HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, September 14, 1964

The house met at 2 p.m.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Governor General:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an order in council appointing Hon. John Robert Nicholson, Postmaster General, Hon. Maurice Sauvé, Minister of Forestry and Hon. William Moore Benidickson, Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, to act with Hon. George James McIlraith, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and the Speaker of the House of Commons as commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of the one hundred and forty third chapter of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, intituled: An Act respecting the House of Commons.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT AS TO LEGISLATION TO BE CONSIDERED

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated on Thursday that I would make a short statement today on motions in regard to the business for the next few weeks.

Today, as the house knows, we will be dealing with certain farm legislation, and if that should be completed provision has been made for the rest of the day. After this legislation we will deal with the legislation regarding redistribution. I said on May 15 that we as a House of Commons, would be in default if we failed to provide for redistribution, now long overdue, in accordance with the census taken some three years ago.

After the redistribution legislation, Mr. Speaker, we will introduce legislation arising out of the report of the royal commission on transportation. This is a very important and complex matter and we are anxious to get it to a committee as quickly as possible.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we will introduce legislation to establish a Canada pension plan. A draft of the bill for this purpose is ready. This is one of the most important and complicated legislative measures, I think, ever introduced into this House of Commons. It deals with a new problem, to provide for a federal pension plan which, in conjunction with provincial legislation and with provincial co-operation, can operate as one nation-wide pension system. A careful review of every single clause of this legislation is essential, and careful consultation with the provinces in respect of all these clauses is going on, but the bill will be ready and the review completed when we get to it in the house after the legislation I have mentioned.

Then, Mr. Speaker, from time to time we will have to interrupt the legislative program to deal with supply. By the end of this month we will be half way through the financial year. On Thursday and Friday of this week, therefore, we will deal with estimates. Next Monday there will be a supply motion which will take up Monday and Tuesday, with the one remaining supply motion to be brought forward a week or two later. A week from Thursday and Friday, the 24th and 25th of this month, we will be on estimates again.

Some time in October, if not earlier, the report of the flag committee will be received; that report will be submitted to the house without delay, and a decision will be taken on this matter.

That is the program ahead, always subject, of course, to change if an emergency makes such change necessary.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion on which the house has received a report as to the legislation that will be brought before it. I was interested in the reference to redistribution, and I welcome the announcement. However, it is not in accordance with the report that was given by the premier of Saskatchewan to the effect that after having talked over this matter with the Prime Minister, he had been assured that redistribution would not be in effect for the next general election.

In so far as the pension plan is concerned, I think it is rather regrettable that it will not be introduced a little earlier so that a committee of the house could be set up and sit while the house is sitting. As to the question of the calling of supply, certainly that is most desirable. Indeed, when interim supply was asked for in June it was Her Majesty's loyal opposition that asked that the period of interim supply, fixed at the request of the government at two months, should be increased to three months.

There is the matter of the visit of Her Majesty the Queen, who will be in Ottawa while the house is still in session. Is it intended to have Her Majesty speak to the two houses of parliament? I think this would be a desirable course to follow provided the Queen would not find it unnecessarily tiring and that it would be in keeping with her wishes.

With respect to the flag committee, the Prime Minister has stated that its report will be received in October and the house will then proceed with the matter. I am sure that last evening Canadians as a whole were disturbed by the statement by the Prime Minister in which he predicted that the flag would be one with a maple leaf on it. That is a very strange prediction from a Prime Minister who had just agreed to the setting up of the committee that was to be objective and not dominated in any way. Yet the Prime Minister saw fit to say that he knew what the committee would recommend, apparently knowing in advance the stand to be taken by the Liberal members on that committee.

I think his statement last night in which he announced what the committee would decide before the committee has been constituted was a serious dereliction. It is far removed from what we understood the committee was to be, when the Prime Minister announces in advance to the people of Canada that the committee is going to be set up and that there will be a flag before Christmas. He said that with fervor. He said that it would have a maple leaf thereon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to note the degree of applause that comes from the government side of the house. It indicates that this committee, which we had hoped would be impartial, has already been directed by the Prime Minister in so far as the Liberal members are concerned. I protest this very strongly.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): We are glad to have this outline of legislation which the Prime Minister has placed before the house. There is one slight difference compared with what was announced by the house leader on Friday, who indicated we would be taking the transportation legislation dealing with railway abandonment and railway rationalization before redistribution. It is immaterial to us which order the government wants to follow in dealing with this legislation, but certainly our understanding from the statement of the Minister of Justice on Friday was that the railway legislation would come first. If the government decides to proceed with redistribution before railway legislation, however, we have no objection.

We do not feel we ought to raise the question as to when the flag committee is going to report, nor to join in the battle. We shall leave that fight for the committee rather than have it here in the house. However, we do hope the committee's report will not be introduced until some important matters which need to be dealt with have been passed by the house. We have particular reference to the Canada pension plan, which should be completed, and the national labour code which the Minister of Labour promised to introduce. We hope these matters will be dealt with before we get into a protracted debate on the flag question, in the event that the committee is not able to come up with a virtually unanimous selection of a flag design.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): At this time, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is sufficient to say we welcome the work program announced to us by the Prime Minister. I do not believe it matters too much whether the order in which this work is to be accomplished is the order we had expected. Each of the items mentioned is important so far as our responsibilities in the house are concerned. We welcome the fact that we are going to be able to get at some of them instead of carrying on as we have these past weeks. Rather than enter into any discussion regarding the topics or their order of presentation, I would just say we will be happy to co-operate in every way possible to further the business of this house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks I should like to take some 30 seconds to congratulate and thank those who took part in the translation of Beauchesne's which was distributed a few days ago. Unfortunately, I was not in Ottawa at that time, as I only came back yesterday. I must also commend the government on what they did to supply us with the French translation of Beauchesne's. We hope that while it helps us to a better understanding of the rules of the house your task will be made easier and everybody will be satisfied.

As for the business of the house proposed to us, it was suggested that we should discuss first the resolution on farm improvement loans. We are quite prepared to help farmers, but we think that the first legislation to be discussed and the only one we should like to have added to the list of priority measures is the one concerning the establishment of a department of agriculture for the east. We believe that such legislation is most urgent and that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) should add it to the priority legislation of the government.

We support the establishment of a department of agriculture for eastern Canada because even if farm loans are being improved, one must realize that there are practically no loans granted in eastern Canada, since this government's farm policy is conceived in terms of western rather than eastern farm needs.

Therefore, if that legislation is to be really useful, we think that to assist farmers the first thing would be to discuss and pass the legislation concerning the setting up of a department of agriculture for eastern Canada, in accordance with the resolution which has been on the order paper for almost two years, that is since the coming to office of this government.

As far as the flag issue is concerned, I must admit that I have been away for four weeks and 250 supposedly intelligent members discussed the question during that time. On my return, four weeks later, I find that nothing has been done. In fact, not only has nothing been done but the issue has been shelved, since it has been referred to a committee. Absolutely nothing has been done during my four weeks of absence.

You will agree that some Canadians must find it surprising, like I do, that no progress has been made in that field and that after two whole months—

[Text]

Mr. Rhéaume: We didn't miss you either.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I have not been missed in the house but I can assure you that I did not miss the Conservative speeches on the flag issue.

Since the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) was allowed to digress, I should like to point out to the house that even in England—and one could hardly find a person more English than the English there—several people asked me: "That man called Baker—many of them did not even know his full name—why does he take so much time to discuss the flag issue?"

The English themselves were surprised by the attitude taken in that connection and were wondering which hon. members were talking like that. They thought it was the French speaking members.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition was the first one to digress, since he was allowed to do so. However, I have completed my remarks on this matter.

Before resuming my seat, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if it would be possible to include the resolution on the establishment of a department of agriculture for eastern Canada on the list of priority measures?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in order to clear up one point which may have led to some misunderstanding about the relation of the redistribution legislation to the transportation legislation, I said arrangements had been made on Friday for dealing with the rest of the day, that is Monday, in case the farm improvement loans legislation passed the resolution stage, namely that we would go on with the transportation legislation; and tomorrow, Tuesday, we would go back to other farm legislation, and if all the farm legislation passed tomorrow we would then go on to the redistribution measure.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am not objecting to that order of business. I simply point out that as recorded at page 7932 of Hansard for Friday last the Minister of Justice indicated that the transportation legislation would follow the farm improvement loans legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what we are doing.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that a week ago last Friday the Minister of Labour promised that the national labour code legislation would be on the order paper this month, and in view of the fact that the Prime Minister made no reference to it in his line-up of business, can he assure us that the labour code has priority along with the other items he mentioned today?

Report on World Finance Meetings

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is in the priority list, Mr. Speaker. The fact that I did not refer to it today should not be taken to indicate that we have reduced it in priority in any way.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Does the resolution concerning the establishment of a department of agriculture for eastern Canada also appear on the priority list?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we hope to deal with that in the autumn session.

FINANCE

REPORT ON MEETINGS OF WORLD BANK AND INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement regarding the annual meetings of the World Bank and international monetary fund which I attended last week in Tokyo. This is the statement which I promised on August 10 in connection with the release, internationally, of two important studies of world liquidity; the annual report of the monetary fund and the special report of the so-called group of ten.

At the meetings of the monetary fund in Tokyo, discussion centred on the question of world liquidity; that is to say, whether the supplies of gold and foreign exchange available in the form of reserves to governments and central banks are and will continue to be adequate, and whether short and medium term credit arrangements are also satisfactory. In brief, are the basic financial facilities adequate and appropriate to support continuing growth in world trade, investment and employment?

As the representative of Canada I voted in favour of a resolution calling for an enlargement of the international monetary fund. This enlargement would chiefly consist of an equal proportionate increase in the quotas of all member countries. It would also include additional increases in the quotas of a few individual countries which could claim them on the basis of above average increases in their own trade and economic activity.

Canada's quota would, of course, be increased on the first count and in all probability on the second as well. I should remind the house that, in the fund, a country's quota plays a triple role; it is a measure of its access to credit from the fund in time of need; it is a measure of its financial contribution to the fund, and it is a measure of its voting strength in the organization.

It seems likely that the general increase in quotas will be 25 per cent. While this would be acceptable to us we would, as I said in the meeting, have preferred a higher figure. I pointed out in Tokyo that the growth of the fund since its inception has not kept pace with the growth of world trade and payments. The proposed increase would do no more than reduce the gap. Our present quota is $550 million in terms of U.S. dollars. An enlargement of 25 per cent would involve us in a contribution of $137.5 million. Of this, one quarter or $34.4 million would be payable in gold out of our existing gold reserves. These have been rising recently and amounted to $948.8 million at the end of July. The remaining three quarters, amounting to $103.1 million, would be paid in non-interest bearing demand notes of the government of Canada.

I should draw the attention of hon. members to two points. First, our enlarged contribution to the fund will not involve us in any budgetary charge. Second, the approval of parliament will be sought by means of an amendment of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act. The necessary legislation will probably be introduced early next year. We shall, however, await detailed proposals from the executive directors of the fund in Washington, who have been instructed to make a report on the size, timing and method of payment of the quota increases.

This discussion in Tokyo on the subject of world liquidity was both vigorous and illuminating. Depending on their national backgrounds and recent experiences, governments tend to take differing views of the outlook for world liquidity arrangements. However, there seemed to be general agreement on the enlargement of the monetary fund along the lines indicated, also that further studies which are already in hand should be proceeded with. Of particular interest is a study, under the auspices of the group of ten, of the various processes through which international reserve assets, other than gold, are or could be created. These reserve assets can take the form of reserve currencies such as U.S. dollars and sterling, or claims on the monetary fund, or, as some are urging, forms that are entirely new. Canada will continue to be an active participant in this study.

Hon. members will, I know, welcome this forward looking exercise. At the same time they will appreciate that if any new and far reaching powers were going to be bestowed on some international agency, we should have to be very sure of the political acceptability as well as the financial integrity of the agency in question. Canada, with a great stake in international trade and finance, is deeply concerned that international arrangements shall respond fully and adequately to the demands made upon them.

Before concluding may I add a few words about the annual meetings of the world bank. These were also held in Tokyo last week. This bank is the largest single channel of aid to the less developed countries of the world. It raises most of its funds from world capital markets, under the collective guarantee of all the member governments, and re-lends these funds at a slightly higher interest rate. The bank has since its inception been efficiently managed. Although its charges are quite small, its total profits have over the years become substantial. Last year its profits were nearly $100 million.

In Tokyo last week I joined with others in approving a proposal that $50 million of these profits should be turned over as a grant to a subsidiary of the bank known as the international development association. This body makes loans to needy countries on highly concessional terms. In the past all the funds for the I.D.A. have been contributed by 17 of the member governments, including Canada. It is very welcome to have a large subscription from another quarter.

The I.D.A. was founded in response to the growing need of many of the less developed countries for capital from abroad on terms that do not materially add to their balance of payments problems. In this connection I was glad to be able to call the attention of the Tokyo meeting to the terms on which Canadian external aid is now being provided, as outlined in the house by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on November 14 last.

Some minor amendments to the constitution of the world bank were agreed to in Tokyo. In so far as Canada is concerned, these may require amendments in the Bretton Woods Agreements Act. This question will be referred to the Department of Justice and the appropriate amendments, if required, will be introduced into the house at the same time as the amendment relating to the enlargement of our quota in the international monetary fund.

In the biennial elections of the executive directors of both the bank and fund we nominated Mr. A. F. W. Plumptre, assistance deputy minister of finance, and he was re-elected. In addition, he was selected by the officials of the group of ten to be their vice chairman for the following year.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am sure those of us who have taken some interest in this problem of international liquidity will be very glad to hear the statement of the minister today. I recall that last year on behalf of the Canadian delegation to the interparliamentary union in Belgrade I raised this question; and the gathering there, representing some 60 or 70 countries, gave unanimous support to the demand that there should be a study of this problem.

I note the minister suggests that there has been a certain amount of caution, as is usually the case at any gathering of central bankers, and I can only hope that they are not too cautious as they have often been in the past; because although at the present time it appears that an immediate crisis with regard to international liquidity is not developing as some had feared it might, I think there is every possibility that it will if the world embarks on the sort of development program which it is going to have to embark upon if we are to solve the problem of the gap between the have and the have not countries.

I hope Canada and Canada's representatives will give all support possible to any proposals toward developing a new unit of international exchange when the group of ten have completed their studies. Undoubtedly they will come up with some mechanism in this respect, and I would hope to see Canada in the forefront supporting the proposal.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that if Canada contributes approximately $137 million to the world bank to support international liquidity and if three quarters of those $137 million come from demand notes of the government of Canada, that does not represent much of a commitment on our part inasmuch as it does not cost the Minister of Finance anything whatever to sign new government demand notes.

As for the remaining 25 per cent, simply made up of gold standard representations, that is but a transfer of gold bricks which do not even circulate across the country. The cost to the government, then, is not such a great deal.

But there is one thing though which might make us much more cautious. The Minister of Finance must know it, since the matter has been mentioned in this house. The secret intention of the group of ten is to head more and more toward an international monetary unit. This can be a good thing in itself, if it is used only for international trade. But the consequence is also that only the powerful countries in the field of finance will be able to control this international monetary unit, always at the expense of the small countries which revolve around those powerful nations. Canada is one of them and it should be one of the first to endeavour to protect itself against the creation of an international monetary unit.

We had the opportunity before to warn the Minister of Finance against this danger.

So we are informed that there will be an amendment to the act already passed by the House of Commons and approving those agreements. We are told that this will have to be passed by parliament and it is at that moment that we can try and convince the Minister of Finance to take the necessary steps, especially in view of the agreements which have just been reached in Tokyo, in order to prevent this creation of an international monetary unit which would only result in enabling, even more than today, foreign capitalist countries and big financial interests to have more control over the natural resources of this country.

FARM MACHINERY

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR PURCHASES BY SYNDICATES

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates for the purchase of farm machinery and for the terms and conditions of such loans, the amount of a loan not to exceed 80 per cent of the actual price to the farm machinery syndicate of the farm machinery to be purchased with the loan; and to provide also for the establishment in the consolidated revenue fund of a special account not to exceed $25,000,000 to which shall be charged advances made to the Farm Credit Corporation and to which shall be credited all moneys paid to the Receiver General by the corporation and for other financial provisions in relation to the said fund in connection with the administration of the measure.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Motion agreed to.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 1,660—Mr. Barnett:

1. What, for each of the fiscal years commencing with 1920-21, are expenditures made by the marine services branch of the Department of Transport on the seacoast of British Columbia for aids to navigation, including capital and operating costs of visual aids and the operation and servicing of harbour facilities and the provision and maintenance of sea rescue services?

2. What, for each of the fiscal years commencing with 1920-21, are expenditures made by the Department of Transport for the provision and operation of electronic aids to navigation on the seacoast of British Columbia?

3. What, for each of the fiscal years commencing with 1920-21, are expenditures made for the seacoast of British Columbia for the provision and operation of services under the marine regulations branch of the Department of Transport?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): 1. Aids to navigation and sea rescue service:

1947-48	728,000
1948-49	763,000
1950-51	1,289,000
1951-52	934,000
1952-53	1,037,000
1953-54	1,302,000
1954-55	1,200,000

1959-60	5,258,000
1960-61	2,303,000
1961-62	3,751,000
1963-64	4,233,000

The above figures include the operating and capital costs of aids to navigation and Canadian coastguard vessels, excluding weather ships, based at Victoria and Prince Rupert marine agencies. The details of expenditures for prior years are not available.

2. Radio aids to marine navigation:

1947-48	276,000
1948-49	395,000
1949-50	407,000
1950-51	422,000
1951-52	502,000
1952-53	506,000
1953-54	538,000
1954-55	567,000
1956-57	644,000
1957-58	734,000
1958-59	646,000
1959-60	664,000
1960-61	820,000
1961-62	1,346,000
1962-63	1,046,000
1963-64	635,000

The details of expenditures for prior years are not available.

3. Marine regulations branch:

1946-47	79,000
1947-48	89,000
1948-49	123,000
1949-50	174,000
1950-51	287,000
1951-52	273,000
1952-53	259,000
1953-54	251,000

1959-60	343,000
1962-63	471,000
1963-64	471,000

The details of expenditures for prior years are not available.

FREIGHT HANDLING, NORTH SYDNEY—PORT AUX BASQUES FERRY

Question No. 1,772—Mr. Scott:

1. With regard to the new freight ferry service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, has the government decided whether or not the transfer of freight will be made at the North Sydney end of the ferry or at the Port aux Basques end of the ferry and, if so, what were the considerations which influenced the decision of the government?

2. Has the government made a study as to the economic effects of such decision on the economies of North Sydney and Port aux Basques and, if so, what were the natures of such studies and their conclusions?

3. If the decision in paragraph 1 referred to has not been made, when does the government expect to be able to make an announcement of such decision?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): 1, 2 and 3. A consequence of the decision to improve the present freight service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques by the substitution of a rail car ferry for existing methods will be the elimination of transfer operations at one of the two ports. Technical and operating considerations strongly favour the use of Port aux Basques for the transfer operations.

Since the difference in gauge is not sufficient to permit an additional narrow-gauge track on the ferry, transfer at Port aux Basques will make possible greater carriage of freight in the vessel by use of the larger gauge equipment. Moreover, Port aux Basques is not subject to ice conditions and is thus accessible in all seasons. Development and use of an alternative mainland port with the transfer facilities involved for use during severe ice conditions would be extremely costly and inefficient. With transfer at Port aux Basques all that is required at an alternative port is the facilities to move the cars on board ship. It is also the case that transfer of freight to Newfoundland coastal service vessels at Port aux Basques can be done directly from mainland cars, thus eliminating the double transfer that would otherwise take place.

The effect on employment would be approximately the same at either port. Since the community of Port aux Basques is almost totally dependant for its existence upon the operations of the ferry service, and since a greater variety of employment is available at North Sydney this additional consideration reinforces the strong technical advantages of making the transfers at Port aux Basques.

The government and the Canadian National Railways are investigating the probable impact of these changes on employment in North Sydney with a view to considering what steps might usefully be taken to ease the effects of the transition which is not expected to take place until 1967, at which time it is expected at least three other ferries will be operating out of North Sydney.

SEAPLANE BASE, ROCKCLIFFE AIRPORT, OTTAWA

Question No. 1,776—Mr. Thompson:

Does the Department of National Defence intend to retain Rockcliffe airport as a seaplane base?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): No. Arrangements are being made to have the seaplane base at Rockcliffe transferred to the Department of Transport.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION CONTRACTS TO ENAMEL HEATING AND PRODUCTS

Question No. 1,783—Mr. Coates:

1. What was the dollar value of contracts awarded by the Department of Defence Production to Enamel Heating and Products Limited, for the fiscal years 1959-60, 1960-61, 1961-62, 1962-63, 1963-64 and the estimated value of contracts for 1964-65?

2. What was the employment figure for the above years?

3. What is the present employment at the plant located at Amherst, N.S.?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. The dollar values of prime contracts awarded by the head office and district offices of the Department of Defence Production to Enamel Heating and Products Limited are as follows:

1962-63	378,210
1964-65 (April-July 31)	350,583*

*Information on the value of contracts placed in 1964/65 is available only to the end of July. An estimate of the value of contracts placed to the end of the current fiscal year cannot be made since it is the policy of the department to award contracts as the result of competitive tender, wherever possible.

2. The following are the average employment figures for these fiscal years:

1960-61	235
1961-62	214
1962-63	218

(Average for 5 month period April 1 to August 31, 1964).

3. The present employment figure is 180.

GRANTS TO MENTAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION

Question No. 1,831—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

What assistance, financial or otherwise, has been provided by the federal government to the Canadian mental health association in each of the last five years?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The assistance provided the Canadian mental health association by the Department of National Health and Welfare consists of formal and informal consultation and collaboration as well as regular financial assistance. The chief of the department's mental health division is a member of the scientific planning council of the association and the public information officer of the division participates as an observer at these meetings. In addition to this technical and scientific assistance, there is collaboration in the production of materials for use by the association in its public education program.

An annual grant of $15,000 is made to this organization.

GRANTS TO HEALTH LEAGUE

Question No. 1,836—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

What assistance, financial or otherwise, has been provided by the federal government to the health league of Canada in each of the last five years?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Officers of the Department of National Health and Welfare co-operate with the health league of Canada by providing, on request, data on certain aspects of illness and health in Canada and by suggesting sources of additional information. The department also assists the league in publicizing special programs, such as health week and immunization week, through the publication of appropriate items in departmental periodicals, such as "Canada's Health and Welfare", "Canada's Mental Health" and the "Health Education Bulletin."

An annual grant of $15,000 is made to this organization.

GRANTS TO ASSOCIATION FOR RETARDED CHILDREN

Question No. 1,837—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

What assistance, financial or otherwise, has been provided by the federal government to the Canadian association for retarded children in each of the last five years?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Canadian association for retarded children is assisted by the Department of National Health and Welfare in several ways. There is formal and informal consultation on matters such as research and public information. Officers of the mental health and child and maternal health divisions of the department have served regularly on the association's scientific research advisory board.

Since 1959-60 an annual grant has been made to this organization of $5,000. The estimates for the current year provide for an increase in this grant to $15,000.

GRANT TO COUNCIL FOR RESEARCH IN EDUCATION

Question No. 1,839—Mr. Webster:

1. Does the federal government make a contribution to the Canadian council for research in education and, if so, how much?

2. Who has been appointed to organize the scientific secretariat announced on April 30, 1964, by the Prime Minister and how large a staff has been appointed to assist him?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): 1. No.

2. Professor F. A. Forward assumed the duties of director of the scientific secretariat effective July 1, 1964. To date no other staff has been appointed apart from the provision of a secretary to the director.

LICENSING OF CONTRACTORS FOR INDUSTRIAL RADIOGRAPHY

Question No. 1,842—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. What action is the atomic energy control board taking to control the qualifications and licensing of outside industrial contractors for industrial radiography?

2. What safety regulations does the atomic energy control board prescribe for such contractors?

3. Are these safety regulations enforced and, if so, how are they enforced?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Under the atomic energy control regulations no person may obtain or use radioactive materials in Canada without a licence from the atomic energy control board. A licence is not granted to an industrial contractor to use radioactive materials for radiography purposes until the board's advisers in the federal and provincial health departments are satisfied that he has suitable radiography and protective equipment and is experienced in the safe handling of radioactive materials. Moreover, any licence issued contains the condition that no employee be permitted to carry out radiography operations unsupervised until he has received adequate training in the fundamentals of radiation protection and the use of protective equipment as well as training in the use and maintenance of radiography equipment. The board and its advisers accept the Canadian government standards certification as proof of such training and the contractors concerned have been notified that the board will shortly require all radiographers, except those in training, to have such certification.

2. A radiography licence issued by the board requires the licensee to comply with the health and safety provisions of the atomic energy control regulations as well as additional safety precautions recommended by the board's health advisers.

3. These regulations and additional requirements are enforced by officers of the Department of National Health and Welfare, provincial departments of health and provincial departments of labour acting as board inspectors. In addition, the Department of National Revenue (customs) assists the board by preventing the importation of radioactive materials by other than board licensees.

IMPOUNDING OF CATTLE, SUFFIELD EXPERIMENTAL STATION

Question No. 1,864—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

With reference to the impounding of livestock by the defence research board at the Suffield experimental station, what was the reason for the increase or decrease in cattle impounded during (a) 1961 (b) 1962 (c) 1963?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Aerial patrols of the experimental area, which were put into effect in December, 1960 gave more thorough and easier surveillance of the range and resulted in increased pick-ups. It is believed that the decrease is due to the aerial patrols encouraging greater precautions being taken to avoid intrusion of cattle into the restricted area.

LOW RENTAL HOUSING PROJECT, YARMOUTH, N.S.

Question No. 1,876—Mr. Crouse:

1. Was there an agreement between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the town of Yarmouth or Yarmouth Housing Ltd., covering the construction and operation of a low-rental housing community in that town and, if so, was there provision made that these units be rented only to families in a low-income bracket and what would be the income ceiling for admission?

2. In these agreements entered into by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the housing companies, do these ceilings continue to apply when the occupants' income increases and, if so, is eviction taken by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or by the housing company?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): 1. There are agreements between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and Yarmouth Housing Limited covering the construction and operation of two projects containing a total of 56 units built for families of low income. The agreements contain provision that the projects are to be leased to families of low income. The income limit for admission in respect of one of the projects is $2,250 and $2,306 in respect of the second project.

2. In these particular agreements, the income ceiling refers only to the income applicable at the time of the commencement of the lease.

UNEMPLOYED AGE GROUPS, HAMILTON, ONT.

Question No. 1,882—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

What proportion of the following age groups are presently unemployed in Hamilton, Ontario (a) 15 to 24 years (b) 25 to 34 years (c) 35 to 44 years (d) 45 to 54 years (e) 55 to 65 years?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Information is not available on the number of unemployed in Hamilton.

UNEMPLOYED AGE GROUPS, CANADA

Question No. 1,883—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

What proportions of the following age groups are presently unemployed in Canada (a) 15 to 24 years (b) 25 to 34 years (c) 35 to 44 years (d) 45 to 54 years (e) 55 to 65 years?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Unemployment rates(1) for specified age groups, week ended July 18, 1964, Canada: 15 to 24 years, 7.3; 25 to 34 years, 2.4; 35 to 44 years, 2.0; 45 to 54 years, 2.5; 55 to 64 years, 2.8.

(1)The unemployed as a percentage of the labour force.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

VETERANS AFFAIRS, N.B.—CASES TREATED OUTSIDE MILITARY HOSPITAL

Question No. 1,567—Mr. MacRae:

1. For the province of New Brunswick, how many cases of war pensioners (all classifications) were operated on or treated medically outside of Lancaster military hospital for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963 and for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964?
2. What was the diagnosis and treatment; in what hospital did it take place; and who was the surgeon and attending physician?
3. How were these cases dealt with by the treatment officer and under what rule and regulation was the case accepted or turned down?
4. Who were the treatment officers involved in each case?
5. How many cases were paid for as an emergency and how many were paid who had prior authorization for the so-called elective admission?
6. In how many cases was authorization given after so-called elective admission?

Return tabled.

PUBLIC SERVICE APPOINTMENTS BY ORDER IN COUNCIL

Question No. 1,596—Mr. MacRae:

1. Who are the employees of the public service appointed by order in council in receipt of a salary in excess of $18,000 per annum?
2. What is the exact salary of each?
3. What is the position that each fills?

Return tabled.

FISHERIES

REGULATIONS RESPECTING KILLING OF SEALS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think I will direct this question to the Prime Minister. It arises out of an article which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail entitled "Baby seal killing", and so forth. The article deals with a full page story in the German newspaper Weekend circulated in many countries, entitled "This scandal should shock the world". The article suggests that the killing of seals is so cruel and inhumane that action should be taken and that, among other things, letters should be directed to the Prime Minister and to myself in this connection.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has not received almost an avalanche of letters on this question; and whether under the circumstances, in view of the statement as far back as May last, in answer to questions by myself and other members, that amendments would be made to the law to put an end to this practice which, as described, is dastardly cruel. Among the matters that will be introduced before this session ends will there be legislation to bring about an end to this practice and to improve Canada's image, which cannot but be seriously damaged in this regard.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the article in question in the German Weekend magazine, though I will take steps to get a copy of it. My right hon. friend knows that the Minister of Fisheries made a statement in the house, I think it was last week, in which he indicated that action was going to be taken in respect of this matter and that he would make a report to the house shortly in regard to that action. I will be glad to look into the matter along the lines suggested by my right hon. friend.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I then ask the Minister of Fisheries, now that four or five months have passed since he undertook, in answer to the hon. member for Ontario, to bring in legislation, whether this legislation will be introduced so that this practice which seriously defaces Canada's image will at least be subject to punishment.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I have stated on numerous occasions in this house, the government and this department are concerned with the practice which has been going on for a number of years in respect of the killing of seals. As I stated in reply to a question by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam last Thursday, I believe it was, the regulations respecting the killing of seals in Atlantic waters are under revision, and amendments will be made to the present regulations. For the information of the right hon. gentleman I may say that no legislation is required in this house to amend such regulations; this can be done by order in council.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in so far as these offences are committed within Canada's territorial waters, is the Criminal Code sufficient in the opinion of the minister; and if so, why has not action been taken under the Criminal Code?

Mr. Robichaud: As I have just said, Mr. Speaker, this practice has been going on for a number of years, and this year was the first occasion on which the government made special representations to the industry and to those concerned, and ordered a special survey in order to determine the extent of the excesses which were going on. This matter does not come under the Criminal Code but under fisheries regulations and, as I have said and want to repeat, the regulations will be amended to control the killing of seals, before the opening of the 1965 season.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LA MACAZA, QUEBEC—TREATMENT OF PEACE DEMONSTRATORS BY R.C.A.F. POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence regarding the answer he gave to a question asked by my colleague the hon. member for Hamilton South, in connection with the actions of the R.C.A.F. police at La Macaza during certain peace demonstrations there.

In his answer last Friday the minister said that the allegations contained in a certain newspaper article were false. I should like to ask the minister who made this investigation, since I have in my hand a report from persons who participated. The information is that in the first charge by the 100 guards against some 23 demonstrators at the main gate, one young man was dragged by his hair along the road, a girl was kicked between the legs and a number of people were cruelly seized by the chin and by the back of the neck; that in the second attack several persons were kicked in the side, and one young man who participated said "I was jerked about by six guards, stretched out and then literally tossed up into the air over the ditch, and I heard the sergeant in charge of the guards say to the other guards 'This is your last chance to throw them off the road so make it good.' ". Also, those who took part in this demonstration say that the R.C.A.F. police endeavoured to stop pictures being taken of this demonstration and of the attack which they claim was inexcusably brutal.

I therefore want to ask the associate minister who made this investigation, as a result of which he told the house that the statements contained in the article were utterly false.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I cannot name the exact persons who made the inquiry, but an inquiry was made of the commanding officer at the station, La Macaza From the reports that we have, Mr. Speaker it was quite evident that there had to be at some periods, some contact between the R.C.A.F. police and the demonstrators.

As you perhaps know, what the demonstrators did was to lie in the middle of the road and try to block incoming traffic. Of course the R.C.A.F. police had to pick the people up from the ground, these people automatically went limp, and the police had to take them away from the road. This happened on perhaps two or three occasions when trucks were to come into the station, and in order to bring the number of contacts to the least number possible most of the traffic was directed so that it would come in through the back entrance of the station. Only thre or four trucks or vehicles, if my information is correct, came through the front entrance where the demonstrators were From all the reports we have received, all possible precaution was taken to make sure that none of these demonstrators were hurt.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question. If, as claimed by those who took part, there was inexcusable brutality, one would hardly expect this to be reported to the minister by those in charge of the station and who were responsible for the guards' actions. I would therefore like to ask, as a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, whether he is prepared to order an investigation by individuals outside the depart- record to protect, in order that those who ment, who have no actions to hide and no claim to have been mishandled will have an opportunity to state their case and we will have an opportunity to see whether or not the kind of brutal treatment which is alleged actually took place, or whether it is purely a figment of somebody's imagination. I hope the Prime Minister will agree to such an investigation.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will look into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONGO—SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure the minister joins all of us in this house in our concern for the safety of Canadians who are presently in the Stanleyville area of the communist backed rebel regime in the eastern Congo, particularly those of us who know some of the people personally. Does the minister have any information for us about the safety of the five members of the McMillan family and other Canadians who may be held by rebels in the area?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house shares my hon. friend's concern about the safety of Canadians in this particular area. This morning the Canadian embassy in Leopoldville reported, in response to a telegram sent from the Department of External Affairs on Saturday, that the local representative in Leopoldville of the mission of which Rev. Mr. McMillan is a member, reports that to the best of his organization's knowledge Mr. and Mrs. McMillan and their six children are all in Boyulu, a mission post about 100 miles east of Stanleyville. The embassies of the United States and Great Britain are both assuming from these reports that the entire McMillan family is still in this community. None of these sources is aware of the information contained in the radio report of last Saturday. That is the only information I have at the moment.

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the deteriorating political situation in Viet Nam and the very recent communication the minister has had with the secretary of state of the United States, can he give the house a report on just what the situation is there?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend the member for New Westminster gave me notice of his intention to ask a similar question. I can only say that the events of the past week end have, of course, been of great concern. On the basis of recent information it would appear that General Khanh's government has successfully overcome the recent challenge to his authority, and that this has taken place without bloodshed, loss of life or violence. I had the opportunity of discussing this matter with Mr. Rusk when he kindly visited me this morning in Windsor, but I do not believe there is anything more that I can publicly state now.

CYPRUS—REPORTED DIFFICULTY IN TRANSPORTING RED CROSS SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs could say a word about the situation in Cyprus. There is a good deal of concern about the fact that there appears to be a blockade with regard to Turkish Cypriots, so that the United Nations are having to use helicopters to get Turkish Red Cross supplies to the people in Kokkina. In view of the fact that a short time ago the Canadian government made money available for Red Cross supplies for the people of Cyprus, are the Red Cross continuing to experience difficulty in getting freedom of movement and freedom of access so that Red Cross supplies can be taken to needy people whether they are Turkish Cypriots or Greek Cypriots?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have not been informed that the Red Cross have had continuing difficulty. There have been occasions when the Red Cross and other bodies have encountered difficulty, but this has generally been corrected.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

CONFERENCE OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL RESPECTING REPATRIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister tell the house whether any date has yet been set for the meeting between himself and the attorneys general of the provinces to discuss the repatriation of the Canadian constitution?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the dates of the 1st and 2nd of October have been set aside for that purpose.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister assure the house that before the conference meets the house will be informed of the formula for the amendment of the constitution in Canada that the government will put before the provincial representatives?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I shall consider this suggestion and report to the house on the government's decision in this respect.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister also take into consideration providing an opportunity for the house to express its views on the government's proposals to the attorneys general before they are actually presented, so they might have the benefit of the views of the other parties in this parliament?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, one way in which this could be done, and it is an apt suggestion, would be for my estimates to be called as early as possible, and I shall arrange for them to be called on the occasion of the first supply motion which has been announced by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice?

Could the minister tell us whether the statement made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska to the effect that it would be impossible and dangerous to revise the constitution reflects the principles and policy of this government?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I did not have the pleasure of hearing the speech of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska, but I will be pleased to read it.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—INQUIRY AS TO WHEREABOUTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister any information to communicate to the house concerning the whereabouts of Hal Banks, our modern day Al Capone?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I had proposed to give the house whatever information we may have gathered some time during this week, but I think that once a week would be quite a good ratio in this respect.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I might ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister any information on the repatriation of Banks from the United States? Is he now able to answer the question I have asked several times, namely whether he has ascertained from the United States immigration authorities that Mr. Banks left Canada for the United States? And is the minister now in a position to advise whether counsel for the government have given the government the opinion that on the basis of the fact that the charge against Banks for which he is being sought is conspiracy, if Banks is in the United States no extradition is possible?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the last part of the question I must say it is the opinion of the Department of Justice that the offences for which Banks is being prosecuted or has been prosecuted are not extraditable offences. As to the first part of the question, I must say that although we have received full co-operation from the United States authorities the latter have not yet been able to define the whereabouts of Mr. Banks.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How long ago did the government of Canada or the Department of Justice realize that once Banks got out on bail on this charge and left Canada, the sole recourse would be the estreatment of the bail bond, and that Banks would have flown and would be entirely free as long as he stayed in the United States?

Mr. Langlois: A supplementary question—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to know. There is gross negligence here somewhere, and I want to find out how long it has existed.

Mr. Favreau: In view of the allegation of gross negligence just made by the right hon. gentleman I think I must repeat that at the time Banks asked for bail the department saw to it that counsel objected to any bail at all being granted. When the judge stated it was his intention to grant bail the suggestion was then made that bail ought not to be lower than $50,000. I repeat that everything possible has been done. When the chief justice of the court of appeal exercised his own discretion I think he did so with that sense of honesty and sense of justice for which he is well known.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to say about the honesty and integrity of the chief justice, and I make that clear. However, I ask the minister this question. Did the law officers of the crown say that if Banks was let out on bail on the conspiracy charge and disappeared in the United States, the crown's only recourse would be the estreatment of the bail? Did they say that?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman knows or ought to know that the fact that the offences with which the court was concerned at the time the bail was set were not extraditable offences surely was known to the court. I take it that in exercising his discretion the chief justice took all relevant matters into consideration in deciding to fix bail, and the fact that there was strong objection to any bail being set at all is the complete proof and demonstration that all relevant explanations were made to the court at the time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that does not answer the question. Did the representatives of the crown advise the chief justice that the granting of bail under the circumstances could permit of Banks disappearing and not being subject to punishment? Was the chief justice so advised? After all, judges depend on counsel.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to put my supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. A few days ago I asked the minister to set up a commission to inquire into the whole Hal Banks situation, having regard to the rumours going around that some members on the government side and high officials are concerned in the whole Banks mess. Would the minister consider forming a committee of inquiry to clean up the whole thing?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, there was an investigation set up by the previous government, and a report was remitted to the present administration. So far as I am concerned, I am satisfied that all relevant steps have been taken to see that justice is carried out. I do not believe there is cause for setting up a second investigation. However, I am speaking personally, as Minister of Justice, and I am ready to consult my colleagues on the suggestion.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Justice. Can we take it as a fact that Mr. Banks did not appear today in Montreal in connection with the appeal of his conviction and five year sentence which was before the courts today, September 14?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Banks did not appear today, Mr. Speaker. The appeal has been postponed until tomorrow, and if Banks does not appear in court tomorrow for the hearing of his appeal, counsel has been instructed to move for the dismissal of the appeal and to take the necessary steps immediately to have the bond forfeited.

GRAIN

MOOSE JAW, SASK.—OPERATION OF GRAIN DRYING FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): On Friday last the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture, the full context of which is to be found on page 7879 of Hansard. The main part of the question is as follows:

> Will the minister take steps to arrange for the operation of the elevator's grain drying facilities at full capacity so that the tough and damp grain can be put into condition for marketing or storing?

The minister replied he would be happy to bring this matter to the attention of the board of grain commissioners, and I am happy to provide on his behalf the following additional information. The movement of grain into the licensed elevator system comes within the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board. In the event the Canadian wheat board orders grain into the government elevator at Moose Jaw, or any other Canadian government elevator, the board of grain commissioners is now prepared to handle that grain which will require drying. Facilities will be available to the full extent of drying capacities.

TRANSPORT

ONTARIO—SHIPPING SPACE FOR BEAN GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, and also draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce to it. Perhaps their officials could take note. A week or more ago I informed the Department of Transport of the urgent need for shipping space for the bean growers in southern Ontario, and requested that action be taken in this regard. Can the minister tell me whether any progress has been made to date or is likely to be made in the immediate future? The bean industry involves over 8,000 growers or about 10,000 acres of well cultivated land in Ontario. The growers are in a position to sell their product to the United Kingdom at a price—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Has the hon. member asked his first question, and is this a second question?

Mr. Cardiff: I have a second question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I regret to say that I have not received a progress report from my department. I shall be glad to inquire and I hope to give the hon. gentleman a report tomorrow, and to consider very carefully the further representations he was in the process of making, of which he was good enough to give me a copy.

POWER

NEW BRUNSWICK—POSSIBLE DELAY IN GRANT FOR MACTAQUAC DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I should like to answer a question asked on Friday by the hon. member for Cumberland, who asked a similar question somewhat earlier of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister said he would draw it to my attention, and I must apologize to the hon. member for Cumberland for not answering it at the end of last week.

I have given very careful consideration to, and I have discussed with the officials of the Atlantic development board, the question of whether we would be warranted in asking for a reassessment of the decision of the Atlantic development board to assist the Mactaquac power development project in New Brunswick. I might say the board, in its initial examination of the project prior to recommending assistance, considered this project in the context of all potential power sources in the region, having regard to considerations of price, quantity, reliability and the time by which the increased amounts of power could be made available.

The Mactaquac project will come into operation by 1968, by which time the large block that will become available from the project will be urgently required in New Brunswick. It seems to me that in the light of these facts it would be wrong for the Atlantic development board or for this government to take any initiative in this matter, having regard particularly to the fact there is no other known source of power that could be available as early as 1968 for use in the area.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the Minister of Transport could indicate whether Premier Smallwood has requested the Atlantic development board for assistance or to do anything about the $20 million that has been allocated for assistance for Baie d'Espoir?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, he has not. I would think, sir, it would be very unwise to have any delay in either of these power projects. We were satisfied, before recommending these very considerable grants, that power from both of them was going to be needed at the time the power would be developed. If the Hamilton scheme should be successful, and I certainly hope it will be, it will depend, of course, upon the export of a very considerable quantity of power to the United States, and the fact that we have this additional power from Baie d'Espoir and Mactaquac will mean we will have that much more developed wealth by that time. I am sure all Canadians, and particularly all members of the house from the Atlantic provinces, will rejoice to know that we will have.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I was going to ask the minister if he had a pleasant visit with the premier of Newfoundland over the week end.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I had a very pleasant visit, and I had an opportunity of attending a dinner given by the government of Newfoundland to the general council of the United Church, which was one of the finest functions I have ever attended in my life. However, it hardly seems to be very relevant to the business before the house.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a supplementary question on a political rather than a religious note. Is the Atlantic development board assisting in the survey being conducted with regard to the Hamilton Falls project through the maritimes, and if not would the Atlantic development board assist in this survey? I am sure it is costly to Mr. Smallwood, and it might accelerate the survey if the Atlantic development board could be involved because it is a type of project the Atlantic development board was set up for originally.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the Atlantic development board would have been glad to consider a request for assistance for this purpose, but no request was made. I am reasonably well informed about the survey that is being made. I believe it is being carried out just as rapidly as it is humanly possible for it to be done, and that additional financial assistance could not speed it up in any way. I understand that the fullest co-operation is being given by the power commissions of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and that it is expected that early in October there will be a definite feasibility report, which I must say I hope will be favourable.

Mr. Bell: Does the minister appreciate that my only intention is to try to secure the best I can for Newfoundland?

Mr. Pickersgill: I appreciate that, and I hope the hon. gentleman appreciates I am trying to do the best I can for New Brunswick, too.

AIRPORTS

HAMILTON, ONT.—AVAILABILITY OF FEDERAL FUNDS FOR DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I should like to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Hamilton South with regard to a meeting with Hamilton municipal officials about the Mount Hope airport. Discussions took place on September 10 between senior officials of the department and representatives of the city of Hamilton regarding the future of the Mount Hope airport. These covered such matters as repair work which might be required, standards of operation and future use of the airport.

As a result of questions raised at the meeting, both sides are to exchange certain further information as a means of determining whether in fact the airport which is being given up by the Department of National Defence could be kept in operation by the city.

AGRICULTURE

TURKEYS—REIMPOSITION OF QUOTAS ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence I would direct it to the acting minister. It has reference to imports of turkeys into Canada from the United States. I might say I have had a number of telegrams on this matter, and possibly the minister has as well. Will he take immediate action to stop the tremendous importation of turkeys from the United States?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister announced last week that he is having a meeting today or tomorrow with the farmers who raise turkeys, and he will have an announcement to make on his return.

Mr. Pugh: As a supplementary, will the acting minister not agree that immediate and decisive action must be taken now, or is he not at all in conversation with the Minister of Agriculture? Time is of the essence on this question, and I think something should be done along the line of the quotas which were imposed by the previous government and taken off last year by the present administration.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, the minister replied to this proposal, saying he did not feel that quotas needed to be re-established right away, and that he was dealing with this problem by meeting with the people concerned with raising turkeys.

Mr. Pugh: As a further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me this question was pretty fully answered on Friday or Thursday of last week. The minister is meeting with a delegation today, and it would be as well to wait until he makes a statement on that meeting.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLOCATION OF FREE TIME TO POLITICAL PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this question should be addressed to the Secretary of State but in his absence may I direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister had a half hour's chat over a national television network last evening with two representatives of the press, and in view of the fact that we understand the Leader of the Opposition is to have the same privilege tonight, may I ask whether similar or proportionate time will be made available by the C.B.C. to the leaders of other parties in the house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not of course responsible for the allocation of time by the C.B.C., but I shall be glad to bring my hon. friend's question to their attention at once.

Mr. Knowles: Will the Prime Minister also make it clear to the C.B.C. that in our view fairness requires that this be done?

Mr. Pearson: I shall be glad to add that observation.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO SPEECH BY SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister clarify two points made by the Secretary of State in his speech last Wednesday to the Richelieu club of Quebec? My first question is this. When the Secretary of State said, according to Le Devoir that—

> —soon the government of Quebec would benefit from 75 per cent of revenue collected in personal income taxes by the federal government—

—was he announcing government policy? Second, when the Secretary of State said, as reported in Le Devoir, and again I quote:

> Mr. Lamontagne admitted, nevertheless, that there had not been up to now a serious study of the economic consequences of the independence of Quebec, and that a federal agency, under the privy council, was given the task of examining this aspect.

—may I ask is there a committee of public servants under the direction of the privy council engaged in studying the economic consequences of independence or separation of Quebec, as reported by the Secretary of State?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is too far reaching a question to be dealt with on orders of the day. I suggest that my hon. friend put it on the order paper or else bring it up when the estimates of the Secretary of State's department are under discussion.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when a minister makes a statement outside the house a member is entitled to ask whether it represents government policy. That is the question that was asked.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if I lost sight of that particular question in the rather long statement of the hon. gentleman, I apologize. Of course the minister was speaking as a member of the government on this question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On government policy.

[Mr. Pearson.]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PAYMENT OF ALLOWANCES TO VETERANS AND DEPENDANTS LIVING ABROAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister received a letter and a brief from Commander J. Leslie Harries of London, who is president of the Canadian veterans' association of the United Kingdom, urging amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act that would make it possible for Canadian veterans living in England and their widows and orphans to receive the allowance without returning to Canada for 12 months. If so, is the government giving consideration to this request?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I certainly received a representation of this type, but it is difficult for me to identify it from memory just at the moment. Consideration is being given to that question.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—DESIGNATION OF CREDIT UNIONS UNDER ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the Minister of Finance. My question is based on a letter from the credit union league of Saskatchewan directed to the Minister of Finance under date of September 10 and dealing with the sanctioning of credit unions as approved lenders under the student loans legislation. Why has there been a delay in sanctioning Saskatchewan credit unions with respect to this act, and will the minister see that this situation is rectified at an early date?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into the matter.

ONTARIO AND MANITOBA—PROCEDURE IN DEALING WITH APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, last week we directed several questions to the Minister of Finance, through his parliamentary secretary, dealing with alleged red tape slowing down the applications of students in Ontario. Has the minister looked into this, and was there any substance in the charge?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did look into it, and possibly I may be permitted to answer the questions fully. First of all, early in the first week of September all the documents necessary for provincial education authorities and for the banks to proceed with the student loans plan were distributed from Ottawa. Second, about 300,000 brochures were sent out at the same time, outlining the basic facts about the plan, for distribution to educational institutions and to bank branches across Canada.

Third, the advertising program in the press and on the radio was begun later that week, that is later in the first week of September, as soon as the machinery was in readiness. This was a tight schedule for everybody concerned but the main goal, which was achieved, was to make the loan plan available to students as soon as possible before the start of the academic year.

I think last week the hon. member for Danforth referred to an article in the Toronto Daily Star, which I believe was based on a few isolated instances and which drew the conclusion that the plan was not working smoothly, or that it was involved in red tape. My information is quite different, Mr. Speaker. I have been advised by the responsible authorities in Ontario that organization for the administration of this plan is complete and is functioning well. Reports from other provinces are to the same general effect.

While I am dealing with this question, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might refer to a point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who asked about the form used by the authorities in Manitoba by which the students apply for certificates of eligibility. Under the act the provincial authorities must satisfy themselves that the student has attained a satisfactory scholastic standard and is in need of a student loan. The method and procedures by which the provincial authorities satisfy themselves on these points is quite properly a matter for them to decide, and that was provided for in the legislation.

Because of the pressure of time some provinces are using application forms which had been in use for previously existing provincial student loan plans. In the case of Manitoba it is made clear, I am informed, that the parts of the form dealing with the co-signature or guarantor of a loan is not to be used in the case of loans under the Canada Student Loans Act. A part of the application form in Manitoba deals with the financial status of the student, or of his parents if he is still dependent on them. However, I am informed that in no case is the student required to obtain the approval of his parents under the Canada Student Loans Act.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there any reason why Manitoba cannot be supplied with copies of the loan application form that appears as schedule B to the regulations under this act, so this confusion can be avoided?

Mr. Gordon: I think this confusion is exaggerated, Mr. Speaker. From the inquiries I have been able to make today I am informed the province has been supplied with these forms.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REDUCTION IN UNIVERSITY NAVAL TRAINING UNITS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence and ask him whether the Department of National Defence has decided to close down, within a month, the Royal Canadian Navy university naval training units at St. Dunstan's University, St. Francis Xavier University and Acadia University, as well as three others in other parts of the country?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I announced in the house last fall at the time our estimates were under consideration that there would be a reduction of 50 per cent in the expenditure for university reserve officers of the three services. This is now being implemented, and this report which appeared in the newspapers refers to just part of the reorganization. Perhaps, under the circumstances, I might take the question as notice and give a full statement of the reorganization tomorrow or the next day.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister whether in reviewing this situation he will also inform the house how the decision was arrived at as to which units are to be closed down, and whether representations were heard from the universities concerned or from any local representatives.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I think my full statement will satisfy the hon. gentleman, and perhaps we could leave supplementary questions until he has heard it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ST. HUBERT, QUE.—POSSIBLE USE AS CIVILIAN AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Could the minister tell us if his department intends to use the St. Hubert air force base as a civil airport?

If such is the government's intention, when will the base be made available for public use?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think this question should be put on the order paper.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TORONTO, ONT.—DENIAL OF BENEFITS TO STRIKING NEWSPAPER EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour. Can the parliamentary secretary inform the house whether the unemployment insurance commission has now ruled as to whether the I.T.U. strikers in Toronto are eligible for unemployment insurance?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Danforth I would say I have been informed by the chairman of the unemployment insurance commission that this matter is being actively studied. First they must determine whether the industry has returned to 80 per cent of normal operation; then it must be determined whether the relevant section of the act applies in this case. There will be some definitive action by the middle of this week.

Mr. Scott: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This is the story we have been getting for three weeks from this department. When are we going to get some action in this matter? What is the unemployment insurance commission doing to ascertain whether 80 per cent of production has been restored? Frankly, we are fed up with this evasion.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, whether or not my hon. friend is fed up is irrelevant.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Byrne: Active consideration is taking place and a study is being made to determine whether the industry is back to 80 per cent of normal operation, and then as to whether the act applies in this case. This will be determined by the middle of the week.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the parliamentary secretary why it takes three weeks to make an investigation which any normal commission, with fairly competent people, could make in five days?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I want to give notice of my intention to raise this question at 10.30.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING LOAN MAXIMUM, AGGREGATE OF GUARANTEED LOANS, ETC.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act to increase from $7,500 to $15,000 the maximum amount of any loan that may be made under the act to a borrower together with any amount owing in respect of other guaranteed farm improvement loans, to increase from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000 the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed loans that may be made in the three year loan period ending June 30, 1965, to provide for a further three year loan period ending June 30, 1968, and to provide that the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed loans that may be made in that period shall not exceed $700,000,000.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, this resolution foreshadows proposed amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act which will raise from $7,500 to $15,000 the maximum guaranteed loan amount which a farmer may have outstanding, and will also effect appropriate extensions of the government's guarantee to enable farmers generally to continue to borrow under the act at the same or at an even higher rate than that experienced in recent years. To this end the maximum aggregate amount of loans that may be made under the government guarantee during the current three year lending period, which expires at the end of next June, would be raised from $400 million to $500 million and there would be added a new lending period, from July 1, 1965 to June 30, 1968. During this new period the government guarantee would apply to an aggregate maximum volume of guaranteed loans of $700 million.

As hon. members are aware, this legislation was designed to make intermediate term credit more readily available to farmers for the purpose of financing a wide range of capital improvements. To achieve this, the act authorizes the government to guarantee each bank against loss up to 10 per cent of the farm improvement loans made by that bank during a lending period. To limit the government's over-all contingent liability, the act establishes a maximum on the total amount of guaranteed loans which may be made by all the banks during a lending period.

The use that has been made of this act since it came into force in 1945 has shown considerable growth. Whereas about $10 million was lent under the act in 1946 the annual amount of loans has exceeded $100 million since 1960 and grew to $135 million in 1963. Based on the trend in lending established so far this year, 1964 loans are expected to be in excess of $150 million.

During the period of operations under the act, technological advance and the mechanization of farms have been a dominant feature of Canadian farming, and farm improvement loans have played an important role in facilitating those developments. Although loans under the act are made for a wide range of farm improvement projects, they have always been used quite prominently to help finance the purchase of machinery and equipment. In recent years about three out of every four dollars borrowed under the act have been used for the purchase of machinery and equipment.

There has also been over the years, along with an increase in the average size of farming operation, a trend toward the use of heavier and more expensive machinery and equipment. This has been reflected in the size of individual credit needs which have been met under the provisions of the act, and the maximum amount permitted under the act to an individual farmer has been raised from time to time. While a maximum of $3,000, established originally in 1945, served the purposes of the act for many years, this was raised to $4,000 in 1953 and again to $5,000 in 1956. The present maximum of $7,500 has been in effect since 1959.

There has been evidence recently that the maximum was again becoming restrictive in relation to the needs of modern farming. To meet this problem it is now proposed to raise the maximum loan amount to $15,000. This figure has been developed in close collaboration with the Department of Agriculture, and we believe it will help farmers to meet their credit needs more fully with loans guaranteed under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

An increase in the maximum loan amount is, of course, likely to accelerate somewhat the present growth rate in lending. Even without taking this factor into account, however, it is possible that loans during the current lending period ending next June will exceed the present limit of $400 million on loans that may be made under the government guarantee. The increase in this limit to $500 million is designed to prevent lending under the act being interrupted as the aggregate volume of loans reaches the current limit.

In the interests of smooth and continuous operations under the act it is also now proposed to add a new lending period which would run from July 1, 1965 to June 30, 1968. Based on current lending trends, a limit of $700 million is proposed on the aggregate amount of loans that may be made by all banks during the new three year period. It is estimated that this will be adequate to help accommodate the credit needs of Canadian farmers during that period.

Hon. members will appreciate that the nature of the proposed amendments is, in a sense, a measure of the success of this legislation. In this the co-operation of the banks deserves recognition. It is a good indication of the soundness of the scheme that on a total loan volume of close to $1.4 billion since inception, accumulated losses during this period have been only slightly above one tenth of one per cent.

In conclusion may I say that the Farm Improvement Loans Act has been an important instrument in helping Canadian farmers to meet their credit needs, and that the amendments to the act now proposed will, I am confident, further contribute to the improvement of living conditions of Canadian farm families and will further encourage the development of Canadian farming.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, we in the official opposition certainly welcome the introduction of this amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. We had hoped that this resolution might have been brought in at the time of the amendment of the Farm Credit Act and before the debate on the flag took place. We certainly do not wish to quarrel at this time with this laxity on the part of the government, nor do we wish to put this matter into the partisan field. However, we should like to state to the government that our constant pressure to have this amendment brought before the house at a much earlier date was due to the fact that we were concerned that the farmers should have this increase available to them in time to be of use in the 1964 season. The fact that this measure has been delayed until this date almost precludes the possibility that this additional finance will help them this year.

The parliamentary secretary has pointed out that this Farm Improvement Loans Act which was enacted in 1945 has been amended from time to time. The legislation began with a maximum loan of $3,000. The act was amended in 1953 and the amount raised to $4,000; in 1956 the maximum was raised to $5,000; in 1959 it was again increased to $7,500, and now the government proposes that the maximum be $15,000.

We have absolutely no quarrel with this. We feel that the trend through the years gives two indications; first, the degree to which each government when in office feels that this industry needs this sort of help and does make the maximum use of it; second, we believe this trend is a sound criterion or indication of the degree to which farm expenses have increased, and forms a yardstick over the years of this drastic increase.

We believe this great industry of agriculture was one of the first industries of this country to feel the pressure of the industrial revolution which has been taking place over the last few years. Agriculture was the first industry which came face to face with the problem of automation. It was the first industry to lose a large proportion of its labourers and their children who left agriculture and migrated to the cities to take advantage of the higher wages offered, with the problems that followed.

There were just two courses of action open to agriculture. First of all, this agriculture industry had to attempt to meet the wage scale provided by heavy industry, which would have meant a drastic increase in expenses and in the price of farm commodities to the Canadian people. Or second, they had to change their entire method of procedure and try to take advantage of the machinery available and copy the industrial change-over to try to find out whether by this means they could increase their production.

When the previous government was in office I believe it assessed correctly that this revolution was in progress, and took direct action to provide the answer and the necessary aid to agriculture. I think it is a credit to the parliament of that time that there was no great opposition offered by any party in this house to that course of action.

This course of action, sir, followed along three lines. First there was a determination to increase the sale of agricultural products internationally and nationally in order to move the tremendous surpluses that were building up. Second, sir, there was an attempt by the previous government to effect some sort of stabilization of farm prices so that farmers would not be subjected to the extremes of very high and very low prices, which created great havoc both to the economic security of the farmer and his long term farming proposition. The third step taken by the previous government was in the form of farm credits, and there were amendments extending the scope of both the Farm Credit Corporation legislation and the Farm Improvement Loans Act to include all individuals engaged in agriculture, and to directly increase the amount of finance available to the farmers of that day.

It is very interesting to note that the agricultural industry was one of the first to take advantage of government financing to this large degree in an attempt to cope with the drastic problems it was faced with at that time. The loan picture as portrayed by reports of the farm loan board give us a very clear indication of just exactly what is going on. For example, the average loan after this act was passed in 1945 was around $784, and by 1962 the average loan had reached $1,626. This meant that over 90 per cent of the farmers borrowing during those years borrowed far less than the maximum allowed by the act.

It is interesting to note, however, where this money went. To bear out the theory that farmers were turning to large machinery in order to offset the cost of high priced farm labour, in 1962 some $87 million was borrowed by Canadian farmers for the purchase of machinery, which is 73 per cent of the entire amount of money borrowed. In respect of farm buildings $50 million was borrowed; $11 million was borrowed for the purchase of livestock and $3,749,000 was borrowed for other improvements.

Here in Canada we are beginning to experience a drastically changing farm operation. Farmers are moving toward greater specialization. Farms are indeed becoming larger and being run by modern farmers who are today more businesslike than probably their fathers or grandfathers. The farmer is a man who works on a profit and loss column, has an office on his farm and is particularly aware of his costs in respect of every venture undertaken on his farm. He quickly realizes that in order to make his farm an economic operation in this modern world he must turn to the theory of producing more units with a smaller margin of profit rather than the former conception, fewer units with a large profit. This is necessary in order to compete in foreign markets, and the fact that foreign markets must take a great deal of our produce means that the farmer of today is taking the right course of action.

In order for the farmer to take advantage of this changing trend, today he must have more complicated and expensive machinery. We believe this is the act under which farmers will be provided with the tools necessary to work these new farms. Citizens today in Canada are subjected from time to time to news comments and reports and other sources of criticism, to the effect that governments of the day perhaps coddle this industry of agriculture to the detriment of those in urban centres who have to bear the effects of higher taxes.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is one illustration which points out the fallacy of those particular arguments. The parliamentary secretary has pointed out that we have a maximum of $1,250 million in loans to the farmers of Canada, and that the loss on this tremendous outlay of money is less than one tenth of one per cent. Since the loss is only one tenth of one per cent and the government, and therefore the taxpayers, are only responsible for 10 per cent of these losses, one will see that the government and the taxpayers are only forced to sustain a loss of one one hundredth of one per cent, which is trivial indeed.

These loans do make possible the production of food in this country at a price comparable and in competition with all the nations of the world, and enable the citizens of this country to obtain food of the highest quality and greatest variety. We believe there is only one major gap left now in respect of agriculture which must be corrected, and that has relation to young men without the necessary credit to borrow under this act, but who have expressed the desire and have the ability to be great farmers in Canada today. We feel there is room for action for the benefit of those young individuals, and that they should not be forgotten in the provisions under the Farm Credit Corporation and the Farm Improvement Loans Act; because a farmer wishing to borrow money under this legislation must possess the necessary assets so that he will not become a liability.

We are in favour of making these funds available to farmers at the earliest date possible. We will wait the provisions to be contained in the new bill, and if there are no startling changes but, as set out by the parliamentary secretary, those acceptable provisions, we see no reason for delay and feel perhaps the committee stage of this measure can be completed by tomorrow. We feel that this is a good measure but, as I say, our only quarrel relates to the regretful delay in its implementation. We propose only to have one speaker at the resolution stage in order to expedite the matter. We feel the department should be complimented for the scope to which they have increased this farm loans legislation.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise on behalf of this party to support the principle of this resolution. Well do I remember members of this party getting up in this house, nearly 20 years ago, reflecting the representations of farmers' organizations, particularly in western Canada, urging the establishment of this type of legislation. We support the principle and purpose of this resolution, which actually is simply a measure to increase the maximum loan available for capital improvements up to $15,000. The very fact that in 1946 the total amount that could be borrowed was $3,000 while today we find it necessary to amend the act to provide for borrowing up to $15,000 is a clear indication that the act has functioned very satisfactorily indeed, and that the need has been proven throughout the years.

Before passing on to a few other general observations I wish to make with respect to agriculture I want to say in passing that I trust the parliamentary secretary will inform the minister of my commendation, because there have been occasions, you know, when I have ribbed him a bit.

I must say I was very pleased to read the minister's remarks as reported in the press concerning the importance of the role of the farmer in our society. I thought they were very down to earth comments indeed about the food producers of this country. Too many fail to realize the contribution to our national life and to Canadian production and income that has been made by those who work on the land and, as the previous speaker mentioned, many people fail to realize how economically they produce the food of the nation. You meet people who actually are under the impression that farming is one of the most inefficient occupations in this country, and I was very pleased that the minister made these comments.

I also wish to congratulate the minister for organizing the tour of Canada by agriculturalists from the Soviet union. In my opinion this type of association and exchange of ideas between those interested in agriculture in both countries can be most fruitful in the development of friendship between our country and the Soviet union. I have talked to some of those who were on the tour, and I am sure the visit of these Soviet agriculturalists was very worth while indeed. I think it was mutually beneficial and enjoyable.

I compliment the minister particularly as one who comes from a family that believes in free enterprise from here to eternity, because we recognize that he has done a good job in inviting these representatives from a socialist country to look at Canadian agriculture. I hope there was a bit of mellowing on both sides. Possibly we could learn something from them and they could learn something from our way of doing things. I think this is a very good way indeed to develop understanding between two very important groups in the economics of both countries.

I want to say a word or two with respect to the resolution stage of legislation. Years ago there used to be a debate on the resolution before the Speaker left the chair. Then we had the resolution, second reading, committee of the whole and so on. There is a move now to do away with the resolution stage on money bills. I can well understand this, but if the resolution stage were used for the purpose for which it was originally intended it could be a most useful stage in discussion.

I understand that the original purpose of the resolution stage before the introduction of the legislation was so that members on the opposition side could express their views, make observations regarding the circumstances surrounding the legislation, and offer suggestions; and that any wise government would listen to the views expressed by the opposition and after listening to them would very often make changes in the legislation before bringing in the measure. If the resolution stage was used for that purpose and governments did not finally draft their legislation—it would not apply in simple matters, but would in complicated circumstances—until after the debate on the resolution stage had terminated, the government could amend its legislation to take advantage of the views of the opposition without any loss of face, and the country as a whole would benefit. I suggest that consideration be given to that aspect of the resolution stage. Otherwise there is no great value in the debate on the resolution stage unless it is intended, as I said, to have some effect on the government in the drafting of the legislation.

Let me say that we welcome this legislation, which is urgently required at this time to meet the growing need for this type of credit in this field. I have had some experience in this respect. In travelling around I talk to our farmers and discuss their requirements, and I realize there has been a growing need for the amendment proposed in the legislation.

I might also say that we support this type of legislation wholeheartedly because it is right in line with our philosophy and program, which is based on a mixed economy. This involves legitimate private ownership operating in co-operation with government as the result of social capital being invested in our agricultural economy, and still leaving to the individual the opportunity for ownership of the farm, the making of management decisions and so on.

As far as I can ascertain, during the past 150 years our national agricultural policy has had one primary objective, namely the establishment of a rural economy in which independent farmers had complete ownership and control of the land they farmed. As a result the family farm has been the principal type of productive unit in Canadian agriculture to date. However, changing circumstances as the result of our industrial development have aroused widespread concern with regard to the present position of the family farm in Canadian agriculture. The increasing apprehension over the apparently precarious position of the family farm, particularly in some areas of Canada, is somewhat similar to the feeling of insecurity that exists in small business operations, some small industries and other aspects of our economy across Canada.

What is a family farm? In my opinion a family farm is a farm where, first, the farm owner or operator makes all the management decisions; second, where the farmer and the members of his family supply most of the labour required except at seeding and harvest times; and third, where the available farm resources and markets are sufficient to provide the family with an adequate standard of living. That is a family farm.

I might say I also believe in what I term the maintenance farm, because I think it has a role to play in our agricultural economy. Statistics do not always tell the whole story.

We have the economic family farm unit which we take as the basis of our agricultural economy, but in my district I have a lot of what I term maintenance farmers. These are people who on five to ten acres are growing fruit, producing poultry or carrying on dairying on a small scale. Over the year their total returns from a financial point of view do not compare very favourably with the income expected by some other people. They grow fruit, have their own cows, produce their own pork and bacon and do their own canning. They also grow other commodities on the ranch and in most cases are able to produce their own fuel. They burn wood.

In my district I have dozens and dozens of what I call maintenance farmers living on beautiful sites. They have lovely orchards and lawns and nice houses and driveways. From the point of view of some people their standard of living is not high, but from their own point of view they have an adequate standard of living, and a high standard of living so far as the cultural aspects of life are concerned. I believe there is a place for the maintenance farm in our economy. We cannot judge the success of all phases of agriculture by figures only, because figures alone do not tell the whole story.

I am one who believes that in the future we have to look toward decentralizing our cities and their populations and decentralizing industry. Instead of having increasingly larger units which eventually become factory farms and having people who were farming moving to the cities, I think we should be doing everything we can to maintain and develop a healthy, satisfactory rural economy.

I also believe there is a place for part time farming. I find it is being engaged in more and more and I think it should be encouraged. It involves men who are connected with the forest industry, persons who are possibly doing some tree farming, others who are engaged in beekeeping, in fact part time farmers of various kinds. I think the more people we can influence to become interested in the soil in Canada the better it will be for our country, and the healthier and more stable will be our society. I always maintain we should work for the development of these three types of farms, and there is a great deal of research and investigation required before we can come to definite conclusions on some of these matters.

Now, during recent years there has been a development of interest and it relates to the possibilities offered by family company farming. This type of farming will not conflict with the traditional concept of the family farm. In fact, it has several advantages over the single ownership system. For example, where the farming operation is of considerable size or where several members of the family are involved, it offers an excellent arrangement for the handling of such problems as intra-family ownership and estate planning. This has become a problem so far as many farmers are concerned in recent years. No one would have thought of such a thing 20 years ago—that a farmer would have been worried about the value of his estate, succession duties, and so on. More and more those members who are interested in these questions are finding that farmers are very concerned about this, because of the liquidation of the family enterprise.

In my opinion, the future will see a great increase in the family company type of farming. I do not think it is going to change the picture whatever, but it makes for more efficient farming and assured security of the family interested in the development of the farm itself. However, Mr. Chairman, I do want to say that in my opinion there is a great need for further research and study of the various problems surrounding the development of these various types of farming and ownership, particularly with respect to the financing of the purchase of land. As the previous member said, this is of particular interest to the young people who wish to go into farming. Then there is the question of the purchase of equipment and the provision of housing and other buildings necessary for the operation of a modern farm.

While we have lengthy Canadian experience, very competent federal and provincial staffs, as well as competent agriculture staffs on universities throughout Canada, I think we can still learn from the experience of other countries. I just want to deal briefly with two of them. Let me say this, that Canada has no monopoly whatever on the problems surrounding the maintenance and development of the family farm. This is a very general problem in portions of Europe, Great Britain, the United States, New Zealand and Australia. In Britain, for instance, the government has established what is called a small farmer assistance scheme which is devised to assist small farmers who own not less than 20 acres and no more than 100 acres of crop land. That is a small scale farm compared to some in Canada, but this assistance is in the form of direct grants of up to $3,000 for the improvement of land by tillage, drainage or irrigation, for fertilizers, and so on. This, as I say, is an experiment in Great Britain in an attempt to make it possible for these smaller units to become economic. Although it has only been in operation a few years, it has proven to be very successful. Where a farmer has achieved the approved standard of production and income, he receives no further assistance from the scheme. However he is entitled to other grants and loans that are available to him as a bona fide farmer.

I mention this so that we will all realize this problem does not exist only in Canada. It exists also in a country such as the United Kingdom which has had a lengthy experience in agriculture. I think we possibly could learn something from their experience with respect to this problem as a result of their experiment. I think we could learn something also from the experience of the United States. A recent report by the national agricultural advisory commission sets forth a convincing and well documented case for the survival and development of the family farm. I have read this report and I could dwell upon it at length because it is a most interesting one. I am not going to take the time of the committee now. This report was made after considerable investigation by this commission into the circumstances prevailing in agriculture in every state of the union. I call attention to this one paragraph:

> The family farm remains the backbone of American agriculture because it has shown remarkable capacity to adapt to new methods and markets in a dynamic economy. The very changes that have enabled it to remain efficient, however have so transformed it in some respects that an erroneous impression sometimes exist that the family farm has disappeared.

The confidence of the commission in the endurance of the family farm is noticeable in the conclusion of this report, and I bring this to the attention of the parliamentary secretary. It is a most interesting document because circumstances in the United States are similar to ours. It is to insure the development of such an environment that this type of legislation is required. I refer to the granting of additional credit.

Mr. Pennell: What was the name of that report again?

Mr. Herridge: The report of the national agricultural advisory commission of the United States. I was going to say that here again, as in the labour field, I think we should be willing to undertake some experiments. I do not believe a constructive person should be critical if we drop one program or modify a program or change a program substantially. It is the only way sound policies are developed. I am thinking of studies in the field of legislation that covers agriculture production in Canada, particularly relating to the family farm, the maintenance farm, the part time farmer and the family company farm. There is plenty of opportunity to consider these various aspects and to experiment in certain fields in Canada.

Circumstances in the maritimes are different from those in Quebec and Ontario. Conditions on the prairies are very different from those that exist in British Columbia. It is for this reason I say that a complete, satisfactory long term program that meets all the needs of agriculture in the years ahead cannot devised overnight. It is a matter of experimentation and proving things as you go along.

However, it is to ensure the development of such an environment that this type of education is required. This is one aspect of agricultural legislation that is fundamental. To adequately understand the problems facing those on the family farm, we need, in my opinion, an extension of research and educational services for our farmers. I am not belittling the services that are provided at the present time. We need a strengthening of the role of farmer controlled co-operatives, as well as stronger support from governments both federal and provincial. We need a recognition of the special credit needs of agriculture.

Before concluding I want to bring to the attention of the committee two other matters which I feel should receive consideration while we are discussing the matter of farm credit. We need extended opportunities for the training of younger farmers, young men who are looking forward to acquiring land as a result of borrowing from the Farm Credit Corporation or as a result of government guaranteed credit from other sources. We need some new arrangements to assist in building new farm homes. Here is one field where enough has not been done, by any means. As a matter of fact, my reading of reports and inquiries of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation lead me to believe they have not done very much in this field. It appears to me that consideration should be given to this particular problem. I refer to the building of satisfactory farm homes on farm properties. Possibly there should be some common policy and approach devised as the result of consultation between the officials of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Farm Credit Corporation, the Veterans Land Act administration and those who administer this and similar legislation. This is a problem which has not been met satisfactorily to date and I urge that consideration be given to the question of credit for the building of farm homes, as distinct from the purchase of equipment and machinery and the development of farms themselves.

Some way must be devised of providing security for the loan on the farmhouse without mortgaging the whole farm itself; but that is a problem that can be solved if there is a common approach between these various lending agencies. With these few remarks I look forward to seeing the exact terms of the bill and I may have a few questions to ask at that stage.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, my first words in speaking to this resolution must be to commend the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance for his very comprehensive explanation of the proposed amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. This act, with the amendments that have been made to it over the years, is one of the most useful and effective pieces of legislation we have dealing with agriculture. From personal experience in my own constituency and in many other parts of Canada I know that its provisions have been used extensively, and in its application there has been a disposition on the part of the bankers, who for the most part administer the act, to be very co-operative in recognizing the needs of farmers when they make application for credit. Certainly the act has met with a high level of acceptance by farmers from one end of the country to the other.

It is also worth mentioning that many other people besides farmers have benefited from this act. I am thinking particularly of farm equipment dealers who have had a large and continuing source of credit available to continue in the promotion of their business. It may be argued that some of the instalment payment arrangements set up by farm machinery companies and various types of acceptance companies have also performed good service, but in my opinion no source of funds for the purchase of new equipment has been as easily attainable and as useful as this act.

I was interested to hear the parliamentary secretary state that from the inception of this act in 1945 until now losses incurred were at the very low rate of one tenth of 1 per cent. This brings to mind a speech made by the Minister of Agriculture to a gathering of farmers at the C.N.E. in Toronto, when he said we have been a little too reluctant in extending farm credit because the record shows the losses are very small, in fact that they are substantially below most other kinds of credit extension.

I do not wish at this time to debate in general terms the value of farm credit for the purpose of modernizing and keeping farm units efficient, but one very interesting matter was recently mentioned by the Minister of Agriculture, a matter that I think is worth mentioning, again, namely recognizing the farmers of Canada for what they are, the producers of food and groceries, rather than as some entity unto themselves that continually comes to the government for assistance.

If my memory serves me correctly only about 21 to 25 cents out of each dollar Canadians earn are used for the purchase of food. I believe this is the lowest figure of any country in the world, and the purchasing of food has to be the paramount consideration when we think of our standard of living and the well-being of the whole nation. If the figure is as low as this then most of the credit has to be given to the efficiency of our farmers in producing the food requirements of our nation, and when one thinks in those terms he must realize it is essential that our farm units be kept efficient and in a healthy state.

The performance record of Canadian farmers has been such that all our other citizens ought to be grateful and satisfied that, whatever legislation has been passed by parliament for the benefit of farmers, the money it provided has been well invested.

We are being asked to approve amendments to the act to increase the maximum amount of loans from $7,500 to $15,000, available to individual farmers for the purchase of equipment and other things they are allowed to purchase under the provisions of this act. In this connection we have to recognize that there has been a certain amount of automation in the agricultural industry, as was mentioned a few moments ago by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.). This automation has increased the efficiency of our farmers in terms of the cost of production. It has been made necessary because there has been a reluctance on the part of the labouring classes to take up farm labour as a vocation.

There are a number of reasons for this. One reason has to do with the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act and other things; but nevertheless this automation has certainly taken place during the past few years. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that automation has increased the cost of investment in an efficient farm. Therefore increasing the amount now from $7,500 to $15,000 is recognizing two things; the first of which is that the cost of equipment and machinery has risen substantially since 1959. But in addition to that I think it is also a recognition of the fact that even in 1959, when the increase was made, while it was a step in the right direction it did not meet the requirements of of the time.

The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance mentioned that about 75 per cent of all the money that has been lent under the Farm Improvement Loans Act over the years it has been in operation has been used for the purpose of purchasing either machinery or equipment. In the resolution that has been placed before us this afternoon we are not asked to deal with other amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act; we are simply asked to increase the limits in regard to borrowing. I think the Department of Finance and the Department of Agriculture ought to take under consideration some other amendments that would perhaps broaden the purposes for which this kind of loan may be used, because with regard to modernizing a farm there are such things that do not necessarily fall into the category of either machinery or equipment. In my constituency for example there are such things as land levelling. This is a very important asset to a farm. I know that money for this purpose can be borrowed from the Farm Credit Corporation under long term arrangements, provided you qualify for a farm improvement loan in the first place. I only mention this as an example, Mr. Chairman. There are other things, such as the purchase of fertilizer, better qualities of seed, and so on. Some of these things, at the discretion in many cases of the banker, can be purchased with a farm improvement loan; but usually in a case where the borrower is unable to provide some kind of security in land, the banker requires only security in the piece of equipment that is being purchased with the proceeds of the loan being applied for. Of course this is impossible with respect to fertilizer, seed, and some other things. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, because of the mechanics of the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the very high level of success it has had over the years, I think there should be some broadening of the provisions of that act so that some of these other things, which do in fact make for increased productivity, can in fact be purchased with a farm improvement loan.

Before the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance comes back and tells me that this is already provided in the act, I would ask him to look at the practical application of the act. He should do this before he makes a blanket statement that this is already provided for. I know it is certainly provided for in the case of those farmers who come along and have what is considered a high credit rating; in other words, if they have a large investment or large equity in the land, that is not committed for some other purpose, then of course money will be granted for the purchase of seed, fertilizer, perhaps even some livestock, and so on. However, Mr. Chairman, this is not what I am talking about. Let us take the case of renters, or other farmers whose credit rating is not quite so high. When the banker can take full security in the piece of equipment that has a serial number on it and is not going to deteriorate very rapidly, there is no difficulty in granting that farmer a loan because there is a reasonably new—and in most cases, brand new—piece of equipment in which the banker can take security. But as I have said, in the case of some of the renters and people in that category, who could make very good use of a loan for some of these other things I have mentioned, they are not granted loans in spite of the fact that there may now be provision in the act for such loans.

Therefore I believe there should be some broadening of the provisions of this act because it has been so successful. If I may repeat myself, Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary said their losses are only one tenth of one per cent, and perhaps this is an indication that some relaxation is in order.

It is interesting to read some of the submissions that have been made to the Prime Minister. On February 26 this year a submission was made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. There was also the address of the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to their 28th annual meeting in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, earlier this year. On page four of the document that I have before me, which was printed by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, they say, under the heading "Views on Farm Credit":

> I would like to suggest that we should consider establishing means of thinking the problem through by study and analysis and arriving at new and sound proposals. There are a number of areas in which farm credit needs are not now being adequately met:
> 1. Loan limits are probably inadequate under present conditions.
> 2. Adequate arrangements for meeting the problem of transfer of farms on the retirement, or death, of the present owners.

Then the president of the federation goes on to give No. 3:

> Operating, or intermediate credit needs, are not being adequately met by the farm improvement loan program, or the present banking system.

Then No. 4 is the matter of emergency or disaster credit. That was in the speech of the president of the federation given to the 28th annual meeting. In their submission to the Prime Minister and members of the cabinet on February 26, they said this:

> 32. Second, the loan limit of the Farm Credit Corporation should be raised to $50,000. This would be more realistically in line with present costs of financing economic farm units.

Item No. 33 that they presented at that meeting was as follows:

> 33. Third, the loan limit on farm machinery under the Farm Improvement Loans Act should be raised to $10,000—again, a more realistic level in light of present day costs for machinery and equipment.

If you look at some of the submissions and the discussions preceding those submissions so far as farm credit is concerned, it becomes apparent that by passing the amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the amendments we passed in respect of the Farm Credit Corporation several weeks ago, we have not only met but have considerably surpassed the requests that were being made by this association of farmers' organizations. I do not mean to be facetious because this is a serious subject, but it seems to me that we have now gone beyond even the fondest dreams of spokesmen for farmers' organizations, so far as limits are concerned. This amendment puts the maximum $5,000 beyond that asked for, and also $5,000 in aggregate, I think it is fair to say, beyond that asked for under the Farm Credit Act. I believe the maximum limits which have been placed on these various forms of farm credit available from and guaranteed by the government are now adequate; at least they are adequate for the time being. They have been raised to a point where they have taken into account both the need for farmers to become efficient in order to face the tremendous competition they have to face in the world today, and also the increased cost of the farm machinery that is sold today. So in the immediate future when we talk of farm credit I think we should turn our attention to other things with respect to the administration of farm credit. I strongly urge on the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance—although this may not be completely within the sphere of his minister's department—the suggestion that there is some room for improvement in the application of these loans apart from simply increasing the maximum limits from time to time.

I do not wish to repeat what I said about making some amendments to the farm improvement loans legislation to provide financing of other things than farm machinery, but I think this question is a valid one and should be considered. We have no hesitation in giving our wholehearted support to the amendment proposed in the resolution before us, and during the passage of this bill through committee stage I hope the parliamentary secretary will be able at least to assure the committee that he and the Department of Agriculture are giving favourable consideration to relaxing some of the regulations which have hitherto prevented farmers with a low credit rating from making use of this type of loan to increase the productivity of their farms.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to say a few words about the resolution now under consideration. I had prepared some questions I wanted to put to the Minister of Finance; I will do that later when he comes back to the house.

In the meantime, I will just make a few general remarks, first to congratulate the government for its decision to increase farm improvement loans from $7,500 to $15,000.

At the present time, our agriculture certainly needs our government's attention.

First, as stated by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson)—and I agree with him on several points he mentioned—it is a fact that agriculture is almost entirely centred on foodstuffs. Right now the figure is 21 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, agriculture has always been the basis of our economy. Whether we like it or not it is essential to life, and that is why I feel that in the normal course of things it must always be considered with attention in order to prevent it from drifting.

In a country like Canada, which is known as one of the most fertile countries, not only the provincial governments, but the federal government as well must seek to maintain farm production as high as possible.

Farm loans are a good thing, and this increase from $7,500 to $15,000 will enable family units to expand and escape a kind of socialization—I should rather use the word centralization—by companies which at a certain time would probably establish a monopoly under their exclusive control.

Our farm families have certainly showed their good will in the past. Today, some very well equipped farms produce much more than they could just a few years ago. Perhaps it is due to automation, but certainly to the good will and courage of Canadian farmers at large.

Tremendous courage was needed to clear that land for cultivation, land which is not too old as far as agriculture is concerned but which was practically turned into a farm kingdom.

Now, it is up to the government to legislate in such a way as to permit those farmers to live decently, particularly if one considers that the farmer is the most important of our citizens since he is producing food for the nation.

Today we want to help the family farm and that is why I am in favour of the proposed increase in farm improvement loans. It will permit families settled on Canadian farms to expand and improve their farm techniques in order to increase and improve their production in order to meet the needs of the Canadian people generally.

Now, this is good for agriculture in general or the rural economy itself.

As I said a moment ago, it is the very basis of the national economy, in this country as in other countries. Without agriculture, I think that it would be extremely difficult to survive.

Now, it is not sufficient to grant loans. I think that we should take our bearings and look in the direction of production and loans granted to farmers. It is obvious that if the farmer cannot obtain enough for his products, he will continue to need larger loans. And the fact that he is borrowing is not necessarily a good thing. If he applies for a loan, it is because his support price or the price he gets for his products is not high enough. The loan is therefore a bad thing, because it merely delays his bankruptcy.

In the present case, certain areas could even be designated where a loan would actually hinder the farmer's development. In the circumstances, it is up to us to look into the situation, to seek advice and to act accordingly, so as to maintain the price of his products high enough to enable the farmer to live on the income of his farm.

All farmers are taking jobs today, and I am not only speaking about the province of Quebec, but also of western farm lands—where the best farms in the country are to be found. There are people who work in a locality and, at a given time, they leave to go to work in Regina; others have to go to work in Edmonton, because their farm is not too remote from the city, in order to make both ends meet at the end of the year.

This happens in the west, and it also happens in the province of Quebec. Nowadays, it is no longer the farm that supports the farmer; in many cases it is rather the farmer who has to support the farm. It is not at all the same thing. That is why it is necessary that an extensive study be made in connection with the sale and cost prices of agricultural products. It is useless to make loans easier for farmers if the prices quoted are not high enough. As I said a moment ago, the only result is to postpone bankruptcy. But at the present time, regardless of the views other members might put forward, I am convinced that the prices the farmers get in some agricultural areas are altogether ridiculous and that it is unthinkable to try to maintain a farm economy with such prices.

Here is an example I should like to give to the house to show what I mean. I would ask the government to consider such cases when they occur, in all farm production areas. I want to refer here to maple products, with which I am familiar because they are produced on a large scale in my own constituency.

Last year the cost of producing a pound of grade one, class A, maple sugar was 27 cents. The maple syrup then went to wholesalers or co-operatives to be placed on the market, etc. I should like to mention that when the organizers of last year's Plessisville maple sugar festival, seeing that they could not obtain enough maple syrup from the farmers because they were sold out, went back to the co-operative, the next day, after the quality test of the maple syrup had been taken, for another supply of maple sugar. They asked for second grade sugar since it makes a better and less crystallizing toffee; they paid 42 cents per pound for second grade sugar while the day before, first grade was selling for 27 cents per pound.

As you can see the farmer does not benefit from the disposal of those commodities. With regard to the price at farm level—though it has been said that maple sugar is expensive, it does cost something, there is the work of the farmer who produces it, the depreciation of his equipment used in the manufacture of maple sugar—we are advised not to put any cattle in the sugar bush, because it disturbs sugar production. Therefore, to what use can the sugar bush be put at times? Land taxes have to be paid, as well as the help, horses have to be obtained on rental and, today, tractors have to be used instead of horses because those that are used in the sugar bush are now very very rare indeed.

There are certain burdens which must be carried by the farmer before he starts making any sort of profit. It is a problem which has to be considered.

The same thing is true in other sectors of farm production. The price to the farmer has to be studied. Western farmers joined together to establish a basic price for their wheat production, according to the various categories of wheat and the same procedure should be followed in other fields.

People seem to worry about surplus production. Let us take corn production for instance. According to a report given to the committee on agriculture, we imported last year almost $35 million worth of corn from the United States. Maybe we could produce a little more corn in our country, but would we be in a position to sell it? Could the farmer recover his outlay and make a profit? That is the core of the problem and a big question mark.

Other farmers undertake the raising of cattle, hogs and poultry. There also, there is a question mark. The farmer wonders whether he will be able at the end of the year to sell his production at a profit, at cost or at a loss?

Nowadays, Mr. Chairman, very often the farmer incurs a loss. Moreover, if the farmer were counting his labour, there would be times when he would reconsider his position and perhaps come to the conclusion that he should sell his farm.

Such a loan will perhaps solve his problem temporarily. Well and good, but will it solve it permanently? This is something to wonder about. It will certainly enable the farmer to enlarge his farm, but in what way? Will that lead him to a worse bankruptcy or will it help him to survive?

I would ask the minister to consider this very carefully, then to talk it over with the provincial ministers of agriculture, to refrain from depriving one part of the country for the benefit of another and to endeavour to find a farm policy that would satisfy every section of the country at the same time. Once such a policy has been established, we might have a more stable, more satisfied and a happier farming class.

But at the present, there are far too many of our farmers who must leave their farms to work in the city in an attempt to survive, and who have to use the money earned in the city to make up the deficits they have incurred on their farms.

Granted, Mr. Chairman, there is land for everybody in Canada. Our farm lands are not so small, for the great majority of farmers own at least a hundred acres. I think such a loan will enable them to break more ground, but it will not solve the whole problem.

You certainly will not solve the farmer's problem by trying to consolidate all his debts, because ten years later he will be right back where he started. All you have to do is look at the situation today and compare it with what it was ten years ago. The difference between the two is that farm lands—I am speaking of eastern Canada—were debt free 15 or 20 years ago. Those were economic farms then, whereas today, under the same administration, the same management, they are burdened with debts and farm loans. It is obvious that there is something wrong somewhere and that improvements, changes are indispensable.

I am urging the government to consider such a possibility, and to stop worrying about production surpluses. There are so many people who are starving in this world that the farmers will only be pleased to sell their products to them. Is it not better to sell a little at a price lower than the current one, a certain percentage of production than not to sell at all or to sell at a loss? This is where the government must play their part, through a compensation discount granted to the farmers who would sell their products on outside markets at reduced prices. Then, the farmers would be able to buy the necessary farming machinery which is heavily burdened with taxes and almost beyond their reach.

In considering the western situation, I see that in 1944, a farmer could buy a combine for $2,400 or $2,700, while today he must pay from $12,000 to $13,000, even though it must be admitted that this piece of equipment has been improved. Although it can cut a 16-foot swath, the various improvements made do not compensate for the difference in price. To pay $13,000 for equipment you use about only three weeks during the year, while the next year, the value of the equipment has gone down to $9,000, is quite expensive because the farmer incurs a $3,000 depreciation. Western farmers must make tremendous profits to meet such expenses.

For a tractor, it is exactly the same thing. Fifteen years ago a tractor sold for $3,500, whereas today the cost is $8,000, $9,000 and $10,000.

The price of wheat has not increased as much as that, the soil produces the same thing and young people in western Canada, like those in eastern Canada, to start with, have to get farm machinery at a cost of $20,000 or $25,000, and they have to pay about as much for the land itself. This means that before they even start, they have to invest $50,000. How many members in this house could do that, Mr. Chairman?

It is certainly not through loans that we shall be able to guarantee sufficient income to cover these expenses. The only means to ensure a profitable income on that production is to establish a guaranteed price. The farmer who has to invest $25,000 or $50,000 will then be sure that his investment will be profitable. At the present time, the farmers can hardly pay interest charges.

Mr. Chairman, it is to this point I wish to draw the attention of the government. I do not object to the bill. On the contrary, I approve it. However, I wish the government would broaden its perspective so as to consider the whole farming situation in the best interest of the country and see to it that the farm production is sold at a reasonable price, which would enable the farmer to live on his own land instead of working on some other land or overcrowding the labour market.

I think it might be said that in the field of agriculture there is an improvement. There are other projects. In that field, there is ARDA, but it has become so complicated that I wonder whether its authors understand it nowadays. After the authorities concerned have examined the question, they could perhaps confirm that this project is somewhat in accordance with our suggestions, because we have long been advocating support prices and we will continue to do so.

We commend the government for the initiative it has taken in introducing this resolution, but we would ask it to consider this matter. However, the government must broaden its horizons and maintain its assistance to farmers, because they are greatly in need of help. A department of agriculture should be set up for eastern Canada and another department should be entrusted with western agriculture, because the problems are entirely different in the two parts of the country; the needs and crops are not the same in both areas.

Until we are given more details in that connection, I reserve the right to direct some questions to the minister in due time.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

[Mr. Langlois.]

Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Gordon) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-119, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRANSPORT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING BRANCH LINES, GRAIN FREIGHT RATES, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize implementation of certain recommendations of the royal commission on transportation with respect to the rationalization of branch lines of railways and passenger train services and the fixing of freight rates under and consistent with a national transportation policy suited to modern transportation conditions; to establish a branch line rationalization authority and a branch line rationalization fund to be continued for 15 years to assist in the establishment of an orderly program for the improvement of the efficiency of railway branch lines; to provide authority for public funds to be used where assistance of a type similar to that provided by the branch line rationalization fund may be required after such 15 year period; to provide for payments out of the consolidated revenue fund on a reducing scale for a period of five years commencing with 1964 to compensate railways under the jurisdiction of parliament for passenger train deficits incurred in Canada during such period; to authorize payments to maintain the prevailing level of freight rates on western grain moving by rail to export positions; to permit the lapsing of the subsidy (known as the "bridge" subsidy) now provided for the maintenance of the trackage of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company between Sudbury and Fort William and the corresponding trackage of the Canadian National Railway Company between Capreol and Fort William and between Cochrane and Armstrong; to authorize agreements relating to the carriage by rail of Her Majesty's mail, and members of the Canadian forces and police travelling on Her Majesty's service and to provide further for other matters consequential upon or related or incidental to any of the foregoing.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the resolution carries, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should make a few brief observations. It has been suggested to me from the other side of the house, perhaps as a query, that there might be some disposition to treat this resolution as the last one was treated, and have one member of each group say something at the resolution stage. We could then see the bill and have the main debate on the bill itself when we would know with more certainty what we were talking about. In case there should be any disposition in that direction I intend to make the kind of speech that I think is appropriate to the resolution and not attempt in any way to deal with the provisions of the bill itself except in the most general terms.

The resolution suggests that it is expedient to introduce a piece of legislation of a character that I was almost going to say was revolutionary. It certainly involves a number of fundamental changes in our concept of railways in Canada. I sometimes think that, over the years, railways in Canada have caused almost as much emotion and certainly as much controversy as flags and almost as much as languages. It is not surprising that this should be so because throughout the whole of our history since confederation, in fact even from the time of the union of 1840, railways have been the bony structure of the body politic in Canada. Perhaps this was truer in our generation of western Canada than of eastern Canada—I speak as one in his sixtieth year—but in western Canada the train whistle was really in many ways the call of civilization. It was the signal of the one thing that really connected each isolated community, some of them very much so indeed, with the rest of the country and the rest of the world. I think that the whistle of the old steam locomotive, which has gone into history, went into history just about the time that the railway ceased to be a quasi monopoly in transportation. I think there are still a good many of us who have got the habit of thinking that the railways are the only form of transportation which really matters in Canada. This is no longer true. For a long time, in many parts of the world and in many parts of Canada, the railway was the only effective means of transportation of persons or goods. It was a quasi monopoly, if not an actual monopoly, depending on where you happened to be.

At the outset the railways received from this parliament relatively rigid regulation. Even so, regulation was relaxed and relaxed considerably, in those parts of the country where alternative forms of transport were really important. This has always been true in areas where water transportation on our unique waterways competed with the railways. I think many of us who did not have the good fortune to live in areas where there was that kind of competition, which kept rates down, were rather envious of the advantages of those who did. With the development of hard surfaced heavy duty roads, with the trans-Canada highway which, although it is far from complete, does now give us an all Canadian road from one coast to the other, with the remarkable development of the air lines not only in carrying passengers but also in carrying freight, it is no longer true that the railways have a monopoly in most parts of this country for most kinds of traffic.

It is true that in certain remote areas the railway is the only effective means of transport. It is true also for certain kinds of goods. I suppose in this respect the most important single commodity is wheat. The railway in many parts of the country is still the principal carrier of wheat, the only other effective means of carriage being by water, where that is available.

It has been apparent I think for a number of years that a great leap forward was needed in our thinking about rail transportation and about the relationship of parliament and government to rail transportation. This leap forward would recognize the fact that the railways no longer, except in those rather limited areas to which I have referred, have a monopoly. There is competition which in many respects is very effective, and in some respects so effective that the railways are losing the traffic almost completely. Under these conditions it is surely better to allow the forces of competition to provide the regulation than to seek to provide it, generally somewhat out of date, by law.

Some years ago under the previous administration a royal commission was set up. This of course has been the pattern over the years, that at each important stage of development in our railways, we have used this rather useful device for having a hard look at the railways taken by really competent people. This most recent commission was not under one chairmanship. Unfortunately, for reasons of health, the chairman was not able to continue but found a very worthy successor in Mr. MacPherson who, although our views might differ politically, I think the house would be united in agreeing is a man of utmost integrity, great competence and vast experience in this field. This commission had a number of other able members. They provided us more than two years ago with a report which certainly deserves our respect. This does not mean, of course, we should blindly accept every recommendation that was made by fallible men who could make errors in judgment. But I am bound to say that when the present government was faced with the problem of deciding what if anything should be done about this problem—and it certainly called for some drastic action —the recommendations in the main have commended themselves to the government, and in the main we are proposing to ask parliament to translate those recommendations into legislation, if the house is willing to accept this resolution and to permit the government to bring forward a bill.

Now I may say that despite what some hon. gentlemen opposite said in the exuberance of debate in recent weeks, the bill has been ready for months, and I say that because I want to say something about the date July 1, 1964, which is in the bill. I do not propose to ask to have the bill reprinted on that account. I think it would be better to have it introduced, better to see what progress we make and, if it is desirable to make the effective date a different date, the government would reserve the right to substitute another date for it, without being accused of retreating or advancing or anything else, but just of being sensible.

Mr. Clancy: You are just neutral about it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman suggests that we are just neutral, but we are just being sensible about this matter, and if we can save the taxpayers a little money in the process then it is a good thing to do. I thought I ought to mention this one point because it seemed to me, if later this day we do get consent to introduce the bill, there should be an explanation on the record with regard to this date.

Broadly speaking, what the bill would propose to do is to relieve the railways of the burden of the services which the royal commission decided were uneconomic. By uneconomic I mean services that were being provided to the public at a greater cost than the railway was recovering from the direct payment for those services. It is in that narrow sense of the word uneconomic that I use the term. It does not necessarily mean any of these services are uneconomic in the sense of being unnecessary to the whole economy. Those that are unnecessary to the economy we would hope would be dispensed with altogether; but those services which, for economic or social reasons, do need to be carried on, but for which the railways do not receive, in direct return adequate financial support, it is felt should not be charged to the general revenues of the railways but that these uneconomic charges should be made and clearly defined for what they are, so that we will know in this parliament, so that the public will know as nearly as we can possibly, by good accounting segregate these matters—what is costing what, what is being received for what, and how the railways are doing.

The legislation will also provide for a radically new method of freight rate regulation which will involve, in fact, a great deal less regulation than we have been accustomed to in the past, and which is in general very much along the lines recommended in the report.

There are a number of recommendations in the report which do not directly affect these two basic matters, recommendations with respect to the Maritime Freight Rates Act, with respect to road transport and some other matters that are of great importance in themselves, but that it was not felt we should attempt to include within the four corners of this legislation which we now wish to bring forward, and some of which we feel still need more study before the government will be prepared to decide to recommend legislation.

The philosophical basis, if one wants to put it that way, of the legislation is that the railways now, in the main in most spheres, being subject to competition from other forms of transport should be free to compete for business with other forms of transport, but with due regard to the national interest. In this context I should like to say a word about the fear that has been expressed by those engaged in other forms of transport, that in some way or other, the government is proposing massive subsidies to the railways to enable them to undercut their competitors. There is no such thought and no such intention in the legislation.

It is true that in the past several years parliament has seen fit to vote certain sums of money which are paid to the railways because of their financial situation, and it is true that the government will be asking—and parliament has already been told this—to have these payments made for the calendar year 1964, and that we have undertaken to look at the effect of the recent increases in wages, six months after those increases were granted, to see what if any additional, temporary, transitional assistance the railways may require.

But the whole purpose of this approach to the railway problem, the whole purpose of the legislation we have in mind is to get away from any large, undifferentiated lump sum payment to the railways, to make payments only for specific services that are specifically defined, and to leave the railways free otherwise to compete, but to compete with their own resources, the resources that are available to them, on the same basis as other forms of transport. I thought it worth while making this point because there is a great deal of misunderstanding and apprehension occasioned by that misunderstanding about this point.

I may add, moreover, that, having regard to the financial situation of the treasury and to what I believe myself to be good sound principle, it is the desire of the government, wherever this is possible, wherever it is reasonable, wherever there are not important national considerations calling for different action, that users, and not the taxpayers, should pay for the services that are provided in the field of transportation. There are of course exceptions that will have to be made, as they have always had to be made to this principle, with respect to the railways, and which sometimes have been made with respect to other forms of transport.

We must remember that in the Canadian context, perhaps more than in that of most countries, good transport and efficient transport is essential to keep the country a country, to keep it united, and that the national interest must at all times be paramount. We consider, as every government has considered —at least for a generation—that one of the national interests of this country is to maintain the tremendous grain export business that has been one of the main sources of income of the Canadian people in the whole of the twentieth century. For that reason there is no thought and no intention of disturbing the Crowsnest pass rates, and those other rates which are an extension of the Crowsnest pass rates on grain.

It is also very well known that, notwithstanding the tremendous changes that have taken place in railway transportation on the prairies, this applies more to the prairies than to any other part of Canada, although there are other areas where it has some application —where railway branch lines, in many cases, are getting much less traffic than will pay for the cost of operation of those lines—that there are many of those lines which are essential now and will be essential for a considerable number of years for transportation, and particularly for the transport of grain. And as hon. members know I have taken the view, which was taken also by my predecessor, and which has been taken by this government and which I am sure would have been taken by the previous government, that in this matter the public interest must be placed ahead of balance sheets.

So far as these branch lines are concerned, there are undoubtedly some of them where the traffic is so light that their essentiality has really disappeared and the branch lines themselves could probably be dispensed with fairly soon. There are others which are going to be needed for a great many years ahead, so far ahead as it is reasonably safe to legislate in a matter of this kind, and therefore it is proposed to recommend that a branch line rationalization authority be established and that a fund be given to this authority to keep these lines in being, without making the losses on them a charge on the general revenues of the railways, but having them paid for directly as a national service, so that the railways will not be able to blame any failure to earn a living by themselves on these branch lines.

We have all of us witnessed, no matter what part of Canada we have come from, the gradual shrinking—though there has been perhaps under the red, white and blue a revival of late, but it is only a small revival compared with the shrinking that has taken place—of passenger traffic and passenger services on the railways.

It is proposed to accept the recommendation of the royal commission that payments be made to the railways to maintain certain of these passenger services on a sliding or diminishing scale in order to give the railways an opportunity to test which service can really be made to justify itself and which cannot, without sudden shocks in the transportation field.

I think these are the principal features of the legislation that is proposed. As I said at the outset, Mr. Chairman, I would hope that we would not feel it necessary to try to debate the bill before we see it. If we could confine ourselves to generalities and possibly to a few questions about any points that I may have left obscure at this resolution stage, we could have a much more intelligent and informed debate when we have the bill in front of us and know precisely what it is the government is proposing.

With respect to what the government will be proposing, I may say that of course we are taking our responsibility as a government for the proposals in general; but it is the intention of the government to have this bill sent after second reading, provided the house sees fit to give it second reading, to the railway committee, because it is of such vast importance to everyone in the country. We think it would be quite unreasonable to take any other course. We would expect that the committee would hear representations from all seriously interested bodies. I may say that as the minister primarily responsible for this legislation, it would be my view that I should listen most carefully to all representations and bring to the attention of my colleagues any serious suggestions for amendment of the legislation that in the light of those representations might seem to be more in the public interest than what is being recommended. No one can be all wise about as difficult and complex a subject as this, and certainly the government does not pretend to be. I do not think the royal commission did, either. If through our collective wisdom in the committee or in the house we can provide more effectively for the future of the railways, we will seek to do so in the course of this legislation.

I think I should just say, in conclusion, that notwithstanding the tremendous development of road transportation, of transportation by air and other forms of transport, particularly the tremendous increase in the volume of inland water transport which has taken place since the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway, the railways still do represent a very important element in the whole Canadian economy. It is essential that we have efficient railway service in this country, not only to transport goods from one part of the country to another but, in a country which still depends for about one fifth of its income on sales outside the country, it is of the utmost importance that our railways should be both efficient and competitive, not only with other forms of transport in Canada but with transport elsewhere in the world, so that we may continue to derive from the rest of the world that one fifth, that 20 cents of every dollar, of the income of the average Canadian that comes from sales abroad.

It is our view that it is of great importance that we should give the railways an opportunity to operate as efficiently and as economically as possible and avoid adding unduly to fixed charges that are imposed upon the taxpayers and that inevitably have to be paid for and are therefore a minus factor in the economy. At the same time we must remember that the railways are large employers of labour; that the interests of the employees of the railways, our fellow citizens, must not be overlooked; and that, though change is essential in this field if the railways are to compete and receive a reasonable share of the traffic which will enable them to maintain their services out of their revenues, we must at the same time see that we do not, because of changes for which they have no responsibility whatsoever, visit hardships that are not reasonable and bearable upon a large section of the Canadian population. I think, sir, on that note I should conclude what I have to say at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether he could give some indication, or perhaps even assurance, that after the bill is referred to the committee there will be sufficient time—I am thinking in terms of at least six weeks; perhaps two months—allowed before witnesses are called, so that the people concerned, and primarily the three prairie provincial governments, will have time to prepare their case.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do think any reasonable suggestion of that kind would be acceded to very readily by the government. I would rather hope that it might be possible to go on quite soon, after the first reading, with the debate on second reading of the bill. Suggestions have been made that even the second reading should be delayed for a long period. I do not think that would really serve any particularly useful purpose; I believe it would be desirable to have the second reading of the bill and then have it before the committee. But I do not think we should, in committee, act in such a way as to make it difficult for any organizations or individuals who have serious contributions to make, to make them in the way they want to make them. I would certainly be very happy indeed to consider any reasonable requests for delays in these matters; but I think there should be an interval, perhaps after second reading, before the committee even undertakes its task—unless perchance there are a number of organizations that are ready to proceed, because I think these proceedings will take a long time. If a number of organizations are ready to proceed, perhaps a start could be made and then there could be an interval, if it was required by any of those seriously interested. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, if I may make a very bad pun, the government has no thought of trying to railroad this legislation at any stage.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I think there must be a realization in the minds of all of us that the introduction of this bill, into the house is a very historic occasion. Railway legislation and the problems that go along with railway construction and management in Canada are far older than the federal structure itself.

The very fact that when we built this House of Commons the largest single room in it was the railway committee room is an indication that the men who sat in their places here before us spent the greater part of their time dealing with railway problems. Now we have an introductory statement by the minister which indicates that the railways, which were once the chosen instrument of government to achieve national development, are now going to be asked to go into the position of being just another transportation company with an equal chance to grab their share of the transportation market, and with an equal chance of removing the load of carrying national responsibility which this parliament of Canada placed upon the railways.

My remarks today on the resolution stage will deal with the principle of the resolution, namely should this parliament consider first reading of a bill to expend the moneys indicated in the words of the ministers, to make this adjustment of a railways system by taking it out of the role of being the chosen instrument of the national government back into the field of free enterprise? The grants which the minister talked about are, in effect, adjustment grants to help the adjustment become a little smoother than it would be if we simply arbitrarily cut off all help.

I should like at this time, Mr. Chairman, to highlight, if I may use that word, the real significance of this legislation as indicated to us by the minister. To see this highlight one has only to go to areas of Canada where competition did not bring down freight rates. Those areas are the prairies, the maritimes and certain northern areas of all our provinces where there is no other reasonable type of competition. As a result, as costs of railway management rose, freight rate increases were applied across the board. But because freight rates in areas where there was competition—namely, in the central provinces—could not be raised, the increase was loaded on to the prairies, the maritimes and the northern railway sections.

This is not a new problem, Mr. Chairman. Using round figures, and taking a date shortly after the war, these increases in freight rates, applicable only to certain areas of our country and to certain classifications of goods carried by the railways in those areas, rose approximately 150 per cent. If in this period of a little over a decade there was a 150 per cent increase in the cost of moving goods into a particular area and the cost of moving much of the goods out of that area, it would be a high cost factor loaded on to the production end. In no place in Canada was this more severe than in the maritimes and in the prairies. All of the goods imported from central Canada were at high cost. This cost was accelerated at a rate which no other goods had to meet. So the railways situation, or the problem, as it is called, has always been of prime interest to the people on the prairies. The same type of argument would apply to the maritimes, and spokesmen for that area will no doubt remind us of it. Also a forgotten group were those in the areas in the northern parts of Quebec and Ontario, who had the same freight rate increases applied to them but apparently over the years of our history had no spokesmen in this house to speak for them.

One of the greatest of the spokesmen for the areas which were being discriminated against was M. A. MacPherson, senior. He became one of the members of the royal commission on transportation in 1959, and eventually its chairman. I do not think I am wrong in saying that any province in western Canada, whether it was governed by a Social Credit government, a C.C.F. government, a Liberal government or a Conservative government, had any doubt that M. A. MacPherson was looked upon as the man who, probably better than anyone, expressed the viewpoint of western Canada on these discriminatory rates.

I mention this highlight to you, Mr. Chairman, because the significance of this royal commission report with which we are now dealing is that for the first time we see some answer to the continually spiralling cost of freight rates. As I understand that the recommendations, according to the words of the minister, will be included in the legislation at long last, those of us in the areas of Canada which have been discriminated against know that, under the radical system of freight rate adjustments, if the increases apply at any place they apply all across Canada. They are based on certain formulas.

I said earlier that this was not a new matter. In 1951 the government set up a railways royal commission, if I remember correctly, which reported a year or so later. This royal commission grappled with these problems and the suggestion it came up with, which was accepted by the government of that day, was the bridge subsidy, whereby the federal taxpayers paid approximately $7 million a year to the two railways to bridge the gap between Winnipeg and the head of the lakes, or roughly that area, on the C.N.R. I have read the recommendations of that royal commission. I have gone further back and read the recommendations of the royal commission of the early 1930's, and in my judgment one of the great tragedies of this whole question of governments dealing with the railways is that the recommendations of the commission of the 1930's were not more seriously considered. However, as a reasonably well informed student of these matters I know that the government was aware of the fact that we were then in the throes of the depression, and that any move in those days to make the railways efficient and to let them have some reasonable chance to cope with their rising difficulties would have practically been construed as being against the interests of the many thousands of unemployed.

When you go over those recommendations, Mr. Chairman, and think what would have happened in the last 30 years if some of them had been implemented, these losses which have piled up all during the years would never have occurred and the situation we have to deal with today would not be so extreme. So I hope that all members of this committee, regardless of party, realize that the first responsibility we have to face in regard to this legislation is that for the good of Canada we will have to get the railways into some form of rational situation where they can cope, and are just another private enterprise concern in this country.

Speaking for a moment on behalf of the farmers, at least those on the prairies, I think they want more than anything else probably to be freed from the fear that the old system which was in effect in 1958 and 1959 will be continued. Every year or two they have been exposed to accelerated freight rate increases, increases which do not apply to the great bulk of areas in other parts of Canada, and to be freed from this fear is one thing above all others which they would like. Having pointed out what I think is the highlight, and never forgetting that removing this discrimination is the main objective of us all, if this legislation frees us from that fear I think it should get the support of all parties, not just the support of the government party.

However, it is up to us in the opposition to bring forward as clearly as we can some of the great concerns we have about the implementation of this legislation.

For the sake of the record, I should like to mention one or two historical facts about the way this problem has been tackled. Many members will recall that when the government of which I was a member took office it was faced almost immediately with a succession of difficulties relating to wages paid on the railroad, always under the threat of strike of some form. These negotiations were always on the basis of a strike situation, but we met these situations as well as we could. We finally set up a royal commission, and paid a temporary grant of $50 million per year in an attempt to keep the situation stable until this royal commission report could be acted upon.

The order in council establishing the royal commission was dated in May, 1959. The first volume of its report was received by the government in March of 1961. The second volume was received in December of 1961, and the third volume in July of 1962. Even before the third volume was received certain action was under way by the government to prepare itself for the production of legislation to meet at least some of the recommendations of that royal commission. The resolution was ready in the fall of 1962 and was referred to in the speech from the throne at the beginning of that session of parliament.

One of the most painful memories I have of that session, knowing the many hours that had been used in the preparation of this resolution, relates to my feeling at the time I read in the newspapers, as evidenced by the attitude here in this house, that the opposition was determined not only that no estimates would go through, but no legislation would be passed. One of the most devastating and determined efforts of the opposition to block legislation occurred in the fall of 1962, and continued at greater lengths than ever before. We had to take certain steps, and I should like to outline for the first time in this house some of the steps that were taken.

There was great uncertainty in the country at that time as to what would happen to the recommendations of the royal commission, not only on the part of many farmers, but on the part of governments which felt affected. In the fall of 1962, after a great deal of preliminary negotiation and, if I might say so, skirmishing, we finally arranged a meeting of the officers of the two railways and the grain trading companies, pool and private, in western Canada. These two factions, old enemies as they were, faced up to the fact that the day of the railroad being used as a chosen instrument, under which all the obligations that the railroad could not meet through revenue were passed on to the taxpayer, was coming to an end. They met in an attempt to find some common ground so that they could come together on an economic front. To the credit of all concerned, both on the side of the railways and on the side of the grain companies, pool, co-operative and private, an understanding was reached. I think generally speaking this understanding has been followed, although there have been times when I wondered if the understanding was being kept fully. I know there have been some complaints on the part of each side about the actions of each other, but generally speaking that understanding has been honoured.

On two or three occasions the predecessor of the present minister has stood in this house and said the present government would honour those commitments. One of those commitments was that we would introduce legislation and get it under way in the spring of 1963. The government changed in April of that year, and of course we could not honour that commitment. We in the opposition have not been too hard on the present government for not bringing this legislation forward sooner, because, while we knew it was ready, we knew that the new government would have to spend a good many months examining it in order to get the feeling of it and decide whether they wanted to bring it before the house. The resolution now on the order paper is almost identical to the one we prepared, with the exception of one clause, and I am sure the present minister is aware of that fact. I point this fact out because we have now reached that stage at which we have not been able to honour a commitment of time. I should like to point out that we did not expect this government to move too quickly because, as the minister has said, this is very complicated legislation.

Having described that meeting between the economic groups affected by the actual operation of the railways, particularly in western Canada, we called a meeting at the end of January, 1963 of the three prairie premiers and the officials here in Ottawa. I hope the minister has read the minutes of that meeting, at which we explained the general philosophy of the government in respect of solving the railway situation. We explained in general terms the devices we had developed to protect public interests, and we asked for their co-operation, because there were certain fields the board of transport commissioners could not cope with. We admitted this fact, and indicated that only by co-operation between the respective governments, namely the federal government and the governments of the three prairie provinces, could there be an answer to the difficulties.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is a well known fact that the great bulk of low density line abandonments recommended exist in the prairie provinces, and you will see why the remarks I make now deal specifically with that area, but apply equally to every section of the country where line abandonment is contemplated. At this meeting of the prairie premiers we outlined certain commitments, one being that during the period of the introduction of the bill, first and second readings, there would be delays enabling the representatives of those governments to prepare general briefs outlining their positions. Whatever information those general briefs contain, they are ready and have been ready for many months. We also indicated to the premiers that in respect of this question of rationalization, even though at that moment we did not contemplate such an agency or board as suggested by the minister, a fund was available and we would work very closely with them in this regard.

I should like to make one further suggestion at this time, and I hope I am being constructive. I think the three premiers agreed to the suggestion that we did not generally support the concept of an over-all study of the prairie area, but that we thought it should be broken down into regions. Manitoba lends itself very well to four main regions; Saskatchewan lends itself to nine or ten and Alberta to four or five. We thought this study could proceed while consideration was being given to the nationalized abandonment period recommended by the commission.

I think the government should also be aware of one further question which was kept separate during this meeting. We also agreed that when the truckers saw the legislation they would be given time to prepare a brief and either present it at the time of second reading or in committee. We made that pledge and I know the government will honour it, because they should.

Time is passing and I want to deal with the subject matter of the report. As I said earlier, the first principle of the report and its highlights, I think, is the recommendation of the commissioners that at long last there should be an end to unequal freight rate increases in Canada which have so plagued and divided our country economically over the last 30 years. Second, they recommend that the railways should be allowed to move out of passenger services where people did not travel on the railways, and in this regard they recommend the five year declining subsidy to which the minister referred. Third, they dealt with the question of light density lines. This of course will be a crucial part of the debate that will develop, in that we will be concerned about how we are going to handle this situation. The railways put forward the idea, which was accepted by the commissioners, that they should be allowed to abandon light density lines where the traffic did not pay the fixed or constant costs of the railway and the variable costs of the railway applied to such light density lines. The commissioners recommended a period of 15 years in which these adjustments could take place. They said that if the railways could demonstrate that the traffic generated on these light density lines was not sufficient to meet the constant costs and the variable costs, then in the national interest they should be a charge on the government if the government wanted the railways to continue operating these lines. The commissioners recommended a subsidy for the constant cost and also a maximum subsidy applicable to the variable costs. This is a subject I want to come back to later in the debate, because I think it will be the crux of the matter in determining whether good legislation has been introduced which will meet the demands of the present and future situations.

As the minister pointed out, there is no intention to break the Crowsnest pass agreement. I know it is very difficult for people who do not come from the prairies to understand the significance of the Crowsnest pass agreement to westerners. To us this is the charter on which we base our thinking. This is the basis on which hundreds of thousands of people moved into the area, established homes and cultivated and brought into production an area of land probably equal to the greatest agricultural areas in the world. I am thinking of the Ukraine and some of the great plains of India.

I am not going to go into legalistic interpretations with respect to the Crowsnest pass agreement. The agreement was made and the government of the day picked the railways as the chosen instrument to open up this area. To encourage the railways to go in there we gave them certain land grants and cash grants and finally we got the Crowsnest pass agreement with respect to one area. However, I intend to deal with it as it affects the whole prairie area, because that is the way it should be dealt with. If a member to my left follows me in the debate I suppose he will refer to the oil rights and mining rights that went along with the land.

A deal was made based on conditions over 60 years ago, and nothing has happened since to suggest that the agreement should be dishonoured or broken. In those days a small engine pulled a small number of cars and the fixed costs and variable costs were set. Today we have locomotives that can pull over 100 much larger cars and travel much faster. According to all the laws of economics, if the deal was economically sound then it is even sounder today. There is nothing in the evidence that any commissioner was able to dig up to prove that there are losses under the Crowsnest pass rates.

Mr. Herridge: Or on the Kettle valley.

Mr. Hamilton: I suggest to the minister that one reason why the railways have not pressed for quicker action on this legislation in the last year and a half is that exports of grain in 1961, 1962, 1963 and 1964 have been such that even a mediocre economist like myself can figure out with a pencil that they are making money on most of these lines they have set down for abandonment. I am going to have something to say about that, but not just now.

In winding up this part of my remarks I should like to suggest that if the MacPherson report and the legislation we pass to implement it end the discrimination that has existed, this report will be one of the greatest reports in Canada's history, not only because of ending 130 years of our history and bringing us into the new electronic age but because it is an end of injustice. You cannot build a strong Canada if the maritimes or prairies are suffering from discriminatory freight rates, and freight rates are such a large part of our costs.

If the royal commission report has achieved this objective, which I think is the highlight of the report, then it is to be expected that there will be honest criticism in the house in putting the report into effect without relinquishing our right to discuss the controversial parts and to make sure that the people of the country realize what this report means to them, namely at some time in the future a cessation of the continual pressure on taxpayers that they have had to undergo for over 100 years in the building of this nation.

I should like to call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you leave the chair, sir, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would object if I pointed out that what he said was not quite fair to the railways. From the day I took over this portfolio I have been under constant pressure from the heads of both railways to bring on this legislation, and if they have not blasted me in public they have come quite close to it once or twice in private.

The Chairman: It is my duty, pursuant to standing order 39A, to inform hon. members that the following question is to be raised at 10.30 o'clock this evening:

The hon. member for Danforth, unemployment insurance, denial of benefits to striking newspaper employees in Toronto.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, before the break for the dinner hour I was dealing, in a very general way, with some of the history of this railway problem and pointing out near the end that the Crowsnest pass rates were a matter of charter rights to those of us in the west. I expect that some time, probably during the debate, the maritime members will explain how their interests have to be protected also. In the time that remains to me, which is not very much, I want to wind up with the strongest statement that I can on what I think the problem from now on will be, in so far as putting this legislation through, getting it accepted and making it work.

In my earlier remarks I mentioned that in the fall of 1962 through to the end of January, 1963, we had put considerable effort, as a government, in getting the interested parties on the economic side into a meeting with those on the political side and trying to explain to them what our objective was. It is very important in this type of complex legislation to have understanding and sympathy with other political organizations that are affected. There has been a great deal of talk over the last year or so about co-operative federalism. The co-operative federalism envisaged in my mind is where adult governments which have matured mentally, knowing full well what their constitutional responsibilities are, are willing to sit down on any particular subject as equal governments, regardless of political affiliation, to see if they cannot come up with some common agreement. This was the basis of my approach and the approach of the governments of the three western provinces.

I think we had an understanding. If you read the statements of ex-premier Lloyd on this matter, you will find he had the same concept. They know in western Canada that adjustments have to be made, but there are certain things that have to be said, certain things that have to be done, to protect the social and economic interests of the people there. These social and economic interests were created by the federal government in the national policies of that day. There was a desire to fill up western Canada with people. These railway lines were built as a part of that policy and the railways were the chosen instruments of the federal government. It is true that during this process of filling this vast area the railways were built where it is clear now they should not have been built. It is clear also that when the Canadian National was put together in 1919 it had the task, as the chosen instrument of the federal government, of bringing together this hodgepodge of lines as an integrated railway system. By contrast, the Canadian Pacific was built on an integrated basis and its problems in connection with applications for abandonments of lines are not nearly as great as those of the Canadian National which was left with this inheritance from this tremendous overbuilding at the beginning of the century.

It is because of this national policy of 60 years ago that we must move with great caution at this time. You cannot, in justification of human values as well as economic values, move in and arbitrarily take out railway lines on a dollars and cents formula per line. The fact that you created the situation as a result of national policy means that it must be met as a national policy. I believe I said that many people in western Canada, as well as the provincial governments, are prepared to accept the premise that in return for getting clear of this fear that there will be ever spiralling freight rates applied to them, they must be willing to accept a rational economic proposal put forward by the federal government. However, they have a duty to protect their people, and this duty must be discharged in the form of representations from provincial governments. We, as federal members from the prairie provinces—almost entirely Conservative at the present time—intend to bring our representations forward as individual members of ridings. However, a duty falls upon the provincial governments to represent the people of their provinces as well. It is in this field or arena that I would suggest the technique of co-operative work with the provincial governments of the three prairie provinces would yield tremendous dividends.

We set the pattern in January, 1963. There has been great concern and uncertainty since because, so far as we know, they have never been consulted since. Occasionally we get from them these expressions of concern. These meetings that have been held in various parts of Manitoba and Saskatchewan during this last year and a half are indicative of the fact that the concern is widespread in these provinces. I would suggest very strongly, not only to the Minister of Transport but more particularly to the minister who is to be in charge of this rationalization program, that they frequently communicate with the governments of these three prairie provinces.

No matter how you twist and turn, no matter how you rationalize the abandonment of any of these lines there are people there who have spent a lifetime—two generations in some cases—building up the social capital of their churches, their sidewalks, their sewage systems, their water systems, their curling rinks and all the other things that make up the social capital of a community. Take a railway out of one of these towns and you may destroy the economic base of that community—

The Chairman: I have to interrupt the hon. member to ascertain if he has the unanimous consent of the committee to go beyond his time limit.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I shall not trespass too far on the good will of the committee, as I think I can finish my remarks in five or six minutes. I am trying to make the point that here you have a large number of people who, rightly or wrongly, are in a certain spot and they have invested all they own in this social capital, as well as in the private ownership of their homes. At this moment I am not including in my concern the great grain companies who invested hundreds of millions of dollars in grain handling facilities, as they can look after themselves fairly well in this type of tug of war. But I am speaking, with all the feeling I can put into my words, for these small merchants and craftsmen in the towns, who have built these conveniences to supply the people around them, all because there was a railway going through their towns.

Having said that I know there are other cases involved. In fact one happened in my constituency in 1961 when 122 miles of railway line were abandoned. I joined with the hon. member for Moose Mountain and the hon. member for Brandon-Souris in trying to get the people of that area, if they wanted to preserve their railway, to join with us in collecting information and promising certain things to convince the railway that the line should be kept there. But the businessmen had to tell us they could not take their business and hand it back to the railway, because of the time factor in modern merchandising.

Likewise, when I took the case of two or three of the communities involved to the railways to suggest that a spur line be built by the C.N.R. into the areas abandoned by the C.P.R., they were able to show that the figures of maintaining and servicing these spur lines were greater than the cost of trucking goods. Therefore we dropped our opposition. The rail line was abandoned, but I am compelled to say that these particular towns we were worried about are equal to or stronger than they were before the lines were abandoned. However the situation in that case was that the other railway was only two or three miles away, and there was no loss to the farmers. People kept coming to these communities to curl, go to church and do their business. In that particular case the abandonment of the line did not cause any harm to the social capital I have been talking about and actually it improved the economics of the two railway lines north and south.

If we are willing to look into these problems of going into an area and taking out railway lines that may well possibly have been built in the wrong places 60 years ago, if we are willing to add up the assets as well as the liabilities, then I am sure westerners will be willing to be the first to agree to a railway line being taken out, as long as the suffering or loss is not so severe that it destroys the livelihood of the people in those areas. No matter how you turn and twist there are going to be areas where the taking out of a line is not going to be serious; but equally there are areas, and I think a majority of them, where the losses will be beyond the recovery of the private individual. In these areas where losses will be beyond the individual's ability to cope with, where the small businessman, the clerks in a town, small craftsmen and, in some cases, groups of farmers, will be completely isolated, then I think governments have to accept something more than just the ordinary type of commiseration. We are going to have to do something definite, and there are many practical proposals that could be put forward to meet the needs of those places.

With regard to this resolution I think we should make our general viewpoints known about the whole question of dealing with these recommendations of the royal commission, but really we are talking in a vacuum until we have the terms of the bill before us. Therefore I hope the members of the official opposition will join with me in suggesting it might be wise to let the resolution stage pass tonight, with each of the other parties making their views known, in order to get the bill in our hands. Then if the minister on behalf of the government could assure us of having a suitable length of time to study the bill, which is very extensive and complicated—say about 10 days—we would be in a better position.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I might be permitted, Mr. Chairman, before the next member speaks, I would give that assurance without any hesitation. It would be much more desirable to have the bill studied reasonably thoroughly before embarking on debate on second reading, and in view of the timetable which the Prime Minister put before the house it would not appear likely to impede the program of the house in any way to give that assurance, because there is other legislation available for tomorrow and Wednesday, which I think will take all the time, and next week on Monday and Tuesday we have a supply motion.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the minister is one person whose abilities I have a great deal of respect for, in his capacity to analyse, and also in his capacity to project his analysis into this chamber when he wants to. It is quite apparent from the introduction he gave this resolution that he has not chosen to do this and, knowing the minister, I assume that he has very good reasons for it, probably tactical.

But one might have assumed that on legislation which has been mooted so long, which, according to the minister, arose out of one of the great studies of transportation, the royal commission on transportation, we might have had an over-all presentation of the transportation policy of the government. It is now apparent we are not going to get it or, that if we get it, it will come piecemeal. It is not satisfactory to assume that we can get it at second reading, or that we are likely to get it then, and so we are left with the impression that the Liberal party's policy on transportation is a piecemeal approach, taking a bit here and a bit there, without any over-all application or any over-all plan; because the minister, I think, would have to confess that this resolution cannot really stand as the main guts of the MacPherson recommendations.

There is nothing here about a national transportation board; there is nothing about a national transportation council. And so I am left to wonder what the minister and his predecessor have been doing with their time. The minister has told us the bill has been ready for a long time. He has had time to prepare a statement on national transportation policy, because anything that has to do with the railways, and particularly the major railways, which are certainly both vertical and horizontal in the transportation business, surely has implications and requires some kind of statement on national transportation policy.

We all know the minister is capable of giving us this, and the fact that he has not done so is an indication that members of the government feel it is best to leave it this way, so that they will not arouse too much antagonism or too much interest, and maybe this is the most effective way to get it through the house.

I could not help but be slightly amused by a comparison between the resolution put forward by the minister's predecessor, now the President of the Privy Council, and this one. There are a few changes. I can just see the blue pencil of the minister from Newfoundland cutting out the phrase in the previous resolution which read:

> —to establish a branch line rationalization authority and a branch line rationalization fund to be continued for 15 years to assist in the establishment of an orderly, rational and planned program of abandonment of uneconomic branch lines—

That has been changed in the new resolution to this:

> —to establish a branch line rationalization authority and a branch line rationalization fund to be continued for 15 years to assist in the establishment of an orderly program for the improvement of the efficiency of railway branch lines;—

This is a really subtle contribution the minister has made. We have cut out those okay words "rational" and "planned". I suppose this is to take care of the free enterprise activities in the area the minister represents. Instead of the kind of ugliness of "abandonment of uneconomic branch lines," we have this much more positive statement, "the improvement of the efficiency of railway branch lines". That is a really great contribution the minister has made to the policy as set forth in the resolution.

Mr. Knowles: He is the minister of euphemism.

Mr. Fisher: Yes, he is the minister of euphemism, all right. I would like to suggest to the minister that some time, surely, during the proceedings, if not at the second reading stage then perhaps when the railway committee is hearing the evidence and examining the bill, we should get from him some idea as to what is the government's transportation policy. A lot of people are very much interested in this. I can think of the trucking industry, the people who are involved in pipe lines, all the railway workers across the country, who would still like to have some impression of where this government stands with regard to some of the problems that are facing them.

So far as our party is concerned, we will not call any division at the resolution stage, but we are certainly sceptical enough of this legislation, from what we can see of it, to anticipate that we shall probably be speaking against it, or speaking against substantial parts of it, and voting, probably, against the legislation when it comes in. This is not put forward as any kind of threat that we are going to drag things out, but it is quite apparent that there are a number of items in the legislation revealed by the resolution that are unsatisfactory, to say the least.

One of the things that I do not think has really struck home to the people across the country generally is this. I do not think they realize what a drastic change we have had. We have had a freight rates system building up for decades; a freight rates system handled by the board of transport commissioners. We all know the tremendous number of hearings and the long attempts that were made, particularly in the 1950's and a few years ago, to equalize the freight rates, to try to make the system one that is practical and adjustable. Despite any of the vicious or mean things that might be left in the freight rates system at the present time, it was viable and it was working. Now we have to start off with a completely new slate in so far as freight rates are concerned, because the essence of what the minister and the government have plucked out of the royal commission's recommendations is opening up the whole area to competition. This sounds great; there is nothing better than competition and laws and rules in the market place to give you the best in transportation. However, I happen to come from an area that has been subsidized substantially by the bridge subsidy. I would like to give the minister an example of what happened recently with the pick up in the transportation out of our area of basic commodities. The $7 million had to be spread a lot thinner. As a consequence, in effect there was a substantial rise in the rates of certain commodities, particularly lumber. The railways, without any hesitation, went in and applied this rate despite the fact that its application immediately made much of that exportation of lumber out of our area uneconomical. We are still hoping we can stave off the increase. It has been postponed several times. But this gives you an idea of the tremendous economic pressure many parts of our country suffer when they have not competition.

We cannot get competitive transportation in the sense in which they have it in southern and northern Ontario. I do not believe we get it really on the prairies, as yet. Yet this is going to be the carte blanche that is given to this new set-up as far as we can make it out—the abolition of the freight rates structure as we know it. I suggest that, inadequate as the structure may have been, despite all the difficulties in connection with it, we are really throwing out a great deal for something that is most indefinite. I am somewhat hesitant of making a fetish out of or bowing to the shrine of free enterprise and competition in contemplation of what may be possible.

I suggest to the minister that if the legislation follows through and is introduced, what we will have here—and members had better remember this—is more delegations and more representations than we have ever had before when the new freight rates are applied and the railways put their rates on a so-called economic or competitive basis. This is one of the reasons why we want to look at that particular section most closely.

I certainly intend to call before the committee a couple of Canadian experts on freight rates, people who have had experience with them. I know at least two of them who have worked in the field for a number of years, and they think this proposal is absolutely fantastic. I refer to the proposal to suddenly throw away the whole structure, all for the sacred principle of competition. One of the other questions that the commission dealt with was this. I remember that when I appeared before the commission I put this first question to them. One of the fundamental issues we faced was, are we to throw open competition in Canadian transportation, restricting the role of the board of transport commissioners, or move toward nationalized transportation, initially through nationalizing the railways? We got the answer from the MacPherson commission. In effect they said that our railway structure has now reached the stage where it is easy enough to get into the competitive modes of transportation, particularly in trucking, so we can have genuine competition in most parts of the country. So the thing to do is throw away most of the old, controlled apparatus; let the railways free; set them free to make their way.

This immediately raises one question in my mind about the areas where competition really will not be in effect. I would like to ask the minister how he feels a lumber exporter, or a mine that is shipping concentrates from somewhere on the north line of the C.N.R., is going to make out. Another point involved here is the whole idea that competition in itself in the transportation business is the best and cheapest way of getting things. We had one great competitive surge in railway business back from about 1896 to 1917. What did it leave us with? Right now we have a proposal from the C.N.R. that it should be recapitalized by some $800 million. We had the tragedy of over-building, all as a result of competition. People may say, "That is old stuff. They do not make mistakes like that any more". That is just where they are wrong.

You want to look at a real boob like Manitouwadge, where you have a small community of 4,000 people, with two producing mines; and we have two railroads into it. This is complete economic nonsense. There is an even bigger development up in Esterhazy, Saskatchewan, where the C.N.R. were on the site. What was one of the consequences? The C.P.R. held the government up—it certainly held a committee up—for its share in this thing. I do not know who is going to profit from the competition. All we know is that neither railway is going to get as much as would be the case if one had the natural entry that seemed to be justified by geography; and we have a duplication of facilities, plant and everything else. We must remember that even the C.P.R., with one sacred institution of private enterprise, has been terrifically subsidized, even within recent years, by the government. So here, Mr. Chairman, are two subsidized operations with a phony kind of competition.

We have another example in this horrid affair down in Gaspé, that the government has just got out of by one of the craziest undertakings that I know of.

This is in the province of Quebec, a province which does not like the federal government to interfere in its affairs. We are going to support a special road to get us off the hook for building a railway which the previous parliament undertook to build, a railway which the government knows and which the C.N.R. knew is completely uneconomic. I give these examples, Mr. Chairman, to point out that the day of stupidity in the development of railway lines is not past.

I also believe that the day of stupidity with regard to abandonment is not past, because just yesterday I discovered that the Canadian National Railways has put work trains on a line which runs from the lakehead up through Superior Junction to Winnipeg. At the same time there was a big wreck on the south line of the C.N.R. with some 40 cars derailed. The cause of the derailment was supposed to be a broken axle. That is probably true, but I do know that the roadbed on the south line is very poor. I am convinced that the intention of the C.N.R. with their work trains is to improve the northern roadbed, to increase traffic and gradually to snuff out the south line because it is uneconomic. I am sure that is the intention of the Canadian National Railways. But the way we operate results in the fact that we have communities all along the south line who do not know what is coming or what is going to be their future. No wonder the minister takes out words like "rational" and "planned" from the resolution. It will just be orderly. I should like to know how the order is going to unfold.

I suggest that the people of western Canada are getting in this legislation—and I am disappointed to discover that the official opposition, as revealed by their spokesman, seems to be I will not say enthusiastic, but certainly prepared to go along with this legislation—something that they will regret for a long time. I am not speaking just of the abandonment features, but of the whole question of a new deal in freight rates for an area which has not the protection of the kind of competition existing in other parts of the country. Why have the prairies been squawking for years? Why have we one of the most brilliant lawyers in Canada here from the province of Alberta? It is because of their realization of how vulnerable they are in the freight rates situation when competition really does not work in their favour. There seems to be a general tendency to assume that because M. A. MacPherson was from the prairies and was a good Tory, therefore his recommendations should be suitable to the Canadian west. I think that is a bit of a misstatement. I am not going to credit or discredit the contribution of Mr. MacPherson to the royal commission, but I have the feeling that there was a couple of younger men on the commission who got the bit between their teeth. I wonder why we bothered to go before that commission. I wonder why there were such vigorous presentations when I note the fact that the recommendations seem to ignore completely what was one of the most common features of representation. Region after region in this country worried about their future in the face of wide open freight rates, or freight rates which were uneconomic and would not allow them to get their products to the market. It seems to me that western Canada has the most to lose, unless this legislation is a lot more attractive than appears at the present time.

In our part of the country we too would seem to have something to lose, unless we can get some assurances when the railway officials come before the committee that the ending of the bridge subsidy will not mean immediately an upsweep in freight rates. Quite frankly—and the minister should know this—we have not the advantages of competition in our area. One really cannot conceive of trucks hauling mineral concentrates or bringing in supplies which keep my area going over the distances which are travelled. It is for that reason that to be left to the possible mercy of the competitive free enterprise instincts of the noble railroads of Canada, when it comes to setting freight rates, that we are so worked up about this wonderful prospect.

There is another irony in this whole question of competing modes, and that is the substance of the truckers' objections to the recommendations of the commission. One of their criticisms relates to very substantial and further subsidies for the railways over another interim period in connection with both abandonment and passenger traffic. I can leave that to one side for a moment, but the fact remains that when you talk of competing modes you have at the same time these two huge organizations both expanding in the trucking business. I am wondering whether the commissioners and the government which follows their recommendations, have any idea of the trends today in the transportation business. We are not returning to the day of perfect competition when small men spring up all over the place in the trucking business and other transportation modes, the old Lincolnian ideal of the small man making his way. We are at the stage of consolidation of trucking operations, where even the biggest private operators are waiting, hoping for a bid from the C.N.R. or the C.P.R. You do not get into long haul trucking without a considerable amount of capital. At the present time the major railway companies have franchises all across the country and are in a position to expand and to exploit them.

Members who shared the committee experience with me when Mr. Gordon was before us not long ago will remember that he came to the committee and said the C.N.R. had a huge deficit. But Mr. Gordon was proud—I do not say justifiably—of the fact that the trucking operations of the C.N.R. were going ahead and were making money. How are you going to get the competing modes of transportation really chewing down the costs when, in effect, you have the development of two large universal carriers as an integrated operation? Mr. Gordon told us five years ago when the C.N.R. got into trucking that they would keep these lines separate. He did not go through with that kind of deceitfulness any longer at the last committee hearing. He told us that this was for legal reasons and to deal with provincial boards. In effect we have consolidated the whole operation. There is no reason why I select the C.N.R. instead of the C.P.R.; let us realize that we have here two giants in the transportation field. These companies are not only in railways but are very much in trucking as well, and they have a great future in trucking.

That being the situation, and with the capital support that both those railways enjoy—the capital of one of them supported by the government—how can you expect the trucking industry not to be scared and frightened and leery of proposals such as this, which are going to promise specific subsidies for another generation and also support the capital expenditures in the structure of these railways? I make this point because previously at least these lump sum payments which went into keeping down freight rates in relation to wage boosts were applied to freight rates. I wrote down somewhere—I cannot find it at the moment—the minister's statement to the effect that really what this will do is that it will get us away from large lump sum payments and pay the railways for specific things. One of the specific things is passenger service subsidies. Here is a decision to pay the railways a passenger subsidy, which seems reasonable. The railways have complained that they have been losing their shirts on passenger service, and most of us believe them. Evidence to this effect was offered to the commission and the commission came forward and said it was the fact.

What has happened in the last two years as far as passenger service is concerned? We have all heard of the red, white and blue fares and the tremendous increase in traffic. Mr. Gordon said just a few months ago that it is too early to tell, but certainly things look better than ever. In other words, the railways modernized their marketing, streamlined their passenger operations and now things look as though they are beginning to improve; yet we are starting to give them a big subsidy in connection with passenger changes. I suggest there is something of a paradox here. Surely one does not set out to subsidize so definitive a service that is in a flux or change, and where there is some indication that with even more marketing and with a move back to a use of the rails this passenger service in many parts of the country may be able to fend for itself. Yet that is what this government seems to be doing with this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other aspect of the minister's approach, or lack of approach, or at least his lack in telling us what his approach is, which I should like to mention. I am sure he has an approach. We all know him too well to feel that he does not have this pretty well set in that very capable mind of his. There is nothing in this legislation in respect of one of the major problems of concern to the people who work for the railroads, or whose communities are sustained economically by the railways. I thought this was supposed to be such a go-ahead government made up of a group of very bright people who were sensitive to all the things that were happening and all the trends, but everyone has been talking about automation lately, the effects of it, and automatic innovation and change. We had a committee which met last year which voted almost unanimously—there was one dissenting vote—in favour of changing the Railway Act. The committee made quite clear recommendations in respect of a change to take care of that community of employees who were being shifted; but all the minister does is stand in his place and tell us that the railways are a very important part of the economy of this country, and that they employ a great number of people. He has no message in this resolution in respect of those very genuine problems which exist in this field.

It might be said that this problem should be dealt with by amendments to the Railway Act; but this is something the minister did not explain, or if he did I did not understand him. What is the relationship of this legislation to the Railway Act? It seems to me to be very lacking in general terms. It may be more explicit in the bill when it is presented, but there is either going to be a conflict or a great need for amending that act as a result of this legislation. We have received no information in that regard. In other words the minister has come forward in this house without any grand outline of intention, presenting a bill which he is willing to concede will affect a tremendous number of Canadians, but is unwilling to give us a clear statement of his intention, or a clear statement in respect of government policy. It seems to me the only excuse or alibi that can be put forward for him, and he must be clear in his mind in this regard—and surely must have worked out the situation—is that he does not want to become involved in any grand hassle on principle which might lead us into longer and longer debate.

I would suggest that if we had a little bit less stupidity on the part of the government in its tactics in this house we would not be reaching the stage of bringing a bill of this complexity in at this late date, having only ten days, which I think represents a good undertaking, to look at this bill, then send it to a committee where there will be all kinds of people who want to make representations. The minister knows that it will be a miracle if this bill gets through at this session, unless this session is going to last into next year.

What were we doing during the last three or four months, at a time when this particular resolution could have been before us? We were fooling around with interim supply and the flag debate. This was the grand strategy of those masters on that side of the house whom we just had to have back in Ottawa in order to get the country straightened out. What a collection they are, Mr. Chairman, indeed. We are now faced with a most complex resolution brought in late in the session. I suppose we will have the minister chattering away on the C.B.C. television some night in the not too distant future telling the people about the opposition blocking and getting in the way of the government in this connection.

An hon. Member: Perhaps he has learned.

Mr. Fisher: I hear someone suggesting that perhaps he has learned, but we all remember his last appearance on television.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am never invited. It is only the hon. gentleman who is on television.

Mr. Fairweather: He just wants you to ask him down some Sunday night.

Mr. Fisher: He knows that the door is always open.

One of the things that intrigues me about the recommendations of the royal commission—and this makes me very suspicious, as it makes most railroad employees—is that in only two parts of the country, or two institutions, have I found that these recommendations are really being thought of as wonderful, and those institutions are the president of the C.N.R. and the president of the C.P.R. Mr. Chairman, one would have to be a pretty innocent fellow not to be a little suspicious when Donald Gordon and Mr. Crump are just delighted about the recommendations of the royal commission.

Mr. Moreau: Do not forget the truckers.

Mr. Fisher: I have not heard of any truckers who were delighted, and if it was only the truckers who were against the recommendations I would be suspicious; but aside from one of the major unions which supported the commission's recommendations, with some caveat, I have not heard general enthusiasm for the royal commission's recommendations, except that expressed by Mr. Gordon and Mr. Crump. All I can say is that that should be enough of a guarantee, and enough of a warning, particularly to the people of western Canada in the bridge country, to anticipate that we should look at this legislation very carefully.

Mr. Chairman, one could go into a great deal more detail in respect of this matter. At eight o'clock I was talking with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle who said he really needed several hours to warm up to this particular issue. I feel somewhat similar, but I assume that we will be able to do so when the bill has received second reading and sent to a committee.

I should just like to repeat that I think the farmers and people in those areas of Canada where the competitive modes of transportation are not having their necks wrung, including railways employees and employees of the trucking industry, particularly the long haul, should be concerned and interested in this legislation.

It would just be blind stupidity to condemn legislation completely on the basis of this resolution. I do not really have any particular questions to ask the minister, and I hope that we can get this resolution through and receive the bill tonight. I would like to suggest that when the minister comes to the committee with this legislation he bring with him his usual and normal humility, plus a desire to be more expressive about the transportation policy of the government, because I do not see how he can suggest changes of this magnitude that will affect the whole transportation industry without some inkling as to government long term intentions; and this legislation does not have that. Even if, as I say, someone did place in this resolution a rational plan of approach, the minister cut it out before presenting the resolution.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Port Arthur who has just taken his seat mentioned that this was a very complex piece of legislation introduced by the resolution now before us. I think it is fair to say that even that expression is an understatement, particularly when we consider the implications and ramifications which may flow from the legislation apparently to be included in the bill when it is before us.

Generally speaking the resolution before us tonight deals with three main subjects with respect to the transportation policy of Canada. It deals with what is now termed the rationalization of branch lines. As has been pointed out, this is a change from the former wording in that it used to be referred to as the abandonment of branch lines. The resolution also deals with passenger train services and the fixing of freight rates.

