but also for our other non-commodity obligations.

I have in my hand a copy of the statement made by the minister in the House of Commons on June 17 when he announced the initial price for grain in western Canada. In that statement he said:

> I wish to inform the house that initial payments for the basic grades of western wheat, oats and barley delivered during the 1964-65 crop year will be at the same level as the present crop year.

I mention this because the minister is responsible to parliament for the Canadian wheat board, and I ask why it was that not until well in September were many farmers paid for the deliveries they made to their local elevators in August? If the government informed the wheat board on June 17 of what the initial payments were to be, why was it that the board could not authorize the elevator agents to issue the grain payment tickets until September? I know of points in western Canada where grain tickets were not released until the first week in September. This means that grain had been hauled to the elevators and was in storage for five weeks before the elevator agents were authorized to pay for it.

In some cases they accepted advances under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, but to me this was a silly procedure because in the middle of June the government had announced what the price would be. However, that information apparently was not communicated to the agents until September. We do not understand the reason for this. It is something which happened previously and I would like the minister to tell us why it is necessary to hold up these payments.

The minister has painted a very rosy picture of Canada's prosperity and of significant increases in trade with most nations of the world. We hope that some consideration will be given to the problem of balance of payments and to building up some of the traditional markets we rely upon for wheat exports and the export of other commodities, markets such as Japan which is interested in buying increased quantities from us.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a few comments to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) during consideration of his estimates, but before doing so I am going to read a few lines from the speech he made on September 28 last at the 35th annual congress of the Canadian chamber of commerce in Winnipeg.

I will then draw a comparison between what he said in his speech and the figures he is submitting to the house, as I have noticed that the minister was very enthusiastic when he made his speech and was particularly proud of export figures for the year. We are as pleased as he is, for we can see that he is giving special importance to exports in general and to wheat exports, a subject I shall not deal with here, since the member who spoke before me covered the matter very thoroughly. And it was only proper that he should do so, because the prairie people always know how to defend their special product—wheat—and we cannot hold that against them.

Mr. Chairman, I will quote some paragraphs from the speech which the minister delivered on September 28:

> To link the prosperity of Canada with its flourishing exportations has become a platitude. In fact, it is now evident that the increase in the gross national product in 1964 will be higher than the 7 per cent which it almost reached last year, which shows an increase in the rate of our development.
> The increase in our exports greatly contributed to this sustained expansion. For the period 1960 to 1963, Canada's merchandise exports increased by 30 per cent; to date, the exportations in 1964 increased by 23 per cent as compared with 1963.
> If the exceptional wheat sales are not taken into account—

This is exactly the point which I want to forget this evening, and the minister does not take it into account, because he speaks about merchandise exports.

> —exports are up by 17 per cent.

A little further, the minister says:

> However, according to available figures up to this day, this improvement of our external accounts was not maintained this year. The accelerated growth in the Canadian economy accompanied by sharply expanded capital expenditures has entailed a new upsurge in import demands. The merchandise imports—

Mr. Chairman, I draw the attention of the house to these words:

> So far in 1964, merchandise imports are up by 17 per cent over 1963, and payments for non-merchandise items are also up sharply.

Mr. Chairman, after reading those few lines, a question naturally comes to my mind. Who derived more benefit from these exports? To whom does the importation of manufactured goods, often made out of our exports of raw materials, cost more?

Even though we boast about being an exporting country, if foreign investors—since foreign capital is used to develop our natural resources—benefit from our exports to an extent of 80 per cent, Canadians must be satisfied with crumbs.

On the other hand, if the increase in our imports is equal to the volume of our exports for 1963-64, as suggested by the minister, and taking into account that Canadians are paying for 80 per cent of those imports, it means that the imbalance between our exports and our imports results in a double loss for the Canadian people in general.

Indeed, as we export mainly raw materials, thus disposing of our natural resources at a dizzy rate, we only guarantee crumbs for our people.

On the other hand, we import at an accelerated rate finished products which could advantageously come out of Canadian factories, thus avoiding the drain on Canadian capital necessary to the upsurge of our economy.

What is the purpose of building our economy by always reinforcing the top in such a way that, one day, the foundations will suddenly collapse?

Is it not wiser for a responsible businessman to satisfy the customers who are close at hand before trying to get the business of distant communities?

If, after his first ventures, the merchant finds himself with a surplus, it is normal for him to try to expand his operations. The same holds true for our trade relations. To try to make an exception to the general rule is to court deficits and bankruptcy. We are ridden with debts and deficits at present. The worst part of it is that we refuse to admit that we have made a mistake; indeed, so-called brilliant people claim that the countries and provinces which are getting into debt are those which are run by truly able administrators. We must come to our senses and realize that an economy has to be built from the bottom up and not from top to bottom.

At the risk of being at variance with our great socialistically minded economists, I will again state those great principles. Being the bridge between production and consumption, trade must not destroy one to protect the other. On the other hand, if the welfare of the individual is the end product of any economic system, one must get down to the level of the individual to assess the damage caused by an economy which fails to accomplish its purpose because one of its elements, trade, is not directed towards the achievement of the primary goal.

Is our trade not a striking illustration of the famous trade in ivory, which was practiced in African countries, when foreigners destroyed everything on that continent, giving the poor natives but a few pennies while removing all the wealth from their country.

In order to increase exports mostly carried on by foreigners, we are bleeding our country. For instance, in order to increase our pulp and paper exports, we let foreign companies ruin our forests without compelling them to renew them.

Why not compel those companies to replant a tree, under the pretext that this will give $6 a cord to the lumberjack, while this same cord of wood will net from $140 to $150 to that company to which all possible guarantees have been granted?

I am not opposed to lumber exports, but I believe they should be rational or—so our socialists may better understand—planned.

I say that trade should first serve regional interests, through the creation of manufacturing industries, for the requirements of the district, the province and the country. After this first stage foreign countries may benefit from our surpluses.

But, for God's sake, let us stop giving our raw materials at ridiculous prices and import them afterwards as finished products at astronomical prices.

That is the main reason for our adverse trade balance which reached the terrifying amount of $1,500 million in 1959 and which we reduced to $500 million in 1963, by allowing this national suicide of our natural resources.

If we keep that pace, Mr. Chairman, we will be able to pride ourselves of having sold out the wealth of our children.

Fortunately, the minister gives us a gleam of hope in indicating that he shall turn to domestic trade.

In fact if we take a look at page 6 of the report of his conference, we read:

> Exports are important, but let us not forget that about four fifths of our national product is disposed of on the domestic market and that a very large share of that percentage is represented by the inter-provincial flow of goods and services.

There is at least one story that the minister leaves us as a consolation and I hope wholeheartedly that it will not be merely a consolation but that he will make it a policy.

If the minister really wants to work in the way he indicated in his conference, he must absolutely turn to primary industry. And we shall succeed in that field by developing our domestic trade, the nearest to us and also the most important.

A man is only as free as he is self-supporting. The same applies to a nation. Our trading ideal must be a self-supporting Canada. To hit such a target, there is only one way: the development of our manufacturing industries.

Let us take a look at countries where planning was made from the bottom up, that is where private industry was the ward of the nation: we realize with great pleasure that such countries are not plagued with unemployment.

In Canada, where we have all the opportunities, we are obliged to import too many essential products because of irresponsible governments which were unable or unwilling to help our fellow citizens in their efforts.

That is a very serious failing. And when those governments took pleasure in bombarding the few Canadian industries that had had the courage to establish themselves with every type of tax, to the point of wiping them out, I cannot find words strong enough to qualify their actions.

Today taxes on Canadian industry and Canadian capital remain the public enemy No. 1 of our industrial and commercial development. Canadian capital is now being called up through all the propaganda media —it being added that this is how we can become masters in our own house. These calls make me think of moose hunters who imitate the beast's call the better to get it into range.

You may be sure that as soon as the new capital is on the market the tax inspectors and collectors will be on the watch. And those who are too daring had better watch out.

Do you really believe there is lack of capital in Quebec for instance? I do not. On the contrary, there are still well-lined stockings to be found in Quebec, but they are buried in the ground to avoid taxation. Canadians are not asking for very much in return for allowing the country to take advantage of the millions of dollars that are hidden away. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) only has to assure them that they will be granted the same exemptions as those granted foreign capital in their own country.

Do you really believe that Canadian interests are better served by dealing so strictly with Canadian capital? Do you believe you are helping Canadian trade to develop by submitting small and medium industry belonging to Canadians to unbearable fiscal obligations? I believe that so far you have achieved exactly the opposite results.

Eliminate taxes on all Canadian capital for a few years. Grant some tax exemptions not only to the industries which dare to settle in a depressed area, but to any new industry, in order to enable them to survive the difficult first years.

In a few years you will be glad for having permitted new industries to make a new contribution to our trade.

The government is not to be given too much credit for the increase in our raw materials exports, since that increase is the result of a further ransacking of our natural resources to the benefit of foreign countries.

If, after supplying 90 per cent of the domestic market, the government should announce a high percentage of finished products in our exports, then it would deserve our congratulations.

Again, the time of long speeches should be over and the government should take immediate action at the regional level, through efficient and well planned marketing. Guaranteed markets is the key to the survival of our industries.

Let us consider agriculture. What made western Canada prosperous as it is today? The marketing of their products. When western farmers did not have those guaranteed markets, they were poorer than our Quebec farmers.

We need markets for our dairy products and their by-products. Markets for all our market-gardening industry, for our apples, honey, maple syrup, potatoes and all our fruits, wild as well as cultivated.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce travels around the world selling wheat, as if wheat is the only thing Canada produces. And when we talk "consumer goods", again we talk about wheat. This one-track-mindedness must cease; let us start looking upon the whole country as a possible trade zone, and not only upon one area of the country.

They say: We are going to double our efforts with regard to our domestic trade. There has been enough talking; it is high time we started finding the markets the eastern producers have been waiting for.

The minister has told us that he will oppose the economic balkanizing of Canada. I wonder if we have not been doing exactly the contrary for the last 25 years.

Let us first have trade equity within Canada; we can then be proud of a flourishing foreign trade, after having achieved the real goal of any sound economic system, the supplying of the domestic market, for the "better-being" of every individual.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I notice the minister looking my way and I assure him that I will be very brief. I should like to make one or two comments in respect of the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. I do not see him in the house at this time, but he suggested that it would be a good idea for members of parliament to attend classes and receive lectures from the ministers. This is a novel suggestion in my opinion because I think members of parliament do not generally want to listen to lectures on the part of ministers, but rather deliver lectures to ministers.

Mr. Chairman, I intend to confine my remarks to that very limited item in these estimates in connection with tariffs on automobile parts and the related agreement. If I understand the situation correctly, under a proposed agreement, Canada would allow the import of certain parts made in the United States, provided Canada could export an equivalent amount of parts. I understand some of the manufacturers of United States automobile parts are not happy about this arrangement and are urging the government not to put tariffs on our exports because that would, in the vernacular, queer the whole deal.

Mr. Chairman, I think the suggestion proposed in respect of this automobile parts agreement represents a very important part of our export policy, and I hope to see this type of thing adopted as trade principle. I certainly urge the minister to do everything possible to keep this agreement in effect.

In view of certain objections on the part of United States automobile parts manufacturers toward this agreement, will it not be possible to include, so far as Canada is concerned, not only car parts but parts for farm tractors, motorcycles and other pieces of machinery of this type? I suggest this machinery all falls within the same or a similar category.

As one hon. member opposite has stated, everything should be done to continue these transactions, because it is possible for this country to maintain a balance of trade, yet not really use to capacity our own resources. One must consider that we sell $1,700 million of aluminum, but that amount actually represents electric power, transportation and other services. Does it mean on the other hand that we can import $1,700 million of automobile and farm machinery parts? The same situation is true in respect of the export of gas and other raw materials, or a combination of them.

We will eventually have to propose to other nations with which we hope to carry on trade that we import no more than we export, or we export as much as we import. I am sure if every nation followed this practice the balance of trade would depend on quality rather than quantity, and the country which could produce an article better and more efficiently would be the country which would have a better import-export balance. I have no doubt at all that here in Canada we could develop an aircraft industry second to none in the world. We have the raw materials, cheap power and the know-how, and there is no reason at all why we should not become the world's most efficient producers of aircraft. This is a product in respect of which there is no transportation costs because an aircraft can be delivered to any place in the world.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest the outcome of the trade situation developing will depend upon agreements such as the one I have envisaged. As an example, if I manufactured air conditioning equipment, and I might say that I have, and I exported $1,000 worth, I should receive a permit to import $1,000 worth of equipment of the same or a similar category. If I do not use that permit, rather than the government taking the tariff charges as a penalty I should be able to sell the permit on the open market. I might then receive 18 cents, 20 cents, or 30 cents on the dollar, which would help me balance my export-import situation, and would at the same time do something for the tariff position. I suggest the situation would balance out automatically and assist in providing a balance of employment and a balance in terms of supply and demand. We need to have a balance of export and import trade in accordance with skills, man-hours of skills, but not necessarily dollars because dollars are not a true criterion. I said I was going to be brief. I would urge the minister to do whatever he can with American manufacturers and the American government in this very important field, so that we may continue this agreement with the United States and be able to expand it to other categories of products from time to time.

Mr. Irvine: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words tonight with respect to trade and commerce. I was interested, and I am sure many other hon. members were, in the statement of the minister this afternoon. I am also sure that a great many will be interested in reading Hansard tomorrow in order that they may get the full portent of his complete statement including, of course, some of the statistics he quoted. He delivered his speech very rapidly. There were a number of things I should have liked to write down but that was impossible and I am sure many other members also found it impossible.

However, Mr. Chairman, I believe the first sentence the minister uttered in his report to the house this afternoon proved the falsity of the Liberal campaign charges that the Canadian economy was stagnant. The committee will recall that in March and April of 1963 many such statements were made. One of the Grit slogans of that time was: "Let's get the economy rolling again". But the minister said this afternoon and also in his speech recently at Winnipeg, I believe, that the advance in the economy commenced some four years ago. That would place it in 1960. I should like to compliment the minister on his honesty. I think what he said is a wonderful tribute to the former minister of trade and commerce and it is also a tribute to the former minister of agriculture.

I should have liked to speak very briefly this evening on a subject which I am afraid might be forbidden. I believe the operation has been transferred from the Department of Trade and Commerce to the Department of Industry. I was going to speak rather briefly on the subject of the plight of the small businessmen and it is unfortunate I will not be able to do so, because they are having great difficulty. I believe this matter now comes under the Department of Industry. I should like to have some clarification on that point because there is so much duplication and it is difficult sometimes for a new member to know exactly what department is responsible for some of these matters. This causes a great deal of confusion particularly in the minds of the newer members.

I should also like to mention at this time that while the minister has been particularly optimistic, which is perhaps a very good thing, there have been many impediments thrown in his path, one in particular which I will mention. I refer, of course, to the 11 per cent tax on production machinery. Naturally this increases prices and when you increase prices there is a tendency toward pricing yourself out of certain markets. But in spite of that we must say that the minister's department has certainly made progress. This is what we are all looking for, of course, because I think most members of the house are first of all Canadians and, second, party supporters.

I should like to say a word or two tonight about the imbalance of our export-import trade. In 1963, for example, our trade with the United States amounted to about $8.41 billion. This represented roughly 62 per cent of our total trade. I am just wondering whether as a trading nation we are on a very sound footing when we do approximately twice as much business with the United States as we do with the rest of the world. In 1963 our purchases from the United States amounted to over $500 million more than the amount of our sales to that country. This is made somewhat more easy to take in view of our favourable trade balance, in some cases very favourable, with such countries as the Soviet union, Japan, China, West Germany and, of course, Great Britain. But I think this is a time when we should be particularly objective in our thinking because sooner or later these countries where we enjoy these more favourable trade balances are going to demand a greater amount of our import business, and when they do we are not going to be in any position to turn a deaf ear to them if we hope to continue to enjoy the amount of business we do with them at the present time.

The minister referred to certain statistics this afternoon and I hope I have it right, that exports to the United States are up 11 per cent this year and exports to Great Britain are up 21 per cent. Mind you, on the surface this looks pretty good but let us look at the situation from another angle. In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964 we had an increase of something like 6 per cent, and while this looks good it is not so reasonable when you consider that our general export business increase was something like 11 per cent.

Why do we export mainly only to the larger countries? I think this is something to which we should give a great deal of consideration. Why should we not look a little bit farther into the future? This afternoon we heard about what has happened in the past, but what about tomorrow and next year? What is our policy? What is the matter with our vision? Why is the bulk of our trade done with the United States, Great Britain, France and Germany?

Mr. Sharp: Because they are the richest countries.

Mr. Irvine: In 1963, for instance, we did twice as much business with France as we did with the entire Middle East. Our sales to Japan were three times our sales to all of Africa. In the whole of South America our sales were less than those to West Germany. What is the matter with our sales efforts? Some years ago I was quite interested in sales work. I had a staff of some 200 salesmen working under me and our market was the entire Dominion of Canada. We used to sit down from time to time, assess the situation, go over the whole area, mark out those areas of the territory that we covered and try to improve our sales efforts in every area.

It is our business to develop trade throughout the entire world and, knowing the Minister of Trade and Commerce as I do, I would imagine that he must be sitting down and assessing the whole picture with a view to a rapid expansion of our trade policies. There used to be an old slogan we referred to in our sales work and I am sure it would come in handy today. We used to say: "First you plan your work and then you work your plan".

The optimism shown by the minister is a wonderful thing but you cannot allow that to go too far because the next step could possibly be apathy and maybe indifference. At some time we might find ourselves in the position of the proverbial ostrich which placed its head in the sand. I think we should pull our head out and take a very good look around to see what there is in the way of export markets where we could expand.

To take a look at the South American continent, last year we purchased from Brazil approximately $31 million worth of merchandise. However, we only sold them about $29 million worth of goods. Here is a country conveniently located, with a rapidly growing population now of over 75 million people. Surely this is a convenient market that should be explored to the nth degree. I should like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the accumulation of all these things could have a profound effect on balancing our budget and also in assisting us in attaining a balance of import-export trade.

There are a couple of questions I should like to leave with the minister, and I am sure he will provide the answers. First I should like to ask, what are the plans for the future? What is to be our trade policy? Second I should like to ask about the budget of Expo '67, which was mentioned in the house this afternoon. We have heard many other names for it, but I rather like this name. I should like to know what is the total cost to date to Canada of the 1967 fair which has been referred to as Expo '67. I should like an answer to that. There are two more questions I should like to ask in connection with this exposition. What is the anticipated total cost of our 1967 world fair, that is for the entire operation? What disposition will be made of the permanent buildings. These were paid for with the taxpayers' money. What part of that money will be recaptured, and how is it to be decided? I think the public is entitled to the answer.

I should like to place it rather firmly on the record, Mr. Chairman, that I am wholeheartedly in favour of this centennial world fair or Expo '67 as you may wish to name it. I think this is a good location. When we have the Canadian national exhibition in Toronto, it would seem only right that we should have the other exhibition in the largest city in Canada.

Mr. Sharp: I wonder if the hon. member—

[Mr. Irvine.]

Mr. Irvine: If the minister would give me one minute more, I shall be pleased to give him the floor.

Mr. Sharp: I do not want the floor, I just wanted to be clear about the question the hon. member asked so I would be able to answer it accurately. Can he tell me what he means by the first question, as to what is the expected total cost? What is the hon. member taking into account? Does he mean the net cost taking into account the revenue, or is he talking about the total investment in the exposition?

Mr. Irvine: The total cost I had in mind is the total cost of the entire Expo '67, the total budget for the entire fair. I should like to close by saying that I think this is likely one of the finest, if not the finest public relations effort we have ever planned in the interests of this great country of ours.

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Chairman, having been engaged in international trade for several years, I am of course still very interested in problems arising out of international exchange of goods and services.

This afternoon, I listened to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) with the same attention as that with which I follow his activities. I think the English proverb "The right man in the right place" applies very well to him. I recognize that he is a great negotiator; I must pay this tribute to him. I should also say that his parliamentary secretary is a great help to him.

Furthermore, I must add that he has the support of a remarkable team of men of great merit, stationed in strategic posts throughout the world, to conduct business on behalf of Canada. I see in the galleries several officials who second his efforts here in Ottawa. As a matter of fact, I remember a few I met in Brazil, for instance, and I could name Mr. Holton, in Sao Paulo, and Mr. Cole, in Brasilia, remarkable polyglots very anxious to expand our trade with South America.

At this stage, I should like to stress the importance for our representatives abroad to speak French and English perfectly, because those are two great international languages understood throughout the world.

It is especially during this trip that I became deeply convinced that the exchange system was definitely defective.

Mention was made over there of operaçoes paralelas, parallel operations, that is, goods exchanged against the mutual acceptance of each currency, according to a predetermined equivalence.

So when I came back it occurred to me to introduce Bill No. C-24, whose purpose was to permit the Bank of Canada to keep in its foreign reserves up to $500 million in unconvertible exchange, in order to greatly increase our external trade.

Then, an hon. member opposite said that to reach that goal, the Bank of Canada would have to sell $500 million of Canadian securities. What a monumental joke. One has to be unaware of banking operations to make such a suggestion.

That is why I should like to quote what Mr. James H. Gallager, of Toronto, wrote to me recently.

[Text]

The present world monetary system is not the type of system which promotes prosperity in all nations...All nations should exercise control of credit and currency within their own boundaries. A world monetary system does not require financial contributions from 102 member nations to operate efficiently. All that is required is for a world bank to have currency which would be used and accepted by 102 member nations to make up deficits in trading transactions between nations. Within nations themselves, the central banks of nations can balance potential consumption of goods and services with potential production of goods and services within nations.

[Translation]

In my opinion, this Canadian citizen in Toronto is perfectly right.

I suppose that the minister attended the meeting of the international monetary fund when he went to Japan recently.

Perhaps he had an opportunity to hear Mr. Valery Giscard d'Estaing, the French minister of finance, propose an improvement of the international payments system by the abolition of the gold exchange standard because that is the basic cause preventing the exchange of products between countries.

Incidentally, I should like to point out that Mr. Giscard d'Estaing is recognized as one of the best financial experts in the world. In fact, in its issue of September 25, 1964, Time Magazine published an article praising him highly and stated that because of his financial administration, France had a balanced budget for the first time in 34 years.

Mr. Chairman, we must open our doors to friendly countries, because Canada is a country of abundance, except for the 3,800,000 Canadians living in poverty, and we can trade with all those nations to exchange our agricultural and industrial products, and even our services. In that regard, I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce should use all his influence to promote a Canadian foreign trade bank, on the model of the United States export-import bank, and of the French bank of foreign trade.

A Canadian foreign bank could look after credit operations concerning the financing of foreign trade, including the documentary credit, because Canada is a trading country and all banking facilities must be made available for the exchange of our products by some institution of the federal government, to which belong the monetary authority and power.

I feel that a serious mistake was made in 1961 when the government allowed chartered banks to acquire the Export Finance Corporation of Canada Limited, a company set up by a special act of parliament in June 1959, and whose main purpose was to help finance exports guaranteed by the Export Credit Insurance Corporation, a state corporation.

Through this finance company banks make further loans (bank or scrip money) which are also guaranteed by the taxes of the Canadian people. This is an abnormal combination because it is not normal that Canadian taxpayers should take all the risks instead of commercial banks.

At this point I should like to say a few words about the textile industry which faces tremendous competition because this industry employs a great number of Canadian workers and must be protected at all costs.

We know that Japan has taken a rather firm stand, but we must always keep in mind that we must protect the industries with a large labour force as it is an essential step to eliminate unemployment.

Mr. Chairman, these are a few suggestions I wanted to make to the government so as to increase our trade, because our economy is too vulnerable, as a result of the concentration of the majority of our exports to a few countries only.

[Text]

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, in rising to participate in this debate I first want to say I am very sorry I was not in the chamber this afternoon. I was anxious to hear the comments of the minister, but unfortunately the work of those of us who are on the flag committee is occupying such a large amount of our time that it detracts from the opportunities we have to sit in the chamber and hear some of the proceedings. Therefore not being able to say much about the minister's speech, if I can last for another three or four minutes on generalities I may have the opportunity to adjourn the debate, then study his speech and comment on it at the next opportunity.

All of us who study this department are impressed by its complexity and by the difficulties an ordinary member experiences in trying to assess a department of this size and to assess the work of the minister. One of the problems we have is a serious lack of a good statistics gathering service. I am of course thinking of the d.b.s. upon which all of us rely. The information we are able to collect is that the statistics gathering agencies of the government are starved for personnel in many areas. We hope this is wrong, but I would be interested in the minister advising the committee on the recruitment requests that have been made by the various agencies of the d.b.s., on how many people they have recruited for additions to their staff, on how many of these have been recommended by the minister and, more importantly, on how many of them have been turned down by treasury board.

It is my understanding that these agencies have requested additional staff in very considerable number, that the minister has concurred in this, but that it has been rejected by the treasury board. If this is so it is a sad state of affairs, because I do not know how the minister and, more importantly, how individual members of parliament will be able to judge some problems if they do not have the necessary statistical information available.

For example, I understand a very small degree of good planning is taking place in some areas and that the government has discontinued real studies on input and output tables with any great degree of regularity. Without this kind of economic research it is hard to know how we can do any real effective planning.

I would like to know the size of the economic research staffs. Again it is my impression they are pretty thin in numbers, and if we are to do a fair amount of planning an increase of some 200 per cent to 300 per cent is necessary in the staffs of many of our research units. If we are going to do effective planning we have to have this help available. Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the house leader about the business for tomorrow and an outline of the business for next week.

[Mr. Scott.]

Mr. Favreau: For tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, —and about this I have advised the house leaders—we will first proceed with item No. 70, which is a resolution to refer the matter of the water levels of the great lakes system to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters. I expect, or hope at least, that the discussion on that matter will be relatively short. Then we will take the balance of the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, after which we will proceed with discussing the balance of the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. This will be followed by the estimates of the Department of Defence Production, to be followed by the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

On Monday we will resume debate on the farm machinery bill, after which we will take the resolution on the Crop Insurance Act, which will be followed by second reading of the bill to amend certain acts administered by the Department of Insurance.

Mr. Winkler: Let us do the first three tonight.

SUGGESTED HOLIDAY ON THANKSGIVING DAY.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the house would agree to revert to motions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house agree to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the house would give unanimous consent to not sitting on Thanksgiving day, Monday, October 12?

Mr. Fairweather: What recess have you got in mind?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, our party is not immediately prepared to give its unanimous consent so that the house will not sit on that Monday, because the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) did not tell us why we should not sit on that day.

As we have a lot of work to do, we believe that the population of this country deserves that we work on its behalf and that it would be to its advantage for us to sit on Monday, October 12 next, like on any other day of the week.

That is why we refuse to give unanimous consent.

[Text]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this particular matter, inasmuch as October 12 will be the day of the visit of Her Majesty to the capital, and inasmuch as the Queen is the Queen of Canada, we suggest that the motion the house leader is putting before the house is the only course that should be followed.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we would favour such an order being made, but perhaps the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) might let this matter stand until tomorrow. I think if we had a meeting of the house leaders on the point we could probably arrive at agreement a little quicker than we can here and now. If my understanding is correct, the minister has not taken it up with any of us, although I think he had the right to assume that we would agree to such a proposal. However, Mr. Speaker, perhaps if we had a meeting we could reach agreement.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I am ready to state that it was just sheer enthusiasm or optimism on my part; but I had given notice to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire).

Mr. Churchill: Let us agree to it right now. That is just obstruction.

Mr. Winkler: Let us have it right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. Does the house give unanimous consent not to sit on Monday, October 12?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Grégoire: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Alkenbrack: What is the reason for that?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

NATIONAL DEFENCE—LA MACAZA, QUE.—TREATMENT OF PEACE DEMONSTRATORS BY R.C.A.F. POLICE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, for almost three weeks I have been asking the government to investigate a disturbance which took place at La Macaza, Quebec, on September 9 and 10, at which time it was alleged that there was ill treatment of certain persons who participated in a peace demonstration. This afternoon the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) gave the house a report. In my opinion that report was a travesty. In the first place, it was not an independent investigation; it was an investigation based entirely on reports from the minister's officials. I would hardly expect a report to be objective that was made by men who are asked to give their opinion on their own competency or the competency of their subordinates.

The minister endeavoured to dismiss the whole matter by quoting from a press dispatch. If it was the same one that I saw, it was a dispatch of September 10 in the Globe and Mail which said that the demonstrators were pleased with the results and that they considered the whole demonstration a successful action.

If the minister is that good at reading press reports he might also have read some of the other press reports. He might have read the press report of September 16, which gave the account of a Miss Kathleen Moses, a Queen's university student who comes from Niagara Falls, who claims to have been kicked. He might have read the report of Miss Alison Gordon of Edmonton, who said that one of the servicemen at the base who was a friend of hers wrote afterwards apologizing for the rough treatment she was given. He might have read the Globe and Mail of September 17, which quotes Dan Daniels of Montreal, Andre Cardinal of Montreal and Peter Boothroyd of Toronto saying there was beating and brutal treatment of some of those who took part in the demonstration. I do not know whether those statements are accurate or not. I have a letter from a woman in Montreal who participated along with her two daughters, and she said she was thrown in a ditch and so were her two daughters, that servicemen jumped on them, and that she saw people being kicked while they lay on the ground. I do not know whether these statements are accurate but there is one thing I think the house and the country should understand. These were not young roughnecks or juvenile delinquents. In the main they were young people who are pacifists. They came almost directly from the peace camp at Grindstone, Ontario operated by the Society of Friends, or Quakers, and they returned to their camp after the demonstration was over.

I am not a pacifist but I submit that in a democracy every person has a right to be a pacifist and those of us who believe in democracy must preserve the rights of people who do not believe as we do. Voltaire said: "I disagree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." We must also be prepared to take the same attitude when people take certain action of which we do not approve. If these young people were breaking the law the minister had a clear course of action open to him. He could have had these people arrested and charged with obstructing traffic or disturbing the peace. If found guilty they could have been punished by due process of law, not by policemen, military or otherwise, beating them up. If we are to allow the police to use their judgment as to whether or not persons ought to be abused, we are setting our feet on the slippery path that leads to a police state.

I wrote down what the minister said this afternoon. He said that if any of these young people felt that undue force had been used he would have expected them to lay charges and follow the due process of law as laid down in the constitution. That is the most ridiculous statement I have ever heard from a minister of the crown. How would these young people, university students, set in motion the due process of law? Would they sue the Department of National Defence? Would they obtain a fiat from the Minister of Justice? Where would they get the necessary funds to enable them to prosecute the crown? Surely the minister, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), to whom I appeal, have the responsibility, when people make charges in the public press that there has been brutal mistreatment by military police, to investigate the matter—and I do not mean by having some army or air force officer look into it; I mean by appointing some impartial person or body to determine whether or not these allegations are true.

I am not anxious that anybody should be punished over this. I am anxious that if these statements are true, action should be taken so that such incidents will not happen again and so that military police or any other police be adequately trained and disciplined in order that they will not use abusive methods. Violence always begets violence, and if the crown acquiesces in the use of violence by any of its servants we are asking for the day when other groups, not pacifists but more unruly groups, will begin to think the same methods can be used by them with impunity. I hope the government will give us a better answer tonight than the one we got this afternoon and I appeal to the government and to the Prime Minister, when he looks over the record of this debate, to institute an impartial and independent investigation in order that the people of Canada may know that there will be no recurrence of any ill treatment whether by military police or by other police who come under the jurisdiction of the government of Canada.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I rise only to say to the house and to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) is unavoidably absent this evening, otherwise he would be here to reply to my hon. friend. I shall see that his remarks are brought to the attention of both the minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson).

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES—SUBSIDIES TO CULTURAL CENTRES IN DORCHESTER COUNTY, QUE.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-André Boutin (Dorchester): This afternoon, on the orders of the day, I directed to the right hon. Prime Minister a question which met all the requirements, as it was very important, concise and urgent.

As the Prime Minister refused to answer this afternoon, I have deemed it advisable to discuss the matter this evening.

Since the Prime Minister and his parliamentary secretaries are not here, I would therefore ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to answer my question, since he took part in the election campaign.

My question was as follows:

Can the Prime Minister tell us if his government intends to grant subsidies to the numerous cultural centres which are being promised by the Liberal party in the county of Dorchester during the current by-election campaign, and, if so, does he thereby admit that "operation agriculture" having failed in this county, the situation might be remedied through "operation culture"?

Mr. Speaker, I have been prompted to ask this question by the list of innumerable promises which appears daily in the newspapers aimed at the voters who will choose a representative on October 5 next in the counties of Dorchester, Matane, etc.

Never before have we seen in our province an auction similar to the one now in progress in these counties. The shower of promises, of subsidies is such that the people of Dorchester feel swamped; municipal parks here, sludge plants there, confederation monument elsewhere, and many more still.

One may wonder if the $100 million the Lesage government borrowed from a Social Credit government, that of British Columbia, just before the election, will not be all squandered on highway projects, asphalt and all kinds of gifts for the Dorchester county alone.

People in the county are no fools since we could hear from electors in various ridings comments such as: "We are getting buried under asphalt" or "One may wonder if it would not be better for our representative to die every year".

Obviously these people are right since not a single penny had been spent in four years and within four weeks millions are being poured into the county.

But the most dazzling, the most brilliant and the most subtle of all those promises is to build "cultural centres" in almost every parish of the county of Dorchester. Just think, Mr. Speaker, in an entirely rural environment where 60 per cent of the people live from the land, cultural centres are to be built, not in order to show our farmers how to improve their land and pursue their great calling—no, our people in Dorchester are to become little intellectuals, subtle little minds, in a word, they are to become sophisticated.

Mr. Speaker, the most ridiculous aspect in all this election story, which will never be forgotten, is that some good politicians in Ottawa are going to help those auctioneers.

Indeed, we have seen the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) and the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauvé) "Mr. ARDA", both federal ministers, go to that riding and speak in favour of the new co-operative federalism, that is the federalism of election promises. We also heard the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Laverdière) strongly approve the decision to build cultural centres in the county of Dorchester.

Mr. Speaker, as the federal members are all for the building of such cultural centres, the federal government must have given its authorization, or have promised the government of the province of Quebec to subsidize those centres, which are to be centennial projects. As those centres have already been officially announced by the Quebec government in at least two parishes of that county, i.e. in Ste Germaine, for an amount of $100,000, and at St. Prosper for an equal amount, the federal government obviously promised to give those centres to the people.

This is the answer I should like to receive from the Prime Minister. Did the government grant an amount to the Ste Germaine and St. Prosper parishes or is this promise only eyewash on the part of the Lesage government?

In my question I asked of the Prime Minister: "Does he admit that "operation agriculture" having failed, the situation might be remedied through "operation culture"?

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, agriculture is in a state of depression in our area. That is why the Liberal party does not mention the subject during this campaign; they prefer to take farmers for a ride in the clouds instead of dealing with their problems. It is certainly not ARDA which will save them.

Since Mr. Lesage is so much in favour of co-operative federalism, why does he refuse to request the assistance of the federal Minister of Agriculture to help maple sugar and syrup producers in the province of Quebec whose production was a complete failure last spring?

Since Mr. Lesage said he looks after the problems of all the people of Quebec, why did he hide when 20,000 farmers marched on Quebec city?

Those are points the premier of Quebec and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration should explain to voters instead of encouraging the orgy of promises which takes place during these by-elections.

If Mr. Lesage is serious and sincere when he talks of co-operative federalism, he should ask as soon as possible the federal government to help farmers, instead of hiding, or turning a deaf ear to their requests.

Would the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration answer up to a certain point the questions I just put to him?

[Text]

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, because of a perhaps all too narrow preoccupation with federal politics and federal policies, I am not directly familiar with the particular local issues important in the provincial by-election now going on in the splendid county of Dorchester. I believe that the Prime Minister was in a somewhat similar position. Moreover, I suspect that when this question first came up this afternoon he and the Speaker concluded that this was a matter primarily within provincial jurisdiction.

Indeed, I am rather surprised to find that this matter is put down for discussion at this hour, and what the hon. gentleman has just said confirms me in my wonderment at its being before us now. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. gentleman is looking for reassurance, and that I can make him rest easier by telling him that there is a well established tradition that Liberals strive to do those things which they promise to try to do. I am sure that in this instance this tradition will prevail.

But, sir, one aspect of the hon. member's question as he put it this afternoon caused some concern. He asked, hypothetically, if in the county of Dorchester agriculture is to be supplanted by culture. He seemed to imply that Dorchester could not sustain both at the same time. The problem of eastern agriculture is a difficult one. I do not think I should attempt to give my views on it this evening. But I am sure the hon. member did not wish to imply that there was some sort of contradiction between agriculture and culture. I am sure that, while we may disagree as to what good government is, he would agree with me that under good government both sound agriculture and genuine culture can flourish in his fine county.

Mr. Grégoire: That is not an answer.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.22 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 2, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

IMMIGRATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FOREIGN INTERVENTION IN LABOUR DISPUTES AND NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. C. O. Cooper (for Mr. Ormiston) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-127, to amend the Immigration Act (foreign intervention in industrial disputes).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Cooper: The purpose of this bill is to prevent foreign interference in domestic labour-management disputes and such intervention in subsequent negotiations.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—INQUIRY AS TO WHEREABOUTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the Minister of Justice. When he spoke on television last night at eleven o'clock and stated that he had no knowledge of the whereabouts of Mr. Banks, did he not at that time have the information that Mr. Murphy, a radio man connected with station CFRA, I believe, had had a radio discussion with Mr. Banks, and that Mr. Reguly of the Toronto Star just walked down by the dockside and was able to see Mr. Banks there along with his car bearing a Quebec licence? Would the minister be able to explain that rather incongruous position?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. gentleman knows, of course, one does not appear directly on television on the eleven o'clock news. These interviews are taped, and the interview in question was taped around 4.30 yesterday afternoon. I learned of this alleged interview with Banks at the time the interview was taped and I had no way, of course, of ascertaining to what extent the facts as alleged were accurate and especially no way of ascertaining who tipped off the reporter. Whether or not it was Mr. Banks himself I do not know.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wonder whether the minister, having tried for so long to find the location of Mr. Banks, is now able to give us information with regard to whether the elusive Mr. Banks, the waltzing Matilda of Canadian politics, has been discovered.

Mr. Favreau: I do not have precise information as to this yet, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat that I shall tell my right hon. friend whenever information is obtained.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the information the Minister of Justice gave the house yesterday in answer to the Leader of the Opposition, that the proceedings to which he referred could have been commenced five years ago, could the minister explain why those proceedings were not commenced during his tenure of office in the Department of Justice, which did not cease until 1960 after he had been there six years through two administrations?

Mr. Favreau: Of course, Mr. Speaker, the information came to the Department of Justice in 1958, a period when a Liberal government, I am told, was not in office but rather a Conservative government; and the first positive statement came in February, 1962, at a time when a Liberal government was not in office.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This does not answer the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not wish to prevent anyone asking any reasonable and proper question at this time, but I suggest we are getting very close to starting a debate.

Mr. Favreau: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I wish to correct an inaccuracy. It was not February, 1962 as I have just stated, but February, 1959.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I think the point the minister raised yesterday is important and should be cleared up. Since the minister was serving as assistant deputy minister in the department in 1958, will he inform the house what advice the law officers of the crown gave to the government of that day?

Mr. Speaker: This question is improper.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Does the Minister of Justice not think that in 1958 and 1959 it rested much more with the minister of justice than with the deputy minister to make the appropriate decisions in such cases?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I was just about to say—and I thank the hon. member for Lapointe for his suggestion—that in 1958 or 1959, I was not responsible for the policy of the department.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question which I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. In view of the obvious secrecy which has surrounded the whole matter of Banks' escape from Canada, as well as the obvious interest in this matter of all members of the house, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would cause an independent body to inquire into and make findings upon all the surrounding circumstances which have enabled Banks to blatantly flout the law of Canada and escape out of Canadian jurisdiction.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no such inquiry is necessary. I think the facts are quite clear, and I do not think any useful purpose would be served at this time in establishing that kind of inquiry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am still waiting for an answer from the Minister of Justice. Is he now in a position to say whether any inquiry was ever made of the immigration authorities in the United States as to Banks crossing the line with car attached? Second, can he say whether the S.I.U. office or Mr. Hall was ever communicated with to find out where Banks was?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I myself, of course, do not perform the actual investigations subsequent to demands for information. I never said in this house that a formal demand had been made to the immigration authorities of the United States. On the contrary, I said it was most unlikely that these would be the authorities who could supply us with information. What I did say in this respect was that the R.C.M.P. had asked the F.B.I. to supply us with information.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, did the minister notice the statement made by Paul Hall that he had never been asked where Banks was? Why did not the minister in the discharge of his responsibilities, if he was really trying to do something—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —get in touch with this man?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I should think it was more appropriate to go to the authorities concerned, namely the F.B.I., rather than to Mr. Paul Hall.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Blaming the F.B.I. for your negligence.

Mr. Nielsen: A further supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister seen this morning's report in the Globe and Mail where it is set forth that packages from a convertible with Quebec licence 323-983 were transferred to Banks' Cadillac in New York? If so, does he intend to take any investigative action to see whether an offence has been committed by any other Canadian in this conspiracy?

Mr. Favreau: I have not yet seen the item in the paper, Mr. Speaker.

QUEBEC—REPORTED SECRET CAMPS FOR GUERRILLA TRAINING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Minister of Justice, and ask him if his attention has been drawn to a statement made in the courts by Marcel Tardif to the effect he received guerrilla training in a secret camp last summer near Shawinigan? He says in his statement that this camp was used to give military training against "the enemy" and when asked by the judge as to who the enemy was he said "the federalists". I should like to ask the minister whether the R.C.M.P. have any knowledge of this alleged secret military camp or of any other secret military camps, and whether an investigation is being made by his department into the statement of Marcel Tardif.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I have no knowledge personally to date of the facts as just stated. However, I shall take that question as notice and shall inquire.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. Has the Minister of Justice or the R.C.M.P. any knowledge of one François Schirm who, according to Marcel Tardif, is a one time French paratrooper and who was the commander in charge of this camp? Has the R.C.M.P. any knowledge of this man or his activities, or is any attempt being made to question him?

Mr. Favreau: I think this is a question that ought to be put on the order paper.

Mr. Douglas: Surely when a man is named in the courts as being the commander of a secret military camp, that is something that ought not to be put on the order paper where it may lie for two or three months. Surely this is a matter which the Department of Justice and the R.C.M.P. ought to be looking into. When I ask the minister if his department or the R.C.M.P. know anything about this man, surely I ought not to be told to put the question on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has stated the question twice now and the minister has said he will take notice of it and investigate. I think, although the question is extremely important and that is why it was allowed in the first place, the minister should have an opportunity to make a full and complete investigation.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister did not say he would look into the matter of François Schirm, who was allegedly the commander of this secret military camp. He asked me to put the question on the order paper. I am suggesting that this is a matter of too great urgency to be put on the order paper. If the minister will undertake to look into the question and report to the house, I am satisfied. However, I am not satisfied to put the question on the order paper.

Mr. Favreau: The reason I suggested that the question be put on the order paper was that I thought François Schirm was one of the three persons arrested and presently detained in Montreal in connection with a murder in an arms dealer's store. I shall inquire and, of course, any of these allegations or facts stated in newspapers are automatically and immediately inquired into by the R.C.M.P. Once the result of the inquiry is brought to my attention I shall report to the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ROYAL VISIT

MEASURES TO ASSURE SAFETY OF HER MAJESTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is really related to the question that has just been asked and is directed to the Minister of Justice. In his opinion are the arrangements for the protection of the safety of the Queen properly in hand, in view of the fact that there are printed instructions being circulated through the publication La Cognée telling how best to plan action against the Queen's visit, how to infiltrate crowds, touch off riots and cope with the police when they attempt to restore order? It seems to me this is all related, and that there should be some statement that such activity is being adequately taken care of ahead of time.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my answer to this is a definite affirmative. Definitely, yes; all the necessary measures have been and are being taken, and I can assure this house that the safety of the Queen is completely assured and that facts such as those which have just been brought to the attention of the house are being investigated and measures have been taken in relation thereto.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MONTREAL—BENEFITS TO STRIKING NEWSPAPER EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Could he tell us whether a decision has been made by his department and the unemployment insurance commission in order to allow the employees of La Presse who are out of work on account of the strike at this newspaper, to draw unemployment insurance benefits as of early June?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it this matter is before the board of referees. I shall check to see whether a decision has been reached by the board.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PENSIONS

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN TORONTO CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, which perhaps the acting minister or the Prime Minister would answer. Are any members of the federal government taking part in the Canadian pensions conference being held in Toronto and, if not, has the department full time observers or participants at the conferences?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether, on behalf of the minister, I could take notice of this question, check into it today and give the hon. member an answer.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the parliamentary secretary's suggestion, but the conference will be over by next week.

Mr. Munro: I said I would supply the hon. member with an answer after orders of the day.

[Later:]

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I have the answer to a question posed earlier today by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. The Department of National Health and Welfare was represented by a delegate at the Canadian pensions conference held in Toronto on Wednesday, September 30. That conference terminated yesterday.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROPOSED ALTERATIONS IN OLDER WORKER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Is it his intention to propose alterations to the expensive and unsuccessful older workers program and, if so—

Mr. Robichaud: Order.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I see the little man is piping up again. If the minister is proposing alterations would he outline them to the house?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have no information as to any unsuccessful winter works program operated by the Department of Labour.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister is it not a fact that under his older workers program $200,000 was spent to put approximately 2,000 people to work?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member could put this on the order paper as it requires a detailed answer.

QUEBEC—APPLICATIONS UNDER WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, at the request of several mayors of municipalities in my constituency, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Can the minister tell us why application forms for the 1964-65 winter works are not yet distributed to Quebec municipalities?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): These forms are presently being processed by the queen's printer, and we hope they will be available for distribution next week.

D.E.W. LINE—EQUAL WAGES FOR U.S. AND CANADIAN PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it relates to the basic labour problem on the distant early warning line. Has the government of Canada made it abundantly clear to the government of the United States that it is unacceptable that Canadians employed on the distant early warning line by the United States Federal Electric Corporation should receive substantially lower wages than United States citizens with whom they are working in identical jobs?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I take that question as notice and find out whether I can give a proper reply.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

FORT WILLIAM, ONT.—PROTEST RESPECTING SURVEILLANCE OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice in the absence of the Postmaster General. Since the postal employees at Fort William feel that peepholes in the building constitute an invasion of their civil rights, will the minister assure the house that the peephole situation will be rectified, or that these men can seek redress under the bill of rights?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Apparently if there is a peephole situation, Mr. Speaker, it began some time before the last federal election. I shall take the question as notice for the Postmaster General and discuss the matter with him.

FLOOD CONTROL

ONTARIO—FEDERAL APPROVAL OF CREDIT VALLEY PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. It arises out of a story in this morning's Globe and Mail that an urgently needed $5 million flood control scheme for the Credit valley is being held up because approval cannot be obtained from the minister's department. If there is a delay what is the reason for it, and when can we expect approval of this very urgently required flood control scheme?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The only delay is dictated by the fact that the economic studies involving the relation of the benefit to the cost have not yet been completed. I can assure the hon. member that we are proceeding with these studies as rapidly as possible; they relate solely to the benefit anticipated in comparison with the cost.

Mr. Scott: The hon. gentleman will understand that the parties concerned are urgently in need of some indication as to the length of time which may be involved. Can the minister give any indication when these studies will be completed and some decision rendered?

Mr. Laing: Very quickly, Mr. Speaker.

SHIPPING

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF MARINA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works.

When I was elected at a by-election last February, the minister told the population of Montreal that a definite project had been agreed upon for the construction of a harbour station for the city of Montreal.

Since that time, as far as I know, no work has been undertaken toward the construction of that station.

Could the minister tell the house if his department intends to pursue this project and when?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will contact the Minister of Transport in this respect, and under the circumstances I shall consider this question as a notice.

[Text]

TRANSPORTATION

PETERBOROUGH-TORONTO—PROPOSED WITHDRAWAL OF DAYLINER SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport and ask him whether he would make inquiries to see if it is true that the proposed withdrawal of the dayliner service between Havelock and Toronto will be carried out in order that the coaches may be transferred to the Montreal area.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): I will look into the matter further. I am aware there is a proposal by the railway company to discontinue dayliner service between Peterborough and Toronto, and representations have been made to the board of transport commissioners on behalf of the municipalities directly concerned. As the hon. member knows, the board has the responsibililty of deciding what should be done in these circumstances. When I have any further information I will bring it to the attention of the hon. member.

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Will the minister use his influence with the board of transport commissioners to make sure there is a public hearing on this matter before the dayliner service is abandoned?

Mr. McIlraith: I do not think I can undertake to try to influence a quasi-judicial body such as the board of transport commissioners, but I will find out what the responsibility of the minister is in this regard and make sure that any representations which are made to me are brought to the attention of the board. But I would certainly not undertake to try to influence the board.

UNITED NATIONS

PROPOSED ADOPTION OF WEIGHTED VOTE ON PEACE KEEPING OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question concerning the proposal recently made to a United Nations committee by United States Ambassador Plimpton which, if adopted, would in effect give a bigger voice or a weighted vote in peace keeping decisions to the great powers and those members who are large financial contributors to the United Nations. Could the minister indicate the government's attitude toward this proposal?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member gave me notice of this question the day before yesterday. The Canadian government through its ambassador at the United Nations supports the suggestion that there should be a special committee of the United Nations to give consideration to the problem of the financing of future UN peace keeping operations. This suggestion arises out of a proposal made by the government of the United States in the working group of 21. I do not believe the hon. member is right in saying the proposal involves the question of a weighted voting principle. However, we support the establishment of a committee for the purpose I have mentioned.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REPORT OF DEFENCE COMMITTEE RESPECTING PUBLIC ACCEPTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Having in mind yesterday's report by the special defence committee regarding the failure of civil defence to gain public acceptance in the fields of fallout shelters and population evacuation, can the minister indicate what steps the government will take to meet the situation revealed by the committee?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this is a question which falls within the jurisdiction of my colleague the Minister of Industry.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, as the remaining part of the estimates of the Department of Defence Production, which includes the emergency measures organization, has been called for later today I suggest that the answer to this question might be left until that time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNION TRUSTEES—APPEARANCE BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. When may we expect the maritime trustees to appear before a committee of this house?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to state on what date they will appear.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate what effort he is making to meet the request of many hon. members of this house in this regard?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the request of the members of the house that a meeting with the trustees be arranged has been met. It is proposed that the trustees meet the committee of the house during this session; the only thing unsettled is the date of that appearance.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, could the minister ask the trustees to inquire whether the school in New York to which members of the S.I.U. have been sent for training by the trustees is the school which Mr. Banks has in recent weeks been heading up?

Mr. Nielsen: He has just graduated.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the trustees know the members of this house have wanted them to appear before a committee for months, does the minister not think it is a little impudent on their part to continue to delay this appearance?

Mr. MacEachen: I would not agree with my hon. friend. As my hon. friend is aware, the chairman of the board wrote me a letter on this subject, gave me lengthy reasons for his thinking in this matter and said he would appear later in the fall. I wrote back and said that was fine with the government. The only question to be settled now is when they will come, and I will raise the matter with the chairman again.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO SITTING ON THANKSGIVING DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since unanimous consent was not given last night to the request of the house leader that the house not sit on October 12, the day Her Majesty the Queen will be here, could the Prime Minister not consider bringing in a motion for the house not to sit on that day?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker; a motion to that effect is being put on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC DELEGATION IN PARIS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question?

Could the minister tell me whether the status of the general secretariat for the province of Quebec is to be changed shortly and, in particular, whether there is any basis to the rumour that the Canadian ambassador to Egypt, Mr. Chapdelaine, will be appointed to that position?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question rests entirely with the Quebec government. The question is no doubt based on an item in this morning's issue of Le Devoir.

All I can say is that during his stay in Canada Mr. Chapdelaine discussed his plans with me, but only in general terms. However, we have not yet received an official resignation from Mr. Chapdelaine who has given such dedicated service to Canada as the head of diplomatic missions.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Has Mr. Chapdelaine handed his resignation to the minister?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may have misunderstood what I said: not yet, no. In addition, I meant to say that we have appointed two new consuls in France, Messrs. Choquette and Bussière, both from the province of Quebec.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question? Has he been in touch with Mr. Lesage or other Quebec ministers in this connection?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have had no opportunity of getting in touch with anyone of the Quebec provincial government concerning this matter which, furthermore, does not fall within my jurisdiction.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs had any official representations from the province of Quebec in this connection?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question has been up two or three times during the last few weeks, and it seems to me that to get a proper reply it should be put on the order paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: A detailed reply.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DISCONTINUANCE OF SECTIONS OF MID-CANADA RADAR LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister inform the house whether the government has under consideration a further discontinuance of sections of the mid-Canada radar line?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

COMBINES

OTTAWA—KICKBACKS BY FIRMS SERVING APARTMENT BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to pose to the Minister of Justice. Is the minister aware of allegations made on the program "Live Wire" this morning to the effect that most bakery, dairy and cleaning firms holding franchises in large apartment buildings in Ottawa are providing kickbacks to those who provide the franchises, and that in some cases compulsion to use these companies is written into a lease? Would the minister check to see whether this matter falls under the jurisdiction of the restrictive trade practices commission, and take appropriate action?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of what was said on that program, but I shall refer the matter to my appropriate officials.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister tell the house whether it is the policy of the government to move in this direction and do this work under contract rather than under the system as developed directly within the government administration?

An hon. Member: To what are you referring?

Mr. Winkler: I refer to the question of maintenance staffs engaged for the purpose of looking after government buildings. Is it the policy of the government now to move out of the area of direct hiring of these employees and into the contract field?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): We are moving back to contract, Mr. Speaker, rather than hiring the personnel to do the job.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PRINTING BUREAU, OTTAWA—ENGLISH REPLY TO FRENCH TELEPHONE INQUIRIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to direct a question to the Secretary of State but, in his absence, I shall ask his parliamentary secretary to answer it.

Would the Secretary of State consider making an investigation in the case of Mr. L. Deavey who answers the telephone at the printing bureau and who, when French speaking Canadians telephone there gives the following answer:

[Text]

"Another fanatic wants to speak French".

[Mr. Howe (Hamilton South).]

[Translation]

Is the Secretary of State going to investigate the case of that Mr. Deavey who gives answers which are not quite appropriate?

[Text]

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the question in detail, but when I have read it I shall try to decide whether a suitable answer can be made.

IMMIGRATION

TORONTO—STATUS OF PERSONS CONCERNED WITH NEWSPAPER STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether his officials have completed their investigations into the activities of the various groups in respect of which questions were asked last week concerning the I.T.U. strike in Toronto; and if they have completed their investigations, what report can the minister now make to this house?

[Translation]

Hon. Réne Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received a complete report, but I hope that early next week I will be in a position to inform the house about the latest developments.

WORLD FAIR

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF NOTRE DAME ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce about a report published in the Expo Digest bulletin. Is the minister in a position to tell the house by how much the area of Notre Dame island will be extended for the exhibition and what will be the additional cost?

Mr. Speaker: Surely this is a question for the order paper.

WATER LEVELS

MOTION FOR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE ON MINES, FORESTS AND WATERS

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved:

That the subject matter of the water levels of the great lakes system be referred to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters for their consideration and report.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should perhaps make a very short statement in respect of this motion.

A nation rich in resources has the duty to ensure that her posterity never find it necessary to accuse their forefathers of neglectfully wasting their heritage. The present crisis in the livelihood and interests of many of our people in the great lakes basin requires that measures be taken which will not only meet current needs but will ensure the wise use of this water resource.

With these thoughts in mind I propose to introduce a motion on this subject. Before doing so I should like to report briefly to the house on measures already being taken by the government, and others which are now proposed, in regard to water levels in the great lakes. These measures form part of a comprehensive approach to the long term objective of learning to live with a natural resource of the size of the great lakes, but they also deal with today's problem.

As regards the current situation, I would remind the house that the international joint commission already has certain important responsibilities. Within the limits of natural conditions and existing authority it is regulating levels and flows from two of the lakes so as to make the best use of available supplies of water.

In April of this year all the lakes were below the average level of the past ten years for that month and, indeed, lake Huron reached its lowest level of the past 100 years. At the outlets of lake Superior and lake Ontario there are dams by which levels can be controlled but there are not present physical means by which the levels of lakes Michigan, Huron and Erie can be similarly regulated.

The commission's present authority extends only to lake Superior and lake Ontario. The international joint commission on June 25, 1964 authorized its lake Superior board of control to release water above the so-called "rule curve requirements" as long as supplies to the lake continue to be favourable and the present large differential in relation to low water datum between the two lakes exists. This measure cannot provide an immediate end to the low water in the lakes downstream, but it will have a beneficial effect. It should be remembered that the time required for a larger portion of the benefit of this additional water to reach Montreal harbour will be well over one year because of the storage capacities of the intervening lakes and their relatively restricted outlet capacities.

Lake Ontario levels have been regulated since 1958 at the Barnhart island dam in the St. Lawrence, in accordance with the order of the I.J.C. Under the approved plan of regulation, levels on lake Ontario are maintained within a range of four feet during the navigation season, as contrasted with a range in nature of 6.6 feet. This has the effect of preventing as low a level of water in dry years as would have been the case had the Barnhart island dam not been built. There is every expectation that lake Ontario levels will be maintained within the improved range again this year. The levels of Montreal harbour are dependent on flows from the Ottawa river as well as from lake Ontario, and the approved plan of regulation recognizes this fact. In anticipation of low water supplies this year, every effort was made by the international joint commission and its board of control, in co-operation with the water users, to store as much additional water as possible in lake Ontario. This was released later in the season to alleviate expected low water conditions at Montreal and the lower St. Lawrence, when the flow from the Ottawa river fell off.

While the international joint commission is doing everything it can under its present authority, there are some steps the government can take to alleviate the worst effects of the present low water levels in particular harbours. On June 4 my colleague the Minister of Public Works informed the house of the expanded dredging program to be undertaken by his department. This dredging will relieve the local situation in some hard pressed areas, but I do not wish to imply that dredging can meet the needs of the many foreshore interests which are currently harassed by low water conditions or which may at other times suffer from high lake levels.

Indeed, the improvement of the water levels themselves is a longer term problem to which solutions must be found. One approach is to study the possibility of extending the regulation regime to make the best use of all the water supplies available from the great lakes basin. Until there is complete knowledge as to how the waters of the basin can be controlled and interests protected through both wet and dry periods, we should be concerned about any plan to introduce large supplies of imported waters. Experience with international regulation of levels on lake Ontario and lake Superior confirms the fact that substantial benefits can be achieved by the regulation of outflows.