This history of transportation in Canada has been written often and well and I do not think anything can be gained tonight by rethreshing old straw. But I think it is fair to say that from the early days of settlement, government bodies have taken an active part in providing and regulating transportation by water, by highway, by rail and more recently by air. Generally the public has insisted that these facilities be operated on a commercial basis, that is, that the users pay the cost of services and operations, but at the same time the welfare of the public and the benefit of the nation as a whole have been a fundamental and persistent objective.

We can say that the history of Canadian transportation involves the interplay of two radically different concepts. On the one hand there are straight business principles, and on the other hand such matters as national unity, Canadian trade, the development of new areas and matters of defence. I wish to deal only briefly with the question of passenger train services. I think it is worth mentioning at this time, as the hon. member for Port Arthur has already pointed out, that there has already been a substantial change in the past year and a half with respect to the usage of railway passenger facilities. The introduction of red, white and blue days and the introduction of special excursion rates certainly have attracted a great deal more business to passenger trains from one end of Canada to the other.

We are looking forward to celebrating our 100th birthday three years hence, Mr. Chairman, and among the plans that are being made at the present time for our centennial celebrations is the idea that it would be desirable to have a great movement of people from certain areas of Canada into other areas, resulting in an intermingling of the people from one area with those of another so they can understand each other better. It is thought that this massive movement of people to various regions of Canada during that year will help to strengthen national understanding and national unity. I do not think any reasonable member of the house will question the validity of these plans and the anticipated results. But, Mr. Chairman, during the summer of 1964, when as yet there has not been any real attempt by the centennial committee or other interested persons and groups of persons to encourage such a movement of people, we find that the railway passenger facilities have been used to the maximum all summer.

I have attempted on many occasions, as I am sure other hon. members have, to obtain reservations on some of our passenger trains and have found that there was absolutely nothing available for days and in some cases weeks in advance of the date on which I wished to travel. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, if the railways are now utilizing all of their usable equipment for moving passengers throughout Canada, what are they going to be using in 1967 for what has been described as a massive movement of people from one region to another? It seems obvious to me that even in this year the railways do not have the equipment to take care of the demands that have been made upon them, and certainly we cannot look to 1967 with any degree of optimism that the plans of the centennial committee are going to be realized. Therefore, while I believe that perhaps there is a need for some subsidies for passenger train services to keep them in operation, I think that since the MacPherson commission made its recommendations there has been a very substantial change in the use of the passenger train facilities and this should be taken into consideration.

If these plans for 1967 are going to materialize, certainly the railways are going to have to produce a lot of new equipment. Maybe prior to the MacPherson commission hearings the railways ought to have taken the action they have now taken. It this had been done they probably would not have experienced a drastic falling off in the use of passenger train facilities. We think that perhaps we have already passed the point where we need to take another look at passenger train service in Canada. I might say that the MacPherson commission came to this conclusion in its report:

> Uneconomic passenger services exist over the whole length and breadth of the nation but with different degrees of intensity... We regard the provision of these services, whether they be required by law, tradition or public policy, as national obligations upon the railways and a burden upon them and the other users of rail services.

We in the Social Credit party feel it is the responsibility of the house to assist the board of transport commissioners in determining whether there may be alternative public transportation available in some cases that could be used by people who normally use railway passenger service, provided they will not be subjected to too much inconvenience. Then there are other important considerations which must be kept in mind such as the severe weather conditions that exist in some parts of Canada in the winter and which, if no adequate public highway is provided, may result in the isolation of those areas for certain periods of time.

The minister in his introductory remarks this afternoon, and I intend to deal with this more fully in a minute, said that the government was preparing for some subsidies. I think he referred to specific subsidies rather than a grant or a large subsidy without any specific purpose. Some of the subsidies paid during the past four or five years, of course, have been in the form of large grants without any accounting being made of how the money has been used.

We believe there may be some instances where assistance could be granted to improve other facilities in local areas, particularly highway transportation, and that if this were done the money would be better spent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, turning to this matter of what is called the rationalization of branch lines or railway line abandonment as it used to be called, I should like to say, without going into too much detail, that I do not believe there has been any single commission report that created so much stir in western Canada as the MacPherson report, which contained some recommendations respecting railway line abandonment. In fact, the governments of the three prairie provinces have held a number of meetings during the past year and a half trying to work out some concerted presentation to make to the federal government respecting this matter. In addition to that, there were a number of meetings held in Regina at which there were representatives from almost every provincial and national organization in the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba.

I do not want to spend the time of the committee tonight dealing with many of the submissions that were made. However, there certainly seem to be unanimity in at least one area and that was that before there is any progress from this point on in allowing the board of transport commissioners to authorize the abandonment of any more railway lines, there should be a minimum grid system set up. In other words, there should be an orderly process for the abandonment of these particular branch lines that do not serve a useful purpose. In so far as we are concerned, we take the position that there should not be blanket opposition to all abandonments but rather that each case should be considered on its merits. Even these individual cases, however, should not be presented to the railway commissioners, parliament should not even allow such presentations, until we know what the plan is for the over-all rearrangement of railways, particularly in western Canada. We think, too, that those lines which are resulting in substantial deficits being loaded into the freight rate structure should not be abandoned unless local transportation requirements can be provided satisfactorily by some other form of carrier.

We believe that the first essential is that the railways should prepare a projected program for proposed abandonments which should be extended over a period of time to afford the communities affected an opportunity of knowing in advance what is proposed, in order that they can satisfy themselves as to whether or not the abandonments are justified, and if so adjust their local transportation programs to other forms of transport such as highway transport. I did not hear the Minister of Transport say this afternoon whether or not the government has accepted that principle. He has talked about a 15 year period. He has talked about a fund that may be required for this length of time. But I did not hear him say that the government was prepared to insist that the railways come forward with a projected program of proposed railway abandonments. Along with that projection, the government and the railways should indicate what they consider to be a minimum grid system, particularly over the three western provinces. If he did say that and I missed it, I am sorry. It seems to me, after all the representations that have been made to the federal government, they ought to have accepted this principle as a first requirement before going into railway abandonment of any kind, and even before accepting responsibility for setting up a fund to provide for some of the adjustments that will obviously be necessary.

When I say that in so far as we are concerned we do not take blanket opposition to all abandonments, I should like the minister to know that we do not believe that any community should be abandoned to the point of isolation. This is so obvious it hardly needs to be said. There may be places, in fact I know of places, where highway transportation is far more economical. It is far more convenient. The proof of this statement is that highway transport is being used to such a degree there is little or no use being made of the railways, in spite of the fact they are there and there is a schedule of trains provided. I know, for example, in my own constituency of a branch line that serves two or three small towns. A few years ago the railway services into these towns were very important, particularly in the wintertime. Until a few years ago, there was no other way of getting the grain out of these towns, and they are grain growing communities. During the past two or three years all the mail and all the l.c.l. or local freight, all the passengers moving in and out of these communities, as well as all the grain, has been moved by highway transport to the mills in Medicine Hat.

It seems to me obvious, Mr. Chairman, that in such a case where the railway is not being used at all for any of these railway services that were so essential a few years ago, it would be stupid on our part to insist that they be maintained, that the right of way be maintained and that they maintain regular train service into and out of these places. However, when the minister accepts the concept that the government is prepared to pay certain moneys out of the federal treasury in connection with these lines because of deficits that may be incurred, it is time for consideration to be given to whether or not the federal government could make better use of that money by assisting the municipalities, through the provincial governments, in upgrading highway transport. I know that the minister of highways in the province of Alberta has, over the years, been urging the federal government to assume some responsibility for a grid system of highways throughout Canada. This has been done in the case of the trans-Canada highway. So far as western Canada is concerned, it is the only one. We know that recently the federal government changed positions with regard to the proposed railway in Gaspé and allocated at least a portion of that money for a highway in that area.

I believe that the time has come when the responsibility for the trans-Canada highway and for many other highway development projects should be transferred from the Department of Public Works to the Minister of Transport. I say that because as the importance of highways increases in Canada, and that is happening every year, there should be an assumption of responsibility for them by the federal government.

I am not trying to take anything away from the Department of Public Works which has its responsibilities for the trans-Canada highway and, latterly, for the Alaska highway, but there is a principle that ought to be accepted by the federal government, the principle of providing a network of good highways for the movement of people and goods to market. It is only logical that this responsibility ought to rest with the Department of Transport.

Substantial subsidies will be paid out of the federal treasury to maintain some uneconomic railway branch lines, knowing full well that these lines will tend to be of diminishing importance. In that case possibly the money would be better spent if the federal government gave assistance to improving the highway links serving communities where branch lines are uneconomical.

The minister said the government had no intention of interfering with the rates established under the Crownsnest pass agreement. In this connection one point was mentioned briefly by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, that in the minority report of the royal commission Mr. Gobeil of Quebec disagreed completely with the railways' contention that they had any losses as a result of hauling grain. He agreed that on some of the low density branch lines losses could be incurred on the movement of grain, and we in this party think additional proof would have to be provided, through a proper accounting method, to show whether or not there were losses. We recognize costs have gone up terrifically for all the services the railways must purchase, but it would be fair to say there has been a corresponding increase in the efficiency of moving grain. By that I mean the loads they are hauling out to the lakehead and the Pacific coast are now several times the size they were when these rates were set, and in many cases they are being hauled out with less labour than in those days.

We agree with the members who have already spoken, that it would be better to wait until we have the bill in our hands before making further contribution to this debate. The resolution contains one phrase dealing with the fixing of freight rates "under and consistent with a national transportation policy", which certainly does not spell out in detail what the government intends to do with the very complicated rail tariff structure.

As the minister well knows, the province of Alberta has been much concerned about the matter of freight rates and, as the hon. member for Port Arthur pointed out, has kept one of the most brilliant lawyers in Canada here in Ottawa for a number of years, to keep watch on the federal government whenever it attempts to play around with freight rates. Every time there has been an upward adjustment in rail tariffs we in Alberta usually get the lion's share of the increase. We happen to be near the continental divide which appears to be a kind of tariff divide for the railways, and we get the worst coming from both ends. Many commodities can be transported by rail from central Canada to Vancouver cheaper than they can be shipped to points in Alberta, despite the fact that Vancouver is 1,000 to 1,200 miles further away. Therefore when the minister seeks to amend the freight rates structure this time, we hope it will not be a repetition of what has happened so many times in the past.

There have been instances of 10, 12 and 17 per cent increases in freight rates across the board, and if this principle is applied in those areas where there is a virtual monopoly in transportation then there is need for some government regulation.

No doubt we shall have a great deal more to say about some of the provisions in the bill, but first we need to see it. Further, following the question I asked the minister this afternoon, I want to say to him we know the report of the royal commission has been in the hands of this and the previous government for many months. It may be argued that already too much time has gone by, but it is absolutely essential that the experts in this field, such as the counsel for Alberta in Ottawa—and I may say Manitoba and Saskatchewan have their own experts—should have time to prepare their arguments. I have talked many times to the counsel for Alberta and he thinks he and his colleagues would be able to prepare arguments in six weeks. I am not asking for any undue delay when the bill goes to committee, but I do plead with the minister that he allow at least six weeks from the time the representatives of the provinces see the bill until they prepare and present their cases.

It will be up to the committee to decide how long it wants to hear such submissions but, as the minister pointed out this afternoon, I am certain they will not railroad it through to the point where they prevent any valid representations or arguments being made to the committee. A minimum of six weeks should be allowed for these people to prepare their cases, and following that it may be desirable for the committee to allow another three or four weeks for these people to prepare rebuttals to other submissions made to the committee.

The lifeblood of the economy of many communities is dependant on railway transportation. In view of this, and if there is going to be a large departure from the tariffs controlled by the government, taking into account competitive factors, ample time should be allowed so that all interested parties may be heard.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would be remiss if I did not sincerely congratulate the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) who has set out his resolution in a simple, clear and specific way, without any political partisanship, but rather with the purpose of introducing legislation he is bent on.

We seldom see a minister do that with so much simplicity, and I think it is proper to congratulate him for having done so this afternoon.

However, his resolution, like all those we had before us, is couched in rather vague terms. This is not peculiar to this case, but to all resolutions presented to us. In fact, everyone gets up and says: Well, since we do not quite know what it is all about, since we do not know what the bill will be, let us wait and see.

All those who spoke before me repeated the same thing: before offering our criticism and observations, before making suggestions, let us wait until we see the bill.

Therefore, I wonder, after sitting in this house for two years and a half, whether the resolution stage is essential to parliamentary procedure.

Indeed, I wonder like those who rose before me, if I should discuss the bill, since I do not know what will be in it.

Therefore, it might be proper to question the usefulness of this stage in our parliamentary procedure.

So, I shall say, like all the others—and it is normal—that I shall wait to see the bill in order to know exactly what is in it before offering my observations, my comments and my suggestions.

Mr. Chairman, all previous speakers mentioned the part played by railways within the context of Canadian unity.

In the past the part played by railways was far more important than nowadays to achieve some kind of economic unity, because they were connecting various regions with one another, and encouraging the export trade of certain goods.

But nowadays, our very modern roads, our superhighways, where trucks as long and spacious as railway cars can roll, the St. Lawrence seaway which runs from the Atlantic to the great lakes and which allows the shipping of wheat and grain stored in elevators, planes which are more convenient and not much more expensive for the transportation of passengers from Halifax to Vancouver, Toronto or Winnipeg, in short, other means of transportation, including individual transportation, have become as important if not more so than railways for the Canadian economic and political unity.

Therefore, those new means of communication, such as air transportation and the St. Lawrence seaway, and especially the trucking business, should not be destroyed in an attempt to overly assist the railways.

It is essential to find a happy medium likely to satisfy everybody and to enable us to achieve our aims.

The government must see to it that what has to be done is done, whether it be by the railways or by the trucking industry. It must not help one at the expense of the other, but as I just said, it must see to it that what must be done is done in the best possible and economical way.

Such is the part to be played by the government. Let us not destroy private enterprise, the trucking business, by providing too much assistance to the railways. Let us try instead to find a happy medium while enabling everyone to survive and to render services, because planes, trucks and ships are just as useful as railways in our modern age.

We must therefore find a solution which will not benefit one to the detriment of the other, but which will help all transport services.

The Minister of Transport is called the minister of "transport" and not the minister of national railways. When we say "minister of transport", the term may apply to truck, ship, air or rail transport. The minister must represent all those means of transport and not only one.

To penalize the trucking industry in order to save the railways would be a monumental blunder, because it would not foster unity in the country; quite the contrary, it would perhaps contribute to its destruction.

It was also mentioned that we have an obligation toward the thousands of railroad employees. I quite agree. We must see to it that they have good working conditions and good salaries.

But we also must think of the thousands of employees of the trucking industry as well as of the small truckers and even of the large ones who earn their living in the transportation business and whose need to survive is just as great as that of the railway employees. All must be placed on the same footing. All must be helped as much as possible, because they all serve the Canadian community.

However, the resolution contains one point which leaves me rather sceptical. In the middle of the paragraph, for instance, it is said:

> —to provide for payments out of the consolidated revenue fund on a reducing scale for a period of five years commencing with 1964 to compensate railways under the jurisdiction of parliament for passenger train deficits incurred in Canada during such period;—

Mention is made of the deficits of passenger services included in the services as a whole, but only for railways under the jurisdiction of parliament, namely the Canadian National Railways.

Now last year, when we studied the last report of the Canadian National Railways, it indicated a surplus of a few million dollars. It will be said that on the whole, there has been a general deficit and it is true. Why? On account of the debt charges and the payment of interests on the debt of the Canadian National Railways.

When the president of the company, Mr. Donald Gordon, last appeared before the committee on railways, he asked the federal government to recapitalize its debt and stated that afterwards the company would show a surplus.

Well, if the C.N.R. gets a recapitalization of its debt and if it shows a surplus, at that time it will not have a general deficit—there might be a deficit in a certain area, but not a general deficit; for its operations as a whole, it would have a surplus.

And now you would have a government business with a surplus which would nevertheless be subsidized by the government to pay for a deficit which would exist in a given area of operations, namely, in the passenger services.

If there is a deficit in the passenger services but a surplus for the operations as a whole, this surplus should be used to make up for that deficit. It is as simple as that.

As the C.N.R. president stated himself before the committee, once the debt is recapitalized, the C.N.R. would have an operation surplus. So, I do not see why we should go on giving them grants for certain services so that this company may come and say: we have a surplus. Let them use their surplus to make up their deficit. That is what every private company and every business man does. If a man has several businesses and if one of these has a deficit, he makes it up with surpluses from his other businesses.

So, if the C.N.R. has a surplus it should not get grants to make up a deficit in a certain area.

As far as the C.P.R. is concerned, I believe it showed a revenue of $30 million last year, after taxes. A profit of $30 million from its over-all operations. It does not appear that it would need a government grant to cover a small deficit in its passenger train service.

Mr. Chairman, I will not say any more for the time being. Like the others I will wait for the introduction of the bill.

However, in conclusion, I would like to draw three points to the attention of the minister.

First, we cannot accept that the government, through a crown corporation, subject private industry to some underhanded competition, using taxes paid by that industry to do so.

In other words, we cannot accept that the government use the taxes paid by the trucking industry to subsidize the C.N.R. To act otherwise would be to destroy initiative and personal ambition and to remove any incentive to expand on the part of such a vast sector of private enterprise as the trucking industry. That is inadmissible.

If the government feels rich enough to give subsidies, I have no objection but let it subsidize all transport companies so as to prevent any unfair and underhanded competition at the expense of part of our society.

Second, we have before us at this time a resolution concerning the railroad industry. When looking through the order paper we find that there are other resolutions concerning the railways—No. 51, for instance, relating to the Canadian National Railways.

I am asking the minister whether—as there are various bills concerning the C.N.R. to be introduced, one of which concerning the recapitalization of the C.N.R. debt, which might be considered simultaneously—it would not be possible to submit or introduce all those bills immediately? We might pass all those resolutions very quickly and refer them all to the committee, to proceed with a study of Canadian railway matters, which hardly can be made bit by bit, or piecemeal, but by considering the railway problem as a whole. Suggestions and recommendations would then be made concerning not one specific area of railroading, but the overall aspect of those problems which complete each other and are interconnected, as in the case of the recapitalization of the C.N.R. debt, which is certainly directly linked with the proposed subsidies to meet the deficits which may be incurred in some respects.

Under resolution No. 51, there is a question of financial claims by the C.N.R. We find a similar claim under No. 35. Could the Minister of Transport not immediately move resolution No. 51? It might then perhaps be passed more quickly than the resolution now before us.

Then we would refer all that to the committee on railways and the members could thus examine the over-all problems and submit a more comprehensive solution. This would certainly be more satisfying to the railways as well as to the members, who could study those problems all at once.

Hence I submit, and I believe everybody would agree to this, that once this resolution has been adopted, we should deal with all the other resolutions dealing with the national railways, and which are all concerned with related problems, so as to enable the members to have an over-all outlook and to make a more intensive study of all those problems.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Third, and it is my last suggestion, or rather the one before the last, reference is made to the abandonment of railway lines, especially in the west. There is something peculiar about that. I wonder whether we could not obtain retroactivity in that field? I say this because in the province of Quebec, the abandonment of railway lines program has already been carried out.

That program has been completed for some ten years. If you take the line from Quebec to Ste Anne de Beaupré and Baie St. Paul, you realize that that line has been eliminated for several years. That abandonment of railway lines program has been completed. But when the time comes to abandon railway lines in the west or in Ontario, well the decision is taken to proceed in such a way as not to affect those regions.

Yet, as far as the province of Quebec is concerned, a program of abandonment of railway lines was adopted first and then carried out. But as regards the west and Ontario, things were postponed and principles are brought up. There is even a plan to assist cities, which was not done in the province of Quebec.

Could there not be some kind of retroactivity in order to assist the province of Quebec in that field as it is done in the rest of the country. We are not asking for the same amounts, but for some retroactivity for Quebec, the same benefits as are given the other provinces in establishing this program of abandonment of uneconomic railway lines.

I think it could be done. I suggest that the minister should try it.

The fourth and last recommendation I should like to submit to the minister is perhaps of less importance than the preceding ones. I was looking forward for the opportunity to make it today and I am availing myself of it now. In concluding, I would like to submit it to him. Certain innovations have appeared in the national railways. Some of them were good and some others were not as good and not as successful. The opportunity seems well at hand for me to make this recommendation to the minister.

It is because electronic kitchens have been installed on some C.N.R. trains. Everything is cooked in 30 seconds but it is just not fit to eat. Therefore, I wonder if one must prefer inferior food, less expensive and prepared more quickly, to better tasting and healthier food. Therefore, I wonder if the minister could not take this opportunity to forward those recommendations to the president of the C.N.R.

I close my remarks by saying that we are happy that this bill is being referred to a committee. We will study it without prejudice, trying to favour the country's economic development in one of its important areas. On the other hand, we will be very firm on one point, namely that the government must not help some areas of the transportation industry to the disadvantage of others. In that connection, we will stick to ideas formulated in this house on many occasions.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it would be profitable or in the spirit of the debate so far if I undertook to make any lengthy reply to the observations which have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite this evening. I intend to deal with all the points which have been raised on second reading of the bill. There are, however, one or two points that perhaps I did not clarify sufficiently, and it would leave a wrong impression if I did not say a word about them.

The hon. member for Lapointe, who has been missed while he has been visiting other parliaments, said something at the beginning of his remarks which I must say has often occurred to me, and that is that I wonder whether this vestigial remnant of medieval times, known as a resolution before a money bill is any longer really necessary. In Australia it has been abolished completely, and they seem to get on pretty well without it. I am rather hopeful that this is one of the things that will be looked at by the committee on procedure, but that is hardly within the scope of our debate this evening.

The hon. gentleman also inquired whether item No. 51 on the order paper could be taken immediately after this order, advancing it, so that the bill would be made available. Normally I would hesitate to say anything, especially in view of the fact the house leader has just come in and is casting a baleful eye in my direction, but I think if the committee would agree to such a proposition, and put this through without any debate, that would be very sensible.

Perhaps I should point out that this is the annual resolution which, by statute, has to be put forward each year by the minister of finance in respect of the ordinary annual financing of the C.N.R. There is nothing new, revolutionary or unusual about it at all. However, if the house were disposed to get the bill before us right after this resolution, and before embarking on the next item of business, I am sure the house leader would not object. I will not say more than that.

Perhaps I should say a word in reply to one or two of the remarks made by the hon. and conservative member for Port Arthur, who seemed to be suspicious of any change or anything new during the whole course of his speech. He objected very much to my leaving the word "rational" and the word "plan" out of the resolution, as they appeared in the resolution that was placed before the house during the last session of parliament. It did seem to me that "rationalization", if it means anything, means that this should be done rationally, and that it is a little redundant to repeat it. I did say at the outset of my observations this afternoon that what was being proposed was something that was, and while I did hesitate a little about it I did use the word, "revolutionary". I would have thought that would have been welcomed by the hon. member, but apparently it was not.

The hon. member did point out a real deficiency in my observations this afternoon, and I should like at this time to correct this very serious deficiency. I should have said something about the problem to which he referred when he mentioned particularly the head of the lakes, but which has application in two respects. It has application to certain areas of the country and application to certain commodities. The railways still in certain areas have a monopoly or a quasi monopoly. There is no thought whatever, in the legislation that is going to be proposed, of ending the regulation of rates in those cases where the railway has a monopoly or quasi monopoly and where, in other words, the shipper has no real alternative. Provision is being made for the maintenance of regulated rates, as should be the case. There must be effective competition, and the hon. gentleman and I are both pseudoeconomists and realize that perfect competition does not exist in this field or in many others. It is only where there is effective competition that, in the view of the government, regulation is not necessary. In those areas, whether it is in respect of certain commodities or certain regions where the railway is the only practical mode of carriage, regulated rates will be maintained. I really think I did not say anything about them, and that was a very serious omission from my observation.

I must say there was another omission, although I do not think it was as serious, but which I wish to remedy immediately. In the main this legislation will not involve a new act but will be an amendment to the Railway Act. There is no danger of any conflict with the Railway Act because it will replace something in the Railway Act that needs to be replaced in order to carry out the intent of the bill. It will also, in an ancillary way, amend one or two other acts; but in the main it will only represent an amendment to the Railway Act.

The hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Medicine Hat both dealt with a problem which is certainly one of the most serious in connection with this legislation, and that is the method by which abandonments, rationalizations or more efficient planning of branch lines is to be carried out. I was really hurt by what the hon. member for Port Arthur said when he referred to my English, because I did think it was rather an improvement to talk about obtaining more efficient operations than about abandonment of things. The resolution refers to improved efficiency of railway branch lines. Anyone who is familiar with the prairies will know that in many cases in the days when there was, what the hon. gentleman would call more perfect competition, Mackenzie and Mann built railways paralleling railways that had already been built by the C.P.R. In some of those cases neither line is a paying proposition, as long as both are in existence. However, if one of them is removed the other will probably be self-supporting. This is precisely the kind of situation in each of the various regions of the prairies the government intends the rationalization authority should consider before abandonments are permitted.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend tonight to go into all the detail that will be included in the bill, about how this process is to be carried out, because this is rather complicated and I think we should have the document before us so we will all be on equal terms when we are debating it. I did however want to make it quite clear that it is to avoid a situation which has existed in the past, where each case was considered in complete isolation from all the rest of the structure of the railways, that we are proposing this legislation, and substituting for that type of consideration a consideration in respect of the effect on the whole region, and proposing, moreover, that it shall be under the jurisdiction of and responsible to the Minister of Agriculture. I have been asked why this was being done. It is being done precisely because, in the main, the users of the railways, which in most cases are candidates for abandonment, are farmers, and it is because the rationalization authority will be considering primarily the economic effect on a community and not primarily the interests of the railways, that it seemed more appropriate that the minister who was more familiar and perhaps more directly concerned with the interests of the consumers of railway services, should have charge of that authority.

There is just one other point I think perhaps I should mention. I hope that the intervals of time suggested by the hon. member for Medicine Hat are a little greater than will really be necessary, because if we are going to have six weeks before the committee can even start, and other adjournments of perhaps three weeks, it does look as though the hon. member for Port Arthur may be right about the prospects for this legislation. At the same time, it would be far better to get the legislation right than to try and get it hastily through and have it wrong, because I think even the limited debate we have had so far does justify one observation I made, that this is a subject that is very close to all of us in this country. Railways and railway legislation are really still of the utmost economic importance, the utmost social importance and the utmost national importance. Even if it takes a lot longer than some of us would like, we must be sure that we do this job properly and with all the wisdom we can bring to bear upon it.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pickersgill thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-120, to amend the Railway Act, the Transport Act and the Canadian National Railways Act, and to repeal the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether it would be the pleasure of the house to dispose of now, without debate, item No. 51, which was referred to a few minutes ago, so that the bill could be placed in everybody's hands. I refer to the measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company to make capital expenditures and to supply the financial requirements of affiliated companies in the year 1964.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, this is a remarkable change in the attitude of the hon. member for Lapointe over the years because I think this is the legislation on which he has always taken the opportunity to deal rather strenuously with the operations of the C.N.R. What has caused the sudden change in attitude?

Mr. Fisher: Bilingualism.

Mr. Knowles: He can still do it on second reading.

Mr. Grégoire: We will have an opportunity then.

Mr. Churchill: Will he assure us he will not continue his talk of other years on second reading of this bill?

Mr. Grégoire: Why not?

Mr. Churchill: As far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, although it is a rather unusual procedure and we think that items like this should be brought to our attention at the proper time when the business of the house is announced, we will nevertheless go along with the proposal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, this bill does not normally go to a committee. We will see the bill when it is introduced and it will not go to a committee.

Mr. Grégoire: If it is not going to go to a committee, we are opposed. We thought it would go to a committee at the same time as the other bill so that we would be able to discuss all these problems in committee and have a general idea of all the problems of the C.N.R. That is what we would like and I should like to have an answer from the minister.

Mr. Fisher: Of course it will go to committee of the whole.

Mr. Grégoire: No, I mean the committee on railways. Will it not go to the committee on railways? I should like to ask the minister that question. Will it go to the railway committee?

Mr. Favreau: I am advised it never has and it is not the intention of the government that it should go before the committee on railways.

Mr. Grégoire: Then we are opposed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could take the time to make my point. Only last July we had Mr. Gordon before us. The hon. member was there and we went into everything connected with the C.N.R. This is not the big measure by way of recapitalization for which Mr. Gordon is looking. This is just the normal money bill. I suggest to the hon. member that on this other measure he can take up almost anything in which he may be interested. Therefore I hope the hon. member will change his mind.

Mr. Grégoire: No, Mr. Speaker. If this measure goes before the committee along with the other one everybody will then realize that under item 51 we are giving so many hundred million to the C.N.R. and under item 35 so many hundred million to the C.N.R. We would also like to have the bill on recapitalization sent to the committee at the same time, so that we could have the whole picture of all the operations and what they cost and try to make necessary changes. We would like to have the bill sent to the committee. I may tell the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that there is no change in my opinion. We would like to see the bill sent to the committee and then we could discuss all these measures.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I should make the situation clear, because I believe the hon. member may be under a misapprehension. This measure has nothing to do with recapitalization. This is an annual bill which has to come before parliament every year. It has always been treated as something rather close to a matter of routine. It is really a kind of audit of the C.N.R. and the bill has never been sent to a committee because the C.N.R. in its annual report traverses a much broader field. I think it would be rather a mistake to depart from the normal procedure and agree to send the bill to a committee simply for the sake of having the resolution passed and getting the bill before us. I would not feel competent, and I doubt that the Minister of Justice would either, to commit the Minister of Finance, whose bill it is, to an unusual course of that kind. Therefore unless the house can see fit to carry out the original suggestion of the hon. member for Lapointe that we dispose of the resolution and give the bill first reading—there will be ample time on second reading and in committee of the whole to consider it—I think we had better go on with the business that was prescribed.

Mr. Grégoire: It is not my proposition, because my original proposition was to send it to a committee. If that is not to be done we will not agree to pass the resolution without debate.

Mr. Churchill: That is terrible. We would like to accept the original proposal of the hon.

member for Lapointe. I think it was a very good one.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, just so the record will be complete and there will be no misunderstanding of our position, may I say we believe that any question that could be asked with regard to the bill to follow the resolution in order No. 51 can be asked when the bill to follow the resolution in order No. 35 is sent to the standing committee. We also think it is far better to spend a great deal of time in detailed discussion after we have the bill and know its details. For that reason we would agree to pass the resolution so that we could then have the bill before us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement that order No. 51 will be called at this time with the understanding that the resolution stage will be disposed of immediately?

Mr. Grégoire: No, Mr. Speaker.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed, from Thursday, April 23, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith—Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Pearson)—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 6—Appointment of chairman.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on April 23 last, clause 6, with an amendment thereto proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, was being considered. Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think before we resume our consideration of this item I should like to make a suggestion to the committee. I suggest that rather than continue at this particular time today, since we hope this bill will come up again, we suspend the consideration of clause 6 and perhaps also the consideration of clauses 7, 8, 9 and 13. Then, we should try to dispose of the other clauses, which are I think largely non-contentious, in the short time that remains this evening. I think possibly if we had an opportunity between now and the next time this bill comes up to have certain consultations we might make greater progress with the clause we were considering. I am just offering this as a suggestion.

The Chairman: Is the suggestion acceptable to the committee?

Mr. Churchill: It sounds like a very reasonable suggestion, Mr. Chairman, but there may be some clauses which hon. members who do not happen to be in the house this evening might wish to discuss. I would be content to follow the proposal of the Minister of Transport with the slight proviso that if some absent member indicated, when he returned, that he wished to deal with one of the clauses which had been passed he might have that opportunity. The thing I fear right at the moment is that we might make a mistake. We are coming to this rather hurriedly tonight and we were expecting to continue the discussion of the amendment rather than proceed with the other clauses. I do not want members to be embarrassed by finding that this evening, at five minutes after ten, the committee rushed along with the clauses which might be of considerable interest to members who are not here.

Mr. Pickersgill: I appreciate that many of us did not think we would reach this bill this evening. I do not believe anyone would want to deprive any member of the opportunity to say whether or not he had any serious objection to these clauses, so they might be carried on the understanding that if any hon. member wished to make some serious observations relating to some of these clauses he could make them on a later clause that had not been passed.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to support the suggestion that has emerged within the last few minutes. Perhaps clause 32, which seems to refer to all the clauses in the bill, might be the one upon which any such missed contributions could be picked up.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps we could call clause 10.

The Chairman: Shall clause 10 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 11—Return of dominion statistician.

Mr. Fisher: I just wanted to ask a question for the purpose of seeking information. Are we to assume from the information the minister gave previously, and the experience some of us have had, that the chief electoral officer has preparations in effect so that the intent of this particular section, in administrative terms, has already been carried out? Are the preparations practically complete, if you read this as applying to the census taken in the year 1961?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am afraid I did not catch the purport of the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Fisher: Well, this section is setting up preparations for what shall be sent by the dominion statistician. Are we to assume—

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman speaking about clause 10 or clause 11?

Mr. Douglas: Clause 11; clause 10 was passed, I thought.

Mr. Fisher: I assume that this has already been done for the 1961 census. My question is, is this a fact?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not believe it could be done in the sense in which the legislation is drafted, because this is not an act of parliament. Certain computations may have been made which would be the basis for carrying out these instructions of parliament, if parliament ever does give these instructions. I could not say whether or not they have been formally, but I feel quite sure it is well known to all hon. members that computations have been made based upon provisions of section 51 of the British North America Act.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 12—Calculation of members to be assigned to each province; preparation of report.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 12 of the bill, there is one point I wish to refer to. As a matter of fact, I did not expect in the least we would reach this section—

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon for interrupting him. I believe I inadvertently said clause 13 should stand when it should be clause 12 which should be held up pending the passage of the rest of the bill, because I think it is clause 12 that contains the tolerance feature which I am sure the committee will want to debate.

Mr. Knowles: No, it is clause 13.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I was just a little bit hasty.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I was saying that we did not expect to reach clause 12 tonight, because we know an amendment and a subamendment will be moved to clause 6. We thought clause 12 would be considered tomorrow.

However, since this clause is before us tonight I shall make the remarks I intend to make just the same.

I wanted to point out first of all, regarding section 51 of the B.N.A. Act—if I give the wrong figures, I hope the house will excuse me, because I did not bring the necessary material tonight, not knowing that we would be studying this section and I am caught a little off my guard—

In the past, as far as ridings are concerned, it was provided that there would always be 65 in the province of Quebec, in relation to the rest of the country. The number of ridings could change, but always on the basis of the population in the province of Quebec: dividing this population by 65 would give the equivalent number of ridings in the province of Quebec in relation to the population in the rest of the country. It gave the number of ridings for the rest of the country, and the number of members of parliament for the province of Quebec remained the same.

I do not have the original text of section 51 of the British North America Act, but I think that it was changed at a certain time to increase the number of members of parliament to 75 in the province of Quebec, and for the rest of the country, the number of ridings would vary in relation to the population in proportion to what it was in the rest of Canada, while in the province of Quebec it remained at 75. Now this is going to be changed, but how is it going to be changed? It is not stipulated in the legislation. It is said:

Subject to section 51.

Who will mention the fixed number of 75, while the rest of the country will vary according to population?

In the province of Quebec there is an election act dating from confederation. In the text of the confederation, it is said that in the province of Quebec there shall be some ridings which will not change. Why? Because at that time, in 1867, there was in the province of Quebec an English minority which was living mainly in some ridings called eastern townships.

It was provided that these constituencies would not vary, even though the population increased in the rest of the province. For all that, those constituencies remained static. For instance, there are constituencies like Compton, Brome, Missisquoi and a few others, a dozen constituencies where the population is far less than in other constituencies.

At this time a redistribution is being made in the province of Quebec, and those constituencies are not affected, because it was so provided by the British North America Act to protect an English minority, to guarantee them a number of constituencies in the province of Quebec. This was readily accepted by the French Canadians at that time because it has always been a point of honour for them to protect minorities and, in many cases, to give them all the security and protection required.

Now, today, there is an immigration trend which may cause changes and, no doubt, an increase of population in certain parts of the country. Even if the increase in the population of the province of Quebec was quite steady, it is not equal to that which took place in other areas of the country. I therefore have a suggestion to make—and I want to indicate to each and everyone that I do not intend to propose an amendment—but I wonder if the government should not propose an amendment and have it supported by the official opposition, for, at that moment, it would be much appreciated by everybody, for the purpose of stating, on item 12, that over a total of 265, or perhaps of 300 in 20 years, or 400 in 50 years after all there are 650 seats for 50 million people in England, we could number 50 million inhabitants in 30 years and there would perhaps be 600 members in the house, people would be somewhat crowded, but it does not matter—that the province of Quebec maintain always the same percentage of members. The Minister of Transport indicated a while ago that I have visited several parliaments in Europe. In fact, I visited that of London, which is twice as small as ours and where 600 members or more are crowded in an area which represents half that of our own House of Commons; therefore, would it not be possible for the province of Quebec to have always the same proportion of members, whatever the number of members sitting in the house, that is always the ratio of 75 to 265, which makes about 30 per cent? The same proportion would remain, whatever might be the additions made to the number of members forming the house.

Then the only French Canadian province would be sure it would always have at least a minimum representation in the House of Commons of this country. I wonder whether the Minister of Transport would be ready to accept such a suggestion, because the principle was accepted at the time of the drafting of the British North America Act. Such a principle was accepted for the counties with an English speaking majority in the province of Quebec, and this was written into the British North America Act. Would it not be possible today to make this electoral change and give exactly the same guarantee to the province of Quebec, to the effect that it will always have the same proportional representation it has today, that is 30 per cent. I think that this might remove some of the apprehensions which many Quebeckers have.

I will not move an amendment in that connection, but this is a suggestion and it will rest upon the government and the Minister of Transport to present this as an amendment if they deem it advisable. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) would be well chosen to second such an amendment and it would be accepted unanimously by the house.

This is a principle which has been accepted and which would be very much appreciated by all the people of the province of Quebec. That is a suggestion I wanted to make concerning section 12. I wonder whether the minister would not comment in that regard or, better still, present the amendment.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, if I followed the hon. gentleman correctly, he is suggesting that we should attempt in this bill to amend the rules set out in section 51 of the British North America Act. I do not think it would be within the scope of this bill to do that. If we felt it was desirable to amend the rules which are laid down in the constitution for the apportionment of seats between provinces—

Mr. Knowles: Among, please.

Mr. Pickersgill: —among provinces; I am always glad to see what a conservative the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is in matters of language—if we attempted to revise those rules, we ought to do it by a separate bill which would amend the British North America Act for that purpose.

Though it is not strictly in order, perhaps I might recall to the minds of hon. members who were here—and perhaps it will be of interest to those who were not here—at the time the present provisions for the disposition of seats among the provinces were made, that it was done precisely because the old rule, where Quebec had a fixed number of seats, 65, was very unfair to certain of the provinces, and particularly to the province of Quebec. That had the effect of maintaining the representation of the province of Ontario, which was the most populous province, above its just desserts according to the strict rules of representation by population.

When the amendment was made to the British North America Act which established the present rule—with the exception that was made, I believe in 1951, to meet a special situation that then existed in Saskatchewan—when the final rule was made after the war, I think it was in 1947, and I am speaking from memory—that amendment was proposed by my right hon. friend Mr. St. Laurent, who, I do not think, would ever be accused of wanting to be unfair to any part of the country. It was proposed so that we would have a closer approach to equality among the provinces and so that this disparity that existed for many years between Ontario and Quebec would be removed.

There is no doubt that, apart from the special provisions that are in the constitution with respect to the least populous provinces, and which at the present time operate only in the case of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, it is fair to say that the operation of section 51 of the British North America Act in so far as all the other provinces are concerned, except Saskatchewan, is precisely to reflect the actual population of those provinces.

I do not think that to go back to the system of giving a fixed representation to, say, the province of Quebec, or to any other province, would alter that at all. It might alter the total number of members that would be in the house, and probably would alter it very slightly at present time, but it would not really affect the relative position. However this is a big question and I do not think the Chair would permit anyone to offer an amendment on it to this bill.

If we wished to do that, I think we have to go beyond the scope of this bill and deal with the British North America Act itself, and that is a matter for which I could not possibly take the responsibility alone of making any decision. However I would be very glad to read carefully what the hon. gentleman said and discuss it with my colleagues. But it is something that I think could not be done within the scope of the bill. If in the circumstances the hon. gentleman would like to have clause 12 stand, and if no one else has any objection, perhaps we might make some progress by letting it stand and going on to other clauses that may not give rise to contention.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, following the position taken by the hon. member for Lapointe and the answer given by the minister, I wonder whether it would not be more than wise to let clause 12 stand, because it occurred to me that when the minister said, rather quickly, that we should let clause 12 stand his mind must have been thinking somewhat along the lines mine was; namely, that if it is the intention of the government to get this bill through, there must be obvious thoughts in the mind of the government as to just what adjustments could be made to the bill that would make it acceptable to all groups in the house.

I think one of the matters that must be going through the mind of the government is the suggestion, for example, of increasing the number of members of the house itself. In this way you get rid of the problem of representation by population with regard to the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and, I think, Manitoba. That is one proposal that must be going through the mind of the government, namely what adjustments can be made to their bill to get it through the house.

Another suggestion arises from the minister's remarks about Saskatchewan. The situation in 1954 must surely have been identical in every detail with the situation that existed in 1952. At that time we had 21 members from Saskatchewan and the representation by population principle as provided by section 12 meant we would have to lose five seats, if I remember correctly. The government of that day, in common justice to the province of Saskatchewan, could not envisage such a radical jump in one redistribution bill and brought in an amendment under the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent along that line, and applied this 15 per cent rule, so that we only lost four seats at that time.

At the present time, under the representation by population rule we stand to lose four seats. Surely if five seats was too much to lose out of 21, it is an even greater slump in our representation to lose four seats out of 17. Surely the minister, who is very conscious of the necessity of making some adjustments in this bill to get it through, would reconsider with his colleagues the question of doing something about this 15 per cent rule that we have at the present time in relation to Saskatchewan.

I am not making a special plea just because I come from that province, and I was not in the house in 1952 and 1953 when that change was made; but I think all the arguments used at that time for the change would be valid now. I do know there are not now any Liberal members for Saskatchewan, and there were at that time. But surely that is not the criterion that the minister who is now piloting this bill, with his broad considerations of the national good, has in mind. Surely the minister is not applying the rule as to whether you are Conservative or Liberal with respect to fair treatment in this connection.

I suggest that the minister would be well advised to hold this clause over so that the government might consider the one, two, three or four suggestions that must be considered as to adjustments that could be made, in order to allow this bill through.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am quite prepared to have the clause stand; but I would like to say a word about what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has said. One thing that I do not think I could ever bring myself to do is consider any suggestion that would have the effect of giving more members to a province with a smaller population than another province. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle knows, the population of Manitoba and Saskatchewan is now almost identical. The population of Manitoba is slightly larger, and even in 1961, when the last census took place, the difference was only 5,000.

I think it would appear to anyone that it would be a very grave injustice to have a different representation for those two provinces, and indeed the amendment of 1951 provided precisely for that situation by providing that a province having a smaller population than another province should not have a larger membership in the house. I think the observations I made to the hon. member for Lapointe apply equally to what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has said, namely that if there is to be any consideration in any way of these changes to the rules laid down in the British North America Act, I think that would have to be the subject of separate legislation. I do not think it would be within the scope of this bill to purport to amend the constitution by an amendment to a clause in this bill. Of course I am quite prepared, as I said to the hon. member for Lapointe—and this applies to what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has said—to bring the points he has raised to the attention of my colleagues. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, we could agree to let the clause stand and proceed to clause 14. We might make a little more progress in the few minutes that remain, if this is done.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, we are ready to have clause 12 stand in order to consider it further.

However, I should like to make a correction to the statement made a few minutes ago by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), because I think he did not quite understand my remarks. I did not suggest at all to set a number for the members of the province of Quebec but rather to guarantee a proportion—whatever the number might be—equal to the one existing today, as far as the number of members from the province of Quebec in this house is concerned.

[Text]

The Chairman: Shall clause 12 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 12 stands.

The Chairman: Shall we go on to clause 14?

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman. I think we should rise and report progress. It is now 10.30, and we have done fairly well.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement of the business made by the Prime Minister today, could the house leader let us know what business will be taken up during the course of this week, including the estimates for Thursday and Friday, if he is in a position to tell us tonight?

Mr. Favreau: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we will proceed with second reading and the committee stage of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, after which we will take up the resolution on the Crop Insurance Act, after which we will discuss the resolution preceding a bill with respect to farm machinery syndicates. Then if there is time we will carry on with the committee stage of the redistribution bill.

On Thursday and Friday we will be taking estimates in the following order: first, the Department of Transport; after that, northern affairs; to be followed by the estimates of the Department of Public Works. I intend tomorrow, if possible, to announce the addition of at least one department with respect to the discussion of estimates.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—TORONTO, ONT.—DENIAL OF BENEFITS TO STRIKING NEWSPAPER EMPLOYEES

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, the issue I want to raise tonight is whether or not the members of the international typographical union presently on strike in Toronto against the three Toronto dailies are entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. This matter has already been raised by members of this party on four or five occasions but to date no satisfactory answer has been obtained. The minister has indicated that benefits are payable when a substantial resumption of production has taken place. In a later answer he replied that what he meant by a substantial resumption of work was a production figure equal to 85 per cent of that prevailing before the work stoppage occurred. However, beyond that point we have been unable to obtain any accurate information as to the type of investigation being made, when it was started, when it is likely to be completed and what factors the unemployment insurance commission is taking into consideration in reaching its decision. This morning the answer received was again unsatisfactory, and therefore I should like to pose a series of questions to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour.

1. Is it confirmed that once production reaches 85 per cent of that prevailing before the strike the workers will be eligible for unemployment insurance?

2. Will the eligibility be retroactive and, if so, to what date?

3. When was the investigation in this regard started and at whose request?

4. What interviews have been conducted and with whom?

5. What factors are used by the commission, such as size of the paper, its circulation, amount of advertising, etc., in reaching its decision?

6. Has the commission experienced any difficulty in obtaining this information and, if so, what are the nature of such difficulties and what steps is the government taking to overcome them?

7. Is the rate of strike pay taken into account in any way in assessing the level of benefits to which the men will be entitled?

In short, Mr. Speaker, what I want is the fullest possible explanation from the minister as to what is going on, how the investigation is proceeding and when we can expect an answer. These men have made their contributions to the fund and if they are properly entitled to benefits the government should see that there are no roadblocks placed in their way.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that three minutes would hardly permit me to answer all these questions in the order in which they were put, but first I must apologize for saying this afternoon that the hon. member's feelings were not to be considered. I am sure he meant the feelings of those who are on strike, and should be given fullest consideration. I apologize for that inadvertence.

Normally a claimant must make representations to prove that there is not a stoppage of work. The commission, following representations made by telephone, undertook to send a man from head office in Ottawa to make those investigations. There were preliminary investigations made, I understand, by the office in Toronto, but nothing in writing had been put before the commission in so far as the employees or the strikers were concerned.

I have the statement that:

> On September 9, 1964, local 91 of the international typographical union made representations to the commission, which were confirmed in writing on September 10, that a substantial resumption of work to near normal conditions has been established at the three Toronto daily newspapers, the Daily Star, the Telegram and the Globe and Mail.

These representations are based on the fact that the newspapers are producing their usual number of editions per day, that they are of normal size and that the circulation of the papers is back to normal. These facts, with certain reservations have been verified by the newspapers.

However, the three newspapers claim that the work in their composing rooms is only being accomplished under emergency conditions, that the complement of staff required for operating the composing room is still substantially short of requirements for normal operations and that the present work is being carried on by executives and salaried personnel assisted by a number of new employees.

This information is now being assessed by the insurance officer. If he is satisfied that a substantial resumption of work—and that would be approximately 85 instead of 80, as I said this afternoon—has occurred, the disqualification now in effect under section 63 of the act will be terminated. The normal operation would be determined by production and staff requirements. I think that the matter of strike pay of course will have to be considered before a decision is made. The investigation, as referred to in the statement, began on an official basis when our Mr. Shearer, from Ottawa, went to the various newspapers and made those inquiries. As I understand the situation, he experienced no difficulty in this regard.

The question regarding what investigations have been undertaken has been answered. The question in respect to retroactivity of course will be determined by whether these claims were legitimate when first put forward.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his time has expired.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.39 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, September 15, 1964

The house met at 2 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he can give the house a report on the present situation in Cyprus, particularly whether in the last day or so there have been any signs that the situation is alleviating.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation in Cyprus is that the government of Turkey has relented in respect of a position it had announced it was going to take with regard to the sending of supplies to the island, an act that was thought to contain elements of provocation. The decision now is that the Turkish government, in response to an appeal by the United Nations secretary general to postpone the sending of the shipment, has agreed to do so if the United Nations will provide the necessary arrangements for further food shipments to reach Kokkina. Arrangements are being made to this end.

This has considerably eased the situation. As the right hon. gentleman knows, the secretary general has circulated a report with regard to the operation of the force, and this will be considered by the security council on Thursday, I think.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say whether there has been any agreement on the part of Canada to continue its force in Cyprus indefinitely, or whether a limitation has been placed on the availability of the Canadian force?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There has been no decision by the Canadian government to contribute forces indefinitely, nor has there been any decision reached as to further participation in the force. I would not want this last remark to be interpreted as meaning that, given the necessary conditions, we would not continue to live up to our obligations under the charter. The security council is meeting, and after that meeting has taken place I fully expect that the secretary general will get in touch with the participating governments.

CONGO—REFUSAL TO PERMIT REMOVAL OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister tell us whether it is true that a rescue mission has been denied landing privileges to remove 16 or more Canadians from the Stanleyville area of the Congo? If it is, what steps is the government taking to protect the safety of Canadian nationals?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, communications with the Congo are proving very difficult. Perhaps I can say more about that tomorrow.

INDONESIA—SUGGESTED TERMINATION OF CANADIAN AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I was wondering if the minister was in a position to answer two questions. The first question is, has the government as yet made up its mind as to whether it intends to encourage and assist Dr. Sukarno, at Canadian taxpayers' expense, in his attacks on Malaysia? Does he not think it is time to terminate our two-faced foreign policy in this area?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Without commenting upon what I think are the regrettable observations of my hon. friend, who has had a long experience in external affairs, may I direct his attention to the reply I gave the Leader of the Opposition on this question last week.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if the military survey group from Canada has now proceeded to Malaysia?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think they have left, but their departure is imminent.

CANADIAN FLAG

INQUIRY AS TO DELAY IN ESTABLISHING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Prime Minister the reason for the delay in setting up the committee to deal with the selection of a distinctive national flag for Canada. This matter was agreed to unanimously by the house last Thursday, but so far the committee has not been set up. Everybody seeems to be getting into the act and seeking to predict what the committee is going to decide. It seems to me the committee ought to be appointed as quickly as possible. I ask the Prime Minister the reason for the delay.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The names selected from the government side were given to the government whip last Friday evening. The names of representatives of the smaller opposition parties were also sent to the government whip last Friday night, though in one case this was subject to confirmation on Monday morning, which confirmation was received. We have received no names from the official opposition as their representatives on the committee.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I should like to say that what the Prime Minister has said regarding the opposition is correct. We were waiting for the return of two members, and later today the names will be made available, just as soon as we can secure confirmation from those two members.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether the party leaders could agree to adopt a moratorium on making predictions as to what the committee is going to recommend as a flag design. It seems to me that the committee's work will be made much easier if we can persuade both the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, to take the veil of silence for the next six weeks.

Mr. Pearson: I think this would be an extremely good idea. I was very disturbed, as I know my hon. friend was, when after a meeting of the party leaders the other day at which it was agreed that the committee should be set up, this agreement was interpreted in certain quarters as a retreat by the government, that they had the government on the run, that we were giving up on our own desire for a distinctive maple leaf flag. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I felt it was desirable for me to express my own view that we should have such a flag.

Both sides having stated their position on this matter, and the committee being set up I hope tomorrow, with no instructions having been given to members of that committee by any of the party leaders—I hope that is the case with my right hon. friend, because it is certainly the case on this side—perhaps the committee could be allowed to do its work in peace and quiet.

FINANCE

PAYMENT OF U.S. SHARE OF COLUMBIA RIVER DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Is it true that the Canadian government has accepted, as payment for financing the development of the Columbia river, treasury notes or other securities from the United States government in lieu of American dollars and that those funds were not deposited to the account of the Receiver General of Canada?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government is investing these funds to the best advantage, and I think it is a satisfactory way of handling this transaction.

WATER RESOURCES

INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION FOR PROTECTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister intend to take steps to set up completely new machinery to deal with the protection of our water resources, the wastage and mishandling of which has reached the proportions of a national disaster, as revealed in a very informative study which appeared in the Montreal Gazette on Saturday?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The matter referred to in the article in question is under consideration, and perhaps the minister of northern affairs will have a statement to make about it in the near future.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HERRIDGE—APPROVAL OF RATIFICATION OF COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all hon. members of the house, and a most important question of privilege of national and international consequence, which is evident from a page I have just received taken from the Spokesman-Review of Spokane of Friday, September 11 in which there appeared an editorial entitled "Canada's Pearson Campaigns for L. B. J.".

It goes on to say:

> —Mr. Johnson's long lasso has roped him into domestic political affairs in the United States—and calls it a wholly unnecessary expedition at this time. It adds:

> It is unfortunate that Prime Minister Pearson —who has plenty of domestic troubles of his own —is now being dragged into the American political campaign—and says it is:

> —a low-level political blow at...many northwest citizens—and so on. I mention that editorial to indicate the international as well as the national significance of my point of privilege. The question concerns the apparent misinterpretation by ministers of the crown of a resolution of this house.

As this misinterpretation may have misleading consequences in our treaty relations with the United States of America and our domestic relations with the province of British Columbia, I believe this house must clarify the constitutional meaning and limits of that resolution to the end that those members of this house who, as advisers to His Excellency the Governor General, must aid and assist His Excellency in implementing that resolution, do not construe the resolution as a licence to arrogate and usurp to themselves, without counselling with His Excellency, the statutory prerogative of his excellency the governor general in council in matters of disallowance.

Such misinterpretation is implicit in the announcement by the Prime Minister of his intended participation in an international ceremony to celebrate the purported coming into force of the treaty.

Question of Privilege

1. The resolution of the house approving the ratification of the Columbia treaty, so-called, with the protocol and exchange of notes, as recorded in the Journals of the house for June 5, 1964, is subject to section 90 of the B.N.A. Act with respect to the disallowance of a provincial statute.

2. Article XIV (1) of the treaty requires that Canada designate a Canadian entity for the purpose of the treaty. The note of January 22, 1964, with the attachment thereto, provides in article C that Canada shall designate the British Columbia hydro and power authority as the Canadian entity for the purpose of article XIV (1). The designation of that authority is therefore incorporated by reference in the treaty, and, as so incorporated, was approved in the resolution of this house.

3. The British Columbia hydro and power authority was established under the provisions of an act, cited as the British Columbia hydro and power authority act, 1964, passed by the legislature of British Columbia on or about March 10, 1964.

4. Some time after March 10, 1964 a copy of the act was forwarded to the Governor General of Canada by the lieutenant governor of British Columbia.

5. Under section 90 of the B.N.A. Act, the governor in council may disallow the act within one year of the receipt of the act by the Governor General.

6. On March 16, 1960 Mr. Speaker ruled that the question of disallowance is a power which has been entrusted to the exectuive and not to parliament. Therefore it follows from this Speaker's decision that the approval of the house of June 5, 1964 to the treaty, protocol and notes, and in particular to article XIV (1) as incorporating by reference the designation of the British Columbia hydro and power authority in article C of the attachment to the note of January 22, 1964, was and is subject to the exercise or non-exercise by the executive of its power to annul the provincial statute that creates the British Columbia hydro and power authority. In other words—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad I am getting applause, because I worked very hard on this question of privilege.

In other words, unless the governor in council sooner disallows the British Columbia statute, then the approval of the house to the treaty is in effect in escrow for one year after the receipt by the Governor General of a copy of the British Columbia act. Putting the matter another way, under section 90 of the British North America Act the executive may disallow the British Columbia act within one year, but there is no positive way by which the governor in council can indicate that it, or a successor governor in council, will not disallow the act. The governor in council can only approve the act by letting one year elapse without disallowing the act.

The matter is put neatly in the question of the member for Vancouver East and the reply of Mr. Speaker thereto in the course of the Speaker's decision already cited, as it appears in Hansard for March 16, 1960, volume II at page 2121:

> Mr. Winch: That is the very point. Do I understand from what you have just said that the House of Commons cannot deal with this matter until the last minute of the period of authority of the cabinet to deal with the matter; and, if so, that we cannot even raise it then because by that time the time has expired and it is a fait accompli? Is that the case?
> Mr. Speaker: That is precisely the situation—

Applying the principle of that ruling to this case, the ratification by this house of the treaty is not effective until the last minute of authority of the governor in council to deal with the matter. Under our constitution the ratification by this house is either valid or invalid depending upon:

(a) The elapse of one year from some time in the spring of 1964 without the governor in council disallowing the British Columbia hydro and power authority act, 1964; or

(b) the disallowance of the act by the governor in council within that year with the consequential nullification of the ratification by this house.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron):

> That the resolution of this house of the 5th June 1964 concerning the approval of the ratification of the Columbia river treaty, so called, in no way derogates from or impinges upon the powers and authorities conferred upon and entrusted to the governor general in council under section 90 of the British North America Act relating to the disallowance of an act entitled the British Columbia hydro and power authority act, 1964 as passed by the legislature of the province of British Columbia.
> And therefore, to quieten doubts that have arisen or may arise as to the interpretation and effect of the said resolution, be it recorded in the Journal of this house that this house declares that the said resolution is subject to and dependant upon the powers and authorities so conferred upon and entrusted to his excellency the governor general in council.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Speaker: I have to decide whether or not there is a question of privilege here, and after listening very attentively to the remarks, the long preamble, of the hon. member I have not the slightest hesitation in reaching the conclusion that inasmuch as he is asking for a legal opinion from the Chair, the Chair has no authority to give that legal opinion. Therefore I must conclude that the question of privilege does not arise.

Mr. Herridge: With respect to your reply to my question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, with all due deference do you not give a legal opinion when you rule, while a member is speaking, whether a matter is within the jurisdiction of this parliament or that of a provincial legislature?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should not misinterpret my words. We discussed this matter rather extensively from 12 till 1 o'clock so neither of us is exactly taken by surprise. I still hold to the ruling I have given that there is no question of privilege.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—ELIGIBILITY OF STUDENTS ATTENDING NEW BRUNSWICK TEACHERS COLLEGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a question for the Minister of Finance relating to student loans, about which I have given him some notice. Have the New Brunswick appointees any authority to declare students at New Brunswick teachers college ineligible, although that institution is included among those listed in the brochure which was made available?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the province of New Brunswick has specified that the teachers college at Fredericton should be one of the institutions whose students would be entitled to receive loans under the Canada Student Loans Act.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, will the minister investigate this matter if I give him the information? The story is that the institution has been declared ineligible and, further, it has been stated that in any event there is not enough money to go around.

Mr. Gordon: I am grateful to my hon. friend for having given me notice of this question, Mr. Speaker. I rather expect that the advice this particular student was given had to do with the province's own student loans fund. However, I will be very pleased to look into it and see whether I can track this matter down.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question in that connection, Mr. Speaker. Is it a sufficient answer to say they should make application for the provincial grant, and that the other is not possible for them? Would this answer it?

Mr. Gordon: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I think the official of New Brunswick who wrote the letter was probably saying this particular college did not qualify under the provincial regulations or the provincial act. However it would qualify under the Canada Student Loans Act.

STUDENT LOANS—DESIGNATION OF CREDIT UNIONS UNDER ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether he has had time to look into the question I put to him yesterday regarding the letter he has received from Mr. Charbonneau of the Saskatchewan credit union league, pointing out the fact that the Saskatchewan credit unions had not been able to approve student loans.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to be able to answer that question this afternoon. I did look into it immediately after I left the chamber yesterday, but have not yet found the letter in question. I hope to be able to reply tomorrow.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—POSSIBLE SETTLEMENT TERMS OF STRIKE AT LA PRESSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the strike at the newspaper La Presse of Montreal seems to revolve around the freedom of the press in general, does this government intend to see to it that the strike is not settled to the detriment of one of the most important freedoms, the freedom of the press?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can answer that question on the orders of the day, except to say that I am convinced that no decision would be reached that would in any way infringe upon the legitimate freedom of the press.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

If the settlement of this strike were to affect the freedom of the press, then would the government consider stepping in so that this fundamental right might be protected?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE USE OF FORMER R.C.A.F. BASE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Industry whether the city of Vancouver has yet submitted a plan regarding the Kitsilano property until recently occupied by the R.C.A.F. If so, what is the nature of the submission in this regard and what decision has the government made respecting this matter? In particular, is it going to prefer the request of the city of Vancouver to the demand of the C.B.C. made earlier, I think it was in June, by the president of the C.B.C.?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that it was 59 days ago that the city of Vancouver asked for a delay of 60 days in which to develop and forward to the federal government an alternative proposal for the Kitsilano project. Tomorrow will be the sixtieth day. In answer to the balance of the right hon. gentleman's question I would say that we have not yet received any proposal from the city of Vancouver.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): If no proposal is received, is it the minister's intention to get in touch with the city of Vancouver to ascertain the reason for the delay in order that there may be an extension of the time, if they desire such an extension?

Mr. Drury: My colleague the Postmaster General during the interval has been indicating to the city of Vancouver the importance of coming to a rapid conclusion in this matter. I think I would be endeavouring to answer a hypothetical question by suggesting what might happen in the event that the city of Vancouver made no proposal.

AGRICULTURE

TURKEYS—INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO MAINTAIN PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask the Minister of Agriculture in reference to a question I asked him on September 10 having to do with turkey prices. At that time he said he would discuss this problem with the turkey producers on Monday, that is to say yesterday, in Winnipeg and would report back to the house. Has he anything to report at this time?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I met with the executive of the turkey federation and attended the annual meeting, and spent considerable time with them. They are putting forward proposals that we are going to consider, and after that time I will report back to the house.

WORLD FAIR

POSSIBLE REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Paul (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce but, in his absence, I shall put it to the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to ask for the resignation of Mr. Robert Shaw as assistant commissioner of the 1967 world fair, following the severe admonition given to him by Judge Marcel Gaboury in the judgment he delivered recently in an action for fraud against the Foundation Company of Canada Limited, whose executive vice president was the same Robert Shaw?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of that question.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT HANDLING ON FERRY SERVICE, NORTH SYDNEY-PORT AUX BASQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I have been trying since March 23 of this year, without success, to obtain information from the minister and the government as to what effect the proposed new railway car ferry service will have on the employment of stevedores as between Port aux Basques and North Sydney.

Now that yesterday the minister sounded the death knell for the stevedores at North Sydney in his written reply to the hon. member for Danforth, may I ask him when I will receive a reply to question No. 1,811 on the order paper, which is actually a series of questions on this same subject but in considerably more detail. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, we all understand the full collaboration that exists between the minister and the hon. member of the N.D.P., as indicated by the fact that he answered that question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is a rather offensive observation with which the hon. gentleman closed his remarks, which I think I should protest strongly as not being in order. I hope very much to have the additional detail for which the hon. gentleman asked, and which of course made it necessary to take longer to answer his question, available tomorrow.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on a question of privilege. The gratuitous observation of the hon. gentleman is really not worthy of him. I want to make it clear that the question was based on a responsibility to that area and not because of this stupid statement about collaboration between my party and the Liberal party.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a supplementary question. Of course I accept the statement of the hon. gentleman, who is a very good friend of mine.

An hon. Member: He was.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask the minister, in view of his reply yesterday to the hon. member for Danforth, and in view of the closing of the Point Edward naval base and other cutbacks, just how many economic blows does he think North Sydney and the surrounding areas can stand before we see another Elliot Lake or Springhill?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: That question is not in order.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister consider it is proper that a minister of the crown, concerning matters affecting the economy of two provinces, should align himself behind one province as against the other?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): A very hypothetical question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has referred to this as a hypothetical question. It is anything but, because this is exactly what the Minister of Transport did in North Sydney when he said when it concerned a problem between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, he intended to favour Newfoundland. There is nothing hypothetical there, and I would very much appreciate an answer from the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, perhaps before the Prime Minister is troubled to answer that question I may say I never made any such statement at any time in any serious sense at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I listened to the hon. gentleman making his imputations, which were meant to be harmful and malicious, and I suggest, sir, I should be allowed to reply to them without the kind of interruptions which are so characteristic of the hon. member. I did say in the course of an after dinner speech to the North Sydney board of trade, where I had a great deal of hospitality of the kind that is characteristic of North Sydney, and in the presence of the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, that of course when I had to make a choice between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland I would choose Newfoundland, and I think everybody who heard that understood it in precisely the sense in which it was made.

Further, I think my record and the record of this government in doing things for Cape Breton in the last year—just to mention the heavy water plant, the development of the airport, the establishment of the coastguard college and so on—is ample proof that there is no thought of discriminating against that important area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis: As a further supplementary to the Prime Minister, now that it has been quite clearly indicated by the Minister of Transport that my question was not hypothetical and that the minister did make such a statement as I referred to, does the Prime Minister not think it is time that the ministers when—

Mr. Teillet: Oh, sit down.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I think in all fairness that remark made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs should not be permitted. After all, I have not been addressing my question to him, and if the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who continually remains in his seat—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me we are making a mountain out of a molehill.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I don't consider it is making a mountain out of a molehill when I have to stand here like this. After all, if the Liberal ministers—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. gentleman has heard a long explanation from the Minister of Transport, and surely he is satisfied.

Mr. MacInnis: I am certainly not satisfied, because the minister has admitted in this house making the statement which the Prime Minister referred to as hypothetical.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Words must be given their ordinary meaning and it was perfectly clear to me that the Minister of Transport explained in detail what was implied in his off the cuff remark.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me, what I am trying to get across to the Prime Minister, to the Minister of Transport, and to the arrogant benches on that side, is that a statement made by the Minister of Transport on any issue should be considered a serious one, and if he now says he said it jokingly I would point out to him that his statement in North Sydney was taken quite seriously by the people of that area.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely we have spent enough time on this important issue.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I do not propose to recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton South if he persists along this line, because it is enticing the house into an argument which is certainly not needed at this time.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege. My question of privilege refers to what the Prime Minister has called a hypothetical question. This was categorically denied by the Minister of Transport when he attempted to make that statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacInnis: I would ask the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no question of privilege here. Surely the hon. member can see that.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a supplementary question to ask, but first I should like to say that the minister did make that statement at North Sydney and it is correct, what he did say at that time. Has he now made a decision in favour of Newfoundland to the detriment of the port of North Sydney, one which will put everybody out of work?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I do not think any decision has been made to the detriment of any port. There was a necessary decision to be made in the interests of carrying out the terms of union with Newfoundland to provide a ferry service to Newfoundland. As my answer yesterday clearly indicated, every consideration was given to a matter which was not easy to decide, because it was obvious that if the ship was unloaded on one side of the strait the work would be there and not on the other side, and nothing could change that fact. The officials of the Department of Transport and, ultimately, the minister, had to decide what, in the public interest, was the wise decision to make, and that decision was made in the light of technical considerations which I tried to set out as plainly as I could in the answer I gave yesterday.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): So the stevedores at the port of North Sydney are to be the sacrificial lambs.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman prefer to sacrifice those at Port aux Basques?

Mr. MacInnis: I have a further supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. This is in line with a question I put to him last spring. Can the hon. gentleman now indicate to the house whether the gauge at the marshalling yards at Port aux Basques will be standardized?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a technical question which I cannot answer offhand.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I put the same question to the minister some months ago and he said I could not make that deduction. That is what he said when I asked him if they would be standardized.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have spent nearly ten minutes on this important subject. Surely we have exhausted it.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): And we are going to have three or four hundred unemployed.

Mr. MacInnis: Unless they standardize the rails at Port aux Basques how are they going to unload the cargo from this particular ferry?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put that question on the order paper?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): There is no point in putting anything on the order paper, because we cannot get answers. I have had a question on the order paper for weeks.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CONSULTATION PROCEDURES RESPECTING DESIGNATED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, and is based on the criticism of his department's achievements at the conference of mayors and municipalities. Will the minister assure us that in future before areas are designated he will improve the consultation procedures as among the department, the local authorities and the provinces; and will he also assure the house that he will take immediate steps in area industrial development to avoid duplication of services that already exists in the provinces?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I saw the newspaper report which no doubt led the hon. member to make this observation. Yesterday I attended throughout the meeting of mayors of municipalities, and the sole reference to designated areas in the presentation of their brief by the mayors of municipalities was limited to an invitation to the area development agency to avail themselves of the advice of the director, Mr. Mooney.

This was an invitation which I gladly accepted yesterday, and I did in fact instruct the area development agency to make use of the services of Mr. Mooney in respect of any ideas he may have in so far as designated areas are concerned. It has been a preoccupation of the officials of the area development agency to avoid duplication or, indeed, any kind of conflict with the provincial area or regional development programs. This has been our policy and will continue to be so.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN POSITION ON ADMISSION OF COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, arising out of a statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday to the Atlantic treaty association. Perhaps I may be permitted to quote one sentence from that statement, as follows:

If we exposed them—

He was speaking of communist China.

If we exposed them more to the views of the rest of the world, we might some day expect a more realistic policy from them. The present isolation of China encourages recurring crises.

I should like to ask the secretary of state whether this is now the official view of the government, and perhaps whether this is an indication of some action that Canada intends to initiate or support at the coming session of the United Nations.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the statement attributed to the Prime Minister yesterday was, of course, a statement which represents government policy, and is in keeping with the statement of government policy announced in this house on May 22. I am sure it commends itself to my hon. friend.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The second part of my question was, does Canada intend to initiate or support some action to bring China into the councils of the world at this session of the United Nations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, of course Canada has now established growing contacts and commercial contacts with communist China. We now have an exchange of newspapermen. As to the course to be taken at the general assembly, I think my hon. friend will appreciate, in view of the importance of this question, that he might wish to examine in greater detail the statement which was made on May 22 in this house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister by way of a supplementary question, and without entering into an argument on the matter of communist China, whether he can give this house the assurance that before any statement of policy is made by the government in this connection, this house will have a day set aside in order to obtain the views generally of all members as of this time, so the government will fully recognize the variety of views that are held in this house in that connection.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, foreign policy, of course, must be achieved initially through executive acts of government, under our parliamentary system. Government policy in this regard is always subject to the scrutiny of parliament. I would hope there will be the fullest opportunity for a discussion of this matter before any action is taken, but the government must always observe its responsibilities in connection with these matters in the light of situations that could develop.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in that volume of words there is still no answer to this question. Recognizing the executive function of government and its responsibility for external affairs, before a decision is made will this house be allowed a day's debate on this question, so important not only to the international world as such but to Canada as well? That was my question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of great importance, and I am sure my right hon. friend would not want to be projecting questions to elicit ill-considered answers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If he did I would be very surprised. I would hope there would be an opportunity to discuss matters of this sort before any action was taken. I am not implying by that remark that there is any immediate action in mind. In the statement I made on May 22 there was a careful analysis of the situation that could develop at the next general assembly, and I suggest to my right hon. friend that he should read that statement and possibly use it as the basis of a question tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I say to my hon. friend that reading it would be to have a source book for questions for the next few weeks absolutely dissimilar one from the other.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's statement in Tokyo that he hoped the government of the United States would be agreeable to some recognition of mainland China, is he or are any of the officials of his department in touch with the United States authorities to ascertain their views regarding either recognition of communist China by Canada or the seating of mainland China in the United Nations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last week, I made no such statement as was attributed to me. The statement was said to have been one made at a private meeting. But I did say to my hon. friend that in the formulation of foreign policy the government, this government or any other government, would take into consideration the position of friendly countries. That is still the position of the government of Canada.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I was not asking the minister a hypothetical question as to what they would do. I asked the minister if actual discussions are or have been going on relative to this subject.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, discussions on these matters are always taking place between interested governments. I had some discussion only the other day about this matter with a representative of a friendly country, and I expect to have one later today. This is part of the job of the external affairs minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Elucidation is part of the job, too.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to address a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would he inform the house whether the reports he receives from our representative on the truce commission in South Viet Nam are identical or similar to those he receives from the United States state department with respect to the interpretation of the development of events in South Viet Nam?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we have naturally had reactions from interested governments on that delicate situation. When we were in Tokyo we asked the representative of Canada on the international control commission to come to Tokyo to discuss the situation with us. These sources of information are very valuable to us in making necessary assessments.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow up one series of questions asked of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. With regard to the discussions that are being held with representatives of friendly countries, would one of those representatives be the senior senator from Arkansas, Senator Fulbright, whose speech in the Senate on April 15 has been widely disseminated?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Senator Fulbright is chairman of the foreign relations committee. He is not a member of the government of the United States. However, I happen to know Senator Fulbright and I would not be averse to talking to him.

Mr. Churchill: What is his opinion?

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the house whether any member nation of the United Nations has stated that it intends to move a motion or to initiate some action for the seating of red China at the next session of the general assembly?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows that negotiations of this kind are confidential. It would be improper for me to say what the representative of another country indicated to me in a private conversation, but these conversations are taking place. Much will depend on the interpretation that is given this problem as to whether it is an important question within the meaning of the charter of the United Nations or whether it is a question that requires only a simple majority vote. I suggest quite seriously to my hon. friend that he look again at the detailed statement on this subject which was made in the month of May.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, now that I have reread his speech of May 22 I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether his statement then holds true today as a declaration of Canada's policy with regard to China. His statement then read as follows:

> We are watching the situation closely and Canadian policy will be predicated on a number of factors.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend would read the analysis of the factors that followed in that speech perhaps he could add an interesting part to his question.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

OTTAWA—POLICY RESPECTING REAL ESTATE TRANSFER FEES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Can the minister tell us if the national capital commission has changed its policy with regard to the transfer of buildings to the city of Ottawa, because it now charges a $100 fee for what it used to do for $1.?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire about this matter because I am not in a position now to answer that question.

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of his statement in the house on March 20 of this year that the government's legislation respecting the Canada development corporation would be, to quote his exact words, "brought forward at the appropriate time", can he say whether the appropriate time has come and, if not, what has happened to this legislation?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that at the appropriate time.

INQUIRY AS TO STOCKPILING OF COBALT ORE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and ask him whether the government has made a final decision as to the amount and price of cobalt ore to be stockpiled this year.

Mr. Speaker: Surely this is a question for the order paper.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF—RECOMMENDATIONS OF ADVISORY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the demand for the minister's resignation that was made at the regular session of the Banff advisory council last evening, could the minister indicate to the house the reason for such action on the part of this responsible body?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will first of all disappoint the hon. member by telling him that I have no intention of resigning. This is an advisory body. In the past we have thought that in these unorganized areas within our parks such bodies were good things. After the decision taken last evening I am going to be more cautious about the advice I accept from that particular body.

Two of the reasons given for the action were that we were running contrary to the Oberlander report, and were running contrary to recommendations of the land use code. On checking into the matter I find that in the allocation of this particular property for a motel we are following the Oberlander report completely, and in addition we are following the advice of the body involved in respect of the zoning plans. So I cannot understand how they can be so ill informed, and I shall be very careful about taking any advice from them in the future.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate whether the development on the Bow river site is in conformity with the recommendations of the Oberlander report with respect to proper land use? Further, could he indicate whether the opinion of the Banff advisory council was not confirmed by the interim development committee?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I want to reply by stating that the Bowview lodge location is not presently zoned for motels, but the location is recommended zoned for motel use in the Oberlander report and the new land use code proposes this location should be zoned for motel use.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, could the minister intimate whether the viewpoint of the Banff advisory council was substantiated by the viewpoint of the interim development committee?

Mr. Laing: No, Mr. Speaker, but the recommendation of the interim development committee was not accepted.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ANNEXATION BY BRITISH COLUMBIA OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question I should like to direct to either the Prime Minister or the minister of northern affairs. I wonder if they are aware of a statement made, I believe yesterday, by Premier Bennett of British Columbia to the effect that British Columbia is now ready to annex the Yukon and Northwest Territories up to the 120th meridian, thus making British Columbia Canada's largest province; and in return he offers the residents of the annexed areas $300 million in road and railway links. If they are aware of this offer by the premier of British Columbia, do they think those concerned should accept?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the statement of the premier of British Columbia. He did not take me into his confidence before making this statement. However, I understand that the convention was treated to high drama at the time. I think there are 23 delegates present, of whom eight came from Alaska.

This is not a new suggestion by any means. My hon. friend may remember that the late great Duff Pattullo of British Columbia once made this suggestion in respect of the Yukon. Premier Bennett appears to be more generous in his territorial ambitions. I do not know the reaction of the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

He is dealing, of course, substantially with the provision of transportation and communication in that area. We are very aware of that, as is indicated by our interest in highways. I should like also to pay tribute to the Canadian National Railways people who for some time have been making a very thorough study of the transportation requirements to develop the resources of that general area as they become available.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is it the intention of the minister to place before the house in the near future any legislation implementing the recommendations of the standing committee on veterans affairs, as adopted by this house last session?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): There will certainly be legislation coming forward, we hope before the end of this session. I will have a report later.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—FAILURE TO APPEAR IN COURT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Has the minister consulted his cabinet colleagues or officials of his department concerning the proceedings which should be taken following Mr. Hal Banks' failure to appear in court yesterday, the date on which his bail expired?

Does the minister or his department intend to take steps besides what has already been done to explain to the Canadian people Mr. Banks' refusal to abide by Canadian law and to ensure the respect of the law in Canada?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I answered yesterday that, as far as the proceedings to be brought before the court of appeal were concerned, counsel for the department had been instructed to ask that, should Mr. Hal Banks not appear in court today after a 24-hour postponement, his appeal be dismissed or rejected. I also said that we had instructed our counsel that, in such a case, they were to start proceedings immediately to have the bond forfeited. Those were their instructions.

I tried to get a report on what was going on in court this morning, but counsel are still held up there. Tomorrow noon, however, I shall be in a position to report, not on whether or not Mr. Banks did appear, but in regard to the proceedings then in progress.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Could the Minister of Justice tell us whether he asked experts of his department to examine the report of the Norris commission to determine whether it would not be possible to lay new charges against Hal Banks which would make him liable to extradition and would compel him to serve his sentence.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, it is clear that a thorough study of this report was made before lodging proceedings against Hal Banks. However, I can promise my hon. friend that I will take into account the comments implied in his question.

LEGISLATION RESPECTING DISSEMINATION OF "HATE" LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. It arises out of newspaper reports concerning a fresh outbreak of anti-semitic literature in Toronto and Hamilton, one of which even goes so far as to claim that the Beatles are a Jewish plot to corrupt the world. Since most of this material is far more scurrilous, and in view of the need for some action, I wanted to ask the minister what progress he is making with the attorneys general of the provinces and their advice on amendments to the Criminal Code to deal with the dissemination of this type of material.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I do not feel it my duty to make any statement on my personal reaction to the performance of the Beatles, or to draw any inferences from comparisons with other people. However, as far as the last part of the question is concerned, I must remind my hon. friend that the answers I gave to these questions in the past have not been related to a conference with the attorneys general of the various provinces. I said that the attorney general of Ontario had undertaken to make a test case if the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were in a position to furnish evidence which would satisfy him that a complaint might be laid. We have not, as yet, been in a position to satisfy the attorney general that any such evidence was available, sufficient to establish at least a plausible identification of an accused with the hate literature. I repeat, there has been no understanding with respect to the holding of a meeting with the attorneys general, but the suggestion is one which I am ready to consider.

Mr. Scott: As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that part of the problem may be that the existing legislation is inadequate to permit successful prosecutions, would the Minister of Justice re-examine the Criminal Code to ascertain whether certain amendments to it would facilitate prosecutions respecting this type of material?

Mr. Favreau: With respect to the last question, Mr. Speaker, I must repeat that this is precisely a study which is presently being continued very actively, and I am also considering other ways and means to achieve the purpose sought, in a manner that would be as efficient and rapid as possible.

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware of the specific distribution of hate literature in the Hamilton area recently? I have received a letter or sample of the literature distributed in the Hamilton area, and I ask whether anything specific is being done to combat this.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition put a question to me which related to that particular literature which, if I am not mistaken, consisted of a blue card with the ill spelling "This is the end". This has been referred to my officers to peruse in their study, in conjunction with the material already gathered.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): As a further supplementary question, in view of the suggestion made some months ago by an interested delegation for an amendment to the Criminal Code in respect to this matter, will the minister advise whether this suggested amendment has been rejected both by himself and by the officials of his department?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, that suggested amendment is one of those which are being considered. So far as I am concerned I am not satisfied that there may not be a better formula to define or to determine, but I must say that that amendment has not been rejected. It is still being studied and looked into, in comparison with other formulas that have been devised.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COURT OF CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Could the right hon. gentleman advise the house whether it is still the intention of the government to establish an Indian claims commission and, if so, could he give us some idea when this is likely to be done?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government to do this and at as early a date as possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIRPORTS

HAMILTON—AVAILABILITY OF FEDERAL FUNDS FOR DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, and I would like to thank him for the answer he gave me yesterday in my absence, with regard to Mount Hope airport. Since then I have found that there is a proposed $7½ million United States airport industry considering the use of Mount Hope airport at Hamilton, and the decision on it will be made by this Friday, thereby making it urgent for the government to reach a decision as to how much will be made available for this airport.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a matter that cannot be decided by the government alone. We are engaged in discussions with the city and there must be a meeting of minds on this matter, but I believe it is very likely to be decided quite soon.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—ACTION FOLLOWING RECENT SINKING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since I am on my feet perhaps I may answer the question I inadvertently failed to answer, which was asked by the hon. member for Three Rivers a week ago today, about the accident to the Tritonica around a year ago. The hon. gentleman asked whether following the inquiry into the sinking:

> —any special change in the routing or the various aid to navigation installations on the St. Lawrence was recommended and, if so, whether such recommendation has been followed by the department.

I am told that the report of the investigation into the sinking of the Tritonica did not contain any recommendations of the type referred to in the hon. gentleman's question, but buoys were immediately placed to mark the site of the wreck, and the intensity of navigation lights was increased to assist vessels to pass safely through the area. We can only regret that notwithstanding these precautions they were not effective in the recent case.

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Could the minister tell us, now that the inquiry by the department into the recent disaster has been concluded, whether it is the intention to order a public inquiry?

Mr. Pickersgill: The answer, sir, is yes.

COMBINES

SUGGESTED CREATION OF MARKETING ADVISORY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that consideration has been given since February to the setting up of a marketing advisory council and the repeal of section 34 of the Combines Investigation Act, can the minister tell me whether his study has been completed and whether any decision has been reached with regard to future action?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): As far as I am concerned, my study of the matter is complete. The reference I intend to make to the cabinet has not yet been made, so for some time this will remain a matter of government policy to be announced as soon as a decision has been taken by my colleagues and myself.

SUGGESTED REVERSION TO NORMAL SITTING HOURS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Perhaps, since the right hon. gentleman has just left, I could address it to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that we undertook to sit longer hours principally to get rid of some urgent legislation before an expected summer recess, would the government now be prepared to give consideration to the suggestion that we revert to normal sitting hours?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nugent: I wish the hon. gentleman would at least take the question as notice.

Hon Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am afraid I did not hear the question; I was thinking about the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Perhaps I could take a look at it.

Mr. Nugent: If the hon. gentleman would take a look at it and answer tomorrow, that would be fine.

CHANGE IN ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR TODAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Before the first item of business is called I think I owe it to the house to advise hon. members of a slight change which will take place in the order of business as announced last evening.

I had announced that we would first proceed with the second reading and committee stage of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, after which we would take the resolution preceding the bill relating to the Crop Insurance Act, to be followed by the resolution preceding the bill with respect to farm machinery syndicates. The order in which these last two resolutions will be taken will be inverted, and after the committee stage of the Farm Improvement Loans Act I will ask the clerk to call the resolution in respect to the farm machinery syndicates.

In view of certain circumstances which have been explained to the leaders of the other parties, I wish to advise the house that I propose, if we get through the committee stage of the farm loans act today, to ask for agreement to proceed with the third reading immediately. I must say I have had no firm answer from the house leaders of the other parties, but I just want to put them on notice that I will make that request.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): With regard to the latter part of the statement made by the leader of the house, let me say that if there are no amendments as we go through that particular bill in committee it may be that the house could proceed to give it third reading; it does not appear to be highly controversial.

However, with regard to the other suggested change may I say that this type of alteration at the last moment is unusual and should not be indulged in without adequate reason being produced. We have made our preparations for the discussion of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the resolution dealing with crop insurance and the farm machinery bill. To alter the order throws out the arrangements by which people who are taking these subjects seriously are prepared to act.

I dislike raising objections to alterations such as this, but I have vivid recollections of a slight change being made several years ago and a storm of criticism descending upon me, some of it from members who are still in the house such as the Minister of Transport, and some from a member of the then opposition who is now over in London.

Are these resolutions not being dealt with by the same minister, the Minister of Agriculture? Could they not stay in the order which was announced last night? There is not much purpose in announcing business the night before if a sudden change is to be brought before the house just before the first item of business is called. I lodge my complaint with regard to this manner of organizing the business of the house. It is surely possible to do it in a better way. Alternatively, let us be given an adequate reason why a change should be necessary.

Mr. Favreau: I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in the kindness of his heart does not wish a storm of protest to be raised against me. I am sorry if a few years ago, if the circumstances were almost the same, there was a storm of protest. Perhaps if I had been here I would have convinced my colleagues not to raise it, but I think there must have been a slight difference in the circumstances.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, the reason for my suggesting this slight change is that in our estimation the farm machinery syndicates matter will probably take less time than the crop insurance question; and second, that this is the type of legislation which if brought to a conclusion will be capable of immediate implementation and application. I think that would be sufficient reason for this slight change, together with the fact that I made it clear that today we would take the two measures, so I take it that in their professional conscience all my hon. friends have duly prepared for both matters.

However, Mr. Speaker, if it is felt that any serious inconvenience will be caused, in the circumstances I am sure the Minister of Agriculture would not mind proceeding in the order announced yesterday. But I think for the benefit of the farmers it would be preferable if we could dispose of the farm machinery syndicates resolution right away.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING LOAN MAXIMUM, AGGREGATE OF GUARANTEED LOANS, ETC.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-119, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, before this bill is passed I would like to make a few remarks with regard to the question of credit generally and how this bill will fit into the credit situation of farmers, and particularly farmers in our area. This bill, of course, doubles the maximum amount that is available under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, from $7,500 to $15,000. This legislation is primarily concerned with the doubling of this amount.

All the credit that is now available to agricultural people in Canada is generally divided into two groups; first, short term lending under the Farm Improvement Loans Act; and second, longer term credit under the Farm Credit Corporation. Both these methods of obtaining credit for our farmers leave a gap, in that they are not well coordinated one to the other and farmers sometimes have a great deal of difficulty securing operating capital because their assets are tied up with either the Farm Credit Corporation or under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I say to the minister right away that personally I agree with the increased amount he is making available to farmers through this legislation, but I think his departmental officials, and those in the economics branch of his department particularly, should be considering some method by which there could be more correlation between the kinds of credit that are available to farmers.

The Farm Credit Corporation of course takes a mortgage and it mortgages everything it can get its hands on, regardless of the amount of the loan. I suppose you cannot blame the officials for this, but this is what they do. Therefore, when the farm operator goes to the bank to try to obtain operating capital for his immediate needs, the bank has nothing left that it can take in security or hold, even where it can hold title rather than take chattel mortgages; and of course they cannot do this except under section 88 of the Bank Act.

It is a hardship on farmers when both these things tie up their assets so they cannot obtain additional operating capital which they need on a short term basis. I would also like to point out to the minister that with respect to the Farm Improvement Loans Act we depend upon the activities and policies of the chartered banks to make this money available. We have had several occasions in western Canada when the president of the chartered bank has said "We are not going to give these loans; we are going to tighten up on our funds". The first people to get hurt are the farmers who are trying to borrow money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act because, of course, the bank makes less money on this type of loan than it does on some other types.

It has happened on occasion that the local bankers in the farming communities have received instructions from their head offices regarding the maximum amount of loan that is set out in the legislation. These managers have been told "You are not to make farm improvement loans over $2,000". I have seen letters to this effect that branch managers have shown me. On occasion farmers have had their programs approved by the bank; then the head office of the bank has sent out a circular to the managers saying "We are not going to lend any more money in farm improvement loans". In this case our farmers have not received the loans for which they have applied.

It is vitally important, if we are to pass this kind of legislation, that we have the cooperation of the banking fraternity in order to make it effective. It is no use at all doubling the amount available under the Farm Improvement Loans Act if the bankers are not going to go along with it. I would hope the minister would make sure that he gets in touch with our banks, because they have made a practice over the years, particularly in western Canada, of cutting off the farmer first of all and worrying about him the least. This of course was the reason for the whole system of farm credit and farm improvement loans being put into operation in the first place; it was because our banks were not looking after the credit needs of the people in agriculture. There is hardly any point in passing legislation to double the maximum amount available if the bankers are not going to make this credit available.

An hon. Member: Why wouldn't they?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Because they have done it before in situations of tight money, and they will do it again. The bank managers receive instructions from their head offices to cut down on the farm improvement loans because they are not making any money on them. They have done this under previous Liberal regimes and they did it also when our party was in power. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I have seen letters from the head offices telling the branch managers not to make any farm improvement loans of over $2,000. What is the point of passing legislation providing that the maximum loan available shall be $15,000 if the banks are giving instructions to their managers to curtail the amount of farm improvement loans? To my mind this is the very essence of the legislation. If the banks are going to go along with this program, fine and dandy. If they are not, we are just putting it on paper for nothing.

I would like to know from the minister whether he has had discussions with the chartered banks association and whether they will go along with this program. It is fine and dandy to pass legislation and then go home and tell our farmers, "There is now a maximum amount of $15,000 that is available in loans", but then when the farmer goes into the bank and asks the manager for a loan he finds he will only give him $5,000. There is not much point in passing this legislation unless the banks are prepared to co-operate in this respect.

I would ask the minister again whether he has had any discussions with the chartered banks in this regard. Are they going to make this maximum of $15,000 workable? Are they going to start giving $15,000 in loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act? If they are not, I would point out that not very many farmers in my area have been able to obtain the maximum that is provided already.

The minister may well stand in his place and say that perhaps the farmers do not have sufficient assets to enable them to apply for loans, but it is not a question of assets at all. It is a question of bank policy, and that policy is set by the head offices of the banks which are located primarily in eastern Canada. I suggest the very crux of whether this legislation is going to be worth even passing is whether the banks are going to do the job once we do pass it. We are dependant upon the banks to do so, and in the past they have let us down on more than one occasion when it was vitally important to obtain additional money.

I recall that the last time the banks let the farmers down was during a period when the crops were under snow in western Canada. At that time the bank managers were receiving notices from their head offices directing them to curtail farm loans. Under those circumstances, when the farmer needs money he is not able to get it, in spite of legislation passed by this government.

Mr. Benidickson: Can you tell us the year of that occurrence?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): That situation occurred in 1962. That was a time when farmers desperately needed credit but the banks were curtailing loans under this legislation, when the maximum loan presumably available was less than the proposed $15,000. Bank managers followed this course on numerous occasions before the one I mentioned. They adopted this attitude in 1956, and I am sure will do so again unless the minister uses his power and that of the government to stop them from doing so. I think the minister should discuss this situation with the head offices of banks in an attempt to ascertain whether they are going to go along with this proposed increase.

Mr. Speaker, I should like again to refer to the other point I made reference to, regarding the tying up of farmers' assets. When a farmer makes a loan under this legislation his assets are tied up and he is unable to obtain bank credit for immediate needs when he finds it vitally necessary to obtain that credit. The farm improvement loans legislation is primarily aimed at intermediate credit, whereas farm credit legislation is aimed at long term credit. On many occasions a farmer finds it necessary to obtain immediate bank credit for day to day operations.

As one can readily see, there are three different categories of bank credit, treated in three different ways. A farmer may have obtained a loan through the Farm Credit Corporation and at the same time have a mortgage on his land, his machinery and perhaps his cattle. If he goes to the bank to get more bank credit of course he is unsuccessful, because his assets are all tied up.

We can propose legislation, put it on the order paper, debate it, pass it and have it become law, but that does not necessarily mean it will be operative. We must have some assurance from the banks that the purpose envisaged by this proposed increase will be understood and carried out by the banks, and I should like the Minister of Agriculture to make some comment in respect of whether he has had any discussions with the heads of chartered banks in this regard, and whether he can give us some assurance that they are going to help to make this proposed legislation work efficiently.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, while we are faced with this legislation at the present time I think all hon. members would be remiss if they scrutinized it just in the narrow context of farm loan legislation. I speak particularly at this time for eastern Canadian farmers, and it is my hope that this is not just one isolated piece of legislation but part of the government's larger and broader plan to keep farmers on larger, more economically productive farm units.

The minister said some days ago in this house that eastern Canadian dairy farmers were better off than they had been for 15 years, and he repeated that on two occasions. Mr. Speaker, that is just not the fact. While it is very interesting for us by this legislation to increase the loan limit to $15,000, many eastern farmers today cannot avail themselves of even the amount presently available. Many farmers in eastern Canada are abandoning their farms, particularly in my area, in spite of the minister's statement that the dairy farmers are well off in eastern Canada. Many of those farmers will be interested in finding out about even a few instances of loans being obtained up to the $15,000 limit under this new legislation.

I suggest this legislation will not be meaningful to many farmers in eastern Canada unless this government commences to make ARDA work. I do not intend to get into an argument on semantics as to whether the Minister of Forestry, with his responsibility for ARDA, is the eastern minister of agriculture. I do not intend to go to any great length in this chamber today to criticize the present government for not getting ARDA working faster and more efficiently in the province of Quebec; because while Ottawa and Quebec wrangle and argue, the plight of the eastern farmer, who so often is abandoning his farm at the present time, does not get any better. I simply say that unless much greater impetus is given to ARDA than has been given by the government in the past, and unless the Minister of Agriculture contacts the Minister of Forestry, who is now in charge of ARDA, and instructs him to get things moving in the province of Quebec at a much faster rate, this legislation before the House of Commons at the present time will not have much meaning to many eastern farmers.

Mr. Speaker, following the statements made by the minister in this house a number of days ago in respect of the improved position of eastern dairy farmers, I visited some farm fairs in my area, and through discussion of the situation with farmers I have ascertained that they are distressed by the fact that someone has apparently informed the minister that they are better off today than they have been for the past 15 years.

This present legislation, coupled with improved ARDA legislation, I hope will enable the Minister of Industry and the Minister of Finance, in co-operation with the Minister of Agriculture, to assist and encourage farmers to stay on larger farm units which are more economically viable. I hope this present legislation is not an isolated shot in the dark piece of legislation, but that it is well thought out within an integrated plan.

Mr. Speaker, I hope we will see the immediate establishment of vocational training schools in rural areas, because obviously when farms become automated and larger, young people tend to leave them. I hope the government will encourage young people to attend vocational schools in rural areas in order that when they leave the farms they will be trained and able to take their place in industry. I firmly believe it is part of the government's long term plan to keep farmers on larger farm units, and I hope this plan will be worked out in conjunction with a plan to increase vocational guidance and training in rural areas.

I hope the Minister of Industry will also consider, in respect of his area designation program, that tax incentives should be provided in rural areas for the establishment of light and medium manufacturing industries, and that tax incentives should be provided to companies which decide to retrain workers within their own plants and shops.

I am simply saying that while I support this legislation, it will not be effective by itself. I cannot see it will do much good in the long, short or immediate term picture unless it is integrated—call it indicative planning, if you will—with an over-all plan for agriculture in the east. As I said, eastern farmers are not now taking advantage of the present loan limits under this legislation, and because of the generally disastrous situation facing them many have been forced to abandon their farms.

I hope this legislation will be combined with a much greater emphasis on the ARDA legislation than we have seen up to the present time. I hope it is combined with an increase in the building of vocational training schools in rural areas. Again I say that I think the Minister of Industry in his designated area plans can certainly consider the possibility of tax incentives to medium and light industries which decide to establish in depressed rural areas in the east. I also think the Minister of Finance could seriously consider the giving of tax incentives to industries which will retrain workers in light or medium manufacturing industries in rural areas.

While the assumption is that legislation like this will encourage farmers to remain on more economically productive farm units, we must be realistic and recognize that their sons and grandsons will often be obliged to leave the farms. While this may have to take place, we should make it as attractive as possible in every way for them to remain in rural areas. It is all very well for us at this stage of the scientific revolution to talk about mobility of workers and the necessity for workers and farmers to be willing to move. I understand this. Certainly in an industrial context it is most necessary that many industrial workers and also office workers be willing to be mobile and move in order to advance themselves. The same thing can very often be said of agricultural workers, but at the same time that should not remove from us in Ottawa the responsibility to make it as attractive as possible for our rural people to remain in a rural environment if they so wish.

I hope again that nobody who votes for this legislation will think it is going to work an overnight miracle for eastern farmers, in spite of the fact that the minister says the eastern dairy farmer is better off today than he has been for 15 years.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, ever since the present government came into office we have been waiting for the government and particularly the Minister of Agriculture to outline the agricultural program that the government intends to pursue. Various amending bills have been brought in which deal with the periphery of the problem, but we have had no indication that the government is either bringing in or contemplates bringing in any legislation which will grapple with the fundamental problem facing the farmers of Canada.

I think it has to be understood that agriculture today and for the past quarter of a century has been passing through the same kind of technological revolution which confronted industry in the past century. We have seen tremendous changes in agriculture because of the introduction of new agricultural machinery, new methods of farming, the use of electric power on the farms, new varieties of seed and new types of livestock. The result is that the agricultural population has been declining steadily while agricultural production has been going up.

The 1931 census showed that over 30 per cent of the population of Canada lived on farms. In 1961 this had dropped to 11 per cent. This means that a little over 30 years ago one Canadian out of every three lived on a farm. Today only one Canadian out of every nine lives on a farm. In terms of the labour force there has been a tremendous change and shift in population. Prior to world war II about a million and a quarter persons were in the farm labour force. This has now declined to 650,000, or one tenth of the labour force of Canada. In other words, out of the total labour force only one person in 10 is engaged in agriculture.

The amazing thing is that side by side with this decline in farm population and the farm labour force we have had a tremendous increase in production. Every once in a while we hear some swivel chair farmer saying that the problem of agriculture is that it has to become more efficient. There is no industry in Canada which has increased its productivity at the phenomenal rate which has been achieved by the farmers.

It is estimated that prior to the war one farm worker fed between 10 and 12 persons. Present figures indicate that every person working on a farm feeds about 30 individuals. This is a fantastic increase in productivity. The increase has not been in terms of quantity of goods only, but also in terms of quality of goods, because there has been a great increase in the quality of production. This has been brought about by increasing the size of farms and by the use of expensive machinery which makes it possible for fewer individuals to farm more land and produce more farm produce. No matter what branch of agriculture one investigates one finds that without fail productivity per worker has risen at a very considerable rate.

Alongside this increased productivity a great many problems have been created. Because farms are bigger, and because more expensive equipment is required, the capital investment for land, machinery and equipment per farm unit has increased tremendously. The time has passed when a person with four horses, a cow and a few chickens can start farming. Farming requires a very considerable amount of capital if the farmer is to operate an economic farm unit. Therefore parliament is well advised to give what assistance it can in the field of providing capital.

We have already done this by amendments to the Farm Credit Act. We are now dealing with the Farm Improvement Loans Act, doubling the amount of money which a farmer may borrow from a bank under this legislation from $7,500 to $15,000, as well as increasing the gross amount which may be borrowed during the present period and increasing the total amount which the government may guarantee under the new period which terminates at the end of June, 1968.

No one can quarrel for a moment with the suggestion the government has made that we should make greater amounts of capital available to farmers for the purchase of land, the purchase of machinery or for the improvement of their buildings and their equipment. I think this is a commendable piece of legislation. However, there is a point I want to make, and I make it with reference to this legislation and equally with reference to the legislation which has to do with the setting up of farm machinery syndicates. Heaven only knows where the minister got the name "syndicates", but we will deal with that when we come to the legislation.

The point I want to make is that legislation making it possible for a farmer to borrow more money to meet his capital needs, legislation to help him make the best use of his machinery, does not even begin to grapple with the central problem that faces the farmer. Almost every speech I have heard the Minister of Agriculture make when introducing legislation or his estimates has stressed the thought that if the farmer got more capital, if he has a larger economic unit, if he improved his livestock or the varieties of seed he uses, this would solve the problem of the Canadian farmer.

No one will deny, Mr. Speaker, that there is value in helping the farmer get increased capital or helping him improve his farming methods or make better use of farm machinery. However, none of these things grapple with the central problem, and the central problem facing the Canadian farmer today is the problem of farm income. Until we come to grips with this problem we are just playing around with the agricultural situation.

One has only to look at two sets of figures to realize how serious the farm income problem is. The dominion bureau of statistics has made all the figures available, and the last figures just came in this morning. If one looks at the index for the prices of agricultural products, one will find that the index commodity figure in 1951 was 296.8. This figure has been declining steadily until in 1961 it reached 261.2. By 1963 it had declined to 259.3. The figures which have just become available today show that as at January 1, 1964 the index figure for agricultural prices was 252.1. From the base year 1951 to 1964 the agriculture price indices have dropped by 44.7 points, and that is a catastrophic drop in the price which the farmer receives for the products he has to sell.

During the same period there has been an alarming increase in the prices which the farmer has been required to pay for the commodities and services which he must buy in order to produce. The dominion bureau of statistics shows that in 1951 the index commodity figure for the goods and services which the farmer purchases stood at 230. By 1962 this figure had risen to 290.8 and by 1963 it had risen to 298.7. As of January 1 of this year the figure was 299.6. This represents an increase from 1951 to 1964 of 66 points in the index commodity figure for the prices of the goods which the farmer must buy in order to stay in business.

If one looks at the income figures, the dominion bureau of statistics prices and price indices, one finds some very interesting facts. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture in its July bulletin prints these figures and makes some comments thereon. They say that:

> —the returns of the average Canadian farm operator for his labour and for his capital investment are only slightly higher, (7.8 per cent) in 1963 than in 1949, while real wages to wage earners have gone up 40 per cent.

They go on to say that:

> —the prices of commodities and services used by farmers have gone up consistently since 1949, and in 1963 farm costs showed an increase of about 40 per cent over 1949.

Now, while this report says the average Canadian operator has received 7.8 per cent more in 1963 than he did in 1949, that is in current dollars. If we look at the table put out by the dominion bureau of statistics we find that the realized net farm income in current dollars in 1949 was $1,513,900,000. In 1962 this had declined to $1,490,700,000. The estimate for 1963 is $1,410,200,000.

But if we take the realized farm income in constant dollars and adjust the income each year for price changes, we find that in 1949 the farmers received $1,513,900,000, and by 1959 this had dropped to $977 million. By 1962 this had risen again to $1,074,700,000, and the estimate for 1963 is $986,700,000. In constant dollars, therefore, the realizable net farm income from 1949 to 1963 had dropped from $1,513,900,000 to $986,700,000. If we base this on the average income per operator, during the period from 1949 to 1963 we find that, in 1949 the average income per operator was $2,283, and by 1963 it had risen to $3,519. That is in current dollars, but if we squeeze out the water and make adjustment for price changes, the income per farm operator only went up from $2,283 in 1949 to $2,462 in 1963.

No industry can possibly stay in business when over a 15 year period, the price of the goods it sells drops by 44 points while the price of the things it has to buy rises by 66 points. No industry whose costs are rising can stay in business when its net realizable income in constant dollars drops in a 15 year period from $1½ billion to $986 million. This is the real problem that faces agriculture.

Research, improved strains, better livestock, more modern machinery, larger farm units, ready access to capital, all of these are important but none of them will solve the agricultural problem until the government tackles the question of farm income.

So long as the farmer is caught in a cost price squeeze, so long as he finds the price of everything he has to sell going down while the price of everything he has to buy goes up, and goes up at an alarming rate, then he is doomed to eventual bankruptcy. Lending him money which he has to repay with interest is not going to solve his problem, unless there is some hope that the realizable income he gets will enable him to pay off these loans, and pay his taxes and meet his other costs.

I rose, Mr. Speaker, merely for the purpose of saying that we in the New Democratic party support any measure that will enable farmers to get credit for improving their farms and extending their operations, but we urge the government to bring down some policy to deal with the real farm problem, the problem of farm income, to get the farmer out of the cost price squeeze, to do something about farm costs which are going up, and about farm prices which are going down. Unless the government tackles this problem it is just playing around.

We have had no indication from the Minister of Agriculture that he is even seized of this problem, that he is even conscious there is a problem about farm income, and unless the government does appreciate this problem, tackles it and brings down legislation to provide the farmers with adequate income in relation to their increasing costs, then we are going to continue to have people leaving the farms. We will continue to have farmers going bankrupt, and to have agriculture as one of the depressed industries in this country.

In days gone by we had industrial black areas. Today industry is experiencing a period of boom, but it is a period of industrial boom which surrounds areas of agricultural depression.

We have cities that are growing and expanding, but our rural areas are going back, and they are going back because the farmers' income will not meet their costs of production and enable them to stay on the farms as efficient producers. Unless the government wakes up to this problem and tackles it, the problem will get worse.

We are not satisfied in this parliament to have the government hand out the soothing syrup, that if only we have more agricultural research and improved livestock strains and better varieties of seed, all our farm problems will disappear. They will not disappear until the government faces up to the problem of the inadequacy of farm income.

Today farmers find that most of the commodities they produce go into the export market where they must be sold in competition, without any protection, without the farmer having any control over the price at which they will be sold. At the same time that the farmer is selling in an unprotected market he is buying in a protected market where almost everything that he purchases has its price set by someone else. That is why he pays more for his machinery and gets less for his products. That is why the farmer is finding it increasingly difficult to meet his outstanding obligations.

We in this party will keep on pressing the government to face up to the problem of agricultural income and, if it does not face up to it, then we will certainly raise our voice repeatedly until the government either admits that it does not know what to do or is not going to do it, or finally resolves to tackle this problem and undertake the only kind of program, that can make agriculture a viable economy, and that is to put the farmers back on their feet and enable them to operate efficiently and to live comfortably on their farms.

The government has to do something about the problem of agricultural income. If it fails to do so the responsibility will lie with it, and the farmers will not be slow to recognize the government's negligence in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, my first words in taking part in this debate are to say that I am not an expert in agriculture, far from it, but coming from an area where agriculture constitutes an important factor in the economy, I think it is my duty to speak in the house on behalf of the thousands of farmers from my area as well as from the province of Quebec in general.

We have before us a government bill providing for an increase in credit facilities available to farmers. If I look up the order paper, I note that two other measures concerning agriculture are to be considered shortly; both deal also with the need to increase credit available to farmers. In my opinion, this is a serious symptom of what seems to be a lasting disorder. I wonder whether we have the right formula to cure that disorder.

There is a desire to help farmers by all means but the only concrete measures which have been offered till now were all meant to get the farmers more deeply into debt by urging him to invest more in a unit which is already recognized as uneconomic, precisely because it is impossible for the farmer to produce at a cost which would leave him a profit at current market prices.

As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) who just resumed his seat said so well, I think that the farmers whom we now advise to increase their production have proved more than any other sector of our economy that they had anticipated this amazing development of productivity at all levels.

I believe, and there is conclusive evidence to support this statement, that farmers were among the first to improve their production, not only in quantity and in quality, as was stated by the previous speaker, but also in variety, since today, in Canada, they offer a great variety of meat, vegetable, fruit and all other farm products. I think we pay a tribute to the farmers when we recognize the tremendous contribution they made to the economy of this country and also the countless goods they supplied to us through their labour and initiative.

But I think we have not yet found a solution to their problems. I think it is somewhat as desperate people that farmers are now looking up to us. They are wondering whether they really knocked at the right door to get a solution to their problems.

What are we offering them? Easier credit. There is the evidence that they do not have enough income, since we have to offer them sources of cheap money and to guarantee their borrowings.

Is that not proof that their profession today is considered by lenders as not offering enough guarantee, since we feel that the government has to become a surety for them with the banks and other institutions? I think such a situation is really abnormal. I wonder if you will find now in industry firms with a capital investment of $50,000 to $60,000 which get so little income on an annual basis?

I think that it is in that particular area that we will have to work most; we will have to make the Canadian people understand that they must pay a fair price for the work done by the farmer to produce.

We are ready to pay, in the automobile industry, the manufacturing price plus a certain profit and I cannot understand that the Canadian people do not accept to pay a just and fair price for the farmer's production, although they accept to do it for any manufactured product.

I think that farm production is the very basis of life and that the population must accept to pay a just and fair price for it. At the present time the farmer is in our country the worker who gets the lowest pay for his work.

In my opinion, that is the problem and it is not by providing farmers with credit to enable them to purchase equipment or to enlarge their farms that we will remedy the situation. We are forgetting that the basic problem is one of marketing and of adequate prices for farm products.

It is said that farmers now work for 10 to 15 cents an hour. That is fantastic. A floor sweeper in a plant gets from $2 to $2.25 an hour for unimportant work which, for all practical purposes, requires no special qualification or skills. In comparison with such a salary, the income of the farmer who must support his family is just simply ridiculous. That is why so many farmers leave the farm for the city; they realize that people who have absolutely no qualifications earn much more than they do after a whole year during which their wives and children have worked hard for 10, 12 and 18 hours a day.

We will surely vote in favour of Bill No. C-119 which is before us but that legislation is only a partial solution to the problems of the agricultural industry. When the act was passed in 1945, it certainly met a need and it will definitely be useful for farmers to see the amount of loans available for the purchase of machinery raised from $7,500 to $15,000. However, there is a slight problem that has been brought to my attention by farmers and I should like to speak about it because it concerns the whole field of agriculture.

Nowadays farmers are being asked to diversify their crops. Naturally that calls for the purchase of machinery and farmers are extended the necessary credit to make the additional investment.

But there is another problem. When they want to buy machinery, they can get a loan from the bank, because the latter gets a lien on the machinery bought and knows moreover that the federal government guarantees reimbursement of the loan. The bank is thus assured that it will not lose anything and the only person who has no such assurance is once again the farmer. The bank has no problem, since it does not run any risk, it does not do any work; on the other hand, the farmer takes all the risks, he is responsible and must work to meet his obligations at the end of the year.

He is the only one under our financial system who is not insured, whose income is not guaranteed. The bank has been assured that it would get 6 per cent interest. There is no doubt that the banks do not want to take any risk; they do not even take the risk of working, they will surely not run the risk of losing money, but the farmer must assume every risk.

When the farmer wants to buy farm equipment, he can do so through this legislation and in order to improve his situation, he is actually asked to diversify his production or to specialize in some field. To this end, farmers must have their production financed on an almost annual basis. In the spring, they must obtain the necessary credit in order to purchase seed grain, lime, fertilizers; they need credit to buy feed grain so as to feed their cattle all through summer and until fall. At present, this type of credit is not available from the banks, which are unwilling to take any chance, because there is actually a risk in that case, since the government does not provide any guarantee. And the banks cannot mortgage the future production, because nobody can guarantee it. Since he is unable to secure a loan on those conditions, the farmer must apply to private institutions, and sometimes even to more or less honest money lenders. In most cases, he has to obtain credit from the large milling enterprises. One knows what it means: farmers must get their feed grain by signing a contract with a mill and commit themselves to buy all their grain there all through summer and until fall. At that time, they unload their crop on the market without knowing its value in advance. There again, mills take no chances, but the farmers run all the risks and have to repay the loans in the fall. If not, they will be dispossessed of everything they own.

Then, I think that if we really want farmers to profit by this legislation, loans granted by a bank should be guaranteed, because under our present system, the bank cannot lose. But I do not see why we could not take another step forward and guarantee to the banks that they will not lose any money if they grant reasonable loans to farmers to finance their needs throughout the summer until harvest time in autumn.

We should accept that first step, since we have already accepted the principle of guaranteed loans to banks. We should guarantee those loans to banks to enable farmers to elude the control of large millers, enjoy a greater independence and get their feed grain at cheaper prices. In other words, they would be free. They would not be compelled to buy solely from dealers who in most cases are taking unfair advantage of them.

I think that this is the main argument I wanted to develop in my contribution to this debate this afternoon, in short, we should guarantee loans granted by banks to farmers to finance their purchases throughout the year up to harvest time in autumn, in the hope that the farmer would have enough money to his credit to finance his purchases during the year and thus avoid paying 6 per cent interest since, in my opinion, he thus loses any profit realized during the year. Of course, with our present system, this will not come about tomorrow.

So, the solution to this problem would be to ensure for farm products a fair price which would cover production costs plus a reasonable profit as any other production in any other industrial field. Agriculture is a basic industry and therefore it is our responsibility today to see to it that farm products are marketed at a reasonable and fair price.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would have a few comments to make before the bill is read for the second time. I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) is in his seat and I should like to bring to his attention once more the problem of agriculture in Quebec and particularly in the area I represent.

The minister will perhaps be a bit annoyed at always hearing members from the province of Quebec speak on the agricultural needs of Quebec. However, 30, 35 or 40 years ago members from the west were heard stating the needs of western agriculture. I note that the needs of the eastern farmers today are about the same as those of the western farmers, 35 or 40 years ago.

Today, I would like to try a bringing together by trying to have the Minister or Agriculture enter the province of Quebec, and there examine and at least understand the needs of Quebec farmers.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the present crisis in Quebec agriculture must be solved through the united efforts of farmers and of the governments.

Farmers should be helped primarily by their respective provincial governments but, inasmuch as our present system forces us to ask Ottawa, for the funds required to fill the gap left by the provincial government, we have to ask the federal government, no matter how reluctantly, to do something to help Quebec farmers.

Mr. Speaker, our provincial government cannot, by itself, solve the problem which exists today, for the simple reason that it lacks the necessary income. That is why we urge the federal government to act as quickly as possible, so it will not let our Quebec agriculture collapse once and for all.

Today Bill No. C-119 is introduced with a view to increasing farm improvement loans.

Mr. Speaker, I must admit very frankly that the reading of this bill leaves me quite puzzled, because I wonder if the government sincerely wants to assist the farmer by increasing—

[Text]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member who has the floor at the present time is delivering in French a speech for which I believe he has made a great deal of preparation, yet across the way we have the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) not listening to this speech—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nasserden: —conversing with those on the other side of the house and laughing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member realizes that is not a point of order at all.

Mr. Nasserden: I think it is a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because we all know the minister did not have the earpiece on, and he cannot understand French.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member thinks it is a point of order perhaps he would refer the Chair to the particular standing order to which he is referring.

Mr. Scott: Section 1.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier).

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I could see that the minister was talking with other members, but I was under the impression that he was consulting his colleagues in order to know whether Quebec agriculture still concerned them. That is why I let him go on. I think he will get good advice, because I know those with whom he speaks now and I know they can give him most profitable suggestions for Quebec agriculture. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, those two members are from Ontario and they know Quebec very well, I presume.

I see the Minister of Agriculture has left the house; he will probably consult Quebeckers, which may be more favourable to agriculture in Quebec.

I am not against the increase proposed in Bill No. C-119, but I wonder seriously whether the fact of increasing the loan from $7,500 to $15,000 will really be profitable for Quebec farmers.

One must have lived in our area and accompanied some Quebec farmers to our chartered banks to know the difficulty they experience when they want to borrow $1,000 or $2,000.

Mr. Speaker, is it sincerely believed—as far as I am concerned, I do not believe it at all, take my word for it—that in the coming months or years, farmers will dare borrow up to $15,000 from chartered banks? This is impossible in 98 per cent of the cases in the province of Quebec, especially when one knows all the investigations conducted by the banks in connection with such loans and all the guarantees they require. In fact some banks require as collateral more than three or four times the amount of money they are risking by granting some loans to farmers.

I know beforehand that in 98 per cent of the cases, this bill will not be to the advantage of our farmers in the province of Quebec, not because the legislation is not good, but rather because the chartered banks are the only judges, in brief, the ultimate judges in all these loans, just like they are for all the transactions they enter into with the farmers.

It is all very well to say in this house that we grant loans to farmers, and we do this and that in order to allow our farmers to get into debt. But what are we actually doing? We are simply acting as sales agents between the chartered banks and our farmers. That is all we are doing in this house. We incite the farmers to get into debt with the chartered banks. Moreover, the government guarantees such loans, not in order that the farmers may not lose anything, but above all in order that the chartered banks may not lose anything.

The federal government guarantees the loans, and we are asking our farmers to get into debt so that two, three, four or at the most ten years from now, their properties will not belong to them any more and they will be so indebted that they will have to sell everything and seek refuge in the city.

Furthermore, I have had occasion to witness this in numerous cases, as far as loans from the Farm Credit Corporation are concerned. As a matter of fact, some farm loan counsellors, seemingly competent, told a farmer who owned four lots and more than 250 acres of land under cultivation: "You had better sell your farm and go to the city". I have heard that dreadful remark with my own ears and I would like to draw it to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture who, once again, unfortunately, is not in the house. However, I hope he will read my remarks, for I have already pointed out to the house the doings of certain farm loan counsellors whom I had qualified as not being serious, as amateurs, as people who sometimes are touring the country with their wives telling this or that farmer who has no gravel yard or no sidewalk in front of his house: "You are too poor to obtain a loan, go to the city".

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that as long as we have that kind of men and, as I said in one of my articles, men from the cities trying to show the farmers how to live on a farm, we shall always be faced with failures such as the one we are encountering at present. And this will last until the government awaken and realize that they must send competent technical advisers to the farmers so as to see that these loans will enable them to live, for some years at least, on their farms.

Mr. Speaker, I said a while ago that we were merely selling agents. I am asking the government to try, at least in that capacity, to have their say with the banks as far as these loans are concerned.

It has often been claimed that the government controls the banks. This is 8 per cent true. Now, the government might at least control them in so far as directing them to give the farmers a fairer deal.

Moreover, if the government undertakes to guarantee farm improvement loans it should see to it that the farmer who needs only $4,000, $5,000 or $6,000 to raise the yield of his farm by 50 per cent, obtains those sums. At present, the bank manager will offer him only $2,000, whereas he needs $5,000 or $6,000. That is a way of refusing a loan, because the farmer is bright enough to know that a $2,000 loan will often put him in a worse position than before.

For instance, a farmer wants to develop a business of his own—I say of his own, because I am not speaking of such business firms as exist at this time in my country, such as commercial hatcheries, piggeries, flour mills, or any other large animal producing business making a good profit. Indeed, at the end of the year, when the farmers have worked hard, night and day, for those companies, they find that they have earned a salary of about $1800 to $1900 to maintain a family of 10 or 12 children. And we think that this is fine. And we leave the entire control to those large companies or mills which establish profit-making farm production here and there. And then, we are told in this parliament: All is well, farm production is increasing. We are told that it is increasing, but it is always to the advantage of the centralizer, the capitalist, and not of the small farmer.

Mr. Speaker, we in Quebec are able to produce. But I say, even if it should surprise some people, that the crucial point, in Quebec farming today, is not necessarily to accelerate production. To my mind, the capital question is marketing.

I was brought up on a farm, and I know that the farmer's problem in the fall consists in disposing of his products at a reasonable price.

If today we may congratulate ourselves that there is prosperity in the west, it is mainly for this reason: Not only is western production very large, but its marketing is excellent. The west succeeded in establishing the Canadian wheat board, with the help of the governments. Should the Canadian wheat board be abolished in that part of Canada, I am sure that the living standard of our western farmers would decline by 50 per cent.

What do we really need in Quebec? A sound marketing policy so that farmers can be sure that they will sell their products at an economic price.

I am sure that when we have succeeded in giving Quebec a sound marketing policy with economic prices, Quebec farmers will not be reluctant to produce, production will come automatically and in large quantity, as is the case in the west.

Look at the variety of farm produce in the province of Quebec. In a few years, thanks to this marketing policy and government help, the producer will be more prosperous. It is what has taken place in the west. When the Canadian wheat board was set up, farmers made an effort and that effort was supported.

In my area, I know several groups which work hard, but their efforts are supported neither by the provincial government nor by the federal government. And I must say that in this field the work of the provincial government in co-operation with the federal government is badly directed.

I will give only one example: the blueberry farm program under ARDA. One after the other, the federal and provincial ministers visit the area and say: We have invested more than $3 million in blueberry farms; look how wonderful it is.

Precisely, Mr. Speaker, this is the mistake that is made. Production and overproduction are looked after, and no attention is given first to marketing.

We have set up more than 14 or 15 of these blueberry areas. But, try to find out anything about them. Nobody dares mention them, because nothing has been produced. There has not been anything other than the personal efforts of those who worked for the marketing.

If, this year, blueberries sold a little better, it is due to the fact that two or three private organizations took the matter in hand—and I want to say it in this house—without any kind of help from any government, while we spent $3 million—I am not the one to say it, Mr. Speaker, it is the ministers—in an attempt to set up blueberry patches. However, there was not a cent spent for marketing, not one cent.

I just heard a remark. Since farming now comes under forestry, I say to the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) that it would have been better for him to appropriate $1.5 million for marketing and $1.5 million for the development of blueberry fields, in order to help those already operating blueberry fields, instead of systematically destroying the forests.

Tremendous projects have been set up lately. Trees are cut down over hundreds of acres of forest lands in order to grow blueberries. Exactly the opposite should be done. Those who were entrusted with this problem know nothing about blueberries and therefore, they were unsuccessful this year, because out of 14 blueberry fields, not one yielded a profitable crop.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member now speaking should not be concerned that he is straying a little from the matter now before us, that is the Farm Improvement Loans Act?

Mr. Gauthier: I was just going to stop dealing with that point, because I was thinking that my example was perhaps a little too long. So I will come back to the bill now before us, that is the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

[Text]

Mr. Byrne: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member was not trying to get the attention of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who does not seem to be interested in the discussion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Roberval.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I only wish to prove to the house that if loans are to be granted to improve the lot of Quebec farmers, they would be more beneficial if at least half of them were meant to assist the farmer in organizing the marketing of his products on a solid basis. This is the particular matter to which I want to call the attention of this house.

Let us stop getting farmers to run into debt, let us stop looking at only one side of the picture while we completely forget the other, which is much more important than to be willing to grant loans.

Our farmers do not need loans, they need substantial assistance instead. I figure it would be much better to take 50 per cent of the amount allocated and hand them out as subsidies, instead of continuing to burden the farmers with more debts.

You can boast all you want, throughout the province, about the help you are giving farmers, but I maintain you are only helping them temporarily and that, in its present form, that assistance is harmful to them. When you truly and sincerely want to help somebody, you give him something.

Here, I should like to touch upon a subject about which farmers feel very strongly. I shall not wander too much from the resolution and, in any case, I shall come back to it in a few seconds.

I should like to deal with farm machinery. Here again the Minister of Agriculture should take whatever steps are necessary to try to reduce the price of farm machinery which the farmers need to operate their farms.

Coming back, now, to farm improvement loans, I will say that if we continue, through chartered banks, to make loans to farmers, thus getting them deeper into debt, we are simply playing into the hands of the financiers. The final solution to the whole problem, as regards both farm improvement and the Farm Credit Corporation, would simply be to decide once and for all to set up a special fund to make loans which would really help the farmer. That fund will be made available, even for marketing, through the facilities of the Bank of Canada. Let us stop lending through private banks, that is chartered banks; let us stop always depending on them to try and get our economy moving. In advance, we are sure that chartered banks will start moving their own economy before the economy of the country.

We have a bank in this country, an institution that belongs to us. Why not use it to help agriculture, which is the basic industry in our country? Now that the Minister of Agriculture is back in his seat, I am sure that he will take the remarks I just made into serious consideration, in order to arrive at some understanding of the needs of agriculture in Quebec and then act as quickly as possible, so as to rectify the farmers' situation in that province, because if we want to put a stop to the rural exodus towards the cities, the federal Department of Agriculture, together with the provincial minister of agriculture, must absolutely try to find a much more serious solution than all those proposed to this date.

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, the farmers of my constituency have looked forward for some considerable time to the passage of this bill. This bill is very good legislation. I should like to remind the minister however that many of its benefits could be nullified by the attitude of farm valuators, as that attitude has been evident under farm credit legislation. On many occasions in my constituency these valuators have valued farms in such a way that if this situation continues under the banks, the loans made under this bill will be almost worthless to the earnest, progressive farmers in their efforts to modernize and expand farm operations. I refer particularly to those farmers residing in the localities around the village of Mount Pleasant and the villages of Scotland and Burford in my constituency. I trust nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of this legislation loans will be more readily available than they have been in the past.

I must hasten to add, however, that I agree with much of what has been said by hon. members who have preceded me in this debate. I look forward hopefully, Mr. Speaker, to some realistic change in the near future in connection with the availability of farm loans in general in order that the farmers in my area and in my province may maintain their traditional position. If this is to be done they will require more and more money for modernization and expansion in order that agriculture may play a more vital part in the life of my constituency in these times.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a few remarks on this Bill No. C-119 and I intend to restrict my remarks to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I come from a province in which these farm improvement loans are greatly appreciated. One of the reasons for this appreciation is that these loans are made by the banks in times of emergency. In my province crops are very uncertain things. In 1960 or 1961 when we had snowed under crops, many farmers availed themselves of these loans. The same situation could occur this year. At one time we thought we had a very good crop and farmers had no intention of borrowing money. Now, after these heavy frosts, our farmers may have to again avail themselves of these loans. They may have to use the frozen grain as feed for livestock or by going into hog production. In this way they will realize a better return from the grain than by selling it to the Canadian wheat board.

I am pleased to note that the size of the loan has been increased from $7,500 to $15,000. In the past we have found that a loan of $7,500 was not sufficient to enable farmers to invest in new machinery such as grain dryers, which may be needed this year. I was home over the long week end, and it had been raining for three or four days. The prospects were that it might rain for another three days. This means that the crop, which is ready to be combined, is going to be damp and tough. Farmers may be able to make use of these loans by buying grain dryers. As I have said, this is very important because you can go to your bank or credit union and avail yourself of these loans. I regret that this legislation was not introduced a year ago to increase the amount of the loan to $15,000. Western agriculture today is highly mechanized and a loan of

As I have said, the farmers make use of these loans in cases of emergency. I appreciate too the fact that the loan fund has been increased from $400 million to $500 million. Another thing I should like to stress is that when livestock is purchased these loans are available for a period of ten years. When conditions are such that there may be a drop in farm income, the banks are often reluctant to extend this credit to farmers. However our experience in the past has been good, and I am pleased that the minister saw fit to increase the amount of the loan from $7,500 to $15,000.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, like many of the other members in the house I want to congratulate the government for introducing this legislation at this time. This amendment will result in an increase in the amount available under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and this is something to which the farmers have been looking forward for the last 16 or perhaps 20 months. A great change has taken place during that period in the type of machinery that the farmers are likely to use.

There were some of us who thought this legislation might have been dealt with earlier in this present session. This draws to our attention the importance of the priority that is given legislation in the House of Commons. I felt the government would have been well advised to have brought this legislation forward before introducing the farm credit legislation and then this legislation would have been of some use to the farmers during this harvest period. This was one of the pieces of legislation that was on the statute books when the government led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) took office.

After that the government led by him retained this as a part of the over-all agricultural policy of the country, and made certain improvements to it. In its initial stages it provided loans of something like $3,000 and now, under the terms of this bill, loans up to $15,000 will be provided. This indicates something of the inflation that has taken place in the price of farm land, and also something of the increased capital costs for anyone engaging in agriculture.

I would like to commend the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) on his reference that this legislation alone is not enough. I should also like to commend the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) and the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard), who drew attention to the government's failure to tackle the problems facing Quebec farmers. Each of these members has indicated to the government that what farm people need more than anything—and I am not at all decrying the value of this measure—is attention to the problem of marketing their products.

We in this party are proud of the record achieved by our government when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), who is presently in his seat, was minister of agriculture. One of the members of the Ralliement Créditistes mentioned the problem producers had in getting a market for blueberries, and this is only one of the marketing problems.

I was interested in the remarks of the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas) as we in this party have also been waiting for the minister to indicate the agricultural philosophy and general policies of the government. Having these minor amendments brought in on a piecemeal basis is hardly fair to members of the house when they are considering the over-all effect of an agricultural program. Without saying more I repeat that this is a good piece of legislation, perhaps a little late in its introduction, but it should be of benefit.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill No. C-119 is to increase from $7,500 to $15,000 the maximum amount which a farmer can borrow.

I will say quite sincerely and quite frankly that that is not doing too much to help our farmers get out of a difficult spot. However, I should like to take this opportunity to state that Quebec has not taken advantage as much as the other provinces of this legislation which has been in our statute books for a number of years.

I have here the 1963 report of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) on the administration of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. When looking at this table, we find, for instance, that, with regard to the purchase of farm implements, Saskatchewan comes first with 18,913 loans; Alberta, second, with 15,246 loans; Ontario third with 9,369; followed by Manitoba, with 7,387, and Quebec with 2,223 loans.

The same situation prevails with regard to the construction, repair and alteration of farm buildings.

As far as the purchase of animals is concerned, Alberta comes first with 3,057 loans; Saskatchewan, second, with 1,899; Ontario, third, with 1,531; Manitoba, fourth, with 1,367; British Columbia, fifth, for livestock purchases, with 429, and Quebec comes last with only 364 loans.

You will agree, Mr. Speaker, that if we compare our province which has six million people, with Saskatchewan which has one million, Alberta with a little more than one million, British Columbia and Manitoba which do not even have one million people, and if further, we compare the total of 2,871 loans granted to the province of Quebec with regard to livestock purchases and other improvements, machinery purchases, construction, repairs, alteration of farm buildings, to the total of loans granted, Quebec comes fifth in line. Saskatchewan comes first with 23,519 loans for a total of $41,639,177; Alberta, second, with 22,085 loans for a total of $37,763,054; Ontario, third, with 14,582 loans for a total of $26,472,190, and Manitoba, fourth, with Quebec in fifth place with a total of $5,598,713.

Mr. Speaker, it is hardly surprising to my French Canadian fellow members from the province of Quebec, whether they be Liberals or Conservatives, that the government today should boast about the advantages of ARDA and so on. On the other hand, why have loans been systematically denied to applicants from the province of Quebec? Do the Quebec farmers not have as much courage as those in the other Canadian provinces to meet their obligations and to take the opportunities they have to produce something on their farms? Just a few minutes ago, somebody was dealing with—

Mr. Dupuis: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

Mr. Dupuis: Is the hon. member for Villeneuve not aware of the fact that the province of Ontario does not provide farm loans, and that it is precisely for that reason that the federal government is granting more loans in Ontario? In the province of Quebec, many loans could be granted by the federal government but they are not for this reason.

Mr. Caouette: I understand what the minister means, but he must admit that we pay taxes just the same in Quebec.

It is not the federal government which pays for the provincial farm loan. If Ontario, Saskatchewan or Alberta do not have a provincial farm loan board, that is their business. In Quebec we have one, but it is not enough, and it is precisely on this point that I want to call the attention of the house. I feel that it would be reasonable to give Quebec the financial means to grant its own loans to farmers. The problem will be solved when applications for loans from the province of Quebec are no longer accepted at the federal level.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a comparative table which will likely be of interest to the Minister without Portfolio.

In 1962—and please note that I am not a Conservative, far from it—under a Conservative government, the number of loans in the province of Quebec was 3,244, for a total amount of about $5½ million, while in 1963, under this government, the number of loans was only 2,871, a decrease of 373. Why such a difference? Why do the Liberals lend less to Quebec than the Conservatives did when they were in office? It would be interesting to know the answer to this question.

In the same report, there is table No. 6 concerning loans granted for the purchase of agricultural implements, new and used. The province of Saskatchewan comes first with 19,432 loans, for a total amount of $34 million; the province of Alberta is second with 15,919 loans, for a total of $26 million; Ontario is third with 9,890 loans, for a total of $16 million; Manitoba comes fourth, with 7,597 loans, for a total of $12.7 million. Quebec comes next with 2,506 loans for a total of $3,934,604.

The federal act applies as much in the province of Quebec as in the other provinces concerning loans for the purchase of agricultural implements, new or used.

In fact, I know personally that the federal authorities have refused to guarantee payment of a tractor or a small farm truck; that happened many times.

If we now consider table No. 7 entitled: "Loans for the construction, repairs and alterations of farm houses and other farm buildings"—

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt the hon. member, but I would like to point out that, a moment ago, he stated that 3,244 loans had been made in 1962 under the Conservative administration.

Mr. Caouette: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dupuis: The hon. member also said that in 1963, 373 fewer loans were granted.

However, the hon. member forgot to say that, even though fewer loans were granted, the total amount of the loans is not lower. In fact, it is a little higher. This means that the quality rather than the number of borrowers has been taken into account.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, does the minister mean that the quality of borrowers is lower in the province of Quebec than in the other provinces?

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, that is not what I said at all.

Mr. Caouette: The amount loaned out matters very little. What counts is the number of farmers who will actually benefit from this assistance provided under the farm loan legislation.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, if you lent money to someone and you knew beforehand that he would be unable to meet his obligations, would it be good policy to lend him money?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, does the minister believe there are only 2,871 solvent borrowers in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Dupuis: There are others who have benefited from the provincial farm loan.

Mr. Caouette: Certainly, but the provincial farm loan is under the jurisdiction of the province, not of the federal government, and I am now speaking specifically about the federal farm loan legislation.

Mr. Dupuis: They are the same farmers.

Mr. Caouette: Yes, I understand, but the same farmers, in some cases, tried in vain to borrow from the federal government. They even encountered a refusal from the federal authorities, Liberal as well as Conservative, and that is why I insist to have the government give as much importance to the province of Quebec as to the other provinces.

The Minister without Portfolio just said that 2,871 loans were granted, for a total of $5,598,000, in comparison to 3,244 loans in 1962, for a total of $5,515,000. Perhaps larger farmers were helped, with larger loans; however, a smaller number of farmers were assisted.

The Minister without Portfolio and, needless to say, the government, are aware of the fact that under ARDA, it is intended to help not an exclusive class of farmers. In fact, it is intended to reach all the farmers and to try to assist them. I am of the opinion that had this been done some 10 or 15 years ago, we would probably not have to face today's problems. The Quebec farmers would probably be as well off as their colleagues in other provinces, for the minister knows very well that agriculture is less prosperous in the province of Quebec than in the province of Ontario or other provinces.

The minister is aware also that the present state of agriculture in the province of Quebec is not due to the negligence of the farmers, but really to the bad administration of the provincial government as well as of the federal government. In fact, our governments have not assisted our eastern farmers in the same way as the farmers of other provinces.

I now go back to table No. 7: loans for construction, repair and alteration of houses and other farm buildings. I appreciate that in this field also, there is the provincial farm loan, but I know that quite often, in some cases, and more particularly during an election, they have played politics with the farm loan. The minister is aware of that, because this has been done in his own constituency.

Mr. Dupuis: At the federal level?

Mr. Caouette: No, on the provincial level. They played politics with the provincial farm loan by making propaganda in certain parishes. As a matter of fact, they were saying that such or such a parish would get farm loans provided that this or that man agreed to take part in the candidates' political organization. We have seen some politicians play politics with agriculture instead of assisting it.

Table No. 7 shows that 223 loans were granted in Quebec for construction, repair and alteration of houses and other farm buildings; those loans amounted to $904,811. On the other hand, Ontario was granted 2,980 loans, Saskatchewan, 1,634 and Alberta, 1,851.

Table 8 of the same report shows that Quebec holds the fourth place concerning loans for other improvements. Ontario got 52 loans for clearing and seeding while Quebec got none. It must be said, however, that our province has its own department of colonization.

Under the heading "Irrigation works", one can see that 83 loans were granted to Ontario, 284 to Alberta and eight only to Quebec.

As far as farm installations and electrification are concerned, 180 loans went to Ontario, 21 to British Columbia, 22 to Alberta, 24 to Saskatchewan and 28 to Manitoba. In that respect, Quebec comes second with 39 loans.

Mr. Dupuis: Those figures do not include provincial loans; that is important.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the important thing is federal loans. At that rate, we would still beat zero, since the province of Quebec can provide farm installations and electrification.

In the field of fencing and drainage, Quebec got three loans as compared with 112 for Ontario.

As for "other than improvements and installations", the report indicates that 499 loans went to Alberta, 451 to Saskatchewan, 151 to Manitoba, 275 to Ontario and 11 only to Quebec.

All this, Mr. Speaker, is just to show that we are doing our share just the same for agriculture and that we are ready to help the other farmers who are still in need of assistance. But I feel the federal government should consider the possibility of calling upon the provinces to establish their own programs, just as Quebec has its own, and of providing the funds required to finance agriculture, not only in Quebec, but in the other provinces as well. For instance, instead of telling us it is ready to lend the sum of $15,000, the federal government should give back to the province its sources of taxation, so the province can have the means to implement this federal suggestion. The farmers would then be more satisfied than they are now.

That is why we have claimed for a good many years and we still claim that the province should control credit so that it can look after its farm and labour problems, in any field for that matter, because the farmer is more at home with the government of his province than with the Canadian government. Ottawa is far from home; his provincial capital is nearer.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, we urge upon the provincial governments, the one in Quebec as well as the others, to make representations to the federal authorities so that the taxation sources of the provinces may be given back to them and that they may have the financial means to set up for the farmers a program which would neither stifle nor crush them, but would really make them kings on Canadian farms.

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few words to say following the remarks made by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Dupuis), as far as the number of loans made in the province of Quebec is concerned.

I have no intention whatsoever to defend the government or to attack the hon. member for Villeneuve, but I feel it is necessary to set the record straight concerning certain figures in the 1962 and 1963 reports.

First of all, in 1961, 11,126 loans amounting to $18,101,149 were granted in the province of Quebec; in 1962, 3,244 loans amounting to $5,515,926 were granted; in 1963, 2,871 loans amounting to $5,958,713 were granted. If there was a decrease it is due to the fact that in 1960 the government of the province of Quebec passed a legislative measure—before the Union Nationale lost power—allowing the provincial government to pay up to 3 per cent of the interest on the loans granted by banks and caisses populaires for the purchase of machinery or for the improvement of farms in the province.

That legislation enabled the farmer to borrow up to $4,000 for the purchase of machinery, farm improvement, the construction of buildings, etc., and up to $3,000 for the purchase of livestock. This means that the Quebec farmer availed himself to the maximum of the farm improvement legislation till 1961. Then he somewhat broke away from it to borrow from banks and caisses populaires through the provincial act, because with the latter he could avail himself of a subsidy of 3 per cent granted by the provincial government, so that he had only 3 per cent interest to pay on loans secured under the provincial act.

Mr. Caouette: Would the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska allow a question?

Mr. Vincent: Certainly.

Mr. Caouette: I wish to ask the hon. member if he is aware of the number of farm loans granted by a caisse populaire or a bank in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the number of loans granted by the caisses populaires or the banks, but I do know that the caisses populaires granted so many loans that there came a time when they had to stop granting those loans because available funds were rapidly decreasing.

In that connection, I wish to point out that hon. members from the other provinces must not believe that there was any discrimination against the Quebec farmers with regard to that legislation. They took full advantage of it until 1960 to improve their farms and their operations. But after 1960, that is in 1961 and 1962, they found it advisable to take advantage of the provincial legislation to get the 3 per cent grant from the provincial government.

I repeat it, Mr. Speaker, no one must get the impression that there was any discrimination against the Quebec farmers. The only reason why the number of loans decreased is the one I just gave.

But with the amendment which the federal government is presenting today, increasing the maximum from $7,500 to $15,000, the number of loans will probably increase, because the maximum now allowed by the Quebec legislation is $7,000, that is $4,000 for the improvement or purchase of farm implements and $3,000 for the purchase of livestock, which is not enough for a farmer with a large operation.

Just the same, I wish to point out that I think this legislation should have been presented to us several months ago, because if I am not mistaken—I speak from memory—that resolution has been on the order paper since July 11. Several farmers became interested in it and asked members on the government side as well as members in the opposition to put pressure on the Minister of Agriculture so that this bill could be discussed as soon as possible. I think, Mr. Speaker, that within a few days, this legislation will be passed, but before it has gone through all stages, it surely will be too late, in certain areas, to take full advantage of it. Indeed, by the end of September or by October, farmers will not be as interested as they were in July or August to purchase some machinery they need, or to carry out some improvement on their farm. It is on that point that I wish to criticize the government for not having introduced this legislation sooner. We are going to accept it readily, but it is most unfortunate that they had to wait until now to bring it before the house.

Also I take this opportunity to tell the government that since they took office the only legislation they brought forward in the field of agriculture were amendments to existing legislation. I appreciate that amendments had to be made to those measures, but that is not what the farmer wants nowadays. He is asking for completely new legislation that will improve the lot of farmers in eastern Canada and more particularly, as far as I am concerned, the lot of farmers in the province of Quebec.

To conclude, I wish to say this: all these amendments, even if they are satisfactory, could not be compared to legislation which could be passed to assist the eastern farmers. I refer to legislation concerning the dairy industry, because it is the basic industry of farming in eastern Canada just as wheat growing is the basic income of western farmers.

We are able to pass practical legislation for the farmers. I should like the government to refer to the remarks made in this house by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) and by myself on July 10 last, because if the government really wants to help the eastern farmer, who is now in need of help, it will have to consider the field of dairy farming in order to introduce new legislation. I am sure that this would solve the existing problem and thus, really help the eastern farmers.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as a member for an important agricultural area of western Canada it gives me great pleasure this afternoon to make a few comments during this debate about this proposed amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I was disappointed that this piece of legislation was not introduced prior to the legislation dealing with the Farm Credit Corporation because, as was mentioned I believe by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden), a lot of beneficial effects have been lost for this particular year. However I am very pleased to see at last that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) has introduced another piece of legislation which will help to bolster the agricultural economy.

Mr. Speaker, this piecemeal policy in respect of agricultural legislation, to which we have been exposed by this government, is a far cry from the policy laid down by the right hon. leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), when he was prime minister, and in the statement he made I believe in August, 1958, when he laid down a comprehensive national agricultural policy including various measures such as the crop insurance Agricultural Stabilization Act, farm credit, water conservation, amendments to the Seeds Act, human slaughter of animals, and other measures dealing with a multitude of problems facing the agricultural industry. Today we find we are dealing with only the second piece of legislation introduced by this government in respect of the agricultural economy.

Mr. Speaker, today I think my remarks could be related to a statement made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in a presentation made to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) under date of February 26, 1964. As you will realize, the Canadian

Federation of Agriculture represents and speaks for something in the neighbourhood of 500,000 Canadian farmers. That federation presented its brief last February and I should like to read several excerpts dealing with the subject of farm credits. Stated in this brief is the following:

> The federation, at the federal-provincial agricultural conference in December of last year, made a number of submissions on farm credit to the government, urging in general much more intensive attention to farm credit needs, and the development of new programs.

I will not repeat these representations here in full, Mr. Speaker, but in the resolutions delegates to the annual meeting laid special emphasis on three immediate needs which I should like to draw to the attention of the house at this time. Those needs are stated in this brief as follows:

> First, they reiterated our long standing request for special disaster loan legislation.

This matter is now under study by the Farm Credit Corporation, and the federation is looking forward to early action in this regard.

The brief then goes on to state:

> No interest should be charged for the first year at least, and very low interest for an appropriate period, perhaps five years.
> Second, the loan limit of the Farm Credit Corporation should be raised to $50,000.

Of course, the house has dealt with that matter and as we are aware, this has been increased to a maximum of $55,000.

The third suggestion in this brief dealing with farm credit relates to the discussion we are having this afternoon, and states:

> Third, the loan limit on farm machinery under the Farm Improvement Loans Act should be raised to $10,000—

Mr. Speaker, this point was dealt with a few moments ago by my illustrious colleague, the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent), and I think his point was very well taken.

This section of the federation's brief in respect of farm credit concludes as follows:

> May we repeat that we feel well-developed, flexible credit services to meet farm needs are of utmost importance and deserve more intensive investigation and research than they have received in the past.

Earlier this afternoon the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Horner) made a very valid point when dealing with policy, as far as the application of these loans is concerned. I should like to refer to the annual report of the Farm Improvement Loans Act for 1963. Perhaps I should tell the minister that I am pleased this report was forthcoming. Yesterday when I was looking up some information in respect of this subject I had to refer to the 1962 report, and wondered at the time why there was a laxity in that the 1963 report was not available. We are happy to have received it this afternoon, even though the debate has been under way for some time.

Under the heading "Review of lending operations since inception" this annual report states:

> The average size of loans has increased from $784 in 1945 to $1,757 in 1963.

It is interesting to note at the outset that $784 is a very low average, although perhaps it is compatible with the year 1945, and the fact that this was new legislation at that time. However, 19 years later we find that the average size of loans has only increased to $1,757. The comparable figure for 1962 is $1,626. In other words during that year the average loan has only increased approximately $125.

I should now like to refer to the point emphasized by the hon. member for Jasper-Edson. Apparently the lending institutions are taking too tough an attitude in their consideration of applications that come to them, because in looking at the 1963 report in respect of loans made under this legislation we find that they continue to be low. The report goes on to state:

> The total amount of all claims paid to the banks under the guarantee represents about one tenth of 1 per cent of the total amount of loans made to date.

I believe that is a remarkable record and indicates that the government has not incurred any great loss in respect of loans made under this legislation. The government has incurred only a minimum loss. A total of $207,622 has been recovered on claims paid as of 1963, including $39,421 which was collected in 1963.

I think the banks should be more flexible and tolerant in their consideration of these applications. I notice this statement at the end of the report in reference to bank loans:

> The banks continue to extend their co-operation in the implementation of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Rural branch banks have established many outstanding lending records in various agricultural areas across Canada. Several individual branch banks, for instance, have made farm improvement loans under this act in excess of $4,500,000. Operations under this legislation have, however, not been confined to rural banks. Farm improvement loans are made by a number of branch banks in smaller cities.

I should like to emphasize the last expression by repeating it: "—a number of branch banks in smaller cities". I presume they mean that a number of these banks have established good lending records. I do not think that in itself is good enough. The banks of this country have an enviable record, of which we are proud, and they play a very important part in the successful economy of the agricultural industry as a whole. These leading institutions have a definite responsibility under this act to see that there is no discrepancy or variation in policy between one bank and another, and between one area and another. There should be laid down a general policy so that all banks many establish good records in this lending field, rather than just a few. I should like to emphasize the fact, referred to so aptly by the hon. member for Jasper-Edson, that there has been something wrong in the operation of this legislation, in view of the fact that we are today considering an amendment to increase maximum loans to $15,000. Yet, as I say, in looking at the figures we find that the average loan is only $1,757, so the act is not doing the job that we as legislators intended it to do. I think that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) have to take this matter under serious consideration and encourage the lending institutions to take a much more tolerant attitude toward the needs of the agricultural industry.

I was going to go into a more extensive review of the lending operations but this has been done very adequately by previous speakers. In my opinion the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) gave a very forthright review of the need for credit in the province of Quebec, and other speakers this afternoon also dealt with credit needs. Personally I am very much in favour, and I think the agricultural industry in general is too, of the legislation that has been introduced into the house today to make more money available through increasing the limit on loans and also increasing the amount of money available for lending. The necessity was impressed on me as a member of the standing committee on agriculture both two and three years ago when we were inquiring into the cost of farm machinery and were considering how farm credit affected the agricultural industry as a whole.

In the evidence presented to the committee something came out that I thought was very pertinent and important to the committee and the agricultural industry in general. Evidence was given that a great number of farmers who were purchasing machinery on credit were getting credit through subsidiary loan companies established by the farm machinery companies. In other words, in order to promote the sale of farm machinery on a credit basis the machinery companies were providing credit facilities and credit was not being secured by these farmers under the Farm Credit Act or the Farm Improvement Loans Act. When we inquired into the reason for this situation we were alarmed to find that in many cases farmers were paying from 11 to 13 per cent for the use of money in order to buy farm machinery to equip their farms properly.

To my mind this was a very significant fact and I believe I made the comment at that time that we should look immediately at the farm credit situation so far as farm improvement loans were concerned, and increase the amount of money available for the purchase of farm machinery which money, as hon. members know, is made available at an interest rate of 5 per cent. The interest rate of 5 per cent is in effect over the four year period, which is the period for which the farmer borrows money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act in order to purchase machinery. The difference between an interest rate of 5 per cent and a rate of 11 to 13 per cent that many farmers were paying to the subsidiaries of machinery companies would mean a vast saving.

I wish to emphasize again that the banks must take a more flexible and tolerant view of applications. I also emphasize that we are pleased that this legislation has been brought before the house. I trust it will be passed as soon as possible so that the money will be available to our farmers who need it so badly.

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the house is well aware the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is charged with the responsibility of presenting this particular bill to the house, and in the circumstances perhaps I may be allowed to answer very briefly several of the questions that have been raised. I might add that I have listened with great interest to a series of excellent speeches that have probed into the very heart of the agricultural problem. However the house will appreciate that the bill deals only with one aspect, namely farm credit.

The hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Horner) wanted to know whether the banks are co-operating with farmers who apply for loans. This question was also raised by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam). The only answer I can give, of course, is to be found in the report itself, which shows that the number of loans has increased steadily over the years, that the size of loans has increased and that the aggregate principal amount of money for guaranteed loans in the present lending period will have to be increased from $400 million to $500 million. I respectfully suggest that this is powerful evidence that there has been a good measure of co-operation between bank managers and farmers, although I am the first to admit that there may be isolated cases in which this co-operation has not been forthcoming.

I am indebted to the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) for the very lucid answer he gave to the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) regarding the discrepancy between the amount of loans being made in the province of Quebec and the amount in other provinces. I just wish to say to hon. members from Quebec that, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska, there is no discrimination against the farmers of that province.

One of my colleagues made reference to the fact that some of the merits of the act have been detracted from by the fact that there have been improper farm valuations. With great respect I say to my colleague that I do not think this criticism applies to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, although it may be a valid criticism so far as the Farm Credit Act is concerned. As I did not detect any note of hostility toward the bill now before us I think I should conclude my remarks and respectfully anticipate speedy passage in the committee stage.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Hays (for Mr. Gordon) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FARM MACHINERY

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR PURCHASES BY SYNDICATES

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates for the purchase of farm machinery and for the terms and conditions of such loans, the amount of a loan not to exceed 80 per cent of the actual price to the farm machinery syndicate of the farm machinery to be purchased with the loan; and to provide also for the establishment in the consolidated revenue fund of a special account not to exceed $25,000,000 to which shall be charged advances made to the Farm Credit Corporation and to which shall be credited all moneys paid to the Receiver General by the corporation and for other financial provisions in relation to the said fund in connection with the administration of the measure.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us for consideration today proposes a type of farm credit which is fundamentally different from all previous credit programs in Canada. We are all aware of the rapid developments that have taken place in agriculture in the past 20 years, and in particular the developments with regard to the types of farm machinery and equipment available for use on our farms today. We know the value of this machinery to the farmers, both in its ability to save manual labour and in its ability to provide the farmer with the timeliness of operation which is so essential to successful agricultural production. Unfortunately we are all also aware of the high cost of a full line of equipment on a farm today.

When a farmer purchases a modern farm implement he very frequently finds that if he purchases an efficient machine it is able to handle considerably more work than he has for it. He may pay the cost, and sometimes a rather high cost, of a machine which he may use only a limited period during the year, and the capital represented by the machine, which could be used to good advantage for other purposes, must remain idle for long periods. It thus becomes a very expensive machine for him to own unless he expands his farm operations greatly. Probably more than any other single factor, the increased cost of modern farm machinery has made it difficult for the small farmer to make his way and earn a reasonable living under today's conditions.

One of the ways in which farmers can reduce their machinery costs is by sharing equipment with their neighbours, either by sharing in the ownership and use of equipment or by obtaining it on a custom or rental basis for the period of time required. Co-operative use of farm machinery is not new.

Many farmers presently share the ownership of individual machines or have work done on a custom basis. It is highly desirable, however, that facilities be provided to enable farmers to organize groups for this purpose on a formal basis and to provide the credit facilities necessary for such groups to procure machinery for the joint use of their members.

The proposed measure will provide for the establishment of a revolving fund of $25 million to be administered by the Farm Credit Corporation. The farm machinery syndicates set up under the provisions of this measure will be able to borrow up to 80 per cent of the cost of the machinery they wish to buy. In this way three or more farmers, each of whom might find it difficult to buy all the machinery they require to operate their farms individually, may join together in a syndicate to buy items of machinery of sufficient capacity to do the work of all members. Furthermore, the farm machinery syndicates will be able to make the machinery which they have purchased available for use by other farmers on a rental or custom basis. In this way farmers who are not members of farm machinery syndicates may still obtain benefit from the proposed measure because of the availability of machinery from such syndicate for use on their farms.

Adequate credit facilities are an important need of Canadian agriculture. We now have the Farm Credit Act to provide long term mortgage credit for the establishment of economic farm units. We have the Farm Improvement Loans Act to provide operating credit for individual farmers. Both of these have been, or are in the course of being, amended at this session to increase their usefulness to farmers. As I stated during the debate on the bill to amend the Farm Credit Act, we have set up an interdepartmental committee to keep the credit needs of farmers under continuing review. The present measure will in my opinion provide an additional and valuable supplement to the present farm credit facilities, and will make a substantial contribution to the welfare of Canadian agriculture.

This is the thought behind the bill which introduces the farm machinery credit act. If we can adopt the resolution, Mr. Chairman, then we could present the bill which certainly covers the proposal in a great deal more detail.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, there does not appear to be too much time available in which to put forward any particular ideas before six o'clock. I shall therefore content myself by saying that one of the tremendous unsolved problems of the agriculture industry has been rising costs in general and those of machinery in particular. I was planning to put on the record some of the figures that bear out this statement, and then go on to discuss the principle of this particular measure to see how far it moves into the field of meeting this problem. I should like to keep my remarks coherent, so I shall deal with that part of them after the dinner recess.

I should like to point out to the committee that on several occasions in the last 30 years governments have sought to find some answer to the rising costs of machinery. I think all of us recognize that the agriculture revolution during the last 30 or 40 years has been sparked by the mechanization of our farms. I think it is fair to say, generally speaking, that this mechanization hit the prairies first, because they seem to lend themselves to the rapid change-over to mechanization. I think it is recognized also that the move toward mechanization in the twenties was checked by the depression and the war. Since about 1945, western Canada has demonstrated the tremendous willingness of the farm people to risk their future livelihood by borrowing money and by translating this money into modern farm machinery, not only to increase their productivity but to lower the per unit cost of production. The same trend has now become apparent in the central provinces, and I think it will soon spread to all parts of Canada.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, when I adjourned the debate at six o'clock I was outlining briefly the characteristic that has been most outstanding in agriculture during the last 40 years, namely the use of machinery in the agricultural revolution that has taken place in our country as well as in others. This machinery that I have been talking about as the main ingredient of the agricultural revolution has been very costly, and to date the farmers of Canada have poured over $10 billion into farm investment to try and make their industry more efficient.

To deal more precisely with the resolution under discussion tonight, I went back in my reading to the several sources that are available to members of the house. One is the fact, as I said earlier, that the costs of farm machinery have exercised people in government circles for many years. I personally recall at least four farm machinery investigations into the cost of equipment, and one of them was being conducted during the period of the government preceding this one, in the standing committee on agriculture and colonization. For two years practical farmers on that committee tried to get the figures of their costs from farm machinery companies, tried to get from distribution agencies estimates of what it cost to handle this machinery with present techniques, and tried to find practical ways of reducing the cost of machinery to farmers.

Since the change of government the standing committee on agriculture and colonization has been called together, but not once has the matter of farm machinery been referred to that committee, and I gather from what the Minister of Agriculture said this afternoon that very little reading of the records of that committee was done before this resolution was introduced. Later in my remarks I shall make this point even more emphatically.

Another source of information is the royal commission appointed in Saskatchewan, called the royal commission on agriculture and rural life. I remember very distinctly in the years after the war, with the sudden rush of mechanization in western Canada and the rising price of farm machinery, that this was one of the greatest single issues facing leaders of various parties and governments in power, and the government of Saskatchewan, realizing the tremendous need for examination into the whole revolution in agriculture, set up this royal commission which sat for four years, from 1952 to 1956.

I know many hon. members have spent a great deal of time looking over the 14 volumes of that royal commission's report. Volume 2 deals with mechanization and farm costs, and even though this volume deals in generalities I think the conclusions arrived at in the royal commission's report are not only true in many parts of Canada which are just going through the revolution of the mechanical age on farms, but will also be true for many of the areas that have still to go through that revolution.

One thing that intrigued me this afternoon as I listened to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam put the finger on the federal government, urging it to tackle the problem of farm income or else his party would continually press for that action, was that these were exactly the same words as I heard him use 20 years ago. Because looking at this problem as an outsider for many years, the thing that struck me about the attitude of the C.C.F. party, now the N.D.P., is that it pointed the finger at the federal government and always held it responsible for farm income.

Generally speaking I believe that this is correct, that rightly or wrongly, the federal government has assumed responsibility over the years for farm income; but it so happens that on this question of action on farm machinery costs, which is recommended in various circles, it is usually only in the constitutional field controlled by the provinces that the definitive and final action can be taken.

It is rather interesting to look at this royal commission report of eight years ago and ask ourselves how much was done in Saskatchewan about its recommendations. I shall not go through the whole 31 conclusions; I will just deal with the recommendations at the end of the report, where the first recommendation urged reform within the farm equipment industry and distribution system as it now exists. The distribution, as it now exists at the consumer level, can only be controlled under property and civil rights by a province.

A second recommendation was that co-operative manufacturing and distribution be examined as a way out of the dilemma, and a third recommendation was nationalization of the industry. This would probably be in the field of federal power, if you are going to do it on a federal basis, but actually constitutionally the power lies only with the provinces.

Looking back over the last eight years we see there was certainly no atempt in Saskatchewan, which is the leading province so far as mechanization is concerned, to nationalize the industry. Of course it was impossible for the Saskatchewan government to do this, because if it nationalized industry in Saskatchewan it would have been called socialist. No socialist government would ever dare to be called socialist, so it shied away from that alternative.

The commission recommended co-operative manufacturing and distribution. There is, Mr. Chairman, one company in existence, C.C.I.L.—Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited—which is set up on the basis of co-operative distribution of the products of one of the manufacturers. It is spread pretty widely through the west and has made a tremendous effort to gain the advantages of co-operative distribution in a very wide area of the country; but if you are objective in your observation of this operation you have to agree it has not been successful, and there are various reasons for that. As to the first recommendation, I think something was done on those lines in Saskatchewan under an act dealing with the distribution of farm machinery in that province. Regulations were changed and tightened up, in consequence of which I believe some 200 merchants engaged in the distributive side of the industry were squeezed out of operation; the regulations prescribed in detail what they had to do if they were to retain their licences to distribute machinery. Apart from that, very little was done in Saskatchewan. I mention this because in my opinion a solution to this problem of machinery costs will not be resolved by one government or another; there needs to be a co-operative approach by governments in both realms of jurisdiction.

I make these comments as an introduction to the general discussion of this resolution. I believe there are in this house a large number of members who have had long experience in farming. Many of them have mechanized their operations completely. Many of them know the problems of financing and the difficulty of equipping farms with modern machinery while keeping costs low enough to enable them to stay in the competitive business of agriculture today. The experience of these members represents a wealth of human resources which could be applied to this task, and from the evidence of the work of the committee on agriculture and colonization over the last few years it appears that the committee had begun to think of a full series of practical suggestions to improve the distribution of farm machinery and reduce costs. I should like to suggest at this point that the bill before us should go before the committee on agriculture so that we may have the benefit of the tremendous amount of knowledge available on the subject in this house. Admittedly, most of the members who have this experience are on the opposition side, but there are several government supporters with practical experience in mixed farming and I am sure they could use this knowledge to assist the efforts of the minister to solve this problem.

I heard only part of the minister's introductory remarks. I gather they were in line with the resolution before us. We are all wondering what the word "syndicate" means. Some of us thought immediately of Spain in the days of the anarchists when syndicalism was prominent among the social and political ideas of the day. But obviously, on reflection, this is not what the minister has in mind. The expression means some grouping of farmers. I do not suppose there is anything in farming which is harder than persuading farmers to work together. In my personal experience even men who have fought side by side during the war as comrades on the field of battle, and who returned to farming after the war was over, found such co-operation impossible to achieve. With that sort of background one would think they could work together and utilize the same machinery. Yet those same men who served as friends during the greatest of difficulties fell into hostility and enmity when they had to make joint use of farm machinery. In the early days, the trouble arose largely over the use of separators. Farmers would get together and buy a separator. Then, under the pressure of fall weather, the fights which occurred, in many cases between friends of long standing, made them enemies for life. This same difficulty has marked shared farming operations in all parts of Canada. The only time such programs seem to work is when those engaged in them are connected by a blood relationship or when the partners are unusually congenial. After all, it is hard for a man, when his whole year's wages depend on a successful harvest operation, to wait his turn under a pooling arrangement.

This is a difficulty which we must expect. To refer to the situation in Saskatchewan once again, a serious and sincere effort was made after the war on the part of many people to set up a co-operative type of farming. The failures, which were legion, almost always came down to this question of people getting along together. Success was encountered only when those concerned were of a congenial nature, accepting the leadership of whomever they had appointed or elected. No government should be condemned on account of this human frailty. It is a fact which has to be faced when we are considering what is likely to happen in connection with this legislation.

I, for one, intend to support this measure. I do so because I do not think there is any problem which is more vexatious on the cost side of agriculture today than is the cost of machinery. So I think the effort we find here should be supported. I have warned the house about the difficulty likely to be encountered when a group of farmers is brought together. I hope farmers will accept the logic of the situation—that the use of one set of machinery for a certain operation spread over five farms is more economic than the possession by each of the five farmers of his own equipment. I will submit a corollary to the point I have made about the difficulty of getting people to co-operate. It seems we must accept the fact that certain farming operations must necessarily be carried on when the weather is right. Then we should accept the principle that in relation to these operations a farmer must have his own machinery, his individual possession. If we accept this, then I believe we would make a step toward wisdom by letting him have it, even though logic says farmers would be better off if they pooled their operation. The operation I have in mind is, primarily, harvesting, though my remarks apply also to certain types of seeding and cultivation equipment. However, there a number of operations, particularly in mixed farming on modern farms which lend themselves to some form of co-operation, especially those which can be carried out over a period of time without any loss in return to the farmers concerned. One example which occurs to me is machinery for clearing out cattle corrals; this is applicable to the west generally, and it is increasingly applicable to eastern areas. Another example is machinery for removing manure piles and distributing them over the fields. This is another job which can be done over an extended period of the year, and it can be done more efficiently by a group which comes in to carry out this particular task than by the farmer himself who is often occupied doing other jobs at a busy time of the year. It does not matter whether it is done in May, June, July or August and it is obviously unwise to have this equipment on only one farm if several farms can share it.

There is another type of operation which comes into this category. It may not be so common in eastern areas but I do know that it is of importance in the Red River valley of Manitoba, namely the harvesting of corn and sunflowers. This is an operation which can be carried out over a period of several weeks without any prejudice to the farmer either as to quantity or quality, and it seems sensible that there should be pooled machinery in connection with it. I could outline half a dozen such operations where pooled operations would not only be wise in themselves but where they would not conflict with the element of human nature which has, in the past, upset so many efforts toward co-operation.

I put this corollary forward because I am trying to demonstrate as best I can that there are arguments in favour of this type of approach. I am also warning the minister and his officials that they can expect trouble with many forms of co-operation in those fields of activity on the farm where everything has to be done at the same time on every farm.

I would like now, if I may, to just put on the record the size of the problem, using figures taken from the d.b.s. handbook. The figures I am going to use are based on the eight-year period from 1954 to 1961. I think they will demonstrate that in this race to get the increased income about which the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was speaking we are barely holding our own, and in some parts of the country we are actually losing ground. I give these figures under two main headings. The first heading is "Realized gross income" and the second is "Operating and depreciation costs".

Any person knowledgeable in farm economics will know that these figures do not include the interest on the land value and the labour of the man working on the land. Let me put these figures on the record to show the house how the race between income and costs is going in Canada. These are national figures and they do not tell the story in regions. I will attempt to clarify that later. In the year 1954 the realized gross income of farmers across Canada was $2.7 billion; the costs were $1.6 billion. I am taking these amounts to the nearest round figure. In 1955 the income was $2.7 billion, and the costs had risen to $1.6 billion plus. In 1956 the income had risen to $2.9 billion plus, and costs had risen to $1.7 billion. In 1957 income was still at $2.9 billion, and the costs were still at $1.7 billion. In 1958 the income jumped rather drastically to $3.1 billion, and the costs had risen to $1.8 billion. In 1959 the income had gone to $3.1 billion plus, and costs had gone to $1.8 billion. In 1960 income had climbed to $3.2 billion, and costs to $1.9 billion. In 1961 income had risen to $3.3 billion, and costs to $2 billion.

These figures show that in the last eight years there has been a rise of 22 per cent in farm income; but the costs during that period have risen 27 per cent. If you take the figures for 1962 and 1963 which are available, you will find this trend has continued. So as a nation, Mr. Chairman, the costs are rising at a greater percentage than the income.

Farm Machinery

When you break it down into farm income per farm—because it must be remembered that not only has farm income been going down and costs have been going up, but the number of farmers has decreased—you get a more accurate picture. In the period 1954 to 1957 the realized gross income, as an average all across Canada, was $4,891 per farm. The operating costs of the average farm in that period were $2,883, leaving a net realized income of $2,008. In the years 1958-1961 the income for those four years was $5,964 per farm; but costs had gone up to $3,514 per farm, leaving a net income of $2,450. If I may do the arithmetic for hon. members, comparing the period 1958-1961 with the four preceding years, farm income had gone up $1,073, costs had gone up $631, and the increase in net income per farm was $443.

Therefore, I think in all fairness we can say that if the federal government is responsible for farm income, there was some betterment of the position; not as much as we would have liked, but at least we reversed the trend that had been there in that first period after the war. So we can say that for each one of those four years the increase in net income, after costs had been taken off, for the average farmer across Canada, was $443 better each year than it had been in the preceding four years. I translated those figures into income per farm to give the real picture and to point out to the committee, and I hope to the country, that progress has been made in meeting this question of farm income. I have given the figures of rising costs to indicate that the battle is still going on and percentagewise the costs are rising, as a nation, faster than the income. If this trend were to continue indefinitely, eventually the net income increase would slow down again and we would be in serious trouble.

When you look at the picture in areas across Canada you get a different story. I broke these figures down for the maritimes, for the same eight years. With regard to the maritimes, if you compare the years 1958-1961 with the previous four years, during those four years the average increase in income per year, per farm, was $431; but the costs went up during that same period each year by $433. By the correction of decimal places it actually works out that in each of those years the average farm in the maritimes lost out by a little better than $1 each year. So in the maritimes, when the rest of Canada was getting ahead by $443 a year income over costs, farmers actually lost $1 a year. I think this gives a very dramatic picture of why our attention should be increasingly on the farms in eastern Canada.

With regard to the province of Quebec, once again using the figures per farm, in the four years 1954-1957 the average income per farm was $3,755. It increased in the years 1958-1961 to $4,428. This was an increase of $673 per year, per farm. But the costs during that same time climbed from $2,122 per year, per farm, to $2,767, or a net increase in costs of $645. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, with regard to Quebec farms in those four years the gain of income over costs each year was only $28 per farm, compared to the national average of $443. Therefore Quebec is just barely holding its own, and no more.

With regard to Ontario the figures are a little better. In Ontario the increase per farm, per year, for those four years was $1,173. The increase in costs was $915 per year; so there was a net gain in each of those four years of $258 per farm, as compared to the national average of $443.

The figures in relation to the prairie provinces tell a very dramatic story. Comparing the four years of 1957 to 1961 with the succeeding four years their income increased very dramatically to the extent of $1,315 per farm, and the cost only went up per farm to the extent of $453, which is one of the lowest increases in the whole of Canada. This gives an increase in realized income, when you subtract costs from gross income, of $863 per year per farm. Therefore, western Canada, because it had poured these hundreds of millions of dollars into mechanization, the farmers were gaining the benefits of it, and the gains in income rose quickly over costs as compared to the rest of Canada.

To complete the picture across Canada I will give the figures for the province of British Columbia. The province of British Columbia had an increase per farm for each of those four years over the previous four years of $1,056. Costs went up $748 per farm per year giving a net increase of income of $309 for each of those years as compared to the national average, $443.

The Chairman: Order. Does the hon. member have the unanimous agreement of the committee to go beyond his allotted time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton: I think I can complete my remarks in two or three minutes, Mr. Chairman.

I have put these remarks on the record with the hope that the situation, vis-à-vis farm income increases, cost increases and realized net income, can be applied to this legislation that the minister has brought in. I am going to suggest that this is an attack on these rising costs across Canada, which are growing at about 5 per cent greater than income, or 27 per cent compared to 22 per cent. However, this is such a small step that I hope farmers across this country are not going to become too excited about what it is going to do.

I know something of the tremendous difficulties that will have to be faced to reduce farm machinery costs, which represent the largest single item of expense in the agricultural industry in Canada today. In eastern Canada of course the highest cost factor is in respect of feed grains. Generally speaking, across Canada, when one averages out the figures he will find that farm machinery represents the greatest need and the greatest single cost of operating a farm. If this legislation, small step as it may be, does even a little bit to help reduce the expense incurred by even a few farmers, I think we have no choice but to support it.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the resolution which is before this committee is designed to do something about the very serious problems that exist in respect of farm machinery, and how it can best be made available to farmers in view of the heavy costs which are involved. As most members realize, this question of farm machinery, and the high costs which are imposed on farmers, is something which has concerned this House of Commons and the legislatures of some of the provinces for the past 25 years. I think the first committee set up by this parliament was set up in 1937, sat through 1937 and 1938, and made a very exhaustive report to the house, in respect of which unfortunately action was never taken. Other reports have been made, one of the most exhaustive of which was made by a legislative committee of the Saskatchewan legislature. That committee made a series of recommendations, most of which were carried out in so far as they fell within provincial jurisdiction.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle has made reference to the royal commission on rural development in Saskatchewan which sat between 1952 and 1956. He took some time to deal with those recommendations and to offer some criticism in respect of the alleged failure of the government of that province to carry out those recommendations. The hon. member seemed to be somewhat incensed about the fact that I said this afternoon that the real problem facing farmers of Canada today was the lack of farm income. He was only able to belittle this statement by saying he heard me make it 20 years ago. Of course the fact it was made 20 years ago does not destroy it today; it is still true.

As I pointed out in the figures I gave to the house this afternoon, any industry which finds the index price for the things it sells down by 44 points, and the index price for things it buys up by 66 points knows it is on its way to bankruptcy. There are parts of the agricultural economy which do not share this general situation from time to time, but the over-all picture of the agricultural industry is serious, and until we grapple with this problem of farm income we are not going to solve it, and certainly not by putting on little patches. We are playing blind man's buff with this agricultural problem.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle dealt with some of the recommendations made by the royal commission on rural development in Saskatchewan, one of which related to nationalization of the farm implement industry and he said, that the reason this had not been done was because socialist governments never believe in socializing anything. I believe that even one as naïve as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle knows that one cannot socialize an industry unless it is within one's jurisdiction, and the farm implement industry does not happen to be located in the province of Saskatchewan. The centre of the farm implements manufacturing industry is pretty well located in central Canada, and while distribution is carried on in the province of Saskatchewan and the other prairie provinces, it would be of little value to nationalize distribution when someone else has control of manufacturing. The fact is of course that when the member said this is a field falling within the jurisdiction of the provincial government, and they alone have the power to nationalize the farm implement industry, he is talking complete nonsense. A provincial government could hardly deal with an industry which is nation-wide; but the government of Canada which has power to deal with matters which are for the general advantage of Canada, does have the power to deal with the farm implement industry. The only reason I can imagine why the hon. member for Qu'Appelle spent so much time on this question discussing what happened or did not happen in Saskatchewan is because he was trying to create a smokescreen behind which he could hide the fact that during the years he was federal minister of agriculture nothing whatever was done to tackle this problem in respect of farm implement prices. As a matter of fact, a committee of the house was set up and spent I think two years studying this situation, but during at least the last two years the Conservatives were in office the committee was not called together, and the whole thing died after it had received the necessary publicity to create the impression that the Conservatives were concerned about this problem and might eventually do something about it.

Another recommendation of the royal commission on rural development was in respect of co-operative manufacturing and distribution, and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is quite wrong when he says that was not at all successful. As a matter of fact, Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited has been very successful in its operations.

As a result of loans made to it by the three prairie governments it was able to go into the manufacture in Winnipeg of small farm implements, has been able to enter into long term agreements to buy farm machinery at very acceptable prices from one of the manufacturers in eastern Canada and one in United States; has been able to reduce the price of farm machinery to its members and has brought about very substantial savings for the farmers who make use of the co-operative implements organization. No one should rule out the co-operative manufacturing and distribution of farm machinery as one of the methods for improving the lot of the farmer, in so far as farm implements are concerned.

As a matter of fact, I hope the minister will look into this field, and if the federal government is not prepared at some time to nationalize the farm implements industry it could help by making capital available to the co-operatives so that they could expand their operations both in manufacturing and distribution. I think the competitive effect of a powerful co-operative implement manufacturing and distribution organization in Canada would go a long way toward compelling some of the farm implement companies to get their prices more in line with what they ought to be.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle said that the Saskatchewan government had done something about distribution, but that all it had succeeded in doing was to squeeze some 200 individuals out of business. I make no apology for the kind of people who were squeezed out of business. The government took the recommendation of the royal commission and of a legislative committee and required all persons who were handling farm implements to be licensed, primarily so that they would be reliable persons who would not only sell machinery but would be prepared to service it and would be prepared to keep on hand adequate supplies of repair parts when they were needed. A farm implement agent has a responsibility to do more than just sell you a piece of machinery and then disappear into the mists. He has a responsibility to be there when the farmer needs a part for his machine, especially if he needs it in the middle of harvesting or when spring seeding is on. He needs to be able to get that part quickly. The licensing was restricted to those who were prepared not only to be financially responsible but to have adequate supplies of parts and repair facilities on hand at all times, and if they were not prepared to stand by the product that they had sold, and prepared to service it and supply parts for it, they could not have a licence.

It seems to me that instead of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle belittling this action he should be commending it, because this is what ought to be done all across Canada. This of course is not a federal responsibility. It is something over which provincial governments alone have jurisdiction. But if people are going to make a very handsome commission, as they do, out of selling farm machinery, then they have a responsibility to stand behind that machinery, to service it and to see that when people want parts for a machine those parts are available. I shall have something more to say about that later.

The other thing which the royal commission recommended, as did the legislative committee, was the setting up of co-operatives for the co-operative use of farm machinery. Again I must take issue with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle who said with regard to these co-operative farms, if I remember the phrase he used, that "failures were legion". I would be obliged if the member for Qu'Appelle would produce figures some time as to the legion that were unsuccessful.

These co-operatives fell into two classes. There were actual co-operative farms, of which I believe 27 were established and I think 26 are still in operation. In the main these farms were set up by veterans when they returned from world war II. They owned the land co-operatively, owned the equipment co-operatively and farmed as a unit. In the main they have been extremely successful. I agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that the main problem is a social one rather than an economic one. Sometimes some of the members did not get along or, more specifically, their wives did not get along, and sometimes they moved off the co-operative farm.

Mr. Teillet: They were generally successful.

Mr. Douglas: But of the less than 30 that were set up I think 26 of 27 or 28 are still operating, and operating most successfully from an economic viewpoint, and I believe from a social viewpoint as well. But the more successful experiment was the setting up of co-operatives for the co-operative use of farm machinery. Between 300 and 400 of these co-operatives were established and they are still in operation. They were particularly designed to help small farmers who found they could not operate with the old horse drawn vehicles and remain in business. Yet if they bought farm machinery their capitalization was greater than the size of their farms warranted.

Not only that, but because their farms were small they bought the smallest kind of machinery, which is the most expensive to operate. A man with a large farm who can buy diesel equipment can purchase fuel at half the price of fuel for an internal combustion tractor. These men who were buying small tractors found that their cost per unit was much higher than that of their neighbour down the road who was using diesel equipment. So these co-operatives enabled groups of farmers to come together, buy large machinery with its low cost of operation and do their farming with this machinery, with the result that none of them had too heavy an investment for the size of his farm and yet was able to get all the advantages of low cost operation.

These co-operatives for the co-operative use of farm machinery have been quite successful. They have had problems, it is true, but they have had a great deal of help from the farm management branch of the University of Saskatchewan. A very careful accounting has been kept of their costs per unit, per acre and per hour, and they have enabled several hundred smaller farmers to remain on the farm and continue operation who otherwise would have been driven off the farm, had they not been able to engage in this type of co-operative endeavour. Therefore when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle says that nothing was done about the royal commission report on rural development, I want to say that everything was done that could be done within provincial jurisdiction, including the matter of licensing, the matter of trying to improve the distribution system, co-operatives for the co-operative use of farm machinery and the co-operative farms themselves.

One other thing was done as a result of this report, which has been most useful. I refer to the setting up of the first and probably the only provincial farm machinery testing operation in Canada. Every piece of farm machinery that comes into the province is tested by a provincial agency set up for that purpose, and the machinery is graded A, B, C, and D and so on. A statement by the agricultural implement engineers accompanies the particular piece of machinery, and at the university and experimental farms it is put under all kinds of tests. A report is written as to its performance, how it stands up under certain conditions and certain strains, and all of this information is made available to the farmers and to the farm organizations. If any farmer wants to buy a piece of machinery in spite of the report, or purchase a piece of machinery that has not been graded, that is his privilege. Nobody can stop a man buying something which has not been proven and about which he knows nothing. But any farmer, before he buys a piece of machinery, can get a report on that piece of machinery. He can find out how it is graded, how it stood up under various types of farming conditions, and before he buys it he knows how it is likely to react under given conditions.

He knows also, when he is dealing with a farm implement agent in the province of Saskatchewan, that the agent must give him a warranty guaranteeing the performance which is advertised. He knows also that the implement agent, in order to retain his licence, must carry repair parts and must service the machinery which he has sold. He must stand by it or take the chance of losing his licence. I say, therefore, that far from decrying the actions which have been taken by the government of Saskatchewan with respect to these reports on farm implements, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, as a member from Saskatchewan, ought to be taking some pride in the fact that there is no province in Canada which has done more, within the limited jurisdiction which a provincial government has, to improve the sale, distribution and servicing of farm implements.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that when we get to second reading of the bill the minister will give us some further information relating to what he has in mind. I am interested in what he calls these farm implement syndicates. Are they to be co-operatives in the true sense of the word, that is will they be organized on the basis of one member one vote? If there is a surplus, will this be distributed on some basis related to the amount of work which is done for each member, or the amount of use which each member makes of the machinery which has been purchased by the syndicate? Will joint stock companies be permitted or will these syndicates be organized entirely on a co-operative basis? I hope the minister will tell us whether or not corporation farms are going to come under this type of legislation, because corporation farms are becoming all too prevalent in some parts of Canada. Packing companies and food processing companies have set up farms on which the farmers are paid what is virtually a commission for operating them. Are they going to be able to come under this legislation, or is the legislation designed solely to provide a service for the family farm and the individual farm operator who joins with his neighbours in forming an organization for the purpose of jointly purchasing and using farm implements?

I think there is the germ of an idea here that could be useful, if what the minister has in mind is something similar to the co-operatives for the use of farm machinery. This method could be useful, particularly to the smaller farmers. If this legislation which the minister is going to bring down makes it possible for the smaller farmers to combine themselves so that they can get the advantage of the larger machinery which they cannot afford to own or operate themselves, then it will certainly help to reduce farm costs and do something toward helping get the farmer out of the cost-price squeeze. I want to suggest to the minister that I hope he is not going to accept this as a solution to the problem of farm implement prices. All the investigations which have been made by various royal commissions and parliamentary committees indicate that over the last 30 years, while the labour factor in producing farm implements has reduced on a per dollar cost basis, the amount spent in promotion and advertising has gone up; that a very great part of the excessive cost of farm machinery is due to duplication in the industry and particularly to the duplication of repair services. In every small community there are three or four implement agents, each of whom must carry a supply of repair parts. All of this costs money.

The possibility has been looked into of setting up repair depots at which repair parts for all the different makes of farm machinery would be available, rather than having three or four separate agents handling these repair parts in every community. I think the government will have to go much farther. I think the government will have to sit down with the farm organizations in Canada to see if the co-operative manufacture, co-operative distribution and co-operative servicing of farm machinery cannot be worked out, with the government assisting by way of loans to these co-operatives to enable them to set up the necessary factories or to buy out some of the existing farm implement companies. I am convinced that nothing effective will be done about reducing the price of farm machinery to farmers, that nothing effective will be done about removing the costly duplication of services in both the selling and repairing of machinery until the farmers themselves, with whatever assistance the government is prepared to give them, establish effective co-operatives for this purpose. While I hope this measure the minister is introducing will be of some value, and we will know more about that when we get down to examining the legislation, I trust he will not consider this first, faltering step to be a solution to the problem by any means.

For 30 years parliament has looked at this problem, but so far nothing really effective has been done to cope with it. I hope the minister will be prepared, in the not too distant future, to work out a dynamic, bold policy and bring it to this house. I am sure if he does he will have the wholehearted support of the organized farm movement in Canada, and I am sure he will get a good reception from the members of this house.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the resolution that has been introduced today for the purpose of financing what has been termed farm machinery syndicates is certainly a new departure in the provision of farm credit. It is not my intention to embark on a general discussion of agriculture or its credit requirements. Furthermore I do not intend to deal at length with the submissions made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, but I do wish to deal briefly with the remarks made by the minister earlier today.

I was very disappointed at the very brief explanation he gave respecting the application of details envisaged in this measure. I hope he does not misunderstand me; I do not criticize him for being brief, but he ought to be criticized for introducing what could prove to be a very important piece of legislation, what I have already described as a new departure in farm credit, and then failing to give us any of the details of the mechanics of its operation. The only alternative left is to wait until we get the bill and make a detailed examination of it at that time.

The sharing of equipment with others is a well established practice in western Canada. The minister says the intention is to set up a $25 million revolving fund to provide the capital required by the provisions of the bill which this resolution precedes. He also mentioned that it is intended to provide up to 80 per cent of the cost of the machinery purchased by the syndicates that will be established, and one of the obvious deficiencies in the minister's explanation was what he meant by a syndicate.

We have no idea what the requisite terms will be for the incorporation of these syndicates. The minister said they would include three or more farmers; but when we are dealing with legislation to provide a maximum of $75,000 to each syndicate we have a responsibility to protect the public purse in respect of that which is guaranteed by it, in other words to see that we have a reasonable level of security for this extension of credit.

If I may digress for a moment, the minister mentioned the establishment of an interdepartmental board of review for farm credit. We are entitled to a more detailed explanation of this board's functions, of what matters will be referred to it, of what is intended to be reviewed, whether it is the whole field of farm credit, including the Farm Credit Corporation, the Farm Improvement Loans Act, this measure when it becomes law, and whether it will also take into consideration other sources of credit for agriculture available from provincial governments and private concerns?

To return to the resolution, it is fair to say that the sharing of equipment has some historic credence in Canada. I remember many years ago when one, two or three threshing machines took care of the threshing for a whole community. Generally speaking, one tractor and threshing machine were able to look after the needs of 10 to 15 farmers, so it is not a new concept that one piece of equipment will do certain operations for more than one farmer.

When agricultural land was first being settled in the west it was also a rather common practice for large, steam powered breaking equipment to go around communities and do a lot of custom work. Such a piece of equipment was far too heavy and expensive for an individual settler to buy, and in many cases there was almost what one might call a co-operative purchase of such machinery. Also in the case of smaller pieces of equipment, such as crushing and grinding equipment for preparing livestock feed, which was used only a few days a month, or in some cases a few days a week, it was not uncommon for a few farmers to co-operate in the purchase of that equipment.

Mention was made this evening about the possibility of this measure interfering with what is commonly known in the west as custom work, done by those people who make a business of doing work such as seeding or harvesting for so much per acre or so much per hour. I do not believe this legislation ought to be intended to provide credit facilities that would interfere with such a valid, useful and legitimate business.

There is a much more important matter that needs attention, the matter that has been referred to by every previous speaker. It is the matter of equipment costs, and in this connection I am talking about the whole operation of farms in Canada today. Earlier this session we were told by the Minister of Agriculture, and other people also have similar statistics, that in western Canada equipment costs including acquisition, repair and depreciation amount to about 50 per cent of the total operating costs of farming operations in the three western provinces. We should direct our attention to this matter and do something about these tremendous costs of equipment.

We should also bear in mind, so far as custom work is concerned, that finding operators is often as difficult as finding machines at the busy season of the year, and that custom work operators usually have experienced operators who are willing to move on from operation to operation at harvest time.

I do not intend to speak at length this evening, but I wish to say there are several categories of equipment that could usefully be purchased by several farmers, such as heavy trucks used by livestock farmers and grain farmers. For that matter, there are other types of farming operations in western Canada which from time to time require the use of heavy trucks. Trucks are required in the spring for brief periods for hauling seed to be cleaned, ready for planting. They are required at harvest time. They are required to carry stock to market, and so on. But I think it is correct to say that most of these heavy trucks are standing idle in farmers' yards more than 90 per cent of the time. This is one piece of equipment which is very important when you need it. But a farmer does not need it for very long. Thus it seems to me it is a piece of equipment which could properly be purchased under the terms of the bill before us, in spite of the fact that a motor truck is not confined to the category of farm equipment. The minister has not yet indicated whether or not the measure will be limited so as to apply only to certain specific pieces of equipment, but I hope that if this is the case motor trucks will be included in the list.

Perhaps the next most expensive pieces of equipment used on the farms of western Canada—indeed, in some cases they are the most expensive—are grain combines. However there is a problem here, because most of the grain within a community ripens at the same time and some arrangement would have to be worked out among members of a syndicate as to whose crop should be harvested first. Most members from western Canada who are experienced with the problems caused by wet weather at harvest time realize there is always a possibility of differences arising between the members of a syndicate in this regard. I would point out that in the southern region of Alberta this fall, the harvest is already 45 per cent to 50 per cent complete as far as threshing is concerned; a lesser amount as one moves north. If farmers had the services of a heavy combine for a matter of a week it could, on occasion, gather up a grain harvest sufficient to pay for its cost. A few weeks of inclement weather might mean the loss of a whole crop. This would be the problem, though I do not think it is insurmountable: Who would use this equipment first, when weather conditions permit it to be used?

Heavy tillage machinery is another item which no doubt will be considered. In this case, as compared with harvesting, timing is not so delicate and the deterioration or loss of value if the operation cannot be carried out at a particular moment is not so important. Then there are types of equipment designed to handle specialized crops. I think of equipment for harvesting sugar beets, for example. Anyway, if there is to be a specified list of the machinery which can be purchased under this measure I think we are justified in asking the minister to provide such a list. Moreover, he should be willing to accept suggestions for additions. In my own riding and, indeed, throughout southern Alberta there is a need today for a very heavy piece of equipment which could break the prairie, prepare a seed bed and actually seed tame grass in some of the submarginal land. I do not know whether such a machine is in existence, but it would necessarily have to be a very heavy and costly piece of equipment. One farmer would not have any use for it over an extended period of time; he might want to prepare a few acres of land each year to ensure correct grazing rotation. I bring this up as an example; there are many other specialized pieces of equipment required in connection with other farming operations in various parts of Canada.

In closing, I wish to ask a number of specific questions which I hope the minister will answer, either when he closes this debate on the resolution or when the bill comes up for second reading. First I should like to know what will be the requirements facing these corporations or syndicates. There is clearly some need to protect the guarantees which are to be made by the public purse; a need to see that the machinery will be maintained so that the undepreciated value will always be higher than the unpaid balance of the credit, as well as to make sure that there is some continuity of the syndicate after the money has been expended. Then I should like to know, as I have already indicated, whether the eligible equipment is to be specified. I have already dealt with that point. The third question I should like to ask is this: What are the anticipated terms of repayment? Will the arrangement follow the lines of the Farm Improvement Loans Act or of the administrative provisions applied by the Farm Credit Corporation, with extended terms? Or will there be a variable schedule of repayments to match the estimated depreciation of the machine or machines which have been purchased?

There is another question which I am sure the members of these syndicates will be asking. What security, what personal guarantees will be required from the farmers who form themselves into these groups? This was not dealt with by the minister in his opening observations today. If we could have answers to the questions I have raised I believe we would be in a far better position to discuss intelligently some of the practical applications of this measure as it moves to its further stages.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I would like to put a question to the hon. member who just yielded the floor.

Can he tell us where he has taken his figures, when he mentioned the $75,000 maximum?

All day, I have listened to speeches delivered either by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), or by members, and I have not heard of any maximum for such loans.

[Text]

Is there a special pipeline between the government and the hon. member?

Mr. Olson: I did not hear the last part of the question.

Mr. Vincent: Is there a special pipeline through which the hon. member receives information from the government, and which we could tap?

Mr. Olson: I think there were some suggestions in the press during the past weeks mentioning the figure I put forward as a maximum. With regard to the comment about a pipeline, I should like to tell the hon. member that I have enjoyed very good co-operation from the members of the present government as I did from members of the government when his party was in office about a year and a half ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, my turn has come to make some remarks about the resolution now before us.

The hon. members who spoke before me talked mostly about their respective riding or province; we heard mostly about the western provinces and the usefulness of that resolution for the prairie farmers.

That resolution is meant, as explained by a number of hon. members, to allow some groups of farmers to get together in order to be able, on behalf of their group, to purchase machinery under the new loans which will be granted when the bill which will follow this resolution has been adopted.

However, in the remarks he made this afternoon, the Minister of Agriculture did not say anything which could lead us to believe that in the near future the price of farm machinery would decrease thanks to grants from the federal government or a tax cut, for instance the repeal of the 11 per cent tax which has also affected in its own way the price of farm machinery.

Nothing was said about reducing the cost of farm machinery. But, I recall that in 1949 or 1950, a farmer had to pay from $1,800 to $2,000 for a new tractor, with all the necessary farming attachments. Today, we would pay between $5,000 and $6,000 for such a tractor. It means that the cost of that equipment increased by 300 per cent over the past 15 years.

However, as I have just mentioned, nothing in the act, as it now stands, suggests that the price of farm machinery sold to farmers will be lowered. Instead of lowering prices, we want the farmers, who have to suffer the consequences, to get organized, to form a syndicate or a group of three to buy what one man could afford 15 years ago.

Mr. Chairman, before I took the floor, some hon. members have discussed the practical effects which this resolution will have in their respective riding or province.

We realize, on examining this resolution, that its object was commendable and that those who have prepared it or are encouraging it are surely well intentioned.

But let us look at it in a practical way. It may be practical in some provinces, I have no doubt about that and I am not discussing that point. But as far as agriculture in eastern Canada is concerned, when we come to think of the type of machinery which the farmers will be able to buy through co-operatives under the existing legislation, we realize that this legislation will be almost unworkable in that part of Canada.

Farmers cannot get together to buy a milking machine, for instance, because if they did, they would have to milk their cows at different hours. Perhaps they could manage it but it would go against the cows' nature.

Farmers will not be able to agree either on the purchase of a litter carrier through a syndicate because such a machine is a fixture in the building and therefore, cannot be lent to other farmers.

There are also the hay balers for the storage of hay. Everyone knows, especially in the province of Quebec, that our farmers have been the victims of bad weather for the past few years. When the weather is nice for a few days all the farmers are in a hurry to use their machines to store their hay on time. Consequently, farmers could not get together under this legislation to purchase a single hay baler.

Now, if four or five farmers take advantage of this bill to buy a piece of machinery they will be joint owners and there will be trouble when the time comes to use the machine. On the other hand, when a farmer is the sole owner of a machine he is independent and works when it is convenient; he can make arrangements with his client as to the day on which he will go and work for him on his farm.

I am looking at the practical side of this legislation. I see that the Minister of Agriculture is laughing. Perhaps it is practical for western Canada to have a combine for five or six farmers, but in the east of the country I certainly cannot see the practical aspect of this measure. I do not deny the good intentions of the minister, but I look forward to reading the bill to be able to say what will be the practical aspect of the proposed legislation.

Can people organize a syndicate in order to buy a tractor? It is impossible. Nowadays a tractor is used daily on our farms. People certainly cannot organize a syndicate to buy one.

Let us analyse our farm situation and see which farm implements we need. The minister should analyse the situation in order to know if it is possible, from the practical viewpoint, to apply such legislation.

I do not deny the good intentions of the Minister of Agriculture, but it would be much wiser and more useful if the minister would introduce as soon as possible measures likely to enable our farmers to get farm machinery at a cheaper cost, so that they might, allowing for the changing weather in the east, do their work at the convenient time.

If five or six farmers are to use the same machinery in eastern Canada, I do not see the practical aspect of such a system.

I think that those who really know the farm problems of Quebec will agree with me when I say that the aim of this resolution is a worthy one, but I am anxious to hear the Minister of Agriculture explain to us the practical side of this legislation.

And now, Mr. Chairman, we are impatiently waiting for this bill to be made available to us.

A lot was said about our farmers' prosperity which is made much of especially at election time. But if today our farmers cannot buy machinery for themselves, they will be able in the future, not because of their prosperous situation but rather because of the farm crisis, to unite to get the machinery which a few years ago each was buying to meet his own needs.

[Text]

Mr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, I am delighted with this bill. I was glad to hear the hon. members for Qu'Appelle and Burnaby-Coquitlam state that they thought it would help somewhat to reduce farm costs. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said, if it helps to reduce these costs a little bit, it will be worth while, and will be well worth supporting. Mr. Chairman, I am not a farmer and so I am no expert in these matters; but I am anxious to see bills of the kind that the resolution speaks of coming before the house, because these are matters which should be of great assistance to those who follow agricultural pursuits in this country. I trust that the bill will greatly assist groups of farmers. The resolution refers to syndicates and I hope this will be of assistance to co-operative movements and, as a result, to the general enhancement of farming in other provinces, in these crucial days for our farming population. Like the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I trust that this legislation will help the small farmers to band together in order to rise above the cost-price squeeze in the purchasing of equipment.

Mr. Chairman, the purchasing of farm machinery by syndicates composed of farmers is, of course, of assistance to the farm implement business, a business which has been the backbone of industrial life in the city of Brantford, Ontario, over the years. Today in Brantford we have a new farm implement plant which is one of the largest, if not the largest manufacturing plant of its kind in North America. Speaking both for the farming population and for those enterprises engaged in manufacturing of farm equipment, I cannot but be enthusiastic about this resolution. Mr. Chairman, I shall look forward with keen interest to studying the bill.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, I have been looking forward to the time when this legislation was presented to the house. I hope the minister will not think this is a complete answer to the agricultural problems of today, because it is not. I should like to point out several things in respect of the cost of farm machinery, of which he may or may not be aware.

First of all I should like to suggest that if as a result of this kind of legislation he thinks he is going to reduce the cost of farm machinery to the individual farmer, he is having a pipe dream. If it has that effect I will be pleased, but I do not think it will. I have some very definite views in respect of how, if he has any desire to do so, he can reduce the cost of farm machinery to farmers all across this country.

Several years ago members of parliament spent a great deal of time accumulating several thousand pages of evidence in respect of the cost of producing farm machinery. That committee on agriculture, after its detailed study, made certain recommendations, the main one being that the committee should continue to study the problems and look at what was being done by other countries today in relation to the cost of farm machinery.

Mr. Chairman, so far as the resolution and the minister's statement are concerned, I am of the opinion that very little will be done to reduce the cost of farm implements. We have just heard the hon. member for Brantford speak in support of this piece of legislation, and I wonder whether it is going to be more beneficial to the manufacturers of farm machinery than to the farmers. Perhaps that is a good question and one deserving of an answer. Before we accomplish anything in respect of solving the difficulties relating to the cost of farm implements—and I should like to remind the minister that costs incurred by farmers are increasing all the time, while the farm income picture is not rosy—we will have to take more definitive steps than proposed at this time.

We are greatly concerned about what the minister and his cohorts intend to do in respect of rising costs in relation to many farm products including the cost of raising cattle and producing grain, because we are vitally concerned with these difficulties. I suggest one of the ways by which costs incurred by farmers could be reduced is by government leadership in the field of standardization. For the last two or three years I have had a private member's resolution on the order paper in respect of this situation. I believe that if we are going to accomplish anything in this field of standardizing the costs of farm machinery parts we must have leadership from the government. Parts must be standardized before any reduction in costs will be realized, and although there has been a slight step in this direction, we have a long way to go. Farmers complain mainly about the cost of repairs to farm implements. They are familiar with capital costs of machinery, and figure these costs into their over-all plans; but the high and unforeseeable cost of repairs is hurting them badly.

One reason for the high cost of repairs is the lack of standardization in respect of parts. I believe a system of standardization should be set up under the authority of a three man board, one appointed by the farm organizations, one by machine manufacturers and one by the government, and this board could work towards standardization of as many parts as possible. I appreciate that this would involve great difficulties, and that we must continue to maintain private enterprise in the manufacture of farm machinery if we are to keep up to date and make progress in the development of agricultural technology; but we must be able to compete with the rest of the world in agricultural products, if we are to keep this industry healthy, and we certainly should not allow costs of repairing farm machinery to rise out of all proportion. I suggest that the minister give some consideration to my suggestion in respect of standardization when drafting his next bill to assist farmers. This will be difficult, but I think we should make a start by establishing a three man board to look into the situation with a view to gradually bringing farm implement parts under a standardization policy.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam made a suggestion in respect of repair depots. I am not a socialist and do not believe in his theory that we should nationalize the farm machinery industry, and that is what his agriculture minister suggested to the agricultural committee of the Saskatchewan legislature. He suggested that we nationalize the farm machinery industry and do away with private enterprise in this field. I am wondering how the hon. member for Brantford would feel about that sort of proposition put forward by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam when he was the premier of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Peters: He might not find it any different having civil servants in the Brantford machine factory.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): The hon. member for Timiskaming was also a member of our committee and expressed that same attitude. I intend to also refer to some of the other suggestions made by that committee in respect of the cost of farm machinery.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam referred also to the fact that labour productivity had increased and that this was not the reason for the increased cost of farm implements. Of course one must realize that one of the conclusions of that committee was that there was a difference of opinion expressed by witnesses in respect of labour productivity compared to the increase in wages. I do not feel competent to deal with the finer economical points of this argument, but there was a considerable difference of opinion expressed by labour unions and management in regard to whether or not the increase in wages could be compared favourably or otherwise to the increase in productivity, or whether in fact increased wages did contribute to the increased cost of farm machinery. I appreciate that the increases in wages were justified and that labour has the right to an improved standard of living, just as do farmers and others, but I do not believe that the nationalization of the farm machinery industry will cut costs incurred by farmers. As I have stated, I think a standardization policy would do much toward that end.

Second, I should like to point out that the majority of farm implements are not manufactured in Canada, unless that factory in Brantford is now engaged in this field. At least in the years 1961 and 1962 there was not one tractor manufactured in Canada. These companies, Massey-Harris, International Harvester, John Deere and Case are international farm machinery companies. They manufacture their machinery in the country where they can find the lowest costs, and they sell their machinery in countries like Canada for what the market will bear, with no regard to their costs. The then general manager of Massey-Ferguson admitted this to the committee when he said in answer to the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) that "market conditions here establish the price of equipment in this market". He went on further to tell us point blank that what they charged farmers in Canada had nothing to do with their costs.

Many years ago the entry of farm machinery into Canada was made available to farmers on a free trade basis, without duty. So we set the stage for these international companies to build their machinery in the country where they could find the lowest standard of living and the lowest labour cost, so that they could then sell their machines in countries like Canada at prices set on the basis of what the market would bear. This is what the general manager of Massey-Ferguson admitted before the committee.

If we really want to do something about the cost of such machinery to the farmers of Canada we have to have regard to the fact that Massey-Ferguson manufactures all its diesel tractors in Coventry, England. If a Canadian farmer wanted to do so he could travel to England and buy an identical tractor from a dealer there for several hundred dollars less than the price for which he could buy it from a Canadian dealer.

Here is the crux of the situation. If we are going to lower the cost of some of this machinery we are going to have to say to these manufacturers that if they want to continue to enjoy duty free entry of their product into Canada they must sell it to our dealers at a price equivalent to the price at which they sell it to dealers in the country of origin. Our farmers cannot even buy machinery manufactured in the United States from a dealer in Canada at the same price as they could if they went to the United States and bought the same machine from a dealer there. Why is this so? Because our farmers have been suckered into a deal where they are paying what the market will bear.

If we want to do something about the cost of farm machinery, let us have a look at the situation which makes it possible for these international companies to operate in this way. Massey-Ferguson puts forward the proposition that they are really a Canadian company because they have their head office here, but most of their manufacturing is done outside of Canada and most of their sales, of course, are also made outside of Canada. These international companies have taken advantage of the free trade situation and in my opinion have in fact conspired to set prices in Canada at what the market will bear. What in fact are Canadian farmers doing? They are paying for the cost of erecting factories in low labour cost countries. If we want to do something about the cost of farm machinery, then let us say to these people that if they are going to bring in tractors from England they must treat their dealers in Canada in the same way as their dealers in the country of origin. If they did so the price of tractors would come down tomorrow by $400 to $500, far more money than the farmers will save as the result of anything contained in this resolution.

I am sure the minister is aware that a year ago the Alberta legislature set up facilities so that farmers could get together in groups to buy farm machinery. This plan has been operating for a year and I believe, subject to correction, that there are seven such groups now operating in the province of Alberta under a similar sort of arrangement to what the minister is now trying to set up. I wonder whether the minister's department has got in touch with the department in Alberta to see how their plan is working. My understanding is that it is working very well for certain types of machinery, but that in the case of harvesting and seeding equipment it does not work very well.

I have spoken to some of those in the group in the Camrose area where they have a farm machinery co-operative and my information is that machinery such as land levellers, caterpillar tractors and feeding and grinding equipment is ideally suited to this kind of approach but, as a Creditiste member mentioned, what about tractors? A tractor has to be readily available if maximum benefit is to be derived from its use.

If we want to reduce the price of farm machinery we have to do more than is envisaged in this resolution. We have to proceed with a standardization program. I believe we should take the best parts of Saskatchewan's program and institute it on a national basis. I think there should be national standards with regard to warranties because the most common complaint I have had from farmers in my area with regard to farm machinery is not that the dealer would not do anything for them but that the company would not stand behind the warranty. The farmer could not return the machine if he was not happy with it and had nothing but trouble with it. This applies to some of our larger farm machinery companies, even if their head office is in Canada.

These people have had a good market in Canada for their product, and while I appreciate they have provided some jobs in cities such as Brantford, Toronto and Hamilton the number of jobs that the farm machinery companies have really provided have not been that many. Therefore they should think about doing more manufacturing in Canada, particularly in view of the fact that they have had free access to the market here and have set their prices here without regard to their costs. All we say is that our farmers should be able to buy the same tractor for the same price that a farmer has to pay for it in the country of origin, and I am taking into consideration freight and everything else. I know what I am talking about because I had a friend who was going to Scotland price a Massey 35 diesel for me, and if he had purchased it he could have saved $600, even taking into account the cost of shipping the tractor to Canada.

Surely it would be a simple thing for the Minister of Finance to say to these people: You will no longer have free entry into our market unless you show us that you are making this machinery available to our farmers on a basis comparable to that on which you make it available to farmers in the country of origin. This is not restricting trade. This is making sure that these companies do not make suckers of Canadian farmers.

There are one or two other things I wanted to say with regard to the type of machinery that might be worth while under a program such as the minister has outlined. Again I say that this program can be of some little help, particularly with regard to the clearing of land. It seems to me that would be an ideal situation for a group of farmers to get together to buy land clearing machinery, and in my area this is vitally important. I hope the minister will make allowances for this in the bill and that he will not exclude large caterpillar tractors, large breaking plows, large diskers and so on that can be used in clearing and breaking new land, particularly in those areas where there is good arable farm land available.

I also think that the best way to proceed with the bill, once we have it, would be for the minister to refer it to the standing committee on agriculture for its consideration. Many members on this side of the house and some on the other side took part in previous committees which spent some time studying the problem of farm machinery costs. I think the minister should take advantage of their knowledge by submitting the bill to the standing committee on agriculture. I believe that in this way we could hammer out a bill with which we would all be happy and which would be really effective. There have been many questions asked by hon. members who have already spoken. Who is going to qualify? What kind of machinery is going to be available under this legislation? All of these things, of course, so far are merely the subject of conjecture.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat apparently had some word from someone that $75,000 was the amount which would be made available to each syndicate. This is a lot of money, but I can say that in an area such as mine in which clearing and breaking equipment is required, it is not going to be enough. I do not know whether or not the hon. member has a pipe line to the minister's office, but these are some of the problems that could be thrashed out in the committee. Perhaps if the committee were to meet in camera we could hammer out a bill that would be effective, and which would help the farmers right across the country to a greater extent than some superficial bill that will be the subject of so many regulations that it will not be effective. I understand that the farm credit officers are going to administer this measure. If this is correct, then I agree with it. I think this is essential. This is one of the things for which we fought when I pointed out to the minister that he was being pushed around by the justice department in connection with the naming of solicitors.

The idea of having a farm credit officer out in the area is one which we brought about. We think this is a worth-while idea. This is the kind of work such an officer can do, along with his farm credit work. He can supervise some of these applications from these syndicates and find out what they are doing. I feel this is an excellent idea—if it is the idea.

I come back to one other point, and that is the question of regulations. We have to make sure we are not just passing another piece of paper. We have to make sure this is going to work. As I said in connection with the Farm Improvement Loans Act, that measure will not be of assistance if the banks will not lend the money. This type of legislation is fine; it looks good. It will help a few farmers, but I have a suspicion it is going to help the larger farmers who can find $5,000 to go into a syndicate. What is it going to do for the poor little farmer who cannot find $300 or $400 to go into a syndicate which will buy machinery? How is it going to benefit these people?

We will be looking forward with interest to the bill which will be following this resolution. I hope the minister will follow our suggestion that the bill be referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization, so that we can hammer out a bill which would be a first step toward the effective reduction of farm machinery costs. I hope also he will give consideration to the two areas with which I have been concerned, namely standardization and the importation of equipment from low labour cost countries. According to their own admission, these companies have charged whatever the market would bear. I ask him, along with his colleague the Minister of Justice, to look at whether or not these companies are in fact in breach of the combines legislation in their pricing policies on farm machinery. I refer particularly to machinery which is manufactured in other countries, and this covers the majority of farm machinery now used in Canada. If we really want to do something about the cost of farm machinery, here is an area in which we could save our farmers a great deal of money and in which we may even be able to provide additional jobs by manufacturing machinery in Canada.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I have a few comments to make about this resolution.

First, I must say that the measure the government is bringing forward today is still but a pebble in the ditch separating the pitiful income of the farmer from a reasonable income.

I should like to quote what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) said on television on August 23, 1964:

> Never, since 1956, has parliament done so much legislative work in so little time.

Those were the words spoken by the Minister of Justice on August 23 of this year.

On the other hand, on other occasions we have heard the same minister tell us that we were carrying on a filibuster.

Despite all those measures referred to by the Minister of Justice, we have yet to see a concrete one really designed to help the eastern farmer.

For several months we have been hearing about the legislation now before us. Yet, it was put on the order paper only on September 14 last, that is only yesterday. What the minister stated this afternoon does not give us much information on the bill which will be brought forward after the passing of this resolution.

I expected that the minister would give us some information that would enable us to see whether this new legislation would at least put a little stone in the trench separating the farmers' pitiful income from a reasonable revenue.

Now, what would be the maximum amount allowed for that organization or co-operative mentioned in the said resolution? Will it be $75,000? That amount was mentioned by an hon. member a few minutes ago. Will the maximum amount be larger or smaller? We would have liked the minister to tell us.

Moreover, the Minister of Agriculture told us that this agency or co-operative would be made up of three or more members. Now, I wish to point out that in this resolution nowhere is the word farmer used. Maybe it is the intention of the minister, at this time, to eliminate completely this word in future legislation.

As far as I am concerned, even if I am still a farmer, I am not in the least ashamed of it. But it is to be noted that the resolution does not mention that those three persons must be farmers. I think, therefore, that a farm machinery salesman could, for instance, form a syndicate, which would be quite easy for him, for he would only have to ask two other persons, who are farmers, to form this syndicate with him, and after a while, he could sell his share to another farmer. In the meantime he would have sold a lot of farm machinery, and in six or eight months he could set up the same scheme and form another group or syndicate. As I said before, how are we to know if only farmers or producers of farm products will form such groups.

Now, if such a group is an organization, a co-operative or a syndicate composed of three members, could three brothers who have formed a farm corporation, owning the same farm, the same livestock, organize such a syndicate or co-operative? That is another question I have asked, and I believe that under the circumstances it would serve a good purpose if three members of the same family could form such an organization or syndicate.

Here is another point I immediately thought of when I read the resolution and after hearing the statement of the Minister of Agriculture: What would be the rate of interest charged on loans made to those organizations? Would it be higher than the rate now charged under the Farm Improvement Loans Act or would it be the same as the rate accepted by the present government on loans over $7,500 made under part 3 of the Farm Credit Corporation Act?

Now, what will be the method of reimbursement? Over how many years will the repayment of loans granted to those syndicates be spread? We would have liked the minister to clarify this point when he spoke on the resolution earlier. I think we would have passed through this stage more promptly so that he might ask his officers to make the necessary corrections to the bill and submit it to us afterwards as soon as possible.

There is a further question several of us are asking themselves: Why will this act be administered by the Farm Credit Corporation instead of by chartered banks, as is the case with the Farm Improvement Loans Act?

I approve the Department of Agriculture for having entrusted the implementation of this measure, the provisions of which I do not know yet, to the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation, because I know several advisers of this corporation and I am aware of their wide experience in the preparation of such loans, and I am convinced that they will be able, by working in agreement with their advisers throughout all the provinces, to deal with this measure which is highly prized by the farmers; they have, in many areas, efficient advisers who will be able to welcome and advise the farmers who are anxious to set up syndicates.

I should like to take this opportunity to say to the minister that it is very nice, indeed, to introduce pieces of legislation to enable farmers to purchase farm machinery, but it is even more important to be able to advise farmers in such a way that they will not engage in a series of commercial operations they may be sorry for in a few months or years. If, in a given area, the farm counsellor takes time to pay the necessary attention to farmers who want to unite in a group and to give them appropriate advice by explaining to them the best way to organize themselves, I think the Farm Credit Corporation will play a part which will be beneficial to all farmers in this country.

When a group of farmers wish to form a syndicate or a co-operative to buy machinery, they must necessarily know the operating cost per hour of work of a combine for instance. I am unable to tell you what it is, but the farmer must know. If the Farm Credit Corporation has those figures, the farmers can meet its farming counsellors and establish their program before buying machinery they would then know the annual rate of depreciation, the interest charges and the method of reimbursment, and they could make their purchase accordingly.

I know that we will resume consideration of all these questions when we study the bill.

But before reading the bill I should like the Minister of Agriculture to give me a few answers, so that I will not have to move amendments to this bill when it is brought before us.

As the hon. member who spoke before me said a moment ago, it would have been preferable for this bill to be submitted to the committee on agriculture and colonization, so that every member informed by the advice of officials of the department could express his idea in order to hammer out the best possible legislation.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, no matter has come before the House of Commons of as much importance to the agricultural industry as that of the cost of farm machinery. About six months ago I listened to the minister addressing the municipal convention in Regina. I recall the plateau he was on at that time, and the forecast he made of the inroads that would be made into the problem of farm machinery costs, and his forecast of what the government would do to attack that problem. If this resolution is the result of all the intervening months' work, then I for one am sincerely disappointed.

When I say that, I do not intend to indicate that this is a useless measure in itself; but if it is the sum total of all those months of study, and of the long hard look that was taken at this problem, then it is a weak and pale measure indeed.

The hon. member for Shefford indicated his belief that this would be a more useful measure for farmers in western Canada than for those in other parts of the country. I am inclined to agree with him. In fact I am inclined to go a little further and say it will be of more benefit to the larger farmer than to the smaller farmer who, for the past several years, has been the chief concern of governments both at the provincial and federal level. I am interested in this word "syndicate". I wonder why it is used in this resolution, and whether it will be used in the bill. I wonder whether this measure envisages the setting up of simple co-operatives for the purchase of machinery they require. If this is so, why does the minister not want to use the word accepted in most farm communities across Canada, rather than the word "syndicate" which is before us at the present time.

There is one other question I should like to raise. In the last several months, particularly the last five or six months, the Minister of Agriculture has indicated a desire to get the provinces to bring in legislation supplementary to the legislation he proposes—legislation which, I take it, is encompassed by the measure now before us. I should like the minister to tell us whether he has been successful in securing commitments or indications from any of the provinces that they are willing to bring in legislation which will complement or supplement the legislation envisaged in the resolution before us.

I think back to the inquiry into the cost of farm machinery which was undertaken by the government several years ago, when we were sitting on the other side of the house. I recall the frustration some of the members of that committee felt as they questioned the officials of certain of the companies which came before the committee at that time. One member who spoke today in the debate said we took no action on the recommendations of that committee during the last few months during which we were in office. I cannot allow that observation to pass without making reference to the determined obstruction mounted by members opposite, who then formed the official opposition, obstruction which prevented the government from completing many of the courses upon which it had embarked in its first years of office.

I know the minister is a learned man in many ways and that he keeps in close touch with what is happening in the business world in Canada. I suggest he take a look at what has happened to the value of Massey-Harris shares in the last few years. This will give him some indication whether or not an inquiry into the cost of farm machinery should now be undertaken for a second time, and proceeded with. No one can deny that the situation has changed, even since the inquiry which was held some two years ago.

The fact that these arrangements are to be under the supervision of the Farm Credit Corporation brings up the question of the interest rates to be charged on these loans to farmers. I want to tell the government that if in the bill they propose to bring before parliament there is a further erosion of the principle which was embodied in the Farm Improvement Loans Act as it existed before the present administration came to office, this will be another step along the road which will raise instead of lowering the cost of loans to farmers across this country. I notice that certain people have been taking notes, and I hope the minister and his officials will take note of that observation. I trust we shall not have to rise when the bill is brought forward and oppose it on that ground, at least.

Another matter which was mentioned briefly by an earlier speaker this evening concerned the nature of the syndicates or co-operatives themselves. As I mentioned, in western Canada Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited has been operating for some years. This organization was set up in an attempt to reduce the cost of farm implements, and it is a fact that in the past two years dividends from the company have amounted to between 10 and 12 per cent. This immediately raises the question as to the nature of the syndicate or co-operative or other form of company which would be set up to make possible the purchase of machinery in accordance with the provisions of the bill to be laid before us. Dividends will be forthcoming to the purchasers, and there must be some basis upon which these dividends can become the equity of those to whom they belong.

Another problem which concerns farmers in this regard has to do with warranties, and this too has been mentioned by an earlier speaker. In Saskatchewan I believe the leader of the New Democratic party indicated his belief that the problem had been licked or, at any rate, that an effort had been made to solve it. I can assure the committee that this is far from the truth. Farmers on the prairies today are having a difficult time with the implement companies as far as warranties are concerned. Many of the machines coming off the assembly lines now are not proven. But farmers who find them unsuitable for the operations for which these machines were purchased are often unable to return them to the manufacturers when it is apparent they are not performing satisfactorily.

A word now about parts. As I recall it, when the inquiry into the cost of farm implements was under way the implement companies presented what seemed to many of us a very fair case with regard to the parts carried for the farm people. But this still remains one of the problems facing those who buy machinery—the fact that parts of many of these machines are not as readily available as they should be, even for new machines. This is particularly damaging when a replacement part is needed at seeding time, or during the harvest or in the course of some other urgent farm operation.

I am disappointed in this resolution and in its terms. If this is supposed to be the answer the government has to the high price of farm machinery I can only say it is a poor substitute indeed for legislation which could have accomplished its purpose more effectively. It will help only a limited number of people, in many cases people who would otherwise be able to secure the credit they need from other sources—and I am not referring to those sources which are charging 12, 14 and 16 per cent. I know the minister has been anxious to create the impression that he intends to do something for agriculture. We on this side like to think he is sincere in that desire. But when I look at this resolution I cannot see very much in it which will enhance the prospects of the agricultural community of Canada. In so far as agriculture is concerned, it is one of the weakest resolutions that has ever been brought before the parliament of this nation, when one compares its limited extent with the promises that were held out, almost on a daily basis, from one end of this country to the other by the Minister of Agriculture. In view of this, sir, all I can say is that if the bill follows the terms of this resolution, it will be a shocking dereliction of duty, in so far as the promises that were made to the farmers across this country are concerned.

I say that it is particularly shocking to those in eastern and central Canada, and the smaller farmers in other parts of Canada, who will find this legislation almost useless to them in their struggle to beat the cost-price squeeze that today engages the attention of farmers across this country. I am sure the minister and his officials have been taking notes during this discussion and perhaps this point has occurred to them already; but I would hope that grain handling, grain storage and grain cleaning equipment would also be included in the definition of "farm machinery" when the definition is decided upon. I do not think I have anything else to say at this time, Mr. Chairman, except that I hope the bill is much better than the resolution would indicate.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I and many other members of this house have been greatly interested in this proposed piece of legislation, perhaps because the minister has gone across the country talking about it and saying what it would do to the agricultural economy. I think at one time he said it would revolutionize the agricultural economy of this country. We have been waiting anxiously for this measure to be introduced. I have a brief clipping from a Lethbridge newspaper away back in April, when the minister made a statement in Lethbridge and said, "Farmers, wait". Well, Mr. Chairman, this house has been waiting since that time, and at last this measure is on the order paper and is before us.

In Lethbridge in the spring the minister said he could not supply any information with regard to what he envisaged would be in the bill, and he did very little better when introducing it at the resolution stage. He failed to enunciate what he meant by the word "syndicate". An hon. member asked, "Does it mean three farmers or more? Can it be two farmers and their sons who are already operating farms?" We really do not know. What does it apply to; what does the minister mean by the words "farm machinery"?

I can remember that a couple of years back I had quite an interesting discussion about the terms "farm implements" and "farm machinery". What do these terms include? I could ask, for example, will they include feed mills, and a syndicate opening and starting to operate a feed mill for the purpose of feeding their own livestock? Will it cover those people who are going to be in the business of dealing with livestock or buying livestock? I hope the minister will consider these points before bringing in the bill. The resolution says:

—the terms and conditions of such loans, the amount of a loan not to exceed 80 per cent of the actual price to the farm machinery syndicate—

What does the minister mean by "farm machinery"? Does he mean that the provisions of the bill will apply only to machinery, and not to livestock? Certainly anybody in the feeding business knows that he can put his own money into livestock and put the government's money into the feed mills, corrals, and the feed distribution system, which has become highly automated in the last five years in particular.

Perhaps the most one can say for this resolution, as it has been devised by the minister, is that it is his hope of doing something for the farmers. But whom will it help? Will it help the grocery growers, the food manufacturers, or just the plain farmer? Will it help the wealthy farmers, or will it help those who need help the most?

Some years ago when we were on the other side of the house we implemented the Farm Credit Corporation, or revised the old farm loan board. It was a well established fact that the old farm loan board only helped those who did not really need it, who had financial backing to help themselves. We established the Farm Credit Corporation under the principle of helping those who needed help; in fact, one who had already established himself on an economic unit could not obtain a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation. During this session quite recently we saw some erosion of this principle; we saw the Farm Credit Corporation granting loans up to $40,000 and $55,000, when it was a well established fact that anybody obtaining a loan of $40,000 from that corporation should at least have collateral equalling $40,000.

Now we have before us a proposal that is going to be operated by the Farm Credit Corporation, and the provisions of the bill will mean that loans will be granted to syndicates. I do not know what the minister thinks of farmers. From his definition, or his evasion with regard to the word "farmer" I am led to believe that he has perhaps been ashamed of being called a farmer all his life, and has been trying to find a new name for himself. Personally, Mr. Chairman, I am not ashamed of the name "farmer" and I have always been proud to be proclaimed as one. But the Farm Credit Corporation was set up with the basic principle of helping those who needed help most. Now, however, we find that the Farm Credit Corporation is helping those who need it the least. Certainly any farmer, or any ten farmers in any part of Canada would not like to be called grocery growers and would hate to be called a syndicate. I am sure farmers would view that title with some scepticism, to say the least. In this resolution we fail to see any definition of the words "farmer" or "syndicate". Would it include a lawyer, for example, who is practising a law business but also operates a farm on the edge of town? Would this measure allow him to go into the feeding business, for example? This is, of course, occurring in many areas of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it 10.30?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, if the committee had a disposition to give this bill first reading tonight—and I sense that it has—we might be disposed not to see the clock and let the hon. gentleman complete his interesting remarks. In that event, we might give the bill first reading.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I think it might facilitate the speed with which the house deals with this measure at the resolution stage if we could get some answer from the government as to whether this brand new legislation will go before the standing committee on agriculture and colonization. That committee is not holding any meetings now and would be free to give this legislation a detailed examination outside the house, and therefore the house could go on with other business.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, we have given this bill a great deal of consideration. We realize that after the bill has been in operation for possibly a year some parts of it will perhaps need amending. But it is important, I think, in so far as farmers are concerned, and I believe that after hon. members of the committee see the bill they will agree with this. I have listened very carefully to all the questions that have been asked this evening, and I think they are all answered in the bill. I do not think one question has been asked that is not answered by one of the clauses of this bill. Mr. Chairman, I also should indicate that I have discussed this proposed legislation with all of the ministers of agriculture of the ten provinces of Canada, and they have indicated they think this is an excellent bill.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Who do you say thinks this is an excellent bill?

Mr. Hays: I have discussed it with all ten of the provincial ministers of agriculture of Canada, and they agree with me that there are no specific items of machinery not covered, or that will not be covered by the legislation. Be that as it may, I think we could go ahead and accept the resolution tonight, then have the bill presented, which I am sure is self-explanatory.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I intend to continue my remarks or call it ten thirty.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, it is my suggestion that we allow the hon. member to complete his remarks so that we might be in a position then to give the bill first reading. In view of the importance of this legislation I am sure all hon. members are interested in seeing the bill, so as to be in a position to discuss it more thoroughly at the second reading stage.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, there is little value in doing that unless we know this is the last speaker. There may be other speakers, and by sitting for an extra 20 minutes or half an hour only to find that there are others would be useless.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, if I am not too much out of order perhaps I could ask the members of the opposition parties present whether there are any others who intend to speak at this stage, and if there is an indication that this is the last speaker I am sure we would all be interested in listening to him so that we may receive this bill and make some real headway.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether there are any other speakers to follow me, but I do know I have ten or twenty minutes left which I intend to use, and if the committee is good enough to stay and listen to me I will complete my remarks. I might say that I asked for permission during the flag debate to speak longer than my allotted time and it was not given. Those members on the opposite side seem to have had a change of heart. I will gladly forgo my further remarks at this time if the minister will state that this whole question in respect of farm machinery will be referred to the agriculture committee, and that representatives of farm organizations, machine companies and other interested parties will be heard, so that we will have a better idea of what is envisaged by this legislation.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Batten): Is it the wish of the committee to allow the hon. member to continue?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, if I am right, I must have unanimous consent in order to continue past ten thirty.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Batten): Is it the wish of the committee to continue?

Mr. Monteith: It is ten thirty.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN FLAG

PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre) moved:

That the special committee on a Canadian flag appointed September 10, 1964, be composed of Messrs: Batten, Cadieux (Terrebonne), Deachman, Dubé, Flemming (Victoria-Carleton), Mrs Konantz, Langlois, Lessard (Lake St. John), Macaluso, Matheson, Monteith, Pugh, Rapp, Ricard and Scott.

He said: In moving this motion, Mr. Speaker, I hope the house will allow me to assure the members of the special committee on a Canadian flag that they have the good will of their parliamentary colleagues, and our full confidence in their sincerity, integrity and patriotism. We wish them well in their arduous and historically important task.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader whether we are to carry on tomorrow with the two resolutions now in front of us?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will carry on with the business as announced yesterday and try to complete—I hope we will—the resolution stage of the farm machinery syndicate bill. I might try to communicate with the house leaders to find out whether it would not be possible to complete the other stages of that bill tomorrow. I am not prejudging any issue, of course. I say that, in view of the importance of the measure as already stated by the Leader of the Opposition.

We will then take the resolution preceding the crop insurance bill, to be followed by the continuation of the debate at the committee stage of the redistribution bill. I should like to say that beginning Thursday, as announced, we will be taking estimates. The order will be that already announced, that is the Department of Transport to be followed by northern affairs, public works and citizenship and immigration.

I should like to advise the house that in view of a commitment of the Minister of Transport, the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Transport will be limited for this week to Thursday only, although I hope they will be completed on that day. However, if we have not completed the estimates of the Department of Transport we will proceed on Friday with those of northern affairs, followed by the departments I have just announced.

At 10.40 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, September 16, 1964

The house met at 2 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, September 16, 1964

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, September 16, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,

Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PAY INCREASES FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Speaker: I have an announcement which I am sure will interest all hon. members. It relates to salary revisions for employees of the House of Commons. I should like to make an announcement which will, I know, be of interest. At their meeting on Monday, September 14, 1964, the commissioners of internal economy approved pay increases for House of Commons employees in classes and grades comparable with those included in group B of the civil service. An extract of the minutes of the said meeting in connection therewith will be laid before the house shortly.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY—TABLING OF EXCHANGE OF NOTES

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table, in English and in French, two exchanges of notes in connection with the Columbia river treaty. The first is an exchange of notes between Canada and the United States of America confirming the entry into force of the protocol of January 22, 1964, to the Columbia river treaty, and dated September 16, 1964, and the second is an exchange of notes between Canada and the United States of America authorizing the Canadian entitlement purchase agreement provided for under the Columbia river treaty, and dated September 16, 1964.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: A sell-out.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NATIONAL FILM BOARD FEATURE PRODUCTIONS

Question No. 1,779—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What theatrical features have been produced by the national film board?
2. What was the true cost of each, including its fair share of all overhead?
3. What is the purpose of each?
4. What is the policy of the national film board regarding production of future theatrical features?
5. How many original motion pictures were produced by the national film board in each of the past five years?
6. How many original motion pictures were produced for the national film board by private Canadian companies in each of the past five years?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the national film board as follows:

1. (a) Royal Journey, 1951; (b) Pour la Suite du Monde, 1963; (c) Drylanders, 1963; (d) Le Chat dans le Sac, 1964; (e) Nobody Waved Goodbye, 1964.

2. (a) $88,962, final cost (including production overhead); (b) $82,625 final cost (including production overhead); (c) $211,479, final cost (including production overhead); (d) $45,982, total cost (including production overhead); (e) $73,593, to July 31st, 1964. Final cost estimated at about $5,000 higher in each case.

3. Under the terms of the National Film Act 1950 the board is established to produce films in the national interest and in particular to interpret Canada to Canadians and to other nations. Each of the above films fulfils this purpose. Royal Journey recounts the travels of the Queen when she was Princess Elizabeth across Canada in 1951; Pour la Suite du Monde is about the people and traditions of the Isle aux Coudres in the lower St. Lawrence; Drylanders recreates the history of a pioneer family which settled on the prairies in the early 1900's; Le Chat dans le Sac is the story of a young man's struggle to decide his destiny in the French Canada of today. Nobody Waved Goodbye is concerned with a young man from a middle class family in revolt against his milieu and is intended to explain some facets of juvenile delinquency.

4. It is anticipated that the board will produce a limited number of feature films in the future when the subject matter as well as the distribution warrant the feature length format, taking into account the overall balance of its production program and its resources.

5. 1959-60, 95 (including 23 commissioned by other departments); 1960/61, 83 (including 28 commissioned by other departments); 1961-62, 93 (including 19 commissioned by other departments); 1962-63, 84 (including 19 commissioned by other departments); 1963-64, 90 (including 25 commissioned by other departments).

6. 1959-60, 1; 1960-61, 1; 1961-62, 3; 1962-63, 7; 1963-64, 1.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY—PSYCHOLOGISTS EMPLOYED

Question No. 1,788—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. How many psychologists, full and part time, are employed in the federal penitentiaries at Kingston, Ontario?
2. How many positions for psychologists, full or part time, are now vacant?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. Three full time; none part time.

2. Three full time; none part time.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY—PSYCHIATRISTS EMPLOYED

Question No. 1,789—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. How many psychiatrists, full and part time, are employed in the federal penitentiaries at Kingston, Ontario?
2. How many positions for psychiatrists, full or part time, are now vacant?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. Full time, none; part time 2.

2. None.

[Mr. Stewart.]

SOIL POLLUTION BY AGRICULTURAL CHEMICALS

Question No. 1,801—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Is the government conducting research into the effects of long term soil pollution with herbicides, pesticides, and other agricultural chemicals and, if so, at which institutions, and under whose direction is such research being conducted?
2. What is the annual cost to the government of each of these projects?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): 1 and 2. The Department of Agriculture has been directing the attention of available scientists to define where long term pollution may become a problem as the result of agricultural uses of pesticides. At the present time no comprehensive co-ordinated program has been developed or put into action due to the shortage of qualified trained staff. Chemists and biologists capable of conducting the investigations are available now at a few locations, working on local and regional problems of priority that have emerged as the result of local requirements for pest control. The Department of Agriculture is attempting to recruit and train the specialists required to develop research programs at key locations.

Investigations now in progress at research branch establishments as part of existing programs are:

Research station, Kentville, Nova Scotia, director, Dr. J. R. Wright. Investigation of the persistence of pesticides in soil of apple orchards and pastures; the translocation of mercury in apples, vegetables and root crops; the residues in plants and soil from new selective systemic insecticides. Estimated annual cost $20,000.

Research station, Fredericton, New Brunswick, director, S. Hilton. Residues of arsenic and D.D.T. on apples resulting from apple maggot and blueberry maggot control. Estimated annual cost $6,000.

Analytical chemistry research service, Ottawa, Ontario, director, R. B. Carson. Research on methods of pesticide residue analysis in plants, animal and soil. Estimated annual cost $35,000.

Entomology laboratory, Chatham, Ontario, officer in charge, G. F. Manson. Research on factors affecting the efficiency and persistence of soil insecticides. Estimated annual cost $27,000.

Research institute, London, Ontario, director, Dr. E. Y. Spencer. Research on chemistry of metabolism and degradation of pesticides; fundamental research on physiology and toxicology of mode of action of pesticides; physiology and chemistry of natural and synthetic plant growth regulating compounds; the chemistry and biogenesis of naturally occurring plant toxins and protective substances produced by plants. Estimated annual cost $135,000.

Research station, Winnipeg, Manitoba, director, Dr. A. E. Hannah. Research on the persistence of dieldrin in cereals and forage plants, (program now being revised); chemistry of conversion of heptachlor to heptachlor epoxide and factors affecting efficiency of this pesticide in soil (under review). Estimated annual cost $35,000.

Research station, Summerland, British Columbia, director, Dr. C. C. Strachan. Chemical analysis of pesticide spray deposits as part of program of development of local pest control recommendations. Estimated annual cost $13,500.

Research station, Vancouver, British Columbia, director, Dr. R. E. Fitzpatrick. Research on persistence in soil of insecticides used for wireworm control. Estimated annual cost $7,000.

FREIGHT FERRY, PORT AUX BASQUES—NORTH SYDNEY

Question No 1,811—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. With reference to the new freight-carrying ferry to be put into service between Port aux Basques, Newfoundland and North Sydney, Nova Scotia, announced to a meeting of the North Sydney board of trade on March 14, 1964, by the Minister of Transport, how soon will tenders be called for such a service?

2. Did the Minister of Transport, after the meeting, advise reporters of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald and the Cape Breton Post that such a ferry would carry loaded railway freight cars from North Sydney for unloading at Port aux Basques?

3. If such a plan is effected, what will be the outcome in the reduction of the stevedore working force at North Sydney?

4. Has a survey been initiated by the government or the Canadian National Railways to determine the effect on the employment of stevedores at North Sydney as a result of the placing into service of a railway freight car ferry that would carry loaded railway cars from North Sydney to Port aux Basques?

5. In such a survey, is it being ascertained how many employees will soon be eligible for retirement?

6. When will tenders be called for the construction of the necessary wharfage facilities at North Sydney that will accommodate the vessels in the Canadian National Railways service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques?

7. How many vessels will the wharfage facilities be capable of accommodating?

8. What department will be responsible for the construction of the wharfage facilities in question?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): 1. Work on the design of this vessel is in progress but it is unlikely that tenders can be called before the end of this year.

2. No written statement was given to the press, and the Minister of Transport does not recall giving any categorical statement of this character, although such an inference might conceivably have been drawn from such answers as he made to questions.

3 and 4. There will be a reduction in the stevedore working force after the ferry comes into operation in 1967, the extent of which is now under investigation by the department and Canadian National Railways.

5. Yes.

6. The terminal development at North Sydney, which will include provision for both the Argentia ferry and the rail ferry, will be carried out in several stages; tenders on the first stage are due September 30, and tenders on the second stage will be called this winter.

7. There will be one rail berth at each port, but due to the short time required for unloading and loading these would be able to accommodate several vessels in service.

8. The Department of Public Works.

QUEBEC—WHARF REPAIR AND CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 1,812—Mr. Ouellet:

What projects are planned for the repair, construction and preparation work on piers in the counties of Rivière du Loup, Rimouski and Matane during 1964 and 1965?

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Rivière du Loup-Témiscouata constituency: Cabano, breakwater repairs; Cabano, wharf repairs; Cacouna Est, construction of inclined plane and enlargement of wharf headblock; Gros Cacouna, development of harbour; Ile Verte, maintenance repairs to wharf; Notre Dame de l'Ile Verte, repairs to eastern wharf; Notre Dame de l'Ile Verte, repairs to western wharf; Rivière du Loup, wharf repairs; Rivière du Loup, renewal of water line on wharf; Rivière du Loup, repairs to river wharf; Rivière du Loup, to complete new ferry landing; St-Juste-du-Lac, wharf repairs.

Rimouski constituency: Pointe-au-Père, wharf repairs; Pointe-au-Père, harbour improvements; Rimouski, Wharf repairs; Trois Pistoles, repairs to wharf A; Trois Pistoles, new ferry landing.

Matapédia-Matane constituency: Baie des Sables, protection work; Matane, wharf repairs; Matane, protection works; Matane, dredging; Matane, harbour improvements; Matapédia, extension to protection works;

Ste-Félicité, wharf repairs; St. Ulric (Rivière Blanche), wharf repairs and removal of outer end.

WINTER CLOTHING OF R.C.M.P. GUARDS AT GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Question No. 1,816—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Of those members of the R.C.M.P. who served outdoors at the Governor General's residence last winter, was each one issued with a pea jacket and/or storm coat?

2. Will they be so supplied in future?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): 1. Each member was personally issued with a pea jacket. Eleven members who worked on the day and evening shifts were individually issued with a storm coat. Ten additional storm coats were issued to the post for the use of members working on the night shift.

2. Pea jackets will continue to be supplied to each member, but since April, 1964, storm coats are no longer issued on an individual basis, and 21 will be charged to the post and worn by each member as required.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION DEPARTMENT PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,845—Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John):

1. What was the number of personnel in the Department of Defence Production during each of the last five years?

2. How many persons left that department and how many have been hired during the same period?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. March 31, 1960, 1,467; March 31, 1961, 1,515; March 31, 1962, 1,555; March 31, 1963, 1,526; March 31, 1964, 1,639; August 31, 1964, 1829.

	Terminations	Appointments
March 31, 1961	199	238
March 31, 1962	207	247
March 31, 1963	231	202
March 31, 1964	222	335
August 31, 1964	183	373

VETERANS PENSIONS

Question No. 1,857—Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John):

1. In each province, how many disabled veterans rely solely upon the pension paid by the government for all their needs?

2. In each province, how many veterans are receiving a pension for partial disability?

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

3. During the past five years, what amount did the federal government pay for veterans pensions in each of the ten provinces?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Canadian pension commission: 1. Since the payment of disability pensions is made without regard to other earnings, there is no information as to the number of these pensioners who live solely on their pensions. Past experience indicates that the pensioners themselves would resent any effort to obtain this information.

2. Veterans receiving pension for partial disability as at March 31, 1964, by province. This includes all service disability pensioners other than those receiving pension at the rate of 100 per cent.

Province	Number
Newfoundland	1,547
Prince Edward Island	1,470
Nova Scotia	8,153
New Brunswick	5,556
Quebec	16,493

AIRPORT TAXI STRIP, RIVERS, MAN.

Question No. 1,867—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What are the details of the tenders submitted recently for the contract to construct a taxi strip at the C.J.A.T.C., Rivers, Manitoba?
2. To whom was the contract awarded and for what reasons?
3. Which of the companies submitting tenders are entirely Canadian owned?
4. Which of the companies are subsidiaries of U.S.A. companies?
5. What was the cost estimate for the job?
6. What are the specifications for the contract?
7. Is the successful company meeting all these specifications?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Three companies submitted tenders as follows: Tallman Construction Co. Ltd., Winnipeg, Manitoba, $66,887.90; Claydon Company Limited, Winnipeg, Manitoba, $90,655.80; Central Construction Co. Limited, Brandon, Manitoba, $93,512.95.

2. The contract was awarded to Tallman Construction Co. Ltd., the lowest tenderer.

3 and 4. According to the information available the companies concerned are Canadian owned.

5. The estimated cost was $83,700.

6. The specifications for the contract were excavation and rebuilding of an existing concrete apron, a new concrete apron and adjoining asphalt areas.

7. Yes.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO UNIVERSITY SERVICE OVERSEAS

Question No. 1,870—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

What has been the government contribution to the Canadian university service overseas in each of the last five years?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian university service overseas was established on June 6, 1961. Since then the Canadian government has extended administrative support and assistance both through the external aid office in Ottawa and through the diplomatic missions in the overseas countries where the C.U.S.O. volunteers have been assigned. This year the Canadian government has given additional assistance by providing the transportation from Canada to destinations abroad of all C.U.S.O. personnel proceeding overseas in 1964.

COST FIGURES FOR MACTAQUAC POWER DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 1,873—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton):

1. Has the Atlantic development board investigated the cost figures submitted to them by the New Brunswick electric power commission for the Mactaquac project on the St. John river and, if so, are they satisfied that the estimated cost figures are justified and confirmed by a reliable independent engineering firm with technical experience and of established reputation?
2. If not, what was the basis for the estimate submitted and on what engineering report was it based?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes to both parts of the question.

2. Answered in 1 above.

ADVERTISING REVENUE, STATION CJBC, TORONTO

Question No. 1,878—Mr. Cowan:

What was the division of the advertising revenue of radio station CJBC, Toronto in the months of May and August, 1964, between advertising in the French language and advertising in the English language?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am advised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that all advertising revenue of station CJBC for the months of May and August 1964 was from advertising in the English language.

MORAL RE-ARMAMENT ORGANIZATION

Question No. 1,879—Mr. Herridge:

Is there an organization known as Moral Re-Armament registered with the Department of National Revenue as a religious or charitable organization whose financial supporters are entitled to receive income tax exemptions and, if so (a) is this organization incorporated (b) what is its official address and the names of its officials (c) has a copy of its articles of incorporation been deposited with the Department of National Revenue?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): (a), (b) and (c). The taxation division's records indicate that the Oxford group (Moral Re-Armament) in Canada (also known as the Oxford group and as Moral Re-Armament) was incorporated without share capital under the Dominion Companies' Act by letters patent in 1944 and amended by supplementary letters patent in 1956, the main purpose of which is stated to be "to advance the Christian religion".

It has been recognized as a charitable organization by the department since 1956, and donors to the organization are entitled to deduct their donations from income for tax purposes.

The department's records show that Mr. Ian Rae is secretary treasurer of the Oxford group (Moral Re-Armament) in Canada, and its official address is 1303 Yonge street, room 37, Toronto 7, Ontario.

OXFORD GROUP ORGANIZATION

Question No. 1,880—Mr. Herridge:

Is there an organization known as the Oxford group registered with the Department of National Revenue as a religious or charitable organization whose financial supporters are entitled to receive income tax exemptions and, if so (a) is this organization incorporated (b) what is its official address and the names of its officers (c) has a copy of its articles of incorporation been deposited with the Department of National Revenue?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): (a), (b) and (c). The taxation division's records indicate that the Oxford group (Moral Re-Armament) in Canada (also known as the Oxford group and as Moral Re-Armament) was incorporated without share capital under the Dominion Companies' Act by letters patent in 1944 and amended by supplementary letters patent in 1956, the main purpose of which is stated to be "to advance the Christian religion".

It has been recognized as a charitable organization by the department since 1956, and donors to the organization are entitled to deduct their donations from income for tax purposes.

The department's records show that Mr. Ian Rae is secretary treasurer of the Oxford group (Moral Re-Armament) in Canada, and its official address is 1303 Yonge street, room 37, Toronto 7, Ontario.

UNEMPLOYED BY AGE GROUPS

Of those presently unemployed, what proportion is between (a) 15 and 24 years (b) 25 and 34 years (c) 35 and 44 years (d) 45 and 54 years (e) 55 and 65 years?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Unemployed in specified age groups expressed as a percentage of total unemployed, week ended July 18, 1964, Canada: 15 to 24 years, 51 per cent; 25 to 34 years, 14 per cent; 35 to 44 years, 12 per cent; 45 to 54 years, 12 per cent; 55 to 64 years, 8 per cent.

[Mr. Benson.]

U.S. REGULATIONS RESPECTING PESTICIDES

Question No. 1,891—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has the government taken note of the action by the United States department of interior which has issued strict regulations limiting the use of long-lived pesticides such as D.D.T., chlordane, dieldrin and endrin on public land administered by that department and also has issued directives specifying that if chemicals must be used, priority be given to the use of non-persistent pesticides such as malathion, which do not retain their toxicity over extended periods?

2. Is the government considering issuing the same type of regulations in Canada?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes.

2. Government officials are examining all pest control programs with the object of confirming that they are being conducted in the most appropriate manner and to assure that every precaution is taken to guard against undesirable side effects such as those adversely affecting wildlife and fish.

JAPANESE MARKET FOR YUKON IRON ORE

Question No. 1,897—Mr. Dinsdale:

During the recent conversations in Tokyo, between representatives of the Canadian government and the Japanese government, was the prospect of a market in Japan for the rich Yukon iron ore deposits on the Snake river explored and, if so, what conclusions were reached and decisions made?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The recent conversations in Tokyo, between ministers of the Canadian government and the Japanese government, did not involve the specific consideration of the prospect of a market in Japan for Snake river iron ore.

As stated by the honourable the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his report to the house on Tuesday, September 8, 1964, the ministerial committee is not a negotiating body. We did, however, discuss Canadian interests in the Japanese market, including sales of ores and more highly processed metals and minerals.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY

Question No. 1,641—Mr. Orlikow:

2. What are the accommodations in each category of cells—furniture, sanitary facilities, lighting and heating?

3. How many of these cells were declared improper for use by the Archambault commission and how many inmates are using such cells?

4. What are the plans of the Department of Justice to implement the recommendations of the Archambault commission?

5. How much money has been spent since the riot of 1962 on new buildings, and what are those buildings?

6. What is the daily ration of food allotted to each inmate?

7. How many people are employed in the penitentiary and (a) what are their classifications (b) what are the duties of each (c) what is the salary of each?

8. How many university graduates are employed full time and (a) what are their classifications (b) what are the duties of each (c) what is the salary of each?

9. How many vacant positions are there in this penitentiary at the present time and, in what classifications are these vacancies?

Return tabled.

SUPPORT PRICES FOR DAIRY PRODUCTS

Question No. 1,813—Mr. Martineau:

1. What subsidies or support prices have the government granted for butter and other dairy products in each year since 1939, indicating the amount of the subsidy and the total amount paid each year?

2. Since 1939, in what years have changes been made to the support prices or subsidies granted for butter, milk, cheese and powdered milk?

3. What has been, for each year, the total amount paid by the federal government in each province as a production subsidy or support price for each of the products above mentioned?

Return tabled.

CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS UNDER INCOME TAX ACT

Question No. 1,863—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

Has the Department of National Revenue a list of charitable organizations they use when administering the Income Tax Act and, if so (a) how many institutions are on the list and (b) what are their names?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 163 is acceptable to the government. I ask that motions 164 and 165 be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that motion 163 be carried?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

WINNIPEG—IDENTICAL TENDERS FOR ELECTRICAL EQUIPMENT

Motion No. 163—Mr. Knowles:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any communications from the council of the city of Winnipeg, dated since August 31, 1964, concerning identical prices contained in tenders for the supply of certain items of electrical equipment by Canada Wire and Cable Company Limited, Canadian Westinghouse Company Limited, Phillips Electrical Company Limited, and Pirelli Cables Limited, received by the minister of justice, and for a copy of any replies thereto.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There are news commentaries in the press today of arrangements which have been announced by President Makarios with respect to the relaxation of tension on the island of Cyprus, and apparently certain confidential communications have been going on between representatives of the United Nations and President Makarios. I am wondering could the Secretary of State for External Affairs bring the house up to date, so far as it is possible for him to do so, on what discussions are going on at the moment.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend may perhaps recall that yesterday I referred to the announcement of the government of Cyprus with regard to the relaxation of restrictions in connection with the shipment of food to the Kokkina area. This has now been definitely confirmed, as my hon. friend's question indicates. This and other matters will be covered I believe in a statement that, it is expected, will be made today, though possibly not until tomorrow, by the secretary general dealing with the operations of the force.

Mr. Nowlan: As a supplementary question, will the statement to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made reference deal with the communications going on between the representatives of the UN and President Makarios?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I believe so.

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING NEW RUSSIAN WEAPON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence or perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is based on a statement made yesterday by Mr. Khrushchev that his military people showed him, I think last Monday, some new weapon that had the capacity to destroy all life on earth. Mr. Khrushchev is reported also as having said that he was amazed at the power of this new weapon. I should like to ask the minister if he can give the house any indication of the nature of this new, powerful destructive weapon, and if the NATO alliance is giving any consideration to what might happen to what is called the balance of power or balance of terror as a result of this announcement.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I read the story which appeared in this morning's newspapers concerning the statement attributed to Chairman Khrushchev and purportedly addressed by him to some Japanese parliamentarians. The statement is being examined, but beyond that I would not have any comment to make today.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME TRUSTEES—INVESTIGATION INTO DISMISSAL OF S.I.U. EMPLOYEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has received a request from a Mr. Kenneth Bryan of Port Arthur for an inquiry into his dismissal as an employee of the S.I.U. on the grounds that he refused to run for office in the forthcoming S.I.U. elections.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker; this matter was brought to my attention earlier today by the hon. member for Fort William. My officials are in touch with the board of trustees, and the matter is under investigation.

Mr. Starr: Will the minister report back to the house concerning the action the board of trustees is prepared to take in this connection?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LA MACAZA, QUE.—TREATMENT OF PEACE DEMONSTRATORS BY R.C.A.F. POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. On Monday I asked the Prime Minister a question about the alleged brutality of R.C.A.F. guards at La Macaza in connection with a peace demonstration there, and the Prime Minister promised to look into the matter. Since that time a statement has been given to the press by a Miss Kathleen Moses of Niagara Falls, a student at Queen's University, in which she says:

> I was carried about 15 feet to the edge of the road. They began to swing me back and forth gently to throw me into the ditch and just as they let go I felt the kick directly between my legs. There was intense pain.

The statement goes on to state that one demonstrator was dragged by the hair, another had his fingers stamped on, and yet another was handled by a guard who put his fingers on pressure points behind the ears. Now that these statements have appeared in the press it seems to me that the request I made last Monday for a full investigation by some independent persons outside the Department of National Defence is completely justified, and I ask the Acting Prime Minister to tell us whether the government is now prepared to order such an investigation.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): The Prime Minister expressed his concern about this matter, and I should like to take this particular question today as notice. The matter is being looked into.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. How soon may we expect some action in this regard? The incident took place some time ago. The Associate Minister of National Defence carried on an investigation which consisted mainly of getting in touch with the officer in charge of the station. It seems to me that if much time elapses the persons who might be available to give evidence may no longer be on hand, and I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister how soon we may expect a decision from the government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am taking this question as notice. It is difficult to say how soon, but there will be no undue delay.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STATEMENT BY QUEBEC MINISTER RESPECTING CO-OPERATIVE FEDERALISM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister being absent, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice, inasmuch as he is quite familiar with its subject matter.

Would the minister care to comment on the statement made yesterday by Mr. René Lévesque, the Quebec minister of national resources, to the effect that co-operative federalism could result in the painless abortion of the French Canadian nation?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I hope with all my heart that the words of Mr. René Lévesque were inaccurately reported.

Mr. Caouette: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do the distinguished minds who advocate co-operative federalism, according to Mr. René Lévesque, include the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin)?

[Text]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question I should like to direct to the Acting Prime Minister in that capacity as well as in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thanks very much.

Mr. Nesbitt: The question is this. Since August 20 last I have had a question on the order paper seeking information of a purely statistical nature and I am sure the statistics could be obtained within an hour or two. I would like to direct this question to the Acting Prime Minister. Just when can I expect an answer to this question? I am quite sure it could be answered within an hour.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since it is argued the question could be answered within an hour, I will take a look at the question and see whether that is the case.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The question, for the Acting Prime Minister's information, is No. 1,744.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is an historic date in history.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TORONTO, ONT.—DENIAL OF BENEFITS TO STRIKING NEWSPAPER EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister yet in a position to make a statement regarding the eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits of the Toronto newspaper employees who are members of the international typographical union?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the insurance officer has ruled that the work stoppage has terminated, and that the first persons affected will be eligible for benefits.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): To what date will these benefits be retroactive?

Mr. MacEachen: The date of termination of the work stoppage was September 7. I am not exactly sure as of what date payments will be made, but I will check for my hon. friend.

Mr. Douglas: Will they be paid back to September 7?

Mr. MacEachen: That is what I would like to check, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ASSISTANCE TO MEDICAL SCHOOLS AND MEDICAL RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The complete urgency of this question is based on the fact that qualified applicants have been rejected by the score at Canadian medical schools; that the N.I.H. in the United States is gradually cutting down grants to medical research in Canada; and finally, that we are producing in Canada 50 more medical teachers each year when we need 200 more each year to maintain present medical standards.

Based on this urgency, I would ask the minister if she is about to announce a new policy of assistance to our medical schools and to medical research in Canada, apart from any considerations of the Hall report. Would she call a crash program or a crash policy to meet this apparent emergency?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, even if I were to declare that the government was going to put millions of dollars into building medical schools, it would be some eight years before the schools would produce doctors. But that is not the case. My hon. friend must realize that this matter has been dealt with in considerable detail in the report of the Hall commission; that it is a realm which is primarily one of provincial responsibility; that it is one of our most urgent problems, namely that of providing new facilities in order that we may have more medical personnel for any increased medical services for the population.

It has been the subject of discussion not only in my department; this question was dealt with as recently as three days ago in a speech I made to the Nova Scotia medical association and in discussions I have had with them. It is not a matter that can be easily decided; because the amounts of money involved, it will be appreciated, are very great, since each new medical school starting from scratch would cost something in the nature of $15 million to $30 million. And it is a matter which must be considered within the whole ambit of the Hall commission report.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the hon. lady feel there are any specific recommendations in the Hall commission report that will meet this immediate emergency problem?

Miss LaMarsh: I refer my hon. friend to the report, Mr. Speaker. There is certainly a recommendation that some five or six medical schools be built in the immediate future. But, as the report points out and as I have just said, it takes some eight years from the time of the decision to build to the time that you can produce a doctor. There is no short cut, unhappily, to providing enough personnel.

Mr. Grafftey: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Apart from the building of medical schools, as I said in my question, since the N.I.H. in the United States is gradually cutting down grants to medical research in Canada as such, would the hon. lady be willing at this time to say whether the government will contemplate a new crash policy or program specifically relating to medical research as such?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, because of the decision of the United States government to discourage grants for research of any kind outside its borders in an attempt to conserve its dollars, obviously this country and others involved have had to restudy the question of grants and public support to medical research. It is very regrettable that in Canada wealthy individuals and institutions do not support such research to anything like the extent they do in the United States. It is also a clear cut fact that effective research is not just a matter of money. You do not necessarily get results because you put more dollars into research. This is something which we are considering as a whole package, and I must say to my hon. friend that while I appreciate the urgency of the matter in a general way, and appreciate his repeated and continuing interest in it, this matter will have to wait for an announcement on over-all government policy.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Since the minister has just stated that building medical schools is a very expensive proposition and also that this was a matter of provincial jurisdiction, does she intend to recommend to the government that some sources of revenue be given back to the provinces to enable them to solve the urgent and very important problem of medical schools in Canada?

[Text]

Miss LaMarsh: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the provinces do with the revenue at their command is their responsibility. Whether they direct it to building facilities for higher education or put it into roads or other matters is a matter for them. But I did not say that the provision of new medical facilities is solely a provincial responsibility; I said it is primarily a provincial responsibility. However, it seems to me that we are now talking about a natural resource, the provision of higher education in order that the people's health shall be well protected, and that is a matter which will require the highest degree of co-operative federalism.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Is the minister implying that the federal government might interfere in the field of education with respect to medical schools in Canada?

FINANCE

REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS AND EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Could he tell the house if consideration will be given to the request made by the house builders association of the district of Montreal, which is also that of every Canadian, concerning the removal of the sales tax on building materials which will soon reach 11 per cent?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I seem to have had this question to deal with before. My recollection is that in the first six months of this year the number of houses completed in communities of 5,000 or more was some 44 per cent higher than last year, and that as of June, 1964 the number of houses under construction was some 7 per cent greater than the corresponding number the year previous. In the circumstances I think any suggestion that the tax policy of the government has done anything to slow down the economy or to slow down activity in the house building industry is completely exaggerated.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question arising out of the answer given by the Minister of Finance in reply to the question I asked a moment ago.

Is the Minister of Finance aware of the fact that from January 1, 1964 to July 31, 1964, 3,902 new houses were built in the Montreal area compared to 4,244 the previous year, a decrease of 8.1 per cent?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: In a matter of this kind, Mr. Speaker, it is hardly possible to devise legislation that will ensure an increase in any particular field in every centre in Canada. The statistics I quoted were for the country as a whole. As far as Montreal is concerned, I think everybody knows there is a great construction boom going on in that city, and that it will continue for a considerable time. There is less unemployment there than there has been for years, and Montreal is pretty prosperous.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

Since he practically stated that this 11 per cent tax has brought about this economic recovery in the house building field, would the minister consider the advisability of increasing this tax to 22 per cent so that Canada might enjoy a greater prosperity?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: I think that would be a most unwise course to take, Mr. Speaker.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—DESIGNATION OF CREDIT UNIONS UNDER ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet perhaps I might be permitted to answer a question which was put to me by the hon. member for Moose Mountain in connection with a letter dated September 10 from the credit union league of Saskatchewan. This letter was received on the 14th, Monday, and will be answered today. I should like to assure the hon. member that there have been no unnecessary delays in dealing with the applications of credit unions.

The student loans act stipulates that, in addition to chartered banks, lenders shall include credit unions, caisses populaires or other co-operative credit societies which are designated by the Minister of Finance following formal application by them. For this purpose it is necessary for the credit unions concerned to provide adequate information concerning their organization and operations. Before individual credit unions are designated they should, of course, be fully familiar with the requirements and procedures of the act and regulations and satisfy themselves that they have the resources to provide loans to students.

Detailed information and documentation concerning the Canada student loans plan have been forwarded as soon as possible to all credit unions which have written to me. Full particulars from some applicant credit unions have begun to reach the department this week, and their requests to be designated will be acted upon promptly.

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF EASTERN FEED GRAIN SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Forestry.

Since the minister stated on several occasions that he was waiting for the agriculture and colonization committee to announce a new feed grain policy and since the committee interrupted its sittings in December 1963 and never resumed them, does the minister intend to have the committee take up its work on feed grain as soon as possible?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I met the chairman of the committee this morning and he told me that the steering committee of the agriculture and colonization committee will meet Tuesday with a view to resuming its work on the feed grain question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ARMAMENT OF EUROPEAN AIR DIVISION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence if that portion of the Canadian air division stationed in France has yet been equipped with any armament, conventional or nuclear.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman is referring to the squadrons at Marville, they have been partially equipped with the reconnaissance equipment that is designated for them. They have commenced training, but they have not been declared fully operational units yet.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to my earlier question concerning the part of the air division stationed in France. I was asking about fighting armament, not reconnaissance equipment. Do I understand from the minister that these planes are not equipped to fight with either conventional or nuclear weapons?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, their primary role, as the hon. gentleman undoubtedly knows, is reconnaissance. Their secondary role is non-nuclear ground support. The plans to provide armament for the secondary role are going forward, but they are not yet complete.

Mr. Churchill: I wonder whether I could ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if it is right and diplomatic for him to find fault with the NATO military organization, when Canada is not fulfilling her part of the agreement with our NATO allies to provide an air division equipped to fight with weapons and not with photographic equipment?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the two parts of my hon. friend's question have no logical relationship, of course, and on that account it is not easy to make the kind of response that one would like to make. I would simply say that it is open to any member of the alliance, in the interests of the alliance, to give consideration to ways of improving the alliance. That Canada is doing, as are other members.

Mr. Churchill: Am I wrong, or were the television and radio reports incorrect when they stated that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was critical of the NATO organization with regard to consultation on military matters amongst the allies?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have not listened to these reports. If my hon. friend asks, was he wrong, my immediate reaction is to say of course he was wrong. However, I should like to have a more precise statement of the question before I say in this instance that the hon. member is incorrect.

Mr. Churchill: I was not suggesting I was wrong. I was asking the minister if the radio and television reports were incorrect, indicating that the minister was very critical of our NATO allies and that the military organization was unsound.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is paraphrasing now. One would almost be tempted to suggest he should join the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Churchill: It would be an improvement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would think, in that event, that the television audience would be a very limited one.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask the minister if the planes to which he refers as being currently located in France are the same type as those located in other parts of Europe, and included in the same force. I should like a clearer answer than that which we got from the minister of external affairs.

Mr. Hellyer: The planes in all three wings are CF-104 Starfighters. The six squadrons in Germany have a primary strike role and the two squadrons in France have a primary role in reconnaissance. This was all part of the original commitment. If when the administration of the hon. gentleman was in office a decision had been taken to redeploy the planes in accordance with the original intention, then by now all the armament could have been in place. However, in view of the fact that a decision was not taken then but was left to be made after the administration changed, we have certain administrative requirements in order to fulfil our commitment.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if at the same time the minister would not investigate the charges that have just been made by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra to the effect that the department of defence is the kremlin of Canadian bureaucracy, and particularly those charges dealing with the command station at Carp, which he compared to a fabulous executive suite.

Mr. Hellyer: I suspect that the views expressed by the hon. gentleman were personal views.

REDUCTION IN UNIVERSITY NAVAL TRAINING UNITS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to a question raised on Monday last by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) with respect to the closing down of certain Royal Canadian Navy university training units. In reply I told the hon. member that since this related to a general reorganization of all university training units I would give a full explanation later in the week.

As hon. members will recall, during the course of the debate on the estimates of the Department of National Defence in December of last year I stated that it was intended to reduce expenditures on the university reserves training plan by 50 per cent. Since that time detailed studies have been made within the department and, in consultation with the national conference of Canadian universities and colleges, it has been decided that university training will be done on an integrated basis with only one integrated unit at each university where training is conducted. Theoretical training will be based on the syllabus of the Canadian service colleges. Practical training will be given by the individual services. The implementation of this plan, however, is related to the integration of national defence headquarters and the development of the appropriate administrative procedures. In consequence it will not be practical to reorganize units on an integrated basis before September, 1965.

In the meantime, in order to effect the necessary economies to which I referred last December, certain steps have been taken by the three individual services. In so far as the Royal Canadian Navy is concerned, it has been decided to close eight units at the following universities: University of Alberta, University of Western Ontario, l'université de Sherbrooke, Bishop's University, Ontario Agricultural College, Mount Allison University, St. Francis Xavier, Acadia University and St. Dunstan's University. In so far as the army and air force are concerned, the existing units will be maintained but strengths will be reduced.

In arriving at this decision the individual needs of each service have been considered. The Royal Canadian Navy, because of the reorganization of the Royal Canadian naval reserves, considered that it was not economically feasible to retain training units whose graduates cannot be absorbed into the active list of the parent Royal Canadian naval reserve divisions. With this as a general criterion, all U.N.T.D. units have been assessed on the basis of proximity to associated reserve divisions, enrolment patterns and efficiency. The army, despite the planned reduction in the militia, can absorb the officers from the C.O.T.C. and, because of the dispersion of the militia, geographical considerations are not too important. The R.C.A.F. elected to have smaller intakes and strengths in the university reserve training plan in order to retain their representation and still bring about the necessary economies.

The hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) asked whether representatives were heard from the universities concerned. In reply I can say that from the outset the department consulted the national conference of Canadian universities and colleges requesting their assistance and advice. The national conference of Canadian universities and colleges was provided with information as plans were developed. Representatives of this organization also met with myself and departmental representatives and their advice and opinions, based on information obtained by them from the universities, was welcomed and suggested changes were made to the extent compatible with budget limitations.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister referred to the University of Alberta. He meant the University of Alberta at Calgary, did he not?

Mr. Hellyer: That is correct.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO HOLIDAYS FOR STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the President of the Privy Council if he has anything further to say regarding the consideration being given to holidays for the House of Commons staff?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Well, Mr. Speaker, this matter was discussed at the meeting of the commissioners of internal economy on Monday last. It is a matter for His Honour the Speaker; therefore perhaps it is not proper for me to answer. I must not do that. I think, to relieve the interest of hon. members, I should add that it has been dealt with and some of the staff have already started holidays.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CRASH OF T.C.A. PLANE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Minister of Transport whether he has received a report on the unfortunate crash of a T.C.A. DC-8 some months ago near Montreal. If he has received the report will it be made public, and what action does he propose taking in the light of that report?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I have this week received a preliminary report. I indicated to the house on July 15—and this will be found on pages 5503 and 5504 of Hansard when I was replying to a question by the hon. member for Three Rivers—that when the investigation then under way was completed the findings would come to me as Minister of Transport. I would then have the responsibility of deciding whether a board of inquiry was to be convened at which the findings in this case would be presented at a public hearing. If such a board were convened, it would not consist of persons who were in the employ of the Department of Transport or T.C.A.

I am giving most urgent consideration to the question of whether there should be a public inquiry, and just as soon as I can reach a conclusion and confer with my colleagues about it, I will make an announcement to the house. I feel that until that decision has been made it would be unwise, and not really in the interests of those we have so much in mind, to make a preliminary report public.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister care to indicate whether there is any indication of sabotage involved or is this something he does not want to disclose until he has decided about an inquiry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps in view of the nature of that particular question and the fact that I should like to be very frank in my reply, my answer is that there is no such evidence.

FARM MACHINERY

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR PURCHASES BY SYNDICATES

The house resumed, from Tuesday, September 15, consideration in committee on the following resolution—Mr. Hays—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates for the purchase of farm machinery and for the terms and conditions of such loans, the amount of a loan not to exceed 80 per cent of the actual price to the farm machinery syndicate of the farm machinery to be purchased with the loan; and to provide also for the establishment in the consolidated revenue fund of a special account not to exceed $25,000,000 to which shall be charged advances made to the Farm Credit Corporation and to which shall be credited all moneys paid to the Receiver General by the corporation and for other financial provisions in relation to the said fund in connection with the administration of the measure.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, in rising to continue my remarks on this resolution I might say, in summarizing my remarks last evening, that I had a certain fear this measure would bring about further erosion of the principle which we established in connection with farm credit in 1960. This principle has become well established and has been widely accepted and acclaimed by farm unions throughout Canada. The principle of which I speak was enunciated in the legislation, and clearly stated that the legislation was to aid those who needed aid, while those who were already on an economic unit or had sufficient capital could not obtain a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation.

I feel I should express some of the fears I have, before the bill is presented to us. We hear much talk about the reduction in the number of farms. A few years ago there were something like 600,000 farms in Canada but today there are only 480,000. From time to time economists and agricultural professors have said the sooner the small farmer was done away with the better it would be, but I disagree with that theory. I believe there is ample room in Canadian agriculture for the small and big farmer alike. There is enough diversification to make room for all types of farmers.

Parliament should be concerned with helping those who need help most, in other words the small farmers, who should be assisted to diversify and intensify their operations. Parliament should not be concerned with helping the large farmers commercialize and go into vertical integration. A few years ago this was the fear being expressed in farm papers and magazines. They all carried articles and editorials saying we must do something about vertical integration. On the other hand, there was and still is a great deal of talk in farm journals about maintaining the family farm.

I want the minister to tell us what this legislation will do. Will it speed up vertical integration, or will it sustain and aid the family farm? The policy of all parties has been to assist the family farm, and I ask how does this legislation help it? I fear it will do more good for vertical integration and for those who want to promote vertical integration than it will for the family farm. One of the few things the farmer treasures and is prepared to work for is his independence, but with vertical integration the very root of his independence is taken away.

This resolution speaks about the establishment of farm machinery syndicates. Why not call them farm machinery integrated farms? I strongly suspect that this legislation will do nothing for the family farm but will promote vertical integration.

It may be asked how can I, a farmer, be against putting more money into the hands of farmers. This legislation with one hand will do that, but as a legislator I must examine where, how, and to what farmers this money will be given. It is my duty to ask myself will this promote and aid my neighbours and the farmers in my constituency, or will it aid and promote big business? Will it aid and encourage the part time farmer? I greatly fear it will. Will this legislation aid the lawyers, doctors, dentists and all those types of people who are buying farms and going into the agriculture business? I fear it may. We farmers are proud of one thing, our independence. We make up our own minds where and when to buy and when to sell, but integration takes this away.

This measure will assist in the effort to reduce machinery costs. A few years ago we heard much about the cost-price squeeze, and this squeeze is just as evident today as it was then, in fact more so. In the middle 1950's the farmers were caught in a drastic cost-price squeeze, but due to a great deal of work done by this party when it formed the government, between 1958 and 1962, that problem was alleviated to some degree. I have here a newspaper clipping dealing with the farmers' cost index, showing that their costs rose to a high of 282 points in April last. Two or three years ago the index stood at about 242 points; thus it has risen some 40 points in the last few years.

A publication issued by the dominion bureau of statistics in July, dealing with the index of farm prices, showed that the price index for all Canada was down to 252 points. A year ago it was 271, and two years ago it was 281. In this situation the farmers again face the severe crisis they were in a few years ago, and I ask what will this legislation do to alleviate that problem.

When the Minister of Agriculture spoke in Lethbridge on April 11 last he talked about parliament and how the opposition was filibustering at that time. According to the government, filibustering is all the opposition does. Whenever anybody on the opposition benches makes a speech, according to the government he is filibustering; but today, so that I may set the record straight, I am expressing my fears with regard to this proposed legislation.

At Lethbridge the minister dealt with many matters, and subsequently the Lethbridge Herald carried an editorial entitled "The Farmers Wait". The minister dealt with the three important measures he intended to place before parliament, and the editorial said:

> Most important of the three, according to Mr. Hays, is a measure to deal with the high cost of capitalizing a modern-day farming operation. The machinery necessary for good farming is so expensive that it seriously affects the degree of good farming. Exactly what he proposes to do about it Mr. Hays does not say, because the government is expected to save its policy announcements for the House of Commons. But he does promise that his bill would vastly change the agricultural economy.

How will this measure change the agricultural economy? According to the minister it will change it vastly, but I ask in what direction? Is it going to promote vertical integration? Is this the way the minister is going to change it? I suggest this measure will speed up vertical integration and I see nothing in the resolution, or in the statement the minister made yesterday, that allays my fears.

The minister has introduced three pieces of legislation dealing with agriculture. The first provided more credit through the Farm Credit Corporation, which was necessary, but to some extent the enlargement of the loans brought about a slight erosion of the principles inherent in that legislation. Then earlier this week he introduced a measure to increase the maximum loan under the Farm Improvement Loans Act from $7,500 to $15,000. That was a further enlargement of credit. I say this is one more step in a millionaire's approach to agricultural problems in Canada today. Is it a correct step? Does the minister have the interests of the small farmer in mind. More money, he says, will solve all problems. I sometimes fear it may promote the takeover by large operators and crowd the smaller ones out all the more rapidly. This is what is happening today in many areas.

When I read the expression "farm machinery syndicates" many questions come to my mind. Does this mean that a co-operative farm can apply for and obtain a loan? Does it mean that Hutterite colonies in Alberta can obtain loans under this legislation? We know that the Alberta government has promoted such colonies for the past number of years. The former provincial treasurer was involved in many deals, selling land to them. Now the Minister of Agriculture himself is to promote the development of these colonies by making money available to them for the purchase of farm machinery because, I suppose these colonies could well qualify under the government's definition of a syndicate. These are some of the questions I should like to have answered.

The minister said yesterday, or on a previous occasion, that he thought this legislation would help in the purchase of tractors, combines and other expensive equipment which many small operators could not afford to buy. He is out of touch with the times. Custom work on farms in Canada is a diminishing thing. Back in the early forties when combines were new, custom work was a common thing in the fall. Today one sees very little of it. Most farmers feel that in view of the unsettled weather conditions in western Canada they must own their own combines and get in their crops as quickly as possible because their livelihood, their profit for the year, depends on doing so.

The minister made a speech some time ago in Carstairs, or another town in a prosperous district in Alberta, in which he set out his farming experience. He told his audience all about his old farm tractor, what a great friend it had been to him and how it had taken him through many a difficult spot in his economic progress. Is the hon. gentleman now suggesting that farmers should get out and buy bigger and better tractors although he said, in that particular speech, that farmers were overbuying machinery? Today apparently he thinks the machinery they have is not big enough. What a reversal. I wonder what he really thinks.

I fail to see how this bill will really help to expand the purchase of combines or tractors. I say this because most farmers have bought, and will continue to buy, their own tractors. If we look at the money spent on farm machinery in any year, we find that 50 per cent of it is spent on tractors, 20 per cent on harvesters and harvest equipment, 10 per cent on seeding equipment, and the remaining 10 per cent on the other items which are necessary to a modern farmer. The minister feels there is a need to revolutionize the agricultural economy. I have here a newspaper clipping containing the minister's prognostications with regard to the industry. This is what he said shortly after taking over his present portfolio. This was in the summer of 1963, and the heading of this article reads "Hays calls for less wheat; says machinery prices too high." He told his audience:

> I would be irresponsible if I didn't urge farmers to examine the question of wheat output on a long term basis.

He urged them to cut down wheat production. Well, he was proven wrong in his prognostication, because 1963 was a very good year in which to grow wheat. But the minister also had this to say about the livestock industry. The report says:

> He called on western farmers to diversify and grow more forage crops and feed grains. There is 'evidence of optimism' in the beef markets, he said.

Where is that optimism today? What has happened to the beef industry, and what action has the minister taken with regard to this vital branch of agriculture in Canada?

Everybody associated with the sittings of the committee on agriculture in 1961 realizes that the sale of agricultural equipment depends to a great extent on the prices the farmers receive for their commodities. The committee did a great deal of valuable work, and some of its findings are extremely interesting.

I am sure a number of hon. members were surprised by some of the findings reported by the committee. It was pointed out, for example, by those who appeared for the machinery companies that those companies were enlarging their interest in the financial field. Every one of them was now promoting long term loans to farmers in connection with equipment sales. The committee was told that the proportion of such sales was as high as 9.5 per cent in the case of one particular company.

To whom were these companies lending money? They were lending it to farmers who could not obtain credit under the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act; to people who were considered poor risks, and who had not improved their ratings with the ordinary credit business houses. So they were paying the extra 4½ per cent interest to the companies and were still able to buy their equipment on credit.

Other interesting evidence brought before the committee had to do with the cost of the farm machinery distribution system. The inefficiency of this system is responsible for a terrific proportion of the cost of farm machinery in this country, and I think the government should take a close look at what is happening. It was found in 1937, when this farm machinery problem came up for examination, that the distribution system was extremely costly. What has been done from 1937 to the present day to improve it? It is still a costly system.

The companies have brought in the concept of dealership. This may have resulted in better service for some areas, but has it lowered prices? I suggest the minister should take a look at this system to see whether a reduction in machinery prices could be brought about by instituting something better. Take Massey-Ferguson for example. They buy their largest tractor from Minneapolis-Moline in the United States. They charge a mark-up of something like 30 per cent just for selling it through their dealer system. Then the dealer himself takes another 30 per cent for selling it. Thus the actual cost of a machine may be $3,000. Massey-Ferguson takes $1,000 for selling it through the company's system and the dealer takes another $1,200 or $1,300 for his part in the transaction. So the farmer has to pay $5,000 or $6,000. Of course these figures would apply a few years ago; today the same tractor would cost something like $7,500.

This is a situation which should be looked into. What is the practice followed by Massey-Ferguson in the United States? They do not have an agreement with Minneapolis-Moline to sell their biggest tractor in the United States; it is only sold in Canada. In the United States, Massey-Ferguson, buys its largest tractor from the Oliver company and sells it in the United States, taking the same double mark up.

All this was made clear in the evidence given before the committee. All the companies do this. Cockshutt International does it. Cockshutt imported a three cylinder deisel from Italy at a fixed rate. They took a 30 per cent mark up for selling it through their distribution system.

What does such a system consist of? It is a bunch of dealers trying to make a nickel across Canada. They took advantage of having a group of dealers linked together to charge a mark-up on that tractor. Then of course the dealer takes his own percentage, another 20 per cent or 30 per cent depending on the cost of the machine. This represents a double mark-up on many agricultural machines imported into Canada and sold in this country. I point this out with regard to tractors, Mr. Chairman, because 50 per cent of the money spent on farm machinery is spent on tractors. Most of the money spent on tractors is spent on large tractors, and one of the biggest sellers in Canada, Massey-Ferguson, are putting a double mark-up on the tractors they are selling.

Mr. Chairman, you and many members might ask "How is this possible?" In the inquiry concerning machinery, company after company pointed out that the costs of producing machines do not set their prices; they charge all the market will bear. In other words, if they feel they can increase the price of tractors and still keep up their sales, they will do so. It became evident, to me at least, that the machinery industry adopted the practice of following the price leader. One particular company which had the largest sales in Canada was the price leader, and when they increased their prices the rest followed along behind.

Certainly this whole distribution system should be looked at very closely. How will this bill bring about reduced costs, in view of what I have said? It will have no effect whatsoever. It will just aid syndicates in the purchase of this high cost machinery. The resolution sets out that the loan shall not exceed 80 per cent of the actual price of the machine. All one has to do is go to a dealer and say "We want to buy the largest tractor you have. We will give you 80 per cent in cash. Your mark-up is 25 per cent. You take off the 20 per cent, and it still leaves you with 5 per cent clear profit for handling the paper work". The syndicate puts up no money at all as a down payment. This is one way in which you can get around this proposed legislation.

There are many questions I would like to ask in this connection. One is, what is "machinery"? What does the minister mean by "farm machinery"? There are a number of farm implements that I think should be classified as farm machinery and on which Canadian farmers are still paying duty. Last evening I mentioned the cattle feeding industry. The hog feeding industry is another example. It is certainly becoming highly mechanized, and is a prominent industry in the agricultural field in Canada. Most of the self-feeding equipment that is brought into Canada from the United States carries a duty of 22½ per cent. Is the minister seriously considering bringing down the cost of machinery? If he is, why does he not take off this 22½ per cent duty which applies to much of the self-feeding equipment that is now being used in the feeding industry generally in agriculture?

I take the dairy industry, for example. This is a big industry in Ontario and in Quebec. There is duty on much of the dairy equipment, even down to stainless steel milk pails and stainless steel cans. The duty on both these items is 20 per cent. What is the purpose of this duty? Is the minister seriously trying to bring about a reduction in the cost of farm machinery, or is he trying to enhance the image of the minister himself across the country by bringing in this syndicate legislation?

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member's time has expired. Does he have the unanimous consent of the committee to continue beyond his time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hays: May I just say a word here, Mr. Chairman. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Acadia and to the hon. member for Rosthern. If the committee would consider passing the resolution, I would be glad at the next stage of this legislation to deal with all the questions that have been asked. I think they could be taken care of at that time. It seems to me, if I may be really frank, that when hon. members see the bill they will be a bit embarrassed by some of the statements they have made. I would not like this to happen to such fine fellows as the hon. member for Acadia, for example. If we could do this I am sure it would be a great assistance. I must remind hon. members that as recently as August 26 the Leader of the Opposition said:

> So there will be no misunderstanding I say to the minister at once, put this resolution on the order paper and it will receive immediate attention, if he is so concerned about the farmers. Will you do that?

It is here, and it seems to me we can deal with these questions in the examination of the bill. Then hon. members could assess it and speak much more intelligently about it than when they are just guessing as to what might be in the bill.

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Chairman, the minister said a moment ago that some of the questions that had been posed would be answered later if the resolution is passed now. Does the minister not intend to answer the questions before the resolution is passed?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I think the questions that have been raised are pretty well all answered in the bill. If there are others that are not answered, I would certainly be very pleased to reply to those questions.

The Chairman: Order. Does the hon. member have leave to continue beyond his time? Of course he has the opportunity to speak again, but if he is just continuing his remarks I would point out that there are other hon. members who wish to take part in the debate. Has the hon. member leave to continue at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have just a few brief remarks to make, and I will take the risk of being embarrassed by the minister when he brings in the bill. I was wondering about certain types of machinery and whether they would qualify for syndicate buying, if I may use that term. I have in mind something that could be of benefit to a number of farmers in the foothills country, for example. I refer to brush clearing equipment. With regard to my own area, perhaps large grass seeding equipment could be purchased; perhaps large portable grain mills. I wonder whether portable grain dryers would be included. This equipment would have been put to great use if the wet weather had continued on the prairies. Also, would portable grain cleaning equipment and seed cleaning equipment be included? In other words, would a farmer and his neighbours be permitted to buy this type of equipment under this legislation?

I would like to ask the minister this question. Could a group of farmers set up a cattle feeding co-operative and borrow something like $75,000, as was suggested by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, for equipping a cattle feeding operation, a hog feeding operation, a turkey feeding operation, or an operation of a similar type? Could a syndicate buy this type of machinery duty free, if any duty applied to it? Much of the duty that does apply to machines used on farms involves machines that have a dual purpose, which are agricultural in some aspects and commercial in others.

As I understand the interpretation of this proposed legislation, it is intended to promote commercial ventures, custom work, and so on. If a person was going into the grain drying business, could he buy the grain dryer duty free, for example; or could he buy seed cleaning equipment, grain mills, brush clearing equipment and grass seeding equipment duty free? If duty does apply to this machinery, could it be bought duty free? If it could, approximately 22 per cent would be saved in regard to most of this machinery. This is certainly well worth considering, because 22 per cent of the cost of the high priced machinery used in today's agricultural economy represents a great deal of money.

I have another question that I would ask the minister. In my part of the country during the past year we experienced a great water shortage. P.F.R.A. did a tremendous job in pumping water to the livestock of many farmers. Could farmers' co-ops be set up through which farmers would be able to purchase their own pipe? This would be of some benefit in the drier parts of Alberta. In many areas throughout the southern part of Alberta farmers have gone into the business of hauling water and have bought trucks for this purpose to haul water for their livestock. Could such equipment be bought on a syndicated or co-operative basis? One would wonder whether many other pieces of equipment—I am sure many hon. members have a number of pieces of equipment in their minds—will qualify under this legislation.

I should also like to see the minister take an active interest in the price of farmers' commodities. Some time ago the turkey producers were alarmed at the removal of quotas on turkeys from the United States coming into Canada. It seems to me that the minister shrugged this off rather lightly, and said in effect; "Everything is all right in the industry. You fellows will have to take a few cents less but don't worry about it. You can eat your own turkeys, I guess, if you get really hungry". That was the sort of attitude he had.

The lamb industry, which at times is a flourishing one in southern Alberta, has suffered a severe drop in price of eight cents a pound over the last six months. Has the minister paid attention to this problem and what is he prepared to do about it?

With regard to the beef industry, I mentioned some time ago that the minister pointed out last year that this was one part of the agricultural economy where optimism was evident. However this has certainly not shown to be the case this year, in fact even in the fall of 1963. Prices and optimism in the beef industry are at an all time low, at least since the last ten years. I have never seen the industry look at its future so dismally. Some months ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture what he proposed to do about the red meat embargo placed on Canadian red meat entering the United States. I asked him twice as a matter of fact, but he never got around to giving me an answer. Perhaps the minister could make a more direct and interested appraisal of the price aspect of the agricultural economy so that the farmers can buy and pay for machinery to enable them to become more efficient.

There are just two or three recommendations which I should like to place on record regarding the manufacturing industry, particularly that part of it engaged in farm machinery manufacture. During the study of this question by the agriculture committee in 1961 I had some points brought home to me with regard to dealers being able to return spare parts which they no longer required. Actually companies do allow for return of parts. They have what they call a parts returnable list; but if a particular part is no longer saleable you can rest assured, Mr. Chairman, that it is not on the returnable list. Therefore this increases the overhead and the dealers' costs. Dealers should be able to return all parts to the manufacturer, and the amount of money paid for them should be refunded. That would lower the cost of handling spare parts and eventually lower the cost to the farmer. Dealers should also be able to stock the cheapest part for any particular machine whether or not the part be made by the company with which he has a dealership. I think it was pointed out time and again in the agricultural committee that every company had a different price for the same sort of bearing. A dealer should be able to stock or buy from the manufacturer the same bearing at the cheapest price.

There must also be more standardization. Time and again in the agricultural committee evidence was submitted that not enough was done by the machine companies to standardize their equipment. In fact it is obvious to many farmers that machine companies go out of their way to make their parts just a little different from the parts of other manufacturers so that other parts cannot be used on their machines. Companies such as Hydraulic Couplers, and many more companies who manufacture repair parts, could in this way bring about a greater reduction in cost of spare parts and repairs to machinery to the benefit of the farmers.

I think the whole matter of dealership contracts should be examined by the combines investigation branch or the whole question referred, as I suggested last evening, to the agricultural committee. The whole distribution system of agricultural machinery should be given close examination. Actually in the 1960-61 inquiry the committee dealt more with the cost of production than with the distribution system. Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited, for example, which had brought in and innovated a new distributing system, was not even heard from during the committee inquiry, and I think this whole question should be dealt with once again. This method of syndicated buying which the government is now promoting could be examined by the agricultural committee to see whether or not it would promote vertical integration or the family farm. It appears obvious to me—I do not want to be embarrassed but, as I said, I run the risk of being embarrassed—that in promoting this resolution the government is sponsoring the virtual take-over of farming in Canada. It has discarded and done away with the principle every political party has stood for hitherto, namely the promotion and maintenance of the family farm. It is just one more manifestation of the millionaire's approach to the agricultural problems in Canada today.

Mr. Peters: I really had not intended to take part in this discussion of the resolution before the committee, until I heard the minister inform us that there was no point in anybody speaking on the resolution because all the answers were contained in the bill. That in itself would make me, as one who believes in democracy and parliamentary procedure and who has some respect for those institutions, rise from my seat and loudly complain that the minister already knows what is in the bill, that this resolution is only window dressing, and that although he will get some very good ideas from members of parliament he will give no consideration to them. This in effect is direction of legislation at its worst, because I presume that this bill in particular will follow, not the wishes of the cabinet or the farm organizations, but rather the inclination of the minister himself. Therefore I strongly protest, Mr. Chairman, at the minister's admitting publicly that he has no use for our parliamentary traditions, which ask the government to present a resolution when any legislation involving major expenditure is required. He may not agree that these resolutions serve any purpose, and I realize that the Liberal government are seeing less and less use in them, but I think it is shocking when a minister gets up and says, in effect: "Get on with the bill; I already have the particulars in it, this is only window dressing".

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I did suggest that when the committee had dealt with the resolution the crop insurance bill would immediately follow this bill, at which time there would be ample opportunity to discuss agriculture in all its facets. I was merely suggesting that if the resolution were passed hon. members would have the opportunity to look at the bill. The crop insurance resolution will immediately follow passage of this resolution dealing with farm machinery syndicates.

Mr. Peters: Well, Mr. Chairman, I accept the minister's explanation, which is not what I interpreted from his original remarks. However, as I say, I accept what the minister says in its inclination. This was not clear to me from the previous explanation. I think that the minister, every farm organization in Canada and every member of parliament who has given any consideration to the farm problem at all will know that one of the major problems that Canada's farmers face is the increase in the cost of the machinery they require to conduct their agricultural operations. I think this fact is reconized by everyone. I believe anyone who really gives consideration to the problem of the high cost of farm machinery, which has been accompanied by the extending of acreages in order to provide economic family farms, will come to the conclusion that the problem is not that the farmer needs to borrow money to buy new machinery but rather it is the cost of that farm machinery in relation percentagewise to the operation of the enterprise that the farmer may have.

If the minister gives any consideration to the reports of the farm implement companies I think he will come to the conclusion that there is a great deal to be desired in the operations of the farm machinery companies in Canada. In fact some consideration must be given to the whole international farm machinery industry, because if any industry is international it is this one. It might be interesting for members of the committee to review the proceedings of the agricultural committee several years ago when this matter was being considered. They will find that some farm implements sold in Timiskaming are produced in India and that farm machinery sold in other parts of Canada is made in the United States, Great Britain, France, in fact most of the major countries of Europe as well as in some of the countries of Africa and South America. Many of these machinery companies decide that a particular machine will be manufactured in one country, and its manufacture will not be duplicated anywhere else in their vast international empires.

Knowing the minister's background, knowing something about conditions in western Canada and having heard over the years about the co-operatives that have been established in western Canada both to operate farms and for the pooling of machinery, I think this legislation will work to a limited extent. I also suggest that it will work not only in the case of very large producers but in some instances in the case of very small producers who may be unable to get custom work done by an entrepreneur because their farms are too poor and their acreage too small to warrant the custom operator buying equipment in a particular area.

I make the prediction that the legislation we are now being asked to pass, with regard to which the farm magazines throughout Canada will give great credit to the minister for having tried to solve the problem, will never apply to even 2 per cent of the agricultural population of this nation. If this is true, then this legislation certainly is not the answer to the agricultural problem created by the high cost per unit of farm machinery. If this is true, then the minister had better look far beyond this legislation because I think the problem is much deeper.

The committee that dealt with this matter several years ago came to a number of conclusions. Members can look them up for themselves. I will not bore the committee by reading them. But members should look at them because I believe these conclusions caused the Conservative government of the day a great deal of concern. They raised problems that the Minister of Finance in the present government has tried to solve as did the minister of finance in the former government, and in both cases they have been wholly unsuccessful.

I refer to the fact that American companies, in fact, even some with their headquarters in Canada, are operating international cartels in the farm machinery implement industry, and the government, the Minister of Finance and nobody else in this country has been able to come to grips with this problem. Suggestions were made at the time of the committee hearings that there would have to be controls. We have some controls. There are controls on the import and export of many commodities. But have we had the initiative to place import and export controls on farm machinery? No; this is a totally neglected field. The hon. member for Acadia referred to hydraulic couplers for tractors, ejector seats and other accessories for farm equipment which are subject to taxes and tariff restrictions if bought separately. Milking machinery is also subject to restrictions. But in the main, farm machinery can flow across international borders without any control. This means that the companies pay no attention to supply and demand, produce in areas where it is most economical for them to do so and sell in a market where they can and do command the highest prices which the market will bear.

I am not in a position to say that there are monopolies on the national scene, but when you buy an automobile in Canada, whether from General Motors, Ford, Chrysler or Studebaker, you find that in comparable categories you get about the same kind of product from one company as you do from another for the same price. I do not know whether or not there is a monopoly. There are many more qualified to judge than I am, but it is a surprising situation and it limits the choice of the individual and his opportunity to get a better deal from one company than from another.

There is a similarity between the farm implement industry and the automobile industry. A John Deere tractor costs very nearly the same as a Massey-Harris tractor of similar horsepower, and with similar equipment. These are problems that the government is not prepared to face. I suggest that the reason the committee was not reconstituted a year ago was that the former government did not have the courage to face these problems. If the minister wants to be fair, if the farm machinery dealers wish to be fair, if the farm magazines wish to be fair, they will point out that this major problem is not being faced by this legislation and has not been faced by this or the former government. In fact, I do not expect it to be faced by any government in Canada for some time, because it will require very drastic controls that the capitalistic governments of Canada are not prepared to impose.

This is the minister's own legislation. In my opinion it does not have the approval of his departmental officials and probably does not have the approval of most of the agricultural representatives in the Liberal party. In saying this I do not wish to be unfair. I represent the farmers of Timiskaming in the main, although incidentally I may represent farmers in other parts of Canada. I represent the mixed farmers of the clay belt of northern Ontario who have problems that are peculiar to them, and my representation is oriented to them. I know that the minister has connections with agriculture in western Canada and I am aware of what type of connections he has. I am sure his representation of his people will be the type of representation that will result in legislation of this kind. This may be all right, except for the fact that this is the Minister of Agriculture presenting this legislation and he has a much wider responsibility. Under that responsibility he must in my opinion take into consideration the aspirations of farmers in other parts of the country.

Last night I heard a member make the very strong statement that in his opinion most farmers could not get along with their neighbours to the extent of buying farm machinery co-operatively. I believe he was correct. I am in a partnership with my brother, and with two brothers it is very hard to decide whether we are going to cut my fall wheat first or cut his fall wheat first. I will decide that mine is riper and therefore it is necessary to cut it, while I am sure my brother will say that his is the riper and the advantageous time to cut it is today.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in western Canada you can sit around and talk about this for several days before you decide whose wheat you are going to cut. In Timiskaming if you do not get it cut while the sun is shining it will probably rain the next day and you will be lucky if the rain does not last for three weeks. If it does, no one will get the grain cut. If you do not think this will raise the blood pressure of those operating the farm machinery syndicate, I will be surprised. I suppose a scheme like this will work with people like the Hutterites. It will work with the larger groups in western Canada who have an affinity for one another greater than blood. It will work with those groups who have this type of brotherly philosophy that will allow it to work.

If you have ever dealt with a custom combine outfit or, in the early days, with a threshing outfit you will know that money changed hands in order that one farmer could get his grain cut earlier than his neighbours. There was a little bonus slipped under the table or some kind of incentive used. I presume that sometimes the custom thresher paid some attention to whether or not the cooking at one place was better than another. I know farmers well enough, Mr. Chairman, to know that it would not take very many years before there was a falling out of the members of a co-operative if the weather turned bad and only one or two of the farmers were able to have this equipment at the opportune time, while the others were left out.

The minister, of course, comes from an area in which there is a very dry, very stabilized climate, so probably he does not know about this. However, the situation I have described applies in Ontario and Quebec. I believe the result will be that few farmers will get this type of farm machinery. I imagine the hon. member for Kootenay East may find that a syndicate in his area will be able to go into the pulp and paper industry or a saw mill, something of that nature, because he gets along very well with them. There are a few farmers in my area in the pulpwood industry and they may get along to the extent of being able to share a truck for the hauling of their product. I think that in eastern Canada at least we are going to have some resentment on the part of farmers who find themselves out of luck in getting machinery from the syndicate.