As the Prime Minister told the house on May 22, the governments of Canada and the United States are proceeding with a special reference to the international joint commission on great lakes water levels. I expect that an early agreement will be reached to study the feasibility of extending the present regulatory system. This study will take some considerable time and immediate results are not to be expected.

The whole problem of water levels in the great lakes basin is exceedingly complex. As I mentioned earlier, it is welded to the greater human problem of how to live with a natural resource that is unique both in kind and in size. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that there are certain aspects in nature which we can bend to a certain extent, and there are some which we cannot bend. An understanding of causes and possible solutions involves the examination of extensive and complicated technical data. The facets of this complicated problem must become better understood by all those both within and outside this house who are concerned with the problem. A close examination of and a concentration of public attention upon the facts of the situation seem imperative at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister allow a question before he sits down? He has made a very full statement, and I should like to ask him whether he would be prepared to say something with regard to the effects of the Chicago diversion. What is being done to assure that the repeated requests for increased diversion in that area shall not be accepted?

Mr. Laing: In reply to the right hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, may I say I am quite certain that for many years the great body of Canadian public opinion has been that the so-called Chicago diversion was one of the chief causes of the drain upon water which originated substantially in Canada. At the present time and for some years now that has not been the case. The draw-off at Chicago is of the nature of 3,200 second feet only. It has been much higher in the past. This is a very small amount of water in relation to the problem that exists.

The right hon. gentleman implied that greater demands are going to be made. I would remind him that this tendency would seem to apply in Canada as well as in the United States, because at the present time I believe the province of Ontario is constructing a 72 inch pipe line for the sale of water wholesale to the city of London, and if this should be a continuing program in respect of drawing water from the lakes for the supply of our cities—

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Laing: I am not saying it should not be done. I say it is a good thing. I am not criticizing it at all, but it is going to create a very heavy drain upon our water. I would remind the house that much of the water that goes inland in such cases as that of the city of London will not return to the lakes but will be evaporated or lost through use inland. The huge requirements of our cities for water for multipurpose use are going to confront us with a problem probably just as great as that created by the demand that may eventuate from American cities.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask one more question. Has there been any request on the part of the corporation of Chicago for any increase in the amount of water diverted in that area?

Mr. Laing: I would not want to say definitely there has been no recent request for an increase. It is the opinion of our officials that the requirements or demands for water from Chicago are not pertinent to the problem at this time.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to ask the minister a question. After all the conferences that have been held over the past several months in Toronto and Montreal and in Michigan with regard to this problem, has the government set no wheels in motion yet to alleviate the situation either as to the water levels or by way of assistance to the people affected? There was one program of dredging mentioned which was of very small benefit.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member I would say that in recent months in one of my weaker or probably one of my stronger moments I suggested that we might resort to prayer. I am quite certain the hon. member has read the minutes of all the various meetings that have been held, and will recall that in one instance in Michigan one man suggested at the end of the day that the delegates had come there in total error, that they should have had five priests, five rabbis and five ministers of the Episcopalian church praying. So apparently I have support in other parts of the continent.

I think my hon. friend will probably agree with me that this again points up those areas of the problem that are going to be very hard for us to determine because we have had an abnormally low rainfall in the area for five successive years. As the hon. member knows, precipitation is down by 5½ inches on average. The area of drainage into the lakes is exceedingly small in relation to the body of the lakes themselves. It is a very great and complex problem.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the minister a question? Since he has brought up the question of the prayer session, may I ask if he was asked to go and preside on that occasion?

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, since the minister has referred to the London pipe line may I say that the pipe line is of particular interest in our area. It passes through the constituency of Middlesex West. I am somewhat disturbed to hear the minister suggest that the draw-off from lake Huron through this pipe line to supply to city of London and possibly some other municipalities would make any appreciable difference in the level of that lake. It has been suggested that a run-off of half an inch on the upper reaches of the Thames watershed, which is not a large one, would supply the city of London for a year. I should like the minister to tell us if possible what the percentage of the draw-off from lake Huron would be to supply the city of London. In other words, can he give us some figures that would allow us to compare the draw-off for the city of London with the diversion at the city of Chicago?

Mr. Laing: My Scottish grandmother used to say that many a mickle makes a muckle, and I think that is what applies in this case. I am not criticizing London at all. I think the action of the Ontario government in accepting responsibility for supplying water wholesale is a good policy, but one that will probably expand enormously. My hon. friend may say that the amount of water is very small but I point out again that the water in these draw-offs will have no chance to return to the lakes and that a great deal of additional water could be required in the future.

I would not care to make a suggestion. It would depend, of course, on the pressure in the 72 inch pipe. However, if very great pressure is used, I would advise my hon. friend that conceivably a tremendous amount of water could be drawn off inasmuch as I fully realize that the needs of London will be very great indeed. If this policy should be extended, and I expect it will expand in other areas because it would appear to me to be a reasonable policy to supply water wholesale to these cities, then this will get us into a study of the primary nature of water in so far as its multiuse purposes are concerned. I want to assure the house that I have had some indication of the briefs that have been prepared for this hearing before the committee, and I think they promise to make this committee one of the most informative and most intelligent presentations yet made to the Canadian public.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to the motion introduced by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I do not know if his statement was brief in order to get the matter before the committee or if he felt that enough had been said in the house so that members are sufficiently aware of the critical situation that exists.

We on this side are well aware of the need that exists for policy and action in regard to the many problems with which the provinces and municipalities are faced. However, you cannot take action without some policy. We believe it has gone far enough. We believe at this particular stage of the game there could be some policy statement made to indicate that action will be forthcoming in the very near future. Indeed, some of the people living in the area of this great water system expected that action would have been taken before this time. The great loss that has been suffered by resort owners, and the great loss that has been sustained as a result of the lack of action and the lack of policy, are things which the people concerned can no longer tolerate.

We are aware of the conflict that exists. I do not say this to the minister today in an endeavour to suggest that this problem is new, because it certainly is not new. It is an old problem. It is a problem that has existed for a considerable period of time. We know of the extensive areas of authorities concerned within this government itself. For instance, there are a number of departments involved such as external affairs, transport, mines and technical surveys, agriculture, forestry, fisheries, and even health and welfare; and of course public works is involved to a substantial degree. Action by one of these departments is not sufficient to protect the interests of those served by other departments.

I was interested to note that the minister himself stated lake Huron had reached the lowest level experienced in 100 years. Surely this would indicate that some type of practical action is necessary at an early date. I could refer back to the address that was made by the hon. member for Simcoe East, who brought this problem forcefully to the attention of the government on September 18. We did this previously as well. I think of the representations that were made to the government by the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue away back on May 11 by way of a motion. He felt the matter was of such immediate importance that he placed a motion on the order paper, and it was discussed at that time.

If action is to be taken, such as the development of policy, and if it is such as to bring pressure to bear upon the government, if this is the minister's own view, then we will support him wholeheartedly. However, we do not believe government policy or action can be formulated by any such house committee. This must be the responsibility of the government. It was for this reason I stated we expected some action to be taken before this time.

I could refer also to speeches made by other hon. members, and I shall do so as briefly as I can, Mr. Speaker. I could refer to the contradiction which we believe has existed this year, and perhaps even before, within the government itself. I am thinking of a newspaper article that comes to us in the Vancouver Times. This article is by Mr. Dillon O'Leary, the Times Ottawa correspondent, and the headline is "Laing Contradicts Davis; Keep Water for Ourselves". The sentiment expressed here by the minister, that of keeping water for our own development, is certainly one with which I can agree. We believe water is one of the most important resources Canada has today. The minister has made this statement. However, confusion exists when the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister makes one statement in B.C. and the minister contradicts him. This statement may relate to British Columbia and I realize I am getting away from the great lakes, Mr. Speaker, but it indicates the confusion that exists.

Then I should like to refer to this well known and well documented article in the Montreal Gazette of September 12 written by the parliamentary correspondent, Mr. Arthur Blakely. This is a full page article which I think is most comprehensive. It outlines the problems which exist. It points out very forcefully some of the difficulties, such as, for instance, the way we lose this resource today. It may be that the minister will agree with me because I am one of those who believe that employing the virtuous course of prayer may be very desirable in connection with a question of this sort. Other questions have arisen here this morning in connection with which the same virtuous course might be employed with better results.

In this particular case Mr. Blakely has gone to great lengths to explain what the problem is and to outline the confusion. We on this side have known for a long time the confusion that exists. Mr. Blakely, for instance, deals very forcefully with the way we waste water. The heading on this article, of course, is "Canada's Water Going Down the Drain"; this is in a derogatory sense and not in the ordinary sense. He points out there have been floods causing immense property damage which could have been better controlled and, in many cases, avoided altogether. He deals with the question of shipping and the depletion of previously low levels; the supply of fresh drinking water without which great cities cannot exist; the virtual destruction of once great commercial fisheries. He goes into all the areas of concern such as recreation, soil, soil erosion, and so on. I think the last point he makes is a very good one. He refers to the dangerous tendency to allow Canadian water resources to be diverted outside our borders on a first come first served basis before Canada's own future requirements have been studied, let alone assured.

This is the thing with which I feel we must concern ourselves. We hope, of course, that Canada's population will be much greater in the future than it is today. If we are not sufficiently cognizant of this particular problem to do something about it, then I think we are going to lose for all time part of the resources that we have.

I come back to the proposal made by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue. He referred to the great problem that exists with regard to these resources and mentioned the plan of Mr. Thomas Kierans, a Sudbury engineer, for the diversion of water to supply our various needs. I believe, however, that the answers to the many problems that exist lie within our own competence.

Mr. Blakely goes on to refer to a conflict over the great lakes, and in his article he says:

> It is scarcely surprising. Under the rambling, ramshackle Canadian control system—if it can be described as a system—solutions whether of the short term, medium term or long term, almost defy application.
> It is a story everywhere, and at all levels, of divided jurisdiction.

I regret the reason which necessitates the Minister of Transport being absent from the house, but some time ago I asked him if the government had any policy to bring this matter under the jurisdiction of one department or one area of control. I forget the exact words of his answer, but he explained that this could not be done because of diversification of interests. Here is the nub of the thing, Mr. Speaker; there has to be leadership. Not only do we require policy and action but we need active, positive leadership, and in my opinion we do not have this leadership.

In his article Mr. Blakely went on to explain that there is a lack of hydraulic engineering authority from which the minister can draw advice. Nevertheless I believe we have enough qualified men to give us a start, if we could only eliminate the professional jealousy that exists between departments. I will excuse any of these officials if they will just drop this pettiness so far as their departmental positions are concerned, pool their resource knowledge and do something.

I have no qualifications in this field, but I understand the problem starts in the waters of the St. Lawrence downstream from Montreal, and that any solution must begin at that particular point. I believe it is lake St. Peter, though I am not absolutely certain of that. However, the solution or remedy should be undertaken there first; then work can proceed back up through the great lakes system.

As has already been said in the house, we should see what people have done in European countries to conserve their resources; then we could take some similar type of action. However, first and foremost we have to have a separate water authority, and if necessary we must convince our neighbours to the south that they should have a separate authority too, instead of both of us having a proliferation of semi-authorities, semi-areas of control which have no function and meaning in the question before us today.

I know, as does the parliamentary secretary to the minister, that reports exist within departments, very technical, substantive reports, dealing with a solution of this problem, but somehow or other the jealousies that exist between departments cause these reports to be pigeonholed and buried somewhere as official government documents not available to the public. Slowly but surely some of them are being drawn out. Mr. Blakely referred to this in his article, although we had known about it previously, and I am very pleased he saw fit to make it public knowledge. In regard to one report he wrote:

> It recommended the installation of a system of dikes in lake St. Peter which would compress the river flow in that area.

Obviously this is the beginning of the solution, but I understand that a much lesser sum of money could have been spent in solving it than has been spent to date, and the solution here would have been the answer for the port of Montreal.

When one is not a professional one can only deal with the expert information that is placed before one. Therefore I say it is not an impossible situation. Far from it; I am told that if we can control the problem at this point a magnetic study shows that the flow of water can be so diverted as to keep the St. Lawrence open for a much longer period of the year. I know this is not pleasing to eastern Canada, but the hydraulic engineers know what can be done on the basis of their own knowledge and the experience of European countries.

The minister cannot expect the committee to give him the kind of direction he requires. He must find these things out himself, and I am sure he knows them now. Today he showed a willingness to participate in the answering of questions, which was a wonderful thing. It does not happen too often when we are questioning the government benches; therefore I compliment him in that regard. He gave some of the answers our people wanted to hear.

The hon. member for Simcoe East gave a good outline of the things that have been tried, of the things that must be tried and of the policy that must be adopted in order to eliminate the low water levels. The minister says levels have been interfered with from the point of view of man-made devices, and I maintain that the problem can be dealt with in a similar way.

Recently when I was in Scotland I was interested to learn how resources were conserved there. The hydroelectric company of Britain—I forget the exact name—has taken the flow of water from a lake in its northern division and used it to drive turbines that supply electricity. It has installed an automatic system whereby when the peak consumer period passes the turbines are phased out and two of them are reversed to act as pumps, raising water from a large basin dredged out at the base of the power plant. The water is pumped back upstairs and reused next day. In fact during the night time when consumption is at its lowest, six turbines are reversed to pump water back up to the lake, to be used a second or possibly a third time for the generation of electricity. This shows there is already a means of conservation in operation and this may be the answer to our problem at Kingston. If not, there are other means which can be used to halt the catastrophic waste of water.

Today the hon. member for Danforth raised the question of the Credit valley control system, without receiving a satisfactory answer. We pray that the minister will press the government to take action. We shall not plead with him to the point where we will get down on our knees, because I think there is a greater authority than the minister, but we do hope he will see fit to press the government into some action to achieve the solutions we believe are possible.

As has been stated by my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka, there have been conferences before. This is why we have not too much to say about the setting up of a committee. Surely at these earlier conferences there were people present with more experience on these questions than those who will take part in the committee now proposed, with the exception, of course, of the expert witnesses who will be called. It is, naturally, my hope that the committee will have a free hand in the calling of witnesses.

The minister has mentioned the meetings held in Michigan, Toronto and Montreal. One would have thought that as a result of these meetings some clear policy or course of action on the part of the government would have emerged. If the delay so far has been due to any watering down of the remedies put forward by the authorities, let us put an end to it now. Let us do something constructive. We may not have the opportunity again. When the growth of our country reaches a certain stage it will be much too late to begin anything on lines which are possible today.

Mr. Speaker, we are concerned with the conservation of water in areas of this country other than the great lakes and its associated system. My reference to this aspect will be brief because I realize I might be out of order, though of course this subject comes well within the competence of the minister whose motion is now before us. As I have indicated already, it is doubtful whether we really need a committee to consider water levels in the great lakes, because sufficient information must surely be available to the government as a result of the various conferences which have been held.

However, since the government has no particular policy to put forward we intend to support the setting up of a committee in the hope that as a result of pressure on the government some policy of action will evolve. I believe that if its work is to be effective the committee must be able to bring in outside witnesses such as Professor Langford, in addition to witnesses from the United States; because I think the problem in the United States is closely related to our own. There must be an indication from the government that it fully understands the efforts of our two countries in this field must be correlated. The Minister of Transport said this was not possible. Perhaps the minister of northern affairs will say the same thing, but I do not think his parliamentary secretary would agree with him. We feel there must be one policy, one course of action, one authority.

I wish to refer to the experience we have had in British Columbia; the great potential we have in the north and the fact that we may lose the possibility of developing a most valuable natural resource situated in the Yukon Territory. This most valuable resource may well be lost if we do not act quickly. I refer in particular to what is known as the Rampart scheme on the Yukon river. Its potential is many times that of the St. Lawrence seaway in hydro power alone. It involves a great body of resource water available for us to develop as Canadians.

We know there are alternatives which are currently under discussion. One is known as the Tulsaquan project and the other is the Tayia project; I believe those are the correct pronunciations. We believe that this subject, because of its importance to the Canadian economy both now and in the future, should also be placed before the committee for consideration. If one of the alternatives I have mentioned were adopted we would lose the entire potential of the great body of water whose development is proposed. Other schemes would afford us at least a possibility of maintaining something for ourselves. I might mention, perhaps, that the Yukon river flows through Yukon Territory for a distance of 2,200 miles. It is the seventh largest navigable river in the world, and is extremely rich in resources of all kinds.

I therefore move, seconded by my hon. friend from Yukon:

That after the word "system" in the first line of the said resolution be added the following words: "and the proposal for the construction of a dam at Rampart in the state of Alaska on the Yukon river."

I do so in order that these matters may be discussed at one and the same time.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the minister rising to address the house on the question of the amendment?

Mr. Laing: I would participate now, if there were no other speakers. But I understand that by some arrangement a number of speakers have been lined up; they will probably be able to relate the main matter while discussing the amendment which has now been moved.

Mr. Scott: We would prefer to have the amendment dealt with.

Mr. Herridge: I wish to speak on the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I rise to support wholeheartedly the amendment which has just been moved. It is in line with the thoughts I had in mind about enlarging the scope of the terms of reference of this committee. We support this resolution in view of the fact that the development of our water resources is a national problem. In our opinion the terms of reference should be extended to include consideration of the development of other water resources, particularly those of our northwestern rivers such as the Yukon and the other rivers in that region which were mentioned by the previous speaker.

Throughout the years the chairman of the international joint commission, General McNaughton, made an annual report to the external affairs committee of proposals for the development of our water resources. Members of that committee were always delighted to hear this great Canadian scientist and engineer give his masterly report without reference to a manuscript and answer questions with great precision and in detail. Members of the committee on external affairs and many Canadians including a host of qualified engineers recognize the great contribution General McNaughton has made in the defence of Canada's best interests in war and in peace. We miss him very much. Hon. members have not seen or read very much about the international joint commission in the newspapers of Canada since General McNaughton retired from the chairmanship of the Canadian section of that body.

Now I want to refer to the question raised by the previous speaker. In doing so I want to quote a Canadian Press despatch from Whitehorse in the Yukon Territory dated September 17, 1964, a report which causes me to think along the lines suggested by the mover of this motion. It reads as follows:

Delegates to the B.C., Alaska and Yukon conference Tuesday rejected a scheme which would involve water from the three areas being exported as far as New York and Mexico.

The proposed scheme—

—and it is a scheme; that is the proper word for it.

—known as the North American water and power alliance, would divert northwestern rivers into a waterway from B.C. to the great lakes and southern U.S.

Representatives of the three regions agreed to issue a formal objection to the plan.

At Prince George Monday, John Davis, parliamentary assistant to Prime Minister Pearson, said a water exchange such as the one proposed had much to recommend it.

I dealt with that question during the estimates of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, but because of the reference to the export of these Canadian waters to the United States and their diversion to the St. Lawrence seaway, in our opinion as far as development of resources is concerned this problem should not be treated on a piecemeal basis but on a total basis.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has already given evidence that he recognizes the need for a national water policy, and in this connection I would refer hon. members to page 8209 of Hansard for September 18, where I quoted from the speech of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, made on behalf of the minister, and an excellent speech it was. He said:

> It must be clear to all of us that the development of a national water management policy is a priority which must occupy us for the next generation. I want to say to you at the outset that Canada has had such a policy for many years but that, to my mind, it must be revised and sharpened.

I am one of those who were very pleased to see the minister's recognition of the need for this policy.

I come now to the speech of the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, who is the hon. member for Coast-Capilano. I should like to quote one paragraph of his speech which I thought was in distinct contradiction to the principles and policies outlined by the minister. This was a speech delivered at Prince George, B.C., on September 4 entitled "The Great Northern Water Plan", and he said in part:

> Today I want to talk about water. I want to talk about water resource development on a grand scale. I also want you to look ahead 50 or even 100 years. By then, we will be diverting our northern rivers southward. Advancing technology will help us to skim off their flood waters in order to meet the urgent requirements of people who live in the south.

In essence he means people who live in the United States.

Mr. Byrne: That is not what he says; he was referring to southern and eastern Canada.

Mr. Herridge: Well, who lives to the south of the Yukon and British Columbia? Certainly he is referring to the United States, as the rest of his text gives a clear indication. The parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister is referring in this instance, and in other instances in the speech I have just quoted, to the necessity for the diversion of water to the south, to the United States. That is why I was very pleased to hear the previous speaker for the official opposition move the amendment he did, because I am one who believes that this problem has to be tackled wholesale, as it were, if we are going to develop a national water management policy.

The study of this question, Mr. Speaker, is of urgent and immediate importance. Many Canadians do not realize that, particularly in view of the United States proposal for the building of the Rampart dam mentioned by the previous speaker and the effect the building of this dam would have on the possibilities for the development of Canadian waters in the Yukon territory. I am informed that this dam would be situated in Alaska about 350 miles downstream from the Alaska-Yukon border just below the junction of the Tanna and Yukon rivers, and would flood back to Canadian territory. I am informed that this dam would develop about four million kilowatts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the point. Once the United States captured this flow from the Yukon by the building of the Rampart dam, Canadians could whistle as far as proper and full development of the Yukon and other rivers is concerned. I see the hon. member for Yukon is nodding his head in agreement, and I am pleased to know that at least we agree on one or two things.

Why is this, Mr. Speaker? It is because of the insistence of the United States on their doctrine of "first in time, first in right". That means that once a dam is built in United States territory below Canada we cannot divert any waters which would affect the operation of that dam and any other use to which they wished to put the water stored behind it. If we allow this scheme to proceed we will have lost another opportunity to develop Canadian water resources for the production of Canadian power for Canadians with employment in perpetuity for Canadians, the provision of water for the irrigation of Canadian soil on the prairies and other portions of Canada, and to meet the increasing requirements of Canadians for water for various consumptive uses in Canada. It would also affect the possibilities for other developments.

What is known as the Tayia development was first proposed by the president of the Aluminum Company of America and supported by the then deputy minister of the department, Hugh E. Keenleyside. Fortunately for Canada these proposals were very quickly nipped in the bud by the minister of the department of the day, Hon. Robert Winters, and he did a good turn for Canada by doing so.

Mr. Nielsen: I think the hon. member means Mr. Lesage.

Mr. Herridge: No. I have personal knowledge of what occurred in the Rideau club on a certain evening.

Mr. Nielsen: I was thinking of Hansard.

Mr. Herridge: I know exactly what happened at the Rideau club during a famous dinner, at which this licence was taken away from Mr. Wilson, the president of the Aluminum Company of America, by Mr. Robert Winters, who was minister of the department at the time. This story was told to me by officials of the department.

Mr. Wardell, who is a well known person in Canada, had worked out the Taku development, which I am informed would result in six million kilowatts of power development all in Canada, whereas the Tayia development would have provided two or three million kilowatts all in Alaska. Many competent people claim that what is called the Wardell plan would make proper use of waters of Canadian origin.

Let me point out that I am not an expert in these matters; I am just expressing the opinions of a number of competent engineers with whom I have discussed this matter and who have been closely related to this department. There would be storage in Atlin bay, and I am informed that the head available for the three stage development proposed would amount to some 2,300 feet. I understand that Mr. Wardell's plan is beneficial to Canada and is an entirely Canadian development, whereas the Rampart dam recently proposed by the United States, which is being pressed quite strongly by United States authorities, would seriously affect the development of the Yukon in Canada and would provide an opportunity for United States industries to establish a monopoly on metallurgical processes in trade with Japan in such metals as aluminum, magnesium and other materials.

Because of the interrelationship of these problems, the possibility of diversion of waters to the great lakes and the danger of our losing an opportunity to develop the Yukon in the best interests of Canada, I wholeheartedly support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce. These problems are so related I believe there should be an over-all consideration of them and, further, in view of the need for a national water management policy and proposals for the diversion of northern waters south to the United States and into the great lakes basin, I urge support for the amendment moved by the hon. member, and that the terms of the committee be extended to include a study and report of all these related projects as a first practical step toward the development of such a national water management policy.

As the previous speaker said, let us call and examine witnesses. Let us call General McNaughton, with all his vast experience and knowledge in this field, before this committee. Let us call engineers like Mr. Wardell and others. I am sure the hon. member for Yukon knows of some witnesses we could call to the advantage of this committee. Let us call witnesses who have knowledge of the great lakes operations, from industry, from labour, as well as technical personnel of the department. Let us obtain all the facts while we have the opportunity of studying this question, because it is not isolated from the others. It is related to all the other water management proposals and to all the aspects of the development of a national water management policy.

In conclusion I urge the minister to give favourable consideration to this amendment, because we are trying to help and support him in his policy. The only thing of which we complain is that we are losing an opportunity at this time to deal with the problem on an over-all basis and get all the information required to satisfactorily deal with the water levels of the great lakes for years ahead.

I express again our wholehearted support for the amendment, and again urge the minister to consider it favourably, because we believe this is the best way to deal with this problem.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I do not rise at this time to take part in the debate, but I thought I should ask the minister by way of a suggestion whether he is prepared now to indicate to the house whether the government is prepared to accept the amendment. If he does so, and gives a favourable indication, that might shorten the debate somewhat.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I thought the question of the admissibility of the amendment might have arisen in your own mind, because it seems to me that a study of the Rampart proposal is not in any way related to a study of the great lakes. I must admit that acceptance of the amendment will mean an immense extension of the studies of the committee. At the same time I at once admit that I have no objection to this, because we have been saying that water, its uses and conservation is one of the greatest concerns in Canada, and will be during the next 20 years. I have no qualifications in that regard because I believe that implicitly. However, I should like it understood that in any studies which will be undertaken by the committee we allot the primary time to the study of the great lakes problem, because this is why we initiated the resolution in the first place.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Laing: The studies beyond that, in respect of the Rampart proposal—and I am sure this will be obvious to the hon. member for Kootenay West—will bring in their train a great number of other discussions and proposals. I have no objection to this amendment, and I am sure the government will not object, but I must point out that I think our first duty and objective, because of the representations which have been made by people in the great lakes area, is to study that situation and examine witnesses in that regard before proceeding with other problems.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister another question. Would the minister then say that after a study has been completed in respect of the levels of the great lakes he will move another motion for a similar type of study of the Rampart dam and associated policies?

Mr. Nielsen: That is what he said.

Mr. Herridge: Did the minister say he would accept the amendment?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes.

Mr. Herridge: Pardon me, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear that acceptance. I must say I am delighted by it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps before we proceed with the debate on the amendment the Chair should be allowed to say that after looking at the amendment it seems obvious there would have been some difficulty about its admissibility. There is no doubt whatsoever that it enlarges the scope of the original resolution, and I think it will be agreed that under normal circumstances it could not be allowed. If there is any purpose in giving notice of a resolution it is to make sure that throughout the debate we consider the resolution as contained in the notice. The amendment proposed by the hon. member goes beyond the scope and confines of the resolution of which notice has been given.

On the other hand, the minister is prepared to accept the amendment as proposed, subject to certain limitations as to the order of consideration by the committee. In the circumstances I suggest we go ahead and proceed with the debate on the amendment.

[Mr. Laing.]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly on the amendment. I think I understand it clearly, but I feel it is my duty to insist that consideration of the subject matter now before the house concerning the great lakes should be completed and a report made before we enter into a consideration of the second question. I admit there is a certain problem referred to in the remarks of hon. members, but I cannot admit that there is more than one basic problem contained in this resolution. If the committee considers the great lakes situation and makes a report, and then commences to consider the second situation, I will be glad to support the amendment. Otherwise I cannot support it.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I am rising now to endeavour to deal with the very unusual suggestion made by the hon. member for Kootenay West, that we give an undertaking after the great lakes study, now so long before the Canadian public, that we will then make another reference to the committee respecting these much broader studies.

I do not know whether it would be pertinent or proper for me to make any such commitment at the present time, in the light of the assurance I have given to the house that we will accept the amendment. I think hon. members will understand that because we have set out specifically to call witnesses in respect of the great lakes levels, it would be better to conclude that study before commencing another. I certainly give this house my assurance that I am aware of the much broader problems introduced by the amendment and am conscious of the necessity to study them, just as there is necessity to study the great lakes problems, but at the proper time. I am quite certain that we will be agreeable later on to a motion dealing with the much broader problems in respect of water elsewhere in the country.

Mr. Winkler: On that basis, Mr. Speaker; inasmuch as the minister impressed us with his consciousness of the problem, and as the hon. member for Kootenay West was unaware of the intervention he made, we will agree to this suggestion.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the minister's statement fully or correctly, and I withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should bring to the attention of the house that the hon. member has already spoken on the amendment, and unless he is only rising to ask a question and has the unanimous consent of the house to do so, he cannot do so at this time.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I will ask a question. I trust the minister now understands that I made my suggestion because I did not hear him fully or completely. I am delighted to know that he accepts the amendment, and I will withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, we propose to accept the suggestion of the minister, and we will accordingly withdraw the amendment at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question on the main motion? The hon. member for Danforth.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to rise to give support on behalf of the New Democratic party to the resolution before the house which will enable a committee of the house to undertake a thorough study of a most serious and complex problem, namely the water levels of the great lakes.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, in a debate of this kind it is almost impossible to overemphasize or even to state adequately the importance of this great inland waterway to the economies of both Canada and her neighbour to the south. The existence of this waterway gives both the United States and Canada an inland development advantage over practically every other nation in the world. It supports the industries of some of our major cities such as Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor, Sault Ste. Marie and the lakehead as well as the limited United States cities of Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Duluth and a host of others.

Unfortunately the problem of the water levels has in some degree become a cause of friction between the Canadian government, the provinces involved and some of the neighbouring states. This is regrettable, but it does emphasize the importance to the economies of both countries. Mr. Kierans, who has proposed a rather imaginative and expensive solution to the problem, has stated in a release:

> We go from crisis to crisis until we really land ourselves in a jackpot. By 1975 we'll have the biggest crisis of all. If they keep fighting among themselves they'll have a disaster on their hands.

This view of the importance of the problem and the immediate necessity for some action is reinforced by Professor Kenneth Hare of McGill University, who says:

> I think the great lakes water shortage is more profound than even Kierans estimated.

So there seems no doubt that the committee we are setting up is undertaking the study of an extremely important problem facing the Canadian economy as a whole. When you look at the present situation—I think for the benefit of the committee some of this information should be placed on the record, although the committee will receive additional information—the picture is one which creates a feeling of dismay. One of our regrets is that the committee should be given this task in what are really the dying months of the session. It is most unfortunate that an opportunity could not have been found earlier in the year to place this committee in action so that it might have been dealing with this problem while the house was preoccupied all summer with the question of a distinctive Canadian flag.

The reports that are available, Mr. Speaker, show that lake Huron is three feet below normal, the lowest level since 1860, and that lake Michigan is just as bad. Lake Ontario is down two feet and lake Erie a similar amount. The St. Lawrence river is at its lowest level in 30 years between Kingston and Iroquois, and Montreal harbour itself is just thirsting for water. This constitutes a gigantic and monstrous problem facing the entire inland waterway system, and the results of this condition are a staggering economic loss to Canada running into the millions. The low water levels affect the lives and the pocketbooks of every citizen in central Canada as well as those on the prairies, because the movement of grain is also affected. As I have said, the losses run into untold millions.

For example, in the iron ore trade alone the loss is estimated at $13 million. A total of 6,920,000 tons could not be carried because of the low water levels, which represents the seasonal capacity of 15 ships. Resort operators in the lake Huron and Georgian bay areas face economic ruin because of low water levels, high docks and the serious cutback in the tourist trade. In the first four months of 1964 alone Ontario hydro lost one and a quarter billion kilowatts of power, and if this continues for the whole year it will amount to a loss equal to the entire consumption of the city of Toronto for a whole year.

Grain shipments have been affected. The ships cannot take full loads, and every Georgian bay port with grain elevators is losing money. The Midland elevators, for example, are down six million bushels in capacity. The Sault Ste. Marie locks can only be used by small lake freighters, again occasioning considerable economic loss.

To property owners the loss is just as staggering and personal. The St. Clair river is at the lowest level since 1934. Over the winter sewage pipes were exposed and frozen, sand beaches have reverted to rocky shores, boats and boathouses are landlocked by the hundreds. Harbours all along the system are practically useless for long periods of the year.

I put these views forward to emphasize the tremendous economic losses that we have sustained as a result of this problem. I am not being particularly critical of the minister. We all listened to his speech this morning, and I realize that he is seriously concerned with the problem and most anxious that something should be done. The real tragedy, of course, is that nothing has been done over the past five or six years even though the problem has been very evident. I think this is a sad reflection on the apathy and indifference of previous administrations.

As far as the causes are concerned there is a variety of opinion. Low rainfall and not enough snow seem to be the major problem. Greater evaporation has taken place. Some people blame the deepening of the channel at Sarnia for pulling the plug on lake Huron. Other people have advanced theories with regard to the Chicago diversion. In any event, there is not sufficient agreement on the causes and certainly far less agreement on the solutions.

In order to attack the problem and devise some solutions, many agencies have been at work. The United States corps of engineers, similar to our public works department, has done an enormous amount of studies, and I hope the minister will arrange to have all these studies available for the committee to examine and perhaps to hear some of these individuals in person. The Ontario water resources commission have been making an intensive study of the whole problem, and although their report is not expected until the end of the year there probably is a wealth of information that the committee should have at its disposal. There have been conferences between Ontario and the bordering states, and again useful information is available. What I want to suggest is that because of the magnitude of the problem and the necessity of fairly intensive study it is too bad that some way cannot be found to treat this committee—

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member almost to the end of his text? It is one o'clock, but I should like him to continue if he could.

Mr. Scott: I guess I had better call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, at the adjournment for lunch I had been discussing the complexity of the problem and some of the economic repercussions and damages that flow from the low levels of the great lakes. I had been emphasizing the extremely difficult and gargantuan task the committee faces. It seems almost as though the ultimate solution from a long run point of view may well involve sums of money that are far beyond the capacity of any province or any state, and may ultimately evoke some sort of international partnership between Canada, the United States and the various provinces and states bordering the great lakes. The more one examines it, the more it seems that any permanent, long run solution is going to be one involving considerable expense.

By way of conclusion I just wanted to state several propositions which, in our view, the committee should take into consideration. We hope the committee, above all else, will try to come up with some concept of the role of the federal government in this whole problem, and that it will try also to come up with some suggestions as to the nature of the over-all lake control system which will be necessary to control the flow of water throughout the whole of the inland system, rather than go into the idea of importing water into the system at this stage. This may be a secondary consideration. Above all else, we hope the committee will have associated with it on some permanent basis people from the water resources division, people who will be responsible to and who will work for the committee rather than for any particular department of government. I do not really see how a committee of this sort is going to handle this type of problem if it behaves in the normal way that committees of the house usually conduct their affairs. Because of the complexity of the matter, we hope that the committee will have available to it the resources to retain any technical or professional help which may be needed, and any sort of clerical staff it will require.

We would like to see the committee empowered to sit even though the house may be in recess. It is not likely we will have a recess this fall, but the work of the committee should be continued. We hope it would continue. We hope some method could be found for a committee of this type continuing to meet, even though the session itself ends. I know our rules do not provide for such a contingency, but it seems a waste of time to set up this committee approximately two months before the session is likely to conclude, then wait four or five months at the next session for our committees to be constituted and begin their work. It would seem to us the personnel of this committee should be able to sit constantly and keep abreast of the work it is doing. In short, we want to be sure that this committee has every possible facility to enable it to attack this complex task, not only financially but in terms of personnel and staff.

In order that this desire can be clarified, I should like to move a simple amendment with which I am sure the minister will be in agreement. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe):

That the motion be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"and the committee be empowered to engage technical and clerical personnel as it may deem necessary".

I think that if this is done it will greatly facilitate the work of the committee. We realize the important and complex task which is ahead and we wish it well in its endeavours.

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I should like to speak to the amendment for a minute, Mr. Speaker. I would preface what I have to say by saying that there have been some very constructive suggestions made this morning and this afternoon from the other side of the house. These suggestions will certainly be considered by the minister and by the committee during its inquiry into this subject.

This particular addition suggested by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) causes me to wonder if it is in order in the sense that the powers sought to be given to the committee by this amendment are usually sought by the committee itself by way of a report to the house. Surely it would be up to the committee itself, when it assembles, to consider its terms of reference and to apply for the power to engage technical and clerical personnel. In other words, I would suggest to Your Honour that the amendment is out of order in the sense that it anticipates the committee's decision. The committee, if it so decides, would have this power in any event by way of referral of its report to the house and the subsequent acceptance of that report. Perhaps the hon. member would be content to allow the committee to decide this matter itself, and report in due course to the house. I would suggest, therefore, that if the hon. member for Danforth so desired he could withdraw the amendment and the committee would have an opportunity of deciding this matter. If he does not want to withdraw, I would invite Your Honour to consider it out of order as anticipating the study by the committee.

Mr. Barnett: If I may just say a word to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, which has been raised, it does seem to me the hon. member is advancing a very peculiar theory. If I may suggest, what he is arguing, in effect, is that a committee has greater powers than the house. This sounds to me like a rather peculiar line to take in raising a point of order. You probably realize, Mr. Speaker, that I do not claim to be any authority on the rules, but it does seem to me that the argument advanced, on the face of it, is a rather absurd one. The suggestion that the house itself has neither the power nor right to set the terms of reference under which one of its committees will operate is surely one which the parliamentary secretary cannot seriously support.

Mr. Turner: On the point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would suggest to the parliamentary secretary that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) might be allowed to complete his contribution, after which the parliamentary secretary might wish to participate again on the point of order, by way of explanation.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Speaker, I have only one point to make—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) has completed his speech I think I should recognize the parliamentary secretary at this point.

Mr. Turner: With the greatest respect to the hon. member who has just spoken, I say he has misinterpreted my argument. I did not suggest that the committee would in any way be usurping the powers of the house. What I said was that usually the procedure for a committee is for it to decide if it wants such technical and clerical personnel and then, by way of interim report to the house, to ask for that power.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to argue with the parliamentary secretary, but if I understood him correctly—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member has already contributed to the point of order. The Chair will now recognize the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I was rising on the point of order, and the parliamentary secretary has claimed I misinterpreted his intent. I understood him to be attempting to argue that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) was out of order on the grounds that it was a matter which lay within the hands of the committee. I cannot agree that it is not within the competence of the house, if it so wishes, to give the committee power, as part of the initial terms of reference, to acquire the assistance which is set out in the amendment. The parliamentary secretary entirely misses the point of the argument I raised against his contention.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, one must admire the very ingenious argument raised by the parliamentary secretary, but the complete answer to his proposition is that while it is true in the final analysis it is for the committee itself to come to a decision as to whether or not it should engage technical and clerical personnel, yet it can only invoke that authority after it has been given to it by the house.

I think this is a very sensible step to take at this time, rather than have the committee decide later, if it so wishes, that it wants this power, and then have to come back to the house for it. This is not saying to the committee, "You must exercise this authority; you must engage technical and clerical personnel." By adopting this amendment we are clothing the committee with the widest possible powers, saying to its members, "If you see fit to exercise all or any of these powers, here is the authority to do so," thereby obviating the necessity for them to come back here for that authority.

This is something which has been done by at least four committees this year, including the public accounts committee, the joint committee on consumer credit and the fisheries committee, and money is appropriated for the use of these committees under the pertinent appropriations act. This is a sensible and useful amendment to adopt at this time, leaving it to the committee, during the course of their deliberations, to indicate whether they want to exercise this power or not. If they do not, then they do not have to come back to the house, and I submit with deference that the amendment is completely in order.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member addressing himself to the point of order?

Mr. Otto: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For the guidance of hon. members I think I should say the Chair feels sufficient argument has been advanced on this point to reach a decision now, but perhaps the hon. member thinks he has a contribution which might change the mind of the Chair.

Mr. Otto: I do not know if I am going to change Your Honour's mind, but I think we should face the language of truth. Surely no committee has ever been denied whatever staff it needed. It seems to me the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) was chastised a little while ago by one of the local newspapers for having missed some Friday sessions and, by accident or otherwise, being here today, all he requires is a vote to be taken to register that fact.

Mr. Scott: I don't have to take that kind of nonsense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Scott: He is the biggest absentee in parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I suggest that the contribution of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) was rather irrelevant and certainly did not contribute to changing the mind of the Chair.

It seems quite obvious to me that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Danforth does not extend in any way the scope of the main motion now before the house. It does not direct the committee to do anything in particular. It does not extend the scope of it and does not anticipate, as has been suggested by the parliamentary secretary, whether the powers which it seeks to give to the committee will actually be exercised or not. I think the amendment as proposed is quite acceptable and is in order.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, we will accept the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question on the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Scott: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker, I want to protest the statement of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) that I happened to be here by accident. It is the type of cheap, smeary thing he is used to saying, and he is well known for having that type of mentality.

Mr. Knowles: You Torontonians are such warm friends.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): My remarks will be very brief, Mr. Speaker, but at the outset I would like to raise what might be called a point of order on what took place here this afternoon, on the basis of questions and answers while Your Honour was in the chair. We could well do without this when we are sending something to a committee. It delays the house and cuts down on the amount of time available to it.

I believe it is important that we devise a national policy in connection with the problem of water and other types of conservation. Water shortage will be one of our major problems in the next decade. The motion before us deals with the watersheds running into the great lakes. The importance of this matter is apparent to the people in eastern Canada, but it should be part and parcel of a national policy.

It should be included within the framework of the policy which the government intends to pursue. I believe that according to the report which was made on the Fraser river it is proposed to build a dam on the north fork of that river, or on the McGregor river, for flood control purposes. This is another part of the same problem. We should I think be looking forward to a time when we may wish to use water for the transportation of materials in pipe lines. Plans for transportation by this means are now being made in Edmonton in connection with shipments of iron ore from the Peace river area. All these matters must be related to the motion now before us.

May I conclude by saying I do not think these water resource studies can be separated from the question of forest cover in Canada. It is important that the whole question of forest protection and sustained forest yield, the maintenance of moisture in our soil and the prevention of evaporation, should be tied in with this question of water conservation and use. The committee to which it is proposed this problem shall be sent is one which is in my view well constituted and qualified to study this important matter in relation to the others which will come before it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, upon taking the floor to participate in this debate, I wish to point out that I shall be very brief.

I want particularly to assure the house that our party favours the motion now under study, namely that the subject matter of the water levels of the great lakes be referred to the committee.

I noticed this morning, and again just a while ago, that the members are deeply interested in this matter. The amendments which have been introduced bear proof of this.

All of us recognize that the problem of regulating the flow of this natural resource to ensure better use and service is one of great importance. I am pleased to see that the house is paying attention to this problem, and we will make it our duty to give any assistance we can when this study is undertaken.

During the summer three meetings were held—two in Canada and one in the United States—precisely to study this problem. Therefore, it is evident that not only Canada but also the United States are interested in this problem. It is almost a matter relating to boundaries. It is important that Canada study it thoroughly in order to ascertain what we can do in this respect, and I feel the meetings which were held during the summer will be beneficial to the committee entrusted with this study.

Before I take my seat, I would like to point out that suggestions were advanced to solve this problem of the water level, and I will remind you that an engineer from Sudbury, Mr. Thomas Kierans, made a suggestion which deserves the consideration of the committee; it is still being studied in certain quarters, and I hope the committee will consider it carefully.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I should like to take this opportunity to thank hon. members opposite for the important contributions they have made. I think their suggestions are extremely valuable. I should like in particular to acknowledge the contribution made by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) and for his friendly attitude in withdrawing the amendment he put forward in order to clarify the matter and enable the work of the committee to be concentrated upon the first consideration before it, namely the level of the great lakes.

The hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) pointed out that the committee could not establish policy, and of course that is so. This is primarily a committee before which purely technical matters will be dealt with, and we hope that out of its deliberations we can derive a reliable and sound policy for the future. I wish to remind the house that our consideration of all these questions of our natural resources, particularly our water resources, dates back to the resources for tomorrow conference of 1961. I have paid tribute to that conference in the past and I express once again the hope that the magnificent assemblage of data which resulted from that conference could be made required reading for all Canadians. We face this difficulty, that these resources, including the waters which flow or tumble within the separate provinces, are a provincial resource and our provinces are naturally jealous of their rights. But to the extent that presenting the picture in total to the public will lead the public to recognize that it is within the power of a province to do something which will cause inestimable damage to a neighbouring province, we hope we shall be in the position soon when people everywhere will realize that, particularly with regard to waters which flow across provincial boundaries, there is such a thing as a national resource in Canada in which all Canadians can share.

I do want to claim that we have done, to date, as much as we can do. We have been in touch with the provinces concerned with regard to the possibility of diverting water supplies, or of possible diversions to areas where they are required. We are expanding enormously the amount of money to be spent on making the necessary studies of a national water policy. I want to remind hon. members that time has been on our side in respect to water development in this country. I believe that even those who in 1955 supported the agreement made in the province of British Columbia at that time between the provincial government and the Kaiser people would admit, today, that they were in error. It was suggested then that the provincial government should permit the building of dams on the Columbia river in return for an income of $1 million a year. By waiting, as the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) has pointed out, and by realizing the tremendous importance of water in every sphere of activity, we have been able to conclude an agreement with our neighbour the United States under which by 1972 more than $500 million will be returned, in effect, for the use of that particular river.

I hope that out of the inquiry to be made by this committee, using the best technical people it is possible to obtain, there will come a conviction on the part of all Canadians of just how important these water resources are.

Motion (Mr. Laing) as amended agreed to.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

Dominion coal board—

65. Administration and investigations of the dominion coal board, $179,400.

Mr. Martineau: Perhaps the minister is going to make a statement.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the committee will recognize that earlier the major portion of the items related to the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys had been passed by this committee. There was left over items related to the dominion coal board. The previous minister has spoken and has asked for some comments. I think the former minister from Pontiac-Témiscamingue will remember that in the announcement I made last year I said that instead of having an item for the dominion coal board, which was an annual item included each year, we would this year provide for this form of subvention on a five year basis. This has not yet come before the members of this committee but will come in the form of an item in the supplementary estimates and will appear within a week or two. This surely gives some assurance to the coal industry of our desire to co-operate with them on this long term policy. When I say "long term policy" I would also assure the committee that both at the top political level and at the top civil service level we are studying the coal problem in the hope that eventually we can get out of the necessity of paying these subventions in this amount.

The hon. member for Kootenay West asked me a question some three or four weeks ago at a time when my estimates were coming up within the next day or so. May I say to him in reply that so far as any long term coal policy is concerned the question is getting the most active consideration, not only on the basis of a committee composed of members of the cabinet but also consideration by members of various departments who deal with coal and energy and who might be interested in it. I cannot tell him today but I hope to be able to tell him in the near future that progress has been made.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to hear what the minister has had to say regarding the provision of subsidies on a longer term, a five year period. He mentioned that a supplementary item would be placed before the committee to provide for this but I really do not see how a supplementary item would fit this purpose. The item, I expect, would be renewable—unless the minister has some other explanations to make—every fiscal year, so I do not see how we would really be making any progress at all.

I feel that what is required is legislation, and then with statutory authority the minister could as a matter of course have his estimate approved each year. In that event there would be no change because the statute would already have been passed and would embrace the specific period, and this would oblige this or any subsequent government to bring forward the necessary estimate. Therefore I think the minister should carefully consider the need for positive legislation in this field, legislation which has been asked for by the coal industry itself as well as by the purchasers of coal abroad, particularly the Japanese. Owing to a scarcity of coal at home they must arrange their purchasing program on a long term basis, and unless the government takes action soon in this regard I think we may lose a very important and developing market.

Mr. Harkness: As the minister is aware I am particularly interested in subsidies paid to assist the movement of coal to Japan from western Canada. I am wondering whether the minister could inform us how much of the total amount of $14 million odd in the minister's estimates is used for that particular purpose and how many tons of coal it will enable to be exported to Japan during the present fiscal year. He might also indicate at the same time whether this is an increase or a decrease in the amount of coal assisted in that way to be moved to Japan.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, although I may lack some detail in answering the hon. member for Calgary North, I do know he is well aware that we made an arrangement within the calendar year for an increase in this subsidy involving, I think, 200,000 additional tons of coal which was entirely exported to the Japanese market. As I recollect it, this involved an additional $2 per ton. I would remind the hon. member that while we agreed to this step, it is not entirely satisfactory or helpful to trade. I am told that the Japanese purchasers look upon this action with a little reluctance, having regard to the opportunity of buying coal from Australia without subsidy, and it is this element of uncertainty in the export market which is bothering everyone in the industry. However, we have to stabilize the industry in western Alberta and eastern British Columbia and we did agree for the last year to increase this subsidy.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, as the minister is aware the operators of these mines in western Alberta and eastern B.C. have done an extremely good job in improving their methods of mining and thus bringing down the cost of producing coal. As a result the amount of subsidy required to make it possible for them to move this coal to the Pacific coast so that it could be exported has been considerably reduced from what it was. I do not quite understand what the minister means when he says the subsidy has been increased $2 a ton. Actually the movement over the past several years has been in the opposite direction: The amount of subsidy per ton has been reduced because the operators, through efficient methods, have been able to reduce the cost of production and thus do not require as much help from the government to enter the market.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think I was inaccurate. I should have said that the total subsidy was increased on the total tonnage involved within the last year.

Mr. Harkness: Well, this is the point I want to get at, and that is why I asked the minister for the figures for the tonnage which will be moved in this current fiscal year. I think the figure he gave was 200,000 tons, is that correct?

Mr. Benidickson: It is my impression that following a meeting in Japan we agreed with our coal producers here in Canada to an increase in exports of about 200,000 tons.

Mr. Harkness: Perhaps the minister and his officials could supply us with those figures so that we might have that useful information. I refer to the figures in respect of the estimated exports of coal for the current fiscal year, as compared to the three previous years. I should also like to have the exact figures relating to subsidies per ton, so that we might have some indication of the cost to the taxpayer of enabling our coal mines in those areas to compete for Japanese markets. I think we should have those figures on a tonnage basis.

The operators themselves look forward to that day when they will be able to export their coal to Japan and to the United States without the necessity of a subsidy. They look upon the subsidy paid at the present time as a temporary thing to help them through a difficult period. I think this policy is helpful as far as the coal industry in that area is concerned, and as far as the attitude of the operators is concerned, but the operators do not look forward to assistance indefinitely from the taxpayer, but on the contrary to a time when they can operate this business without subsidy. The figures in respect of the subsidy being reduced are of value and importance to the members of this committee.

In order to maintain the Japanese market these coal operators must be in a position to give some guarantee for future deliveries for a period of years. The Japanese buyers naturally look at their coal needs on a long term basis and are interested in knowing whether they are going to be able to buy this coal at a favourable price for a period of three, four or five years. For that reason there has been a desire to have these subsidies placed on a permanent basis, or at least for a period of five years. In this way the Japanese customer would be assured that the subsidy would not be cut off at the end of any particular fiscal year.

My understanding is that the minister intends to make a definite announcement very soon in regard to subsidies. As was pointed out by one of my colleagues, if the subsidies were put on a legislative basis it would be much better. Certainly I think there is a necessity for coal operators and their Japanese customers to be assured that the supply is going to continue and, with government assistance, that the Canadian producers will be in a position to fulfil the contracts for several years. Unless there is that stability I think the Canadian producers will be in severe danger of losing this market to Australia and other sources.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to sneer at the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary North, but I should like to remind him that he sat in this house at a time when these subsidies were based on a one year proposition.

This afternoon I informed the house that we have given more assurance and security to the industry than has ever before been given, as a result of the announcement that we would base this program on a five year period. This program, as hon. members are aware, has been carried out until this time on a year by year basis. We have ready at this time, for presentation next week, supplementary estimates to take care of this new five year program, confirming what I said in this regard last June or July.

I am not particularly happy about the subventions. Many people are unhappy about subventions paid in respect of coal or anything else, particularly during prosperous times. We are working very strenuously in an attempt to find a way of avoiding this kind of subvention, specifically in respect of western Canada coal. I can assure my hon. friend from Calgary North that within the last year we have increased the opportunity for shipments of coal to Japan. I think we have gone a long way in helping that industry to compete with the Australian supplier of coal. I assure this committee that we desire to sell western Canadian coal.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister can now obtain from the chairman of the coal board the figures I asked for a few moments ago.

Mr. Benidickson: As a result of a meeting which took place last fall in Japan between our people and people otherwise interested in the coal industry, we were able to enter into a three year contract covering an amount of coal greater than ever before. I think this contract involves the sale of 200,000 additional tons of coking coal per year.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the minister's explanation in regard to how these supplementary estimates he intends to introduce next week will guarantee a subsidy on a five year basis.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, as the former minister must know, these supplementary estimates have been presented to me in a form which I think is satisfactory to this house, but the presentation of them to this house depends on the House of Commons timetable.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I understand from what the minister has said that there is a government guarantee which will enable 200,000 tons of coal to be moved this year and in each of the two subsequent years. What is the amount of the subsidy being provided to make that possible?

Mr. Benidickson: Of course this is an additional amount because this is a new program based upon an agreement with Japan. The proposal came to me and to the government and involved an ultimate cost of roughly $600,000. We have agreed to this proposal. I am informed that the unit price is perhaps closer to $3 per ton, or roughly $2.73. That price will apply to coal exported from western Canada to Japan.

Mr. Harkness: Can the minister now tell us what was the subsidy per ton in this regard during the years 1961, 1962 and 1963? The figure he has just given is for 1964.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I assume the hon. member is inquiring about the relationship of subsidies from the coal producing mines in Alberta and British Columbia to the ocean port. Is that it?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think all members of the committee will recognize that this is quite a technical proposition. My hon. friend asked us to go back to 1961-62. At that time we moved 701,000 tons and our subsidy was $4.50 per ton. In 1962-63 our subsidy was $3.63. In 1963-64 we think we have got it down to $3.19 and our estimate for the coming year, 1964-65, even with increased tonnage, would be $2.73 per ton. That is quite a bit less than our maritime movement.

Mr. Martineau: In regard to how many tons? The minister did not give that figure.

Mr. Benidickson: The estimate for 1964-65 would be on the basis of 950,000 tons.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, these are figures which I think the committee should be well aware of. The cost per ton of moving this coal has steadily gone down from $4.50 per ton in 1961 to $3.19 last year and an estimated $2.73 per ton for the current fiscal year. I think this is an excellent record so far as coal subsidies are concerned. In fact, it is the only case I know of where there has been a steady reduction instead of a steady increase. One thing I did not understand was the figure of 200,000 tons to which the minister referred. My memory was that we were exporting a great deal more than 200,000 tons. The minister has just said that in 1961 the tonnage exported was 701,000 tons and the estimated tonnage this year is 950,000 tons, an increase of about 250,000 tons. I take it that the 200,000 tons to which the minister referred in the beginning was the increase over the tonnage exported last year. Is that correct?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Based on the agreement made with Japan an increase of 200,000 tons of coal for that market was considered and eventually decided upon. I was not there but I received a report and I recall there was some possibility that one of the other Alberta mines might have automatically been able to take advantage of the export opportunity, but I do not think they have done so. So it was a 200,000 ton increase based on the normal formula of subsidies that we have always had for coking coal.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have only one question to ask, and I would have given way to the hon. member for Cape Breton South because I know he is interested in this matter. I might say I was very interested to hear the minister's remarks with respect to the study of the coal policy being made by the cabinet, the officials and other persons with a view to placing the whole matter on a somewhat firmer foundation than arranging for a five year subvention period. I presume this was done in order to give time for a complete study to be undertaken and a policy evolved. We all recognize this is a long term project because we have very large coal resources, and many other countries are without these resources. Would the minister explain to the house briefly how this policy is being devised from the point of view of consultation with the provinces concerned, the countries which are seeking to purchase our coal, the industry in Canada, the labour organizations involved and the research institutions which are associated with the problem and play a very important role?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think it is a year ago that some encouragement was given to the coal industry, both labour and management, because of the five year assurance I announced. In the meantime I have been worried about this policy. It is taking $18 million a year and I have been concerned about it. I want something solid that will be good for the future. In the meantime we have to have some stability.

I have talked to the labour unions about the new events that have taken place in the coal mines involving automation and so on. Indeed, I have gone down into the coal mines and have seen the new machines that displace labour. I have talked to some of the people who own the mines, inasmuch as I want to know what their ideas are about the future. With the resources and brainpower that we have here in Ottawa I think that in the next four years we are going to develop a pretty good policy.

My hon. friend asked what collaboration there is with the provinces. Every year we have a mines ministers' conference. All 10 provincial mines ministers meet and this proposition would be a natural one for their agenda. We discussed it last year and again this year and I think we are making some progress.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, the minister referred to the policy announced last June—I think he mentioned the date—of paying the subventions on coal over a five year period. I can tell the minister that this announcement was very well received by both union and company representatives in the Nova Scotia coal industry.

Although I did not see any great advantage in it, I would be inclined to support the remarks made by the former minister of mines, the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue, a few moments ago when he said the matter should be the subject of legislation. However, the fact the minister has announced that, as a long range policy, the subventions are going to be applied on the basis of five years rather than year to year, I hope does not mean the subventions will remain at a fixed amount. I should like the minister to advise the committee that the policy will be a flexible one and, if necessary, the amount could be increased.

We all hope that in some way or other increased subventions will not be necessary. Although, as I say, originally I did not see any great advantage in this subvention policy, nevertheless I now accept it as being possibly a very good thing in view of the fact the minister has stated he is not happy with subventions. He has stated also he would like to be rid of the necessity of paying subventions. Tying this remark in with a remark by a member of the coal board which, although I presume it was directed to western subventions, contained implications directed at the east coast, I was happy to hear the minister inform the committee that there was no such implication in so far as the east coast was concerned. The minister himself has advocated the need for getting away from these subventions. I might say here that coal is not alone in this category. We can go right across the board and find industries throughout this country which are subsidized to a far greater and sometimes lesser extent than coal itself.

The minister remarked that he is not happy about the necessity for paying subventions, and tying in the remark by the member of the coal board with the statement by the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, that coal subventions should be done away with, places the industry in Nova Scotia in a rather precarious position. The industry is always on its guard as to what is going to develop in Ottawa. Although there is nothing official in the way of a policy announcement, and although when I questioned the minister he assured me there would not be anything of this nature happen, the fact remains that there are people abroad in this city who feel that the Rand coal commission report should be fully implemented. When I say "fully implemented", I am thinking primarily of the recommendation he made to reduce coal production in Nova Scotia to three million tons per year. I am sure the minister is aware of the drastic effect this would have on coal operations and on the working force within the coal industry of Nova Scotia.