When the minister speaks, as I presume he will, I should like to hear from him what he believes the relationship will be between this legislation and vertical integration. We know that vertical integration, in the fields in which it was introduced originally, has not been successful. It has not been the concern of this government but it was of the previous government because after a period of several years vertical integration in agriculture ran its course. I would suggest that this is another type of vertical integration to which the minister ought to give consideration. I hope he will be interested in doing something in this regard.

Now, Mr. Chairman, supplying credit to purchase farm machinery without cutting the cost of that machinery seems to me to be putting the cart before the horse. All hon. members agree that the price of farm machinery is too high. Farmers do not say they cannot borrow enough money to buy this equipment; they say the price is so high that it is unprofitable to operate it on the farm. We are not cutting the price of farm machinery; all we are doing is supplying credit through the Farm Credit Corporation to enable farmers to group together to buy this machinery. This scheme may or may not cut the cost per farm unit; it may or may not cut the cost of production per unit, but it will not cut the cost of purchasing machinery.

The minister has not told us if this credit is going to cost the farmer 5 per cent. This question, of course, will be answered when we see the bill. We do not know whether or not the banks are going to lend the money and the loan is going to be guaranteed by the government. This is the manner in which farm improvement loans are made. These questions will be answered of course when the bill is introduced. We have met the problem of the reclassification of farm machinery, and I hope the minister has made provision for this in the bill. I am always surprised when I find certain items that are normally included in the cost of a tractor, such things as the canopy, foam rubber seats, a starter and other amenities that we expect on this type of equipment, are not included. When these things are bought separately and not as part of the original unit there is a tariff on them, and this increases the price because those items are not then considered to be farm machinery. This applies to many other things that are normally considered to be part of the tractor or other farm machines. I hope the minister has reclassified the words "farm machinery" so that they include all the things the farmer uses for agricultural purposes. I would presume, Mr. Chairman, that this applies also to trucks used solely for agricultural purposes.

The minister in my opinion has not been fair to farmers or farm organizations, because of his reluctance to say anything about the problem of farm machinery. By now the minister must have read the report of the agriculture committee which conducted a hearing into farm machinery costs. If he has read it, he will note that there are many things the committee studied to which consideration should be given right away. I feel the minister should be prepared to say whether or not he intends to reconstitute this farm machinery inquiry. He ought to be prepared to attempt to arrive at standardization of hydraulic lifts, power take-offs, and things of that sort that are very elementary. The standardization of this type of thing should be easily legislated by the federal government. Does the minister have anything to say about the maintenance of parts at a reasonable cost for a reasonable period of time? The committee thought this was an important part of the farm machinery and implement industry. Has the minister given any consideration to the remarks made last night by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam in relation to the testing of farm equipment? The hon. member pointed out that the provincial governments, particularly Saskatchewan, have gone as far as they can in this field. There is certainly nothing this government is doing better than giving advice and assistance to the provinces to run their own business. This is a field where that could be considered, although I suggest we should do it ourselves rather than have someone else do it.

Has the minister given any consideration to the greatest bugbear in the farm implement industry, namely the problem existing in the used implement end of it? What happens when a farmer trades in an implement? Who gets it and what relation has it to the new implements bought? The minister has said all these questions will be answered when we see the bill. I am quite anxious to see it but I doubt very much that it will answer a lot of these questions, although I hope it answers the questions that have been specifically related to the resolution.

The problems in the farm implement industry and those surrounding methods of reducing the cost per unit of production will have to be answered in many other ways, not all of them in the credit field. The minister will also have to take into consideration the problems he wants the agriculture committee to study. He will have less trouble with farm organizations, the farm press, and indeed with the farmers themselves, if he allows this measure, along with all the others, to be sent to the agriculture committee where they can be discussed, where people who have a great deal of experience and knowledge outside the legislative field would help us to make up our minds on how to supply the farmers with more favourable and satisfactory legislation at less cost to the public and the treasury.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, any legislation introduced in the house to help the agricultural class must necessarily receive the attention of all hon. members, and everyone must see to it that this legislation is enacted as soon as possible.

Yet, it does not mean that we should shelve our responsibilities and take the minister's recommendations for granted.

A few moments ago, when he reiterated his request to the effect that the resolution be passed immediately, my first reaction was to agree. But when I remembered the various questions I asked him, and which remained without answer for many weeks, I revised my way of thinking and agreed with other hon. members that the matter should receive further consideration.

The minister certainly meant well when he introduced this legislation. But, Mr. Chairman, we all know the saying: The road to hell is paved with good intentions. Therefore, in order to warn the minister and help him not commit errors which he would regret later on, I decided to take a few brief minutes to express my views, which are those of my voters at home.

I am very much afraid that the legislation now before us may cause some disappointment, especially among the farmers in the province of Quebec and eastern Canada.

I agree with other hon. members who stated that this measure would affect only an insignificant number of farmers. Moreover, I think what we have here is one more measure tending mainly to help the large farm operators. It seems to me that those are the only measures taken by the present government: measures giving no heed whatever to the family farm or the small farmer.

If there is an important sector in the agricultural field, Mr. Chairman, it is that of the family farm. That is where future farmers learn to work and to till the soil in order to replace their parents. If they are not given the necessary attention, we will sooner or later be the first to suffer the consequences of that carelessness towards that part of our population.

I would like to ask the minister a few questions concerning the measure under consideration. First of all, I would have liked, as other hon. members, to know what he means by farm machinery syndicate. I would have liked to know from the minister whether these syndicates will be controlled by provincial or federal legislation.

I would have liked also to know what arrangements have been made with the provincial ministers of agriculture during the meetings where this measure has been especially considered.

The minister would certainly have received more attention from this side of the house if, during his remarks, he had explained these points which, I feel, are of vital interest.

We should also like to know the interest rate the borrowers will have to pay; what will be the repayment periods; the amount a syndicate will be able to borrow; and finally whether this legislation will only apply to bona fide farmers or also to citizens who are not farmers.

I am inclined to agree more particularly with my hon. friend from Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) when he says that this measure will benefit especially the western farmers and that it ignores the eastern farmers, more particularly those from the province of Quebec, the maritime provinces and Ontario.

I think our people will appreciate the remarks of my hon. friend from Rosthern who is certainly familiar with the needs of eastern farmers.

The question of the price of farm machinery is of capital importance to our farmers. As was pointed out by other speakers, especially the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner), the agriculture and colonization committee considered the matter in the spring of 1961. At the time, to get firsthand information, I sent to 200 farmers of my riding a questionnaire in which I asked them to give me some information on the price and life of the farm machinery required to run a family farm. I also told them I needed all the information available to present their case adequately when the question would be considered by the committee.

Out of these 200 questionnaires, I received exactly 72 completed ones. In my first question, I asked this:

Please, indicate, in order of importance, the farm machinery that you think is most important, as well as its purchase price.

In the second question, I asked:

In your opinion, what is the average life of the machinery listed under item no. 1.

And my third question read as follows:

Please, list what seems to you the most important reason which explains the increase in price of farm machinery.

Here is what I learned from the answers to these questions sent to professional farmers:

Tractor, $2,300; baling-press, $2,300; manure spreader, $550; mower, $390; spinner, $410; plough, $230; milking machine, $450; harrow, $395; combine, about $4,000; disks, $600; binder, $550; spreader, $400.

Total cost of purchase would be about $12,500, at 1961 prices. The purchasing price of the above farm machinery has certainly increased considerably since then.

Modern farms are also equipped with a hay conditioner, a potato digger, a beet digger and an ensilage cutter or blower. Unfortunately, I have no detail about the price of this machinery, but I am convinced that it is among the most costly.

According to the information obtained by means of that questionnaire, those machines last between five and ten years, depending on the care they receive. Some farmers who are very careful will keep their machinery much longer, while others who are careless will have to make repairs or trade them in much more often than those who keep them in order.

As for the various causes stated to justify the increased cost of machinery, this is what farmers had to say:

First, many are of the opinion that the commissions drawn by salesmen are too high and the profits of the farm machinery manufacturers are exorbitant.

Moreover, repair and maintenance costs are also very high. The same is true for transportation costs which increase constantly from year to year.

They mention also that tax increases that follow one another contribute enormously to the fact that farm machinery gets more expensive every year.

And there are those who even complain that farm machinery, and more particularly tractors, are unnecessarily luxurious.

In this connection, and more especially with regard to tractors, there is surely a great deal of truth in what some farmers told me, because various manufacturers of farm machinery seem to outdo each other in luxury in order to offer de luxe machinery to their customers, even though the latter do not need them to carry out their work. I am sure most farmers could do without de luxe attachments on their tractors. If the cost of those machines were reduced by as much, farmers could use that money for other purposes.

According to the replies received, I was able to realize that the farmers, in general, complain about the discrepancy between the cost and the selling price of their products. And this question of farm machinery certainly enters into account when both the prices I have mentioned are being determined.

Then, before resuming my seat, I wish I could, on the part of the farmers of my constituency, exert some pressure upon the minister to have him bring about measures that will particularly apply to the eastern farmers. We are not jealous of the help given to the farmers of the prairie provinces, but we believe that the central government, especially the present Liberal government, following the many promises made, should give special attention to eastern farmers. An eastern department of agriculture was promised, but such a project remains unfulfilled. Consequently, I would ask the hon. minister and his parliamentary secretary, whose intentions are certainly good, to give——to have that "long look" of which the minister speaks so often. We need it in eastern Canada today. We need the help of the minister and we do need that "long look". But, even more important, we need practical measures to help our farmers.

Our farmers are most disappointed. I must tell the hon. gentleman this, because it is true. I would much prefer to be agreeable to him and congratulate him on the measures he has brought in. But my farmers—and I am sorry for this—have asked me to tell the hon. gentleman that they are very disappointed. I do not wish to review the measures he has taken—measures which have had results so unfavourable to our dairy farmers. I have told the government this, time and again, but it has not seemed to sink in too well. However, Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity of saying that there are many facets to this question; there are many angles. We on this side of the house represent so many people who are professional farmers and therefore know very well about farming and farming problems. These people could give the minister a great deal of assistance in arriving at solutions to some of the problems that are today facing our farmers.

I join those who have spoken before me in recommending that this measure be sent to the committee on agriculture and colonization. There is a wealth of knowledge in that committee, especially in members from this side of the house, and we are all willing to help the government because we realize that the Department of Agriculture is in dire need of help. We are willing to give this help to the minister.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few general remarks at the resolution stage of this legislation. At the outset I would like to quote from yesterday's Hansard, when the Minister of Justice, the house leader, said:

> But I think for the benefit of the farmers it would be preferable if we could dispose of the farm machinery syndicates resolution right away.

This may be so, and this is one reason for my rising to my feet, because I am interested in knowing what types of equipment the minister is thinking about in this connection; that is, what types of equipment may be purchased under this legislation. As I see it, farming is pretty well completed for this year, but many farmers wish to lay their plans and arrange their business for the coming year. The word "syndicate" intrigued me, so I looked it up in the Winston dictionary. It says, "Syndicate is an association of persons or corporations to promote some particular enterprise, especially an enterprise requiring a large amount of capital, and control the market in a particular commodity".

This raises the question in my mind as to whether this is a bill mainly for the small farmer who cannot afford a certain type of equipment, or is it going to put some farmers into the category of being more or less small contractors, in terms of equipment costing $50,000 or $75,000? I cannot foresee this bill dealing with some types of farming equipment that we use. I am thinking of haying equipment, loaders, and possibly bulldozers. If one wishes to do bulldozing work, this would be the type of equipment contractors would use for clearing land. Perhaps this is what the minister has in mind, but he has not mentioned it yet. A few minutes ago the minister said that most of the answers were contained in the bill. However, Mr. Chairman, if I understand the position correctly, the resolution stage is the time to put forward ideas that may be introduced into a bill. Despite this, the minister has said the questions have already been answered in the bill.

I would like to point out a few of the difficulties that I think could occur under an arrangement where three or four farmers join together to form a syndicate. I have had some experience, as have many farmers, of buying equipment jointly. I realize that one of the drawbacks to this type of co-operative farming is the fact that the farmers will use the equipment and nobody will be its actual boss. Therefore the equipment will not be looked after in the proper manner, and eventually these syndicates about which we are speaking will fall apart. Perhaps again the minister will explain this matter when we deal with the bill. On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, I would think that with regard to any type of equipment costing up to possibly $75,000, the people involved would be organizing for a profit. My idea of a bill that would be of benefit to the small farmers would be one that provided for the purchase of the type of equipment that one would buy in order to save money, and not in order to make a profit.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam last evening when he referred to C.C.I.L., as we know it in western Canada, and how it was organized with the idea of saving a great deal of money for the farmers. I believe it is true that many farmers who buy through C.C.I.L. do receive a fair dividend. Again, Mr. Chairman, one of the drawbacks of this arrangement is that only one type of equipment is available and there is no choice. Any farmer who has a specific choice or preference for one particular make of equipment, because he believes it is superior to others, does not fall into this category.

A great deal of the large equipment that C.C.I.L. sells is imported from England, from Europe, and we must realize that when a farmer wants his equipment repaired, he wants the repair to be carried out at once. Anybody who has farmed in western Canada realizes that many times we must have parts flown in from eastern Canada or the United States. I think this is one of the drawbacks of the C.C.I.L. arrangement. Collective parts depots was a subject that was also mentioned. I for one do not believe that this is a feasible set-up. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam mentioned this matter. I do not think there can be co-operation among machine companies any more than there can be between members of different political parties, or members of the House of Commons. I do not think they can agree on one thing.

Mr. Whelan: Get out in the world, instead of living on a tractor.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): I believe that a bill such as this, which is of vital interest to farmers all across Canada, should be sent to the committee on agriculture and colonization, as has been suggested. The committee could then study the bill, and I believe many good suggestions would be brought forward. I hope that when the minister introduces the bill he will specify the types of equipment this legislation will cover. We are looking at the over-all cost of farm equipment, whether it be equipment used in eastern Canada or the large type of equipment used in western Canada. I cannot see that this will have any bearing on lowering the cost of farm equipment. At best it may aid a few of the smaller farmers by enabling them to buy collectively certain types of equipment. The hon. member for Medicine Hat mentioned the figure of $75,000 last evening and I think the minister should tell us whether such a figure is involved here. What types of equipment has he in mind which could possibly cost $75,000. I realize that farm improvement loans have been increased from $7,500 to $15,000, which is all to the good because the cost of equipment has gone up three or four times what it was 15 years ago.

A few other questions I have in mind are these. When we are speaking of partners in a syndicate I should like the minister to explain whether he means such partners will be live partners, or whether just one or two will control the syndicate and the rest will be silent partners. This might again raise the question whether this measure will be of benefit to the small farmer, or will have the effect of organizing a group of big farmers and put them into the farm contracting business.

As we all know, there are many types of tractors and combines today. I would say that the smallest costs about $5,000 to $6,000 and you can pay as much as $12,000 to $15,000. I should like to know whether it is the intention of the minister to allow three or four farmers collectively, after having spent their $15,000 farm improvement loan, to raise another $75,000 to buy some of the bigger tractors and go into commercial custom combining or contract farming.

I should also like to know whether it is the minister's intention that the syndicates be big enough to buy direct from the manufacturer and thus cut out some 40 to 50 per cent profit which is involved in the sale of equipment locally. I am referring to the local dealer who gets about 20 to 25 per cent on selling an implement, and also the wholesalers or general offices located in each province which make, according to the figure I have heard, 35 to 40 per cent for their particular company. That is the profit which eventually ends up in the hands of the company which manufactures the equipment concerned.

I have just outlined, Mr. Chairman, a few of the questions which I have in my mind. I will not say anything more at this point because I should like to see what is in the bill in detail. When I have seen it I may have either some criticisms or some constructive criticisms, whichever it may be, of the bill which the minister is introducing.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to make a long speech but I do have a few questions to ask the minister at this point. I do not expect him to answer them now, but he might make a note of them and perhaps answer them either on second reading or during committee stage of the bill.

My first question is: Have the officials of his department given consideration to the adequacy of this amount of $25 million? I ask that question because just the other day I was in the Northwest Territories attending a ceremony at which the minister himself was supposed to be present but unfortunately was not. However, his colleague the minister of northern affairs was present and made a speech in connection with the crossing of the Great Slave lake railway into the Northwest Territories, and he referred to the fact that this railroad, among other things would provide a means of transportation across some eight to ten million acres of agricultural land which in due course would be opened up. That is borne out by the fact that in the last four years at least 3,500 to 4,000 applications have been made by people concerned in securing agricultural land in the newly opening areas in the constituency of Peace River alone, under the provincial homestead settlements scheme. The amount of machinery which these farmers and potential farmers would require to remove the brush and cultivate the land will take up a substantial portion of the $25 million which the minister is suggesting be offered for this purpose on credit terms.

To underline that I would also call attention to the fact that page 11 of the 1963 report made under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the amendment to which act was the subject of discussion yesterday, shows that $99 million—almost $100 million—in the year 1963 alone was utilized by the farmers in Canada for the purchase of farm machinery under the pertinent provisions of that legislation. In other words, the farmers of Canada purchased $100 million worth of farm equipment under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. It is interesting to note that there were 58,000 applications, and that the average loan per farmer was less than $2,000.

The next question I should like to ask the minister is this: To what particular portion of the farming community is this legislation dedicated? Who are contemplated as the beneficiaries under this legislation? The minister may, of course, say that under the Farm Improvement Loans Act it is impossible to grant loans to syndicates and co-operatives, and consequently they are the people who are shut out, under the provisions of that act, as a group, as a co-operative or as a syndicate, from securing these benefits. However, I would point out to the minister that under the Farm Credit Act, which he administers and which the previous government passed in 1959, section 2 defines "farming" as including a co-operative farm association and a family farming corporation. So it cannot be said at this time that prior to the enactment of the legislation which will be introduced following passage of this resolution there is not now in existence legislation which might well cover the particular groups the minister has in mind in this resolution.

It is rather interesting to note in examining the figures in connection with the Farm Credit Corporation—and I am now reading from the annual report and financial statement for the year 1963-64—that while for that year there were 8,689 loans totalling $108 million, with an average loan amount of $12,430, only 1.2 per cent of the loans were for the purchase of equipment. I would then assume—these are figures I do not have, but the minister may have them—that with regard to farm co-operatives and family farm incorporations, which are defined in the Farm Credit Act as being amongst the group who may secure the benefits of the legislation, a very infinitesimal portion of the total moneys lent would be lent to such groups for the purpose of securing farm machinery. Therefore I think this underlines the request I have made to the minister, that at some time he should enlighten members of the committee as to the groups, the people, the individuals who in his opinion are entitled and will be able to secure benefits from this particular legislation, having in mind the figures I have put on the record under the two enactments which at present constitute the sum total of federal farm credit legislation.

Before I sit down there is one more question I wish to ask the minister. This concerns a class of people who have not been mentioned in the debates we have had in the house in connection with farm credit. I refer to the original settlers of this country, the Indians. I call the minister's attention to the fact that some years ago we had a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons which inquired into the whole question of the Indian Act and the economic and social conditions of the Indian. One of the very interesting discussions which took place was with regard to the opportunities afforded to the Indian people under the Indian Act to secure the same types of benefits in the form of credit and assistance as did the other inhabitants of Canada.

It was then pointed out, not only by the Indians themselves but by officials of the department, that these people labour under a considerable handicap because of the fact they do not have title to their lands. Under the Indian Act they hold under what are known as certificates of occupation. As a resident of my province the minister will recall that there is an act known as the métis colonies act which sets up in the northern part of the province and to a large extent in my constituency a number of areas where those native inhabitants, who are no longer under the Indian Act but come under the métis act, secure certain benefits. Tracts of land have been set apart for their farms. They also operate under a system of land holding involving certificates of occupation which do not give them title to the land. Very often in their attempts to secure the benefits of the type of farm credit legislation and farm assistance programs available to other Canadians they come squarely up against this handicap. This was mentioned and extensively commented on and I would hope that in the legislation the minister is going to introduce provision will be made to deal with these people.

It is all very well to say, as has been said, that it is possible to change the provisions of the Indian Act so that Indians can hold title to their lands. At the present time the Indians themselves are very much opposed to this. When we are attempting to establish many of these people and to provide them with the opportunity to attain the living conditions that prevail for all other Canadians, I think it is manifestly unfair that because of their system of land ownership we should deprive them of the opportunities which they would receive under legislation of this kind. I know that many of these people are good farmers and would like the opportunity to settle into the mainstream of our economic life, but by reason of these facts they are prevented from doing so. When the minister introduces the legislation I hope it will provide for them. If it does not I hope he will consider making appropriate amendments for that purpose.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, having had the honour of being a member of the agricultural committee for a number of years I have always been interested in the problem of the cost of farm machinery, and I believe that every member of the house should have the same interest because of the fact that the agricultural economy is still one of the basic and most important economic factors in this great country. I was disappointed yesterday afternoon that the minister gave such a brief résumé of the proposed legislation. It seemed to be a rather insipid introduction for something as important as this and consequently I have a few questions to ask. I do not think that members on this side of the house have any apologies to make if we wish to make a few brief remarks, and I can assure you mine will be brief.

Because of the fact that so little explanation was given in introducing the legislation to provide for the extension of farm machinery syndicates I feel we should place our queries on the record. I ask the same question that many members have asked. Will the legislation actually help those farmers who need help? In discussing the problem of the cost of farm machinery with the well established farmer operating on a large scale, I find he feels that because of the legislation with respect to the agricultural economy placed on the statute books by the previous government he has been able to pull himself out of the economic doldrums. Nevertheless he is interested in this legislation also. However it is those smaller farmers who operate the great majority of the 400,000 farms spread across this vast land about whom I am concerned. I am concerned as to whether this measure will actually work in practice.

I can see that a father and a couple of sons, or three brothers could apply to the Farm Credit Corporation and receive a loan up to $75,000 to provide machinery to operate a family farm unit but, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Timiskaming, farmers are free enterprisers and individualists. They are very much concerned about running their own operations. Looking at the matter from the psychological aspect I wonder what would happen if three or four farmers formed a syndicate to buy a tractor costing $8,000 to $11,000, or a $10,000 combine for harvesting, particularly during a fall season such as we are experiencing at the present time.

Who would decide who would use the particular machine when the sun did come out? After all, farmers are most interested in good weather because they are so dependant on the elements. Every farmer wants to get out and do 10, 12 or 14 hours of combining while the weather is right. I am concerned whether there is any practical value to this legislation. I hope the minister will put forward some way of solving this problem when he brings the bill before us.

With respect to the maximum loan of $75,000 which is available under this measure I would ask this question. Will the small farmer take the risk of using his land as collateral in order to borrow to this extent? I find that farmers are most reluctant to incur any large debt unless they can see a reasonable prospect of repaying the loan. There is always the consideration whether the farmer will want to pledge his chattels and land as collateral for a loan of this size.

As has been pointed out by other speakers, there is another factor that enters into the picture where you have a co-operative enterprise for the buying of machinery involving four or five farmers who purchase a machine. Who will be responsible for the repairing of the machinery? Will the machinery be maintained? Not long ago one of our members was talking to one of the Russian visitors to Canada who were interested in our farming operations. This Russian visitor looked at the tractor and asked the farmer how old it was. The farmer said it was 11 years old. The Russian visitor immediately raised his eyebrows and asked how he maintained such a lifespan for a tractor. The farmer said that the individual who purchased it took pride in keeping up his machinery; he greased it regularly and repaired it regularly so that the life of the tractor was extended. He asked the Russian what the situation was in Russia. The reply was that when they bought machinery to operate their communal farms the lifespan was perhaps a year and a half or two years. You can see the difference. If we set up these syndicates, will the machinery have the normal life expectancy it should have under the free enterprise system?

We find today that we have a number of farmers who, by agreement, will have one farmer buy a tractor or a big combine. In order to help him finance the cost of this machine he will do some custom work in the neighbourhood to supplement the work that has already been done by farmers who have combines of their own. In order to take advantage of the sunshine and get his crop harvested, a farmer will seek the help of this neighbour and this, in turn, helps to liquidate the cost of the investment. By injecting this new feature of the farm machinery syndicate into the picture, are we going to interfere with this operation that is already established?

I believe the hon. member for Acadia has already referred to vertical integration. We had quite a bit of discussion about this in the agriculture committee several years ago. I should like to see the bill before I make too many comments on the subject, but this is something we have to guard against. We should not be providing large sums of money to commercial operators who are not really farmers in the ordinary sense of the word but who, because this money is available, want to get into the agriculture picture and make a fast buck, as it were. We want to be careful we are not encouraging further vertical integration.

The cost-price squeeze was referred to by some members. I believe the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam dwelt upon it at length. This is an old phrase, but I believe it has importance in the agricultural economy. I am wondering, in relation to the cost-price squeeze about which we speak, if we are putting the emphasis in the right place. We are interested in the high cost of machinery. I find in talking to the farmers in my area that a number of them are asking questions about the prices of the farm products they have to sell. We talk a lot about keeping down the prices of the things the farmer has to buy, but can we do something about raising the price of the things the farmer has to sell? I think this is an important aspect that has not been given too much consideration by the present government. We brought in several measures, of course, to help alleviate this condition. The Agricultural Stabilization Act is well known and well established now and has gone a long way toward helping the situation. I think it should be looked at again and perhaps made more effective in the light of the experience we have had since that legislation was introduced.

Another thing we did which helped to reduce this cost price squeeze was to get ourselves into a sellers' market so far as our wheat was concerned. As the members of the committee know, when we took office in 1957 and 1958 there was a large volume of grain in the prairie provinces and there were high storage costs on it. By getting out and making contracts with other countries, we got ourselves into a liquid position. We got into a sellers' market, with the result that when the last world wheat agreement was completed some three years ago we got the world wheat price up 10 cents or 12 cents a bushel.

The next major move, and the most effective of all, was the revaluation of the Canadian dollar. This in effect placed another 15 cents per bushel on the value of our Canadian wheat. This 25 cents per bushel extra, when applied to a crop of 400 million bushels, which is a modest average production in western Canada, gave us another $100 million which did not come out of the pockets of the taxpayers, but came out of world markets. This was another step in reducing the cost-price squeeze.

I suggest to the committee that we have to look at both sides of this picture so far as the machine dealers are concerned. I understand that a number of machine dealers in various parts of the country have been able to grant a little higher value on the trade-ins. This has worked to the benefit of the purchaser. The machine dealers have been able to recover these increased costs by putting this machinery out for custom use in the neighbourhood. Again, some farmers in the neighbourhood who want to take advantage of the good weather will go in to the machine dealer and rent some of this farm machinery. They take it out to the farm, put it to work and then bring it back to the dealer. The result of this has been to help the dealer get his value out of the machine and to help the farmer get his crop harvested. It is a mutually satisfactory business and helps both sides. This practice has not been too widely developed as yet, but it has been developed and it would be a mistake to interfere with it.

The hon. member for Timiskaming said something about the former government not taking action so far as the agriculture committee was concerned in connection with this inquiry into the price of farm machinery. As a member of that committee I may say that it was one of the most worth-while committees of which I have ever been a member. We had 29 meetings and we heard witnesses from all across Canada, particularly those in the machine industry. We were not altogether satisfied with some of the testimony because we were repeatedly told that the answers to some questions would give information to competitors. Had we carried on as the government, we had arranged to have these witnesses recalled. I was interested in hearing the hon. member for Jasper-Edson say that there were machine companies in Canada who were selling the same machines in Scotland for $600 less than in Canada. There was an indication of this sort of thing in the testimony given to the agriculture committee. As a result of that, we were prepared to recommend to the house that we send four or five men, one from each party in the house, on a short tour of Europe to look into the situation. However, the work of that committee was not completed. I do not believe we should bear too much criticism of the kind we received from the hon. member for Timiskaming, because I believe we would have been able to come up with very good results had we completed our work.

With these few remarks, I should like to suggest that before we finally pass this legislation it should be placed for some time at least in the hands of the committee on agriculture and colonization for further study.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Hays thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-121, to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): By leave now. Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): By unanimous consent, Mr. Hays, seconded by Mr. Favreau, moves that the said bill be read a second time.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I understood we would give this first reading and leave second reading until a later date, and that we would go on with the farm crop insurance measure at this time.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say there was an agreement or an arrangement. I had suggested that if it were at all possible for the present bill to be carried through its three stages, it would be a different thing from the crop insurance bill, because the present bill, if it is passed, may be implemented right away for the benefit of the farmers, for reasons which have been explained by my hon. colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays). But if there has been any misapprehension on the other side I must say there was no agreement or arrangement. There was only a very strong suggestion by myself, to the effect that I have just explained. I had the very clear impression that sympathetic consideration was to be given to it, and I may say I was not surprised a few moments ago when there appeared to be consent to go on with second reading. I repeat that I did not have the same insistence for the crop insurance measure.

Mr. Starr: May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Events have moved a little too rapidly at this time. It was our complete understanding that we would give the bill first reading today, go on with the crop insurance item and then carry on with the second reading of the bill at the next sitting of the house.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I would not want anybody to be taken by surprise or to imply anything which has not been decided. Therefore, if it is the intention of the official opposition not to proceed with second reading of the farm machinery syndicates bill today, I can only repeat there was no formal arrangement but just a very strong hope on my part.

Mr. Jorgenson: The minister is to be lauded on his efforts to get this legislation through for the benefit of the farmers, but I am sure he must realize this is new legislation. It is a departure from anything we have seen and hon. members would want to give it careful examination before agreeing to pass it. There must be a number of questions that can be raised on second reading, and I believe hon. members would want to proceed with the crop insurance item.

Mr. Favreau: I am not trying to benefit from any surprise which may have been caused by this apparent decision of the house, and the government is ready to consider that only first reading has been given, and to have second reading at the next sitting of the house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. When shall the said bill be read the second time? Next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Crop Insurance Act

CROP INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REINSURANCE PROGRAM

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Crop Insurance Act to authorize the governor in council to enter into agreements for the purpose of establishing a crop reinsurance program to supplement provincial crop insurance plans; to provide for the establishment in the consolidated revenue fund of a special account, to be known as the crop reinsurance fund, to which shall be credited amounts paid by a province under a crop reinsurance agreement and out of which shall be paid amounts required for the payment of reinsurance claims; to authorize advances from time to time from the consolidated revenue fund by way of non-interest bearing loans to the crop reinsurance fund; and to authorize the rebate, to grain growers whose grain is grown on insured lands, of sums paid by way of levy under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I wish at this time to outline briefly the proposed amendments to the Crop Insurance Act, and inasmuch as there was some concern about not enough explanation having been given on the previous measure I shall endeavour to deal with this one more thoroughly.

When my predecessor, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) introduced the Crop Insurance Act in 1959, he pointed out that the constitutional responsibility for crop insurance rests with the provinces. He further emphasized that conditions vary so greatly from province to province, that a program which would work well and be practised in one province would not work in another province.

The responsibility therefore for providing the necessary legislation and administrative machinery, to provide a suitable crop insurance scheme for any province, rests with the provincial authorities.

The Crop Insurance Act passed by parliament in 1959 was designed to help the provinces to provide crop insurance for farmers, at costs which would not be prohibitive for interested producers. To this end the act provided that under agreement with any province the federal government could reimburse the province for up to 20 per cent of the premiums necessary to make an insurance scheme self-sustaining, and 50 per cent of the necessary administrative costs incurred by the province.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten).]

In addition it was provided that Canada could, in any one year, lend to a province 75 per cent of the amount by which indemnities exceeded the total of premiums, reserves and $200,000. This provision was intended to protect the provinces from being financially crippled, in the event of widespread disaster to crops, particularly in the early years of operations before adequate reserves were accumulated. But some have indicated they do not consider this protection adequate or in a satisfactory form.

It is of course a requirement of the agreements with the provinces that the premium rates be actuarially sound, and that over a period of years, based on long term experience, the income from premiums will equal the payout through indemnities. Crop insurance however differs from many other types of insurance. Life insurance companies can with a considerable degree of accuracy predict the number of people in any age group who will die in any year. Other insurance operations are based on data which gives a reasonable forecast of losses in any year. It is difficult, if not impossible, to determine the exact incidence of crop failure. Crop insurance premiums are based on crop yield statistics for a long period of time. In Manitoba the period for cereal grains, for instance, is 35 years. Premiums are expected over that number of years to equal the amount of indemnities paid.

In the meantime, obviously any serious crop disasters could require insurance pay-outs greatly in excess of premium intake and reserves. There is however no way by which the extent of crop failure in any year can be forecast.

This government, on taking office and examining the existing crop insurance program, recognized that the provinces with the longest experience in this field were reluctant to expand their insurance programs, and for good reason. Had they expanded their coverage to the significant percentage of farms necessary for a useful program, the impact of widespread crop failure before insurance reserves have accumulated could have had a very serious effect on their financial position.

The government recognized that even under the present provision of the act for federal loans in case of disaster, the loans necessary to pay indemnities in one or more disaster years would have a detrimental effect on a province's borrowing powers for other essential government purposes. These provinces even before present agreements were signed requested that some provision be made for reinsurance by the federal government of part of the provincial crop insurance risks.

In February of this year a conference with provincial officials was held in Ottawa at which the whole matter of reinsurance was discussed and several proposals were considered. Basically all proposals suggested that a province should be able to pay an annual premium to the federal government for protection against crop disasters.

In return for an annual premium which will be calculated to be actuarially sound as a reinsurance premium, the federal government will undertake to pay about 75 per cent of crop disaster insurance payments in any one year.

We are not suggesting that the federal government assume any of the provincial responsibility for crop insurance. But the federal government is prepared through the reinsurance arrangement proposed in this legislation to provide a way for spreading the financial impact of disaster years which may occur from time to time over a period of years.

In other words the federal government would act as a backstop for provincial crop insurance programs if crop losses hit disastrous levels. The government is convinced of the value of crop insurance and the need for the protection of farm operating capital which it provides. This will not in any way affect premiums farmers have to pay and will make crop insurance available to many more of them. I might point out that under the scheme as it now exists the federal government pays 20 per cent of farmers' premiums. This means that for every 80 cents the farmer puts in he gets a dollar's worth of insurance in the event of a crop loss. Perhaps I should also remind hon. members that crop insurance is designed to return the insured farmer his cost of production.

Because the government believes in the importance of crop insurance to farmers' security, it wants to give every encouragement to the provinces in making crop insurance available to the greatest possible number of producers. But again, I should probably point out that this is not a subsidy program. It is intended over a period of years to be virtually self-sustaining.

The proposed amendments in accordance with the wishes of the provinces will provide a new choice of disaster protection for provincial schemes. As an alternative to the present loan feature of the act the federal government would be able to enter into an agreement with any province operating an approved crop insurance scheme to reinsure a portion of the provincial risks involved. Provinces will thus have a choice of operating under the present loan arrangement or under a reinsurance agreement for which the province would pay an annual premium to the federal government.

The proposed amendments developed out of consultation with the provinces are founded on these basic principles: Reinsurance coverage provided for must be useful and acceptable on a national basis; a reinsurance program should protect provinces against a series of bad years that would result in an impairment of their fiscal position; the reinsurance program should maintain the present general relationship of federal-provincial involvement; the reinsurance program should not be confused with "relief" programs.

In the opinion of the government these objectives can best be accomplished by a three way division of financial responsibility. The first responsibility should fall on the provincial crop insurance agency through its premium receipts and reserves and as is the case with the present legislation, the second level of responsibility should fall on the province, since these are basically provincial programs. The amendments now proposed would provide for this second level of provincial responsibility in this way: Whenever the indemnities to be paid in any year exceeded the aggregate amount of premiums and reserves the province would assume responsibility for an amount equal to 2½ per cent of the total face value of insurance policies in force in that year. But in the case of a series of bad years the amendments also provide that this provincial responsibility shall be limited to an accumulated total at any time the program is in operation of 16⅔ per cent of the total current liability.

The third level of responsibility should then fall jointly on the federal and provincial governments, with federal participation financed from the reinsurance fund. In providing for this third level of responsibility it is proposed that after premiums and reserves plus the 2½ per cent deductible have been used to pay indemnities, any residual amount required shall be provided 75 per cent by the federal government and 25 per cent by the province. These are the essential objectives of this legislation.

There is however another provision which is of some importance to insured farmers. When the Crop Insurance Act was passed in 1959, the minister of agriculture indicated that the lands operated by farmers who purchased crop insurance coverage under a provincial scheme would be excluded from benefits of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and that they would not be required to pay the 1 per cent P.F.A.A. levy on grain sales. However the act in its final form only provided that the initial payment farmers receive at the time of delivery of grain should be exempt from the levy. Interim and final payments made by the wheat board still remained subject to the levy. The reason for this was because of certain administrative problems encountered by the Canadian wheat board. We now feel we have a solution for these problems which will enable us to carry out the original intent of the act to exempt insured farmers from any payment of the levy.

As the house knows, only three provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island—have so far joined in the program, although Alberta and Nova Scotia now have crop insurance legislation on their books. Manitoba has had the most ambitious crop insurance scheme so far. It is expected to cover some 6,200 farmers this year with about $15 million worth of insurance. Some 2,200 farmers have been insured in Saskatchewan and 75 in Prince Edward Island. Altogether that is about 8,500 of the 480,000 farms in all of Canada—not a very substantial proportion.

May I say in conclusion that the government believes this legislation will encourage more provinces to participate and encourage them to offer crop insurance coverage much more widely. This would mean crop insurance becoming available to many more farmers eventually, we hope, in every province thus removing their long-standing fear of being ruined overnight by disasters over which they or anyone else have no control.

By making the crop insurance program more effective with the changes this government proposes, there will be available a most important new stabilizing force, not just in our farm economy but, because of the importance of our farm economy to so many other areas of activity in this country, also in the economy of the country as a whole.

Mr. Jorgenson: These amendments to the crop insurance legislation which was placed on the statute books by the previous government in 1959 are, I feel, a logical development in view of the experience of the government, and of the province of Manitoba in particular in this field. When the legislation was introduced by the hon. member for Calgary North, he indicated that in the light of experience it might be necessary to introduce amendments from time to time so as to improve the act, bring it up to date and enable it to do the job it was intended to do in all circumstances.

I was interested in one comment the minister made. He said he was convinced of the value of crop insurance. We are pleased to know this, because the members of the party to which he belongs were by no means so convinced when they made their comments on the legislation brought forward in 1959. They said, as I recall, that it would be of little value or benefit to anybody and that farmers would not participate in the scheme. However the wisdom of the former government in introducing this legislation, as well as of the Manitoba government in following it up by complementary legislation, has clearly been justified. It has been shown that crop insurance is not only desirable but that it is almost a necessity in these days of high fixed costs and fluctuating yields.

This is not the only example of hon. members opposite being converted to programs initiated by the previous government. I recall the comments they had to make about sales of wheat to China. I remember how they beat around the country telling everyone that these sales were just a flash in the pan—the sort of thing that would not be repeated. I was interested in the remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce some time ago when he said they are looking to China as a continuing market for wheat. I have digressed a little here, Mr. Chairman, but the minister gave us that opportunity a short while ago when he said he wanted to get this farm machinery syndicates bill through, and if we wanted to discuss farm problems generally we could discuss them on this bill. When we were discussing supplementary estimates I remember the minister suggested we should deal with general farm policy on the main estimates; and when we got to the main estimates he suggested we should deal with these matters on the particular items. Then when we reached that stage, the minister wanted us to discuss these questions somewhere else. I suppose that now we are dealing with the crop insurance resolution the minister will suggest that we discuss these matters on next year's estimates.

Mr. Hays: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would hope we can get this crop insurance legislation through for next spring, so it is all right for the hon. member to speak as long as he wishes; but the farm machinery syndicates bill is wanted right away, so I hope we can get it through quickly.

Mr. Jorgenson: I am not sure it is that urgent, Mr. Chairman; the crop is just about off the land and most of the farm machinery that will be required will not be required until next spring. However so far as this legislation is concerned, I think it is of great importance that it be dealt with at the earliest possible opportunity, because in my own province of Manitoba, which is the pioneer in the field of crop insurance, they have been asking for this legislation since 1962 and the government of that day—

Mr. Hays: Nineteen fifty eight.

Mr. Jorgenson: My hon. friend is wrong, Mr. Chairman, because it was in 1962 that there was a formal presentation and request for a reinsurance proposition and there was an amendment to the existing act. We were dealing with it at the time, and I regret to say that there was some opposition to the introduction of this amendment to the crop insurance legislation. The opposition was from treasury board, because they felt it was going to cost the treasury too much money. However, this is certainly far from the truth, because rather than costing the treasury money, I feel this amendment to the legislation is going to save the treasury money.

The minister indicated that this legislation was going to afford the provinces an opportunity to expand their crop insurance program and enable them to get into the business of crop insurance under a more developed program than exists at the present time. I was speaking to the minister of agriculture of the province of Manitoba only yesterday, and he was very happy to learn that this legislation was coming forth, and was anxious that it should be passed as quickly as possible so they could extend their plans in regard to crop insurance to cover about 50 per cent of the farmers in that province for next year.

I sometimes feel that the public generally misunderstands the role of crop insurance in an over-all farm program. Crop insurance by itself is nothing more than a device that levels out yields from year to year. This is a very important function of a farm program. If we are to provide the degree of stability in agriculture that is necessary to maintain income levels that will take care of the high costs of production, this type of program is very necessary. In crop insurance we find one facet of a farm program that deals with the variability of income due to the fluctuation of yield. It is fairly obvious that crop insurance, taken by itself, can have no influence whatsoever on the variation of income due to price variations. Therefore another piece of legislation was introduced by the previous government to take care of that aspect of income variations. That policy was embodied in the provisions of the price stabilization bill, which does provide some degree of stability in prices, preventing the violent fluctuations of prices of agricultural products.

Then again there is a necessity to provide for credit to farmers, and this has been dealt with by the farm credit legislation, the Farm Improvement Loans Act and other items of legislation that deal with farm credit. Another program that was initiated by the previous government in an effort to provide greater stability on farms was a program of accelerated marketing research, a program that I feel is necessary if the increased production that is a result of better research, a better application of the products of research, is to find markets. These four items of the previous government's farm program—which, incidentally, were not too well received by the opposition at that time—have become the mainstay of the agricultural program and have formed the bulwark of the program designed to provide some stability in agricultural prices.

At the present time crop insurance in the province of Manitoba is extended to about 6,000 farmers, as the minister indicated, with a total liability of something like $14 million. At the time the program was initiated, in the 1960-61 crop year, something like 2,500 farmers signed up for the program, with a total liability of $4 million. With the provisions of this amendment to the Crop Insurance Act it is hoped that within the province of Manitoba the total liability next year, covering about 50 per cent of the farmers, will amount to something over $25 million.

We can readily see that with the extent of this coverage the liability assumed by the province is far greater than the resources that a provincial government is capable of bearing in the event of a disastrous crop loss. So the introduction of this legislation is designed to provide that the federal government will assume that liability; not at any loss, I might add, to the federal treasury over the long period, because the premiums being paid by the provinces will be actuarially sound and designed to take care of crop losses over a period of years.

The minister mentioned that the period of research that had gone into the development of the crop insurance program went back 35 years. I think it was based largely on the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. I have always felt that for several reasons the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, although in some respects it might be followed, is not an accurate or reliable guide to follow in the developing and processing of data for crop insurance programs. First of all, in a crop insurance program there will be a number of areas that are engaged in the production of grain at the present time that will not be covered by crop insurance because the premiums, the risk factor, in those particular areas are too high for the farmers to take advantage of crop insurance. Therefore, in my opinion they will seek other forms of production, perhaps other forms of production more remunerative to those particular areas and perhaps more suitable for the type of soil in those regions. Second, Mr. Chairman, the advances that have been made in technology, in farming methods, over the past number of years would tend to minimize the risk factor as opposed to 35 years ago. I am speaking of the extensive use of pesticides, which have minimized crop losses due to insects, which was at one time a source of some difficulty which the farmers had to face in relation to crop yields. The use of insecticides and herbicides has done a great deal to increase production. Fertilizer application and more modern methods of farming have all contributed to higher average yields than was the case even in the 1930's. I think the figure for the average rainfall during the 1959-1964 period was far less than it was during the 1930's; yet the experience particularly of 1961, when the drought situation was considered quite severe in western Canada, shows that the yield for that year was much higher than any of the yields we experienced in the 1930's when the drought was perhaps not quite so severe. I think this can be attributed to the fact that farmers are taking advantage of the more modern methods of farming and are using more fertilizer, pesticides and herbicides. So I think that we can logically expect that the experience over the next few years of the incidence of crop loss will be that it will be lower than it was in the past number of years, and for that reason I think we can look forward with some degree of optimism to the application of crop insurance. Because of the risk factor the premiums will be lower and the cost to the farmer not as great as some people have anticipated.

I have heard many farmers, and indeed speakers in this house suggest that rather than introducing amendments to crop insurance legislation, or even introducing crop insurance legislation itself, we should simply amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and develop that program to replace crop insurance. I should like to draw the attention of the committee to some of the difficulties which might be involved in amending the Prairie Farm Assistance Act to meet today's conditions, and if the variability of income due to crop losses is also to be met.

In 1939 P.F.A.A. was intended as a relief measure, and as such has done I think a creditable job over the years. The difficulty with the Prairie Farm Assistance Act regulations is that the regulations do not apply on an individual basis, and in my opinion it would be a mistake to attempt to make payments on an individual basis under P.F.A.A. unless some effort were made to amend the regulations so as to change the method of payment into the fund. At the present time the levy is imposed on the deliveries of grain to the elevator on the basis of 1 per cent of the value of the grain sold. If the levy were simply increased this would mean that those farmers selling the most grain—who ostensibly would be the farmers who were the most productive and successful—would be paying into the fund a great deal more than those farmers who suffered crop losses year after year. To a large extent it is obvious if one examines the record of P.F.A.A. that the majority of payments made under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act are in specific areas. If one examines these areas a little more carefully he will discover that to a large extent these areas are classed either as marginal or submarginal areas.

Therefore the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, although as I have said a creditable piece of legislation which has done a tremendous job over the years, is diametrically opposed to the attempt today to encourage the proper utilization of the land. We have two acts; we have the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act which is calculated and designed to encourage proper utilization of land, and more recently the ARDA legislation, which is intended to do the same thing. My view and my experience of prairie farm assistance is that it has the opposite effect and a tendency to encourage improper use of land, for the reason that there are two programs here diametrically opposed one to the other. The natural result is, first, confusion in the minds of the farmers, and second, an improper utilization of their resources.

I suggest to the committee that simply making amendments to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, of which there have been many, will not resolve this basic difficulty and take care of the situation I mentioned earlier with regard to the need for larger payments in the event of crop losses. Anyone with experience in farming today knows full well that a payment of $800, which is the maximum payment under P.F.A.A., will do nothing to offset the cost incurred by a farmer whose expenses amount perhaps to $10,000 to $15,000 a year. Something more realistic, something which will take care of the cost involved in production today, is necessary, and I feel that this legislation is the answer. I am glad to see that the minister has chosen this time to introduce this amendment, because in my opinion it is necessary if the provinces are to take advantage of the provisions of the Crop Insurance Act.

I might mention that under P.F.A.A. something like $330 million has been paid out up to the report of last year. At the same time there has been collected and paid in by the farmers themselves, I might add, some $142 million, with the difference of something like $187 million being taken up by the federal treasury. I would venture to suggest that the statistics developed by the crop insurance corporation in the province of Manitoba, as well as by the Department of Agriculture, clearly indicate that if crop insurance had been in effect during that same period of years in Manitoba the amount of money paid into the province under crop insurance would have been considerably less than the amount paid under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, and the benefits to the farmer would have been considerably greater.

Every argument I have attempted to put forward here this afternoon on behalf of crop insurance indicates that the need for this legislation and amendment to this legislation is very great, and we are certainly pleased that the minister has finally introduced this amendment. But in saying that, we hope the government do not take the stand that this particular amendment to the crop insurance legislation is going to be the final word on crop insurance, because it is far from that. Crop insurance, like any other program, must be continuing. It must be continuously examined in the light of existing conditions and amended wherever necessary. As I said earlier, there need be no fear on the part of the government that because it has introduced this legislation there is going to be a great deal more expense incurred by the federal treasury. In my view there will be far less because there are many ad hoc programs now in effect to take care of crop disasters. We had an example of this recently in the Ottawa valley, when the provisions of the feed grain assistance program were implemented to provide assistance to farmers who suffered losses of hay and losses from starving cattle, a fact which was dramatically portrayed in a picture I saw in one of the Ottawa newspapers. I recall that a number of years ago the crops in western Canada were unharvested and remained out all winter and some assistance was provided at that time. Disaster loans have been provided. All of these ad hoc arrangements, which are designed to take care of particular situations arising from time to time, can fully and completely be taken care of under a comprehensive crop insurance program. For this reason, as I said earlier there need be no fear on the part of the government or on the part of anyone in the country that vast sums of money from the federal treasury will be poured into this program, because such is not the case.

The first two provisions of the measure stipulate that the federal government shall pay 20 per cent of the premiums and 50 per cent of the administration costs of the money paid out. This is true, but it is no more than is being done under the provisions of the unemployment insurance fund. In my opinion this is not so costly that the people of Canada cannot assume this responsibility, when you consider the value received for the dollars they put in, when you consider the stability it provides for agriculture and when you consider that agricultural stability provides stability in the economy because farmers are able to purchase the machinery and other things they require, which keeps the factories and the people working in those factories busy.

This was amply demonstrated within the past year. The huge sales of wheat to communist China and Russia and the buoyant market situation have provided a buoyant economy in this country, and I think to a large extent this is a reflection of the ability of the farmers to purchase these items of machinery. Anything that can be done to provide for real stability in agriculture is money well spent, as far as I am concerned.

Again, I do not think it is necessary for us to limit our sights to the provision of crop insurance for crops only. What is wrong with thinking in terms of catch insurance for fishermen? What is wrong with thinking in terms of providing insurance for hay crops as well as potato, other vegetable and tobacco crops? All these crops can be profitably insured and provide the degree of stability which, as I said earlier, is so necessary today to meet the high costs of production.

In my own province of Manitoba the crop insurance corporation has provided for the efficient farmer, the farmer who is farming his land in the best possible manner, the opportunity to get his insurance somewhat cheaper. This is based on the same principle as ordinary insurance. Where the risk factor is smaller the premiums are smaller. The result is better farming methods, which the government simply must encourage, and a lower cost to the farmer for insuring his crop. In addition, it is consistent with our aim of maximizing the efficient use of all our resources, human, financial and land.

In conclusion I should like to read the last paragraph of a statement made by the minister of agriculture of the province of Manitoba, Hon. George Hutton, to the federal-provincial conference on agriculture held in Ottawa in 1962. I think this is something that will give us some food for thought when we are considering this legislation.

He said:

> We think that there is one question that should be squarely faced—should governments sit back and be forced by circumstances into programs which may be mediocre or poorly planned or do governments have some responsibility to sell a program of value to the farm community?

This is certainly my opinion so far as crop insurance is concerned. I am somewhat distressed by the reluctance of some provincial governments to participate more fully in a crop insurance program.

> For generations the threat of crop loss due to natural disaster has hung like a cloud over the farmer of Canada, especially in the west. We know that the loss of production has been the most significant factor in years of low income to farmers and the largest contributing factor to instability in farm income. I think that if you will study the principles of crop insurance you will find an application to your province. You will find that there is a planned approach to this whole question of assistance at times of crop disaster. The farmers are ready; the farmers are willing. We should be too.

I think this sums up my attitude with respect to this legislation, and again I should like to thank the minister for introducing it at this time.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the members of this party have always been strong supporters of the idea of crop insurance. As far back as 30 years ago we placed in our program crop insurance and unemployment insurance as two of the methods of protecting people against a disastrous decline in income. We advocated at that time that there should be unemployment insurance for those who, through no fault of their own, were thrown out of work and that at the same time there ought to be crop insurance for those farmers who, also through no fault of their own, were deprived of their normal livelihood. We campaigned very hard for that during the 1930's and for that reason we welcomed the Prairie Farm Assistance Act when it was introduced in 1939, and we supported that measure.

I have always looked upon the P.F.A.A. as really being the farmers' equivalent of unemployment insurance. While it is true, as the previous speaker said, that the government of Canada has had to subsidize P.F.A.A., it is equally true of course that the unemployment insurance fund is subsidized, since its revenue is made up of a three way split, contributions by the employee, employer and the government of Canada. Therefore I do not think that prairie farmers need to apologize at any time for the fact that the 1 per cent levy on their grain which they contribute to the fund has not been sufficient to cover the cost, with the result that over the period of years since 1939 very considerable contributions from the federal treasury have been required.

I am one of those who felt that the P.F.A.A. legislation could be revamped and extended into a genuine national crop insurance plan. I agree completely with the last speaker that it would have to be almost entirely revamped and reorganized in order to make the P.F.A.A. system applicable across Canada and applicable to all the different types of farmers on an equitable basis. I think this could have been done, however. To do this it would have been necessary to divide the country into regions and each province into regions. I think the levy would have to vary from district to district according to the productivity of that area so that the levy would be higher in high risk areas and lower in the good crop communities.

I also think, as he does, that to have extended P.F.A.A. and make it a national crop insurance plan it would have been necessary to insure farmers on an individual basis. But that is not as difficult now as it would have been 25 years ago because the farmer has his permit book from the Canadian wheat board, he has to register how many acres he is sowing to different kinds of crops and the government has a record of every bushel he delivers to the elevator. Therefore it would not be as difficult now as it would have been 25 years ago to pay benefits from a national crop insurance plan on an individual basis.

The problem of the farmer who stays on land which should be taken out of production would be met to a very large extent by varying the levy according to the area and according to the production record. It would also have been necessary to extend the benefits of a national crop insurance plan organized on the P.F.A.A. pattern to cover crops other than cereal grains. I think this might have been done. I was very sorry at the time it was not done because I think P.F.A.A. had caught the imagination of the farmers. It had demonstrated its worth as a stabilizing factor in farm income.

I still think, had it been extended into a national crop insurance plan the farmers would have accepted it. It would still have been possible to take advantage of that and to have had crop insurance either run by private insurance companies or by municipal hail insurance groups, or by provincial governments to provide additional crop insurance if the farmers wanted it. I think a national crop insurance plan that would have provided a minimum guaranteed return to every farmer in the event of a crop failure would have been accepted and would have been extremely beneficial. I have always regretted that this step was not taken.

Instead, in 1959 the Crop Insurance Act which it is now proposed to amend was brought into effect. I think all members will agree that it has not been an outstanding success in terms of the extent to which farmers have availed themselves of it. Only three provinces have entered into agreements with the federal government. In the case of Prince Edward Island only 75 farmers, I think, come under the plan, so one can virtually rule them out and say that really there are only two provinces, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, that have made any extensive use of this plan. Now, a national crop insurance plan that covers in all of Canada only about 6,000 farmers out of 400,000 farmers is a long way from a national crop insurance program.

There is no doubt in my mind as to why there has not been greater acceptance of this plan. The crop insurance plan that was introduced in 1959 transferred from the federal government to the provincial governments what had been solely a federal responsibility. It laid upon provincial governments a responsibility which they could not possibly discharge if that plan went beyond a merely pilot project stage. Up until 1959, the entire cost of operating crop insurance that we had under P.F.A.A. was met either from the 1 per cent levy which a farmer paid on his deliveries of grain, or from the federal treasury. But when crop insurance was introduced the provincial governments, that had up until that time no financial responsibility whatever, found that they were to be called upon to pay, first of all, 50 per cent of the administrative costs; second; since the federal government was paying 20 per cent of the premium costs the provinces were expected to match this, so the provinces were now called upon to pay 20 per cent of the premium costs. These two items, if the plan were to have very widespread acceptance, could amount to a considerable sum of money.

However, I do not believe that was the main reason the provinces were cautious and reluctant about entering into crop insurance. What really frightened the provinces was the fact that under the crop insurance legislation they were underwriting the entire cost of a large scale crop failure. Under the act as it now stands, in the event of a crop failure if the reimbursements exceed the amount of the premiums which have been collected and the reserves which have been built up, the provinces must pay the first $200,000. They may then borrow from the federal government 75 per cent of the balance. What does this mean? It means that in addition to the provinces paying 50 per cent of the administrative costs and 20 per cent of the premiums they could, in the case of a severe crop failure, be called upon to pay $200,000 plus 25 per cent of the balance of the cost of the crop failure, and accept as a contingent liability the other 75 per cent.

As long as the crop insurance plan is on such a very small scale as it has been in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, this has not been a serious problem. However, every member here knows that if we had any of the catastrophic crop failures such as we have had in some parts of Canada, particularly the prairies, if we had a drought, frost or an infestation of grasshoppers or a severe rust epidemic which took out an entire crop—and this has happened in the past—the amount for which the provincial government could find itself responsible might be in the tens of millions or even hundreds of millions of dollars, if the plan covered every farmer in the province. This is why the provinces have been extremely wary about rushing into a crop insurance agreement with the federal government or to sign up farmers on a very large scale. I must say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not believe we will ever have a national crop insurance plan unless the federal government is prepared to accept a much larger share of the financial responsibility than they are doing under the present legislation.

It is true that in the legislation which the minister is now bringing down this burden is ameliorated somewhat. There is to be some provision for reinsurance and some additional assistance by the federal government if the provinces get into financial difficulty. I do not want to discuss the details of that until we have had a chance to look at the bill itself. The point I want to make is that even the provisions which are outlined now by the minister are not sufficiently generous to make it possible for the provinces, with any degree of enthusiasm, to enter into a crop insurance arrangement. Unless the federal government is prepared to assume by far the major portion of the financial responsibility and leave to the provinces mainly the administration and a very small financial contribution, we are not going to have crop insurance on a nation-wide basis.

This crop insurance plan we have at the moment is simply a pilot project. It will be useful in the future to farmers who have availed themselves of it. It will be useful to the government in that it will enable them to gather statistics, to work out techniques, by which crop insurance may be improved and extended. If the minister wants to do something for the farmers he had better start working on a national crop insurance plan, and if he wants such a plan to be accepted, then he must either make it a national plan, operated by the government of Canada, similar to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, or if he wants to decentralize he must be prepared to offer the provinces much more generous terms than those contained in the present act, or those forecast in the legislation he proposes to bring down.

Mr. Olson: In the few minutes left before we rise I would like to say that the resolution before us is a step in the right direction toward a national, comprehensive crop insurance scheme, but in my view it is a very limited step.

I must draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that there seems to be a great degree of unanimity between the Conservative party, the New Democratic party and the Social Credit party with respect to some of the lessons we have learned over the years regarding crop insurance, and particularly the provisions of P.F.A.A. As has been pointed out a number of times today, this legislation requires complementary legislation to be passed by the provincial legislatures before it has effect in any of the provinces.

It has been pointed out that for a number of years there have been pilot projects in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and that these projects have not been completely satisfactory. We also know that Prince Edward Island has very timidly moved into this field, and that during the past session the Alberta provincial legislature considered legislation to set up a crop insurance program. Up to the present time these programs have not been too successful, but on the other hand we have had 25 years experience evolving a satisfactory crop insurance scheme within P.F.A.A. for most of the prairies. It would be unfortunate if we were to try to sidestep all of the experience and practice that has come from that operation.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable house attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

An act respecting the Guarantee Company of North America.

An act to incorporate Congregation of the Marist Sisters.

An act to incorporate Meota Pipe Lines Ltd.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, September 17, 1964

The house met at 2 p.m.

CANADIAN FLAG

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's) presented the first report of the special committee on the Canadian flag, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLUMBIA RIVER—TABLING OF ACCORD ON RATIFICATION OF TREATY

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table an accord signed yesterday at the international peace arch by the Prime Minister of Canada and the premier and president of the executive council for British Columbia, with regard to the ratification of the Columbia river treaty and the coming into force of the protocol to that treaty.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INCLUSION OF MENTAL PATIENTS UNDER HOSPITALIZATION PROVISIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Acting Prime Minister can give an answer in this regard, but I should like to ask him if the government is now negotiating with the provinces with a view to bringing into effect a plan whereby mental patients will be included under the hospitalization scheme.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I wonder if I may take that question as notice and bring it to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who today is engaged on official business outside the house.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORAD—REPORTED STATEMENT BY DEFENCE RESEARCH BOARD CHIEF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the hon. gentleman's attention been drawn to a statement by Dr. R. J. Sutherland, chief of operational research for the defence research board and one of the principal military advisers to the Minister of National Defence, who is quoted as saying, "It is beyond question that within the total spectrum of the western military programs the importance of North American air defence has diminished". Mr. Sutherland is also quoted as saying that the ballistic missile has relieved the problem of the extreme vulnerability of the strategic deterrent forces.

In view of the fact that this vindicates the position taken by this party, I should like to ask the minister whether the government now intends to begin negotiation with the government of the United States to discontinue the maintenance of Bomarc nuclear missile bases on Canadian soil.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I did read the statement. I will ask my colleague the Minister of National Defence whether he cares to comment on it. Perhaps he wishes to study it further.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I do not think the conclusion reached by the hon. gentleman can legitimately be drawn from the text of Mr. Sutherland's statement. If he would look at it closely I think he would find that with respect to the requirement for continuation of North American air defence it reflects fairly closely the view contained in the white paper tabled in March.

Mr. Douglas: Perhaps I could ask the Acting Prime Minister this. In view of the fact that during the last election the Liberal party which the government represents spoke of negotiating itself out of a nuclear role, and in view of this statement by Dr. Sutherland that the importance of the North American air defence role is greatly diminished, when does the government intend to begin negotiating Canada out of a nuclear role in NORAD?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Without agreeing with the premise stated by the hon. gentleman, I would remind him that I dealt with this question some time ago in answer to an inquiry addressed to me by one of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I forget the exact date. Perhaps the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and I could get together and look at that reply.

Mr. Churchill: There was nothing in that answer.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government has concluded that the NORAD plan is becoming obsolete. Was this a leak which was deliberately provided to ensure that a foundation is laid for setting aside NORAD?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There would be no basis for such a conclusion. Mr. Sutherland noted in his statement, which was widely reported today, that he was speaking only for himself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the government given any consideration to the elimination of NORAD, by agreement with the United States? Is anything being done at this time to achieve that end?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have just said that nothing of that kind is being done. The answer to that question is, of course, no.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is it a fact that the government does not intend to invest funds in any new jet planes which can operate only as interceptors, in view of Mr. Sutherland's private or public posture?

Mr. Hellyer: The general requirements for tactical aircraft have been set out in the white paper and the department has been studying what types of tactical aircraft might be available and what their general capabilities and performance would be.

Mr. Churchill: That is no answer.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the Acting Prime Minister's statement that Mr. Sutherland was speaking for himself, could the Minister of National Defence say whether the speech was delivered with the minister's knowledge; and if so, did he agree with the content of the speech?

Mr. Hellyer: It was given with my knowledge, but it was on the understanding that Mr. Sutherland would express his own views and would state that this was the case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a most devious explanation.

Mr. Lambert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of National Defence not agree that it is a rather extraordinary position that one of the chief advisers to the minister in military affairs should be allowed to speak on his own account to an organization such as the Atlantic treaty association.

Mr. Hellyer: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Sutherland is the chief of operational research. He does research and provides facts for the consideration of the defence staff and the defence council. He does not give military advice as such. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on an interjection made by the right hon. leader of the operation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: I mean the Leader of the Opposition, but that was right; "operation muzzle". He said this was a devious operation. I can recall that when he was prime minister of this country he refused to let anyone associated with the Department of National Defence speak out for fear they would say something which would cause some embarrassment to his government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon, gentleman this question. Did he look over the speech in advance? Did he make any alterations or suggestions? What manner of system is this, when a minister sees what is going to be said and allows it to be advanced? Is this the new policy of the Department of National Defence?

Mr. Hellyer: The system was set out in the bill of rights, that there are some rights in this country to express opinions freely, and no censorship.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I should be allowed to say that the bill of rights, that was ridiculed by these people, now becomes the keystone to them. I am glad the hon.

gentleman has learned that the bill of rights means something. I ask the hon. gentleman, did he peruse this speech in advance? Did he make any suggestions? I ask him to answer carefully, because the facts are known.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did he make any suggestions as to change?

Mr. Hellyer: He made no suggestions, Mr. Speaker. And may I reiterate that a bill of rights must be upheld in practice if it is to have real meaning. I believe in the bill of rights; I believe in free expression of opinion. For that reason I could see no reason why Mr. Sutherland should not be allowed to address the organization and express his views freely.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. gentleman, after that high minded declaration, why then did he have a perusal in advance? Was it to see whether what was going to be said was in his favour?

Mr. Hellyer: It was so I would be able to answer the right hon. gentleman's questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of National Defence has established that Mr. Sutherland expressed his own views. I would like to ask the minister whether he disagrees with Mr. Sutherland's views, particularly when Mr. Sutherland says that the primary purpose of the North American air defence system is not the defence of North America?

Mr. Hellyer: I would not want to take complete responsibility for what he said. I find that in public life one carries a sufficient yoke if one accepts responsibility for one's own utterances.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am not asking the minister to accept responsibility; I am asking him whether he agrees with this very important military thesis expounded by someone in his department in a speech which the minister himself saw before it was made. I am asking the minister whether he agrees with it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No answer.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it is in fashion to ask the ministers to comment on speeches, I would like to ask this question. Does the minister agree with the statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra—who incidentally is a member of the defence committee—in an address recently before the Vancouver Rotary club, when he said that the defence department is the "Kremlin of Canadian bureaucracy"?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was nice enough to send me a copy of the question he proposed to ask. I must say that in my opinion the question is completely out of order on at least two grounds. First of all, he is asking for an opinion from the minister on a statement made outside the house by a private member; and second, under the rules given me, questions should not inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are correct.

Mr. Herridge: Then may I rephrase my question. Does the minister believe that the defence department is the Kremlin of Canadian bureaucracy

Mr. Hellyer: I would say yes, Mr. Speaker, if it is understood that the definition of "Kremlin" is a depository for hard working and devoted servants of the nation.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder whether the minister would not like to make a slight correction to his earlier answer to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, who questioned the minister with regard to negotiating out of our nuclear role. The minister referred the hon. member to an answer he had given me in the house earlier this session, which may be found at pages 6759 and 6760 of Hansard. Perhaps the minister would now like to tell the house that he did not give me an answer to that question. His words were lengthy, but he said he would be glad to take the question as notice. Having taken it as notice on August 13, I am still waiting for an answer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of my hon. friend's question.

ARMAMENT OF EUROPEAN AIR DIVISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday in the course of answering a question I put to him he informed me that the CF-104 Starfighters, of which there are six squadrons in Germany, have a primary strike role, and that two squadrons in France have a primary role in reconnaissance. I wonder if there is any other reason than that of present government policy for retaining these two squadrons in a reconnaissance role, any reason other than the explanation given thereafter by the minister? Further in regard to the same question, he concluded by saying:

—we have certain administrative requirements in order to fulfil our commitment.

Could he enlarge on what those administrative requirements are?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is the time to get involved in a debate on national defence. I would be quite glad at the appropriate time, perhaps when the estimates of the department are being considered, to enlarge on this subject; but as my hon. friend very well knows, the commitment undertaken by the government of which he was a supporter was in the strike reconnaissance role. Perhaps it was unfortunate this term was used in the first instance, because it meant airplanes would be equipped for the strike role and other airplanes for the reconnaissance role.

The original plan was to have some reconnaissance planes in each squadron with the strike aircraft, but unfortunately special ammunition storage was not possible in France, and in order to alleviate this problem the squadrons were regrouped; all reconnaissance aircraft were put in two squadrons, and all strike aircraft were put in six squadrons. As I have already explained to the house, this was the best solution under the circumstances.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the failure of the Minister of National Defence to make the air division in Europe an effective fighting force does not limit the effectiveness of the minister's statements concerning agreements with our NATO allies?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows perfectly well that that question has no justifiable foundation.

Mr. Churchill: Does not the situation disclose a difference of policy between the two departments and the two ministers which surely, in the words of the minister, is not conducive to the development of a strong and respected position for this country in the United Nations and elsewhere in the world?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am of course aware that my hon. friend's questions in this particular area are intended to be provocative—

Mr. Churchill: No; helpful.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —nevertheless, because he has put this question I take advantage of the opportunity to say that one of the achievements of this administration is that there has been a clear appreciation by the Department of National Defence and the Department of External Affairs of their dependence one on the other in the matter of policy. Indeed, the present Minister of National Defence in my judgment deserves a great deal of credit for the recognition that defence policy must be consistent with foreign policy. This is one of the cardinal principles of the white paper.

I do not like to make disparaging remarks about former administrations, but I have a suspicion that, following what I have just said, it will be recognized that there is a great difference between the co-operation existing now between the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs as compared with the lack of co-operation between these ministries in the former government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a further supplementary question. Is there not a definite and obvious lack of co-operation between the two ministers now with regard to our air division in Europe, which is ineffective and which fails to live up to our obligations to the NATO military organization?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I wish, in a very kindly way, to tell the hon. gentleman that there is no lack of co-operation between the Minister of National Defence and myself on this matter. The lack of co-operation in this instance is between the hon. gentleman and myself.

REDUCTION IN UNIVERSITY NAVAL TRAINING UNITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Considering the fact that two thirds of the Canadian navy is based on the Atlantic coast, in the closing of eight Royal Canadian Navy university training units how can the minister justify the fact that four of them should be located in the maritime area, namely one in Prince Edward Island, one in New Brunswick and two in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): As I explained yesterday, the closing of the university training units was related not to the permanent navy but to the naval reserve and the availability of naval reserve units to absorb the officer output from the universities. I am sure the hon. member will be pleased to know that commencing a year from now, when the new integrated units are established at the universites, it will be possible to take entrants from each of the armed forces because the facilities will be available, as a result of the reduced overhead costs which can be achieved through the integration of the units from three or two into a single unit.

Mr. MacInnis: Possibly the minister, on re-examination of this particular problem, would find that the very argument he put forward in defence of his stand would work to the benefit of the maritime universities—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. MacInnis: And in these circumstances there should be reconsideration of the government's decision which means that 50 per cent of the closings are to be made right in the centre of the naval bases.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MONTREAL—BENEFITS TO STRIKING NEWSPAPER EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I intended to ask the Minister of Labour a question, but seeing that he is absent and considering the importance of the yuestion I shall put it to the Acting Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to get in touch with the unemployment office in Montreal so that the employees of the newspaper La Presse, who are without work because part of the staff is on strike, may receive unemployment insurance benefits?

Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Acting Prime Minister expected me to ask that question, but I find he just woke up. Of course, so soon after a meal—

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I was watching the Leader of the Opposition.

Would the hon. member be kind enough to repeat his question?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition may be peculiar enough to watch, but my question was important and for the information of the Acting Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, I will repeat it.

Does the government intend to get in touch with the unemployment insurance office in Montreal so that the employees of the newspaper La Presse, who are out of work because part of the staff is on strike can draw the unemployment insurance benefits they are entitled to?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for asking his question. I shall bring it to the attention of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Acting Prime Minister also call the attention of the Minister of Labour to the fact that a similar situation was dealt with in Toronto after the strike was on for only three weeks, while in Montreal, after three months and a half, no decision has been taken yet?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REVIEW OF CRIMINAL CODE PROVISIONS RESPECTING BAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Justice based on a story in the Globe and Mail this morning concerning a young boy who spent 11 weeks in custody on a rape charge because he could not raise bail, and who was subsequently discharged by a grand jury. The minister will know that this is only one example of our antiquated and backward bail system in Canada. Would the minister undertake a re-examination of the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to bail, with a view to bringing in amendments which will bring bail into line with modern penology and modern thinking?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, may I first say in answer to the question that I have not yet read the item in the Globe and Mail, but I am in a position to say that the question of bail, including that of personal recognizance, is part of the study I am now making of the Criminal Code.

HAL BANKS—DISPOSITION OF BAIL FORFEITED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Paul (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Could the minister tell us whether a request for forfeiture of bail has been introduced in the case of Hal Banks and, should that happen, would the amount of $25,000 fall in the coffers of the federal Department of National Revenue or in those of the provincial department?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think that, as my hon. friend knows, the matter of the disposal of sums of money coming from a forfeiture of bail is essentially a legal matter, which has been under discussion for some time between the provinces and the federal government.

I think that between my departure from the Department of Justice and my return to that same department, an agreement was concluded between the provinces and the federal government, but I am not in a position to give an immediate answer to that question.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us if his department scrutinized all the charges laid against Hal Banks to find one under which he could be extradited from any country?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, as concerns the facts drawn to the attention of the department by any means whatsoever, that must be the policy to follow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEKONG RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs and also to the Minister of Finance. My question is this. In view of the fact that several years ago Canada made a multi-million dollar contribution to the Mekong river development project, and since we have had no report on this project for some time, I believe about two years, would either the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Finance undertake to give the house a report at some appropriate time, such as on motions, within the next week or so?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish my hon. friend had asked this question when the external affairs committee was sitting a few weeks ago, at which time we could have answered in detail. However, I assure my hon. friend we will report at the earliest moment possible under our procedures.

NATO—SPEECH BY MINISTER TO ATLANTIC TREATY ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question which I think will be helpful in the general interest of repairing some of the deterioration affecting Canadian prestige abroad. I base my question on the minister's speech to the Atlantic treaty association on September 15 in which he was sharply critical of our NATO allies. He used this sentence, and I am quoting:

> I believe the time has come to face these problems and honestly deal with them.

The problems referred to affect the fields of strategy, military integration, nuclear control, command structure and cost sharing. Would the minister not think it the part of wisdom to be more careful about his use of language, because his speeches are read with much greater interest abroad than they are at home. Which allies are not facing up to these problems, and which are not dealing with them honestly?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There was no suggestion that any member of the alliance was not dealing with problems having to do with the alliance honestly. The adverb is used there in a different context position which apparently my hon. friend does not completely appreciate. The statement I made was a sound statement, and I may say it had previously been made by my predecessor, Mr. Green.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): I should like to ask the minister if it is fair to conclude from the answer he has given that he was incorrectly quoted by the press?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is only weak minded men who make that statement, and as I do not have a feeling of insecurity, I am not making it.

REQUEST BY CALVIN MACDONALD FOR POLITICAL ASYLUM IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which may sound facetious, but it is not. In view of the extraordinary situation where we have a man named Macdonald, who maintains he has been crucified because he was a secret service operator for the R.C.M.P., and who claims he can no longer get employment because of his communist contacts and contamination; in view of the fact that, as reported in the papers, he has asked for political asylum in the United States; and in view of the fact that his publicity agent threw a quart of beef blood on the floor of this house, may I ask the minister whether there is any understanding, agreement, arrangement or treaty between Canada and the United States respecting political asylum?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Without commenting on the merits of the question, Mr. Speaker, the matter of asylum in international law is not generally covered by treaty but by convention. I do not know how this will help in this particular situation.

[Later:]

Mr. Winch: I hope I am not being nasty, but I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration because I am concerned about the growth of attention to and discussion of this matter involving Macdonald who has received such attention since his publicity agent threw blood on the floor of this house.

I want to ask my question, and I will put it this way. This man made application last week for political asylum in the United States, according to what I read in the press. His application was turned down by the customs and immigration officers in Vancouver. He has now made application for admission to the United States as a landed immigrant, together with his wife. I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether an effort has been made to determine whether this lady is in fact his wife and, if so, the whereabouts of the numerous children which Macdonald had and ignored for three years, only giving their mother $10 during that period, and this only in the last few weeks.

In view of press reports that Macdonald is now applying in Vancouver for permission to enter the United States with his wife as a landed immigrant, can the hon. gentleman tell us where the children are and whether the person seeking admission with Macdonald is indeed his wife? Perhaps I am nasty, but the whole situation is nasty—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

VOLUME OF SHIPMENTS THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister tell us whether he shares the concern expressed by the officials of the Hudson bay route association in regard to the volume of shipments through the port of Churchill so far this season?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the reported remarks of the Hudson bay route association. All I can assure my hon. friend is that the wheat board is making every possible effort to see that that port is used to its maximum extent.

WORLD FAIR

POSSIBLE REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to a question that was asked by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière on September 15. The hon. gentleman directed a question to the right hon. Prime Minister in my absence, concerning the government's intention in relation to the deputy commissioner general of the 1967 world exposition. The inquiry was raised in the light of the judgment recently delivered in an action against the Foundation Company of Canada Limited of which Mr. Robert Shaw was executive vice president.

I am sure that hon. members are aware of the outstanding work done by Mr. Shaw since his appointment to the post of deputy commissioner general of the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition. He has contributed greatly to the satisfactory progress made in the development of this important project, and the government continues to have every confidence in his ability and integrity.

I have asked the commissioner general and the directors of the corporation to give the most careful consideration to the judgment of the court, and to let the Canadian government and the governments of the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal have the benefit of their views, as those having a direct interest in the success of the exposition.

I might add that it is typical of Mr. Shaw's high sense of public responsibility that when he was approached several months ago to accept appointment as deputy commissioner general he drew attention to the pending action against the Foundation Company.

IMMIGRATION

GANDER, NFLD.—DEFECTION OF CUBANS FROM CZECH PLANE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Would the minister confirm or deny a report that 14 Cubans left a Czechoslovakian airliner recently at the international airport at Gander, Newfoundland, making a total of more than 100 who have defected from aircraft there, and after being held by immigration authorities for 24 hours were transferred to immigration department detention quarters at Halifax?

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving notice of this question. The report is substantially correct. Fourteen Cubans left a Czechoslovak airliner at Gander airport on September 5. This brings to over 100 the number of persons who have left aircraft at Gander in this way in the past two years.

No decisions have as yet been made in these 14 cases. In accordance with normal procedure, an immigration hearing is convened in each case in order to obtain full particulars of the individual and his intentions. Some of these people wish to go to other countries, while others seek to remain in Canada. Those wishing to go elsewhere are put in touch with the authorities of the countries concerned. The cases of those seeking to stay in Canada are referred to Ottawa where I have the ultimate responsibility to decide whether to grant landed immigrant status or to allow the individual to stay under the authority of a minister's permit.

Pending final decisions the individuals concerned are accommodated in immigration quarters at Halifax or elsewhere.

BRIDGES

SARNIA, ONT.—REPORTED REIMPOSITION OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport based on a claim this week that tolls have been charged illegally on the Blue Water bridge at Sarnia due to the failure of the bridge authority to file a schedule of tolls with the transport board. Is the minister in a position to say that this is indeed the case, and whether appropriate steps have been taken to correct this very unusual situation?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, of course the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) will realize that the Blue Water bridge authority does not come under the direct jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport. I had heard indirectly something about this matter, and directed that some inquiries be made so that I would be informed, but I have not heard anything that might be called hard information about it yet. What I did hear was that there had been an inadvertent failure to deposit the tariff with the board of transport commissioners, and I imagine, if that was the case, that has already been remedied.

AIR TRANSPORT

SIGHT REQUIREMENTS FOR PRIVATE PILOT'S LICENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and in her absence I would appreciate the parliamentary secretary taking it as notice and replying at the earliest possible opportunity. This question is of national interest.

Has the minister or one of her officials at any time requested a study by the defence research board and the institute of aviation medicine to determine whether people who possess monocular vision may be permitted to exercise the privileges of a private air pilot? If these studies have been made and are available, will the minister table them at the earliest possible opportunity?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): I shall be pleased to do as the hon. member has requested.

SHIPPING

MEASURES TO CONTROL WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a question for the Minister of Transport concerning the water levels of the St. Lawrence and the great lakes. Is there any integrated plan for the solution of the problems that exist, which we on this side feel is possible?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am sure the hon. gentleman, like all members of the house, appreciates the tremendous difficulty of having an integrated plan, having regard to the fact that the great lakes and parts of the St. Lawrence are international waters, and that jurisdiction over many aspects of our waterways is provincial rather than federal. I do believe their has never been a time when a more urgent effort has been made to secure maximum co-ordination among all the agencies concerned.

I am very hopeful that hon. members might see fit, perhaps next week, to agree to a motion in the name of my hon. friend the minister of northern affairs, which has been on the order paper for some time. If this were done the committee could be set up and hon. members would hear in detail from the head of the international joint commission and other public servants just what is being done in this field, about which there is real anxiety in all parts of the country. I feel we must endeavour to do our utmost to see that co-ordinated plans are worked out. Since it is not within the jurisdiction of any one government, it is not possible for any one government to have a plan of its own.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO DELIVERY QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): On September 11 I directed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to when the Canadian wheat board expected to have all points in western Canada on the 1 bushel quota. The minister replied that a member of the wheat board was in Ottawa that day, and I wonder if he has a reply to that question now.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have just received the most up to date information, and I had delayed my reply until it was at hand. At the moment, out of 1,905 shipping points in western Canada only 450 now remain on a unit quota. The balance are either on 1, 2 or 3 bushel quotas. I am advised by the Canadian wheat board they expect all stations will be off the unit quota in the not too distant future, certainly well before the comparable date last year when this did not occur until December 23.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STATEMENT BY QUEBEC MINISTER RESPECTING CO-OPERATIVE FEDERALISM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the question put to the Minister of Justice yesterday by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) concerning a speech on co-operative federalism made by the Quebec minister of natural resources, would the minister tell us today whether he was able to make sure that Mr. Lévesque was not misquoted and could he give us an explanation at this time?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think that my personal attitude on this matter is rather well known, but I feel that the difference in viewpoint or concept either on co-operative federalism or any other political question, between a minister of any provincial government and a minister of the federal government, can hardly be the subject of a discussion in this house.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): On a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, would the minister contact the premier of the province of Quebec in order to know whether or not this Quebec minister was speaking officially for the province of Quebec, because it is most important to know that at this time?

[Text]

TRANSFER OF TAX REVENUES RESPECTING SHARED PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Last Friday I asked the Prime Minister if he could state the amount of money involved by way of transfer of tax revenues from the federal treasury to provincial treasuries in consequence of the letters he wrote to the premiers on August 15. The Prime Minister promised to get this information, and I wonder whether the Minister of Finance has it now.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I do not think I should like to answer this question off the top of my head. As it is so important I wonder whether the hon. member would allow me to answer it on Monday; I shall not be here tomorrow.

Mr. Douglas: I understood the Prime Minister to say the information had been prepared.

Mr. Gordon: I am sure the Prime Minister did take notice of the question. But I was away, and he is away, and probably we did not get together on it.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—REPORTED LIMIT ON AMOUNT AVAILABLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. I understand there is a limit on the amount of loans available to students in Ottawa and other areas. As a matter of fact I believe the limit here is some $400,000, which means that only 400 students will be able to obtain the maximum loan of $1,000. Will the minister consider asking that the amount available be increased so that all needy students will be able to take advantage of this important legislation?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend has got mixed up in his zeros. The limit is $40 million.

Mr. Bigg: I only have this complaint made locally, but I understand there are 625 students here wishing to take advantage of the loans, and that only 400 will be accepted unless there is an enlargement of the limit.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, the limits are set provincially. If there were any limits suggested locally within provincial boundaries, that has been done by the provincial government and is outside my jurisdiction.

Mr. Bigg: If this situation does exist will the minister take it under advisement?

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Gordon: I shall be glad to look into it, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I might say that the total amount of money provided under the legislation is $40 million for the first year, so it is inconceivable that any students in Canada who want to take advantage of this legislation should be prevented from doing so.

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Has the minister received representations from the Canadian union of students requesting a supreme court ruling or a test case on the Canada Student Loans Act? If so, what has been his reply?

Mr. Gordon: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I shall be glad to inquire.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): As a further supplementary question would the minister table or make available the different quotas for each of the provinces; because in spite of what he has said, in the case of New Brunswick they are already limiting applications to certain institutions?

Mr. Gordon: I shall be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker. It was made public, I think, during the course of the debate on second reading, but I shall look into it and I shall be glad either to table the quotas or answer the question on orders of the day on Monday.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister of Finance tell us if the Quebec government asked for the money it is entitled to get under that program, in order to set up in the province of Quebec a system similar to the one existing in the nine other provinces?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: The province of Quebec have their own program, which is a very comprehensive one, and they do not need to make any formal claim for compensation under the act. That is provided for in the act which was passed by this house, and they will receive the amount provided in the normal course.

STUDENT LOANS—DESIGNATION OF CREDIT UNIONS UNDER ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I was about to ask the Minister of Finance a question, but apparently he has disappeared from the scene temporarily. Actually it is a question which, had time permitted, I would have addressed to the hon. gentleman yesterday.

It arises out of the reference he made to the relationship between the credit unions and the new student loans act. Perhaps this could be another question for the minister to answer on Monday; he has indicated he will answer several others.

I should like to ask him whether he has received any representations from the credit union league of British Columbia with respect to the omission from all the publicity in connection with this new student loans plan of any reference to the inclusion of credit unions. If so, what steps is the minister prepared to take to rectify this omission? My own observations confirm that there has been such an omission. It is not widely known that the term "bank" in the relevant section includes credit unions. Perhaps the minister would answer this question on Monday.

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The Minister of Finance has been called from the house. I will take the hon. member's question as notice and draw it to the attention of the minister later today.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

REFUSAL OF CERTIFICATES TO PROFESSED ATHEISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is the minister aware of a recent case in which citizenship was refused because the couple involved were atheists and could not take the oath "so help me God"? If so, is this consistent with the bill of rights with regard to freedom of religion, and will the minister look into this and report to the house?

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I am not aware of this case, Mr. Speaker. I shall inquire and report later to the house.

WATER RESOURCES

STATEMENTS BY NORTHERN AFFAIRS MINISTER AND MEMBER FOR COAST-CAPILANO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister on a subject upon which I have asked previous questions of great importance, namely government policy with respect to our water resources. In view of the great and vivid difference between statements made in this house by the minister of northern affairs with regard to water policy and the speech made by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano in Prince George recently, can the Acting Prime Minister inform the house which of them is stating government policy?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Of course one of the statements was made by a member of the government. I do not know whether they are available or not, but in any event I would want to look at the original sources before making any comment.

INDUSTRY

IMPROVEMENT OF INCENTIVES TO ASSIST DEPRESSED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Are investigations being carried out by officials of the Department of Finance or the Department of Trade and Commerce at the present time to try to make tax incentives for the attraction of industries to depressed areas more effective than they are at present?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Officials of the Department of Finance are always engaged in studies to see whether they can make these incentives or any other incentives more effective. I have nothing further to add on this subject at this time. If and when there is an announcement of government policy to be made it will be made at the appropriate time.

Mr. Coates: A supplementary question. Have the recommendations of Professor Wilson to the governments of the Atlantic provinces been given serious consideration?

Mr. Gordon: I have a copy of Professor Wilson's report. It is being studied, and certainly it will be taken into consideration.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLOCATION OF FREE TIME TO POLITICAL PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. My question relates to one I put to the Prime Minister on Monday of this week concerning the possibility of time being made available on the C.B.C. for the leaders of the three smaller parties in view of the time given recently to the leaders of the two larger parties. No answer has yet been forthcoming, and I wonder whether one could be made soon. I have in mind that the leaders of the smaller parties might well speak on television without touching the question of the flag.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman will remember that his leader, for whom we all have great affection, suggested yesterday that we ought to have a moratorium on this subject. Nevertheless I shall be glad to see that the Prime Minister has his attention directed to this question. He will be back late tonight. He has been away, you know, on important public business in British Columbia.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the Acting Prime Minister that I was not asking for time for the three leaders to discuss the flag. I am sure they do not wish to do that. I am asking for fairness in the matter of time allotted over the C.B.C. television network.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The attention of the Prime Minister will be drawn to this.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

1. Departmental administration (including the former vote for the operation and maintenance of official railway cars), $3,773,800.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister will be making a statement on this item.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, some time before the day was over to make a statement which would incorporate whatever replies I could make to the observations of hon. members. In that way I would be sure to talk about the things members were interested in, and not just things that I was interested in.

Mr. Balcer: I know the committee will be disappointed, Mr. Chairman, because of course when the minister speaks he is always interesting, and everything he talks about is always of the utmost interest to all members of this house. But unfortunately for the committee, we shall have to wait.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks at the very outset of the consideration of the Department of Transport's estimates. I am very pleased that we should be examining these estimates, since the present minister has been in function for quite some time.

Having had the privilege of being minister of transport, I must say that I consider it the most interesting department in the whole federal administration. There has often been talk of dividing it, but I am convinced that the present minister would be very disappointed if such a decision was made.

[Text]

The Chairman: Order. May I bring to the attention of hon. members that it is very noisy and difficult for the Chair to follow the remarks of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Balcer: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I am of the opinion that it is possible at the present time to run the Department of Transport without dividing it. But, and this is a personal opinion, I believe that it would make sense to take the management of the civil aviation division away from the Department of Transport. However, we must wait for the decision of the government before making any comment in that regard.

Mr. Chairman, the day after his swearing in, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) made a great play about a plan to give Canada, at long last, a national policy with regard to civil aviation. Everyone was very interested to learn that the minister was undertaking such a large scale project. Though couched in a rather mysterious language, the plan had roused everyone's attention.

Yet, for the information of those who followed the work accomplished within the Department of Transport in matters of civil aviation, I must say that since then, we had cause for wondering what the minister meant by "national civil aviation policy". We also have every reason to wonder why the minister reversed his decision. Could it be that he has abandoned that project he had announced with such fanfare? Indeed, as far as our two large international air lines are concerned, that is, Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines, the only achievement in that direction we were able to see to date was the meetings of the two presidents at the minister's suggestion.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that the minister told the presidents of those two companies: "Now be good boys and try and get along together. Make an effort to see each other more often. There is really no problem; try to agree. Take your time, and we shall see how things stand later".

That is about all the national civil aviation policy that applies to those two large international lines.

At the time when the minister announced this new national civil aviation policy, the papers speculated quite a bit and wondered whether the minister meant that those two great lines would amalgamate, or whether Canada would decide to have one single large international service for all our international airways. The matter still comes up from time to time in the papers. We see some efforts being made in one direction or other, and I think that the house would be interested to know the present situation, because it is about time to put a stop to those rumours. Clearing up the matter in that way would give a certain peace of mind to the employees of those two companies, while allowing the directors of the two great international lines to progress and make plans for the years to come.

There is no doubt that during the last months, the two big international air lines have had very good financial results and that they are still bringing the name of Canada to the fore in the field of international air transport.

About the same time, the minister also announced great and mysterious plans concerning local air lines. There again, we have seen, as yet, no concrete results. As a matter of fact, newspapers reported that the minister had given to understand that the big air lines would probably have to give up some of their air routes for the benefit of local carriers.

For my part, I have not yet seen a single result of that project. If there have been any, I feel the minister should tell the house about them. There is no doubt that, when he made his statement, everyone interested in civil aviation in Canada saw in it the announcement of a new policy and then eagerly awaited the results.

Now, I recall that when I was minister of transport the opposition of the day was most critical of Canada's position, as compared to that of the United States, with regard to the bilateral agreements on civil aviation between our two countries.

I must confess that, in my capacity as minister, I was in no way satisfied with the situation. Our big air lines were undoubtedly quite right in insisting that the government make representations to the United States government, in order to improve the unfavourable position in which our two air lines found themselves compared to the American air lines.

Those bilateral agreements had been made by the previous government. We had to put up with those agreements and when we were in office, we made representations time and again to the American authorities on this matter.

I remember that during the last election campaign, the Liberal party said that if they were in office, they would settle the matter quickly and to the benefit of our air lines. Of course, there were meetings between our Canadian experts and the American experts, following a report to the President of the United States by Mr. Galbraith, the economist of international reputation. But up to the present, those discussions between our two countries have been unfruitful and we do not see what happy effects they might have for Canada.

I hope that during this debate the Minister of Transport will be able to report on this matter and announce certain progress, because it is very painful to see the position of both our great air lines as compared with the American companies.

When he answers those various questions, I would like the minister to give us his viewpoint with respect to the statement of the president of Air Canada the last time he appeared before the committee of the house, which goes into the financial report of that company.

The president of Air Canada actually stated that one of the reasons why he has always been in favour of a single international air line for Canada is the fact that to have two big lines in Canada placed our country in an inferiority position each time bilateral agreements have to be discussed with other nations. He gave as an example the discussions which were under way at that time between the United States and Canada.

To my mind that was an extremely important statement, and I believe the minister should tell us if the fact that we have two air lines in Canada is endangering our position.

According to my information, which is unofficial of course, the representatives of both air lines, who are in Washington as observers, seem to get along fine at those talks. Therefore, I think the president of Air Canada has exaggerated the facts.

I think there ought to be an agreement between the two air lines, just as there are agreements between our two national railways.

It is absolutely ridiculous to think that we are not taking advantage of our rights.

For instance, Canada has the right to carry passengers, by virtue of what is called the five freedoms, between Paris and Rome. That is a route of very heavy traffic and all large carriers in the world make tremendous profits from it. But because of the relationship between our two main air lines, neither one is using that route which we are entitled to use.

You only have to imagine, for instance, the number of people who travel between Paris and Rome on the occasion of imposing ceremonies and large meetings like the ecumenical council in Rome. On that occasion, a great number of Canadian clergy go to Rome via Paris where they have to transfer to European carriers. It is so much income lost to Canadian air lines.

There is something else which could be to the advantage of our country. For instance, at this time, one of our two air lines has a flight to Tokyo and Hong Kong. If there could be an agreement between our two large carriers concerning the route between New York and Toronto, we could advertise, in New York, that the shortest route between New York and Tokyo is the one used by Canadian air lines that can fly north through Toronto, Vancouver, Alaska and land in Japan. But we are deprived of this advantage precisely because of the failure to agree between our two large air lines.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to labour the point too long, but I must say that I am very anxious to hear what the minister will have to say.

While we are discussing the estimates of the Department of Transport, I should like to raise a point which has already been mentioned many times in the house in the form of questions on the orders of the day.

I am thinking of the passenger service between airports and cities. In my opinion, the problem is most serious and I am not blaming the present government more than any other, but I feel that the public is now at a great disadvantage. We have reached a point where the companies which transport passengers between the airports and the cities charge so much that their fares are very often more expensive than plane fares.

I think the department should fully investigate this situation.

Since exclusive rights are involved in this matter, I feel they should not take advantage of this monopoly to increase their rates, but on the contrary, their rates should be lower than those of companies providing regular city transportation services, and I mean taxis.

At the present time, air passengers may take either a limousine or a taxi. People who ride in those limousines lose a great deal of time, because they are extremely slow and never start on time. Fares charged are rather expensive and there are only a few scheduled stops. From there, one has to take a taxi, and all this costs a lot of money. One has the choice to do that or to take taxis which are also exclusive, because they belong to the same company as the limousines and those taxis charge really prohibitive fares.

I think an investigation should be made in this field. An agreement should be concluded between provinces and municipalities, in order to abolish that monopoly and allow anyone who has a taxi permit in a province or municipality to go to the airport and freely serve the public. On the other hand, I know that it is easy to argue that there is a contract and nothing can be done, but I feel that those companies have gone too far. A few years ago it may have been necessary for those companies to have a franchise but this reason is no longer valid at the present time.

In my opinion, that system works against the passengers. I feel that the Department of Transport must intervene to protect the public whenever agreements carrying exclusive rights are prejudicial to passengers.

Mr. Chairman, I should not want to take too much of the committee's time but, before I sit down, I should like to say a few words about shipbuilding in Canada and for Canada.

I remember that, in his budget speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) expressed very serious doubts about the value and especially the advantages of grants to the Canadian shipbuilding industry.

I see that this government has maintained our policy. I am sure that after holding his portfolio for a few months, the Minister of Transport has decided to continue those grants which are absolutely necessary, in my opinion.

The subsidies were very useful. We owe them our merchant marine on the St. Lawrence and the great lakes, which will be entirely modernized and up to date.

Thanks to those subsidies and to this merchant marine we were able to find enough space to ship from the lakehead to the St. Lawrence ports tremendous loads of wheat and grain to Russia and other countries behind the iron curtain, as well as to China.

Had we not followed such a policy at that time, grain shipping would certainly have been delayed, with disastrous results for our western farmers and for this country as a whole.

We had also taken action to keep or reserve the use of Canada's inland waters only for ships flying the Canadian flag. We had obtained the agreement of all other commonwealth countries signatories to the commonwealth agreement on coastal traffic, and we were about to introduce legislation to this effect when, unfortunately, an election was called and our program was interrupted. I hope that the present government will not hesitate to maintain that policy, in order to give new strength to our merchant marine. It is unfortunate for our country that our merchant marine never had that new vitality which would enable us to have a real seagoing merchant marine.

In my opinion, the government should endeavour to take further steps in order to reach this goal completely.

I believe that, in another field of concern to Canadian shipping the government should do more. And here I am talking about the trips organized each summer to ship food and equipment to our various stations in the far north.

These trips should be restricted to ships under the Canadian flag. At present, the government charters foreign ships. To my mind, this is a discrimination against our ship owners and our seamen. I really believe that this is a field where the government has full authority and for which it pays all expenditures and signs contracts with the shipowners. Consequently, it should limit its naval operations to ships under Canadian flag. It is a new step toward the building of a Canadian merchant marine of significance.

Mr. Chairman, before resuming my seat, I would like once again to draw the attention of the house on the serious problem of Canadian waters.

This afternoon, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) directed a question to the Minister of Transport; the latter expressed his concern at the seriouness of this problem. I am convinced, as every other sincere Canadian, that the minister is really worried over this great problem threatening our main natural resource.

Today, those who have an opportunity to see the St. Lawrence river find out to what extent the waters are low and polluted all along its banks. Anyone seeing the St. Lawrence at the present time may realize the importance and the urgency of this problem, as well as the pressing need for a new system under which this problem would be no longer in the hands of bureaucracy, and when I say "bureaucracy" I do not mean the civil service. But this article, which was written by Mr. Arthur Blakeley, of the Gazette, depicts perfectly the situation prevailing in that field, and, in my opinion, it is a hair-raising problem for those really concerned.

There are at least some 30 officials in the federal government who meddle with this problem. There is no agreement between them, the reports of their discussions are lost or get shelved in some branch or other; different policies are adopted. I believe that the government should take the bull by the horns, that is, establish a department of water courses in Canada, or set up an agency, some administrative body which would have the necessary authority to study the problems as a whole and to make really serious decisions.

An engineer was telling me recently that in Canada we waste to such an extent these natural resources that if we keep on doing it, the ocean-going vessels will probably be unable to go upstream further than Quebec.

I think that one of the most serious gaps in our past is not to have developed hydraulic engineering. All the people who had to carry out projects along the St. Lawrence river were civil engineers who, though very well qualified in their field, were by no means specialized in hydraulics.

Thus, all along the St. Lawrence river, seaports and jetties were built and dikes were erected without worrying too much about the effect of those constructions on the tides, the currents and ice movements. This resulted in a complete change in the currents of the St. Lawrence, and today, the water is so low that ships cannot come up to Montreal to take on a full cargo. And there is another aspect. The water of the St. Lawrence is so polluted all along its course, that people living in those magnificent summer residences and resorts cannot swim or bathe there. Today all that is finished, everything has been wasted. No doctor will advise anybody to bathe in the St. Lawrence river.

I believe that the federal government, even if it is not the only one to blame, should convene a federal-provincial conference on this matter and tackle the problem, because today, the Ottawa and the St. Lawrence are practically open sewers. This situation has lasted long enough, and it is imperative for the government to assume its responsibilities, forget what happened in the past, and take an entirely new attitude. There is no question of blaming this or that person or body, but the problem must be tackled if we want the St. Lawrence river to remain that magnificent waterway which was the cradle of this country.

I refer to the St. Lawrence because I know it well, having been raised in Three Rivers.

I know that the great lakes are experiencing the same difficulty. As for lake Huron, the situation is critical and the government must do something about it. That is why I was so pleased by the minister's answer to my hon. friend from Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler). I hope the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) will take positive action, leaving political manoeuvring aside. Any positive step he takes to help the Canadian people in this connection will be wholeheartedly supported by the opposition.

That will conclude my remarks, Mr. Chairman, and I thank hon. members for their attention. I hope that, when all the other hon. members have made their speeches, the minister will answer the few questions I have put to him.

[Text]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the minister is displaying what he considers an admirable reticence in opening the estimates of his department. He has indicated he would prefer to listen to what some other members might have to say. However I think I should say at the outset that some of us are anxious to hear something from the minister before these estimates are concluded. He has been a member of this house long enough to know that members have an understandable interest in the attitudes of a new minister with respect to various matters of policy. Certainly there are a number of matters upon which I should like to have the benefit of the thinking of the Minister of Transport as we begin the spending for a new fiscal year of this very important Department of Transport. I have some questions I should like to pose or at least some matters I should like to draw to the minister's attention at this stage upon which I should like to have a statement from him prior to the conclusion of these estimates. Actually, I would prefer that he might deal with them when we are giving consideration to the various sections of the estimates, at which time there may be a better opportunity for questioning him on these points.

If I may I should like to take a few minutes to draw his attention to the particular areas of interest I have immediately before me, so far as the estimates of his department are concerned this year. I might tell the minister that there were a number of matters about which I had some discussion with his immediate predecessor in the portfolio. One of them had to do with the operations of the air transport board. The former minister and I had a number of discussions on this subject last year. Amongst other things, I was then urging that the air transport board should adopt a procedure of going much closer to the people than it had done in the past in respect of the holding of public hearings concerning the establishment of lines or rates. I should like to tell the minister I was very happy that, in connection with its regional hearings, the air transport board did see fit to hold sittings in some of the smaller centres along the coast of British Columbia. While I have had it reported to me that the citizens did not flock to those hearings in large numbers to make representations, nevertheless I think that whatever decision the air transport board may have arrived at in connection with various matters in relation to the changing of existing air line routes, there will likely be a more ready acceptance of the board's decision than there was in relation to certain matters not too long ago. There was certainly a strong protest, as the minister is aware, concerning certain actions taken by the board in connection with air lines.

I should like to draw to the attention of the minister the fact that, arising out of a certain situation that developed in respect of a decision of the board last year, I came to feel there was a rather serious flaw in the existing Aeronautics Act which, as the minister will recall, provides that if an air line which has an application before the board is not satisfied with the board's decision, an appeal to the minister does lie. However in the case of another air line, if it feels its interests have been advertently affected by a decision of the board no such appeal to the minister does lie under the terms of the law at the moment. On the face of it, this seems to be a rather unfair situation. I am hoping that when the minister is able to proceed with the amendments to the Aeronautics Act, which are now on the order paper in the form of a resolution, this particular point will not be overlooked in those amendments.

I did have some discussions on this very point with his predecessor, and it was suggested to me that when the Aeronautics Act was up for amendment it might be appropriate for me to pursue my argument in this connection. I should like to suggest to the minister that if this particular point is not already covered in the amendments which he intends to introduce, this is something to which he should give serious consideration. I suppose there is a question which can arise as to whether or not there should be any appeal to the minister. If there is to be an appeal allowed to the minister under the legislation, certainly so far as I am concerned it should not be a one way street. In other words, both parties should have the right to appeal.

While I am on the question of air transport, Mr. Chairman, I should like to indicate also to the minister that I am very much concerned about the type of facilities which can and should be developed for the landing of planes on water. I think it is generally recognized in this house that a great many millions of dollars have been spent on facilities for passengers to be transferred by air in connection with planes which land on the land. Most members of the house have had some opportunity to take advantage of the facilities which are provided at some of our more modern air terminals where we have, in general terms, very complicated and expensive technical facilities provided to assure that passengers will arrive at these terminals in safety and comfort. The whole question of seaplane landing facilities is a neglected one, so far as the Department of Transport and parliament are concerned. I only hope that because of the nature of his constituency the minister may be inclined to have a greater appreciation of this matter than some of his predecessors.

I had an opportunity of pointing out a few things to the minister's immediate predecessor during a visit he made to the B.C. coast. I was able to explain to him some of the landing problems that arise due to winds and tides, because I had personal experience of the hazards that develop when landing a seaplane in places where there are protruding piles against which winds may swing aircraft wings. As compared with the provision of facilities for landing planes in other parts of the country, very little has been done to develop such facilities along our sea coasts. I have had some discussions on this matter with persons operating planes along the B.C. coast, so the minister will not be surprised when I tell him the B.C. aviation council sent me a copy of a recent communication they forwarded to him. I would like him to tell us his reactions to the suggestions made by that council.

I believe that under former policies the department spent more money on the establishment of landing facilities than circumstances justified. All those interested in this problem on the Pacific coast are anxious that the best possible facilities be provided at the lowest possible cost. We are convinced that with proper correlation between the marine services branch of the department and the planning sections of the Department of Public Works adequate seaplane landing facilities can be provided in many areas where none presently exist, at a very modest cost—modest compared with the amount spent on the provision of landing facilities for land based aircraft.

I am particularly interested in the levying of wharfage charges and I hope the minister will deal with this matter when we reach the marine services branch estimates. As the minister may recall, I had a recent exchange of correspondence with him on this subject, and he sent me an explanatory statement outlining the basis on which these charges are currently being levied, under the regulations which came into effect last January 23.

In this statement the minister enunciated the idea that those who use these facilities should be prepared to pay something for the service provided. Not many responsible people would quarrel with that idea, but having examined his explanatory statement I do not feel we have arrived at a proper and satisfactory arrangement. As a matter of fact I think the regulations seek to impose an impossible responsibility on the administrative officers in the field, and that the policy is impossible of being equitably applied.

I have received complaints concerning these charges for use of the harbour installations at Comox, and I would point out there are a great many places which have these facilities but where there are no wharfingers to collect the wharfage charges. If I understand the regulations correctly there is a certain onus on people using these facilities to regard the district marine agent as a wharfinger, where there is no wharfinger as such, but I do not know how the minister can expect a fisherman who has tied up in port at Whaletown or Namu to send in a report later, saying he was tied up there for 10 hours and including the money for the wharfage charges.

I cite Comox as an illustration. There are several installations within a relatively few miles of Comox where no charges are being levied. An attempt is being made to apply the charges in Comox, where there is a wharfinger. I do not intend to be critical of the wharfinger, but with the situation under which he operates he cannot be regarded as a full time employee. I am informed that certain boats which the wharfinger knows will be moored there are charged wharfage, but other boats come in, in some cases yachts operated by people who can well afford to pay wharfage charges, and these boats may stay there a day or two, and then away they go and no charges are levied against them. As the minister will readily understand, this is creating an attitude of resentment against the whole idea.

In addition I should advise the minister that the local business people in Comox rely almost entirely upon the business which commercial fishermen and other boat owners bring to them, and these business people are resentful because they feel this arrangement is driving people away from Comox harbour, and that boats are going elsewhere where no charges are levied. So, while I have some sympathy with the minister in his attempt to formulate an integrated policy with respect to a difficult question, I wish nevertheless to register my own feeling that a better solution could be reached than the one now adopted. It is my view that ports in the category of Comox, which I have used as an example, should be excluded from the application of the regulations.

I had hoped for an opportunity during the summer recess of spending a good deal of time discussing this question with commercial fishermen and other boat operators in the area for which I have the greatest concern.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. member will permit me to say that I, too, shared that hope.

Mr. Barnett: Perhaps it would not be amiss to take this opportunity to point out that one of the most important functions of a member of parliament in my view, and apparently in the view of the minister as well, is to ascertain the views of his constituents, particularly in areas where the operations of some of the government departments are of such great importance in the daily lives of the people. One of our most important responsibilities, I feel, is to talk to the people we represent and ascertain their views as to how some of these matters should be dealt with. It is a matter of great regret to me that I have not had such an opportunity during the current year and the minister would no doubt agree with me that a Christmas recess, if we get one, does not fall at the time of year when it is easiest to do a job of this kind.

Nevertheless I have had some opportunity to discuss this question with the people who are most directly involved and the general reaction, at least among the more responsible minded of those to whom I spoke, seemed to be this: They had no objection to the idea of paying some reasonable charge where adequate facilities were provided, particularly in places where light, power, water and supervision were at the disposal of people needing these services. However in cases where these services have not been available and where no charges have been made in the past, there is a natural reluctance to accept any additional cost.

One or two suggestions have been made to me as alternatives to the idea presently advanced as the basis for wharfage charges. I will put them before the committee, not because I am persuaded they are correct or that they are necessarily better than the present arrangements, but because they have been made to me and because they are worthy of consideration. One such proposal is that instead of attempting to levy a charge in accordance with the length of the vessel to be moored, a small tax might be placed on fuel, say one cent a gallon. Another suggestion made to me is that it might be possible to issue an annual mooring licence. Commercial fishermen, when they went to obtain their commercial licences, could, if they intended to use public mooring facilities, pay a mooring charge in accordance with the size of their vessels. In return they would receive licences to moor at any of the public facilities they wished to use as they voyaged up and down the coast. I have not yet reached any final conclusion as to the merits of these two suggestions, but the minister should be thinking along these lines as he tries to work out a more satisfactory policy than the present arrangement is proving to be on the coast of British Columbia. I will leave it to the hon. gentleman to make his own analysis of how these charges should apply on the coast of Newfoundland.

There are a great number of questions one can always discuss in connection with the operations of a department whose work spreads over a spectrum as broad as that of the Department of Transport. I should like the minister, before this discussion ends, to give us the latest information about what is developing in the field of policy with regard to cable television. This is a subject which has come up on a number of occasions during the life of this parliament and it is, of course, a matter of concern to a large number of people. I have made my own position clear. As far as I am concerned I do not believe there should be any attempt to restrict artificially the right of people to view the programs of their own choice. I think any attempt to do so is neither necessary nor desirable. Indeed, it could easily become a form of censorship. If we want to encourage Canadians to watch Canadian programs, the best way of doing it is to make Canadian programs so attractive that viewers will not want to watch programs from the United States or any other country, exclusively at least.

I believe there is nothing wrong in seeing what United States television can produce. Indeed I hope the day will come when we shall have much more ready access to television programs from Britain and other European countries than we have at the present time. It is also my belief that the need does exist for programs on the air which have a basically Canadian flavour and content if we are to survive as a nation. With regard to cable television, however, I would point out that in some areas of my constituency at least, due to the geography of the coast line, the only programs available are those which originate in the United States, and even these can only be received through the use of special antennae with cable connections to individual sets. I hope the minister will make it clear that there is no intention on the part of the government to restrict artificially the right of people in situations such as these to view such programs as they are able to receive in present circumstances.

While I am on this subject, Mr. Chairman, I should like to urge upon the minister, as a member of the government, the necessity of taking steps so that parliament may provide a much more adequate budget for the provision of Canadian radio and television, so that those who represent constituencies like mine will no longer receive from the C.B.C. the answer we have had again and again, "If you people will provide us with the money, we will extend facilities to these areas", namely those areas in which Canadians cannot now satisfactorily receive C.B.C. programs. Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw from the discussion, temporarily at least, and hope to have some comments from the minister as we get further along into the estimates.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, during consideration of the Department of Transport's estimates, I think the occasion is well chosen to draw to the attention of the hon. members a few problems in which I have been personally interested for some time and which concern not only the people of the riding of Quebec-Montmorency but also the people of the province of Quebec and of Canada as a whole.

I avail myself of the fact that item 1 allows us to discuss those problems in the house. Most of those problems have been submitted by myself to various organizations coming under the Department of Transport, and the answers have always been unsatisfactory, inadequate or non-existent.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I feel it is my duty and in the interest of the citizens concerned to draw these problems to the attention of the hon. members.

I would like to speak of the Canadian National Railways Company and of Air Canada. Those two crown corporations must report yearly to the railways, canals and telegraph lines standing committee or to the sessional committee. Since I have been in parliament, I have noticed that the evidence given by the representatives of those various companies, either the president of the Canadian National Railways Company or the president of Air Canada, were not at all satisfactory. They often declined to answer questions, or else they took refuge behind a kind of immunity by saying that it was not customary to disclose certain figures, etc., so that, even under our democratic system, we are unable to scrutinize the budget and the expenditures of those two crown corporations.

I realize that, as it has already been pointed out, it would be practically impossible for those companies to operate if members of this house were to question them repeatedly, if not every day, to find out just how they are running their business. And it is also said that, inasmuch as those crown corporations have to compete with other companies, certain figures ought not to be revealed, since that would be detrimental to those crown corporations. Considering that those two companies are subsidized by the government, that taxpayers help to make up for their deficits, it would not make sense to enable private enterprises to benefit from confidential information. Of course, we have to agree with that line of reasoning. Yet, just because of the terms imposed by the crown corporations, the Canadian taxpayer is absolutely helpless, as he has never at any time been able to obtain satisfactory answers. The taxpayer may not be exactly familiar with the procedures and ways of those two crown corporations, nor with any possible schemes with other people set up with the help of officers in those corporations.

I remember, some time ago, having asked a question when the C.N.R. president was before the committee. I asked him then—though I knew very well that he would not be able to give an immediate answer—what was the distribution of traffic, at the Palais station in Quebec city, as between the C.N.R. and the C.P.R.; furthermore in what proportion premises were occupied by the C.N.R. and by the C.P.R., and finally what costs were charged to the C.N.R. for the use of those services. Mr. Gordon told me that he could not give me an answer, but would see to it that I get one later on. And I heard absolutely nothing until, following a second letter of mine, I received on Sept. 4, from the Canadian National Railways, a letter with figures indicating that, at least to uninitiated eyes, like mine, the C.N.R., to a certain extent, helps out the C.P.R. by making much less use of tracks and premises than the latter company, although expenses are apportioned roughly on a fifty-fifty basis between the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. This means that the C.N.R. is contributing, with the taxpayers' money, to bolster the C.P.R.'s profits.

There is nothing wrong, of course, in the C.N.R. doing the C.P.R. a good turn. But when we know that the taxpayers have to make up the deficits, I think the C.N.R.'s expenditures should be looked into more closely. That is the kind of information we cannot obtain from the presidents of those companies when they come before the committee.

If I had not insisted on a reply, I think I would still be in the dark as to the conditions of the contract signed in that connection by the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. However, some lines have been abandoned following the signing of the contract.

Certain trains have stopped using the C.P.R. tracks. Others follow a new route; instead of passing through Quebec city, they take another C.N.R. track which brings them directly to St. Raymond. Those are all services for which the C.N.R. has paid for and which are no longer used. In fact, I wonder if the C.N.R. still pays the C.P.R. the same charges and rent as before.

All that to say that unless we remain on our toes, the Canadian taxpayers will practically find themselves under the domination of certain private companies.

There would still be lots of things to say in that connection. For instance, last year, I asked questions about the Canadian Prepack and the Crowley McCraken companies, which deal either directly or indirectly with the C.N.R. and with which the crown corporation has contracts which cannot be scrutinized because they are private contracts. It is impossible to know either the names of the directors of those companies because the latter are incorporated under provincial law.

Those are all factors which make it difficult to examine the budget and expenses of the C.N.R. and, occasionally also, of Air Canada.

I still have other observations to make in this regard which are even more serious inasmuch as they refer to what is apparently a matter of political patronage.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Marcoux: I know the minister will be quite surprised to learn that such a thing as political patronage could exist within his department—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Marcoux: —because it would just about be the only place where it could be found, since we know none exists elsewhere. Here, I wish to refer to another company called Transol Inc. I had asked the C.N.R. what agreements they had reached with that company. I was told that the C.N.R. had not sold any property to Transol. Of course, that was not what I meant and I had to give it another try, for even if I knew the answer, I wanted to get it directly from the C.N.R. So I made another attempt and asked them more specifically what transportation contracts Transol Inc. had been awarded between Lévis and Rivière du Loup.

I finally succeeded in getting an answer, on September 10, from the secretary of the company, Mr. Vaughn. Now, this is a contract signed by the C.N.R. with that company, whose directors are Mr. Marius Diamant, Mr. Gaston Desjardins, a lawyer, and I think one of his associates, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, whom I have not met but who ran against me in the last election.

This company offered its services to the C.N.R. The latter investigated the credit standing of the Transol Inc. company in order to know what it was worth. According to the report submitted to the C.N.R., that company was not solvent, it was not in operation and was only incorporated on June 13, 1963, which meant that it was quite newly formed and had no capital value. Strange enough, in spite of this unfavourable report, the C.N.R. decided to award the contract to the Transol Inc. company, so that the latter is now operating a freight transportation service between its stations located between Lévis and Rivière du Loup.

Transol Inc. was authorized to operate this service by the Quebec transport board on October 30, 1963, and only started operating on that date.

As can be easily imagined, this means that when the company was awarded a contract by the C.N.R. for freight transportation, bank credits were unfrozen, so to speak, and it was very easy for this company to secure from the bank the funds necessary to set up the whole system as we know it today.

This even enabled this company to purchase a tank-truck in order to transport wine from Niagara Falls, this wine producing area we know quite well, to Quebec city, for the Quebec liquor control board. This means that this transportation company competed directly with the Canadian National Railways, which already had tank cars, and that the crown corporation consequently lost this contract to Transol Inc.

Evidently, in regard to the province of Quebec, the same thing happens. The liquor board is a crown corporation, so to say, which is entirely above politics. It then became quite easy for that corporation to send in a tender to the liquor board. However, C.N.R., which had agreed, as it were, to the creation of such a corporation, lost the contract they had with the Quebec liquor board.

To my mind it is a loathesome situation when a company such as the C.N.R. whose deficits, as I said, are made up by the people of Canada, is at the mercy of a small group like that.

Coming back to the directors of Transol Inc., lawyers Gaston Desjardins and Ovide Laflamme have their office in the same building as Mr. Gérard Lévesque who used to be chairman of the Quebec Liberal federation.

An hon. Member: He used to be.

Mr. Marcoux: Yes, he used to be chairman of the federation. He did a lot of work at that time. There was another person in that office, Mr. Laurent P. Bolduc, who is not a lawyer, I think, but who owns two ships, the Sillery and the Cacouna, the building of which was largely paid through federal grants.

Consequently, that is a fairly great concentration of power. I am sure the minister will get to the bottom of this so that there will be no repetition of such distasteful happenings.

Of course, now that Transol Inc. is a well organized company which is doing good business, I imagine it would be difficult to take away its contracts, but the minister will surely be on his guard the next time such a thing happens.

I would have other remarks to make in that connection but I will stop here. Naturally, I am not a minister but I have a rather thick file on that case.

Now I shall say a few words concerning another question, coming under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport, that is the choice of a medium range aircraft by Air Canada. This is another corporation entirely independent from the government and which receives no instructions from the latter; in brief, this is a company which makes its own decisions. Then, we have nothing to say. It is nevertheless strange to find out that the decision made previously to choose the BAC-111 aircraft was changed following the unfortunate accident suffered by the prototype plane while it was flying over a British city.

I feel that Air Canada was wise to change its decision, since it realized that the plane could be dangerous.

As far as the DC-9 is concerned, that plane was never built. It never flew once and it was accepted. And the Caravelle, which has proved itself over many years, is used quite extensively in the United States by a firm which is not particularly francophile and in a country which has no particular concessions to make to France. As a matter of fact, they are very happy to use the Caravelle because it gives very good service and its safety rating is very high.

Mr. Chairman, I will not talk about this any longer, because I do not want to reopen an old sore. I just wanted to point out some odd things that might be found in the management of Air Canada.

Another field which comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport and which awakened my interest is that of radio and television. As a matter of fact, I always wondered why television and radio come under the Department of Transport, especially broadcasting stations and the issuance of licences and permits.

I know very well that permits for the operation of radio and television stations are issued by the Department of Transport, on the recommendation of the board of broadcast governors, although sometimes when the minister did not like the board of broadcast governors' decision, he changed it and went ahead with another policy that had not been recommended by the governors.

For a few years now I have been interested in a Gaspé peninsula television company, namely the "Compagnie de t.v.-transgaspésienne", which submitted to the board of broadcast governors rather long and detailed briefs that I have at hand. They are about four inches thick.

Following a decision that I never understood from the board of broadcast governors, that company was prevented from operating a television station in the north Gaspé area. The reasons given for this refusal were numerous and inconsistent. That company had the luck—or the bad luck—to submit briefs to the board of broadcast governors on four or five occasions.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Marcoux: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member is aware that there are already two other television stations in the Gaspé peninsula, one in Matane and the other in Carleton, which serve the peninsula and must also, under their operating licence, serve that area. Besides, I feel that those companies give a very good service to the areas they cover.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I was precisely coming to this point, because it is a complicated problem, in a complicated area, and a problem in which I have taken a complicated interest also.

If one studies the questions I put to the Department of Transport, both under this government and the previous one, one will realize that I did not envisage the question in a superficial way.

I know that the Matane station has moved its antenna. Instead of erecting it near the city of Matane, they went away and erected it on Logan mountain, in order to have a much wider field of action. However, this antenna was barely erected than a satellite had to be built on Climont mountain, because it was found that the city of Matane and the Matapedia valley could no longer be served adequately.

I feel that this is a very complicated question, and I think the decisions were made in favour of the existing stations.

I know that this is normal, that those stations have the right to have a monopoly, but on the other hand I know also that some areas in the Gaspé peninsula are entitled to service, and if those two stations had an exclusive contract with the C.B.C., the third station might have signed a contract with another company, with Tele-metropole, for instance.

And if people had not wanted Tele-metropole, the Trans-Gaspé t.v. company could have signed a new contract with the C.B.C. Anyway, the problem was not beyond solution.

If existing stations did not wish to make use of Jacques Cartier mountain, as did Trans-Gaspé t.v., it was hardly up to the latter to let the two existing companies benefit from the advantages offered by the highest peak in eastern Canada.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Marcoux: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member aware of the fact that, even if an antenna had been installed on Jacques Cartier mountain, the station established there would nevertheless have had to set up satellites to serve some villages along the north shore of the Gaspé peninsula?

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased that the hon. member asked this question.

The consulting engineer of Trans-Gaspé t.v., Mr. Boisvert, made a technological study of the power of the CKBL-TV Matane station, and stated, on the sole basis of mathematical computation, that the district around Matane would have a signal several decibels weaker and that the station would have to use a satellite further away, if the people on behalf of whom an operation permit had been sought were to have a proper service.

The predictions of this engineer have been found perfectly true.

The same engineer also studied the diffusion of waves from Jacques Cartier mountain to certain remote spots of the northern part of the Gaspé peninsula such as Gros Morne and Grande Vallée, for example, which are the most inaccessible. The report prepared by that qualified engineer indicated that the new station could serve those areas. The quality of the service would be somewhat inferior, perhaps in the B or C grade, instead of A. But this would have been sufficient to enable the inhabitants of those areas to employ television adequately.

If an engineer who was sufficiently competent to predict the coverage of the CKBL-TV antenna feels that the station which could have been operated by Trans-Gaspé t.v. would have given satisfactory results, I do not see why those results should be discussed.

On the economic level, it is clear that the two stations now in operation would be greatly handicapped, especially on the north shore, since the greater percentage of the volume of business of the Matane t.v. company comes from the north shore.

Of course, I agree that the new station which could have been operated would have been prejudicial to the existing stations. The Magdalen islands and Anticosti island would probably have been served by the new station. Moreover, the north shore of the province of Quebec, the Natashquan area and the other areas located a little farther to the east, in short all the areas which are not now served by the Matane station, would have been served by the new one. This means that, as far as the technical aspect is concerned, the station which could have been operated by Trans-Gaspé t.v. is necessary.

It is obvious that certain companies may suffer some financial prejudice. I agree that the new station may constitute a handicap. But the strangest thing is that if we examine the objecting briefs, we realize that those companies presented divergent views to the board of broadcast governors. When the application for the establishment of a new station was presented, they told the board that they were in a bad financial situation and that they did not want a third station to compete with them. However, when the question was to expand or set up a new satellite station, they would say to the board that their finances were very good and that they could afford to make the necessary expenditures. Consequently, the evidence was contradictory, and so were the decisions of the board of broadcast governors.

At first it was said that Trans-Gaspé t.v. did not fulfil the technical requirements. The latter then had to change the technical specifications so as to meet the requirements of the board of governors. When the officials of Trans-Gaspé t.v. came up with these new improvements, the decision of the board of governors was that their financial organization was not adequate. And when the officials came back again to show that their financial organization was adequate, the decision of the board of governors was that the existing stations had to be given an opportunity to install satellites and try to serve the Gaspé population.

I have nothing against the decisions of the board of governors; nor do I have anything to gain from the case of the Trans-Gaspé t.v. Company which I have put forward.

But I suggest that if that firm had been prevented, for whatever reason, to make those changes and reappear before the board of governors, about $50,000 or more would have been saved.

That company had always been given to understand that it would be permitted to set up a television station and, consequently, it spent a great deal of money. However, it is now in a hopeless situation, as no decision has been made.

Since the board of governors comes under the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) and the issuance of a licence is the responsibility of the Department of Transport, it makes matters more difficult.

I am not in the least exercising any pressure on the government to make a decision. I am only saying it should have been regarded as a matter of justice, for they let the Trans-Gaspé company go to a great deal of expense by leading it to believe it could set up a station. Now the company's request has been turned down. I think, Mr. Chairman, we have here a situation which is at least discriminatory. I know that some chambers of commerce exerted pressure against Trans-Gaspé t.v., while, at the same time, others protested in favour of the company and this made it even more difficult for the minister to reach a decision.

However, it is a question of justice. Trans-Gaspé t.v. acted in good faith in wanting to serve that part of Gaspé which has no service. This has always interested that company which has been operating, under another name, a community antenna and, for a long time, had decided to bring television to the people of Ste Anne des Monts and St. Joachim de Tourelle. I believe three or more stations were received by means of this antenna and programs were retransmitted locally to Ste Anne des Monts and vicinity. This proves that the company has always wished to serve adequately the people of that area.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister to take this matter into consideration. As I have said previously, I do not want to pressure him; nor do I want to force a decision on him. I know that he is subject to very strong pressures from opposing camps. I know that financially, certain companies have made investments and, naturally, they do not like competition.

However, for the sake of justice and equity, the minister should make a decision, which would favour not only Trans-Gaspé t.v. but the whole of the population of North Gaspé and even of other places, who could be served by this station which enjoys a very advantageous geographical location.

Before concluding, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word concerning a long lasting problem—

The Chairman: Order. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired. Does he have the unanimous consent of the house to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Marcoux: I thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I apologize to the house for taking up so much of its valuable time.

However, I am so concerned with these matters that I would not miss the opportunity to discuss them before the house, and I will try to be as brief as possible.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a matter which has not been discussed for a long time, that is the foreshore at Beaupré.

Theoretically, the foreshore belongs to the national harbours board which has jurisdiction over the port of Quebec. The board maintains that the foreshore is necessary to the expansion of the port of Quebec. Theoretically, it cannot give up the foreshore without prejudice to the good management of the port of Quebec.

Some private companies requested from Quebec harbour authorities permission to use part of the foreshore, to build a deep-water wharf enabling them to move a certain quantity of cement produced nearby.

Riparian proprietors have been using these lands for a certain number of years and, in many cases, they claim to own them. The national harbours board challenges these claims, saying that these lands belong to the crown and that nobody can use them without the consent of the national harbours board.

These lands are not put to any use, they are in a very poor state and they cannot be profitable to anybody, not even to the port of Quebec.

During a recent meeting of the mayors of the municipalities concerned, the possibility of developing the foreshore at Beaupré was discussed.

The suggestion was made that the national harbours board would purely and simply waive its claim, subject perhaps to some conditions, to the use of the foreshore. It would hand over to the municipalities concerned all the foreshore at Beaupré with permission to develop it as they pleased.

This means that certain municipalities could start some developments, such as parks or the like. Some municipalities could even use it to extend their territory and authorize the building of houses. Others could use them for commercial or industrial purposes.

I think the minister should give special consideration to this problem.

For a number of years, the people concerned have been seeing officials of the national harbours board about this, but no decision has ever been made in this regard.

Mr. Cantin: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Would he favour this idea, even if it is detrimental to the development of Quebec harbour?

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, as I said a while ago, even though this land is essential, theoretically, to the development of Quebec harbour, in practice, on account of the limited budget of the national harbours board and of the very poor state of Quebec harbour, the sums of money that could be used for the development of the foreshore would be so large that we would probably have to wait another 50 years for Quebec harbour to expand along the Beaupré shore.

Mr. Chairman, I see the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport shaking his head, but that problem has been under consideration for the past 60 years at least.

We met several times with the Quebec harbour and the national harbours board officials in Ottawa, and no firm decision were ever made; the board officials never showed us any definite plan indicating their intention of developing that part of the coast at Beaupré. In that way and without causing any harm whatsoever to the Quebec harbour, the national harbours board could, especially if it were instructed to do so by the government, solve that problem to the advantage of everybody, including Quebec harbour, and particularly to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank you and all hon. members for being kind enough to allow me to continue.

I hope that my comments will decide the minister to act in certain fields. Of course, I do not wish to insist, but as I said a short time ago, I hope that he will take my remarks in due consideration.

Mr. Beaulé: Mr. Chairman, I wish to take a few minutes to comment on the estimates of the Department of Transport which, as we all know, is one of the most important.

I believe that the various organizations that come under this department are much too heavy for one man alone to carry. For example, among the branches that come under the Department of Transport, we find marine services, railways and steamships, civil aviation, telecommunications, meteorological services, air transport board, Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, Canadian maritime commission, national harbours board and the St. Lawrence seaway authority. The administration of those services is funnelled into the offices of the Department of Transport, and, frankly, it represents a task that is too heavy for one man. I would suggest, therefore, to the government that the department be divided into two parts.

Under the first part the following services could be included: marine services, railways and steamships, crown corporations such as the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, the Canadian maritime commission, the national harbours board and the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

The second part which could be called the department of air transport, would include the following: civil aviation, air transport board, telecommunications and meteorological services. This would make possible a more efficient performance by dividing the work within the department and by distributing the tasks more evenly.

Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) mentioned a while ago, as regards passenger service between air terminals and cities—be it Montreal, Toronto or Quebec—I think those companies are exercising a monopoly and I agree with the hon. member when he said that an investigation should be made in this connection, and the Department of Transport should decide on a maximum and a minimum rate for the transportation of passengers between air terminals and the cities.

I have already made a recommendation to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines respecting handling of baggage in airports. I for one asked that at Ancienne Lorette airport, near Quebec city, where baggage is handled a little too roughly, carriages drawn by a tractor should be provided, instead of a type of tractor equipped with a box, to convey baggage from the planes to the airport.

I should also ask the minister whether it would be possible to use Vanguard aircraft on passenger services between Quebec and Ottawa. We have noticed on several occasions that travellers must make reservations several days in advance and often cannot get a seat on board because there are too many passengers. I ask the minister whether it would not be possible to replace the Viscount aircraft by Vanguards on the air route Quebec-Ottawa via Montreal.

Now, I should like to turn to another problem which I already raised in this house; I know that the parliamentary secretary is in a very good position to discuss that problem of railway crossings in Quebec city. We have in Quebec city a railway company, the Canadian Pacific, which operates a passenger service. The station is located in the business centre, and I think that besides being out of date, it interferes with the traffic and business in Quebec city. Passenger trains circulating between Quebec and Montreal must pass through the city from east to west or from west to east and thus cross the streets eight times in Quebec city. Now, six of those streets are located in the business sector, which means that every time a train goes in or out, a traffic jam is the result.

I wrote to Mr. Gordon, president of the C.N.R., in this connection in June 1963. Mr. Gordon answered that he was prepared to enter into discussions with the authorities of the Canadian Pacific, of the board of transport commissioners and of the Department of Transport, in order to settle that problem. I also wrote to the president of the C.P.R., but the authorities of that company do not want to hear about it. They say it would be too expensive, that, after all, the situation is not abnormal and that everything is going fine in Quebec city.

I suggested to the high ranking officials of the Department of Transport to go to Quebec city, to visit the places in question and to see the traffic jams caused when a train enters or leaves the station or when some shunting is done in the Canadian Pacific yards.

I reported all those facts to Mayor Hamel of Quebec city, who replied to me as follows:

I have just taken cognizance of your letter dated June 28 concerning level crossings in the city of Quebec. This important question has been our concern for many years.

I might say that in all our talks, we met considerable opposition, which explains why the question has not progressed further.

We shall renew our representations, in the hope that we may find a solution to this important problem.

I would therefore ask the minister to inquire in order to know who is responsible for this opposition met by the city of Quebec. Would it be the authorities of the Department of Transport, who do not care about it, or of the Canadian Pacific Railways, who refuse to listen to reason?

I would suggest to the parliamentary secretary who advocates the restoration of older Quebec to include in his projects an improvement of railway crossings.

I would also suggest to the minister to make some arrangements with the Canadian National Railways, the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway in order that the marshalling yard used by the C.P.R. may be demolished and transferred outside the walls of Quebec city perhaps to Ste Foy.

The C.N.R. advocates the construction of a passenger service station. They have a station at Ste Foy, since they already operate a service between Montreal and Quebec city, via the south shore, and they precisely stop at Ste Foy to leave passengers, and I think it would be more logical if that station was situated in the suburbs. Then the problem would be solved and, by the same token, the railway crossings, which are a public danger, would be eliminated. If the C.N.R. would develop outside of Quebec city a railway centre and a marshalling yard the problem would be solved.

I make that suggestion and I am convinced that the minister will make the required representations to the authorities concerned, so that we, the people in Quebec city, might also profit from downtown improvements and some day see the elimination of those notorious railway crossings which interfere with traffic.

Mr. Moreau: I do not want to delay the committee unduly but I would like to express my surprise that the hon. member for Three Rivers criticized the monopoly situation that exists at airports across the country, because the agreements providing for this situation were concluded, I believe, while the previous government was in office, and when he was the minister responsible.

It is well known that the hon. member for York-Humber and I have raised this matter in the house, in connection with air terminal transport at Toronto international airport. It is now surprising to find an endorsement of our stand by the hon. member for Three Rivers, and I would like to thank him very much for his support in our efforts to have this situation looked at again.

I wish to bring the minister's attention to the matter of express delivery in the suburbs of metropolitan Toronto. When I moved to Toronto a few years ago I was amazed to find that in the suburb of Scarborough prepaid express operated in the following manner. One day a truck appeared at my door and the driver demanded 75 cents a parcel for delivery of prepaid express articles. This seemed a rather strange situation so I went down to the express office to discuss it with the people there because I had not received notice that the shipment was coming to me. I had no opportunity at all to pick it up myself, and I was quite surprised there was not free delivery by the express companies, C.N. and C.P., on this sort of service in such a large community as Scarborough which contains over 200,000 people.

Communities of much smaller size get free delivery service as part of the express service operated by the express companies. I am sure Scarborough is not the only suburb of Toronto which faces this problem, and I would ask the minister to have a look at it. I should like to relate briefly an experience I had in this connection some years ago. I had ordered some lobsters. I knew they were coming and called the express office repeatedly to find out whether this shipment had arrived. We had organized a dinner party at which we intended to serve the lobsters. We were expecting them on a certain day and I called the express office at 9.30 that morning and was informed that the lobsters had arrived. I said "Fine. I will come right down and pick them up." "Well," the fellow said to me on the telephone, "you cannot pick them up, they are already on the truck". I said "Isn't that rather strange? You fellows got a good start this morning." He assured me they were on the truck. By noon they had not arrived and he told me "Oh well, the truck takes a whole lot of these things; it goes on a circuitous route. But don't worry, it will be along". I called again at two o'clock, and finally at 6.30, by which time my wife was in a near state of panic, the lobsters arrived.

I am not suggesting there is collusion between the express officials and the local delivery service but a number of people have asked me why it is they are not informed that shipments have arrived, so that at least if they do not have an express delivery service they would have the option of picking them up on their own. I received two or three letters recently in this connection from people pointing out that since they lived in such a populous area they should be given the same consideration as people in downtown Toronto or in other communities throughout Canada.

I find it difficult to defend the present policy, particularly since we were told that the marshalling yards which were built, despite considerable objection from people in certain parts of my constituency, would rationalize the whole railroad picture in Toronto. We were told: Just wait and see, and when these yards are in operation all the problems will be solved. Well, this is one problem which has not been solved and I hope the minister will get answers to some of the questions I have to ask on this matter. I should like to know why we are not given delivery service by the express company, a service which is given to much smaller communities as well as to other parts of metropolitan Toronto. I should like to know why under the present arrangements patrons are not informed of shipments having arrived, so that they can pick them up themselves. I have been told by the express people in the local office that this is impossible—that they cannot cope with this work. I say that if there is such a volume of business it should warrant the express company having a truck or trucks down there to take care of it. In the second place, I should like to know more about this arrangement between the railway and the local carrier—it is always the same carrier. Is this franchise —and it appears to be that—the result of tender or is it just some arrangement which is made by the railroads? If there is such an arrangement, are the railroads getting a "kick back" from this operation? These are the questions I should like the minister to inquire into. Certainly the people in my constituency would be most interested in knowing the answers.

Mr. Deachman: In the few minutes remaining before five o'clock I want to introduce a new topic. It concerns grain handling facilities in the port of Vancouver. I had wished to make some lengthy remarks with regard to the development of the national harbours board facilities in the port of Vancouver, but perhaps I could leave these to a later occasion, perhaps later on during consideration of these estimates, or at some other time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Delighted.

Mr. Deachman: I am sure the minister will be delighted, as I can see from his expression. I wish to direct my observations now to the question of grain handling facilities in the port of Vancouver. The unprecedented wheat sales over the last year has meant the passage of some 200 million bushels of wheat through the port of Vancouver—more than Vancouver has ever shipped before. All the facilities of the port have been strained and put to the test in dealing with this record shipment. Vessels have stayed in the harbour sometimes for weeks on end awaiting berths. As a result there have been considerable losses to shipping companies. We do not have sufficient facilities to handle all the wheat which was offered at the port.

I wish to refer to an article which appeared in the New York Times on August 30, 1964 which sums up the wheat shipment story in these words:

> Vancouver has been shipping 20 million bushels of grain a month during the year. There are 11 grain loading berths, but if the port facilities were better, a $500 million wheat transaction with Moscow might have been more than 10 per cent higher.
> Full use of the berths handling 200 million bushels of wheat a year was pledged last year and, despite a promised expenditure of millions of dollars for increased facilities, ships still wait while costs mount.

There has been considerable discussion in Vancouver as to whether or not increased facilities should include an elevator or whether there should merely be an upgrading of existing grain handling facilities. A survey was made by the previous incumbent of the office of minister of transport. This survey took place toward the end of 1963 with a view to securing advice on what would be required by way of additional facilities at Vancouver and other ports of Canada. Since that time there have been rumours and stories in the Vancouver papers that private enterprise grain handling companies or co-operatives would be willing to build an elevator in the port of Vancouver to provide additional storage. So it seems to me we are coming close to a point where additional storage and grain handling facilities, rather than just working or handling facilities, should be developed in the port.

The question arises—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member but it being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions for the production of papers, private bills and public bills.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed with the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

SECURITY PROCEDURES AND INVESTIGATIONS

The house resumed from Thursday, July 9, consideration of the motion (Mr. Orlikow):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all government statements and directives to government departments during the past year regarding security procedures and investigations.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): I wonder if I may rise on a question of personal privilege. As hon. members will recall, I previously participated in the debate on this matter and on July 9 as reported on page 5259 of Hansard there is record of a question put to me by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. At that time the hon. member inquired whether a person whose reliability was questioned would have the right to appear before the security review board, and also whether he would have the right to appear with counsel. At that time I gave it as my understanding that he would have such a right. But in the discussions that have taken place—as hon. members opposite are aware —with the responsible officers, it has come to my attention that it is the British practice which is to be followed here, and there will be no right to appear personally or with counsel. The function of the review board is merely to review the file that already exists. I make this statement, Mr. Speaker, so that hon. members opposite will not be misled in that regard.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I should start by saying, "As I was saying on July 9 at six o'clock". At that time I was dealing with a particular aspect of security matters and I had brought before the house the case of a young man who was working within a government department and applying for another position in the same department, but one which required a security clearance. The case was brought to my attention by the B.C. civil liberties association. The young man had refused to answer certain questions about his in-laws; he claimed this was information which he should not reasonably be expected to have. I should like to deal with that particular aspect of security matters for a few minutes.

It seems to me that a person should be judged upon his own character and background; that there should be sufficient opportunity from interview, from checking the records and references of a person, from speaking to his previous employers and those people who had something to do with his education and background generally, to find out what type of a person he is and whether he is a satisfactory security risk. In my opinion it is very unreasonable to check the status of a very large number of relatives and to reach any sort of conclusion about a person based upon such a check. A person from a large family might be at a very great disadvantage; he may have uncles, aunts and cousins who belong to various political parties and organizations, over whom he surely has no control. I think we presume that such people have too much influence upon an individual. I suggest that this type of question is unnecessary and there are adequate means of checking the individual without going into the case histories of all his relatives.

At the conclusion of my remarks when this matter was being debated previously, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the case which was brought to the attention of the house last year by my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron). This was the case of a young man who had been released from the Royal Canadian Navy because a security check revealed that his uncle had once been a communist. Of course, the error was found out; there was a confusion of names. The man whom the security officers thought was the young man's uncle was not his uncle at all, and the young man was given a security release. At that time I concluded my remarks by asking: "What if his uncle had been a communist?" This is a very unfair burden for such a young man to carry. He should be judged upon his own character, his own background, his own education, his own working record. I imagine this would be a particularly hard burden for some young people in this country who may be very orthodox and conform in every way, but whose parents may not conform and may be very radical. Are they to carry that burden throughout their lives?

We are dealing here with cases involving the careers of individuals. This is most important, Mr. Speaker. They should be judged upon their own characters, and not upon those of their relatives, no matter how close those relatives may be.

On the general subject of security procedures, just before I rose to speak on July 9 the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) had been stoutly defending the government's position on security matters, and in particular the statement the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) made on October 25, 1963. At that time I said:

> The millennium in security procedures was not reached on October 25, 1963.

I pointed out that the millennium had not been reached on that date in this country, and still has not been. We do not consider the board of review which was established at that time to be satisfactory at all. As the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) pointed out, this is not a judicial body. It is an administrative body, but it has quasi-judicial powers. It seems to me to be an altogether wrong principle for a body having judicial powers of any sort to be part of the general administrative set-up of the government. If it is to have judicial powers, it should be appointed as a judicial body. The type of persons appointed to judgeships is the sort we want, namely those appointed independently of the government.

As the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice, (Mr. Macdonald) admitted a few moments ago, the present board of review does not permit the person under investigation to appear before it; he cannot be represented by counsel. This is a most unsatisfactory situation. Again I would reiterate that the careers of persons are being affected here, and their careers may be permanently affected by the wrong sort of security information. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, events in this country in the last month should give us cause for concern about the kind of people who are involved in our security investigations. I have an idea that they are not of the best and most reliable character. They can be given a great deal of wrong information, and may be supplying to the authorities wrong information upon which the authorities act in some cases, as they did in the case of the young man from Nanaimo, British Columbia, who was in the Royal Canadian Navy.

There is one other matter in connection with security that I would like to raise. I wonder whether any review has been carried out recently of the number of positions in the federal government service of Canada who are subject to security checks. It seems to me that if you examined all the government departments, all the crown corporations and all the various crown agencies there would be a great many positions for which security checks are required. I believe they would number many thousands. I wonder whether this situation could not be examined to see if they are not carrying out security checks for far too many positions. It is my belief that the number of people working for the government of Canada who would have access to information that would be of any real value to an enemy would really be extremely small. I would suggest to the department that this sort of review should be undertaken so that we may keep to an absolute minimum the number of positions within the government with regard to which security checks are required.

I believe it was the hon. member for Greenwood, supported by the hon. member for Peace River, who suggested that perhaps a house committee should be established, to sit in camera, so that this question of security could be more fully explored by members of the house. Any time security matters have been raised in the house, ministers of justice of this country have seemed to become awfully sanctimonious and have thrown out the suggestion that the security of the nation is involved and they cannot answer any questions. I suggest that the members of the house at least have a right to know what are the procedures that are followed by the government. If it is felt that these matters should not be made public, and perhaps there is a good case to be put forward for that contention, this type of inquiry could be carried out by a house committee sitting in camera. Surely if we can have a committee meet in camera to discuss the flag, we can go into this very important subject which deals with the civil and individual liberties of Canadians. Therefore I again put the suggestion that this should be given consideration, because for our part we will not be satisfied until we know more of what is involved in the government's security policy.

I conclude my remarks by reminding hon. members that the security of the nation is very important certainly, but the liberties of individuals, their freedom and their right to a career is also important. We must not forget that, because we have by no means yet reached a happy balance between security and civil liberty in Canada.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the last speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie), in discussing this motion. I think there is a mystique among government circles or those in councils of state, so to speak, about secrecy and the ramifications of it. In fact, I think it is time we took a look at the whole problem. In France, as I understand it, with their system of the conseil d'état, the citizen has such right if he is injuriously affected by a wrong ruling; we all remember the case of the young sailor which we discussed in the house last October. But there is no such right of action in this country, and I think it is time that we revamped our system and brought into our law a body of public law to protect the citizen.

I am thinking here of an article in the August 15 edition of The Economist in which the author was discussing the concept of the ombudsman and showing that really an ombudsman would not go far enough. To reinforce his argument he referred to the French system of the conseil d'état and cited numerous examples, one of which might have been taken from our own Canadian experience as it concerned a young man in a department of government who, just because of rumour, had been dismissed. But in France this person had a right of action. He was reinstated by an order of the conseil d'état and was also awarded damages.

I think the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond—and I know others have discussed this—has a point here and that we really should have a committee consider the matter. I am not worried about any proliferation of committees in this house if the committees have something interesting and really useful to do. I think we should go into this whole system.