Although as I said, originally I saw no great benefit in the announcement that subventions were going to be paid on a five year basis, at least we can look to that statement as a possible protection against the wedge that people appear to be attempting to drive into the coal industry in Nova Scotia. It is not my intention to refer to the west in connection with this subject. I have not watched western developments with as much care as I possibly should have. However, I am taken by surprise by the minister's reference to the Japanese coal market. Possibly the minister could straighten me out on this, and I am just asking for my own information, but I understood that the subventions in the east were paid on transportation, and were paid directly to the transportation company. They are not paid to the mine owners or operators.

What would similar subventions on the west coast have to do with the Japanese purchasers of Canadian coal? Why should they concern themselves about that? After all, if this subvention is paid in the west as the subvention is paid in the east, why would the Japanese concern themselves about this policy?

Mr. Benidickson: My understanding is, Mr. Chairman, that anybody requiring a product as important to his industry as coal, is a little nervous about a product that is based on a subsidy in the land of export. This applies to the utilizer in Japan. There is no such thing in Australia, so far as I know and therefore, for a long term connection, the Japanese are just a little hesitant about buying from a market that is based on a domestic subsidy.

Mr. MacInnis: Would not the purchasers have a firm contract in which the price was stipulated, and what bearing would the subvention in the exporting country have on a contract drawn up in which a firm price was stated? I cannot see the reason behind the Japanese purchasers concerning themselves over the fact that a country would subsidize any one type of product. They would have a firm commitment on price and the subsidy, as I understand it, is paid in order to allow the Canadian product to compete in that market.

Mr. Benidickson: My point was that, for the first time, not only the Canadian seller but the foreign buyer had a little longer term as assurance than they had before, as a result of the policy I announced last summer. There will now be a five year term instead of the precarious predicament of wondering, year by year, if parliament would pass an item in the estimates.

Mr. MacInnis: Will the minister now give the committee assurance that there will be no policy adopted by his government to implement the recommendation in the Rand commission report concerning the three million production per year?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the recommendations of the Rand commission of 1960, some recommendations made earlier and even currently, must be considered. I could not give my hon. friend the assurance that we would not consider everything and anything that relates to a problem in our economy that is so great.

Item agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Laprise): This completes the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian affairs—

15. Administration, operation and maintenance including expenditures on works on other than federal property, grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, recoverable expenditures under agreements entered into with the approval of the governor in council with the governments of the provinces and territories and with local school boards in respect of social assistance to persons residing on Indian reserves other than Indians and the education in Indian schools of children other than Indian children, and to authorize the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to provide, in respect of Indian commercial activities, for the instruction and supervision of Indians, the furnishing of materials, the purchase of finished goods and, notwithstanding any other act, the sale of such finished goods, $47,742,400.

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, before the estimates of this branch carry I want to make a few remarks to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, since I am aware he does not intend to make a further statement at this point. The older Indian people in the part of the country in which I live often say that many years ago, before the white man came to Canada in any numbers, the Indian had all the land and the white man had the Bible. These days it is the white man that has all the land and the Indian has the Bible.

I tell this by way of prefacing my remarks on the Indian claims commission and the legislation respecting it, which was supposed to have been introduced and processed by parliament. This one aspect of Indian affairs is deserving of most of the complaints by members on this side of the chamber, because the history of it is a pretty sorry mess in terms of the inability of the department to meet a most pressing need and a most pressing commitment. Because nothing has been done it is my opinion things would be better had it never been mentioned in the house and mentioned to the Indian people.

The basic obstacle separating the Indian and non-Indian people of Canada is a lack of trust on the part of the Indians in the dealings they have had with successive Canadian governments. There are countless examples in our history where the rights of Indian people were abrogated, curtailed, or taken away entirely. There are countless examples of treaties signed with the Indian people by governments that had no intention of living up to either the spirit or the letter of those treaties.

I can give the committee a good example from my own area in northern Canada, and which I am sure could be duplicated by many members. I have here a copy of treaty No. 11, signed on July 17, 1922 by the government of the day with the Indian people of the north. One of the statements by the commissioner in the opening part of it, talking about the difficulties they had getting Indian people to sign peace treaties, reads as follows:

> The Indians seemed afraid, for one thing, that their liberty to hunt, trap and fish would be taken away or curtailed but were assured by me that this would not be the case.

That treaty was signed in 1922; yet in 1917, some five years earlier, the government of Canada had signed an international agreement with the governments of the United States and Mexico, in terms of the Migratory Birds Convention Act, which specifically limited the right of the Indian people to kill certain kinds of migratory birds at certain times of the year. Thus we had a treaty being negotiated and signed by the Indian people, presumably in good faith, yet five years earlier the same government had signed away the Indians' rights in entering into an agreement with the governments of the United States and Mexico.

We do not have to go back to 1922 to find more examples of this. The first day I entered this chamber, on May 31, 1963, a question was asked by the hon. member for Skeena, who has been no slouch when it comes to standing up for the rights of Indians—and in saying that I do not indicate he is a slouch in anything else either—and his question drew the attention of the Prime Minister to a decision handed down by Chief Justice McRuer in the Ontario supreme court, ruling that the Indians' right to hunt, trap and fish must be respected.

The hon. member asked the Prime Minister to see to it that the Ontario supreme court decision be communicated to all federal officers and agencies throughout the country, and to the provincial governments, to make sure in future the rights of these Indian people would not be infringed. In that part of his answer which was not facetious the Prime Minister said, as recorded at page 502 of Hansard for that date, "Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that . . ." Then he went on to make a jest, but those were the key words. In actual fact he did not, and many members have been besieged by other cases involving Indian people who have continued to be persecuted in the courts.

[Mr. Rhéaume.]

Law officers and various crown agencies continue to harass the Indian people when they break game and fish laws which the chief justice of Ontario categorically ruled do not apply to the Indian people. It is little wonder then that the Indian says the white man speaks with a forked tongue, because our pattern of dealing with the Indians over the years has been one of promises and trusts broken, and outright betrayals.

There are ways of building trust with a group of people who may for the time being be socially and technologically under developed. The minister would do well to look at some of the things which occurred during the administration of the previous government. You build trust in people when you give them the right to vote, and for the first time in Canada all Indian people over 21 years of age had the right to vote in the 1962 general election. For the first time there was a way for them to express their likes and dislikes and exercise their democratic responsibilities under the franchise. That was an important step.

The previous administration also appointed a senator from the Indian people, so that again for the first time in Canada's history the Indians had a representative in parliament. If you look at the estimates of the various departments you will notice there was a dramatic increase in the moneys allocated to health, education, welfare and housing matters for Indian people. It is a basic principle that a cold, hungry, sick person is a second class citizen and that you must attack those evils before trying any other kind of rehabilitation.

The history of the Indian claims commission is a shoddy one, for which some of the responsibility must rest upon the minister's shoulders. On his head will rest the blame from the Indians, should we see a repetition of this history. Mention was first made of the establishment of an Indian claims commission in the throne speech of September 1962. This gave notice of legislation which would be brought in. At the same time, behind the scenes, the machinery for consulting the Indian people was set in motion. In the speech from the throne to the first session of the twenty sixth parliament in May, 1962, no mention is made of the Indian claims commission.

An hon. Member: The government had changed, then.

Mr. Rhéaume: The government had changed. But very early in the session a commitment was made to proceed with the establishment. In August, 1963 I attended a convention in Winnipeg with the former minister, now the Minister of Justice. It was a convention of the national Indian council of Canada. The minister told the Indians who were assembled in Winnipeg from all parts of the country that legislation was to be introduced in the house before Christmas and that very soon the Indian people would have a commission to which they could bring all their claims and to which they could report all the injustices which everyone knows exist.

In November, 1963, when it became apparent there would be delay, I raised this matter in the House of Commons as reported in Hansard of November, 1963 on page 5898. I recall that the minister of that day got excited when I suggested there had been a betrayal of the Indian people. He rose on a question of privilege to say that as superintendent general for Indian affairs he would not let these people down. At that time I said to the minister: If there is to be further delay, let the Indian people know about it, not just the members of this house, and tell them the new date by which it is expected the commission will be at work. If the minister were to do this, I said, he could retain the trust the Indian people had in him. And I can assure the minister from my meetings with Indian delegates, that they had trust in him. This was the suggestion I made to the minister in November—not to get excited and start protecting himself but to let the Indian people know of his plans.

The next page in this story of legislative indecision is to be found on page 319 of Hansard for February, 1964. By this time certain problems had arisen behind the scenes on the government side and there had been a change of minister. I am referring to page 319 of Hansard for February 27, 1964 where members will see that the present minister tells the house and, presumably, the Indian people of Canada, that the government does not intend to proceed with the legislation but intends to consult with the Indian bands. Almost a year after the government has taken office they intend to consult with the Indians as the only way of finding out what the Indian people really want. That is what the hon. gentleman said.

Well, in March of 1964, as hon. members will see if they refer to page 826 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on the orders of the day how the consultations were going. He replied, in effect: They are going fine but we are still consulting with the Indian people; as soon as we get their advice we will boom ahead to set up this claims commission for them. And at the end of March, speaking on the minister's estimates, I gave the minister some advice—I did so because the portfolio had changed hands and I knew that the former minister might not have passed on the advice given him by members on this side of the house. I said this as reported in Hansard for March 13, 1964, at page 900:

> The Indian claims commission holds tremendous promise for the Indian people of Canada. They are very keen on it. I have referred before to the efforts the previous minister made in dealing with the Indian people to assure them that the government was going to proceed with this commission, I assure the present minister, as I did the past, that the Indian people are keen on the commission.

These are the pertinent words:

> Do not betray their trust and do not, through inaction, allow their enthusiasm to wane and permit this commission to go the way of so many other projects.

Well, Mr. Chairman, nothing happened. The next episode I wish to put on record again is to be found reported at page 2760 of Hansard for April 30, 1964. I asked the minister on the orders of the day whether he could assure the house and the Indian people of Canada that he would proceed with the matter of the commission and introduce legislation at an early date. This was at the end of April. The minister replied, in effect, that he was still consulting with the Indian people; he still wanted to find out what they thought. But he intended to introduce the legislation during the second part of the session.

An hon. Member: After the recess.

Mr. Rhéaume: Presumably it was to have been after our well earned summer recess.

The next entry to which I will call attention is reported at page 3683 of Hansard for Thursday, May 28. Again I asked the Minister, because I knew the federal provincial conference on Indian affairs was being postponed, whether this would have the effect of delaying a decision on the Indian claims commission until after October. The minister said in reply that it would not. It would not delay it, he said, because there was "no relation whatsoever between those two matters". That was at the end of May, 1964.

Now we come to August of 1964. The same minister. Here he is, this man of action, speaking in the house as reported at page 6861 of Hansard. He says this:

> In keeping with our wish to consult the Indians on all matters of direct concern to them, the Indian claims Bill No. C-130, as introduced in the house on December 14 last, was sent in January to Indian bands, Indian organizations and others throughout the country.

The minister added that he had received some replies from the Indians and intended to give these close study. This was in August, 1964. Now he has consulted with the Indians and all that remains for him to do is to study the replies.

Let us see what happened in September, 1964. I refer, you, Mr. Chairman, to page 8387 of Hansard and to the question directed to the minister by the hon. member for Cariboo. The hon. member for Cariboo wonders how things are going with regard to the Indian claims commission and the minister says, in effect, that he has consulted with the Indians. He has obtained replies from them. Members will recall that the last time this matter was raised the hon. gentleman was going to study them. Well, he says on September 24 that he intends to consider the answers they have given. He has studied them, but he has not had time in which to consider them. However, he intends to do that very soon.

Well, Mr. Chairman, this is a sorry mess the minister has got himself into. I say to him and to the government: If you don't want to help the Indian people, don't help them; but for God's sake do not hold out hope to the Indians and get them all stirred up by telling them that soon the terrible problems which have been theirs are to be solved—that soon, as the previous minister said, in effect, they would walk into the promised world of the white man. If you do not want to do anything, don't do it. But do not give us this nonsense which extends over 9,000 pages of Hansard. We asked the government to do this from the very beginning, but I ask the government not to lie to the Indian people. If it is not ready, then let the government tell us. Let them say to the Indian people: "We are sorry but this is a complicated matter and we are unable to make a decision on it now. We are sorry for you Indian people because we are going to do nothing for you". Every hon. member of this house is affected by this kind of delay, not just those of us with Indian people in our constituencies. Everyone in the house must take collective responsibility if a small group of people are betrayed.

Before the minister's estimates pass we on this side of the house want an answer to two questions. The first question is: "When is the government going to bring in the legislation on the Indian claims commission?

That should not be a difficult question to answer. The second question is: Will the government consider setting up some vehicle, say a committee hearing, where the Indian people can then take a look at this legislation? Because what I am afraid of is that this Indian claims commission, like so many other matters, is good for election after election. I can see the government bringing in the revised edition of the Indian claims commission legislation and the minister saying that, first of all, he must consult with the Indians and then consult with them some more, and then ask for advice, then for more time to study what they have said, and then he will want to consider that, and so on—just as he did the first time. Surely the questions I have put are not unreasonable ones.

I want to tell the minister why this is so important to the Indian people who happen to live in my part of the country. It may come as a surprise to some Canadians to know that there are no Indian reservations either in the Yukon or the Northwest Territories. There is good reason for this. Unfortunately, the reason, as I will unfold it, will be seen to be another chronicle of betrayal. The Indian people in the Yukon territory have had land, and I quote, "set aside" for them by order in council. Here again the history of what has happened to these parcels of land which were to be set aside is not good. Every time a government agency needed some of this land the order in council was merely revised. Surely the best example the committee has of this is when the government needed more land for the airport at Teslin in the Yukon. They simply took it away from property which was supposedly set aside for the Indians.

In the Northwest Territories even this much has not been done. Earlier I referred to the treaties signed with the Indian people in the north and which have never been lived up to. I have them here and they are interesting documents. We think the United States robbed the Indians when they bought Manhattan island, but surely there was no greater robbery than that which occurred in the signing of treaties Nos. 8 and 11. Treaty No. 8 took away nearly all of northern Alberta and part of the Northwest Territories from the Indians and gave it to the crown. That is an area of some 480,000 square miles and it was purchased in 1899 for $26,974 cash. Those who think the white man was not always crooked in his dealings with the Indians should read this treaty; they would be fascinated to learn of some of the other things we gave to the Indians to make sure they had a good deal. For example each chief, after the signing of the treaty, was to receive a silver medal and a suitable flag—which is probably of more value than any of us thought was the case in those days. The following year and every third year thereafter each chief and head man was to receive a suitable suit of clothing. Here are some more of these "goodies":

—Her Majesty agrees to supply each chief of a band...for the use of that band 10 axes, five handsaws, five augers, one grindstone and the necessary files and whetstones.

That plus $26,000 cash, and you buy yourself 480,000 square miles of Alberta and the Northwest Territories.

I want to digress for a moment to mention another interesting matter. The other day the minister of northern affairs and some other hon. members of the house, including myself, were present when the Great Slave lake railway crossed the 60th parallel of latitude. That was an occasion for the great speech making, handshaking and self-congratulation amongst all of us because we had all done a brilliant job of driving the last spike. On going through these old treaties I noticed this remark made by the chief of the Chipewyan Indians at Fort Chipewyan, Alberta in 1899. This was what the commissioners said in the treaty:

We should add that the chief of the Chipewyans of Fort Chipewyan asked that the government should undertake to have a railway built into the country, as the cost of goods which the Indians require would be thereby cheapened and the prosperity of the country enhanced.

So really this suggestion came in 1899 from this old Indian chief. This shows in terms of the Great Slave lake railway that the Indians thought of this in 1899, the Liberals promised it in 1936 and the Conservatives built it in 1961. At any rate my point is that these treaties were signed with the Indian people of Canada's northland and were not lived up to, and for this reason they must have some sort of court or commission to which they can go.

The Indian people were promised basically two things. They were promised that their rights to hunt, trap and fish would not be curtailed; yet we all know that this is happening every day, not only in the north but all over Canada. The other thing they were promised—and this is where this point about there being no reservations comes in—was one square mile of land for every five Indian people who signed the treaty. This was true in the treaty signed in 1899 and it was true in the second treaty signed in 1922 with the rest of the Indian people of the Northwest Territories, but this land in fact was never set aside for the Indian people; and so the two things promised them in return for peacefully allowing the white man into their country were never advanced to them. Because of that there are no reservations. No one in the Northwest Territories, to my knowledge, wants the government to set up Indian reservations at this stage, but everyone wants the government to live up to its obligations, to renegotiate the treaties and to make good the commitments undertaken in 1899 and 1922.

In closing my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the minister that in addition to getting on with this legislation he has been dangling before us for so many months he give consideration to setting up a national advisory Indian council, much in the same way the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has a national religious advisory council. More and more is required a vehicle for consultation between the government and the Indian people. I suggest that in view of the tremendous changes being made almost daily in the programs which the minister has under his department this would be invaluable. Indian peoples could be represented on it and we could consult them in a meaningful way, and thus overcome the basic obstacle of mistrust which I suggest to the minister is coming between himself and the efficient administration of his department.

In resuming my place, Mr. Chairman, I should like to terminate my remarks with a word of gratitude on behalf of the members of this house for the fine work that has been done by some of the old hands of the Indian affairs branch who have retired in the last several years. Most of us knew these men who served many years in that branch during a difficult period of administration in Canada, and who guided the Indian people as far as the position they now occupy.

There is now a new look in the Indian affairs branch, which is long overdue. The staff is new and there is a new spirit, and all of us welcome these changes. We are happy to hear of the creation of an assistant deputy minister's post for the former director of the Indian affairs branch, Mr. Battle. We are happy not only because he personally has been appointed to this post, but because this appointment gives further recognition to the important part the Indian affairs branch plays in the work of this department.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the consideration of the estimates of the Indian affairs, I want to address a few remarks to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Tremblay) about the small reservation of Pointe Bleue located in my constituency. Further to an article published in L'Étoile du Lac, a district newspaper, on September 17 last, entitled "On the war path", I have advised the minister of the small revolt that is coming on within the Pointe Bleue reservation in connection with certain methods of a certain company.

I put several questions to the minister and I told him that I believed that he was completely unaware of certain things that were going on in the Pointe Bleue reservation, in connection with the Hudson's Bay Company.

I will not read the letter as I have only ten minutes at my disposal, but further to my letter, the minister answered that he had sent investigators. And it is on this point that I should like to call the minister's attention. The investigators he has sent are precisely those we did not want. In fact, it is the same as if we were asking for an inquiry into a theft and the thieves were sent in to investigate. That is the situation I want to put before the minister. I have no grudge whatsoever against him. I merely want to throw some light on the matter and help him do justice to the Indians.

Therefore we shall examine in a general manner what is happening today on the Pointe Bleue reservation, and particularly the causes of this unrest. I will even suggest some solutions to this problem. As I said a moment ago, I wish to warn the minister before this report is received.

As I requested in my letter, the minister must study the role which was played and which is still being played by the Hudson's Bay Company in the Pointe Bleue reservation. This English firm is the only one established on the reservation. It is not there for the sake of the Indians; it is there to do business, and probably very profitable business because it has not been facing any competition for three quarters of a century. If the minister would only visit that reservation, he would see and hear all kinds of things.

For instance, it is said that during the years the company controlled the economy, not a single Indian dared stand up against it. Indeed, none of them could afford to.

You hear about winters during which the only rations issued to the Indians by the company were flour, salted pork, beans, coarse salt, third quality molasses and oatmeal. In fact, whenever a person needed a little bit of cereal, powdered milk or something else for his children, he had to trade his rations of oatmeal and salted pork with someone else to get it. It is said that pregnant women had to pass whole winters eating only oatmeal, three times a day. Perhaps it would have been too costly for the company to feed those people somewhat like human beings.

In addition to supplying them third rate goods, it bought Indian products at ridiculous prices and paid the Indians in oatmeal and flour. This is the kind of stories one hears when one takes the trouble to mix with those people.

In the last few years a number of Indians, whose patience was at an end, risked all their savings in an attempt to provide better service to their fellow citizens. From that time a few little shops were opened and sold all the goods found in ordinary groceries. The Hudson's Bay Company was not long in retorting. From that day it sold all the goods it had never dared to put on sale and, moreover, it cut its prices to such an extent that they were even lower than those asked by Indian merchants. The company even went so far as to organize a delivery system.

Today the Indians are capable of having a market of their own and if we encourage the Indian merchants by offering them the same privileges as those which were tacitly or effectively granted the Hudson's Bay Company, I am almost certain that it will be to the advantage of the entire tribe.

At the present time the Indian merchants are unable to deal with any banking or financial institution. Hence the unequal struggle against a company that has all the financial powers on its side.

I am therefore of the opinion that if the minister, in conjunction with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), were to set up a federal finance organization serving only the Indians but having some contact outside the reservation, he would put the struggle on a more equal footing. The lack of such an organization seems to enable the company to keep the population of the reserve under its financial domination.

I am told that these days in order to subsist, the Indian must have a charge account with the Hudson's Bay Company. If he wants to work for an engineer or a prospector, he must report to the company's office and sign a slip authorizing the company's employees to get his pay and administer it as they see fit.

It seems that the company carries things even further, going so far as to collect almost all allowance cheques directly from the post office. In my opinion, this way of doing things is quite unfair to the Indians.

For these reasons and many others I do not have the time to mention at this point, some Indians assisted by a large number of their fellow members anxious to free themselves of foreign influence, have launched a market in order to protect the Indians. In 1961, when the band council renewed for ten years the company's lease, it did so on one condition, which I want to mention: that the company could not develop its trade. This is, Mr. Chairman, what the Indian merchants want, supported unanimously by the band council. Nevertheless after three years the company wants to develop its trade.

The minister was told that there was a lease but without any mention that this lease included the specific condition which I just mentioned. This is the main reason that prompts me to call these facts to the attention of the minister.

When I am told that arrangements have been made for a meeting between representatives of the Hudson's Bay Company and the Indian people, I say that the meeting took place with representatives of the Hudson's Bay Company but not with those of the Indian merchants on the reservation. There seems to have been a secret meeting of some members of the band council, even using the secretary of the reservation agent instead of the official secretary of the band council.

The Indian merchants were ignored and the representatives of the Quebec office and of the agency had a private meeting with the company.

I think that the Indians are living in a tragic period and that the minister must make the necessary clean up. People always took pleasure in hanging fear, like a sword of Damocles, over the head of the Indian authorities, through political, monetary or social threats, for the sole purpose of making Indian authorities renounce their first decisions, in order to show that the Indians cannot administer themselves.

The time has come to end such a ridiculous situation and to guarantee to the Indians their commercial freedom, their freedom of action within the limits of their reservation.

I am sure that a serious investigation carried out by officials other than those of the Quebec office or the reservation agency, will show that the Indians can administer themselves and that if the minister will give them the necessary assistance, they could almost be self-sufficient instead of being citizens that the government pays for doing nothing.

At this time I recall an observation made to me by a good Indian to whom I pointed out that he received a social allowance. He answered: "Well yes, but what is most demoralizing is waiting for the meagre allowance without having the right to work."

What surprised me, Mr. Chairman, was to note that the small pension of $15 which an Indian pensioner receives must be reduced if he works one, two or three days.

If the minister were to get together with the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), he would see, I think, that he has a magnificent opportunity to apply usefully the ARDA program, and thus to foster the agricultural rehabilitation of the whole reserve.

Substantial loans might be granted to the band council to develop the tourist industry at Pointe Bleue.

We spend more than $30 million which produces no result, while every year thousands of tourists must turn back because there are practically no accommodations on the reservation. Yet the most wonderful tourist attraction in Lake St. John is at Pointe Bleue. I am positive that if the government wanted to make an effort and spend a little of that money to improve that area, tremendous results would ensue; besides creating many jobs for the Indians of the reservation, it would enable them to promote their handicraft with the tourists who would certainly be attracted by those improvements. This would also help to make the Indian proud again, for he, too, would like to be able to say that he is an asset in the Canadian economy; in this way, he would be able to live a happier life, because he would have a greater awareness of the importance of his actions and his contribution within the reservation.

Pointe Bleue has all that is needed to make it a tourist attraction. The only condition is to give the required opportunities and encouragement to its people. The government has the duty to take action before the war axe is dug up, because wars were always brought on by injustice piling up.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest, as I am sure other members did, to the remarks of the hon. member who spoke on behalf of the Conservative party, and while listening to him I came to the conclusion that the present minister is perhaps at least as bad as if not worse than Hon. Ellen Fairclough, when she held that particular office.

Mr. Churchill: She is not here. Don't attack people not here.

Mr. Howard: I am not mentioning that because she is not here. It is not my fault she is not here; someone else had a hand in that. In any event, the former prime minister decided she was relatively useless in Indian Affairs and moved her from that post to something else before the election took place. I only make that comment in reply to that just made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in a low voice.

Mr. Churchill: I will make it louder then. It is a scurrilous remark.

An hon. Member: Get up and say that.

Mr. Churchill: I will get up and say it. On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think it is very much out of order for a member of this house to attack a former minister of the crown who is not present here, and I object to that procedure.

Mr. Howard: It is unfortunate that the member who just raised that point of order was not the minister of citizenship and immigration himself, because one could perhaps make a comment about his activities in the cabinet. I have no intention of becoming embroiled in a crossfire with him in particular.

Mr. Nielsen: Why did you start it?

Mr. Howard: It will be recalled that last year when the present Minister of Justice held the portfolio of citizenship and immigration the house was in a mood to expedite the passage of the estimates because they had been held over for some period of time and there was a desire to complete the business before parliament in order to get back on a more regular basis in the consideration of parliamentary matters and government expenditures. Accordingly, many hon. members refrained from making suggestions and criticisms with regard to the operation of the Indian affairs branch, and accepted the bland assurances of the former minister that something worth while was going to be done. So far, however, we have not seen any great example of the desire and the speed with which Indian affairs should be tackled.

I have been asked by a number of bands at home, and there are a number from which to choose, to issue an invitation to the minister to visit any one of them. I have been asked to invite him to bring his wife with him. I understand he is the proud father of four children and he is invited to bring them as well and to come and live for a month or a couple of months if he so desires on any reserve he chooses. The only requirement is that he and his family bring their necessary clothing, their toilet articles and their bedding. Everything else will be supplied including a house. The only other proviso is that he bring no money but that he and his family live on the reserve for the month or two months or as long as he desires on the pittance that the Indian affairs branch dishes out as welfare or relief money. If the minister qualified for the relief money the Indian affairs branch provides he would receive, taking the standard rate, $85 a month, I believe, for himself, his wife and four children.

This invitation is issued in all sincerity so that the minister may realize at first hand just how difficult it is to attempt to feed a wife and family of four on $85 a month, which is the standard rate he would receive from the Indian affairs branch. The bands wanted me to extend the invitation in an anonymous way at the moment, but if the minister would care to accept it I would gladly communicate with the band involved and arrangements can be worked out for the minister to go there. He can even pick the time of the year. It is more difficult to live in the winter months than in the summer. He might want to go there in the summer or spring, but he can go in the winter or at any time he likes provided he tries to live on the relief payment on which his own department asks the Indian people to live.

In a preliminary way I should like to take a few moments to point out what I think has been an almost despicable approach to our native Indian people on the part of Liberal governments, not the present government particularly but preceding Liberal administrations dating back to 1910, in order to show the pattern or attitude that has prevailed in the last 50 years at least with respect to Indian affairs in Canada. I use as a guide to this bit of historical information a brochure published by the Liberal party itself, because I do not want to be unkind and say something that is not truthful. Here is a publication by the Liberal party with a picture of the present Prime Minister on it. He is described as the leader of the Liberal party. Unfortunately there is no date on this, but I obtained it during the 1962 election campaign and presumably this is the time to which this publication applied. The statements made in here were applicable then and are applicable now. This publication deals to an extent with the land question in British Columbia, a subject which would be dealt with extensively by any Indian claims commission that might be established.

I quote from this publication:

At Prince Rupert, in 1910, Sir Wilfrid—

I suppose the reference is to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

—promised that the Indian land question would be taken to the privy council.

He made this promise. Then reference is made in the publication to the fact that the solution in 1963 lies in a totally different course of action. In effect, they are saying that Sir Wilfrid Laurier promised a solution in 1910, but by 1963 the Liberals had not gotten around to living up to that promise or even attempting to do so. Now they were going to take the course of appointing this Indian claims commission as soon as possible. As has been pointed out, "as soon as possible", seems to be a rather indefinite time and may stretch into years.

Another portion of this brochure indicates the manner in which the Liberal party admitted its own delinquency in dealing with this question. From another part of the publication, I read this:

To assure the objectivity which Indians of Canada have the right to expect after years of procrastination—

Then, they go on to explain what the commissioners will do. Here is an admission of their own guilt, of their procrastination. They say it is Liberal policy that Canada's native Indians must achieve full equality, just as if this were a hope that had not been expressed before. They say that the Liberals must erase the blot of second and third class citizenship from these people. I do not want to read extensively from the pamphlet but there are many more quotations I could give. There is this admission of guilt on the part of the Liberal party, that year after year it has engaged in procrastination, delay, broken promises and virtual discrimination toward the native Indian people with complete disregard for their rights, their welfare or their fundamental freedoms. One would hope that in this enlightened day perhaps we could get a government in office that would take a little different attitude toward our Indian people.

My own point of view, without any reflection upon the individuals who are now in the Indian affairs branch or who may have been in positions of authority in that branch, is that it is clearly impossible for the Indian affairs branch to be anything other than an administrative organ to administer the Indian Act. It is a filler out of forms, a filer of papers, a keeper of statistics; but when it comes to some serious thought in depth or a research approach on a sociological basis to Indian affairs, unfortunately the Indian affairs branch, because of its structure, is not able to engage in that sort of activity. It is regrettable but it is a fact. It is because of this, and not because of anybody in the branch, that the greatest obstacle to progress by the native Indian people in Canada is the Indian affairs branch itself.

So long as the Indian affairs branch remains as largely an administrative body, so long as its sole function is to administer a piece of legislation conceived by political figures, it will remain as a barrier in the way of progress by our native Indian people. I should like to see the time come, and there are countless hundreds of native people in Canada who would like to see the time come, when there is no Indian affairs branch. I should like to see the time when there is not any longer an Indian Act on the statute books of Canada. This act, by its very nature, is discriminatory because it applies to a particular group of people. The basis of its application is their racial origin. As I have said on many occasions, Mr. Chairman, if we had a French act in Canada and the provisions of that act applied only to people of French origin there would be a tendency for people, because of this fact, to look at French people and say that there must be something a little bit queer about them. This is what many people do who do not understand the situation, who do not take the time to investigate it. Many people who are not of Indian origin and who do not know anything about Indian affairs, tend to look at the Indian people and say there must be something queer about them because there is a special law designed solely for them. The native people do not like being singled out for this special consideration. They would like to see the time come when there is no longer an Indian Act.

Incidentally, while I am on this subject of the branch, I may say that a number of officials who head up certain divisions within the Indian affairs branch are referred to as chiefs of their divisions. The Indian people rather resent this designation of chief, especially as applied to a non-Indian in the Indian affairs branch. The minister could take an immediate step in the direction of allaying some of the antagonistic feeling of the Indian people by calling the heads of these branches assistant directors or something of that nature rather than chiefs. This is the wrong word by which to designate these people.

The hon. member for Northwest Territories indicated that the first mention in this house of an Indian claims commission was in the speech from the throne in 1962. I think he is a bit in error in that respect. Perhaps he was just too polite to the government to draw their attention to it. On February 9, 1948, unanimously, without any hesitation on the part of any of the members, the joint Senate and House of Commons committee on Indian affairs recommended that a commission in the nature of a claims commission be set up with the least possible delay. This was 16 years ago and a Liberal government was in office at that time, incidentally. This idea dates back beyond 1962, it dates back many years. I merely read that extract from the committee report to buttress the contention of the hon. member for Northwest Territories and others that the sole accomplishment by ministers and the Indian affairs branch under successive governments, was this record of delay, procrastination, broken promises and speaking with forked tongues, as the expression goes.

It is a sad and sorry indictment I have to make, not of this minister but of all people who have held that position in the past, and not of this government but of all governments that have held office in Canada in the past, because the record is identical. It is a black one, regardless of the government that has been in office, apart from the odd, occasional, little foray of a study into Indian affairs, such as the one held in 1948 and in 1959, 1960 and 1961 by committees which made recommendations; and with respect to the one in 1961 we have heard nothing so far.

Maybe what I am doing here is making exactly the same speech I have made on occasions in the past, and if I am guilty of that then I accept the guilt; but I know of no other way to approach this question. We can talk about day to day difficulties. We can raise items of interest peculiar to our own constituencies. We can deal with questions related to individual bands, and raise matters with which individual Indians have difficulties and problems, but this is only nibbling away at the periphery of the difficulties because these are but isolated instances.

The record of successive governments is black and sterile. It is disgraceful. Generally speaking, Indian people by and large have been trusting over the years. If government has told them something they, perhaps with some naïveté, have believed government. If the Indian agent has come and told them something is going to happen they have believed the Indian agent. But their patience and trust are wearing pretty thin. We should no longer permit ourselves the luxury of an annual invasion into the Indian affairs branch in parliament in this way, as we come to question the estimates of that particular branch. This is not good enough.

In the future we cannot permit ourselves to allow a situation to exist which would require the kind of speech the hon. member for Northwest Territories made today, and to have to say the kind of things which my own feelings and conscience force me to say. This is no longer good enough. There is a great and growing resentment among Indian people all across Canada, in all Indian villages and reserves. There is a growing resentment among native people who, for a variety of reasons, left the reserves and went to live in urbanized and semi-urbanized areas—incidentally living on the fringe of them because that is the only place they are accepted.

There is much talk among many people about digging up the tomahawk they buried many years ago, because they have come to believe that the trust and faith they placed in the words of government are not worth placing any longer. The older people still continue to fight as they can. In their council meetings they still continue to caution the younger generation about doing things in the normal way. They still continue to advise the younger generation that they should air their complaints and grievances in meetings of council with the Indian agent, that they should present their demands and grievances by way of resolutions, passed and channelled through the Indian agent, the commissioners and the directors up some place to the top, and eventually hope some communication will filter back to the band so that they will know what happened to their grievances.

But the younger people have had a taste of the non-Indian society. Those in their teens and twenties have had better opportunities for education than their parents, and having found it necessary to move away from the reserve in order to work, are finding and searching out the ways of the non-Indian and are discovering from a little taste of this type of society of the non-Indian that they want more of it, and they are wondering why it is denied them.

They will not be content with the mere passing of resolutions in council meetings. They will not be content with sitting around a council fire discussing things among themselves and with their elders and advisers. They will not be content with listening to being put off by the Indian agent. They will not be content with having their grievances lost in the mass of red tape in the Indian affairs branch.

They are a rising group of people. Their population is expanding tremendously. They are a volatile group of people when they get going. Mr. Minister, you should appreciate this, coming from the province you do and having the racial origin you have. You should appreciate that what the native Indian people are seeking is almost identical with what the French people are seeking. You, with your background and your understanding of your own culture, should appreciate what this means and should be able to move with great speed to cope with the Indian's problem.

I do not envisage—at least I hope to heaven it never comes to this—that we will have an uprising of our native people, such as has been the case in other countries. But mark my words, it could happen, and the spark which will set it off will be a continuation of the practice of the past. This will be the thing which will allow that feeling of resentment to burst into flame and perhaps consume what sociological relations we have with our native people.

Please, Mr. Minister, do not take these words personally as applying to you. Do not take the words that are directed by Indian bands as applying to your government exclusively. To the members of the Indian affairs branch I say, do not take these words as applying individually and personally to you. Do not take the resentment of native people as being aimed in your direction. These feelings of resentment are directed at our society, at successive governments, and they are the outgrowth of many years of delay, of lies, of distortions of all sorts, and of the most degrading activities people can engage in. Fairly shortly we will be facing the time of truth.

There are many other things I wish to go into detail on, when we get further into the estimates. At this stage I can only echo the utterances of the older people of the villages I know personally, and say they are praying as they never prayed before that something worth while will be done.

Mr. Nielsen: I shall not take up too much time of the committee; but I wish to deal with the announcement made by the minister in replying to questions I put to him on September 30 last, as recorded at pages 8586, 8587 and 8588 of Hansard for that day. The minister made an announcement on that occasion with respect to the negotiations which are now being conducted between officials on behalf of the federal government and officials on behalf of the provinces, to transfer jurisdiction of educational and social welfare matters to the provinces, and I use that word "jurisdiction" advisedly, even though a rather hairy distinction is made by the minister and others opposite between it and the word "responsibility."

Referring to the forthcoming federal-provincial conference the minister said, as recorded at page 8586 of Hansard:

> As it so happens, we shall be discussing measures that would enable the provinces to extend a number of provincial services to the Indians, on condition the federal government grant compensation.

Mr. Badanai: Would the hon. member repeat the date?

Mr. Nielsen: The date is September 30, and the page is 8586. The committee will remember the discussions which took place concerning the proposals of the federal government to transfer jurisdiction over the Eskimo people of Quebec to the government of that province. The minister knows that the Eskimo people are Indians by virtue of a supreme court decision of 1939, and for purposes of the Indian Act they come under federal jurisdiction. I suggest to the minister that regardless of his own personal assessment of federal legislation and its constitutionality in this regard, any transfer of jurisdiction over the Indian or Eskimo people from the federal government to any other authority is ultra vires under the terms of section 91(24) of the British North America Act which places squarely upon the shoulders of the federal government responsibility or jurisdiction in this regard. Any exercise of a purported authority to transfer control, jurisdiction or responsibility, whatever the minister chooses to call it, over the Indian or the Eskimo people of Canada to a provincial authority is an abrogation of the power expressly given to the parliament of Canada, as opposed to the executive, by section 91(28) of the British North America Act.

It is said in answer to this that the Indian Act gives sufficient power to the executive to transfer control and responsibility to the provinces by process of agreement. I suggest to the minister that he re-examine the legal assessment he may have placed on this situation in the light of what I have to say. If the Indian Act does purport to give this power to the executive, then to that extent the Indian Act is ultra vires and in conflict with section 91(24) of the British North America Act which places such power in the hands of the parliament of Canada. Unless and until section 91(24) is amended, the purported exercise of that power by the executive is wrong and ultra vires.

What is really happening here, one may conjecture, is that what the resources minister of Quebec has failed to get by the front door he is now getting by the back door. As a result of the pressure put on the government, and of the publicity given at the time the subject was raised, he did not succeed in getting control over the education and social welfare of the Eskimo population of Quebec as he wished to do. This is just another way of appeasing Mr. Lévesque and his friends. There is no difference between that case and the considerations raised by the transfer of jurisdiction or responsibility with respect to the Indian people of that province. An attempt has been made to draw a nice distinction between those terms by the minister and by others on the government benches. But the distinction is not valid, because if responsibility were to be transferred in any other way than by an amendment to the British North America Act, which would be constitutionally proper, it would necessarily include the transfer of jurisdiction over the people concerned and no amount of nice definitions can alter that plain fact.

The Indian people of Canada were guaranteed as a minority certain fundamental rights by the treaty of Paris and the royal proclamation made thereunder in 1763. Those rights are perpetuated by the inclusion in the British North America Act of section 91(24), any any attempt to abrogate them would be a travesty of justice. I believe the minister and his advisers should take a hard second look at this whole question.

Regardless of the intention of the federal government with respect to this matter the assurances which have been given to the house by the Prime Minister and by the minister himself are insufficient. The minister and the Prime Minister grandly say that before any decision is taken the Indian people themselves—and I presume he intends also to include the Eskimo people—will be consulted. In all fairness to those who are most concerned, the consultation which is required here is consultation in advance, because the Indian people themselves may have some ideas, and extremely valid ideas, as to whether or not they wish jurisdiction to be transferred at all. They should be consulted in advance, not bandied about like chattels, to recall a phrase which was used by one speaker on this side of the house.

I do not know whether I am correctly interpreting the remarks made by the minister as reported on page 8586 of Hansard for September 30 but I was surprised to see this statement with respect to consultation before transfer:

> I can assure the two hon. members and the entire house that the federal government will not make any major decision during this parliament before consulting the Indians themselves, as they are the first concerned in all these measures and, all the more so, the provincial authorities.

I say this to the minister that it should be "all the more so the Indian people" in order of importance, surely. The consultations to be held should be consultations with the people directly concerned, that is with the Indian people. Then once the minister has established their views and conveyed them to his colleagues in the cabinet—and the Indians may reject outright any proposal for transfer, in which case that should be the end of the matter—once their views have been ascertained, that is the time to evolve a policy which might be discussed with provincial authorities.

An hon. Member: Five o'clock.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not say it.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Mr. Badanai: We have made good progress with the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration this afternoon. There are only four items remaining and I wonder whether unanimous consent might be obtained in order that we could proceed to finish our examination of the estimates.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give consent to the suspension of private members' hour?

Mr. Howard: No, I do not think the house does, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills.

RAILWAY ACT

PROVISION FOR MORATORIUM ON ABANDONMENT

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-57, to amend the Railway Act (abandonment moratorium).

He said: Mr. Speaker, my first words on rising this afternoon to speak to the second reading of Bill No. C-57 is to express both on behalf of myself and I am sure on behalf of other hon. members our regret that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) is ill and confined to hospital. I am sure we all wish him a speedy recovery and look forward to having him back in the house at an early date. It was my hope he would be here this afternoon to listen to the principle which I will espouse in speaking to this bill. I might say that I first introduced it to the house on June 7, 1963 as Bill No. C-70, but it was so far down the order paper that it did not come up for second reading last year. Consequently I had the pleasure of reintroducing it in the house this year as Bill No. C-57 and it was read for the first time on February 20, 1964.

I should like to give a brief explanation to the house of the bill, and I think I could do no better than to refer to my previous remarks when introducing the bill last year, which remarks are to be found at page 771 of Hansard for Friday, June 7, 1963. At that time I said:

> Mr. Speaker, the magnitude of the problem of railway abandonment is becoming apparent from the large mass of applications being directed to the board of transport commissioners based on recommendations of the MacPherson royal commission on transportation. These abandonments are estimated to affect between 4,300 and 8,600 miles of branch lines. About 4,000 to 5,000 miles of this total is in the three prairie provinces, and 2,000 miles is in Saskatchewan.
> The purpose of this bill is to declare a moratorium of five years on all applications respecting rail abandonment accepted and granted by the board of transport commissioners so that private persons, rural and urban municipalities, primary producers, industries, businesses, elevator companies, wheat pools, labour organizations, the motor transport and pipe line industries and all others which may be adversely affected may plan well in advance before the abandonment actually takes place, in this way alleviating as far as possible the social and economic upheaval that may occur in many communities, especially those in rural areas.

At that time I said I hoped the bill would receive widespread support not only in the house but across Canada, and I might say this was the reaction it received. I had correspondence coming in from a wide area which suggested that the principle involved in the bill was receiving wide support and sympathy.

I might also say that my reason for introducing the bill was because of an experience I had in the matter of the Reston-Wolseley rail abandonment which came before the board of transport commissioners in 1959. This Reston-Wolseley line commenced in the constituency of Brandon-Souris, went across my riding of Moose Mountain and into the riding of Qu'Appelle, a distance of 122 miles. I am sure hon. members realize that this abandonment was quite a shock to the people in that area, as it affected quite a large community. At that time I debated the abandonment in this house and brought forward facts and figures, as well as appearing before the board of transport commissioners to make the plea that the abandonment should not take place until the MacPherson royal commission report was brought in and proper legislation enacted. However the board of transport commissioners in their wisdom saw fit to concur in the abandonment of this line.

In this particular case, although the abandonment was very serious to the people concerned, it was not as serious as might have been the case owing to the fact that the Canadian National line ran adjacent, almost parallel a short distance away, to the Reston-Wolseley line for quite a large extent of its coverage. Therefore the shock was not as severe as it otherwise might have been. Nevertheless it was still bad enough to create a great deal of concern among the various people affected, as I outlined in my explanation when I introduced my previous bill, and as a result I felt that we as members of parliament should take a serious look at the present Railway Act.

I should like at this point to read for the benefit of the house the explanation of this present bill. It is to amend section 168 of the Railway Act by adding thereto the following subsection:

> (2) Every approval when given by the board stands appealed to the governor in council for a time expiring five years from the day approval is given or until an order of the governor in council is sooner made to confirm, vary or rescind such approval.

The explanatory notes continue as follows:

> The section was first enacted...by amendment to the act in 1932-33, c. 47, s.1. Prior to that year railway companies could under common law, unless there were a contractual or statutory duty to continue operations, abandon the operation of the whole or any part of their lines without the approval of the board. Between 1922 and 1933 the board of transport commissioners, in a series of decisions, consistently upheld this common law right of the railways. In 1933 parliament, while recognizing this common law right of the railways, restricted the liberty of action of the companies in exercising this right by providing the companies must have the approval of the board. The board takes into consideration the interests of the company and the public. The section was a remedy to one of the economic pressures of the depression. It was not conceived as a remedy for the pressures that urge mass abandonment today. The board has held that the section gives no right to compensation by industries, primary producers, or others who are seriously affected by the deprivation of transport, or to railway workers who suffer financial loss by change of residence or earlier retirement.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel in view of the fact that there is before the house today Bill No. C-120 this proposed amendment to the Railway Act is very timely.

One of the recourses which we had to this particular act as it now applies was section 53, and I want to refer to that section. It reads as follows:

The governor in council may at any time, in his discretion, either upon petition of any party, person or company interested, or of his own motion, and without any petition or application, vary or rescind any order, decision, rule or regulation of the board, whether such order or decision is made inter partes or otherwise, and whether such regulation is general or limited in its scope and application; and any order that the governor in council may make with respect thereto is binding upon the board and upon all parties.

In 1961 the residents affected by the proposed abandonment of the Reston-Wolseley line made an application to the governor in council for alleviation or assistance in respect of that abandonment. Their application was given consideration, and the abandonment was held in abeyance for 30 days, but it finally went through.

There is one other alternative, although I do not think it is of much benefit to the people involved. Individuals can ask for the retention of a branch line after an application has been made for abandonment, provided they can find a legal or technical reason. These individuals can go to the Supreme Court of Canada for relief, but I do not think that actually happens very often. As a consequence, this alternative does not provide much assistance to people affected by rail line abandonments.

My bill asking for this rail line abandonment moratorium should be considered very seriously by the government. The knowledge that this principle was being considered seriously by the government would lessen the concern of thousands of people across Canada who are today faced with this abandonment situation. I think there will still be grounds for concern even after Bill No. C-120 has been discussed, considered, perhaps amended and passed. The government should give serious consideration to the suggestion that the principles contained in my bill should be included in the legislative measures proposed by the government in respect of rationalization or rail line abandonment.

Many other things are of concern to the people of Canada in respect of rail line abandonment. Some of them are as follows; the abandonment of approximately 4,500 to 8,500 miles of line to which I referred a few moments ago, spiralling freight rate increases, heavy increases in the cost of marketing farm grain, captive freight rate areas, great lack of railway passenger service, widespread concern of railway workers, and social and economic upheaval of both urban and rural individuals living adjacent to proposed line abandonments.

In an attempt to substantiate my statements about this concern, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read from the front page of the Western Producer of October 1, 1964. The headline is "Legislation on branch line abandonment totally inadequate, says pool president". The reference in that headline is to the Saskatchewan wheat pool, which is the largest wheat pool handling grain in western Canada. Mr. Charles Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, is one of the most qualified individuals in western Canada to speak in respect of the handling of grain and for those individuals who are seriously affected by proposed rail line abandonments. This article carries a subheading "West facing transportation crisis", and at page 38 reads as follows:

Applications to abandon branch lines totalling nearly 2,000 miles of track serving 260 communities are on file with the board of transport commissioners. The lines serve 547 country elevators with a total capacity of more than 39 million bushels. The branches are shown on the map above.

The abandonment applications have been filed by the railways over a period of two years. Consideration has been held up pending the introduction of legislation to deal with railway matters. Most of the applications on file were made by Canadian National in response to appeals from farm organizations and the government for information to show the scope of the branch line problem. Canadian Pacific has not committed itself on its overall plans, filing only on a piece-by-piece basis.

Legislation to deal with branch line abandonment was introduced by the government September 14 as part of a transportation policy arising from the report of the MacPherson commission. Saskatchewan wheat pool and other farm organizations have expressed grave concern at terms of the bill dealing with branch lines. The pools have indicated intention to request far reaching amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I could say a good deal more in explanation of this bill but I think I have placed substantial information on the record this afternoon to give something more than a general outline. I am sure other hon. members wish to speak in support of this bill.

Before resuming my seat I would again urge the government to consider the principles of Bill C-57, so that when any application by either the C.N.R., the C.P.R. or any other railway company in Canada for the abandonment of a branch line has been approved, before such abandonment takes place there will be a five year moratorium allowing the urban and rural residents an opportunity to adjust their plans so as to avoid the severe impact of such an abandonment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is not usual for a minister to speak during private members' hour, but I have taken the trouble to refresh my memory and I know it is quite proper to speak at this time. References to this effect will be found in paragraph 748 of Beauchesne's third edition, and on page 581 of Bourinot's. In any event, I felt I owed a duty to this house to bring to its attention during the consideration of this bill certain relevant matters.

The bill itself is an attempt by an hon. member to put forward a piece of legislation, by way of an amendment to the Railway Act, to assist mainly in protecting the interests of grain producers and other affected parties in western Canada, where a great many branch railway lines will possibly be the subject of applications for abandonment.

The hon. member I am sure will understand if I suggest that there should be a reservation as to the figures he used in respect of the mileage involved. Both this government and the previous one invited the railways to file applications for every proposed abandonment in the three prairie provinces. In light of the premise upon which those applications were made, it will be seen that the total proposed mileage subject to abandonment is an over-inflated figure.

Having expressed that reservation, Mr. Speaker, I must admit that the problem is a very real and serious one, and I understand and appreciate the concern of the residents in those affected areas. Without any desire to be technical, I respectfully suggest that the bill itself does not do what the hon. member wishes to be done, and if I may be allowed to develop my remarks along that line for a few moments I should like to do so.

The bill itself merely allows the appeal of every case to the governor in council, and I suggest that authority already exists. Anybody can appeal a case now to the governor in council under the existing legislation. The objection to this form of appeal under which every case would be automatically appealed is that it would change the whole scheme of the present board of transport commissioners legislation whereby they perform a quasi-judicial function, and make that function one performed subject to review in every instance by the governor in council and put an inordinate work load on the governor in council without the governor in council in turn developing adequate machinery to deal with those appeals. I would submit that the legislation before us is defective on that point.

What is needed to deal with this matter is dealt with rather fully in Bill No. C-120, the bill based on the MacPherson royal commission report and now before the house for consideration. Any changes that should be made in the part of that bill dealing with this subject should properly be made by way of amendment to that bill at the committee stage. There is nothing different in principle, so it would not involve rejection of the bill. If the point of argument made by the hon. member is valid, that would be a matter to be raised by way of amendment to the particular clauses on this subject when Bill No. C-120, an act to amend the Railway Act, is before the house.

As is obvious to hon. members, that bill is a very long and complicated one. I expect it will take some considerable examination at the committee stage and I would expect that there would be a good deal of discussion on this very vital point. But I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that clause 7 of that bill provides for adding a whole new part to the Railway Act, that new part to be headed "Abandonment of Lines or Operations, Uneconomic Branch Lines", which is the very subject matter causing concern. There is of course legislative provision for setting up a rationalization authority to deal with this whole question. That rationalization authority, after a line is found to be uneconomic and eligible for abandonment under the present concept of what makes a branch rail line eligible for abandonment, is given jurisdiction to deal with the subject of abandonment, the time of abandonment and to make quite extensive orders.

I do not want to argue the proposition in detail here, but it will be seen that the rationalization authority has the kind of jurisdiction that permits it to look at the services in the whole region affected by the abandonment of a particular branch line or branch lines, and it has the kind of authority required to permit it to deal, not with each individual application by itself but with each application in relation to the effect on possible patronage that abandonment of railway service will have in the area, or in relation to other applications for abandonment, so that the whole result from the decisions made will be a rational system of railway lines. That is the approach to the problem.

The criteria established for the authority in reaching its conclusions will be found on page 7 of the bill in these words:

...the authority shall fix the earliest such date or dates consistent with the public interest and for that purpose shall have regard to all matters that appear to the authorities to be relevant including, without restricting the generality of the foregoing—

Hon. members will note the breadth of the criteria that the authority must apply in making a decision on what is consistent with the public interest.

—(a) the alternative transportation facilities available or likely to be available to the area served by the line;

(b) the period of time reasonably required for the purpose of adjusting any facilities, wholly or in part dependant on the services provided by the line, with the least disruption to the economy of the area served by such line;

(c) the probable effect on other lines or other carriers of the abandonment of the line or of the abandonment of any segments of the line at different dates;

(d) any rule prescribed by the authority for the orderly processing of applications for the abandonment of lines in the area served by the line or in surrounding areas;

(e) the feasibility of maintaining the line or any segment thereof as an operating line by changes in the method of operation;

(f) the feasibility of maintaining the line or any segment thereof as an operating line in the system of another rail carrier by the purchase or lease of the line to another railway company or otherwise; and

(g) the probable future transportation needs of the area served by the line.

In other words, the government legislation before the house for its consideration and decision does attempt to deal with this subject in a broad, comprehensive way by creating an authority having wide powers and having authority based on serving the public interest which is defined in the widest possible way in that bill. If the point raised by the hon. member is valid, and I acknowledge at once the concern of farmers and other people engaged in the whole economy of the three prairie provinces particularly, I am under obligation to point out to hon. members that the whole subject will be before them when the government legislation is being examined. While I cannot speak for the committee, which has jurisdiction over how it conducts its own business, I think it must be readily apparent to all hon. members, and a reasonable presumption, that the appropriate public bodies throughout these provinces will appear before the committee. I have reference to the elevator operators, the grain growers' organizations, the relevant farm organizations and representatives of the provincial governments as well, I presume. Therefore the whole subject will be examined rather thoroughly there.

If the provisions in the government's bill are inadequate, then any changes along the lines suggested would not be a matter for separate amendment of the Railway Act by way of a separate bill, but can only properly be a matter for amendment to the clauses on the subject, when those clauses are before the appropriate committee for consideration. I thought I ought to make that point and I thank hon. members for hearing me out on this matter.

Mr. Southam: Could I ask the minister a question?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Southam: Did I understand the minister to say at the beginning of his remarks that the amendment in my bill was in effect already covered in the act, and that it did not have any purpose or significance, or something to that effect?

Mr. McIlraith: No. The point I made in the early part of my remarks was that parties concerned can appeal to the governor in council, but there is no automatic appeal. They are obligated to bring an appeal if they wish to do so. The effect of the hon. member's bill is to provide that every case will be automatically appealed to the governor in council.

Mr. Southam: I want to make that point clear. I realize what the situation is under the existing law, but my amendment suggests that if and when people affected by an abandonment make application to the board of transport commissioners under section 53, the board would automatically have to allow a five year moratorium before the abandonment became effective.

The whole principle of this bill is to hold this in abeyance in order to alleviate the shock. I went on to refer then to my experience in connection with the abandonment of the Reston-Wolseley line. As soon as the application was accepted by the board of transport commissioners under section 53, they wrapped up this line and there was an economic and social shock to the area. Under this amendment I am suggesting today, and which I think should get serious consideration from the government when they consider Bill No. C-120, after rationalization and everything else had been considered, when the abandonment of any piece of line had been finally considered there should be a five year moratorium applied to it. This is the new concept.

Mr. McIlraith: I hope my remarks were not capable of being interpreted to indicate any satisfaction with the present legislation under which the line to which the hon. member referred was abandoned in 1961. It is quite obvious that the whole purpose of the government's bill is to attempt to correct that situation. The hon. member's bill would impose a waiting period in every case. The public bill provides that such period as may be determined by the rationalization authority up to 15 years in each case, may be imposed. It is a matter for discussion in committee as to what is the precise term, and the best way of handling it.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I do not propose to discuss the merits of the bill. I am a member of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and as the minister indicated we will be considering this subject very shortly. I have not spoken to the sponsor of the bill, but I should like to suggest that the subject of this bill be referred to the committee. I will not make a motion since I have not consulted him, but if he agrees perhaps such a motion could be made.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): It is not my intention to speak at length in regard to this bill before us. I do think the suggestion which has been been made is a logical one, because this is a very important piece of legislation contained in Bill No. C-120. It would seem to me that whether or not the subject matter of the bill before us, strictly speaking, is included in Bill No. C-120, the proper place for consideration of this bill would be that committee, when the major piece of legislation is before it. I would concur in the suggestion made by the last speaker and suggest to the sponsor of the bill that it would appear to me the subject matter could very well be referred to the committee.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question? Does he realize that the subject matter is contained in the public Bill No. C-120, and that any change in that would be by way of amendment? I do not know how the committee would proceed if the subject matter of Bill No. C-57 were referred to it. I do not know if the hon. member is following the procedural point I am raising. If the subject matter is referred to the committee, presumably they have to take a decision on it. If they take a decision to reject it, then that concludes the matter. If they take a decision to accept it, that concludes the matter. Then they come along to the public bill and they may want to make certain amendments on the very point dealt with in Bill No. C-57. If they do, they are confronted with the previous decision they have taken. Anything that can be done by referring the subject matter of Bill No. C-57 to the committee could be done under the reference of the public bill to the committee.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Is the minister suggesting that if we decided to refer the subject matter to the committee, then automatically we cannot discuss the subject during the discussion of Bill No. C-120?

Mr. McIlraith: No, but the committee would have to take a decision and report to the house on any reference of Bill No. C-57. I think anything you can do, if I understand the hon. gentleman correctly, by referring Bill No. C-57 to the committee can be done by way of amendment when Bill No. C-120 is before the committee. If you refer Bill No. C-57 to the committee, the committee has to take a decision and report back to the house, and then you get into quite a procedural jam, which I am quite sure is not the hon. member's intention.

Mr. Prittie: I wonder if I might ask the minister, then, what we mean by "subject matter"? Is railway abandonment not the subject matter of the bill?

Mr. McIlraith: No, it would be something narrower. It would be compulsory appeals in all cases to the cabinet, with an arbitrary waiting period of five years. This is a much narrower subject than is found in Bill No. C-120.

Mr. Thompson: I was not moving any formal motion that this should be done. I was merely suggesting to the sponsor of the bill that perhaps this would be the best way of handling it. I have not studied Bill No. C-120 to see what specific relationship it has to the bill introduced today. If the sponsor of the bill felt that this is the way the problem he is referring to could be dealt with most adequately, whether the subject matter is referred to the committee or whether he should withdraw the bill on the understanding the matter would be dealt with, that is entirely up to him. It seems to me that since the over-all picture is to be brought before the committee, we are spending time here in useless debate so far as the objective he is attempting to achieve is concerned. I understand the point the minister is making, Mr. Speaker, and certainly the over-all subject matter of railway abandonment is completely covered in Bill No. C-120.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to speak on Bill No. C-57. The minister has said there is a Bill No. C-120 on the order paper which will be discussed later, but I should like to speak about matters with which I am very familiar, namely railway abandonments and the effect they will have on my particular province. I know that should this railway abandonment plan go through it will affect a great number of farmers. It will affect not only a great number of farmers but it will affect communities, towns and even villages and hamlets. At the present time there will be approximately 1,746 miles of railway line abandoned, and when you take into consideration the fact that 235 elevators will be abandoned—

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Why does he use these figures, giving in absolute terms the mileage of lines that will be abandoned, when he does not even know whether or not applications for the abandonment of these lines will be proceeded with?

Mr. Rapp: The reason I know these are the figures is because the railways have indicated them, and the towns and villages that are affected have all set up retention committies which have made representation to the provincial government. That is why I mention so many miles being abandoned, because these places have secured the figures from the railway companies.

These 235 elevators would take in possibly 64 million bushels of grain in any one crop year. If the railways are abandoned these elevators will not operate any more, and farmers who produce grain will be confronted with much higher expense delivering grain to elevators.

The Crowsnest pass agreement provides a stipulated rate for the delivery of grain, but if a farmer has to haul his grain 40 or 50 miles to a station, then the benefit of the Crowsnest pass rate will be almost useless to him. That is why the farmers in the three western provinces are so concerned about rail line abandonment. If the lines are abandoned there will be the extra cost of delivering grain to the elevators. The farmers will also suffer capital losses because the value of their farms will not be so high when they are located 20, 30 or 40 miles from a grain elevator. Further, the value of the towns affected will not be as high as they are at present. These are the reasons why retention committees have been set up in the three western provinces. I am aware railway rationalization legislation is being introduced, but I think now is the time for us to stress these points. If the railway lines are abandoned it will be the greatest disaster ever to strike the three prairie provinces.

The other day when we were discussing immigration the minister said he intended to encourage immigrants who were well educated and trained. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) then pointed out that his area could accommodate an additional 5 million people to open up the country, and pointed out that the Pine Point railway gives that opportunity for opening it up.

The minister has said that all these matters pertaining to railway abandonment should be directed to a committee for consideration, where witnesses and representatives of the railways could be called, and all these things discussed around the table to see whether railway abandonment is necessary or not. I point out that since the railways themselves have always been opposed to the Crowsnest pass agreement, by abandonment of so many lines they think they would not lose so much money by hauling grain under the Crowsnest pass arrangement.

That is all I have to say at this time.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) has shown an interest in this important subject. I would point out that those of us who come from areas that are badly in need of industrial development are much concerned with the question of railway policy.

I see the smiling and benign countenance of the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) in the chamber, and I wish to say there should be some co-ordination between railway policies and the general policies of those of us on this side of the house with respect to industrial development, and its encouragement in those areas that have fallen behind the rest of the country. I do not think we can divorce from the question of railway policy the motivations and directions of the Department of Industry toward industrialization.

The Department of Industry is devoted to the encouragement of industrial development. It has promoted measures such as the designated area legislation, and its new branch, the area development agency, is devoted to encouraging industrial development in areas of slow growth. For that reason I do not think the department can operate without giving some thought to the government's railway policy, because one essential for industrial development in slow growth areas is that those areas should have adequate railway service. We shall not achieve industrial development, no matter how wise or far seeing are the policies of the Department of Industry, if railway policies are such as to divest designated areas of railway service.

Because of this I am pleased to note the government has already introduced Bill No. C-120, which indicates very broad thinking in this area of railway line abandonment. It certainly leaves room and scope for the thought I have in mind, which is that the whole question of railways should be correlated to the need for the distribution of industries across our broad land to a far greater degree than has been the case.

I note that Bill No. C-120 proposes to a large degree the implementation of the findings of the MacPherson commission, and while I have some sympathy with the aims of Bill No. C-57 I personally feel the implementation of the entire ambit of the findings of the MacPherson commission, as envisaged by Bill C-120, is preferable to a hodgepodge, a piecemeal approach to the problem.

I am particularly pleased to support the general premise that the findings of the MacPherson commission should be embodied in government legislation, by reason of the fact that the commission was headed by M. A. MacPherson, who has the very outstanding and distinguishing mark of having been once rejected by his party as leader of that party. I think this is a mark to be proudly worn. I, too, am sorry the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) is not here to consider this bill, which has some bearing on Bill C-120 which he himself introduced. We were all extremely sorry to learn of his illness and I was pleased to hear the sponsor of this bill wish him well. I should like to inform the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) who is always concerned about the well-being of the Minister of Transport that I am instructed on reliable authority that while he is in hospital his white flowing robes will be cleaned and will be purged of any stain which remains thereon from the pipe line. I know the hon. member will be very pleased to hear this, as he has been concerned about it in the past.

I think we should consider Bill C-120 in its entirety to determine whether or not the matter which is dealt with in the bill before us is not considered in a far broader way and in a far more satisfactory way, in my humble submission, in the former measure. We know that in clause 6 of Bill C-120, section 168 of the act is amended to cover the entire policy of the abandonment of railway lines. A number of clauses, from clause 6 onward, are concerned with this whole question of the abandonment of rail lines and its effect upon the economy—and not only upon the economy of the railway companies. I agree with the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) that up to the present time the difficulty attached to these hearings—and I have taken some part in them in the past—is that the commissioners have had to consider the economic position of the railway companies as the main criterion with respect to applications for abandonment. Those of us who represent constituencies in which economic development is badly needed were certainly aghast at the thought that such areas might be deprived of railway service, thus ending virtually all hope of industrial development.

It was heartwarming to find that while the economic position of the railroads is given consideration in the general findings of the MacPherson report the government in presenting Bill C-120 has made its legislation so comprehensive that questions such as the future industrial development of the areas concerned will be taken into account and considered very carefully before any permission to abandon lines is given. As I have just said, it is my hope that this question of the possible abandonment of railway lines in areas of slow industrial growth should be considered very carefully in conjunction with the policy of the government as expressed through the Department of Industry, and the area development agencies which are working to encourage industrial expansion where it has previously not taken place. It would surely be foolhardy to promote the abandonment of railway lines on one hand while seeking to achieve industrial expansion in those areas on the other because, once the railways are gone, any hope of industrial expansion would be extremely slight.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): In the few moments left I have a few thoughts I should like to place before the house. I do so with hesitation because, coming from a seacoast constituency I am to a considerable degree a layman when I discuss railway line abandonment on the prairies. Nevertheless we in the city of Vancouver have an interest in this subject, inasmuch as we are exporters of a great deal of the grain which is grown in the prairie provinces, in the province of Alberta and on into Saskatchewan.

With the trend toward the shipment of larger quantities of grain across the Pacific we would like to ship more and more prairie grain from Vancouver. Indeed we are discussing at the present time the building of additional facilities so as to be able to handle more grain through that port, and provide the facilities needed for prairie producers to export their products to world markets as expeditiously as they can now be exported through the head of the lakes.

I wish to point out to hon. members opposite that when we pick up a railway map of Saskatchewan we see crosshatched on it more railway lines than one is likely to see on any other map anywhere in the world. I think it is safe to say that Saskatchewan is served by more railway lines operating uneconomically than any other spot on earth. In view of this fact, the question of rail line abandonment is academic. Of course railway lines must be altered in order that transportation may be placed upon a more economic basis. Our problem today is to get this done expeditiously enough that the United States to the south, which is rapidly overhauling its own transportation arrangements and improving its facilities for handling grain, does not reach a point where it becomes highly competitive with us in moving grain to the Pacific coast and exporting across the Pacific to areas to which, because of an antipathy toward the Soviet world, there has been no great anxiety up to now to send commodities. However in the near future we can envisage the United States competing with our exports to these areas. It is only because of the political relationship between the United States and the communist world that we have been given some temporary advantage in selling our grain through the Pacific ports. So it would be unwise to place any moratorium upon the process of upgrading grain handling facilities in western Canada, thus losing the advantage we have, and damaging the prospect of keeping for Canadians an export market which is bound to continue for a considerable time.

[Mr. Greene.]

As I say, I am not qualified to discuss this question in detail or at any length. Nevertheless I believe we should give consideration to the points I have raised and realize that upon the efficiency of our rail transport system may depend the future of a vital market, a highly competitive market which our neighbour to the south is prepared to enter.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the acting house leader whether the business for Monday and Tuesday stands as announced?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On Monday we will resume the debate on the farm machinery bill, followed by the resolution preceding the crop insurance act. That will be followed by second reading of the bill to amend the acts administered by the department of insurance.

In line with the suggestion made by the chief whip of the official opposition as set out at page 8662 of Hansard, when that is finished in the afternoon I will arrange to have the leader of the house advise the other house leaders what the business will be on Monday evening.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed this day in committee of supply.]

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

MARRIAGE

PROVISION FOR MINIMUM AGES FOR MALES AND FEMALES

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-128, respecting marriage (age of marriage).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, Canada has heretofore failed to impose minimum age requirements with respect to marriage as it might have done pursuant to the powers contained in paragraph 26 of section 91 of the British North America Act 1867. At present in various Canadian provinces children may contract marriage at ages substantially below what has been considered an appropriate minimum age by numerous delegates to the United Nations, namely 15 years.

This bill is designed to strengthen and dignify the institution of marriage by fixing an absolute minimum age of 16 years for males and 15 years for females below which no person in Canada may enter into this solemn contract.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

POSTAL ACCOMMODATION, RED ROCK, ONT.

Question No. 1,862—Mr. Fisher:

1. How many postal boxes are there in the Red Rock post office?
2. Can any more be added?
3. Are there sufficient boxes to meet the demand?
4. Has the Department of Public Works surveyed the accommodation and, if so, what comments has it made?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): 1. 378.

2. Yes. Additional boxes to be installed.

3. Only one request on hand which will be met October 1, 1964.

4. The Department of Public Works surveyed the accommodation and it was determined that additional lock boxes could be installed to meet the requirements of the Post Office Department. Immediate action is being taken to have the additional lock boxes installed.

PROVISION FOR FLIGHT INFORMATION BY T.C.A.

Question No. 1,885—Mr. Tucker:

Has the T.C.A. received complaints concerning the overloading of telephone lines by persons making reservations and, if so, will consideration be given to the installation of additional lines in their various offices which would be used solely for the provision of flight information to the travelling public?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The management of Trans-Canada Air Lines advise as follows:

Complaints are received from time to time in connection with reservations—telephone answering service. However, established customer service standards are being achieved on a system basis and in many cases exceeded. Standards require that a minimum of 85 per cent of incoming calls in a given hour be challenged immediately and 82 per cent of these calls must be accepted by an operator for processing within 20 seconds of dialing completion. The air line relies on the telephone companies' metering equipment for details regarding hourly volume of incoming calls being rejected.

Telephone answering service in the Ottawa office suffered this year due to extensive internal renovations and malfunction of telephone equipment, and this situation has now largely been corrected although still under close observation.

Studies are being conducted into the use of electronic equipment to segregate and service requests for flight arrival and departure information, and when these are completed, a decision will be made as to the advisability of its installation.

CIVIL SERVICE COMPETITION 64205

Question No. 1,903—Mrs. Jones:

1. What are the names of the candidates for competition No. 64205, executive pilots' position, Department of Transport?
2. Who was the successful candidate?
3. On what basis was he chosen?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): 1. Having regard for the right to privacy of candidates in competitions, and the possibility that publication of this information could prove not only embarrassing but prejudicial to them, the civil service commission holds the names of candidates in confidence. However, the names of the successful candidate(s) placed on the eligible list will be published in the Canada Gazette.

2. This competition is still in progress and the commission has not determined who the successful candidate(s) will be.

3. The successful candidate(s) will be chosen after an interview at which careful consideration will be given to their qualifications related to the job, and subsequent to any other necessary examination or investigation of the candidates or their backgrounds.

TRAINING GRANTS FOR PSYCHIATRISTS

Question No. 1,907—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many psychiatrists in training for the current year are in receipt of training grants from the federal government?
2. What is the value of each grant?
3. What is the total value of the grants?
4. What are the plans for next year's grants?
5. What commitments have been made for the next five years to the universities and the medical colleges, in the field of mental health?
6. What requests have been made by the medical colleges for the next five years in the field of mental health?
7. In the past five years, how much have the requests from the medical colleges in the field of mental health gone up, year by year?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Under the national health grants, 143 psychiatrists are in receipt of training grants during the fiscal year 1964-65.

2. Payments to trainees in psychiatry under the national health grants are made as follows:

(a) Bursaries to trainees taking professional training are set by the provinces according to the need of the individual, but they are not to exceed $250 monthly for persons without dependants and $300 for persons with dependants. Besides a bursary a trainee may receive travel expenses to and from the place of training only once during the training period; transportation costs to and from the place of training when a trainee is out on field work outside his training centre; tuition fees as actually charged by the training institution; and an allowance for books and technical supplies not exceeding $50 for the full course. Bursaries may be claimed for trainees during the period of actual training. This period may include a reasonable period of travel to and from the training centre. It is understood that the provinces in certain cases supplement the federal assistance.

(b) For short training courses, the duration of which does not exceed three months, actual reasonable living expenses may be requested. Living expenses are to be accounted for on the basis of provincial regulations governing travelling and maintenance expenses.

3. For 1964-65 an amount of $237,312 is being allocated for the training of psychiatrists.

4. The national health grants represent a federal-provincial program. Provincial plans for the submission of projects against next year's and, to some extent, subsequent years' grants are presently under study in all provinces. The resulting submissions of projects and consultations with provincial planners will begin in December of this year.

5. See answers 4 and 6.

6. The annual submissions of projects received from the provinces on behalf of training, research and health services in medical colleges request the continuance of federal assistance in subsequent years, although a five year period is not always specified.

7. The following funds were made available on the request of the provinces in the fiscal years 1959-64 to Canadian universities and their medical colleges in the field of mental health: 1959-60, $891,578; 1960-61, $1,041,607; 1961-62, $1,141,793; 1962-63, $1,246,549; 1963-64, $955,342.

Question No. 1,933—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

1. When was the prairie province water board set up?
2. Did all the prairie provinces join at that time in support of the water board?
3. When was the initial study undertaken?
4. Did Alberta participate?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The prairie provinces water board was established by agreement on July 28, 1948.

2. Yes.

3. The initial study was undertaken in November 1948 and involved analysis of stream flow records at interprovincial boundaries.

4. Yes.

INSTALLATION OF TRAFFIC SIGNALS, SCARBOROUGH TOWNSHIP, ONT.

Question No. 1,934—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the government or any other agency of the government, including the board of transport commissioners, received a request from the township of Scarborough, for the installation of traffic signals at the intersection of Danforth road and Midland avenue?
2. Would such installation require approval by the board of transport commissioners and, if so, has such approval been given and, if not, for what reason?
3. When was the request from the township of Scarborough first made?
4. What action does the government intend taking to see that this request is acted upon quickly?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advises as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Yes in so far as the synchronization of the street traffic signals with the railway signal protection is concerned. Approval of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada in this matter has not yet been given due to the complexity of the design of the various electric circuits required. The development of a satisfactory design is under active consideration between the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, the Canadian National Railways, and the municipality of metropolitan Toronto.

3. September 9, 1964. However, on April 10, 1963, the municipality of metropolitan Toronto indicated to the board of transport commissioners that traffic studies were taking place with a view to developing a plan for highway traffic control at the intersection of Danforth road and Midland avenue. As this intersection is in close proximity to a Canadian National crossing of Danforth road, the board suggested, in the interests of safety, that the street traffic signals be properly synchronized with the railway crossing signal protection. A scheme was then developed as a result of discussions between representatives of the Canadian National Railways and the municipality of metropolitan Toronto and was submitted by the municipality to the board for its consideration on August 7, 1964.

4. This matter is presently under active development between representatives of the board of transport commissioners, the Canadian National Railways, and the traffic engineers of the municipality of metropolitan Toronto, and the township of Scarborough is being kept advised.

QUALITY PERFORMANCE ANALYSIS CHECKS, AIR CANADA

Question No. 1,935—Mr. Jorgenson:

1. Are there quality performance analysis checks on employees working for Air Canada?
2. What is the purpose of these checks and to what extent are they useful in determining performance ratings of employees?
3. In the carrying out of these checks are conversations with Air Canada employees and passengers arranging for flight reservations tape recorded?
4. How long has this practice been carried on?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The management of Trans-Canada Air Lines advise as follows:

1. Yes. Quality performance checks are maintained in all areas important to (a) satisfactory customer service and (b) maintaining acceptable maintenance and overhaul standards. Specifically, the air line's customer service quality measurement program includes, among other areas, the following: promptness of telephone answering; quality of in flight services and aircraft grooming; promptness of passenger handling and baggage delivery; reliability of air freight services.

In the area of maintenance and overhaul, the quality analysis program concentrates on achieving technical standards with respect to aircraft, engines and components.

2. The purpose of these programs is to relate actual performance to predetermined standards and, where necessary, take appropriate action to bring below standard performance up to the air line's objectives. They are useful in determining performance ratings of individual employees; however, their prime purpose is as explained above. Information obtained is used as an integral part of the company's over all training program, and for appropriate supervisory action.

3. The quality analysis program as related to the telephone answering service of the company, does not involve the tape recording of telephone conversations with customers; however, quality analysts do monitor such telephone conversations.

4. Quality performance analysis was introduced in the sales department in 1949.

2, 3 and 4. However, during the financial year 1963-64 the federal government contributed to the province of Nova Scotia $279,637 for trade and other occupational training and $14,290 for technicians training.

AMENDMENT OF N.H.A. REGULATIONS RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION SUPERINTENDENTS

Question No. 1,996—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation branch office in Scarborough, Ontario, received a request from any representatives of the township of Scarborough for amendment to any N.H.A. regulations, making it a condition of mortgage approval, that apartment projects employ the services of a qualified, competent construction superintendent and, if so, what was the answer given by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to the request?

2. If Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation refused the request, in detail, what are the reasons for such refusal?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): 1. The manager of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's loans office in Scarborough, Ontario was asked by the township clerk of Scarborough on June 23 to comment on the practicality of a requirement by the corporation, as a condition of loan approval, that the builder of any apartment project employ a qualified, competent, construction superintendent for the purpose of ensuring compliance with township building and safety requirements.

2. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in respect of all loans under the National Housing Act on apartments, requires that the heating installations be supervised by a qualified engineer. If the apartment exceeds seven storeys, the entire structure must be supervised by a qualified architect or engineer.

In answer to the request for comment, the corporation suggested that it did not feel that the imposition of further lending conditions would improve the enforcement of municipal bylaws but that the corporation's inspection personnel would continue its fullest co-operation with inspectors of the township of Scarborough to facilitate the enforcement of building standards.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS CASE—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Before the orders of the day are called I wish to ask leave to move the adjournment of this house in accordance with standing order 26, in order to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the threat to law and order which is inherent in a statement as reported in the press made by Mr. James Todd, secretary treasurer of the Canadian maritime union. He has charged, according to press reports, that certain people in the government made a deal with Hal Banks to get him out of Canada. He is further reported to have said that Banks was only charged with offences for which he could not be brought back; they did not want Banks back to tell everything he knows.

Furthermore, as appears from the report, the F.B.I. in the United States was not requested by the Canadian government for assistance in locating the said Hal Banks, and generally that incomplete and evasive answers and explanations given to this house by members of the government reveal a failure to deal forthrightly with the case of Hal Banks, which failure has resulted in Banks being free to flout the law and escape justice thereby bringing into disrepute the administration of law and justice.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I should like to say, in response to my right hon. friend's intention to move the adjournment of the house, that under our rules it is obligatory to establish a number of preliminaries. My right hon. friend, while he has brought forward a matter that is, of course, of public importance, has not established the urgency that is contemplated within our standing orders. In any event, even if there were the kind of urgency that is contemplated within the standing orders, the matter can be dealt with more effectively later, in view of the fact that the government will bring in the estimates of the Department of Justice not later than Thursday of this week.

In addition, the responsible minister, the Minister of Justice, is now engaged in conference on constitutional questions with the provincial attorneys general, who have assembled here and began meetings this morning. They will continue to meet throughout today and tomorrow. The Prime Minister likewise, as my right hon. friend will recall, left a short time ago for Charlottetown to meet Her Majesty the Queen.

But I suggest, in addition to the fact that the Minister of Justice is not here, being preoccupied with important business having to do with constitutional matters involving relations with the provinces, and also because this question, important as it is, does not come within the rule of urgency, that my right hon. friend has not made a case for disturbing the order of business for today. Further, I give him the assurance that he will have the opportunity of dealing with this matter not later than Thursday of this week, when the estimates of the Department of Justice will be before the house.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, before Your Honour reaches a decision as to the acceptability of the motion that has been made, may I speak to the question of urgency. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs has rightly pointed out, the matter that has been raised in the motion is undoubtedly one of great public importance. As to the matter of urgency, the fact that the motion has been made in view of the information given to the public in the last two or three days makes it all the more urgent, in my submission, for the Minister of Justice to be here to take part in the debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Nielsen: I submit to Your Honour that you have a very simple matter to decide. If the statement which has been read into the record by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition as having been made by Mr. Todd is correct, then the matter in itself becomes urgent since the law of Canada and good government in this country has been held up to contempt and ridicule by, to use the words of Mr. Millard, a responsible labour leader.

If Your Honour rules the motion out of order on the ground that it is not urgent, what Your Honour is in effect doing is prejudging the veracity of Mr. Todd's statements. In order for Your Honour to say the matter is not urgent you must perforce say that what Mr. Todd said is not true, and I suggest to you, sir, that is not your function. It is the function of the house to accept the urgency inherent in the statement by Mr. Todd that there has been a connivance by the government and the S.I.U. in order to contrive for the escape of Hal Banks—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend and interfere with that portion of his argument which may be in order, but I am sure Your Honour will appreciate that it is not possible at this stage in our proceedings to argue the merits of the question. Your Honour has the motion before you, and Your Honour must determine whether that motion has urgency within the meaning of standing order 26. Your Honour is not called upon to decide whether the allegations are right or invalid, but simply whether there is the required urgency.

My hon. friend is now making an argument, to which no reply is being made simply because we want to keep within the rules. I suggest that the question before Your Honour is whether the required urgency has been established, not whether this person or that is to be believed. There is an allegation that someone has said there was a connivance. There were certain other allegations too. All Your Honour has to determine within standing order 26 is whether this question as presented in the motion is one that possesses the urgency specified by standing order 26.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I thought I was steering clear of the merits, just as my hon. friend so often does in his own arguments on questions of this nature. I had not at all mentioned the merits of the statements made. I was simply reiterating the words contained in the motion as presented by the Leader of the Opposition, words quoted from press reports, and I was pointing out to Your Honour that in order to come to a decision that there is no urgency involved in the motion, perforce that decision must be in effect one of disbelief of Mr. Todd's statements to the press.

I further suggested to Your Honour that the proper course to follow would be to accept that urgency attaches to this matter; because after all, if Mr. Todd's statements which have been read into the record by the Leader of the Opposition are true then the matter is indeed one of urgency, because it holds up to contempt the administration of law and justice in this country. I would think that all members of the government would want to see discounted any reflection on the government that there has been connivance with the S.I.U. in Mr. Banks' escape from Canada, and the only way in which this can be done is by allowing the house to debate this subject at the earliest possible opportunity.

There have been many conflicting and misleading statements made with regard to this whole subject, and unless these statements are resolved, and unless forthright and full explanations are made by responsible members of the treasury benches, the Canadian public and members of this house will be left in doubt as to whether there is that solid foundation upon which all freedom in this country is based, namely the efficient and impartial administration of our laws.

Surely this would indicate the great urgency which attaches to this question, and I suggest to Your Honour again that if you were to reach a conclusion that there is no urgency attached to debating this question you would, in effect, be prejudging the veracity of Mr. Todd's statements—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is going a little far. The duty of the Chair is not to decide the merits of the case. That I think, is obvious. The duty of the Chair is to decide whether under the terms of standing order 26 there is sufficient urgency attached to this matter to justify setting aside the ordinary business of the house so as to debate the question immediately. In a case such as this I certainly intend to rely in part on Beauchesne, citation 100—

Mr. Woolliams: Is Your Honour ruling now that no one else may speak to this motion at this stage?

Mr. Speaker: That is right. Citation 100—

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a question of privilege. I feel that hon. members on all sides of the house are interested in this matter and should have the right to speak at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no question of privilege. Paragraph 3 of the citation to which I have referred reads:

> "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate"—

Mr. Nielsen: Surely, before your mind is made up, the least that could be done would be to hear some further argument.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened with the greatest of interest and as carefully as possible to the three arguments which have been presented and I do not see that there is such difficulty as to justify my listening for the rest of the afternoon to several speakers. I think, at least I hope, that the ruling I give will be correct, fair, and of course impartial. Anyway, I would refer to rule 100, paragraph 3 which reads:

> "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

There is no doubt at all that this is an urgent matter. The matter to which the Leader of the Opposition addressed the attention of the house is important; it is a matter of public importance. But the duty of the Chair is to apply certain criteria to standing order 26, and in doing so the criterion I wish to apply is whether there is an opportunity to debate this matter in an effective way.

Mr. Speaker Black said on March 31, 1931, as reported in the Journals of that day at page 50:

> The reason for allowing such a motion for the adjournment is to afford members an opportunity of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance which they could do in no other way—

Mr. Speaker Michener on June 27, 1961, as reported at page 7105 of Hansard, ruled in more or less similar words what I have said this afternoon.

I am informed today that the estimates of the Minister of Justice will be before the house on Thursday and that, of course, will provide an opportunity for a full discussion of this matter.

In view of the fact that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice are away on necessary business of state, with the Prime Minister either in or approaching

Charlottetown, it seems to me we could have a much better, fuller and more authoritative discussion on their return. Therefore, with regret, I cannot accede to the request of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

APPEARANCE BEFORE COMMITTEE OF UNION TRUSTEES—CONSIDERATION OF BANKS CASE BY INDEPENDENT BODY

On the orders of the day:

Right. Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I now direct a question in connection with this matter to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statements made by Mr. Todd, which of course all the members of the government will have seen, is the government now prepared to call an immediate meeting of the trustees so that the trustees of the maritime unions may be brought before a committee of parliament and this matter looked into and most carefully scrutinized and examined?

Also, Mr. Speaker, despite the peremptory refusal of the Prime Minister on Friday, in view of these further statements that have been made—and there are many of them—I wonder whether a full inquiry by an impartial body into the circumstances concerning the laying of the charges of conspiracy against Mr. Banks would be considered, in the public interest.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did deal with this question in principle on Friday. I do not recall that the statements made by Mr. Todd were before the house at that time, but I cannot believe that this would change the situation. However, I am going to take this question as notice and direct it to the head of the government.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister is aware of a tape recording of a certain interview given by Mr. Banks to Mr. Ed Murphy—I had a telephone call from Charlottetown to that effect—which alleges that certain members of the Liberal party, and maybe of the government, in the past have received from Banks certain consideration which may affect the character of good members. Is he now prepared, as I suggested to the Prime Minister on another occasion, to hold a complete inquiry into this matter, to protect the good name of his members or satisfy the public as to the government itself in this regard?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about the tape recording in question. I am certain there is nothing in it that would in any way reflect unfavourably on the character of any member of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering how the Acting Prime Minister was able to answer as he has just done if he has not heard the tape. I take it he has heard the tape, in order to pass such an opinion. Has the Acting Prime Minister heard the tape? How can he pass an opinion, if he has not heard it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have not heard the tape, Mr. Speaker, but I have done more than that; I have learned something about the nature of the men who constitute the government of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: What about Judy?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Sir Galahad feels better now.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for either the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the fact that Hal C. Banks has been found guilty of conspiracy in the courts and is now a fugitive from justice, is the government planning to take steps to cancel his status as a landed immigrant?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I take advantage of this opportunity to say that if I did not include the Minister of National Health and Welfare in my explanation a few minutes ago, it was because it was so apparent that she could not be involved in my hon. friend's question that I did not involve her in my response. I should like to take notice of that question.

Mr. Douglas: I am sorry; I did not quite understand the last part of the answer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said that I would take notice of the question and give a reply tomorrow.

Mr. Douglas: Do I understand that the government has given no consideration to this question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Again I say I should like to take notice of this question to see whether or not it has.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Could he tell the house if the present government is doing everything in its power to find other charges which could lead to Hal C. Banks' extradition? Could he also tell the house how the government is going about finding these charges and obtaining the extradition of Mr. Banks to Canada?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows full well, the government has appointed special attorneys to study this matter, and I am sure the investigation is still in progress.

[Text]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to address to the Acting Prime Minister. In order to assist members of the opposition who will be interested in the debate that will occur on Thursday, can the Acting Prime Minister assure members of the house that Harold Chamberlain Banks or his union did not make large donations to the Liberal party?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend knows that is the kind of question which is not generally levelled by a fair minded man.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure that is not the case, but it would be equally proper for me to ask my hon. friend whether he had obtained assistance in an election from a doubtful character. I am not going to ask that question because that would cast unfair aspersions on my hon. friend, but it perhaps might have just as much foundation as the question which my hon. friend has asked.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, perhaps in view of the reply of the Acting Prime Minister a few moments ago I should direct my question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has his department taken any action in regard to cancellation of the rights of one Mr. Banks as a landed immigrant?

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have already pointed out to the house, Mr. Hal C. Banks has not only the status of landed immigrant in Canada, but also five years' residence in this country, five years of what is called Canadian residence. Since he has obtained his Canadian residence, Mr. Banks can only be deported in certain cases provided under the Immigration Act. Here are those cases:

He must have engaged in subversive activities;

[Text]

second, he must have been convicted by a court of competent jurisdiction of an offence involving dissatisfaction or disloyalty to Her Majesty; third, he must have engaged in espionage, sabotage or other activity detrimental to the security of Canada or, four he must have been convicted of an offence under the Narcotic Control Act.

[Translation]

Therefore, the department keeps the matter under constant review, on the basis of developments which may occur in the case of Mr. Banks in the event he could be convicted by a qualified tribunal of an offence which, under the Immigration Act, would make it possible for the government to issue a deportation order against him.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Following the answer he just gave, could the minister tell the house whether it is the intention of his department to issue to Mr. Banks a certificate of good behaviour?

[Text]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the suggestion that Banks should be brought back and charged with attempted murder, I am wondering whether the minister can explain when Banks established his 25 years of domicile in Canada?

Mr. Tremblay: I said five years; "cinq ans".

Mr. Winkler: I am sorry; I misunderstood.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister concerning Mr. Banks.

As can be seen in Hansard of September 14 last, I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) a question worded somewhat like Mr. Todd's article referred to today. In fact

Inquiries of the Ministry

I asked the Minister of Justice whether he intended to set up a commission to inquire into the situation; the minister answered that he would consult his colleagues of the government. Could the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the Minister of Justice did consult his colleagues of the cabinet on that matter?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the hon. member, I should like to look into this matter and I may be in a position to reply tomorrow or Wednesday.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING POVERTY IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware of an Ontario federation of labour report to the effect that 2,500,000 Canadians live in destitution? If so, has the minister considered the establishment of a royal commission to examine and report on the question of poverty in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put that question on the order paper.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask him to tell the house if the government is at this time planning any special measures to alleviate the desperate financial situation affecting many Canadians?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I do not know to what my hon. friend is alluding.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. He said he did not know to what I alluded. I ask him if he has knowledge of the report issued by the Ontario federation of labour to the effect that at this time 2,500,000 Canadians are living in destitution and another 1,500,000 are living in utter poverty. In view of this alarming report, is the government going to do anything about it?

Mr. Gordon: I will first say that the government has already done a great deal about it. I should like to remind my hon. friend that the economy is in excellent shape, and that Canadians as a whole have never been as well off as they are now. I should like to suggest that there are many other things that should be done and will be done if this house gets on with its business.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Hamilton South asked the same question and I suggested that it be put on the order paper. Perhaps the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue would do the same.

Mr. Martineau: I have only one more non-controversial question. I ask the minister whether in view of the report the government is contemplating a program similar to the Johnson attack on poverty.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): May I ask a supplementary question in view of the minister's last statement concerning the Canadian people and their economic stability. Is he willing to come and say that at a meeting of my constituents at Thetford Mines?

Mr. Gordon: I am willing to say this before anybody in Canada. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, there are areas in this country that are behind others and should be helped, and I think the one my hon. friend represents is such an area.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): May we advertise that the minister will speak in Thetford Mines next Sunday? He will be welcome there to explain what he has just said in the house.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): I should like to know if the Minister of Finance would be willing to come into my area, and he will see that there are other areas like this in Canada.

AIRPORTS

ROUYN, QUE.—CONSTRUCTION OF TERMINAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the town of Rouyn submitted a request for the construction of a terminal building at the Rouyn airport and, if so, does the minister intend to grant such a justified request on the part of the municipal authorities?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember having received any such request which, at any rate, should be addressed to the Minister of Transport. Since the latter is away, however, I shall find out and give a reply to the hon. member shortly.

[Text]

AIR CANADA

COST OF CHANGING MAPLE LEAF SYMBOL ON PLANES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works a supplementary question. Can he tell the house the cost of affixing the new emblem, comprised of a maple leaf and a split circle, on the aircraft of Air Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This also is a question for the order paper.

COMBINES

CHANGE OF JURISDICTION OVER RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice, but in his absence and the absence of the parliamentary secretary I should like to address it to the Acting Prime Minister or the Acting Minister of Justice. My question deals with a speech made by the Minister of Justice at Montebello on Friday, October 2. Is the government giving present and active consideration to changing its jurisdiction in respect of restrictive trade practices by means of the section dealing with trade and commerce under the British North America Act, as the minister's speech indicated?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I will take the question as notice.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INQUIRY AS TO SUPPORT FOR SUGGESTED YOUTH PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State relating to an article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of October 3, under the caption "Youth parliament on hill". It deals with the promotion by Mr. William Fair of a Canadian centenary youth parliament, and indicates widespread support. Will the minister indicate whether the federal government, his department and the department of the Prime Minister endorse this project?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper. There is no immediate urgency in that regard.

FISHERIES

REPRESENTATIONS OPPOSING LANDING OF FISH BY FOREIGN FLEETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries. I wonder whether the minister has received representations over the week end from the fisheries council of Canada expressing strong opposition to the landing of fish in Canada by foreign fleets and uneasiness over the minister's statement on this point on September 24. If so, what is his view on the matter?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I did in fact receive a letter this morning from the fisheries council of Canada, and in my reply I referred to the statement I made in the house on September 24 during the discussion of my department's estimates. Hon. members will recall that I stated then that this whole matter was being studied by an interdepartmental committee, and at the time I also brought to the attention of the house some of the objections and problems which would result if such a practice were established.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

APPEARANCE OF JUSTICE MINISTER ON PROGRAM "THIS HOUR HAS SEVEN DAYS"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Will the Secretary of State ascertain from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation whether it has received a complaint from the Minister of Justice or from anyone acting on his behalf with respect to the part that the Minister of Justice took in last night's program entitled "This Hour Has Seven Days"?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will be very pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT ACTION RESPECTING POULTRY AND CATTLE PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture based on representations made to me by a number of farmers on my return to my constituency this past week end. As a result of the perilously low prices for fowl and beef cattle is the minister considering any immediate action to alleviate the pressure on the farmers?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in so far as beef cattle are concerned they are supported under the stabilization program. The situation is that for most of the summer and a great deal of the spring beef cattle in the United States were much higher than they were in Canada. We are fortunate in that the consumption of beef is up about 9 per cent since June 16, and we have been able to consume all of the meat produced. Otherwise the situation would have been much worse. We have to thank our buoyant economy for that favourable situation.

In so far as poultry are concerned, I have met the people who seem to be in the worst trouble, the turkey producers. We are concerned about this situation. They have protection amounting to about 7½ cents to 8 cents a pound over United States turkeys. We are watching the situation very closely, and if we have to make a move we certainly will.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Did I understand him to say that we were fortunate in that certain classes of beef were selling for $6 or $7 less than they were a year ago?

Mr. Hays: No, I did not say that, Mr. Speaker. If I did, I did not mean to. The price of beef cattle today is about $22 or $22.50 for reds and blues at Toronto, and generally there is a difference of about 2½ cents a pound caused by freight rates from the west to the east. Prices of livestock in the United States were about $4.25 a hundred below ours and, of course, they started to move into Canada. This condition existed in the early part of the year, when we imported something like 30,000 head. There are some of our cattle now moving into the United States as their market has firmed up. We hope and believe this market will continue, and that there will not be much change in the price of beef cattle between now and next spring.

FINANCE

SUPPORT FOR BRITISH CURRENCY DURING ELECTION PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Will he tell the house what arrangement has been made among the central banks of Canada, Belgium, France, Italy, The Netherlands, Switzerland and West Germany, to quote the press dispatch, "against the possibility of speculation arising in the exchange markets during the election period" in the United Kingdom? Can the minister say what is the nature of these arrangements?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada and the central banks of the other countries to which the Leader of the Opposition referred have entered into arrangements of a temporary character to provide support to sterling, if it is needed, against any possible speculative pressures.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That much appeared in the newspapers. What is the nature of the arrangements that have been made; and do they result from the fear of the British government that the same kind of manipulation that caused a run on the Canadian dollar in 1962 during the election of that year might occur during the election campaign in Great Britain?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, my recollection of the circumstances in 1962 is that the financial affairs of the country had been thoroughly badly managed, and that was the cause of the difficulty. I would not like to suggest that the same situation applies in Great Britain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is not for me to answer the hon. gentleman in kind, but he has made a mess of the finances of this country. He incited me to say that, and I did not want to say anything that would cause him to feel an unnecessary degree of immodesty. I would ask him this question. What is the nature of the arrangement that has been made? Does the minister not know what the arrangement is?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I know what the arrangement is.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right.

Mr. Gordon: The central banks of a number of countries have agreed to make certain credits available to the Bank of England in the event that there should be speculative pressures against sterling. If there are no speculative pressures against sterling nothing will have to be done. If there are, then the central banks to the extent of their commitments will be able to come to the assistance of the Bank of England.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the extent of the commitment by the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, these are subjects which, in the best interests of international finance, I think it would be preferable not to go into in detail. The Bank of Canada has every right under the law to make credits available, and it is exercising that right. I expect that in due course after the present temporary difficulties have passed the bank will be making a full report.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that our international deficit on non-merchandise account for the first six months of this year is now placed at $518 million, which is about $86 million higher than for the same period last year, is the minister taking any steps to protect the Canadian dollar in the event of pressures being brought to bear against it?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend is correct in comparing the situation for the first half of this year with that for the first half of last year. However, he will allow me to remind him that this difficulty occurred during the first quarter, and that in the second quarter the situation was better in 1964 than it was in 1963.

With respect to steps being taken to protect the value of the Canadian dollar, I would remind the hon. member that the official holdings of gold and United States dollars, which are made up of the holdings of the exchange fund, the Minister of Finance and the Bank of Canada, were some $2,624 million in terms of United States dollars at the end of September, a substantial increase over the corresponding amount at the end of August. I am quite confident in saying that the position of the Canadian dollar is very strong.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question. He has just stated that the Bank of Canada has all the required authority to grant or make arrangements to grant credit to England under the present circumstances.

In the interest of international finance, however, he cannot reveal to what extent Canada is participating in this arrangement.

Perhaps he could tell us, however, always in the interest of Canada, whether interest will be charged on credit granted by the Bank of Canada, and whether such amounts will be loaned or given in order to prevent the fluctuations or speculation he referred to?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: It is quite possible no amount will be lent. There is merely an arrangement for the Bank of England to call on the central banks of other countries, including Canada, for assistance in the event of need. I would remind my hon. friend that Canada was in the same position not so very long ago, and we were grateful to the central banks of other countries for making similar facilities available to us. This is a movement, I would say, in the right direction and one in which Canada should be very pleased and happy to be in a position to participate.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. If this assistance, in the event it is called for, is given to the Bank of England will it be in addition to assistance given by the international monetary fund, or will this assistance be given through the international monetary fund?

Mr. Gordon: This assistance about which we are talking is quite separate and distinct from any assistance that may or may not be available through the international monetary fund.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask a supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister if it is not true that at the time to which he referred just now, when Canada was in difficulty, part of the effectiveness of the stand-by agreements that were made was their publication? I should like to ask why he considers it would not be in the public interest for prospective speculators to know the extent of the stand-by agreement that Canada has made with Great Britain.

Mr. Gordon: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would not be for me to indicate what the situation was or what the motivations were that led to the decision on the part of Canada to make these stand-by arrangements known to the world in June of 1962. In this particular case I believe—this is merely an off the cuff or voluntary statement—that perhaps the British do not feel the situation in so far as sterling is concerned at the present time is anything like as critical as the exchange crisis in which this country was involved in the summer of 1962. In any event, if any such statement were to be made the initiative should come from the country that is making the arrangements with the other central banks to assist that country in the event of need.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—ELIGIBILITY OF QUEBEC STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I should like to answer a question asked on Thursday by the hon. member for Royal concerning the position of Quebec students who wish to obtain loans under the Canada Student Loans Act and attend universities in New Brunswick. The Quebec plan for loans to students referred to in the question is entirely within the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec. Accordingly I am unable to answer any question concerning the application of that plan to students from Quebec.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ASSISTANCE TO MEDICAL SCHOOLS AND MEDICAL RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The hon. member for Simcoe East asked a question about instituting immediately a program for the training of more doctors and to explore the question of having medical schools operate for a full term of 12 months rather than 8 months. My hon. friend is not in the house, but perhaps he will read the answer in Hansard.

This is a question which comes under one of the subjects dealt with in the recommendations of the report of the royal commission on health services, with which the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare dealt in statements to this house on July 22. These recommendations, which are primarily the concern of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, are presently being reviewed by the government in its study of that report.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO ATTACK ON R.M.C. CADETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can he clear up any puzzlement in connection with the rather brutal attack in Montreal on the cadets from the Royal Military College, and just give us the assurance this is an ordinary criminal matter rather than something with military or political significance?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): The investigation is under way, and I am afraid I cannot yet give any assurance to the house. Certainly if when we get the facts they prove it is a criminal matter, as it appears to be on the surface, every possible step will be taken to see that the guilty people are brought to justice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. member for Mégantic if this matter is really pressing?

Mr. Langlois: I think you will be able to judge that for yourself, Mr. Speaker. My question relates to question No. 1,381, which has been on the order paper since June 26. I should like the Minister of Public Works to tell me if he will be able to answer it before next June 26.

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that I will attend immediately to this matter.

The hon. member undoubtedly knows that the parliamentary secretary got in touch with him with respect to this matter in order to clear up some of the questions he asked. We contacted the local office several times and we should be in a position to give him an answer next time.

FARM MACHINERY

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR PURCHASES BY SYNDICATES

The house resumed, from Tuesday, September 29, consideration in committee of Bill

No. C-121, to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates—Mr. Hays—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, when the committee was considering this bill last week hon. members raised a number of questions, and if the committee is agreeable I think it would save time and satisfy most of their objections if I were to make a short statement at this stage dealing with the matters already raised.

The Chairman: Is this agreeable to the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hays: We are dealing with clause 2, but since it is closely related to clauses 3 and 9 I hope hon. members will permit me to refer to whatever extent is necessary for clarity, to those clauses as well.

Several hon. members have questioned the provision in the bill that the definition of farm machinery should be set by regulation instead of being spelled out in the bill. There are excellent reasons and excellent precedents for this approach. The main reason, as I should think lawyers would understand better than anyone else, is to ensure the greatest possible flexibility in the use of this legislation.

I think most informed persons recognize that to define is to limit. I admit right away that a definition set by regulation could turn out to be just as limiting as a definition set by parliament, but if a definition set by regulation does turn out in day to day experience to be faulty, then it can be revised and broadened a lot faster than if it were set out by law. If, for example, we did write a legal definition of "farm machinery" into this bill, what if it overlooked three or four machines which turned up in loan applications a week after the bill became law? The only way these machines could then be made eligible would be to come back to parliament and go through the whole process of having this bill amended. Even then there would be no way of being sure that we would not run into a similar situation the week after such an amendment had been passed.

I think all hon. members should be able to see from this how much more flexible the administration of this legislation will be by leaving the definition to be set by regulation. By leaving the definition up to the administration of this legislation we are making it possible for the definition to be revised according to day by day experience, and to be revised quickly and easily.

That is the main reason for taking the approach we have. But there is also a very good precedent for taking this approach, a precedent already approved by parliament and well proven in actual operation. This is the precedent we find in the Farm Credit Act. In section 19 of the Farm Credit Act the definition of "farm equipment" is left to the regulations. I am sure all hon. members would agree that this approach has proven very successful in the Farm Credit Act, which is a good act. It was passed by the previous government, but it is still a good act and I don't mind saying so.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the committee to let us proceed in the same way with this bill. Because of the need for flexibility in this program, and because of the rapid development of new machinery, a legal definition written into this act now could seriously restrict the adaptability of the program.

Hon. members have also questioned the provision in the bill that the terms and conditions of a syndicate agreement should be set by regulation, instead of being written into the measure as law. Again we believe there are excellent reasons and excellent precedents for this approach. The most obvious reason is that this provides greater flexibility in dealing with farmers' applications for loans under this bill. But a precedent can also be found in the Farm Credit Act, again a precedent approved by parliament and well proven in actual operation. We believe this is the only sound approach we can take to ensure that the program, a new and experimental one, can be revised and improved as experience dictates.

Besides leaving the definition of "farm machinery" to the regulations the Farm Credit Act, in section 11, confers other rather extensive discretion on the Farm Credit Corporation. This discretion, which is not subject to approval by governor in council, includes the authority to prescribe the forms of mortgages and agreements which farmers make with the corporation.

I believe this was one occasion when the previous government showed a lot of common sense. I am convinced, and I am sure everyone familiar with the great variety of the farmers' credit needs would agree, that this kind of flexible approach is essential for success in any farm credit program.

This is why we have proposed that the matters to be covered in agreements under the farm machinery syndicates bill should also be left to the administrators, to the people dealing directly with the farmers.

Naturally we have given very careful consideration to the general terms which the regulations will require in the agreements. Farmers forming a syndicate will have to make provision for such items as the rights and liabilities of syndicate members, including the interest in it of each member; insurance of the property against fire, and of the syndicate against public liability; the addition of new members; the withdrawal, death, insolvency, retirement or incapacity of a member for any cause; the dissolution of a syndicate; the holding of syndicate business meetings; the election of syndicate officers; the procedures in the event of default by an individual syndicate member; maintenance and sale of machinery; keeping proper records and accounts.

These are some of the general terms. But I am sure hon. members would not want to dictate to farmers in advance every detail as to how each syndicate must organize to meet these general terms. In administering the program the Farm Credit Corporation will of course suggest various ways in which these general terms can be met. For example, suppose a member wants to withdraw from a syndicate because he has sold his farm, or does not need the machinery any longer for some other reason. The syndicate agreement could include a provision for any member to withdraw as long as he could make a mutually satisfactory arrangement with other members to take over his share of both the assets and the liabilities, or for another farmer acceptable to the other members to take his place. In other words, since he would have an equity in the net worth of the syndicate he would be able to dispose of it to the remaining members or to another farmer.

But farmers themselves might like to make other arrangements. By leaving the terms and conditions of agreements under this bill to be set by regulation, by the administrators, we provide the farmers the freedom to make any reasonable arrangements they and the corporation see fit.

I think it should be obvious that if we tried to fix, by legislation, the exact nature of agreements which the farmers should work out among themselves we would be severely restricting the program and could very sharply reduce its value to our farmers.

[Mr. Hays.]

Several hon. members have questioned the provision for joint and several liability of syndicate members. This is referred to in clause 3 of the bill. But the question of liability is also inherent in clause 2, because the syndicate agreement as referred to in this clause is in fact a form of partnership agreement with obvious liability implications.

Obviously it is essential that there be some formal agreement among farmers intending to own and operate machinery on a co-operative basis. Several approaches are possible. We could have asked the farmers to form a limited company or corporation. We could have asked that the farmers incorporate themselves as a co-operative. But either of these approaches would have involved a great deal of extra time and expense for the farmers. Either of these approaches would have been clumsy and slow. We want to cut out all the red tape we can in this program. We want to be able to handle the farmers' loan applications just as quickly as possible.

Both these approaches are obviously loaded with red tape and delay, especially for small farmers who might only want to get together to buy one or two machines. We do not mind seeing lawyers make a decent living. I have known lawyers who are very nice people. Some of my best friends are lawyers. But this is legislation for the farmers, and we have done our best to make it as simple and convenient as possible for the farmer to use.

The Farm Credit Corporation will, of course, be in a position to suggest the form of a general agreement which farmers may follow in setting up a syndicate. If a large number of farmers decide to set up a syndicate to share a large amount of machinery where a lot of money is involved they may want to hire a lawyer to help them. But in most cases we believe the farmers, in consultation with the Farm Credit Corporation, should be able to draw up the necessary agreements without legal advice.

We tried to imagine, for example what farmers in the Atlantic provinces would say if we asked them to form a company just to buy a potato planter or a potato digger; or if we asked farmers on the prairies to form a company just to buy a grain cleaner or a grain dryer. It seemed to us that the best, the simplest and most convenient approach was to require only that farmers set themselves up in a partnership agreement to borrow under this legislation.

Partnerships are regulated under provincial law, and in its lending operations under this program the Farm Credit Corporation will operate within the scope of provincial laws. It may help if I point out that farm machinery syndicates in Britain were organized by the farmers and the farmers' unions, and that the farmers themselves, after looking into this very thoroughly themselves, decided from the start that making individual syndicate members jointly and severally liable was one of the most important factors in ensuring the success of these syndicates.

We have a Reading University report on British farm machinery syndicates which says "The key to the problem of credit was the joint and several liability of the participating farmers working together in owning and operating a particular machine as a specific and restricted partnership." These British farmers saw for themselves that if they were going to work together in this way they would also have to share the financial responsibilities. I think our farmers are just as bright as British farmers and just as capable of understanding this. In fact I am sure no Canadian farmer would want to go into one of these deals unless he was sure his partners were going to have just as much at stake in the success or failure of the deal as he had.

And, after all, how much risk is this going to involve? I think hon. members should remember that ordinarily the assets of one of these syndicates will always be greater than its liabilities. These loans will cover only 80 per cent of the machinery cost from the start, so the assets of a syndicate will be greater than its liabilities from the beginning. With regular repayments slightly higher than the rate of depreciation for the machinery the assets should be worth more than the balance of the loan right through until the loan has been paid off. Furthermore, the fact that a syndicate's members know they are jointly and severally responsible is obviously going to do a lot to ensure that every member sees that the machinery is well maintained. They will all own it, and every one of them will understand very well, I am sure, that keeping it in good shape is the best way to protect their individual interest in the syndicate.

I know farmers pretty well. I don't think any of them are going to enter one of these deals without sizing up their partners pretty thoroughly. I think the judgment each farmer exercises with respect to his prospective partners will probably be the best guarantee we can have that these syndicates will be a success.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, after the most careful consideration the government feels certain that the joint and several liability provision will not present any problem to any individual farmer wanting to take part in one of these loans. In fact we think this provision might easily prove to be one of the essential factors in the success of this program by offering some real encouragement to syndicate members to work together and solve in a friendly, neighbourly way whatever problems might come up.

Trying to limit the liability of an individual member to only his individual share in the syndicate poses some serious problems of administration. It would involve far more red tape both for the corporation and for the farmers. It could also open the way to bad situations among members of a syndicate. If something happened to make one member decide he wanted to get out, for example, he could be in a position to tie up all the assets of the whole syndicate if there were only limited individual liability. The corporation, to protect the interests of the taxpapers in recovering these loans, might have to seize the machinery because of bad faith by only one member.

In other words, limiting the liability as suggested by some hon. members could put one individual syndicate member in a position where he could keep all the other members from continuing to use the machinery. By making all syndicate members equally liable no individual member will be in a position to spoil it for the others, if by any chance this kind of a situation did arise. The remaining members could assume the share in both the liability and the assets of a defaulting member, and in this way protect their investment with the least possible trouble.

There could be another real benefit from taking the approach to syndicate liability proposed in the bill. It could very well help some farmers benefit from this type of credit who would not be able to qualify for credit on their own. Consider, for example, the case of a young farmer who has used up all his personal credit in order to get started in farming. His neighbours, who may be well established farmers, know him personally and have a high regard for his ability and integrity. They may be perfectly willing to join with him on a promissory note for one of these loans because they know him. And, because of the faith shown in him by his better-off neighbours, through their willingness to back his credit, the corporation could grant him credit for which, on his own, he would not qualify.

In concluding my remarks on this point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer to a suggestion by the hon. member for Acadia that we should not be asking for a promissory note under this bill because it is not required under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The hon. member is as well informed on this as he is on other matters. Section 9 of the farm improvement loans regulations states very clearly that a promissory note shall be made for a farm improvement loan. In fact, as anyone who has ever borrowed from a bank should know, it is common banking practice to require a promissory note from any borrower. I think I should also point out that when two farmers join to obtain a farm improvement loan to buy machinery, they are held jointly and severally responsible for repayment of the loan.

Mr. Chairman, I feel sure we can satisfy any further objections raised by hon. members as the committee continues its examination of this bill. I appeal to all hon. members that they then let this bill pass and give the farmers a chance to try this out. Let us give our farmers a chance to test this new program in action. The farmers of this country are the only ones who can put this bill to the real test.

Mr. Baldwin: We have all listened with great interest to what the minister has just said. I am afraid if the answers and explanations he will be asked to give later on are no better than those he has just given, the bill is likely to encounter considerable difficulty.

I wish to take up the first point the hon. gentleman made. I speak not only as a lawyer—I plead guilty to that charge—but as one who farmed actively for eight or nine years before I became a member of this house. That was at a time when it was necessary to be a lawyer or an auctioneer to have enough money to be able to carry on farming operations.

The reasons given by the minister for not spelling out in detail, as far as possible, the meaning of what is contained in this legislation are the same as have been advanced year after year by officials of provincial and federal governments. They say, in effect "We know best. Leave it to us. If changes are required we will make the changes." I do not deny there are certain occasions in this complex and fast moving world when it is necessary to have power to make regulations as far as the machinery of legislation is concerned. Nevertheless, other considerations should apply to the basic essentials.

The minister has referred to clauses 2, 3 and 9; I hope I will have the same latitude accorded to me. With regard to these provisions I say that more than regulations are necessary. Even if this were the best government in the world—and we on this side, at any rate, have some doubts about that—I did not come here to allow the views of the government to be substituted for my own. I must say I have a good deal more confidence in the Farm Credit Corporation than I have in the government. My experience with that body has been excellent. The way they have operated, the co-operation I have received, and the way in which they have dealt with farmers has been such that I have a considerable amount of confidence in them. But I was not elected as a member of parliament to give this government a blank cheque for $25 million when the very basic essentials which comprise the heart of this legislation have not been clearly shown to us. This is where I make my stand.

I recognize that it will always be the function of the executive to initiate legislation, to bring it forward. This is not the function of a legislative body. It is for us to examine and analyse the legislation to see that it is complete, that all the essentials are there to make the legislation effective, worthwhile, and do that job it is supposed to do. I have strong doubts as to whether this is the situation here.

Let us look, for example, at the clause in question. I refer to clause 2. It says under (a):

"Corporation" means the Farm Credit Corporation;

I have no objection to that. Then it says under (b):

"farming" includes livestock raising, dairying, fruit growing and all tillage of the soil;

The minister did say the last time this matter was before us that this was the same definition that appears in the farm credit bill. I think he will admit that this is not correct; that the words "bee keeping" were added, and there is this distinction. However, that is a minor point and I do not stress it too much. Then (c) says:

"farm machinery syndicate" means an association formed (i) by an agreement in writing, approved by the corporation—

The type of association, the type of partnership, is going to be carefully fixed by the terms of this agreement. I quite agree with the minister when he says we should not expect parliament to spell out in complete detail all the fine print in such an agreement, but I do suggest it is essential for the government to say at this time what are the basic requirements they will insist upon so far as this agreement is concerned. This must be brought forward and demonstrated, bearing in mind that there is a basic distinction in this country between the common law provinces and the province of Quebec. I think this is a very important consideration which no parliament of Canada can afford to disregard at this particular time in the history of this nation. This clause says:

"farm machinery syndicate" means an association formed

(i) by an agreement in writing, approved by the corporation—

I am not content to let the Farm Credit Corporation approve in detail all that is going to be in this agreement. I suggest it is essential that the government should say "Here are certain minimum basic essentials which should be in the agreement", and spell them out, leaving it for the farmers themselves, as the minister pointed out, to fill out the rest of it. There are a great many details which will be peculiar to the nature of the transaction, to the nature of the farming being carried on, to the geographic situation where the farming operations are, which will be reflected in the agreement. But, Mr. Chairman, there are basic essentials which should be there and which it is the duty of the government to bring before us and say "We are asking that these be included in every agreement." Clause 2 (c) says:

(i) by an agreement in writing, approved by the corporation, between not less than three individuals

(A) who are engaged in farming independently of one another or who are members of a co-operative farm association—

I ask the minister now, does this mean that a syndicate can be composed of three or more people who are taken from a co-operative farm association, as defined by regulation? Does this mean that the co-operative farm association will be the syndicate; or does it mean that in order to qualify the individuals to fix their capacity and thus engage in a venture of this kind they must be members of a co-operative farm association? I ask the minister to consider this point carefully, because it is not made clear in the bill. I may be unable to see it, but it is not clear to me. Does it mean three individuals who are member of a co-operation farm association? Is it the three individuals who then comprise a syndicate, or is it the co-operative farm association which comprises the syndicate? Possibly the minister might like to answer that question before I proceed.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, they can belong to a co-operative or a limited company. The three members making up the syndicate could belong to other organizations. However, the three particular members who wished to purchase machinery under this bill would be the syndicate.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister, then, takes the position that you could take out of a farm co-operative association five members who would together form a syndicate. The syndicate would then be a separate entity and would have no relation at all to the co-operative farm association. Is that correct?

Mr. Hays: That is right.

Mr. Baldwin: If I am correct in this, then why in the name of heaven was it necessary to say "who are members of a co-operative farm association"? All you needed to say was "three individuals who are engaged in farming independently of one another". Perhaps I am reading into this something that is not there, but I simply cannot see the necessity for this inclusion. It seems to me to be superfluous.

Mr. Hays: They have to be farming independently. They could belong to a corporation that was not in the business of farming.