In a little book called the "British Government Observed", Professor Brian Chapman of Manchester University makes some very useful comments in some 64 pages of his book. I do not know how one could possibly observe the British or any government in 64 pages, but he does it in a very interesting way. He discussed what I have called this mystique of secrecy. We all bow before the altar and say that everything is all right, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has said that all the procedures have been followed through and there is really no problem. This in a land of the free just is not good enough. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Macdonald) on a point of privilege said that everything was all right, that there was a review board, that the person who is being charged really does not have to come and that he cannot have counsel. But I know that in his heart the parliamentary secretary deplores having to make such an admission in this house. I know him and I respect him, and I know you do not have to be a lawyer to have a conscience.

Mr. Douglas: It is a lot easier if you have not.

Mr. Fairweather: Perhaps the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) has a point there.

I liked the reference in this article to the council of state for Britain, in which it was suggested that the council is really not the enemy of the administration but is its conscience. I think that an administration based on Liberal principles—we are going to be talking about this a great deal in another city in the next few days, and this will be bowing before the tenets of Liberalism—should be proud to say that this system of public law which they might bring about is their conscience and their guideline, instead of saying that the Prime Minister says everything is all right, do not butt in or bother finding out whether a man's rights are affected or not.

If the parliamentary secretary in his point of privilege had brought in a statute, then we could rejoice with him and think that this terrible problem is really being attended to. I am told that the United States state department even today, which must be ten years after the nefarious McCarthy-type inquiry was prevalent, has not recovered from the terrible damage done to it by the sort of loose, false and unsubstantiated charges which were made in those days. I am not drawing any parallel, thank heaven, on this aspect—and I want to be clear here—between the two countries, but it might happen here. It did happen in the United States. Last October we were given an example where it could happen to a small, modest person. But the fact that in Canada in 1964 a citizen has not the right to go before the board of review and has not the right to be confronted by his accuser, which seems to me to be the crux of the matter, as well as be confronted by the evidence—I hope I will be corrected if I am wrong about this—leads me to submit that it is time that the mighty Liberal party got into high gear and attended to the matter so that we could all approve of their action.

At the end of Dr. Brian Chapman's book there is a little statement which I am going to share with the house because I think it cuts through the fog which seems to emanate from government benches whenever we get into matters affecting secrecy. He says:

> This passion for secrecy has some constitutional support, but it clearly has much profounder psychological and sociological origins. Secrecy in public life panders to a craving for a sentiment of self-importance, of belonging to an inner circle.

Here I admit that the author is discussing crown privilege and so on, but I am satisfied that there is a very clear parallel. It is all part of the same sort of mystique or fog. He goes on:

> There is no doubt that this sentiment is frequently exploited in order to absorb critics and potential reformers into the system.

I think the government would do itself honour if it allowed this motion to pass and if the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) had the privilege of examining these documents. I think this precedent, which the government should readily accept, would go a long way toward clearing up a most unfortunate attitude among members of the general public to this very serious problem. The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) said that no more important subject could be considered by a committee. I am not able to put matters in order of priority in this way, but I do think it would be well for this House of Commons if we could take really effective action to improve the security measures in this country and, at the very least, give a citizen the right to be confronted, as I said, by his accusers, to see the evidence and have counsel.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in the very few minutes remaining before this debate must be interrupted, because of the regrettable absence at this point of my colleague for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who hopes to be here later but may not arrive in time to avail himself of the opportunity the rules provide to make a five minute reply at the end of the debate.

On his behalf however, and on behalf of all of us who are associated with him, I should like to say that we feel the debate that has taken place on this motion demonstrates very clearly that the motion should be allowed to pass. The request contained therein is for the tabling of a copy of all government statements and directives to government departments during the past year regarding security procedures and investigations. For the reasons stated today by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, and for the reasons just now stated so well by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather), it seems to me that all parts of this house would be true to their best traditions if they agreed to this motion.

If any statement made during the whole course of this debate clinches the argument, Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is the statement made this afternoon on a matter of privilege by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Macdonald). I will not make any extended observations on the fact that he was not sure of his ground when he spoke on July 9 during this debate, but I think there is tremendous significance in what he said today, namely that despite these new procedures set up by this Liberal government, including a board of review, these procedures that are supposed to protect the liberties and the rights of the individual, an admission is now made that the suspected individual does not have the chance to appear before the board of review. That being the case, it seems to us that the least the government should be willing to do is make public these statements and directives which, for all practical purposes, are laws of the land—laws under which people may lose their positions, or have their lives seriously affected for all time. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is our hope that the government will change its mind with respect to the position stated earlier and agree to allow this motion to pass. If the government does not see fit we shall, of course, when the time comes, ask the house to vote on this issue.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I think the debate that has taken place so far in this house in respect of this notice of motion for the production of papers has been very useful in that it has drawn into focus some of the very real problems with which most members are familiar respecting this matter of investigating what are normally called national security risks. Whether this motion passes or not, we should like to know what the government is going to do about this board of review that was promised by a former minister of justice. Several months ago he promised, under great pressure I think, that this board of review was going to be set up. As has been stated this afternoon by the parliamentary secretary, and again by the previous speaker, there is now no possibility of an accused being able to present himself before this board of review and present his case directly. It seems to me that we have lost some of the hope we had for justice being done in cases where serious mistakes have been made.

I should also like to say, Mr. Speaker, that in most of the democratic countries of the western world there have been adopted security risk procedures, if I may refer to them as such, that are almost indefensible when you try to reconcile them with the personal freedoms and personal rights of citizens. I am led to believe that in Australia and New Zealand they also have difficulty in carrying out what they consider to be proper investigations of these matters of national security risks. In spite of some measures that have been taken, such as the establishment of an ombudsman in New Zealand, this is still not completely satisfactory in so far as doing justice where mistakes have been made is concerned.

Some cases have been brought to the attention of this house where serious mistakes have been made, and this has been admitted. I am aware of other individual cases which have not been forcibly drawn to the attention of the house, in spite of the fact they have been referred to the Department of Justice on a number of occasions for re-examination. At this date I am still convinced that mistakes have been made, mistakes in so far as the conclusions that were reached on sloppy evidence, if I may use that word, gathered by the person doing the investigating.

Whether this motion passes or not, Mr. Speaker, surely on the basis of what the government has said from time to time, and on the basis of the sentiment expressed from many corners of this house, it ought to be willing to do something so that individuals who think they have been falsely accused will have some recourse, and that in this right to recourse they will have the opportunity of appearing before a board at which, if they are not confronted directly by the accusers, they ought to be faced with some of the so-called evidence against them. This is not an unreasonable request in my view, and although this relaxation may in some cases reveal the methods that are used by the investigating officers, surely this would be a small price to pay in relation to maintaining justice for those who have been falsely accused.

I do not intend to go into this situation further, or mention a lot of names and cases with which I personally am familiar and concerning which I believe justice has not been done, because to do so would initiate other problems. I do hope however that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Macdonald), and his minister, will give some very serious consideration to allowing some sort of recourse by means of a board of review, or otherwise, so justice can be done.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise under rule 37(1), and the exception thereto, to correct what I think was a misrepresentation of what I said at the beginning of the debate today, namely that there would not be a board of review established. I pointed out that there would be a board of review, but it was proposed that the British practice in this regard would be followed, under which there is no right to be personally present, or represented. I rather gathered from the remarks of the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) that he was saying there would be none, and I rise to correct that particular statement.

Mr. Knowles: The more often you rise, the worse it gets.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to the terms of standing order 47, subsection 2, a minister of the crown may at this point speak for not more than five minutes. If no one speaks on behalf of the government, the mover of the motion has the right to speak for five minutes to close the debate.

No one speaks.

Mr. Knowles: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

It being six o'clock the hour for private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Favreau: I am pleased to inform the house that today an arrangement was made by all parties through their respective house leaders after consultation with the members of the parties to the following effect: (1) that the next supply motion to be called shall be the last supply motion this session, and (2) that as of Monday we will revert to normal hours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Favreau: I am wondering, therefore, whether the house would give unanimous consent to the following two orders: (1) that commencing Monday, September 21, 1964, the hours of sitting of the house shall be as provided for in the standing and provisional orders, and (2) that, notwithstanding standing order No. 56(5), on the next occasion when a motion for an order for supply is called the estimates of the departments then outstanding shall be forthwith entered for consideration, and that the said motion shall be deemed to be the sixth and final supply motion in the current session.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house has heard the proposal put forward by the Minister of Justice. Is it ordered accordingly?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house will now resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

1. Departmental administration (including the former vote for the operation and maintenance of official railway cars), $3,773,800.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply on the estimates of the Department of Transport. When the committee rose at five o'clock we were discussing vote No. 1.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the committee to complete the very few remarks that I had begun when five o'clock was called, on the subject of grain handling facilities in the harbour of Vancouver. I think after the present season consideration must surely be seriously under way with regard to the provision of an additional elevator in the port of Vancouver. That being so I would like to conclude with a few remarks regarding its placement.

The harbour of Vancouver, on the Vancouver side, is growing and becoming well filled with general cargo handling facilities. There is however ample space on the north side of the harbour for bulk handling facilities, and I think it would be the hope of many people who are familiar with that port that additional grain handling facilities be placed on that shore rather than on the Vancouver side. In making this suggestion I would point out that there is one difficulty which faces the construction of bulk handling facilities on the north side of Vancouver harbour, and that is access to that shore, because interswitching, as members familiar with the port know, is across the old second narrows bridge. This bridge is old and is coming to the end of its real usefulness.

I would suggest to the minister that in approaching this problem he and his engineers should give serious consideration again to an old, old idea; that is, to building a causeway across the neck of the north arm, which would cut off the flow of water into the north arm, control it with a lock, which would then permit rail movement from the north shore, across the causeway, across the north arm, through a tunnel in the mountain on the west side of the entrance to the north arm, and connect with the rail which now enters at the Imperial Oil plant at Port Moody on the Indian arm.

The effect would be to provide a circuit, or a horseshoe route on the Vancouver side of the harbour to the North Vancouver side; it would provide interswitching without the use of a bridge or a lift span; it would prevent the removal eventually of the existing old second narrows railway bridge, and it would do some other rather remarkable things. The flow of water into the harbour of Vancouver at Prospect point to the first narrows at peak runs is now at something in the neighbourhood of six knots, which makes it difficult for vessels moving in and out at peak flows. This however would cut off a considerable portion of the water which must flow into the harbour at high tide and it would indeed reduce considerably the flow of water at the first narrows and also at the second narrows, where over the years there has been considerable difficulty in navigation while the tides are moving. Such a causeway would also create, of course, a fresh water body, which is a rather interesting thing. This body would gradually convert itself to a fresh water body—I am referring to the waters of the north arm—and that would have considerable advantage indeed for log storage and other purposes. It would enable Vancouver to have a harbour railway which would run clean around the port of Vancouver, around the Indian arm to Port Moody and along the north shore without having to resort to the interswitching charges, which raise freight rates, back and forth between the north shore and the Vancouver side of the harbour. It would provide access for mainline railways coming down the Fraser valley to the north side of the harbour, which would be of very great advantage to that side of the harbour.

The whole project, if one looks at the map, consists of putting the fill into a narrow neck of water at the entrance to the north arm, the fill being provided from the tunnel which would have to be driven for about a mile through the mountain to connect with the rail at the Imperial Oil refinery at Port Moody. This would enable the use of the whole north shore of the harbour for the development of bulk loading facilities of all kinds.

There are new bulk loading wharves going up on the north shore. There is ample space there for the development of a grain elevator. I commend this project to the minister and his engineers for their careful study, before coming to any decision regarding the building of an elevator on that side, because this long term project would be of inestimable value in the total growth of the harbour of Vancouver.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I feel obliged to say something on the Department of Transport estimates because I did not have the opportunity to do so last year. I also know something of the sensibilities and aspirations of the new minister and I know he would be annoyed if a maritimer did not say a few words about this important department. I intend only to mention general matters and two which have particular constituency application. The general subjects to which I wish to refer are winter navigation and the merchant navy, which are old favourites of mine. I am not going to go into their past history; I just want to emphasize one or two points which have come up and perhaps bring the committee up to date. I may mention from time to time in my remarks the Atlantic development board, but it will be with reference to genuine transportation matters. For proof of the importance of transport to the maritimes one has only to consider the fact that many, if not most of the subjects with which the Atlantic development board are dealing concern transportation matters.

With regard to winter navigation hon. members will recall that the Atlantic development board made a thorough review of the effects of icebreaking in the St. Lawrence on the ports of Saint John and Halifax. They made a very good survey and a press release was published in this regard. There are also other surveys being conducted with respect to Saint John and Halifax. I remember that at the time the survey was referred to them there were some misgivings that the board might be involving themselves in activities not within their compass, but I think that this particular survey has proved to be a very good type of reference for them. In view of some of the activities in which the board are engaging I think it is worthy of note that this survey has met with the approval of everybody.

I should like to refer to two matters in the report which was published, this being my first opportunity to do so. If I may quote directly from the press release of the Atlantic development board dated May 15 of this year regarding winter navigation in the St. Lawrence river and gulf as it affects the Atlantic ports, it is significant to note that this was said:

> The main weight of the loss referred to falls upon Saint John, reflecting partly the greater volume of general cargo transshipment traffic through that port.

Everyone knows that it is the loss of general cargo about which we are concerned. I will not labour that particular point because it has been already debated, but on page two of the same press release a statement appears which I should like to put on record. I do not think this is an attempt to rewrite history in which the minister may have been involved, but the board make this statement:

> In the winter of 1957-58 the federal government began to provide icebreaker assistance to vessels entering the gulf.

Every schoolboy knows that this icebreaking activity was going on long before that, so I do not know why the year 1957-58 was mentioned particularly. Perhaps it was selected arbitrarily.

I recall that when I first came to the house in 1953 I made a speech, and if anyone would care to look it up they would find it dealt specifically with icebreaking activity at that particular time, about which I was complaining. This report of the board is an example of their work and is very comprehensive, but we still have not reached a solution. I presented a brief to the board in Saint John. When I did so I think they felt that I might have been adopting a partisan approach, but the board were very cordial to me. The two points I wanted them to consider, and which I mention now because of their significance to this department, were these. I think the federal government should admit fully their responsibility to Saint John and Halifax, promises to this effect having been made ever since confederation. Second—and this is more from the point of view of the public relations of the department—the government should make public exactly what they are doing in the St. Lawrence so far as icebreaking is concerned. There is no sense in trying to hide this. If they do make their activities known I think the sort of controversies which occur each fall might be avoided.

With respect to the merchant navy, hon. members will recall that I have raised this subject for many years now. In a private member's motion this year I pointed out that there was a greater need than ever for the revival and development of a Canadian merchant marine. I showed that men would be trained for the sea and there would be a tremendous help from a defence standpoint. I also mentioned that with the increasing development of bulk cargo throughout the world it is even more important from this trade point of view that Canada have its own ships. Today the S.I.U. seem to be making moves, with elections coming up shortly, to bring about perhaps a more stable future for seamen. However, a certain matter was called to my attention which indicates the state of mind still existing in Canada, and which the minister will have to overcome if he sincerely hopes to do something about the merchant navy.

On August 6 last I asked a question in the house of the minister of external affairs with respect to the United Nations conference on trade and development which took place in March of this year in Geneva. The resolution on which I based my question was framed in this way:

> All countries should co-operate in devising measures to help developing countries to build up maritime and other means of transport for their economic development to ensure the unhindered use of international transport facilities.

The surprising thing, Mr. Chairman, when this resolution was put to the meeting, was that Canada abstained. There were 92 in favour, 7 against with 17 abstentions. We stated why Canada was against the resolution, and I suppose I should mention the reason. It was because we felt that the special principles should make it clear that the building up of maritime transport in developing countries should be based on sound economic criteria.

Although this may seem obscure, Mr. Chairman, I mention it to show the state of mind existing in Canada which the minister will have to overcome in order to make us more sea conscious. We are basically a nation of landlubbers. I just mention this to spur the minister on. Mr. Chairman, I mentioned the two general matters, winter navigation and revival of the merchant marine. I should now like to discuss two local problems in my constituency. The minister did not make a statement at the beginning of our consideration of his estimates. I do not seriously object, because I think we would really be perpetuating the bad habit we have acquired in referring to minor items on the discussion of first item. Actually such details should be referred to at a later time during our discussion of particular items. However having received the invitation to do so, I intend to mention these two local matters.

At the outset I should like to state that in discussing these items I have an opportunity to pay tribute to a distinguished marine agent in Saint John who died very suddenly last week. He was a very devoted civil servant and at all hours of the day could be called on to deal with the many problems which were brought to him. I refer to the late Frank A. McKinnon.

First, we have one of the few municipal airports left in Canada in Saint John. It is a good airport of which we are proud, and we are pleased that we have been able, in a private enterprise way to survive. I have heard a great deal of talk on numerous occasions about this airport being sold to the federal government, although that idea is not mine. I hope that if serious negotiations ever take place the federal government will make a very handsome offer to the municipal authorities.

We have experienced problems, and I do not say that any particular favour has been played by the federal government in respect of other airports with which we are in competition, but it seems impossible, with its importance and the growing demands for new improvements, to compete with other completely federally operated airports. Recently in Saint John we have had difficulty as a result of weather conditions, and a lot of flights have been cancelled. Hon. members know that there is no such thing as a fog in Saint John, or we never admit this publicly, but many flights have been cancelled recently. I think public relations on the part of the government have fallen into a bad state. I suggest a weather forecaster should be appointed for the Saint John airport under the Department of Transport. Our weather forecasts now originate in Halifax and are accurate for the most part, and probably serve a purpose, but I suggest to the minister that a weather forecaster be appointed for the Saint John area in order to dispel criticism that falls on the government whenever a flight is cancelled. I think such a man could be a very useful buffer between the public and the government, putting an end to the criticism that, whenever a flight is cancelled in Saint John at the same time flights are operating out of Fredericton, Moncton and Halifax, it is the fault of the government. I am not complaining because flights have been cancelled, but suggest that from a public relations standpoint, if for no other reason, the minister would be justified in seriously considering some sort of an employee with sole responsibility for deciding whether or not flights should be cancelled.

The second matter of local interest to which I should like to refer is a harbour bridge. A day or two ago, I asked the Minister of Transport a question about the Atlantic development board and its consideration in respect of assistance toward the development of a harbour bridge in Saint John. I do not intend to deal with this subject at any length, and I should have liked to include Halifax in my remarks, but there has been some criticism in this regard. I agree to a certain extent that the Atlantic development board should not be involved in this type of activity, but the field is now wide open. The board is assisting in the building of roads and other things, and I think this is about the only way we in Saint John are going to be able to afford such a bridge. Therefore, it seems the Minister of Transport is going to be responsible in some way for dealing with this problem. I hope that he will consider this idea favourably, and provide some assistance through the Atlantic development board, or the national harbours board —which would be involved if the bridge was built in a certain location in the harbour— or perhaps through the municipal loans board.

I should like to make two comments in conclusion, Mr. Chairman. I was pleased to hear the minister announce that there would be further grants in lieu of taxes in connection with the national harbours board property. This will be welcomed by all the national ports affected. I also noted that St. John's, Newfoundland, is to be included as a national harbours board port, and we think this is good, and are very pleased. I suppose one could say there really is not much competition between Saint John, New Brunswick, and St. John's, Newfoundland, but by such an inclusion of the national ports, a tradition is maintained.

I should like to say in connection with the national harbours board that I have always felt it to be a very good agency. From time to time criticism has been levelled at the board but it has always done a good job and I hope plans go forward for protecting its future. Often we hear the suggestion that in this day and age serious changes might have to be made, but the board agency in Saint John has been very helpful to our port.

The previous member who spoke, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, referred to the grain elevators in Vancouver. We have two or three grain elevators in Saint John, but the grain elevator which was operated by the Canadian National Railways became little used and in bad repair, and there is now a suggestion that it should be sold. I think that the national harbours board, which has had tremendous success in the operation of grain elevators, should take over this elevator in Saint John on a permanent basis. I refer, of course, to that elevator in the centre of the city.

One other matter I wish to mention, and I am not going to do so in great detail tonight, is the Maritime Freight Rates Act and related problems. I understand the suggestion has been put forward by the hon. member for Peace River and others, that it is advisable that in respect of any piece of legislation which comes forward as a result of the MacPherson report, there should be some method of segregating the discussions. I am interested in railway legislation that affects the maritimes and am less concerned at the moment with railway abandonment, which looms so large out west. But, I think if there were special subcommittee groups to deal with each aspect of this type of legislation they would be of tremendous help to the minister and those who are going to be affected.

I have dealt with two national matters, the first being winter navigation, and I am sure that the subjects will be discussed again this fall. I hope the minister takes some of my advice in this regard. I tried to bring my thinking in respect of the merchant navy up to date for the purposes of this debate, and I hope I have done so. I concluded my remarks by referring to two local matters which I hope the minister will consider. I deliberately did not prepare an address for this evening because I just wanted to mention these matters in a general way.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I have two matters I should like to discuss briefly now. As the hon. member for Saint John-Albert stated, these are local problems. I may enlarge upon them and give more details when we come to the particular items, namely the grade crossing fund and air services. In case we do not reach these items tonight, I want to refer now to the two problems that are of great interest to my home city of Moose Jaw. By my referring to them now, the minister might be in a position to give answers to these questions when we come to the particular items.

Dealing with the grade crossing fund first, I want to draw to the attention of the minister the protracted negotiations with the board of transport commissioners in regard to the plans drawn up by Moose Jaw to reduce the traffic hazard on what is called the Fourth avenue bridge over the main line, and the large freight yard of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am given to understand that officials of the board of transport commissioners have inspected the proposed renovations and changes to the overpass, and that they have agreed that these changes will greatly reduce the traffic hazard on the structure, which was designed for much slower traffic than the present flow of cars, trucks and buses, which at peak loads now form an almost continuous movement. The traffic hazard is particularly acute in winter because of snow and ice conditions.

I am sure the board of transport commissioners are impressed with the need for the proposed changes in the interest of greater safety and less traffic congestion. As a result of a telephone call home today I was informed by city officials that full inspections and inquiries have been made by the board officials. If an early and favourable decision could be given it might be possible to arrange for some winter works on the project. I bring this matter to the attention of the minister so that he may help in having an announcement by the board of transport commissioners speeded up.

My other point, Mr. Chairman, relates to a press release from the Department of Transport dated August 18, and which is headed, "D.O.T. co-sponsors community airport planning research". This press release reads in part as follows:

> The federal Department of Transport, in co-operation with the social science research council of Canada (a non-government, non-profit organization), is providing technical and financial assistance for a series of studies on what constitutes a good, economic community airport to serve the needs of training, recreational, local and itinerant flying. Dr. Neil McArthur associate professor of geography at the Royal Military College, Kingston, is conducting the studies.

Farther down the press release reads:

> For the past two years Dr. McArthur has been doing research in the general field of community airport development in peninsular Ontario and in the integrating of small airports with the economic and recreation areas they serve.

I am speaking in the interests of my home city, Mr. Chairman. As the minister knows, Moose Jaw has a large R.C.A.F. station for pilot training on the new Tudor jets. There is also a small civilian landing field north of the city. There is no regular air service. I know there can be no commercial air flights from the R.C.A.F. base. I am speaking with regard to the possibility of extending the civilian airfield north of the city or the possibility of constructing a new landing field.

The previous government had a program for what were called local airstrips and development airstrips. In the case of development airstrips there was a federal grant of up to $100,000 for an approved project. In a statement issued in 1958 the minister of transport in the previous government referred to these development and local airstrips. His statement reads in part as follows:

> In addition, there have been a great many cases recently where local authorities would like to have an airstrip as a means of improving the status of the municipality. These are not cases where schedule service is involved or where the existence of the air strip is essential to the community because of its remote location. They are cases in which the existence of an airstrip would appear desirable and helpful, although not essential, and where the strip would primarily be of benefit to the persons engaged in flying training, private flying, charter flying with small aircraft, and private business flying.
> These projects do not fall in the essential category, but if on examination we determine that there is some possibility of use for these purposes that merits assistance, we will share in the total cost of this sort of project with an appropriate local entity, up to a maximum of $100,000 on the part of the federal government, with the local interest being allowed to include cost of the land in its share of the project. In these cases as well, title of the land would have to be transferred to the federal government, with the local authority assuming operational responsibility for the strip after construction.

I should like the minister to tell me if this program of federal assistance is still in force. As I said, Mr. Chairman, these remarks might have been held over until we reach item 30 for air services or item 82 for the grade crossing fund. I have made these brief references now so the minister will be in a position to answer when the items are reached. I trust he will be able to give me some information concerning these matters I have raised.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I shall confine myself to questions at this point and not go into a lengthy speech. Perhaps the minister will answer my questions when the particular items are under discussion.

The first question I have is, have we rules and regulations covering pilots of all craft flying? For example do we have two pilots on all licensed airplanes, or where is the cut-off point? I should like to know this, and I should like to know also how long a pilot is allowed to fly a plane continuously before someone else takes over. In other words, what is his period of duty? I should like to know how often these pilots are called in for a medical check-up. I think this is very important in view of a statement made the other day at a medical meeting by a well regarded medical man to the effect that after 40 years of age two out of three of us are prone to coronary attacks. I am wondering if we should not look a little more closely at the rules and regulations in view of the vast expansion in flying.

A further question has to do with elevators. Is it the policy of the government to give a private elevator in business in a rival company the same service from the department as is given for example a C.N.R. elevator?

Then there is a further question I would like to ask the minister, and it has to do with low water levels, and this would involve northern affairs and public works, as well as transport. Would it be possible to take a rather more generous attitude where dredging must be done, due to low water levels, until this situation is controlled, either by dams or possibly by damming up tributaries to the great lakes? I would ask the minister to take a long look at this.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I shall only take a few moments of the time of the house, so the minister can answer questions which are of particular concern to my constituency and especially to the town of St. Hyacinthe.

It is a well-known fact that, since 1957, St. Hyacinthe has been experiencing a remarkable development.

People who know something of this town located on the south shore of the St. Lawrence river are aware that it is cut in two by C.N.R. tracks.

Several years ago, there were three roads one could take to get from what is known as the southern part of town to the northern section. Around 1940, if I remember correctly, two of those level crossings of access were closed, to be replaced by a tunnel for motor and horse-drawn vehicle traffic, at Laframboise boulevard.

This sufficed for a number of years, but as I said earlier, because of a large increase in population these last few years, it has become necessary to open at least another roadway, a tunnel, if you like, so as to make it easier to cross from one part of the city to the other.

At peak hours, at noon for instance, traffic is so heavy that workers are greatly delayed, since most factories are located on the north side of the railroad tracks.

I know that the St. Hyacinthe city council intends to ask for the construction of a tunnel off Choquette boulevard. I would not be surprised if negotiations were already under way with government representatives. I should like to take this opportunity to ask the minister to give his kind attention to the requests submitted to him or to any division of his department. This matter is of capital importance.

By using his influence, not only will the minister have done a lot to gain the esteem of the member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot in the House of Commons but I know that the population of the city of St. Hyacinthe will be grateful to him. His kindness and his graciousness will have won him their affection.

I would not want to deprive him of the opportunity to make a name for himself.

That is why I urge him to give special consideration to that request when the city council gets in touch with him.

[Text]

Mr. Olson: I had not intended to speak at length on the estimates of the Department of Transport, and my intention was based on two reasons which I shall explain later. However, since the minister's opening statement was reduced to an invitation to members of the committee to make suggestions to him on what he ought to talk about, I feel compelled to take part in the discussion and to invite him to address himself to certain specified matters.

It seems to me there is a certain amount of overlapping between the discussion now taking place and the debate on Bill No. C-120. That bill is of such magnitude and complexity that it covers a large part of the activities of the department. I do not want to discuss its provisions but I would like to make a few suggestions, which I hope the minister will support, on how the bill should be proceeded with from this point forward. We should recognize that it may be preferable to send the bill to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines at an earlier stage than is ordinarily done. The reason I suggest this is because after second reading and agreement in principle it may be more difficult to accept amendments suggested by the committee.

I also suggest that there may be profound differences of opinion respecting certain clauses in the bill and, if they are agreed to in principle on second reading before representation is made on them in the committee, it may make matters more difficult.

Further I would ask for the minister's cooperation in reorganizing the committee structure of the house to some extent, to meet the need we will face with respect to the railways bill. The committee may find it necessary to break up into subcommittees to consider various aspects of the legislation, and there are at least three major aspects of it that should be considered separately. Also there should be an extension of the life of the committee beyond prorogation, and when I talk about prorogation I have in the back of my mind some date just before Christmas. Whether I am making a good guess or a bad one is immaterial, but if members on both sides have such a target date for prorogation it will be very difficult to finish consideration of the bill and have the committee's recommendations brought back to the house before then.

Mr. Knowles: Which Christmas?

Mr. Olson: 1964 is the one I had in mind. I would not like to see all the work of the committee die at prorogation. I know that in 1945 and other years we got around this problem by simply adjourning rather than proroguing, so that the committees could carry on. But it seems to me we could do something now to give formal status to committees between sessions, so that there will be no need to use subterfuges of one kind or another. I hope the minister will give a favourable response—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. member does not feel he should be addressing his appeal to his hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre who is, I understand, the chairman of a subcommittee on procedure which, as far as I can see, has proceeded at the slowest pace of any committee we have ever had.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder whether I could be permitted to bring the Minister of Transport up to date. The committee on organization and procedure has set up a fourth subcommittee of which the hon. member for Medicine Hat is chairman. It is really a committee on committees, and what my hon. friend is doing is putting in a commercial on behalf of the good work of that committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: At the beginning of his speech the hon. member for Medicine Hat said he would make some unorthodox remarks because I had issued an invitation for members to do so. Well, it was not an invitation; it was resignation. I do not mean that in a political sense, but in a philosophical sense. I was aware that a certain number of speeches would be made but I would not like to think that any member of this committee would be tempted to follow the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I think it would be wonderful if we could get through the general part of this discussion and turn to the detail as soon as possible. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member, but I hope we will not get into a discussion here on the structure of special, sessional or standing committees of the house because that would lead us far astray. Nevertheless I am much interested in what the hon. gentleman says and I would like to talk to him about it behind the curtains.

Mr. Churchill: That would ruin his plans.

Mr. Olson: I can assure the Minister of Transport that the work of the committee on organization and procedure and of the fourth subcommittee which deals with committee structure is proceeding as rapidly as possible. Some suggestions will be brought forward and we do need a favourable response from the Minister of Transport. I may add that they would assist him in getting his bill through parliament. It is not my purpose, however, to transgress the rules of the house by discussing this matter any further. I have only brought it up because this is particularly applicable to the Department of Transport.

One question I should like the minister to discuss—and here again we are in the grey area where it is difficult to know whether or not one is transgressing the rules of order—concerns federal responsibility in the field of highway transport. This is a subject which has been brought up on a number of occasions. So far, it appears that the limited responsibility which the federal government has assumed has been exercised through the Department of Public Works. It seems to me that the growth in importance of highway transport in Canada indicates that it should properly belong to the Department of Transport. It is not good enough simply to transfer responsibility to the Department of Transport unless there is to be increased activity. If responsibility were transferred, we would assume the federal government would undertake a greater degree of responsibility. I believe that some of the expenditure proposed out of the railway rationalization fund, as I think it is called, could be better invested in improving highway transport than in keeping some of the uneconomic branch lines going over a long period of time when we know full well that some of them will be of diminishing value.

Another matter I invite the minister to discuss is this question of regional air line services. We have waited several months for a statement by the minister respecting a new policy on regional or feeder air line services. We have had a sad experience with what used to be called the southern prairie run. I want to tell the minister now that we do not want any repetition of what happened in connection with that service—the transferring of half a million dollars worth of equipment to TransAir under certain agreements, with the contracts left open to the point where TransAir, in this case, could renege on its responsibility to provide an air line service while keeping the $500,000 worth of equipment which was given to it.

We set up Trans-Canada Air Lines, now known as Air Canada, so as to provide air services for this country. It was not confined to providing air services from Vancouver to Toronto and Montreal, skipping over all the other cities in Canada without providing feeder or branch line services at all. If the trend which has been established continues, Air Canada will be telling us they have no aircraft smaller than the Viscount, which is a 60 passenger plane. It will then be argued that no service can be provided to any city where traffic does not allow a reasonable load for a 60 passenger plane. It can be assumed that the Viscounts will be phased out in the course of the next three to five years and then we shall be in a position where Air Canada does not possess any aircraft smaller than the Vanguard. Where do we go from there?—to the DC-8? Would it reach a point where Air Canada has only DC-8 and DC-9 aircraft? These are not aircraft which can provide a satisfactory air service for Canada to include all our cities, and I think it is the responsibility of Air Canada to reconsider its policy in this respect. I do not accept the contention that Air Canada cannot own any aircraft smaller than a Viscount. There are all kinds of modern aircraft smaller than the Viscount which could be used to give a satisfactory and profitable air service to some of the smaller cities of Canada.

Medicine Hat, which I represent is not the only city to be affected. Swift Current, Yorkton, and other cities in Manitoba are affected. We are now without an air line service completely. Trans-Canada Air Lines withdrew over a year ago. TransAir then assumed the responsibility to provide this service but before a year had elapsed they withdrew. I am not suggesting the company should have continued the kind of air service it was providing. Representations were made time and again that its schedules were not conducive to attracting business. But instead of adjusting those schedules so as to make satisfactory connections with the transcontinental run the company simply produced figures illustrating its contention that the service was not being used to a sufficient level, and then withdrew.

I do not think it is valid to put forward the argument that profit or loss in connection with an air line service should be calculated between every point of landing. For example, the service between Calgary and Regina should not be calculated in such a way that it has to show a profit, any more than it should from Medicine Hat to Calgary, or from Toronto to Timmins, or between any other two points.

I think we have a right to expect reasonably comprehensive service for the whole country, and that the whole operation should be considered in the profit and loss statement. Certainly these feeder lines which feed into the transcontinental runs do not always pay for themselves because of their limited scale; but they do provide additional passenger and freight loads for the long runs. Therefore I would ask the Minister of Transport to address himself to some of the questions I have raised, without asking him to duplicate the debate that is going to take place when the railway bill comes before the house. That bill may not come back to the house for several weeks, and we would like to have some direction as to its process through the committee before it comes back to the house and becomes law.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, while we are discussing item 1 of these estimates there are two matters I should like to bring to the attention of the committee and the minister. The first concerns the general radio service, which is the name of the organization in Canada. In the United States, where the idea first originated, it is known as the citizens' band—the frequency band set aside for the use of citizens for general communications. I have here a letter I received from one of my constituents who belongs to the organization in Canada and points out the very inhospitable manner in which this government treats United States visitors when they bring this type of equipment into Canada. This letter reads in part as follows:

> I am taking the liberty of enclosing our general radio service paper. (We) got two of these radios for business last spring and we have found them so helpful businesswise and pleasurewise. The Department of Transport apparently doesn't wish to recognize these radios or the clubs formed so that members are aware of all rules and regulations and realize the advantage of using our radios properly.

When their United States counterparts come to Canada—that is, the counterparts of the general radio service people in Canada—they are forced at the border point by our Canadian customs officials to shut off their transmission equipment, and I am told that in most cases this equipment is sealed so that it cannot be used while they are in Canada. These people call themselves CBers, and they have sent me their periodical in which appears an editorial headed "Let's Tear Down the Iron Curtain". I would draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the reference there is to the curtain of silence that is enforced by our laws in connection with visitors to this country. The editorial says:

> Many CBers from the United States are arriving at our border expecting to travel into Canada for a vacation and visit with GRS operators in Canada on their travels. Unfortunately many of these tourists are being given a sour taste of Canadian government hospitality by having their CB sets sealed to prevent their use while in our country.

This editorial runs the length of the page and I will not burden hon. members by reading any more of it, but that is the gist of the editorial. I believe this periodical has a wide circulation. Elsewhere in this publication they give us some bad publicity in a section headed, "Welcome to Canada!" It is said, underneath a picture showing some of their radio equipment:

Here's the welcome greeting CBers from the United States get from the Canadian government when they arrive at the Canadian border. A customs seal is placed on their set in some way as to prevent any transmissions from the rig. In this case the mike was removed from the input and a seal placed on it so it could not be used without being broken. Through lack of an agreement, U.S. mobiles are not allowed to use the CB sets while in Canada. Consequently, a fortune in tourist business is lost each year from CBers who would come to visit and vacation in Canada if it was made legal for them to use their sets.

I am not raising this matter solely on behalf of United States citizens, no matter how worthy may be their motives. We know they bring a great many tourist dollars to our country, and we need this money and their business very badly. But that is not my reason for bringing this matter to the attention of the minister. I am speaking mainly for their Canadian counterparts who are not in such great numbers as is the case in the United States, but who form the general radio service club of Canada. I believe it is time the Canadian and United States governments entered into an agreement with regard to the common use of a radio band by these two allied organizations. Technically it could be the same band as that used in the United States. Agreement should be reached with regard to Canadian and United States communal use of this system. Our country is larger than the United States, and less populous. We could encourage the use of this facility in a manner commensurate with the encouragement it receives from our more populated neighbour country to the south.

I have been informed that this hobby, or operation—it is not completely a hobby; it is also for public use—is very popular amongst ranchers, forestry workers, lumbermen, the construction industry, missionary and social welfare workers in remote areas, and hobbyists in radio communications. I bring this matter to the attention of the committee, Mr. Chairman, hoping that some effort will be made by the minister to correct this unfair situation.

Finally, I have received a communication from the international brotherhood of teamsters, chauffeurs, warehousemen, and helpers. This concerns, of course, the Canadian government railway. It is a protest against the continual escalation of subsidies to the Canadian government railway. You will notice, Mr. Chairman, that I did not say "Canadian National Railways"; I used the old term that was used when they were first founded, namely Canadian government railway. No matter how large an organization they have built up since then, we are responsible for the situation that exists in the railway. The letter is addressed to me and reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

There is a very persistent rumour that the federal government has ordered various transport companies to use the piggyback services provided by Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railway companies in order to reduce the operating deficit of the railways. If there is any basis in fact for this rumour, then I strenuously object to the order, as this is unfair competition and displaces hundreds of men in the transport industry who would otherwise be moving these loads over the highways.

If the government of Canada is sincerely concerned in the displacement of men through automation, then I suggest that they consider the abolishment of piggyback orders, if they exist. The railways cannot possibly suffer by providing this service, as there is certainly not rate cutting that will be a benefit to the transport companies involved.

Further, the railways are continually buying out transport companies, or controlling shares in them, and are also cutting rates to the point where no transport company could possibly compete, and then when they experience an operating deficit they apply to the federal government for a subsidy. They are allowed to continue this rate cutting, and nothing is being done to curtail this practice. If a transport company operated in such a manner, where can they get a comparable subsidy?

There is no indication that the subsidy paid to the railways is not being applied to the transport companies they now control, and if this situation is allowed to continue, the economy of the country cannot possibly survive without additional tax burdens.

As a taxpayer of this country, I strongly resent the foregoing situation and suggest that all these points be thoroughly investigated and the populace of this country be informed of the true facts.

Submitted for the consideration and investigation of the respected house.

Yours truly,
R. Carron, President

That letter, Mr. Chairman, is from the international brotherhood of teamsters, chauffeurs, warehousemen and helpers and is sent from their local office in Kingston. In passing this letter on for the due and thorough consideration of the Minister of Transport and his department I would point out to the minister that there is a good deal of basic common sense in the letter.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I have a very few words to say on the first item of the estimates. I believe some months ago I made reference to the question of a national air policy and asked when the government would be bringing such a policy forward. It was stated on that occasion, I think, that the former minister, who is now President of the Privy Council, had had his officials study the question and that a new policy would be forthcoming some time in the future. I would like to impress on the minister and on the government the importance of that aspect to our economy today. Without in any way trying to detract from the good work the Minister of Transport is trying to do today, I think we can say that his department is loaded down quite heavily, particularly when one considers the fact that in the next two or three years the government will have before it the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation, and in particular the problems of railways. This will require a great deal of attention from the minister.

I believe there is a growing feeling in the country today that what we need in parliament is a minister for aircraft services and development. If we take a look at the increasing traffic on our highways, the increasing value of the civil aviation industry and the need for volume in the manufacturing of small aircraft, all of these matters indicate that this is a branch of government which needs more attention than it can possibly receive at the present time under one ministry, which has all the other transportation services under its jurisdiction. I want to leave that thought with the government, and I believe the minister has on one or two occasions voiced an opinion somewhat along the same lines.

However I do have a suggestion to offer. I am not too sure how practical it is, but it might be an indication of the increasing importance of civil aviation in this country. I would ask the minister whether some study will be given to the possibility of assisting glider clubs across the country as a means of eventually promoting an interest in smaller aircraft. I should also like to bring to the minister's attention, as I did on a former occasion, the fact that many of the people in our smaller towns are wondering whether the federal government and the Department of Transport are going to formulate a policy of assistance in the construction of local airports for smaller aircraft, the use of which no doubt in the next 40 or 50 years will become more frequent each year.

Another matter I want to raise concerns the port of Churchill. I am wondering whether the minister can tell us whether there is any research being undertaken in order to try to stretch out the navigation season for that port.

The final matter I want to mention is with regard to the royal commission on transportation. I do not intend to go into this question in detail as we will have other occasions to discuss it, but I believe it is a very important matter which will be engaging our attention. Not only will the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines be considering it but I suggest subcommittees should also study various aspects of the matter as well, so that the whole question can be dealt with more expeditiously than would otherwise be the case. The minister's statement the other day left me a little disturbed, I must say, particularly his observations on the subsidy for passenger services. There were other matters mentioned which appeared to indicate that there might be some erosion of the Crowsnest pass rates. I know the minister will assure us that that is not the thought in mind, and I am not going to raise that particular aspect tonight.

There is one matter which, in view of the intentions of the railways to abandon some of the lines, might merit some consideration by the government, and it is the feasibility or necessity or possibility of providing some kind of bridge building incentive to the provinces in order to alleviate some of the hardships which might otherwse be caused by some of the rail line abandonments which seem, as far as the economy is concerned, to be soundly based. I do not think there is anything else with which I need deal at this particular time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, whether or not we get the first item of these estimates through tonight, I hope the minister will take the floor. A good many things have been put to him about which he should make a comment or two, and I should like to emphasize two subjects concerning which it would be desirable to have a statement from him tonight. One is of pretty wide general application and the other affects a particular group of people.

I notice the minister pointing to the clock and that seems to be a suggestion that I co-operate so that he can get the floor. I assure him that I shall do so.

The first subject I want to underline has been dealt with or alluded to by a number of speakers, namely the question of a clear statement on the part of the government so far as air policy is concerned. I remind the minister that once, but only once in the history of this country has there been a clear statement of government policy with respect to civil aviation. He knows when that was made and that I was a member of the house at the time. He was something more; he was a grey eminence.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was not as grey then as I am now.

Mr. Knowles: Nor as eminent, either.

I refer to the civil aviation policy for the post-war period announced in this house in 1944 by Right Hon. C. D. Howe.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman is rather mistaken. The policy was originally announced by Mr. Mackenzie King some months before that.

Mr. Knowles: That is right, Mr. Chairman, the general lines were first announced by the then prime minister, but a few months later, in 1944, Mr. Howe in a very clear and detailed statement gave us the full program, and it was clear and definite. This was one of those occasions when the members of the group to which I belong gave wholehearted support to that policy. I regret to say that within two years Mr. Howe started to whittle away at his own policy.

I see the Minister of Transport shaking his head but I can give him chapter and verse if he wishes. He does not want me to take the time, and accedes to my assertion that in 1946 Mr. Howe started to whittle away at that policy by changes that were made with respect to the question as to whether or not surface transportation companies could own air lines. Perhaps that is enough to convince the minister that I know whereof I speak.

From then we have gone on to still further watering down of the air policy set out by Mr. King and Mr. Howe in 1944. At the present time, along with all the other dilutions of policy that have taken place both under the previous Liberal government and the previous Conservative government, we are now left with considerable uncertainty. The minister tells us that statements are going to be made, but we are kept waiting for them. In the meantime we are presented with rumours and press reports about some companies like TransAir wanting more deals, such as the hon. member for Medicine Hat and others have referred to tonight. This has been very unsatisfactory. I want to support the line that was taken by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, which is the line we have taken through the years, that the main cornerstone of aviation policy in this country should be Air Canada. That was the heart of Mr. King's and Mr. Howe's policy of 1944, and we regret very much that governments that have been in power since have moved away from that policy.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I am ready to cooperate and make it possible for the minister to make a statement tonight, so I need not spell this out. I just hope I have drawn his attention to it sufficiently, and that I have provoked him sufficiently, that he will say something clear and definite on this question tonight.

Mr. Chairman, I now turn to the other subject that is on my mind, and if I have not been sufficiently provocative with respect to civil aviation policy I will try a little harder now. I want to say something about the position of retired C.N.R. employees whose retirement took place before recent improvements were made in the pension plan of the C.N.R. I say to the Minister of Transport, my friend of his former Winnipeg days, that he is the biggest disappointment we have had in the ministry of transport with respect to this subject. Other ministers have at least promised to look into the matter themselves, but all this minister has done is to act as a messenger boy and refer the matter to Mr. Donald Gordon, and then refer us to what Mr. Donald Gordon has said.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this whole question of the position of retired people on pensions which were fixed in previous years or previous decades is one of national policy, and that the government has to be concerned not only about plans like the Canada pension plan, which we hope we will get some day, but about retired civil servants, other groups such as former members of the R.C.M.P., and retired employees of the Canadian National Railways. I regret very much that all the minister has done since he became minister of this very important department is to tell me that he would refer the matter to the president of the Canadian National Railways, and that the president of the Canadian National Railways had given a certain reply. I know the matter was taken up in the presence of Mr. Donald Gordon in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, when Mr. Gordon appeared before that committee this year, but so far the government has washed its hands of this whole matter. I say to my hon. friend that there are some retired Canadian National employees in Winnipeg who still remember when the Minister of Transport was a Winnipeger, and they are surprised that he seems to be doing no better with respect to this subject than some of his predecessors have done.

Mr. Chairman, I said I would co-operate by not taking up much time, but I hope when the minister gets the floor to make a speech he will have something important to say about these two important subjects.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make only a few remarks about grade crossings. Although there would be much to say on that matter, my observations will be brief.

The government should undertake a large program in order to eliminate grade crossings which are still numerous in Canada and especially in the province of Quebec.

Besides, grade crossings cost many lives and are the cause of quite large material damages that Canadian citizens have to pay for because, generally, the railways are never responsible for those accidents.

For instance, the C.P.R. line crosses the community where I live and the highway at six different points, over a distance of three miles. In the dead centre of the town of Lac Mégantic, there is a grade crossing at the crossroad of four main streets and of the highway. Every year, we have to regret the loss of human lives and heavy material damages at that crossing.

The authorities of Lac Mégantic have been making pressures and representations on that matter for some 30 years. They have a very thick file on this and it seems quite difficult to obtain anything because, to date, nothing was done concerning that grade crossing.

That is why I am suggesting to the minister, and this is quite possible, to come to an agreement with the Minister of Public Works regarding those grade crossings.

The C.P.R., the federal and provincial governments, and the municipalities should take advantage of the winter works program to remove those various grade crossings.

It seems to me that many municipalities do not know how to spend money earmarked for winter works and waste considerable amounts in unnecessary winter works. It would be much better if the money was spent to eliminate such crossings; it would serve a good cause and improve the situation considerably.

I think something should be done in that regard.

In the town of Mégantic, taxpayers lose a considerable amount of time whenever a train blocks traffic.

There are three such crossings right in the centre of Mégantic. Shunting operations are carried out right in the middle of the street, which thus becomes practically impassable. Very seldom can one go over the tracks without having to wait five, 10 or 15 minutes.

I believe the town of Mégantic intends to insist on the elimination of that level crossing.

I call on the minister to do all in his power to carry out, not only in Mégantic but throughout Canada, a vast program to remove level crossings which take a heavy toll in human lives. Human life is priceless and the government must do something, because nothing can replace such a great and noble gift.

I should now like to say a few words about radio broadcasting in my city.

The federal government has a small radio transmitter in Mégantic, but reception is almost nil. In the daytime, we pick up the C.B.C. fairly well, but from 7, 8, 9, and 10 p.m., it is almost impossible to get that station. Since American stations interfere with the C.B.C. network, local citizens would be very grateful to the Minister of Transport if he could do something about it.

The small radio transmitter in our city might not be powerful enough. At any rate, reception is quite unsatisfactory, and I do not know exactly why. I was asked to report the matter to the Minister of Public Works and to ask him whether it would not be possible to effect some improvements in our small radio station.

I repeat what I have already told the minister: An agreement should be reached with the other departments so that we can get rid of railway crossings under the winter works program. In my opinion, that would be a great improvement throughout the country and that would do a great service to municipalities in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada.

If such an agreement were possible, a large number of towns in my constituency could undertake the elimination of grade crossings under the winter works program. That would be a very useful means for people generally to spend the money set aside for those works.

Mr. Nesbitt: I realize the minister wants to get the floor and answer some of the questions that have been asked, so I shall do my best to co-operate and make my remarks very brief. I shall deal with a subject with which I have dealt a number of times during the 12 years I have been a member of this house. It is a subject that is becoming of increasing importance every year. I refer to the search and rescue organizations on the great lakes. I confine my remarks to the great lakes because they are international waters over which the federal government has appropriate jurisdiction. The regulations that have been drawn up by the Department of Transport under the Canada Shipping Act apply to other waters as well, so I shall direct my remarks to the great lakes themselves.

I have found that every minister of transport over the years, starting with Hon. Mr. Marler and succeeding ministers, has been very helpful with this matter. They have all done something. I should like particularly to pay a compliment to the deputy minister of transport, Mr. Baldwin, who has spent a great deal of time dealing with matters such as this. At the moment there are a number of groups, governmental and non-governmental, on the great lakes which provide search and rescue organizations. In the non-governmental category, I refer to power boat squadrons and certain private fishing boats that are agreeable to assisting in connection with this matter. There are of course provincial police organizations, chiefly in the province of Ontario, municipal police and the like. There are other groups that I should like to mention as well, but time does not permit.

One of the principal jobs during the summer months on the great lakes is trying to co-ordinate these search and recue facilities. This is of course strictly a seasonal job. As I mentioned earlier, it is becoming increasingly important because of the number of small boats on the great lakes. I should not like to give a figure because I do not know, but I would estimate that the number of these boats has increased 10 or 20 times since the end of world war II. I know of one place, for instance, on lake Erie, namely Long Point, where on the opening day of the fishing season there will be approximately 3,000 or 4,000 boats going out into very dangerous and rough water. There is an increasing number of drownings on the great lakes every year.

Since this work is of a seasonal nature, chiefly during June, July, August and perhaps early September, the department would not be justified in going to the expense of employing people for this job on a year round basis. This is clearly not necessary. Perhaps during the summer months students from universities could be employed on this job as co-ordinators between existing search and rescue services, from the Royal Canadian Air Force down to the power boat squadrons I mentioned. I think a great deal of good would be done. When an accident occurs many people do not know with whom they should get in touch. Time is of the essence in these situations and sometimes five or ten minutes can make the difference between life and death.

Five or ten minutes could make the difference between the saving of lives, and deaths in drowning accidents, and if these co-ordinators could be placed at the principal resort and boating points on lake Huron, Georgian bay, lake Erie and lake Ontario they would be a great help. Most university students finish their courses in May and they could undertake a three week training.

This would only be a seasonal job, but that is all that is necessary in this particular situation. It is part of the government's program to assist more students to go to universities. Hon. members know the difficulties students have in obtaining summer jobs, and the more students go to universities the more jobs they will need. The government could kill two jobs with one stone. Perhaps that is an unfortunate metaphor but I think the minister gets the general idea, that the plan I outline could be of assistance to students who require summer work and at the same time it would add to the safety factor on the great lakes.

In addition to training, these students might also be given certain law enforcement authority because we all know that a number of people of all ages, and they are not confined to teenagers—sometimes they are old teenagers of 40 and 50 years—get hold of power boats and rip in among people swimming near the shore, thus creating a great hazard. While regulations do exist providing for action to be taken against these people, their enforcement has been difficult, and it would be helpful if the co-ordinators were given power to enforce the regulations and deal with people who are reckless and careless of human life and limb when other people are swimming.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Chairman, I have a question I would like to bring up again with the minister. It is about four and a half months since I raised it first and at that time he said he would take it into consideration, but since then I have heard nothing about it. It is a purely local problem. Why is the same rent charged by the D.O.T. for Yorkton footage as is charged at Regina, when you consider the facilities at both airports?

I have written to the minister's department three times and I have never had an acknowledgement of my letters. Most of the other departments at least acknowledge my letters—they may tell me to jump over the moon, but at least they acknowledge them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. member for Winnipeg North speaks perhaps I may be allowed to apologize to the hon. member for Yorkton. To the best of my knowledge his letters have not been brought to my attention and I have no intention of being discourteous. I am very sorry he has not had an answer.

Mr. Clancy: I hope the minister will take this under immediate consideration as the problem still exists and the people of Yorkton are incensed.

Mr. Orlikow: The first matter I want to refer to is the T.C.A. repair base in Winnipeg. I do not intend to put the history of that base on the record again, nor the changes which have been made at that base. This matter has been discussed on a number of occasions and the minister must know that the citizens of Manitoba, regardless of what economic group they come from, regardless of the party they represent, are unanimous in their feeling that Winnipeg has been treated shabbily by the management of T.C.A.

I want to put on the record just one illustration of why Manitoba feels the way it does. In February 1949, when T.C.A. announced that it was moving its operations administration staff from Winnipeg to Montreal—some 155 people—the president of T.C.A., Mr. Gordon McGregor, issued a statement in which he said in part:

> There is no conceivable reason, nor any grounds for suspicion, that this move marks the beginning of a mass transfer of T.C.A. activities from Winnipeg to Montreal.

But of course since that time there have been mass transfers of various T.C.A. departments from Winnipeg to Montreal. However, it is not my intention to go into them in detail.

Hon. members will recall that big delegations came to Ottawa to make representations about this matter, that they saw the Prime Minister, that the Prime Minister and the former minister of transport made statements, and that both statements were interpreted in Winnipeg by everyone, including that old friend of the minister, the Winnipeg Free Press, as a commitment that no more changes would be made until further studies were undertaken. Finally the government agreed to the appointment of a one man commission to investigate the whole question of T.C.A. operations in Winnipeg.

At present the various organizations in Manitoba which made representations previously wish to make representations to this one man commission. It was understood that the Manitoba government would get a copy of the Dixon-Speas report—not the edited version but the original report with all the information contained in it—so that it could put its experts to work in order that it could make the fullest and fairest representations to the one man commission.

It was understood this commission would begin its hearings in October, but according to a report which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on September 4, Arthur Mauro, the Manitoba government's transportation counsel, said that as of that date the Manitoba government had not yet received a copy of the report. I shall read a sentence of an exact quote from Mr. Mauro:

> We are concerned about the delay because we were promised a copy of the report when the commission was established more than two months ago. Mr. Thompson, the commissioner, is doing everything possible to get us a copy of the report so we don't expect the holdup to last much longer.

There may be a reasonable explanation for this, but I want to warn the minister that the people of Manitoba have had so many explanations from T.C.A. that they have lost practically all their faith in the president of T.C.A., and I would urge the minister to make inquiries, if he has not already done so, to see that that report is turned over to the Manitoba government as quickly as possible.

The other matter I would like to raise is one which I expected the minister to deal with when he introduced the resolution preceding the bill to implement some of the recommendations of the MacPherson commission report. I refer to the fact that last year the house had before it a bill introduced by my hon. friend from Port Arthur, Bill No. C-15 to amend the Railway Act. The purpose of that measure was to provide that railway employees who lost their employment as a result of changes beneficial to a railway should be compensated by that railway for the cost of rehabilitating themselves with new skills saleable on the labour market. This bill must have had a lot of appeal because instead of being talked out, as are 99 per cent of the bills brought in by private members, it was sent to a special committee—

Mr. Martin (Timmins): To be talked out there.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member for Timmins says "to be talked out there". The fact is that the committee held a large number of meetings, heard evidence from the railway companies, from the railway unions and from other interested parties and then made a report which was virtually unanimous recommending in essence that sympathetic consideration should be given to the bill. I do not wish to enter now into the arguments which were presented. Hon. members are aware of the background of this measure. I might point out that the number of railway workers covered by non-operating labour unions in 1962 was 152,000. This year the unions are negotiating for 102,000 workers, the figure having been reduced by almost one third. This is what has happened, and nobody questions the right of the companies to reduce staff in accordance with changing methods so that the operation may be as efficient as possible. Nobody questions the need to do this. But we have now reached a position where, because of new methods of operation, the dieselization program, the use of steel freight cars, automatic hump yards, computing equipment which has eliminated a great deal of paper work, and, I would add, because of the kind of legislation we are to be asked to consider in detail to implement the recommendations of the MacPherson commission, these reductions in staff will probably continue for a considerable time.

I do not wish at this time to discuss the provisions of this bill brought in by my hon. friend from Port Arthur, because we shall have an opportunity of doing so on another occasion. But it does seem strange to me that neither today when we are discussing the estimates of his department nor the other day when he introduced a resolution preceding another railway measure, did the minister take the opportunity to indicate the government's view on the important principle contained in the measure which the hon. member for Port Arthur put forward last year, namely that railway workers, particularly those who have put in long years of service, should not be displaced from employment in consequence of technological changes or because of branch line abandonment programs at an age when it is virtually impossible for them to find other jobs. I maintain that the companies have an obligation both moral and legal to look after people who have worked for them and who have given their best years to the service of the railways. I should like the minister to give us some indication of the government's view on this question. I do not expect the hon. gentleman to say: This is a very good bill which the hon. member for Port Arthur has introduced and we intend to bring it along. I do not expect any government to process a bill proposed by a member of another party. But it seems to me the minister should at least indicate the general policy the government has in mind with respect to this question, a question which affects the well-being and the livelihood of tens of thousands of workers in this country.

Mr. Pickersgill: I see I have only the time left which is allotted to a private member. If therefore my remarks in reference to some of the points which have been raised are brief, I hope hon. members will not mind. In order to avoid turning the pages of my notes back and starting again, perhaps the hon. member for Three Rivers will forgive me if I leave his observations to the last; he will remember what was said in the gospel about that—and I do not mean to apply the same precept to the hon. member who has just spoken.

I should like to deal with the points he raised. I read the same piece in the Winnipeg Free Press as he did and I am making inquiries to find out why the Manitoba government has not yet received the Dixon-Speas report. As soon as I have the information I will let the hon. gentleman know why it was.

Mr. Orlikow: Let the Manitoba government know, not me.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Manitoba government will probably find out as soon as I do. I am sure they are grateful to the hon. gentleman for acting as their porte parole in this house. As for the introduction last year of the bill by the hon. member for Port Arthur, I am not sure whether the hon. member for Winnipeg North was a member of the railway committee or not, but I indicated very clearly, I thought, the position which I took, and which the government took, on this matter. The questions involved in the hon. member's bill are of such far-reaching importance, affecting automation not merely in the railways but in the whole of the economy, that we felt they required a good deal more study than the committee had been able to give to the matter during the last session of parliament. The Department of Labour is studying this whole question and I am hopeful that as a result of these studies some constructive suggestions will be made to deal with this problem, which is primarily the responsibility of the Department of Labour rather than of the Department of Transport. I may say in passing that in the bill which I was privileged to introduce the other day I recommended that parliament should restore what most people believed to be the law until the supreme court decided otherwise. This action would go some distance in the direction the hon. gentleman recommends. But we do not feel at the present time, having in mind the implications in relation to other occupations, that without additional study we could recommend going further at this particular time. But I would not like anyone to think we do not realize that this problem is, in many ways, the biggest which faces an industrial society.

The hon. member for Yorkton asked a question about an attempt to charge a relatively small place such as Yorkton the same amount as was charged in Regina. That is something I feel very regretful about neglecting and I will try to get an answer as soon as possible.

I was much interested by the suggestion of the hon. member for Oxford, and the fact that he related it to my ancestral home was perhaps not entirely accidental. I will certainly see that his suggestion is considered.

The hon. member for Compton-Frontenac and several other hon. members talked about the desirability of eliminating grade crossings. I think anyone who reads the newspapers or listens to the radio at any week end will realize how important is this subject. I do hope we can continue to make as much progress as possible in this connection. As for the problem of radio reception to which the hon. member referred, I will see that it is looked into.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised two subjects, one of which I do not intend to deal with until I come to the hon. member for Three Rivers, who raised it first. It will be the last topic with which I shall deal, and I hope to leave most of my time to deal with it. On the question of the retired C.N.R. employees, the hon. member described me as a messenger boy. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing against messenger boys; I have carried many messages in my time. But the hon. gentleman does raise a question on which I suspect he and I would never be able to see eye to eye, no matter how long we lived; because I have never been able to convince myself that because someone had spent most of his working life on the public payroll and had then retired, he was entitled to consideration above that given by the general policies of the government to other citizens who had retired, but in some cases were not even fortunate enough to have as good a situation as those people who, though their pensions admittedly are very inadequate, were on the public payroll. It has always seemed to me that our social security policies should apply in similar circumstances to all sections of the population.

This may be because I have never represented a constituency in which there was a considerable number of these employees, and I do represent a constituency where the incomes are not very high and where there are very few people who receive pensions at all except the old age pension, which everyone gets uniformly. However, Mr. Chairman, I have always felt it was better to try to raise the level of social security for older people equally, for all kinds of older people, regardless of who their previous employer might be, and that it was rather difficult to find an equitable justification for singling out certain people because at one time they happened to be employed directly or indirectly by the state. I know the hon. member does not agree with that view. I do not think either of us would convince the other. He is perhaps right in saying that I have not been very zealous about the matter; but I am at least being honest about it.

The hon. member for Rosthern wants to stretch out navigation at Churchill. I would tell the hon. member that long before he was born I belonged to the "On to the Bay" association, and if there is one thing that stirs my imagination from my boyhood days it is navigation through Hudson bay. Whatever else I may be as Minister of Transport I am bound always to be an enthusiast for that particular route; even after visiting the place, as I did during the Easter holidays. My visit was short, I might add.

Mr. Knowles: You must have been in short pants, too.

Mr. Pickersgill: During the Easter holidays? No, it was in short breath. I am not sure that the best way of extending the season at Churchill is not perhaps to handle a greater volume in the season when the ships now operate, rather than trying to extend the number of months in the season. It might add up to the same thing. But there are very difficult technical problems. That does not mean we are not going to try to keep on solving them, because we solve new technical problems all the time.

The hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox talked about the citizens' radio band and the seals that are put on the radios of United States tourists. I am happy to say this matter was brought to my attention some weeks ago, and this policy has been changed, notwithstanding the fact that the United States will not reciprocate and still puts seals on our radios. As for the hon. gentleman's references to the competition between the railways and trucking, I think we are going to have many other opportunities of discussing this subject.

That brings me to the hon. member for Medicine Hat and his interesting suggestions about how to deal with the railway bill. I am going to make one suggestion myself. Since everyone else has been transgressing the rules, perhaps you will let me do the same, Mr. Chairman, unless someone objects very strongly. I am going to suggest that it probably will not be feasible, having regard to the other matters that are coming before this house, to have the railway bill come back for second reading in the month of September. It might therefore be very desirable if we could have a totally informal series of meetings which would not be meetings of the committee as such, but of members of the railway committee or such hon. members as may wish to attend. Any hon. member who is not a member of the committee could attend these meetings if he wished to do so. Perhaps these meetings could be held in private, so that a lot of positions would not be taken up. In this event, Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to make available certain of the officials of my department to be asked questions about the bill. I think if that were done in an entirely informal way—perhaps you might call it a sort of seminar or study group: I know I sometimes made fun of these things when on the other side of the house, but they have their purpose—something useful might be achieved in this respect. This is a highly complex piece of legislation, and no one is more anxious to get it dealt with expeditiously and at the same time properly by the house than I am. If a number of hon. members who are members of the railway committee would like to indicate to me, to my parliamentary secretary or—though I have not had a chance to speak to him yet—the hon. member for Ottawa East that they would be interested in this kind of project, I would be very glad to see if we could organize it.

I think it would be much better to have a debate about what the bill really means than to have misapprehensions in the minds of hon. members in trying to decipher its legal language. I confess quite frankly that when I read the bill the first time, before I had a little instruction, I was rather confused by a great part of it.

Mr. Knowles: You had a head start.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, necessarily. I will be very happy if anyone can catch up; and I will not be very surprised. I am going to beg off any attempt to make a speech tonight about highway transport, having been warned by the hon. member for Rosthern that I am trying to do far too much and am spreading myself far too thinly over too many things. I think I should leave alone a subject that is not part of my responsibilities at all.

I will come to the subject of regional air services again at the close of my remarks. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, after paying a tribute to the amazing growth of that city which is apparently growing faster than any other in Canada, or at least in the province of Quebec, asked for a few tunnels, and one in particular. I will tell the C.N.R. about this and I will endeavour to earn his gratitude. I hope he will be as forthcoming about the flag as I am about his tunnel.

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Fane: Bribery and corruption.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Simcoe East asked one or two questions about pilots. I do not pretend to carry this information in my head; a messenger boy has brought me this little note. I am advised that we do have rules for medical examinations applicable to all pilots, and they vary depending on the category of the pilot. Permissible flying hours also vary according to the individual company but they are reviewed from time to time by the air transport board as a part of the company's operating certificate, and pilots must be examined medically once a year. If the hon. member wishes more details we will be very glad to let him have them.

The hon. member asked about grain elevators and whether the same service is provided to elevators owned by private companies as elevators owned by the C.N.R. I am not sure whether the C.N.R. does own any elevators, but I think the hon. gentleman means elevators owned one way or another by some public agency. I should have thought that so far as any general services of the Department of Transport are concerned they would be quite the same, but the main services he would probably be interested in would be dredging and that sort of thing, which is not my responsibility, of course, but the responsibility of the Minister of Public Works. That would apply also to dredging generally. I will have to put a little pressure on the Minister of Public Works to do a little dredging this year in the great lakes because of the water levels.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre had some things to say about the grade crossing fund in so far as it affected Moose Jaw, and I will see that the board of transport commissioners have their attention directed to his observations. I will also have details given to him about this problem to which he referred, and they will be sent to him in writing.

The hon. member for Saint John-Albert made one or two suggestions about how to deal with railway legislation along the lines which were elaborated a little more by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. He said that the national harbours board was a good thing and I think that was gratifying to me as well as to the board. The hon. member mentioned the harbour bridge in Saint John. I do not think anything will contribute more to the economy of Saint John than the building of the harbour bridge, and I can tell him that I personally am very sympathetic toward doing everything I can so that that project is proceeded with as quickly as possible.

Whether or not having a Department of Transport weather forecaster at the Saint John airport would make people happier when planes did not come in I am not absolutely sure, but at any rate we will give the matter careful consideration. I know the hon. member's interest in the merchant navy. I share it, but perhaps not quite with the same degree of enthusiasm as he, as I am sure he is the most enthusiastic member in the house, at least on that side of the house, on this matter. I also know his views about winter navigation. There is a problem there of balancing one part of the country with another and balancing the interests of both, which is not easy to do.

As for the constructive suggestions made by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra concerning Vancouver harbour, and particularly the grain handling facilities there, I may say I am very anxious to see the expansion of the grain handling facilities and the facilities for handling bulk cargo generally in Vancouver harbour. Anything I can reasonably do to push that ahead will be done.

I feel very sad about those lobsters to which the hon. member for York-Scarborough referred; I hope they were not dead before the party. We are looking into his problem about the delivery of express, and we are trying to solve all of the problems of Scarborough, including redistribution. The hon. member also referred to the monopoly of taxi and other services at the airports, as did several other hon. members. I think I dealt with this subject at some length in reply to an intervention by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam when we were considering interim supply some time ago, and I do not think I can usefully add anything to what I said on that occasion. I forget the page in Hansard in this regard, but I am sure hon. members can look it up. It is an awkward problem, and I certainly agree with what everyone has said about it—that as long as people have any kind of monopoly they have to be watched.

The hon. member for Quebec East said he thought the job of Minister of Transport was too big for any one man. I am not sure that I entirely disagree with that, but notwithstanding the excellent schemes which have been put forward for dividing up the department, if you are going to try, as we are trying in the legislation we are now putting forward, to look at the transportation problems with which parliament has to deal as a whole and try to get some co-ordination, it is frightfully difficult to separate the department. Perhaps when we get some of these policies better worked out it might be possible. Personally I should like to carve off some of the peripheral parts of the department and get rid of them if I could; but it is really a problem for the Prime Minister, not for me, as I have enough of my own, as I have been told.

The situation in the railways in Quebec city to which the hon. member for Quebec East referred is being pursued assiduously by my hon. friend the hon. member for Quebec South, my parliamentary secretary. He is very zealous about these matters and I am sure they can safely be left in his hands. I think that applies to most of the questions, except the one about the television in Gaspé which was raised by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency. However, I think I should say that my hon. friend for Quebec South and I have more faith in the growth of the harbour at Quebec than the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency showed. We believe there is going to be a very great expansion of that harbour in the next 20 years and we want to be very careful not to inhibit our capacity to expand. At the same time the problem of the Beaupré shore to which the hon. member referred is being considered very actively indeed at the present time. I will try to get together as quickly as I can such statistics as are available to us which the hon. gentleman wanted, and furnish him with them.

With regard to the problem about the television, I really think this is outside the scope of my responsibilities in any event. This being the case I am not going to say anything more about it tonight.

I come now to the observations of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, who had some complimentary things to say about the air transport board and its operations. I have no doubt that it was partly as a result of his urging that they did have a hearing in British Columbia, and I am sure that it is a very good thing for these governmental agencies to see on the spot what are the conditions which prevail whenever it is possible to do so. I must say that the question of the flaw in the Aeronautics Act, or what the hon. gentleman thought was a flaw, is something I will have looked at, and perhaps if we ever get to that bill something might be done about it. With regard to the matter of facilities for water landings for planes, the hon. gentleman is not wrong in thinking that this matter is a matter of real interest to me. I have landed in planes in some of the most unlikely places along a coast that is almost as difficult as the hon. gentleman's coast. This is one of the matters which we have to tackle more earnestly than we have up to the present.

The submission of the British Columbia aviation council, which was given to me when I was performing another function as commodore of the Kelowna regatta, is being studied at the present time by the department.

In respect of many of the things about these wharf charges, to which the hon. member referred, I at any rate have a feeling of sympathy, if I do not agree in total with them. It was perhaps not the most auspicious part of my beginning as Minister of Transport, that just before I began there was a complete overhaul of these wharfage charges. This did create the impression in my own constituency that my first act as Minister of Transport was to charge more for the use of wharves, which, perhaps if I had control of the timing, might have been done a little differently. However, I think the hon. gentleman can be pretty sure that on this subject I will tend to be on the side of the users of the wharves, just as far as one can and still have some regard for the public interest. At any rate, the regulations with regard to wharves are not, in my view, as the laws of the Medes and Persians, but are subject to change almost without notice if I can think of any good reason for changing them.

I do not think I will attempt to add anything to what I said about community antenna television on July 22, which the hon. member can reread at page 5799 of Hansard. I have no new views on the subject since I gave those on that date. In view of what the hon. gentleman said about television reception in certain parts of his constituency he ought to get together with the hon. member for Kootenay East. I suggest that they make a joint attack on the C.B.C. in respect of this matter and, at any rate, they will carry my sympathy with them.

I come at last to the remarks of the hon. member for Three Rivers, and I intend to take in opposite order the items to which he referred, dealing first with the problem in respect of the use of our waters and the conservation of our waters. I do not think I should really attempt at this stage to add anything to what I said in reply to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce on orders of the day. I should very much like to see the agreement of the house leaders, who seem to be very agreeable these days, to put through the motion to have this reference to the committee, so that we can have a good look at what is now being done in the country and at what some of these problems are during this session. I think that would help a great deal to understand this better and to enlist greater support from the house generally for what needs to be done.

The hon. member referred to a reserving of the business of northern supply for ships on Canadian registry. I think the hon. gentleman is perhaps not unaware of the fact that I got my fingers slightly burned in this particular traffic and I will probably be a little more careful next time.

About cabotage, the Senate has given its blessings to the policy suggested by the hon. gentleman, when he was minister, in a bill that is now on the order paper, and that, God willing, we will reach some time before Christmas.

I hope in the near future to be able to make a rather detailed statement about shipbuilding and this whole matter. There has been a great deal of shipbuilding done because of the subsidy policy introduced by the hon. member for Three Rivers. I think the time has come to make a thorough appraisal of the results of that policy. Certainly one of the results has been a vast increase in employment in shipyards, for which we are all very grateful.

I do not think I will say anything more about bus and taxi services at airports.

I now come to the general question of air policy. I think I ought to start by recalling to the hon. gentleman that I have not got much more than three minutes left at this time. The last time I attempted to do this these three minutes were taken up by others and I had to accept an invitation from the C.B.C., and that is the only time I have ever been on, so the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam does not need to feel that he is the only one who is left out. Perhaps this evening the committee will be more inclined to listen to me even, though this is only repetition.

The principles recommended as a basis for civil aviation policy are:

(1) In the international field, air services provided by Canadian air lines should serve the Canadian interest as a whole; these services should not be competitive or conflicting, but should represent a single integrated plan, which could be achieved by amalgamation, by partnership or by a clear division of fields of operations.

(2) In the domestic main line field, while the principle of competition is not rejected, any development of competition should not compromise or seriously injure the economic viability of T.C.A.'s main line domestic operations which represent the essential framework of its network of domestic services. In other words, there must not be the kind of competition which would put T.C.A. into the red; and, in the event that competition continues, the air transport board should ensure an opportunity for growth to both lines above this basic minimum.

(3) In formulation of policy based upon the foregoing point, a reasonable role for regional air carriers providing scheduled and regular air service must be established; this role must provide for a relationship between the regional air carriers and T.C.A. (and any other licensed main line transcontinental carrier) which will give the regional air carriers a reasonable chance to operate without government subsidies.

If I could have three minutes more and the committee saw fit to listen to me I think I could conclude these observations.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I asked the two air lines to hold discussions to see within this framework whether they could come up with some agreed recommendations. I hope that they will have, at any rate, reached agreement on a great many points by the end of September. On some points they have already reached full agreement. I believe that a lot of the conflicting difficulty outside Canada has already been solved. However, I do feel that the greater the measure of consent and agreement we can get in these matters, rather than the imposition of policy from above, the more likely it is to work smoothly and effectively.

I am also very much impressed with the fact that it took, to my personal knowledge, a year and a half at least, and maybe longer, before the policy that was formulated in those general lines by Mr. Mackenzie King, and extended in 1944 by Mr. C. D. Howe, was worked out. My own view is that that policy, even with some erosion of which I did not approve, I might add, has served this country pretty well for 20 years. I am more anxious to see that any policies I recommend to my colleagues, and that my colleagues join in recommending to this house, will work for 20 years, than in trying to meet some deadline of September 30 or October 31. What we want to do is to get a policy that is right for this country. If it takes two or three extra months to do it, so far as I am concerned I think I would be wiser to take the two or three extra months. I do believe that this framework which was announced on May 1, and with which I found very little quarrel in any part of the country, is on the whole the right framework within which to work out this policy.

I do agree, too, that there has to be a proper balance between the one or two main line carriers, whichever there are going to be —I am talking about the domestic field at the moment—and the regional carriers. I do not believe that one great, single carrier can perform all the scheduled air service for this country satisfactorily. I think the headquarters would be too far from the field. For a regional scheduled carrier to operate effectively, his headquarters have got to be in the area of his operation. I say this not from any theoretical standpoint. Anybody who has been a politician in Newfoundland in the period I have been, when at the start you did not have very many roads, who has seen how dependant a region can be on air services for the essential services, knows that a regional service could not be effectively provided from Montreal. I think that would be even truer of British Columbia, which is still farther away.

I think we have to get a proper balance. It is very important to get that balance in such a way that, so far as possible, the users and not the taxpayers pay for the service. This does not mean that there may not be air services so essential to the national interest that they have to be provided even if they will not pay. However we do have to get this balance. We are going to get it, but it is not going to be easy and it is not going to be achieved next week. I am going to keep right on pushing just as hard as I can for the achievement of this, which I think is every bit as important as the railway legislation. The government, as all hon. members know, has made firm recommendations to parliament in this railway legislation. These firm recommendations do not mean that every comma in that bill has got to stay as it is. There would be no sense in sending it to a committee, there would be no sense in studying it in advance or having subcommittees, if that were our attitude. We do believe, however, that along broad lines we have made good recommendations. I hope before the end of this year I will be able to make good recommendations, too, about air policy.

Now, I was just wondering, since we have had a broad ranging discussion, if the committee might feel inclined to carry the first item of my estimates. Then, all specific questions could be dealt with on specific items.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Item agreed to.

Mr. Knowles: That is enough.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am grateful to the committee. I am glad no one minded too much my not making a speech at the beginning.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the acting house leader if he will just record in Hansard the business for tomorrow, for the convenience of members?

Mr. MacNaught: Tomorrow we will consider the main estimates of the department of northern affairs, followed by the Department of Public Works and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

At 10.35 p.m., the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day:]

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

A—Department—

1. Departmental administration (including the former vote for the operation and maintenance of official railway cars, $3,773,800.

1a. Departmental administration, $78,400.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, September 18, 1964

The house met at 10.30 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TABLING OF INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION MINUTES RESPECTING SALARY REVISIONS AND ANNUAL LEAVE

Mr. Speaker: May I ask leave to table the following documents: (a) extract from the minutes of a meeting of the commissioners of internal economy held on Monday, September 14, 1964, authorizing salary revisions for employees of the House of Commons in certain classifications; and (b) extract from the minutes of a meeting of the commissioners of internal economy held on Thursday, September 17, 1964, relating to annual leave for the staff of the House of Commons, both regular full time and sessional.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would it be in keeping with our practice to have these documents made appendices to today's Votes and Proceedings? Perhaps Your Honour knows whether or not this has been done in the past.

Mr. Speaker: It has been suggested to me that while it is not customary to make this an appendix to Hansard—

Mr. Knowles: I suggested Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: —we could, if it was the wish of the house, include it in Votes and Proceedings. Does the house so agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BIRTHDAY CONGRATULATIONS TO LEADER OF OPPOSITION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): May I ask your permission, Mr. Speaker, to convey on behalf of all members of the house, I would hope, on this occasion our felicitations and congratulations to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition on his birthday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: I do not think I can do better than convey to him the traditional wish of many happy returns, with an abundance of health and happiness. There is certainly no doubt whatever, Mr. Speaker, about his health, and I can only think of one thing that might make him happier. It is a source of continuing regret on my part that I am not able to co-operate more wholly in his achievement of that objective.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Nevertheless, on this day there are no party differences between us, and I am sure we all join in wishing him the very best in the days and weeks and months ahead.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate the members of this party with the remarks which have been made by the Prime Minister. We would like to extend to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition our best wishes for many happy returns of this day. We trust that his health will continue to permit him to serve his party and his country; that he will have many more years in which to keep the government on its toes and to make the very excellent contribution which he can make to the public life of this country.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition is fortunate in his good health; it can be said of him, as it was said of one of old, that his eye has not dimmed nor his natural force abated. He is still in good health, and we hope that for many years to come he will be able to continue his public service to the people of Canada whom he has served with such distinction in the past.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is with genuine pleasure that we in the Social Credit party associate ourselves with the remarks of the Prime Minister and the leaders of the other groups in the house in conveying our very sincere wishes on the birthday anniversary that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is today celebrating. We likewise wish him much happiness and good health. We are certainly mindful of the fact that as he enters his seventieth year time is something that none of us can hold back, and as the years approach for all of us we are specially mindful of these birthdays that come around. Thus we offer him our very best wishes. I would say to him, Mr. Speaker, that I do not have any more gifts to offer him than those I have already given him during the past year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Bélanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to add the voice of my own group to that of the others in wishing the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) a happy birthday, good health and many happy returns.

May Divine Providence keep him with his family, first, and then with his party for a long time to come, for he is a perfect gentleman and it is a real pleasure for us to have him as Leader of the Opposition.

[Text]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply touched by the gracious and kindly words of the Prime Minister, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, the hon. member for Red Deer and the hon. member for Charlevoix. I am particularly impressed, as always, by this spirit of friendship in the House of Commons that transcends all partisan considerations. I say to one and all, touched as I am by what they have said, that I hope to be here for a long time. I was also particularly appreciative of the fact that the Prime Minister promised co-operation in the days ahead as in the past.

CANADIAN FLAG

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's) presented the second report of the special committee on a Canadian flag, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL VISIT

ADDRESS BY HER MAJESTY TO BOTH HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with the approach of the visit of Her Majesty the Queen I wonder whether the Prime Minister is in a position to inform the house as to the general program, and in particular whether any consideration has been given to the suggestion I made the other day that the Queen address both houses of parliament. I know this would be an unusual course to follow, but when one considers the importance of this visit which celebrates the one hundredth anniversary of the beginning of the meetings which led to confederation I am sure this gesture on her part would be gratefully appreciated by her loyal Canadian subjects.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the details of the program will be made public within a day or two. The details of the Prince Edward Island and Quebec program have, I believe, already been made public, and one reason for the delay in completing the details of the other part of her visit is to give consideration to the suggestion made by my right hon. friend for the Queen to address parliament during the one day she is in Ottawa.

This may not be possible, Mr. Speaker, though I will reserve the final announcement on the matter until next week; but I can assure my right hon. friend and members of the house that in any event arrangements will be made for the Queen to meet members of parliament while in Ottawa.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question to ask the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Has the letter which appeared in yesterday's edition of the London Times written by Mr. Campbell Stewart, a well known Canadian, been drawn to the Prime Minister's attention, in which Mr. Stewart suggests that Her Majesty's visit should be cancelled in view of the general atmosphere; and would the Prime Minister care to make a comment in respect of this communication?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make on the letter which I have not seen, though I have read a report on it in the newspapers.

[Later:]

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister stated that when Her Majesty the Queen is in Ottawa members will be given an opportunity to meet her. To look our best and not so tired out, would the Prime Minister not consider a two weeks' holiday before this event takes place?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister had an answer and you did not give him a chance to make it.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was going to say the question is of such urgent and immediate importance that I should give the most careful consideration to it before answering.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LA MACAZA, QUE.—TREATMENT OF PEACE DEMONSTRATORS BY R.C.A.F. POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Prime Minister whether he has yet made any decision regarding the request I made on Monday for an independent investigation into the charges of unnecessary brutality on the part of R.C.A.F. guards in dealing with peace demonstrators at La Macaza?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I have asked for a report on the whole matter, which is now on my desk. Having just returned to Ottawa I have not had an opportunity to read that report, but I have had an opportunity of discussing the matter with the minister of defence and I propose to talk to him about it again when I have studied the report. Then I will be in a position to announce whether any further steps should be taken.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether his attention has been drawn to press statements in which at least five or six of the persons who took part in that demonstration have given statements to the press which would indicate that in their opinions there was unnecessary harshness in dealing with these demonstrators? If these charges are true it would seem that some type of independent investigation is called for.

Mr. Pearson: I have not had a chance to see those press reports but I am sure they will be included, Mr. Speaker, in the documentation which I am going to study during the day. I assure my hon. friend that I am as anxious as he is to correct any mistreatment that may have occurred. I would deplore as much as he would any action of the kind charged, but I have to satisfy myself before taking any further steps that the charges are justified, and I propose to make a very strict examination of all the evidence on that point.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the minister's expressed belief in the efficacy of prayer with regard to weather, and his urging members to pray for rain recently, does the minister accept any responsibility for the heavy rains that prevented the Prime Minister from giving his prepared speech at the ceremony held in connection with the ratification of the Columbia river treaty?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. member that it was said at that ceremony that that was the same water we were selling to the United States.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell the house whether it is true that the premier of British Columbia, Mr. Bennett, has offered money to the federal government to make up the deficit for 1964?

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF EASTERN FEED GRAIN AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry. I am wondering whether the minister's attention has been drawn to a resolution adopted earlier this week by the maritime provinces boards of trade that an eastern feed grain agency be established by the government similar in concept to the Canadian wheat board, and will the minister give urgent attention to this forward looking resolution?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, my attention has not as yet been drawn to this resolution, but this problem is before the committee on agriculture and we expect a report some time before Christmas.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDUSTRY

NUMBER OF INFORMATION OFFICERS TO BE ENGAGED BY DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. A week ago today the minister denied in an answer to a question I asked that his department would be hiring 35 information officers, and he agreed to make a statement on Monday. To the best of my knowledge he has not made this statement, and I am wondering whether he would care to make it now.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, during the course of the past week either the hon. member who asked this question or myself have been outside the house, and I am glad today to be able to take this occasion to correct a misunderstanding which appears to have arisen regarding the information staffs of the Department of Industry and the Department of Defence Production.

As I have indicated previously on a number of occasions, the Department of Industry looks to the Department of Defence Production for the provision of the majority of its supporting services. This includes the information service which relates to the preparation of pamphlets, the editing of reports and the dissemination of booklets prepared within the Department of Industry. The information division of the Department of Defence Production serves both departments, industry and defence production.

At the present time the information division of the Department of Defence Production, serving both departments, has eight information officers, three technical administrative staff and five clerical and typing employees. Four more information officers have been appointed and will report for duty shortly. There are, however, no plans to augment the present staff further in the next few months. We will only add to staff as need becomes evident and, of course, within the approved establishment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING MULTILATERAL FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In the light of the views expressed by a distinguished American visitor, Mr. Livingston Merchant, in favour of a multilateral nuclear force for NATO, would the Prime Minister reassure the house of the Canadian government's unchanged opposition to this plan, and on a suitable occasion make a statement on the government's position and its reasons for opposition so there will be an occasion for comment or debate in the house on this highly important matter?

[Mr. Sauvé.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position of the government in this matter remains as set out by me in the house on June 7, 1963 when I said, as found on page 790 of Hansard:

> —I do not think that it will be likely that we would wish to add to our existing responsibilities and commitments by participating in this kind of multilateral nuclear force.

There has been no change in that position.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Has the administration of the United States at any time in recent weeks pressed Canada to follow the suggestion made by Mr. Merchant in the gratuitous advice that he gave to Canada?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no approach made to me, or to my knowledge to any member of the government. At the moment I can only speak for myself, but there has been no approach of any kind on this matter by the United States government.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister does not think that in addition to stating merely that Canada does not want to add to its commitments, some statement as to why Canada does not think this would be a particularly useful addition to the forces of NATO might be made to the house and through the house to the public.

Mr. Pearson: I shall be glad to take this into consideration, Mr. Speaker. It might be a useful thing to do. I think it is also fair to point out that Mr. Merchant, who is not a member of the United States administration at the present time, was speaking as a private individual and to a non-official conference of the Atlantic treaty association.

CONTINUATION OF PRESENT PROVISIONS RESPECTING SHARED PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet may I deal with a question raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam when he asked me last week and again this week, I believe, to clarify the contracting out arrangements as they will apply during the interim period to programs of a primarily social character such as hospital insurance, old age pensions, blind persons allowances, disabled persons allowances and so on. I should like to confirm what I said last week in a tentative answer, that the present provisions of these joint programs will be maintained in all respects throughout the duration of the interim arrangement.

The hon. member also asked what amounts of money were involved in these major programs. Only the province of Quebec has so far indicated that it wishes to enter into contracting out arrangements. On the basis of the estimated federal contributions for the current fiscal year, the amount of money that would be transferred to finance the programs listed in category B in my letter of August 15 will be some $209 million in the case of Quebec. I do not know as yet what position the other provinces will take in this matter.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question to the one answered by the Prime Minister in respect of the opting out provisions, I am sure hon. members will be pleased to have the Prime Minister's assurance with reference to the maintenance of reciprocity and uniformity up to the end of the present agreement. Does transfer of payments also apply only to the term of the present agreement?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I believe so. I would like to check, Mr. Speaker, and make sure that is the right answer.

AIR TRANSPORT

SIGHT REQUIREMENTS FOR PRIVATE PILOT'S LICENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I posed a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I wonder if she has a reply ready today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asked a question with respect to the licensing of private airplane pilots who possess monocular vision. I am advised by my department that the physical standards for civil pilots are set up by the Department of Transport and that these follow closely the international civil aviation organization standards and recommended practices for personnel licensing.

In these standards pilots are required to have vision in both eyes. However, there are some applicants who have vision in only one eye, as a result of which we are asking advice from the defence research board panel on visual problems, which I understand has such an item on the agenda for its meeting in Toronto on November 7. We understand the defence research board is working in close co-operation with the R.C.A.F. institute of aviation medicine.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

SUBSTITUTION OF AFFIRMATION AS ALTERNATIVE IN OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that prospective Canadian citizens are required to swear an oath of allegiance involving the Bible and the phrase "so help me God", and in view of the fact that the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has requested the Department of Justice to consider affirmation as an alternative to swearing the oath, will the minister indicate when he expects to render a decision on this matter?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to say right now when I will be able to make a decision on the matter, but I shall be giving my attention to it so that it may be disposed of as soon as possible.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLOCATION OF FREE TIME TO POLITICAL PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Medicine Hat on September 10, as recorded at page 7828 of Hansard, asked the Secretary of State about the allocation of free political broadcasting time on two C.B.C. series of programs "The Nation's Business" and "Les Affaires de l'Etat." I have inquired of the C.B.C. on behalf of the Secretary of State, and I have been informed that a new series of 20 programs under each of these two titles, on both radio and television, will begin in October 1964 and conclude in August 1965.

The number of periods allocated to each party was determined at a meeting among the representatives of the five political parties and the C.B.C. on August 26, 1964. When the parties failed to reach unanimous agreement among themselves on the division of time, the C.B.C. proposed a division that was acceptable to four of the five parties represented, as follows: Liberals, 7½; Progressive Conservatives, 6½; New Democratic party, 3; Social Credit, 1½; and Le Ralliement Creditistes, 1½. It is on this basis that the current series for the 1964-65 season will proceed.

As I believe the hon. member knows, this is the same division of time which applied to the last series of free time broadcasts on the C.B.C. radio and television networks, and which was confirmed by the board of broadcast governors following a hearing on January 13, 1964, which was called to hear an appeal by the Social Credit party.

The formula used by the C.B.C. is that set out in section III, parts I (b) and (c) of the C.B.C. manual of policies and regulations on "Political and Controversial Broadcasting." Mr. Speaker, I can table a copy of this manual on political and contraversial broadcasting if the house wishes that this be done.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): As a supplementary question, did the parliamentary secretary ascertain that the allocation the C.B.C. has now come up with is in keeping and in compliance with the formula he is going to table?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that this is accurate.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question either to the parliamentary secretary or to the Prime Minister, can we be informed whether the half hours of last Sunday and Monday enjoyed by two of the party leaders are part of this allocation, or are they in addition thereto?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I shall ascertain what the view of the C.B.C. is in relation to those particular broadcasts.

[Mr. Stewart.]

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE USE OF FORMER R.C.A.F. BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Since the 60 days have now expired during which applications were to be received in connection with the disposal of the Kitsilano property, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and ask him whether any proposal has been received from the city of Vancouver.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The mayor of Vancouver has sent a telegram indicating that the city has a proposal for the setting aside of a downtown site for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in Vancouver to be put together, I understand, under the urban renewal scheme. He has asked the Prime Minister whether it would be possible for representatives of the city council to come to Ottawa to discuss details of this particular scheme. A reply has been sent to the mayor of Vancouver inviting him down at the earliest possible moment.

CROWN ASSETS

ST. HYACINTHE, QUE.—DISPOSITION OF FEDERAL BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production.

Could he tell us whether the representatives of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and the municipal council of St. Hyacinthe have reached an agreement on the purchase of the federal buildings which have become surplus in that city?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of that particular case, but I will have an investigation carried out.

[Text]

CANADIAN COASTGUARD

REVISION OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING AID TO FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport but in his absence I shall direct it to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that we are rapidly approaching the hurricane season on Canada's east coast, which increases the hazards for all maritime fishermen, will the Prime Minister inform the house whether immediate consideration is being given to changing the regulations governing the duties of our Canadian coastguard, so that our Canadian fishermen can expect to be towed to the nearest port by the coastguard if they become disabled on the high seas?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into that matter and discuss it with the Minister of Transport, whom I shall be seeing tomorrow.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Can he inform the house whether the negotiations respecting the Eskimos are still going on between the federal government and the province of Quebec?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, there have been no recent negotiations or contacts made, either by myself or by my officials.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

WINNIPEG—INVESTIGATION OF FOSTER HOMES FOR CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware of a report in Wednesday's Winnipeg Free Press, arising out of the alleged beating of an Indian child, in which it is said that the zone superintendent of the Indian northern health service in Winnipeg declared that homes are not investigated before Indian children are placed in them because there is no authority for such investigation. Will the minister have this looked into, and see if such investigations cannot in fact be made?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I was most distressed and surprised to hear of the report, and I have already asked my department for a full report on why an investigation did not take place.

HOUSING

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE EVICTIONS FROM VETERANS HOUSING PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in both his capacities as minister and member for his constituency. In view of the fact that the 15th of this month was the deadline for purchase or acceptance of higher rentals in the Fraserview veterans housing project, can he tell us whether non-acceptance means eviction, and whether such orders are now going through?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): This, of course, is a matter concerning Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which does not come under my jurisdiction. I have read the statement made by the leader of the group who says they have no intention of paying the increase. This concerns a small number of people within the area—120 or so, I think—but I would not care to predict at this time what action C.M.H.C. may take in the circumstances.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question. May I ask the acting postmaster general or the parliamentary secretary, in view of the fact that this minister has some responsibility for C.M.H.C., whether any orders have gone out for the eviction of veterans who had not signed agreements by the 15th of this month.

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as the Postmaster General is not here today, I will consider the question of the hon. member as notice, in order that an answer be given to him early next week.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

OTTAWA—POLICY RESPECTING REAL ESTATE TRANSFER FEES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, while I have the floor, may I answer a question put to me by the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau)?

Inquiries of the Ministry

A few days ago the hon. member asked me whether the national capital commission had changed its policy in connection with the transfer of buildings to the city of Ottawa.

There is no change of policy. The only change to take place recently concerns fees for easements.

It is true that recently the city of Ottawa was billed for $100 because from now on a $25 minimum is required.

However, there may be additional amounts added to this minimum because of technical surveys, legal research, travel and other administrative costs.

FINANCE

REMOVAL OF TAX ON MACHINERY OF PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. I know the concern the hon. gentleman has for the promotion of industry in this country, and I should like to ask him this. Now that we know that in the United States, the United Kingdom and Japan no tax is imposed on production machinery, will he approach the Minister of Finance in an effort to have this tax withdrawn so that Canadian companies may be competitive?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I would be glad to discuss the desirability of that suggestion with my colleague the Minister of Finance. I would, however, point out to the hon. member for Peterborough the remarkable success in expanding the manufacturing industry which has been experienced in the past year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISPOSITION OF OFFICE FURNITURE OF FIRST WOMAN MEMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, most sentimental in nature and affecting the members of this house, I think. It was some months ago that the Minister of Public Works did me the courtesy of placing in storage the original furniture of the first woman to sit in the House of Commons, namely Miss Agnes MacPhail. It was my understanding that everything was moving satisfactorily until the member who presently represents that riding stuck his oar in; and I should like to know, as a result of the confusion he confounded, whether the Minister of Public Works can now tell us what has been the disposition of the furniture of the first woman to sit in this House of Commons.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): The last time I heard of this was a month or two ago, but I think the leader of the New Democratic party will remember that I contacted him and told him that because of the sentimental value attached to this furniture we were ready to dispose of it, and we were charging him to see that it was disposed of in the best interests of those concerned.

Mr. Winch: Will the minister tell us to whom he said that?

Mr. Douglas: To me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deschatelets: I might say that the first request was received from the hon. member who has brought up the matter today.

A little later we had another request from another hon. gentleman, and I thought in the circumstances the best thing to do was to dispose of the matter through the leader of the New Democratic party. At that time, if I remember correctly, the hon. member for Vancouver East was not here; otherwise I would surely have told him about it. I intend to inquire on Monday about this matter, because I thought it had been disposed of and that everybody was satisfied. I see today that this is not the case, so I will have a second look at it.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works, and ask him whether my request to him was not almost identical to that of the hon. member who raised this question, inasmuch as my request was that these particular items should be given to the museum in the county of Grey, in which my predecessor lived, for the purpose of preserving them for posterity. I did not in any way confuse the issue. If it was confused, it was confused by one or both of the other two hon. gentlemen who dealt with this matter.

Mr. Winch: If the hon. member had not stuck in his oar the museum would have had this furniture two months ago.

Mr. Deschatelets: I have to agree that both requests were made with the same objective in mind.

Mr. Winkler: Would the minister say, then, that the last statement by the hon. member for Vancouver East is entirely false?

Mr. Deschatelets: I will let the hon. member deal directly with the hon. member for Vancouver East.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

National parks—

15. Administration, operation and maintenance including wildlife resources conservation and development, administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act and payments to land owners who maintain migratory bird habitat in accordance with agreements entered into on terms and conditions approved by the governor in council, payment to the national battlefields commission for the purposes and subject to the provisions of an act respecting the national battlefields at Quebec and grants as detailed in the estimates, $11,485,600.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister how far his department has progressed with the development of service centres in the Banff national park and other national parks adjacent to the trans-Canada highway. We know this program is being developed, and I think we can expect from the minister a progress report in this regard. In addition I would ask the minister what are the future plans for general access to Jasper national park and the provision of service centres in regard to it. As traffic develops, what provision has the government made for these service centres?

I would also ask the minister whether he can give us a forecast of developments with regard to connections with the Jasper-Banff highway, the Columbia icefields highway, from the east as an extension of the connections from central Alberta, from Red Deer and Rocky Mountain House. This is of particular interest to us in northern Alberta, because I suggest to the minister that many more people would visit the splendid facilities of Jasper national park and those adjacent areas that are so attractive to Canadian tourists—not necessarily only to foreign tourists—if we could establish a shorter circuit. Very many people have told me they would go to the mountain parks much more frequently if the round trip, Jasper, Lake Louise, Banff, around to Calgary, were not so long. It is too much for even the long week end. Therefore it would be so attractive if some central connection were provided. In the light of the minister's answers in this regard, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may ask some more questions.

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up too much time of the committee, but I wish to bring to the attention of the committee a matter to which I referred in debate on May 10, 1961, when the estimates of this department were taken up. My particular reference is to historic sites and to Fort Ellice in my constituency. Some 133 years ago a fort was built on the banks of the Assiniboine just five miles down from the junction with the Qu'Appelle river, and this fort served for 50 years as a stop-off between Winnipeg and Edmonton. Red River carts coming in for furs travelled from Winnipeg to Edmonton. It was a stop-off place; it was on a waterway between Winnipeg and Fort Ellice. It also served as an Indian trading post. Perhaps I may briefly mention that it had a trading post, a carpenter's shop, men's quarters, belfry, cottage, blacksmith's shop, chief factor's house, dairy, storehouses, warehouse and flagstaff. It was fully equipped to serve the area before it was opened to settlers from eastern Canada or Europe.

This site, which I consider to be an historic site, has been considered a number of times by the historic sites and monuments board of Canada. In 1936 the board considered it and for some reason or other decided to do nothing about it. In 1958 Monsignor A. d'Eschambault was instructed by the board "to study the situation especially in connection with the role played by Fort Ellice in supplying pemmican for the fur trade economy". I believe the board received a report in this connection. In 1960 the board considered Fort Ellice among ten other sites, and placed it in ninth position.

This is either an historic site or it is not. Placing Fort Ellice even in ninth place is an admission that it is an historic site, and nothing at all has been done about it in so far as the historic sites and monuments board is concerned.

However, Mr. Chairman, the people of that area have tried to do something to preserve their past. This fort is only a mile or so from the village of St. Lazare, which is settled by good Canadians of French ancestry. In 1930 St. Lazare and the municipality of Ellice erected a cairn just off the traces that are left of the stockade, and have developed a picnic ground thereon. I ask the minister to find another community in Canada that has on its own tried to preserve what we consider to be an historic site, and which the board has admitted to be an historic site by putting it in ninth place.

Just this year Fowillard Brothers, a firm of businessmen, of St. Lazare decided on their own to rebuild this fort at their own expense. I hope the minister is paying attention, Mr. Chairman. The material for the stockade is there. They intend to rebuild the warehouse and convert it into a museum. They have some 60 or 70 museum pieces already gathered in and around St. Lazare to put into this building.

These people are doing this on their own. As a matter of fact the property on which this fort is situated is registered in the name of Fowillard Brothers. However, they would be prepared to turn it over to the nation, and they are doing this rebuilding on their own without having received a broken nickel from this board which decided to place it ninth on the list. Perhaps the board is waiting until all traces of this fort have disappeared, but the local population is not going to let that happen.

I have visited the site. The area where the stockade was is still visible, as is the foundation of the big chimney and the stone foundations of various buildings that were on the site. I refer to the buildings I have already mentioned. There is a badly neglected cemetery there, one portion being where the Indian dead were buried and a portion where the whites were buried.

The minister's department finances the historic sites and monuments board of Canada, and according to vote 15 some $840,000 has been allotted for this purpose. When we come to vote 15 I should like the minister to tell us to which historic sites this money is allotted, and whether we can expect some consideration in this regard if for no other reason than the fact that the local people and businessmen are anxious to preserve this site for posterity. This site in west central Manitoba is just as important, I feel, as any other historic site in Canada.

With these few remarks I would close by saying I hope the minister will give this matter some consideration, if not in the 1964-65 estimates then at some future time. I have old pictures of the fort which I could show the minister. I could show him the remains of what is left. If the minister were to see those sunken graves he would find just pieces of boards marking the spots. He would not even be able to read the names of the dead buried there. Instead of continuing to neglect and ignore our past and to spend money on other parts of Canada, I contend that Fort Ellice, which played such an important part in the fur trade of central Manitoba, deserves careful consideration by the minister.

[Mr. Mandziuk.]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to delay the deliberations of the committee. I have informed the minister that I do wish to draw a certain matter to his attention, but first and foremost may I say that I think the brief exchange which took place this morning during the question period is quite relevant to this particular item.

I regret that the exchange regarding my predecessor, Miss Agnes MacPhail, took place because we all know the contribution she made on behalf of the women in Canada so far as parliament is concerned. I am sure we are all aware of the era which she opened up for representation in this house of the fair sex. We in the constituency of Grey-Bruce are proud in that she made such a valuable contribution here and such a deep impression on the country and, generally speaking, on many other countries of the world.

The hon. member for Vancouver East implied that somehow or other I had confounded the issue when in fact my efforts were directed only to assisting that which he himself thought was necessary. Granted he fell upon the situation as it existed, and if there is some kudos here I am perfectly willing to allow him to have every bit of it. On the other hand, inasmuch as he might not have known at that time that there was a county museum in the city of Owen Sound, I felt that this would be the proper place for these items of furniture to be preserved for prosterity in honour of the lady referred to, and I make no apologies at all for that which I did, which was merely to assist and to see that these items were placed in the proper hands.

Mr. Winch: Would the hon. member permit a question. I do not want to get into any fight about this, but did he not receive the information that in the weeks which followed the steps to preserve this furniture which belonged to Agnes MacPhail, the first woman member of the House of Commons, an arrangement was made between, shall I say, the Liberal party and the council that it should be handed over for the purpose of being placed in the museum? That was the understanding, and if I had the opportunity I could bring down from my office all the files on this matter which would show that the decision that the furniture should go to the museum had been absolutely agreed upon.

However, after that agreement had been reached something happened, and that something was you yourself, sir, coming into the picture. Did you not know that agreement had been reached?

Mr. Winkler: As I said in the course of the question period, that is entirely false. I wrote one letter to the minister which would support the views which have now been expressed. As far as I am concerned I saw nothing of an arrangement. However, I did discover that it was the hon. member himself who first noticed the fact that this furniture might be disposed of, and I am sure on investigation he would find that my letter in support of his action was written long before a determination was made by the government and any other interested parties.

If that does not satisfy him he must then investigate further, and I am sure he will find that what I am saying is the truth and that he was endeavouring to make something wrong out of the effort which I have put in. If that transpires to be the case then I think a successful conclusion will have been reached, and I extend nothing but my thanks to the hon. member and the ministry for having worked it out in this way. I do not wish to enter the question from the point of view of arguing it; if somebody else is using it for other purposes, then that is fine by me.

Mr. Winch: Would the hon. member permit one further question. There is no use carrying on this debate, so will he and I agree, kudos or no kudos, that this furniture goes to the museum?

Mr. Winkler: That is absolutely agreed upon, and all I want to say is that I did not raise the question.

To proceed with my further point on these estimates, the matter I want to raise I have brought up on numerous occasions previously. At the outset may I say that in this matter I have the concurrence of the hon. member from the constituency of Bruce. It concerns the establishment of a national park in the province of Ontario in the area known as the Bruce peninsula. The reasons for the establishment of a park there are well known, as I have laid them out in detail prior to this occasion. The minister is well aware of the representations I have made. The question has been discussed with him in detail as well as several reports which were produced; and if he mentions this matter in his reply I would ask him not to allude to them because of the nature of the reports.

I mention this so the committee and the people of that area will know that with a considerable amount of effort I did at one time bring the government of Ontario and the government here at Ottawa together to consider this matter, and it was under serious consideration at the time of the 1963 election. It took me some time to bring these two levels of government together at that time, but roadblocks did exist to stay this proposition.

I would ask the minister to give us some information in this regard as soon as possible. I do not suggest that he do so within 60 days, but I certainly hope that in the course of this year, or perhaps early next year during the preparation of further estimates, in the interests of those facilities that should be maintained in national parks for the service of the metropolitan areas in southern Ontario which have easy access, and considering the number of tourists from both Canada and the United States who visit these areas each year, some even by boat, he would consider it most desirable to expedite the establishment of a national park in this area.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, very briefly I should like to draw to the attention of the minister some of the representations that have been made over the years in reference to the attitude of the province of Alberta toward some of the national park areas in that province. First, several months ago the minister answered a question I asked on orders of the day and said he was going to bring forward a new statement of policy respecting the development particularly of tourist accommodation within the national parks. If I have missed having this policy drawn to my attention I am sorry, but so far I have not heard of it, I think there is some confusion, particularly in Banff national park and Jasper national park, regarding what will be allowed and what will not be allowed, and how much discretion certain officers of the department have in making decisions as to what is in fact going to be acceptable and what is not acceptable in this field of tourist accommodation development. I hope that policy will be announced fairly soon in order to clear the air in respect of this situation.

The other subject I should like to discuss, Mr. Chairman, is the application the province of Alberta has made to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources respecting Wood Buffalo park in northern Alberta. That park may not be well known, but the provincial legislature passed a resolution, I think unanimously, during its last session requesting the federal government to turn back this land area to provincial jurisdiction.

There are many good reasons for this, probably the most important of which is that the province of Alberta wants to proceed with some development of the natural resources existing within this very large park area. We must also take into consideration the fact that this area is at the extreme northern edge of Alberta, with a part of it extending into the Northwest Territories. It lies in an area that will never, or at least in the foreseeable future, attract large numbers of tourists because at the present time there is no road into this park of the kind tourists will travel. It lies in an area of Canada where the summer season is short. Circumstances are such that I feel safe in saying that for a long time this area will not be suitable for any kind of development which might attract great numbers of tourists.

I should like to point out that there are some very important and valuable deposits of minerals in this area that could be developed very profitably for the province of Alberta. I might say I appreciate the attitude of the department of northern affairs in its belief that the people of Canada want more rather than fewer national parks, and I agree with that feeling. It is so obvious that more and more people are travelling around the country making good use of national park facilities, particularly for camping and holidaying, that it hardly needs to be mentioned; but I do think that in pursuing this policy which, as I have said, is certainly desirable as far as I am concerned, the department ought to be directing its efforts toward developing more national parks in areas which lend themselves to the prospect of attracting tourists.

At the present time any potential development reasonably close to the trans-Canada highway ought to be given prior consideration, and I suggest to the minister that his department give some consideration to taking over what is known as the dinosaur park in southern Alberta. While I am not authorized to speak on behalf of the province or the government of Alberta in suggesting that the province might be willing to transfer this park area to the national parks board, I think perhaps the province of Alberta would be willing to consider exchanging this area for the Wood Buffalo park in northern Alberta.

There are some unique features about this dinosaur park area which would make it far more suitable as a national park than as a provincial park. It is the only area that has been set aside anywhere in Canada with this kind of historical significance so far as fossils are concerned, and it has attracted the international attention of those people who are interested in the vertebrae remains of dinosaurs several million years old. There certainly is a great potential tourist attraction in this area, and it seems desirable that it be administered and developed by the national parks board. Perhaps I should also mention that this area is located only about 20 miles from the trans-Canada highway, so there is certainly no difficulty in respect of building access roads for the massive flow of tourists travelling across this country every summer.

Mr. Chairman, that is all I want to say at this time in an attempt to make known to the minister and Canadians generally that the province of Alberta does take the attitude that Wood Buffalo park should be turned back to the province, because it will not be developed for a number of years, and that there are other places in Alberta that the minister ought to consider in so far as developing additional park lands which Canadians generally seem to want.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to know that other members of this house are interested in Wood Buffalo park. The greater portion of this enormous land area, approximately 14,500 square miles, is situated in my own constituency of Athabasca. There has not been much publicity given to this park over the years, I suppose for the perfectly good reason that it is not and never will be a playground in the sense that Banff and Jasper parks are. However, this park is the home of a very large herd of plains buffalo which were put up there some years ago as a result of the farsightedness of some members of the federal government. These buffalo have flourished in this area, and it is a pity that they are so far off the beaten track they are practically unseen.

At this point I should like to direct the minister's attention to the fact that Elk Island park, just east of Edmonton, is also the home of a herd of buffalo, but does not receive the publicity it deserves. I suggest that more money be spent in advertising our buffalo herds, especially in Elk Island park. This area is in the constituency of the hon.

member for Edmonton East, and he asked me to bring this matter to the attention of the minister in order to speed up the passage of his estimates.

As early as 1958 I took it upon myself to look into the question of returning Wood Buffalo park to the province of Alberta. I am delighted to hear, though in a roundabout way from the hon. member for Medicine Hat, that the province of Alberta are taking a new look at their attitude with regard to co-operation in this matter, because in all the overtures I made in contacts with officials of the province on several occasions their attitude has always been all or nothing at all. They want the whole of Wood Buffalo park that lies within the province of Alberta turned back to the province without any consideration for the interests of the federal government in preserving Wood Buffalo park as a national playground and as a home for wildlife.

As hon. members probably know, the only flock of whooping cranes in the world nests every summer in Wood Buffalo park. Those who like to use wildlife as a complete argument in favour of the federal government retaining the whole of Wood Buffalo park will say that 14,500 square miles are needed for some 30 whooping cranes to nest. This, of course, is patently ridiculous. We do not even need that much land to pasture the two magnificent herds of buffalo. At the same time I think some of this area should be retained particularly for the wild woods buffalo, but it would be quite possible to turn back the major portion of Wood Buffalo park to the province.

There are vast mineral resources in this area. At the present time no commercialization whatsoever is allowed under the National Parks Act. I am inclined to agree with this as a general principle for our national parks; but if the size of Wood Buffalo park were decreased, which I think is sensible, we would not have to change the National Parks Act. It would then be possible to make an assessment of the mineral and other resources, once a large portion of the area was turned back to the province.

However, I want to say again that before the federal government can act in this matter I think it must have a very firm commitment from the province indicating that the provincial officials are at least willing to meet the federal government half way, so that a long view can be taken of the whole national parks problem for the purpose of arriving at some sensible adjustment. This can only be done, of course, by open and friendly discussion. The closed door attitude which I encountered in this regard over a period of five years achieved absolutely nothing. The former administration finally did get the door open by offering the provincial government a sizeable portion of Wood Buffalo park as a basis for entering into further discussions. However, the election unfortunately interfered with this matter, and I am not sure what the present situation is with regard to taking a new look at our national parks.

I think a great deal more can be done with respect to setting up national parks farther south. In my view the province should co-operate in some kind of land trade. It need not necessarily be acre for acre; in fact a much smaller area might be provided as a new home for the buffalo, perhaps in the Cypress hills or at Wainwright or at Red Deer. Instead of going up a blind alley by talking about whooping cranes, this might be a very fair exchange from the recreational point of view for people who would want to go to such a place for their summer holidays.

I think I would be remiss if I did not pay tribute to Mr. Olsen, the superintendent of Wood Buffalo park, for his magnificent work in caring for both the plains buffalo and the wild woods buffalo which inhabit that region. In the last few years there has been some difficulty because of the ravages of anthrax, which could presumably destroy the whole of the buffalo herd if it were not kept under control. Mr. Olsen and his staff, with the co-operation of the health of animals branch, have been able to keep the disease under control. At the present time they are faced with the rather large and difficult task of inoculating these wild animals. I am quite sure that any expense to which we may be put to preserve these last two significant herds of buffalo will be well worth while, inasmuch as people for generations to come will be able to enjoy seeing these herds.

With regard to the question of accessibility to parks, I should like to urge the minister to use his influence with the other members of the government to make sure that when trans-Canada highway No. 2 is built, as it will be, it will go far enough north to link our magnificent northern parks all across Canada. I suggest that this might be pressed now as one of our national centennial projects. I should like to see trans-Canada highway No. 2 or confederation highway, as I prefer to call it, well on its way, if not completed, by 1967.

I suggest it should link Riding Mountain national park in Manitoba, Prince Albert national park in Saskatchewan and a new park in the Cold Lake area where there is a magnificent lake which is the equal of any other in Canada. I suggest that the highway should then bypass Edmonton to the north, proceed to Jasper park and perhaps fork somewhere in the Whitecourt area with one fork leading to the Alaska highway.

One difficulty that is encountered in setting up national parks in Canada is the temperature of the water in the lakes. With natural gas so readily available in northern Alberta it seems to me it would be a very easy thing to develop large outdoor swimming pools, heat them by natural gas jets and perhaps raise the temperature of the water by 20 degrees. The people who live on the prairies and visitors would then be able to take advantage of these beautiful northern parks for purposes of family swimming at temperatures which are not too cold.

I do not wish to delay the passage of the minister's estimates any longer. I hope he and his department can get together with the provincial authorities of Alberta and take a new look at the readjustment of the size of the parks and the permitting of commercial development. I think also some attention should be given to the creation of new parks farther south in order that we may have a complete chain of national parks serving our people.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a few words, not about Wood Buffalo park but with regard to one of the most popular parks in the country, Prince Edward Island national park, about which I have not noted a great deal in earlier statements emanating from the minister. I have been most impressed with the growth of this park and its use during the tenure of office of the minister's three predecessors. Tourism is the most rapidly expanding and most expandable industry in the province of Prince Edward Island, and the federal government is able to contribute mightily through its parks policy.

There are developments of late which have caused me some concern. The Prince Edward Island park is largely a beach park and is recreational because of the bathing facilities it provides and its very fine golf course. It used to have a program which drew appreciative comment from hundreds of thousands of visitors, and I have been alarmed to discover that this program has been abandoned under the present government. It was a recreational program, and for many years we had a fine recreational director there.

I have now found that the recreational hall is locked up, and on August 7 I wrote a letter to the minister to which I received no reply. This discourtesy to myself I do not mind, but I must protest on behalf of the people concerned. It is extremely important that the recreation program be not abandoned, but that it be developed. More and more tourists are coming to P.E.I. every year. Local tourist operators are providing more facilities, and there is never any trouble about accommodating visitors. But it behooves the park authorities to provide the best possible recreational program.

I would hope that some imaginative leadership might produce a little more development in the Rustico section of the park. It is an historic village, very old, and one of the unique fishing centres in the maritime provinces. I am also interested in what is happening in the Fort Amherst historic park, which was set up just a few years ago. Fort Amherst reflects not only the English regime but also the French regime, and I find it difficult to see significant or tangible marks of development in recent months. I would hope no opportunity will be missed to develop this park.

Another problem which I have discussed with the minister's predecessors is the enlargement of the present park by giving it greater width or breadth, whichever word is preferable. It is a long strip taking in a great deal of beach, but for many purposes greater depth is required. I believe the P.E.I. government was prepared to turn over land to the dominion government and the department in order to increase the width of the park and provide for greater development, but it is my understanding that this has not been accepted and I would like to know why.

I am also extremely anxious to know something about the second national park promised by the government some months ago, and I would like to know particularly where it is going to be established. Because I want to see the present session end some day before we begin another one, I shall terminate my remarks but certainly not my interest in this subject.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I would like to enter a plea with the minister of northern affairs on behalf of the Minister of Public Works, and in the interests of cabinet solidarity I at once declare that my plea is entirely gratuitous and not based on any behind scenes arrangement with the minister. My plea is that the minister do something to rescue the Minister of Public Works from the dilemma in which the national parks administration has placed him in respect to the operations of the trans-Canada highway.

This highway runs through several major national parks in the west, and under existing arrangements the national parks administration levies a toll on vehicles entering national parks. This has forced the Minister of Public Works to depart from the concept of a national toll-free highway from coast to coast.

I myself have travelled this highway from Alberta across into B.C., and on the basis of an informal calculation I believe it is the most expensive piece of toll highway in the world, particularly that section in the eastern part of B.C. and the area adjacent to Banff national park. Toll costs amount to roughly $1 per hour of driving time. I have travelled on turnpike roads in the United States, and I know it is possible to travel on them for a whole day at modern highway speeds for less money than that.

I made reference to this matter when the estimates of the Department of Public Works were discussed last year, but inasmuch as the basic decision apparently lies within the jurisdiction of the minister of northern affairs I suggest to him that it is a matter which requires rectification in the interests of the comfort of his colleague, if for no other reason. As a matter of fact I made reference to this problem when speaking to the courteous young woman on duty at the park gates. I asked her why we had to pay a toll on the trans-Canada highway. She replied in a most adept manner and I pressed with a second question, whereupon she said "Why don't you take it up with the Prime Minister?" I was sorely tempted to identify myself as a member of parliament but I decided not to, and merely said that perhaps I would do just that.

This may not appear to be a weighty or serious matter. The levy is $2 per year, which entitles one to travel through any of the national parks in the country. Nevertheless it is a matter which should receive immediate and serious attention in the interests of those of us who use the trans-Canada highway for the purpose of travelling across Canada and not for the purpose of visiting national parks.

The minister knows I come from a part of B.C. that has scenic aspects exceeding anything to be found in Banff or any of the other parks in that region. If we in the coastal areas of B.C. want to enjoy scenery we have no reason to travel to Banff.

Mr. Byrne: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Barnett: The hon. member for Kootenay East says that is a matter of opinion. I am not trying to decry the scenic beauties of the Kootenays, but before these estimates pass I hope the minister will give us some indication of what plans he has to deal with this question, and to return the trans-Canada highway to the purpose for which it was designed. This is a nuisance which is bound to increase as the volume of traffic using the trans-Canada highway grows, unless the tolls are removed.

Mr. Rapp: My remarks will be directed mainly to the subject of the Prince Albert national park. I should like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that during the summer a number of university undergraduates apply for employment on the golf courses and in other places. I know that a number of my constituents, as well as students from other areas, sometimes have difficulty in getting these jobs. The Waskesiu golf course is a great attraction not only to the people of Saskatchewan and neighbouring provinces, but also to a large number of tourists from the United States who visit it for a week or two on their way to lac la Ronge, particularly in the fall, to fish for trout.

Sympathetic consideration should be given to applications from students who wish to work on this course and, in addition, every effort should be made to provide adequate accommodation for visitors. I have heard tourists say they found great difficulty in getting proper accommodation. As the minister no doubt knows, a year or two ago the golfing fees at the Waskesiu course were increased. Later, as a result of complaints from tourists, they were reduced to the amount originally charged.

Many people have applied for posts as park wardens. It seems to me the qualifications required for these jobs are very stiff, and perhaps consideration could be given to making these qualifications less difficult to achieve than in the past. My main point, though, is that undergraduates who wish to obtain work during their vacations should be given a chance to do so. It is sometimes difficult and expensive for students to apply for jobs in other provinces far away from their homes. I think these circumstances should be taken into consideration. I am told that at lac la Ronge itself everything possible is being done to attract more tourists from the United States. This is obviously needed, because these people come thousands of miles and sometimes they find it difficult to obtain lodgings which offer them all the facilities they need to enjoy their holidays.

This is all I wish to say at the present time. I hope the minister will look into the questions I have raised. I would appreciate any action he can take in this regard.

Mr. Fane: May I take the opportunity to make a few brief comments and ask a few questions of the minister at this time. My remarks all concern Elk Island national park, which lies wholly within my constituency of Vegreville. I suppose I should thank my hon. friend from Athabasca for putting in a plug for this area, one which I had intended to make. He has helped me that much. I do agree that a park such as Elk Island should receive more publicity, as he suggested. May I suggest to the minister that if I am not in my place when he rises to reply to this discussion he should answer my questions and put the answers on the record in full, because as the result of another engagement I shall probably be out of the house when he replies to the points raised in the debate.

The heading of this item, item 15, is "national parks, historic sites and monuments—administration, operation and maintenance of parks". This is the only place where Elk Island national park is mentioned. The estimates contain an item of estimated expenditure amounting to $326,200 to cover all those things I have mentioned and I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that considering all the expenditures which are needed in the parks this amount will have to be spread out pretty thinly. It would look as though Elk Island national park is again becoming the Cinderella park of Canada as it was in 1958, when I came here. After a great deal of hard work—and I certainly bothered all the ministers—this Cinderella park of Canada reached a stage a year ago where that title was no longer applicable. I should like the minister to give us a breakdown, an itemized statement showing what expenditures within that park are included in this sum of $326,200. As I have just said, it will have to be spread pretty thinly; there will not be very many extras this year.

Elk Island national park has been through several phases. It began as a park set aside solely for buffalo. As time went on it became a recreation centre, and because of the extent of wildlife there—buffalo, elk, moose and deer—and also because of the severe winters occurring from time to time, it became necessary to develop a farming phase so as to provide fodder to keep these animals alive throughout the winter. At one time the herd of buffalo in the park numbered between 1,200 and 1,500. I have no official information, but I have been told that excluding this year's calves the herd numbers fewer than 500 animals at the present time. I do not know how correct my information is, but assuming it is correct I think this is a very small number of buffalo to have in a park the size of Elk Island. The feed situation is always very good there, and I think that park should be able to pasture somewhere between 500 and 1,000 head all the time. I would like the minister to take note of this point, because I have been asked many times how many animals the government intends to keep there.

For quite some years there has been a project afoot in regard to building a museum in Elk Island park. This is something that I think should be continued. I worked very hard on this during the years when the party to which I belong formed the government, and I seemed to be getting somewhere. I just do not know where that item has been relegated to at the moment; sometimes it is rather difficult to find out.

However, Mr. Chairman, there is a small museum there. It is contained in a house of the original type that was built by the people from central Europe when they came to this country. It is very well preserved and well looked after, but it is very small and can house very few of the items that a museum should be able to house. In my opinion this project should be continued and carried to completion, because this area is very productive of museum pieces and there should be somewhere in which they could be housed. There would not be any trouble in getting somebody to look after a museum of that type.

There is also very great need for a large swimming pool close to the lake at Sandy beach. I know that a swimming pool is quite an extensive project, but we must have one because at times the water in the lake is not too good for swimming; there is a great deal of algae, leeches and things like that in the water, and it is just not satisfactory. Provision should be made for a large swimming pool there because most of the water that is available at the present time is not very satisfactory. Water could be provided through the purification system that was installed there in the last few years.

I have also been asked about a second golf course on the park. There is one nine hole course that I believe is very popular; it is supposed to be a very good course. I would not have the slightest idea what makes a good golf course, but many people who play there tell me it is very difficult to get a game on a holiday, Saturday or Sunday because the crowd which lines up to play is so large and is more than one nine hole course can handle. It has been suggested that another golf course of similar size be provide in order to give these facilities to a great many more people. I realize very well that extra things like that will certainly take away from the amount of land available on which to raise buffalo. However, Mr. Chairman, another nine hole golf course would not take up that much room and would not make very much difference. Again I would ask the minister to answer the questions I have raised when he deals with points which hon. members have put forward. I will not be in my seat when the minister replies, but I hope he will deal with these matters at that time.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to speak at length, but I wish to raise a few questions with respect to the administration of Mount Revelstoke park, at the request of a number of residents of Revelstoke including some well known members of the minister's own party. I raised these questions when the former minister was in office. I did get some information, but apparently a number of people consider there is justification for criticism of the administration of this park.

I might say that I do not know the superintendent and have never met him, but I have known the park area very well ever since I was a young man. The previous inquiries were directed to me by the residents of whom I spoke, and I put questions on the order paper. The residents were talking about the waste of public funds and so on, and I believe their contention was proven when as a result of questions that I asked I discovered that the superintendent's house cost $48,000. It has cost more since; repairs and alterations have been carried out on the house since that time. I would like the minister to inform the committee how many park superintendents' houses in Canada have cost $48,000 plus, and whether this is government policy in this respect; because it has been the cause of considerable criticism and I think justifiably so.

Then, Mr. Chairman, I want to know whether it is the custom in the parks for the employees to cut the wood for the park superintendent and put it in the woodshed. This was brought to my attention, and I asked questions about it. It was discovered that the wood was cut for the superintendent at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada. The feeling apparently was that this poor park superintendent could not afford to buy his own fuel or anything like that, poor chap; so they cut the wood and put it in the woodshed. On one occasion his wife did not like fir and made them take it all out and put birch in the shed. I would ask the minister, is it customary for the taxpayers of Canada to supply the fuel for a park superintendent who lives within a quarter of a mile of a city?

I know a good many employees in this park, and I have been informed that they were set to work helping a contractor build houses while their salary was being paid by the government of Canada. This was proven to be correct; the answer was that there was some quid pro quo, or something of that sort; the park labour was donated and then the contractor did a bit of work for the government of Canada. But no figures were given in this respect.

I want to ask whether it is the policy of the park, and I have been informed that they at the expense of the government of Canada with respect to the building of houses and other works in parks. I also want to know how much free labour the government of Canada is supposed to provide with respect to looking after the gardens and lawns of the officials of our parks. If they do not get salaries sufficient to pay for such things like any ordinary citizen, then it may be justified. I also want to ask about salaries. I want to know what is the salary of the superintendent, what are his academic qualifications for the post, and what previous posts he has held. Also, what was his experience prior to being appointed superintendent of the park? I just ask these questions of behalf of these ladies and gentlemen so they can be published in the Revelstoke Review with the minister's reply.

I now come to the administration of the park. In recent years some quite expensive log cabins have been built on top of mount Revelstoke, and I have been informed by someone who worked on them that they cost about $15,000 each. I am also informed that it is now the intention of the administration to tear down these log cabins, which have been very well built. I should like the minister to tell us what is the policy of the administration of the park with respect to these log cabins on top of mount Revelstoke, and to tell us, if they are to be torn down, why they are being torn down and what was their purpose in the first place, this money having been spent on them. I should also like to know what was their actual cost, because I was informed that they cost about $15,000 each.

A new road is being built to the top of mount Revelstoke which I understand is being done by contract. I should like the minister to inform the committee who are the contractors and what is the total amount of the contract. I know a little about road construction, having been concerned in the building of a good many miles of highway a few years ago. Also what is the total yardage of earth, rock and shale, and so on, which is to be moved? I would also like the minister to inform the committee whether under present circumstances any of the employees who work in mount Revelstoke park render any assistance at any time to the contractors, their services being paid for by the government of Canada.

I expect the minister will not be able to completely answer these questions today, but I did promise to ask them. The point has now been reached where some people are watching the administration of the park almost daily with a microscopic eye, as are some of the well known members of the minister's party. However, I always bring up complaints whether they come from Liberals or Conservatives. While these particular complaints did not emanate from my own party, I did tell these ladies and gentlemen concerned that I would raise them at the first opportunity on the minister's estimates, and I shall look forward to some comprehensive replies. I am confident that it is not his idea that we should be so lavish in our expenditures on homes for superintendents, engineers and other officials of our parks. We want adequate accommodation, but we do not want luxury.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I rise to refer to an application which has been before the national historic sites committee for a number of years concerning Fort Walsh in the southwestern part of Saskatchewan. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Marquette say a few moments ago that there is a priority list which this committee uses in designating these historic sites. Although Fort Walsh is not recognized by the committee as an historic site, I think all hon. members of the committee who know their Canadian history will recognize that it is one of the most important historical sites in the history of Canada. It is maintained at the present time by the R.C.M.P. as a special place to raise their famous horses.

According to a letter which I have from the Minister of Justice, this application has been before this committee for a number of years. I would ask the minister whether he could give me the reason a decision has not yet been made in this matter. I am of the opinion that possibly because of pressure, if I may use that word, from the Department of Justice on behalf of the R.C.M.P. this matter has not been decided to this date. If there is a priority list I should like to know where this application stands on that list. I have had representations from that community, which is in my constituency. It lies in the southwest corner of Saskatchewan in an area known as the Cypress hills in the Maple Creek district. The site itself has natural beauty and is an attraction to tourists. Other speakers on this item have made reference to tourism, and I suggest to the minister that if he wants to gain tourist dollars for Canada this is one area which could be opened up to tourists.

Recently the chamber of commerce in Maple Creek has attempted to make representations to the government in connection with making this an historic site. The members of the chamber of commerce are wondering whether there is anything they can do as an organization to persuade the R.C.M.P. to permit visitors to the fort. I understand why the R.C.M.P. are reluctant to receive visitors at that site, because it is a nuisance. I do not suppose that the budget of the R.C.M.P. provides for looking after tourists, but when I see an item of $728,000 in the minister's estimates relating to this particular activity I do wonder what portion of that amount has been allocated to the province of Saskatchewan.

These people are not asking for very much. All they are asking for is a guide and possibly for some improvement to the road from Maple Creek to the site. I suggest to the minister that this is a less costly project than some of the others which have been suggested today. No request is made for swimming pools and such things—not that I want to detract from anything which another hon. member has said in that regard. However, it seems to me that the request of the chamber of commerce and the people from the Maple Creek area is legitimate, and does not involve high cost.

As I said before, the officials of the R.C.M.P., though not intentionally, are discouraging the opening up of this site, and some of the excuses they have given in this respect cannot be accepted either by myself as the member representing that area or by the constituents I represent. The R.C.M.P. say there have no guides and there are no parking facilities. I realize that there are no guides, and possibly they have not the manpower to provide them; but as far as parking facilities are concerned, the area itself is vast with plenty of range land. I suggest that one of the greatest worries of the officials in that area is that a fire hazard could be created on this grazing land, but I think that could be overcome.

The suggestion of the chamber of commerce in the Maple Creek area is that if this site were in the United States there would be a four lane highway to and from the site, with hot dog stands all along the way. That is not what the chamber of commerce are requesting; they just want recognition of the site by the committee, a few dollars to provide a guide or two during the tourist season, and an improved road. This would not cost very much.

I wonder whether the minister would inform the committee if there has been any consultation on this matter between his department and the Department of Justice. My representations in the past have all been made to the Department of Justice because the R.C.M.P. come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice. However, I have now come to the point where, although I understand the position of the R.C.M.P. officials, I also feel it is time this site is recognized and is opened up to tourists. In the not too distant future I am sure this is going to come, and if the minister agrees with me I suggest that he talk to this committee and put this application high on the list.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw the minister's attention to an historic site known as Fort Cahiaque in my area, located in a very beautiful setting, approximately seven miles from Orillia and one half a mile off the trans-Canada highway. Professor Emerson of the University of Toronto has been doing considerable work in this area and has unearthed some very interesting objects. I was there one day when a heel of a shoe worn by a Frenchman approximately 250 years ago was unearthed. He is also outlining various buildings that existed in that area, including the longhouse. This is a beautiful setting which gradually slopes down into an area that 250 years ago was a lake but which today has gradually receded into a marsh. This area was once the location of one of the largest Indian villages in Ontario, and substantial evidence indicates that it was inhabited by approximately 10,000 Indians. In addition, Champlain stayed for some time in this area. Professor Emerson will be appearing before the board of historic sites later this year, and I ask the minister to give full consideration to his suggestions.

Considering the things we have done in the field of historic site development I think we have overlooked the outstanding contribution made by Champlain, who played a great part in the development of this country. When we consider the hardships that Champlain had to undergo, living in this area infested by mosquitoes, flies, and all sorts of diseases, I think it rates highly as an historic site and further consideration to the re-establishment of this site as an historic site, should be seriously considered, thereby helping to give Champlain his proper place in history in this area, and historically show the build-up of that area. As I say, this site is located near Orillia, one half mile off the trans-Canada highway in a beautifully wooded area in the township of Medonte.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I have two matters I should like to bring to the attention of the minister and his department, one of which concerns generally the province of Alberta and the other concerning my own constituency. The hon. members for Medicine Hat and Athabasca have already referred to the Wood Buffalo park which is located partpartially within the Northwest Territories, but I should like to draw the minister's attention to certain facts in greater detail relating to this park, because I think there is an urgent situation which requires a decision in respect of policy and action coming from that policy as soon as possible.

It is rather interesting to know the part of Alberta that is presently under the jurisdiction of the federal government. Of the total national parks area in Canada, Alberta presently provides 58.8 per cent, and this does not include the Wood Buffalo national park of which we are speaking, that portion in Alberta which is much larger than Prince Edward Island. In other words, this park is so large it exceeds the total national park areas in the rest of Canada. All the national parks in Canada including those in Alberta, other than the Wood Buffalo park, could be placed within the boundaries of the Alberta section of that park and there would still be 1,700 square miles of park area unoccupied.

These figures are even more interesting when based on population. Alberta has approximately one seventh of the population of Canada, and by comparison, Ontario with a high density population, has only 11.8 square miles of national park, while Alberta has 7,042 square miles, not including the Alberta section of the Wood Buffalo national park.

Mr. Chairman, we in Alberta are not against national parks as such because we feel they play a very important part in Canada and will play an even greater part in the future. However, in view of the size of the area now occupied by Wood Buffalo national park, withdrawn from the provincial administration and from natural resources development which would normally take place, this matter becomes extremely important. It is also interesting to note that 10 per cent of the total area of Alberta is taken up by national parks located within that province.

The suggestion made by the minister relating to some policy concerning the Wood Buffalo national park relating to an exchange of areas elsewhere in Alberta at least some of the area taken up by that park is a bit irrelevant. It appears to me that we tend to regard negotiations between the province and the federal government like negotiations with a foreign power, where there is a necessity to drive a hard bargain. I do not think there is any question of trading acre for acre involved, but a question of facing the facts concerned with the problem of working out a solution to the mutual benefit of both the federal and provincial governments, as well as the citizens of the province. Therefore I do not think the suggestion that has been made is realistic at all, particularly if the minister is suggesting that because the buffalo preserve was named as a park in 1922 by the government of that day, Alberta must now be penalized by the request that it provide a total alternate of 20,717 square miles of national parks. This is far out of proportion to the 4,933 square miles in the eight other provinces. I do not include Quebec in those figures because Quebec has not given land for national parks as such.

I believe it is the responsibility of the government to take a very hard second look at this whole matter, and to do so rather quickly. I do not think any change in policy regarding Wood Buffalo national park need jeopardize the policy of the government in relation to other national parks. The transfer of natural resources to the provinces in 1930 prohibits federal development of the resources. In Wood Buffalo national park, at the present time the federal government is in the business of granting timber leases. More than ten million board feet of timber are being taken out of this park annually. Trap lines are being licensed, and fur is exported from the park area. The value in 1961-62, the latest figure I have, amounted to more than $77,000. The total production from commercial fishing during that same year amounted to something like 114,000 pounds.

When Wood Buffalo national park is returned to the province, as I think it should be, the many other resources there, waiting for development can be developed. This cannot be done at the present time because of the area being within a national park. That is why I believe it is urgent that the government take some action on this matter.

There are only a few areas within Wood Buffalo national park that lend themselves to park purposes, and I am thinking specifically of recreation facilities. Those areas are on the Slave river, on the Peace river and at Pine Point some 45 miles south of Fort Smith. These areas could well be protected under provincial park legislation. The provincial park could be extended on the east side of the Slave river and take in some of lake Athabasca, which extends beyond the present park boundaries. With rapid development foreseen in northeastern Alberta there is no reason at all why park facilities in this area could not be supplied by the provincial government.

In relation to the administration of the park, I would join with the hon. member for Athabasca in paying tribute to Mr. Ed Olsen, the superintendent of the park, because I think he has done an excellent job. He is truly interested in the preservation of the buffalo and is certainly willing to co-operate in every way, but the problem at hand goes far beyond what he can do as the one responsible for administration of the park, and falls squarely upon the department.

I should like to bring to the attention of the minister several important facts that have been brought before the government of Alberta by Mr. Fimrite, the member of the legislature representing the area concerned. I put this information before the minister not only because I believe it is most relevant, but also to indicate that for some time now the Alberta government have been trying to get some action from the federal government in relation to this park.

Forty-two years have passed since Wood Buffalo national park was established as a sanctuary for the last remaining herd of buffalo. I am taking this information from a speech made last April by Mr. Fimrite in the Alberta legislature. The preservation of buffalo in the park has been a very successful project. One error that was made was that the buffalo preserve was established under the National Parks Act. Unfortunately the government at that time gave little thought to the development of the natural resources in the days to come. This area does not lend itself to national park purposes, and it certainly cannot be said to be a tourist attraction. So it is logical that the Wood Buffalo preserve should be taken out of park jurisdiction. To insist stubbornly that the area is a park because it was so named in 1922 certainly does not make it so at the present time. That is why it is necessary to look at the matter in the light of the present situation.

Mr. Fimrite went on to point out in his speech that there are a number of things required to make this area commercially important. One is the construction of the necessary transportation facilities in that northeastern part of Alberta. The building of roads is of prime importance to the development of the entire area. It is urgent that a road be built from Fort Smith to Peace Point on the Peace river continuing west to High Level on the Mackenzie highway, a distance of 285 miles. Certainly the federal government, particularly the parks branch, is not going to be interested in building that kind of highway.

Not only is transportation important to this general area, but there are great natural resources in the form of minerals located in the area. The Peace Point gypsum deposits are well known, and they need only to be removed from the authority of the national parks branch to excite the interest of developers. The relatively pure gypsum in these deposits is exposed in cliffs rising from the Peace river to a height of 100 feet. The thin overburden makes its mining a very economical matter. Conservative estimates of the gypsum deposits are that there are more than 100 million tons. This is of extreme importance to the developing industrial strength of Alberta and all western Canada.

There are other types of minerals in the park area whose existence exploration has revealed. Paleozoic outcroppings along the west bank of the Slave river indicate that there are large lead and zinc deposits similar to those at Pine Point, which were sufficient to warrant the building of a railway to that area. There is a possibility that petroleum will be discovered in the southwest portion of the park area. Uranium is an additional possibility. With the development of the Athabasca oil sands near Fort McMurray, certainly a great deal of commercial and industrial activity is going to develop in the general area in which the park is located. The oil sands development is just beginning, because it will extend much farther north as well.

As I have already mentioned, there is a great deal of timber in the park area. The national parks branch has sold to private companies one and a half billion board feet of ripe timber. This was disposed of under a sanitation regulation that applied to national parks. Production is in excess of 10 million board feet per year at the present time. Because of the isolation of the area and the difficulty of access so far as transportation is concerned, this timber is producing a royalty of only $1 per thousand board feet. This is quite inequitable when compared with timber sales under provincial control, and the result is that the difference in policy creates quite a problem for the provincial government.

Among other national resources in the park is commercial fishing. The lake Claire waters within the present park boundaries are said to be capable of maintaining a flourishing goldeye fishery. The present catch has reached a maximum of 105,000 pounds annually. Fort Chipewyan immediately east of the park on lake Athabasca has been selected as one of the sites for the new provincial community development program, utilizing both the human and natural resources of the region, and commercial fishing is certainly a part of this program.

As far as the management of the buffalo herd is concerned, at the present time the herd is estimated to number over 20,000. A large number have migrated into the Northwest Territories. The anthrax infestation that the federal government is attempting to control is not limited to a region inside the park. Fortunately the disease is confined to a small area, and it may now be under control. However, the buffalo herd within the park is not free from disease. There is a high incidence of bovine tuberculosis as well as brucellosis among the herd, and the purpose of food supply for the Indians is not logical in the interests of public health. It seems to me it is quite a wrong argument that the management of these buffalo herds could be carried on equally well whether this area is a park area or not.

I am not going to spend more time talking about the development of certain recreational areas of community development programs, except to say again I believe these would fit into the provincial program, in the light of the location of the park, far better than under any national parks administration.

I would refer the minister to a press release which I am sure he has in his possession, issued by the provincial minister of lands and forests, Hon. Norman Willmore, in Alberta, in regard to this, as early as December 1962. I draw to the minister's attention again that the provincial government has been trying for a long time to get action from the federal government, and the reasons the provincial government feels action should be taken on returning this area to it are listed as follows in Mr. Willmore's release:

1. The development of the natural resources is clearly the responsibility of the provincial government and we believe this can be properly accomplished under the multiple use concept of resource management.
2. The area does not lend itself either presently or in the future to development for national parks purposes.
3. The government of Canada now holds a disproportionate amount of land in Alberta compared to the other provinces for various purposes, including national parks, which in all totals approximately 23,500 square miles. For example, in Ontario national parks comprise a total of 12 square miles, although this is the area of Canada which is most heavily populated.
4. Alberta has developed an extensive system of provincial parks and recreational areas as well as establishing wilderness areas and we have reserved and designated many other areas of crown land for future development as our population grows.

Therefore the government of Alberta feels that the Wood Buffalo park area should be dealt with on the basis of return to the province rather than in the light of any exchange of lands. It is our belief that this proposal will serve the best interest of the people of Alberta and Canada as a whole.

I would urge the minister to set up a provincial-federal commission to deal with this matter and to lay out a policy and pursue the action that is necessary, and I urge him to do this immediately because this problem has gone on far too long already.

The second point I would like to refer to briefly concerns my own constituency, and specifically the historic site that centres on the original location of one of the earliest forts in western Canada, the fort named Fort Rocky Mountain House. This is one of the oldest and most important forts west of Manitoba. It was in existence long before forts such as Fort Edmonton. In fact as early as 1799 both the Northwest Company and the Hudson Bay Company operated forts at Rocky Mountain House. Basically they were fur trading forts, but also represented the very terminal point of the fur trading route at that time, coming eastward from the west, with Rocky Mountain as the western boundary.

[Mr. Thompson.]

At the present time the North Saskatchewan river has deviated from its original course, to the extent that the entire site on which these forts were located is threatened with being washed out of existence into the river bed. The actual remains of the last fort to be built on this site are now just on the edge of the river bank. The old chimneys still stand, but within a matter of a few years they will be washed into the river. Already the tunnel that led down from the fort site to the river bank has been washed away, and it is urgent that the historic sites branch take a very close look at this particular site with the idea of preserving the remains of the original forts before they are completely destroyed.

I have had it checked by engineers in the area who tell me it is not a difficult problem. With modern equipment it would be a simple matter to clear out the original river channel, which is some several hundred yards to the south, so that the river could be diverted into its original channel instead of being allowed to erode away the north bank on which is located the fort ruins.

I have been concerned at a communication I received from the department relating to the historic basis of these old forts. In it it is pointed out that the chimneys and ruins which are now standing were built as late as 1864, and abandoned in 1875. There is some error in that information. We know there were several fort sites. Both the Hudson Bay and Northwest Companies had forts there and these forts were burned down at different times and rebuilt. There were several different sites, and the Glenbow foundation has done much work, and will do more archaeological work next year, digging up some of these older sites. However the fact remains that the present ruins go back much earlier than 1864, and moreover they are the last evidence of this historic site. Whether they were built in 1798 or 1825 really does not matter. They should be preserved, and I urge the minister to consider doing so because as we approach our centennial we are concerned about our early history and are trying to preserve as much of it as we can.

One of the proposed projects now before the centennial council is a re-enactment of the old fur trade convoys from the west to Montreal. The plans presently proposed would have a canoe convoy begin at Edmonton and take some three months to travel over the old fur trade route. It would be much more true to history if this trip should begin back at Fort Rocky Mountain House, and I am sure those responsible for suggesting this project would agree to that, particularly if the department were to take the initiative and restore this site.

Further I would urge the minister to use his influence, so far as government policy is concerned relating to centennial projects, to support this convoy re-enactment that is projected as a centennial project. One of the ways in which he could do this is to pay very close attention to the historic sites along the route, not just the one at Rocky Mountain House but all the others as well. Since I became interested in this project I have come to realize how it could be one of the most practical ways of teaching history to all our young folk, and to our older folk who do not realize the tremendous wealth of history this country has. Canada has a dozen Davy Crocketts who could be the heroes of our young people at school as they study the early years of Canadian history. All this enters not only into the celebration of our centenary but is vital to the building of the national spirit we must have if Canada is to be the nation we all expect it will be.

I was most grateful that during the past summer the Minister of Public Works was able to take a couple of days off duty and travel over part of the ancient route which the great explorer and map maker, David Thompson, travelled nearly 200 years ago. We travelled together through the Rocky mountain pass known as the Howse pass which connects British Columbia with the fur trading route I was talking about—past Fort Rocky Mountain House and Fort Edmonton, through north Saskatchewan to lake Winnipegosis and then on through the Lake of the Woods to the great lakes, connecting with the Ottawa river system which flows right past parliament hill.

I am sure he shares with me a knowledge of the historical significance of this general area. In closing, I would urge the minister and the government to pay close attention to the responsibilities allocated to the department of northern affairs as they relate to the restoration and reconstruction of these important historical sites linked with the earliest days of Canadian history.