Mr. Baldwin: Then why was it necessary to put into this clause the words "who are members of a co-operative farm association"? If they are three or more individuals who are engaged in farming independently, why do you need to add "who are members of a co-operative farm association"? Surely if they are members of a farm co-operative association they are farmers and they are farming independently?

Mr. Hays: In this bill we do not say they are farming independently; we say that the syndicate must be made up of independent farmers. They could belong to an association and five of them could form a syndicate. But their main business is farming; in fact their business is farming.

Mr. Baldwin: Then the minister does envisage a situation where there is a farm co-operative association the members of which engage in farming on a co-operative basis.

They are not independent, in this case, as is suggested in the first part of this clause?

Mr. Hays: That is right.

Mr. Baldwin: Then I submit you have this very difficult result. You might have five men forming a syndicate, who in one of the aspects of the farming operation are members of an association probably formed pursuant to provincial law and regulation; but at the same time they are members of a syndicate formed under this bill. I suggest this could lead to very considerable anomalies with regard to the very basic essential of a farm co-operative association formed under provincial law. I assume the government intends to permit provincially formed co-operative farm associations to come under this legislation. But the basic essential there is limitation—

Mr. Douglas: I took it from the minister's remarks that they did not.

Mr. Baldwin: Then perhaps the minister would reply to that point.

Mr. Hays: There are very few co-operative farmers. We thought about this. We realized there might be some problems, but at the same time we think that in the initial stages we should stay with the idea that three individual farmers or more can form a syndicate. They could belong to any sort of organization, but when they become a partnership within the meaning of this bill they can buy machinery as a group to work among themselves. We think this is the way it should be in its initial stages.

Mr. Baldwin: I think the minister does contemplate, then, that this type of farm marketing association could be one initially formed under provincial law; but if three or more members desire to set up a separate entity and become a syndicate within the meaning of this particular bill, No. C-121, they will have the right, if they pass all the other requirements, to come in and be eligible for a loan pursuant to the provisions of this bill.

If I am correct in this you will have a situation where under provincial law these people deliberately belong to or join a farm co-operative association which has certain limiting conditions attached to it. They join it for definite reasons. One of the reasons is that there is a limitation on their liability. So you will find that in the one aspect of their agricultural business they are doing business as a co-operative farm association with a limitation on their liability; on the other they are a syndicate under this bill jointly and severally liable for the full amount of the moneys borrowed under this legislation. That is where I think anomalies are created. The minister can deal with this point later on if he sees fit.

I should now like to repeat certain points which were referred to by hon. members on September 29 when this particular clause was being considered. Initially provincial governments are charged with the responsibility of dealing with limited companies, co-operative associations and co-operative farm marketing associations. That fact does not preclude the federal government, in respect of matters which fall under its jurisdiction, from allowing the formation of joint stock companies and associations. However I think the minister and the government are going to run into a considerable amount of difficulty, as was pointed out on September 29, in respect of questions dealing with the capacity of members of the association, the rights of transfer, the rights of transmission of shares and voluntary and involuntary assignments when a syndicate breaks up in one way or another. It may break up voluntarily or involuntarily. There may also be difficulties because of an association or a syndicate incurring a charge which would make the balance of the members responsible. What is the right of one or two members to pledge the credit of the syndicate? There might also be difficulties in respect of bylaws, officers and meetings.

If one takes a combination of the agreement which is referred to in clause 2 (c) (i), together with the type of association which will be defined by regulation of farm marketing and co-operative marketing associations, he may well include within the four corners of these two essential aspects of the syndicate certain types of programs, associations or syndicates which are in direct conflict with provincial law. This situation was pointed out by the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue. I can envisage a situation where one might find a type of agreement brought to the corporation and accepted by the corporation which is in direct conflict with the laws of a certain province.

Just before lunch I had occasion to look at the co-operative association act and the societies act of the province of Alberta. They are both very complex and lengthy pieces of legislation, and I can envisage situations arising where there might be this kind of conflict. It seems to me the minister might well give consideration to what has been proposed—not spelling out in complete detail what will be included in the agreement, but at least stating that there shall be certain essential ingredients and that no syndicate formed pursuant to this measure shall be of a nature such as to be in conflict with the laws of any province.

Those two simple alterations might well meet some of the objections that have been raised. I admit that in so far as the definition of farm machinery is concerned, the language of this bill may be adequate. I do not think there will be any difficulty in that respect alone, but if that language stood by itself I would be perfectly willing to leave to the discretion of the Farm Credit Corporation under the supervision of the government the fixing of definitions from time to time. However, when one considers that situation, together with the type of agreements under which a syndicate is to be formed, and the definition of farm co-operative associations, indicating the type of association from which members may come to form a syndicate, in my submission we are placing too great a responsibility in the hands of the government. I cannot stand idly by and permit that to happen. I feel that I would be abdicating my responsibility as a member in delegating to the executive a function which we as a legislative body should exercise. I hope before we reach our consideration of clause 9 of this bill, which is the clause in respect of which I have indicated I intend to propose an amendment, the minister will give some further consideration to what has been said by myself and other hon. members.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might answer one or two of the questions raised in connection with provincial laws. Though not in detail, I have raised these questions on two occasions with the provincial ministers of agriculture. I can assure hon. members that we would not do anything that was not in keeping with provincial law. I have a great deal of respect for the hon. member who has raised these questions, and I can assure him that we have gone into these things very thoroughly. We think that in so far as this act is concerned, at least in the initial stages, we should go ahead on the basis of this bill.

We have considered co-operatives that are engaged in farming, as well as other business enterprises which are free to go to the industrial development bank, where they have limited liability and that sort of thing. This bill is designed after the British syndicates bill; which was drafted as a result of the wishes expressed by farmers and farm unions, and they felt that these syndicates would operate best if the members were severally and jointly responsible. There was a great deal of flexibility in so far as the regulations were concerned at least in the initial stages.

Mr. Baldwin: May I just make one comment. The British government operates under a unitary system and is not bothered with problems of division of responsibility.

Mr. Hays: I realize that fact.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question before he leaves that point? Do I understand from what the minister has said that a farm co-operative association cannot, as an entity, come under the provisions of this act?

Mr. Hays: That is right.

Mr. Douglas: Individual members of such a co-operative association can separately form a syndicate and take advantage of the benefits provided by this measure, is that right?

Mr. Hays: That is right.

Mr. Douglas: A co-operative association itself cannot come under this legislation?

Mr. Hays: No.

Mr. Douglas: In that event, why under clause 9 is the corporation, with the approval of the governor in council, allowed to make regulations, as stated in paragraph (b), for co-operative farm associations? Why does this have to be defined by order in council if a co-operative farm association cannot become a syndicate and obtain the benefits of this act?

Mr. Hays: I will have to ask you to repeat your question, as there were several people talking at once.

Mr. Douglas: Since a co-operative farm association cannot as a legal entity come within this act for the purpose of obtaining the benefits provided therein, why is it necessary under clause 9, paragraph (b) to give to the corporation, with the approval of the governor in council, the power to make regulations defining a co-operative farm association?

Mr. Hays: My officials point out that clause 2, paragraph (c) (i) (A) refers to those——who are engaged in farming independently of one another or who are members of a co-operative farm association, as defined by regulation, and

(B) the principal occupation of a majority of whom is farming, and

(ii) for the purpose of purchasing farm machinery for use primarily by members of the syndicate;—

Clause 9 of the bill gives authority for regulation in this regard.

Mr. Douglas: Why make regulations regarding co-operative farm associations if they cannot come within the act? It does not make any difference to the Farm Credit Corporation whether the three individuals making application farm separately, or what kind of farm association they belong to.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, as everybody realizes, of course, I am not a lawyer. However we told the Department of Justice the job we wanted to do, and when they sent back the draft legislation I went over all these points. They say that this takes care of the situation. If there are too many words or something like that, then I am at a loss to know why they were put in there. But the idea is that a co-operative shall not be entitled to use this legislation, although three or more of its members will be able to form a syndicate to purchase machinery under this legislation. This legislation provides that members of a co-operative will be able to do this sort of thing. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. Douglas: All I should like to say is that I think it is a great pity that the co-operative farm associations cannot come under this legislation. When the minister says they can go to the industrial development bank and borrow money I should like to know how many co-operative farms operating in this country have been able to borrow money from the industrial development bank. They might be able to borrow money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act or they might be able to borrow money from the Farm Credit Corporation for the purchase of land, but borrowing money from the industrial development bank is not easy for a co-operative farm group.

I think it is a great pity that the minister should shut them out. There are not many of them, as the minister says. There are between 25 and 30 in the province of Saskatchewan and there are a number of communal farms, such as the Hutterites and other such groups, which have set up a different type of co-operative farm. It seems to me that to bar them from coming under this legislation and make them act as individuals so that there are two entities on the farm, one the co-operative farming association itself and the other a syndicate buying machinery, is unnecessarily complicating the situation. I think these co-operative farms would get a great deal of use out of this legislation.

The same is true of co-operatives that have been organized for the co-operative use of machinery. I know that in the province of Saskatchewan there are between 300 and 400 co-operatives for the co-operative use of farm machinery. There are farmers who are already co-operating in the use of machinery which they have bought on a co-operative basis, and I take it they would not be allowed to come under this legislation if they applied as a legal entity. Again they would have to break up their organization and apply separately. I think the minister will find he has left out a very important group when he has shut out co-operative farms and groups of that kind.

While I am on my feet I should like to say that I think clause 2, the interpretation clause, lacks a great deal in terms of definition, and that too much power has been placed in clause 9 of the bill which gives the governor general in council power to make regulations providing the terms and conditions that a syndicate agreement must contain. This virtually means that by order in council the government is going to determine the terms and conditions under which people may form a syndicate. It seems to me that is legislation by order in council to the nth degree. Power is also given to define by order in council what the expression "farm machinery" means and what the expression "co-operative farm association" means. I would have thought these were definitions that should be in the interpretation clause—

An hon. Member: Pass now, draft later.

Mr. Douglas: —rather than leaving this to be done by order in council. I think this is a dangerous precedent for the government to seek and for the House of Commons to establish. I had hoped that the minister would put some of these definitions in clause 2 rather than leaving them to be made by regulation.

Mr. Hays: In reply to one question, no co-operative farm is being prohibited from using this legislation just because it is a co-operative farm. Individually they may use it and if they are farming separately they can use it. This was the sole purpose of the act. It was designed for the family farm right across Canada. I think there is some merit in the point the hon. member has raised but I think we would do better in the initial stages to confine the legislation to individual farmers in syndicates of three or more.

With regard to the second question the hon. member asked, I would point out that clause 3 (a) of the Farm Credit Act regulations provides as follows:

> For the purposes of the act and these regulations "co-operative farm association" means a co-operative association incorporated under the legislation of any province, the members of which are principally engaged in farming and the principal object of which is the carrying on on a co-operative basis of an enterprise devoted to production of agricultural products.

It is defined in the regulations under the Farm Credit Act, and in this case it will also be defined in the regulations.

Mr. Douglas: Is that definition in the act or in the regulations?

Mr. Hays: It is in the regulations.

Mr. Douglas: I do not want to labour the point but the minister said that anybody in a co-operative farm association—

The Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member questioning the minister on the same point?

Mr. Douglas: Yes, the same point. I want to say one word on it. I do not want to labour it. The minister says that people in a co-operative farming association can come under this legislation but they must do so individually.

Mr. Hays: That is right.

Mr. Douglas: I simply point out to the minister that if he had allowed them to come in as a legal entity it would have saved them and the government a good deal of work. Let me take the Matador co-operative farm association as an example. It is composed of 20 young veterans from the last war who set up a co-operative farm association. They have a very successful operation. This group is accustomed to carrying on all their business as a co-operative. The selling of their farm produce, the buying of their supplies and all their other activities are carried on on a co-operative basis. To become eligible under this legislation either all 20 of them must form a syndicate and apply or four or five of them must form a syndicate and apply. They would be operating two organizations, two different legal entities, one a co-operative farming association and the other a farm machinery syndicate, with two different sets of books and all the complications which it seems to me could have been avoided, simply by saying that a co-operative farm association might apply to come under this legislation as an entity and be considered a syndicate for the purposes of this act.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I have some remarks with regard to other matters, but I think the answer to the question that has been discussed during the last few minutes is found in the words "who are engaged in farming independently of one another or who are members of a co-operative farm association, as defined by regulation". I do not think there would be anything to prevent a co-operative farming group applying. They already have the set-up that the minister is requiring of other farmers. There would be nothing to stop them from doing so.

However, the thing that intrigues me about the bill is that it discriminates against the individual farmer. I suspected this when we were discussing it before and over the week end I called together a bunch of farmers in my constituency. We went over the bill and they pointed out one thing to me. If I understood the minister's answer correctly, at the present time a farmer can secure $15,000 under the Farm Improvement Loans Act as well as certain things under the Farm Credit Act, and this legislation is not supposed to have any effect upon whatever interest a farmer may have under these other pieces of legislation. Is that correct?

Mr. Hays: Yes.

Mr. Nasserden: Then the minister is saying to the farmers of Canada: As an individual you cannot secure any more credit to buy farm machinery unless you go together with your neighbours. That is discrimination against the individual farmer in the purchase of farm machinery. The minister says that at least three farmers have to come together and form a syndicate. An individual farmer, if he desires to buy a piece of farm machinery, cannot secure the $15,000 extra. This, in my opinion, goes against the grain of the thinking in western Canada at least. I will let the members from other parts of the country speak for the farmers in their area.

I see the minister is laughing. He finds it very amusing. I wonder if he would tell us if that is the intention?

Mr. Hays: I would be glad to do so. We have just completed a measure to increase the amount that could be borrowed under the farm improvement loans measure from $7,500 to $15,000. A farmer can now borrow up to $15,000 to buy machinery. I do not believe we are discriminating so far as this is concerned. Two farmers can join together and borrow $30,000 or three of them could borrow $45,000, aside from the fact that three farmers can join together to form a syndicate and borrow $45,000 under this measure. Evidently the hon. member is suggesting we should have increased the farm improvement loans to $30,000.

Mr. Nasserden: This is what you are doing for farmers who join together; each one can get $15,000 and three of them could get $45,000, and then they can borrow under the farm improvement loans measure and get another $45,000. Individual farmers cannot do this.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam raised a question about 20 veterans in a co-operative being unable to obtain a loan under this measure because they had formed a co-operative. Is it not correct that these 20 members could form a number of syndicates and thus borrow an aggregate amount that would perhaps be greater than the total amount available to a co-operative of 20 men?

Mr. Hays: They could do exactly as the hon. member suggests. They could form a syndicate of five or six and borrow up to $75,000. Then another five could form a syndicate and do the same thing. As long as they form a syndicate, the 20 men are not barred from borrowing under this measure.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): There would be considerably more available to them, isn't this correct?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): If I might proceed one step farther—

The Chairman: Order; I am sure there are many hon. members who want to speak on the same point and there have been five or six members who have risen within the last few minutes. Perhaps therefore I should recognize the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I listened with great interest to the remarks of the minister and his further explanation. It seems that we get explanations on the instalment plan during this debate. I believe it would have been much better if the minister had made a complete statement at the resolution stage. I listened with interest also to the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River because I believe he always makes a contribution to the debate, whether or not I agree with him. I thought he raised some worthwhile points.

It seems that the two points at issue are the question of co-operatives being able to borrow under the terms of this bill, as mentioned by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and the regulations. I believe any co-operative or farm organization should be able to borrow under this bill because, for instance, co-operative fruit growers might wish to buy a spraying machine or something of that nature. Then there is the question of the regulations, and this is causing some concern. I can well understand it.

I want to say that I am sympathetic to the principle of this bill. I recognize it is experimental legislation. Since the measure was first introduced I have done some reading on this question, particularly over the week end. I find that this type of legislation has been of benefit to farmers in other countries, and I can see that it could be of particular benefit, if we get the proposed amendments, to farmers I represent and others. Over the week end I was reading from World Crops, volume 2, in which there is an article dealing with farm machinery syndicates. I quote:

> This is an account of the organization and operation of farm machinery syndicates in Britain, which will be of immense value to small holders, market gardeners and small farmers in other countries.

The article goes on to deal with the first organization of farm syndicates in Hampshire, which happens to be the county from which I came. It says:

> The articles of association of Syndicates Credits Ltd., a non-profit making company, limited by guarantee and having no share capital, were drawn up for the Hampshire branch of the national farmers union and incorporated on June 8, 1955.

The article mentions that the legislation has been a great success and that the movement spread from Hampshire to several counties in England.

I was reading also from Scottish Agriculture, and there I saw a very interesting article which dealt with the question of regulations, the type of agreement, and so on. I am going to refer to this article and ask the minister if he has in mind regulations patterned somewhat along the lines of the regulations mentioned here. It appears that the legislation was passed in Britain, and then regulations were based on regulations surrounding a model agreement and model rules—I believe that is the term they used. I read them with interest. It mentions here that the syndicate has to get approval of the model agreement and rules by the department of agriculture and fisheries for Scotland. This approval was sought because of their interest in applications for building grants for machinery syndicates. Then, I quote:

There are two documents involved in the formation of a machinery syndicate, and both have been kept as simple as possible. A summary of these is given below.

I am going to mention the headings, and then I should like the minister to reply to a question I shall raise in this connection. Reference is made to the model agreement and the headings mentioned are: registered name and number; objects; membership; maintenance, use and disposal of plant; death or retirement of a member; dissolution; registration; evaluation of assets; arbitration; alteration of agreement; copies of the agreement, to whom they are distributed and so on.

Then, we come to the question of model rules, and these are rules with which I was particularly impressed. I was impressed with the care that had been taken in drafting them. I quote from the article:

The nature of the model rules will vary according to the type of machine, but every syndicate must formulate the basis of apportionment to members of the capital investment, maintenance costs and the use of the machine.

The article goes on to deal with the application of these model rules. I presume under these circumstances these are in the nature of regulations that affect the acts that have been passed in Great Britain and Scotland. My question is, what has the minister in mind with reference to the regulations and the model rules to which I have just referred? I do not know if his officials have studied these. Although I realize administrative details cannot be provided, I feel the members of the committee should have a clear understanding of what the regulations are going to be. It is for this reason I have raised this question, and I should like to get the minister's answer.

Mr. Hays: As I said earlier, Mr. Chairman, naturally we have given very careful consideration to the general terms which the regulations will require in the agreements. Farmers forming a syndicate will have to make provision for such items as the rights and liabilities of syndicate members, including the interest in it of each member; insurance of the property against fire, and of the syndicate against public liability; the addition of new members; the withdrawal, death, insolvency, retirement or incapacity of a member for any cause; the dissolution of a syndicate; the holding of syndicate business meetings; the election of syndicate officers; procedures in the event of default by an individual syndicate member; maintenance and sale of machinery, and keeping proper records and accounts.

We hope to distribute to farmers examples of the regulations which are in force in other countries at a time when they are forming a syndicate, for their consideration before they submit the terms of their syndicate to the Farm Credit Corporation for approval.

Mr. Douglas: The very list which the minister has read out as to terms of an agreement points out how impossible it would be to do the things he suggested a few moments ago. He spoke of a co-operative of 20 members which could break into four or five groups, each forming a syndicate. It is true that each group could then borrow more money, but what would be their position? Keeping the records of performance and carrying insurance would have to be done by each of the separate syndicates on a co-operative farm, and just imagine the confusion you would get if you had 20 men farming together, using syndicate machinery indiscriminately, so that one man on a co-operative farm might be driving machinery that did not belong to the syndicate of which he was a member, but rather to another syndicate on the farm.

If these 20 men are going to own this machinery co-operatively they have to own it as a legal entity. They cannot own it as four separate legal entities and keep all the records in four syndicates, with their co-operative association handling the machinery on a co-operative basis.

If the Farm Credit Corporation has made any study at all of the operations of these co-operative farms—and some of them have been in business for 15 to 16 years—if it has studied their business methods it should realize that under the provisions of clause 2(2) co-operatives are virtually eliminated from the provisions of this legislation. I believe the minister would be well advised if he added to the words in (A) where it says, "who are engaged in farming independently of one another," the words "or a co-operative farm association," in place of the words, "or who are members of a co-operative farm association." This would allow a co-operative association itself to apply to the Farm Credit Corporation for permission to become a syndicate. It would mean that the people who were operating the machinery, handling the insurance and keeping the books on it would be the syndicate, rather than having three or four syndicates on a co-operative farm, all trying to keep separate books despite the fact that they were jointly using the machinery.

Farm Machinery

Mr. Lambert: Has the minister consulted with the Minister of National Revenue regarding the tax position of a co-operative? A co-operative occupies a particular position with regard to taxes, but if it is eliminated from the operations of this legislation as a co-operative, and its members are forced to operate as syndicates, involving legal implications as to expenses and what have you, will it still be deemed to be a true co-operative, or will its members be deemed to be acting as individuals, thereby losing the value of their co-operative status? This is a narrow implication, and certainly not one that is on the side of agriculture, and it may go to the point of destroying that particular position of advantage that co-operative agricultural organizations may have.

Mr. Hays: The intent was that there would be no profit so far as a syndicate was concerned. Its members would be taxed as individuals. This is experimental legislation and we welcome all these suggestions, but we have to creep before we run. This was a point we discussed and we did consult the Minister of National Revenue. We were of the opinion that, so far as taxes are concerned, a syndicate in all probability would be a non-profit organization, with its members being taxed as individuals, the same as with any other partnership.

Mr. Douglas: On that point, since some of the members need not be farmers I take it these syndicates will do custom work?

Mr. Hays: They all have to be farmers. The majority have to have farming as their main livelihood, but they all must be farmers. However, they can lease equipment to another farmer, or anyone to whom they see fit to lease it.

Mr. Lambert: You can be a five acre farmer then?

Mr. Hays: That's right.

Mr. Douglas: The clause says, "the principal occupation of a majority of whom is farming." This means there are some who need not be farmers?

Mr. Hays: No, they must be all farming. The majority must be bona fide farmers. For example, there may be a young fellow 21 years old who decides he wants to farm and he has a quarter or a half section of land. He has no buildings on it, and has a job in town. Such a young fellow could be included in a syndicate, although ordinarily he would not be called a bona fide farmer.

Mr. Douglas: I hope the minister is right in his interpretation. It says, "the principal occupation of a majority—

Mr. Hays: Must be farming.

Mr. Douglas: —is farming." What about the minority? Are they non-farming? Are they businessmen?

Mr. Hays: They all must be engaged in farming. It says in (A), "who are engaged in farming independently of one another or who are members of a co-operative farm association, as defined by regulation—" and these are given in clause 9—and then in (B) it says, "the principal occupation of a majority of whom is farming."

Mr. Douglas: I take it all these syndicates would not be doing custom work?

Mr. Hays: They could well do custom work. If three farmers organized together as a syndicate to purchase farm machinery, and they had a neighbour they thought it better not to have as a member of the syndicate, they could well do his custom work.

Mr. Douglas: And what is their taxation position then? Would the revenue members get from a syndicate be subject to taxation.

Mr. Hays: I would leave that up to the Minister of National Revenue.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, just a few words to say that I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), especially with regard to the constitutional aspect of clause 2.

I wonder if the minister would have any objection to the addition, after paragraph (c) at the end of subparagraph (A), of the words:

All, according to the provisions of provincial legislation in such case made and provided.

The reason for that request is twofold.

First, the instance given by the minister to the effect that there is a similar British precedent or legislation in effect, is not valid under our federal system.

Second, I know that under the constitution, and although the federal government has concurrent jurisdiction in agricultural matters, the federal government has no residual jurisdiction as far as civil and property law is concerned, and this bill deals with civil and property law.

It would be a safeguard quite easily added to the bill and which, in my opinion, would make it more acceptable to the advocates of provincial rights.

I should like also to deal with another question, namely that of liability. I suggest that the legislation, as drafted, does not set any limit as far as liability is concerned. In other words, should a farmer become a member of this co-operative or syndicate that is mentioned in the legislation, he is liable not only up to the amount of his contribution but, in view of the fact that the liability is joint and several, he is liable up to the total amount of the loan and even beyond the amount to which he has committed himself. In other words, he becomes liable in case of insolvency on the part of his partners for more than the amount he has subscribed to personally, as he also becomes liable for the costs. Further, in the event of the death of one of the members of the syndicate, a very precarious and even unjust situation would arise for the widow and the dependants or the children of the deceased.

It seems, therefore, that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), to the effect that the loan should be granted to a syndicate and not to individual farmers would be preferable because, in this way, the already existing syndicates could take advantage of the legislation; in addition, the farmers who would sign up or become members of the syndicate would not incur any personal liability.

As the clause now stands, a farmer who, in good faith, becomes a member of this syndicate, is exposed to having, some time or other and especially when he least expects it, to face a request for reimbursement which could easily break him.

In my opinion—the minister has himself admitted that this legislation is in its experimental stage and that before running we should learn to crawl—it is up to the government to introduce legislation which is of real benefit to the farmer and which does not expose him to incurring financial losses at a later date.

I feel that these suggestions are relevant to this clause and that the minister should consider them carefully. And I submit that he should now move the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Peace River.

[Text]

Mr. Hays: We checked this with the Department of Justice and they assure us there is no infringement as far as civil rights are concerned.

In my opening remarks I thought I had explained our position with regard to the other question which the hon. member raised. I will repeat them for the benefit of the hon. member.

These loans will cover only 80 per cent of the machinery cost from the start, so the assets of a syndicate will be greater than its liabilities from the beginning. With regular repayments slightly higher than the rate of depreciation for the machinery, the assets should be worth more than the balance of the loan right through until the loan has been paid off. Furthermore, the fact that a syndicate's members know they are jointly and severally responsible is obviously going to do a lot to ensure that every member sees that the machinery is well maintained. They will all own it and each one of them will understand very well, I am sure that keeping it in good shape is the best way to protect his individual interests in the syndicate.

I know farmers pretty well. I don't think any of them are going to go into one of these deals without sizing up their partners pretty thoroughly. I think the judgment each farmer exercises with respect to his prospective partners will probably be the best guarantee we can have that these syndicates will be a success.

This was proven with regard to the syndicates in Britain. After the most careful consideration the government feels certain that the joint and several liability provision will not present any problem to any individual farmer wanting to take part in one of these loans. If another course were followed it might open the way to bad situations occurring among members of a syndicate. If something happened to make one member decide he wanted to get out, for example, he could be in a position to tie up all the assets of the whole syndicate if there were only limited individual liability. The corporation in recovering these loans to protect the interests of the taxpayers might have to seize the machinery because of bad faith by only one member. In other words, limiting the liability as suggested by some hon. members could put one individual syndicate member in a position where he could keep all the other members from continuing to use the machinery. By making all syndicate members equally liable no individual member will be in a position to spoil it for the others if by any chance this kind of situation did arise. The remaining members could assume the share of both the liabilities and the assets of a defaulting member and in this way protect their investment with the least possible trouble.

There could be another real benefit from taking the approach to syndicate liability proposed in this bill. It could very well help some farmers benefit from this type of credit who would not be able to qualify for credit on their own. I went on to explain circumstances in which a man might participate in a syndicate when ordinarily he would not be able to raise $15,000 under the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. Martineau: I thank the minister for his answer. But what would be the situation if, of three farmers forming a syndicate, one died and the other became insolvent? Would the third party be responsible for the entire debt? The minister told us that the assets would probably cover it. But he knows that the value of machinery depreciates considerably once it has been sold, simply because it has been bought and become second hand. In addition, the price which would be realized in a forced sale would probably be very low. Would the third party in such a case remain entirely responsible for the debt, the interest, and so on?

Mr. Hays: In the event of such a thing happening there would, in the first place, be a farm to be managed or disposed of, and I suppose that whoever was responsible would likely want to continue to use this machinery for some time. After all, we are dealing here with neighbours who are very close as far as these operations are concerned. Under the arrangements made to govern the British plan, such a situation as this was covered by the agreements. The hon. member for Cariboo suggested it should probably be taken care of by insurance, and we are looking into this possibility to see whether this can be provided for under the regulations.

I know such problems as these will arise. We shall have to deal with them as we come to them. But it seems to me the people who would be responsible for the farm of the deceased would want to share in the use of the machinery, and it seems likely that those concerned would wait to see what happened. Probably the syndicate would take in a third or fourth member.

Mr. Martineau: Is it not a fact that there is nothing in the law as it stands which would offer protection?

Mr. Hays: These situations would have to be covered in the agreement, I suppose. Knowing farmers as I do, it seems unlikely to me that they would overlook these things. I am sure they would be taken care of in any agreements passed by the officials of the corporation.

Mr. Forbes: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister one question for clarification. Can a farmer who has obtained the maximum Farm Credit Corporation loan of $55,000 and also a farm improvement loan of $15,000 be eligible for a further $15,000 loan as a member of a syndicate under this act?

Mr. Hays: Yes, that is so.

Mr. Forbes: I hope the minister realizes that this is a total amount of $85,000, which is a considerable amount of credit for any one individual.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would indicate if he would consider bringing forward an amendment to make available to an individual farmer the same type of credit that is available to a group organized as a syndicate under this measure?

Mr. Hays: No, not at the moment.

Mr. Nasserden: Could the minister give me the reason why he does not want to do that, Mr. Chairman? Surely there must be some reason for it.

Mr. Hays: The individual, of course, can borrow up to $15,000 under the Farm Improvement Loans Act; and this is twice as much as was the case three months ago. This particular bill is designed to help groups of farmers to buy machinery that ordinarily they could not afford to buy, which machinery can be used among themselves and would ordinarily only be used for ten days, 15 days or so in the year. We have spelled out the sort of equipment that can be purchased under this bill. This is what this particular measure is designed to do.

Mr. Nasserden: I have no objection to the minister doing it that way, except that he is discriminating against the individual farmer. You are forcing farmers to join together in order to secure this additional loan, and it is additional to what the individual farmer can secure. I think this is a very serious discrimination and is one that will concern not only farmers but farm organizations across this country.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the last speaker's objection, it must be realized that the amount of money that is borrowed must be related to the ability to pay back. It seems to me that the whole intent of this legislation is to unite two, three or four people so that their total responsibility individually is less. Certainly if we are going to get into a situation where an individual farmer is getting himself into debt without the use of machinery covering a large area, which this legislation contemplates, I think we are getting into an entirely new field. I also believe we must consider farmers as responsible individuals. I have a feeling through listening to this debate that we are trying to be godfather to the farmers and protect them from themselves. I do not think this is necessary at all. I believe that farmers are men who are mature enough—they are over 21—to look after themselves and enter into proper agreements.

As far as individual liability is concerned, this clause did concern me. I refer to the situation where death occurs. As the minister has said, they are looking into the possibility of providing insurance which will cover this particular aspect of the matter. This type of insurance is available to partnerships today from insurance companies. If you are in partnership you can get an insurance policy that will take over your liability and settle the debt. I think the government could easily follow the pattern of private insurance companies and in this particular case make certain that in the event of death the situation will not bring hardship to the other members of the syndicate.

There is one thing that bothers me in this connection. I refer to the matter of repossession. I think there should be in the regulations every conceivable protection for the farmer when it comes to the question of the repossession of any equipment. Having entered into this agreement, if circumstances arise which were not foreseen by the individuals—that is, in the event of something happening as a result of which repossession would be considered by the corporation—the farmer is now going to be left without any machinery with which to farm his land, if he belongs to a syndicate and the machinery is taken away. I believe some very sound measures of protection should be adopted in this regard.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, before clause 2 carries I have one or two points I should like to place before the minister. I am slightly confused with regard to paragraph (A) of clause 2. Why does it need the inclusion of the words, "who are engaged in farming independently of one another", when the minister in answer to a question earlier stated that 20 members of a co-operative could join together in five syndicates; they did not have to be farming independently of one another, as I understood him, as long as each syndicate formed a new entity. In other words, I understood the minister to say that five members of a co-operative could form a new entity; they would not have to be farming independently, but could still receive loans under this bill.

I am somewhat confused on this issue and fail to see the reason for the inclusion in paragraph (A) of the words, "who are engaged in farming independently of one another". I have seriously considered asking that the words after the word "farming" be struck out and words to the effect of "farm co-operative associations established under provincial law" be written in there. This would make the clause a great deal clearer than it is now. We now have paragraph (A) reading that persons farming independently of one another can form a syndicate and that members of a co-operative—although it is somewhat confused—can also join a syndicate and take out a loan. However, as a co-operative entity already registered under provincial law, they cannot. I believe, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam pointed out earlier, that this is hardly necessary. The minister is asking a group of people who are farming jointly to keep separate books with regard to machinery which they are all using together.

I believe that before clause 2 is passed this question should be clarified. Perhaps the minister, after the wise counsel he has received this afternoon on this subject, would agree to forgo the passage of clause 2 right now and bring in an appropriate amendment as suggested by the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. The minister could bring in such an amendment after the supper hour and we could readily pass it at that time. We could proceed with clauses 3 and 4 now, if members of the committee are prepared to do this. I see the minister shaking his head. It is a sad thing that he spent nine months in labour on this bill. I think the gestation period was hardly long enough; perhaps he should have been like a horse and spent 11 months if he shakes his head at a reasonable suggestion that has been put forward for at least an hour and a half or two hours this afternoon by some very learned, legal members of this house, and some very experienced administrators such as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has proven himself to be with regard to legislation.

Surely the minister should take the sound advice that has been offered this afternoon. Rather than moving the amendment myself I would ask for the co-operation of the committee in this regard. Rather than having a vote on the amendment, I ask for the co-operation of the committee for the clarification of this bill. Perhaps we could forgo any further discussion on this particular aspect of clause 2 and proceed with the other clauses of the bill. The minister could then consider this question during the supper recess from six to eight o'clock. Surely this is not too much to ask. During the two hour supper period, he could obtain the best legal advice possible and find some way in which paragraph (A) of clause 2 could be clarified. Then he could come into the house at eight o'clock and put the amendment before us. Surely, Mr. Chairman, in view of the advice that has been offered this afternoon, the minister can be big hearted enough, imaginative enough, to see the reasonableness of this suggestion and bring in an amendment that would clarify this situation.

Some members have referred to the insurance aspect of this proposed loan legislation. I should like to draw attention to the fact that the minister has indicated he will give consideration in this regard, but I feel that consideration could have been given during the nine month gestation period which preceded the birth of this bill.

This legislation is to be administered by the Farm Credit Corporation, and I cannot see why, as suggested by the hon. member for Cariboo, the insurance aspect was not dealt with before this bill was presented. The Farm Credit Corporation now has a package deal in respect of farm loans, which includes insurance. Under the provisions of this bill the members of the syndicate are jointly and severally liable for the outstanding amount of the loan. I think the liability should also have been secured by an insurance policy, provision for which perhaps could have been included in clause 6 of the bill, under the 1 per cent service charge. This could easily have been done by including the word insurance in that clause.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister is in a co-operative mood this afternoon and is prepared to give serious consideration to the several proposals put forward. He has had the benefit of some good legal and administrative advice, as a result of which perhaps he can clarify certain aspects of this proposal through an amendment which will be acceptable to the members of this committee and the farmers in this country.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, the insurance aspect has been taken care of in clause 3 of this bill which reads in part, "Every loan made pursuant to subsection (1) shall be secured by (a) a promissory note ... (b) such other security, including a mortgage—", and so on. In so far as the other question raised by the hon. member in respect of the independent farming of farmers of the syndicate is concerned, I suggest that if the hon. member for Acadia had six sons, each of whom farmed independently, they could form a syndicate and borrow $100,000 for the purchase of machinery.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In the event I had six sons who farmed on the basis of a co-operative association which held title to the land, could my six sons form a syndicate and benefit from the provisions of this legislation?

Mr. Hays: If you had two sections of land and your sons each farmed a quarter section independently, they could form a syndicate and borrow money under this act for the purchase of machinery.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I do not wish to prolong unduly the discussion at this stage, but I should like to have the situation clarified once and for all. It may be as confusing to many others as it is to me. If a co-operative association, comprised of my three sons and myself, or my three sons and three sons of another farmer, farmed land, the title to which was in the name of the co-operative association—you can tack any name you want on that association—would they be entitled to form another entity, call it a syndicate, and take advantage of the provisions of this act?

Mr. Hays: If those people were farming independently they could do so, yes.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): If my three sons and myself formed a co-operative association and that association owned the land, my three sons and myself could form a syndicate within the provisions of this act, provided we were farming four other quarter sections independently, is that right? Do I understand correctly that we would have to be farming other land independent of that owned by the association in order to form a syndicate for the purposes of this bill?

Mr. Hays: I think that point was raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. The members of a co-operative farm association could form a syndicate and borrow money under this act for the purchase of machinery.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It does not make any difference who holds title to the land being farmed, is that right?

Mr. Hays: Not necessarily.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Why does this bill exclude co-operative entities?

Mr. Hays: We are not excluding the members of a co-operative association, but we are excluding the co-operative as such.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Why are you excludind co-operatives as such if you are not excluding the members? Why should the members be required to keep another set of books, another set of repair accounts and incur a completely different set of liabilities? I suggest that would be at cross purposes to the co-operative association they had already formed. Why is that particular restriction necessary?

Mr. Hays: Perhaps I can answer your question in this way. In so far as a co-operative association is concerned, there is limited liability. This legislation is designed to provide a means of making loans to each member of a syndicate to the extent of $15,000 to be secured by a promissory note and a mortgage on the machinery. If the members of the syndicate were members of a co-operative farming association, as I understand the situation, their liability would be limited, just as the liabilities of a limited company are limited.

Mr. Douglas: Perhaps that difficulty can be avoided because the Farm Credit Corporation has the power to state the terms and conditions under which a syndicate can benefit through this legislation. If necessary the Farm Credit Corporation could stipulate that a co-operative farming association must apply any loan granted as a charge against its land and other assets.

The Farm Credit Corporation would be taking much less risk in dealing with co-operative farm associations, in view of the fact the land is owned by the association, as are the buildings, livestock and machinery, than in dealing with three individuals who are perhaps tenants and possess no other assets than the 20 per cent equity in the machinery purchased with the loan. If that is the best reason the minister can give for not allowing co-operative associations to become syndicates under this act, I suggest it is a very weak reason indeed.

Co-operative farming associations should be allowed under this act to become syndicates and to operate as syndicates. If in that instance the Farm Credit Corporation wants to impose some additional requirement with regard to security I am sure there would be no difficulty about that. But to exclude co-operative farming associations or, what is almost equally bad, require them to borrow money under this legislation as a different legal entity with the result that they will have to keep two sets of books, will have to have different insurance and will be faced with the almost impossible job of keeping this machinery, separate from the other machinery on the co-operative farm, since all machinery is used jointly, and to do this simply in order to comply with legislation which has largely been copied from British legislation and does not really apply to our situation here, will in my opinion put co-operatives in the position where they will not benefit from the act at all. Maybe that is what the government has in mind, but if it is I want to say this is discrimination against co-operative farms. I think co-operative farms should be encouraged rather than being discouraged, particularly the co-operative use of farm machinery.

I have gone over all this before and I am not going to go over it again, but I should like to put an amendment before the committee. I propose:

That the words "who are members of" in lines 17 and 18 of section 2, clause (c), be deleted.

It would then read:

(c) "farm machinery syndicate" means an association formed

(i) by an agreement in writing, approved by the corporation, between not less than three individuals

(A) who are engaged in farming independently of one another or a co-operative farm association, as defined by regulation.

Some further drafting may be required, but that would permit a co-operative association to apply as a legal entity.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Chairman, I would object to that simply because it would exclude members of a co-operative farm association.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, this clause does not discriminate against those people who belong to a co-operative. It does not discriminate. The hon. member for Burnaby-

Coquitlam referred to a co-operative farming venture in Saskatchewan with 20 members. Those 20 members in various syndicates of seven could, provided the corporation felt they were capable of repaying the loan and were in need of the equipment, borrow almost $300,000. If we were to do what the hon. member has proposed in his amendment we would limit the borrowing of this group of 20 people to $100,000.

We have looked at most of these problems and I agree that in a year from now we may be able to hurdle this one. We do not want to discriminate against the members of a co-operative. This is why they can as individuals form a syndicate and still be members of a co-operative doing exactly the same thing as their half dozen neighbours alongside of them. We feel we should give this legislation a trial on this basis and if merit dictates an amendment we are not only prepared to do so but are prepared a year from now to take the legislation and send it to the committee so that they may overhaul it.

The legislation is new and experimental. It is challenging. We think there is a great deal of merit in it if we are going to maintain the family farm in Canada. In addition, we are going to make it possible for those people who cannot afford to own large tracts of land to be on an equal basis with the farmer who has three or four sections, like the hon. member for Acadia. This will give the man with 160 acres an opportunity to be able to compete not only in the domestic market but also in world markets. For this reason I think we should leave the bill in its present form.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I am quite aware that the basic intent of the act is to help small farmers and this, of course, is most desirable. The primary purpose of the legislation should be to assist small farmers who cannot afford to buy the large and expensive machinery necessary today in order to farm economically.

Although the small farmers will get the greater benefit from this legislation, the legislation is not restricted to small farmers. It will also benefit the large farmer or whatever groups of farmers want to come together. So if we are going to give this opportunity to farmers generally it seems to me it is most unwise to rule out co-operative associations and particularly co-operatives for the co-operative use of machinery. These are all small farmers farming a quarter section of land and they have not been able to buy large diesel tractors. Consequently they have had to buy small tractors whose operating costs are much higher. For this reason they have formed co-operatives, but under this legislation they are not going to be able to apply as co-operatives. Co-operative farms are not going to be able to apply.

It does not seem to me to be sufficient for the minister to say: Let us take a crack at it and we will have a look at it next year. We are drafting legislation and surely when we are drafting legislation we ought to try intelligently to anticipate all the problems that will arise. Surely we should endeavour to see that the legislation will apply equally and equitably to all kinds of farmers whether they are operating on a co-operative basis, individually, or operating co-operatives for the co-operative use of farm machinery. I do not think that the minister or the department have thought through the implications of this legislation. By restricting it to three or more farmers who form a syndicate, and leaving out co-operative farm associations and co-operative associations for the co-operative use of farm machinery, I think they have overlooked something which has great promise for the stability of agriculture in the future. I hope the minister will consider looking at this amendment or some other draft that his officials may consider more appropriate.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister this question. If he is going to be so agreeable a year from now and send this legislation then to the agriculture committee, why is he not agreeable to sending it to the committee now, before it is passed by the house? Is there any reason in the world why it could not have gone to the agriculture committee in the first place to iron out some of the difficulties that are prominent in the bill? We are trying to keep people out of trouble, not trying to get them into trouble. It seems to me that the minister is leaving the field wide open for people to get into a lot of trouble they otherwise would not get into if the bill had been sent to the committee in the first place. The only reason the minister does not want it to go to the committee is that the opposition members do. There is no other reason that I can see. Yet he is ready to send the legislation to the committee a year from now.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam seems to have left the committee with the idea that co-operatives would be prohibited from coming under this legislation.

Mr. Douglas: As co-operatives.

Mr. Otto: This is not so, because if every member of a co-operative makes an application every member is jointly and severally responsible. There is nothing to prevent them from coming under the bill. They would not have to keep two sets of books. After all, the legislation says that three or more may apply. If there are 20 in the co-operative the 20 can go and borrow the money, and they can all sign. If every member of the co-operative signs it is tantamount to having the co-operative apply.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Why keep them out then?

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, the last statement made by the minister caused me a great deal of concern. He indicated that a co-operative composed of 20 members could secure $300,000 and I took him to mean that the government would give its blessing to that type of thing. Was I right in drawing that inference?

Mr. Hays: If a loan of that sort was justified to do the job they had to do, yes. If there are 20 farmers in a co-operative and they are farming 20 sections of land I can see no reason in the world why they could not possibly borrow up to $300,000 under this legislation.

Mr. Nasserden: Yet the minister would deny a farmer with one section of land $15,000 under this legislation.

Mr. Hays: He can get it under the farm improvement loans measure.

Mr. Nasserden: The members of a co-operative can also get it under the farm improvement loans measure.

Mr. Hays: I don't think so.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister doesn't know.

Mr. Nasserden: Do not tell us whether or not you think so; can they or can they not?

The Chairman: The hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Nasserden: I think my question deserves a better answer than—"I do not think so"—from the minister.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Just before we hurriedly pass the amendment, I may say that we see the Liberal backbenchers are wholeheartedly in support of the minister's nine months of labour in preparing this bill.

Mr. Greene: No split in this party.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is an interesting remark from the hon. member for Renfrew South. Last week he kept interrupting with remarks about the Bay street boys. I thought he had a little bit of a peeve on against the Bay street boys who refused him the leadership of the Ontario Liberal party. Evidently he has become reconciled now and says there is no split.

The Chairman: Order; may I bring to the attention of all hon. members the fact that we are now discussing an amendment moved by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The members across the way, Mr. Chairman, were trying to interrupt me and lead me astray while I was dealing with the amendment. I have not dealt with it at any length this afternoon. I have listened to the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam deal extensively with the poorly drafted clause that is before us. I have suggested to the minister in all sincerity that he and his officials look at this clause between six o'clock and eight o'clock and perhaps they could propose an amendment at eight o'clock. Surely, they could take advice that has been given by two learned gentlemen this afternoon.

Now, we see the members of the government hurriedly trying to push through this clause, not wanting to consult or take another look at a dream that might have entered their minds nine months ago. If I might continue the thought of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I may say that he mentioned the Hutterite colonies. He wondered if they could qualify as co-operative farms. The minister has suggested that a 20 member co-operative could borrow $300,000. Let us look at the Hutterite farm problem. Some of these colonies have 100 members, and if you divide that by seven you would find they could borrow $1,400,000 under this measure. If I am right, 100 members of a Hutterite colony, commonly referred to as a co-operative farm, could borrow this amount.

Mr. Hays: Perhaps I could answer the question now. Hutterite colonies are not constituted as co-operatives, nor are they constituted as limited farms, so under this legislation they would not be eligible for a loan.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I know the minister has a great deal of knowledge on most subjects, but I wonder if he is correct on that aspect of the Hutterite farm. He says it is not a co-operative nor is it a legal entity. I wonder if he is correct. I do not want to question his word. He has many competent legal advisers who drafted this particular piece of legislation to which many members have referred as being ineptly drafted. I will phrase my question this way. Could these Hutterite colonies form co-operatives under provincial legislation, and then could they then qualify by forming as many syndicates as they could form?

Mr. Hays: This is a hypothetical question, but if a colony wanted to become individual farmers, to break up the colony, they would be eligible to form syndicates the same as anyone else.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister is not answering my question. I am not suggesting that the Hutterites become individual farmers. He is not asking the members of a co-operative to become individual farmers. The phrase "farming independently of one another", means nothing in the definition the minister gave this afternoon. This phrase should not be in the bill because it is only confusing. If a Hutterite colony formed co-operative entity under provincial law and then split up to form as many syndicates as possible, could they borrow under this measure?

Mr. Hays: Yes, that is correct; they could.

Mr. Woolliams: I just wanted to ask the minister one question. He has said that as the bill is worded now and as the Hutterite colonies are constituted in Alberta, they would not be able to qualify.

Mr. Hays: Not as one individual farm, no.

Mr. Woolliams: They could as a colony?

Mr. Hays: They could if they were constituted as a co-operative.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, because my understanding, briefly, is that the Hutterites are incorporated by statute under the charitable enterprises act, or something like that, of the province. They are, therefore, really legal entities in that they can sign contracts as legal entities. They are like a corporation, except that they are not the type of corporation that shows profits when it comes to paying income tax.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): I should like to make it quite clear on the record that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam will drastically curtail the amount of credit available to a 20 member co-operative. Under the bill as it is now, a 20 member co-operative would be able to obtain approximately $300,000 in credit. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam will restrict this amount to $100,000.

Mr. Douglas: The minister could get around that very easily by prescribing two limitations, a limitation which may apply to a syndicate of six or seven members, and a limitation which may apply to a co-operative farm association of 20 members. You could have two limitations, one for a co-operative association and one for a syndicate.

Mr. Danforth: I should like clarification of that point. It has been said over and over again that this bill is primarily designed to help the small farmer. I should like to ask the minister if I am correct in assuming from the remarks he has made this afternoon that three farmers together can borrow only $100,000, which gives each one of them actual credit for $30,000. However, a co-operative farm consisting of 35 members may borrow up to half a million dollars. I should like this point clarified, because it is important so far as the small farm is concerned. Am I correct in assuming from the minister's remarks that it is possible for a farmer to borrow up to $15,000, but by taking seven members to form a syndicate a 35 member co-operative could form five syndicates and be able to borrow half a million dollars under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. Hays: In the first place, I do not think there are any 35 member co-ops.

Mr. Danforth: Well, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Hays: This bill says that a three farmer syndicate can borrow a maximum of only $45,000, and the limit for a seven member syndicate would be $100,000. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was speaking of a 20 member farm co-operative, and there are such big co-operatives in Saskatchewan. In speaking to his amendment, I said they would be able to form three sets of syndicates, two of seven members and one of six members, and the actual amount they would be able to borrow, at a maximum of $15,000 per person, would be $290,000. Under the suggestion that he offers this would be limited to $100,000. It is $15,000 multiplied by the number of participants, with a limit of $100,000, which would make for a syndicate of seven members, although alternatively the whole 20 members could each borrow $5,000, with a limit of $100,000.

This bill is designed to make it possible for small farmers to buy equipment in which ordinarily they do not seem to want to invest such an amount of money, because it is just not practical for one farmer to own a $10,000 machine.

Mr. Danforth: I know of a co-op with 435 members, but am I correct in my assumption that if a co-operative has 35 members it could break into five syndicates of seven members each, and thus borrow up to $500,000 under the terms of this bill?

Mr. Hays: I think we are talking about two different things. The hon. member is speaking of farmers' co-ops as such, and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was speaking about farm co-operative associations where 20 individual farmers join together.

Mr. Danforth: That is exactly what I am speaking of.

Mr. Hays: With 455 members?

Mr. Danforth: I said 435 members.

Mr. Hays: I am not familiar with that.

Mr. Danforth: This is my point. Will the minister say it is possible for a co-operative of 35 members to break up into five syndicates of seven members each and borrow up to $500,000?

Mr. Hays: Yes, as defined by the regulations, and if the Farm Credit Corporation felt there was justification for lending them this amount of money.

Mr. Nasserden: Was the minister of agriculture in the province of Saskatchewan consulted with regard to clause 2 of the bill?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I did not discuss the details of the bill with the provincial ministers. I discussed it generally with them at the meeting in Newfoundland when all the ministers met in their annual get together.

Amendment (Mr. Douglas) negatived: yeas 31; nays 61.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, government members say "filibuster," but there is another important aspect to this. I would like to ask the minister some direct questions on how this affects a farmer's credit. This afternoon I heard him say that if the other members of a syndicate were willing, they could take in a young farmer who is just starting out as a farmer. Is it possible, as intimated by the minister, for an individual to come in as a member of a syndicate and borrow money under the provisions of this bill, without having any assets that would be taken into consideration by a bank? In other words, can a young farmer starting out come in without assets and borrow under this legislation? If this is not the case, then is it not true that the other members of a syndicate would in effect be countersigning such a young farmer's promissory note?

Mr. Hays: This is exactly right.

Mr. Danforth: I would like to carry that a little further. Do I understand from the minister that a man can come into a syndicate, have no assets, and borrow $15,000 under this bill?

Mr. Hays: There are joint and several liabilities. The machinery becomes an asset along with the farmers' notes, and I may tell the hon. member I have a great deal of confidence in the farmers of this country. I think they would be careful before they go into such a syndicate, and would only buy the machinery they need. You must remember that although the Farm Credit Corporation has lent something like $380 million to farmers, their bad debts are something like only $7,000. Farmers are good credit, and farmers who sign promissory notes live up to their obligations. I have no doubt this legislation will work well, as it has worked in other countries.

Mr. Danforth: This is an interesting proposition and I would like to carry it further. Take the example of the young farmer and a three man syndicate borrowing $45,000. They each may sign a promissory note, but only one man in the syndicate may have assets. Is that possible?

Mr. Hays: They are borrowing the money for the purposes of farming and they are buying machinery for the farms they operate. I think this is quite a hypothetical thing. Take any three or four farmers who are organizing a syndicate to purchase the machinery they require. They will take a very good look at anyone they invite to join their syndicate. We do not have any doubt that the farmers will be responsible, that the loans will be paid, and that this legislation will be a help to them.

Mr. Danforth: I am sure the minister will have patience with me as I try to develop this point. I am interested in the effect of integrated farming in my own province of Ontario. If what the minister says is correct, would it not be possible for one individual, by making use of two other persons who have no assets but who are connected with farming, to borrow $45,000 whereas he himself might only be able to borrow $15,000?

Mr. Hays: If his assets justified such a loan. He would be a farmer; he would have land. The corporation would not be lending this individual anything if he did not have a farm. As the bill provides, he must be a bona fide farmer.

Mr. Danforth: The minister has told us that a syndicate member does not necessarily need to have bank assets, because his signature is backed by the promissory note signed by his partners in the syndicate. What happens if the situation is the other way round? What happens if a farmer is a member of a syndicate and has signed a promissory note for $15,000? What happens if he goes to the bank to borrow money for fertilizer? Is this liability held against him? Is not the entire liability of the syndicate held against his individual credit? Supposing the promissory notes are for $75,000. Is not this sum an obligation against the credit of each individual member of the syndicate when he goes to a bank to borrow money for seed or fertilizer?

Suppose a farmer wishes to borrow money through the Farm Credit Corporation. He has to list all his liabilities. Is not his total commitment to the syndicate taken into consideration by the corporation? The minister has told us that this measure does not affect the workings of the Farm Credit Corporation or the Farm Improvement Loans Act, but in any dealings I have had with the corporation I have found it to be interested in the total liabilities of a farmer making application for a loan. I should like the minister to give the committee a definite statement telling us how a farmer's credit would be affected by these provisions.

Mr. Nasserden: I should like the minister to tell us what is the total amount of money a farmer can secure under the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act and under the present bill, if it is passed as it now stands. If a farmer secures the maximum amount, what is the total he can secure?

[Mr. Hays.]

Mr. Hays: He would be able to borrow $55,000 as a supervised loan if he were under the age of 45, less the amount of his down payment. He would be able to borrow $15,000 under the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act and he could become a member of a syndicate which could allow him to use $15,000 for the purchase of machinery. Apart from that, I suppose if he wanted to own a house in town and buy a toaster and a radio and all that sort of thing, and if the dealers concerned thought he was worthy of credit, he could borrow to pay for these articles, too.

Mr. Nasserden: The minister finds my question amusing, but he did not answer it. The question I asked was this: What is the total amount a farmer could borrow under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and under this legislation if it is passed? What would be the maximum amount? I am referring to money borrowed by one individual, supposing he entered one of these syndicates.

Mr. Hays: Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act I think the limit he could borrow would be $15,000. If he became part of a syndicate, using the maximum amount, he would be liable for the whole of the $45,000 because he would be jointly and severally responsible along with the other members of the group. We realize all this. After all, a man can borrow as much money as the person who is lending is prepared to allow him, on the basis of his assets and so on. Many farmers in my part of the country use $50,000, $60,000, $75,000 or $100,000 worth of credit at the banks.

The old way in which they did it was this. The bank used to say: This $75,000 you can have at 5¾ per cent—you can get it at 5 per cent in some other act—and we will charge you 6 per cent on the balance. Nobody can really say how much a farmer can borrow. Many people are prepared to lend a farmer $14,000 to purchase a 4-10 combine, with all its attachments. The farmer may be paying as much as 10 or 15 per cent interest. All we are trying to do in this bill is to enable people to acquire machinery without having to pay an excessive amount, so that the small farmer can compete with the richer farmer in both the domestic and the export markets.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nasserden: I hope the minister does not believe we are so childish on this side of the house as to be prepared to accept an answer like that. If a farmer takes a farm improvement loan to the maximum, and borrows the maximum he can get under this syndicate arrangement, what would be the total moneys he could receive from these two sources? Will the minister answer that question.

Mr. Greene: Ask it in one of the two official languages, now.

An hon. Member: Smart boy.

Mr. Nasserden: Maybe I will put it this way, and the minister can tell me whether I am correct. A farmer can get $15,000 under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and $15,000 as his share under the present bill if he entered a syndicate. That would be $30,000. Is that not correct?

Mr. Hays: It is hardly correct because there is a partnership of three people and there is joint and several responsibility for the whole obligation.

Mr. Nasserden: Surely the minister knows what I am getting at. You can borrow $15,000 under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and this legislation will provide another $15,000 per individual farmer entering a syndicate arrangement if the maximum amount were secured. This has no relation to the obligation a farmer takes on. This is the amount he can receive. The total comes to $30,000. Will the minister not give us an answer?

Mr. Hays: I do not understand what the hon. member is getting at. A farmer can borrow $15,000 under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. He can become a member of a syndicate of three individuals, which is the minimum, or he can join a syndicate of seven should he so desire. Under this bill, then, he would be allowed to borrow up to $45,000 along with two partners in a syndicate. He would be responsible for the $15,000, and also for the total amount as would be the other two members.

Mr. Nasserden: Before this clause is passed may I say I think the discussion this afternoon has shown very clearly that this bill should have gone to the committee on agriculture for scrutiny. We have made no headway here today. We have heard the most evasive answers—

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Nasserden: —from the minister in many instances. But from those answers which were definite we understand that a co-operative farm of 35 members can secure a loan up to $500,000 under this legislation. This was pointed out by the hon. member for Kent, (Ont.), and it gives us some indication of the thoughts which are in the minds of hon. members opposite on the government benches. We on this side believe in the family farm and we believe that this type of legislation threatens the entire structure—

Mr. Hays: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not think this has anything to do with the clause under discussion at the moment.

Mr. Nasserden: The minister may not think so, but I would point out that the clause states, among other things:

> (c) "farm machinery syndicate" means an association formed
> (i) by an agreement in writing, approved by the corporation, between not less than three individuals
> (A) who are engaged in farming independently of one another or who are members of a co-operative farm association—

And so on. When he tells us that 35 farmers can secure half a million dollars of credit for a co-operative farm set up in this country he is the threatening the survival of the family farm.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would take the time to tell us exactly what would happen to the credit status of a farmer borrowing under the different parts of this bill. I am particularly interested in the effect it would have on his credit rating at a bank. With regard to a young farmer borrowing $15,000 under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and $15,000 under the syndicate plan, and under the syndicate he had an obligation of $75,000, the members of the syndicate being liable jointly or severally, what effect would this have on his credit rating with the Farm Credit Corporation if he desired to buy more land, or something like that? I would also like to know, what would be the definite responsibility with regard to a bank. It is very important that a farmer, when he is joining a syndicate like this, should know just what effect it will have in connection with his credit rating at a bank. The legislation provides that an individual farmer is liable for the entire amount borrowed by the syndicate. If a farmer borrows only $15,000, which is the maximum amount under this proposed legislation, and signs a promissory note if the syndicate has borrowed $75,000, is that $75,000 a credit liability against him at the bank if he goes there to borrow money for other purposes? I think this is important and farmers will want to know the answer to this question; it has an important bearing on farmers' credit. That is why I pose these questions in the first place, Mr. Chairman, and I wonder whether the minister would be kind enough to give us the answers.