Mr. Barnett: I rise on a question of privilege. I realize we are sitting continuously in consequence of an order of the house and that you have recently arrived in the chair, but I wish to draw to Your Honour's attention that it would appear to be desirable if we could reach an agreement which would enable the minister, at least, to have time for a sandwich and a cup of coffee. I realize that the rest of us are free to go and come as we choose. Nevertheless there are some of us who wish to be here when the hon. gentleman replies to the questions which have been addressed to him, and I am wondering whether there would be a disposition on the part of the committee to rise and report progress. Perhaps there would be unanimous consent to recess for half an hour or so during which time the minister could get a sandwich and a cup of coffee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Laing: I deeply appreciate the consideration of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, but I am in great shape; I am not hungry. However, I do think it would be of advantage to the committee if I were to attempt at this point to deal with the considerable number of constructive contributions which have been made with respect to this item.

We are dealing now with the subject of national parks and historic sites. I think it is obvious to us that not only on this continent but everywhere in the world the preservation of outdoor spaces is of greater concern than it has ever been in the past. We, in Canada, with our relatively small population today, could do ourselves a great deal of good by studying public opinion in the United States in this regard. I do not think any single subject at the present time has been brought so forcefully to the attention of the people of the United States as this need to preserve places of recreation in the open air for future generations. Scientists, doctors and psychiatrists are now becoming authorities in telling us that we have to preserve our countryside—that the rapid pace at which most people live today has to find some compensation and that this is best provided by preserving intact our forests, our lakes and all those places outdoors where the public may go for recreation.

Before I resume my seat I intend, Mr. Chairman, to ask permission to have printed in Hansard a statement showing the attendance at our national parks over the past number of years. I was astonished to learn that it was only in 1947 that the total number of visitors to the national parks reached one million persons. Yet last year the attendance reached nine and a half million. The whole nature of the attendance at our parks has changed and we are confronted with a crisis inasmuch as we have a flood tide of people arriving by automobile who say: Where do I park the trailer; where is the camping ground; where do the tents go?—and so forth. We find there is a marked change in the nature of the traffic. As well as using motels, in the last two or three years people have been using sleeping bags, and roughing it—in comparative comfort, of course. There has been a great change in this regard. While we are doing our best to take care of the new demand in this direction we must remember that we have a responsibility for doing things now for generations which may be many hundreds of years away. Generally speaking, due to the interest in the United States where many hundreds of millions are now being called for by the President and by the secretary of the interior, it would seem to me we cannot lose by setting aside at the earliest possible moment as much land as we possibly can for this purpose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Laing: We shall not go wrong in this regard because I am confident that the areas which we set aside will never depreciate in value. As a great natural resource they will increase in value, so we shall always be on the safe side. In addition, we shall be providing a requisite for the future.

I was very happy when, on Wednesday of this week, secretary of the interior Udall, in the President's plane, took over the loudspeaker to describe the beauties of the area we were crossing. He told us the point had been reached, now, at which the population of the United States felt it had a particular responsibility for the fantastic beauties of the Canadian region which the hon. member for Kootenay East represents, among others. I was delighted, too, to hear Mr. Udall admit that this was a matter of very great importance to Canada's balance of payments situation.

Bearing all these things in mind, I wish to thank members of this committee for the large number of constructive criticisms which have been made of the department and for the fine suggestions which have been put forward. I wish to dispense with the subject of historic sites by saying that members who have called the attention of the committee to particular historic sites in their areas can be assured that those sites will be given the keenest attention by the board on historic sites when it meets.

I wish to deal with a suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West who is concerned, as we all are, with the orderly development of Banff and Jasper, particularly the service centres. We are concerned with the provision of a road through the park to the Yellowhead pass. We are completing as fast as we can the highway between Banff and Jasper and we shall be making a statement with respect to the Oberlander report, I think, on October 19, to the Jasper chamber of commerce. We will provide them with a copy, and the board of trade of Edmonton will also be provided with a copy so that they may study it and make suggestions to us when our ideas as to how the report can be implemented are announced in Jasper. We are of the opinion that the next great explosion of demand for service will be at Jasper and we are making strides as rapidly as we can to provide new facilities there to take care of the impending rush of people. Our figures seem to indicate that the same thing that has happened to us in Banff is imminent in Jasper, and we hope to be ready to deal with it. I assure the hon. member that we have now in the works a highway program involving all the complexes within Jasper over the next three years and amounting to something in excess of $3 million, which should put the highways in pretty fair shape in that particular area.

The hon. member for Marquette dealt with historic sites, and what I said on this subject applies also to Fort Ellice. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce raised the matter of another national park in Ontario. What I said in this connection applies equally in his case. We find this difficulty, that under our act the provinces have to acquire the land and turn it over to us free of encumbrance. I will be dealing a little later with the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer, who says that Ontario has only 12 square miles of national parks and Alberta has 23,000 square miles. I can only suggest to him that I know how happy the province of Ontario would be today if it had one or two of those magnificent parks that are in the Rockies opposite the tremendous population of the United States; because if those parks were opposite the great cities of New York, Philadelphia, and so on, it is quite obvious what the first industry of Canada would be. It would be tourism, of course. But here is the difficulty; the provinces are required to turn over this property to us free of encumbrance. That is why I made the statement yesterday that the best time for the establishment of a national park was yesterday morning, because the cost of these properties is going up all the time. At the present time we are working very, very closely with the province of Ontario in this connection. Our parks people are working harmoniously with the very excellent parks people of the province of Ontario in respect of the selection of a national park in that particular province.

I wish to refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Medicine Hat. We have already had brought to our attention the proposal of a park in the general Drumheller area; that is, Dinosaur park. I will now deal with his remarks with respect to Wood Buffalo park, as I will the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer.

Wood Buffalo park is an enormous park of some 17,000 square miles. I have been somewhat disappointed in that I thought it was a park of such enormous size that no matter what happened to our other national parks, some day we would be able to build a highway in there and this would take care of the overflow of all the parks visitors to Canada. Well, Mr. Chairman, it has not happened that way. This is an area with regard to which I have said that I think the space of time between unbearable insects and frost is too short. In addition to that, it seems to be awash with water in parts. It is not a park that will satisfy the requirements for the outdoors for a great number of Canadians. We are fully conscious of this. We are conscious, also—and this has been brought to our attention by the government of the province of Alberta—of the fact that the provincial government wants to get in there, take over the resources and exploit the park, at least in part. It appears to me—and I am going to face this point—that the government of the province of Alberta is a little more commercial than some other governments. That is not against them.

Mr. Thompson: If you said "more progressive", perhaps that would be better.

Mr. Laing: Yes, they are making progress. I have said in my own province that they are fortunate in having the richest province in Canada. I have said that in British Columbia, so having said it in that province I think I can say it here. I would like to draw to their attention the fact that the parks themselves are a tremendous part of the progress and prosperity they are experiencing. We have figures to show that $15 million was expended on the national parks in the Rockies last year, and they are a tremendous drawing card for visitors. The beauties of the mountain parks of Alberta are a magnet for the tourist.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit a question? Does he mean by his remarks that he is putting this vast 17,000 square miles area in northern Alberta in the same category as the Banff and Jasper parks? I mentioned the points that I did to show this was not a park in relation to recreational facilities. Therefore I think it is very unfair for the minister to be drawing the conclusion he is at the present time.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the hon. member is trying to help me, but I was just getting around to my argument in this regard. I realize we should never class Wood Buffalo national park in the same category as the other magnificent mountain parks we have in this country. At the same time I wish to tell the committee that I am convinced that public opinion in Canada would take this stand: "Don't diminish or reduce any park area in Canada, but increase it". In the negotiations we will be having shortly with Hon. Mr. Willmore, the minister of lands and forests, we are going to put the proposition that there should be something in the way of exchange in respect of that park. So far as the buffalo herd is concerned, we think it would be best for us, and probably best for the buffalo, if we retained it as a national herd.

Mr. Thompson: The buffalo are not much concerned about that.

Mr. Laing: In other words, we would establish something in the nature of a game preserve within the park and at the same time permit the development of the gypsum deposits under provincial administration, and so on. We are working, in a spirit of exchange, to the establishment of still another national park in Alberta closer to the great veins of traffic to which the hon. member for Medicine Hat referred. We think this would be profitable to Alberta as well as profitable to Canada.

I want to say a word of thanks to the hon. member for Athabasca, who also dealt with the Wood Buffalo national park and with the Elk island buffalo herd. With respect to the Elk island buffalo herd, I am of the opinion that if more people knew that herd of 600 or 700 buffalo was 30 miles from the city of Edmonton, we would get a great many more than the 176,000 visitors who visited the park last year. I have a great deal of admiration for our manager there, Mr. Webster; I think he is the best animal husbandry man we have. He is doing a splendid job and is supplying us with many thousands of bales of hay for other parks as well as for the animals there. There are 600 or 700 buffalo in one place there. I never saw a single buffalo when I visited the park. It was a hot day and they were all under the trees. I am quite sure that any visitor who went there on that day did not see a buffalo. These are plains buffalo, and I am sure they can stand the heat better than I. I suggest we should open up some space for them and let the public see a herd of some size.

There is trouble there with Astotin lake, I think it is called. This is a reedy, marshy lake. The hon. member for Vegreville and I were there on one occasion. We were not girl watching that day, but we saw people emerging from the lake with reeds hanging all over them, and so on. If we had a clear water lake there, it would be an extremely popular park. The hon. member suggested that a swimming pool be built there. I do not know whether that would work. We are spending $376,000 for 176,000 visitors. I have an idea that that is as large an expenditure per capita as we make in any of the parks. We will do our best to develop this park. It has been suggested to us that we get some help in clearing the water there, in other words destroy the weedy growth at the bottom. If we had a good lake it would be very attractive, and we will also try to make the buffalo there an attraction as well.

The hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) dealt with Prince Edward Island park which substantially and unfortunately is composed principally of sand dunes and coast line. It is one of the most beautiful extended beaches in all Canada without a doubt. Last year it attracted over a million visitors; it has a splendid beach but very little depth. Here again we have a situation where we should have had the national park the day before yesterday, because today with the development behind this extremely narrow park it would be expensive for Prince Edward Island to expand it. However we will keep in touch there and do the best we can to expand the park. We are now engaged with the province on a joint survey and working closely together to see what can be done with respect to giving more depth to the park, or probably look at some other area in another part of the province for a second park.

[Mr. Laing.]

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni wanted me to endeavour to get out of the confusion or difficulty that I am in with the Minister of Public Works, owing to the fees charged on the parts of the trans-Canada highway which run through national parks. We have established the principle of a fee in the national parks. This is a practice which has been established in most other countries and we do not want to drop it for a number of reasons, one of the main reasons being that it produces over 30 per cent of our total revenue from the parks. I think last year $960,000 from vehicle fees was collected out of a total revenue of $2,889,000. I am not going to insist that these are all the revenues which a park can provide. I think our national park revenue should be higher than this. We might then discuss the opportunity of abolishing fees across Canada. Probably before that we will be discussing the possibility of making fees universal in national parks across Canada, which is not the case today. But the matter of revenue is extremely important to us. We have the occasional person who is called upon to travel between Calgary and Vancouver or Winnipeg and the Pacific coast and who complains about paying when travelling through the parks. This complaint is generally quite lighthearted and is usually made at the gates to the attendant.

It is a difficult matter for us, but I want to remind the hon. member that we are in the process of expending in the national parks on highways alone $73 million, and we have expended to date over $50 million in building highways which are of a standard which I think exceed any of the standards insisted on by the provinces. I am of the opinion that after looking at the Rogers pass area, the highway that runs from Banff to Jasper and the highway which will be completed down to the Kootenay national park, we have three highways there which will defy competition from any location anywhere on the face of the earth. What we want to do is to bring more people to Canada to enjoy our parks, and of course to pay a fee, too.

The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale dealt with employees in the parks and the advisability of providing them with some better accommodation. We are quite aware of this problem and it is one of the difficulties with a seasonal enterprise operating for three or four months. Accommodation has to be set aside for them of a suitable nature, bearing in mind that you can look forward to its being closed six, seven or eight months of the year.

However, we will do our best to take care of this situation.

The hon. member for Vegreville spoke of Elk Island national park, with which I have dealt, and the Ukrainian museum. There is a very splendid museum representing the early days of this extremely important segment of the Canadian community and I am certain that the people from the area are extremely proud of it. I think he is now probably calling for an extension. I was present in Elk Island park when the monument to the Ukrainian pioneers was unveiled. The hon. member also wanted a swimming pool there. These are some things we will have to bear in mind as the parks develop and as demand for these services in the parks increases.

The hon. member for Kootenay West dealt again with the superintendent's house. I think this must be the eighth, ninth or tenth occasion on which he has dealt with this matter.

Mr. Herridge: The fourth time. Whenever I see waste I shall continue to try and prevent it, especially when it is in connection with this sort of thing.

Mr. Laing: I dealt with this on one occasion myself. I reminded him that the house in question was built under a dispensation prior to the term of office of the present government. I also reminded him that the house was up and it was not my intention to tear it down. Since I uttered those remarks I have been a visitor to the superintendent's house and more than ever I am determined not to tear it down.

Mr. Herridge: What about the expensive copper lining to the living room?

Mr. Laing: It is a beautiful house. I see the hon. member has also visited the house.

Mr. Herridge: He has not.

Mr. Laing: Then he has been peering through the windows probably. All I have to say is that it would appear to be a magnificent house for the superintendent of a national park. I would tell the hon. member that we are now getting demands or requests that when a notable visitor comes to Canada we should turn him over to the superintendent of the national park if and when this person passes through. That is a matter which I am not very happy about because our superintendents were certainly not appointed to entertain visitors, however notable, and I would hate to have a great deal of their time expended on that sort of thing. But certainly when someone of some significance to Canada comes to see us, there seems to me there is a little bit of merit in having the superintendent of the park entertain him in a house that is at least commensurate with the object in hand. This is the only defence I make of that particular house. I do know it was built in the term of office of the previous administration, and it seems to me well built. If it cost a lot of money probably the value is showing in the house itself.

The other detailed questions asked by the hon. member I will have to take as notice and write him. They concerned the salary of the superintendent, his administrative experience, and so on. However, I would say to the hon. member that when the task of building the new highway there is completed, which we hope will be at the end of next year, and when we develop the top area we will have in Mount Revelstoke park undisputably the best mountain park in North America.

Mr. Herridge: I agree.

Mr. Laing: At the present time the private investment people are aware of that and are building a great number of splendid motels in Revelstoke. Revelstoke is expanding extremely rapidly. It is booming, as a matter of fact, as a resort area at the present time. While the hon. member is remembering the costly house I would like him to think of the ski jump which we are renewing this year where world records of all kinds have been made, as well as a splendid road we are building up to that magnificent mountain park.

The hon. member for Red Deer dealt with the extent of area in Alberta that is set aside for parks, and I have attempted to explain that situation. He dealt with the resources that could be taken out of Wood Buffalo national park, and I agree with him in this regard, but I would hate to think that many people would agree with the implication that in providing national parks for Canada Alberta is making a sacrifice. I do not think Alberta is making a sacrifice in this regard, in view of the gas tax and money spent by tourists as a result of these tremendous assets.

In my own province of British Columbia I should like to see some of these national parks developed between Calgary and Vancouver, because we both have like or similar areas, and the tourists who come to the west coast from Seattle or from Vancouver island always ask as their first question, "Where is Banff; we want to go there at once." I think if we divided the traffic we would not have the tremendous pressure that exists in Banff at the present time, to the point that it is very difficult for us to serve that area.

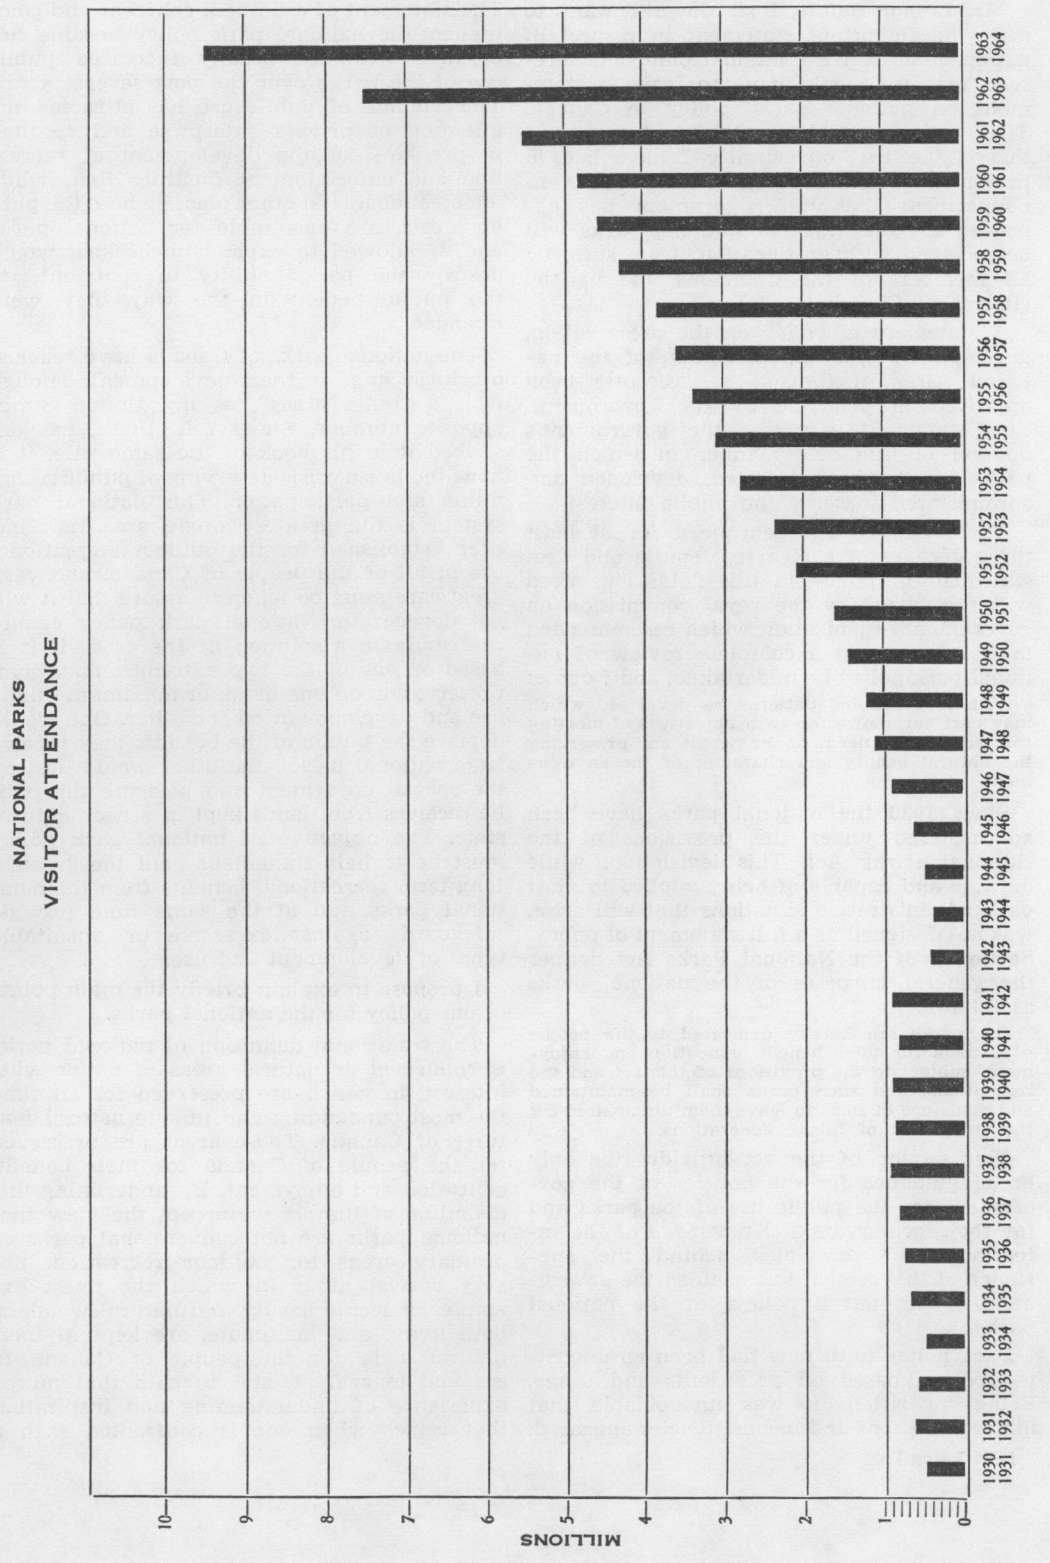
Mr. Barnett: May I interrupt the minister to ask him why he stopped at Vancouver? What about Vancouver island for a national park?

Mr. Laing: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we have received representations recently from Vancouver island, and there is one area in the constituency of the hon. gentleman which I think would make a magnificent park. I do not know the size of this area, and I refer to—

Mr. Barnett: Strathcona?

Mr. Laing: You may call it Strathcona, but there is another name. You have so many there it is difficult to remember. The Forbidden Plateau area is the area I have in mind. Other representations have been received in respect of parks for the west coast, and we have had several discussions in this regard. It is public knowledge now that we have the Garibaldi area in mind, and when we find five national parks on the Atlantic coast with tremendous attraction for visitors, and none on the Pacific coast, I think it will be obvious that we will not drop any of our efforts to obtain a national park there. I think the establishment of such a park on the Pacific coast would be tremendously advantageous to us.



The hon. member for Red Deer spoke of the Rocky Mountain House historic site. We have some information to the effect that the old fort No. 1 of which he spoke was built in 1799 and the site is now unknown. Fort No. 2, which was built in 1846, is three quarters of a mile away from fort No. 3 which was built in 1864 to 1875. Our information is that fort No. 3 is being eroded very badly and it would be extremely costly to repair. Perhaps some attention should be given to the No. 2 site.

I want to assure hon. members that all these splendid representations made in respect of historic sites will be given every consideration by the historic sites board. I want to pay tribute to that board for the very fine work it has done on behalf of Canada. We are now approaching our centennial of confederation when more and more attention is being given to the road by which we have travelled, and the greater extent to which the local people living at these sites can be incorporated in the maintenance of and the enthusiasm for these places, the better for all of us. We have found everywhere across the country that that is the case, and we will take this opportunity at this time in our history of consolidating as many of these sites as we possibly can with the money available.

Before I sit down, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask permission to incorporate in Hansard the graph showing visitor attendance to the national parks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Laing: Before I sit down I want to make an important statement in respect of national parks. We have for some time foreseen that we would have to make a statement on national parks policy in Canada. That policy has been established now and this is the first opportunity I have had to present it to the House of Commons. The announcement that the government has approved a policy for the national parks will be received with gratification, I am sure, by all members of the Commons and by the citizens of Canada.

A statement of policy on the preservation, development and administration of the national parks of Canada has recently been approved in principle by the government. This statement expresses the government's opinion on the best manner in which the parks can be best operated, developed and administered to serve the public interest.

There has been urgent need for at least three decades of a clearer, definite and firm statement of policy in this field. This need was recognized by the royal commission on government organization which recommended in its report that a complete review of national park policy be undertaken, and I quote:

> ...that operational patterns be developed which may best harmonize the twin objectives of meeting the recreational needs of the people and preserving the natural beauty and character of the environment.

Since 1930 the national parks have been administered under the provisions of the National Parks Act. This legislation, while durable and capable of being applied to most park administrative situations that will arise, was not designed as a full statement of policy. Section 4 of the National Parks Act defines the general purposes of the national parks as follows:

> The parks are hereby dedicated to the people of Canada for their benefit, education and enjoyment, subject to the provisions of this act and the regulations, and such parks shall be maintained and made use of so as to leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations.

This section of the act provides the only broad guidance for the policies of the government for the public use of the parks and for their preservation. Knowledge of the intentions and principles behind the substance of this section has enabled the government to set out a policy for the national parks.

Park policy until now had been an unwritten policy, based on precedents and usage. Being unwritten, it was unavoidable that minor variations and inconsistencies appeared.

The statement of a unified, coherent and comprehensible national park policy became imperative with the greatly increased public use of the parks over the past several years. This volume of public use has attracted the attention of private enterprise and resulted in pressure for the development of recreation and entertainment facilities that, while unobjectionable in other places where the public meets, are unsuitable for national parks and, if allowed to expand unchecked, would destroy the parks' ability to contribute to the public benefit in the way they were intended.

The national parks of Canada have reached a critical stage in their development. Though it is a "quiet crisis", as my United States opposite number, Stewart L. Udall, has described it in his book of the same title, it is none the less a crisis deserving of public recognition and participation. Our national park system is the greatest single area that has been established for the outdoor recreational use of all of the people of Canada, and very great care must be taken to assure that it will not degenerate. National park policy cannot contribute to a solution of the crisis if it is based on one of the two extremes, maximum preservation on one hand, or maximum public use and development on the other. One would deprive the public of the benefits they receive from national parks; the other would destroy the special enjoyment and pleasure the public receives from lands kept in a near natural state. The objective of national park policy must be to help Canadians gain the greatest long term recreational benefits from their national parks and at the same time provide safeguards against excessive or unsuitable types of development and use.

I propose to explain briefly the main points of our policy for the national parks.

The traditional definition of national parks is confirmed as natural areas of nation-wide interest, in which are preserved for all time the most outstanding and unique natural features of Canada. These areas are preserved for the people of Canada for their benefit, education and enjoyment. By underlining this definition of the act we accept the view that national parks are not conventional parks or ordinary areas for outdoor recreation, but very special areas in which the finest examples of scenic beauty and natural wonders, both living and inanimate, are kept in their natural state for the people of Canada to see and marvel at, and to gain that mixed experience of understanding and inspiration that comes when one is confronted with a physical expression of the finest of the Canadian scene.

Our understanding of the national parks as sanctuaries of nature where people can relax and enjoy themselves amid a natural environment precludes the exploitation of the natural resources for their commercial value. Canada is a land still rich in natural resources. We have not yet reached the desperate stage in our growth where every cubic yard of the land must be squeezed for whatever material potential it may have. To preserve as national parks lands that altogether make up little more than 1 per cent of our total land area is not a waste of natural resources, particularly when these lands together with their complete resources give our people the opportunity to find some solitude and freedom from care, to rediscover an easy relationship with nature, and to understand the beauty and significance of the natural features that express Canada's very individuality.

A quotation from a speech by Senator Clinton B. Anderson of New Mexico is relevant:

> Wilderness is an anchor to windward. Knowing it is there we can also know that we are still a rich nation, tending to resources as we should—not a people in despair, searching the last nook and cranny of our land for a board of lumber, a barrel of oil, a blade of grass, or a tank of water.

The national parks have provided their benefits to the people of Canada only because the kinds of resource use that have scarred, destroyed, and diminished the scenic values of large areas of the country have not been allowed. Benefits of future generations will be even greater if the natural resources within the national parks remain in their natural state, untouched. Mining, lumbering, prospecting, commercial fishing, oil exploration and production, even hunting—these all would rob the people of Canada of all that is unique within the national parks and much of their attraction and beneficial purpose.

Development in a national park must be considered solely on the direct effect it will have on increasing the public's enjoyment and use of the national parks and on maintaining them as sanctuaries not only of nature but for nature. It does not follow that the government does not wish further development undertaken in the parks. Certainly adequate and appropriate developments are needed to enable the public to use the parks more and gain a better appreciation.

Where best to locate such development and the intensity of development permissible without the impairment of natural values are matters best decided by reference to a land zoning system. In any large area such as a national park, every point does not have the same scenic quality, the same potential for public use, or the same practical advantages for development. The areas that now remain as superb wilderness and are unlikely to be heavily used by the public in future because of their isolation from the routes followed by most visitors will be defined as wilderness zones. The type of development allowed there will be slight, mainly trails or canoe routes and primitive overnight shelter, the barest facilities that will allow access to these areas for the few park visitors who wish a true wilderness experience.

Other areas that are the objective of most park visitors and can be reached easily by extension of present road systems will be developed, but in a careful manner that will assure that all scenic points of interest are not obscured by buildings and parking lots and that the primitive natural beauty of the national park landscape remains to give the scenes depth and meaning.

Visitor service centres will be established in these heavily used areas. Like an urban shopping centre, a visitor services centre will be a grouping of all those services a park visitor wishes—a camp ground, motels, restaurant or coffee shop, gas station, information bureau, a store where supplies can be purchased. These will be located at less scenic locations, convenient to the main points of visitor concentration and yet close enough to scenic viewpoints and other places of interest that visitors can drive there quickly.

The establishment of visitor service centres in the national parks will inaugurate an orderly development pattern, faithful to the purpose of the parks. It will end the scattered development of services that is so irritating to park visitors, the situation where visitor services are scattered haphazardly along park roads and highways so that a visitor desiring a number of different services must make several stops and often drive farther than necessary. In terms of this policy, the present park townsites can be considered only as visitor services centres. Their only reason for being is that they provide essential services to visitors or services to the national parks and its staff.

The government does not intend that national parks attempt to meet every recreational need. To do so would destroy the special purpose they serve in allowing the public to enjoy nature and engage in activities that can be carried out enjoyably only in a natural environment. In future, only such activities as photography, sightseeing, hiking, swimming, riding, skiing, nature observation, fishing and boating will be encouraged by the national parks branch. There are many other types of entertainment and recreation Canadians like to engage in on holiday, but if these are unrelated to a national park and its special purpose and do not require a natural environment for their enjoyment they should be sought elsewhere. Because a national park generally has lots of space, attracts large numbers of people and is public land, many people think it can be developed to its maximum potential by allowing it to become a series of private or commercial resorts. This is a misunderstanding of the purpose of the national parks.

The policy we have adopted regards the national parks as a national asset protected by the national government, and a public service provided by the national government as a contribution to the health and happiness of the citizens. Therefore all basic facilities in the national parks, such as roads, trails, camp grounds, and public utilities, and the costs of administration and protection, are provided out of public funds rather than being paid entirely by the persons who use the parks.

Beyond that, all facilities needed to serve visitors are the responsibility of private enterprise to provide and operate. Commercial visitor services such as hotels, motels and service stations should be provided by the private sector of the economy. Where the public demands special facilities for their use, such as swimming pools, golf courses, marinas and fully serviced camp grounds, those who use these special facilities should pay charges that will at least cover the costs of operating and maintaining these facilities.

The policy regarding those who live and carry on business in the national parks is that they should enjoy no particular economic advantage or disadvantage because of their special place of residence or business. In general, they should be subject to the same financial responsibilities as those who live or carry on business elsewhere. This policy will be applied when charges, rentals and fees paid by national parks residents to the federal government are being reviewed.

A change in policy toward residence in national parks has long been required. In earlier times, when the national parks were not so heavily used nor so easily accessible as they are now, it was reasonable to allow persons to take up permanent or temporary residence, especially when they were regular park visitors whose place of work or primary point of residence was in the vicinity of a national park. Long term leases were granted to these individuals and buildings erected that served them as either permanent or summer homes. In some national parks, residential subdivisions were established to provide for the summer cottages of local park visitors or for the homes of persons who had no reason, other than a personal wish, to be living in a national park. The effect of this policy has been to give special benefits and advantages to individuals who were fortunate enough to live near a national park. National park land is public land that must be used for public park purposes, not for private residential development; it must be used in a way that clearly contributes to public enjoyment and service, not for the private benefit and convenience of individuals.

For this reason, we have adopted a policy that will eventually exclude private residential occupation of park land unless it is required by persons who provide services to the park and its visitors. No new uses of park land for summer homes, cottages, or permanent residence will be allowed unless it is clear that the permanent or temporary resident is providing some essential service to park visitors, or engaged in the administration, operation and protection of the national parks. Such improper occupation of park land by individuals as now exists will be eliminated gradually.

The over-all policy that we have adopted toward the national parks is aimed at achieving maximum public use and benefit consonant with the maximum conservation of the recreational resource. The growing use of the national parks by the public, the expanding demand for more outdoors recreation space that will serve both present and future generations, and the need to preserve with respect and in dignity all that expresses Canada's heritage demand a positive, clear and uniformly applicable policy.

The national parks policy of this government is intended to fulfil the aspirations the people of Canada have for their national parks. They have made it clear repeatedly that they are opposed to excessive commercial development and the types of use that make it difficult for the average family to enjoy a relaxing and restorative holiday amid natural surroundings. It is to the public of Canada as a whole that the national parks are dedicated, and it is to the public that the government is ultimately responsible for the manner in which it manages the national parks.

As public property the national parks are worthy of the interest and attention of every citizen of Canada. All decisions affecting development by public or private enterprise in the parks must be governed by the national interest, and it is the national interest that our policy is intended to serve. Public understanding and support are necessary if the government is to continue its stewardship of the national parks under a policy that serves the national interest. I sincerely trust that not only every member of this committee will support in principle that policy we are following on the national parks, but also that every Canadian will assist in preserving his national heritage by understanding, responsible and appreciative use, and vigilance.

If hon. members desire to proceed with the debate on this particular item I would be entirely agreeable. I shall have a cup of coffee behind the curtains but I shall still be listening.

Mr. Herridge: Before the minister goes would he mind answering a question on the matter I raised? First of all I want to thank him for the information that it is now policy for park superintendents to entertain V.I.P.'s, but let me tell him that in the Arrow lake parks the residents entertained royalty a couple of weeks ago and did not have to thank the minister's officials for doing it. In answering the question I raised, would the minister also give me the dimensions of this house, the number of rooms and their size?

Mr. Laing: Yes.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I have a few brief remarks to make on this item, but for the sake of more orderly discussion if there are members who wish to discuss the minister's statement on national park policy I would be agreeable to let them precede me, so long as the item does not pass before I have a chance to speak again.

Mr. Webb: I am sure the minister is aware of the closing down of the last uranium mines in the Bancroft area. I am also certain he and other members of the cabinet are aware of the statement made by the Prime Minister, when speaking to the Bancroft chamber of commerce, that one of the first duties of the government, and particularly of the Department of Industry, would be to study means of developing some assistance to help the economy in that area. It is because of this I would ask the minister and his department to consider the developing of a natural geographical asset, known as the Eagle Nest rock in Bancroft, as a park.

Several factors make this worthy of the minister's attention, both from the point of view of its value as a tourist attraction, and the practicability of its construction. The small park there, known as the York River park, is inadequate for the rapidly growing tourist industry of the region. Bancroft is the centre of a large and potentially rich tourist area, and I am certain that if the minister and his officials visited the area they would agree that this is a reasonable request and that an effort should be made to develop this natural tourist attraction centre.

The site is very accessible by two routes. The owners of the property are willing to sell it for this worth-while project. Recently the closing of the mines has insured an ample supply of labour in the area, and it is hardly necessary to suggest that the construction of such a park would be an important step in the readjustment of an area which has suffered from a slump in the mining industry.

I am also certain that such a project would reflect very favourably with the people of Bancroft, the district and the county as a whole. Before I take my seat I want to state that I am aware of the administration of parks in Ontario, but I would suggest that a generous contribution to such a project as I have outlined would be very helpful, would be appreciated, and would certainly coincide with the remarks made by the minister just a few minutes ago.

Mr. Southam: I am sure members of the committee were very interested to hear the minister's statement on new national parks policy. I agree with the principles outlined in that policy and I hope the minister will translate it into action at the earliest possible date.

If the minister has read previous debates on the estimates of his department he will know I have discussed the matter of national parks on previous occasions, and more particularly the development of another national park in Saskatchewan. The minister emphasized the terrific growth in the tourist industry, something I myself drew to the attention of this chamber on several previous occasions. In 1945 we had 1 million tourists and by 1963 this number has risen to 9½ million. Canada is a veritable gem as a tourist attraction, and tourists who have travelled the world have told me they can see in Canada everything that is to be found anywhere else.

The tourist industry is now our third largest. The wood pulp and paper industry is our biggest, and agricultural exports hold second place. Last year we derived something like $500 million tourist income and I anticipate that in 1967, with the Canada expo in Montreal, it is quite possible tourist income will reach the billion dollar mark. Therefore anything we can do to develop this industry will be of the greatest importance to the national economy. I place such emphasis upon this, that in the past I have suggested we should consider the possibility of reorganizing this Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources so as to have a minister, or at least a deputy minister, with special responsibility for assisting the tourist industry in this country.

I believe the department should consider the development of another park in Saskatchewan. We have 18 national parks in Canada now, five of which are in the province of Alberta. I can understand the preference for Alberta because of the natural beauty of that province. But because of the part national parks play in the drive for income from tourism I think it is time we should consider providing another park in Saskatchewan. The one we have, the Prince Albert national park, is a very beautiful one, but it is some 500 miles north of the southern boundary of the province. It is interesting to note that in western Montana, North Dakota and western Minnesota—states which lie to the south of the border—the terrain is prairie land, similar to the prairie land of central Saskatchewan; there is little vegetation and little parkland. A large population which appreciates the beauty of Canada lives in these areas and many of these people hie north during the summertime to take advantage of what parkland we have in Saskatchewan. We find there is an ever increasing demand by tourists from the areas of the United States I have mentioned and also from areas of Saskatchewan adjacent to the constituency of Moose Mountain in which I live. This demand is overtaxing the resources of the provincial park of Moose Mountain. I have suggested in the past that the department should take a look at this area, an area 25 miles long by about 12 miles wide, to see whether it could be developed as a national park. The present parkland area could be developed still further by reforestation—plantations of evergreens, and so on.

I know there are problems which are likely to arise in connection with such a development. In the first place, the province of Saskatchewan has been responsible for a beautiful development of the section known as Moose Mountain provincial park. Naturally, the provincial government would have to turn over this area free of encumbrance to the federal government. I did take this matter up with the provincial government several years ago. At that time the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was premier of the province. He seemed very interested in the project, or at least he led me to believe he was. I had an interview with the provincial minister of natural resources, Hon. Mr. Kuziak. He agreed with the principle of my suggestion and said it was worth looking into, but that is about as far as the matter got at that time.

There is another problem—the fact that the Indian reservation known as the White Bear reservation is situated in the southern part of this parkland area. The Indians, naturally, are jealous of their rights. On the other hand I believe they are well aware that anything by way of a national park development would lead to an improvement in their economy. At the present time they derive a great deal of benefit from tourists visiting the reservation from the Carlisle lake resort. I might say that in this mountainous area there are 11 or 12 lakes, three of major proportions —the Carlisle lake in the southern section, the Kenosee lake in the centre of the provincial park, and another, the Kennington, I believe it is called. So there are plenty of possibilities as far as the development of water recreation is concerned, and there would be no difficulty in providing for the beach areas which would need to be developed in national park. I think that any difficulty which might arise with the Indian population could be ironed out through the Indian affairs branch.

Another problem entering into this picture is that which arises because of the 99 year hay leases given to pioneer settlers in the early days in case of years of serious drought. One such year was 1961 when the possessors of these leases were allowed into the areas adjoining the Indian reserve to cut hay in marshes and sloughs. This privilege has, in times gone by, been of great importance when emergencies have arisen due to drought. But I believe this problem, too, could be overcome by compensatory measures.

Another problem arises because of the attitude of some of the pioneer settlers living around the lake shore of Carlisle lake. They are people who established their cottages many years ago. A large number of them are getting along in years. They like the privacy and the quiet of the lake shore and are not enthusiastic about the prospects if the park is developed to a greater extent. However, the provincial government has already incorporated the village of Carlisle lake resort in order to develop, to some extent, the tourist potentiality in and around the lake, so I believe the animosity on the part of the village is gradually decreasing.

I mentioned the restriction of the geographical area as possibly presenting a difficulty. If the government saw fit to take it over as a single national park, I think the development of this area, 12 miles by 25 miles in extent, plus a concentrated planting of evergreens, with some Manitoba maple, would really enhance the attractiveness of the whole area. In the light of what the minister has said and in view of the statistics showing the increased demand for recreation facilities in parkland within reasonable proximity of centres of population, I think serious consideration should be given to the proposal I have outlined. Parents with young families do not like to travel 700 or 800 miles to a lakeshore if they can travel 200 miles or less. I think it is our responsibility to develop all the park areas we possibly can. I think it is an act of providence that we should have this beautiful parkland area of Moose Mountain centred in the southern plains of Saskatchewan.

It is surprising, right now, the number of tourists from the United States who are coming into this area clamouring for accommodation to such an extent that the provincial government finds the existing facilities overtaxed. I believe that if this matter was investigated the provincial government might be willing, and indeed glad, to co-operate with the federal government if they decided this project was feasible. With the heavy demand by the public for holiday facilities there are many places in Saskatchewan now, other than this area, that are clamouring for provincial development on not as large a scale as this, and the province might well divert some of the funds it has appropriated for further development of the Moose Mountain provincial park to some of these smaller projects, and spread the wealth, as it were, to other areas of Saskatchewan. Mr. Chairman, those are all the remarks I want to make as far as the development of a national park there is concerned.

I would now like to say a few words with regard to historic national monuments. During previous discussions under this particular item I have mentioned the possibility of an historic monument at Cannington manor. I refer to the old manor of Cannington north of the town of Manor, Saskatchewan. I might say that the provincial constituency of Cannington, in the province of Saskatchewan, was named after this landmark. This manor was developed back in the latter part of the eighteenth century and the turn of the nineteenth century. This manor house, or community, was organized and populated by a number of old country people. These people came from England, and the early settlers referred to this area as a wee bit of old England. When they set up the community there they built a very beautiful stone church, a beautiful school, and a three-storey manor house. They also built carriage houses, a blacksmith's shop, and they developed a racetrack. They even rode with the hounds. It was a real piece, as I say, of old England when it was in its heyday.

Some of these buildings are still in a relatively good state of preservation. I believe the school and church are still being used. But the manor house, due to its being such an old building, has fallen into a state of disrepair. It is in the centre of a beautiful piece of very rich farmland, but it is fenced off and is a little more isolated than people looking at it from a tourist attraction point of view like to see at the present time. The word has got around in that part of Saskatchewan, and in fact all over Canada, of this particular Cannington manor area and people at the present time during the summer season come down on highway No. 9 or through highway No. 16 and inquire of the people in the immediate area where they can get into this particular site. Visitors are coming to this area in quite large numbers, so much so that I believe the people occupying the land at the present time have had to put a lock on the gate in order to keep the tourists from over-running the buildings that are there and are not in a very good state of preservation.

I was very glad to notice in an article released by the provincial government three or four weeks ago that the premier of the province has recognized the significance of Cannington manor as an historic site and has allocated a certain amount of money for preserving some of the old foundations. This money has been allocated, not to repair or rebuild some of these buildings but at least to keep them in their present state of preservation. I was naturally very pleased to hear this, and the people in that particular area are very pleased about it. But I do not believe this is enough. I think the federal government should reconsider this manor as an historic site, particularly if they decide that the park area I have mentioned could be developed as a national park. I believe that a certain appropriation should be made by the historic sites board to assist the provincial government to maintain, repair or restore the Cannington manor area. If it were properly exploited by advertising and publicity, I am sure it would be one of the chief tourist attractions in that part of Canada. I would like the federal government and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to take these suggestions under consideration. I am sure that if they do, in the long run it will become the attraction I have suggested it could be.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I know that the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre wishes to speak on another aspect of these estimates, and I shall not be very long in my remarks. I have only one complaint to make concerning the national parks, and I would join my colleague from Comox-Alberni in putting forward a complaint about the $2 charge. It is not a very great charge, and I know it applies in all parks. Nevertheless, I do not like the principle of charging a fee for admission to public parks of any type. Perhaps a case can be made out for charging campsite fees. That is a different matter, and these fees should be collected separately. But I simply do not like the idea of paying for entrance to public parks, whether they be municipal, provincial or federal.

I listened to the minister's statement on parks policy generally, and I liked it. I think he has the right approach. I will be interested in reading it later in greater detail. I was also interested in the minister's comments concerning the Wood Buffalo park in Alberta. He mentioned the possibility of giving up that park, provided other lands are given in return. The minister mentioned that public opinion in Canada is against giving up even one acre of parkland or reducing the total amount of parkland by even one acre. He is quite correct in his assessment of public opinion, I am sure, in this regard. Even though Wood Buffalo park may not be a very good one for tourist development, I would certainly urge the minister to retain it until the government can get something in return. If they do not get something in return, retain it anyway. I see nothing wrong with keeping certain sections of land in this country in their completely natural state as nature parks; there is no reason why every park has to be fully developed for tourist purposes. I think it is quite important in the whole scheme of things that certain areas should remain in their completely natural state.

[Mr. Southam.]

The minister said he would like to see another national park between the Pacific coast and Banff. I realize some efforts were made in this direction. It seems to me that about a year ago the minister, on behalf of the government, made an offer to the province of British Columbia that if the Garibaldi provincial park, which is very close to the coast, with magnificent mountain scenery, were turned over to the federal government free of encumbrance, quite a large amount of money would be spent on its development. The government of British Columbia has refused this offer, and the reason for the refusal is what disturbs me. The government of British Columbia and the government of Alberta are not against the idea of limited exploitation of provincial parks. I deplore this attitude. I prefer the conservative or, if you like, the conservationist approach, that the parks should be used for tourist purposes only, with no exploitation whatever. This trend on the part of the government of British Columbia and the government of Alberta is, I think, a disturbing one.

Recently the Canadian Olympics committee met to choose a site for the winter Olympics of 1972. I believe Banff was chosen. Garibaldi park was advanced by a committee in British Columbia, and it really would be a very good site. It is very close to the main centre of the population of the province and to the main centres of population in the northwest states. However, it was not selected. I do not think the government of British Columbia gave any assistance in this connection, because I feel that if the federal government had been able to acquire that park last year, when the offer was made and there was a commitment to spend a large amount of money, it might have had some influence on the choice of the site for the 1972 Olympics.

The policy enunciated by the minister generally seemed to be an excellent one. The possibilities in the future for the development of the national parks for the enjoyment of Canadians and for the amount of money they can earn by bringing in tourists is very great. Although I think I could find some fault in the details, in general I think at the present time the development policies of these parks are the right ones and are certainly preferable to the attitudes which are taken by some of the provincial governments.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I add a few words to those of the previous speaker. Coming from the city of Vancouver I am naturally most concerned with the development of the Garibaldi area. It has always been my understanding that the provincial government of British Columbia might be prepared to turn over Garibaldi to the federal government as a national park if they were allowed to withhold the right to natural resources findings and development, which I presume would be of a mineral character. In the last year in particular the provincial government has at long last been spending money developing access roads to Garibaldi and one company has been doing further development.

In view of the situation and the decision, which I imagine is conclusive, not to develop Garibaldi as a sports area within the next four years, could I ask the minister whether, in view of the most magnificent value of Garibaldi, in its being not only adjacent to Vancouver, Burnaby and New Westminster but also within an hour and a half drive from Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, there is a possibility of co-operation between the federal and provincial governments to develop what I am absolutely convinced would eventually become one of the most remarkable and fantastic recreational areas on the North American continent. Could I ask the minister whether there is a possibility of this type of planning, co-operation and development between the two governments?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I think I could deal with the remarks of the last three speakers now, and I would ask the last two speakers to permit me to deal with the remarks of the hon. member for Moose Mountain first. He referred to a project at Cannington manor. I would advise him that it is now our information that this project has been adopted by the province of Saskatchewan as a centennial project, which would seem to take care of his representations in that regard. I might say that in connection with the discussions I have been having with the province of Alberta—and I give credit to the minister from Alberta, Mr. Willmore—I said to him that because this is a public matter and the public wants to know, it would be just as well if he and I had a public discussion before we met in October. I said to him certain things and he replied, giving the view of the province of Alberta. We had made representations both to the government of Alberta and to the government of Saskatchewan to the effect that we would be interested in developing the area known as the Cypress hills, which is in both Saskatchewan and Alberta. We have received a letter from the premier of the province of Saskatchewan informing us that he is most interested in this suggestion and part of the negotiations with the province of Alberta will be concerned with whether we can include the Cypress hills development. It is particularly distinctive. It is so distinctive that I am told the national museum has recently made it one of the objects of a new diorama there, depicting the particular type of territory, the animal habitat, and so on.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond and the hon. member for Vancouver East have raised again our pet dream in the province of British Columbia. It has been my pet dream for a long time and I am certain would generate an enormous amount of visitor interest. It would provide winter sports unprecedented and unparalleled in Canada for the great population of greater Vancouver, and it would probably rehabilitate $2 million annual investment presently going into mount Baker. I would assure them both that we have not considered this by any means a dead issue. We have again been in touch with the minister of British Columbia, Hon. Mr. Kiernan, and told him that it is now our opinion, as a result of our most recent surveys, that we would not insist upon receiving all of Garibaldi park, instead probably 33 to 35 per cent of the area, including the specific northern area of Whistler mountain, I think it is, the Black Tusk area, which is a magnificent winter sports site, and also the most desirable parts of the summer range and a plateau of wild flowers in the summertime. We have not yet received a reply but I am fully aware that there is a very great desire, not only on the part of British Columbia but on the part of members of the provincial government as well, to do something in that respect. I can only assure these two hon. members that we will renew and redouble our efforts in this direction.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Winch: I desire to ask a question about Vancouver city itself, if that is permissible now. I appreciate this opportunity, and I am proud of the fact that I can now address this question to a minister of northern affairs who comes from the city of Vancouver. Without going into detail may I ask the minister whether or not he is prepared to give serious consideration to the development of New Brighton park in Vancouver as a national historic site. This is a matter which I have raised in the House of Commons for many years. This park is the original establishment of the city of Vancouver, the third city of Canada, with the first hotel, first customs, first post office, first everything in British Columbia. The previous minister turned me down. I am asking whether or not the present minister from Vancouver will have this matter reinvestigated.

The second matter is this. Boundary road divides three ridings between Vancouver and Burnaby. They are my own riding of Vancouver East, the riding of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and the riding of the hon. minister, Vancouver South. The Boundary road area is the actual hub of the population of Vancouver, Burnaby and New Westminster. The park area on Boundary road, taking in the provincial girls industrial school land, the existing area along the site of the senior citizens home, which is municipal, right down to within half a block of the Grandview highway, is without doubt the finest and most magnificent location for a park recreational and athletic centre in the entire lower mainland, and I should like to ask the minister to consider seriously some assistance in the development of this area. If this development is to proceed as a centennial project it will require the co-operation of the federal government, perhaps through the physical fitness council, in the form of a grant. Whether or not the minister, who knows the area of Vancouver East, will admit it or not, this is one of the most deserving areas for this kind of a project, being almost the illegitimate child of Vancouver as far as the availability of recreational and athletic centres are concerned. As a Vancouver member, and as a cabinet minister, I hope he will lend his support to the development of this available area as a centennial project for recreational and athletic purposes. I hope the minister will make some comment in regard to this suggestion.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I am not unfamiliar with the Brighton beach area and of its situation in respect of Vancouver, but the hon. member will recall that we are representing a city that is only 77 years of age, yet with its suburbs today it has almost a million people. We will do very well if we do the things that he has suggested, and make commitments in this regard for the preservation of as many of these historical spots as we can. We in British Columbia have as our representative on the national sites board Dr. Margaret Ormsby, and I am sure the hon. member will agree that we could not have a better person in this position. I certainly will see that this matter is referred to her, but we hesitate to give even a nudge in this regard, as the hon. member can rightly understand. If I can give half a nudge in this case I will do so.

Mr. Winch: You are referring now to the Brighton park, is that right?

Mr. Laing: Yes. I am not unfamiliar with the history of the hon. gentleman's riding. It was not so many years ago that my father owned 20 acres on the top of capital hill for which he traded a stud horse. After paying taxes for about eight or ten years he gave it up, letting it go for taxes. My hon. friend talks about an illegitimate child and I cannot agree with him at all. I was up around Wall street the other day and noticed some very splendid homes, with a tremendous view.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, I said this area was an illegitimate child of Vancouver as far as parks and recreational facilities were concerned.

Mr. Laing: Of course I agree with him in that regard, but the hon. member only a few days ago received the agreement in respect of everything he has said of the mayor of the city of Vancouver—that Vancouver East had been neglected in the matter of parks. We are of course a federal administration, but as far as we possibly can we will work with the provincial and city parks authorities. This year we are contributing $20,000 to assist the development of the national-provincial parks association, which is doing a great deal and has a tremendous opportunity to combine the efforts of those people at the three government levels who are interested in the development of parks.

Mr. Winch: I should like to ask the minister one further question. Will the minister support a plan for a major recreational and athletic centre on Boundary road, which is the hub of the metropolitan area in the lower mainland?

Mr. Laing: We will certainly be interested in co-operating in every way possible within our sphere.

Mr. Rock: Mr. Chairman, it seems that all our national parks are located in either Alberta or British Columbia and I am wondering whether there is any land left for anything else.

I should like to know whether there is any intention on the part of the government to convert the property in the Gatineau hills, which at this moment comes under the jurisdiction of the national capital commission, into a national park under the jurisdiction of the department of northern affairs. I firmly believe that the eastern part of Canada is lacking in national parks, and in view of the close proximity of that area to this capital city I believe it should be converted in that way in order that at least the people in central Canada may enjoy it.

I believe that certain navigable lakes, such as lake St. Louis and the lake of Two Mountains surrounding the island of Montreal, should be considered for development as national park area to accommodate yachts and other craft, as well as beach facilities. In this area there is a population of nearly two million, although there is not one national park. These people on week ends travel to the Plattsburgh area around lake Champlain in the United States to enjoy the park facilities there. I should like the minister to seriously consider these two lake areas I have mentioned for the development of national parks so that the people of the congested Montreal area may enjoy the recreational facilities that could be established there.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I only rise at this time because of the absence of my colleague for Cape Breton North and Victoria who is at this time at home on other important business. I hope what I say is accurate because I have not had an opportunity to check it with the hon. member. Is the minister aware of the intention of his department to construct a clubhouse on the golf course at Cape Breton national park? I think that the need for a clubhouse is going to become most apparent very shortly. This golf course, the most beautiful in Canada, though some members may want to challenge that statement, is very much in need of such a clubhouse.

All hon. members are aware that in addition to the production by the C.B.C. this year the Shell Oil Company chose this course for one of its productions on their program "The Wonderful World of Golf". Without a doubt these programs will mean a tremendous boost to the tourist industry of Cape Breton. If the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria were here I am quite sure he would have something to say about the proposed clubhouse which I understand was in the planning stage, but was later cancelled. With the tremendous publicity we expect from these two television programs which will be shown later this year, the need for a clubhouse will become most apparent and I would ask the minister to keep this in mind.

I would also ask the minister to try to encourage more rapid development of the Louisburg fortress project. It will mean a great deal to the tourist industry of Cape Breton and the speeding up of the project would be of great advantage to our part of the country. There are a few more arguments I would like to put forward, but having regard to the fact that the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre yielded the floor for a moment about an hour ago and is probably still waiting to put his views on record I will not say any more at this time.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity to ask the minister a few questions concerning the Akamina highway. As he comes from British Columbia I am sure he is familiar with this project which has been the subject of discussion not only by the present government but by the former government. I understand that the policy of both governments has been to stand behind the construction of the Akamina-Kishinena highway.

For the benefit of those who may not know where the proposed highway is located, may I say that it would start in the southwestern corner of Waterton lakes national park, extend into British Columbia about 18 miles and link up with another highway coming in from Montana. The governor of Montana and a posse of Montana officials came to Alberta some three years ago and meetings were held at Waterton Lakes to discuss the possibility of getting the governments concerned to construct this highway, which would be a tremendous asset to Waterton Lakes national park. It would permit people from the United States to make a circuit tour starting in Glacier national park in the United States and going through Waterton Lakes national park. If they desired to do so they could then visit other parts of western Canada.

The people of the United States immediately to the south of Waterton Lakes national park have asked our government to take action on this matter. Meetings have been called at the instigation particularly of the Waterton Lakes chamber of commerce. This organization, now headed by Mr. Craig, sponsored meetings as recently as the past summer to see if some action could not be obtained with regard to the construction of about one mile of the Akamina highway in Alberta and about 18 miles of the Kishinena highway in British Columbia.

I am sorry to say that the project has been held up because of certain federal-provincial snags. Let us get them out on the table and look at them. The federal appropriations which we are discussing today do not permit of the spending of any money for the construction of this highway and I can find no item in these estimates. No money appropriated by parliament for a highway under these estimates can be used to construct a highway or road outside of the boundaries of a national park.

If this highway is to be built, one way of doing it would be for the province of British Columbia to give a strip of land to the federal government. It would have to be possibly 160 feet wide and 18 miles long. A second solution would be for the provincial and federal governments to trade adjacent pieces of land which they now own. The province of British Columbia could give the federal government a piece of land in the southwestern corner of British Columbia so that it would then be federal territory, with the result that federal funds could be spent for the construction of the highway. In other words, the details with regard to who is to pay for the highway and how the project is to be worked out are still unresolved.

The result is that the people of Waterton Lakes and the people of the United States who have been co-operating with us so well are still wondering why the federal and provincial governments cannot get together and find a solution for the problem. I know the minister is fully cognizant of the problem and how serious the matter is to the people affected. I should like him to take this opportunity to explain to the people of Waterton Lakes and southern Alberta what is holding up the project. Why can he not get action on it?

I know that the former government sent representatives to Victoria and substantial progress was made, but I want to know from the present minister whether the project is in jeopardy. Has he given up on it? There is no item in the estimates to go forward with the project. I should like him to tell me, the Lethbridge chamber of commerce and the Waterton Lakes chamber of commerce, what the views of the government are and what plans he has for action to get the Akamina-Kishinena highway under way.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I certainly get no satisfaction out of saying it is the fault of the other government, but we have made it very clear to the province of British Columbia that if they will turn over to us the Kishinena watershed, which is what we are discussing, free of all encumbrances it would then be our responsibility to see that the area was suitably developed. We would build the highway at once if that were done. However if the province should decide to construct its 18 miles of road we would at once find the funds to complete the one mile of road within Waterton Lakes national park. We have suggested to the government of the province of British Columbia that they turn over the watershed to us but they have not yet decided to do so.

As I say, I do not take any pleasure in saying it is somebody else's fault, but I want to assure the hon. member that we have done all we can to bring about action on this road. I was told in Lethbridge the other night of its importance not only to Waterton Lakes but to Lethbridge and the area as a whole, and I am quite certain that its importance to that area would be matched by its importance to the province of British Columbia if the road were completed.

I should like to respond to the statements of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier-Lasalle who pointed out that unfortunately there are no national parks in Quebec. We have had certain correspondence with Quebec and we have offered to co-operate in making surveys of certain areas. It has been suggested it might be a good thing if the Gatineau hills in Quebec were established as a national park, but I believe the Quebec department of resources would not think this would be an adequate area in which to create a national park. Quebec has a great number of very fine provincial parks, but I think there is now evidence that they would like to have a national park within the province because a great number of Quebec people travel to other parts of Canada, particularly to the maritimes.

I want to thank the hon. member for Cape Breton South for having, on behalf of the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, said something about the park in Cape Breton. I agree with him that this is one of the most beautiful parks in Canada. The Cabot trail is simply magnificent, and I agree with everything the hon. member said with respect to the golf course.

Plans were drawn two years ago for rebuilding the clubhouse, but they were withdrawn because it was decided certain adjustments were necessary to the course itself, and at that time attendance at the course hardly justified the investment that was proposed. I agree that the magnificent advertising we received this summer, and which will be shown on television this winter, will attract more people there, and that we have to get a new clubhouse very quickly. While provision for it is not included in the estimates for 1964-65 I am quite certain it will be coming along very quickly.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South also dealt with Louisburg, and I may say the progress there has made me very unhappy. It is very difficult to combine the work of archaeologists and builders at the same time, because an archaeologist does not do what a builder does. A builder is supposed to put down foundations and an archaeologist is supposed to undermine them. This is a tremendous fort, extending over an enormous area, and until we get the detail that is required, by excavation, it will be impossible for us to restore any part of it in a veritable manner. I think the people of Canada would not wish us to build anything unless it were a genuine reproduction of what had existed previously. In the meantime, we have spent a considerable amount of money and have not got a great deal to show for it. We expect to have a great deal more to show next year when a lot of work will be done above ground.

I might mention that there were 90,000 visitors to Louisburg this year as against 23,000 last year. This, together with the tens of thousands of artifacts discovered, dating back to 1732, has been of tremendous benefit to the tourist business and hence to the economy of the area.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I yielded the floor so that all speeches dealing with parks could appear consecutively in Hansard, and now I would like to discuss something else which it may be thought has only local application but actually is of general public interest and applies to a certain extent to parkland development and preservation.

The hon. member for Athabasca referred to whooping cranes. I would like to deal briefly with the perennial problem of sandhill cranes and the efforts of the government to help farmers protect their crops from excessive damage by these birds who feed on grain on their way south to their wintering grounds. The minister may recall that I raised this question last year, when he gave a very descriptive answer, saying they were going to bash these birds down in Texas before they started flying north. Apparently they did not bash enough of them because according to reports there are just as many birds this year as before.

I have not been home recently but I have read that for the first time in 47 years the authorities have declared an open season on the shooting of these birds. There was a ban on the shooting of them in other years, because of the danger of shooting whooping cranes, which occasionally come with these birds and land in the area around the north end of Last Mountain lake. I also understand from reports that daily checks are made to see if any danger has been caused to whooping cranes. The shooting season opened on September 1 and is to close tomorrow, September 19. I would like to know whether the minister can make any report on how this new policy of shooting sandhill cranes has worked out, and whether it will be continued, rather than reverting to the previous policy of using explosives to scare the birds off farm crops?

Last year I referred to the fact that there was a bird sanctuary established on the north end of Last Mountain lake. In fact this bird sanctuary was the first one established on the North American continent and was set up by the government of Sir John A. Macdonald in the 1890's. Last year I asked the minister what was the possibility of extending this sanctuary so that birds would flock into it and not bother farmers' crops so much. At that time he indicated his department was looking into the feasibility of extending the sanctuary, and I wonder if he has any statement on the progress made to date. I suggested it would be a good centennial project, and I still think so.

Dealing with whooping cranes, I wish to refer to a press release issued by the department on May 12, 1964, outlining what was called a co-operative Canadian-United States whooping crane management project. Announcement of this project was made jointly by the minister and by Stewart L. Udall, secretary of the United States department of the interior. It was indicated that under this new system of whooping crane management it might be possible to have an annual addition of 100 young whoopers to the total world population, which is now just around 32. The plan calls for a captive breeding stock of eight to ten birds being built up in the United States by incubating up to six eggs a year obtained by the Canadian wildlife service from the whooping crane nesting ground in Wood Buffalo park in the Northwest Territories. This is how I tie this in with the present estimates; there has been a great deal of discussion about Wood Buffalo national park. I should like to ask the minister whether he has any information with regard to a possible build-up of the number of whooping cranes as a result of this project.

There is one other subject I should like to bring up. We have heard a great deal of discussion about buffalo. In Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, we have a local park where there is a herd of buffalo roaming in their natural habitat, as they did before the white man came. This is a great tourist attraction. Every year a large number of visitors come to this park. A plan is on foot now to develop a modern zoo in conjunction with this buffalo herd, and I hope the minister will give some consideration to any application which may reach him from Moose Jaw for assistance in establishing a modern zoo as an additional attraction to this buffalo park.

Mr. Laing: In reply to the hon. member may I say we have had no reports about the incubation of whooping cranes. I know it takes 21 days for chickens to hatch; I do not know how long it takes a whooping crane. As to sandhill cranes, while we have sought the co-operation of the Americans we find we cannot instruct them to destroy sandhill cranes when the birds are down there; apparently it is not too much fun shooting them, because there seem to be more than ever this year. There has been a gradual rise in the numbers of these cranes and we are aware that unfortunately a great deal of damage has been done in several places in Saskatchewan.

I may say that the province has increased its contribution to Last Mountain lake area and have purchased more land for the protection of that particular sanctuary. In 1964 we agreed with the province that permits should be issued for the destruction of sandhill cranes, provided a competent biologist certified that no whooping cranes were in the vicinity at the time. I think this covers the point raised by the hon. member and I thank him for his intervention in the debate.

Mr. Roxburgh: I have no intention of taking up a lot of time. I should like to bring it to the attention of the minister—and I have spoken to him personally about this as well as to his parliamentary secretary—that centenary year is only a stone's throw away. I know the department has worked toward this. I just wanted in my small way to add a little more pressure to that project, and the project is this—that we should have a series of national parks right across Canada. I do not think any project carried out by a department of government would be of greater value to the generations coming along—to our grandsons and to their grandsons and granddaughters in the future. We are very fortunate today that we are able to go out and fish and see wildlife and take part in the shooting of it, if you want to say so. I think everyone recognizes that land in its natural state—and which not long ago we thought was so extensive that there was no need to worry about it—is fast disappearing.

I understand that the tourist industry is today ranking about second in Canada, bringing in about $600 million. Each year the importance of tourist revenue will become greater and it is obvious we must have facilities for our visitors as well as for ourselves. I would therefore like to impress upon the minister the need to make every effort to provide these facilities. I fully realize that this is not always easy, and that the department has to work with the various provincial governments. But I sincerely hope that the provinces, mindful of the needs of our people in the future, will in turn work together with the federal department of northern affairs so as to provide the parks that are needed.

Just one more thought. We have a number of parks which are not kept as they should be in respect to wildlife. I know there are enough places where we get sand kicked into our sandwiches and people spilling our coffee as they go by. We certainly do not want any more of them, though they have their place. I sincerely hope the department will see to it that there are always areas where no one will ever be allowed to build homes or put up commercial structures—areas left open for those who wish to explore, or paddle canoes or, if they happen to be in western Canada, pack their horses and wander freely among the beauties which this nation has to offer. I think we have a wonderful country and I think we should keep it. That is why I want to put these few thoughts on record.

Mr. Barnett: I feel it is very encouraging that such great interest has been shown in this question of parks today. I think it is just as well a number of speakers have intervened between my own observations and those of my colleagues from the Vancouver lower mainland area who spoke earlier, urging the minister to take action with regard to an area with which he is himself perfectly familiar. Perhaps he has been reminded by some of those who intervened that he is also minister of national resources.

I certainly do not wish to indicate that I do not share the enthusiasm of the minister and of my colleagues from Vancouver with regard to the potentialities of Garibaldi park. I intervene again in this discussion only because of a brief exchange between myself and the minister on the question of park potential on Vancouver island. I think the minister will agree that whoever was responsible years ago at the provincial level in British Columbia for setting aside Garibaldi, and Strathcona park on Vancouver island, as park areas should be commended for his wisdom and foresight.

There seemed to be some confusion in the minister's mind as to just what area I was referring to when I suggested Vancouver island area. I think perhaps I should attempt to explain briefly my own conception of what might happen on Vancouver island. Strathcona provincial park was set aside in many thousands of acres in the very heartland of Vancouver island, with an eastern boundary that was set by the line of the original Esquimalt and Nanaimo railway land grant, and represents perhaps the most rugged and beautiful section of Vancouver island. Adjacent to that, but outside the boundary of the park is what is known as the Forbidden Plateau area in the vicinity of Courtenay in the Comox valley.

As the minister may know, there is a growing interest on the part of people on the west coast of Vancouver island in the development of a marine park on a large scale. As I see it, there exists the possibility for the development of a very major wilderness park area which would embrace some of the most beautiful mountain and seashore area to be found in Canada. There certainly is a growing interest and a growing concern among the residents of Vancouver island that action be taken toward a development of this kind, a development which would be completely in keeping with the policy for national parks which was outlined earlier to us by the minister.

I have been explaining to people on a number of occasions what the minister has said many times in this house, namely that the initiative in this matter must come from the provincial authorities of British Columbia. I have suggested to those who are particularly interested that they should seek to initiate an interest on the part of the provincial authorities in this matter. For some reason the government of the province of British Columbia up until now has certainly not displayed any great interest in the idea of national parks development in the coastal areas of the province. This to me is a matter of personal regret. It is not that I would suggest for a moment that in the minds of those who are responsible for parks administration in the province of British Columbia there is not a proper concern for the maintenance and development of the wilderness park idea; nevertheless, the fact remains that there is increasing pressure for the exploitation commercially of the particular heartland of Vancouver island which is included within the boundaries of the present Strathcona park.

I feel the time has come when there should be a reassessment and reappraisal of those boundaries so that a certain area which might be less desirable might be turned over to normal commercial development, but certain areas such as the Forbidden Plateau area and some of the seashore areas on the western coast of Vancouver island might be incorporated within the redrawn boundaries of a park. I believe that this natural wilderness heritage could be best preserved and protected if it were turned over to the national parks administration. I think it has been recognized that because it is a national administration with concern for our national heritage as a whole, it is therefore less vulnerable to the kind of pressures for commercial exploitation which can be put from time to time upon provincial governments.

I believe that the minister should be equally interested in the preservation of this area of Vancouver island as he has already indicated he is interested in the preservation of at least the best parts of the present provincial Garibaldi park. I should point out, for the benefit of members of the house who may not be familiar with the area, that this is a mountain area where mountains rise to the height of between 6,000 and 8,000 feet. There happens to be within it what I believe is the highest waterfall in Canada. I refer to Della falls, which drops some 1,443 feet from its mountain elevation down toward the drainage basin of Great Central lake. In the light of the general interest that has been shown today in the question of our national parks, and in the light of the statement the minister has made concerning parks policy, I wanted to put on the record as briefly as I could my own views in connection with the potentialities of this part of Vancouver island.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks that have been made about the growth of our population and the increasing need to think of not only today but of tomorrow, and possibly of a century or more that lies ahead, I would like also to draw to the attention of the minister and the house the potentialities that lie within the large area of the mainland in the northeastern part of my constituency. Most people think of Comox-Alberni as being a Vancouver island constituency. Actually, however, in the number of acres there is probably as much of it on the mainland of the province of British Columbia as there is on Vancouver Island. In this almost unknown northeastern corner of Comox-Alberni lies the main mountain mass of the coast range of British Columbia. Within its area we have what in the days of my youth was known as Mystery mountain, which was explored by the Mundays who were mountaineers and with whom I am sure the minister is quite familiar. This is now known as mount Waddington, named after one of the early railway surveyors. This is a mountain that is higher than mount Robson.

There lie within this area icefields that are known to be much greater in extent than the more well known Columbia icefields in the Rocky mountains. I am not suggesting this is an area—because it is inaccessible at the present time—that should be the subject matter of any immediate plan for development, but I am suggesting that the people who are concerned with long range planning for the future and the preservation of wilderness areas in this country of ours should not overlook this tremendous wilderness area which now remains virtually untouched by man, except on some of its fringes along the coast line. I felt that in view of the line the discussion has taken I would like to take advantage of this particular opportunity, when we have had what to my mind has been a most facinating discussion on the question of parks, with contributions from hon. members from all across this country, to point out what I consider to be some of our richest potential heritage in this field, which happens to lie within my own constituency.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I can tell the hon. member that his remarks with regard to our province of unsurpassed beauty will be taken due note of, as will be his references to those areas of Vancouver island. While I am on my feet I should like to express my thanks to the hon. member for Norfolk. I think no member of the House of Commons has contributed more to Canada's standing in amateur sport or our admiration or appreciation of the outdoors than he. The hon. member made a plea that I think has probably been repeated in a number of places in the house today, namely for a wider Canadian appreciation of these assets with which we are dealing. I think that both the hon. member for Norfolk and the hon. member who has just spoken are making a plea more to our provincial and civic governments than to us. I remind them again that we are prepared, wherever a province provides this property free of encumbrance, to ask this House of Commons for the funds necessary for its development. I am quite certain that in the present mood of this house, representing the people of Canada, those funds would be forthcoming.

Item agreed to.

National museum of Canada—

25. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,489,600.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, this is an interesting vote on which there was quite a discussion last time. Would the minister give the committee some information as to what has happened to the reorganization of the museum and its administration?

Mr. Laing: We have already assured the committee that this matter will be dealt with in the estimates of the Secretary of State. It has been decided to turn the museum over to the Secretary of State. The legislation to take care of this matter is not yet before the house.

Mr. Churchill: Is this item then to be carried in his estimates or in the minister's?

Mr. Laing: It will be carried in his estimates under transferred duties.

Mr. Churchill: Then we stand this item now?

Mr. Laing: Yes.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Shall the item carry?

Mr. Churchill: Well, I understood we were standing item 25. Is that not right? If this matter is to be transferred to the Secretary of State it would only be open for discussion when his estimates come up.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Is it agreed that item 25 stands?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

Water resources—

30. Administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's share of the expenses of the international executive council, world power conference, and authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amount of the shares of the province of Manitoba and of the province of Ontario of the cost of regulating the levels of lake of the Woods and lac Seul and the amount of the shares of provincial and outside agencies of the cost of hydrometric surveys, $2,097,200.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks on our water resources. Canada has the largest bodies of fresh water in the world. We also have a great source of supply from the great lakes which is extremely important to industry, recreation and sanitary facilities. Industries and populations have settled in the great lakes area and this has created the problem of getting rid of the waste from industries as well as disposing of sewage. The international joint commission was formed, I believe, around 1910 and along with the provinces, states and municipalities has done a reasonably good job over the years. But this great resource of water is gradually being lost. I realize this matter has been referred to previously. It affects the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec as well as the states of Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, New York, both directly and indirectly. It also affects the prairie provinces, in an indirect way.

At the present time the water levels are the lowest in 100 years, and while some people say that precipitation will bring some or all of it back I think that is foolish thinking. Anyone who looks at this situation will realize that today far more water is being used by industry, agriculture and the population in general, and it is ridiculous to say that precipitation will restore what is used, when it is being used far faster than in other years. To my mind precipitation only meets part of the problem.

It has been suggested that a committee of this house be set up to consider the matter but I think probably that is not good enough. This is an international affair and should be considered on an international basis rather than just by a committee of this house. It is not only a federal concern but provincial and international as well. Every avenue must be investigated. I think as far as the provinces and the federal government go they can deal with the tributaries and the water which runs into the great lakes. But when it comes to controlling the great lakes themselves, a committee appointed by this house would not be able to deal with that problem. If a committee is set up I would suggest to the minister that representatives from the provinces and the United States government sit in on the committee; otherwise the committee could not deal with the matter fully and do the work it should do as quickly as it should. First one reference and then another reference would be made until the matter reached the international just commission; at least that is the way I feel about it.

There are a few things we do know in this connection. I think we have controls on lake Superior—this may be rehashing matters which have been gone over before, but I think it worth recalling—and on lake Ontario, but broadly speaking we have no controls on lake Huron, lake Erie, or lake Michigan. Therefore any rise in the level of lake Superior would be very quickly dissipated in the vast reservoirs of lake Huron and lake Erie. As a matter of fact I think the minister prepared a paper on this subject for his parliamentary secretary which stated that in three years only 50 per cent of the water in lake Superior would get down to the port of Montreal.

There are certain facts which stand out here. If the control of water going out of the port of Montreal could be controlled by dam and lock, as it is partly controlled now in one branch of the river by stones piled across it as a stopper, we would find the run-off would be partly contained. I have reviewed this matter at some length and I cannot see any reason why it should not be done. I think the same efforts put in on lake Ontario and lake Huron would control water run-off, and if that water run-off were controlled I am sure there would be lots of time to investigate the other possibility of the grand canal project and other projects. I do not think there is much time on hand at present because in my area the water level this year was down very drastically, some said as much as five to six feet. This loss of water represented a great economic loss to the people running tourist establishments. One of the reasons the water was down this year was that not only was the water situation itself bad, but all of the frightening things said about it here and there which appeared in the press and elsewhere had an adverse effect too. I do not want to see this happen again next year. I want to see this problem well on the way to being solved before the next tourist season comes along. I want to see something definite done so that people can say we are working on the matter.

I would go further and ask the minister to ask the Minister of Transport, who from what he said last night is very sympathetic, to get busy and do a little more dredging, as a helpful measure. The minister is aware of the tremendous need for dredging in those areas. Many of the boats coming into these ports must carry smaller than capacity loads, and many cannot get into the marinas. As a result of this situation there is a great economic loss not only to the immediate area but as well to the heart of western Canada in respect of the freight carried by those boats on the great lakes which is destined for western Canada.

I know the minister is working, and studying this situation in an attempt to find a solution, but I do not think we have as yet grasped the urgency of this problem in this house. It is urgent because of the number of people concerned who have invested all their money in tourist resorts business in this area.

I leave those suggestions with the minister who I am sure has listened sympathetically to what I have said on behalf of my constituents who live on the great lakes.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am very interested in participating in the discussion of these estimates because they provide for water resources. I am speaking on behalf of a party which has been interested in the conservation and development of natural resources both on a federal and provincial scale ever since its formation. I have also put forward a federal-provincial program in this house repeatedly throughout the years urging the government to take action on some aspect of conservation of our resources whether lands, forests or waters. On behalf of the party I have moved a resolution in this house for a number of years urging a national-provincial conference to consider a national resources policy. I give credit to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle who, when the former government was in power took action which resulted in the conference held in Montreal, and the formation of the council of resources ministers. I think this was made easier for the government on that occasion, because prior to that the premier of Quebec had not been in favour of this program, and since Mr. Lesage became premier he has shown a willingness to consider such a conference.

Arising from that action, as I have said, was the establishment of the council of resource ministers who I think are going forward with this problem in the right way although very slowly, and I acknowledge all the difficulties there are in respect of ten provinces agreeing to an agenda and a procedure for an investigation of the development of any of our resources.

Today I wish to draw particular attention to the need for a national water policy and I know the minister is very interested in this subject. This is a subject in which I have been interested, as have my colleagues, for a good many years. I remember when we first brought this subject to the attention of the house in 1945, 1946 and 1947 at which time we were considered to be rather visionary in some respects. I remember the interest taken in respect of the question of conservation and development of our renewable resources immediately following the second world war, and the representations that were made to the government through members of the House of Commons by the Canadian federation of agriculture, trade union organizations located at various places in Canada, chambers of commerce and by numerous community groups, as well as scientific organizations such as the agricultural institute of Canada.

One resolution that was adopted and endorsed by some six of this type of organization, at a meeting of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, reads as follows:

> Business and community interests in soil, forest, water conservation and land use are reflected in the chamber's policy declarations on agriculture and natural resources. In these declarations the chamber:—
>
> (a) Says loss of soil fertility, and erosion by wind and water are among the most important problems facing agriculture.
> (b) Urges government and business to extend educational programs on forest fire prevention, value and necessity of reforestation, and
> (c) Asks for national policy for control and development of nation's water resources.

Almost identical resolutions were adopted by various organizations including labour organizations from the prairie provinces which were particularly interested in the development of a water policy which would provide water for irrigation and other consumptive uses in the prairie provinces. At that time some of these representations and proposals were considered to be somewhat visionary. We hear that the same sort of suggestion today, that we should wait for 10, 15 or 20 years, but the problem grows more acute throughout the years.

I remember in 1954 speaking on this subject. I had moved for a number of years urging a federal-provincial conference on resources, and I recall that hon. members of all parties supported the principles of the resolution and the proposals. I remember particularly former prime minister St. Laurent stating that he supported the principles and admitted that mistakes had been made here and there in the past. Prime minister St. Laurent said that on the over-all picture we were not doing too badly and that a good healthy warning had been sounded in respect of the depletion of Canada's resources, but that this should not induce too deep pessimism. As a matter of fact, the prime minister in my opinion was far too optimistic. We have done very little since that time and in some respects we have done some things to which I have taken strong exception, and of which there is growing awareness in this country.

I am very interested in the development of a national water policy, and have been following the minister's statements in this respect in this house, as well as statements made by his parliamentary secretary and other prominent members on the government side. I think it is about time that this government announced to the people of Canada a national water policy, indicating its immediate and long term objectives.

Recently I read a release of a speech made by Mr. John A. Turner, M.P., before the water level seminar sponsored by the Montreal port council at the Windsor hotel on June 30, 1964. There is quite a lot of good material in this speech. Quoting from page 2 Mr. Turner says:

> It must be clear to all of us that the development of a national water management policy is a priority which must occupy us for the next generation. I want to say to you at the outset that Canada has had such a policy for many years but that, to my mind, it must be revised and sharpened.

While I agree with Mr. Turner's remarks in respect of the need for the development of a national water management policy, I cannot agree with his suggestion that we have had such a policy for many years and that it just needs to be revised and sharpened. I do not think we have had an over-all national water policy in any sense of the word, and certainly a great deal more has to be done than just revising and sharpening the policy we are supposed to have.

Later I read a news report of a speech by the parliamentary secretary to the minister made, I think, as proxy for the minister. The report is to be found in the Gazette of Saturday, September 12, and it is headed "Canada's Water Going Down the Drain?" I agree that it will be going down the Columbia pretty soon at a fast rate.

An hon. Member: It has been for many years.

Mr. Herridge: That is right, and we should do something to conserve some of it for ourselves. I am more interested in the needs of Alberta farmers apparently than is the leader of the Social Credit party. I presume this is a fairly factual report of the parliamentary secretary's speech. I took it for granted that it reflected the minister's approach and I was very pleased to read some of these observations. I am going to put some of them on the record so we will have them there for the future. Here is what it says:

> The price which the public pays for confused policies, haphazard programs and ill planned projects is staggering.

I agree with that. Then it goes on to say:

> It is paid in the form of: Floods, causing immense property damage, which could have been better controlled in many cases, avoided altogether in others.

That is quite correct.

> Shipping, stranded or wrecked on a nation's waterways.

Another accurate statement.

> The depletion, often to perilously low levels, of those secure supplies of fresh drinking water without which great cities cannot exist.

In my opinion that is an accurate statement.

> The virtual destruction of once great commercial fisheries.

There is a lot of truth in that.

> A pollution problem that is only beginning to be faced.

Mind you, this question has been dealt with in the house frequently since the end of the second world war. Yet it is admitted by the minister himself that we are only beginning to face the problem. The article continues:

> Calamitously low water levels in great inland harbours built to accommodate the world's shipping.

The previous speaker dealt with that question and he is more informed than I am as to the need in this respect. It is obvious that this is one of the problems we face.

> Abbreviated navigation seasons attributable to a hit and miss attack on Canada's winter ice problems.
> An acute shortage of water for irrigation and other purposes in farm areas.

You should not think so from the way we have disposed of our water to the United States over long periods of time.

> Spoilage of increasingly important recreational areas due to pollution or shortsighted drainage.

That is an increasing problem in eastern Canada and it is one that is beginning to raise its ugly head in some of our western river basins. It is one that is causing some concern to my constituents with respect to the Kootenay and Columbia rivers where some pollution has commenced. This problem cannot be solved by any small municipality or village affected, or by a provincial government and these villages. It will require a national water policy that will provide for the co-operation of all these levels of government if we are going to tackle this problem in the immediate future, and successfully.

The construction of costly public works which need not have been built at all or which have been planned so inadequately that they make necessary other remedial and expensive public works.

That has to do with river protection, breakwaters and things of that sort, and it is quite an acknowledgement after 22 years of Liberal rule and Liberal planning.

A costly and improvident contest for available water by the various classes of users—farmers, commercial fishermen, power companies, industry, lumber companies, transportation interests, governments and the general public—with scant regard for the modern concept of water as a multi-use resource to be handled for the benefit of all.

How true. The article continues:

A dangerous tendency to allow Canadian water resources to be diverted outside our borders on a first come first served basis, before Canada's own future requirements have been studied, let alone assured.

I am sure all members of this group will agree with that contention and observation. Then the parliamentary secretary went on to say:

Water remains Canada's most important natural resource. It is a resource which has always seemed plentiful and about which we Canadians have devoted altogether too little attention, except at times of crisis—flood or drought.

Then he goes on to deal with the various problems that face us in this respect. He deals with the various authorities that are involved, and I agree that it is an excellent analysis of the situation. He outlines all the various departments that have something to say about the administration of our water resources, and they are too many to mention. There are some two or three dozen at least. Then he goes on to say:

Even those agencies which come under a single department jostle one another for pride of place in the sprawling federal bureaucracy and a bigger share of the departmental budget. They compete for the right to direct departmental thinking about water resources along the lines most advantageous to themselves.

Rival agencies from different departments behave on occasion in a less inhibited fashion, squabbling over methods and objectives, denouncing one another's reports and plans, purloining key personnel, blocking or stalling important projects assigned to other agencies in the hope that time may produce a beneficial change. This buccaneering approach to the nation's water problems is not universal. It is, however, all too common.

The jungle-like atmosphere which prevails in the water resource field is attributable less to the agencies themselves than to the unsystem-like system under which they are required to perform. Operating under the watchful eye of no single department, acknowledging the over-all authority of no single minister, exposed to no coherent policy, the agencies are scarcely encouraged to work together co-ordinating their efforts. With authority fragmented from top to bottom the ordinary decision making machinery is short circuited. The consequences are serious.

Then he goes on to deal with a number of consequences of this fragmentation of administration. I am very glad to see that brought out in the open because the members of this group have dealt with that aspect of the question while not being as well or as fully informed as the parliamentary secretary. This is a problem that has to be faced if we are going to deal with it successfully and give effect to a national water policy.

In view of this speech by the parliamentary secretary I trust this is the line along which the minister is thinking. We are very glad to see this because first of all we must have a purpose and objective, we have got to have a policy and then we must have an administration that can give it effect instead of having our water resources dealt with by so many agencies. I have had several experiences in my own constituency where the conflict between various departments with some limited jurisdiction over certain aspects of our water problems was very obvious. That is that.

I was also very pleased to note that there are others who are concerned about this matter. The Kingston Whig-Standard of Tuesday, September 15 last contained a very interesting editorial which I wish to bring to the minister's attention because I trust it will stiffen his back so that he will stand up for Canada in the days ahead. It is entitled "The Columbia Money Game", and the last paragraph reads in part as follows:

The real winners—as we predicted years ago—are the successful Americans who talked this country into handing over those sovereign rights for a paltry few million dollars—

Mr. Byrne: Order.

Mr. Herridge: I continue:

—which have not left the U.S.—and Premier Bennett, who can hardly wait to start collecting his 5 per cent.

The hon. member for Kootenay East does not like to be reminded about this but I could not resist mentioning—

Mr. Byrne: Out of order.

Mr. Herridge: —the observations of this very intelligent editorial writer. I read the report of the excellent speech of the minister's parliamentary secretary and I thought that we were on the road to a policy. Then I got a manuscript of a speech delivered by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister. It was entitled "The Great Northern Water Plan", and was a luncheon address delivered at the 52nd general conference of the Pacific northwest trade association at Prince George, B.C. on September 14, 1964. Possibly the parliamentary secretary was affected by the spirit and mood of the gathering, because a great number of the people in attendance at this luncheon were United States businessmen interested in the development of Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho and other states in the northwest.

I forgot to mention that while I was very critical in previous statements—at least I asked certain questions previously with respect to the superintendent in one of the minister's parks, at the request of some of his friends—I do want to emphasize the fact that, with the exception of two former deputy ministers who are widely condemned, and not including Major General Young, who is a real man, I have heard nothing but commendation for the officials of the minister's department, and I was very sorry the estimates for national parks were passed without some reference to the good work being done by the wildlife branch.

I judge the parliamentary secretary's speech was delivered on the basis of the recently announced policy of Premier Bennett in B.C., and to meet the feelings of the persons who were listening. I want to quote some paragraphs from his speech and contrast them with the speech I previously quoted. He began:

> Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen—

I can imagine the young man standing up and saying that.

> Today I want to talk about water. I want to talk about water resource development on a grand scale. I also want you to look ahead 50 or even 100 years. By then, we will be diverting our northern rivers southward. Advancing technology will help us to skim off their flood waters in order to meet the urgent requirements of people who live in the south.

Is this not what we were foretelling when Premier Bennett proposed taking over the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, and when some hydro officials in B.C. are looking forward to the development of the various rivers in the north? He went on:

> Man's inventiveness is, no doubt, our greatest resource. It is turning mountains of granite into fuel for our atomic furnaces. It is erasing the fear from our minds that mankind will ultimately run out of energy. It is putting more food on our tables. So mass starvation is no longer the spectre that it once was.

Replying to questions in the committee on external affairs the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that regardless of the foreign aid given by Canada and other countries, to India and similar countries, the gap between their standard of living and ours was still widening. But here the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister talks about—

> —erasing the fear from our minds that mankind will ultimately run out of energy. It is putting more food on our tables—

—and so on. He continued:

> Even the metals are becoming cheaper to produce with each passing decade. So why worry, unduly, about water? It, too, can be used over and over again or drawn from alternative sources to meet our expanding needs.

I want to draw the minister's attention to the conflict in philosophy between his speech and the one given by the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister. Mind you, we are used to him shifting his ground on occasion. He was very critical of the Columbia river treaty during the election. Later he supported it then he disappeared from the house when the vote was taken. One can ask, where does he stand? At page 4 of his speech he said:

> Nor do I under-rate the difficulties of repatriating our water supplies. Once committed, we may never be able to terminate exports of certain Canadian waters to the United States. We must face this prospect and face it head on. Treaty arrangements will be necessary. They must be spelled out in the clearest possible terms. Otherwise we will be involved in misunderstandings which will be harmful to our international relations for generations to come.
> As a North American I cannot, however, ignore the fact that the demand for water is rising and rising rapidly. We are told by your federal experts—

And this indicates he was talking to a United States audience.

> —that U.S. requirements will have risen fourfold between now and the end of the century. Billions of dollars will have to be spent on water diversion and water recovery projects of one kind or another....You, in other words, will be prepared to pay and pay heavily for new sources of supply.

You see—buy Canadian water.

> Under these circumstances, we in Canada, are unlikely to let our great northern rivers flow forever and without interruption to the sea.
> What should we be going now? I suggest we should be already thinking in terms of a great northern water plan. Its concept is simple. Its execution, I believe, is inevitable. In effect, we will be turning our northern rivers around. Some part of their flood waters will be diverted southward—southward and eastward—to meet the more urgent needs of Canadians and Americans in the big cities and towns whose growth would otherwise be hindered for lack of this vital, life giving resource.

Think, if you will, of a great continental water plan. Project your mind ahead to the time when the consumptive uses of water—irrigation, domestic and industrial—have become even more important than the generation of hydroelectric power.

I just want to quote another paragraph or two which appeared to me most interesting. Toward the end of his address he said:

There is only one place for the water to come from; that is the north. The flood crests of our northern rivers perform no useful function at the present time. They can, and I believe eventually will, be skimmed off and directed to the regions of greatest need.

Engineering studies are required. Means of financing must be explored. And finally a treaty or treaties may have to be negotiated between Canada and the United States.

Here he is suggesting a treaty should be negotiated between Canada and the United States before he is even thinking of ways and means of getting this water out to the people in B.C. who require it to the Okanagan, and to the people who require it on the prairies and in other parts of the country. He went on:

All of this will take time. But we must start somewhere. I therefore urge that more of us turn our eyes northward; that we plan against a background which is essentially continental in scope.

Not Canadian in scope, mind you—continental in scope; and this fits completely into the ideas advanced by some of these people in the United States in recent weeks in regard to the continental development of water. It is all right to have a continental scope so long as our government makes certain that all future requirements of water by the Canadian people, requirements for all its various consumptive purposes, are protected and met. That is the first consideration and until we have done that we are not in a position to deal with any other nation in respect to the sale of surplus water. I suggest the minister has a better approach to this problem than the parliamentary secretary, who went on to say:

An exchange scheme linking Alaska with the United States has a great deal to recommend it. Canada, besides providing a land bridge joining Alaska with the other states, may also be able to dispose of some of its cyclical water surplus for lump sum payments made in advance to cover the work involved.

This is the Columbia river treaty over again—we will give you some money to build the dams so long as you sell us all the water we require in the future.

[Mr. Herridge.]

The entire plan may take decades to put into effect. Certain projects—elements of an over-all plan—may however be completed in your lifetime and mine.

Then he went on to deal with the Parsons plan and said:

I know that Washington has launched various investigations, several of which look to the possibility of importing water from Canada. The Parsons plan (known also as the North American water and power alliance) is now before the U.S. senate committee on public works. The question of low water levels on the great lakes has been turned over to the international joint commission.

Then he went on to deal with the necessity for planning and so on.

There is no doubt about it, there is a conflict of philosophy between the minister's approach to this question and the approach taken by the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister. I have drawn this matter to the attention of the minister and of the committee because of the great concern we feel about it. We are not opposed to co-operation with other countries as long as it is on a basis of equity, as long as the Canadian government protects, first of all, the needs of this and future generations with regard to water for irrigation and other consumptive purposes, and any other needs which may develop. Water, as the minister himself said a week or two ago, has become our most valuable national resource.

On behalf of the members of this party I urge the minister to develop a national water policy in co-operation with the provincial governments so as to provide Canadian water for Canadian soil, Canadian water for Canadian power requirements, Canadian water for all other consumptive purposes. In doing so he will provide jobs for Canadians not only in the limited period of the construction of dams but for generations to come.

Item agreed to.

40. Contributions to the provinces toward the construction of dams and other works to assist in the conservation and control of water resources in accordance with agreements entered into between Canada and the provinces, $8,950,000.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I wonder whether the minister would give us an outline of the agreements which are in force at the present time with the provinces under this program. I am of course interested chiefly in my own province, if an agreement exists.

Mr. Laing: Under the Canada Water Conservation Act we have at the present time agreements covering the upper Thames, Ontario, at an estimated cost of $9,640,000. This is the federal contribution only. Then there is the Parkhill project in Ontario at an estimated cost of $825,600; metropolitan Toronto and region, a project involving dams and reservoirs for flood control on the Humber and Don rivers and Black creek at an estimated cost of $24 million—that is the total cost. Our contribution is 37½ per cent.

I would have to draw the hon. member's attention to the presence of agreements under special authority concerning the Winnipeg floodway which involves a total anticipated expenditure of $84 million. I am informed that two thirds of the cost of the excavation work will be paid by the federal government, and 37½ per cent of the balance. I think the principal cost will be incurred in the movement of earth. The federal contribution will therefore exceed 58 per cent of the total cost.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): In addition to these projects, are any negotiations under way at the present time for further agreements with any other province in respect of programs to be carried out during the next fiscal year? If so, can the minister indicate which provinces have made applications? I am not speaking of course about proposals which have already been rejected.

Mr. Laing: The provisions of the Canada Water Conservation Act are, of course, available to all the provinces. As I have said in certain parts of Canada, I cannot put up an advertisement saying: We have money, come and get it. The use of this act appears to have been largely restricted to Ontario, and indeed to metropolitan Toronto. I wish to pay a tribute to Dr. Lord who is chairman of the appropriate organization in metropolitan Toronto, an outstanding engineer who is doing, in my view, a tremendous public service by accepting the chairmanship of the board. He is leaving a great monument behind him in that area. Within ten or 12 miles of the centre of that great city they are providing park lands and areas for recreation which are unprecedented anywhere. However this legislation is available to other provinces, and I understand we are now about to receive an application from the province of British Columbia in respect to the north shore where some flood damage has occurred. I believe British Columbia will apply for assistance in raising the levels of the dikes in the Fraser valley to the extent of about $4.9 million in all. They have indicated they would prefer to use the act also in stage 2 of the plan for protection against flooding in the Fraser valley, which will be the building of dams in the upper reaches of the tributaries of the Fraser. We have not yet agreed with participation in this area. There is a provision in the act that where electric power is incidentally produced the federal contribution will be reduced having regard to that power generation.

The act we are considering seems to have been of tremendous benefit to those who have used it. I think there are other areas in Canada where it could be used to great advantage. But, as I say, there are some people who do not know of its existence.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I know the minister cannot advertise to the provinces that there is money available under this legislation, so I was trying to do a little advertising on his behalf. This is an act which I think has a great potential. It can be used to a far greater extent than it has been used since it was passed by this parliament a good many years ago—I have forgotten how many years, but I think it was at least ten years ago. I think the provinces are now realizing the necessity for doing more water conservation work and I hope that in the future the growth of activity under this legislation will be considerable.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, without asking the minister to go into any detail on the subject I should like to inquire whether any application has been received or whether any negotiations are under way at the present time between his department and British Columbia in respect of any other project under this act, in addition to the one to which he made reference in connection with the Fraser river.

Mr. Laing: No, Mr. Chairman, except that I said I thought we had one in course of preparation between the north shore municipalities and Victoria. Indeed, I think it has been submitted to Hon. Mr. Williston's department, because he has spoken to me about it. That is the only one, involving the three municipalities on the north shore, other than the application of the province of British Columbia joining with the municipalities of the Fraser valley in respect of raising the dike levels there.

Mr. Barnett: There has been no application with respect to any area on Vancouver island, as far as the minister knows?

Mr. Laing: No, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): This completes the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $12,114,500.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Order. The committee is considering vote No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of Public Works for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965. Shall the vote carry?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, surely the minister is going to make an opening statement; or was it made on a previous occasion?

Mr. Deschatelets: I have made my statement, Mr. Chairman, and we are resuming the study of the estimates today.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up too much of the time of the house, but I may perhaps say a few words at this stage of our discussion.

I have to congratulate the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) who is always assisted by very qualified advisers, fully conscious of their responsibilities, for the good work he has accomplished.

Before making any specific remarks, I want to thank the minister for the projects which will be carried out in my constituency, and more particularly at Newport Point, Sandy Beach, and Riviere-au-Renard, the most important one being at Chandler.

Mr. Chairman, a breakwater will be built at Chandler at a cost of $3 million. The Gaspesia Pulp and Paper Company Limited will have to contribute a sixth of the cost of this project. But though the manufacturing of one ton of paper is more costly at Chandler than elsewhere, the Gaspesia Company recently invested over $18 million in a newsprint machine.

With the construction of a deep water harbour, the company intends to invest further capital in the district in the near future.

When the company decided to build a newsprint mill at Chandler, the plant was planned so that the output could be doubled, and increased even more, if the demand should warrant it.

I want to repeat what the minister has already told the house: the planned construction of a breakwater in Chandler, at a cost of $3 million, is an example of the co-operation between the federal government and private concerns towards the progress and development of designated areas.

I want to mention to the hon. members that the Gaspesia Company Limited is not a local concern—it does not belong exclusively to Chandler—but it depends on the whole Gaspé coast and, in fact, most people in the Gaspé peninsula depend on it.

Mr. Chairman, I would like now to deal with another matter.

As you probably know, the general economic survey of the Gaspé peninsula, requested by a number of groups in the area, shows that there is an urgent need to do everything possible in order to take advantage of our resources.

The eastern Quebec development board, in Mont Joli, is preparing a planning program for 1966, and I suggest to the minister to send the highest officials of his department to Mont Joli so that they might see for themselves the planning work which is now being prepared under ARDA. I suggest further that the summaries of any survey of the lower St. Lawrence and Gaspé peninsula areas which are in the possession of his department should be placed at the disposal of the eastern Quebec development board.

The work now being carried out at the eastern Quebec development board for the pilot area of the lower St. Lawrence and the Gaspé peninsula is unique and discussions between the economists of the public works department and those of Mont Joli would certainly be profitable to both groups.

I also wish to bring to the minister's attention the situation of wharves and harbours in some communities of my riding. It is a known fact that the Gaspé riding has a coastal area 288 miles long.

Some ten years ago it was claimed that there was no room left in the Gaspé peninsula to build wharves and develop harbours. At that time, Mr. Léopold Langlois, former member for Gaspé, in co-operation with the Department of Public Works, had met all the requests of the local authorities. Today most of those commercial wharves can no longer meet present needs. Those wharves were built for shallow-draught ships, such as schooners used for carrying wood and freight. The wharf needed no more than 15 feet of water.

Since the deepening of the St. Lawrence small boats are not being built and the tonnage of new ships will increase year by year. Therefore, the Department of Public Works has to spend large sums of money to meet the wharf requirements in eastern Canada because everything has to be done over again, such is the case in my region.

Mr. Chairman, may I call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to some letters I have received?

Quite recently, on August 31, 1964, I received the following letter from the Frank Byrne Pulpwood Inc. company:

If my memory is good, I wrote to you last year to ask whether it was possible to get much needed improvements at the Madeleine and Marsoui wharves, in the Gaspé peninsula.

From Matane to Cloridorme, I buy several thousand cords of pulpwood and we are at the point where none of the companies with which we do business want to use those wharves. I am talking about the L.S.T. boats of the Anglo Canadian Pulp & Paper Mills Ltd. They have no protection from the wind and do not have the required space.

I do not request wharves for sea-going ships, but merely a sort of shelter which engineers could no doubt build to serve our purpose, at a reasonable price. We are ready to indicate to your engineers the sites and what would be required for the boats. The matter of schooners is not taken into account, because they do not use them much, although I am convinced that they would be pleased to use those wharves.

Mr. Chairman, I have also received a letter from a Marsoui manufacturer, A. Couturier & Fils Limitée, from which I would like to quote a few excerpts.

—our company here in Marsoui paid more than $600,000 in salaries in 1963, and we expect that this figure will exceed $1 million in 1964 and during the coming years.

We have a lot of lumber and pulpwood to ship; we also have a logging camp on the north shore where we will cut 5,000,000 feet of logs this year and 10,000,000 feet every year in the coming years.

All those logs will have to be transported to Marsoui by boat and, this year the transport should begin in early August at the latest, and stop at the end of the shipping season.

The vessels which will carry the wood draw about 12 feet of water; with the water around the wharves at its present level, the ships will run aground at the least surge or swell, and they will not be able to unload. The five million feet of logs we are going to cut this year will represent about 60 boat loads.

Mr. Chairman, last year the sawmills of north Gaspé almost had to close down as they were unable to get boats to ship their lumber overseas, for lack of adequate and protected wharves. Some insurance companies now refuse to take the risk of ships stopping alongside some wharves such as in Cap Chat.

Last year, thanks to the co-operation of the Minister of Transport, a tugboat was ordered to stand by to protect the ships.

In order to help S.S. M.V. Dadmar, the James Richardson Company, of Cap Chat, had to pay $3,750 to the Foundation Marine Ltd., of Halifax, for the services of the tugboat Foundation Valour.

It is hardly reasonable that in 1964 a private firm should have to disburse any amount for tugboat services, because of the inadequacy of the wharves.

At Cap Chat, the wharf runs out directly into the gulf; it has no protection whatever against winds and high seas.

The result is that it is impossible to load heavy tonnage boats on days of strong winds, which occur frequently in that area. The maximum draught is 20 feet, which does not favour deep-draught traffic toward the Atlantic.

At Cap Chat, Ste. Anne des Monts, Marsoui, Madeleine, Grande Vallée and other important municipalities of the coast, the Department of Public Works will have to consider heavy expenditures during the forthcoming years for the improvement of wharves so as to retain in the area the few industries which are operating at present.

The situation is nearly the same in the fishing harbours. Most of these ports were built for little fishing boats 20 to 35 feet long, and the fishing boats are now nearly 80 feet long.

In the last few years the department has co-operated closely with the fishermen's union and the Quebec united fishermen in order to meet the present situation as well as possible and so that the structures which are being built meet future needs of the fishing industry.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for the active part he played in the negotiations with the Quebec government, in conjunction with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), concerning the project of renovating highway No. 6 in north Gaspé for which the government will have to contribute $13 million.

I wish success and good health to the minister and I wish he could accompany his officials in Mont Joli and visit the eastern development board.

[Text]

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say but a few words about one very important aspect of the minister's departmental operations, as they bear on the province I have the honour to represent. Over the last seven or eight years there has been a good deal of talk about the causeway which the previous government indicated would be built between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. I should like to report to the minister on something of which he should be aware, and that is that there is considerable disquiet and unrest in Prince Edward Island over the lack of a definitive and comprehensive statement on this particular and very important project. As the minister well knows, alert historian that he is, the very nub of the relations between our little province and the dominion has been communications and transportation. This was at the forefront of the negotiations which brought in our province in 1873, and we have constantly sought and pleaded for continuous and efficient communication with the mainland.

We were quite elated, Mr. Chairman, when with the advance of technology and engineering skill we reached the stage where a continuous land link with the mainland was possible. We were all the more thrilled when the government of the day declared that that which was possible, a causeway, would be constructed.

Mr. Prittie: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Macquarrie: Well, all right.

Mr. Prittie: It is just a brief one. I wonder if the hon. member could tell whether the people of Prince Edward Island are convinced that a causeway would be a good thing? Would this not destroy the uniqueness and charm of that province, flooding the island with hundreds and thousands of motor vehicles coming over from the mainland every year? Is he not better off the way he is now?

Mr. Macquarrie: I can only say that I should have liked the company of my hon. friend last Sunday when I made a very fast trip from Sackville, driving far too fast, in order to get to the ferry terminal, and then discovered I had to sit there and wait, owing to insufficient room, while three boats left. I thought at that time that I would have loved to have with me some of the people who think that it is a charming thing to have the boats. We have arranged, with our Prince Edward Island canniness, that when the causeway is built we will still have the ferry service between Wood Island and Nova Scotia, and anyone who wants a sail can carry on his trip. However I do appreciate the remarks of the hon. and learned member.

Let me say in all seriousness that we recognize the role of the tourist, and as I said this morning this is the most expandable and rapidly expanding industry we have. But more important than that is the primary producer, the farmer and the fisherman, and his ability to get his goods rapidly to market by a sure and certain communication. The means the causeway would provide I think vastly transcends the charm of the boat sail.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

We are nautical people and we love boats, but we are also very hospitable people and not afraid of being overwhelmed. We welcome strangers, be they from British Columbia, be they Liberals, Social Crediters or even members of the N.D.P., and over the years I do not think there has been any indication that we have lost our own cultural uniqueness. I do not fear that at all, any more than Cape Breton has reason to worry about losing its individuality. I would not like the minister to entertain any suggestion that he is protecting Prince Edward Island's culture by not moving forward as rapidly as possible with the causeway.

When the former government was in office we were delighted by the forthright statement of the leader of that government that the causeway would be built. We are looking to this government for a reassertion of the same positive and definite intention. I am not going to say that they have welshed on this arrangement, or that they have backtracked, because I make no accusations that I cannot back up, but I think they would be in a much better position, vis-à-vis our people, if they would forthrightly indicate their intention.

Another thing which has caused us much concern is the seeming veil of secrecy which surrounds the reports which have been elaborately and, I may say, Mr. Chairman, expensively prepared. I can recall when the member for Bonavista-Twillingate used to criticize the then minister of public works for not divulging, not indicating, not tabling and not presenting a report at that time; but the report then had not been completed. As I understand the situation now, the report has been completed and we know that it is vast, exhaustive and tremendous, but still we do not know what is in it. Considering the importance of this to Prince Edward Island, considering the vast expenditure of taxpayers' money, surely it is incumbent upon the government to indicate in considerable detail, whether replete with technical information or not, what is the present thinking of the government.

We are constantly reading statements by the Solicitor General to the effect that consideration is being given to building the structure without rails. We would like to know whether the government has had anyone investigate the feasibility of interprovincial travel by means other than rails, how much Price Edward Island would suffer if the railway was completely abandoned, and what would be the costs.

We would be interested to know the government's reaction to the suggestion—indeed, the positive offer—by a very prominent and reputable private organization, headed I believe by Mr. A. D. Margison, a man of wide repute, in reference to the building of this project. This is a tremendous offer. What is the government doing about it?

I have heard about mysterious meetings of the Minister of Transport, the Solicitor General and the provincial minister of highways. I did not hear of these meetings from the minister of highways but from someone who happened to be at the airport at Charlottetown. Surely this is not a matter of high secrecy, but a matter of tremendous public importance to the people in my province. We are interested in receiving the fullest possible information, and we wonder how much investigation has been carried out in reference to a similar project at Chesapeake bay. Have the people who made that feasibility report been consulted? Have other private offers been made other than that made by Mr. Margison?

In other words, to put it very simply, I say to the minister, Mr. Chairman, that we should like him to indicate to this house and to the province just exactly what is going on. It is not for me to comment on the relationship among ministers of the cabinet, but I am a little surprised that his name does not figure more prominently in discussions, in view of the fact that it is his department that is responsible. He is a minister with a tremendous reputation and we know of his concern for all parts of Canada. We wonder why he is not more prominently in the picture and mentioned perhaps more frequently than the Minister of Transport.

It is in respect of some of these matters that we want to know the government's stand and attitude towards offers that have been made. We want to know what the thinking is in reference to rail traffic. Has the government decided that it cannot and will not build a causeway with rails? Let the people know the answer so that they can make a judgment. This matter has been under consideration for a long time and is of tremendous importance. It is one of the great challenging public works projects of our time. I want to co-operate with the minister in every possible way and it would not injure my pride at all if the whole thing were built and completed as soon as possible—I was going to say, even while this party was in power, but I suppose even modern technology is not that rapid. We are not interested in political partisanship in respect of this matter. We want to wish the minister well and assist him in any way possible because this is a very important matter. I suggest to him, and even advise him, to be a little more forthcoming with information for the people of Canada generally, and particularly those people in Prince Edward Island who are especially concerned.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I made my general observations when the minister's estimates were before the house but I should like to ask a question or two on this occasion.

I suppose the minister is aware of the fact that in the Arrow lakes region, owing to the proposed building of the High Arrow dam—I hope they do not even find the foundation satisfactory—there will be 12 or 13 wharves displaced, which are very important and serve various communities at this time. Some of these communities will be flooded completely and others only partially. Can the minister indicate to the house whether any survey has been made by his department of the needs for wharves after the High Arrow dam is complete? Will there be a relocation of various wharves, or the building of new wharves after this dam has been constructed, and has there been any co-operation whatsoever between the B.C. hydro power authority and the minister's department in respect of planning to meet these needs in the days ahead? If there has been a survey, who will be responsible for the cost of these new wharves, the minister's department or the B.C. hydro power authority? I would appreciate very much the minister letting the house know what has been done to date in this respect, and what the department intends to do in the way of investigation, and at whose expense.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be repetitive but I should like to say that I associate myself with the remarks that have been made by my colleague, the other hon. member for Queen's, Prince Edward Island.

In respect of the remarks made by that hon. member, who just asked a question, I am under the impression, as I think all Prince Edward Islanders are, that this government intends to honour the commitment of the previous government that a causeway would be built, and that there is no longer any question as to a decision in that regard, but only a question as to how quickly, and what type of causeway it will be.

I should like to point out that under the present system as traffic increases it is carried at a deficit, and the cost to the federal government of providing this service increases roughly in proportion to the amount of traffic available. The traffic has increased a great deal in the last few years and I believe it will continue to increase at an accelerated rate. Very soon it will reach the point where in my judgment the present system will be a more costly way of providing that service than will a causeway. When a causeway is built it is the initial capital cost, the capital charges for the money invested, that are the greatest expense; but once it is built it will be able to carry a volume of traffic much larger than that now offering, and there would be no increase in cost in proportion to the increase in traffic, at least for a very long time. I am interested in having as clear and precise a statement as the minister can make on this matter.

Mr. Deschatelets: I have promised that.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I am aware that the minister has promised to make such a statement, but time is passing and the people of Prince Edward Island and no doubt of other areas are most anxious to know what the situation is. The minister may recall that when he sat on this side of the house, his colleague, the present Minister of Transport, was extremely anxious to see that progress was being made as rapidly as possible, and because the rate of progress was not as great as the present Minister of Transport thought it should be at that time he was everlastingly asking questions of the then minister of public works. I remember that on one occasion he got up and asked if the causeway was now under construction. I am aware of course that it is not even yet under construction. On one occasion he saw fit to rechristen it "the pauseway", not the causeway. In passing I point out that the last few months have been the longest period there has been without any very illuminating statement from the government as to what is taking place.

I do not want to be political in any way because this is a great construction project and a great national undertaking. It will be unique in North America, indeed in the world, having regard to all the difficulties that exist in this area such as the ice problem, the tidal problem and so on. The Chesapeake bay causeway is similar in many respects, but there are some ways in which the Northumberland strait crossing will present additional problems. In that regard I should like to be sure that the Department of Public Works has taken action to make certain that all the knowledge gained from the construction of the Chesapeake bay causeway can be exploited by the designers and the department in considering the construction of the Prince Edward Island causeway.

There is a great deal of doubt in people's minds, of course, as to what form it will take. I believe I am correct in assuming that if it involves tunnels in part it would then be impractical or at least very costly to accommodate a railway line. This has grave implications. If that is so we would like to know what the thinking as to an alternative is. Would it be considered advisable to continue to use one ferry for rail service only for a period of time? It is most important at this stage that a study should be made with regard to whether it is economically feasible, and feasible in other ways, to contemplate having Prince Edward Island do without rail service entirely. I know of course, as everybody knows, that there is a trend toward the abandonment of railway lines; but whether or not it would be feasible to carry on a developing economy in the whole of Prince Edward Island with no rail service at all is something that should be studied. A conclusion should be reached one way or the other before consequent decisions are made. If it is decided that rail services are not necessary there is the question of alternate road construction to take the place of railway services. I do not want to prolong the discussion and I have nothing more to say at the moment.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I was very pleased that the Minister of Public Works visited the west last summer. He did manage to get out there. In the house last year I suggested to him that he might visit southwestern Alberta and familiarize himself with the road situation there, with the idea that in his consideration of a second or alternate trans-Canada highway he might see his way clear to name the route from Lethbridge to Nelson as the best alternative to the national No. 1 trans-Canada highway.

I do not know what the minister did while he was out there. I had hoped he might get in touch with me so that I would be able to carry out the promises I made to him to take him around. However, he never showed up. I am afraid he only talked to certain people and did not see the right people. Nothing has happened with regard to this highway and we expected something more tangible. We would be only too glad to take the minister fishing and extend to him all of the hospitality which the resources of that great region enable us to offer, but we also wish that he would familiarize himself with the problems of the area and talk to the people who know most about the problems there so that he would be in a position to act on them.

So far the people of Lethbridge and the Crowsnest pass area have heard nothing with regard to his views as to a southern highway. I see it is five o'clock, Mr. Chairman, and as I have not finished what I wanted to say I would ask to be allowed to call it five o'clock.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I interrupt, Mr. Speaker, to ask about the business for next week?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, as announced by the Prime Minister there will be a supply motion on Monday, and as was agreed and set forth in an order of the house it will be the last supply motion for the present session. Consequently any department which has not been entered in previous supply motions will be deemed to be entered on that occasion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

Order No. 1, Bill No. C-5.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Stand, at the request of the government.

An hon. Member: Order No. 2, Bill No. C-9.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Stand, at the request of the government.

An hon. Member: Order No. 3, Bill No. C-16.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Stand, at the request of the government.

An hon. Member: Order No. 4, Bill C-41.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Stand, at the request of the government.

An hon. Member: Order No. 5, Bill No. S-43.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Stand, at the request of the government.

An hon. Member: Order No. 6, Bill No. C-46.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Stand, at the request of the government.

RAILWAY ACT

PROVISION FOR MORATORIUM ON ABANDONMENT

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-55, to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I regret you were able to get on to this item, but a few years ago a practice was adopted of balloting for a place on this particular section of private members' business, so that hon. members were able to get a place at the head of the list with some prospect of having their bills debated.

During the last two years we have seen that this priority established through balloting seems to have become more or less meaningless. Many hon. members are interested in what appears in the order of balloting, but frankly one has to spend about half an hour or three quarters of an hour chasing around on Friday afternoons trying to find out what bill will be proceeded with. There are hon. members in the house interested in particular bills as they appear on the order paper and who are prepared to make contributions, but they cannot find out what bill will be dealt with until the very last.

There are hon. members interested in speaking on certain bills, but who actually leave on Friday mornings as they cannot find out whether tnose bills will be dealt with or not. At present there is a queue up from the beginning of the session, and I suggest there should be 24 hours notice of which bill is going to be debated at this time on Friday afternoons.

I suggest that this practice of standing bills has made a mockery of the balloting for priority and that we should not continue this practice. If there is going to be this wholesale standing of public bills, then there should be 24 hours notice given of what bill will actually be dealt with.

Mr. Churchill: I wonder if I could speak to that point of order. When I was government house leader I instituted a procedure whereby when a private member's bill was called for the first time it was permitted, without any question, to stand. On the second occasion it was called it was permitted to stand if there were a valid reason for so doing, if the hon. member were inexcusably absent or suffered from illness. On the third occasion it was called, then only if there was a very special reason for its retaining its position on the order paper was it so retained, but not otherwise. The result was that bills, having been called the second time and not proceeded with, dropped to the bottom of the order paper, and on a few occasions it was after they were called a third time that they were dropped to the bottom of the order paper.

Now you have bills standing on the order paper in the same position for the entire session. The result is that we never know what is coming up, and there should be some correction made to this procedure.

Mr. Favreau: If I may be allowed to speak to that point of order, it is quite true that there is likely to be some annoyance caused by the fact that bills might be stood for an indefinite period, but as we all know there are no definite rules covering the matter at the moment.

I am advised by the government whip's office that it has always been possible for a member inquiring from that office to ascertain in proper time, and well before the date, when a bill to be called will actually be discussed. There might be the odd exception, but I agree this would very probably be a good subject for discussion by the special committee of the house on procedure, and I should hope that one day we will reach a solution which will not only be empirical—like the one consisting of calling the whip's office, which is always at the disposal of hon. members—but a solution which will be written into the rules of the house.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, with great respect to my hon. friend from Edmonton West I suggest that there is no point of order in the sense that any rule is being violated. The hon. member is making a suggestion as to a change that might be made, and I think there is merit to his suggestion, but I am sure Your Honour will agree that there is no point of order on the basis of which you can rule that we cannot proceed with the order now called.

We are acting under standing order 19 (1) and (2), a request having been made and concurred in by the government that certain bills might stand. All I am saying is that I think the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has validity, but it is validity only as a suggestion, as something we should look at, not as something on which Your Honour can rule at this stage. I am sure my hon. friend will agree with me, and as a member of the special committee on organization and procedure I for one accept the suggestion that we should look into his proposal in that committee.

Mr. Lambert: I would readily state that as a point of order I am not asking Your Honour to make a ruling on anything, but I am drawing something to the attention of the house, and that is the only way I could do it. I would point out to the house leader that the bills are stood at the request of the government, in conformity with the rules—

Mr. Walker: Yes, in conformity with the rules.

Mr. Lambert: —because it is only the government which can ask to have them stand. As indicated by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), the government house leader has the remedy in his own hands. It is for the government to decide whether or not it will request to have a bill stood. It is for that reason I have raised the point of order this afternoon. I think Your Honour and other hon. members will recognize there are many other bills which have queued up behind the first 50 and which might have a chance to be debated if the ones in front were not stood en bloc. Some of these have now been stood 12 or 15 times.

Mr. Favreau: I am afraid that this point of order which, in fact, was a well taken suggestion and not a point of order, will soon become a question of privilege as far as I am concerned. I must add in due justice that there is also the empirical solution of the whips getting together and negotiating to convince the government not to stand a bill, if it is shown that there may be some prejudice. I repeat that on our part, and I think the feeling will be the same on all sides of the house, there is willingness that this suggestion should be transmitted to the committee on procedure for consideration. Indeed, it need not be transmitted formally because the learned chairman of that committee, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is here and will have heard the suggestion.

Mr. Nasserden: I am afraid I must question the propriety of the suggestion by the leader of the house that anyone wishing to find out what is likely to happen should get in touch with the government whips office. With all due respect to the hon. gentleman there is a question as to the propriety of such a course of action and I think this should be taken into consideration.

Mr. Walker: I should like to ask the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) if he did contact his own whip's office in connection with the business before the house during the private members' hour today. We take the initiative. We may slip up sometimes, but we try to advise opposition whips of what is likely to be up for consideration. I have heard from my own office that the opposition whip's office was advised of today's business on Thursday at twelve noon.

As to the standing of some of these bills, as the hon. member knows, a rule of the house states that this must be done at the request of the government. We take this action in accordance with requests which come from other parties in the house; I think it is important, in my position, that we do retain some good will among ourselves concerning what goes on in the house.

Mr. Lambert: In reply to the government whip may I say there have been many afternoons when at three o'clock the hon. gentleman or his assistant have been running around madly trying to determine what was going to happen. This may be a classic example of an occasion when the government whip can assume a mantle of virtue, but I suggest it is an exception.

Mr. MacInnis: May I point out in this connection that I inquired of my whip this afternoon what would be coming up during this particular hour and he informed me that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) would be dealing with one of his bills. I looked at the order paper with that understanding, and Bill No. C-9 was the first which came to my attention.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I can understand the concern of the house over the procedure which has been followed since five o'clock today and on a number of other afternoons but I would say to hon. members that whatever procedure is adopted the Chair is guided by standing order No. 19. Possibly I could say to the hon. member for Edmonton West that I will take note of the suggestion he has made and as chairman of the committee bring it to the attention of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Prittie: If I may just say a word on the subject of procedure before we go on to consider the bill before us, let me point out that the whip's office asked me on Tuesday of this week whether I was willing to proceed with this measure.

I am concerned about the amount of time which is being taken up during the so-called private members' hour for the consideration of this and similar matters. Last week discussion of the estimates cut into consideration of another bill in which I was interested for 12 minutes or so and now, I see, it is 18 minutes past five. As long as we continue with this so-called private members' hour I suggest it should really be 60 minutes and that in future, Mr. Speaker, you do not call it six o'clock until 60 minutes have expired. The committee on procedure might well come up with some change in our rules to make this possible. I would prefer the system they have in the United Kingdom where there are fewer bills but more time is allowed in which to discuss them. With those remarks I will move on to the subject of the bill before us.

This is an act to amend the Railway Act by requiring transportation companies operating under the Railway Act to file a copy of their reports with the House of Commons. My idea is that such reports should be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines where they could be examined. Officials of the companies in question could graph lines where they could be examined. by members of the committee as is done in the case of the Canadian National Railways.

I wish to comment on the work of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines in this connection. Prior to this session, the work of examining the annual report of the C.N.R. was done by a special sessional committee. This year we made it the work of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I think this was probably a sensible change. If hon. members will examine the most recent report of that committee they will become aware of some of the topics which were brought up by members. I will refer to a few of them now. The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) spent a considerable time questioning the management of C.N.R. about their policy in relation to rail line abandonment. He took, I thought, a great deal of time on this, but the subject was important to him, and no doubt to other members from the three prairie provinces, so I think the time was probably well spent.

The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) asked the president of the company questions about railway service to a steel complex which was contemplated in the province of Quebec. Both the hon. members for Halifax brought up the question of rail traffic in that important port. The hon. member for Middlesex East (Mr. Millar) asked the management of the company questions concerning their policy regarding employees who would be laid off as a result of the closing of railway shops at London, Ontario. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) had questions to ask about run-throughs on the northern line of the C.N.R., on the effect of automation on employees and the impact upon the communities concerned as a result of changes in running schedules. A number of members asked questions about railway lines to various company plants.

These are important questions which affect the people in the ridings represented by the members I have named. I think this committee serves a very useful function. The work of the committee is uneven. Some members do not attend very well, others attend regularly. Some do not come well prepared; others do. They have read the reports and made themselves well informed on transportation matters. However, as I say, the committee serves a useful function because its members have a chance to meet face to face with the management of the railway company and ask questions directly. I think this is much more useful than putting questions on the order paper, speaking on the estimates of the Department of Transport of putting questions to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) which may ultimately be answered after lengthy correspondence between the department and the railway company.

This is a direct way of putting questions and obtaining information. The president of the company is there; the comptroller is there, as is the secretary and other officials. They are ready to answer questions and the information comes forward quickly. I know the committee has been the object of a good deal of publicity in the past, but I maintain that a good rapport has been established between its members and the management of the company because of this direct personal contact.

I know the reason for Canadian National Railways coming before the committee; it is of course because it is owned by the government, and the government has to supply capital funds for the company and supply money to cover the operational losses. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I contend that the other railway companies in this country are not really private enterprises in the strict sense of the term. I said "other railway companies"; there are quite a few in which hon. members may be interested. There is the Algoma Central, I believe it is called, in northern Ontario; the Northern Alberta, the Pacific Great Eastern, and some of the American lines which run into Canada. But I refer particularly to the Canadian Pacific Railway and I would not try to disguise the fact that I would like to see this railway company's officials appear before the committee.

The Canadian Pacific is a private enterprise in the sense that its shares are not held by the government. But it is very much a public institution. It was established as a result of public policy; public lands were granted to it, and it still receives public moneys. All the railways in this country receive a great deal of public money. There are the bridge subsidies, the maritime freight subsidies, the other freight subsidies, the proposed Crows-nest pass subsidy—which I believe we will be dealing with later—and the proposed passenger subsidy. All the subsidies amount to a very large sum of money. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit that public money is being spent here and the representatives of the public ought to have the opportunity to question the management of the railway companies. Some operating rule may have to be worked out. Perhaps we should question the officials of those railway companies receiving subsidies of $5 million a year or more; I am not sure. But again, the point is that public moneys are being spent, and these railways affect the communities in this country and the lives of its people.

I said a few minutes ago that I should like to see the Canadian Pacific Railway Company management appear before the railway committee of the house. It seems rather incongruous that we have Canadian National appearing before this committee, where all its operations are subject to question—its railway operations, its steamship operations, its hotel operations, its trucking operations, its express operations and its telecommunications operation. All these matters are subject to questioning by the representatives of the people. But the other large transportation complex of this country is free of such investigation. I think it would serve a useful purpose to have these other companies appear before the committee, so they could be questioned about their operations by the representatives of the people who in one way or another pay the costs of the operations.

There is one particular point about the Canadian Pacific operation which I think is interesting and which is beginning to develop at the present time. As is the case with the C.N.R., the Canadian Pacific has, besides its railway lines, steamship lines, trucking lines and telegraph operations. It owns lands from which revenues are received from the production of oil and gas. In my own province it owns land from which revenues are received from the cutting of timber; and it has a great many non-rail operations. According to the financial reports that I have read, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has set up another firm, an associated firm, called Canadian Pacific Investments Limited, and they are gradually turning over to Canadian Pacific Investments Limited many of their non-rail holdings. I should like to read a sentence or two from the September, 1964 report of the investment company of McLeod, Young, Weir & Company. They have this to say in part:

> As the result of the transfer of many non-rail assets to the recently created subsidiary, Canadian Pacific Investments Limited, C.P.R.'s real earnings are now considerably understated, since C.P. Investments earnings are not consolidated with those of the railway company.

I do not want to make too much of that, Mr. Speaker, because I really have not investigated it very thoroughly. I have read this report by McLeod, Young, Weir & Company and I have read reports in the Financial Post and Financial Times on the same subject. I am simply trying to point out that this is a very important topic in which the members of this house might be interested; because I think some of us would be concerned if the company was not showing, in its railway operations, its total revenues. After all, the revenues and profits—the earnings, in other words—of the railway company certainly have some bearing upon the freight and passenger rates which are set.

The company received public lands at one time—a very large acreage of public lands; over 25 million acres, anyway—in western Canada. It is from these lands that revenues are being received from oil and gas production and in the sale of real estate, in some cases. In the city of Vancouver they are realizing large amounts of money from the sale of real estate. They would not have received these lands had they not been a railway company; and I contend that all these earnings should be taken into account when we are assessing the earnings position of the railway company and the relation they have to the freight and passenger rate structure within the country.

From time to time in the past we have had set up royal commissions to investigate transportation. It seems to me that if there could be an annual review of the operations of our major transportation companies, the members of the House of Commons could meet the management directly and ask questions. Then there would be less need for investigation, less need for boards of inquiry. The information would be readily forthcoming each year and, despite the newspaper headlines which have attended the meetings of the railway committee at times, I still maintain there is a very good rapport between the members of this house and the management of the railway. We meet Mr. Donald Gordon; we speak to him; we see the other members of his staff. We can meet these people every year, and I think this is an excellent thing. I believe it should also be done with the other railway companies. I do not think the railways should be unwilling to appear before the committee, because whenever a royal commission has been set up and they have wanted to present their case they have been quite eager to appear before them. I think it would be good for them, as well as for the House of Commons.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, because the major transportation companies—the major railway companies particularly—affect the economy of communities throughout this country and the lives of individuals, and because the Canadian people have put up so much money for their operation, I think it is only right and proper that the representatives of the Canadian people in this house should have an opportunity of questioning and examining the management of these companies each year, as is now done in the case of Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Jean L. Rochon (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the speech just made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie).

I appreciate that the hon. member's remarks were in the interest of the people and were not made for any political consideration.

I understand he is only looking forward to the protection of all concerned, and I want to commend him for his good intentions. But, as it happens so often when one wants to do something too well, one loses sight of one's goal; that is, unfortunately, the case with this Bill No. C-55. I fear it is exactly what would happen should the house pass such a piece of legislation. As a matter of fact, in my opinion, this could cripple any action on the part of those who are engaged in or who favour private enterprise.

By submitting them—more specifically the Canadian Pacific—to such legislation, they would be compelled as is the case for publicly-owned companies, to submit to government interference in the internal administration of their affairs.

Many would no longer care to serve the community well, even while expecting a fair retribution.

I am not against some form of control, especially when people are being exploited, with regard to the conditions under which they work, the hours they work or the salary they are paid, far from it. But today, labour unions are so well organized and efficient that abuses are seldom to be deplored.

The purpose of this bill, according to the explanatory notes, is to permit parliament to inquire into, as is done with the publicly-owned Canadian National Railways, the financial structure and the operations of those private railway, telegraph and express companies and water carriers which come under the board of transport commissioners as public utilities.

I share some of the views of the previous speaker but I should like perhaps not to dispute their validity, but to express my concern over a far reaching socialism, a provident state that paralyses or tends to annihilate personal efforts without people realizing it.

Besides, it is provided in the charter of railways or public utilities having to do with transportation, that annual reports must be submitted to the board of transport commissioners and also to the dominion bureau of statistics, and I fail to see the need for such government interference as provided for in this legislation. I realize that some companies are virtual monopolies, but the brain behind them belongs to an individual at the service of a private organization, most often his own. His talent is put at the service of those who benefit from his activities; he pays salaries and in many cases, his employees, at least the most qualified, get fringe benefits according to their qualifications or years of service. In many cases, they are considered as partners rather than employees and relations between employees and employer do not have the tendency that is too often observed among the employees of an organization that is public property.

I would not go so far as saying that the C.N.R. personnel, and especially the express employees do not carry out their duty. Far from it; but I claim, Mr. Speaker, that the interest in one's job, in those public companies, is very often limited, strictly to the terms of the contract agreed to. In this age of automation, everybody must face realistically the facts of life. Like many others, I would look unfavourably upon government control of private enterprise which always remains the best incentive for individual effort, the best way to think and believe that if the government must help the individual, the latter on the other hand must not expect everything from the government.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few remarks on behalf of private enterprise, which should not be destroyed, which should be allowed to live if we are to have good understanding and to get results in our world.

Such are the remarks I wished to make and I made them not in the interest of one company or of one organization but in the interest of every one of us, namely of the people of this country.

[Text]

Mr. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few very brief comments on the bill before us this evening, Bill No. C-55 to amend the Railway Act. I have listened with interest to the remarks made by the mover of the bill, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie). As I understand the bill, the explanatory notes and the explanation of the hon. member, its purpose is to enable parliament to look into the financial structure and operations of private companies doing business in the field of transportation, telephones and telegraphs. The bill would add an additional subsection (5) to the other four subsections of section 384 of the act. This proposed amendment would make these companies submit an additional copy of their returns to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), who in turn would have to lay such copy before the house within a certain period.

I must agree with the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Rochon) that the proposed amendment to the Railway Act is unjustified because the Railway Act already provides for the filing of annual returns. The annual reports of these private companies already have under the act to be filed with the board of transport commissioners as well as with the dominion bureau of statistics. We can see why the C.N.R., the Canada Council or other crown corporations such as Trans-Canada Air Lines, or I should say Air Canada, would have to make annual reports to parliament. They are crown corporations. But I fail to see why private companies should be investigated by parliament. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that by poking our parliamentary noses into private business we are transgressing, reaching beyond our duties and trespassing on a field which lies entirely outside our proper jurisdiction. If we start snooping into the books of private firms, where do we stop? Where do we draw the line between private companies and crown corporations; between free enterprise and socialism? It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment before us would simply tie another governmental string and another yard of red tape around the neck of the private business.

Mr. Raymond Rock (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-55, which is an act to amend the Railway Act, would force all private railways, telegraph, telephone, express companies and carriers by water, which now come under the board of transport commissioners, to be investigated each year by the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. Little does the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie), who is the sponsor of this bill, realize that all these companies must appear before the board of transport commissioners each time they intend to change their tariffs. All the pros and cons in respect of such a change are investigated, studied, and subject to a judgment after all witnesses have presented their cases. If the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond is not satisfied with the operations of any of these privately owned companies, and can support his case, he has the right as a Canadian citizen to appear before the board of transport commissioners.

I am very strongly in favour of private enterprise. Since I have visited many countries of Europe, and particularly some of the socialistic countries, I am even more strongly in favour of private enterprise. Our high standards of living and our way of life is the result of a private enterprise system and not the result of any socialistic measures in Canada. I will always be against anything or anyone who wants to socialize private enterprise in Canada.

In fact, I even believe that the C.N.R. should not be government owned, but should be owned privately. I feel the government should only enter into business activity in Canada when private people are not able to provide efficient service. The Canadian Pacific Railway has done a wonderful job in Canada in providing transport throughout the country. I do not believe the government has any place in the ownership of the Canadian National Railways, but that it should be put back into the hands of private enterprise so long as it can be run efficiently.

I think also that the government should relinquish its ownership of Trans-Canada Air Lines to private enterprise. We have other air lines operating in Canada, such as the Canadian Pacific Airlines, which is carrying out an efficient operation. I strongly believe that the government should get out of the ownership of transportation services and allow private enterprise to own these companies, as long as the services are continued on an efficient basis.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable interest to the remarks of the hon. member who has just taken his seat, and I agree with him that private enterprise, in initiating the system we have today, has built Canada for the most part into what it is today. I think this practice should be continued and encouraged because this is the most efficient way of developing a country.

I believe I should say that I do not agree with him in some of his arguments, for the very reasons he has advanced. If the C.P.R. was in effect running its operation as a free enterprise company and was not coming to parliament for subsidies I would support the kind of action which would keep what has been referred to as our parliamentary nose out of its business.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) presented a very good case in support of making the financial affairs of the Canadian Pacific Railway known to parliament, and I agree with many of his reasons. We are now paying to the Canadian Pacific Railway something like $70 million annually in unconditional subsidies. Surely the members of this House of Commons have a right to know why the C.P.R. requires this kind of assistance. A few days ago when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) was introducing a resolution respecting the new Bill C-120, he said that he hoped to reach the position where all subsidies paid directly to railway companies will be paid for specific purposes, and that massive unconditional subsidies will no longer exist.

Before the end of this session I think we shall have the opportunity of examining the officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway in respect of that company's financial affairs, because no doubt those officers will be presenting themselves to a parliamentary committee, along with their briefs and requests for assistance. However, following the meetings of that committee this session I feel, as the hon. member who supports this bill has advocated, that in view of the fact the C.P.R. does require government subsidy, parliament should have the right to examine its financial structure, its profit and loss statements and balance sheet, as it should have the right to examine the financial structure of any company which comes to parliament asking for millions of dollars in unspecified or unconditional grants. As long as these subsidies are being paid to the C.P.R., or to any other company, even though I am in favour of free enterprise I feel as a member of parliament I have a right to know that they do in fact require this assistance. How can I satisfy myself in that regard unless I have the opportunity to examine their statements and cross-examine the officers of the companies?

If the railway companies, and this includes the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. as well as air lines, as the hon. member has said, carry on operations efficiently and provide the services required by the Canadian people without requiring subsidies from the federal treasury, they should be able to operate without our sticking our parliamentary nose into their affairs. However as long as we are required to pay literally hundreds of millions of dollars out of the public treasury to assist these transportation systems, I feel we have a right to know what their financial structures are. I might say also—

Mr. Choquette: Would we have time to examine it?

Mr. Olson: Yes, we would have time to examine it.

Mr. Choquette: It would be a 12-month session.

Mr. Olson: I might say also that, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) pointed out, there were certain cash grants made out of the public treasury, along with public lands and so on in setting up the Canadian Pacific Railway in the first place. However, when they come back to parliament wanting to raise freight rates, for example, they only present a picture of their financial affairs which is specifically confined to the railway operations. There is the Canadian Pacific Oil and Gas Company, what I believe is referred to as the Canadian Pacific investment fund and so on. A large part of the assets that were turned over to Canadian Pacific when it was established in the first instance are vested in these separate companies. Whether you want to call it free enterprise, public enterprise or any other kind of enterprise, if justice is to be done all of these things, because they were a consideration in the first place, need to be taken into consideration before any further support for the railways from the public purse can be justified. Therefore I think it is a perfectly justifiable demand that the officers of these companies should be called before a committee of parliament so that we can examine the whole of their operations, rather than having to be content with just what they choose to give us.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) was certainly well intentioned in introducing his bill. Nevertheless, there are a few comments I should like to make, inasmuch as I am against its principle.

What the hon. member said about his bill in no way convinced me that it ought to be supported. Of course, in the case of the Canadian National Railways or Air Canada, which are crown corporations property of the Canadian people, it is perfectly logical and legitimate for members of this house to have the right to look into their financial operations. When those companies appear before a committee of this house, members can get information about their financial structure, their development and their programs. We recognize that there are cases where such a thing can clear things up. The Canadian people certainly wish to be informed about their activities through members of parliament.

If we recognize this principle in the case of crown corporations we cannot do so, however, so far as private companies mentioned in the bill are concerned. The hon. member referred especially to the C.P.R. in support of his bill, mentioning that this company had obtained public funds for its operations. He only referred to that company, but on the other hand, his bill goes much further. As a matter of fact, it mentions private railway, telegraph and transportation companies already coming under the board of transport commissioners. Now, those private companies are already required to submit returns to the board of transport commissioners which has jurisdiction over a great number of their activities. It would be quite another thing, as suggested by an hon. member, if those companies published each year a report which, to all practical purposes, would be a public document because it would come before parliament. Thus all companies could find out the assets, liabilities and operating costs of all other companies, which would certainly be harmful to the latter's interests.

Private companies have to comply with a lot of regulations, they are obliged to submit statistics and reports to the federal and provincial governments, and I think that we must not go any further in that field. Companies already have to hire experts to prepare all the statistics and other information required by regulations and federal as well as provincial laws. They must not be forced to appear before the railway committee or the board of transport commissioners to answer publicly all sorts of questions on their operations.

Of course, nothing stops the committee from making certain suggestions when it considers the reports of crown corporations, but it can do so only up to a point. Private companies cannot be influenced substantially as far as their operations are concerned nor can their reports be examined, because such a study must be carried out by experts of the board of transport commissioners. Those people are the only ones who can scrutinize the operations of the companies in question. At any rate, such an examination would be too heavy a task for the committee; the latter would have to sit all year round to make a detailed study of the balance sheets and operations of those companies.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, this bill will be a handicap to private enterprise which has done so much for the country. Furthermore, it is not only premature, it serves no useful purpose.

May I call it six o'clock?

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, September 21, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO EXTEND PRIVILEGE ON COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-122, to amend the Canada Evidence Act (privileged communications).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Canada Evidence Act by inserting therein new sections to extend a privilege on communications between members of the public dealing with members of the clergy, the medical profession and social workers acting in their professional capacities. This is in accordance with the report of the committee on privileged communications to the Ontario civil justice subsection of the Canadian Bar Association.

The common law already confers a privilege from disclosure with respect to communications passed between a client and his solicitor. The rule is stated in Cross "Evidence" (1957), page 238.

The study and recommendations made by the Canadian Bar Association with respect to privileged communications have been spurred by the opinion expressed by Hon. Mr. Justice Stewart during the course of the trial in the case of Dembie v. Dembie in April, 1963. Mr. Justice Stewart expressed the opinion very clearly that a certain communication between a patient and her psychiatrist should be privileged from disclosure. However, there was no formal ruling made by the trial judge as to whether the communications previously referred to were privileged. Therefore, quite apart from the effect of the doctrine of precedent, the learned judge's opinion cannot be considered as a ruling which has become embodied in the law.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

IDENTICAL PUBLIC WORKS TENDERS

Question No. 1,655—Mr. Southam:

1. How many instances has the Department of Public Works had in 1963 of identical tenders and how many to date in 1964?

2. Have these cases been reported to the combines investigation branch of the Department of Justice?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): 1. In 1963, 87; to date in 1964, 52.

2. Thirteen have been reported.

PROTECTION OF ANIMALS USED IN RESEARCH

Question No. 1,771—Mr. Scott:

1. Did the government receive a submission from the council for laboratory animals dealing with the subject of the protection of animals used in scientific research and, if so, when was such submission received?

2. Does the government plan any action in this session with regard to the matters raised in the said submission?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1 and 2. Yes. A submission was received by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General in July, 1963, and in September, 1963 was passed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare for consideration. The views of the interdepartmental committee which had been formed in 1961 were sought. It was generally agreed that no agency of the federal government had authority to institute licensing or inspection over the control of laboratory animals handled by universities or private interests engaged in research work. It was also agreed that legislation establishing any such system would not be within the legislative power of the federal parliament but rather of the provinces. The Minister of National Health and Welfare directed that all laboratories in her department follow as a standard the code of treatment for laboratory animals which was adopted by the Canadian federation of biological societies and indicated that consideration would be given to having that code, or some mutually agreed new code, adopted to ensure humane treatment of animals in all laboratories operated by the federal government.

SUBCONTRACTS TO FAIREY AVIATION

Question No. 1,785—Mr. Coates:

What was the estimated value of subcontracts received from prime contractors located in Canada by Fairey Aviation for the fiscal years, 1959-60, 1960-61, 1961-62, 1962-63, 1963-64?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The department is informed by the company that the following figures cover subcontracts with a value of over $10,000 received during the fiscal years noted.

1959-60, $12,000; 1960-61, $917,000; 1961-62, $2,470,000; 1962-63, $1,509,000; 1963-64, $1,312-000.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION FUND

Question No. 1,786—Mr. Côté (Longueuil):

1. What is the present amount in the civil service superannuation fund?
2. Where is such amount invested and at what rate of interest?

[Translation]

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. As at July 31, 1964, the balance in the superannuation account was $1,930,577,461.44.

2. The superannuation account is a part of the consolidated revenue fund. Interest is credited in accordance with the public service superannuation regulations. This is done on the last day of each calendar quarter at the rate of 1 per cent of the balance to the credit of the fund on the last day of the preceding quarter.

DESALINATION OF SEA WATER

Question No. 1,790—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Is the government conducting or supporting research on the desalination of sea water and, if so, at what institutions, and under whose direction is such research being conducted?
2. What is the annual cost to the government of each of these projects?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as the national research council is concerned, the answer is as follows:

1. The division of applied chemistry has a program devoted to the separation of various constituents from single liquid phases by reverse osmosis. The work is pertinent to the desalination of sea water but the latter is only a by-product of the major research program. The work is supervised by Dr. S. Sourirajan.

2. The annual cost which can be ascribed to this portion of the research program is approximately $10,000.

DOMINION EXPERIMENTAL FARM EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,838—Mr. Cyr:

At the dominion experimental farm of the Department of Agriculture (a) how many persons are casually employed (b) how many casual employees are French speaking (c) how many persons are permanently employed (d) how many permanent employees are French speaking?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Of the total number of Department of Agriculture employees located at the central experimental farm, Ottawa, (formerly dominion experimental farm) (a) 98 are employed on a casual basis; (b) 14 are French speaking; (c) 1,245 are employed on a continuing basis; (d) 199 are French speaking.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 1,851—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. What is the present financial state of the unemployment insurance fund?
2. What are its future prospects?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): 1. On August 31, 1964 the unemployment insurance fund showed a credit balance of $18,-826,358.

2. It is expected that the contributions to the unemployment insurance fund will continue to increase the financial state of the fund until some time in December 1964. From approximately January 1965 during the heavy claims season it is expected that the outgo from the fund will exceed its income.

HAMILTON, ONT.—UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES

Question No. 1,852—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. As of the end of August, 1964, what was the rate of unemployment in (a) Canada (b) Hamilton, Ontario?
2. Of those unemployed in Hamilton, what proportion received unemployment insurance payments?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): 1. The precise information concerning the rate of unemployment is not available. The preliminary figures as of August 31, 1964 show that (a) in Canada there were 309,909 registrations for employment in the national employment service offices and (b) in the Hamilton local office area 8,592 registrations for employment.

2. The precise information concerning the proportion of unemployed persons in Hamilton, Ontario, receiving unemployment insurance payments is not available. The number of active claimants in the Hamilton local office area on August 31, 1964 was 4,879.

CIVIL SERVICE DEATH BENEFIT PLAN

Question No. 1,869—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Are federal civil servants required to subscribe to a death benefit insurance plan and, if so, how many are now so enrolled?
2. What is the monthly premium and what has been the total paid by civil servants in the last year?
3. How many beneficiaries collected in the last year and what was the amount paid them?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. (a) The supplementary death benefit plan provided under part II of the Public Service Superannuation Act covers on a compulsory basis all persons employed in the public service provided that (i) they were contributors under part I of that act on July 1, 1954 and did not elect not to participate under part II on or before November 1, 1954, and have continued to be so employed, or (ii) they have become contributors under part I of that act since July 1, 1954, and (iii) in either case, they are not employees of a crown corporation or public board excluded from the operation of part II of that act by the public service superannuation regulations. (b) There were 175,306 members of the plan in the category described in paragraph (a) on March 31, 1964.

2. (a) The formal monthly premium for these employees is 10 cents for every $250 in the amount of basic coverage. (b) The total of their contributions in the fiscal year 1963-64 was $3,415,215.09.

3. 724 beneficiaries of persons in this category were paid $2,813,950 in the fiscal year 1963-64.

*OFFICIAL USE OF C.N.R. COACH "ACADIA"

Question No. 1,887—Mr. Ricard:

Which minister of the crown made use of the Canadian National Railways "Acadia" coach on the week ends of August 22, 1964 and August 29, 1964, and what was the official duty discharged by the minister concerned on each of the dates mentioned?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): For many years now, coaches have been put at the disposal of ministers of the crown, when needed, and one of those, the "Acadia" was made available to the Minister of Forestry on the dates mentioned. Since those cars may be used to travel anywhere in Canada except in Newfoundland, ministers of transport have never made it a habit to inquire from their colleagues about the purpose of their trips.