Mr. Hays: In reply to this question, Mr. Chairman, I am sure this will not hinder a farmer borrowing from the Farm Credit Corporation. I cannot speak for the banks. If he can participate in such ventures then his credit will be a great deal better than it is today, and he wishes to buy the type of equipment that will allow him to do the job that is necessary for him to compete in other markets, I am sure it will not hinder him in borrowing from the Farm Credit Corporation.

I cannot answer for what the banks will do. This depends upon their particular judgment. However, I am sure that if a farmer is properly financed and his equipment is such that it can do the job he wants done, and he does not have a $10,000 machine tied up in the barn that he is going to use for 12 or 13 days, but only has $3,300 in the machine and is sharing it with others, his credit rating is bound to be better. At least it would be if I were the bank manager.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, is the minister saying that as far as the banks are concerned this credit aspect was not taken into consideration in the preparation of this measure?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, the whole question of security and credit comes more aptly under clause 3. Perhaps we could pass clause 2 and get on to clause 3.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Loans to farm machinery syndicates.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, just to show the committee that I am co-operating 100 per cent—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —in trying to speed up passage of this legislation, I will be brief in my comments. The backbenchers over there, the trained seals, appear hungry; they seem to be snapping their teeth quite a bit. It is near the supper hour, when they will be fed and will be more content in the evening hours, when members who are seriously concerned with passing this legislation can deal with it in a more apt atmosphere than we have had in the last hour, with the snapping and snarling of the trained seals with hunger gnawing at them.

With regard to clause 3, Mr. Chairman, the minister has been talking about security and I have been very interested in his remarks in this regard. On one occasion he said they did not have to have security; a farmer did not have to have assets—I believe that was the phrase he used—to borrow money under this measure. He said all one had to have was the security in the 80 per cent of the machinery the syndicate purchased, and this would be the asset. They just had to sign a promissory note, but no assets were necessary apart from the promissory note. That is what the minister said at one time; but then he reversed himself and looked at the other side of the card and said, "Yes, they have to have some assets. They are all farmers"—

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member misunderstood me, in his hurry to speak before six o'clock. I would hope he would be factual about these things. I said that the farmer who was joining one of these syndicates would sign a promissory note—this is in the bill—and the security would be the promissory note as well as the machinery. This would be all the security. But the promissory note is a rather important document. You cannot borrow any money from any bank without signing a promissory note, irrespective of how much security you may wish to put up. This is always important.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I will put a hypothetical question because it seems to me that when we are dealing with examples the minister has a better understanding. Let us suppose my farm is worth $5,000; that is, the total assets are worth $5,000. Can I join with two other farmers and sign a promissory note for $45,000? Would that be taken as security? I ask the minister that point blank question.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No, certainly not. I am waiting patiently for an answer because I want this matter clarified before we pass the clause.

Mr. Hays: Would the hon. member repeat his question, please; I did not hear it.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am sorry I talk so quietly. My question was this, and it is a hypothetical one. Suppose my farm is worth $5,000 lock, stock and barrel. Could I sign a promissory note and would that be accepted, in regard to a syndicate with two other members, for a total of $45,000?

Mr. Hays: Yes, if the other members were satisfied and were prepared to do this. I think this would be a matter of judgment. It depends on what you had in the $5,000. If you had $5,000 worth of bees and were going to purchase an extractor for the honey after having entered into an agreement, this would be a sensible thing. A great deal depends on circumstances.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister uses an example which is not applicable in this case, and this only confuses me more. He said yesterday that bee farming was not included under this measure, and now he uses that example. I want to clarify the legislation in this regard. I am not concerned with what my fellow syndicators feel about me; I am concerned about the lender, in this case the Farm Credit Corporation. Would they accept my promissory note if my total assets were only worth $5,000 and I signed a promissory note valued at $45,000? Would this be acceptable, in the eyes of the Farm Credit Corporation?

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock, in the hope that the minister and his officials will get together during the supper hour and review this whole question of security and credit.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal further with the questions I posed before the dinner adjournment.

Mr. Moreau: Not again.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I see the hungry seals have not had enough to eat. Perhaps the supper hour should have been longer.

Before the committee adjourned for supper I posed a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Supposing I owned a farm and the total value of my assets was in the neighbourhood of $5,000, would the Farm Credit Corporation put any value on a credit note which I signed in the amount of $45,000? That is the question I posed to the minister who, with his officials from the Farm Credit Corporation in front of him, should be able to answer before I continue my remarks in respect of clause 3.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose we would lend money to an individual in that position. I doubt very much whether an individual who had only $5,000 in assets on a farm would find it necessary to form a syndicate for the purpose of borrowing money for the purchase of farm machinery of the type we have in mind.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I think we are now getting to the crux of the problem, Mr. Chairman. Let us suppose that the total value of my farm and assets was $15,000 and I, with two other farmers, formed a syndicate and signed a promissory note in the amount of $45,000, would the Farm Credit Corporation accept that promissory note as primary security?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I think I must reply in much the same fashion. It would depend upon the circumstances of the gentlemen who were going to form the syndicate, and whether it was a sound proposition. A decision in this regard would be based upon those facts, and the experience and judgment of the individual who was working for the Farm Credit Corporation, who would have to approve such a loan.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I think we are reaching the crux of the problem in respect of this legislation.

Mr. Francis: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I hear the hon. member for Carleton saying oh, oh. Perhaps he ate too much. Perhaps he is one of those trained seals who gorged himself during the supper hour. He spoke during this debate on the question of buying a backhoe and doing some extraordinary work. I am dealing with this particular question and I should like to get an answer.

Mr. Robichaud: Perhaps you have not been eating, but doing something else.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): There, Mr. Chairman, we have a bright remark by the Minister of Fisheries. If he is making some kind of an accusation then he should be prepared to substantiate it. Let him stand in his place and make a charge.

Mr. Robichaud: That is what you are doing.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): They are all just sitting there in their seats. Why do you not get up and make a speech on this subject? Are you all afraid to?

The Chairman: Order, please. May I suggest to hon. members that we return to a study of clause 3.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is what I am doing, Mr. Chairman, and that is what I have been doing. We have been listening to insinuations and smart aleck quips from a bunch of trained seals who know nothing and care nothing about this bill. They have made little or no honest contribution to our consideration, with the exception of one hon. member who offered his opinion in complaint about the interest rate. He suggested that the interest rate should be stated, and that the bill ought to make clear what interest is payable. I value his opinions very much. I do not think the rates should be more than the 5 per cent charged by the Farm Credit Corporation. He is the only member from that side of the house who has made any contribution. The rest have just made smart aleck quips, which is indicative of their lack of interest in the plight of farmers across Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I asked the minister two questions. The last one was this: If I joined a syndicate and the total value of my assets was $15,000 would the corporation consider my promissory note in the amount of $45,000 of any value. The minister indicated that the corporation would not consider it of any value. He said that whether or not I received a loan would depend upon the situation and circumstances of the other members of the syndicate. In other words, what he has said is that unless I have unencumbered assets to the value of the requested loan my application would not be considered favourably. By the admission made a few minutes ago, the minister has confirmed my earlier fears, that it will only be wealthy farmers who will be able to take advantage of the provisions of this legislation.

If a syndicate desires to borrow $45,000, that syndicate must be formed of individual farmers who have assets to the total value of the loan required, and those assets must be unattached in any way. I suggest there are not very many farmers who own unattached assets of that value. I suggest that limitation in this bill is its ruination, and that is why I said very little in respect of the bill until this afternoon when we reached consideration of clause 3. Clause 3 says that each man must sign a promissory note for the total amount owing by the syndicate. In other words, in order for me to join a syndicate with seven other members and borrow $100,000 I must have assets and security worth $100,000. Otherwise any other bank or lending institution can attach my goods.

Someone said earlier that one can borrow $55,000 from the Farm Credit Corporation under part III loans, $15,000 from the bank under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and can then join a syndicate and as a partner in that syndicate borrow the maximum of $15,000. This makes a total debt of $85,000. But if the man joined a syndicate with seven other members and the syndicate borrowed the maximum amount he would then have to have a total net worth of $100,000. If we add to that the $55,000 that can be borrowed from the Farm Credit Corporation and the $15,000 under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, this means that the man will have to have a net worth of $170,000 in order to join a syndicate of that size.

Members on the other side say that this legislation is for the small farmers, the family farm. They will have to bear with me. I come from a part of Alberta where there are many small farmers. Their net worth is not too large and I should like to see them be able to take advantage of this legislation which the house has approved in principle, if it is at all possible for them to do so. I have studied the bill and have talked to various farmers in my constituency about it. I have deliberately talked to those farmers who I felt needed to enlarge their present holdings. I have talked to those farmers who I felt should have more money made available to them as a working tool to enable them to enjoy a standard of living comparable with that enjoyed by workers in other industries in Canada.

When I came to clause 3 and told them that as it now stands they would have to sign a promissory note making themselves liable for the total amount owed by the syndicate, they immediately threw up their hands and said that their banker knew how large a promissory note they could sign. He was familiar with their net worth statements. In other words, they doubted very much whether the corporation would be much more lenient than the banker in this regard.

I may have criticized the bill but I do not wish it to be taken that I am criticizing the management of the Farm Credit Corporation. I think they have done a tremendous job. My constituents feel that the corporation has done a tremendous job. I have no complaints at all about the administration of that act. Let me make that abundantly clear.

But here we are dealing with the question of security. It has been my experience and that of my constituents that the Farm Credit Corporation, to put it mildly, must have all kinds of security before they will make money available to an individual farmer to enlarge his holdings or buy a new farm. So I am somewhat dubious that this clause really adds anything to the bill. The minister has said that it must be there. He did not really explain fully why it must be there. He said that such a clause is always required in the case of most corporations and limited companies, but not necessarily all of them. He said that a farmer has to sign a promissory note when he obtains a farm improvement loan. He went on to explain that if a promissory note was not signed by each individual member of the syndicate for the total amount borrowed, then in the event of the death of one member the machine would be claimed by the Farm Credit Corporation and this would tie up the whole operation of the machine until it was cleared by the remaining members of the syndicate. In my view that was a rather weak defence of this clause.

I believe that if a promissory note is necessary at all each man should only have to sign for his proportionate share of the loan obtained by the syndicate. In other words, if three farmers join together and borrow $45,000 each should only be asked to sign a promissory note for $15,000. If seven farmers join together and form a syndicate and borrow $100,000 each, one would then sign a promissory note for a little under $15,000. Surely I do not have to go into detail with regard to the difference between approximately $14,000 and $100,000.

Members of the legal profession in this party and in the New Democratic party have pointed out the legal complications in which this clause as worded would involve many farmers. It is all well and good for the minister to say that the farmers know one another and they would not join a syndicate where there was some doubt with regard to one member's character. This may be all well and good. The farmers know one another and are good judges of character, I believe, but this will not stop complications arising in the event of a death. In addition, one member could get into many financial difficulties in his own activities outside of the syndicate, thus placing himself in a dangerous position in regard to the syndicate.

The minister has accused me of being partisan in this debate. He has accused me of playing petty politics. If I have appeared to do so it is because of the plight of the small farmer. If I have appeared to seem annoyed at the irresponsibility of some of the Liberal backbenchers it is purely because at times I have felt I am fighting in a lost cause, in trying to make this bill applicable to small farmers generally and, perhaps a bit selfishly, to the farmers of my riding particularly who have faced untold difficulties in years gone by. One could consider the area in Alberta in which they live to be a drought area which has been severely stricken by harsh weather conditions. While I may have appeared to be partisan at times in this particular debate, I would not want to be interpreted in that way. I was partisan on behalf of the small farmer, and the small farmer only. I am sure that my constituency is not the only one in Canada that has farmers in it facing unusual elements such as hail, drought, long distances from markets and so on. I am sure there are other constituencies in which farmers are in similar positions. I am sure there are other constituencies, the farmers in which can take advantage of the principle of this legislation, and join together.

I mentioned in some of my earlier remarks that I had joined in three different groups of my neighbours and bought farm implements, small implements. Farmers are not denied the opportunity of coming together and buying larger implements such as those envisaged by the minister in this bill. I sincerely want this bill made applicable to those small farmers of whom I speak. I do not care how they vote, what their politics are. My sole aim in being in this house is to try to better their condition. With this thought in mind I find that clause 3, subclause (2), paragraph (a) is in direct conflict with the aims and aspirations of many small farmers.

In an earlier speech I mentioned that a small farmer with assets of $20,000 will not sign a promissory note for a syndicate requiring a loan of something like $80,000. He will not mortgage his farm, his livelihood and his children's future by signing a promissory note for a syndicate composed of similar small farmers. No farmer is afraid of his own worth. No farmer is afraid to sign a note for a proportionate share of a syndicate loan. With this in mind I should like to move an amendment to this clause. I know there may be objections to the amendment from the other side of the house. I ask members on the other side to forget partisan politics and to weigh the virtue of this amendment. I ask them to think of the farmer with assets of $15,000, to whom I referred a short time ago. I ask them to recall that the credit corporation will not allow him to join in a minimum syndicate requesting $45,000. The minister said his promissory note would not be satisfactory. I ask members of the house this evening to waive partisan politics, to be bold and think of the small farmer.

We, as legislators in this parliament, must be prepared to help those who can and will help themselves if they are shown the way. We should not concentrate our efforts upon helping those who really do not need our help. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, in all sincerity—those on the other side can laugh, and I forgive them. I ask them to waive their partisan politics and think of the small farmer. If the minister can change this particular clause in any way so that it does not exclude the small farmer, he should do so. The minister said that a farmer with total assets of $15,000 would not be allowed to take advantage of joining a syndicate. He said, no, the promissory note would not be worth the paper upon which it was written.

An hon. Member: He did not say that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No, he did not say that, he said—

An hon. Member: Worse.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): An hon. member says "Worse"; no, I do not think he said that. I am perhaps putting it in the worst possible light. I want to show exactly where the small farmer stands. I am pleading the case of the small farmer in Canada. Some members laugh, and I forgive them. They know not what they laugh at. If they could see the conditions that exist in many constituencies, even in western Canada as well as parts of Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes, I know they would waive their partisan politics. Put yourself in the position of a farmer with assets totalling $15,000. You feel that you could use more money, and perhaps you could, with the advice of a farm leader. I use that term rather loosely, but there is always a leader in any farm community. Perhaps if you could join a syndicate with him he could show you how to use this capital in a way that would permit you to secure a better standard of living.

While in some former speeches I have found this bill slightly objectionable, I think perhaps it could be of benefit to the small farmers in my constituency and in many parts of Canada. Without further ado I am going to move:

That clause 3, subclause (2), paragraph (a) be amended by deleting all the words after "undertakes" and the following be substituted therefor:

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

"be liable for his proportionate share of the outstanding amount of the loan."

This is the amendment I wanted to move. I do not want any hurried answer from the minister. Previously in this debate I have wished the minister would quickly rise to his feet and put me straight if I was in error. I do not want any hurried answer. I should like this subject talked about by some of the learned counsel on the other side. I should like the minister to consider the amendment and to think of the small farmers who do not have extra credit facilities available to them. I want him to think of the small farmer whose total assets may be only $15,000. Surely we as legislators should make this bill applicable to him. This is all I am saying: Surely, we should try to make this bill applicable to him. Has the farmer a bad record in putting up security to the Farm Credit Corporation? He has not; he has a very good record. Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act his record could not be better; and so I ask, why do we have to be so cautious? Why can't we bend a little toward aiding the small farmer?

I plead with the minister to give this serious consideration, because as the bill is worded I am convinced, particularly in the light of the answers he gave to my questions when I started to speak, that this bill by its provisions will exclude many small farmers who are in need of help. I suggest the minister give this more thought and that his learned parliamentary secretary, who has a great deal of farming experience and who has dealt with a lot of small farmers throughout his lifetime, should also give it a great deal of thought. I do not exclude the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation from this suggestion, because time and time again the corporation has been confronted with the plight of the small farmer. Do not forsake the small farmer in passing this legislation.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Could the hon. member suggest how a small farmer can be excluded under this clause, since the minister has stated the security for a loan will be the machinery?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): When one has just finished trying to explain a point it always causes a lot of despair when he is asked to explain it again, because it becomes very clear that the questioner has not understood his remarks. I know the hon. member is very interested in this legislation, but according to the minister's own words a promissory note, according to clause 3 (2)(a) is the primary security. Again to quote the minister's exact words, or relatively close to his exact words, the machinery is the secondary security.

I asked the minister a question at the beginning of my remarks. Suppose my total assets are worth only $5,000, which are not mortgaged to somebody else, and I sign a promissory note, would that promissory note be accepted by the Farm Credit Corporation? The only way I can arrive at a proper conclusion is to pose the question once again to the minister and hope he clarifies the matter for both of us. Suppose I am a small farmer and my total assets, lock, stock and barrel, are no more than $5,000 and I sign a promissory note, would the corporation accept my signature on a promissory note for $45,000? I believe the minister answered me in the negative previously. If I am wrong I hope he will correct my understanding.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, this bill is not designed to discriminate against any farmer, large or small, and in particular it is designed to help the small farmer. When the hon. member first posed his question he was speaking about giving a man with a $5,000 farm $15,000 worth of security, and this farmer, or group of three small farmers like him, may only need $2,000, $3,000 or $4,000.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I don't want to interrupt the minister—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I don't want to interrupt—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You don't want me to get an answer.

The Chairman: Order please. Perhaps the hon. member for Acadia might ask his question after the minister has spoken.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Fine, Mr. Chairman, I have got till ten o'clock.

Mr. Hays: Such a group of small farmers would not be discriminated against. Perhaps I should review some of the remarks I made this afternoon covering the experience of farm machinery syndicates in Britain.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Acadia is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I presume I have a right to speak on this amendment once again before it is voted on?

Mr. Greene: We would not miss that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I want to be absolutely clear. I know I am fighting a lost cause.

Mr. Hays: It might help if I pointed out again that farm machinery syndicates in Britain were organized by the farmers and the farmers' unions, and that the farmers themselves, after looking into this very thoroughly—

Mr. Rock: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Acadia has left after asking for an answer to his question.

An hon. Member: I can hear; I am listening.

Mr. Hays: The farmers in Britain, after looking into this thoroughly themselves, decided from the start that making individual syndicate members jointly and severally liable was one of the most important factors in ensuring the success of these syndicates.

We have the Reading University report on British farm machinery syndicates which says:

> The key to the problem of credit was the joint and several liability of the participating farmers working together in owning and operating a particular machine as a specific and unrestricted partnership.

These British farmers saw for themselves that if they were going to work together in this way they were also going to have to share the financial responsibilities. I could continue and repeat all the remarks I made this afternoon, but I think I have answered the hon. member's question in saying the bill is not meant to discriminate against any farmer, small or large.

Mr. Martineau: What would happen if a partner in a syndicate sold his share to someone else, or assigned his note to a finance company? Would the finance company become a partner in the syndicate?

Mr. Hays: The bill is designed for bona fide farmers, and it will be defined in the regulations as to how it will operate. The farmers will have quite a bit to do with their own agreements so far as regulations are concerned, and I do not think we are going to run into many problems in that regard.

Mr. Martineau: I think the minister will admit that the note is a negotiable instrument. It is a bill of exchange unless there are restrictions, and so far there do not seem to be any.

Mr. Greene: Does the hon. member allege that a borrower can assign a note in Pontiac-Témiscamingue?

The Chairman: Order. Before proceeding any further with the discussion on the amendment, the Chair would like to read it for the benefit of the committee. The hon. member for Acadia moves:

That clause 3, subclause (2), paragraph (a) be amended by deleting all the words after "undertakes" and the following be substituted therefor: "be liable for his proportionate share of the outstanding amount of the loan."

Mr. Lambert: In connection with a syndicate member's equity in the machinery, does the minister indicate that in the regulations there will be a prohibition preventing his signing that equity over to any other full time farmer, or will the ordinary laws of property apply? If the minister answers the first part in the affirmative, then can he tell me how the federal government has jurisdiction over property and civil rights to prevent such an assignment in personal property?

Mr. Hays: Well, I think the other two members of a syndicate of three would have quite a bit to say if one of the members wished to get out. I dealt with that this afternoon and if you wish I can go over it.

Mr. Lambert: That may be so, but I asked the minister for the legal prohibition or regulation which would be imposed in order to control this, if that is what is contemplated.

Mr. Hays: The intent is that groups of three farmers or more will be a partnership, and all the laws of the province in which the syndicate operates will of course have to be respected and will be respected. The hon. member is posing a question. The situation being advanced is where a member wants to get out of the syndicate, or goes bankrupt or is not solvent; is that correct?

Mr. Lambert: No. I am putting the case of a member of the syndicate who says: "I want to sell my share to another person". In other words, another person is being brought into the syndicate to replace him. Or he may want to sell his share to a number of other people. Unless you are going to police this carefully I can see the position arising where three bona fide farmers enter into an agreement to borrow some money to buy machinery and then all three assign it to non-farmers. Unless you are in some way going to police this sort of thing in that your regulations will then make the loan callable, I think you are going to be in trouble. Is the minister foreseeing this type of situation?

Mr. Hays: Any loans made will have to be acceptable to the corporation, the Farm Credit Corporation, of course.

Mr. Lambert: Once they are made, yes. But what do you do six months afterwards?

Mr. Hays: The corporation would still have an interest in the syndicate. They would lend the money and the debt would not be retired.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I have two serious misgivings about clause 3. This clause provides that every loan shall be secured by, first a "promissory note", and second by "such other security" as the corporation may require. With regard to the first security, the promissory note, the provision is that this promissory note will require each member to undertake severally and jointly responsibility for the amount of the loan. I have listened carefully to the minister both this afternoon and this evening but I have not yet heard a satisfactory explanation of why the farmers who join a syndicate must accept joint responsibility. The minister has quoted from the British experience, and the farmers there seem to prefer it. He has also said something about the fact that no one farmer should be able to tie up the other farmers in the syndicate.

I must confess that I am not impressed with his argument. I am convinced that by requiring these farmers to accept joint responsibility as well as several responsibility you will make it extremely difficult for a lot of farmers to join these syndicates. If there are four farmers who are going to go together to form a syndicate and would be entitled to borrow up to $60,000 provided they purchased $75,000 worth of machinery, you see the liability that a member of that syndicate is assuming. First of all, he must put up his share toward providing $15,000 worth of cash for the 20 per cent equity in the machinery which the members must have in the first place. Then he must sign a note not only for his $15,000 but for the entire $60,000 which the syndicate are borrowing from the Farm Credit Corporation. If a farmer assumes this liability, how is this going to affect the credit of any member? What are his chances of ever borrowing from anybody else under any other circumstance? When a possible lender looks over his financial position and sees that he has signed a note for $60,000 for which he may be liable, this is not going to make him a very likely person to whom anyone else would extend further credit. I do not know why the minister insists on joint liability. It seems to me that the Farm Credit Corporation is adequately secured if each farmer assumes responsibility for his share.

In the case of the instance I cited before, all four farmers who borrowed $60,000 would each be then responsible for $15,000. Remember that the Farm Credit Corporation has $75,000 worth of machinery as security plus "such other security" as referred to in paragraph (b), to which I will come in a moment. It seems to me that they are adequately safeguarded if the members of the syndicate assume several responsibility without being required to assume joint responsibility. I think that this will keep a lot of farmers out; they will be afraid that signing a note, which could be for as much as $100,000, would be so onerous that it would completely destroy their credit and their capacity to borrow anything in the future from any other agency.

The second thing about which I have some misgivings, and I would ask the minister if he can to clear this up for me, is this. The second security which the Farm Credit Corporation will take under paragraph (b) is—> —such other security, including a mortgage on the farm machinery purchased with the loan, as the corporation may require.

A mortgage on the farm machinery purchased with the loan is, of course, perfectly understandable; that is only to be expected. The Farm Credit Corporation would get a promissory note and also a mortgage on the machinery purchased with the loan. But what is the meaning of "such other security"? Does that mean that in addition the Farm Credit Corporation could take a mortgage on the land, or a chattel mortgage?

Mr. Hays: Fire insurance; life insurance.

Mr. Douglas: That is not what the bill says.

Mr. Hays: Public liability.

Mr. Douglas: There is nothing in the bill which says that. It seems to me the bill leaves it quite wide open. A literal interpretation of the bill as it now stands would, it seems to me, enable the Farm Credit Corporation, if it chose, to say to the farmer: "We want a mortgage on your land"; or they could say they want a chattel mortgage. But nowhere is this spelled out. Perhaps it is covered by the regulations which will be passed, but certainly it is not covered here, because the bill says "such other security", which of course includes the mortgage on the machinery which has been purchased. The term "such other security" gives a wider latitude, it seems to me, and I think the legislation should be drawn more definitively than it is.

Mr. Hays: So far as this particular part of the bill is concerned, this wording has been proven very successful in the Farm Credit Act. The Farm Credit Corporation regulations provide that the corporation may make a loan to a farmer on the security of a first mortgage on farm lands, and such additional security as the corporation may require. That might be fire insurance. It might be public liability. If one of these machines were, say, to go down the highway and for some reason or other became involved in an accident, if there were any public liability that would be covered by the regulations. So would life insurance, in the event that one of the members of the syndicate passed on. That is what is meant by "such other security", and this will be spelled out in the regulations exactly the same as it is in the Farm Credit Corporation regulations.

The hon. member asked me another question with regard to the members of a syndicate being severally and jointly responsible for the loan. Of course, this bill will also be under provincial jurisdiction, under the partnership act, which makes these people jointly responsible in any event in regard to farm improvement loans. They are jointly and severally responsible now in the situation where two members may borrow $15,000 each for a total of $30,000. This measure will operate in exactly the same way. The liability is not limited, so they are severally and jointly responsible.

The farmers in Great Britain, who have made this act work, felt this responsibility should be held by each member. I would ask hon. members to remember that 20 per cent of this amount is put down in cash and the balance of 80 per cent is lent. The amount by which the machinery will be depreciated, and so on, is set out in the agreement, under the regulations, and we have to approve the agreement in so far as the Farm Credit Corporation is concerned, to ensure that there will be sufficient security at all times to cover the total amount of the loan. The corporation is of course trying to help the farmers; they are not trying to keep these loans from them. These matters will be covered in the regulations in much the same way as loans by the Farm Credit Corporation are covered, and that has proven to be a very good act.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the minister has said the government are trying to help the farmers. I want to tell the minister that I do not know any private lending institution that is any tougher than the procedure the minister has just outlined in this case. This is what a man is faced with when he purchases machinery under this legislation. He puts up 20 per cent of the cost of the machinery; he is going to make out a promissory note for the remaining 80 per cent of the cost of the machinery, together with the other members of the syndicate. He is liable for the entire amount. In addition to that there is a mortgage on the machinery which is purchased, which is understandable. Now the minister says that in addition to this they have life insurance, fire insurance and public liability insurance, and any of this insurance can also be assigned as security.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member misunderstood me. There would be provision in the regulations whereby a farmer would have life insurance for his part of the loan as indicated in the agreement. If the machinery were stored in a building and was destroyed by fire, it would be covered by fire insurance. If there was public liability, this would also be covered. This is just the same as if he bought an automobile or any other piece of rolling equipment. I suggest that for his own sake he should have this protection.

The hon. member says we are making it very difficult for farmers to buy this machinery. I would ask him to remember that under the Farm Improvement Loans Act we lent last year something like $100 million to farmers to buy machinery. Apart from this I know that the farmers borrowed something like $240 million for the purchase of machinery alone at interest rates which varied from 12 per cent to 20 per cent. I am sure this will be a much better deal for them than they had previously.

Supposing a group of farmers wants to buy a rock picking machine or a posthole digger. Every farmer in western Canada has some sort of posthole digger, and I suppose this is the case in eastern Canada, although I am not so familiar with the machinery they use for putting up fences. But I know many of these farmers have equipment that costs $400 or $500 and the equipment is totally inadequate. A group of ten farmers could buy a machine that costs in the neighbourhood of $2,000. This machine will do the work that is required, and their total investment will be in the neighbourhood of $200.

The people taking advantage of this measure will be responsible people. I must emphasize this. The farmers in this country are vigorous, thrifty, and know what they are doing. The people who are going to borrow money under this legislation will be quite responsible, I am sure, and the government will not lose money. Our farmers will receive a great deal of help from this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. A number of members have been trying to get the floor in order to participate in the debate on the very point that is now being discussed. I suggest all hon. members should be given a chance to participate in the debate. The hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Douglas: I just want to point out, Mr. Chairman, that the minister has not answered the question.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps the hon. member could ask his question later on.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I am waiting for the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) to put on his earphone.

I have not been premier of Saskatchewan for 17 years, but it seems to me that I should also have an opportunity to express my opinion on this very important bill.

Section 3 provides that:

> Subject to this act, the corporation may make loans to a farm machinery syndicate for the purchase of farm machinery.

This is clear. The second paragraph reads as follows:

> Every loan made pursuant to subsection (1) shall be secured by
> (a) a promissory note, signed by each member of the syndicate, in which each member undertakes to be jointly and severally liable for the outstanding amount of the loan;

This reminds me somewhat of the winter works program which has been in operation for about two years and in which we require that the people doing some work under the winter works program sign a promissory note to the credit union or the bank in order to draw their salary. This is somewhat what would happen in the case of the farm machinery syndicates.

Mr. Chairman, if we speak about farm syndicates, we do not mean necessarily that only farmers organized together may avail themselves of such legislation. Outside people, people who have nothing to do with farming might form a farm machinery syndicate with the purpose of buying farm machinery.

In clause 3—

Mr. Robichaud: No, they must be farmers.

Mr. Béchard: Why not read clause 1, first?

Mr. Caouette: I see, but we are now on clause 3.

The Chairman: Order. May I remind the hon. member that we are now studying an amendment concerning clause 3.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Acadia (Mr. Horner)?

[Text]

Mr. Béchard: He is the farmer's friend.

Mr. Robichaud: The small farmer's friend.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: No, Mr. Chairman. He must talk in favour of agriculture in his riding because due to the ever-increasing number of Social Crediters in the riding of Acadia, its representative would be a different person should elections be held today.

Mr. Chairman, I heard the hon. member for Acadia tell us a while ago that this bill was against the interests of the small farmer and he closed his remarks by saying that the same legislation or the same section favoured the small farmer. We are wondering what the hon. member for Acadia meant exactly.

I do not know whether he ever saw a farm in his life. He may have seen some, but when he moved his amendment, I wondered if seriously—

[Text]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I think he has misunderstood me and I feel that I should correct him immediately. At no time did I say that the bill or this clause, as it presently stands, would be of assistance to the small farmer. Either the translation was in error or the hon. member misunderstood what I said, and I want to set him right in this regard.

The Chairman: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member that while he may feel he should explain the situation, there is no point of order there.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Clause 2 states that to belong to a farm machinery syndicate one has to have the approval of an organization of which most members are farmers.

Mr. Chairman, such a provision is not contrary to what I have just said to the effect that the hon. member for Acadia, instead of enlightening the house on clause 3, has only succeeded in confusing the house by moving his amendment.

Is the object of this bill really to help the Canadian farmer from whatever part of Canada he may be? There were and still are in western Canada, particularly in Alberta and Saskatchewan, farmers fully equipped to grow anything the land can produce. But the same situation does not exist in our eastern provinces. And when I hear people like the hon. member for Acadia who told us, at one time, that it did not help agriculture but, a minute later, that it did help, I am rather inclined to agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) who, after all, not only had responsibilities as an administrator in his province but who also had a knowledge of the situation through his contacts with the farmers in Saskatchewan.

In that part of the country, Mr. Chairman, there was no lack of farm machinery. And here, if I may digress, I would say that all my relatives, on my mother's side, have lived in southern Saskatchewan since 1909. That was quite a long time ago; they knew years of prosperity and years of despair, after the droughts that prevailed during 1934, 1935 and until 1938.

Mr. Chairman, there are tremendous possibilities in Saskatchewan, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is aware of that. In that case it is not machinery that is lacking.

The hon. member for Acadia told us a while ago that this measure might help the farmer to take advantage of the agricultural machinery he needs to operate his land, that it might or might not help the farmer. He was so explicit that no one could understand a thing, just as the electors in his riding are unable to understand him, that is probably why he is here.

Mr. Chairman, people are not asking for agricultural machinery in the west. The western farmers are organized.

In the east, however, they may be needed in some cases. Neither machinery nor syndicates are lacking and our farmers are not deprived of good will. What we need is markets to sell our farm products.

The Chairman: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member to point out that the remarks he has been making for the past few minutes are, in my opinion, far outside the scope of the clause under consideration and especially of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Acadia. It would seem to me that the hon. member for Villeneuve is now discussing the principle of the bill which was debated at the resolution stage, on second reading and during examination of clauses 1 and 2.

In the circumstances, I suggest to the hon. member that he restrict his remarks more specifically to the terms of the amendment and to the provisions of clause 3 now under study.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, may I say what I think of clause 3 or will you restrict me only to the amendment? If you restrict me to the amendment only, I do not have much more to say, except that the hon. member for Acadia has not thrown any light on the discussion by his amendment and has not given us the opportunity to understand better the spirit or if you want to put it that way, the idea of clause 3, and especially of paragraph (2) which reads as follows:

(2) Every loan made pursuant to subsection (1) shall be secured by

(a) a promissory note, signed by each member of the syndicate, in which each member undertakes to be jointly and severally liable for the outstanding amount of the loan;—

The Chairman: Has the hon. member concluded his remarks?

Mr. Caouette: No, Mr. Chairman, I have not concluded my remarks, but some people are talking near me, and I cannot imagine how you can hear the reasons I invoke and the explanations I am giving.

So I will read again paragraph (2) of clause 3:

(a) a promissory note, signed by each member of the syndicate,—

If in a syndicate there are 15, 25 or even 30 members, each is personally liable for the loan granted under paragraph (1). In my opinion, it is not reasonable that everyone should be responsible for the whole amount of the loan.

It is fair that the syndicate as such be held responsible for the loan granted. It is still normal that everyone share the collaterals in such a loan. However, it should not be required that all farmers and settlers who formed a syndicate for the purpose of purchasing agricultural equipment be held individually responsible for the amount borrowed.

Mr. Chairman, section (3) of Bill No. C-121 clearly establishes that in such a case, the government does not pay, the Minister of Agriculture does not supply guarantees, but the farmers, the settlers and those who are members of the syndicate must endorse personal notes to guarantee the whole amount of the loan.

[The Chairman.]

Then the Minister of Agriculture will tell us that he was generous with the farmers. As usual, the real assets of the farmers and of the Canadian people are used to make or authorize loans; and then we are told that the government was generous—and how many governments were generous—toward the farmers of Gaspé, the Abitibi and lower St. Lawrence.

Mr. Béchard: They will remember it too.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I hear my good friend say they will remember it. Of course, they will remember it, when the time comes for them to pay back the promissory notes the government will force them to sign.

This does not mean that the hon. member for Acadia is very clear in his explanations. I have been listening to him for exactly 35 minutes. At the end of his speech we were no further ahead than at the beginning. The only thing he managed to tell us, and that is normal, is all the present government has not done. He forgot to tell us about what his own government, in power for seven years, forgot to do. This, then, is the true picture of the situation.

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member will recognize, once more, that his comments go beyond the scope of the clause now under study.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, my remarks are confined to the section under consideration, as it is the case for my very good friend from Acadia who always follows the same standards of discussion.

On behalf of my party I wish to mention our desire to assist as much as possible our Canadian farmers in getting the farm machinery which would make things easier for them not only in one part of the country but throughout Canada.

When members from the various political parties realize the merit of what we are saying, I do believe, Mr. Chairman, that clause 3 will be amended in order to relieve our farmers and to urge the government to assist them further.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I have a few words to say in support of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Acadia. I even believe that the hon. member for Villeneuve will share my views if I say that this clause, as drafted, is such as to destroy one of the most efficient and valuable assets of the Canadian farmer, that is his credit.

In fact, to require a farmer who borrows under the provisions of this legislation to be jointly and severally liable for the loan, is to place upon him an overwhelming burden detrimental to his interests.

As the hon. member for Dauphin said this afternoon, if this commitment is undertaken jointly and severally, it means that the individual farmer, that is each farmer who becomes a member of a syndicate, shall be responsible, individually, for the sum of $45,000. This, added to the loans he may have already obtained under the federal Farm Loan Act, the provincial farm loans acts, or the Farm Improvement Loans Act, means that the farmer may incur a debt up to a maximum of about $80,000. This is a burden which he certainly cannot bear. And it is a burden a solvent farmer must meet should the other members of the syndicate become insolvent and unable to meet their debt.

In my opinion, such provision should be deleted absolutely, as suggested in the amendment of the hon. member for Acadia.

And I repeat the argument expressed the other day by my colleague from Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul), to the effect that what the farmer needs is not additional borrowing facilities, which would allow him to get further into debt, but the means of obtaining additional sources of income.

In regard to this same clause—and I believe this concerns also the amendment—I wish to call the attention of the minister on paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of clause 3, which reads as follows:

> such other security, including a mortgage on the farm machinery purchased with the loan, as the corporation may require.

The minister has spoken of mortgages on farm machinery purchased through a syndicate. However, there are no chattel mortgages in the province of Quebec and, consequently, this provision would not apply to Quebec farmers who might borrow under this bill. In addition, I do not think the provision concerning the mortgage on the farm machinery is appropriate in the circumstances because, according to the civil code of the province of Quebec, such a mortgage is an actual loan and can be given only if the lender has the physical possession of the thing given as security.

If that is the case, the provision is obviously useless to farmers.

There again, you have an instance of thoughtless drafting and I believe that this proves that all this legislation is obviously defective, to such an extent that, in my opinion, it is unacceptable. Either it should be referred to a committee, or the minister should reconsider this legislation which, to use the colourful words of my colleague from Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière is very badly made up.

[Text]

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon I posed some questions to the minister in regard to the very point we are dealing with tonight, namely the farmer's liability and his credit rating if the bill should go through in its present form. The minister was not able to answer my questions this afternoon and I hope that he has obtained the information during the dinner hour. Perhaps if I put the question in a different manner he will be able to provide an answer tonight. Let us take the provision as set out in the bill and assume that a member of a syndicate has signed a promissory note for the total amount, which could be $75,000. If he has been accustomed to operating his farm with $25,000 credit at the bank, is it not true that the very fact he has signed a promissory note for $75,000 will destroy his credit rating at the bank? That is the first question.

Second, when a farmer approaches the Farm Credit Corporation for a loan under the terms of that act they are determined that the amount he borrows shall cover his entire financial obligation as an applicant. Is the liability of a member of a syndicate as far as the Farm Credit Corporation is concerned the $15,000 that he has perhaps borrowed under that act, or is his liability in approaching the Farm Credit Corporation the total amount of the obligation assumed by the syndicate? Perhaps in this fashion we can find out how the minister feels the credit rating of a farmer borrowing under the terms of this legislation would be affected.

Mr. Hays: If I may answer the second question first, he would not be responsible for as much personally if he was sharing the obligation with 10 or 12 neighbours, or half a dozen neighbours.

Mr. Danforth: Only his own obligation?

Mr. Hays: It would depend on the security. Supposing he was a feeder and he wanted to purchase a mixing machine which would cost in the neighbourhood of $22,000. Supposing there were 22 members sharing this machine, then it would mix feed for the whole 22 farmers. If he were living in the eastern townships, this piece of equipment would save him in the neighbourhood of $3.50 or $4 per ton. This machine would mix his feed for a month, and he could use his home grown grain or he might be purchasing it by the carload from western Canada. I am sure that this syndicate would be advantageous to him, and the purchase of the machine would be advantageous in so far as his bank credit was concerned if he were operating under section 88 of the Bank Act. He may be feeding 300 head of cattle and he may have a 90 day feeding operation, or 120 days. If I were the bank manager I would look very kindly on his operation, because he could get his feed at a saving of $3 or $4 a ton. This purchase would be financed over seven years.

A lot depends on how you are financed, what your current obligations are and what your current revenues are. There are all kinds of people who borrow substantial amounts of money to perform certain operations in so far as agriculture is concerned. All we are saying of this bill is that this group of farmers can borrow money to do this sort of job. I do not believe it will hurt a farmer's credit at all. I think it would enhance his credit because it would make him a much better risk than he would have been otherwise.

Mr. Danforth: I do not believe the minister appreciates my approach to the problem. I will try to put it in another way. If I had to assume, as a member of a syndicate, an obligation of $75,000, by way of a promissory note, and I wished to borrow from the Farm Credit Corporation myself to buy more land, I am asking the minister this: When the Farm Credit Corporation approaches my total liability do they consider it to be the $15,000 that I have actually borrowed or the entire $75,000 that I have assumed by way of promissory note? This would make a great deal of difference in my credit rating with the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Hays: You would be responsible on that obligation, as would the others. I think the person who was lending money for the purchase of additional land so you could enlarge your operations would be guided by your ability to pay. I believe all loans are made on this principle. We are setting up certain hypothetical cases which make the borrower look bad. People borrow money with the intention of paying it back. Sometimes it is easier to pay back a large debt than it is a small debt. I think we have to go back to the general meaning of this bill. It is designed to give three or four smaller farmers who wish to buy a certain amount of equipment which ordinarily they could not buy, an opportunity to do so.

Let us take the growing of corn as a good example. A couple of years ago we imported something like 30 million bushels of corn from the United States. This represented a tremendous amount of corn to me. We thought when we sold Russia 239 million bushels of wheat, it was fantastic. However, this sale represented one bushel per Russian. We imported 1.5 bushels per Canadian. Let us just tie these things together. We are really sort of a small nation now. With the proper kind of equipment we can grow this corn in this country. A person who is going to purchase corn picking equipment cannot afford to do it for ten acres. But it can be done for 300 acres. Now we are speaking of 30 farmers. I could go on and on to indicate places where there is justification for groups of farmers buying specific pieces of equipment that will make it easier for them to produce.

Mr. Danforth: I appreciate the general information the minister is giving, but can he tell me if my credit liability with the Farm Credit Corporation would be the $15,000 I actually borrow or the $75,000 that I have assumed by way of promissory note?

Mr. Lambert: My remarks tie in with the nature of the security that is being requested in clause 3, as well as with the amendment put forward by the hon. member. I wonder if the minister appreciates the situation with regard to the type of security he is going to be enforcing as it applies across Canada. We know that the promissory note is a joint and several one. I do not agree with the minister as to what several liability means. In other words, if I am potentially liable on a note for $75,000, that is the fact in which the man I go to see is interested. Am I possibly going to be liable for $75,000? The minister must agree that is a possibility.

However, I am not sure that the minister, even though he comes from Alberta, is fully aware of the complications that arise under the chattel mortgages act of that province in connection with enforcing a security. This is not going to be a conditional sales agreement proposition because the Farm Credit Corporation will have to take a chattel mortgage on the machinery. Under the chattel mortgages act of the province of Alberta, if you are going to proceed under a chattel mortgage, the chattel mortgage is limited to the machinery in question. You must elect to proceed under either the chattel mortgage or the promissory note. If you proceed under the chattel mortgage to seize the machinery, then any unrealized balance on the forced sale of that machinery goes by the board.

Let us, for example, say that a machine worth $60,000 was purchased by paying 20 per cent down. There will be $40,000 on the chattel mortgage. Suppose the chattel mortgage is reduced to $35,000 and difficulties arise so that the corporation must realize on its chattel mortgage. Then, the machinery is only worth $25,000. I will tell the minister that under the law of Alberta the corporation will be stuck for $10,000 because it cannot then proceed personally against the makers of the note. On the other hand, if the corporation decides it is not going to move under the chattel mortgage but proceeds on the note, it obtains a judgment. Then the corporation could not attach any of the machinery in question because the provisions of the chattel mortgages act are immediately brought into play. This act limits the corporation, as a judgment creditor, to the value of these particular goods. Of course they are subject to the exemptions act of that province.

I am describing a condition that applies particularly to the province of Alberta. I am mentioning this because the corporation, in order to get the proper amount of security, will insist on something more than a chattel mortgage. It may take an additional chattel mortgage on all the cattle that are on the farm. After all, I think the Farm Credit Corporation officials will be quite aware of how the farm loan board used to proceed, and they used to tie up everything in order to protect the corporation.

I am pointing out certain difficulties in connection with the law, wherein the situation protecting borrowers in Alberta is different from that which prevails in other provinces. I will be very interested to see what type of regulations will be drafted, because the officials of the Farm Credit Corporation are not that naïve, and I rather anticipate what their recommendations will be to the minister with regard to adequate security to protect any borrowings under this bill.

The more security the Farm Credit Corporation seeks the more a borrower will be tied up. He may say, "All right, I will borrow for this machinery," but he will find every other avenue of credit to him has been closed off, and it may take some very fatherly advice on the part of the officials of the corporation to tell a man he should not borrow under this bill.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, at one time I had about 12 lawyers working for me. They were all good fellows but they used to get into arguments like this for hour after hour. As Minister of Agriculture I have indicated to the department the way we want this bill to operate, and the Department of Justice has agreed with all of the things we have suggested and is agreeable to our regulations. We are not promoting this bill in order that it will not work. The Department of Justice says we are right on this, and I would point out that it is that department's lawyers which guide the Farm Credit Corporation. I do not profess to be a lawyer and I know we could argue all night about this sort of thing, but I know the Farm Credit Corporation is going to administer this bill. We in the government know the intent of this bill. We know what we wish it to do for the farmers and I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that so long as I am Minister of Agriculture this is what it will do, and we shall not lose any money on it.

We have been discussing this bill for six days. I have been doing a little calculation here and I find there are about 37 items of business on the order paper, and if they all take as long as this we will be here 222 days before we get all the government business done. We are prepared to go ahead with this bill, which is to aid the farmers. We have had the Department of Justice work on it, and we have had the Department of Finance look at it. Similar legislation works in Britain and in France. We have taken a look at their schemes and put their best features together, and these will be in the regulations along with the bill.

Mr. Lambert: In reply to that, I am as interested—

The Chairman: Order please.

Mr. Lambert: —in putting proper legislation on the books and—

The Chairman: Order please.

Mr. Lambert: —I will not have the minister say that I am going to participate—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order. Would the hon. member resume his seat. I am wondering if the hon. member for Edmonton West has just an additional question to ask, because I would like to point out to him that a number of other hon. members have been rising in the hope of taking part in the debate. Was the hon. member following up the previous question he asked and, if he was, could he make it short in order to give other hon. members an opportunity to participate?

Mr. Lambert: It is not a further question. It would be a commentary on some of the, I think, lighthearted remarks the minister made; but I will leave it as it stands.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I have not yet had an opportunity to say a word about Bill No. C-121 the Minister of Agriculture is submitting. I did not take part in the debate on the bill at the resolution stage, nor at the first and second reading. When clauses 1 and 2 were called I did not say a word. But with regard to clause 3 I would like to say a few words and so ask the minister this. There is already a farm loan act in the province of Quebec. All well and good. There is also Bill No. C-121 which may be useful. On the other hand, there is just one thing I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture and that is, will the Quebec farmers be able to get loans more easily under Bill No. C-121 than they have been able to under the Farm Loan Act?

I am entirely in favour of the act, but as it happens there is a shortage of inspectors, investigators, and agricultural advisers. No matter how many pieces of legislations are passed, if no loans are made, what is the use?

I should like the Minister of Agriculture to tell us that in the province of Quebec the staff will be increased, that the number of officials in charge of the administration of the Farm Credit Act, the number of officials required for a sound implementation of this Bill No. C-121 will be increased in such a way that the farmers of the province of Quebec can obtain loans.

When I was elected in the riding of Lapointe in 1962—

The Chairman: At this stage, may I interrupt the hon. member to point out to him that according to the rules, he must restrict his comments to the clause now before us, that is clause 3 on which an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner).

Mr. Grégoire: I was precisely discussing clause 3 which deals with loans. I was saying it was desirable that they should be made equitably. I was also discussing the amendment because it deals with the provision liable for the total value of the farm machinery they could use.

For the information of the minister, in 1962, the Farm Credit Act under which loans were granted was already in force. In Saskatchewan, they had an average of four farm credit advisers for each riding, while in my district, at that time, there was only one for four ridings. That means 16 times less. Moreover, that person, instead of being there 30 days per month, was there for only one day.

However, the situation has improved and now we have two or three, in the four ridings, although there are at least four in each riding in Saskatchewan, Alberta or Manitoba.

There are only two or three in the four ridings of our region. Therefore, inevitably, this means fewer loans because there are fewer investigators. It would be the same thing for Bill No. C-121.

The minister stated that six days were devoted to the study of this legislation. I shall not even talk six minutes on the subject, but if he will kindly pay attention to my remarks that will be sufficient.

I am in favour of this bill and of the one regarding farm credit. But what we need to make such a bill effective in our section of the country is a sufficient number of officers within the department to make the necessary investigations, give the proper advice and make loans.

I would like to know if the minister is ready or willing to increase the number of his employees in our district. Right now we only have two Farm Credit Corporation counsellors for the four counties while there are four for one single county in certain parts of the country.

Will the minister be prepared to increase his staff so that those acts will become really effective? Since our agriculture is not the same as in the west, would he at the same time ask his staff to adapt the loans method to the type of agriculture which prevails in eastern Canada?

To give an example concerning Bill No. C-121, if a farmer has a farm where he grows wheat, he needs a tractor, machinery, etc. This machinery can be loaned by one farmer to the other, and several farmers can use the same tractor. But in my riding, if a farmer who owns a stable in which he keeps between 25 and 30 cows wants to have a stable cleaning machine, he will not be able to set up a syndicate with four or five other farmers to buy a stable cleaning machine for the use of one and all, because those machines can be installed only in one barn and once they are installed, they cannot be moved from one barn to the other.

Now, did the minister think of these machines which cannot be moved from farm to farm, such as stable cleaning machines and automatic milking apparatus?

I hear one of the barkers of the Liberal party; I am used to hearing them, but could they not keep silent, because it is obvious that they do not know anything in that field?

The minister knows very well that a stable cleaning machine or an automatic milking apparatus cannot be moved from farm to farm.

One cannot ask a syndicate made up of three, five or ten farmers, who operate a herd of 25 to 30 head, to purchase a litter carrier, an automatic milking machine or some other machinery of this type.

First of all, would the minister be prepared to ask his officials in the province of Quebec to adapt themselves to the agricultural conditions prevailing in eastern Canada and then, could he increase his personnel so that the legislation may not remain dormant in the statute books, but that it may become operative?

Those are the two things I ask him to do, and I think they are quite reasonable.

First of all, let us have an adaptation to Quebec agriculture and, second, an increase in personnel so that the legislation may be effective in helping eastern farmers. I should like to get an answer from the minister in that regard.

[Text]

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member certainly has a point. The staff has increased up to about 32 from four, I think, in the last couple of years. So far as loans from the Farm Credit Corporation are concerned, since the first of the year they are up 23 per cent. Up to September 30 they are up over $80 million and I believe Quebec's percentage is even more than most of the other provinces. So there is room for more officials and that sort of thing, and we are looking at this matter all the time.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, can the minister say what is the average loan in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Hays: I do not have the exact figure but I think the average loan last year, if my memory serves me aright—I will correct it tomorrow if I am wrong—is for a greater amount than any other province in Canada.

Mr. Martineau: What is it though?

Mr. Hays: Around $12,000 to $13,000, speaking from memory, but as I say I will correct this tomorrow if I am wrong.

Mr. Martineau: Well, that is the point. If—

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Lapointe wanted to ask another question and since he made the original contribution perhaps I should allow him to ask this additional question. Then I will come back to the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue afterwards.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, to admit that the minister is right, I must say that when the Liberal government came into office the whole of the province of Quebec had been granted for the previous year, 109 loans in 75 federal constituencies, while last year as many loans were granted in the four constituencies of the Saguenay-Lake St. John area alone. It is indeed an improvement—I am not afraid to say it—which has taken place in our constituencies alone.

However, I must say one thing; this figure is nevertheless 400 per cent lower than the loans granted in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

It is true that last year in the province of Quebec about 800 loans were made in the 75 ridings, compared to 1,950 in the province of Saskatchewan, 1,910 in Manitoba and 1,880 in Alberta. Even if in the past only 109 loans were made in the province of Quebec and even if that number was increased eightfold last year, I still believe the situation could be greatly improved. We would like to know how many applications for loans were made in my riding? Last year 90 applications were made and about 25 loans were granted; there had been only five or six the preceding year. It is nevertheless an increase of 500 per cent, and I commend the minister for it.

But what is the reason for this state of affairs? There are not enough inspectors. Since in the past our farmers often did not have the same service they had lately, they need more information, they must vary their crops, the inspector or the official has to remain with them longer in order to help them. Consequently, there is a lack of personnel.

Now, there were only—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member seems to be straying from the matter under consideration.

I know that he is dealing with loans. Could the hon. member resume his seat for a few minutes so that the Chair could try to explain its point of view, namely that the hon. member surely goes beyond the scope of the section now before us?

He is referring at present to the administration of legislation other than the one now proposed. Therefore I urge the hon. member to limit his remarks as much as possible to the administration of the present piece of legislation.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I will endeavour to remain as much as possible within the limits of the debate on this bill. Only the Chair knows as well as I do that whenever a wise man wants to make a decision, he has to go back to past events to make it sounder.

History has always been the first lesson taught to modern man, because things have a way of recurring. That is why history is taking such an important place in classical studies among students who want to become great statesmen.

In applying this principle, I am trying to use what has happened in the past as a lesson in considering this legislation, because the past constitutes a precedent which will enable us to improve as much as possible Bill No. C-121 and apply it in a better way than preceding legislation has been applied.

If this legislation is to operate efficiently, the flaws detected in previous legislation must be carefully avoided.

Under the former legislation, namely the Farm Credit Corporation Act, which is related to this bill, our province and the other eastern provinces lacked a sufficient number of inspectors; though they proved their good will by endeavouring to grant the largest possible number of loans, they could not cope with the task. We do not wish the same causes to produce the same effects in the case of Bill No. C-121 as happened with the act respecting the Farm Credit Corporation Act, that is, that it become inoperative through a lack of personnel.

The personnel of the Department of Agriculture is efficient. I can pay a well-deserved tribute to the employees of that department who work in our district. However, they are overworked to such an extent that they cannot visit all farmers who require assistance. This situation should not occur again as concerns the administration of Bill No. C-121.

I would ask the minister to see to that. There have been improvements. The minister gave us a few statistics. The request for loans has increased eightfold in my riding and in the neighbourhood, but that is still four times less than in other provinces.

Let the minister send two officials for every riding instead of two for four ridings. Let him send two in my own riding. Considering that there are four in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta, I would be satisfied if he sent us two, because they could be of some use to the farmers and the implementation of the act would not be delayed for two or three years. That would be an improvement in our district and we could speak of crop insurance later on.

We will ask that crop insurance be applied—

[Text]

The Chairman: The hon. member for Rosthern is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Nasserden: It is rather a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Lapointe said there are four inspectors for each of these points in the west. I think he is departing very far from the truth when he says that. There certainly are not four per riding.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order. I do not know what province the member who has just spoken is from. If he is from Saskatchewan I can tell him that in that province out of 16 constituencies, 13 are rural and that there are 38 farm loan inspectors. If he will work out the average it is a little over 3½, or slightly under four, let us say.

The hon. member should study his statistics. I did so several months ago and I know them fairly well. I know there are a lot more than in our constituencies, from 3½ to four on an average. If he will take a look at the farm loan board reports he will see that I am not as far from the truth as he alleges.

To get back to what I was saying, our agriculture can be improved if we increase the number of people responsible for administering Bill No. C-121 as was done for the Farm Loan Act.

There is also another piece of legislation to be brought forward, the crop insurance legislation. It is to be applied concurrently with Bill No. C-121, Mr. Chairman, and it is important, because if the eastern farmer does not have a guaranteed income from his crops, the guarantee in regard to payments on his equipment will be void, because in order to pay for his farm machinery Bill No. C-121, the farmer will have to make some profit, otherwise, he obviously would be unable to pay back his loan.

Then crop insurance which is being talked about will be one of the guarantees which will allow the farmer the required income to pay for his equipment.

I would also ask the minister to bring forward the crop insurance legislation right after Bill No. C-121 has been passed and adapt it to the province of Quebec.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make just one comment with regard to the answer given earlier by the minister when he said that in the province of Quebec the number of loans reached 60. If it is so, we are very glad.

I remember that following the new legislation on farm credit the number of farm loans in the province of Quebec had substantially increased under the former administration.

I should like to point out now that credit facilities are already available to farmers. The Farm Credit Act allows him to borrow, in some cases, up to $30,000 and the minister stated that the average loan amounted to $12,000 or $13,000, which means that the credit facilities for loans of $17,000 or $18,000 already provided in the act, are not put to use. That is why I think that it is more important to pass legislation which would bring about an increase in the farmer's income rather than to make available to him other means of getting farther into debt since he does not yet put to use all the credit facilities already available to him.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Whelan: Filibuster.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

It is our right to discuss the laws which are brought before the house. The member for Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard) and the member for St. Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) wish to violate the privileges of the members of the house by trying to keep them from speaking.

If they know nothing about agriculture and if they have no desire to help the farmers of their constituencies, they can at least allow others to speak.

I am discussing a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, and the member for Bonaventure will certainly not prevent us from speaking in the house.

The Chairman: Will the hon. member for Lapointe come to his question of privilege?

Mr. Grégoire: Yes, Mr. Chairman. My question of privilege is as follows. It is our duty as well as our right to stand up for the interests of our constituents in the house. The hon. member for Bonaventure, who remains seated without saying a word, except for grumbling, is not going to prevent us from doing so, nor is the hon. member for St. Denis.

For many evenings they have been here and they have not stopped grumbling. They talk during the elections, but at no other time.

The Chairman: Order. May I ask the hon. member to resume his seat. He explained the point he had raised previously and I am of the opinion that a question of privilege cannot be debated at this stage of the work of the committee.

Therefore, I suggest that members forget the difficulties that occurred and I recognize the hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, you could at least call them to order when they are out of order. If they do not want to see about the plight of their farmers, we on our side of the house want to do so.