CONSTRUCTION OF SUPERINTENDENT'S RESIDENCE, CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS PARK

Question No. 1,894—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Has the government any plans for the construction of a new residence for the use of the superintendent of the Cape Breton Highlands national park?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): This matter is being studied at the present time but there are no plans for the construction of such residence.

CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS GOLF CLUB

Question No. 1,898—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. What is the paid up membership of the Cape Breton Highlands golf club and what is the annual membership fee?
2. What is the annual amount of revenue derived from the green fees for each of the years 1954 to 1964 inclusive?
3. What was the estimated daily population using the facilities of the Cape Breton Highlands golf club house for the months of July and August, 1964?
4. What is the estimated square footage of the Cape Breton Highlands golf club house?
5. What is the estimated square footage of the lounge at the Cape Breton Highlands golf club house?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Thirty four; $2 per annum.

2. This revenue is as follows: 1954; $3,966; 1955, $3,575; 1956, $4,362; 1957, $4,898; 1958, $5,910; 1959, $5,798; 1960, $9,859; 1961, 10,559; 1962, $11,680; 1963, $12,146; 1964, not yet available.

3. Approximately 250.

4. 912 sq. feet of which 150 sq. feet is used for storage.

5. 155 sq. feet.

REPAIRS TO GOVERNMENT WHARVES, TOBERMORY, ONT.

Question No. 1,904—Mr. Loney:

Is the Department of Public Works considering any construction, renovation or repairs at the government wharves at Tobermory, Bruce county, Ontario?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): The department is investigating a request for an extension to wharfage facilities in Little Tub harbour at Tobermory.

Orders for Returns

INTERNATIONAL COFFEE AGREEMENT

Question No. 1,921—Mr. Mather:

1. Is Canada a participant in the international coffee agreement?
2. When did the agreement become effective?
3. What was the price of coffee in Canada in the year prior to the agreement becoming effective?
4. What is the price today?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Canada has been a member of the international coffee agreement since November 20, 1962.

2. The agreement became effective July 1, 1963.

3. Canadian average retail price of coffee, 1 lb. bag, July, 1962, $.756.

4. Canadian average retail price of coffee, 1 lb. bag, August, 1964, $.931.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CIVIL SERVANTS EMPLOYED IN YORK-SUNBURY CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,709—Mr. Coates:

1. What are the names of the civil servants in all federal government departments employed in the constituency of York-Sunbury, New Brunswick?
2. What position does each fill?
3. What is the annual salary of each?

Return tabled.

NATURAL METHODS OF PEST AND WEED CONTROL

Question No. 1,803—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Is the government conducting or supporting research on natural methods of pest and weed control, alternative to poison chemical control and, if so, at which institutions, and under whose direction is such research being conducted?
2. What is the annual cost to the government of each of these projects?

Return tabled.

WINTER WORKS PROJECTS, NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC

Question No. 1,820—Mr. Caouette:

1. What winter works projects were undertaken in Villeneuve county during the past season?
2. What was the cost of such winter works projects and what part of such costs was to be paid for or was paid for by the federal government?
3. Does the federal government still owe money to some municipalities in connection with such projects and, if so, what projects have not yet been paid for by the federal government?
4. What is the total federal contribution outstanding with respect to such winter works projects in Rouyn-Noranda county?
5. Has the government taken any steps to expedite the payment of any outstanding contributions with respect to winter works projects in Rouyn-Noranda county and, if so, what steps have been taken?

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Return tabled.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—INQUIRY AS TO INCREASED FOOD SHIPMENTS FROM CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom in the serried ranks of the government I should direct this question, but I should like to know whether the statement made by the premier of Uttar Pradesh, one of the largest states of India, that a great many of its population are in danger of starving because of the food shortage, has been brought to the attention of the government, and what action Canada is going to take in this regard over and above the $7 million at present provided under the Colombo plan for distribution there.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I reply to the question put by the right hon. gentleman. As I said in the house the other day, the Canadian government has made known to the Indian government its willingness to help if requested. So far we have had no request from the Indian government for further assistance other than that now provided or planned.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And there has been no suggestion by anyone on behalf of the Indian government that assistance is peremptorily needed to meet an increasingly serious situation?

Mr. Sharp: Not as far as I am aware, Mr. Speaker. I will make inquiries to see whether there has been something during the last few hours of which I am unaware.

PUBLIC WORKS

CHURCHILL, MAN.—USE OF LIVING QUARTERS AT FORMER ARMY BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works regarding the army base at Churchill, Manitoba, which was closed and turned over to the Department of Public Works. I understand that this has a capacity for 350 families and that 100 of the married quarters are vacant. I want to ask the minister why it is not possible for Canadian and American personnel working for the Pan-American Airways to occupy these quarters; because I believe these people are living in very primitive conditions indeed.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is, of course, an important matter, and I think it would be better to wait till tomorrow at which time I will have all the facts to provide an answer.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MONTREAL—BENEFITS TO STRIKING NEWSPAPER EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like once again to direct a question to the Minister of Labour which I put to the Acting Prime Minister last week and of which the Minister of Labour was to be informed.

Could the Minister of Labour tell us whether he intends to intervene with the unemployment office in Montreal so that employees of the newspaper La Presse, who are now without work because of a strike in a section of that newspaper, may receive unemployment insurance benefits?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have received notice of the hon. gentleman's question. It is true that the insurance officer adjudicating these claims has decided that the persons involved are not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits because of the particular work situation prevailing there. The employees affected have appealed this decision to the board of referees, and I understand that board is scheduled to hear these appeals at the end of the month, on September 30.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the minister explain why the unemployment insurance appeal board was able to render a decision in the case of the Toronto newspapermen strike only three weeks after the strike began, while it has not been able to render a decision in the case of the Montreal strike, after three and a half months?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the insurance officer in Toronto decided in that case that the work stoppage had ceased, and that barring any other disqualifications the workers affected would be normally eligible for benefits. In this case the insurance officer has adjudicated that a work stoppage still exists. There is no indication that the work stoppage has ceased to exist, and the matter is now before the board of referees as provided for under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REASON FOR DELAY IN ANSWERING STARRED QUESTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I should like to put a question to his parliamentary secretary.

Could he tell the house why starred question No. 1,887 was allowed to stand last Wednesday, to be answered only today?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that was merely due to a clerical error. We were supposed to have the reply on hand but at the last minute the minister and I realized that it had been left at the office.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POINTE CLAIRE, QUE.—ARREST OF MEMBERS OF KINSMEN'S CLUB

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Could the minister tell us whether he has received a request from the solicitor general of the province of Quebec, Hon. Claude Wagner, that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police—

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the translation system is not working and we are unable to hear the interesting remarks of the hon. gentleman.

An hon. Member: It is now.

[Translation]

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Justice whether he can tell the house if the solicitor general of the province of Quebec has asked for the assistance of the R.C.M.P. in order to help the Quebec provincial police to arrest the 13 Kinsmen in connection with a lottery held at Pointe Claire?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did not receive any such request from the solicitor general.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ROBSON, B.C.—EXPROPRIATION OF PROPERTY OF AGED VETERAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise bristling with indignation to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs based on correspondence I received this morning from residents of Robson, British Columbia, who are very concerned about the abominable treatment being given a war veteran over 80 years of age, whose property has been taken by the B.C. hydro authority. I bring this situation to the minister's attention at their request, and ask that he have some official sent into the district to protect the rights of these older veterans who are helpless in the face of this octopus.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I presume by "authorities" the hon. gentleman is speaking of the British Columbia hydro authority.

Mr. Herridge: That is right.

Mr. Teillet: At the moment I have no knowledge of this matter, but I certainly will make inquiries and have someone look into this situation to see what assistance can be given these veterans.

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASES IN PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to address this question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is the minister giving consideration to increasing the pensions of war veterans, which appear to be inadequate at this time?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I believe I answered a question about war veterans allowances and pensions two or three weeks ago in the house. I have nothing further to add at the moment.

[Mr. Balcer.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—NON-PARTICIPATION BY CANADA IN NAVAL EXERCISE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister advise why no units of the Canadian navy are participating in the important NATO fleet exercise beginning today?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian navy is committed for another exercise undertaken jointly with the United States of America, and consequently are unable to participate at this time in the naval exercise taking place off the coast of Europe.

INFORMATION RESPECTING INTEGRATION OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Will the information to be presented to the United States service officers in respect of the integration of the Canadian forces exceed the information already available to this house?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does not the minister think he is wasting the time of our friends south of the border?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

HALIFAX, N.S.—PROVISION OF WORK FOR SHIPYARD PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that an article in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of September 18 states that the normal 900 man labour force at the Halifax shipyards has been reduced to less than 300 men since August 21, after three years of steady employment at the yard, will the Minister of Labour inform the house what plans his department will propose to provide employment for so many skilled personnel who have been trained over a long period of years?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not for a moment accept the numerous allegations of fact in the hon. gentleman's question, but I thank him for raising the matter and I will investigate to ascertain whether the allegations in his question are correct.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister state that the article in Friday's Chronicle-Herald is incorrect?

Mr. MacEachen: I have not said that.

D.E.W. LINE—STEPS TO AVERT STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Can the Minister of National Defence advise the house what steps he has taken in conjunction with the Minister of Labour to avert the possibility of a strike on the D.E.W. line?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I will ask my colleague the Minister of Labour to deal with this question. It is primarily his responsibility, and I believe he has received a report.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): As hon. members may know, the report of the conciliation board was received recently. The board had spent a lengthy period attempting to reach an agreed solution to the dispute between the Federal Electric Company and the international brotherhood of electrical workers. The report was received recently. It has been rejected by the union in question. There has been considerable activity in this matter over the week end. The union has not yet taken a strike vote. The Department of Labour is of course ready to assist at the opportune time in any effort to mediate in the situation.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have any representations been received from the United States or any of their officials for the minister to appoint a mediator to look into the dispute?

Mr. MacEachen: I have received no representations as yet on this point.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue. In the light of the great distance from Ottawa of the D.E.W. line sites and the difficulty in communication, can the minister advise the house whether appropriate steps have been taken to man the D.E.W. line in an alternative manner in the event that there is a strike?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I presume the hon. member meant to put his question to me.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hellyer: All I can say is that we have given some thought as to how the D.E.W. line could be operated in the event that a strike was called.

Mr. Lambert: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does this envisage any gap in its operation, in the event of a strike?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think it would be profitable to comment further. I have given the assurance that we have given this matter some preliminary thought. I think that is all I can usefully say at this time.

LOUISBURG, N.S.—LAY-OFF OF WORKERS AT HISTORIC SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. I wonder whether the minister would use his influence with his colleague the minister of northern affairs in order to bring about a stop to the lay-offs at Fort Louisburg? While the minister is on his feet would he also assure the house that the original intent of this project, which was a make-work project for displaced miners, is still the policy of this government?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to discuss, as I have already done, the project at Louisburg with the minister of northern affairs.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister answer the last part of my question? Is it still the policy of this government that this project remains, as it was originally intended, a make-work project for displaced miners?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is not customary to answer questions of broad policy on the orders of the day. I am sure my hon. friend will have observed from the hiring practices which have prevailed at Louisburg during the last year and a half that unemployed miners from various parts of Cape Breton have been given special consideration in this project.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary question. I did not understand whether the minister said the "hiring" or the "firing" policy.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING LABOUR CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware of the fact that there are only nine calendar days left in the month of September, in fact only seven sitting days? Will he have the national labour code legislation on the order paper before the end of this month as he promised?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. gentleman would even ask that question.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, is the minister not aware of the number of times we have been disappointed and put off? I think the question is one that deserves to be answered.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. gentleman has not been put off or disappointed at any time, because all statements I have made with respect to this important piece of legislation have been fully borne out by subsequent events, and I am completely confident that the statement made on my estimates will be fully borne out by the calendar date suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, the minister could have said yes.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. RESPECTING CANADIAN INCENTIVE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Has the government recently held meetings with representatives of the United States to discuss the automotive parts incentive program of the Canadian government; and in view of the urgent and widespread interest in the matter did the government offer to make alterations in the program, what was the nature of the alterations, and what degree of acceptance did such alterations receive from the United States officials?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

FINANCE

TAX HOLIDAY FOR POTASH FIRMS USING SOLUTION METHOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg. Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Prime Minister or the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, but in their absence I am prompted to direct it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would he state whether a three year tax holiday has been granted to potash firms using solution mining methods to encourage production, as was done for shaft mining for potash? If this has not been done, I wonder why it has not been done?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is surely a question for the order paper also.

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN FINAL SALES TAX INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the cost of an average price winter built home will increase by about $600 as a result of the final 3 per cent increase in the sales tax, bringing the total tax up to 11 per cent; and having in mind also the high cost of winter building, will the minister consider delaying this increase in taxation until late spring?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all I cannot accept the premise on which the question was based. I can assure the hon. member, however, that the government has no thought of changing the present tax legislation to which my hon. friend has referred.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a question to ask the Minister of Finance supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Wellington South concerning the winter housebuilding program and the proposed 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. Will the minister make representations to the government to ensure that the bonus paid in respect of winter built homes will be increased accordingly, so the public will not be further deceived in this regard?

Mr. Gordon: I am not worried about the public being deceived—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: —in this regard, Mr. Speaker; I think the public is very well satisfied with the way things are going.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TAPE RECORDING OF QUEEN'S ACTIVITIES TO FOLLOW LIVE BASEBALL TELECAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State but in his absence I will direct it to the parliamentary secretary. In C.B.C. press release No. 169 dated last Friday we are advised that on the afternoon of Saturday, October 10 the Queen of Canada will go to the Citadel for ceremonies with the Royal 22nd regiment, including dedication of a memorial chapel, and that this event will be videotape recorded for broadcast at the close of the world series baseball game that afternoon. Does the world series game take priority over the activities of the Queen of Canada because of its higher Canadian content?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to bring this question to the attention of the minister.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—STATEMENT RESPECTING CREDIT UNIONS, PROVINCIAL QUOTAS, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if I might reply to a number of questions that were put to me on Thursday and Friday of last week in connection with the student loans legislation.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni raised some questions about credit unions, and in particular I believe asked why they had not been included in some of the publicity that was arranged in connection with this program. I should explain that the main source of the detailed information on the plan which was prepared for the public is a brochure which has been given very extensive distribution. This brochure explained that some credit unions are expected to make arrangements to provide loans under this plan. It is, therefore, not correct to say that all publicity in connection with the Canadian student loans plan omitted any reference to credit unions.

A number of advertisements in newspapers and by radio across the country just prior to and following the Labour day week end were primarily designed to draw the attention of students to the fact that loans were available. At that time arrangements for the designation of credit unions as lenders had not been completed, and the advertisements did not specifically mention credit unions.

The letter to which the hon. member referred in his question took issue with the omission in a recent brief television interview in connection with the Canada student loans plan. In my reply to this letter I pointed out that a credit union may be designated as a bank under this act. I assured the league that I am fully cognizant of the important role played by credit unions in the field in which many of them have done pioneer work. In this connection hon. members will be interested to know that a first group of credit unions will be formally designated as banks for the purposes of the Canada Student Loans Act some time this week.

The hon. member for Saint John-Albert, I think it was on September 17, asked if I would table or make available the different quotas for each of the provinces. Hon. members may recall that on July 14, 1964 I gave the house approximate figures for the provincial allocations. The final figures for the loan year ending June 30, 1965 were sent to the provinces on August 21, 1964. They are as follows: Newfoundland, $1,176,000; Prince Edward Island, $232,000; Nova Scotia, $1,736,000; New Brunswick, $1,416,000; Quebec, $12,964,000; Ontario, $12,440,000; Manitoba, $1,968,000; Saskatchewan, $1,908,000; Alberta, $2,852,000; British Columbia, $3,236,000; Yukon, $24,000; Northwest Territories, $48,000.

The hon. member for Athabasca asked a question in respect of the allocation to students in the Ottawa area. As I explained last Thursday, whatever regional limits there may be within a province on the amount of loans available to students are set by the provinces and are outside my jurisdiction. In this connection I have been advised by the Ontario authorities as follows:

> In Ontario, because a large number of institutions were named as issuing agencies, authority was given to each institution to issue certificates of eligibility up to an initial specified amount. Such a procedure was necessary in order to ensure that, in total, the 44 issuing agencies did not exceed the provincial allocation. The individual allocations were made on a proportional basis and for institutions in the Ottawa area the initial allocations totalled $830,000.

In the letter of instructions sent by the minister of university affairs to each institution it was stated:

—if (your) maximum total is reached during the year you are asked to withhold issuing any additional certificates of eligibility until the availability of additional loan funds has been discussed with the department of university affairs.

No final limit has been set for any Ontario institution. If any institution in Ontario finds its initial allotment temporarily inadequate to meet demand, it should communicate with the department of university affairs as it has been directed.

The final question on this subject was asked by the hon. member for Hamilton South. He asked whether I had received representations from the Canadian union of university students requesting a supreme court ruling or a test case on the Canada Student Loans Act and, if so, what had been my reply. The answer is that I have received no such representation.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): In view of the minister's statement over the week end reporting very buoyant revenues to the government, I wonder when we can expect implementation of the promise of 10,000 scholarships.

Mr. Gordon: I am pleased that the hon. member should refer to the statement I made over the week end with regard to the greatly improved position of the Canadian economy. If I remember correctly I pointed out that this was due primarily to the success of the policies which were approved by this house last spring and summer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Devaluation.

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to send the hon. member a copy of my speech. It will perhaps make things clear to him. In answer to the specific question raised, I will be glad to make an announcement at the proper time.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): My question relates to the announcement made by the Minister of Finance. If I heard him correctly—and the hon. gentleman will no doubt correct me if I am wrong—he said that the allotment to the province of Quebec in respect of student loans amounted to $12,500,000, while only $12,400,000 had been allotted to Ontario. In other words, Ontario will be getting $100,000 less than Quebec. On what basis were these figures arrived at, and why should there be this difference?

Mr. Gordon: The allocations, as the hon. member may recall, because they were discussed at some length during the debate on this legislation, were based on the number of students at post-secondary or high school level. At the moment there happen to be more in Quebec than in Ontario. That is how these figures were arrived at. I should also point out to the hon. member that Quebec has decided not to come into this plan. Quebec has its own plan, so a different formula applies in that province.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): On Thursday it was suggested by the minister that I was mixed up in my zeroes. I was not mixed up in my zeroes at all. I have found now, much to my satisfaction, that the ceiling in the Ottawa area is $830,000 instead of $400,000 and that, as I said, there are about 5,000 students in the Ottawa area who may wish to take advantage of loans. Already 265 applications have been turned down. I wanted to make sure these students were not left without funds, and that is the reason I asked my question.

Mr. Gordon: I apologize for my suggestion that the hon. member would ever become mixed up in his zeroes. I am sure he would not, and I apologize for anything I said in that regard. As I said a moment ago, when the allotment for students has been used up the authorities concerned should get in touch with the department of university affairs in Toronto.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CONTINUATION OF PRESENT PROVISIONS RESPECTING SHARED PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I wonder if I might take this opportunity to deal with a question on another subject which was asked on Friday of the Prime Minister by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. After making a reply, I think to a supplementary question, the Prime Minister said he would look into the supplementary question and reply today, or as soon as he could. It is in connection with the Prime Minister's reply on Friday to the question asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam concerning the government's proposal for contracting out operations in respect to cost sharing programs that I wish to elaborate.

The hon. member asked whether the several features of the contracting out option, including the tax abatement provisions and the preservation of the present undertaking in respect of such programs as hospital insurance, old age assistance, etc. were designed to apply during the interim period provided for.

The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has said. I would like to add only one observation. The policy with respect to shared cost programs after the interim period will undoubtedly be the subject of intensive federal-provincial deliberations during the next 18 months, including those of the tax structure committee and the federal-provincial conference.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Will it be government policy to bargain with the provinces to see to it that any extension of the tax abatements or transfers from the federal treasury to provincial treasuries will go hand in hand with a continuation of the reciprocity and national uniformity provisions?

Mr. Gordon: In answer to that question I would call attention to the work to be done by the tax structure committee which was set up jointly by the federal and provincial governments, as has been reported earlier. It is our earnest hope that this committee will be able to arrive at a unanimous decision, or a united decision, which will constitute its recommendations. I do not, therefore, wish to say that the federal government will take a positive decision until we have the benefit of the report or recommendations of this joint committee.

AGRICULTURE

POULTRY—INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO MAINTAIN PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In his absence I should like to direct it to his parliamentary secretary. It relates to a statement the minister made that turkey and poultry prices generally are higher now than they have been for the last four years. Could the minister explain why Mr. Olaf R. Olson of Spalding, Saskatchewan, received only $8.35 for 99 chickens he sold to the Saskatchewan co-operative creamery association at Humboldt? These chickens were all graded A and B; nothing less than C. He received—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is undoubtedly an important matter of principle, but in my opinion the minister now understands the question and will answer in due course.

Mr. Rapp: This is a matter of such great importance that I would like to take it up at ten o'clock tonight.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister. When can we expect an answer from the government to the numerous requests that have been made on behalf of turkey producers throughout Canada? This matter has gone on for such a long time now that the producers are in extremely bad shape, and the government just do not seem to be doing anything about it. They lifted the quota off, and it is time we had an answer.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): I would say, Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I make due allowance for the tremendous absence of ministers, but this is a problem that has to be met now. It is a serious situation. A telegram was received today by me, and I think also by the government, from the turkey producers of British Columbia to the effect that their industry is being ruined by delay on the part of this government in taking action. Surely the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture in the absence of the minister, can give some assurance to the house in this respect.

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, on September 10 the Minister of Agriculture made a statement, which he confirmed last Thursday or Friday. I will read the statement, which appears on page 7826 of Hansard. This was in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale:

> Mr. Speaker, turkey prices are consistent with what they have been in the last four years. As a matter of fact they are a little higher. In the last two weeks there have been no importations of turkeys from the United States, and turkey prices are fairly firm.

Then the minister said he would be discussing these problems with the producers in Winnipeg last Monday. When he came back he said he was expecting to make a further announcement with regard to this problem later on. As hon. members know, the minister is in France on official business, and will be back in the house on Wednesday.

Mr. Pugh: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister, then, would not agree with the contents of this telegram, which reads as follows:

> Is our government aware of the impending financial disaster awaiting the turkey industry of B.C. unless some immediate corrective measures are taken. Large scale importations of American turkeys at unrealistic prices have depressed returns to growers here to the point where even the American producers are no longer interested in shipping into Canada, an extremely discouraging situation for the Canadian producer. This association with 350 members fervently expects some action to be taken to avoid such a development which would very seriously and adversely affect—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pugh:

—not only turkey producers but feed industry and others.

Does the minister agree with that, or not?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. C. O. Cooper (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the statement the minister just made he said no turkeys have been imported during the last month. Is this an indication that the United States are holding off and are going to ship turkeys in for Thanksgiving and Christmas, and ruin the Canadian market for those holidays?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question, though interesting, I do not think is proper.

REPORT OF EASTERN CANADA FARM SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry. It might be of greater interest to the Minister of Agriculture but, since he is not here, perhaps it could be forwarded to him. The Quebec minister of agriculture, Mr. Courcy, stated that he was waiting for the report from the federal government on agriculture in eastern Canada before deciding on what course to take. Could the minister tell us what is the nature of the report with respect to the investigation the federal government is allegedly making about agriculture in eastern Canada and when we can expect that this report will be published?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to acquaint myself with Mr. Courcy's statement in order to reply to that question accurately.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister.

Has he not met Mr. Courcy over the week end and has he not then discussed that question with him?

Mr. Sauvé: No, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately.

[Mr. Pugh.]

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

SUBSTITUTION OF AFFIRMATION AS ALTERNATIVE IN OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Is the minister now in a position to inform the house regarding the possibility of affirmation of the oath of allegiance by prospective citizens?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, but I count on being able to do so very shortly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INCLUSION OF INTERPRETERS AND TRANSLATORS IN INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION DIRECTIVES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State, I should like to direct a question to his parliamentary secretary.

Did the order passed by the internal economy commission and announced by Mr. Speaker last week include the employees of this house who belong to the departments of translation and interpretation? In the negative, does the minister intend to make an explanatory statement on that matter in the near future?

[Text]

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary to State): I take notice of this question, Mr. Speaker, and will bring it to the attention of the Secretary of State.

INCLUSION OF PROTECTIVE STAFF IN SALARY REVISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the President of the Privy Council. Were the protective staff included in the increases awarded the staff of the House of Commons in the announcement made last Friday? If not, why not?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would point out that this is not a matter for the President of the Privy Council. This is a matter for the Speaker, and the method of communicating with the Speaker is by letter.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

WINNIPEG—INVESTIGATION OF FOSTER HOMES FOR CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the other day the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked me about a report that appeared in the Winnipeg press to the effect that an Indian child has been mistreated in a boarding house in Winnipeg. I have now had a chance to investigate this matter, through my officials, and should like to advise the house as follows.

I am informed that it is not correct to state that children are placed in foster homes in Winnipeg that have not been investigated. Following discharge from hospital, it is often necessary to find a boarding house for an Indian child pending arrangements for transportation and escort to his home in the north, or sometimes to continue with his medical treatment as an out patient. Some of the homes so used are licensed by the city of Winnipeg as boarding homes for children. Where these are not available, placements are supervised by departmental officials. We are informed that short term boardings are not necessarily licensed by the province or by the municipality and, as I have said, where such licensed homes are not available, placements are made and supervised by our departmental officials. These officials, because the children have just left hospital, are in almost constant daily contact with the children and their temporary homes.

In this particular instance we had previously placed children in this home. The woman in question had satisfactorily cared for five children in the last six months for periods of from two weeks up. There was no evidence of any previous mental history and no knowledge of mental instability on her part. The selection of homes which my department makes in regard to these Indian children is confined to married women with children who maintain homes and children in a satisfactory manner and have suitable accommodation for short term boarder placement. After an initial visit by a member of my departmental staff, periodic visits are made and the condition of the children during the stay and on leaving the boarding house is noted.

When the little girl in question was discharged from the children's hospital on April 2, 1964, she was taken by a member of our department to the home of Mrs. K. Wall. On April 9 the department's Winnipeg office was notified by her husband, Mr. Wall, that the infant had fallen out of the top bunk bed and had been taken to the children's hospital emergency ward by Mrs. Wall.

One of our medical officers immediately investigated and was told by hospital authorities that the child's injuries were not consistent with the story told of their having resulted from a fall. Therefore immediate action was taken to notify various authorities and to have an investigation undertaken, which resulted in referral to the attorney general's department for police investigation.

The hospital's social service department then visited the home in question to persuade this lady to voluntarily accept psychiatric help. This was done on a voluntary basis before the case came up in court. It is very deeply regretted that the baby in question has sustained what is apparently permanent mental injury, but I know of no way in which any of my officials might have known in advance that this could possibly happen, or could have avoided it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I just ask the minister one question. Is she now telling the house that there is no question but that all these homes are investigated before Indian children are placed in them? This was the part of the report in the Winnipeg Free Press last Friday which seemed most disturbing.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that this particular home was initially recommended to us by another married woman who had one of our short term boarders. An investigation was made; people went there and met Mrs. Wall, looked at her accommodation and talked to her. She has had five children, short term boarders before with never any trouble.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Is he in a position to make a report to the house on the negotiations among Canada, the United States and Japan concerning the north Pacific treaty? If he is not in a position to do so, when will he be?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, negotiations are under way in Ottawa and have entered the third phase following meetings which took place in Washington and Tokyo last year. I am confident that the negotiations are proceeding satisfactorily and that we will be able to come to an agreement.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. When the minister brings in his report on this agreement, could he give the house some indication of the plans which the Japanese may have for constructing facilities for use as a common market base at St. Pierre and Miquelon?

Mr. Robichaud: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the questions being discussed in the meetings now taking place between Canada, Japan and the United States have nothing to do with the supposed program of the Japanese to establish a base at St. Pierre and Miquelon, so I would be unable to make a report on this matter, which does not directly involve Canada. If this is the case, then this is a problem which concerns the governments of France and Japan.

SUPPLY

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO MEET NATIONAL PROBLEMS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on these occasions the opportunity is given to members of the house to place before the country matters upon which, in the opinion of the opposition, the government has failed to discharge its responsibilities.

The motion in question is one which goes back to the earliest days. I am going to mention the purport of the motion, because frequently it is misunderstood. It is a principle of our constitution that the House of Commons shall control the finances of the country. For almost 550 years that right has been asserted in varying degrees, until within the last 200 years it has been fully confirmed and is no longer subject to dispute. In other words this motion provides the opportunity—and I quote from citation 234 of Beauchesne's fourth edition—for asserting that:

> The ancient doctrine that the redress of grievances should be considered before the grant of supplies is maintained in the House of Commons of Canada.

The motion permits a wide discussion, and a discussion in the House of Commons which is not limited by the rules. In fact the decision of Speakers throughout the years has been that members may discuss various questions on the motion for the Speaker to leave the chair, and a great latitude is allowed on these occasions.

I do not intend to speak at very great length today, Mr. Speaker. Some 17 months have gone by since the present government took office, and what has taken place in the intervening months causes one to read with interest the views expressed by the Prime Minister in his address to the nation on the day after the change of government. These words will take their place with other words uttered by those who will always regret having done so. These words, grandiloquent in their construction, provided a promise and a blueprint which in the light of experience will be either condemned or approbated. He said:

> The task ahead then is immense but it is not frightening. It is complex beyond simple description, but it is not impossible. It will not be an easy time, but it will, I pledge you, be a time to excite the daring, to test the strong and to give new promise to the timid. It will indeed be a time of direction and decision, where our efforts are sustained, our purpose clear and our faith high.

Mr. Speaker, those words as a guide to the government were great in their conception, and have been awful in their execution. I am sure even the most patient supporter of the government must laugh inwardly when he thinks of those words and the degree to which this government has failed in the implementation thereof.

Your Honour, as everyone knows there are six of these motions provided by the rules. In the month of May we passed up one opportunity to debate the motion. So far there have been three motions. On April 20 the amendment moved to the motion was that this house deplored the announced decision of the government to abandon its responsibility for the administration of veterans hospitals. The next amendment to supply motion was made on May 4 having to do with a co-ordinated national water policy, and suggesting the establishment of a national advisory committee on water resources and an acceleration of the application of ARDA policies, the expanding of water and other resource development programs conceived and established by the previous Conservative government. That motion, while defeated, in light of subsequent events has proven to have been an understatement.

The next motion was made on May 25, and the amendment was:

This house regrets the continuing failure of the government to take effective action with regard to the pressing agricultural problems of eastern Canada.

That situation is the same today as it was then, with the perambulating Minister of Agriculture being everywhere but in the House of Commons while the problem for the farmer in eastern Canada becomes worse and worse. An example today had to do with the turkey industry. When the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary referred to the situation in respect of that industry all he received was the same old push-off on the part of this government.

Those three amendments in the light of subsequent events have been shown to have been well founded, irrespective of the votes that took place in the house. Under the rules two days are provided for debate and there is still one more motion to come up, though there has been an informal agreement entered into—which is as equally as binding as if it were formal—that supply motion No. 6 will not be proceeded with because of the desire of hon. members to get on with the business of the house.

These motions give the opposition an opportunity to analyse the shortcomings, weaknesses, failures and retreats of the government in the administration of the affairs of the country. Of course the limitation on discussing those matters is that we should not be too general but should particularize. Sir, there have been so many failures on the part of this government in 17 months that any catalogue of unfilled promises could result in an amendment being moved that would be longer than any other moved in the history of parliament. Unfilled promises and uncertain and fumbling courses have made a mockery of the words of the Prime Minister in April, 1963.

Sir, we have a government that seems to have no compass, no sense of direction and no chart but that of expediency; a government whose slogan might well be tax and tax, spend and spend, retreat and retreat. That has been the history of this government, and no particulars are necessary. The evidence is apparent in every department of government. This is a government of indirection that, for some reason known only to itself, with the exception of one or two matters that have been before the house, has been so confused with legislation so ill conceived that it either has had to withdraw what it had advanced, amend what it had decided upon or repair and amend the original plans placed before parliament. It is a government that nationally has failed to bring about anything approaching national unity. It is a government that has failed to deal with the centrifugal forces that threaten the unity of Canada. It is a government that in 17 months has brought about greater divisions in this nation than had ever been seen or could possibly have been imagined since confederation. In every department it is a government that has been weak and inefficient, dawdling and uncertain, and has failed to bring before parliament legislation covering those matters that are necessary. It is a government that has increased taxation; a government that, at a time when taxation should be reduced, is taking the very opposite course.

Mention has been made today of the sales tax on production machinery and on building materials. Sir, no other nation in the western world imposes such taxes, yet this government going contrary to every economic advice it would receive from those who are experienced in the civil service of the country, brought in that tax while we in the Conservative party stood against it. It has paid off as far as revenue is concerned. I have not the latest figure, but the information I have available indicates that in January the total tax was $8.2 million, in February $7.5 million, in March $11.4 million, in April $10.3 million, and in May $13.4 million. Those are taxes imposed on progress in this country.

We took strong objection to this and continue to do so. Almost every economic and business organization in Canada has condemned this tax, but the government has refused to act. The total amount collected in 1963-64 was some $62 million. I have told the house what the figure was up to the end of May.

What has this tax done? It has simply been a clog on development. It is all very well to talk about the great expansion in building and the like, but when you deduct from expenditures 8 per cent tax that is now in effect the jubilant figures that are put forward become less optimistic in their effect. And so I could go on throughout the entire picture of development on the part of the government.

We believe the time has come for a substantial reduction in taxation. We said during our period of office that Canada was on the upgrade, that the economy was on the way up, but those gloomsters opposite said "nothing of the kind". Now they admit that 45 months ago the Canadian economy started to rise. Furthermore, they ridiculed us when we brought into effect the pegging of the dollar which induced and brought about a tremendous expansion in our trade. Ridiculed when in opposition, it has now become the cornerstone of their policy when in office.

With regard to the field of trade, the Minister of Finance, having secured a great victory in convention on Saturday—he is better in conventions than he is in parliament—dealt expansively with the economy. I should like to have heard him on the question of trade. I should like him to tell the house and the country why it is that in the field of trade our imports are increasing at a substantially greater rate than our exports. I should like him to tell us what the situation is as to the balance of payments. Certainly Canadian producers and manufacturers are having more and more difficulty competing, operating as they do with the load of the tax on production machinery. These are things upon which information should be available. These are things that optimistic statements cannot brush aside.

I mentioned a moment ago something of the situation with regard to Canadian unity. Can you imagine a government which sets up a committee for the purpose of looking into the effects of separation? I know the Prime Minister stated he really did not have that in mind, but I am going to read from Hansard of June 26 last where, as found on page 4780, he was asked whether he would consider a study being made of the economic social and political effects on the rest of Canada of separation, in view of the need for clarification of this subject. The Prime Minister replied:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been considering the matter. It is not a subject which lends itself to easy investigation and dogmatic conclusions, but officials of the government are making that kind of investigation now.

There can be no misunderstanding there, and the same position was repeated the other day in the house. When everything should be done to bring about unity in the nation, this government admits to a spirit of defeatism by setting up a committee of civil servants to look into the effects of separation. And so on in the whole picture.

I mentioned agriculture in eastern Canada. I could deal with the field of unemployment and how the government was going to meet that problem. All that was needed was for them to take office and unemployment would disappear. That was the undertaking. We do not hear much about unemployment today in spite of the fact that it is at a very high level. We hear little or nothing about that. This is the party that promised much in every field of endeavour.

This cursory outline would indicate that if we were to move an amendment to cover the shortcomings of the government we would have one lengthy and filled with detail, for in every sector of government there has been failure. I look at these giants opposite and think of what they promised. I am not going into the record of the campaign promises of 1962 and 1963. I am simply mentioning one or two matters which indicate the situation. They do not know where they are going. They start, they go forward, they retreat. In almost everything they do they emulate the man on the flying trapeze. Oh, there is plenty of action. You see them moving, and then they go back. That has been the story of the present government.

We have been criticized for bringing in amendments. Many have said, why bring in amendments because you know what the result will be? The government has allies, and those allies stay with the government whenever there is a challenge in the form of an amendment. At least, they stay with it to the extent that will assure that whatever the amendment may be, however well founded it may be, it has no possibility of acceptance. That has been the story throughout the picture.

We have been criticized for moving amendments knowing they would be defeated. We know that whatever amendment we might move today, we could expect it to receive the same treatment that all amendments, however beneficial, have received in the past. In addition, we want to get on with the business of the country. We do not want to hold up the government. We have examined a great portion of the estimates during discussions on interim supply. We are most anxious that all departments of the government shall be opened so the necessary examination may be completed at the earliest possible date. All we want is to get the departments before the house, and we will deal with them effectively and I hope efficiently. We do not want to delay. We just want to help the government get these estimates before the house so that we can discharge our responsibilities.

We have had to wait for a long while since the last motion of this type. We want to have the opportunity to look into these matters. We have no confidence in the government, but to move an amendment would, on the basis of past experience, be a continuing experiment in hope without expectation.

We therefore take this general stand. We have made clear the fact that we have no confidence. The record of the government has been one of uncertainty and worse. There are great issues. We are waiting for the pension bill; when will it come? Well, you remember that when the first one came in, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said this is the finest thing ever. She said, "If you do not pass it, you will not have me." We did not get the opportunity, and we still have not. Then there was the second edition. There is a third edition now in drydock. Eastern agriculture has been forgotten by the government. The government has done nothing but borrow and apply our ARDA program, then carry it out with less effectiveness than it deserves. There has been no action to assure new hope for eastern agriculture. All the way across the picture there is the same attitude. Northern development is down to a trickle.

In every field of operation we have seen this uncertainty, this failure to grapple with problems. This action of bringing in the flag was taken in order to cover up the government's failure in so many other fields of endeavour. We have seen all that. It needs no amendment to establish it; we simply state our case.

I mentioned a moment ago that there has been criticism about the moving of amendments. We have been asked, why do you move amendments? Well, it is a course that good parliamentary procedure usually dictates. We find, however, it is being interpreted as a desire to bring about an election. We do not want to be misinterpreted. It has been explained also by a certain leading front bencher that these amendments prevent the government from grappling with problems. If only the opposition were not there, what they would do. We want to give them the opportunity at once to bring in the departments that are not before the committee as yet, so they can be examined.

Before I sit down, let me repeat that the fact we have not moved an amendment does not mean we have changed our attitude in any way. It simply means we are trying to bring about the effectiveness of which the Prime Minister spoke. We want parliament to come to grips with the estimates so we can get them out of the way. Having said that, I conclude.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, should you not announce that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate?

Mr. MacEachen: No.

Mr. Speaker: I did not think it was necessary.

Mr. Knowles: The rules require it; standing order 37(3).

Mr. Speaker: If hon. members wish me to do so, I will announce that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I would—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, it is important that the business of the house be not unduly delayed, and as far as I am concerned, I shall hardly delay it for more than a few minutes. However, I feel that we cannot allow certain statements to go unanswered and that we have to establish a certain policy with regard to our concepts.

Mr. Speaker, everything the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) just stated with regard to this government is valid. When he blames this government for increasing taxes, I cannot but support him. When he blames this government for its continual retreats, I cannot but support him; when he upbraids this government for the economic situation of this country at this time, I cannot but approve him; and when he criticizes this government for its indecision and continual retreat, I have to support him.

But there is another thing I want to add. When the Leader of the Opposition was head of the last government conditions were worse than those we know today, or at least as serious.

When the two old parties are in power we see perpetual tax increases; we see indecision and feel a general economic disorder. Indeed, we may well remember the economic situation in 1959, 1960 and 1961, when the present Leader of the Opposition was in office. At that time things were far from being rosy. Taxes were very high, as was the number of unemployed.

The present Leader of the Opposition, who was then prime minister, was well known for his inability to take decisions.

Mr. Speaker, when in opposition you criticize the government's decisions. That proves one thing: when the two old line parties, Whig or Tory, Liberal or Conservative, are in opposition they claim that they can do everything and blame the government. But when they are in office they are no longer able to do anything except increase taxes, increase unemployment, show more indecision and preside over a disastrous economic situation for a country as wealthy as ours.

On many occasions in the last few weeks the Leader of the Opposition has been talking as if the third parties were the allies of the government. Now if we look up the Votes and Proceedings of the house and especially the votes taken in the course of the last 12 months, we note that the principal friends or allies of the government are not the third parties but rather the members of the Conservative party, because when there is an important vote we note that there are nearly always 30, 35, 40 and even 45 conservative members absent.

Indeed, I remember that on the occasion of an important vote, when barely 12 more votes would have upset the government, I could not keep from mentioning in this house that if the 40 Conservative members absent at that time had been present in the house the government would have been defeated.

In this case, who is the principal ally of the Liberal government?

A short time ago, I think it was in Charlottetown, the leader of the Conservative party stated that the Ralliement Créditiste always followed the Liberal party. Let him figure out the number of votes taken in this House of Commons since he has been in opposition, the number of times the Ralliement Créditiste voted against the government and the number of times the Conservative party voted with the government compared with the number of times the Ralliement Créditiste did. I think that he will be surprised to find that his party voted with the government more often than the Ralliement Créditiste ever did. Let the leader of the Conservative party base his information on figures and then he will stop referring to third parties who are the allies of the government and realize that, on the contrary, his own party is the first ally of the present government.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the statements just made by the leader of the Conservative party concerning the spirit of indecision and retreat of the present government. However, when one realizes that it is the same thing when either of the two old parties is in power, one cannot help note a very important point, and it is this: Canada needs and must choose a new government, formed with a new party and not with those two old parties we have had since confederation. They have not succeeded in giving our country an economic, political and social system that would enable this nation to develop completely and fully with all its resources and potential. Indeed, they only succeeded in administering the debt in terms of taxes, economic slump and unemployment as we have at this time.

I maintain that Canada will have to call on new ideas, a new system, a new organization of the development of our natural resources, if we really want to have a full development.

The Leader of the Opposition mentioned a while ago the existing divisions in Canada. It may be true that there is some dissension, but I feel the ones who are mostly to be blamed for that are still those who would like to continually raise the English against the French or the French against the English although there is room for both ethnic groups in this country.

The Leader of the Opposition is probably one of the persons largely responsible for the disunion now existing, not only in the country but also within his own party. He has succeeded in creating within the Conservative party an image of the same disunion now existing all across the country. You do not have to look far to find out who is responsible. You only have to look at his own chair to see one of the first persons responsible.

As far as we are concerned we declare that there is room for everybody in Canada, for all groups, and even the smaller groups who came to settle in this country. There is room for all those who want to live in peace with other citizens, without trying all the time to blame one another, but rather allowing everybody to develop fully in harmony, while partaking in the country's wealth. We believe that there is room for all by respecting the rights of all and giving freedom to all and the possibility to develop.

The Créditistes maintain that it is possible to achieve that purpose, but in order to do so it is essential that we change the main basis on which confederation stands at the present time. We want to remake the constitution and confederation according to new principles. That does not mean to tear everything down and destroy everything; that means to give a new direction to what exists now, and direct confederation thanks to a new constitution, so that the present discord might be eliminated.

This dissension is found even within the Liberal party. A Liberal minister, in Quebec, says something and that creates dismay in the ranks of the federal Liberal party. Why? Yet, they are two Liberal groups, but they can no longer agree. It seems that the turn of mind of a Quebec Liberal changes when he is elected to parliament in Ottawa. If he is a man of real ability, as there are some in the cabinet at present—several Liberals have personal, intellectual and moral merit—it seems that as soon as he sits on the front benches, he immediately disregards his ideas and principles and thinks only in terms of the party line. On the other hand, if he has no merit, a Liberal member or any old-line party member who comes to Ottawa simply remains silent and does not bother to express any views or principles.

We see, as an example—I regret that he is not in the house at present—the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) whose opinions were quite different before he came to parliament in Ottawa. Now, he is confronted by what he previously condemned, that is Ottawa and co-operative federalism, and he is discarding what he previously preached, he is sacrificing his ideas and his principles to his party's interests.

That has happened ever since 1867 within the old political parties which have governed this country.

The Créditistes believe that these dissensions could be terminated and that peace could be restored. That would not be difficult to achieve as long as confederation could be re-established on a new basis.

The essential basis—this has been said often, but I want to repeat it, in the hope that the present government, which realizes more and more that the present situation is getting tense and the atmosphere heavier all the time, and parliament will try to do something before it is too late—is to recognize not only in parliament and in speeches, but also in practice, that our country is made up of two different nations which can live together, not necessarily apart but in close association, to make Canada one of the greatest and most prosperous countries. Two associated states each having its own responsibilities, and reaching an agreement on a number of others. Two associated states are not separate states, on the contrary, they co-operate instead of being divided.

We are advocating the principle of two associate states and this is the present tendency. If parliament—I do not mean the government but parliament—if all members of the house agreed to draw up a new constitution: two associate states in certain common fields which would keep their responsibilities in certain others.

We are now witnessing on the contrary, the continuous intrusion of the federal government in provincial fields, when the federal government should feel duty bound to respect the rights, obligations and responsibilities of provincial governments. Two associate states which would work together in certain fields, but which would leave to the provinces a certain number of other fields.

We have drawn the list of 16 different fields including defence, external affairs, atomic energy, an agency which now exists, and also transport and postal service. In short, there are 16 different fields where two associate states could co-operate through a really non-federal government and not a government trying to control both states within confederation. This can be done.

Then, the association of two states would develop peacefully and would enable both states to develop more extensively. I have seen citizens from other provinces, even important men in the political field, who desired more and more centralization, a central government, whereas Quebec province and the people wished exactly the opposite. By adopting the principle of two associate states, there would be decentralization for those who want it and centralization for the others. Both states could develop more fully than they are now doing.

Mr. Speaker, we will have to come to such an association some day, for confederation, as it exists now, cannot continue to make progress, because there are only compromises, half solutions, false solutions, solutions that do not settle anything.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition spoke a moment ago of the country's disunion. Well, petty politics will not solve that problem. On the contrary, we can only hope to solve it by putting forward sound solutions likely to be accepted by everybody and carried out across the country in a practical and realistic way. It is our intention today, since that problem was raised a moment ago, to make a practical and realistic suggestion in this regard, and that is to revise the constitution and set it on a new basis, a basis which would not make the central government an associate state but a government depending on and helping in the development of both states.

Mr. Speaker, had we known that the Leader of the Opposition had no intention of moving an amendment, which is not usually the case, we ourselves would have moved a motion suggesting precisely a revision of the constitution setting it on a new basis, on new principles in short, a new constitution under which the country would develop not in the midst of disunion but in harmony and peace. Unfortunately, we did not have time to put down our amendment in writing, but if the debate lasts until six o'clock we will be able to submit it to the house and in such a way as to leave no doubt in the minds of the general public. It will not be in the form of a confidence motion, but a motion for putting the country under a new system, a system under which everybody will be able to live in harmony.

Mr. Speaker, we will present such a motion if the debate is resumed after six o'clock. In any case, we will say this: the blame put on this government applies to all governments which have been in office since confederation.

This is due to the monetary and economic system at present prevailing in this country, a system under which we witness, in a period of prosperity, people on the verge of starvation while warehouses are bulging with products. While there is so much development required in this country, men are out of work. There are masons, bricklayers, carpenters, plasterers without work, whereas in the universities of Quebec and Montreal—the situation is the same in the province of Ontario—admission is being refused to medical students, under the pretence that there is not enough space.

The fathers of those young men would be able to build the necessary quarters, but they are unemployed; during that time, they are refused the privilege of working on the construction of universities, while their sons themselves are refused admission in some faculties.

On the one hand, the family head cannot work on the construction of those quarters and on the other, the son is being refused admittance to the university. This is another scandal of our modern times. Such a situation exists under the present government, such a situation existed under the previous government. I have mentioned medical faculties, but the same thing occurs in all faculties.

There is talk of developing our educational system in this country, and it is alleged that we have not got enough funds; necessary credit is lacking to allow the authorities to expand their quarters, to increase the number of professors, and all those who would like to be educated are left aside.

What is the point of speaking of education if a young man studies six years in primary grades and eight years in the humanities, if after 15 years of study, he finds the doors of the universities closed because there is no more room and not enough professors? Why make long speeches on free education, without any school taxes, while at the same time, rejecting our young people who want to register at a university? This is due to our capitalistic system, to our monetary system. Those are the things which this government and the previous governments defend with all their might. Our economic system refuses to give work to the unemployed in useful and even necessary projects for this country. Such is the system which we, the Social Credit, have been fighting for years.

At the same time, a certain phenomenon can be observed. We see with surprise that the government of the province of Quebec just borrowed $100 million from another province. Now, why is the government of Quebec getting deeper and deeper into debt, whereas the government of another province has money to lend? While the province of Quebec will be paying $57 million in interest a year, the government of British Columbia has money to lend and will grow richer on the interests paid each year by Quebec.

Yet I remember that the Liberal party, during the 1963 election, had a young student from British Columbia come to the province of Quebec, had him hold meetings, make speeches, television appearances, during which he said that Social Credit meant imminent chaos and depression. Yet, the student was from British Columbia. He said: I am from British Columbia, and my province is in a bad depression, getting deeper and deeper into debt, and on the threshold of bankruptcy. Less than a year and a half later, we see the British Columbia government lend $100 million to the province of Quebec. That government is therefore hardly reduced to bankruptcy. It was the Liberal party which sent us this young pup to tell us that British Columbia was getting into debt. It must have recovered very fast since it can now afford to lend $100 million to the province of Quebec.

I remember the time that the Liberal Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Dupuis)—it is a good thing he has no portfolio because he would not know how to handle it—went around saying that our party was advocating funny money while he was throwing dollar bills in the air. If that was funny money, I know a Liberal government in Quebec which was happy to borrow $100 million of it. If that was funny money, the Minister of Finance who had to borrow himself would surely be glad to borrow from British Columbia or from Alberta which loaned to other provinces—I believe it was to Saskatchewan when the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) was premier.

How is it that those two provinces are in a position to lend money for the development of the other provinces?

And the federal Minister of Finance may find that funny. He borrows the year round and now he has to pay $1,080 million in interest on his debt each year. There is one who has $1 billion to lend, while the other has to pay $1 billion in interest each year. But, of the two, which is the funny system?

Mr. Speaker, is it the Social Credit system, the present Liberal system or the previous Conservative system?

Quebec's premier, for his part, states: "This proves that credit is good". Of course credit is good, since it is the credit of the province of Quebec. He borrows on our houses, on Quebec's industries.

But why is credit good? Because he has raised taxes to be able to pay the interest on his debt. As a matter of fact, the more you raise taxes in a country, the better the credit becomes. That is how credit is appraised. This means that the citizens of a province or of a country are made poorer.

If credit is to be good, you must increase taxes in order to be able to reimburse two or three times the amounts borrowed, because you must reimburse the interest and the capital under the present system.

Our present economic system results in unemployment, taxes and debts.

It seems to me that when governments do a little better than the others, we should at least take their advice and study what is happening, how those governments administer their business, instead of continuing to administer ours like the federal government and the Quebec government are doing now.

The Quebec government is increasing taxes for education purposes; the municipalities are also increasing property taxes on houses to help school boards. However, there is not even room enough for our youth in the universities. We heard talk about free education, but when students want to enrol for university courses they come up against the lack of funds to build new universities.

For the past five years, the Ralliement Créditistes has been after provincial authorities to spend more money for the building of schools, colleges and universities.

Today we are faced with the cold facts. Hundreds of students, after 15 years of schooling, cannot enter university to continue their studies in the profession of their choice because there is not enough room.

Meanwhile, the unemployment situation is getting worse. The Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) may deny it, but the number of unemployed is not going down in Canada. His figures may indicate that the situation is improving but they are a sham. When the minister states that there are 125,000 people who are out of work in this country, he bases his calculations on the number of people who get unemployment insurance benefits. However, there are just as many people, if not more, who are not entitled to such benefits, who must be satisfied with social assistance which is so small that it barely keeps the recipient from starving until he gets his next cheque a fortnight later.

The Minister of Labour—I was going to say the minister of unemployment which would have been just as good a designation—claims that unemployment is going down, but it is high time that the Canadian people insist on getting true figures because there are other people besides unemployment insurance recipients who are out of work. There are others who do not get unemployment insurance benefits and this poses a problem, because they have to eke out a living on social assistance with the result that the number of unemployed is just as high as ever but the figures have been juggled. Hypocritical statistics are being used so that the real seriousness of the unemployment problem is unknown. The government uses incomplete statistics to say that there is no unemployment although it is more acute than ever.

They keep saying that the economic situation is prosperous, but if you take a look at the number of bankruptcies in the last six months, you note that there are more than ever. That is what is called economic prosperity in this country although the number of bankruptcies is going up.

The Minister of Finance stated that it was because of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials that there were so many new constructions, especially in Montreal. There may be more activity in the building field in Montreal, but practically all buildings are public or government buildings, because construction in the private field or in the field of family housing has gone down compared to previous years. The increase has been in the construction carried out by various levels of government. And to do this, they have to borrow, pay interests and burden the people with new taxes.

That is what is called a boom in the construction business under the present administration. There is no increase in construction in the private sector or in the field of family housing, but merely and especially in the construction of public buildings.

Mr. Speaker, going over all the faults and shortcomings of the present regime, one finds cause for concern. Besides, I know people are aware of the fact, because they are faced with some lasting problems. Maybe the government does not realize it, but people surely do. They are not living in an ivory tower, like the Minister of Finance or the cabinet. People look at what is going on around them, and I suggest the cabinet and especially the Minister of Finance do the same. Indeed, they should remember that, after his defeat, the former prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent said: "We got too far away from the people." When the Minister of Finance states that this 11 per cent tax on building materials spurred construction, I feel he is getting quite a bit out of touch with the people, and it is distances such as this which cause governments to be overthrown from one day to the next and which make them open their eyes when it is too late.

Mr. Speaker, the Ralliement Créditiste has an answer to the present economic problems. It is to make available the necessary funds in order to enable the country to develop fully, to make available to the people sufficient funds and capital to promote trade and industry within the country, because in a tremendously rich country such as ours, it is quite abnormal to see poor people living on unemployment insurance benefits, in short, people unable to enjoy all the wealth the country is in a position to produce.

[Text]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I was quite prepared to have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) close the debate, and I still am. However in view of the fact that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) has made a statement I thought I should say a few words in order to clarify the position of this party.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has not moved an amendment, and therefore there is nothing before the house except the general motion to go into supply. I feel the same way as the Leader of the Opposition, that while there are a great many questions we would like to discuss, probably the most effective way in which we can further the business of this country is to proceed at once to pass this motion. There are many grievances which the members of this party would like to raise, but all of them can be raised on the departmental estimates which we will be discussing during the next few weeks. There are also many legislative items in which we are interested. But we feel the best way to promote the business of the house is by passing this motion.

We are extremely anxious that the government bring down the Canada pension plan at an early date; we regret that the government has been so slow in getting it on the order paper. We are equally concerned about a national labour code and we hope that the minister's assurance this afternoon that it will be brought down before the end of the month will be carried out. We are anxious to see the redistribution legislation passed, because it is a long time since the representation of this house was based on a recent census. We are anxious that the railway legislation be examined very carefully, not only in the house but in a committee of the house, because it has far reaching repercussions for the Canadian people. There are many other pieces of legislation which we should like to discuss and we think the sooner we get at them the better.

There are also many questions not on the order paper that one might discuss. For example there is the question of unemployment, particularly the problems of structural unemployment, because it is becoming increasingly apparent that a mere economic boom is not going to solve the problem of structural unemployment. This is going to depend on a much vaster retraining, training and placement program than anything the government has envisaged so far. We are anxious to see the government bring down some specific measures to begin laying the foundation for the implementation of the Hall commission report on health services. We are also anxious to see the government carry out its commitment for 10,000 scholarships. These are items which we can raise at a later time.

We have been sitting since February. Even if the house continues to sit steadily from now till nearly Christmas there are only about 60 sitting days left. We think with the estimates which still have to be discussed, with the legislative program before us, and with the items that the government has promised to put on the order paper there is more than sufficient work to keep this house busily engaged until almost the end of the calendar year. For that reason we do not think that the interests of the country would best be served by a protracted debate at this time on some general topic.

The Leader of the Opposition said something about the government having allies who always support it no matter what comes up. I just want to say that an examination of the records of this and last session will show that we have probably voted against the government as often as we have voted for it. We do not consider it our function to vote either for or against the government and we have made our position clear with respect to both the old line parties when they were in office. We differ from them on many fundamental issues, but we do think our job here is to co-operate with whatever government is in office, including this one, as we did with the previous government, in an attempt to get legislation passed and in trying to improve the lot of the Canadian people. The best way to do that under the present circumstances is to pass this motion as quickly as possible.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to prolong the business that is before the house at the present time because basically we are in agreement with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), as indicated in his remarks, as far as permitting the work of the house to move forward as rapidly as possible is concerned. However in view of the fact the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) found it necessary to use this opportunity for a general discussion, it is necessary to make at least a few remarks at this time.

It is the objective and the purpose of our party to get on with the work that is on the order paper, and to permit the government to bring in that legislation it has assured us is going to be dealt with at this session. Certainly there is a great deal of very vital work for us to do. We have heard a great deal of criticism of the government, and we share the opinion that it is essential that various departmental estimates be brought before the house so that they can be considered and passed as soon as possible. There has been some progress made in this regard in the past few weeks, yet there are estimates of at least seven or eight major departments yet to be considered. When these estimates are brought forward for consideration we have an ideal opportunity for specific debate essential in respect of the government's program. I refer briefly to such departmental estimates as those of the Department of Justice, the Department of National Revenue, the Department of Finance and the Department of Trade and Commerce, as well as the estimates of the privy council, the Department of Veterans Affairs and others. At this time there is a necessity to deal with them as quickly as possible.

I would remind the house of the legislation presently on the order paper which must be considered as soon as possible, and the sooner the better, because already there have been long delays. First of all I am thinking of legislation dealing with publications, which has been on the order paper now for a number of months. A number of major statements have been made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), yet we have not had an opportunity of dealing with this legislation. We must also deal with legislation relating to redistribution. If we are not careful this legislation will be delayed until another session and another year, and soon the statistics resulting from the 1961 census will be as out of date as those available before that census was taken. It is essential that we establish the necessary machinery for dealing with redistribution as quickly as possible.

We must also deal with railway legislation. Certainly many years have passed since the report of the royal commission was published. The drafted legislation has been referred to the committee, and this committee should get to work quickly so that a report can be made to the house at an early date. We must also deal with the Canada pension plan, to which reference was made this afternoon. The government has failed to carry through its suggested draft legislation, and while I do not regard this legislation in the same light as some members of this house, that it must be passed immediately, I agree that because of its importance we must proceed carefully and get started on it very soon.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary for me to review the other legislation now on the order paper, or mention again that legislation which has been promised, but I do believe at this present time that we should reassure the people of Canada that our basic objective is to deal with the essential business before us with dispatch and in an efficient manner. Therefore I agree with the suggestion at this time that we forgo a lengthy debate relating to a general discussion on the motion before us, and give the Minister of Finance an opportunity to reply. I hope he will show his own co-operation and willingness to go along with the position now stated by keeping his remarks down to bare essentials. I join with the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic party in the suggestion that we permit this house to get on with its business by limiting this debate to the remarks we have now made.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be permitted to begin by thanking the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) for his congratulations in respect of that great convention held in Toronto on Saturday at which there were some wonderful candidates, over 1,400 delegates, and many hundreds of alternate delegates and friends in attendance. They really represented the people of Ontario, and in their wisdom chose a fine young man who will be a credit to the public life in Canada.

I should like to reciprocate by congratulating the Leader of the Opposition on the record that he has set this afternoon. There were those who did not think that the right hon. gentleman could make a short speech, and believe me we are delighted to be surprised.

Mr. Douglas: Show your pleasure by emulating him.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I have received some advice—which I am sure was well meant—from the leaders of some parties who have been known to speak a good deal more frequently than I have in this house. I remind my friend, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), of my claim to the record of having made the shortest speech in parliament since confederation. I was clocked at 48 seconds the other day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What date was that speech?

Mr. Gordon: I should like to make one other reference to a specific comment of the Leader of the Opposition and I wrote down his words because I found them so encouraging. He said: "We want to get on with the business of the country". Believe me, there are many of us who agree with him in that regard. I do not mind saying that some of us have felt somewhat frustrated in recent months, and some of us on this side have wondered whether the right hon. gentleman and other members in this house were really anxious to get on with the business of the country.

Mr. Lambert: Just as anxious as you are.

Mr. Gordon: So far on various estimates we have spent 52 days, of which 14 days were on the final supplementaries of 1963-64 and 19 days were on interim supply. I suggest to Your Honour that must be something of a record.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, 25 or 26 days under the previous government.

Mr. Gordon: I did not interrupt the right hon. gentleman during the course of his remarks but I intend to reply to some of the things he said. We spent 8 days on the student loans bill, 7 days on the fiscal revision bill, 22 days so far on the flag, 12 days on the Columbia river treaty and 11 days on the redistribution bill so far. If that does not represent a concerted policy of filibuster or at least a slowdown I should like to know what does.

Mr. Knowles: Tell us also about the 60 days of decision.

Mr. Herridge: Who was the cause of it all?

Mr. Woolliams: That is the question; who caused it?

Mr. Herridge: Who started it?

Mr. Gordon: The Leader of the Opposition criticized the Prime Minister for his efforts to unify the country. I found it surprising that the Leader of the Opposition of all people would criticize any other man on that score. I have been wanting to point out for some time, Mr. Speaker, and I am going to take this opportunity to do so if I may, that many of the members on this side of the house, including myself, are very new at politics and that a great many of us stood for parliament for two reasons and two reasons only. First we were disgusted with the way the affairs of the nation were being managed. I am sure I speak for a majority of the members on this side of the house when I say that most of us had no wish to enter public life, but this was one of the main reasons we stood for election.

Mr. Woolliams: How do you feel about it now, after your budget?

Mr. Gordon: I feel fine, and if the hon. member will wait a little while I will give him the reasons. With respect to our second reason for standing for parliament, I know that while not everybody will agree with me a great number of people will agree on this point. I say very seriously that we stood for parliament because we thought and believed then, and we know now, that the Prime Minister is the greatest Canadian of his generation. Those of us who have travelled around the world know that there are many people in high places, in senior positions in the governments of other countries who think that the Prime Minister is one of the greatest men in public life today anywhere in the world, and we believe this. I think that most members on this side of the house will agree with me. I am sure there will also be some on the other side of the house who will agree with me, though perhaps not the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), when I say that we deplore the practice that has developed of trying to tear down and discredit the present Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, well, well. What were you doing all the time in opposition and before you came here?

Mr. Crouse: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Gordon: I will permit a question at the end of my remarks.

Mr. Crouse: Do you remember this "Diefenbuck" your party printed to ridicule the former prime minister?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I have wanted the opportunity for a long time to say what I and a lot of other Canadians think about the Prime Minister.

Mr. Winkler: Such nonsense.

Mr. Gordon: We believe it, and when we say it we speak with considerable emotion. As anybody who is fair, honest and objective knows, the Prime Minister believes, as most of us surely do, that the most important job to be done in this country is to hold it together, to unify and to unite it and, believe me, we think he is doing a fine job in that direction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winkler: Pretty weak applause.

Mr. Gordon: I am going to speak for a few minutes if I may on something I know something about.

An hon. Member: That will be a change.

Mr. Gordon: You will see—

Mr. Woolliams: What did you say?

Mr. Gordon: The interjection came from your friend behind you. I should like to talk for a little while about the economic progress that has been made and about the position of the country at the present time. I do so because of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. In what I thought was a rather scattergun approach he took rather casual and certainly not too well documented potshots at a number of policies which the government has introduced and which have worked out so successfully. I would remind hon. members that when the present government took office a little less than a year and a half ago the upturn in the current business cycle had been in progress, in a faltering way it is true, for about two years, and some hesitations in this progress could be detected. It was apparent that the forward pace would not be fast enough to provide jobs for those who would be entering the labour force in the period ahead. Accordingly, in the spring and early summer of last year a number of new policies were introduced and, if I recall correctly, somewhat bitterly attacked, which were designed to stimulate and expand the economy and provide more jobs. I should like to remind hon. members of a few of these policies because they have certainly worked well.

First of all, there were the very substantial incentives in the form of generous capital cost allowances to manufacturing or processing companies owned by Canadians, or with a degree of Canadian ownership, which purchased new machinery and equipment in the two years following the budget of June, 1963. Believe me, those incentives have had a remarkable effect. Second, there were similar incentives, together with a three year tax exemption, for manufacturing and processing enterprises establishing new facilities in areas of slow growth and high unemployment. These incentives have also been remarkably successful.

Then there were the incentives to the automobile industry aimed at securing for Canada a fairer share of the total production of North America. As most hon. members know, this has provided a stimulus to the manufacturing industries of this country which, except perhaps during the last war, they have never had to the same degree. There was the municipal development and loan fund which was designed to encourage municipalities to accelerate their capital spending programs. This also has been working out remarkably well.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the amount of loans under that?

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to make that figure available to the right hon. gentleman. I do not have it in my head but it is very substantial. Then there was the Atlantic development fund of $100 million which was intended to and is stimulating the economy in the Atlantic area of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How much has been appropriated there?

Mr. Gordon: I shall be glad to get that figure and put it on the record.

There was an improvement in the terms and a shortening up of the incentive program for municipal winter works. There was the $500 bonus plan for winter built houses, which I recall was laughed at at the time it was first announced but which has been tremendously successful in alleviating winter unemployment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister allow a question?

Mr. Gordon: I think if you don't mind, you might ask questions later.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask the minister if he read the observation of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto), who said it was a complete farce.

Mr. Roxburgh: Who is the member for York East?

Mr. Gordon: I thought that what I was trying to do was to explain to some hon. members what had happened. I feel an interjection of that kind is really not to be taken too seriously.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He is an authority. He knows the business. He is in it.

Mr. Gordon: The winter house building program was supplemented and assisted by an increase in mortgage loans by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation of somewhere about $130 million, that is over the same amount in 1962. It was hoped when these loans were introduced that, together with an expansionary monetary policy, they would provide the kind of stimulus that was needed to get the economy surging forward. This is exactly what has happened. When I say that, I am going to show later, Mr. Speaker, that not only has the Canadian economy surged forward in the last year but it has outpaced the progress made in the United States to a significant degree.

[Mr. Gordon.]

It is quite true and everyone will admit, in fact they will be pleased to point out, that these improvements in the Canadian economic scene were aided by large sales of wheat to Russia and other communist countries. Mainly however the improvement in the economy was due to the success of the policies I have mentioned.

There is another point I should like to make. The growth in the economy has been well balanced and no excesses are apparent which might cause serious stresses or pressures. It is now clear that total production for the calendar year, that is the current calendar year, will be appreciably higher than was forecast at the beginning of the year.

Mr. Woolliams: What is the percentage?

Mr. Gordon: If my hon. friend will contain himself, I shall be glad to put on the record those figures. In the first quarter of this year the gross national product, excluding agriculture, rose by 4.2 per cent over the last quarter of 1963. Compared with the first quarter of 1963, the increase was 9.6 per cent. Now preliminary estimates indicate, as we expected, that while the gross national product made a further gain in the second quarter the increase was not as much as in the first three months. The increase could not possibly have been. Our guess is that third quarter growth will be moderate, and in the fourth quarter the pace of activity is expected to rise again.

I say this because there are many powerful forces at work which should keep economic activity at a high level in the months ahead. These include the capital spending programs of both industry and government and, for this winter, the renewal of the house building bonus plan which the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) has announced. If last winter's pattern is repeated this means higher income and higher consumer spending as a result. It is probable also that exports, apart from wheat, will continue in the fourth quarter at higher levels than they were the year before. Of course, as any hon. member from western Canada will appreciate, if western farmers are blessed with good weather and are able to harvest their crop, it looks like a better than average crop and this of course will add to the strength of the economy in the months ahead.

I said the other day, and I should like to try to repeat this in the house, that these various trends, these various indications and the support we see underlying the present economy should mean that the gross national product this year may be of the order of 8 per cent—it may be even a little higher than 8 per cent—over the previous year. In real terms we expect that the increase over last year will be in excess of 6 per cent. If this is achieved, Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is something in which all members of this house and all Canadians can take pride.

Mr. Winkler: Would this be attributable to the pegging of the dollar?

Mr. Fisher: Or the budget of 1963?

Mr. Gordon: If these questions are serious, —and the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) should be serious, because after all he speaks to a larger audience than I am talking to today. He must know that in my personal opinion the dollar would have been revalued long before it was. The fact that it was revalued, even though the revaluation came at a most difficult time and was accomplished in a most inopportune fashion—obviously, it was what was needed. It had been, in my opinion, needed for the previous two years. The effect of this revaluation was clearly beginning to taper off, however, by the spring and summer of 1963. This was one of the reasons there was a faltering in the upturn of the economy. This was the reason other policies were needed. Those policies, I should like to remind my hon. friend from Port Arthur were the policies that were introduced by this government during the spring and summer of 1963, and those policies have been remarkably successful despite the fact that some pundits may not have thought they would be successful.

Mr. Woolliams: Why did the Prime Minister then say there was going to be economic ruin when we pegged the dollar? This is the man you said was a great Canadian.

Mr. Gordon: I do not believe I should be called upon to reply to the hon. member who is making speeches from his seat. I think we should be welcoming him back to his seat. If he waits until I have finished, I shall be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister is casting insinuations upon my hon. friend here without realizing that accompanying my hon. friend was a member of his own party. The insinuations he is trying to cast may reflect back on his own party.

Mr. Gordon: I was not intending to cast reflections on anybody, and certainly not the hon. gentleman who was speaking from his seat.

Mr. Mandziuk: That's right; back track again.

Mr. Gordon: I cannot deal with a comment of that kind.

I was about to say, that I do not expect that on the economic front we shall have to face any obvious dangers in the months ahead. I see no reason why the present trend of economic activity should not continue into 1965. There is no evidence to suggest, for example, that we are heading for the kind of speculative boom which would bring about inflation and, if the inflation was serious enough, would be followed by collapse. Nor are there any immediate warning signs on the horizon of a slow down. I am pleased to be able to say this because when we hear all kinds of speculative statements being made by various people in private life —I think this is a good thing, myself; I welcome a greater degree of public discussion and public statements by authoritative people on the economy and the kind of policies which should be adopted—I think that it is wise for a spokesman for the government to state periodically that in his opinion, and with the resources of the government behind him, he does not see any immediate difficulties on the horizon.

I would not want anybody to think I am suggesting that things will always be as satisfactory as they seem to be at the present time. That would be contrary to all past experience. No one would expect me to say it, or believe me if I did. But I can assure all hon. members that if indications should become evident of either serious inflationary pressures or of a turndown in the rate of economic growth the government would not hesitate to take the kind of remedial action which may be called for, just as it did, if I may say so, in the spring of 1963.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister permit me to ask him a question? Does the hon. gentleman mean by his remarks that the government now intends to bring the Canadian dollar back to par?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: I have made it clear where the government stands on this matter. I have gone out of my way to be emphatic on it on other occasions.

Mr. Crouse: Why did you ridicule us when we did it?

Mr. Sharp: You did it so badly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister permit another question?

Mr. Gordon: I am quite prepared to accept one other question and then I think I should be permitted to go on with my remarks.

Mr. MacInnis: The minister says he has made his stand clear with regard to the position of the Canadian dollar, and he is probably in agreement with what his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce had to say a few days ago on this subject. Why, then, did he deceive the people of Canada when he said at Cobourg, Ontario on March 29, 1963: "I believe I was the first person to state publicly that devaluation caused the stagnation of the economy"?

Mr. Gordon: I can say categorically that I never made a statement of that kind. I would remind the hon. member that I am not likely to have made a statement of that kind in those terms, since I was advocating the course to which he refers two years earlier.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You were not able to convince your friends.

Mr. Gordon: As I was saying, the economy has shown a very marked improvement and we should all rejoice that this is so. I am not satisfied with the conditions in the Atlantic area or in the eastern part of Quebec where unemployment is too high and income levels are too low. But I am encouraged by the fact that unemployment in those areas has been reduced appreciably, just as it has in all other parts of Canada. Taking the country as a whole, conditions are most encouraging and, as I said the other day outside the house, one of the by-products should be a considerable reduction in the federal deficit for the current fiscal year as compared with the forecast which was made six months ago.

We all appreciate, I presume, that one of the most notable developments within the economy this year has been the increase in capital spending plans of private industry. A survey taken late last year showed that capital outlays in 1964 in both the public and the private sectors of the economy were expected to rise by 8 per cent. I think it is fair to say that the full implications of the incentives offered industry in the form of increased capital tax allowances had not been fully appreciated at the time this survey was made. The fact is that increased capital spending has been running at a much higher rate than 8 per cent. According to a mid-year survey it is expected to reach a 16 per cent increase this year over last year, the greatest increase in any year since 1956.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: Somebody, perhaps it was the Leader of the Opposition, mentioned housing. As I believe I said in answer to a question last week, housing starts in the first six months of this year in centres of 5,000 population and over were 12 per cent higher than in the first half of 1963. Completions in the same period were 43.8 per cent above the number of completions during the same period a year ago, and units in various stages of construction at the end of June of this year were up by 7.1 per cent compared with the year before. So I say to hon. members that despite all the talk we heard last year—and we still hear the odd, plaintive echo of it now—these various forecasts and statistics show that the withdrawal of the sales tax exemption on construction materials has not inhibited the expansion of the economy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not what the Canadian lumbermen's association says with regard to the construction industry.

Mr. Gordon: In answer to the Leader of the Opposition may I say that one of our great troubles now is to be sure that the construction industry is able to handle the tremendous volume of work with which it is confronted.

I should like to say a word now about unemployment. In July of this year there were almost 7 million Canadians with jobs. During the previous 12 months, 225,000 new jobs were created. This represents an increase of 3.3 per cent in total employment. If employment on farms is excluded, it represents an increase of 4½ per cent. The increase in employment opportunities was greater than the increase in the labour force. While the unemployment rate was cut from 4.2 per cent in July, 1963, to 3.7 per cent in July, 1964, I am sure all hon. members will have noticed that the figures for mid-August of this year showed that unemployment in the middle of August was down to 3.4 per cent, the lowest rate for that month since 1956. By the same token, if hon. members wish to have the decrease on a seasonally adjusted basis, by mid-August the unemployment rate was 4.8 per cent. I am not suggesting for a minute that I think that this is low enough. I do not. But I think it is a very good improvement over the 6 per cent and 7 per cent levels experienced some years ago.

Looking forward to the next few years, it is apparent that a steady expansion of the economy is essential. The task for all members of this house—certainly for the government—and for industry is to see that we introduce policies that will make it possible to absorb the huge number of young people who will be entering the labour market. It is estimated that in the five years from the end of 1963 to 1968 the labour force will rise by about 750,000 people as a result of natural increase alone, unless there is a reduction in the present proportion of teen-agers choosing to leave school and looking for new jobs. Naturally, immigration will add to these numbers.

I am sure there is one thing on which all members of this house will agree, because they have agreed on it in the past; namely, that this tremendous problem of preparing young people for jobs not only has been a major concern of both provincial and federal governments in the past but it will continue to be one of our major preoccupations for a long time to come. Both this government and the previous government have supported the technical and vocational schools program, and this is why this parliament has approved the extension of youth allowances to 16 and 17 year olds who remain in school. It is also why we approved the student loans plan a month and a half ago, which program will assist many thousands of young people either to go on to university or to take other advanced training courses. The goal must be to help create the kind of labour force that is increasingly able to adapt to the new techniques and requirements of industry.

But let me re-emphasize this, Mr. Speaker. The fundamental need is that there be jobs for all these new workers and for a sizeable proportion—I would like to say, for all—of those who are still out of work. The economy must continue to expand fast enough both to provide the jobs and to take into account all increases in productivity. As I have said on other occasions, this will call for, among other things, the very considerable expansion of the manufacturing industries of Canada as well as the continued expansion of our great resource industries.

Periodically members of the opposition, as is not only their right but their duty, point out changes from month to month in the consumer price index. I think it is only natural that they tend to point these out usually in the months when the consumer price index goes up, and they do not draw the same conclusions about the months when the consumer price index goes down, as it did in August.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How many months has it gone down in the last year?

Mr. Gordon: If my hon. friend will just bear with me for a moment, Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that I think the changes over a longer period than a month are the only ways to look at these fluctuations intelligently, unless one is in possession of the moderating factors that are needed to reduce a month's change to a seasonally adjusted basis. So the figure that I would like to put before the house is the change in the increase in the consumer price index in August of this year as compared with August, 1963. The increase during those 12 months was 1.6 per cent; and this is a record. It is, in fact, a good record, which has been unmatched by any of the major industrial countries of the world, with the exception of the United States.

I think sometimes when we talk about the consumer price index we tend to overlook a factor which perhaps, if we want to be objective, we should take into account more often; that is, that the index is not a precise guide to changes in real living standards. It is difficult, for example, to adjust the index for changes in quality of the products whose price it measures. As there has been a fair amount of talk about new houses, I would point out that while they cost more today than in 1959, they incorporate today many features of greater value, even down to the greater durability of the paint. I think it is fair to say that today's automobile tires perform better than they used to; that clothing fabrics are more durable. I could go on and give other examples; but these are the kinds of improvements that are not, and cannot be, reflected easily in the price index.

The fact is that despite statistical price indexes Canadians today have higher living standards than they have had at any time in the past; the personal disposable income available to the average Canadian to spend on what he needs or what he wants—and I for one believe that he should have the choice—has risen a good deal faster than the relatively slow advance of the consumer price index. Mr. Speaker, I would now like to turn to another matter.

Alleged Failure to Meet National Problems

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Minister of Finance but his time has expired. He started at 4.40 and his time would run to 5.20; and I believe it is now 5.20.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree to extend further time to the Minister of Finance?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fisher: If the minister is willing to answer some questions at the end of his speech.

Mr. Gordon: If that is the condition, Mr. Speaker, I gratefully accept it. I appreciate very much the generosity of the house in allowing me to continue, because I did want to put on record some comparisons of the relative increases in economic progress, in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question. In view of the fact that the minister is raising all this new material which we have not had an opportunity to debate, I contend that he is doing an injustice to this house. If we are given an opportunity to meet the arguments and to discuss and debate the arguments which the minister is now advancing, I am willing to give him additional time to go ahead; but if we are not going to have this opportunity, I say let us not give him the extra time to go ahead.

Mr. Gordon: I thought my hon. friend was asking me a question, Mr. Speaker, but instead he seems to be questioning the decision, as I thought it was, of hon. members a few minutes ago that I should be permitted to continue. However, if there is a difference of view, and hon. members do not wish me to continue—

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would be prepared to accept a question? I would be glad to give it to him, if he would accept it. Would the minister comment on what appears in today's Toronto Star editorial, which reads:

> Finance minister Walter Gordon's review of the Canadian economy in Hamilton last week must come as a disappointment to those who expect leadership and long range policies from a Liberal government.

I would ask the minister whether he would care to comment on this sort of partisan suggestion.

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to, Mr. Speaker, after I have had an opportunity to read the whole of the editorial.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Fisher: But is not this your Hamilton speech?

Mr. Gordon: My hon. friend is asking me whether I am now giving the same speech which I gave in Hamilton on Friday. Let me assure him that when I state the pertinent statistics concerning the Canadian economy I am not likely to change them very much from one day to another. As my hon. friend would expect there is a certain similarity. However, I want to move on to another point.

When the government's economic policies were announced a year ago last spring I seem to recall I was criticized for not suggesting tax cuts as then contemplated by the United States adminisration and which have since been enacted in that country. Those who favoured this course argued—and I think my hon. friend from Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) was one of them—that the increased personal disposable income resulting from such a policy would give the economy the kind of fillip which it needed at the time. Now, unquestionably this would have been one way of stimulating expansion, but we estimated that a significant proportion, as I think I pointed out to my hon. friend before, of the additional expenditures resulting from a tax cut would have resulted in increased imports of consumer goods, thus adding to the current account deficit in our balance of payments rather than adding to employment opportunities in Canada.

Mr. Douglas: Not if they were applied at the low income levels.

Mr. Gordon: Well, I would ask my hon. friend, where else would he think this government would apply such tax cuts?

Mr. Douglas: I would be very glad to tell him.

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to tell him too. To do the job for the purpose we had in mind they would, of course, have been applied in the place where they would do the most good. Another point we took into consideration at the time was this, that there could be no assurance that the whole amount of the tax cut would be diverted to increased consumer spending. In fact, this has so far proved to be the case in the United States where there are various estimates of the proportion which has been added to personal savings and not spent on purchases of goods which would have stimulated the economy.

In any event, the Canadian government decided that in the circumstances we faced in the spring of 1963 the most effective way of expanding the economy and dealing with the unemployment problem was to encourage capital spending. I remember saying this a year ago, and it was the fact. This we did on a scale and in a manner which was not fully understood, I suggest, by some of the critics of our policies at the time. Nevertheless if I may say so I think the results have been right up to expectations. Not only has the Canadian economy made great strides, not only has employment increased and unemployment been reduced and not only are we very substantially better off now than we were 15 months ago, but the over-all performance of the Canadian economy has been appreciably better than that of the United States.

In this regard I should just like to put on record a few statistics, Mr. Speaker. The increase in industrial production between June 1963 and June 1964 has been 5.6 per cent in the United States and 8 per cent in Canada. The increase in total employment between July 1963 and July 1964, using the latest dates for which I have comparable figures, was 2.2 per cent in the United States and 3.3 per cent in Canada. The reduction in the rate of unemployment seasonally adjusted from July 1963 to July 1964—which I think is the best way to make the comparison—was from 5.6 to 4.9 per cent in the United States and from 5.9 to 5 per cent in Canada. Since July it has dropped to 4.8 per cent. The increase in merchandise exports for the first six months of 1963 and 1964 was 14.4 per cent in the United States and 22 per cent in Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the percentage of imports? Have you got that?

Mr. Gordon: The imports have increased in Canada but not as much as exports, as my hon. friend suggested in his remarks. They have gone up because of this great capital spending program which has been going on. As one would expect, there have been importations of machinery and equipment, which was one of the things we were hoping would transpire.

No one can say with certainty that the Canadian record will continue to be better than that of the United States, but I can say with some confidence that based on the results of the past 15 months Canadian economic policies have paid off. There has been a tremendous upsurge in capital spending from which we are all benefiting and from which we shall continue to benefit in the months and years to come. I can only assume from this that hon. members in all parts of the house will agree with me when I say that the economic policies introduced by the government in the spring and summer of 1963 have been vindicated by events.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What were those policies which have been vindicated?

Mr. Gordon: I am afraid my right hon. friend has not been listening to me. As was pointed out a few minutes ago, I have been talking too long. I was urged not to go on any longer than I need because all hon. members are anxious to get on with the business of the country, so while I still have some more to say about the progress of the Canadian economy I will save it for another time.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

Emergency measures organization—

20. Administration and operation, $2,600,000.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

1. Departmental administration including administration of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act, the Prairie Grain Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act, the salaries and expenses of the inspector general of banks office, and grants as detailed in the estimates, $2,710,400.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

1. Administration including the office of the superintendent of bankruptcy, grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, gratuities to the widows and other dependants of judges who die while in office and authority to make recoverable advances for the administration of justice on behalf of the governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, $2,109,600.

LEGISLATION

1. Allowance in lieu of residence to the Speaker of the Senate, $3,000.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

1. General administration, operation and maintenance including authority, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year from firms and individuals requiring special services, $44,388,500.

PRIVY COUNCIL

1. Maintenance and operation of the Prime Minister's residence, $32,500.

Corporations and Labour Unions Act

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

1. Departmental administration including fees for membership in the international organizations listed in the details of the estimates, $5,180,500.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

1. Departmental administration, $6,491,400.

Proceedings reported.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FILING OF CORPORATION RETURNS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-35, to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act was passed in April 1962 and became effective January 1, 1963. The legislation provides for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada. The purpose of the act was described at the time of its introduction to produce certain statistical information on the operation of the economy, the extent of foreign control, and effects of this control. In the course of the debate on this legislation in April 1962, the minister informed the House of Commons that the present form of the legislation was to some extent experimental, that there was a recognition of the importance of good relations with suppliers of data and that amendments to the legislation would be introduced in the light of experience. The amendments that are now before the house carry forward these assurances. The amendments, which affect mainly that portion of the act applying to corporations are designed first, to eliminate a substantial burden to some 30,000 large and medium-sized corporations who at present have to provide virtually the same financial information to the dominion statistician and the Department of National Revenue, and second, to eliminate duplication by these two separate government bodies, that is the dominion statistician and the Department of National Revenue, by establishing an integrated collection and tabulation procedure.

As will be recalled, the information on corporations collected under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act is separated into two clearly defined classes. The first class includes information on directors and share ownership and is available to the public. This class of information would remain unchanged, except that the amendment will facilitate the reporting of information on the distribution of outstanding share capital by permitting this information to be reported as of any specified date within three months before the end of the fiscal year rather than at the end of the fiscal year only. Corporations frequently prepare this information for their own purposes as of dates prior to the fiscal year-end and this amendment is intended to allow a single tabulation by the company to meet the requirements of the act as well as of the corporation. This information is available to the public, and will continue to be available.

The second class of information reported under the act relates to financial statements and certain specified payments to non-residents. This financial information is confidential and is available for government use only. The remainder of the amending legislation applies to this class of information.

As previously indicated, the financial statements required by the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act are virtually identical with those submitted to the Department of National Revenue for corporation income tax purposes. Shortly after the act was proclaimed it was provided by regulation that a copy of the latter statement, as filed with income tax, could be filed with the dominion statistician as compliance with this portion of the act. This provision, while it helped respondent companies, did not fully satisfy them and suggestions were received from many firms that a single financial statement, the one received by the income tax authorities, should be used instead. To accomplish this, two changes are proposed in the present amendment. One of the amendments is designed to provide for the same certification arrangements under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act as under the Income Tax Act. The other is designed to provide that corporations have complied with the requirements of the act, as far as financial statements are concerned, by submitting financial statements to the Department of National Revenue for taxation purposes. Other information now required under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act—payments to non-residents and the information on directors and share ownership—would be submitted through the Department of National Revenue at the same time.

The amending legislation envisages also a single tabulation operation to meet the needs of both the dominion bureau of statistics and the Department of National Revenue after financial returns are submitted to Ottawa. The Department of National Revenue now examines, punches and tabulates information on about 28,000 companies for its own purposes and in order to publish the annual volume known as "Taxation Statistics". The staff of the dominion statistician is required to do the same under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act for about 30,000 companies, most of which are the same companies. An integrated operation has obvious advantages. The resulting combined data, as contemplated by this legislation, will be prepared on a single consistent basis, avoiding a degree of confusion which it would otherwise be difficult, perhaps impossible, to avoid. In addition to an annual report as required by the legislation, the dominion statistician would assume from the Department of National Revenue responsibility for preparation and publication of the corporation portion of the annual report, to which I have referred, "Taxation Statistics". This integrated program is made possible by giving the dominion statistician access to national revenue corporation tax returns, and this is one of the main purposes of the act.

Access by the dominion statistician to these tax returns calls for special measures to preserve the same sort of secrecy of corporation tax returns as now exists. This involves repealing that section of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act which now gives officials of government departments access to financial statements under certain specified circumstances. The question naturally arises as to whether this is a serious loss. It appears to the government that the advantages of this arrangement considerably outweigh its disadvantages. In fact, during the one and a half years that the legislation has been in effect access to individual corporation records has not been necessary, and need by government for information has been satisfied by summary tabulations. It may be that access to individual company statements might be useful at some future time, but against this must be weighed the annual reporting cost and inconvenience to some 30,000 reporting corporations. Experience suggests, moreover, that less burdensome procedures could be used to meet these needs, and if members be used to meet these needs, and if members of the house would like some further information about this when the bill is before the committee I will be very happy to suggest what those alternative procedures might be.

I should state, in conclusion, that the amending legislation has been developed after careful study by the Department of National Revenue and the dominion bureau of statistics in consultation with other interested government departments. The present burden of duplicate reporting had given rise to many complaints and to suggestions from the business community that the returns required under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act and under the Income Tax Act should in some way be consolidated. As I have already indicated, the proposed amending legislation will eliminate a burden to business, eliminate duplication in government departments, facilitate more effective processing of corporation financial statistics, and free resources to produce more comprehensive and detailed statistical studies and analyses which, in line with the purposes of the act, will throw added light on the operations of vital areas of the economy. Furthermore, these amendments do not in any way impair the information on directors and share ownership made available to the public under this legislation through the Secretary of State.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question? Under this particular amendment to the act will the dominion statistician now have access to returns of all corporations and not just those which formerly had to file returns, and is this a relaxation of the original intention of exempting certain corporations and labour unions from filing these returns? If I read the bill correctly, while certain returns are not now required to be made by certain companies, this bill now authorizes the dominion statistician to look at any income tax return of any company without limitation.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, that is right, Mr. Speaker. It does that. It still preserves their secrecy, but it gives the dominion statistician access to more and better information than would be available under the corporation returns act. As I said in the course of my remarks, the dominion statistician will be taking over from the Department of National Revenue certain functions in connection with analysis and publication of statistics in summary form.

Mr. Smith: May I ask the minister a further question? He said that many corporations had objected to the duplication of returns and had asked for simplification, but I wonder how many corporations or organizations representing business corporations have suggested that the dominion statistician be provided with access to their income tax returns?

Did that suggestion come from any business organization?

Mr. Sharp: Not so far as I am aware, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this bill appears to be very innocuous, but I should like to point out to the house that its implications are far greater than the minister has led us to believe. I think that the last two questions put by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) and the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Smith) have pointed this up. In any event, I agree there was a fundamental departure with the introduction of this legislation in 1962, and I think at that time there were certain people who, frankly, were a little dubious about it and had reservations.

The legislation was effective from January 1, 1963 and already we have certain amendments being put forward on the basis of the introduction of a bill in the other place. With regard to the first class of information required under part A concerning shareholdings and so on, I dare say there are some advantages in having a degree of flexibility so that the shareholdings shall not be those listed on the last day of the fiscal period. The question of whether the period should be three months, 60 days or only one month is a matter for decision, and perhaps on the basis of experience a period of three months was found to be more flexible. I have no further reservations with regard to that point except that I think a period of three months does allow for certain changes to take place which might otherwise be shown in the intervening period.

However it is with regard to the second class of information to which the minister has referred that I part company with him. We are being asked this afternoon to underwrite what is really administrative convenience. There is an inviolate principle of confidentiality with regard to income tax returns. We know that in other sectors it takes an order of the court to bring about the production of an income tax return. Corporations, like individuals, are entitled by law and by tradition to confidentiality of their income tax returns.

The information that is sought in part B is the same fiscal information which the company is required to file under certain safeguards of secrecy. The minister said it is virtually the same information supplied in the income tax return, but it is not the same information. In that regard I should like to have the minister define just how "virtually the same" it may be. What is the degree of similarity between the return filed with the Minister of National Revenue and that required to be filed with the dominion statistician?

I can understand quite readily that a corporation may be prepared to file a second copy of its income tax return with the dominion statistician voluntarily and may signify its willingness to do so, but for the law to say that its income tax return shall be the equivalent to the return required to be filed under part B and that the dominion statistician shall have the right to enter into the records of the Minister of National Revenue with regard to corporations and extract the required information from those returns is another thing. In addition, not only is the dominion statistician to be authorized to examine the income tax return for the information now required under part B, but this amendment will authorize the dominion statistician to examine any and all information, relevant and otherwise, filed by a taxpayer. My colleagues point out that I may have created a little confusion. I mean a corporate taxpayer, because after all we are not talking about individuals here.

But why is this being done? The minister indicates that the purpose is to introduce an integrated operation and that the dominion statistician will now take over the preparation of the annual statement of statistics compiled by the Minister of National Revenue and which is prepared by his officials in summary form. Any taxpayer knows that the information on which it is based is absolutely inviolate so far as secrecy is concerned. We are being asked to authorize another individual or officers under his jurisdiction to enter into the Department of National Revenue.

Already we find a great reluctance among the general public to answer questions with regard to the census because they fear that another government department may have access to this information and may create some difficulties. This reluctance on the part of the individual often leads either to a refusal or to difficulties with the census taker. If for the purpose of integrating operations under the act under consideration at the present time, the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, and the Income Tax Act we are going to allow the dominion statistician to have access to corporate income tax returns, then I say this is more than the thin edge of the wedge. If today it is the dominion statistician, tomorrow it may be another individual in the government service. I cannot see why—I have great reservations about this—for reasons of administrative convenience, we are extending or derogating from the principle of the confidentiality of income tax returns.

I wonder why it is found that so many concerns have expressed objection to the filing of this information; yet they do. They object also to supplying statistics for the Unemployment Insurance Act or the Statistics Act. This is another return for the government. Parliament has decided that this information dealing with the degree of foreign control of corporations and other related matters should be available. It is information which would otherwise have to be obtained by examining income tax returns. The previous administration, I think, respected the principle of the confidentiality of income tax returns. In my opinion they acted rightly. If a corporation, however, wishes to give a copy to the dominion statistician for the purposes of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, that is its own decision. It waives the secrecy of its own return. However, these amendments take away the secrecy of these returns, although they do clothe the accessibility with a certain degree of secrecy.

These amendments, Mr. Speaker, go beyond what was indicated by the minister's presentation. It is not only the return that is to be filed with the Minister of National Revenue which would be deemed to be a statement filed for the purposes of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, but it gives access to further documents and further information. In other words, under the proposed amendment the dominion statistician can wade through, willy-nilly as he desires, all sorts of returns and information filed by a corporate taxpayer. I do not believe this is right, and I am opposed to this sort of thing.

I think myself that if we are going to have acceptance of the continuation of a principle of confidentiality of income tax returns, it should be extended to the corporation as well as the individual. Why should it be respected for an individual and not a corporation? There are many men in business on their own who are quite as successful and earn just as much as, if not more than many corporations. However, nothing is being asked of them; their returns are to be left alone. Under these proposed amendments we create two categories of taxpayer in so far as the secrecy of returns is concerned. I do not believe that is right. A man in business on his own, who may be very successful, should be in the same position as a corporate taxpayer; or vice-versa, the corporation should be in the same position as the individual in so far as the inviolability of the tax return is concerned.

I myself am not satisfied with the explanation of the minister. I must say that I would much prefer to hear a clearer and more detailed reason as to why this rather extraordinary step is being taken. I can see that it will be a nice, neat package, or it would appear to be so, from an administrative point of view. But where do we stop administrative convenience at the expense of the rights of individuals, be they persons or corporations? I am quite anxious to hear the minister reply to these few remarks. I think any further remarks I have to make will be made at a later stage in the debate, depending on the decision of the house with respect to these amendments.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: I am getting lots of advice that it is six o'clock, and it is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the desire that I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, there are three things I want to say about this bill, second reading of which is now before the house. It is always risky for a speaker to say in advance how many things he wishes to say because he may think up other things as he goes along. However, to begin with there are three things I want to say.

First, I am disappointed that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) in introducing this legislation did not give us something in the nature of a report on the act which it is proposed to amend. I think he should have told us whether it has been found to be worth while. I think he should have told us what its purposes are and whether or not those purposes are being realized. In fact I think he should have posed for us the question whether or not the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act should be continued at all. I shall return to that point later, but for the moment that is the first heading I have in mind this evening.

The second observation I want to make is that unless the minister can persuade me otherwise it looks as though the amendments proposed in Bill No. S-35 are discriminatory in favour of corporations as against trade unions. Perhaps I should develop that point right now. The main purpose of these proposed amendments, as I understand it from the remarks of the minister and from reading the bill, is to simplify the task which corporations face in completing and compiling the returns called for under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. The main way in which this simplification is to be achieved is by permitting corporations which make returns under the Income Tax Act to be excused from making similar or comparable returns under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. This looks very innocent on the face of it, but what it does is to bring the kind of information which corporations are required to file under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act within the secrecy provisions of the Income Tax Act.

There is no suggestion anywhere in this amending legislation that the same privilege is to be accorded to the trade union movement. Rather, the whole amending bill deals with corporations and, as I see it, it allows them a cloak of secrecy with regard to this information which they do not now possess. That, it seems to me, is contrary to the whole spirit of the original act as it was brought in by the previous government. After all, the whole purpose of that act was to bring to light certain things which were of concern to the previous government. That is being forgotten and there is an element of discrimination in what the government now proposes as a remedy. I do not know whether "remedy" is the word. It is a concession to firms which have found it awkward or onerous to supply this kind of information.

The third comment I wanted to make is that I cannot weep any tears with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) because there may be some invasion of the inviolable secrecy of the Income Tax Act as far as the corporations are concerned. This of course to the hon. member for Edmonton West, and no doubt to his friends, amounts to invading the holy of holies. As hon. members know, many years ago I did in fact introduce a bill to amend the Income Tax Act so as to remove the veil of secrecy from corporate income tax returns when information filed in that way was sought in either of the houses of parliament. So I do not think the Minister of Trade and Commerce need pay too much attention to the criticism which has been made of this legislation by the hon. member for Edmonton West and which, no doubt, will be made by other members of the Conservative party if they speak on second reading of this bill.

As a matter of fact—and this comes under at least two of the headings I have in mind tonight—I am surprised that the hon. member for Edmonton West, who belonged to the party which was in power when this legislation was brought in, should wish to clamp down a veil of secrecy. After all, the whole purpose of this legislation was to find out what the story was with respect to the influence of foreign entities, either corporations or trade unions, in the economic life of this country. I hear the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Smith) telling me quietly that I have misinterpreted what the hon. member for Edmonton West had to say. If I have done so I will be glad to correct what I have said. But the concern which the hon. member for Edmonton West is showing for the secrecy provisions of the Income Tax Act is a concern which somehow gets shown with particular feeling when corporations are involved.

Mr. Aiken: Does this not apply to the unions, too?

Mr. Knowles: I assume that my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka must have come into the chamber since eight o'clock.

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: That gives me the right to disregard the rules against repetition and point out to him that the amending bill being brought in by the Minister of Trade and Commerce permits corporations under this act to file their information under the Income Tax Act instead of under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, and therefore to take advantage of the stricter secrecy provisions of the Income Tax Act. But that right is not accorded to trade unions. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that is an element of discrimination that should not be introduced.

May I go back, however, to the first point I made and say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that I hope when he takes advantage of the opportunity that will be his to close the debate on second reading he will tell us something about this act. After all, he was not here when it was passed, but I do not think his party, in opposition at that time, was very enthusiastic about it. Surely the minister must have some idea as to whether it is worth having on the statute books; as to whether it is worth all the trouble to which it puts both corporations and trade unions, in order to get this information. I agree with the minister that it is good to have information. I may point out, Mr. Speaker, that when the Canadian Labour Congress spoke against the enactment of this legislation even before it was proposed, it made clear that it was in favour of the collection of all information necessary for the efficient running of our economy. But I suggest that the purpose of this legislation was more than just an academic interest in the collecting of information. Indeed there was at least in part a malicious intent in the legislation.

I think we should be told by the minister who is responsible for the branch of government that is administering this act whether anything of use has come to light during the time this information has been collected. I believe we should be told whether anything has been proven by the collecting of this information. The minister told us—and other figures that we have substantiate it—that some 29,000 or 30,000 corporations are filing returns. He told us that at the present time both the dominion statistician and the Department of National Revenue are punching cards to compile all this information. In addition to that we know that about 100 international unions and about 50 national unions are filing the same information and that all this information has to be punched, compiled, computed and tabulated.

We are for information being obtained. We think we should have all that is necessary. But is this information necessary? Is it providing anything? Is it being helpful? Let me put it another way, Mr. Speaker: is any information being obtained as a result of this legislation and all the work that goes into carrying it out that is not obtained in other ways? On the side of the corporations, is not all the information that is obtained under this act obtained either through the operations of the Income Tax Act or through the publishing by corporations, under the requirements of the Companies Act and other legislation, of their annual financial statements?

I ask the same question with regard to trade unions, both international and national. Is not all the information that is obtained by the operation of this act made public already by the annual statements that international and national unions publish in connection with their conventions, which they hold freely and openly throughout this country?

I come back to the position taken by the Canadian Labour Congress when this legislation was first brought in. The congress, through its officers, appeared before the government of the day on February 2, 1961, and noted that the speech from the throne that had just been given disclosed that there would be legislation introduced along the lines of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. The congress at that point said that of course it would have to wait to see the legislation before it would make detailed comment; but it did say this, which I think still holds—and I am reading from the brief of the Canadian Labour Congress to the government of the day on February 2, 1961:

> We would like to comment, however, that there are important distinctions to be made in the matter of disclosures as between business and labour organizations. As you are undoubtedly aware, to a very large extent the financial and other affairs of foreign-owned subsidiaries in Canada remain very much matters known only to the foreign headquarters of these subsidiaries. Such subsidiaries, while physically located in Canada, may be so controlled from abroad and so manipulated as to operate contrary to rather than in the Canadian interest. It is obviously desirable, therefore, that the veil of secrecy which surrounds their operations should be removed and that the people of this country should know at least as much about these subsidiaries as they are able to learn about Canadian-owned public corporations.

It might be argued that the legislation as it was put upon the statute books in part at least met that desire. If it did, that is being detracted from now by the opportunities corporations will have to file their returns in such a way that they will be under a strict veil and cloak of secrecy. Let me read another paragraph from this 1961 brief of the Canadian Labour Congress:

> For international trade unions, the case is somewhat different and we are inclined to take exception to the coupling together of business and labour organizations since to our mind they cannot be so readily equated. But the record will indicate that there is far less secrecy about the operation of international unions in Canada than is the case with international corporations. The constitutions of our unions are open to scrutiny to anyone who cares to examine them. Almost all unions nowadays publish detailed financial statements in a way which makes them available to the public as well as to their own members. Union conventions are held openly. In fact, there is no institution in Canada today which has been so minutely scrutinized in recent years as the trade unions, and the public's ability to do so rests largely on the fact that there is little or no secrecy attached to union activities. We are therefore not likely to upset readily any legislation which will interfere with the internal affairs of the trade unions by making mandatory what is already done voluntarily, or by imposing rules and regulations for the conduct of trade union affairs which more properly should be done by the unions themselves. The century-long record of the trade union movement in Canada does not warrant any legislative interference.

It might be said that this was the view of the Canadian Labour Congress when all it had was warning in the speech from the throne that this legislation was coming. It might be said that body should have waited until the bill had come to light. I draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that after the bill had been introduced and passed, and during the time when it had not yet been proclaimed, the Canadian Labour Congress appeared again before the former government —this was on December 11, 1962—and had this to say about the very legislation which then had been passed and which we are now being asked to amend:

We have on two previous occasions referred to the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. We have expressed strong criticism of it. We have challenged it on grounds of principle as well as for technical reasons.

A fresh examination of this legislation has served amply to confirm the feelings we already had. We are persuaded that the act, to the extent that it affects trade unions, will impose on them unnecessary and onerous burdens in the matter of reporting a variety of kinds of information. This will be a hardship for smaller unions in particular but may seriously impede the legitimate activities of all unions. A great deal of paper work will be involved and it is altogether possible that unions will find it necessary to make constitutional and other procedural changes in order to satisfy the requirements of the act. In addition, the ambiguity or lack of clarity of some of the provisions gives us further cause for apprehension.

That was the view of the Canadian Labour Congress about this legislation after it had been passed. That was part of the brief presented to the former Conservative government on December 11, 1962. In the very next paragraph there is a sentence in which the congress urged the government of that day not to proclaim that legislation. That request that it be not proclaimed was made on December 11, 1962, and the response of the former government was that it was proclaimed effective January 1, 1963. In any case it was the view of the Canadian Labour Congress that this legislation as far as trade unions are concerned was not necessary, and that any information required from trade unions was readily available. Nothing is being done in this amending bill to make the situation less onerous for trade unions; as far as corporations are concerned it is being made less onerous, and as part of the bargain they are also given the means whereby the information supplied can come under the veil of secrecy which obtains under the Income Tax Act.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that instead of the casual introduction of these technical amendments which the minister gave us he should have told us quite frankly whether in his view as a Liberal cabinet minister this legislation is necessary at all, and I hope that at the end of the debate on second reading he will tell us what he failed to tell us at the start of the debate.

Mr. Heber E. Smith (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, sitting as close to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) as do the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and I, it is hard to understand how the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre could have so completely misheard what my colleague was saying this afternoon. Our objection to the extension of the powers of the dominion statistician to inspect the income tax returns of companies is not that it protects the companies concerned; it is that it puts into the hands of the dominion statistician unnecessary information which could be misused. Beyond that, it could also inhibit the operations of this particular act. If a company voluntarily submits the information to the dominion statistician, as it would do to the income tax authorities, then that is all right. Our objection to these amendments is that they will not make the operation of this act more efficient.

It seems to me that the explanation given by the minister this afternoon was rather casual and slight. I am not even sure that he had his heart in it, because at a certain stage of his explanation he rather tried to suggest that this bill was merely an extension of Conservative legislation. I am sure that if he was proud of it he would not have made that concession. Actually that is not so: This bill is not an extension of our legislation.

I think that before this debate closes we should have a considerably fuller explanation of the amendments than we have had. For example I would want the term "virtually identical" explained. I think we should have a complete explanation of what is required by the dominion statistician and what is required under the Income Tax Act. I am wondering whether the amendments are not being made an excuse rather than filling a need. The minister says that many corporations have objected to filing these returns. Most people in varying degrees object to making returns to the government. Every time one makes out another form he says: "What the so-and-so am I doing?" I am wondering whether that is the kind of objection to which the minister refers and whether the people interested in extending bureaucratic control have not seized on this rather general objection to specifically widen bureaucracy in the government.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says that this legislation is loaded in favour of permitting the companies to become more secretive, thus rendering this particular legislation less effective. I do not think that is the purpose, but if it is we should know about it. We should also know whether or not the corporations, through their organizations, are in favour of it. We have heard nothing from the minister about what the various tax associations and other business organizations feel. Perhaps rather than dealing with the matter now this bill could be referred to our banking and commerce committee, and if these organizations wanted to make representations the opportunity would then be given them. We could also hear representations in a general way from the Canadian Labour Congress and other labour organizations.

It seems that the more one looks at this the greater are its implications. I think it would be dangerous just to slip this legislation through as routine, having been blandly assured that it is merely an extension of former legislation. I feel that rather than an extension of former legislation it is changing the course of that legislation, the purpose of which was to make public certain matters. Under the amendments those matters which were to be made public are perhaps going to be made secret.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to review the original course of this bill. I think it is worth noting that when it was introduced by the then minister of justice, Hon. Davie Fulton, it was portrayed as being a rather hardy jewel which was being placed on the Conservative party crown of nationalism. The bill was brought in in 1962 after considerable delay, and at that time those of us who were in the house were somewhat surprised at the attitude of the official opposition, who put up as their main speaker and critic the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron). He gave the house no indication that the official opposition was against the purpose of the bill but he did make some criticisms about specifics. Surprisingly enough the bill was debated for quite a long time, I think a total of about four days, and things became rather bitter between the minister as proponent and members of the opposition, including my colleague from the constituency of Skeena (Mr. Howard).

I have two points I want to make. First of all, the Conservatives presented this legislation as one of the most important pieces of legislation leading to the development of Canadian nationalism, particularly where corporations and trade unions were concerned. The official opposition's attitude was not critical, but it was never really explained whether that party was for it, was enthusiastic, or whatever the case was. However, I think it is fair to say that a certain amount of cynicism about the bill and the intentions of the government of that day was expressed by Liberal spokesmen, particularly the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

Just to reinforce the emotion with which the bill was presented I should like to read a paragraph from Mr. Fulton's presentation, as reported at page 2396 of Hansard for April 2, 1962. He said:

> This is an extremely important bill, and it forms an integral part of the government's national policy.

Those words "national policy" are fateful words, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) will acknowledge. Mr. Fulton went on:

> Canadians are becoming increasingly aware of their nationhood and of the importance of developing to the full the cultural, social and economic resources of this country. This bill is directly related to the efforts the government has been making in such fields as the domiciling of our constitution in Canada, and also to the numerous steps the government has already taken, and is taking, to encourage the development of the nation's resources, their control by Canadians and their use primarily for the benefit of Canada.

In other words, this bill originally had a very noble purpose, I suppose part of the psychology was that by including all corporations above a certain level of revenue it would make them—particularly the ones that were foreign subsidiaries controlled from the United States—self-conscious about their Canadian operations, realizing that the government was looking at their shareholdings and the profits that were being taken out. This may have been a very good thing, but we do not know. Is it working? The minister gives no indication at all that it has been useful in this regard.

One other point that was made in connection with the act, and I take this also from Mr. Fulton's statement, was referred to when he said in conclusion:

> I should like to conclude with a few remarks as as to the policy of the bill. In the first place, as I have already stated, it is in a sense a first step. Second, it is designed to enable the government to understand the operations of the Canadian economy, an economy which admittedly owes much and will continue to owe much to foreign investment. However, no nation which calls itself sovereign can be careless of the extent of results of foreign control of vital segments of its economy. It is essential that we should at least understand careless of the extent or results of foreign control so that we may be able sensibly to determine the policies which should be followed in order to direct our own affairs as Canadians in the kind of world in which we live.

Again this was a very charming closing to the introductory speech to the bill.

The minister does not give us any indication at all that this act is working in this regard. All we really know or have is a report that was filed in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams), which indicates that all the international and most Canadian unions have reported, and that some 20,000 odd corporations have also filed reports. I must say that I am delighted to know that that many corporations have complied with this act, because we heard Louis Lesage, the fellow who administers the Companies Act in another place, reveal something the other day that some of us found out a few years ago in so far as the Companies Act is concerned, and that is that the reports that are required by that act are being ignored by thousands and thousands of Canadian corporations.

This brings me to another point in relation to this bill, and again I am going to stress the fact that we have been given undertakings in this house—by the previous government I will agree—to the effect that the whole Companies Act was to be revised after interdepartmental discussion and after many meetings with provincial representatives so that, as Canadian chartered accountants and other business organizations wanted, we would join in having a common, rational and balanced company law throughout Canada. We have amendments coming from the other place at the present time to the Companies Act. At the time the original proposer of this bill proposed it, he suggested that this had been considered—that is, a change in the Companies Act to get this particular information—but it was felt that since the federal Companies Act did not sufficiently cover the corporations that needed to be considered, this could not be done at that time. I suggest if we are going to have a complete rewriting of the Companies Act, with standardization across the country, this is exactly the kind of thing that should be codified in co-operation with the provinces, so as to obtain this kind of information. That is why I wondered about these piecemeal small amendments at this time.

At the time of the original proposal the proposer said that the question had been considered of obtaining the information from the Department of National Revenue rather than having this report sent to the dominion statistician, but it was felt since the government was willing by this act to accept merely a copy of what was going to the Department of National Revenue, and since copying is very easy for corporate organizations—necessitating the use of Xerox machine—there was no real inconvenience, and the information could be largely identical, but it would go to the dominion bureau of statistics.

In the other place the dominion statistician suggested there is a great deal of duplication in terms of statistical analysis in this area. He pointed out that in respect of the taxation statistics that are published by the Department of National Revenue each year there is a duplication, and it is all punched out. This is not my understanding of the kind of information that was being sought. I cannot find any taxation statistics in Canada that give any real indication or understanding of the extent of foreign shareholdings in Canadian corporations. I cannot get from that information any indication as to the trends of shareholding or the amount of profit going to the parent organizations. Most of this kind of information I will admit should perhaps not be coming to me or any other individual, because this information probably is collected under clause 4(b) of the act.

However, I want to know whether the government really is getting and analysing this information. If we are merely by this amendment pawning off the right of the dominion statistician to look at the files or information collated by the Department of National Revenue, that is not good enough because the Department of National Revenue does not analyse this information from the point of view of the original purposes of this act.

This government is on record, largely through its Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), of being extremely vigilant. We remember the budget of 1963 and how terribly vigilant the government was in repatriating Canadian ownership back into the Canadian financial community. Most of us can remember those provisions in the minister's budget of which he was so proud this afternoon, but which were wiped out very early. Why were they wiped out? I suggest they were wiped out because there was such an objection raised in respect of the changes that were going to affect United States ownership the government had to retreat. So far as I am aware the Minister of Finance has not retreated from his belief that one of the prime problems that faces the federal government of Canada is finding a method of obtaining a greater share in Canadian ownership, and finding out what we can do to reverse the trend.

One of the little games the Liberal spokesmen played when the Conservatives were in power was for them to point out that there was a trend toward greater United States ownership of Canadian resources, despite Conservative policy designed to put a stop to this and bring Canadian ownership back into the picture. I suppose we can now play that game and suggest that there is no indication at all that the Liberals have been able to stop this trend. Certainly the Minister of Finance backed down from his original approach to the matter. There has been a clear indication through the Minister of Finance that this government is as concerned as the previous one and in the same way, as indicated in those submissions put forward by E. Davie Fulton when he first presented the bill. That is why it is so hard to understand —unless the Minister of Trade and Commerce does not wish to put himself under the same blanket—why he would in a sense almost sneak in with these amendments. We have never had any real indication that the party now in government stands behind the original policy and purpose of this bill. We are no nearer to such an understanding, and that is why I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he says that this is something we deserve to know. We also deserve to know whether the shifting of information from the repository or files, if you want, of the dominion bureau of statistics, to the Department of National Revenue is really going to be satisfactory, and I must tell the minister that if he reads the evidence given before the committee of the other place by the dominion statistician I am sure he will find it is not an adequate explanation. It seemed to me as though the worthy gentlemen were in a hurry to get on with it, and they did not bother to probe or ask questions.

It also raises another point which bothered me when the original bill came before the house. Why is it that the Senate gets the privilege of examining this legislation in committee and we do not? I cannot understand this. Maybe the idea is that since this piece of legislation relates to corporations and since the Senate is the old folks home for corporate directors it should be their particular prerogative and we "ickies" and "stupes" over here can really be bypassed. I do not think that is quite good enough. I should like to suggest that we should have a look at this bill in committee, inasmuch as a committee of the other place has had an opportunity to look at it.

I really do not feel that these amendments are of tremendous significance although they do have this significance. The bill is an indication that officialdom at least has lost its enthusiasm for cracking down and securing and using the information that was really intended to be sought. That is the first point. The second thing that is quite obvious is that the government is not enthusiastic about the bill as a whole, and I would assume that the legislation is going to waste away.

There are a couple of informational questions I should like to put to the minister. Will he let us see the forms that have been used in order to gather information under this act, or at the very least will he give us the notation in the Gazette where these forms were printed and published? The second thing I should like him to provide for me, and I hope for other members of the house, is the report that we were promised would follow from this legislation. I still have not seen it. Maybe I have missed it in my checking of sources. But I always understood that after the act had been operating for some time a thorough report would be presented together with an analysis of all the information that had been gathered. It was not going to be any really serious or consequential report because that would be ridiculous if you have 2,000 corporations reporting, but we certainly assumed that the information would be analysed, particularly with regard to trade unions.

For example, we have had Hal Banks and the S.I.U. on our minds for at least 15 or 16 months. The S.I.U. is an international union and I assume it has reported under this act. Maybe the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) can tell us. For example was any useful information with regard to Mr. Hal Banks' salary, his expense accounts and other reputed incomes revealed?

The point is that we have not been given the significance of the results that have been obtained under this act. Basically the purpose was to gather interesting statistics which I suppose were to give a psychological push to opening up information about Canadian ownership, perhaps to give both Canadian unions with international connections and Canadian companies under foreign domination or ownership an inkling that there was a trend or tide in affairs that must lead to greater Canadian participation in ownership, a declaration of our rights, if you will, in these two fields.

I feel that the minister has been completely inadequate in commenting on this legislation. We were not looking for a major speech, but at the very least he should have given us a succinct account. Perhaps he is all burnt out after his efforts over the week end. I must congratulate him on coming back to the house after his defeat with such a smile. I also see the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) over there. I think the minister could have done better than this.

Mr. Douglas: He could have done better away.

Mr. Fisher: Perhaps he could have done better in Toronto. I think he could have done better with his introduction of the bill. The last point I want to make in connection with this matter has been touched on by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). At the time the original legislation was introduced he was an interested onlooker because of his association with the labour movement. I happen to be one of the members who was in the house at the time and I had the very distinct impression that one of the reasons why we got this rather odd coupling of corporations and trade unions sponsored by the minister of justice of that time, and with the results to come to the dominion bureau of statistics, instead of trade unions being under the Department of Labour and corporations being under the Department of Finance or the Secretary of State, was that the government of the day felt that it would be the best way to get the thing through. If the corporation people kicked it could be pointed out that their rivals were getting it in the neck too, and vice-versa. Actually I think this was rather a successful ploy, if you will, because there was a tendency for corporations to welcome information coming from trade unions and vice-versa.

I think the minister takes pride in being a reasonable man and a tidy administrator. I suggest he should give us his opinion whether he thinks the present act, even with these amendments made to it, is a tidy one. Is there not something rather silly about having trade unions reporting in this particular way and corporations reporting in this particular way, under the one act? It is not tidy and it is not sensible except in terms of some form of anti-Americanism. I do not see why a statute which will require statistical work and research should be set up on such an awkward basis.

There are all kinds of wiping away clauses in the bill. The railways do not have to report under this legislation. Why? Because they come under the Railway Act. Radio and television stations do not have to report because they come under such and such an act. I have a complaint about American ownership in Canadian broadcasting. I have a complaint about American ownership in the Canadian Pacific Railway. We do not know to what extent that exists. But if the purpose of the bill is to provide a continuing analysis of American ownership and control of corporations and trade unions, then I say let us bring all corporate organizations within its scope instead of having them split up and reporting under a whole host of acts. We are not really getting the information, so I suggest that in the interest of tidying things up and having proper administration you should put trade unions under the industrial relations act, or some of the other acts that come under the Minister of Labour, if you want this information from them; and if you need this information from corporations let us bring the reporting of all companies together, no matter what their operations may be, so that we can have a statistical analysis.

I put it to the minister that there is a television station for which his friend from Essex East used to be counsel—perhaps he still is—which everybody knows is 90 per cent owned by Americans. I assume that the statistics for that company are not covered by this act. How are we going to get a picture of the trend? The minister tells us that all he needs are summaries and that summaries will do the job. Obviously the summaries are incomplete. They must be incomplete because so many companies are not covered under the act, but under other legislation.

I suggest to the minister that he might even consider withdrawing the bill and tidying up the whole matter by some larger piece of legislation that would bring all information of this kind together, with corporations probably under the Department of Finance or reporting to some agency thereof and trade unions reporting to the Department of Labour. I have been carried away by my memories of the previous debate and have probably spoken too long, but I hope I have contributed, if not to the enlightenment of the minister, to the enlightenment of a few of my colleagues who may have forgotten the presentation that was made when the act was originally introduced.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry-Sound-Muskoka): A reasonably comprehensive review of the legislation which is being amended has been given by several hon. members in this debate. However I believe the heart of the bill before us and of the amendment itself is contained in one clause, that is clause 4—I do not intend to deal with the various clauses—which adds section 14A to the act. In my view, Mr. Speaker, the addition of this one clause completely alters the whole purpose, intent and direction of this information act.

The original act, Mr. Speaker, as has been pointed out, was introduced in order to obtain certain information concerning non-resident corporations carrying on business in Canada, labour unions with head offices outside of Canada, and so on. This information was believed to be necessary in order to obtain a broad picture of the operations of these non-resident companies, as well as resident companies and labour unions in Canada. The act, as passed in 1962, was very carefully drafted so that it would constitute no invasion of the privacy of income tax returns or other forms. Careful provision was made to ensure that no return should be made except to the dominion statistician and that that return should only have non-secret information in it, the type of information to which competitors, governments and others would be entitled in the normal course of business.

The present bill rearranges the whole purpose of the carefully designed original act because clause 4 will now permit an individual from the dominion statistician's office to go to the income tax office and examine the income tax return of any corporation in Canada under the guise of obtaining certain information. I believe this is a principle that has never been put forward before. I believe it is a breach of the confidentiality of income tax returns. In fact, what the government is saying in introducing this amendment is this: We are going to save you a little bit of trouble in filing those other returns; you will not have to file those special returns under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. We are going to examine your income tax return and take out of it what we want. This I believe, is the basis of the amendment. The whole principle is wrong and I am going to cast my vote against it unless there is some proposition made to refer this bill to a committee for amendment before it is given second reading.

I think that the principle in clause 4 is basically wrong. I could not possibly vote for it. Some people, like the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), may say that as soon as you mention corporation the members of the Conservative party jump to their defence. This is more serious than that, because it constitutes what is known as the thin edge of the wedge with regard to income tax returns. I should like, for example, to indicate what the passage of this amendment could do. Clause 14 permits the dominion statistician or any official described in subsection 4 of section 14 to inspect and have access to any return filed or made on behalf of any corporation pursuant to the Income Tax Act.

Now, you may say the information will not get beyond the dominion statistician's office or that the dominion statistician will not take any more information than he really needs. There is nothing in this act however to prevent that happening. This is particularly so in view of clause 14, subsection 5 of the original act which authorizes any official of the dominion statistician's office to obtain this information and to communicate it, (a) to another such person, that is a person such as himself or, (b), to allow any other person to inspect or have access to any statement or any writing containing any privileged information given under this act. These are the people who may give out any of this information. In effect therefore any corporation that has filed an income tax return is legally liable to have someone from the dominion statistician's office go and examine the income tax return, take out whatever the dominion statistician feels he needs for the purposes of this act, and he can then pass it on to any other person to whom he is inclined to give it.

This is carrying it too far. One of the things that has built up confidence in the administration of taxation measures in this country is the fact that the Department of National Revenue refuses to give out information contained in tax returns about the private affairs of a company which would be useful to its competitors or would be useful even to the crown in the right of the minister of justice on a criminal charge. The public in general, therefore, has extreme confidence in the confidentiality of their returns. These returns are filed accurately, or at least as accurately as one can hope, without any fear that someone is going to extract information from a return and make it public.

You may say that this is all done in a nice, accounting sort of way, that it is drawn up in tables and no company could be identified or picked out even if the dominion statistician wants to take more information than was originally allowed under this act. However there are many fields of endeavour in which a limited number of companies are engaged. This is just like the voting in some of our remote areas in which perhaps only one person votes. Certainly the secrecy of that particular vote is gone. Moreover if only three people vote and they all vote one way the secrecy of the vote is gone.

The situation is similar here. There must be many fields of business and manufacturing in this country in which there are limited numbers of people involved, and any return which showed more information than was strictly necessary could surely be traced back and be used in the manner I have mentioned. These are the things that are serious.

Moreover, this is a breach of the principles set out in the Income Tax Act where a penalty is provided for any person giving out confidential information to people who are not entitled to receive it. I presume that in addition such a person would be liable to dismissal. I should like to read from section 133 of the Income Tax Act which states, in relation to such communications:

> Every person who while employed in the service of Her Majesty has communicated or allowed to be communicated to a person not legally entitled thereto any information obtained under this act—

And so on. I stress the words "not legally entitled thereto" because if we pass these amendments the dominion statistician, any officials employed by him or any person to whom the dominion statistician chooses to give this information in the line of duty would be legally entitled to it under section 14 of the act we now have under consideration. In other words, under the guise of making this information easier to provide by the companies concerned we are relaxing the secrecy provisions beyond anything intended in the Income Tax Act and we are not preserving the confidentiality which in Canada we have always been led to expect would attach to income tax returns.

As I said a moment ago, I do not think we have given sufficient consideration to the effect of clause 14. The provisions of the rest of the bill do not appear to be dangerous or damaging. Alternative ways of making the returns are provided. The requirement with regard to signatories has been altered, and so on. All this is inconsequential. But clause 14 does, I believe, constitute a serious invasion of privacy and a relaxation of the secrecy provisions of the Income Tax Act far beyond what was intended. For these reasons I believe the act should be given further consideration and that we should receive much fuller explanation before it is passed as presented. I know that a number of my friends are prepared to speak on this and that they will give the measure all kinds of consideration. As far as I am concerned, though, I will have to vote against it if the motion comes to a vote.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): This seemingly innocuous measure presented to us by the government is not, in my opinion, nearly as innocuous as it would appear from the remarks of the minister who introduced it. I think the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) echoed a feeling which must be widespread in the house when he said there had not been sufficient explanation of this desire for change in the method of obtaining information.

The first question which occurs to me is: Do we still want the information which the government desired to acquire when this act was passed in 1962. I should also like to know whether we got that information or not. Has any use been made of it? Was that information of any help to the government in formulating its present policies? I think it is a good idea for us to recall that there was a good deal of debate in the house when this legislation was first considered. Many arguments were advanced to show why this information could not be obtained from ordinary income tax returns. Some of the dangers of such a course were pointed out, and I do not think the government has answered the valid arguments, which at that time were accepted substantially by everyone, in favour of this special method of getting certain information which the government desired to have from these companies.

At that time there was perhaps more immediate concern about the domination of Canadian companies by United States enterprises. We were perhaps more urgently aware of balance of payments difficulties. Certain union questions were also more pressing and urgent than they are today. But I would feel much happier if the government would now take a stand and tell us why they want to change this bill which was passed in 1962. Possibly the government will tell us that they are no longer worried about United States domination of Canadian companies. Has the situation changed to such an extent that Canadians are now putting up the degree of finance we should all like to see? Has the percentage of foreign ownership and control of our companies declined to such an extent that this is no longer a question which need make us uneasy?

I do not think any member of this house would deny that the underlying reason for bringing in this legislation was concern over the degree of foreign ownership and control of Canadian companies. There was a feeling among members of the government, shared throughout the country, that the excessive domination of our companies by firms abroad was not healthy for Canada. There had been instances of Canadian companies owned by United States companies showing little enthusiasm for taking up opportunities to export to communist dominated nations. Again, certain Canadian companies in a position to compete in markets overseas were being held up because their parent companies preferred to see United States firms dominating exports to those areas. But today we have not heard one word from the government that this situation has changed in any respect.

No one argues that merely getting this information will cure a situation of the kind I have outlined. But the essence of the reason for passing this act in 1962 was that before these problems could be adequately dealt with and before the public could exercise proper judgment as to the seriousness of the situation, complete information had to be acquired. It was argued, successfully, that in order to acquire this information specific targets had to be set out and specific questions answered so as to provide details which would bear little relation to those given in the income tax returns normally filed by these companies. I think the government owes the house an explanation why this principle has been abandoned. What is this sense of well being, this sense of security, which has brought about a change in the government's attitude? Does the government no longer care whether our companies are under foreign control, or is the situation no longer what it was two or three years ago? Is there some dark reason behind this change? Has the government been approached by representatives of foreign dominated companies who say: "This is too embarrassing. If you want our continued good will you must let us off the hook"?

I suggest these proposed amendments do constitute a fundamental change in philosophy. This being so, the government should be prepared to tell us why it has changed its attitude. What has disappeared from the picture? Why is the question of foreign control no longer of interest? I think the government should also tell us something about the way in which this act has worked during the last two years, roughly.

Is it a situation where certain people charged with the statistical compilation of this information, those people who received these returns and were supposed to put them in a form that would be useful to the government and to the public, have failed to put the information in this form? Was there any lack of enthusiasm in some of these departments to compile this sort of information? Has it just been allowed to sit and gather dust, as is usually the case with so much information collected by the government? If it has been adequately handled, and if the respective civil servants in those departments have had put into their hands the type of information that the government thought necessary in 1962, what can the government now tell us with regard to what has been revealed by that information? What does it amount to? What is the position of foreign control and foreign domination now? What are the long term trends in this respect? Is there any substantial increase in investment by Canadian workers and shareholders?

Next, Mr. Speaker, if that information has been correlated and put into the form in which it was envisaged it would be used, what help has it been? Has it had any influence on government thinking? Has it had any influence on the methods this government might be working on to induce Canadians to invest more in Canadian companies? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that these are very simple questions and deserve answers. Certainly the hon. member for Port Arthur revealed the lack of knowledge that lay behind his own bewilderment with regard to this legislation. If we are going to make a change that is so fundamental, with regard to a question decided only two years ago by this whole house, and which was accepted as sensible and necessary at that time, what are the logical reasons for making that change?

Surely this is not too much to ask the minister.

I do not want to go over the ground covered by some other hon. members, but I thought the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Smith) had a good point when he asked, why not send it to a committee? That suggestion was echoed by the hon. member for Port Arthur. The Senate thought it necessary. If I am correct in my assertion that this is really a very fundamental change in policy, it might not hurt at all if the banking and commerce committee of this house took a long, searching look at it. Perhaps the explanation the minister would like to give, or the information revealed by those statistics already filed, is so complicated and of such a nature that it is impracticable for the minister to attempt at this time to give us a breakdown which we can examine. Perhaps it has not been refined enough that it can be presented in any simple manner to this house. Certainly if that is the case I think this is the sort of function for which a committee of this house is designed. That is exactly what the committee can do. Present that information to the committee, let them study it, refine it and see whether it has been helpful. I suggest that any change now of what was thought so logical, when there is no evidence presented that it has been unsuccessful or unnecessary, warrants an explanation being given to the house. There has not even been a suggestion by the minister that it is not still needed. The present action is substantiated by no logical argument that I can think of.

Certainly if you are going to test a method and see whether it works, you have to present some evidence if you want to change it. You must show that you have tried it, that you have tested it, and you must put forward some evidence that it does not work. Perhaps the method of collecting the information that was originally envisaged in this act is the best. If it is not, this house, or at least a committee of the house, has a right to look into the matter before we are asked to change that method. We have the right to look at the efforts that were made to compile this information, to assess it, and to look at the results achieved to see what has been accomplished. I suggest to the minister that until that old method—I say "old", although it is only two years old—can by any of these time tested methods be proven to be wrong, he has no logical reason for asking us to change it now.

[Mr. Nugent.]

I listened to the hon. member for Simcoe North and his suggestion that this is an extension of the powers of looking at income tax returns. I think it is more than that. There was a distinction under the old method which will not apply now. This only applied to large corporations with assets of $500,000 or so, which were required to make these special returns. However, Mr. Speaker, unless I have overlooked something, the income tax department will now have the right to look at the returns of all companies.

Since, in the absence of words from the minister to the contrary, we can imagine that the people in the bureau of vital statistics who are going to look at these returns are going to be looking for the same things, I imagine there will be pressure from that bureau on the income tax branch to amend the income tax return form so that it will give more complete information. I do not think this is exaggeration in any sense. It is going to subject more companies, smaller companies, to the searching glance of the statisticians; but it will also cause pressure to be brought to bear on the income tax department to amend their returns in a manner that will satisfy the needs of the bureau of statistics and the government for further information.

My memory may be faulty, but it seems to me these were exactly the arguments we used in 1962—that since the purposes were not the same, and since there was really a very narrow purpose behind the returns required, we would be most unwise to upset the income tax department, their method of reporting and their need for secrecy, by mixing in the special request of the government for special statistics affecting the general health of the nation in regard to the question of foreign domination and control. I for one will be very happy if the minister can show that my memory is very faulty in this regard, or if he can reveal sufficient evidence to show this house that the method of collecting information which we set up only two years ago has fallen down completely, or that the government has fallen down completely in the various departments in making use of this information, or that conditions in the country are such that any information on foreign ownership, control and domination of Canadian companies is no longer of concern. I hope that if the minister's reply on this matter is necessarily a long and involved one, he will take the easy course of sending it to a committee, where we will be prepared to examine it at leisure and with an open mind, hoping to be convinced.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to rise on a question of privilege in order to make a correction. This should be done at this point. In my remarks, when referring to the information which might be given by the dominion statistician to "any other person", I took these words from subsection 5 of section 14 of the present act. I overlooked the fact that if the bill is passed this subsection is to be repealed. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, to that extent the assertion that the information could be given out to any other person was incorrect. This does not change my view, but I carried the point a little too far.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this bill to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act I think I can be brief. I was impressed by the last speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) and also by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) both of whom suggested that this bill be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce, a committee of parliament. Perhaps the question being asked by most speakers is, why the amendment at all? I do not think the minister has clarified why there should be an amendment. It is obvious that the minister does not want one: It is the officials—I have always felt this—who are behind the minister, whether he be a Conservative minister or a Liberal minister, who are not satisfied with the material they are getting either from labour unions or corporations. Therefore they want the act amended so they can get this information they are looking for.

The second point which impresses me, a point referred to by one of the speakers, is that when we open up the gate to a department, in this case the Department of National Revenue, we are opening up a new field of law—and a very dangerous field of law, when we go into income tax returns. Because the minister has not explained to the house why he requires this particular fork to be put into the act to dig up the proper information, and because he has not explained why he needs to go into a new field and enable another department to go into income tax returns—which is, I suggest, a very dangerous trend, the end of which we will never know —I am myself unhappy about this bill.

All who have spoken so far have agreed that in order to find out who has control of our labour unions or corporations this information should be provided; there is no argument there. I need only refer to what was said by the hon. member for Port Arthur regarding the S.I.U.; we know the kind of control which was held in that case. I suppose I could also name corporations on the other side of the fence which would be just as interesting factually as was the S.I.U. Therefore I am going to move—and I said I would be short—on those two counts, and because I have been impressed by what these hon. members have said, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken):

That the bill be not now read a second time but that the contents thereof be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order on this amendment. I understand that on second reading of a bill it is inadmissible to move that a bill itself go to a standing committee. The wording of the amendment obviously means that it is the bill itself that is to be sent to the committee because it refers to the "contents" of the bill. The standard form for moving such an amendment is to refer the subject matter, which is entirely different. I suggest that this amendment is not in order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do other hon. members wish to speak to the point of order raised by the Minister of Labour?

Mr. Aiken: I have just one point, Mr. Speaker. I think this is the form in which a good many private members' bills have been sent to committee during private members' hours. Unless there is a difference in the form of the amendment it is certainly the same intent, and this form has been used many times in this session.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no other contributions to the discussion on the point of order, may I say I appreciate the point raised by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen). He states that referring the contents of a bill to a committee is different from referring the subject matter of a bill to a committee. This, to my mind, is perhaps technical more than anything else. Perhaps the hon. member who put the motion might be allowed by the house to amend the wording of his amendment so as to read:

That this bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I speak to this motion and in the course of my remarks answer some of the questions raised on the bill, which might induce the house to permit it to receive second reading. As was said by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), this bill was introduced with considerable fanfare by the previous government. The hon. member quoted from the speech of the former minister of justice, the Hon. Davie Fulton, in which some, what I now consider rather extravagant claims were made about what might be accomplished pursuant to this legislation. However, to answer the questions raised by the hon. member and by a number of other hon. members it is my view that this is very useful legislation. I think that what was claimed for it was extravagant, but I feel it would still be useful to continue to have the act on the statute books and to continue to gather the information authorized by the act. In any event, the claims which were made must have been extravagant because one can do very little with the information itself. If we are going to deal with the substance of this matter we must do so by policy rather than by the gathering of information.

May I now say that I did not give a report on what had happened under this bill, and the reason is very simple and really relates to the purpose of the amendments. We had very great difficulty in gathering this information for the year 1962. There was unfamiliarity with the act itself, which is understandable, and it took—

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether the minister would mind a question at this point. I do not say this in any critical way, but I was advised by lawyers in the city of Calgary that the forms for the gathering of this information never reached the corporations. When they applied to the various offices to obtain the forms, they were not ready or prepared and the corporations could not fill them out. I wrote to the minister's department, or to one department about this, but that was one of the main reasons why that information was not forthcoming.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, all I can say in reply to that is that I was asked during the last session of parliament whether all the corporations had at that time made out the returns they were required to make. I said that they had been asked to make a return for which the forms were submitted, but that at that time quite a number of corporations were in arrears. It may be that at the beginning the forms were not available as quickly as they might have been, and I think that is understandable. This act was a new act, and so on. But in the end when the forms were available there was considerable difficulty in getting them completed. However I am happy to say that we now have all the returns in for the fiscal year ending in 1962, which was the first report required by the act. In addition, most returns have been received from corporations and unions for the fiscal period ending 1963, and many have been received for the period ending 1964, so we are making progress. The statistical material received from corporations and labour unions is currently being processed and it is expected that the first report under this legislation will be available for parliament before the end of the current calendar year.

The first report will provide information concerning the extent of non-resident ownership in Canadian companies in respect of assets, equity, sales and profits, and in addition the magnitude and detail of payments to non-residents by corporations in Canada for business services, and to international headquarters of unions operating in Canada in respect of dues and assessment on Canadian members will be made available.

The reason I could not give a report on what had happened under the act was simply that we are in the process of tabulating and analysing the first returns. Otherwise I would have been in a position to say, this is what we have learned as a result of the operation of the act.

I come now to the point about confidentiality of information. The first question asked of me by the hon. member Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) related to the similarity that exists between information required during this act and information required under the Income Tax Act. During the supper hour I obtained from my officials a copy of the corporation income tax return, and I asked them to indicate on that return the items which we now asked for and obtained under the act, to which I shall refer in short form as COLUR, because that is what it is known as around the bureau of statistics. It is the corporations and labour unions return. The dominion statistician now obtains the same information as is tabled on the corporation income tax return in respect of any foreign items of allocation of taxable income to provinces or other jurisdictions in which permanent establishments were maintained, calculation of federal taxes payable, and calculation of provincial taxes payable, information on continuity of all reserves including provisions for doubtful debts, charitable donations, interest, rents, royalties and other similar things, including provincial taxes. That information is not strictly required for the purpose of the act that is now under discussion, but we do obtain all the information about the income of the corporation and its reconciliation of net income with all the accompanying financial statements. In fact, we obtain all the vital information now about the financial positions of every corporation that has to report under this act.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask the minister a simple question? I put this to the hon. minister. If that is correct, why do you still want to amend the act? You must want to do so because you are not getting the proper information or because you do not want to have a duplication of information going to two different departments.

Mr. Sharp: I think the hon. member has finally seen the point. As I said in my opening statement, many corporations suggested to us when we asked for information under this act that they had already filed the information with the Department of National Revenue, and wanted to know why we needed the information again.

In answer to a question put to me at the end of my opening statement I did say that no corporation had specifically said it would like the dominion statistician to have access to the income tax returns, but on checking with my officials I am told that while that was not true, many of the corporations had indicated by implication that they would like that to happen because they had already filed this information and did not want to have to file it again.

I should like to make this point quite clear. Under this act in respect of corporations that have filed returns, the dominion statistician now obtains all the essential information available in the income tax return. That information is required by an act that was approved by this house a couple of years ago. There is nothing new in this legislation. The whole purpose of the amendments is to simplify the administration, and that only.

There is one other point I am surprised some hon. members have not emphasized to a greater degree, and that is that the information now obtained under this act is available to anyone in government. However, when this amendment is approved the distribution of that information will be restricted. It is now available to the dominion statistician only for the purpose of analysis. That is the main point of this legislation; that is the purpose and that is what happens.

Mr. Lambert: What about all the other thousands of corporations not now required to report under COLURA, as you wish to call it, but whose records will now be examined as a result of this proposed amendment?

Mr. Sharp: That is a point, Mr. Speaker; but the penalties for disclosure of any information of that kind are just as serious if the disclosure is made by the dominion statistician or his employees as they would be if the disclosure was made by the Department of National Revenue. At the present time the dominion statistician obtains this information from the larger corporations, and he and his employees are under threat of penalty if they reveal any of that information. This legislation does enable him to get other information at the same time he obtains the information in respect of these specific corporations, so that his statistical analysis is somewhat more complete, but there is no right on the part of the dominion statistician to reveal that information to anyone, not even to someone in government service outside the bureau of statistics.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask the minister one question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister was speaking to the Couchiching conference by radio he emphasized the point that it was very difficult for anyone, including members of parliament, particularly members of the opposition, to be in touch with this information, but I assume the dominion statistician is going to be in possession of this information which is covered under clause 4, subclause (b), and that it is going to be available to the government. Is that not true?

Mr. Sharp: That information is not going to be available except in analysis form. It is not going to a be availaible to people in the government. They will not be able to look at particular returns of particular corporations.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to go into detail, but the present subsection says:

> Any official or authorized person may, for any purpose relating to the determination of policy in connection with the formulation of any law of Canada or the ascertainment of any matter necessarily incidental thereto,
>
> (a) communicate or allow to be communicated—

I do not see anything in the amendment that substantially changes that right.

The other point I wished to touch upon in relation to this legislation relates to the indication given by the minister about this statistical information. I should like to know whether as a result of the changes in practice this legislation will cover those companies that are now exempted by this schedule. The minister knows that the schedule exempts small loan companies. What will happen in respect of Household Finance Corporation, and I could name several others? I assume that if the idea is to ascertain trends, it is important that all corporations be included, and that has not been clearly stated by the minister. I assume that if the dominion statistician has access to the files he is going to go into the records filed with the Department of National Revenue, and they embrace all corporations, wiping out the previous exemptions covered by the schedule.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I first correct the hon. member, as the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka corrected himself. Under clause 3 the amending bill removes subsection 5 of section 14 which the hon. member has just read.

Mr. Fisher: Then why bother to have the act?

Mr. Sharp: The purpose of the act is to obtain information about the extent of foreign ownership and its importance, and this is fully maintained by these amendments. Indeed, the first part of the act which is not amended at all, section A returns which are set our more particularly if you will look at the act, is not altered in any respect except for some filing dates. With regard to part B or section B, returns which relate to financial information, the only change is that the information is now obtained from income tax returns as far as corporations are concerned. That is the only change, except to restrict the access of government officials to the individual returns. That is why I made so little of this bill. It is a very simple amendment designed only to simplify administration.

Mr. Aiken: I wonder whether I might ask the minister a question along the same lines. Has the minister information as to how large a percentage of the corporations which file income tax returns are required to file the special return? I think this is the essence of the question also raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur. How many additional corporations are brought under the operation of this act?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if we do go into committee of the whole I will have my officials in front of me and these questions can be answered there or in any other committee.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Woolliams: I do not want to interrupt the minister but I should like him to answer one other question. If we were to withdraw our amendment this might expedite the matter and save the bill—we are not trying to block it—and in that event would the minister undertake to send the bill to a committee so that witnesses can be called and so that the information members have asked for can be supplied and the questions they have raised can be answered in the standing committee? If he would agree to do that I think the mover and seconder of the amendment would agree to withdraw it, because if we could get the bill before a committee we would be satisfied.

Mr. Sharp: I would be very happy to do that. I had thought that perhaps it would have served the purposes of the house better if that examination had taken place with the first report under this act available. But if hon. members feel they would like to examine these amendments more carefully and to have witnesses called I would certainly have no objection. I would be very happy to comply with the hon. gentleman's suggestion, and instead of going into committee of the whole move that we should refer the bill to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, as the seconder of the amendment I am prepared to withdraw it but I still cannot change my position on the bill. I will have to vote against it. I should like this understood.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I was about to ask the minister a question but if we are speaking to the amendment I should like to say something. However, in view of the interventions by hon. members I am not sure if the minister still has the floor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I believe the minister has concluded his remarks and my understanding is that the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is now speaking to the amendment.

Mr. Nugent: Then instead of just asking a question—

Mr. Favreau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member for Bow River is asking for leave to withdraw his amendment and I wonder whether you would ask if he has the consent of the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member for Bow River unanimous consent of the house to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. Woolliams: Before that is put I want to make sure I understood the minister correctly. My understanding is that the bill will go to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. Sharp: I have no objection at all and I will be happy to so move.

Mr. Favreau: After second reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member for Bow River unanimous consent of the house to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Woolliams) withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Aiken: I want it recorded as being on division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time on division and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

FARM MACHINERY

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR PURCHASES BY SYNDICATES

Hon. Guy Favreau (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-121, to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the introduction of this bill—does the parliamentary secretary wish to speak at this time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister, who is out of the country on government business, I wish to make a statement on second reading of this bill. The minister appreciated the constructive criticism and remarks of members of the house, the concern they expressed with regard to the bill and the interest they have taken in it. I ask the indulgence of the house to permit me to stick to my script because I wish to be rather precise, since I am speaking for the minister.

A number of questions were asked concerning the proposals which would be contained in the bill and how this proposed credit program would operate. An examination of the bill itself will provide the answer to most of these questions.

The government has been concerned, and hon. members have indicated their concern, about the cost to Canadian farmers of owning and operating farm machinery. As an indication of the size of this problem I should like to point out that at the time of the 1961 census the value of farm machinery on farms in Canada amounted to more than $2½ billion. During 1963 the cost to Canadian farmers for owning and operating their machinery amounted to about $541 million and more than half of these costs were represented by the cost of ownership, including depreciation and interest on investment. When we consider ways of increasing the farmer's income I am sure we are all thinking of his net income. Anything which we can do to reduce the farmer's operating costs is in effect a move to improve his income.

As the minister indicated in his remarks at the resolution stage, the co-operative use of farm machinery is already practised among Canadian farmers by sharing in the ownership of individual machines or by having work done on a custom basis.

Two factors have made more extensive co-operative use of machinery difficult. The first has been the need for the determination and establishment of a simple and workable basis for the organization of co-operative groups of farmers. The second has been the lack of adequate credit facilities to enable such groups to operate. The purpose of this bill is to assist in overcoming these two problems and, in this manner, to encourage joint ownership by groups of farmers of these types of machinery and equipment, the use of which may be shared in order to reduce the overhead costs of each farmer.

For this reason, the bill proposes to set up what has been termed syndicates. The syndicates in effect will be groups of three or more persons engaged in farming who have entered into a form of partnership agreement with one another to undertake the joint purchase and use of farm machinery. The bill is designed to assist those whose principal occupation is farming. However, because of location and other factors, it may be very much to the advantage of some full-time farmers to include in their syndicate neighbours who are farming but also engaged in other pursuits. The bill provides for this kind of co-operation, but to assure that full time farmers are the chief beneficiaries at least the majority of members of any syndicate must be persons whose main occupation is farming.