Mr. Béchard: You are always out of order.

[Text]

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I have been quite interested in the remarks made since my amendment was moved. Many members have spoken. I feel that I should tune in to these remarks from across the way; they may be interesting.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I would hate to miss any wise comments that may be made from that side of the chamber. Much of the debate since I moved the amendment has dealt with the application of the Farm Credit Corporation. I have no particular complaint to make with regard to how the act is administered; in fact I think the chairman and the members of his organization have been doing a tremendous job all across Canada. But here we are concerned with a new act under which the corporation is to be given the authority to administer and regulate these loans. The minister complained that we are holding up the business of the house—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —and he figured it out and counted up the days spent on estimates. I know the minister is anxious to put this piece of legislation on the books.

Mr. Davis: Talk it out.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am going to talk until ten o'clock. If you are worried, fine. You don't have to help me, because I have a great deal to say and it will take me more than the next three minutes.

Mr. Greene: Will any of it make sense?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): There is no object in my pleading the case of the small farmers, if it is falling on deaf ears. If members opposite want to continue to howl like jackals, fine; I can stand here in silence. The minister complained about myself and other hon. members holding up this piece of legislation.

Some hon. Members: That is right.

Mr. Greene: It is on the record.

The Chairman: May we have order. It is very difficult for the Chair to follow the remarks of the hon. member.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): There is nothing further from my mind than holding up this legislation. I have been sent here by the farmers in my riding to do a job. If it takes me an extra hour this evening, I am prepared to ask that the committee sit an extra hour. I will stay here—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —if it takes me an extra hour to make my point. If it is necessary in order to make this legislation applicable to the small farmers in my riding, I will spend two hours or three hours extra this evening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister complained about our holding up legislation by making inquiries this afternoon. All he had to do was put this matter before the agriculture committee and then this house could have proceeded with something other than this particular measure. If this question had been sent to the agriculture committee we could have had officials appear before us; we could have inquired to our hearts' content into this measure without holding up any of those pieces of legislation that are on the order paper. I draw this to the minister's attention because he complained that we were filibustering or holding up legislation that is on the order paper.

I am doing my job as I see it. If I am wrong, fine. I moved an amendment after asking the minister a question. The minister answered that question. He said that if I joined a syndicate and the total assets of my farm were $5,000, and I signed a promissory note for $45,000, it would be of little or no value. He did not say that exactly, but that is what he meant. If hon. members opposite dispute that, Hansard will prove that I am right. I will deal with this question tomorrow and I will read it to them from Hansard when this debate resumes. If hon. members opposite think that the minister implied something different, that is what he said; or that is what I interpreted him as saying. In that event, Mr. Chairman, I say that this bill as it now reads and this particular clause as it now reads will not help the small farmer. That is what prompted me to move the amendment.

I see it is ten o'clock. I am pleading the case of the small farmer, and if the committee agrees to sit longer I am prepared to do so.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, in view of the willingness of the hon. member to not see the clock for a few moments, I wonder if we could continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the Liberals are too tired to go on sitting, that they are nervous and spend their time chatting, I think it would be preferable to call it ten o'clock; it would allow them to take a rest.

[Text]

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee that I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Because of the nervousness shown by the Liberal members I believe it is better to call it ten o'clock.

[Text]

The Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting house leader what the business of the house is for tomorrow?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to advise the house that the business for tomorrow is exactly that which was announced on Friday for today.

Mr. Churchill: What is the forecast for Wednesday? Will we be on estimates or on legislation?

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry I am not able to give that information.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 6, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Second report of standing committee on veterans affairs—Mr. Forgie.

FINANCE

AUTOMOBILES AND PARTS—REPORTED AGREEMENT RESPECTING TARIFF REDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him whether, as reported in one or more of the financial papers, a plan has been arrived at which was allegedly revealed to the Canadian auto parts manufacturers last week, whereby the elimination of tariffs on automobiles and automobile parts will be brought about between Canada and the United States, in effect setting up a free trade arrangement therein between these two countries.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not catch the question part of the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has such a plan been arrived at and was it revealed to the Canadian automobile parts manufacturers last week?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and ask him whether any consideration is being given by the government to a plan whereby there will be a removal of or substantial reduction in both United States and Canadian tariffs with regard to automobiles over a period of four or five years, accompanied by a gradual increase in the total share of the North American market available for Canadian plants. Has any consideration been given to that?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the right hon. gentleman would agree with me that the prospect he has just outlined is one which all Canadians would welcome, and were the government able to bring about a situation in which there was a substantial reduction in the barriers to North American trade, accompanied by a corresponding increase in production in Canada, all would welcome it. Naturally consideration is being given to the best means of achieving precisely these objectives.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say whether a report in the Financial Times to the effect that a major step was taken last week when the plan was revealed to Canadian automobile manufacturers, who are expected to discuss it with their U.S. parent companies, is correct?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate for me to comment on the orders of the day on the correctness or otherwise of newspaper reports. If the right hon. gentleman seeks some specific information I would be glad to give it to him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am after information, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister discuss this question last week with Canadian automobile manufacturers, and was it suggested that they should discuss it with their U.S. parent companies, to the end that progress could be made in this connection?

Mr. Drury: I did have a discussion with the automobile manufacturers of Canada regarding the problems they were facing, in order to increase Canadian production. We did explore a great many of these problems and a number of possible solutions to them. I may say that during this discussion no conclusions were reached.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Industry whether any conclusions were reached in his deliberations with the automobile parts manufacturers last week in this connection.

Mr. Drury: The same answer, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNION CARBIDE SHARE ISSUE—PURCHASE BY CANADIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marvin Gelber (York South): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Finance tell the house whether the recent share issue by Union Carbide Company of Canada, Limited, which has been so well subscribed, is largely held by Canadians?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the underwriters called me yesterday and said this particular issue had been greatly oversubscribed; that there was a geat demand for these shares by Canadians. Practically all of them were sold to Canadians and, as they put it, it was all due to legislation which has been enacted by this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the question I am about to ask is not a planted one. What will be the effect on the Canadian taxpayer of this transaction, and how much will it cost? Is it correct that this transaction will cost the Canadian taxpayer $10 million, as reported yesterday by Mr. Meyer in the Montreal Gazette; and would the minister while speaking as the proponent of this wonderful legislation indicate what are the advantages to the Canadian economy of $60 million which is to be invested by Canadian taxpayers in a United States subsidiary operating in Canada, the same $60 million thus being removed from investment in Canadian enterprises? Is that the objective of the policy of the government?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, while my right hon. friend's question was not planted I think we will all agree it was well cultivated.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All my questions are.

Mr. Bell: Don't you put any fertilizer on it.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member suggests I should not try to fertilize it. I think it is the kind of question which tends to fertilize itself.

As to the first part of my right hon. friend's question, I am not quite clear which newspaper columnist calculated how much this was going to cost the Canadian taxpayer. Actually this transaction involves the payment of a substantial dividend prior thereto on which there will be a substantial withholding tax which will accrue to the advantage of the Canadian treasury. Apart from that, this transaction means that Canadians are being given an opportunity to participate in the ownership of a very large Canadian company which has been prosperous in the past, and which I hope and expect will be prosperous in the future. To that extent the investors should all benefit and I hope they will.

I am not sure about the last part of the question. It seemed to me it rather reflected doubt on whether Canadians should be encouraged to acquire an interest in Canadian companies in their own country. Personally I am all for this.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, so there is no mistake about this, may I say the inference drawn by the Minister of Finance is, as always, entirely in error. What we are saying is that the plan in question is not working out. I ask the minister this. According to Mr. Meyer this one transaction will immediately cost the Canadian taxpayer $10 million. Is that statement of Mr. Meyer's correct?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how it would cost the Canadian taxpayer $10 million. Did my right hon. friend ask or does he know what Mr. Meyer had in mind? I did not happen to read the article.

Mr. Gelber: Mr. Speaker, can I ask whether the Minister of Finance could tell the house if Union Carbide have made similar issues in other countries?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, the officials of the company informed me some weeks ago that they have made similar issues, or that their subsidiaries in other countries had made similar issues, and that this has all worked to the best advantage of everyone concerned.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REPORTED STATEMENT BY INDUSTRY MINISTER RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Finance a question which I directed to the Prime Minister last week and which he promised to look into. In view of the statement by the Minister of Industry in a speech in Montreal to the effect that the Canadian economy is not growing fast enough to provide sufficient employment opportunities for the growing labour force, and in view of the fact that the figures just published show that the gross national product for the last quarter did not increase substantially and that the non-farm sector declined slightly, does the minister plan to introduce any emergency measures to stimulate the growth of the economy?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, dealing with the middle part of my hon. friend's statement about the growth of the gross national product, I would point out that in reply to a question from the Leader of the Opposition last week or the week before, I explained that the gross national product for the second quarter of this year was some 8.2 per cent higher than for the corresponding quarter a year ago, so that any suggestion that there has not been growth needs a little explanation.

In the way the statistics came out there was a statement to the effect that there had been no increase in the second quarter over the levels of the first quarter. This was because of the various policies designed to push some of the activities that normally occur in summer back into the winter months, to relieve unemployment during the winter. But I can assure my hon. friend that the economy would seem to be going along at a very satisfactory clip. I have said on other occasions that we do not expect the figures will show an upward surge in the quarter that ended in September, but we do expect a further upsurge in the last quarter, the current one, and it seems probable that the total increase for this year over last year will be of the order of 8 per cent.

In these circumstances I do not think any crash emergency programs are called for, although I can assure my hon. friend that the officials of my department and I are working on various measures that might be needed if the economy should turn up too far or if it should turn down, but at the moment there is no sign of that.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether the very optimistic statement he has just made is not in disagreement with the statement of the Minister of Industry, to the effect that the economy is not growing fast enough to provide sufficient jobs for the growing labour force?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I am ashamed to say I have not read the speech of the Minister of Industry who, as some hon. members of the house know, is my brother in law. I suppose this will get me into a lot of trouble, but I shall see if I can get a copy of the speech and read it. In the meantime I remain optimistic.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES TO REPLENISH FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour in connection with the speech of the Minister of Industry just referred to by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. What does the Minister of Labour propose to do to build up the unemployment insurance fund?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a very wide question which could hardly be expected to be answered on orders of the day. Perhaps the hon. member would put it on the order paper.

MONTREAL—BENEFITS TO LONGSHOREMEN SUSPENDED BY INTERNATIONAL UNION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Last week I asked him some questions concerning the Montreal dockers who were dismissed from their jobs by their union. I asked if they would get unemployment insurance benefits, and the minister was to give me an answer by the end of the week.

He was not here yesterday, but is he today in a position to tell us if those dockers will receive unemployment insurance benefits?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Claims involving two longshoremen were decided by an insurance officer in Montreal and those two claims for benefits, as I understand it, were disqualified because in the opinion of the insurance officer the men had restricted their availability for work. They were therefore disqualified under that particular provision of the Unemployment Insurance Act. It was pointed out to these claimants that they are free to appeal this decision to the board of referees.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask an additional question.

Did those men appeal that decision?

Inquiries of the Ministry

The minister is certainly aware of the case. These men are dockers or stevedores in the Montreal harbour. We are told that they refused work. They did not refuse to work; they were dismissed by their union.

Will the minister give specific attention to those cases?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: These cases have been dealt with by an insurance officer as provided in the law. The insurance officer has determined that these men had restricted their availability for work; it is on this ground that benefits have been denied. But the applicants have been advised that they are entitled to appeal this decision to the board of referees. The hon. gentleman will realize that under the law the insurance officer in the first instance, the board of referees and finally the umpire have total and complete jurisdiction with regard to the determination of a right of this kind.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour.

Is it his intention to look into both those cases in order to see that the freedom of the Montreal dockers unions is respected, under the statutes of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lake St. John.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister was about to rise to answer my question, after hearing it through his earpiece.

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: I do not propose an investigation into this particular case, but I did indicate to the hon. gentleman last week certain steps, or a variety of steps, which might be taken by these individuals in order to further determine their rights.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—APPLICATIONS UNDER WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

It is about the winter works now in course of preparation in this country.

[Mr. Caouette.]

If the minister is aware of the situation, can he confirm the fact that his department has issued to municipalities and the provinces forms containing typographical errors which had therefore to be sent back to the federal department, which will entail considerable delay in the start of winter works?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): My information is that the forms which are normally distributed to the municipalities had to be altered this season to take into account the changes which are being made in the program. They are presently being processed by the queen's printer and ought to be available this week. I have no information that forms were circulated and then withdrawn because of errors.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

I believe the Quebec government have had to set aside requests from the municipalities precisely because the forms contained printing errors that had to be corrected.

Is it true that forms containing printing errors were sent to the provinces?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: I presume the forms in question are those which were in use last year, but I will make inquiries to see whether there is any further information I can give.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

In view of the fact that the Department of Labour is responsible for preparing these forms could the minister assure the municipalities that they can nevertheless go ahead with their projects when the winter works season starts?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: At the proper time these forms will be made available for approval, before the date upon which the winter works program commences.

TRADE

EFFECT OF OIL IMPORTS ON BALANCE OF TRADE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. To what extent have increased imports of crude oil and petroleum products in the past few months contributed to our adverse balance of trade and international payments?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, imports of oil into Canada are usual and normal, and on a large scale, as the hon. gentleman knows. I do not think any increase in imports has occurred which has had any significant effect upon the matters contained in the hon. member's question.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would look into this question and see what the extent of this increase has been in recent months.

Mr. Sharp: I can assure the hon. gentleman that I have been doing that very thing.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

I would like to ask the minister whether he has received requests for assistance from the government of the province of Quebec to sell off all the pulpwood that the Liberal party bought in Dorchester county in its bid to win the election?

[Text]

ALUMINUM PRODUCTS—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED TARIFF CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the government made representations to the government of the United States regarding proposed changes in tariff duties on certain classes of aluminum products imported into Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORTATION

PETERBOROUGH-TORONTO—PROPOSED WITHDRAWAL OF DAYLINER SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Acting Minister of Transport a question on a topic which was initiated by the hon. members for Hastings-Frontenac and York-Scarborough last Friday. I should like to ask first if he has heard from the board of transport commissioners whether they are prepared to hold a public hearing on the abandonment of passenger service between Peterborough and Toronto. Second, can the minister tell us whether any of the subsidies that the C.P.R. is receiving at the present time as a result of the MacPherson report, or that it is planned it will receive under the new legislation, are in lieu of keeping passenger services operating?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as to the first question, the answer is no. As to the second question, I will have to take it as notice.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. By saying "no" does the minister mean that the board of transport commissioners has decided not to hold a public hearing?

Mr. McIlraith: No. The question was whether I had heard from the board of transport commissioners advising me that they were holding a public hearing, and I answered "No" to that question. With regard to the question now put by the hon. member, I will undertake to find out whether they are holding a public hearing and give the answer in the house.

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORTED INTENTION TO REDUCE SERVICE BETWEEN HALIFAX AND YARMOUTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the importance to the citizens of western Nova Scotia of the present Dominion Atlantic Railway dayliner service between Halifax and Yarmouth, will the minister investigate reports that the railway plans to cut the present service in half; and does he know whether a public hearing will be held?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): I should like to take the question as notice.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH ONTARIO MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General in his capacity as the federal minister responsible for housing and urban renewal. Within the past two weeks the minister announced that he would be meeting with the Ontario minister of economics and development and the Ontario minister of municipal affairs some time this week. I would ask the minister whether he has in fact met with them. If so, can he give the results of the meeting to the house; because I believe that in part they are important to the city of Hamilton.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise not only the hon. member but hon. members from other Ontario ridings that along with the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation I met with the two provincial ministers for several hours earlier today. In my opinion and in theirs it was a very successful meeting. We discussed possible urban renewal programs in various parts of the province of Ontario, also public housing in the province of Ontario, how to avoid duplication of effort and duplication of expenditures and other matters. It was, as I have said, a good meeting.

I should also like to advise the house that we have agreed to have a meeting or conference in Toronto on November 23 and 24 to which representatives of the cities and other municipalities and members of this house will be invited to attend. It is part of an educational program. That meeting will be followed by one in northern Ontario either early in the new year or possibly later this year.

Mr. Macaluso: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister discuss with the provincial ministers anything concerning the city of Hamilton, particularly the redevelopment program in the riding of Hamilton West?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Speaker, this is an urgent question, as the Hamilton city council has approved this area as a redevelopment area and they are waiting for a reply in order to proceed.

Mr. Speaker: As I have allowed the first question perhaps the minister could finish with this matter quickly.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I can inform the hon. member that following this morning's conference questions were put by a newspaperman to one of the provincial ministers, and if the hon. member will listen to the news broadcast tonight I think he will get a full answer to his question.

[Mr. Macaluso.]

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE EVICTIONS FROM VETERANS HOUSING PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General as the minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. With regard to the Fraserview subdivision, is the minister aware that a widow with a pension of only $84.50 has received her eviction papers, and that a man with five children who is awaiting a delayed workmen's compensation cheque has been served with notice of eviction? If not, will the minister consider ordering a delay in such drastic action to give him time to look into such cases?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have already advised the house, and I think the hon. member was present at the time, that notices have gone out to the 60-odd people who had not yet agreed to the new rental arrangements, that this was a legal formality that had to be gone through with, but that each individual case would be considered on its merits. While I am on my feet I might say that of the 1,164 housing units originally included in the Fraserview project, all but 52 of them have been satisfactorily disposed of.

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. According to yesterday's Vancouver Province a Mr. Henry R. Bates, a member of the Vancouver South Liberal association, stated that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources agreed with him a year ago that the across the board price would be $7,130. In view of this would the minister give further consideration to having a public hearing on this question?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I would rather let the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources speak for himself. I can say that each of these individual cases will be considered on its merits, but when over 1,100 of 1,164 housing unit cases have, according to my information, been disposed of, that is to the satisfaction of the tenants and the owners concerned, I see no reason for a public hearing.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if he will assure the house that none of these persons who have not signed new leases will be evicted without first having their cases examined by the minister himself.

Mr. Nicholson: If any one of the tenants wishes to take the matter up with me personally, I will be very glad to do so, either on an individual basis or through the hon. member who has just spoken or any other member. I certainly will be glad to look into them personally.

Mr. Douglas: The minister has said that each individual case will be decided on its merits. May I ask the minister by whom? If it is not going to be done by the minister, will this be done by some official of C.M.H.C.?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the hon. member knows, we have responsible Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials in Vancouver.

The people concerned have been invited to take the matter up with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The fact that a great many of them, I would say several score, within the last week or ten days, have been able to work out satisfactory arrangements with the corporation would indicate that the tenants have been able to reach agreement with the officials of the corporation. If there are any who wish to go beyond that, I will be glad to deal with them on an individual basis, if necessary.

Mr. Douglas: Will the officials of C.M.H.C. look into the financial circumstances of these persons before evictions are granted?

Mr. Nicholson: As I have intimated even though notices were sent out, these people are encouraged to come and put their cases before officials of central mortgage and housing. If they do not see fit to do so, I do not believe central mortgage should be asked to look them up individually. It should be the duty of the tenant. The Lord helps those who help themselves.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENTS TO BOARD OF DIRECTORS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I should like to put to his parliamentary secretary a question which is based on a dispatch published in the newspapers recently to the effect that nine of the 12 C.N.R. directors have completed their three-year term.

Could the parliamentary secretary tell the house whether those directors will be reappointed or whether the minister is considering the appointment of French Canadians as directors?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the government's decision will be announced in due time.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETINGS WITH ATTORNEYS GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. I would not want him to think that we are ignoring him today. In view of reports that the conference of the Minister of Justice with the attorneys general of the provinces has concluded, is the government in a position to make any statement as to the results of that conference on the amending of the constitution?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the conference has concluded its plenary meetings. However, the Minister of Justice is carrying on this afternoon with several private meetings, with the attorneys general. In any event I think we should wait until he returns tomorrow.

WORLD FAIR

RESOLUTION EXPRESSING CONFIDENCE IN DEPUTY COMMISSIONER GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): On September 17, Mr. Speaker, I gave a preliminary answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière regarding the government's intention in relation to Mr. Robert Shaw, deputy commissioner general of the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition. On that occasion I said I had asked the board of directors of the corporation for their views. On September 29 I received from the commissioner general the text of a resolution approved unanimously by the board the previous day. This resolution reads as follows:

> In reply to the Minister of Trade and Commerce's invitation the board of directors wants to express its full confidence in Mr. R. F. Shaw, deputy commissioner general of the 1967 world exhibition.

Immediately on receipt of this resolution I conveyed it to my cabinet colleagues and to the Quebec government. With the concurrence of the Quebec government, the Canadian government has decided it is in the interests of Expo '67 that Mr. Shaw should remain as deputy commissioner general. This decision was made after a careful examination of the judgment and evidence in a recent case involving the Foundation Company of Canada.

As I have already said, Mr. Shaw has done an outstanding job as deputy commissioner general, and it is the government's view that his continuation at his post is very much in the interests of the success of the exhibition.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Can the minister advise the house if this resolution by the board of directors of Expo '67 was obtained under a threat of resignation by the commissioner general, Mr. Dupuy, as is reported apparently authoritatively in Le Devoir?

Mr. Sharp: I cannot say anything about the accuracy of the report which appeared in Le Devoir and which I have seen. I was not present at the meeting. I simply asked the commissioner general to ask the board of directors their views. He reported to me in terms as I have reported to the house, and he informed me that this resolution was approved unanimously.

Mr. Lambert: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In anticipation of the minister's estimates, will he kindly inform himself on the question I have raised so we may not get the same kind of general answer on that occasion?

Mr. Sharp: I would welcome any discussion of this matter during my estimates. I think it is most important to the success of the exhibition that not only the government but everyone concerned should have full confidence in Mr. Shaw.

AGRICULTURE

TURKEYS—REIMPOSITION OF QUOTAS ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. O. Cooper (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Yesterday he made the following statement, as reported at page 8730 of Hansard:

> In so far as poultry are concerned, I have met the people who seem to be in the worst trouble, the turkey producers.

I presume the minister was referring to his meeting with the turkey producers in Winnipeg. Did the minister, at that meeting in Winnipeg, give the turkey producers any hope for the reimposition of quotas on United States turkeys coming into Canada?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): We discussed this at the meeting, Mr. Speaker. I am still waiting to hear from the executive of the turkey federation. They were going to send me a list of the things to which they thought we should be giving consideration. As yet I have not heard from them.

Mr. Cooper: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister give the house that report when he gets it from the turkey producers?

Mr. Hays: Yes, I will be pleased to do so.

BEEF CATTLE—CORRECTION OF STATEMENT RESPECTING IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a correction in Hansard, page 8730. In reply to a question by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce I am reported to have said:

> The situation is that for most of the summer and a great deal of the spring beef cattle in the United States were much higher than they were in Canada.

I should have said:

> —beef cattle in Canada were much higher than they were in the United States.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): May I ask the minister, then, was the express purpose of the importation of beef into Canada to lower the price of Canadian beef on our market?

Mr. Hays: I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that it had this effect on the Canadian market. Generally Canada exports to the United States in the neighbourhood of 500,000 head of cattle a year. This year, as the result of much lower prices in the United States, a certain number of cattle moved into Canada. Our position was such, because of the buoyant market, that we were able to consume the 500,000 head, and consumption rose by 9 per cent.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (St. Maurice-Laflèche): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance?

Since the Créditiste candidate, Bernard Dumont, lost his deposit yesterday in Dorchester county, will the members of the Ralliement Créditiste who supplied that amount be entitled to a receipt for charitable donations so that they might deduct it from their income tax?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe we should take the last question too seriously.

Mr. Grégoire: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Lapointe serious in his point of order?

Mr. Grégoire: That is beside the question.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

STUDY OF EXTENSION OF TELEVISION SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, but in his absence I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Can he inform the house whether the government has requested the C.B.C. to prepare an up to date study of the areas which are not now serviced by C.B.C. television? If not, will the government consider asking for such an up to date study?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I shall bring this question to the attention of the Secretary of State.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CERTAIN GROUPS NOT INCLUDED IN PAY INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council, supplementary to one I asked him on September 24. Is he yet in a position to say when pay increases will be announced for members of the protective staff, messengers and tradesmen of the House of Commons?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the pay increases for those groups in the House of Commons staff will come after the cyclical pay revisions of group D of the regular civil service. I expect that will be some time in late winter or early spring.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): As a supplementary question, may I ask the President of the Privy Council has the category of the security staff of the House of Commons been changed to come after group D?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These questions should be addressed to the Chair, in writing.

LABOUR RELATIONS

HAL BANKS—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MARITIME UNION TRUSTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour or the Acting Prime Minister. According to a news item in the Toronto Telegram, Charles Millard, one of the trustees of the S.I.U., stated that we should forget Hal Banks; we found him, let us forget him. Is he trying to cover up something for the government or for the S.I.U. itself?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the instructions given me an hon. member should not inquire as to whether a statement made in a newspaper is correct. It seems to me that this question falls directly within that limitation imposed on the Chair.

Mr. Langlois: I think 95 per cent of the questions in this house arise from statements read in some newspapers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MARITIME UNION TRUSTEES—APPEARANCE BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has been in touch recently with the board of maritime trustees about the desire of the members of this house for that group to appear before the industrial relations committee. If so, will they appear some time before the end of the year?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give an unqualified assurance to the last part of the question, that they will appear before the committee this session, which I may say I hope will not extend beyond this year. I have not been in touch with the chairman of the board of trustees since the matter was raised last week, but officials of my department have discussed it, and I hope to be talking with the chairman soon.

Mr. Orlikow: When the minister does speak to the chairman would he draw his attention to a number of questions I put on the order paper some five weeks ago, which go to the heart of how seriously the trustees are following the instructions given them in the legislation? I may add that my questions have not yet been answered.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do that.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): When the minister refers to "they" does he mean all three members of the board of trustees will appear before the committee?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as I recollect the exchange of correspondence and discussions with Mr. Justice Dryer, it centred upon the appearance of the chairman. I have not raised the matter of the other members of the board appearing, so this is the situation at the present time. The assurance was that the chairman himself would appear, and I do not know what arrangements he might make for his colleagues.

Mr. Starr: Would the minister convey to the trustees that, in my personal opinion, it would be preferable that all three should appear?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to direct the attention of the board to the views expressed by the hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): In view of the fact that this board is a creation of parliament, does the minister not think parliament should decide who should come before the committee, and not the trustees?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that when the appropriate committee meets it will itself wish to decide who should appear; and if the committee issued a call for the other members of the board I am certain they would respect the wishes of the committee.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—CONSIDERATION OF FURTHER CRIMINAL CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Considering that any member of a corporation, banker, agent of a trust company, director, member or official of a company who defrauds the said company is liable to be extradited; considering that at page 115 and following pages of the French version of the Norris report Hal Banks is accused of having defrauded the S.I.U., does the Minister of Labour intend to avail himself of that section of the act respecting the extradition of a person and of the charges laid in the Norris report in order to take proceedings against Hal Banks concerning those cases and have him extradited from the United States into Canada so he can serve the five year jail sentence which was imposed upon him?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, all I can say on this point is that all the facts have been considered by two very eminent counsel, Mr. Robinette and Mr. Martineau. They have concluded, and recommended accordingly, that a charge be laid for the particular matter for which Mr. Banks was convicted. I understand, and this of course is subject to the word of the Minister of Justice, that there was no further recommendation with respect to any other charges, after they had considered all the available evidence.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Another supplementary question. Should we conclude that it is not the intention of the government to lay against Hal Banks other charges that could bring about his extradition to Canada?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: As a non-lawyer, Mr. Speaker, I would think you have to have evidence before you lay charges, and presumably these two eminent counsel could not find evidence.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister, in view of the importance of the matter—if he has read the Norris report—whether he has not seen the charges laid by Mr. Justice Norris that would bring about Hal Banks' extradition?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This questioning has continued at some length, and it seems to me that the Minister of Justice is the proper official to whom these questions should be directed.

Mr. MacEachen: On a point of order, I think I ought to correct the impression left that in the commission report of Justice Norris there was evidence upon which charges were to be laid. Mr. Justice Norris himself recommended that counsel be appointed and that counsel so appointed were to gather evidence upon which future charges might be laid.

POWER

ONTARIO—APPLICATION RESPECTING PROPOSED NUCLEAR PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Industry, following up my query of last week in respect of a nuclear power plant and its location in Ontario, and whether an application had been approved by the atomic energy commission, at which time the minister said no application had yet been received. In view of reliable information I now have that the Ontario hydro commission submitted an application dated September 3, will the minister say whether the application has been approved, or when it is expected to be approved by the atomic energy commission?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the statement I made last week, to the effect that no application had been received, was correct. Since then an application from Ontario hydro has been received by the atomic energy control board and is now under consideration.

Mr. Starr: In view of what the minister has said, that his reply of last week was correct and that no application had been received, and in view of the fact that I have information from a reliable source that the application was forwarded on September 3, a month ago, will the minister reconsider his answer?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I will check my source, and the hon. gentleman might check his.

Mr. Starr: I checked mine.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege involving the Secretary of State, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. It has to do with the business of the house. Can the parliamentary secretary give us any reason why order paper questions 1,453, 1,550, 1,606, 1,623 and 1,642, which have been on the order paper since July, have not been answered? I would refer also to questions 1,705, 1,727, 1,729, 1,766 and 1,810, which have been on the order paper since August, also starred questions 1,874, 1,889, 1,902, 1,925 and 1,982.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Kootenay East has a speech to make I wish he would rise.

Mr. Byrne: You are out of order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): He does all his talking from his seat.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand this is a matter of privilege, and I should like to hear the end of it.

Mr. Winkler: It was meant to be. These questions have been on the order paper for some time, and I would ask the parliamentary secretary when we may expect the answers.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has raised a very detailed question. I do not think I would want to take up the time of the house dealing with each of these questions in particular.

CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENTS TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to address to the Minister of Labour while he still has his crystal ball, foretelling the rest of the session, in front of him. Is it his intention during the current session to bring proposals before parliament to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this matter was dealt with by the Prime Minister in the very early days of the session, and I have nothing to add to what he said on that occasion.

CONSIDERATION OF MOTION RESPECTING THANKSGIVING DAY SITTING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with a motion that is on the order paper, and I direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. I am wondering whether we might proceed with the motion in the name of the Minister of Justice that this house do not sit during the visit of Her Majesty the Queen on Monday. I think all hon. members of the house, being loyal, would be most anxious to give support to this motion, and I am wondering whether the government intends to proceed with it.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I am sure the house would wish me to take this opportunity of saying, in the absence of the Prime Minister, how pleased and honoured we all are in this house and in this country that Her Majesty the Queen is in Canada at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is the wish of the government that we should not sit on Monday. If we have not proceeded with this motion yesterday or today it is because of consultations which are taking place with various sections of the house so as to facilitate the business of the house. I am sure we shall not be sitting on Monday, and I think in view of the discussions which took place among party leaders this morning, or which may take place later in the day, I might ask the right hon. gentleman to let his question stand until that time. I am sure it is the wish of this house that we should not sit on Monday, and steps to that end will be taken.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It certainly is.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): What does the Acting Prime Minister mean by "consultation with various sections of the house"? The entire Conservative party is in favour of the motion which is on the order paper and is not blocking it in any way at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would hope that in a matter of this sort the hon. gentleman would not seek to establish an issue. He knows perfectly well to what I was referring. I was not referring to any particular party.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Because we want to obtain the end result I have mentioned, the hon. gentleman, who is usually co-operative would, I am sure, not wish to be unco-operative in this respect.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he be co-operative, too, and not refer to Her Majesty's loyal opposition as a section of the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I wish to be co-operative with all sections of the house. I could refer to the right hon. gentleman's group as a segment.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

PURCHASE OF LAND FOR CONSTRUCTION OF SMALL POST OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the Postmaster General announced the construction of various post office buildings throughout the country under the winter works program. He also added that the Minister of Public Works would soon buy the land to this end.

May I ask the Minister of Public Works how the officials of his department usually proceed in purchasing such land?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Langlois: The answer could be short, and I should like the minister, if possible, to take my question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

FARM MACHINERY

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR PURCHASES BY SYNDICATES

The house resumed, from Monday, October 5, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-121, to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates—Mr. Hays—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening clause 3 of the bill, with an amendment thereto by the hon. member for Acadia, was under consideration. Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

On clause 3—Loans to farm machinery syndicates.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I will not delay the desired vote on this amendment for more than a few minutes. The whole of clause 3 and the amendment thereto deals with the question of the security to be set against the amount of the loan offered. The Minister of Agriculture has clouded the issue by repeated references to the fact that a person signing a promissory note for the total amount would not necessarily need to have sufficient security to cover the total amount for which he signed. But before I moved my amendment last evening I asked the minister whether a person whose total net worth was $5,000 would be able to sign a promissory note for the total amount borrowed by a syndicate of which he was a member, an amount of perhaps $45,000. I asked the minister whether the corporation would take a promissory note in those circumstances and place a value on it.

As reported on page 8757 of Hansard the minister replied "I do not suppose we would lend money to an individual in that position". I then asked what would happen in a case of a person who had total assets for security purposes of $15,000 and who wished to join a syndicate with three other members. Would his promissory note for $45,000, the total amount the syndicate wished to borrow, be accepted? To this question the minister replied "I think I must reply in the same fashion". In other words he did not think the corporation would lend money to an individual with a net worth of $15,000 who wished to join a syndicate borrowing $45,000.

It is a well known fact that the Farm Credit Corporation considers the question of security against loans to be of the utmost importance. Yesterday it was stated that a farmer could borrow $55,000 from the Farm Credit Corporation and another $15,000 from the banks under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I hesitated to make any suggestion that this might not be the case; I wanted it to come from the minister or his officials. But under part III of the legislation governing the Farm Credit Corporation the corporation can only lend a farmer $55,000 provided he meets all the requirements. One of the conditions is that the farmer must clean up his notes at the bank; he must have no other outside debts. In other words if a farmer who has borrowed $10,000 from the bank under the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act applies for a loan under part III of the farm credit legislation, whether for the full amount or for less, he must immediately set aside sufficient money to meet his obligation at the bank.

I am pointing this out in order to convince the committee that no one is being fooled on this question of security. Despite all that has been said, we are all aware that when money is lent, even if the Minister of Agriculture is acting as the banker, as he has suggested, through the Farm Credit Corporation, adequate security will be insisted on, security which has not been pledged to cover another debt. I say once again that under the clause we now have before us, in the provision stating that a farmer must sign a promissory note for the total amount borrowed by a syndicate, such a promissory note must have the full amount of security backing.

I have put forward an amendment which may cause some difficulty, but it would have the effect of making the promissory note apply only to the amount of the loan applicable to each member of the syndicate, which seems to me much more sensible. A person with assets of $15,000 could then join a syndicate which wished to borrow $45,000; his share would be $15,000, and thus he could join in borrowing the total amount. As it is now, whether a syndicate is formed of three, six or seven members, each member has to sign for the total amount borrowed. This amendment if accepted would give the clause a much wider application and make it possible to cover many more small farmers who are perhaps in need of greater borrowing power.

I have nothing more to say, Mr. Chairman. The Minister of Agriculture has considered this amendment; his officials looked at it all last evening. I have made my plea for a wider application of this bill so it will be applicable to the small farmers who have not the capital assets that the minister stated many farmers have. In his remarks last evening the minister said that in his part of the country they use $50,000, $60,000, $75,000 or $100,000 worth of credit at the banks. I hope we are not passing legislation to aid farmers who can already borrow $100,000 at the bank. I hope we are trying to pass legislation that will help farmers who can perhaps borrow $4,000, $5,000 or $6,000 at the bank, and who need a little more credit to assist them in their operations.

If the Liberal party and the minister cannot visualize now how clause 3 will be discriminatory against the small farmers, I have very little hope for them in the future, or for the small farmer as long as the minister stays in power. Yesterday the minister said he had 12 lawyers working for him. He could not help throwing in the odd little boast as to what a great man he was. He said, of course, that none of them were any good. When one considers this bill it looks as though the minister knew more than all the drafters, because it is certainly a hodgepodge.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Horner, Acadia) negatived: Yeas, 42; nays, 64.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 3 carry?

Clause 3 agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Term of loan on repayment.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I want to just register my strong objection to one feature of clause 5. This is the clause which says that the interest rate will be prescribed by the corporation. I think this is most unsatisfactory. I believe the minister indicated the other day that the interest rate would probably not be more than 6 per cent; I think that was the figure he gave. However, there is no guarantee in passing this legislation as to what the interest rate will actually be, not only at the moment but what it will be over the years, if it is left to the corporation. The minister keeps saying that this legislation is primarily to help small farmers. Certainly if it is to help small farmers I am enthusiastically in favour of such a measure. But if it is to help small farmers, surely we ought to be keeping the cost to the barest minimum, because it is the small farmers who need help.

A survey which has just been completed by the Ontario federation of labour produced some interesting statistics. They pointed out that 71 per cent of all the farmers produced and sold farm products with a gross value of less than $5,000, and that 46 per cent produced and sold less than $2,500 worth of farm produce in 1961, the last year for which complete figures are available. This means that in 1961 more than two fifths of the farmers of Canada had a gross income of less than $2,500. I leave it to anyone to figure out what their net income was; I suspect it was something less than $1,500.

It is these small farmers who need help. It is these small farmers who cannot buy the expensive machinery which would enable them to farm economically. It is these small farmers whom I hope the minister is going to encourage and assist in the forming of syndicates so they can buy machinery which will provide a lower per unit cost of operation.

It is perfectly apparent that farmers whose gross income is less than $2,500 a year and whose net income is probably less than $1,500 a year are going to need all the help they can get. When a farmer comes under the Farm Credit Corporation legislation the interest rate is stated in the act, as I remember, at 5 per cent. When the farmer borrows money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act the interest rate is stated in the act; again, as I recollect it, at 5 per cent. But here is legislation which the minister claims is directed primarily at assisting the small farmer. How is it going to assist the small farmer? He is going to pay interest, the minister says, of not less than 6 per cent.

Just look at the financial burden which will be placed on a farmer who goes into one of these syndicates. I am thinking of a small farmer. First of all he has to find his share of 20 per cent of the cost of the machinery. He must also sign a note, not only for his share but for the entire amount of money that is borrowed. He must also, at the time the loan is made, pay a 1 per cent service charge. In addition to this, the minister indicated yesterday that he will probably be expected to have fire insurance, liability insurance and life insurance to protect the syndicate in the event that any one of its members dies.

Mr. Baldwin: And a service charge of 1 per cent.

Mr. Douglas: I mentioned the service charge of 1 per cent at the time the machinery is purchased. If anyone wishes to add this up, I suggest this is not legislation designed to help small farmers. These farmers will be carrying a very heavy burden. The minister spoke yesterday about farmers buying machinery and paying 10 per cent and 12 per cent interest in this connection. I would think the government ought to have taken action long ago on that type of exploitation. The farmer here is going to pay very heavy costs, and I think the least the government can do is to give the farmer who is borrowing money from the Farm Credit Corporation under this bill terms at least as generous as those accorded to the farmer who borrows money under the Farm Credit Act or under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

If the minister is desirous of helping small farmers it certainly is not apparent in this bill, particularly having regard to the wording of clause 5. I think by comparison to the minister Scrooge looks like a generous person. I say that because the burden which will be saddled on the small farmer who goes into one of these syndicates is going to be extremely heavy.

I would urge the minister to introduce an amendment to clause 5, as was done by the previous government in other farm lending legislation, to fix the interest rate in this clause, and that it will be 5 per cent. I think the government can borrow money at less than that rate, and if they cannot and this requires a subsidy, then the government is even more justified in subsidizing small farmers than it is in subsidizing farmers who borrow money under the Farm Credit Act or under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I hope the minister will see fit to either prescribe in the bill that the interest rate will not be more than 5 per cent or that he will give us some better explanation for leaving this item wide open than anything he has given us so far.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, in reply to this question let me say I agree with the hon. member that we must look on these things with as much favour as we can so far as the farmer is concerned. I know that the Quebec farm credit bureau see fit to pay in the province of Quebec a subsidy of 2½ per cent interest on corporation loans. When my hon. friend was premier of Saskatchewan he never offered this reduction in interest rate to the farmers, a matter to which I think every provincial government should give some thought.

So far as the machinery is concerned, these loans are short term loans, for not more than seven years, and we feel that the interest rate should be at 6 per cent or something less. The hon. member also raised the question about a 1 per cent service charge on the loan. That is normal and is done all the time. So far as national housing is concerned, 2 per cent is paid which is to take care of insurance, and this is added on the mortgage and paid out during the length of the contract. I think this will tend to decrease the cost.

Let me go back to what I said yesterday, that there is something like $240 million being lent to farmers at interest rates from 10 per cent to 20 per cent on the purchase of machinery.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the minister quote the source for that figure?

Mr. Hays: The $240 million? This was information which I was able to have the Farm Credit Corporation gather for me when this bill was in preparation a long time ago.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In other words there is no official source for that figure; it is one which the minister's officials have figured out?

Mr. Hays: Yes, and I have a great deal of confidence in the Farm Credit Corporation. I do not think they would tend to fool me. There is another figure which the federation of agriculture came up with, I believe, a figure of something like $400 million, but I used the conservative figure of $240 million. I am sure there is not a farmer in the country who would object to paying 6 per cent if he could purchase the machinery he needs, particularly when it is realized that over the period of the contract he is only paying one third of this 6 per cent, as he now has an opportunity to share this machine with three people or more. If he had to buy his own piece of equipment to do the work he would bear the full amount, but he will now have an opportunity of using a large machine on which he will actually be paying only 2 per cent, or one third of 6 per cent, if the capital cost of the contract works out as we anticipate it will.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, that is a strange kind of arithmetic on the minister's part. The minister says a farmer will pay only one third of the 6 per cent interest; but he would only have a one third ownership in the machine, so he will pay the full 6 per cent on the part of the debt for which he is liable.

Mr. Hays: I do not think the hon. member was listening to me. What I said was this. Supposing the farmer had to buy the whole machine and pay, say, $10,000. He would pay 6 per cent interest on that machine. He now has an opportunity, if he need only use the machine for a small part of the time, to get exactly the same amount of work out of the machine by paying possibly one third of the capital cost. He would also only pay his share of the interest rate, which I know would be 6 per cent on his particular share; but his operating cost would be decreased by two thirds.

Mr. Douglas: Well, we would all agree that the operating cost is less because the farmer is going into joint ownership of the machine. But he would only have the right to a one third ownership of the machine and to a one third use of the machine. Consequently he would not pay the same amount he would pay if he owned the machine completely and had the use of it all the time. That is the purpose of this legislation.

Surely the minister can give us a better reply than saying that the provinces could subsidize this interest rate. We are passing federal legislation. We have been repeatedly told by the provinces, and with a good deal of justification, that they have been called upon over the years to assume more responsibility than their financial revenues will permit, and all the tax rental arrangements have been designed to siphon off more revenue to the provinces and more taxes to the provinces in order that they may discharge their responsibilities. It is the federal government which has the money, and I do not think they should say that if the interest rate is too high the provinces can put up the money. The provinces in which this legislation will be most needed—I think particularly of the Atlantic provinces—are the provinces which can least afford to subsidize the minister's program. The minister wants to be Santa Claus and hand out presents providing somebody else pays part of the cost. Anyone can be Santa Claus on that basis, but this will not fool anyone. The farmers are holding the minister responsible, and the minister will be held responsible if the farmers have to pay 6 per cent when they borrow money to purchase machinery for these syndicates.

What the minister has not explained is why in this legislation the rate is 6 per cent and in other legislation it is 5 per cent. The farm improvement loans money is also short term; why is the interest 5 per cent in that case? If that money can be borrowed at 5 per cent there is no reason why this money cannot be borrowed at 5 per cent. And usually the amount borrowed will be a larger amount. If the minister is going to make the rate 6 per cent, then let him at least put it in the bill at "not more than 6 per cent", although I think it should be not more than 5 per cent, the same as in the other lending legislation. If the minister thinks that is too low let him put in the words "not more than 6 per cent"; then it would at least be stipulated in the bill. The farmers as well as the members of this house have no way of knowing now whether this rate will creep up to 7 per cent or 8 per cent. There would be some protection for the farmers if the maximum rate of interest to be charged were stipulated in the statute. I know the minister keeps saying: Let us put the legislation into effect and try it out for a while, and then I will refer the legislation to the agriculture committee next year and it can be overhauled then. That does not solve the problem for the farmers who come under this legislation in the course of the next 12 months. If during the next 12 months farmers come under the legislation, enter into agreements with an interest rate of 6 per cent plus a 1 per cent service charge, make themselves jointly and severally responsible for the entire amount of the loan and as a result find themselves in a financial hotbox, amending of the legislation at the next session will not benefit them. It will benefit farmers who come under the legislation subsequently but it will not benefit farmers who come under the legislation between the time it is passed now and the time it is amended at the next session of parliament.

I predict that unless the minister re-examines some of the things he has put in the legislation there will be a great many farmers who in desperation will come under the legislation in order to get machinery, and will find subsequently that they have assumed a heavier burden of financial responsibility than they are able to discharge. I just do not see how a farmer with a gross income of less than $2,500 a year—the survey by the Ontario federation of labour shows that 46 per cent of the farmers of Canada are in that category—can afford to pay 6 per cent interest, a 1 per cent service charge, sign a promissory note to cover the entire borrowing of the syndicate and in addition carry fire insurance, public liability insurance and life insurance as a member of the syndicate. It seems to me this is a financial burden that small farmers will not be able to carry and some of them will find themselves in financial difficulties. I urge the minister to reconsider his decision and to put the maximum interest rate in the legislation, 5 per cent if possible or 6 per cent if he feels he cannot accept the 5 per cent figure.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, taking up the train of thought advanced by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam I would say that the provision contained in subclause 2 of clause 5 is quite a reversal of the philosophy of farm credit legislation now on the statute books. This is going back to the rough, tough days of the farm loan board. We all know why a new act was introduced and the Farm Credit Corporation was established. The purpose was to infuse into the whole farm credit field an entirely new philosophy, and I think it has been quite successful because the officials of the corporation are interpreting the act that way.

I would prefer to see this legislation simply say 5 per cent because it is quite as easy for the government to finance the operations of the Farm Credit Corporation with respect to this legislation as it is with respect to its general credit operations. I do not see why it should be more expensive to borrow under this legislation than under the Farm Credit Act.

Second, under the wording of subclause 2 the rate of interest is not fixed at all from year to year. The subclause reads in part as follows:

—at such rate prescribed by the corporation as in its opinion is sufficient to return to it an amount equal to the cost to the corporation of any money advanced to it for the purpose of making that loan—

That is a flexible amount.

—and the expenses of the corporation in administering that loan—

That is also a flexible amount.

—including a reasonable reserve against losses.

That is the third barrier. Therefore the corporation in its wisdom may start out with an interest rate of 5½ or 6 per cent but two years later they may say they have to have an additional 1 per cent, so two years from now the rate will have gone up.

Mr. Lloyd: Or down.

Mr. Lambert: Or down. That is conceivable, but the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) will readily understand that these rates do not usually go down. They usually go up because costs and reserves for losses are involved. But there is a third objection. The changing of the rate is not subject to restriction by regulation. The words used are "at such rate prescribed by the corporation". Clause 9 deals with regulations and provides that the corporation may, with the approval of the governor in council, make regulations prescribing the terms and conditions that a syndicate agreement must contain and defining the expressions "farm machinery" and "co-operative farm association". I would say that under a reasonable interpretation of clause 5, subclause 2, as it now stands the approval of the governor in council would not be required for a change in the interest rate. By that I do not intend to impute improper motives to the corporation, but unless the minister can prove me wrong I want to point out that a reading of clause 5 and clause 9 together leads me to say that while all other regulations made initially under the act or later amendments are subject to the approval of the governor in council, it is not indicated that the interest rate is included.

I offer these alternatives to the minister. First of all, I should like to see a specific rate of interest prescribed in the bill. If it is found later that with the rate so fixed the Farm Credit Corporation cannot conduct operations successfully, then the corporation will have to come back to parliament for approval of any change. I think that is what should be done here if this legislation is going to be good legislation. It should be on a par with the Farm Credit Act. Therefore I should like to see the rate prescribed so that it will be clear.

Second, if that is not acceptable I should like to see it clearly stated that the rate prescribed by the corporation is subject to the approval of the governor in council. That should be stated clearly in clause 5. There is what I consider to be a latent ambiguity in the language and I think my doubt is sufficiently well founded in the imprecise language in clause 5. If what I have suggested were done there would be a further check.

My first recommendation to the minister, in line with what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has said, is that the interest rate should be spelled out right here in the clause. If you are going to make it 5 per cent, say so. If it is going to be 6 per cent, say so. Second, let us have it clearly set out that any change in the rate of interest shall be subject to the approval of the governor in council. In that way there would be a much closer retention of supervision by parliament over the operations under this legislation.

In saying this I am not imputing improper motives or actions to the Farm Credit Corporation. As a matter of fact, I think we would remove from their backs the burden of approving an interest rate, a burden which I think should rest here in this house.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has referred to approval by the governor in council and he questions the wording of the clause. The intent of the wording is that the interest rate is subject to the approval of the governor in council.

Mr. Lambert: It does not say so.

Mr. Hays: It is contained in clause 5, subclause 2, which reads as follows:

> Subject to the approval of the governor in council, every loan made under this act shall bear interest at such rate prescribed by the corporation as in its opinion is sufficient to return to it an amount equal to the cost to the corporation of any money advanced to it for the purpose of making that loan and the expenses of the corporation in administering that loan, including a reasonable reserve against losses.

The justice department feels that this is the proper wording to do exactly what the hon. member suggested should be done. In so far as interest rates are concerned, the government believes this should be at an economic rate. This wording is much the same as that with respect to the increased loans under the Farm Credit Corporation above $20,000 and above $27,500. We feel that if our farmers are to be subsidized that should be done under the stabilization act or one of the three different ways in which we support these commodities. In so far as this legislation is concerned we feel the interest rate should be at the economic rate.

I know farmers pretty well. I have talked to a lot of them. They want to stand on their own feet. They want markets. They want to be able to finance property. My government feels that the interest rate should be the economic rate. We believe this rate will be 6 per cent or less. Since I know politicians I cannot see any of them raising the interest rate.

Mr. Whelan: I hesitate to enter this debate because I come from a clan of logsplitters and not hairsplitters. After listening to this debate, I just wonder what the farmers of this nation are thinking. I am a farmer, and I know that over 50 per cent of the money that is borrowed in this nation is borrowed at high interest rates, much higher than we will be setting under this bill, from modern day Shylocks and from bonus merchants. This bill will overcome these practices to a great extent. When my own family started farming, and we were a large family, we had nothing like this bill on which to rely. We had to borrow money from whoever would lend it. We did pool our assets to buy our equipment for farming.

As I said earlier, this measure is of tremendous advantage to the average young farmer in this nation. So far as I am concerned, this interest rate is all right. I, as a farmer, approve of it. I do not believe we should go around this nation yelling for lower interest rates just because we are farmers. The farmers of this nation, as I have said before and I will say again, are the most efficient producers in the world. The people of this nation are enjoying the cheapest food, when food prices are related to their earning power, of any nation in the world. I feel we should be able, as the minister has said to make these crops return sufficient to the farmer so that he does not have to go around like a second class citizen asking for special privileges in the way of interest rates. I feel we are actually professional people, industrialists or whatever you want to call us.

Yesterday I heard the hon. member for Acadia pleading the case of the small farmer. In the area from which I come we are small farmers and we do not farm several thousand acres. I know what the small farmers want. I know how important this legislation can be to them. In our area there are many small farmers such as onion producers and vegetable producers, who are being put out of business because they cannot compete with the money people who are taking over this part of the business. The small farmer is being eliminated, and this is an important way of life to many of these people. I visited the countries of Europe last year and I saw that the incentive was taken away from people when these farms were incorporated. The individual farmer's incentive to produce no longer existed. We must preserve the right of the individual farmer to be an independent farmer.

We know that farmers can work together through their co-operatives. We know they can work together to purchase machinery and equipment or whatever is necessary in their everyday life. As a result of the buoyant economy in my area during the last two years, a lot of young men are leaving the farms. This is one of the most productive areas in Canada or in North America. These young people are leaving the farms because they cannot compete with the money people in obtaining credit. As I said earlier, if we had had a bill such as this available to us when we were trying to start a farm we would have been able to enjoy a better way of life. We would have been able to compete with farmers who had unlimited capital to play around with. While we were sharecropping and doing everything possible to make ends meet, others had credit facilities available to them. I say that we in agriculture today, no matter where we may be in Canada, should be able to pay the going rate of interest and should be able to accept our place in society as first rate citizens.

So far as I am concerned, there has been too much talk in connection with this bill, too much delay. It annoys me, as a farmer, and as a farmer who had to help himself. Last year I introduced a bill to protect farmers against bankruptcy. The same people who say they are worried about what is going to happen to the farmer under this particular bill are the ones who held up my bill. They did not want to protect the farmers.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What has this to do with clause 5?

Mr. Whelan: It has a definite relationship because my bill was designed to protect the farmer who had overcapitalized in machinery, in case the company with which he was dealing went broke. In most cases the farmers go broke too, because they have overcapitalized in this machinery by trying to buy it themselves. There is no bill like this right now to protect the farmers.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Why didn't the government bring it in, then?

Mr. Whelan: This bill, so far as I am concerned, bars a close relationship to what I was trying to do last year. Many of our farmers are operating on returns that do not give them a fair way of life. The bill I was introducing last year attempted to give them protection under the old system of borrowing money from Shylocks to buy equipment. If they lost their crops, they were not able to pay anything. The same people who are complaining about the bill before us today are the ones who talked against my bill and did not want to give the farmers protection. So far as I am concerned this measure is long overdue.

Mr. Olson: I do not want to hold up clause 5, but I do subcribe to some of the arguments made by the hon. member for Essex South as well as to some other things the Minister of Agriculture had to say with regard to farmers wanting to stand on their own feet. I wonder if the minister would consider with me the arguments respecting this matter of interest rate from a slightly different angle? Clause 5 refers to the corporation setting the appropriate rate that will take into consideraion the expenses involved in the corporation administering the loan, including reasonable reserves against losses. In addition to that, another clause we are about to consider refers to an additional service charge of 1 per cent per annum on the loan. Now, we have not any indication as to how high this is all going to add up, or what the final figure will be. We feel it is going to be somewhere around 7 per cent. Perhaps this is substantially lower than some of the interest rates now being charged by lending institutions for loans on farm machinery; but under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, which has been operating since 1945, and under which hundreds of millions of dollars have been lent to farmers, the losses to date have been approximately only one tenth of 1 per cent.

Under the provisions of this bill, where security is guaranteed jointly and severally by all members of a syndicate, there is a higher interest rate to be charged. This greater security must lower the risk factor, but on the other hand the interest rate will be substantially higher than the 5 per cent charged under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. For that reason it does not seem reasonable that there should be a higher rate of interest.

Another point is that we have staff within the Farm Credit Corporation to administer this bill, and it seems unreasonable that another charge should be made on the proposed loans for administration. It may be that the corporation will need staff—I do not deny that—but the same principle applies to all government operations whether in farm legislation, in unemployment insurance or in transport. Staff is already being paid by the public treasury and no charge is made for the administration.

As I have said on a number of occasions, though I am concerned with some of the bill's provisions I am prepared to let it pass on a trial basis, and a year from now we can refer it to a committee, find out what weaknesses it has and try to deal with them. Time and again the minister has said the major purpose of this bill is to assist small farmers to buy large, expensive pieces of machinery that they require, under terms by which they would own it and use it cooperatively, thus reducing the cost of the machinery.

I believe a simple amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act would allow farmers to borrow up to $15,000, both independently and jointly, for the purpose of buying farm machinery. The limit of loans under that act was raised to $15,000 a month ago, so that any farmer who had used up to his previous maximum of $7,500 now has another $7,500 available to him if he qualifies under the provisions of the act. Amending that act would have been a simpler and more effective way of meeting the needs of small farmers, because $15,000 is a substantial amount, particularly when one is speaking in terms of a very small farm.

To some extent I support the argument advanced by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for Edmonton West that a specific rate of interest should be prescribed by this bill. An interest rate of 5 per cent has been set for loans under other farm legislation, and since the loans to be made under this bill will be better secured than individual loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, I see no justification for a service charge of 1 per cent over and above the cost of money to the Farm Credit Corporation. Nevertheless, I do not take any hard objection to this because I think the increased maximums provided under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, which were passed by parliament last month, will meet farmers' needs for the next few months. I think these maximum amounts will be used, because loans under that act will be approximately 2 per cent cheaper than credit provided by this bill.

Mr. Hays: There is some misunderstanding here, Mr. Chairman. This 1 per cent service charge will only be charged once for the length of the contract.

Mr. Douglas: At the time of borrowing?

Mr. Hays: At the time of the borrowing. It is not a yearly charge. At present we are raising money at something like 4.78 per cent. We estimate the cost of operating loans for this bill will be something under .75 per cent, and so far as the reserve for bad debts is concerned it will be on the same basis as the Farm Improvement Loans Act. It is not meant to make money, and if the reserve were high it would be used to lower the cost. When you add all this up it is quite a bit under 6 per cent at the moment, and certainly this is a great deal better than farmers have been accustomed to, so far as borrowing for the purchase of large equipment is concerned.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Chairman, I think clause 5 meets all the criteria we expect in handling financial affairs of government in Ottawa. We are most anxious to keep subsidies and the like to any particular sector of the economy, to social services and to provinces, in a proper reporting medium. It seems to me, where we attempt to make funds available at an economic rate for the purchase of equipment of this kind, that the legislation as it is drafted accepts the principle that if there should be need in the farming community for a subsidy which can be identified, it can be provided, as the minister has said, in other ways and by measures which are readily identifiable, which can be compared to the need and can be compared with the other subsidies of government. The more you bury these bits and pieces of subsidies, the more difficult it is to fix responsibility.

I am pleased that this bill does not propose to fix a rate of interest. It fixes the responsibility on the governor in council, and in approving the rate of interest the government takes responsibility. It is responsible to parliament for its actions, and if the rates should become excessive, parliament has opportunities readily available for criticizing a government that adopted such a policy. Certainly clause 5 makes it quite clear that the interest rate must take into account such things as an amount equal to the cost to the corporation of any money advanced to it, also the expenses of the corporation in administering loans, and a reasonable reserve against losses.

I think I should mention clause 6. It provides that there will be a service charge of an amount equal to 1 per cent of the amount of the loan. Then clause 8 establishes the account. All the machinery here will be taken into account when fixing the interest rates. If after a period of time the experience of losses has shown them to be very low, then certainly the governor in council would have regard to this experience when fixing the interest rate, and the rate imposed could be lessened.

It seems to me we should subscribe to the principle that as far as possible economic interest rates should obtain in all these fields. If there are to be subsidies of any kind they should be made in another form and be clearly identifiable so that subsidies to all parts of the country and in all circumstances may be properly compared and assessed.

Mr. Gundlock: In my opinion it is about time we faced the real issue in this talk, or debate, or battle as it has been described. Many of us will recall that when the Farm Credit Corporation was set up the same kind of battle went on. Maybe it was not as obvious, but the battle took place just the same for a most specific purpose. In my opinion and for the information of this committee, it was over the question of the interest rate, and the rate at that time was set at 5 per cent.

I think we should realize that there is more to this talk and to this battle than is apparent on the surface. I think there is something which is in the back of most of our minds and I believe we should be talking about it. I know that we on this side are thinking about it. I refer to the fact that there is probably too much consideration given to farm organizations and interest rates, and to low interest rates. I think of the small businesses here in Canada which need something very like this. I think if there were some assurance—and we on this side are willing to give this assurance—that this same kind of battle would be put up for them, and for the same reasons, much of our trouble might disappear.

Speaking of small business—and I do not mean to depart from the principle we are considering—it is very much needed. I think if Canadian small businesses had some assurance that this kind of battle would be put up for them, some of the criticism of this bill would be lessened. That is about all I wish to say. I want to emphasize by way of repetition that this sort of thing is being done for the same reason as it was previously; maybe not in the same way, but for the same reason. We need a definite rate of interest and we need lower interest rates. We need them for other segments of the Canadian economy besides agriculture.

Mr. Herridge: May I say briefly that I support this legislation in principle. It has proven successful in Great Britain and Scotland, operated by hard headed farmers in the United Kingdom, supported by the national farm union and the co-operative societies which are related to the agriculture industry there.

This is an experiment. We are applying to Canadian conditions provisions which have been successful in England and Scotland. I fully appreciate the criticisms which have been advanced from the benches to my right and I support some of them. I refer to the fact that co-operative organizations are not allowed to borrow; that some of the regulatory features have not been included in the bill, and that there should be a fixed interest rate. As I say, I appreciate these criticisms. But I wish to read two or three paragraphs to indicate what has been done in this field in the United Kingdom. I am all in favour of giving this scheme a trial for a year and finding out where the kinks are, and straightening them out as a result of experience.

I intend to read from an article entitled "Farm Machinery Syndicates" written by Mr. N. L. Goodland. This is what it has to say:

> A machinery-buying syndicate, having been accepted as 'creditworthy', may consist of two farmers or more. On approach to Syndicate Credits Ltd.—

That is the organization which supplies the capital.

> —80 per cent of the cost of the article may be loaned, the remaining 20 per cent to be paid by the syndicate on delivery. The loan so made is paid off in half yearly instalments, with interest payable only on what is outstanding. Loans for movable equipment may be paid off over four years and this may be extended to five years in the case of grain-drying, storage and cleaning plants.
> Further costs are made up as follows: Syndicates Credits Ltd. are charged 1 per cent on money borrowed and also an initial levy of two pounds sterling per syndicate member, which goes back to the agricultural central co-operative association to cover the cost of administration.
> Syndicates Credits Ltd. are also charged for loans one half per cent above bank rate. The syndicates themselves are charged a further 1 per cent to cover the country's administrative costs.

This is similar to the provision included in the bill before us.

> Thus the rate of interest charged to each syndicate is 1½ per cent above bank rate, between the limits of 5 per cent and 7 per cent, calculated on outstanding balances only.

I do not intend to read any more from this article, now. The adjustment comes in the profit to the members of the syndicate at the end of the year—the savings. I suggest it would be ideal to have a fixed rate of interest, but I presume that if as the result of one year's operation of the act it was found unnecessary to charge the interest rate which had been fixed—if a reserve was developing—the rate could be lowered. I simply say therefore that I do not think we should continue a lengthy debate on this bill. We support it in principle though we criticize some of the details. We look upon it as an experiment in Canada based on successful experience in other countries. Let us pass this measure, give it a trial, and find out what happens at the end of the year.

Mr. Danforth: I support the men who have spoken on this bill to advocate that there should be a fixed rate of interest embodied in the terms of the measure.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the contribution made by the hon. member for Essex South. He certainly pleaded the case of the farmers in our area. There is one difference though. The farmers in my riding, being businessmen, would prefer to obtain loans at 5 per cent than at 6 per cent or 7 per cent, as the hon. member's farmers are apparently prepared to pay.

I have one question I should like to ask the minister at this point. I understand that the rates of interest would be prescribed at the time a loan is taken out under this measure, and that this would be the interest rate which the farmers concerned would have to pay. Is it not true, then, that the rate could vary each year for several different years? There could be five different syndicates borrowing in successive years at different rates of interest. Is this what will happen? Or will provision be made that in the case of the cost of money borrowed by a syndicate going down, the amount of interest required from all the syndicates would be adjusted every year accordingly. Of course if a rate of interest of 5 per cent or 6 per cent were to be prescribed now and incorporated in the bill, anyone borrowing money under the terms of this legislation would know exactly where he stood.

Mr. Hays: In reply to the question asked by the hon. member, any syndicates which borrow will pay the same rate of interest throughout the length of the contract. They will know exactly what they are getting into. It is quite likely that the interest rate will fluctuate, exactly as is the case when money is borrowed under the national housing provisions. Some people are fortunate enough to buy their houses at an interest rate of a little over 6 per cent; some are paying over 7 per cent. This depends on the cost of money. But this will be an economic rate.

I have given some indication as to what it will be under this bill. If the bill were to pass tonight, obtain royal assent and next week we were ready to go to bat, it would be something under 6 per cent. This would include all the charges under the particular contract that a syndicate might enter into a week from now.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a few words on this clause. I do not want to be too repetitious, but I certainly agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for Edmonton West. We are told, and have been told previously, that this is experimental legislation. The minister now says that if the bill were implemented today, next week, or even a week after that I suppose, the interest rate would be not more than 6 per cent. He has also told us that this legislation will come back in a year's time; it is on trial; it is experimental; we are going to study and review it; it is going to be before the agriculture committee next year. If this is so, why cannot he show his faith in the interest rate and in the government, and if the interest rate will not be more than 6 per cent why does he not say that in the bill? It would be simple to do this; this legislation is on trial; it is experimental; the minister will not have to stick with it for years and years and years. Then why does he not let us know what we are passing and what we are agreeing to?

I am not asking for a subsidized rate, as was suggested by the hon. member for Essex South. That hon. member seemed to feel that some farmers wanted a subsidized rate. I am asking for an established rate; a rate which farmers will know they will have to pay whether they borrow money today, during the next six months, or the day after the next six months. Farmers should know what the interest rate will be whenever they decide to join a syndicate under this bill. The hon. member for Essex South thought this legislation would be very worth while; he thought it would do something he could not do with his bankruptcy bill, although he claimed that his bankruptcy bill was a tremendously good and important bill. I ask, Mr. Chairman, why does not the government accept the hon. member's bankruptcy bill, if he and the government think it is so good? He has not even convinced his own party that it is good, so how can he hope to convince the country and this House of Commons? The minister has stated time and again that this is legislation for the small farmer; yet he is afraid to give the small farmer the assurance in writing in this clause that the interest rate will not be more than 6 per cent. We are not asking him to peg it at 5 per cent; but he can put in writing that it shall not be more than 6 per cent.

I proposed to move two amendments to this clause. However, I shall not move them because I realize now that the minister is stubborn, thick-skinned, bull-headed and has lost sight of the conditions facing many small farmers across Canada.

Mr. Greene: You are pig-headed.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I cannot for the life of me understand why in the first part of clause 5 it is necessary to include the words, "not exceeding seven years". This clause reads:

> Every loan made under this act shall be (a) for such term, not exceeding seven years, as is fixed by the corporation after considering the kind of farm machinery to be purchased with the loan and the expected economic life of that machinery—

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the life of the loan shall be determined by the corporation. The words "seven years" are not needed in this clause. The minister said last night that he wants to make this bill as flexible as possible, to quote his exact words. How is including a seven year limit making it flexible? When one looks at the schedules set out by the Department of National Revenue it is seen that every machine—if you file your income tax return in one manner; I think it is under form 17, although I am not sure—without a motor on it depreciates at the rate of 10 per cent. In this bill this limitation is set out. It is said that the intention is to make the bill as flexible as possible, but this clause includes the limitation, "not exceeding seven years". There is absolutely no need for those four words in this legislation.

I am not going to propose an amendment in this connection because I realize it will only mean delay; the minister will call in his members and they will vote it out. The hon. member for Medicine Hat and his group will vote the amendment out. The hon. member said he would support it, "to some extent". That means he is only going to mouth his support and when the vote comes he will vote with the government in any case. His whole group will do that, because they are in bed with the Liberals on every piece of legislation, on every clause and in every committee.

Mr. Byrne: Order. Make your speech.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am not going to refer to items of legislation for which they have voted at any particular time. They talk about low interest rates, yet they have supported and voted for high interest rates on many occasions in this house. The hon. member for Medicine Hat said he wanted to support the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and then he added the rider, "to some extent".

There should be immediately removed from this particular clause the words, "not exceeding seven years". Why put that limit on farm machinery? I have tried for the last two weeks whenever this bill has come before us to get some idea as to what the minister envisaged as farm machinery under this legislation. He has said it will include grain combines, and nothing more. He has agreed with me that it will probably include a portable feed mixing mill, or this type of machinery might be included. But he has not said that a stationary feed mill would be included, a silo, or the hundreds of other pieces of farm machinery which the Department of National Revenue depreciate at 10 per cent. This means that the normal life of such machinery is ten years. Why does the minister have to give it seven years? He has the security of the farmer; under clause 3 he has the security of a promissory note; and he has the machine itself as security. Why does he need these words, "not exceeding seven years", in view of the fact that he says the bill is in an experimental stage? This parliament has often brought in legislation on an experimental basis, on a trial and error basis. We had the pension bill before us on four occasions. If we had passed it the very first time, perhaps we would all be on pension by now, or will be by the time it is finally passed.

The minister talks about an experimental stage. He is going to review this legislation after a year's operation; he is going to tell us all about it and it is going to be placed before the agricultural committee. Then why does he not say in the bill, "not more than 6 per cent"? Is the minister afraid of losing a great deal of money? He gives us all kinds of assurances that the interest rate will be less than 6 per cent. I suggest to him that next year it will probably be more than 6 per cent. That is why he wants us to be gullible enough to accept the fact that the interest rate will be 5½ per cent now. I suggest to him that by passing this particular clause we will be accepting an interest rate of nearly 7 per cent before the year is over. We do not know.

Some hon. members say I have spoken too much. I am sure there are members in this house who feel I have spoken too much. However, Mr. Chairman, I am not concerned with that aspect of any piece of legislation, if I believe that by speaking a little longer I can perhaps improve the legislation. The minister has rejected the amendment that I moved yesterday in order to help many farmers who are not in the financial position that the minister envisages them to be in. These farmers could have been helped if my amendment had been accepted. He voted that one down. I feel there is very little use in my talking on this clause any longer because the minister would not be prepared to accept any changes anyway. He says the bill is experimental, that it is new. He also says he is not changing it one iota. The hon. member for Medicine Hat agrees with him. There are many things he does not like about it but he will let the farmers get into trouble for a year or not get into trouble for a year, as they choose. Then in one year's time the minister will take another look at the legislation. This is legislation by trial and error. It is legislation by experiment and by a minister who has lost sight of conditions and the many problems facing small farmers. I said at the beginning of the debate on this bill that it looked like the millionaire's answer to farm problems in Canada. If we proceed and pass the bill it will look to me like the millionaire's answer, and a bull-headed millionaire at that.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 6 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 9—Regulations.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. I have already made plain during the one or two interventions I have made in this debate that I was greatly concerned at the fact that in clause 9 this parliament is being asked to delegate to government the exclusive right to settle the main characteristics and essentials of this legislation, and not only to settle them initially but to alter them from time to time as the case may be. I am not going to repeat the arguments I made in this regard; I would simply say that as this debate has progressed it has become quite apparent that we who take this view are correct.

During the course of the resolution stage questions were asked of the minister and he said that when we had the bill before us we would have the answers. This was quite proper, because the bill at that time had not been exposed to view. Then on second reading stage of the bill he said that when we got into committee we would have the specific answers. But when we got into committee we found that although some of the answers were given, the main features of the bill which are of most consequence and importance were buried in the right of the governor in council to approve the regulations of the corporation.

I think this principle is undesirable. It is not a new principle. The minister and his officials are probably proceeding in the light of the experience of governments over a great many years. Step by step, stage by stage and act by act parliament is being asked to give to government the right to exercise the functions which parliament should exercise, and that is a practice to which I for one would take exception. I think it is quite wrong. It would have been easy for the minister and his officials to define what is meant by farm machinery. I think that if it stood by itself I for one would not ask for a specific definition of that phrase; I think there is an accepted understanding of what is meant by farm machinery. Even if "co-operative farm association" were left I think we could probably accept it. But when there is added to those two features of the bill the right of the corporation to prescribe the terms and conditions which a syndicate agreement must contain before it is approved by the corporation, I must draw the line.

In order to test the feeling of the committee concerning the extent to which we are being asked in almost indecent haste to give these powers to the government, I should like to move the following amendment to this clause:

That clause 9 be amended by adding after (c) the following:

"provided however that any regulation made under this section shall cease to have any force or effect unless approved and ratified by parliament within six months from the date such regulation comes into effect".

Before I sit down let me say I put the term "six months" in the amendment because the minister indicated that he hoped to bring the legislation back to this house. He admits that it is new and experimental and he suggests that he might bring it back in a year. I would be prepared, if the minister accepts the amendment, which would mean that any regulation which he makes must be brought back to this house for approval, to change "six months" to "one year", which would then meet the condition he has laid down.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, clause 9(a) says the corporation may make regulations prescribing the terms and conditions that a syndicate agreement must contain before it is approved by the corporation. This is the only difference so far as the Farm Credit Act is concerned. That clause was put in the bill so that there would be flexibility to enable the syndicates to fix their own agreements. These agreements may be different one from another. Their application may be different. For instance, farmers in Prince Edward Island would probably invest in a mixing machine and would be entirely different from the farmers who would invest in summer fallowing equipment which is used in western Canada, where one outfit would summer fallow 2,000 acres at the rate of 150 acres a day. This wording would allow the corporation to examine the agreements.

I did cover this matter the other day but I will go over it again. I think it would be better if I read the explanation because the other day I was hurrying along and probably some hon. members did not have the opportunity to examine the explanation in Hansard. We believe there are excellent reasons and excellent precedents for this approach. The most obvious reason is that this provides greater flexibility in dealing with farmers' applications for loans under this bill. But a precedent can also be found in the Farm Credit Act, again a precedent approved by parliament and well proven in actual operation. We believe this is the only sound approach we can take to ensure that the program, a new and experimental one, can be revised and improved as experience dictates. Besides leaving the definition of "farm machinery" to the regulations, the Farm Credit Act in section 11 confers other rather extensive discretion on the Farm Credit Corporation. This discretion, which is not subject to approval by governor in council, includes the authority to prescribe the forms of mortgages and agreements which farmers make with the corporation. I believe this was one occasion when the previous government showed a lot of common sense.

I am convinced, and I am sure everyone familiar with the great variety of the farmers' credit needs would agree, that this kind of flexible approach is essential for success in any farm credit program. This is why we have proposed that the items to be covered in agreements under the farm machinery syndicates bill should also be left to the administrators, to the people dealing directly with the farmers.

Naturally we have given very careful consideration to the general terms which the regulations will require in the agreements. Farmers forming a syndicate will have to make provision for such items as the rights and liabilities of syndicate members, including the interest in it of each member; insurance of the property against fire, and of the syndicate against public liability; the addition of new members; the withdrawal, death, insolvency, retirement or incapacity of a member for any cause; the dissolution of a syndicate; the holding of syndicate business meetings; the election of syndicate officers; the procedures in the event of default by an individual syndicate member; maintenance and sale of machinery; keeping proper records and accounts.

These are some of the general terms. But I am sure hon. members would not want to dictate to farmers in advance every detail as to how each syndicate must organize to meet these general terms. In administering the program, of course, the Farm Credit Corporation will suggest various ways in which these general terms can be met. For example, suppose a member wants to withdraw from a syndicate because he has sold his farm, or does not need the machinery any longer for some other reason. A syndicate agreement could include a provision for any member to withdraw as long as he could make a mutually satisfactory arrangement with other members to take over his share of both the assets and the liabilities, or for another farmer acceptable to the other members to take his place. In other words, since he would have an equity in the net worth of the syndicate he would be able to dispose of it to the remaining members or probably to another farmer. The farmers themselves might like to make other arrangements.

By leaving the terms and conditions of agreements under this bill to be set by regulation by the administrators, we provide the farmers with the freedom to make any reasonable arrangements they and the corporation see fit to make.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the bill at this stage. I hesitated to speak earlier because I had hoped on a number of occasions that it would go through. However, after having listened to the hon. member for Acadia again this afternoon, who has spoken at least 10 times at length in this debate and a dozen times for shorter periods, I feel less reluctant about saying a few words.

There are two things I want to say about the bill. First, if it is used imaginatively I am convinced it will increase the efficiency and decrease the operating costs of farmers in my constituency. I will give two examples, Mr. Chairman. In southwestern Quebec in the last two or three years the farmers have been introducing feed corn crops. Feed corn requires drying machines which are much too expensive—

The Chairman: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member is now addressing his remarks to the clause now before the committee, clause 9 together with the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River?

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Chairman, I was making a few introductory remarks. I will restrict myself to the clause. The making of regulations under this clause by the governor in council will certainly be less restrictive than if we were to set out the details of the structure of syndicates or types of machinery as members opposite have suggested on a number of occasions during the debate. In fact, throughout the debate there have been very few practical suggestions for improvement of the bill from members opposite, with the exception of one from the hon. member for Peace River. I am not referring to the amendment now before us but to the suggestion he made with regard to the inclusion of Indian reserves by regulation within the purport of the bill. I wonder whether under clause 9 the minister could assure the house that Indian reserves will be included within the purport of this particular legislation.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps the Chair does not understand the purport of clause 9 and it may be there is a subclause somewhere that relates to the possibility of including Indians under the terms of the bill, but it certainly is very difficult for the Chair to agree to this suggestion. I would again ask the hon. member to restrict his remarks to the clause before the committee. The hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, clause 9 purports to give authority to the Farm Credit Corporation to make regulations defining the expression "farm machinery". In my opinion it is pretty difficult to define farm machinery and I think that the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River is very worth while indeed. The minister has repeatedly told us that the legislation is experimental and that he wants to put it on trial for a year. In his amendment the hon. member for Peace River has suggested six months, but if it is agreeable to the government he is willing to change it to 12 months.

Before the vote is taken may I say I am somewhat disappointed that the minister has not given us a wider view with regard to this point. He has had the officials before him and he says they have studied the bill for nine months. I am surprised he is not able to give us a wider view as to what the bill will cover so far as farm machinery is concerned. At various times I have listed what I thought was farm machinery and what I thought the bill might include, but the minister has failed to comment on most of my suggestions.

We have accepted the principle of the bill, which is that farmers can join together in syndicates and by so doing economize in carrying on their farming operations. First of all you have farmers joining together to form a syndicate so that they can economize in carrying on their farming operations. This should be the main theme when considering what is or is not farm machinery. No attention whatsoever should be paid to the definition laid down by the Department of National Revenue that machinery must have moving parts. This should not enter into the thinking of the officials at all because any machine should be permissible as long as the farmers are carrying on farming operations and can economize and cut down their costs by forming a syndicate.

I have suggested silos or buildings but the minister has not commented on that suggestion. According to the dictionary a machine is a contrivance put together to do a piece of work. This is roughly what the dictionary says about the definition of a machine. I can see many possibilities for farmers to form marketing syndicates. In Prince Edward Island today there are literally hundreds of marketing syndicates or farmers' co-operatives through which the farmers market their produce. I see no real reason why farmers should not form such syndicates if they want to advance their produce one step farther toward the marketplace. It has often been said that farmers need more power in the marketplace. This legislation could be of tremendous help to groups of farmers who wanted to establish their own marketing set-up.

The agriculture committee is studying the feed grain problem. I suggested in the committee that many farmers could build elevators in their own localities and instead of moving their grain to the lakehead and down through the waterway when it is cheap and plentiful, they could store it in their elevators and distribute it among themselves during the winter months when they most need it. Would a huge farm storage bin purchased by a syndicate qualify as farm machinery?

We have never had an answer to this question of whether or not buildings qualify as farm machinery. I believe this bill could be of great benefit in many localities in eastern Canada in which farmers are feeding livestock. I know that in my own area many livestock are fed on grass. I can think of a number of instances in which much of the land is held under a grazing lease. A lease is a machine, a contrivance put together by human beings. I believe that that is a logical explanation of the definition of machinery. Certainly a group of farmers could form a syndicate and purchase a lease. They will be economizing tremendously in this way.

I recall that a lease was sold near my place not long ago to the Calgary stampede. I know the minister is aware of this particular transaction. They paid $84,000 for this grazing lease. If the ranchers in that area had been able to form a syndicate and each borrow $15,000, they would have readily purchased that grazing lease. It would have been of tremendous help to these small farmers. I see some possibility for this legislation if the definition of farm machinery is broadened. It is for this reason I heartily concur in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. Let us have a look at the definition of "farm machinery". I have suggested it should include silos, grain elevators, feed mills, grazing leases, and so on.

Why should the potato farmers of Prince Edward Island or any other part of Canada not be able to form a marketing syndicate for marketing their farm product? Why should they not have the benefits of this legislation? Why could they not erect a warehouse or a system for washing, cleaning and chipping their potatoes? Why should farmers not be able to do these things? Is this not the direction in which farming is moving today? Farming is becoming more mechanized and farmers are moving their produce closer to the markets. The fact is that the minister has failed to give the committee any broad statement concerning the regulations and the definition of farm machinery. The best he could do was to read a prepared statement that he made yesterday, and that is hardly good enough.

I know the minister is aware of this purchase by the Calgary stampede board to which I referred. I know this particular bill could be of direct benefit to many farmers in that area if they were able to borrow money and purchase a grazing lease. What is the difference between feeding cattle on grass or feeding cattle in a feed lot? In both cases we hope the cattle are getting fat and we hope there will be a market for them once they are ready for sale. The minister has said that a portable feed mill would come within the regulations. I asked him about a stationary feed mill for which one would pour a concrete floor. He could not comment on that because no one gave him a prepared statement. I ask him now about the feed grain situation in eastern Canada. Can farmers form a grain storage syndicate to store enough grain for their winter use in close proximity to their farms or feed lots? Can they build a grain storage elevator under this syndicate bill? Can they build stationary silos or set up a feed plant under this bill? Will the minister make an effort to see that a broad definition of farm machinery is established so that this bill could truly be, in the minister's words, as flexible as possible?

Mr. Herridge: I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I support the purpose of the amendment. However, I feel that six months is too brief a period, and I say that for this reason. I am quite confident that as a result of a year's experience—we have said repeatedly that this is experimental legislation—amendments will be required. This is a new field in Canada. At the same time, a period of a year should give the minister and his officials an opportunity to experiment with the regulations. I would suggest to the mover of the amendment that if he would extend his amendment to a period of a year it would give us the opportunity to try out the measure. The officials would have some experience with the regulations and they could come before the house when I am quite sure the bill will be back for amendments. At the same time, the regulations could be approved by the house.

Mr. Olson: All I want to say about this amendment is that, as it is before us now, I do not believe it would give this measure an opportunity to be tried. In other words, the regulations would be invalid by the end of March and activity under the provisions of the bill would only be getting started by then. If the mover of this amendment is willing to extend the period considerably beyond six months, there would be some validity to the amendment. By the end of six months we would be at the peak of activity under this bill, and I believe a year would be a better period of time.

Mr. Baldwin: I have already indicated my willingness to consider changes. I thought the minister would be considering the phraseology in the interval so that he could accept my amendment. I do not know if I see any co-operative gleam in his eye. If not I am quite prepared to change the amendment. I realize of course I would need unanimous consent of the committee, unless an hon. member could be induced to move a sub-amendment. I am quite prepared, with unanimous consent, to change the six months period to 12 months. Having in mind the length of time it has taken to produce the legislation, then the fact a few months would be needed to frame the regulations, there would be a further period of six months after that and I envisage the amendment taking us up until next summer before the effect of it would be felt. However, I am prepared to seek unanimous consent to change the six months to 12 months.

The Chairman: Do I understand the hon. member is seeking the consent of the committee to change the amendment to read 12 months instead of six months?

Mr. Baldwin: Correct.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member have leave to make that amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Ryan: Would the hon. member for Peace River permit a question? Has he taken into consideration the heterogeneous nature of laws for chattel mortgages, conditional sales and liens and sale of goods acts in the various provinces and territories, and that it might well be necessary to have different regulations in every province and territory?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, Mr. Chairman. When I spoke yesterday I intimated that in my opinion the most desirable way to achieve the best working of this bill would be to establish two model agreements, one to apply to the civil code province of Quebec and the other to apply to the common law provinces outside Quebec; but these model agreements would have within them certain minimum essential requirements established by parliament, and they would be exhibited as schedules to the act when passed.

The legislation would provide that these agreements might be modified from time to time and place to place, having in mind the type of agriculture, the region where it is practised and the character of the individuals who comprise a syndicate. These model agreements would be subject to variation, but they would have certain minimum requirements within them.

Mr. Ryan: Does the hon. member not feel this amendment might unnecessarily bog down parliament in a lot of detail?

Mr. Baldwin: I would not think so.

Mr. McIntosh: Can the minister assure the committee that the definition laid down by the corporation for the term "farm machinery" will be accepted by the customs and excise branch of the Department of National Revenue? I do not want to go into this in too much detail, but the Minister of Finance will remember a debate we had in a previous session, covering the definition of a steel grain box for trucks.

Mr. Gordon: I will never forget it.

Mr. Nowlan: Neither will I.

Mr. McIntosh: I do not want to go through a similar experience. It is not settled yet, and to my knowledge the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue have not brought in legislation to amend the act.

[The Chairman.]

As hon. members will remember, it is the Department of Finance which determines what terms go into the tariff rates, but the interpretation of what goes in is left up to another department, which seems to be highly ridiculous. I am suspicious of why the definition of this term is left up to the Farm Credit Corporation. Could the minister assure the committee that whatever is laid down by the corporation will be accepted by the Department of National Revenue?

Mr. Hays: I cannot speak for the Minister of National Revenue but I would like to say something about the amendment. Asking for the regulations to be brought back to parliament is a most unusual request, and in the Farm Credit Corporation legislation the regulations did not have to come back. However, if this bill comes up for amendment in the future, then we could look at all of the problems which the hon. member envisages might occur, and correct them. As a government I think we have to take the same position as the previous government took so far as regulations are concerned, namely that they should not come back to parliament.

Mr. McIntosh: I am not satisfied with the minister's answer to my question. If the definition laid down by the Farm Credit Corporation has no meaning so far as other government departments are concerned, then it is a useless piece of legislation, and maybe the crown corporation itself can say something is not a piece of farm machinery and cannot be purchased under the bill. The hon. member for Acadia tried to point this out, and it has to be definite as to what the government will accept for the definition of farm machinery. The minister should give a little more explanation of what the corporation has in mind.

Mr. Baldwin: In reply to the minister, may I say this is a most unusual amendment but it is in answer to a most unusual clause.

Amendment (Mr. Baldwin) negatived: yeas, 33; nays, 67.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 9 carry?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Go on, see if you can sing "God Save the Queen" over there. You are making a lot of noise and you ought to get in tune.

The Chairman: Order please.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I want to know whether a silo, or several silos will qualify under this bill? Will a grain elevator qualify? If the minister can answer these questions I do not intend to hold the bill any longer. In fact, I had no idea a week ago Monday that debate on the bill would last this long, but the minister got up and made a picayune attack on good, sound suggestions—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —put forward by us—

The Chairman: Order please.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —with regard to what should be in the bill—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member is not addressing himself to the clause under consideration, and I would ask him to limit his remarks to that clause.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am dealing with clause 9 and the question of what should be included in farm machinery. I have no intention of passing this bill so readily that the minister can sit in his seat and say nothing about the serious suggestions I have put forward. Does he accept the definition laid down by the Department of National Revenue, that a farm machine must have a moving part on it? Do silos and grain elevators qualify, and what about the other machines I have mentioned?

Mr. Hays: I think the hon. member for Acadia surely knows that a silo is not a piece of machinery.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It is, or is not?

Mr. Hays: It is not a piece of machinery: It is a building. The hon. member raised the other day the question whether a bull was a machine or not. He raised all kinds of questions of that sort. I think everyone in this house knows exactly what we mean by machinery.

Mr. McIntosh: I, for one, do not know what the minister means by farm machinery and I am sure even the officials of the department do not know what he means.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIntosh: There is no "oh" at all. If hon. members opposite would investigate this a little further—if they had had any dealings with the department involving a definition of farm machinery—they would think otherwise. It is extremely difficult to get an explanation of it. I suggest the minister himself does not understand what the term includes, because otherwise he would have answered the question asked by the hon. member for Acadia. All we want is the definition which will be acceptable to the department and to the other departments of government concerned. I heard the hon. member for Acadia suggest that a machine has to have a moving part. That is the first I have heard about that. Ask the Department of Finance, or ask the Department of National Revenue for a definition. They say they do not have to give a definition and they will not accept any definition in a legal dictionary or in the dictionaries we normally use.

Surely members of this committee, when they go back to their constituencies, will wish to talk intelligently on this subject, and when they are asked to define the term "farm machinery" they should be able to say: "Well, the minister said this—". Perhaps we could be given, now, a definition of farm machinery on the part of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Hays: May I refer the hon. member to page 8514 of Hansard where I had this to say in connection with the question he asks:

> If hon. members will refer to the Farm Credit Act they will note that parliament did not consider it necessary to define in detail in that act the items which might be considered to be farm machinery. Parliament in its wisdom recognized the necessity of providing a measure of flexibility in the definition by permitting it to be broadened from time to time by regulation, without the necessity of amendment to the act itself. I would like to assure hon. members, however, that it is the intention of the government, for the purposes of this act, to have farm machinery defined as broadly as possible so that it may include any item of machinery that a farmer can use in the development or operation of his farm unit. Farmers themselves know what they need and we want to be in the position to meet these needs.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am glad the minister answered my previous question as he did, because his reply illustrates the difficulty an hon. member finds when trying to understand legislation brought in by the government.

The minister has told us that a silo is not farm machinery. Would he tell the committee that the Farm Credit Corporation would not consider a silo as being a farm machine? Mr. Rutherford, who had so much to do with farm machinery—they would think otheradministration, was among the leading proponents of silage, bed silos and upright silos. He was really an avid promoter of silage and I know he would have included silos among farm machinery. Now the minister says they are excluded from the benefits of this bill. This illustrates the difficulty one encounters when trying to define machinery.

I say the definition in this bill should be one which includes all those things which aid farmers to carry out their business. As long as a farmer uses it to aid in carrying out his business, it should qualify. If the minister would agree with that, this bill would go through very quickly and the house would no doubt be at a standstill while the government sought to find new legislation to bring on. Instead, the minister is confused. I know in my heart that the Farm Credit Corporation would accept a silo under clause 3 of the relevant legislation. As the minister has said, let us apply the measure as broadly as possible. Let us therefore make the definition of farm machinery as broad as possible. I ask this question: Does a silo qualify as part and parcel of a farmers' list of machinery when he applies for a loan under part III of the Farm Credit Act?

Mr. Hays: It does not, under the Farm Credit Act. It is listed, I think, as among permanent improvements and it is not considered to be a machine.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It is not considered a machine. But security is still taken on it. However, I do not think it matters.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Don't worry about it. The hon. member for Cochrane seems concerned. He will have to sit in his seat until six o'clock in any case. I state that a silo will be taken as security by the Farm Credit Corporation along with a farmer's other machinery under part III of the loan act. If the minister does not want to call it machinery, as long as money is lent on it I do not really mind.

Why does the minister not want to lend money to a syndicate that wishes to build silos to feed cattle? Has he an answer to that?

Mr. Hays: I am sorry; I did not hear the hon. member.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Why does the hon. gentleman not feel that silos should qualify for loans under the terms of the bill before us? I believe silos cost a lot of money. I do not intend to build one, but they are used extensively here in eastern Canada.

Mr. Hays: I think we did provide other legislation this year to take care of buildings of this nature when we raised the ceiling for unsupervised loans under the Farm Credit Act from $20,000 to $40,000 and when we increased the ceiling on supervised loans from $27,500 to $55,000. In that legislation provision is made for farmers who wish to put up silos, barns, and so on. The bill we are now considering is designed to enable farmers to purchase machinery by forming syndicates and the security is the promissory notes plus the machines.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The Farm Credit Corporation, as the minister knows, lends money basically for the purchase of land, a capital asset, not for the construction of buildings and so on which are liable to depreciation. I am sure all members of the committee will recognize there is a difference between the two things. The Minister of National Revenue would certainly do so. The value of a capital asset does not depreciate in the same way as the value of a silo, which ultimately has to be renewed or replaced. But the only way the Farm Credit Corporation makes money available with regard to silos is that if a person buys a farm with a silo on it, that silo will be accepted as security. But what is the minister trying to promote under clause 9?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I might also explain to the hon. member that the Farm Improvement Loans Act, under which loans have just recently been increased from $7,500 to $15,000, is also legislation that can be used in order to build this sort of improvement.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am not denying that; but I am saying that here we have a bill which will be of some help to some people. One industry I believe it would help is the cattle feeding industry. I am not in the cattle feeding industry, but I follow it and know something about it. I know that silage puts on the cheapest gains that are made in steers. I think this bill should allow a group of farmers to form a syndicate and feed out a herd of cattle. All I am asking is, why not help this industry, too? Why be so narrow? Are we trying to help Massey-Harris, are we trying to help John Deere and all the known machine companies just because they do not make silos? Is it for this reason that silos do not qualify? As long as the implement—

Some hon. Members: Louder.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Well, that does not matter. I know that members opposite are not interested in this bill; they have proven it to me for the last two weeks. But they still seem to be interested enough to heckle one who is trying to do a serious bit of work with regard to defining clause 9. I repeat, I cannot understand why the minister does not include this type of equipment in this legislation. Perhaps the minister could give me some idea of his attitude in this regard. He says that under the provisions of this bill farmers can form a syndicate and will be able to purchase equipment that is needed to improve their operations. He says that through syndicating they will be able to economize. I agree that some farmers might be able to economize through syndicating, but I say that more farmers will be able to economize through syndicating if this bill is made as flexible as possible. The minister should include any farm machine or any machine used on a farm that allows a farmer to work his land more efficiently, to increase his production, to feed his cattle, or anything of that sort. This type of equipment should qualify under clause 9. But the minister says silos do not. I am just using silos as an example. I am sure the minister would agree that eastern farmers should have more grain elevators in this part of the country. That is obvious to anyone coming from western Canada, because you see so many in western Canada and so few in eastern Canada.

I am sure that if a silo would not qualify under this bill, neither would a grain storage elevator in eastern Canada. I ask the minister why he will not include in the provisions of this bill any machinery that will cut the costs of farmers who join together in a syndicate.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Wait; the minister is going to answer.

Mr. McIntosh: I am afraid he is not going to answer.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The Minister of Industry is going to answer.

Mr. McIntosh: I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I wish the hon. member for Essex East was minister of agriculture.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, the minister referred to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Farm Credit Act, and so on, and said that silos could be built under these acts. Is the minister saying that a syndicate can borrow money under the acts he has quoted? Can a syndicate obtain a loan under the Farm Improvement Loans Act? Why does not the minister answer the hon. member's question? All he wants to know is what will be the situation when a syndicate has been formed. Why does not the minister tell the hon. member what the situation will be? Why does he introduce these other acts, if they do not apply to a syndicate? The hon. member wants to know whether a syndicate will be able to build a silo under the provisions of this bill, in order to feed a herd of cattle. Can a syndicate borrow money for that purpose, under this bill?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I have been listening with great interest to this debate. I am not a farmer and I do not know much about farming; but I look at this matter perhaps from a different point of view. I think the government has been making a serious, determined effort to try and meet the needs of the farmers. Their needs are essentially for financial assistance to enable them to bring their farm operations up to a state of efficiency which will allow them to reduce costs and remain competitive. This is not a problem unique to farmers; it extends to other areas of the economy.

However, one must bear in mind, in providing assistance, what the law is; and about this I know something. There are two kinds of security, either under the civil law or the common law. One is security related to real or immovable property, and the other is related to movable property, or chattels. Something that is a structure and is attached to the soil is an immovable or real property and is not, and cannot be, the object of a chattel mortgage. This whole bill is designed to make available credit to farmers, or syndicates of farmers, on the sole strength of the security of the chattel itself, the movable piece of equipment, the farm machinery. This is the purpose of this legislation. Other legislation—

The Chairman: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the minister but I am just wondering whether at this stage he is not discussing the principle of the bill, which was considered on second reading, at the resolution stage and in the discussion on clauses 1, 2 and 3. I would hate to see the committee enter into a further discussion on the principle of the bill. I would invite the minister to limit his remarks to clause 9 as much as possible.

Mr. Drury: I was coming to that, Mr. Chairman. I apologize, but it seemed that the principle of the bill had escaped the hon. member for Acadia. The reason, then, why one cannot include structures such as a silo, or a barn or a farmhouse under the definition of "farm machinery" is that this is a bill related to chattels.

Mr. McIntosh: What about an electric pump?

Mr. Drury: Anything that is a movable, or is a chattel, I suspect would be included under the provisions of this bill. Although I cannot guarantee this, I believe the Minister of Agriculture, who has the interest of the farmers at heart, is going to endeavour to define these items as farm machinery. He cannot, under the law, define a silo, which is a structure, as farm machinery.

Mr. Bigg: Some silos are movable; you can get them on skids.

Mr. Drury: A house is movable, too, if you put it on skids; but it still is not regarded as machinery. The fact of the matter is that if a silo is built on the ground and is incorporated thereon, it becomes a structure and not a chattel, and therefore cannot be classified as machinery.

Mr. Bigg: I understand.

Mr. Drury: Then will you explain that to your colleague?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the Minister of Industry for making this statement. That is the first explanation we have had in this regard. He came to grips with the problem, he defined what is meant in a very good way, and I can understand it quite well. All I want now is the Minister of Agriculture to get up and say the same thing; to say that anything that moves or anything that is movable will qualify under this bill. If he says that now, I will accept it. Is he prepared to agree with his fellow minister?

Mr. Hays: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman; I did not hear the hon. member.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): There is nothing I like more than talking, so I will gladly repeat myself. I said I commend the Minister of Industry for coming to grips with the problem. He gave a reasonable explanation. Whether or not I accept it wholeheartedly, I want to commend him for facing the issue and coming to grips with it. He said—and this is the gist of my question—that it would be anything which is movable, rolling. The minister is shaking his head. What did he say then?

Mr. Beer: Read it in Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): He said that anything which was movable would be considered under this act. All I am asking is: Could the minister make a similar statement? I will not hold him to it to the letter, but let him stand up and tell us.

Mr. Hays: I would be very pleased to. I have a great deal of respect for the Minister of Industry and I agree wholeheartedly with what he said. If the hon. member would take a good look at what he said in Hansard tomorrow he will see why I agree with the Minister of Industry, if he wants to be really honest with himself.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am always really honest with myself and with everybody else. Now the minister has agreed that far. Would he agree that a movable electric pump used for agricultural purposes would be a farm machine?

Mr. Hays: Yes; I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Let me go one step further. Would he say that a stationary electric pump was also a machine?

Mr. Hays: Yes, if it was used to help irrigate three or more farms.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Let me use one more example. You have been patient with me, Mr. Chairman, but I have had to work fairly hard to get the minister this far on a definition of "farm machinery". Let us say that my neighbours and I are going to set up a hog feeding plant. We set up a number of self-feeders. This hinges on the Minister of Industry's definition of a stationary building. A self-feeder is movable. It is on skids; many of them are on wheels. Supposing I have a self-feeder which is portable and movable. Suppose that my neighbours and I are going to buy a group of self-feeders to feed 3,000 or 4,000 hogs. These feeders will cost a lot of money and we would have to form a syndicate to buy them. Would the minister classify them as farm machinery?

Mr. Hays: I suppose this is why farm machinery should be defined under regulation. If a group of people were going to feed their cattle with one of these large worms, which are very successful in many places, I suppose it would be farm machinery. But if it was a hog feeder which you dragged out into a field, put a little grain in it and then used it, I would say it was not a machine.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In other words, the minister agrees, and accepts the definition of the Minister of National Revenue that it has to have moving parts.

Mr. McIntosh: You mean the Minister of Industry.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No, the Minister of National Revenue. I ask the minister both as a farmer and as the Minister of Agriculture whether he accepts that definition. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek has never been given a definition and neither have I, but I came to the conclusion that this is the rule of thumb which is used. I know for a fact that this is his rule of thumb, but does the minister agree that that is the rule of thumb?

Mr. Hays: I do not know whether the hon. member was here when the Farm Credit Act was passed, but if he agrees with this legislation he would also agree that this should be defined by regulation as it was in the Farm Credit Act. I think it proves all the more that machinery can only be defined by regulation. Machines change from day to day. One machine today may be a different sort of machine tomorrow, a machine for which we have no name yet.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): One further question. If a hog self-feeder is not a farm machine, what is it?

Mr. Hays: It is a hog feeder.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Well, I am not satisfied with that explanation. How would the minister classify it?

Mr. Hays: A place where pigs can eat.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I must say the minister is showing leadership. I am agreeable to passing this bill at six o'clock. I was agreeable to passing it ten minutes ago, and we will pass it yet if the minister will quit fooling around and giving such answers. I am trying to be serious. How would the minister classify a hog self-feeder?

Mr. Hays: We would have to define it by regulation. My feeling would be that it is not a machine.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Then what is it? Is it an instrument?

Mr. Hays: It is the same as a stoneboat or any other piece of machinery.

The Chairman: Order. Is it the desire of the committee to call it six o'clock?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Industry is apparently helping the Minister of Agriculture with the legal definition of certain terms. He says he understands the law and should know something about it. I took it from his explanation of the difference between machinery and fixtures on the land that he did not mean the immovable parts of certain instruments were fixtures; he meant buildings and such like. I wonder whether he would tell the house if a steel grain truck box is a piece of machinery, or is it a fixture?

Mr. Drury: Perhaps this is a little irrelevant to the debate but let me say that I cannot and I do not pretend to be able to define within the category of equipment or chattels what is a machine and what is not. To be quite frank I do not know.

Mr. McIntosh: The minister is helping the Minister of Agriculture and we want to know what will be classified as farm machinery. We are asking simple questions. The minister said that he knew the law and all we want is his answer. Is a steel truck box a piece of machinery; yes or no?

Mr. Drury: The hon. member will have to wait for the regulations.

CROP INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REINSURANCE PROGRAM

The house resumed from Wednesday, September 16, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Hays—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Crop Insurance Act to authorize the governor in council to enter into agreements for the purpose of establishing a crop reinsurance program to supplement provincial crop insurance plans; to provide for the establishment in the consolidated revenue fund of a special account, to be known as the crop reinsurance fund, to which shall be credited amounts paid by a province under a crop reinsurance agreement and out of which shall be paid amounts required for the payment of reinsurance claims; to authorize advances from time to time from the consolidated revenue fund by way of non-interest bearing loans to the crop reinsurance fund; and to authorize the rebate, to grain growers whose grain is grown on insured lands, of sums paid by way of levy under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose on the evening of September 16 I had only had about three or four minutes to express some views respecting the resolution before us. I do not want to take a great deal of time this evening in attempting to examine the whole field of crop insurance for Canadian farmers in all the various areas and for all the different types of operations throughout Canada. I do, however, think it is worth repeating, as has been said before in the house a number of times, that the crop insurance schemes set up by three of the provincial governments on a pilot project basis have been something less than successful. In other words, if these pilot projects were to provide the experience and direction necessary to institute a complete and comprehensive crop insurance scheme they have not succeeded in doing so at least up to this time. So I think we will have to be patient while these crop insurance schemes evolve and until either the provincial governments or the federal government are prepared to embark upon a complete and comprehensive insurance scheme that will provide insurance and income to farmers all over Canada in case of crop failure.

The resolution before us represents a forward step. I think one of the reasons why the provincial governments have been a little timid in expanding their crop insurance schemes is that there was the overhanging possibility of being faced with a crop disaster year when a great deal of crop was under the insurance scheme, with the result that their resources would be taxed beyond their capacity to meet the payments if such an occurrence took place. It may be that new information will come to the attention of provincial governments over the years on the basis of the experience they gain respecting these matters. We know that up to the present time the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba have tried crop insurance on a very limited scale. We know that Prince Edward Island has also proceeded to take what has been referred to as a very timid step. At the last session of the Alberta legislature enabling legislation was passed so that that province too can establish a pilot project.

As I said, I think the action of the government to provide for reinsurance is a good move from the point of view of assisting the provincial governments if they should encounter what might be termed a tragedy year. But what I am even more concerned about while we are gaining experience is the suspension of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act in those areas where crop insurance schemes are established. We have had 25 years of experience in evolving a plan not necessarily of crop insurance but at least of a type of payment to farmers in the three prairie provinces today you will find that failure. Certainly this experience has caused the federal government to recognize the weaknesses and to introduce amendments to the act from time to time to take care of those weaknesses. If you go to many parts of the prairie provinces today you will find that the farmers are reasonably well satisfied with the operations of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. In saying that, Mr. Chairman, I am not suggesting it is perfect. I think it could be still further amended so that it would in fact be a form of insurance rather than simply a payment when disaster strikes.

We in this party believe that we could perhaps use the administration developed under P.F.A.A. to good purpose in embarking upon the much wider field of crop insurance. So far as the resolution before us is concerned, it requires complementary operative legislation passed by the provinces before it will have any effect at all. I am not entirely sure in my own mind whether this is the responsibility of the provinces. I know that a fairly good argument can be made on the basis of the varying types of conditions in the different provinces or regions of Canada, and perhaps it would be better if programs were developed in such a way as to take into consideration the specific conditions existing in a region. Perhaps that argument has some validity. On the other hand, under P.F.A.A. we already have a rather large organization with offices established and experienced personnel in several of the provinces and certainly we should not disregard their experience. Before I would be prepared to suggest that the Prairie Farm Assistance Act is completely successful I would say we have to recognize there are some improvements required in the administration of that act as well. I had intended to go into considerable detail about this because the resolution calls for the suspension of the P.F.A.A. wherever crop insurance schemes are set up.

During the last few days I have noticed another resolution on the order paper, No. 78, which in fact calls for referring the royal commission of inquiry into the P.F.A.A. to the committee on agriculture. I believe that would be a more appropriate time to deal in detail with some of the changes that ought to be made in the administration of the P.F.A.A. Tonight, Mr. Chairman, I do want to say this: during the past few months we have had a very serious cloud cast over the administration of the P.F.A.A. across Canada because of certain actions that took place in this house and a committee of this house. I believe that there ought to be an opportunity to present the other side of the coin to the Canadian people so they will not believe this Prairie Farm Assistance Act is some kind of political pork barrel, and a few other things, as it was called in Time magazine of August 7. There are weaknesses, and serious weaknesses, but one of the most serious weaknesses recently in the administration of the P.F.A.A. has been the fact that persons in responsible positions have stood in the way of punishing those who chose to abuse the regulations of the P.F.A.A. This, Mr. Chairman, is something that needs to be corrected.

There is an editorial in the Western Producer of August 27, 1964, which reads in part as follows:

> The P.F.A. Act is a sound piece of legislation, of immense help to farmers in dry years. We cannot see it being supplanted in this area by more comprehensive crop insurance for a long time to come. It is therefore of supreme importance that it be administered and used fairly and honestly by all concerned. And let those who are not concerned, meaning all but the farmers and the properly constituted administration and the minister in charge, keep out of it altogether.

Well, Mr. Chairman, this is a rather profound statement coming from a paper that has its circulation primarily within the area in which P.F.A.A. is operative. I should like to quote one paragraph from Time magazine for August 7:

> The Pope report found that there were indeed "irregularities in the Swift Current situation which reverberated all the way to Tory agriculture Minister Hamilton's office. According to the judge's version of the story, McIntosh "had a very profound influence" over P.F.A.A. Swift Current supervisor George Walker, and he put pressure on Hamilton and his executive assistant, Roy Faibish, to get the election-time cheques out quickly. Left in charge of the matter, Faibish prevailed on the P.F.A.A.'s board of review to clear the cheques although the P.F.A.A. directors had argued that they should be held up while the doubtful claims were investigated.

There are more and more of these. I have an editorial from the Edmonton Journal dated August 14 which supports my contention that the recommendations of this Pope royal commission ought to be referred to either the committee on privileges and elections or the committee on agriculture.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of privilege. I trust that since you have allowed this member to go as far as he has, although the subject of his remarks has nothing to do with the resolution before us, I will have an opportunity to say a few words afterwards.

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member who has the floor now might like to relate his remarks to the resolution before the committee.

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to draw your attention to the last paragraph of the resolution before the committee.

Mr. Gundlock: I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: Order; I understand that the hon. member for Medicine Hat is replying to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. I asked him if he could relate his remarks to the resolution before the committee and if the hon. member for Lethbridge wants to raise a point of order after that he may do so.

Mr. Olson: The last sentence of the resolution before the committee reads:

> —and to authorize the rebate, to grain growers whose grain is grown on insured lands, of sums paid by way of levy under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

I think it is fairly obvious from the remarks I have been making with regard to P.F.A.A. that it is part and parcel of the resolution that is before us. I certainly want to remove any cloud that has been cast on the usefulness and validity of the P.F.A.A. That is all I want to say on the point of order. If there is nothing else, I shall try to continue my speech.

Mr. Lambert: I should like to say something on the point of order. I would draw Your Honour's attention to the rulings this afternoon when we were dealing with a particular clause. If hon. members strayed from it the least bit Your Honour was on his feet immediately, and I think that perhaps the same diligence might be applied here. If we are going to go into a discussion of the whole of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, as the hon. member is tending to do, since he is bringing in a subject that has been discussed on many occasions in the past and which has nothing to do with the proposal of the minister with regard to crop insurance within the scheme of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, then I would suggest that the whole of the prairie farm economy will be before the committee. There is a limit.

The Chairman: Of course the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West is well taken, but what we have here is a resolution. It is always easier for the Chair to define the limits of discussion when we are discussing a particular clause of a bill. In this case there is a rather complex resolution and I must admit it is not too easy for the Chair to determine when an hon. member is going beyond the terms of that resolution. I certainly appreciate hon. members bringing to the attention of the Chair someone who is straying from the matter under consideration. I admit that we are not discussing the Prairie Farm Assistance Act at the moment. Perhaps the hon. member for Medicine Hat will limit his remarks to the resolution specifically before us at this time.

Mr. McIntosh: Before you make your final ruling on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I suggest the member speaking on this resolution has gone away beyond the limits, I have no objection to his bringing up everything under P.F.A.A., but I still want the right to refute some of his arguments, some of his insinuations which have been carried in the press. He seems to believe them. There has been no explanation from the person involved, and since he has mentioned my name I should have an opportunity to put this member straight.

The Chairman: As a final word, we all see that the resolution before us contains a specific reference to rebates to grain growers. However, I do not think this should open up the whole field of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Mr. McIntosh: You have allowed it to be done.

Mr. Olson: I shall certainly bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but I would draw to your attention that when this legislation comes into force in the three prairie provinces it will be a substitute for the operations of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act because that act will be withdrawn from those areas where this is applicable. For that reason I cannot understand how one could be more relevant than in discussing the merits of a plan that has been operating for 25 years, when in fact we are debating a resolution that will be a substitute for it.

I do not believe I have been out of order in anything I have said up until this time, because if you read the resolution carefully you will see it is a substitute for the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, and I am trying to point out that that act has been successful except in those areas where it has been abused. Further, how I can develop that argument, without referring to some of the quotations that were widely used across the country during the last six or seven weeks, is beyond my comprehension. I realize there will be an opportunity to discuss this matter later in the session whenever item No. 78 on the order paper comes up for debate, and at that time we will be able to discuss the Pope report and all matters respecting the abuses of the administration of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. For that reason I will not pursue the matter further tonight.

In closing I suggest that if it is the intention of the government to reinsure provincial crop insurance schemes from time to time, with a view to the eventual suspension of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, it is a mistake. This act has 25 years of experience behind it. Over the years numerous amendments have been made to it, changes have been made in the regulations and in the amount of the levy farmers pay, and all these were undertaken to ensure it continued to do the job it was designed to do. I shall express myself in much more detail on this when item 78 comes before the house.

Over the last 25 years the Prairie Farm Assistance Act has cost the treasury an average of less than $10 million a year to guarantee some return to all the farmers in the three prairie provinces. It has taken the tragedy out of complete loss from failure of crops, and has been one of the cheapest and best federal programs for protecting a large group of Canadian citizens from tragedy.

When there is a good crop year, such as there was in 1963, the farmers pay a large amount of money back into the fund through their 1 per cent levy. I do not say they completely restore the fund, or that the fund has been actuarially sound for the past 25 years, but no other federal assistance program, in agriculture, unemployment insurance, freight rate subsidies, or whatever you care to name, such as subventions for coal, has given the same security to as large a group of people as the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, and at such a low price.

I presume the provinces will be setting up more pilot projects. I understand Alberta is trying to work out some kind of project for 1965, and although I do not know the details I understand Saskatchewan and Manitoba amend their crop insurance schemes year by year. I hope that some day out of all this there will be evolved a crop insurance scheme that will be truly operative and workable, and available to farmers at premiums that will not be prohibitive. In the meantime I urge the minister to be careful in withdrawing a scheme that has been satisfactory, and substituting something for it which to date has not been successful.

All this resolution will do is take certain areas out of the administration of P.F.A.A. and reinsure the provincial schemes that may be set up in those areas. If the government feels P.F.A.A. is costing too much money, perhaps the levy could be adjusted from 1 per cent to 1½ or 2 per cent, and along with that the maximum awards paid under P.F.A.A. could be increased to compensate for complete crop failure. Before the government goes too far in setting P.F.A.A. aside I think it should consider some amendments to that act which, as I say, has been so successful for the last 25 years.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on resolution No. 49 now under study. This resolution is of interest not to us, but to the western provinces. We are pleased that it has been introduced.

It is noteworthy that not very long ago we were promised a crop insurance scheme for eastern Canada, as we were also promised a department of agriculture for eastern Canada; but a perusal of this resolution shows that the crop insurance scheme for the east will suffer the same fate as the department of agriculture for eastern Canada.

As can be seen, this resolution deals with the signing of agreements for the establishment of a crop reinsurance program to supplement provincial crop insurance plans.

As far as Quebec is concerned, it will not be difficult to supplement the provincial plan, because we have no such plan at present.

Our province has absolutely no crop insurance program even though people have been talking about it for years. Eastern farmers, especially those from Quebec, are still expecting the federal parliament or the provincial legislature to set up a crop insurance scheme adapted to the needs of the province.

A little further, toward the end, the resolution reads as follows:

—to authorize advances from time to time from the consolidated revenue fund by way of non-interest bearing loans to the crop reinsurance fund; and to authorize the rebate, to grain growers whose grain is grown on insured lands, of sums paid by way of levy under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Now in the text of this resolution the province of Quebec has been entirely forgotten, and I think the minister is doing the same thing himself.

It seems to me that it is contrary to normal procedure to levy taxes indirectly in order to come to the assistance of the western provinces. We are delighted to see that they have finally got a crop insurance scheme in the west which, although it may not be 100 per cent satisfactory to them, is improving little by little. But in the province of Quebec we are still awaiting the day when this act will be passed.

Various areas of the province have suffered losses this year; in my area apple orchards have suffered; elsewhere other sectors of agriculture have sustained losses. I know some farmers who at the present time are completing provincial government claim forms, who completed such forms a year ago, two years ago, and who have not received a red cent.

Not later than yesterday morning a farmer came to see me. All his apples were destroyed by frost this fall, and the federal government's resolution contains absolutely no provision for assisting this apple grower or, in the Beauce area, the maple syrup producers, the raspberry, strawberry or various garden crop growers.

When this resolution is considered by the committee on agriculture, I should like the minister to add to it a few paragraphs having in mind the province of Quebec and eastern Canada, and to take into consideration other products than grain. Grain is an important asset in our country but farming in Canada is not exclusively concerned with grain; farmers in eastern Canada are engaged in mixed farming.

In the last few years I know that some farmers have spent large amounts for seeding their land and who lost their crops for various reasons. The federal government could easily reimburse expenditures of that kind in the province of Quebec or in other provinces.

A farmer or an apple grower must spend two or three months to maintain his orchard, his raspberry, and his strawberry patches; he may spend from $2,000 to $3,000 hoping that he will have a crop in the fall. But when he loses everything, it seems that the federal government could create out of this crop reinsurance fund, a fund to compensate the farmer for expenditures incurred in seeding or cultivating his orchard.

Mr. Chairman, it seems very difficult for the present Minister of Agriculture, as it was for his predecessors, to set up a crop insurance scheme which would be in the interests of the province of Quebec or of eastern Canada.

Our crops are diversified, and we are proud that the farmer belongs to our national heritage and can grow such fine products. However, at present no provision in our laws will assist the province of Quebec and take into consideration the conditions of its agriculture. Such legislation does not exist.

Since this is a resolution it is impossible to further discuss the program of crop reinsurance, but I wish that the minister would consider reimbursing essential expenditures to farmers who lose their crops. It costs $2,000, $3,000 or $4,000 yearly to maintain an orchard; seeding costs some of our farmers $2,000 or $3,000. It would be easy to provide for the reimbursement of the essential outlays, when they have put in the crop.

Mr. Chairman, it might seem complicated but it is not. Until now we have never given thought to crop losses in eastern Canada and I see, on the government benches, good Liberal members who during the last electoral campaign promised a crop insurance. I do not know whether they intended it then for western Canada only, but from their speeches it seemed to me that they meant agriculture in eastern Canada.

It is time to add a few paragraphs to this resolution to ensure that the Quebec farmers are not completely forgotten.

[Text]

Mr. McIntosh: In speaking to this resolution may I say that the last part of the resolution is difficult for me to understand. I will not read it. To me it seems to be a melding of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act as we know it with the Crop Insurance Act.