There has been some question of the choice of the word "syndicate" to identify these groups. A syndicate by definition means a combination of persons formed for the promotion of an enterprise. There are, of course, other terms which might have been used, and in fact were considered. Some speakers have suggested the word "co-operative". This word was considered, but there is now legislation in practically every province for the formal incorporation of co-operatives, and we did not think it wise to use a term which might seem to conflict with provincial jurisdiction.

The word "syndicate" is an appropriate one to define a combination of persons formed to promote an enterprise or for the acquisition of articles. In fact the use of the word "syndicates" for this purpose is by no means new in Canada. In the early days of the west the term "syndicate" was widely used to describe groups of farmers who joined together for the purchase of machinery.

Several members pointed out, quite properly, that some items of farm machinery lend themselves to joint ownership and use, but there are other items which a farmer has to own himself if he is to be sure of having them available when he needs them most.

There will be authority in the bill to define farm machinery by regulation. We thought it best to do it in this way because we are entering into a completely new venture in which we will have to profit by experience, and in which some changes may be required as we gain experience. The intention, however, would be to define farm machinery very broadly, so that the bill might apply to any item of machinery which a farmer might use in the development or operation of his farm, and leave it to the groups as they are organized to decide the items which they feel could profitably be owned and used jointly.

The bill proposes loans up to 80 per cent of the cost to the syndicate of the machinery which they buy. The remaining 20 per cent of the cost, spread between the various members of the syndicate, will allow individuals to become members with a relatively small initial contribution. The maximum amount of loans to any one syndicate would be $15,000 per member, but not to exceed $100,000. These amounts should be sufficient to allow syndicates to share in the purchase of a considerable amount of equipment, including those specialized items of high capital cost which are available for use but which are too expensive for farmers to purchase on an individual basis.

The initial organization of the syndicates is most important for their future success. Farmers wishing to organize to take advantage of the provisions of this bill will require some assistance and guidance in their initial planning. The minister is proposing that the responsibility for the administration of the measure be assigned to the Farm Credit Corporation so that we may make use of the facilities which they have already established across the county and the experience they have gained in administering farm credit.

It is proposed also to make the program self-supporting. One of the principal items of cost will be the initial establishing of the syndicate, the study of its proposal, and the approval of the loan. This is provided for by a service charge of 1 per cent of the amount of the loan. The cost of administering the loan, once it is made, will be provided for in the interest rates which will be fixed from time to time by the corporation with the approval of the governor in council.

Mr. Speaker, there is quite a bit of chattering in the house. I had hoped that this bill would commend itself to the members sufficiently that they may wish to listen to the statement.

In this connection, I should like to point out that since these loans will be for terms not exceeding seven years, the cost of the money to the corporation will be less than the cost of money it borrows for the making of long term loans under the Farm Credit Act. I am informed that within recent years the cost of money borrowed for periods of less than ten years has been about half of 1 per cent less than the cost of money borrowed for periods of up to 20 years.

Since this is a new type of program there will undoubtedly be problems to overcome in its initial operation. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) has mentioned in particular the difficulties which may arise when several farmers endeavour to share the use of one particular machine. In drafting the provisions of the bill, and planning for its administration, consideration has been given to the ways in which these problems can be lessened.

The first essential factor, of course, is the compatibility of the members one with another, and since syndicates will be formed on the initiative of individual farmers who choose their own partners to participate with them I have no doubt that farmers will find partners with whom they can work amicably. Further, in the setting up of the syndicate there will be predetermined arrangements designed to settle in advance some of the problems which may later arise. There will first be some general provisions applicable to all syndicates, including such items as provisions for adding members, for reduction in membership, for the procedure in the event of death or insolvency of a member, and for the voluntary dissolution of the syndicate. There will also be provisions for such items as the appointment of a secretary, the maintenance of proper books of account, and so on.

Farmers forming syndicates will also be required to make arrangements in advance concerning their individual shares and responsibilities with respect to payment of capital maintenance and operating costs, and the responsibilities for operation, repair, maintenance and storage of the machines. They will need to agree concerning the priority of the right to use the machine in the event that two members wish to use it at the same time. By agreeing on this type of thing in advance many of the difficulties of co-operative use will be overcome.

It is appreciated that the provisions of this bill do not apply equally well to all types of machinery and equipment. Syndicates formed to purchase harvesting equipment, for example, where the time at which the farmer has the machine available is of vital importance, will probably contain a relatively limited number of members. It will be important to ensure when the syndicate is being formed that the machinery being purchased has ample capacity to meet the requirements of all the members within the season of use. However, in dealing with such machinery as that used for land clearing, land levelling, drainage, etc., it may be possible to form syndicates with larger numbers of farmers because the time of use of the equipment is not such a vital factor.

I might point out also that a farmer who obtains assistance under this bill would still retain his eligibility for loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act for equipment he wishes to purchase on his own, as well as for livestock, building improvements, etc.

Hon. members may wish to have some information with respect to this type of operation elsewhere. Syndicates of the type proposed in this bill were started as a pilot project in the United Kingdom in 1955 and developed slowly during the first few years. By 1962, 293 syndicates had been formed. However, as a result of the program's successful operations it has expanded rapidly since that time. In 1963 there were 341 syndicates and by August of this year, 596 syndicates had been formed. Farmers who are members of syndicates who were interviewed concerning their operations indicate that disagreements among syndicate members are rare. They indicated, for example, that the problem of three small farmers deciding upon the order in which a machine should be used by each was not very different from that of a large farmer deciding upon the order in which he would use a machine in his own fields, and the problem was usually resolved after consideration of the same factors as those which influence the decision of the larger farmer. It is interesting to note, also, that some of these syndicates have found it advantageous to share their labour resources as well as their machinery.

It has been suggested that this legislation will be of more value to large operators. On the contrary I believe the advantages of co-operative use are far more significant to the small operator. It may be a perfectly economic proposition for a large farmer to own equipment large and efficient enough to do all his work, while such a proposal might be beyond the means of the small farmer. The opportunity provided to a syndicate to acquire machinery, with an initial payment of 20 per cent of the cost spread among three, four or five members will make it possible for small farmers with limited capital resources to share in the ownership of efficient machinery for operating their land with low individual investment and overhead.

As I have already indicated, this bill is a new departure to meet a new and expanding need for credit and co-operation among farmers. It is designed to assist them to reduce their machinery costs. It proposes a fund of $25 million to meet the initial demand. I have no doubt that after the act is in full operation experience will indicate some changes and modifications and perhaps the need for a larger fund. In this event, amendments will be introduced to make such improvements. But I believe we have in this present bill all the fundamentals of a practical program which will offer very real assistance to Canadian farmers in controlling an important part of their costs and increasing their efficiency. I believe that farmers themselves will quickly recognize the advantages of this program.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): May I ask the leader of the house what will be the business tomorrow?

Mr. Favreau: We shall first carry on with the debate on second reading of Bill No. C-121 to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates. When we are through with the committee stage, we shall proceed with item No. 49 on the order paper and continue the debate on the resolution stage of the bill to amend the Crop Insurance Act. That will be followed by item No. 7 on the order paper, the resolution preceding the measure to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act. This will be followed by the continuation of the committee stage of Bill No. C-72 to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions.

It being eight minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN REPORT OF INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Mr. Speaker: May I be permitted to correct a clerical error which appears in the extract from the minutes of a meeting of the commissioners of internal economy held on Monday, September 14, 1964, concerning salary revisions for employees of the House of Commons in certain classifications, tabled in the house on Friday, September 18, 1964.

On page 3 of the said extract, as well as on page 702 of Votes and Proceedings of that date, under the classification "Chief of personnel" the words "Retroactive from October 1, 1963 to May 11, 1964, inclusive" should read "Retroactive from October 1, 1963, to June 30, 1964, inclusive".

CANADIAN FLAG

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's) presented the third report of the special committee on a Canadian flag, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATES TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice) moved:

That the items listed in the main estimates and the supplementary estimates (A) for 1964-65, relating to the Department of Veterans Affairs, presented to this house at the present session, be withdrawn from the committee of supply and be referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs, saving always the power of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys.

CANADIAN POSITION ON ADMISSION OF COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether, when he met recently with the President of the United States, the question was discussed as to the recognition of communist China or a seat for communist China in the security council?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I answered this question I think at the end of last week. My answer then, which I am glad to be able to repeat now, was that this matter did not come up in our conversations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Prime Minister say, in view of the discussions that are apparently taking place in this connection, referred to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, whether there has been any consultation with the Chiang Kai-shek government or any representative of that government regarding the position of Taiwan in the event that recognition takes place?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. There have been general discussions I think within the last two or three months with the governments concerned, including the government of China on Taiwan. The position of this government on that particular aspect of the problem has been stated very clearly, that any recognition of the government of Peking would have to be related to the views of the inhabitants of Taiwan as to whether or not they wish to be included in that recognition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, has it also been made clear to the Chiang Kai-shek government that whatever measures take place, including recognition, every protection will be given to the people of Taiwan who have stood with us in freedom for so many years?

Mr. Pearson: I have just said, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat in a different way, that it is not the policy of the government to do anything which would compel the people of Taiwan to accept the jurisdiction of a communist government in continental China without their own consent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And to assure the people of Taiwan that their integrity will be protected against the hundreds of millions in communist China?

Mr. Pearson: I think it would be a little difficult, Mr. Speaker, for the government of Canada on its own to give an assurance to the government of Taiwan that the integrity of that island would be protected. It would undoubtedly have the protection under the United Nations charter which would be given to all countries that are the victims of aggression.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORAD—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT NOT BEING RENEWED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if his attention has been drawn to a story in the press which indicates a distinct possibility that the NORAD agreement will not be renewed unless Canada is prepared to contribute to a costly space program. Could I ask the Prime Minister, first, if Canada is being asked to contribute to such a space defence program and, second, whether Canada is contemplating the likelihood of not renewing the present agreement when it expires?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no, and the second part of the question does not arise. The position of the government on that matter has been made very clear by the Minister of National Defence and others.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and it concerns the situation in Cyprus. In view of the fact that our Canadian peace keeping troops are being subjected to a new secret weapon of aggression, being sticks and stones in the hands of female patriots on that island, can the minister report what action has been taken, what decision has been made as far as the general situation on the island is concerned, and what progress has been made at the United Nations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, General Thimayya has taken the matter up with the Turkish community, with the vice president in particular I think, and I suspect that the matter will be resolved satisfactorily.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In my question I also referred to the fact that the house would like to know more about what has developed in relation to negotiations with regard to the Cyprus situation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as to the situation on the island itself, there has been a rather satisfactory state of peace for the last 10 days. The question of the renewal of the mandate of the force is now before the security council, which met on this question last Thursday and Friday. They met again this morning, and they are meeting this afternoon. As soon as the security council has made its decision the government of Canada will then be in a position to give consideration to the course which it proposes to follow.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is Canada imposing any conditions with respect to agreeing to continue the Canadian force in Cyprus for a further period of time? Is Canada asking for any extension of the terms of reference or any change in the status of the agreement between the United Nations and the government of Cyprus, particularly with reference to freedom of access, freedom of movement and the right to disarm guerrillas?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to put the matter exactly in the way my hon. friend has done when he asks, have we imposed a condition. We have urged upon the secretary general the view that the powers of the force should be clearly and unequivocally established. Following the representations which Canada and other countries have made, the secretary general in his report has laid down three conditions that embrace the area of desired action which the hon. gentleman has incorporated in his question. This is now the subject matter of discussion in the security council.

[Later:]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister say what is the state of the plans for the rotation of Canadian troops now in Cyprus, in the event that Canadian troops there will be required there for a further period?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Yes, plans for rotation are complete. An advance party has already left, as I indicated to the house a few days ago, and the Department of National Defence is in a position to act as soon as a decision is taken.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Some weeks ago I asked the minister if he was giving any consideration to provision of additional pay for the Canadian force in Cyprus in line with what has been done by the Swedish, Brazilian and other governments. At that time the hon. gentleman promised the matter would be considered by himself and the officials of his department. Is he now in a position to announce any decision with regard to pay and allowances for troops in Cyprus?

Mr. Hellyer: No positive decision has been taken, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST BY CALVIN MACDONALD FOR POLITICAL ASYLUM IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, September 17, the hon. member for Vancouver East directed an inquiry to me concerning Mr. Calvin Macdonald, who is alleged to have made an application for permanent admission to the United States. I understood at the time that my department was not involved in this matter, but I wanted to see first whether any related matter would fall within my jurisdiction. Such an application would be strictly between the applicant and the United States authorities. The Canadian immigration service would not become involved in such an application in any way; consequently the Department of Citizenship and Immigration would have no information concerning this case.

SOUTH VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the present Khanh regime in South Viet Nam, which I believe is the second or third such regime we have recognized within the last few months, retain the confidence of this government; or in light of continuing turmoil there does it not seem clear that a reappraisal of our relationships in this respect is necessary?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman gave me notice of his intention to ask this question. I should say that, where there is no special consideration, the practice followed by Canada is to deal with the government that is in control. It is not for a Canadian government to decide whether any particular government is the right one for a country to have.

The situation in South Viet Nam, does of course, give concern. I hope that the continuing efforts of General Khanh to bring stability to his troubled country through the creation of a broadly based and popularly supported government will be successful. There will be an opportunity tomorrow for the Prime Minister, myself and other members of the government to exchange views on the general situation in Viet Nam with Ambassador Cabot Lodge.

While I am on my feet I should like to say that some time ago the government of Canada decided to increase the level of its economic and technical assistance to South Viet Nam.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister any report from the Canadian representative on the international truce commission regarding recent happenings in the bay of Tonkin, and can he give the house either today or tomorrow some authoritative information as to what actually took place?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, when I was in Tokyo a few days ago I asked our representative on the international control commission in Viet Nam to come and report to us, as he did. I have nothing to add at this point.

Inquiries of the Ministry

APPOINTMENT OF RUSSIAN PROFESSOR AT UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have not had an opportunity to give him notice, so he may want to take it as notice. I have been informed that with the full approval of the Secretary of State for External Affairs one Professor Nicolaev of the department of economics of the University of Moscow has been appointed to the staff of the economics department of the University of Saskatchewan, Regina campus, for a period of one year.

I should like to ask the minister on what basis this man has been admitted to Canada for this purpose. Is it on the basis of some exchange program whereby a Canadian professor is going to a university in Russia? Can the minister inform the house what is the basis of the admission of this professor into Canada and to this campus for this purpose?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is surely a question for the order paper.

Mr. More: Mr. Speaker, I think this question involves a very pertinent point. My information is that this is being done with the full consent of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Surely he can give a short answer so we can be informed.

Mr. Speaker: The purpose of questions at this time is to deal with urgent matters that require an immediate answer. The minister may or may not be in a position to answer correctly on the spot. Therefore I suggested that the question be put on the order paper in order to get a full and complete answer, rather than a possibly half informed answer.

Mr. More: With due deference, Mr. Speaker, I suggested that the minister might take the question as notice. I think the question is urgent, in that it perhaps has to do with national security. I think we want to be informed. If I have to put the question on the order paper I will do so, but I give notice to debate the question at ten o'clock.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MONTREAL—BENEFITS TO STRIKING NEWSPAPER EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Could he intervene, in the case of the employees of the newspaper La Presse of Montreal, in order that the appeal to the board of referees be heard before September 30, and even this week, in view of the urgency of an immediate solution of that problem for the many employees of La Presse and in view of the fact that the matter was settled much more quickly in the case of the newspaper employees in Toronto?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I shall be glad to investigate to see if there is any way by which this hearing can be held at an earlier date.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister also intend to recommend that payment of benefits be made retroactive to the beginning of June, that is to the time when the strike started?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: There is no way by which the Minister of Labour can make recommendations on this matter, because under the law the determination of the qualifying date in the first place is a matter for the insurance officer, then for the board of referees and ultimately for the umpire if that final step is taken.

HARBOURS

MONTREAL—POSSIBLE TRANSFER TO PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heber E. Smith (Simcoe North): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether there have been any communications or conversations between the federal government and the provincial government of Quebec, the city of Montreal, the municipal port council or any other local body with a view to transferring the national harbours board facilities in Montreal to the provincial or municipal authorities.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): If the harbour facilities generally are the subject of the hon. member's question, the answer is in a very strong negative.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister give every assurance that the position of the ports of Saint John and Halifax, and now St. John's, Newfoundland, will be protected, inasmuch as they are in competition with Montreal, should any of these moves mentioned in the newspapers take place?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think there seems to be a very great misapprehension. There has been no thought, and never has been any thought to my knowledge, that any ports now administered by the national harbours board would not continue to be administered by that board.

SYDNEY, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ADMINISTRATION BY NATIONAL BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. May I ask the minister if he can advise the house whether he and the government will give consideration to the recent suggestion that the port of what we like to call greater Sydney will be brought under the administration and jurisdiction of the national harbours board?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): That is a very large matter of policy, sir, on which I could not very well give an answer on the orders of the day.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

TANGANYIKA AND ZANZIBAR—REQUEST FOR MILITARY ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the government of Canada received any request from the united republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar, as a member of the commonwealth, for military assistance? If so, what is the nature of the response the government proposes to make to such request?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. In reply I would say that over a period of several months the government has been actively considering requests for assistance in the training and equipping of the armed forces of the united republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar. The government has agreed to the request made by that government to send a military survey team to look into these matters.

Prior to the decision to send such a team the Canadian government offered training places for army officer cadets from Tanganyika and Zanzibar and this offer was accepted by the government of the united republic. The first group arrived in Ottawa on September 16. I believe it is anticipated that up to 15 cadets will be accepted in the present training year.

Mr. Brewin: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister say whether there is any danger that if the government of Canada does not render such assistance, other countries, perhaps communist countries, may do so?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has no doubt seen indications in the newspapers to the effect that there has been an offer of assistance from communist China. Indeed, I believe there is a mission from that country in Tanganyika at the present time.

INDUSTRY

PERSONNEL COSTS IN SECURING OF NEW INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister or the Minister of Industry. Can the Minister of Industry justify the expenses incurred concerning personnel charged with finding new industries for different parts of Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Langlois: But is it not a fact that during the last few days many of these men were unnecessarily laid off on a temporary basis?

[Later:]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry in relation to the one I asked a few minutes ago, to the effect that there are a few men in the minister's department who have been laid off; and I refer to those personnel in charge of finding new industries. Is that a fact, and can the minister say when that took place?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that there had been any lay-offs in the Department of Industry, but I will be glad to make inquiries concerning this.

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. RESPECTING CANADIAN INCENTIVE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a question to the Minister of Industry in the hope that it will meet with your ruling. In view of the widespread concern being created by reports from Washington that the United States is likely to take retaliatory action regarding the government's automotive parts incentive program, has the minister held meetings recently with United States officials to discuss alterations in the program; and what is the nature of such alterations, if any?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think hon. members will be aware that there is a quasi-judicial action pending in the United States with respect to the program of which the hon. member has spoken. In view of that fact it would be inappropriate for either the Canadian government or its representatives to make any kind of comment. I may say, however, that as is customary between ourselves and the United States, there continues to be the closest of consultation with a view to exploring all possible contingencies, all possible eventualities, and seeking solutions thereto.

EMPLOYMENT OF RETIRED MILITARY PERSONNEL IN DEFENCE INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the expressed concern that there is a growing close association between the defence department and the defence industry, due to an increasing number of retiring senior military officers taking top posts in defence companies, will the minister inform the house what steps he is taking to prevent this practice continuing?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think the assumptions made in the newspaper story of which I have taken note are quite unwarranted, and there has been no evidence whatsoever that senior members of the armed forces who have retired and taken positions within industry, to give of their talents and energies to the country, have in any way abused the positions they previously held or made use in an unauthorized way of information to which they may have been privy.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to that asked of the Minister of Industry by the previous speaker. Has not this practice been followed in the United States, and as the result of these retired military officials becoming senior executives of companies concerned with defence material production has not the United States had to pass legislation to correct the situation? Would the minister say that none of these retired officers have joined companies in Canada under similar circumstances?

Mr. Drury: I am not aware of the legislation in the United States to which the hon. member has referred. I am certain there is no such legislation in the United Kingdom. I will make inquiries as to what is the situation in the United States; but, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I think any suggestion of restrictive legislation impugning the bona fides of ex-members of the armed forces in this country is quite unwarranted.

Mr. Crouse: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister says he is not aware of this legislation. It was passed by the congress of the United States in 1963, and it prevents senior military officers occupying these posts. My supplementary question is this. Is there not some danger that the defence industry will dictate to the defence department what they should buy, rather than it being the other way around? Would this not be the situation if his department was staffed with too many senior military officers?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with that.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. A prominent member of the United States cabinet said that under these circumstances there could be a conflict of interest. Does not the minister agree with him?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that is a proper question.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—REPORTED UNSATISFACTORY LIMOUSINE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Due to congestion almost every Friday evening of Air Canada passengers arriving at Toronto international airport and requesting limousine service without success, will the minister say whether he has investigated the possibility of private companies supplying this service; and would he inform the R.C.M.P. not to prohibit the private cabs carrying passengers to the terminal from offering such service?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): As the hon. gentleman knows, Mr. Speaker, I have been looking into this matter for some time, and if there is a shortage of cabs I think something should be done to remedy it.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO INTERNATIONAL COFFEE AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In reply to a question of mine yesterday it was indicated that the retail price of coffee in Canada had increased by some 25 per cent to 30 per cent in line with the international coffee agreement. Is Canada satisfied with this agreement, or is some thought being given to protecting coffee drinkers by seeking amendments to it?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, I happen to have been the chairman of the international coffee conference at which the present coffee agreement was negotiated. At that time coffee prices were at very low levels, lower than at any time in the past decade, and it was agreed by the then Canadian government and by all the other countries of the world that this was causing human hardship and was interfering with the development of countries that produce and export coffee.

When the agreement came into effect in July, 1963 prices were, as I say, at these very low levels. Shortly thereafter there was a very serious drought in Brazil, which was the main cause for the increase in prices. Indeed, the increase had very little to do with the international coffee agreement. Then, when these prices rose very sharply as a result of the change in the supply situation, the members subscribing to the coffee agreement acted quickly to increase the permissible supplies of coffee being marketed under the agreement, with the result that coffee prices came down from their high point.

In answer specifically to the question as to whether Canada is satisfied with the operation of the agreement, I would say that this agreement can be improved; and it can be improved, I think, for the benefit of both consumers and producers. I would urge upon my hon. friend who asked this question that it is very much in the interests of all of us, including the consumers of Canada, that there should be reasonable prices for coffee, just as there should be reasonable prices for wheat.

An hon. Member: And turkeys.

Mr. Mather: As a supplementary question, is the minister not aware that the United States house of representatives has withheld re-ratification of the world coffee agreement because it is the feeling there that it is working to the detriment of the consumers of coffee in the United States?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I know this. I know the reluctance there has been in the United States for many years to agree to any international commodity agreement. This has been a standing difficulty, but I do hope this agreement will be ratified.

BUTTER—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING IMPORTS INTO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Could he tell us whether it is true that certain concerns are now entering into preliminary negotiations with a view to import butter into Canada?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of it, but I will make inquiries.

SPORTS

REQUEST FOR GRANT FOR 1966 QUEBEC FESTIVAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could the minister inform the house whether the government is favourable to awarding the $500,000 grant to la société des jeux d'hiver de Québec, as recommended by the national advisory council on amateur sport and physical fitness? Also, what stage has been reached in these transactions between the federal and the provincial authorities?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It does seem to me this is a very good question for the order paper.

Mr. Choquette: It is an urgent question, because those games are supposed to take place in 1966 or 1967.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Choquette: Therefore the organization has to be assured it will get the grant as soon as possible. Mr. Speaker, I will raise this question at ten o'clock.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF—RECOMMENDATIONS OF ADVISORY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and arises out of an answer he gave the former minister of northern affairs and national resources, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, in reference to a demand for his resignation by the Banff civic council, an elected body. Is he now prepared, because of the serious charges made against him by that elected council, to meet with the council in the very near future?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to meeting the council at any time. I would hope that some of those who made the statements in question would not be at the council meeting when I attend it. This is an advisory board, and they gave the type of advice that was given in this case when it was absolutely clear that I was operating within the advice given us by the Oberlander report and also by the code that we had developed in respect to the use of these properties. This matter has been the subject of a number of editorials, and I think the gentleman who spoke about dirty politics was probably answered as well by them as I intend to answer him when I speak.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would care to disclose the name of that elected representative on the council, so the council could advise him to stay away the night the minister meets with the council.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister assure the house that the choice made in regard to this property was not in favour of commercial interests versus one of the most strategic potential park sites in Banff?

Mr. Laing: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe so, because this site was set aside in the Oberlander report for use as a motel. The difficulty in the parks—not alone in this park—is that there is resistance to competition. I unfortunately, as was the former minister, was placed in the position of having to determine what is the proper degree of competition. I would say that in my best judgment at the present time I tend to greater competition being permitted than exists at the present time, and that is going to be the policy.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SHOWING OF FILM ON FREDERICTON CONFERENCE ON NATIONAL GOALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State, but in his absence perhaps the acting minister could answer. Can the minister advise the house and public when the film on the excellent national conference on Canadian goals, recently held at Fredericton, will be shown on C.B.C. television?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Acting Secretary of State): I have no knowledge of the matter, Mr. Speaker, but I will inquire.

ALLOCATION OF FREE TIME TO POLITICAL PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether he has made representations to the C.B.C. so that the leaders of the other parties might have a television program like the ones given to the leaders of the Liberal and Conservative parties, and also what were the results of those representations?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will pass on the views expressed by the hon. member to the C.B.C.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell us whether there was an answer from the C.B.C., whether he expects an answer soon or whether he intends to renew his request in this respect?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to make further inquiries.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question refers to an important article appearing in this morning's Globe and Mail, which reads in part:

"Until honesty returns to our ranks, how can we criticize other political parties?"

This was stated by a supporter of the Ontario Liberal association in protest against federal Liberal politicians in the provincial field.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Winkler: My question is to the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is not in order.

CROWN ASSETS

ST. HYACINTHE, QUE.—DISPOSITION OF FEDERAL BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to answer the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) who asked me a question the other day in connection with the disposal of crown assets.

I understand that there have been negotiations between the city council of St. Hyacinthe and the representatives of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and a resolution from the city council of St. Hyacinthe is expected now at any moment.

[Later:]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production a supplementary question arising out of the information he gave a little earlier.

How much did the city council of St. Hyacinthe offer for the two unused buildings?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, as I said a little earlier, we are awaiting the city council's offer.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

BRANDON, MAN.—CANCELLATION OF FLY-PAST COMMEMORATING BATTLE OF BRITAIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister aware that the traditional fly-past held in connection with the annual battle of Britain ceremony in the Rivers-Brandon area was cancelled at the last moment on instructions from Ottawa and that this was the only disappointing aspect of an otherwise impressive ceremony? Can the minister give reasons for the sudden change in policy in this regard?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I thank the hon. gentleman for indicating to me on the way to the house that he would ask this question. He is not accurate when he implies there was a sudden change in policy. As I think he was advised in response to his telegram, last March the R.C.A.F. established a policy of not accepting invitations to participate in fly-pasts and other shows across the country, except in a certain narrow range of circumstances including air force days. The policy which has been applied throughout the whole season was applied in the case to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is the minister aware that regular training exercises are carried out by the aircraft based at Rivers, that the pilots of these planes were standing by waiting to take part in the ceremony, and that they were disappointed, because they regard it as one of the most important ceremonies in which the air force can participate, inasmuch as it was commemorating an event which makes it possible for us to sit here as a free parliament today?

Mr. Hellyer: I was not aware of that, but if it is so I am surprised they would not have been aware of the policy which was established by the force many months ago.

TRANSPORT

DISCUSSION WITH WHEAT POOLS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Minister of Transport; I regret I have not sent him notice. Has the hon. gentleman recently had discussions with the leaders of the western wheat pools with regard to the new transport legislation, and is he able to disclose to the house the nature of any advice which may have been tendered to him?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I had the chairmen of the Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta pools to lunch with me today. The Minister of Trade and Commerce was also present. It was a very enjoyable western gathering at which we had a little discussion about the transport of wheat, a subject which naturally interests the wheat pools.

CANADIAN FLAG

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Did the right hon. gentleman state in the course of a press conference in Vancouver on September 17 that closure would be used if the flag committee did not come forward with a near unanimous decision?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No such statement was made.

Mr. Coates: Would the Prime Minister make available to the house what, in fact, he did say to that press conference? I picked up the Montreal Star on Friday afternoon and the headline said that closure would be applied by the Prime Minister in the debate.

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to convey to the hon. member the record, as I have it, of what I did say. Also if he studies the matter he will find out that the Montreal Star did not make the statement he mentioned.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a supplementary question.

According to the Canadian Press he stated in Newfoundland yesterday:

> I hope to see the new Canadian flag and the union jack flying side by side on the parliament buildings.

Does this mean that even before the committee hands in its report we are certain that Canada will have two flags?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: No; I did not say that, either, in that form.

Mr. Coates: I wonder if the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There should be a little order.

Mr. Langlois: I rise on a question of privilege—

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Perhaps the Prime Minister would tell us what he did say?

Mr. Langlois: I rise on a question of privilege. I had intended doing so earlier, but since the question has now been brought up I should like to insist on a point which the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam brought before the house the other day. As a member of the flag committee I urge that until this committee has made its report the leaders of the two major parties in this house should refrain from making any statements which would cause any kind of commotion in that committee, so that we can come to a conclusion before long.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): We do not want to be unfair to the Prime Minister, because two misreports in two days is one under par. Would he tell us what he did say yesterday in this regard? He says he did not say that he hoped soon there would be two flags flying on parliament hill. What did he say?

Mr. Pearson: I know the right hon. gentleman has an intense interest in this matter, and I also know how preoccupied he has been over the years by accuracy in reporting. What I said was, I am sure, something which would appeal to the right hon. gentleman. I said that if the committee reports, and the report of the committee is accepted by the house providing for a distinctive Canadian national flag and a flag which symbolizes our commonwealth association and our loyalty to the monarchy, I would hope on appropriate occasions to see both of them flying on parliament hill.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now that we have the revision of what the Prime Minister said yesterday—

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, the right hon. gentleman asked me what I said and I gave him a report of what I said. He has no right to refer to this as a revision of what I said. I do not adopt those tactics, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I hope we have concluded questions on this particular matter for the moment.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have a supplementary question on another aspect—

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member for Kootenay West that we have had sufficient discussion of this matter.

Mr. Herridge: It has been brought up, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fisher: Christmas comes but once a year.

LOTTERIES

NOVA SCOTIA—DRAWING OF NAMES OF HUNTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. On the front page of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald for yesterday morning, September 21, I read that the first open season on moose in Nova Scotia since 1937 will open tomorrow, but only 400 residents are eligible to hunt the animals. Then this statement appears: "The licences were drawn for last month".

Will the Minister of Justice advise this house when the lottery was legalized by the Department of Justice, so that we may have a precedent for other lotteries in this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Now we have enjoyed that question I suggest we move on.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASES IN PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Inasmuch as the hon. gentleman's estimates received a speedy referral to the standing committee today, would the hon. gentleman tell us whether he is ready to discuss, within the area of that committee's inquiries, the revision of veterans pensions in the light of the present day cost of living?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I think that is a question for the committee itself. Perhaps I had better put it this way. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I will be glad to appear before that committee at any time it so requests.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and it can probably be classified as supplementary to a previous question. When his estimates are before the committee concerned, will he be in a position to make a policy statement with regard to the proposed takeover of veterans hospitals. I may be in error, but I do not think we have had a clarifying statement. On the one hand, we have the statement being made—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question has been asked. Let us wait for the answer.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated a moment ago I will certainly be glad to appear before the committee at any time and answer any questions that are right and proper, and which I can answer.

PUBLIC WORKS

CHURCHILL, MAN.—USE OF LIVING QUARTERS AT FORMER ARMY BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Yesterday the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam wondered why vacant quarters in Churchill could not be occupied by personnel of Pan-American Airways. When the army was responsible for housing before April 1, 1964, they issued a block of houses to the United States air force, which in turn allocated some of the houses to its contractor, Pan-American Airways. The Department of Public Works has kept that arrangement in force, because the vacant houses will eventually be filled by employees of various federal departments now in Churchill when they have completed their recruiting. We anticipate, therefore, that this recruiting will soon be completed, and there should be no vacancies after that.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How soon does the minister think these 100 vacant married quarters will be occupied? At the present time I understand they are empty, while Pan-American employees are having great difficulty obtaining living accommodation for themselves and their families. How soon will these 100 vacant quarters be occupied by the families to which he referred?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, this recruiting is going on quite rapidly. I think my estimates will be called on Thursday or Friday of this week, and I will be in a position then to give more details.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INCLUSION OF INTERPRETERS AND TRANSLATORS IN INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION DIRECTIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency asked a question concerning certain pay increases. I want to say that the order passed by the internal economy commission and announced by Mr. Speaker last week did not include the employees of the house who belong to the translation and interpretation divisions of the Department of the Secretary of State, because the salaries of these employees have been revised already. That revision was effective as of April 1, 1963. The classes of translators and interpreters form part of the group A cyclical review.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Would the parliamentary secretary inquire whether the regulations—not the increases but the regulations—applicable to the employees of the House of Commons apply also to translators and interpreters?

[Text]

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I will refer this particular detailed question to the appropriate authorities and obtain an answer.

HIGHWAYS

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING NATIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister advise the house whether discussions have been reinstituted with the provinces, or whether discussions are contemplated with the provinces, in respect of the development of a national highways policy; and can he tell the house when the government plans to make an announcement of such policy and whether it is likely to be soon?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is not easy on orders of the day to answer such a broad question which has to do with government policy, but I might say that it is not the intention of the department to call the provincial ministers of highways to a national conference. This does not close the door to any exchange of views in respect of problems the provinces might have. In fact, during the past month we have had many meetings with the provincial ministers of highways.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand the minister to say there is not to be a conference on national highways policy but simply conferences on ad hoc situations as they arise, and that no national policy is contemplated?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I said before that for the present year it is not the intention to call a meeting of the provincial ministers of highways, and that is the situation at this time. I have said that this was not closing the door to any particular talks with any provinces, and such talks have in fact taken place.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am not asking the minister about not closing doors, I am asking him whether he is going to open some doors to a national highways policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest that the hon. member put that very detailed question on the order paper.

FISHERIES

REGULATIONS RESPECTING KILLING OF SEALS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister of Fisheries has been receiving many complaints following the article in the Globe and Mail regarding the inhuman and dastardly practices of some in respect of sealing. He stated the other day that he was going to recommend some change in the regulations. Is he now in a position to say what those changes will be, so there will be no repetition of the circumstances set out in that article that brought about tremendous public interest?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the seal season has been closed since April 25 last, I believe, and will not reopen until early in March of next year. As I have stated in this house, a meeting was held on May 19 or 20 in Moncton with representatives of the sealing industry and a number of representatives of the fishermen concerned. Since then a draft has been prepared of certain amendments to the seal regulations, and a second meeting has been called for early October in order to make known to those interested the amendments we have in mind. Following that meeting it is my intention to have an order in council passed amending the regulations and giving the protection which has been asked for.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for that statement, and ask him whether representatives of the humane society will be present when these proposed amendments to the regulations are discussed, so there will be double assurance that these cruelties will not continue to be perpetuated.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that we have already discussed these proposed amendments with representatives of the humane society, and they are quite satisfied with the amendments we have in mind.

WORLD FAIR

REPORTED INTENTION TO CONSTRUCT MODEL HOUSES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Public Works?

Could the minister inquire of the 1967 world exhibition corporation about its project "Habitat 67" under which 1,100 model apartments would be built at an estimated cost of $36,903 each?

Does the minister not feel that those apartments are too expensive?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member to put his question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) since he actually attends to matters relating to the 1967 world fair?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF EASTERN FEED GRAIN AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Approximately a year ago I asked in the house whether the government intended to form an agency to deal with eastern Canada feed grain. Has the government taken any decision or any step in this direction since 365 days ago?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will bring this question to the attention of the minister who is absent on official business.

FARM MACHINERY

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR PURCHASES BY SYNDICATES

The house resumed from Monday, September 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hays for the second reading of Bill No. C-121, to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture gave us some further information concerning the general outline of the bill we are discussing, which has to do with loans to farm machinery syndicates. This was done because on this side of the house many questions were asked at the resolution stage pertaining to the background of the legislation. When the minister was pressed at the resolution stage he stated that in the terms of the bill itself, and the explanations that would follow, answers would be found to these many pertinent questions.

Although the parliamentary secretary did comply with our requests to a degree, there still remain many broad questions with respect to the principles of the bill about which we would like to be satisfied. After having had the opportunity to read the bill I must say that personally I am very disappointed. I am of the opinion that the measure may indeed be of some help to a few large farm complexes throughout the country, but in its application it will do very little to help the ordinary farmer who seems to be in difficulty today.

The approach of the government in the bill, as with any other farm legislation or policy that has been introduced by the government, seems to follow one particular course, to provide further funds by way of credit for our farmers who, if they take advantage of it, find themselves deeper and deeper in debt. In my opinion this in no way attacks the basic problem of farming today because farmers do not want to be in debt. They do not want too much additional credit. What they want is an attempt by the government either to increase their incomes or decrease their operating expenses in order to give them the necessary capital to finance themselves. It is my honest opinion that the bill, as in the case of other legislative applications of policy by the government, does nothing to attack these basic problems facing agriculture today. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and the parliamentary secretary spoke about the 80 per cent of the cost that the loan would cover and the 20 per cent that would have to be put up by the individuals joining such a syndicate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that in the course of a few minutes this afternoon I could ask the parliamentary secretary or the minister some of the questions that must be going through the minds of farmers today who are aware of this legislation. I hope that before we get into the committee stage on this bill the parliamentary secretary might provide the answers to these questions, which I am sure must be troubling these farmers. We have heard about this 80 per cent-20 per cent basis, but what the farmers will want to know is how this 20 per cent is going to be broken up amongst the members of the syndicate. Is each member of the syndicate to be assessed an equal amount of this equity or is there to be a disparity amongst the members who join? Can one member put up 10 per cent and the other three members provide the other 10 per cent or must they all assume an equal amount of this liability? This is one of the questions farmers are asking today.

We understand from the parliamentary secretary that each member will be allowed to borrow up to $15,000, and that there will be a maximum of $100,000 for the syndicate. We find the same regulation applying to farm improvement loans, and we wonder just what difference there will be. The parliamentary secretary stated this will in no way jeopardize the ability of farmers to borrow under the farm improvement loans legislation. Here again a question arises. If a farmer has borrowed $15,000 under the farm improvement loans legislation and has used his assets as collateral, will these same assets not be necessary for collateral for a farm machinery loan? Certainly the parliamentary secretary would not, I believe, contend that the same amount of capital can be used as collateral for both of these loans.

Then there is the seven year limit. If $100,000 is borrowed and the interest rate is the prevailing rate, plus 1 per cent for the cost of operation, it could mean 6 per cent spread over seven years. If there are five or six participants in this syndicate it would mean the repayment would amount to perhaps $6,000 per member per year, which is quite an obligation to be undertaken by a farmer.

There is another question that is bothering farmers today. What effect will this measure have on private enterprise? Throughout Canada today there are machine agents who are providing pools of machinery and making equipment available to their neighbours and farmers in the area, and charging operation costs on a custom basis. In what position does this measure place these men? There is a provision in this legislation to the effect that every member of a syndicate does not have to be a full time farmer. This has caused a lot of worry amongst members of the opposition because they believe it will lead to integration and we shall see big business come into the field to take over the tools necessary to do farm work. I am sure farmers all across this country would like to see these loans strictly limited to farmers. Farmers have a great deal of suspicion about pouring money into the hands of individuals not engaged in farm work who may be induced to come into the field, because in many cases this does not promote the best interests of the farmers themselves.

The parliamentary secretary spoke about general provisions. Farmers have found as a result of bitter experience that it is always a simple matter for them to obtain money from the various farm corporations, provided they have the necessary security. It is always a simple matter to contract into these things. When we are talking about $100,000, the farmers want to know how they contract out of something like this if it does not meet with their approval or does not live up to their expectations. The parliamentary secretary has stated that general provisions would be enacted for adding new members, to cover the death or insolvency of a member and for the dissolution of the syndicate. These are very general terms, Mr. Speaker, and general terms do not mean very much to a farmer in connection with an undertaking of this size.

We would like the government, if it is in a position to do so, to elaborate on these general provisions and to indicate what machinery they envisage might be set up to take care of this very important part of this measure. The farmers want to know what happens if a partner becomes bankrupt. Where do we stand then? What happens if one of the partners should die? Am I saddled with that part of the obligation? If I want to get out of this syndicate, how do I get out or can I get out? How much of the obligation am I going to be forced to assume to get out of the syndicate? What factors are taken into consideration? What about the devaluation of the machinery the syndicate has purchased? These are some of the questions farmers are asking themselves today. Farmers are businessmen, Mr. Speaker, and they want to look at this measure strictly as businessmen. I feel that they are right in asking these questions.

The next question is, how do we arrive at the type of machinery we are going to buy? What happens if there is a disagreement amongst the members of the syndicate as to the type of machinery we want to buy? The members might agree on the type of machine, but there may be a difference of opinion over the company that is to furnish this machine. There are many machine companies today making machinery which is used for the same purpose but which may be slightly different. The farmers want to know how these matters are going to be decided. Are we going to have the members of the syndicate making all these decisions, or will the syndicate be subjected to a mass of rules and regulations relating to each of these difficulties that might arise? The farmers want to know exactly what they are going to get into. In my opinion it is not sufficient to state there will be general provisions.

It is stated that before a syndicate is formed the members will be required to make arrangements regarding shares, regarding repairs, operating costs, storage and allocation of priority for use of the machine. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is meant by "make arrangements"? Is it going to be stated that before a syndicate is brought into being you must form a board of directors, that you must have bylaws? Is it to be a closed corporation? What are the operating methods by which these arrangements are going to be made? Who makes these arrangements? Who decides what machinery shall be bought? Who decides the type of machinery that shall be bought? What happens when a new member is brought into the syndicate? How is he treated? What part of the obligation does he assume? Does he have to contribute toward the full cost of the machinery or the depreciated value of the machinery? These are the questions we would like to have answered before we deal with this bill clause by clause.

We hear that a number of persons may join a syndicate. This poses another problem in connection with farm credit. Farmers do not want to tie up all their credit in farm machinery. They have to have credit for fertilizers, for livestock and for seed. If I understand this bill correctly, when a person joins the syndicate he must sign a promissory note, and he must assume the entire obligation because, as I understand it, the obligation is assumed jointly and severally. Farmers want to know if they borrow $15,000 individually and the syndicate borrows $100,000, is the credit of a farmer assessed for the entire $100,000? When the farmer goes to a bank to borrow additional funds and this promissory note is disclosed, does this work against his credit to the full extent of $100,000? If such is the case, then there are hundreds of thousands of farmers whose credit would be absolutely at an end if they belonged to a syndicate operated under such an arrangement.

We are certainly not going to oppose this bill in its entirety. We are not going to oppose the principle of the bill, because we are of the opinion that if there is anything at all that will help the farmers we will support it, and if the farmers can use further credit we shall support the provision of it. If farmers can obtain and use better equipment, then that is all to the good; but I fear this bill will not accomplish what the government hopes it can, because I do not think the farmers will utilize this credit.

It will probably be businessmen who hope to invest money and earn a living that way, who will use the provisions of this bill. There may be large farm complexes which will take advantage of it, but these are few in number; and I believe that after the bill has been in operation for a few years the government will find it is a very poor one indeed. The government will find that it is not attacking the basic farm problems, that it is window dressing, and that it fails to meet basic farm needs.

It is my opinion that the provision of more credit to farmers at this stage is not the answer to farm problems. Some attempt must be made to assess and combat the two basic problems facing farmers today, which are lack of gross income and the increase in operating expenses. The gap is narrowing every year and farmers are finding it increasingly difficult to cope with these problems. All the government is doing through the Farm Credit Corporation, the Farm Improvement Loans Act and now through this farm machinery syndicate bill is offering greater and greater credit to farmers which, for the most part, will put them more and more in debt, unless something is done to attack the basic problems of agriculture. The farmers of Quebec, Ontario, the maritimes, the west and B.C. know what the problems are. They have made representations to the government on their basic problems, and it is my opinion that a measure such as this will not in any way alleviate the basic problems they are facing.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to make a few brief observations on this somewhat unusual bill to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates, the exact purpose of which is still somewhat of a mystery to the members of the house.

Before I proceed I should explain that I have been a farmer all my life, but in contrast to the many well-to-do farmers we find in the ranks of the Progressive Conservative party I have been associated more with the axe, the grub hoe and the walking plow throughout my life.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You are an agricultural plutocrat.

Mr. Herridge: However, I am just as interested in this bill as if I were the owner of a very large farm and had a large amount of equipment. I might say, Mr. Speaker, as my leader previously said, that we support the apparent principle of the bill, which even at this time is somewhat obscure, but the over-all general intention appears to be good. However, we shall have to do a bit of quizzing before we finally know what it all means.

To extend credit to farm syndicates and to provide a special account of some $25 million sounds very well. But as hon. members know, throughout the years this party has supported the economic family farm as the basis of Canadian agriculture, has supported the development of the co-operative ownership of machinery, has supported co-operative processing for farmers, has supported co-operative marketing, and has supported commodity marketing agreements between governments. In fact I think it is true to say that throughout the years this party has had some influence on agricultural policies in this house, closely associated as it is with the producers of Canada, whether they are industrial or agricultural.

Until now we have not been faced with a bill quite like this one, but we have urged policies to this end and have urged legislation containing what appear to be the general purposes of this bill. We all know that in recent years, particularly since the second world war, there has been a great need for credit because of the greatly increased mechanization of our farms, and because of the large amounts of money required to buy the equipment necessary to service them.

I have had some experience of that in a much smaller field than on these wide prairie plains, or the rich Ontario valleys, or the rolling Quebec hills. It has been practical experience, because I am one of those who have their noses to the grindstone most of the time. Anyway this experience with the people I have the honour to represent has caused them willingly to associate themselves together in the co-operative purchasing of machinery, and I was rather surprised to hear the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) raise some doubts as to the ability of farmers to co-operate for this purpose. Our experience has been entirely different. We have carried on a form of co-operation in the purchase of machinery, as I said before on a much smaller scale than my hon. friends to the right speak of, but with great success, and I believe that what can be done in a limited sphere can be extended.

In his statement the minister recognized the great need for credit for the purchase of machinery, and also recognized the need for co-operative effort in purchasing machinery. Then he went on to deal with the syndicates, and this is the part of the bill on which we want full explanations. What does he mean by syndicates? How will they function? How will the proposed act be administered? I understand it is to be administered by the Farm Credit Corporation, and as this piece of legislation is an experiment its administration and application will be watched with interest.

As I have endeavoured to point out, there is experience in Canadian history to support this type of legislation in general principle. I am not quite sure of the details, but I remember when I was a boy our first investment in co-operative machinery was when all the neighbourhood got together to build a snowplow in order to get us out of the woods. Some people say we have not got out of them yet; but anyway, Mr. Speaker, after that we had co-operative ownership of stump pulling machines. No one had sufficient money to buy a stump pulling machine and the necessary steam engine so we did it on a co-operative basis. Later we bought community land clearing equipment. Then as our orchards came into bearing we bought spraying machines on a co-operative basis, because these too were costly. In fact they are now ten times as costly as they were 40 years ago. Some farmers also went into the purchase of small saw mills and planers on a co-operative basis, and I shall have some questions to ask in that respect when we come to deal with various clauses in the bill.

Further, as has been pointed out, the prairies and other parts of the country shared similar experiences; all of which indicates that this type of legislation, if it is on a sound basis, should be very successful. Further we know that in the United Kingdom during the last eight or nine years they have experimented along these lines quite successfully. I do not know the details of their legislation with respect to co-operative ownership of machinery, but I do know the U.K. government makes provision for credit for the purchasing of machinery.

Because this is experimental legislation we have to ask a lot of questions. We support the principle or general purpose of the bill. Only experience in its application will determine whether it is successful to any extent or whether by amendment it can be made fully successful.

I take this point of view, Mr. Speaker. As I have said before, I give credit to the government for bringing in any legislation along this line that is of an experimental nature. We have to be willing to experiment in various ways in agriculture, as far as legislation is concerned. Some of these experiments will fail; some will succeed as the result of amendment because of experience. But I do believe we should be willing to see legislation of this type given a trial, to see how it works, and then look forward to an account from the minister, say after the act has had a year's operation.

I could go on at greater length, Mr. Speaker, but I think we can best get the information we require with respect to the purpose of this bill by asking our questions on the various clauses of the bill when they are being considered by the house in committee.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words on the second reading of Bill C-121, an act to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates. We appreciate the remarks the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture made last night, bringing to our attention some of the ramifications of this proposed legislation and answering some of the questions that have been asked. It is a refreshing change to have this Liberal government introducing for the first time since it was elected a piece of legislation that has to do with agriculture. Any other pieces of agriculture legislation, to the best of my knowledge, were concerned with amendments to existing legislation that had been introduced into this house by the Conservative party. It is unusual, Mr. Speaker, that when the government is introducing for the first time a piece of legislation concerning agriculture, the Minister of Agriculture is not present to pilot the bill through the house.

Mr. Speaker, may I make it abundantly clear at the beginning that I am in favour of any legislation that will help increase the farmer's income, or anything that can be done to reduce the farmer's operating costs. I would hope sincerely that this legislation would do just that, but I have very many doubts as to whether it will provide either of these two conditions. The first question I would ask the minister if he were here is: Why did he introduce this legislation? Did anybody make representation to him or the government asking for such legislation? Did the Canadian farm federation or the farmers' union make representation asking for this type of legislation? Or is this just a brainchild of the minister's, to help promote farm integration? Does he want to promote integration, or does he want to help the small, individual farmer? Or is this going to be just a great bonanza for the agricultural farm implement people?

I think there is a great deal of duplication in this piece of legislation. Farm improvement loans were extended just recently doubling the amount that any farmer may borrow. As hon. members know, this act was set up to enable farmers to buy machinery. I believe this act would take care of the very thing the government is trying to bring about in this bill. The Farm Credit Corporation legislation was recently amended and it, too, makes provision for the purchase of machinery.

Then we have the other lending facilities that are available. I think of the Canadian banking system and the banks that are ready and willing to extend credit to an economic farm unit or a farm operation that is on sound footing. I believe we should pause here for a moment Mr. Speaker, and think of the part the bank managers and the banks of Canada have played down through the years in helping to develop the economy of our country and agriculture as well. I think of the very useful advice the bank manager can give to a farmer or to anyone who makes application for a loan. I do not think we can just pass by lightly the ability that he has and the information he has at his disposal; the guiding hand and direction he is able to give anyone making application for or inquiring about a loan. I say again that I believe there is a great deal of duplication in this piece of legislation.

Are these syndicates to be treated as a co-operative? Are they to have the advantages with regard to income tax returns that co-operatives have at the present time? If this is so, I think this is a discriminatory piece of legislation; I think it is unfair to private business. The man who has made a great investment in machinery, who is ready and willing and is doing business in his community as a custom operator, is being discriminated against by this piece of legislation; or will be if it is adopted by the house. I think of the many millers who are operating feed mills in my area and many other areas of Canada. It is suggested that mobile feed mills can be bought under a syndicate arrangement. These mobile feed mills will move around an area in which there is already located a mill that has been serving the area down through the years and has been rendering good service. They will have a distinct advantage over the miller in the community especially with regard to the income tax arrangements that will be provided to these syndicates under this piece of legislation.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think this will create unfair competition. I would suggest that if the minister wishes to aid the livestock feeder in the east or the west, a more direct approach might be taken. In my humble opinion, the present course of action that is proposed will give the greatest benefit to the machinery manufacturers. The progressive farmer has more to do than learn the complex workings of the feed trade. The organizing, operating, upkeep and financing of a mobile feed mill is no small problem. The knowledge required to use the mill to maximum efficiency, the knowledge required to mix uniform feeds for effective purposes, and the knowledge required to choose the right supplements to complement the farmer's grains are not learned overnight.

[Mr. Hales.]

What happens then? Either there is the drop in quality that goes with a drop in price or some member, the one who has learned the most, will take over as manager of the group. If that is the case, the new co-operative group will be in direct competition with the local feed mill. It will incur many of the overhead costs which must be borne by any business organization and there will be fewer farmers to help bear these costs. A duplication of services often dilutes the efficiency of both.

I think this is a most unusual bill. There is a certain amount of mystery and experimentation connected with it. What research did the department carry out before introducing it? The parliamentary secretary told us last night that this system had been used in the United Kingdom. I believe he said it was introduced there in 1955 but that it took seven years, until 1962, to get 293 syndicates interested in this type of legislation. Even nine years later, in 1964, there were only 596 syndicates established under the United Kingdom program. Looking up the number of farmers in the United Kingdom I found that as of last year there were 399,683, almost as many as we have in Canada. However, I do not think a comparison can fairly be made between the situation in the United Kingdom and that which exists in Canada in this respect. The type of farming carried on in the United Kingdom is entirely different. They have smaller units there and climatic conditions are different from ours. So I do not think it is fair to say that because this scheme has worked in the United Kingdom it will necessarily work in Canada.

In conclusion I repeat what I said at the beginning of my remarks. I am in favour of anything which would help increase farm income or reduce operating costs, but I do not believe this bill is an answer to these problems. The measure involves duplication and for this reason it is not necessary. It discriminates against private businesses which are in operation in some fields one of which I have mentioned. For these reasons and others already mentioned, I doubt very much the value of this piece of legislation. I mentioned that this is the first piece of farm legislation which the Liberal government has introduced since it came to power and I cannot help think that they could have introduced much more needed legislation than is represented by the illconceived measure which has been placed before us at the present time.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My remarks in relation to Bill No. C-121 will be brief. This bill represents a new departure as far as farm assistance programs are concerned. It is impossible at this point to foretell exactly how it will work out but in principle I believe it has merit. On this basis therefore I am in favour of the legislation and I think it should be given a trial.

We must admit that it aims at fulfilling a definite need among our farmers and for this reason it justifies our support. I do not believe it is aimed at helping the large farmers. I am sure it is legislation which will be of greatest advantage to the small family farm unit which is today experiencing great difficulty in remaining economic.

I look back on my own experience as a lad on a farm. We grew up in the parkland area of the west; our farms did not have the vast acreage to be found in the prairies. One of the greatest problems we encountered was in the financing of the purchase of the expensive farm equipment needed. Consequently, even when it came to buying tractors and sod breaking equipment, farmers very often came together and jointly purchased machinery. No better illustration of this practice comes to mind than that of the community threshing machine. True, there was a day when the big custom machines were popular. But as the smaller threshing machines developed, the practice was for a group of farmers to get together to buy them jointly and provide the labour necessary to operate them. This system worked out most satisfactorily. I am convinced from my experience of the operation of smaller farms both in the east and in the west that there still is a need in this country for co-operative arrangements of this kind, because the cost of equipment today has increased so greatly to place it beyond the reach of many of the smaller operators. I have in mind a combine unit which costs in the vicinity of $8,000 or $10,000. A small farmer simply cannot afford to buy such equipment, nor indeed would he be justified in doing so, having regard to the tremendous investment involved and the shortness of the time during which such a machine would be used. However it could well be purchased under arrangements suggested in this legislation in co-operation with a number of other farmers and this, it seems to me, constitutes a practical answer to a problem which I think exists right across this country.

A number of speakers have suggested during this debate that the bill runs contrary to the principles of private enterprise, that it will work hardship on legitimate business operators who are now performing custom service. I do not think it conflicts with this type of service at all. The ordinary feed mill operator is not serving just three or four farms; he is probably serving 30 or 40 farms in a community. Custom operations at harvest time and certain other seasons of the year are based on an area much larger than this legislation is likely to reach. For this reason I do not agree that the measure will work hardship on what has now become a legitimate private enterprise business, namely custom work. I believe this is a much smaller thing, and that it will assist farmers who are now encountering difficulty in making their units economic. On this basis the legislation is desirable. However, I think it is impossible at this stage to predict how widely the facilities will be used or just how well the legislation will meet the end toward which it is directed. I do think however it is worthy of being given our confidence at this time so that it can be put forward on a trial basis. If it does not meet the objective that it is intended to meet, the legislation will just not be used as perhaps some of us visualize it will be used.

The greatest problem farmers experience today is that of obtaining credit on the one hand, while at the same time being able to make use of that equipment which the credit will enable the farmer to purchase in an economical fashion. Here again I think that this bill is aimed in the right direction. I believe that we can well adopt the attitude that it is worthy of our support, and we should give it a trial, letting the farmers themselves prove how successful and extensive it can be in their present needs.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to add anything to the arguments that have been advanced by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) (Mr. Danforth) and the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales), but I do feel that some observation should be made regarding the policy of this government to act on behalf of farmers and bring about within our country new hope in various areas of agriculture that have been so seriously neglected by this government.

In so far as this legislation is concerned, I can only measure its importance in the view of the government by the fact that no minister is here to present this legislation. Only two ministers are in the house. One is the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught), who at no time in my experience has participated in agricultural matters, and the other, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet), whose experience in connection with agriculture is, to say the least, limited. I am not talking about his past, because I do not know anything about that, but I do know that his knowledge of agriculture has never been very apparent in this house. I am not going further than that at the moment, unless the hon. gentleman wants to get me into another field.

May I say this, and I speak with the authority of parliament throughout the years, that there could be nothing more contemptuous of the House of Commons than the introduction of legislation, which we are told is important, when the carriage of that legislation is not in the hands of a minister. I say that with all due respect to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Beer), the parliamentary secretary. He cannot speak for the government and has no authority to do so. The answers he may give would not have the authority of governmental answers. Indeed I think this is the first time in the years I have been here that I have known of any legislation being introduced without a minister being available to explain and answer the questions that necessarily arise.

When one thinks of the promises made only 17 months ago, 18 months ago and 19 months ago in respect of what was going to be done for Canadian agriculture, he must remember that now in the month of September this is the first matter of legislation originating with this government intended to help the farmer. Nothing has been done to meet the problem of the Canadian farmer, and that problem today relates to the increase in the cost-price squeeze and the increase in the prices of those things which the farmer has to buy without a corresponding increase in the price of those things the farmer has to sell. The government that promised much now brings in a piece of legislation that has all the appearance of papering over the agricultural cracks in the Canadian economy.

I was interested to read recently that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) thinks that the name "farmer" is one that is not as highly regarded as it should be. Indeed he said in his speech in Toronto on December 4 that something should be done to improve the image of the farmer, and that image he said should be improved in the sophisticated city minds. In the view of the Minister of Agriculture "farmer" is an expression that can no longer be used among the sophisticated, and therefore the Minister of Agriculture for Canada has concluded that it might be well to change the name, and instead of calling him a farmer we should begin to call him what he really is, a food producer, a food manufacturer, or a grocery grower. That is a most unusual viewpoint on the part of the Minister of Agriculture for Canada, and it is surprising that he should be disturbed in his soul about the name "farmer" but not equally disturbed by the need for taking effective action.

Hon. members of the official opposition have brought before the house and the country the serious plight of the dairy farmers, the serious plight of the farmers both in Ontario and in Quebec. No action has been taken and nothing has been done to meet the problem, of such a nature in the province of Quebec that some 16,000 farmers—if I may still use that expression without its having the connotation of opprobrium that was in the mind of the Minister of Agriculture when he spoke in Toronto—marched on Quebec city. Nothing has been done and no action has been taken. The real income of the Canadian farmer is down, and I mean the effective income based on a proper relationship to the cost of things the farmer has to buy. Indeed what is being produced here by this legislation is simply an experiment with a potential $25 million cost tag attached to it.

I cannot discuss at this moment what the effect of this legislation will be, but it does provide that not less than three individuals, who are engaged in farming independently of one another, or who are members of a co-operative farm association, and the principal occupation of a majority of whom is farming, may obtain some assistance. What does this mean? It means simply that two farmers can join with a financially powerful man and then obtain this assistance. It is all very well to say that something should be done for the small farmer, and I believe in that, but this legislation has all the appearance of being ill digested, ill considered and completely insufficient in any way to meet the farm problems.

I am reminded that many promises were made by the Liberal party during the election campaign. They were summed up recently in the Family Herald of Montreal. I am glad to see that the joint minister of agriculture, if I may call him that, is in our midst now because he is the one who should be piloting this measure. He is the only one who can speak with authority, not a parliamentary secretary however estimable but a minister of the crown. I hope that as I go on the number of ministers will increase. I am referring to numbers, not to importance. We now have three present and we will expect the hon. gentleman who has just come in, the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), to have something to say in this regard because, after all, in his own province of Quebec public opinion is aroused today to such an extent that one of the ministers said the other day the economic situation in that province was of greater importance than any constitutional matter that is being raised there.

I do not know why the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) felt that the word "farmer" carried a very unelevated connotation and whether that is the reason the present government has not acted to carry out its promises. They were wonderful promises that were made. Here they are as set out in the Family Herald:

The emphasis in price supports will be shifted from butter to skim milk powder and cheese. Deficiency payments will be made to cream shippers to maintain present price levels.

What has been done in that connection has left the dairy industry of eastern Canada —and I am now speaking of eastern Canada— in a most serious situation. Next:

A new Liberal government will take the initiative in formulating with the provinces a program of providing free milk for children in school.

Free milk? That promise, made in every part of this country, is gone. Next:

A new program of active leadership in improving the quality of dairy products will be undertaken in co-operation with the provinces.

Except for the change in the subsidy on cheddar cheese there has been no action. Next:

Farmers who wish to switch from dairying to other enterprises to which their farms are better suited will be encouraged by credit specifically adapted to this purpose and by conversion compensation grants.

There is another program promised but no new measure has been produced.

Vigorous leadership will be provided in the activities in a new national co-ordinating advisory board for the dairy industry.

Promises were made and while a special dairy conference was convened the only board that is in existence is the national co-ordinating advisory board established by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) when he was minister. Then we come to wheat.

A new Liberal government will immediately provide a floor price of $2 per bushel for wheat—

Promise? Yes. Implementation? None. It has now been dropped.

Further, legislation will be provided for a two price system for wheat on the basis of the unit quota. Farmers will be paid a price for wheat used in domestic human consumption which reflects the fact that they buy production requirements in a tariff protected market and sell in world markets. This policy will be effected by a consumer subsidy and thus will cause no rise in the price of bread.

No action. Forgotten. I mention these promises to indicate that what is being done here is simply a subterfuge to conceal the failure of the government to act on behalf of agriculture. What did they promise with regard to price supports?

A new Liberal government will maintain price supports on important agricultural products that are fair and realistic, they will be based on principles, not on expediency. Where appropriate, a new Liberal government will provide deficiency payments that will protect farmers in seasons of price declines by calculating payments on a quarterly instead of annual basis. Where appropriate, also, support prices will be put on a regional basis.

I need not tell you that that promise has been honoured by being entirely neglected except for the price support program on dairy products and the 47 cent support price on a pound of flue cured tobacco. Then we come to livestock improvement. To read this is like reading a book of fiction when compared with the implementation contained in this measure, which represents all that has been done except for the extension of credit under legislation already existing. This is what it says:

To further improve this vital section of our agricultural economy a new Liberal government will:

Rapidly expand record of performance testing of livestock...

Undertake additional aggressive programs of quality improvement for hogs, beef cattle, poultry and sheep.

Vigorously support research on livestock nutrition with a view to achieving significant cost reductions for farmers...

Undertake a thorough revision of the health of animals regulations and ensure their effective enforcement.

Nothing has been done on that last one. You will recall it was said that too much was being done for the west under the government of which I had the honour to be prime minister. All we did was to elevate the level in western Canada to that in other parts of Canada on behalf of agriculture. I speak now, not as Leader of the Opposition but as a western member wanting to see something done by the government on behalf of the eastern dairy farmers. Let us have no more of this tinkering, for that is what it is. The government will go out and say that they made $25 million available to syndicates. What the farmers are asking for is a fair and reasonable price level. Do you remember what those on the other side of the house said? "We are going to bring about a new system. It has been most unfair for all ministers of agriculture to come from western Canada. We are going to give you an associate minister."

A new Liberal government will include both a minister of agriculture and an associate minister of agriculture of cabinet rank, one of whom will be specifically responsible for agricultural problems in eastern Canada.

A government of promises. A government of retreat. On the very first day as prime minister, the Prime Minister indicated it was his intention to appoint Mr. René Tremblay as the new minister of agriculture, east. That hon. gentleman thought he was appointed. He even had letterheads prepared and then he found there was not going to be one. That is the position of affairs today. This was a major promise and certainly with the Minister of Agriculture perambulating all over the country there should be a minister of agriculture present in the House of Commons to substitute for him and carry out some of these promises.

Mr. Woolliams: You mean one inside the house and one outside.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then we come to feed grains.

The Liberal party is committed to continuing the present feed freight assistance program.

They did that.

Ensuring that sufficient freight and storage capacity is made available, so that adequate supplies of feed grains are maintained at the lakehead to supply eastern Canadian markets.

Instead of doing that they instituted a storage program under which the government pays for the storage in licensed elevators in eastern Canada of feed grains during the six months from October 15 to April 15.

Providing the seasonal credit necessary to co-operatives for the purpose of ensuring that adequate supplies of feed grains are moved to eastern Canada prior to the closing of navigation on the great lakes and held there until required during the winter months.

This is the promise; the performance, nil.

Providing long term credit to co-operatives for the purpose of expanding feed grain storage facilities where required.

I ask, what did they do in that regard? Again the answer is, nothing. Then they also said that they would sponsor legislation for the incorporation of co-operatives on a national basis, and would provide loans and other encouragement for the efficient development of agricultural marketing and supply co-operatives of all types. Again, what was the answer?

They said that the P.F.A.A. would be extended to provide more adequate coverage in the areas to which it applied. Again there was no action. I quote:

A new Liberal government will extend national housing legislation for the improvement of farm homes and other dwellings in rural areas.

What has been done in that connection?

Mr. Winkler: Not a thing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You could almost ask that question on all of these matters and develop a symphony in the house, a symphony in which all would say "nothing".

There is part of the record. I say that this government has totally failed to give consideration to the needs of Canadian agriculture. When the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Pugh) asked the other day regarding the turkey situation—and this was after the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) had spoken to those whom he called "the turkey people"—he was told that when the minister came back he would tell us about it. The turkey industry is in grave danger today. We have had for too long a Minister of Agriculture absent from this house. With the situation in our country, with the cost-price squeeze facing the Canadian farmer, the time has come for this government to wake up and bring in legislation that will be helpful. I repeat that western members and members from all parts of Canada will join with the government, if only it will act to meet immediately the one problem of transcendent importance to agriculture, the dairy problem in our country.

This legislation, the principle of which we accept and the performance of which we have little hope, does not even scratch the area of responsibility of this government in agriculture. It is nothing, as I see it, but a means of endeavouring to lead the people to believe that effective action is being taken. This legislation was promised months ago. I think about July 1 the minister announced that this legislation would be of great importance and that it would be brought in by about July 29. It is being introduced on September 22. No one knows where it was conceived. No one knows what agriculture organization has asked for it. No one knows how it will work. It is simply, as I said to begin with, a measure, grandiloquent in its terms, designed to cover up the fact that masses of promises respecting agriculture were made by members of the Liberal party, but now they are in office those promises have been dishonoured in the intervening 17 months. Nothing has been done except to increase the credit provided by legislation already on the statute books.

I do not know if this measure will do any harm. I do not believe it will. However, it does not meet the overwhelming need of Canadian agriculture, and that is for action by this government, by a government represented by a minister in the house carrying the legislation through, rather than placing the responsibilities on the estimable shoulders of an hon. gentleman who cannot speak with the authority of a cabinet minister.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, on this occasion I take great pleasure in taking issue with the right hon. gentleman on some of the remarks he made. That he should say it is improper for the parliamentary secretary to guide this bill through this house indicates the respect which that right hon. gentleman has for parliamentary secretaries, or indeed even the ministers—

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member will permit a question? Is he aware that when I was parliamentary secretary to the minister of veterans affairs the then Liberal opposition even refused to allow me to guide the estimates through the committee?

Mr. Otto: The atmosphere in the house at that time must have been such that it would have been inconceivable to permit such a thing. I am happy to see that our ministers emphasize, and this government emphasizes the importance of placing responsibility on the shoulders of parliamentary secretaries, and the younger generation of men in this house.

An hon. Member: You know better.

Mr. Otto: I was happy, Mr. Speaker, to hear the young member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) say he considered this to be daring legislation. In fact, what this whole nation needs is to be directed with daring and adventure. It is lucky for us we do not sit down like a bunch of old men, as hon. gentlemen on the other side do and say, take care, take care, do not do this, do not do that. We have to do something. I am pleased to see that the Minister of Agriculture did give the parliamentary secretary the responsibility of guiding this bill through the house. I think it is something that should be repeated in other departments.

An hon. Member: It might be an improvement, at that.

Mr. Otto: The matters pertaining to this bill have been discussed not only by the minister but by the parliamentary secretary, and by many members on this side of the house as well as the other side. It is a matter of concern to everyone. This is not something that was dreamed up by any minister; it was the consensus of many members here who know a great deal about the problems of agriculture.

It cannot be denied that many small farmers work half their lifetime in order to buy new equipment, but no sooner do they buy a piece of equipment at a fantastically high price than it becomes antiquated and is hardly ever used. This bill provides part of the solution because now that equipment can be shared. In many instances farmers want to diversify their activities, but individually they cannot afford the complete purchase price of new equipment necessary for diversification. The syndicate method would be an answer in such cases, and in many others as well. Primarily this is an approach towards an answer, which is much more than the right hon. gentleman ever did when he was on this side.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Here comes Red Skelton.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, somebody has just called me Red Skelton again. I always like to see the hon. member from Windsor castle here because he is so fond of royalty.

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, it is a little difficult for me to speak at this time following the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) because I feel that no man in this house understands the problems of the farmers better than he. I always thought it was most regrettable during the last election, and the one previous to it, that the Liberal party, in order once again to pit class against class, farmers against businessmen, allowed propaganda against the western farmers to be broadcast from the radio and television stations in Toronto—

Mr. Vincent: And in Montreal.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, and in Montreal, leaving the impression that the previous government was interested only in the program for the western farmer.

I want to say something about the economics of farming. I was born and raised on a western farm homesteaded by my father in 1905, and over the breakfast and dinner table I heard all about the problems which occurred in the 1920's, the 1930's, and even during the second world war. I have always believed that the law of supply and demand is just as important to the farm community as it is to the business community. When the farmers can get a market for their produce there is prosperity on the western plains.

I think it would be a good thing when considering this legislation, which to me is very nebulous—it is not going to do any harm but it is certainly not going to do any good—to review the early months of this government's tenure in office. It is well to remember that in May 1963 the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) went out to Regina and Edmonton and said the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), had made a mistake when he told the farmers to grow more grain. The minister said they should not grow more grain, that there would not be any market for it, and that it would pile up on their farms, just as it did previously under a Liberal administration. In short, he said the former minister made a great mistake in saying to the farmers, "Grow more grain and we will sell it".

Then something happened. The cabinet found out that the previous government had laid the foundation whereby credit was given to communist nations so that they could buy western wheat. That is the important thing to keep in mind. When the Liberals go out west and say, "We are selling your wheat too," it is not the sale of the wheat that is so important. What is important was the setting up of the credit arrangements by the Conservative government, to permit communist countries to buy western grain. Not only did that bring prosperity to western Canada—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I am just wondering whether he would not think that the speech he has been making up until now is not too closely related to the bill before the house. I realize his statements are probably introductory in nature, but I would suggest he should get on to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: I would like to answer that, Mr. Speaker. What I am saying is right in line with the bill because the farmers do not need credit when they have a market for their produce. When they can sell their produce, they themselves produce the capital they need and can go to private institutions to fill the gap. That is why it is important to review this first of all, because we cannot separate the thought and the principle of credit without dealing with market legislation and marketing. I would like to continue in this vein for a few moments because of the relevancy between credits and markets.

At that time the Minister of Trade and Commerce said it was wrong to grow the wheat. Then they got the market in Russia, and yesterday we heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) say everything is good in the country, and that there is a boom in progress. Certainly there has been a great improvement, so far as agriculture is concerned, since the Conservative party took office in the late 1950's, and that improvement is reflected today in the general economy of Canada, because when the wheat was sold it increased the gross national product of Canada and thus improved the general economic picture of the country.

During the 1962 and 1963 elections, when the Liberals were pouring out promises to win votes, we Conservative members told the people in our ridings, and elsewhere, that there was a bright economic picture, and that because the gross national product had increased by 6 or 8 per cent there was an uptrend in the economy. Did those farm champions, those cabinet ministers who are absent today, tell the electorate the truth at that time?

The Minister of Finance talked about the great Canadian, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the greatest living Canadian; but that same Canadian during the election told the farmers at Forest Lawn, in my constituency, that if his party were elected he would set a floor price for wheat at $2 a bushel. That was as much as he knew about agriculture. Hazen Argue had not been able to whisper to him that wheat at Fort William was then selling at $2.06 a bushel. The Prime Minister promised to reduce the price of wheat.

He also told the farmers that when the dollar was down valued they would get less for their produce and therefore would need more credit, but yesterday the Minister of Finance said that devaluing the dollar was the most important thing that led to the uptrend in the economy.

Now when the Liberals have found they have a market they are trying to take the credit for it. We have a travelling Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays). Someone said there was nothing wrong in having the parliamentary secretary steer this legislation through the house. As the farmer says, "Somebody has to do the work. If I am going to sit in town the hired hand has to do the work," that is what is happening here.

As I said in my opening remarks, the law of supply and demand is important. If you have the demand, western Canada can supply it. As a man born and raised in western Canada I am convinced that if there were a food emergency in the world and the call went out, the western plains could produce not 600 million, not 700 million but a billion bushels of wheat, on present day farms with modern equipment.

The reflection of the economy of western Canada on eastern Canada is important. In dealing with credit for the purchase of farm machinery I want to refer to a speech I made on April 23, 1959. In it I gave the example of an average farm in the Bow River riding, and showed that the cost of machinery for it in 1947 was $37,000, while the same machinery cost $57,000 in 1959. In that short period the cost of machinery increased by $20,000, and I shall try to be most fair about this. There has been an uptrend in the cost of machinery. We know that the kind of equipment used on farms has been much improved, and these improvements add to the cost of the machinery but, as the Leader of the Opposition pointed out, the farmer always faces the cost squeeze.

To people who may not be quite familiar with the economics of agriculture, when they drive into a farm and see a big combine, and see this and that, they think everything is fine on the homestead. But the cost of production is ever on the increase; and the government, as pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition, has done nothing to assist the farmer meet the cost squeeze. The only reason the farmers in western Canada are not in difficulty today is that the previous government laid the foundation for the markets for grain which brought prosperity and money to the farmers so they could purchase machines, pay their taxes and the costs of production.

But what has the government done today with regard to these markets? We read today in the farm papers and other papers that the Russian market has gone. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) is talking about exporting various kinds of new bulls from Canada; but they will not let them in because of the problem of foot and mouth disease. Has the minister really considered with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) the problem of new markets; because it will take only one year in which to lose the markets that have been established, and the grain will pile up on the farms. The farmers really needed credit in 1956 and 1957, when they could not sell the grain. The previous government unloaded that surplus and laid the foundation for the markets which are now enjoyed by the Liberal government and have bailed them out of trouble, not only in western Canada but economically throughout Canada. That is the picture.

Let us analyse the bill itself. A typical farm today, in order to be an economic unit, must have at least a section, a section and a half or two sections of land in the wheat belts of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Today, with the type of farming that is undertaken, and no doubt with the new kinds of grain scientists have brought out so as to shorten the period in which it will ripen, we are able to harvest the grain earlier. But we have that period in agriculture which we call the sensitivity period, the time when you have to do the work when the sun shines. I do not think this bill will be of any benefit to farmers who wish to purchase harvesting equipment, which is the most expensive type of equipment used on the farm. Last fall at this time I visited my own farm and drove one of those pusher combines which has just been made. It cost $12,000. This type of machine is necessary on the farm, for this reason. At that time the grain was swathed; it had been raining and the grain had started to sprout. When the time comes that the sun shines, you cannot have your neighbour using your combine, you have to be combining yourself —for two reasons; one is to get the grain, and the second is to keep the grade of the grain that is lying in the swath.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, with regard to harvesting and seeding equipment, or general equipment on the farm in western Canada, this legislation is absolute nonsense. One of the closest friends of Harry Hays, the Minister of Agriculture, said it is absolute nonsense; it will do nothing. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said, it is plain window-dressing. They are pretty thin drapes, at that; I am afraid everybody has seen through them. Do you know why this bill is brought in? It is brought in for the benefit of those who are going back to their constituencies, or those who wish to go into Conservative constituencies in western Canada, so they can say, "We at least did something for agriculture while Harry was absent". That is exactly what it is.

I will end with these words, Mr. Speaker. It is harmless; it will not do any harm. I will vote for it because the only thing it might do is this; in order to market the grain in the winter farmers might be able to form a co-operative in order to buy snow-removing equipment so they may get their trucks into town. But as far as doing anything to organize farm machinery in western Canada is concerned, or keeping the family farm that they talk about, it is absolutely useless. They are very strongly in favour of the family farm during an election; but they forget both the family and the farm after the election. This legislation will not do anything for western Canada. The prosperity is there—and I admit it is there—at the present time, and it only exists because of the policies of the previous government. This government is absolutely bankrupt as far as agricultural legislation is concerned. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is a disgrace that the minister is not here to defend his department in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, just a word or two about Bill No. C-121, to tell the house that our party is in favour of the bill.

It does not commit the government but, above all, our farmers' credit. As for the government they will only have to take money out of the country's consolidated revenue fund.

Nowadays laws are constantly being passed to create new ways of getting into debt. Such is probably the new basis of our national economy.

Mr. Speaker, when this bill is being considered in committee I will probably have several questions to put to the Minister of Agriculture, but I very much fear that once again he will be conspicuous by his absence as he is this afternoon. I am obliged to make a few comments at this time so that they can at least be recorded if they cannot be answered right now.

We are all very much disappointed on account of the minister being absent when he should be in his seat in the house. If he is inadequately paid I would suggest that we increase his indemnity so that he would at least be present when the government is proposing amendments or legislation pertaining to agriculture and that he would show some interest in the agriculture of this country.

On reading this bill to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates, I am wondering whether this legislation will actually be useful in the province of Quebec.

Indeed, we find in the new Quebec farm programs a trend to extend each farmer's acreage. This need became evident when the farm loan legislation was discussed. Indeed, about 60 per cent of all loans were refused in my district because they said the farmers' acreage was too small. Today, our farmers are asked to have twice, or three, and even four times the area of their former land in order to be eligible for all those loans made available by the government.

Apart from those extended acreages, the smallest unit is 300 acres per farmer, we notice something else in the new policies and more particularly when there is forest farming. There are those community projects in Matane and Gaspé; I wonder when we are going to stop setting up community projects in order to come back to the family farm, which is so dear to our fellow citizens.

As I said a moment ago our farmers were asked to enlarge their acreage so as to be eligible for loans. And now that some farmers in my riding have bought four or five lots, which means about 500 acres, in order to negotiate a loan with a view to setting up a herd or buying mechanical equipment they are faced with another piece of legislation which in effect tells them: In future, we shall lend only to farm syndicates.

I know people who had to organize themselves on a family basis to acquire the minimum acreage required by the Farm Credit Corporation.

And, now that the head of the family has called upon his children in order to get enough land to entitle him to a farm loan, he is going to be asked to form a syndicate of at least three members. That means that, in future, three family units who have organized themselves these last few years will have to join together to try and benefit from those loans.

Frankly, I wonder if such a loan is not designed to favour some province other than Quebec. Not being familiar with the situation in the other provinces, I cannot tell whether they have enough of those machine syndicates to allow them to take advantage of the benefits provided for in Bill No. C-121, but I know the province of Quebec quite well and, at the present time, I am sure farmers there are not in a position to form those syndicates of at least three members to benefit immediately from those loans.

Considering the responsibility that will fall upon members of the syndicates as a consequence of this bill, I wonder how that responsibility will be spread among the members.

Let us say that a syndicate has five, six or ten members, even though I doubt very much that such a thing will ever be possible in Quebec. Which of the ten members will carry more responsibility? Would it not have been better to provide in the bill for the issuance of an insurance policy to cover each member's share of the loan. If there were nine or ten members, a single policy would cover them all and on the death of the first one, the whole loan would be repaid. Indeed, I feel that other explanations will be necessary for us to form an opinion as to the responsibility of syndicate members.

For instance, the minister should state—because we will be asked that question in our ridings—who will be responsible, or if each farmer will be responsible, on a pro rata basis, for the amount he endorsed. I understood that they assume equal obligations, and since it is always the most solvent who is the most responsible, the whole thing is unfair and unpractical. I am asking my question in that light and, therefore, I claim that it will again be impossible for us in Quebec to get something out of that bill.

We are already having enough trouble with the loans granted by the Farm Credit Corporation; we are having a lot of trouble getting it to accept a small number of the applications made by our farmers who need those loans.

Mr. Speaker, if the investigators called upon to deal with those loans are as strict as those of the Farm Credit Corporation, it should not be expected that this bill will be of any use in my area, because I follow closely the work of those officials and they are much more inclined to refuse loans than to try to help farmers to become eligible for them.

Over 40 per cent of farm owners in my area, that is, former farms that used to yield large crops, had to move to the city because their holdings were too small to meet the needs of their families. Those farms have remained uncultivated for five, 10, 15, and even 20 years. Those farmers are still waiting for government legislation, hoping that with farm credit loans, they will be able to return to those farms and cultivate them again. But, as the inspectors do not seem very much interested in putting those lands back under cultivation, farmers leave them and, sometimes on the advice of the investigators themselves, go to the city and try to sell their land to a finance or a trust company.

Mr. Speaker, I heartily wish that this bill will serve the purpose which the minister likely has in mind, but I think if he had glanced at Quebec, he would have soon realized that this bill would fall short of its objective. In fact, if he wanted to make it useful to Quebec, he would have to rewrite it almost entirely.

Why not pass a bill which would grant a loan to all farmers instead of those syndicates? Why not amend it to enable all farmers to take advantage of the measure? I think that it would be much more logical.

I heard someone from the western provinces talk about this bill and I concluded that if it had been introduced in the abovementioned conditions, it would have been much more beneficial to farmers.

To conclude, I want to say that our farmers do not necessarily need loans, but concrete help. Under our present farming system, a loan is no help. Let us give our farmers what they ask for instead of what they did not ask for. They never asked for loans to purchase farm machinery. They need compensated discounts or subsidies in order to reduce the cost of those machines. That is what our farmers need.

Instead of throwing away millions of dollars to seek to control a small nation in Cyprus, why not use some of those millions for our own people, our farmers, by granting them compensated discounts on farm machinery?

If the sale of farm machinery cannot be controlled, I think the government would nevertheless have a major part to play by conducting inquiries on the cost of that machinery, and I am convinced that it can save for our farmers, from 20 to 25 per cent on the selling price of that machinery, if it would set a limit on the income of those companies, as well as a maximum rate of interest.

In doing so, it would help the farmers and, consequently, the whole of the people. The first duty of a government is to impose limits upon those who are tempted to go beyond them.

Even today, we hear that loans are granted at 30, 35 and even 40 per cent interest, and the government does not dare interfere with these loan sharks. I am wondering what useful purpose does the government serve? If there is one thing against which the farmers and all the Canadian people should be protected it is excessive interest rates.

This does not make sense; and when we ask the government to fix interest rates, to set a limit, it does absolutely nothing.

If a manufacturer or a seller is entitled to make 20, 25 or 30 per cent profit on the sale of an item, it rests with the government to fix a profit margin. But such a suggestion is made to no avail.

The government merely introduces measures such as the one which has just been passed to enable the farmer to get into debt, that is to authorize finance companies to take a tighter hold on him without any government control.

Instead of providing credit facilities for farmers, his cost price should be assured and more particularly, the marketing of his products should be guaranteed. The farmer would not need any loan then because he is no shirker.

Let us facilitate for him the purchase of farm implements at a reasonable cost, instead of forcing him to reimburse two or three times the cost. Let us secure markets for him and it will not be necessary to press him to support his family and develop our farm economy.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words in respect of this particular bill, and I shall be brief because I think most of the salient points have been covered by other hon. members. It would be a mistake on my part not to mention the effect of this legislation on the wheat farmers in my riding of Macleod, Alberta, and I limit my remarks to those individuals so there will be no misunderstanding about whom I have in mind.

If more than 1 per cent of all the wheat farmers in my area take advantage of, or benefit by the provisions of this legislation, that would be more than I would expect. This legislation is being advanced by the present government in an attempt to solve the problems with which farmers are faced today, and if less than 1 per cent of wheat farmers benefit, I suggest it will have little or no effect on the farming community of western Canada.

It may well be that several farmers in remote areas will get together and purchase a saw, for example, on a co-operative basis. I understand certain co-operative organizations in Saskatchewan have been purchasing machinery, and they might take advantage of the provisions of this legislation. We have yet to hear the minister clarify the effect of these provisions on the Hutterite farming communities. I am sure we all want that information, so that we can in turn assess the effect the provisions of this legislation will have on different segments of the agricultural economy in this country. I am sure many others across Canada will be seeking information of this kind.

This legislation provides that those individuals who enter into a syndicate for the purposes of obtaining the assistance provided by this legislation will be jointly and severally responsible. In other words, if a man becomes part of a syndicate which obtains assistance through this legislation for the purchase of machinery, he becomes jointly and severally responsible in respect of that obligation. If I have any understanding of farmers and their philosophy, and I think I have, I know that they will not become involved in such a situation. Farmers are not inclined to sign on the dotted line and become responsible for a debt incurred by a syndicate, because they will not risk losing their land. I am sure that most farmers in western Canada who farm on a quarter section, a half section or perhaps even three quarters of a section will hesitate before forming a syndicate and becoming liable for the repayment of $100,000, for example, obtained through the provisions of this legislation for the purchase of new machinery. It is my experience that the farmers in western Canada usually buy second hand machinery which they can repair and use to harvest their crops, but which they can afford to purchase out of their available funds without having to risk having their land and assets attached. Farmers generally are wary of joining syndicates, corporations and organizations of that kind because they know they might lose their shirts.

I might also add that if five farmers formed a syndicate one might prefer to buy a combine, another might prefer to buy a manure spreader and another might want to buy a tractor; but if each one bought a particular machine they could exchange work and in this way get their farm work done rather than setting out to buy farm machinery jointly. In other words, the individualistic approach of the western farmer is going to have a great deal of influence on his thinking so far as joining a syndicate is concerned.

As for supporting the legislation, it provides for loans and may help co-operatives and others. Therefore I certainly will support it. However, the government is barking up the wrong tree if it thinks that this legislation is the solution of the farm problem of western Canada. This legislation has to do with the provision of credit, and you do not look to credit for the solution of the problem of the farmers of western Canada. Their problem involves prices and markets. We were even told by the second speaker on the bill, a member of the N.D.P., that Liberal members from rural ridings did not support the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) with regard to this legislation. I have not had time to look into that statement but if it is true, and I believe it is, I wonder what those Liberal members would wish to support.

With all due respect, what we want to protect and perpetuate in this country is the family-size farm. It is the price which the farmer is going to receive for his wheat, his turkeys and other agricultural commodities which will determine whether he can keep his head above water and cope with the situation. The answer is not to give him more credit. If the government could do something to bring down the price of machinery they would be doing something that farmers and everybody else would like to see done, but there is nothing in this legislation that will bring down the price of machinery.

What the government is doing is to lend the farmers more money so they can buy more machinery, but this is no solution at all to the farm problem. Since I am talking to practically empty benches on the Liberal side, which indicates what they think about their agricultural program and the bill now before the house, I do not see that anyone else should be too much concerned. As I have said before, I intend to support the legislation and I hope it will do some good.

Mr. John Mullally (Kings): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak very briefly on the bill and I am prompted to do so by the remarks of the last speaker who said directly that members on this side of the house do not support the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) so far as this particular piece of legislation is concerned. I deny that charge and I want to assure the hon. member emphatically that we support this legislation very strongly and have advocated it for a considerable time.

The first time I spoke in the house I made particular mention of legislation of this nature. My thinking on the matter was a little different from what is embodied in the legislation introduced by the minister but I think that it nevertheless accomplishes the same purpose. My idea was probably somewhat involved and would have been rather expensive. I had in mind that the Department of Agriculture would set up machinery banks in the various agricultural areas of the country, where farmers could rent the necessary pieces of machinery from the department at the lowest possible rental charges. I can see that this is a very involved proposition. I believe that the measure now introduced by the Minister of Agriculture will overcome or at least contribute to overcoming one of the very great difficulties facing our farmers, the increasing high cost of machinery, which has tripled in the years since the end of the war. The parliamentary secretary indicated last night that machinery is now costing our farmers $541 million a year.

May I also compliment the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Beer), who is piloting this legislation through the house. We regret, as hon. members opposite do, that the Minister of Agriculture cannot be with us today. He is attending a very important meeting abroad which I am sure is in the interests of agriculture in this country, and I am certain that the farmers of Canada will benefit from the work he is doing in this connection. While we regret his absence on business of this nature, nevertheless we are very happy that the bill is being so capably handled by a farmer with the experience of the hon. member for Peel, who is able to provide answers to questions that hon. members may wish to ask and can guide this legislation very capably, I am sure.

I am most disappointed at the typically critical, non-constructive and sometimes cynical attitude toward this legislation of some members opposite. I confine that comment to members of the official opposition who have complained bitterly about the inadequacies of the bill and about farm problems in general, but have put forward no constructive suggestions as to what might be done, first to improve the legislation, and second to improve the farm situation generally. We are well aware that there is a serious situation on the farms, particularly in eastern Canada. We know what the basic problem is. I think the leader of the New Democratic party summarized it very well in a speech last week when he dealt with the rising costs of operating a farm, and the decrease in the returns to the farmer from his labours and from the sale of his products. Other hon. members have already referred to this situation today as the cost-price squeeze.

This is the problem, but what is to be done about it? It is very easy to point to the problem and I am very concerned about it, as are all hon. members on this side. I have listened intently throughout this and previous debates for one constructive suggestion from the opposition as to what might be done, and I have failed to hear one. While it is easy to criticize it is much more difficult to offer constructive suggestions and put forward ideas that can be enacted into legislation for the benefit of farmers in all parts of Canada.

I am also disappointed and somewhat disturbed by the attitude of members of the official opposition in indicating very strongly, it seemed to me, that our farmers are a group of people who cannot co-operate or work together. I deny that most emphatically. I was raised on a farm and have seen farmers work together. I cannot think of any occupational group of people who work together as well as farmers do, who share their machinery, plant their crops and harvest together. In fact, not only with regard to their agricultural problems but in their other pursuits and indeed, in every phase of life they work closely together, and I am most disappointed that members of the opposition would suggest, as they have almost invariably in speaking to the bill, that our farmers are a group of people who absolutely cannot take advantage of this legislation for the simple reason that they are selfish individuals who cannot work co-operatively for their own benefit, for the welfare of their industry and the common good of all farmers.

I am not going to enter into a discussion with the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) or some of the other members who spoke on all phases of agriculture, particularly in eastern Canada. The Leader of the Opposition had a very good opportunity yesterday to test the confidence of parliament in the matter of eastern agriculture or agriculture in general, but he passed up that opportunity. I think that if he had something to offer, some criticism to make, yesterday was the time to do so. Today he should have confined his remarks more closely to the matter under discussion.

The other point which has been raised consistently by speakers from the opposite side has been the suggestion that this legislation will help only the large farmers. They seem to be gravely concerned that this government, and the minister, is interested in helping only the large farmer. Possibly they represent the large farmers, but in my part of the country we have many small farmers, and I think this is the situation in much of eastern Canada. I feel this legislation will do the exact opposite of what they have suggested, and that it will be of real benefit to the small farmer. The large farmer does not have to depend on it; he has personal resources from which he can buy the type of machinery he needs most. The small farmer is not in such a favourable position. He must depend upon sources of credit such as are provided by this legislation in order to enable him to work in co-operation with his fellow farmers and purchase the type of machinery he requires. I think this is a very good piece of legislation—not perfect of course, but it is something new, something revolutionary, something farsighted, which members opposite can never see. It is something which will eventually, perhaps with improvement as may become necessary, benefit the small farmers of this country.

It has been suggested, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of Canada are not concerned about additional credit. I should like to refer for a moment to a brief which was submitted by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to the Prime Minister of Canada and the members of the cabinet on February 26. On the matter of farm credit, the federation stated, in part, as follows:

> The federation, at the federal-provincial agricultural conference in December of last year, made a number of submissions on farm credit to the government, urging in general much more intensive attention to farm credit needs, and the development of new programs. We will not repeat those representations here in full. In resolutions from our members, however, delegates to our annual meeting laid special emphasis on three immediate needs, which we would draw to your attention for early action:
> First, they reiterated our long standing request for special disaster loan legislation.

I need not tell hon. gentlemen that this is the very type of legislation which we have introduced, and which is already in the resolution stage. I refer to the crop reinsurance measure. This will provide one of the requests of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

Their second request was as follows:

> Second, the loan limit of the Farm Credit Corporation should be raised to $50,000.

We were even more generous than the Canadian Federation of Agriculture thought we should be. We raised it to $55,000. I continue to quote:

> Third, the loan limit on farm machinery under the Farm Improvement Loans Act should be raised to $10,000—

Again, we were more generous than requested. We have raised the limit to $15,000.

Finally the federation said:

> May we repeat that we feel well developed, flexible credit services to meet farm needs are of utmost importance and deserve more intensive investigation and research than they have received in the past.

I think this measure answers very thoroughly the concern of Canadian farm people in having better sources of capital available to finance their varied farm activities, particularly in relation to one of the most difficult aspects of agriculture farmers have faced in recent years, the high cost of farm machinery.

I believe I have concluded what I wanted to say in this connection. I do not believe anyone would suggest this is a perfect piece of legislation. It is something new and something which I believe may be improved as experience dictates from time to time. There are two things which, from a personal point of view, I should like to see changed. I would prefer to see a fixed interest rate rather than a flexible one, which varies according to the cost of money at any particular time. I should like to see the service charge of 1 per cent eliminated. I feel that as a country we are not doing as much for agriculture as other countries are doing, and I think particularly of the United States, Great Britain and many European countries. The amount of money we contribute as a percentage of our budget or as a percentage of our total agricultural production, certainly is not comparable to the amount provided in other countries. I think the government should absorb the cost of servicing these loans and we should establish a fixed interest rate.

I mentioned that my original conception of this legislation was somewhat different from the measure the minister has introduced. I want to state emphatically that we on this side unanimously support this particular piece of legislation. We strongly support the minister. We have discussed it. We have advocated it and we feel it is a measure that will benefit farmers in all parts of Canada. If the farmers in some parts of Canada are too prosperous to take advantage of it, I can assure the house there are many farmers in eastern Canada who will be very happy to take advantage of it and I feel they will benefit immeasurably from it.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): In rising to speak on the principle of this bill following the remarks of the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Mullally), I should like to refer to some of the things he mentioned. He asked certain questions and I will be only too glad to try to answer them. I should like to draw my answers from a document with which I am sure he is familiar. The caption is "A square deal for farmers". This is a pamphlet put out by the Liberal party in 1962, wherein they said they had all the answers.

This pamphlet sets forth the basic problem. It is stated that the basic farm problem is the cost-price squeeze on the farmer's income. This is an important thing to remember when we are considering this bill, which is to provide credit for the purchase of farm machinery by syndicates. The other point that should be raised at this time, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that this bill provides for setting aside $25 million for the purposes embodied in the bill. I should like to refer hon. members opposite to the fact that the estimates of the Department of Agriculture for this fiscal year amount to only $140 million. This measure apparently is so important it will require $25 million of the funds of this country in order to achieve the purposes for which this measure is designed and which, in my opinion, will affect less than 1 per cent of the Canadian farmers.

Those who want to know what could be done now for the farmers by way of legislation should look at the promises embodied in this election leaflet that was put out by hon. members opposite. I am just going to mention a few of those promises. These are some of the pledges made by the government and which were never fulfilled. In fact, no indication has been given that the government wants to move along these particular lines. First of all, you may think of the accelerated depreciation on farm machinery that was promised. You may think of the consumer subsidy that was promised on wheat going into domestic consumption. I think too of those promises that were made with regard to the stabilization act. What happened to the egg producers on the prairies during the last few months? I think too of the crop insurance legislation to which the hon. member referred when he mentioned disasters. The legislation to compensate for disaster promised by the government has nothing to do with the crop insurance legislation already on the statute books, and we have had no indication from the government of any legislation over and above the crop insurance legislation already enacted.

I also think of the impetus that could be given to ARDA in the areas where it applies. Mention was made today of the dairy problem in eastern Canada, and there was another promise made with regard to unemployment insurance for farm workers. That promise has been denied by the ministry and indications are that nothing will be done in that regard. I could go on through this long list of promises, and hardly one has been touched upon by the administration.

Rosthern constituency probably has more small farms in it than any other riding in Canada. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, this bill is one of the most useless pieces of legislation ever to come before parliament. I am opposed to the principle contained in the bill. I believe it is a dangerous piece of legislation and that its very terms are a denial of the things the minister himself stated on so many occasions during the past several months, when he said the primary aim of his department would be to try to meet the problem of the farm machinery cost-price squeeze.

This bill does not lower the price of farm machinery. When one considers that $25 million is being set aside by this measure, and when one thinks of all the other things that could be done for farm people, and for people in other walks of life, with that $25 million, there can be no other conclusion but that there should be much more important legislation to present than this bill. I am going to oppose it because I believe it is wrong and because I believe farm people will be unable to use its provisions to any great extent.

The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) said we have got to do something. That is the thinking across the aisle. They know they have to do something because they have not done anything so far. No one can deny that the Minister of Agriculture promised the farmers he would do something about the high price of farm machinery, but this bill will not in any appreciable way overcome that problem.

I believe this measure will encourage those speculative influences in agriculture that are likely to accelerate the destruction of the family farm. I am sure the speculators in western Canada will be much more interested in this measure than will farm people. It is an unthinkable thing that we are going to channel $25 million into this type of operation, after all the other legislation we have tried to enact over the years to help the family farm.

While there may be some—and their numbers will be limited—who will be able to use this legislation, its over-all effect will be to the detriment of the agricultural industry and it will be a retrograde step so far as farmers from one end of Canada to the other are concerned. Some have said this is daring legislation: I say it is foolhardy legislation.

To think we were told during the so-called flag debate that we were holding up something that was of importance, and now to be presented with this bill just reinforces the comments I made on the resolution stage when I said this was one of the weakest measures ever brought before parliament on behalf of the agricultural industry.

[Mr. Nasserden.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I just want to make one observation in reply to the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Mullally) who asked a very pertinent question on why the official opposition did not take the opportunity presented on the supply motion to challenge the government by bringing forward a motion of non-confidence. It is very simply answered by the fact that in May this year, on a supply motion, such a motion of non-confidence dealing with the problems of eastern agriculture, was presented, and on that motion the hon. gentleman himself spoke and made quite a worth-while contribution.

Members on the government side substantially voted against the motion of non-confidence and the official opposition, as well as all the other opposition parties, are now prohibited by the rules from presenting such a motion. It is impossible for the opposition parties to introduce it at this time.

Mr. Mullally: I thank the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the parliamentary secretary speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to close the debate. I simply want to observe that a number of questions have been asked and that the minister is expected to arrive for the eight o'clock reconvening of the house. I am sure he would like to have the opportunity at that time to answer these questions and to explain the bill further. So without regarding this as replying to the debate, may I call it six o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty pursuant to standing order 39A to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock on the adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp)—agriculture—poultry—inquiry as to steps to maintain prices.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette)—grants requested for the 1966 Quebec festival.

[Text]

Third, the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. More)—external affairs—appointment of Russian professor at University of Saskatchewan.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

FINANCE

ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING BROADENING OF INVESTMENT POWERS OF INSURANCE, TRUST AND LOAN COMPANIES—RETENTION OF CANADIAN CONTROL

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have the consent of the house to revert to motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gordon: I have asked permission to revert to motions at this time in order to make an announcement that should be made when financial markets are closed. It is my intention to introduce tomorrow a bill to amend certain acts administered in the department of insurance. This bill would amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act and the Loan Companies Act.

In my budget speech earlier this year I mentioned the government's intention to broaden the investment powers of insurance companies particularly in relation to investment in common shares in order to bring about an expanded Canadian market for shares of Canadian corporations; this was related to other steps being taken to encourage increased Canadian ownership of Canadian companies.

It has been evident for several years that there has been increasing concern about the problem of retaining Canadian ownership and control of Canadian enterprises and in particular of our financial institutions. The report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects recommended measures designed to retain control in Canada of these institutions. The report of the royal commission on banking and finance published earlier this year also expressed concern about Canadian control of our financial institutions, particularly of banks. In 1957 there were amendments to the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act with this objective in mind for life insurance companies.

But it is clear that the steps so far taken, while they have been effective to a degree, do not go far enough to provide assurance that we can retain an adequate measure of Canadian control over our institutions. The bill to be introduced tomorrow contains the amendments to investment powers referred to in my budget speech and, in addition, an amendment designed to retain in Canada control of those federally incorporated life insurance, trust and loan companies that remain in Canadian hands.

It will be proposed that the investment powers of insurance companies, trust companies and loan companies be amended particularly with relation to common shares. The limit on the investment in common shares would be raised from 15 per cent of a company's assets to 25 per cent and the eligibility provisions for common shares would be broadened.

A number of other changes are included, perhaps the most important being a change in the limit on mortgage loans to permit companies to lend up to 75 per cent of the value of the real estate instead of 66⅔ per cent as at present. The power of insurance companies to invest in real estate would be broadened and life insurance companies would be permitted to own subsidiary life insurance companies in foreign fields, subsidiary fire and casualty insurance companies in Canada and subsidiary real estate companies. For loan and trust companies, the limit on the amount that may be borrowed by a loan company or accepted in trust for investment by a trust company would be modified.

The other principal purpose of the bill, as I have already indicated, is to limit the extent to which non-residents may own and vote shares of the capital stock of federally incorporated Canadian life insurance companies, trust companies and loan companies. The bill would limit the total number of shares of the capital stock of a company that may be held by all non-residents taken together, to 25 per cent of the total number of issued shares, and would limit the number of shares that may be held by any one non-resident to 10 per cent of the total number of issued shares; shares held by shareholders associated with the non-resident also would be taken into account in determining the 10 per cent limit.

The proposals would not prevent shares being registered in the name of a Canadian resident where a non-resident is the beneficial owner, but in such cases no one would be permitted to exercise the voting rights pertaining to the shares so held.

No one would be permitted to exercise the voting rights pertaining to shares held directly by a non-resident or held for him by nominees if the total of the shares so held together with the shares held by or for shareholders associated with the non-resident exceeds 10 per cent of the issued shares of the company.

In order to prevent the purpose of the legislation from being defeated by transfers of shares between the date the bill is introduced and the date the legislation comes into force, and at the same time to avoid interfering with existing voting rights, the legislation would establish midnight tonight as a significant point of time in three respects. First, it will be proposed that if the directors of a company allow the entry in the company's books of any transfer of outstanding shares or allotment of newly issued shares to a non-resident after today that would increase the number of shares held by non-residents beyond 25 per cent of the total number of issued shares, no one will be permitted to exercise the voting rights pertaining to the shares so transferred or allotted so long as they continue to be held by or for a non-resident. In the case of a company that today has more than 25 per cent of its issued shares held by non-residents, this suspension of voting rights would apply only to transfers or allotments of shares that would increase the proportion of shares held by non-residents, but the voting rights pertaining to shares now held by non-residents would not be disturbed.

Second, the prohibition against the exercising of voting rights, applicable in the case of any holding of shares by or for a non-resident and associated shareholders that exceeds 10 per cent of the issued shares, would not apply to any such holdings that now exist. However, this exemption would cease if any such holding is increased after today.

Third, if more than 50 per cent of the shares of a company are, today, held by or for one non-resident, that company would be exempt from these limitations on the transfer of shares and the exercise of voting rights so long as that condition continues to exist.

[Mr. Gordon.]

I wish to remove any uncertainty which might otherwise exist following the introduction of this bill as to what will be proposed in the bills to amend the bank acts to be introduced later, concerning non-resident ownership and control. Provisions relating to this matter similar to those set forth in clause 3 of the bill to be introduced tomorrow and already described by me in this statement will be included in the bills to amend the bank acts, and these would also be effective after today to the extent that I have indicated for insurance, trust and loan companies.

I also want to make it clear that the proposals relating to non-resident ownership and control will not affect the great majority of normal market transactions in the shares of the institutions concerned. If trading is for resident ownership, these transactions are not affected at all. Transfers of shares between non-residents also will not be affected unless the transfer would cause a non-resident together with associated shareholders to own more than 10 per cent of the total number of issued shares.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): This statement by the Minister of Finance has, of course, very wide implications, first in the investment field with regard to the powers of investment of trust companies and also in the much more complicated area of the ownership of financial institutions such as life insurance companies, trust and loan companies and banks.

I recall back in 1957 the measures brought in by the minister of finance at that time to prevent through mutualization, the capture of Canadian life insurance companies by foreign companies, if they were subject to take-over attempts. However these measures never prevented the gradual buying-in of these institutions, and I think it is this practice that the minister is trying to curb at the present time. Subject to what we may have to say when we see the bill and have considered all its implications, I think we must commend the government generally on this attempt. This is very complicated legislation as we can see from the conditions which will apply as described on pages two and three of the statement. I think I will reserve my remarks on the complexities of the measure until we see the legislation, except to mention that it has some of the complexity of certain anterior legislation which was presented to us and which has not worked out so well.

As I see it, the measure proposed will certainly not bring back some of our major life insurance companies which have been taken over, companies where more than a 50 per cent interest is owned by foreign investors. I think the third paragraph on page three covers that situation; it will remain undisturbed.

There is one point I should like to draw to the attention of hon. members. Insurance companies are to be given additional powers to invest in real estate and they will also be able to invest in subsidiary fire and casualty insurance companies in Canada, as well as in subsidiary life insurance companies. I think this is right, because our companies, particularly our fire and casualty companies, have gradually been taken over one by one by foreign owned concerns who have possessed this power while our own people, who frankly could have done so, were prevented by law from so doing.

One cautionary note I would raise relates to investment in subsidiary real estate companies. If these are merely realty holding companies for the purchase of a company's own premises, then it is not so bad. But I would not like to see this provision used as a means of involvement in speculative estate companies, because if there is anything which will get the reserves of a financial concern into a real mess it's having them tied up in real estate. We need only go back to the early thirties to be reminded of the position of United States financial institutions in this regard.

I feel that any further comment at this time would be superfluous; we will await the introduction of the legislation before making any further comment. However it seems to me that generally this represents a move in the direction taken by the minister's immediate predecessor but one.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I think every member of the house will commend the minister on his purpose in bringing forward this legislation. We may have some doubts as to how efficacious its provisions are likely to be but I am sure no one will object to the objectives of this particular measure.

I am concerned about some of the administrative difficulties which may be involved in policing this legislation. I can foresee a number of difficulties in enforcing it. It may be they are not as serious as I think they are, but I should be glad to hear the minister explain later how it is intended to supervise these provisions.

We have, of course, been losing insurance companies right and left to investors next door, and I have not been able to make up my mind about this paragraph on page three regarding companies of whose shares 50 per cent or more are owned by non-residents. The implications of the exclusion of these companies from the legislation are not yet clear to me. It seems to me there may be many cases in which non-resident ownership may be slightly over 50 per cent and there is no reason why they should not be subject to this legislation. It may be, of course, there is some reason which escapes me at the moment.

However, I would think that eventually, if the minister really hopes to repossess Canadians of their financial institutions and prevent any further alienation, he may have to consider the possibility of using the apparently moribund Canadian development corporation as a means of generating public investment in such concerns in order to ensure their continued Canadian ownership. Of course, I am not yet sure what will happen, but I should like to think that the Canadian pension plan may provide some of the funds, through the Canadian development corporation, for such a development.

I am not sure how effective the prohibition of voting rights will be in some cases. While the votes may not be cast by some people whom the minister wishes to exclude, I suspect that their influence will be sufficient to have the acceptable votes cast in the way they wish it to be done. However, we shall have to wait until the text of the bill is before us for study. In the meantime I will conclude by saying again that we must commend the minister's efforts. He is still pursuing his goal with commendable perseverance in spite of some mishaps in the past, and I sincerely hope he will not meet with any mishaps on this occasion. We shall have more to say when the bill comes before us.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): I wish to say only that we shall be very interested in seeing this legislation. Indeed, until it is brought before us I do not think there is anything further which needs to be said.

We hope that when we come to consider the revision of the bank acts, however, we shall find that certain financial institutions now excluded will be able to make mortgage loans so as to help prevent the alienation of our resources which has taken place in the past, due to the fact that the banks of this country have been unable to extend loans on the basis of first mortgages. I think this is most important.

With those few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will just say that we will be interested to see what the legislation has to offer when it is before us.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, when we are handed a copy of a statement, such as the one the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) made, only a few moments before the minister takes the floor, it is obviously far more difficult to make any comments than when we can study a document for a number of days. I would nevertheless like to make a few remarks about this statement.

The object is to try to maintain at least some of the control we have over our investments and our economy and, if possible, to increase Canadian control.

To achieve that purpose, the Minister of Finance intends to make changes in order to facilitate investments by Canadian insurance and loan companies as well as trust companies. By the same token, it would be more difficult for those insurance, loan and trust companies, which are not Canadian residents to make investments in our Canadian economy.

We are thus trying to dry up somewhat sources of capital from foreign companies.

Has the minister provided for new domestic sources of capital to replace capital coming from foreign insurance, loan and trust companies? For it is obvious that if one source of capital is being limited in a country, in a developing country like Canada, other sources of capital will have to be found to fill the gap.

Does the Minister of Finance feel that under the system he now proposes to introduce Canadian companies alone will be able to discharge the obligations they assumed in the past and, at the same time, replace the capital provided by foreign companies?

Does the minister expect another source of capital to replace the foreign investments which will now be more strictly regulated? In my opinion, that is a point which deserves serious consideration.

We are in favour of investments by Canadian companies but, considering the needs of our expanding economy, if a source of foreign capital is sealed off, the Minister of Finance must think about getting the necessary capital elsewhere.

As far as we are concerned we have suggested several sources to him, and we hope that some day he will accept one of our suggestions.

Mr. Speaker, one of my colleagues calls my attention to the fact that if those investment sources coming from foreign companies are cut off, there remains the government of British Columbia with Canadian capital to lend in order to promote the economic development of our country. Besides, Alberta is also in the same position. It may be that the Minister of Finance is depending on those two Social Credit provinces to replace the capital which used to come from foreign insurance, loan or trust companies. Fortunately, he can depend on those two Social Credit governments in Canada to replace those foreign sources of investment capital.

The second point I wish to bring to the attention of the house concerns the provisions of the act giving those companies powers to invest 15 per cent in other companies or to buy common shares of other companies. Under the new legislation announced by the minister, that proportion would be increased to 25 per cent. But, in this case, according to what the Minister of Finance just stated, this same increase from 15 to 25 per cent to be allowed in future for those trust, insurance or loan companies to buy common shares will apply to foreign companies as well as to Canadian firms.

Did the minister figure out the proportion of foreign insurance, loan and trust companies which will benefit from this increase from 15 to 25 per cent?

Mention is made of the fact that the voting right will be given to 10 per cent only of the shareholders, but we find today a certain attitude among the directors of foreign companies. As a matter of fact, some directors of foreign companies doing business in Canada have made it their practice to let the voting of shares to Canadians. They are satisfied with going back to their respective countries with the profits.

Will the mere fact of depriving the voting rights of shareholders who own too large a percentage of shares be sufficient to limit their investments or their purchase of shares in such insurance, loan or trust companies? In my opinion the present trend proves the contrary.

A third point to which I call the attention of the house is that the Minister of Finance has just announced that mortgage loan companies will now be authorized to lend up to 75 per cent of the real estate value, instead if 66⅔ per cent.

I hope that in his new bill the Minister of Finance gave some thought to limiting the rise of interest rates on those loans, because we must admit that there is now a greater risk, since the loan company will be entitled to lend up to 75 per cent, instead of 66⅔ per cent of the real estate value. Therefore, it would be appropriate to see to it that interest on mortgage loans, which is already quite high, be not further increased by this bill.

Mr. Speaker, all the Minister of Finance just told us will certainly be of interest to several committees. There is the loan question which is of interest to the consumers credit committee, the matter of the Bank Act amendment, which concerns the proposed committee to study the Porter report; then, there is the committee to be set up on the new Bank Act.

I therefore hope that those new bills will be referred to the various committees, so that hon. members of this house may discuss them further and question experts in those fields, in order that they may be in a better position in future to suggest proper amendments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The house will now resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

FARM MACHINERY

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR PURCHASES BY SYNDICATES

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hays for the second reading of Bill No. C-121, to provide for the extension of credit to farm machinery syndicates.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on Bill C-121 I must first of all point out that at the time this bill was in the resolution stage I had many fears in respect of what it might do for Canadian agriculture, and many fears as to what it would do to the family farm position in this country. At that time I was assured by the minister that all my questions and fears were without foundation and would be dispelled when the bill was brought forward. We now have the bill, and as far as I am concerned I still see cause for questions and fears in respect of this supposed syndicate legislation.

There is no question but that today's agricultural picture represents a very important part of Canada's economy, and that money and management are the keys to agricultural success. Perhaps 20 or 30 years ago hard labour and long hours might well have been written in the record as being the key words to success on a farm. Today money and management might be said to be the two key factors in promoting and ensuring success on the farm. But as legislators we must ask ourselves what type of agriculture we are promoting. What types of farms do we foresee in the future? Several different pictures could be painted, one not necessarily in contradiction of the other, but nevertheless different modes of agricultural life exist in the world today. We look at Canada where we have a free enterprise type of agriculture, a personalized type of management in the operation of farms throughout Canada, with every farmer working and managing his own farm, looking after his own machinery and achieving one of the highest degrees of productivity throughout the world.

From time to time people take tours of Canada to study our agriculture. Not very long ago the Russian minister of agriculture toured Canada in an effort to ascertain why we were so successful in this country while they were not. What type of agriculture do we have in this country? As I pointed out, we have personalized management, a personal concern for profits, a personal effort on the part of the owner to make sure that he makes a comfortable living and is able to sustain himself. What type of agriculture does Russia have? One might say it is collective, one might say it is managed, but one can also say it is a syndicated type of operation for the welfare of the state and not necessarily for the welfare of the individual.

How much different is that from what this legislation will promote? This legislation establishes syndicates which will benefit the managers, but will it necessarily benefit the workers? How different is what this type of legislation promotes from the type of agriculture carried on in Russia today? Farms in that country are managed by the state and under this definition they would be syndicates with the workers taking care of the machinery.

In an article in a rural paper in western Canada the minister of agriculture from the U.S.S.R. pointed out that they have difficulties in that country because farm machinery is not looked after and the operators do not care because they do not own it. He said that he thought there was a difference. The minister and those with him visited farms in Saskatchewan and Manitoba where there were tractors and other machinery 10 years old and they wondered why they were in such good condition. The answer they were given was: "It is mine, I look after it". That is the key to the management of farms across Canada today. How will that be promoted and extended by this legislation?

Mr. Moreau: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Dandy; shoot.

Mr. Moreau: Does he see any element of compulsion in this legislation? Does anyone have to take part who does not want to?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In the economic climate of today the compulsion arises in that if a farmer is not able to survive today on a small farm he may be enticed into a syndicate and he may end up a worker with a manager managing him and the machinery. That is the compulsive aspect of this legislation. It offers very little to the small farmer other than to entice him into something he may feel is better than he now has, but 10 years from now he will wake up having lost what he now has and with a sore back besides.

I have looked at the bill very closely, Mr. Speaker. I studied it over the week end and thought about it a great deal. I am a practising farmer and I realize the important part that money plays in the agricultural world today. I want to see as much money as possible made available to farmers across Canada. I read in the Lethbridge Herald that this legislation was going to revolutionize the agricultural economy and reduce machinery costs. This was the advance billing for this legislation, but I wonder how it is going to reduce costs and how it is going to revolutionize the agricultural economy?

It must be borne in mind that first of all as I take my place in this house I am a legislator. Today in this debate I am concerned with agriculture. How is this measure going to revolutionize the agricultural economy? I fear syndicate farming. As a practising farmer nothing has annoyed me more than to see neighbouring farms in my district being managed by non-resident farmers, by someone living in the city. I say that the land is for those who love it. The land is for those who are prepared to work, not for a syndicate, not for a manager and not for the state as in Russia where they have syndicate farms. Let us beware of this proposed legislation.

Before anyone goes astray let me say with regard to the co-operative buying of machinery that on my own farm I now have five pieces of machinery which I own jointly with my neighbours. This is fine. It works out well. But they are all small pieces of machinery which are not needed for any specific time in the cycle of work being done on the farm. They can be used this week or the week after. There is no urgent requirement. That type of machine can be bought co-operatively, but in most cases such machines are not too expensive, so few farmers really need to form a syndicate to purchase them.

Let us look at farm machinery costs today. I believe that in 1963 something like $228 million was spent for the purchase of farm machinery. Let us analyse that a bit. Fifty per cent of that amount was spent on tractors. We know the type of tractor the minister likes. He told us all about it one time in Alberta. I think it was a 1928 model. But that is not the solution for today's farming. Most farmers across Canada own more than one tractor. Look at the statistics, if you doubt it. Fifty per cent of the money spent on farm machinery is spent on tractors. Many farmers across Canada have three of four tractors and most have more than one. Therefore very few farmers are going to form a syndicate for the purchase of tractors.

If we go down the list we find that harvesting equipment represents something like 25 per cent of the total machinery cost. The rest is split up among seeding and tillage implements, dairying equipment and so on. What I am trying to point out is that so far as the machines used in the daily agricultural life of most farmers are concerned you do not have to form a syndicate to buy them. To what machines would this legislation apply and whom would it benefit? These are the two points with which we must concern ourselves. To deal first with who will benefit from this legislation, I have read the remarks of the parliamentary secretary in which he said that he feels this legislation will benefit small farmers just as much as big farmers. I fail to see this because it is stated quite clearly in the bill that on syndicate loans a promissory note must be signed by each person in the syndicate accepting full responsibility for the full amount borrowed. Surely this points up, Mr. Speaker, that no small farmer is going to mortgage his family farm simply for the benefit of four or five other persons who want to enter into a syndicate. This is what the small farmer will have to put on the line. I feel that the legislation will only help large farmers. By far the greatest amount of the help will go to the large farmers and a certain amount to the person who has used up all other available credit who is in the position that he still finds himself short of money and the investments he has made, while the very best, have not yet started to make any returns to him. He still needs more credit in order to earn his livelihood. He will then turn to this piece of legislation and use this method of borrowing money because he will have used up all the credit available elsewhere. This will be another avenue through which he hopes to be successful. These are the two types of people I feel will be making the greatest use of this piece of legislation.

During the course of the discussion at the resolution stage, I asked the minister to define this term "farm machinery". According to Webster's dictionary machinery is defined as the assemblage of contrivances employed in the development of a piece of work. This would cover nearly all machinery. I am sure that many legal minds could be turned to the question of the definition of farm machinery. Certainly in the agricultural field as we see it today we know that one could have a small piece of land and spend a great deal of money intensifying the development of that piece of land, or one could turn his thoughts to buying more land and thereby, in a broad sense of the term, give himself more machinery to increase his income. The parliamentary secretary stated that he realized that this would be a point at which a definition would have to be made clear. He said however this would be left to the regulation stage.

I do not feel that is good enough. I feel that before we are asked to pass this bill the terms pertaining to it should be clearly defined. These definitions should not be left to the officials, and that is what the parliamentary secretary meant when he said they would be left to the regulation stage. This is not good enough. The term "farm machinery" has so far eluded definition in so far as legislation before this house has been concerned. We see farm machinery defined in the tariff act. We see farm machinery defined in many other pieces of legislation, and every definition is slightly different. Farm machinery, in the broad sense, is supposed to be duty free, yet many pieces of farm machinery used in agriculture today carry a duty. The 11 per cent sales tax is paid on some farm machinery, although it was understood farm machinery was exempt from the 11 per cent sales tax. This results from the fact there is no precise over-all definition of farm machinery.

When I looked at this bill I did not see any definition of this term. I thought perhaps I had missed some of the remarks made by the minister or someone else. I looked for some definition of these words but failed to find it. The only reference I found was that we would leave it to the regulations. Are we to pass something blind? Are we to pass something without knowing what we are doing? Certainly I do not believe we should. This bill which seems to contain a suggestion for the promotion of syndicate farming, non-resident farming, may well get everybody into the farming business. This happened a few years ago in the United States. Everyone who had a little money to spare invested in land in the southern states. They plowed it up and grew wheat. This was in the early fifties. From that year on, they have had a surplus of wheat and the land has blown completely out of the country. Large machines were used to plow up tremendous acreages, and the dust bowl of northern Texas and most of the southern states was created because big business got into farming and did not give any consideration to the land which was farmed. Most farmers today use fertilizers. They protect their land so that their sons and their son's children may earn a living from the land. They are building for the future and do not want to deplete the land.

What will happen to his particular theme when the syndicates take over? Will they be interested in the future of the land? Will they be interested in depleting the soil or replenishing the soil? I say, Mr. Speaker and fellow members, before we pass this bill this question should be answered. You can pick up any farm magazine you want across Canada, whether it be concerned with eastern agriculture or western agriculture, and you will find the theme is to maintain your basic asset. We, through this government, supply assistance for the supply of lime to replenish the soil in eastern Canada and we do relatively the same thing for western agriculture. Our prime concern is to maintain our basic asset which we are so fortunate to have in this country. Certainly, our land is our big asset. What effect will syndicate farming have on this natural asset?

There are those who feel that this bill will help the small farmer. How will it help the small farmer? We have just passed in this house amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act permitting a farmer to borrow up to $15,000 at 5 per cent interest. Why will the small farmer not use this piece of legislation rather than use the measure we are discussing now to borrow money at 6¼ per cent or even 7 per cent? No, Mr. Speaker, you come back to my original thought that those who will use this piece of legislation have used all their credit elsewhere and will view this as another avenue which may afford one ray of hope to enable them to be a success in the business world.

What will it do to reduce the cost of machinery? One may well say that it will allow a certain machine to spread itself over more acreage, thereby reducing the cost of the machine per acre. If this theory really held true, one could only come to the conclusion that Russia, with its communes, must be very successful. They buy machines for the optimum amount of use. The Russian minister of agriculture pointed this out quite vividly while touring Canada. I noticed a report of his conversation with one farmer who was using a tractor that was 10 or 11 years old. The Russian minister of agriculture asked how it happened the machine was in such good condition. The farmer replied that it was his and he looked after it.

I notice a provision in the bill to the effect that arrangements for repairs must be clearly set out in advance before the syndicate is set up. No one can foretell when a certain machine will break down or why it will break down. The fault may have been building up over the years. It is difficult to assess who does the greatest amount of damage to a machine and who should repair it. In my experience of operating and maintaining five different implements with my neighbours, we have had no trouble in this regard. But if those machines were costly, and were bought for something like $75,000, $80,000 or $90,000, we might quibble long and hard over where a machine should be repaired and who should pay for the repairs.

Many farmers may look upon this bill as a ray of hope to alleviate their problems brought about by being situated in an uneconomic farming area where the agricultural business they carry on is not economic itself. They may form syndicates and give the lawyers lots of business, but in a few years they may well find themselves disappointed. This is no solution to the agricultural problem.

Mr. Roxburgh: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Certainly.

Mr. Roxburgh: I am just wondering whether the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) is against this bill?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The hon. member's curiosity will be satisfied in due course. I am in the process of making up my mind. I see many things in this legislation to which I am opposed, and unless the minister can allay my fears that this will not promote the type of agriculture I do not like I will vote against it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Why should I, as a farming legislator, support something that I do not think is going to maintain the type of agriculture in which I believe? I ask the hon. member, and all other hon. members on that side of the house who represent rural constituencies, to take this bill home tonight and ask themselves, will it promote the family farm, and then come back tomorrow and tell me why it will?

Mr. Roxburgh: It will promote the family farm.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Tell me why it will.

Mr. Roxburgh: I can tell you—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member who has the floor should not be interrupted.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am glad to see one hon. member over there rise on his feet and try to answer my questions. This bill has been knocked about for a week and very few members have said it will promote the family farm. I say to the hon. member, let him make his speech on this legislation. Prove to me right down—a, b, c, and d—that this will promote the established family farm. How does syndicating help the family farm?

How does syndicating help the farmer's son take over a farm when his father dies? The farm may well be involved in a syndicate, and after the lawyers are through he may have nothing left.

Mr. MacEwan: An hon. member, "Oh, oh."

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That may have been a bit harsh on the lawyers, but this is part of the concern farmers in my area have about this legislation. It might well be said that this measure could be helpful in land clearing and land levelling. I live reasonably adjacent to an irrigation area, and I have done a bit of irrigating myself.

An hon. Member: And aerating.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have done a little bit of land levelling myself, and I know once a piece of land is levelled it requires very little levelling, from there on in. A certain amount can be done by a farmer with standard equipment, but once the initial land levelling has been done, what are the farmers who form a syndicate to do with a big caterpillar complete with dirt moving equipment—equipment they have bought for a certain job? Land watering might also be assisted by this bill, but P.F.R.A. has done a tremendous amount of work in western Canada. Is it going to be stopped if this legislation becomes law?

If the government is interested in promoting the family farm it should not ask farmers to level and drain their own land at a cost of 7 or 6½ per cent interest. It should be aiding the development of the land, because there is only so much land, and it is our greatest resource. It is the government's duty to aid the better utilization of land, and for some time now a Senate committee has been studying this question. Certainly the government has an important part to play.

I have with me a sheet of paper outlining Liberal party promises during the election, and one item that catches my eye speaks of better farm markets. If this legislation aided farmers to form syndicates to run marketing organizations, then I might say yes. The hon. member who asked me a question a while ago might himself syndicate a tobacco marketing agency, even though this would be contrary to the health recommendations of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh), but he might do that nevertheless, because his is a tobacco producing riding.

I see in this measure legislation to speed up the wealthy people's takeover of small farms. Right across the country small farms are under-capitalized and under-mechanized, and in many areas you have wealthy farmers buying up small farms. Many economists have said the quicker this happens the better it will be for all, but I do not agree with them because I believe Canadian agriculture has many opportunities for diversification. Both the federal and provincial parliaments should promote diversification in agriculture, and might even subsidize the promotion of certain types of agriculture in specific areas.

We should not allow small farms to be taken over by syndicates, particularly syndicates which do not consist of farmers. Under this measure only a majority of them have to be farmers and the others may be doctors, lawyers, machine agents, or what we in western Canada call wealthy tycoons. They may take over land from the small operator, put him out of business and run his farm from their office desks. Is this the type of agriculture we want in this country? In Saskatchewan studies have been made of this particular question. These studies were carried out not too many years ago, in the early 1950's. The social life of the farmer is a very important part of maintaining a happy farm life and a happy farm existence. This is perhaps why the Minister of Agriculture does not like to be called a farmer; maybe he did not have a happy upbringing on the farm. Perhaps this is why he thinks farmers should not be called farmers but should be called grocery growers or food manufacturers. But any farmer who enjoys living on a farm does not mind being called a farmer. Any farmer who loves the land and is prepared to work the land loves being called a farmer; this name does not bother him one bit.

But what does this legislation do to the person who has not enough money, who has not enough good land to eke out a fair standard of living? The wealthy syndicate can put him out of business, take over his land and, in conjunction with many other enterprises, perhaps he will be allowed to manage it. What does it do to farm life? Ask any farmers who have around their communities a number of farms managed by non-resident farmers. They play no part in the social life of the community, because they are in the cities. They play no part in or make no contribution toward what one might well say is one of the benefits of living on a farm; they take no part in the community life, which is so well liked and cherished by the farmers who know it and have lived in it.

I say in closing, Mr. Speaker, that I hope the minister can allay many of the fears I have with regard to this legislation. My fear is that it will do nothing to promote the family farm; that it will promote the type of agriculture to which I am opposed. In the advance billing of this legislation it was suggested that this bill would vastly change the agricultural economy of this country. This is what I am afraid of. How is it going to change our agricultural economy? I fear it is going to change it in such a way that we will no longer have family farms such as the one on which I was raised and on which many farmers were raised. People will not enjoy life on the farm or being part of a family enterprise.

As I see it, this bill will be the first piece of legislation ever brought in by a federal government that is directly detrimental to that type of existence. Unless the minister can convince me that I am wrong in this regard, I have no alternative but to oppose this legislation. On the other hand, my opening remarks were that money and management may well be the key to good farming in this agricultural world in which we live. But if this government is to put up the money, if any government is to put up the money, they must direct their help to those who need it. The wealthy, whether they be in farming or any other business, are well able to look after themselves. I hope I am wrong about this legislation. I hope this money which is going into agriculture will benefit agriculture as we know it in Canada today. I hope it will promote and maintain the farm managed by the farmer for the benefit of the farmer and his family.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I for one am not apprehensive of this legislation as long as the syndicate is composed of farmers who really are working the land. I have only one suggestion to make to the minister in connection with this legislation. I think serious thought should be given to having these loans insured against the death of one of the participants. I do not think it would be very difficult to get the legislation changed in such a way that an insurance policy could follow the loan, whereby if one of the partners of the syndicate passes on, that part will be paid up and it will not be a burden on the other participants or the widow, as the case may be.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see that we have another bill before us which purports to help the farmer. As so often happens in this free discussion group here, a previous speaker rises and steals a great deal of your thunder. I could not have said better than the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) the things which are very close to my heart in connection with farming problems.

If the house will bear with me for a few minutes, there are one or two matters I wish to bring to the attention of the minister. I think we must consider very carefully the principle behind this bill. What are we going to do to farming in general? It is only a few years ago that our main problem, apparently—I do not say that I agree with this entirely—was that we had already produced too many agricultural products and we were starving in the midst of plenty. At that time our main problem was to find markets. I think the main problem is still to find markets. If the main efforts of our government were spent on marketing our products and making sure that the hungry people of the world were fed, for instance, and that our prices in the world market were such that credit arrangements, and so forth, meant we were able to sell our goods, I think most of the smaller problems such as financing the farm would disappear. I say this because if the farmers all across Canada had a ready market for their products, many of our problems in agriculture would disappear. I think it is safe to say that we are the only country in the world with far more virgin soil to be developed than we have developed so far. We have not yet reached our potential in farm production on the land we have. If our main effort is going to be toward feeding the world—and I think that is what it should be—and if marketing is to be our main objective, I believe this government should carry on in the vein in which we carried on in the six years we held office. We concentrated on the marketing of our goods, and, behold, many of the problems in agriculture were reduced.

Looked at from the human point of view, I for one was raised on the farm. I have no apologies to make for that because I think farming is now and always has been the most noble of all human endeavours. The feeding of people in our own country and then feeding the hungry people of the world is a blessing to mankind. This is certainly the role Canada can play far and above any other country, and this is the effort we should be making in this regard.

We want to keep people on the farm. I think the principle of this bill is entirely wrong. As the hon. member for Acadia said, this bill stresses making available large funds to farmers. They are certainly large funds to a small farmer or to a group of small farmers, if they can borrow up to $100,000. I do not think it is the financing of the farm that is the bottleneck. This bill purports to aid farmers in obtaining farm machinery and, I presume, at something like reasonable prices. What in the world is the use of a bill that requires the forming of syndicates, that requires considerable expense in getting together in a legal group, with all sorts of guarantees? How in the world will this reduce the price of farm machinery?

I do not see how this could do anything except raise the price by at least 1 per cent. That is written into the bill. It will cost money to administer the scheme and the cost of administration will be borne by the farmers themselves. So if we agree that this bill sets out to help the small farmer —and I do not think it does—it would begin by adding at least 1 per cent to the cost of machinery bought under its provisions.

It may be a little more efficient to have one large tractor working on five farms, but my experience is that this is not possible. If there is a need to purchase one large piece of machinery I can see the need for a syndicate. But five farmers do not need a syndicate in order to get five tractors. Each farmer will naturally look after his tractor much better if he owns it outright and does not have to haggle with four other men. Rightly or wrongly, the Canadian farmer is a very independent person indeed. If he did not love his freedom I do not think he would go out and spend all the years necessary to put a farm into proper shape. This takes many long years of work not only by the farmer himself but by his family, gratis, and when they have produced a family farm they do not want four other farmers to help them run it.

I believe this is a thinly disguised way of providing assistance to corporate farming; I think this is the purpose behind the legislation, which is nothing less than a sop to this creeping socialism which is so prevalent in our country today.

The independent farmers in my own district, and I am speaking principally of them, each own between a quarter section and a section of land. Each needs one tractor. What they are worried about is certainly not the borrowing of $100,000 for more machinery. What they are worried about is getting a reasonable return for what they produce. If they can market their goods at reasonable prices they do not mind paying a reasonable price for machinery. It would take great ingenuity, I know, under our free enterprise system to devise a bill which would bring about a reduction in the price of a small tractor to the family farmer. But this is what he wants and this is what I should like to see him get. The small family farmer is worried about other things and I suggest the minister should turn his attention to other assistance measures which are of far more value even than lowering the cost of farm machinery, among them a guaranteed income. I do not go so far as to say that the department is actually against the small farmer, but I do believe the effect of this legislation will mean that the small farm will become smaller and smaller and that the large farm will become ever larger.

Do we want this trend to continue? We have heard a great deal lately about western farmers being in such good shape that they do not require any further assistance. This could be true of the large grain farmers because in the last two or three years they have found a market for their grain. But by far the major proportion of the farmers in northern Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are small farmers. They are unable to pay the excessively high prices required today for machinery. Labour is short. It is necessary now for a farmer to farm his own land and the argument that the large farm or corporation farm is more efficient is not a good enough answer for us in Canada.

As hon. members opposite well know, because it is their pigeon now, we face a folding up of many railway branch lines. One reason for this is that there are fewer people living on the land. It takes a courageous government to reverse this trend, a trend which I say is wrong. A corporate farm may be able to produce wheat at $1.20 a bushel whereas normally it would cost $1.40, but we will always require in Canada a strong, independent minded people who come from rural surroundings. I do not think there is a man in this house who if he were to look into his ancestry, would find himself more than three generations off the farm. When families move into the cities, they die out. I challenge anybody in this house to say he can look back for three generations and not find that his grandparents or great-grandparents came from the farm. This is a heritage we have to preserve, and that is why I ask the house to consider this whole matter very carefully. This new economic religion we are preaching today, this religion of efficiency, efficiency, efficiency, may have a serious effect on the future of our country.

Mr. Kindt: May I ask the hon. member for Athabasca a question? This afternoon in my speech on this subject I mentioned the percentage of farmers in my riding who I thought would be making use of this legislation. What is the view of the hon. member with respect to the constituency of Athabasca, where there are a large number of small farmers? Would it be 1 per cent, or would it be less?

Mr. Bigg: I think 1 per cent would be a liberal estimate, if I may use that term. Certainly the suggestion contained in this legislation has never been put forward to me, and I have attended every farmers meeting in my district during the past six years. I have never attended a farmers meeting without this question being put to me—and I admit it is a difficult one to answer: How can we reduce the cost of farm machinery on the family farm? If the present bill purports to do that, I think it is a colossal failure. I cannot see that by adding legal costs to the already extremely high cost of farm machinery we shall be doing a thing to help the farmers.

But we must do more than try to reduce the initial cost of farm machinery. I understand from the farmers in my area that they are greatly concerned at the present time at the cost of maintenance and repairs. I will give hon. members a concrete example. Only two years ago I was out in a harvest field with one of the farmers in my constituency. Some time earlier his combine had broken down. He had sent his son to town for the spare part required and his son eventually arrived with the piece of repair material. It was a chain. No doubt some members will recognize it when I describe it as an elevating chain for hoisting grain into the combine where it is threshed. The farmer showed it to me and said: "What do you think would be a fair price for that?" Well, it was two pieces of chain a little heavier than bicycle chain, about 20 feet long—two chains 20 feet long very similar to bicycle chain, built the same way. And there were crossed slats set about 15 inches apart, made of bent aluminum. I looked at it. I am not a machinist but it seemed to me that allowing for the automation they have in industry, facilities for turning out this kind of thing by mass production, $50 would be a fair price. Believe me I was giving what I thought was a liberal estimate of a fair price for that piece of machinery. Well, it cost that farmer $248. It was just five times the price I thought it should be. I have had some experience on the farm. I have also worked in a hardware store. Yet I could not see how this was worth more than $50 in any circumstances.

This is the kind of problem which alarms the small farmer. His turnover is not large and after he has paid $9,000 for a combine he is worried about the cost of keeping it in operation. What are we going to do about that? That is perhaps a difficult question to answer. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture and the officials of his department might call together the manufacturers of farm machines and ask them what they intend to do about lowering the cost of farm machinery and repairs.

This whole situation is not a one-way street. We are not shy about asking the farmer to put his shoulder to the wheel in time of war to produce more and more food and peg the prices of his products. Why cannot the farm machinery manufacturers do something to reduce the cost of repairs?

I am not so cynical that I believe the Massey-Ferguson people are not interested in the welfare of this country and particularly the farmer. Well, they should be interested because if my figures are accurate their profit for this year exceeded the profit for any year in their history, and at a time when the farmers of this country are asking this government to do something about reducing the price of farm machinery. I think there should be a limit to the profits of the farm machinery manufacturer. What would people do if the farmers were to create a monopoly on food, holding it on the farms until they received an exorbitant price? I am sure every newspaper and member of parliament, particularly those representing urban ridings, would castigate the farmers of this country if they held their grain on the farm until they received $4, $5, $6 or $7 per bushel. The people of this country would become alarmed if that situation occurred.

The Minister of Agriculture should make some attempt, in co-operation with farm machinery manufacturing companies, to reduce the cost of farm machines and repairs to farm implements. The Liberals and Conservatives, being members of the two free enterprise supporting parties in this house, should get together with management in an attempt to find a solution to this price squeeze problem. Let us challenge the manufacturers to find a solution to this problem.

No one who has heard me speak in this house could think that I am a socialist. I am against socialism in all its creeping forms. I do not think that the Saskatchewan river dam project is a socialist project but rather an investment in which we should all share. I do not think subsidies paid in certain circumstances, particularly in respect of freight rates for the shipment of livestock, is representative of socialism, but some people would make that suggestion. However, I am opposed to this kind of legislation and suggest that it is a socialistic measure, because it in effect states that individual farmers can no longer own and operate their own farms and at the same time obtain assistance under the provisions of this bill. It suggests that farmers must form a corporation of three, five, seven or a million. The basic principle of strength in our economic national life has always been that one man may own and operate his own farm. I am against corporation farming in all its phases. I think it is very dangerous to have more than half of the production of food in Canada being produced by corporations.

This bill states that the majority of people to be assisted under this farming legislation must be farmers. It is astounding that that fact must be spelled out in this legislation. I suggest that the Minister of Agriculture has spelled that out in this bill in an attempt to bring a halt to the trend toward the complete takeover by corporations of farming in Canada. I think we should take a very serious look at the situation. I do not think it is wise to turn our land over to corporations and allow them to produce all our food, including grains, poultry and cattle. Why must we spell out in a bill as this that the majority of individuals to benefit will be farmers, and then limit the assistance to groups or corporations? I do not wish to name the corporations, but the effect of this legislation will be that those groups will be able to obtain vast sums of money for the purchase of farm machinery with which to operate in direct competition with the small farmer of the type I represent, who on his own is unable to obtain the same assistance.

The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt) suggested perhaps 1 per cent of the wheat farmers in western Canada would benefit as a result of this legislation. I do not believe that one quarter of 1 per cent of the wheat farmers in western Canada will benefit. I think the benefit of this legislation will be reaped by those corporations which are engaged, and are becoming engaged, in farming. As long as the government is assisting these corporations by guaranteeing prices and developing markets farming will be profitable on that basis.

I do not believe in nor will I support anything that tends to assist and encourage large groups or corporations to buy farms from the individual farmers who have worked all their lives to make a living. I would support any kind of legislation which would help make it possible for the boys and girls who have been raised on the small family farms in Canada to take over those farms from their parents and operate them as family farms, and I will not support any legislation of the kind that suggests men should gather together in groups or corporations in order to operate farms in Canada. People should be allowed to group together of their own volition, and I am thinking in terms of the Hutterite colonies which exist in Alberta. In many cases even they are being persecuted, but if they wish to gather together in that fashion it is their right to do so. I do not think people should be forced to form corporations in order to take advantage of assistance offered by the government.

The Minister of Agriculture may well suggest that there is nothing in this legislation to compel farmers to form groups, but the only way they can take advantage of the provisions of this legislation is by doing exactly that. If a group of individuals wish to obtain $100,000 for the purchase of farm machinery they must form a group or corporation and assume liability jointly and severally.

Cheaper farm machinery cannot be obtained by hiring a lawyer to incorporate a group or by incurring the expenses of civil servants to inspect the farms to ascertain whether they are good risks. Let us do something about reducing the cost of farm machinery. Let us do something about reducing the cost of maintaining that machinery. Once we do that thousands of individual farmers across this country will believe that we are assisting them.

The only excuse I can find for the minister in respect of this legislation is that he does not fully understand the effect of it. If he does fully understand the effect of the provisions in this bill and realizes that it is a form of socialism, supported by those members to my left, then this legislation is worse than it appears on the surface.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Bigg: Certainly.

Mr. Herridge: Does the hon. member realize that the people he is referring to in this part of the house also have some criticism to express in respect of this bill, while supporting the general principle?

Mr. Bigg: I am criticizing the hon. members in that part of the house on the basis of their support for creeping socialism. It is bad enough when the government does not know that the essence of this bill embraces a creeping socialism, but if the government is aware of this fact then they are completely selling out Liberal principles.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member answer another question? Are the members of his party going to support this bill?

Mr. Bigg: I sincerely hope that they will not, and that is one of the reasons I am taking part in this debate. I do not think my words fall entirely on deaf ears. If I can show hon. members that this legislation is not in the interests of the average small farmer in Canada I am sure some hon.

members, even in your party, will be broad-minded enough to oppose it.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if I have offended the hon. member by my castigation of socialism, but when considering the end result of this proposed legislation one must realize that it is a form of socialism. I commenced my remarks along that particular line.

The principles of this bill should be thoroughly understood before we are called upon to make a decision. If there is any provision in this bill which in the end result will be of assistance to the family farm I will support it, but I do not believe that to be the case. If there is anything in this bill which will promote the welfare of the individual farmer in this country I will support it, but I think we must look at the end result of its provisions before coming to a final conclusion. I do not think any provision of this bill will promote that welfare, but will in fact do quite the contrary—increase the cost of farm machinery. I think this legislation is a smokescreen behind which the ministers can hide. We are being asked by this legislation in effect to sign several blank cheques. I do not think we fully appreciate exactly what this bill will accomplish.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I bring to the attention of the hon. member that on second reading we are limited to a study and consideration of the principles of a bill, and the hon. member cannot discuss a study or consideration of individual clauses.

Mr. Bigg: I have been trying to establish the principle of the bill as well as I can. I think any hasty legislation loses sight of the principle, and it is the principle of the bill which I am attacking, I hope with some approbation in the house. I am sure that anybody who believes in free enterprise will say that the emphasis should be upon individual, free enterprise and that people should not be forced into corporations. Perhaps in other industries some people have been forced into incorporating, but I think most of us will agree that generally this is done to escape taxation. When an individual starts making excess profits, shall we say, he immediately turns to his lawyers and has them form a corporation so that his excess profits are still retained within a very narrow group.

I suggest that the same type of thing will go on under this legislation in that excess profits might be made from fattening livestock, let us say, by people who are not really farmers at all, and they are going to hide these profits by spreading them five ways. Only two of them may be farmers and another may well be a millionaire who has no connection whatsoever with agriculture. It is this principle I am attacking, and I am quite sure that I am expressing the opinion of a great majority of the members of my own party, although I do not pretend to speak for the Conservative party as a whole. On this side of the house we do not do that. We speak at all times according to our consciences and on the basis of what we know. We are not a group of experts in any respect. I have never owned a farm, although in my youth I worked for several years on farms for very little remuneration.

I am not an expert on farming but I have taken the trouble to talk to people who are, to people who have hacked their own farms out of the bush and now live in the hope that by working hard and long and doing their best they can earn a fair and decent living. When I visit these farmers it is the cost-price squeeze I am always hearing about. They want to know why it is that no matter how high the prices for their products go the price of machinery always goes higher. This is why I suggested to the minister—I would be quite willing to go along with him if necessary—that he should talk to some of the people who produce farm machinery and discuss whether this is a good time to expect excessive profits. The farmer has often been asked if he would not work a little harder to produce cheaper food for the hungry people of the world, and it is a good question. Would the farm machinery people not be willing to give a little so far as their profits are concerned toward the same end? Certainly we could produce cheaper grain if we had cheaper machinery.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, it is also a mistake to assume that all the problems of agriculture in western Canada are solved. I might say that in the northern half of Alberta comprising the constituencies of Athabasca, Jasper-Edson and Peace River there are more individual farmers than there are in the other eight constituencies south of the North Saskatchewan river. This supports what I said, that if we are thinking about agriculture it is the small bush farms where we find the people who are replenishing the good red blood of our country. They are on farms and this legislation will not help them at all. It will only add unnecessary cost when what is required is the cutting down of the original cost of machinery and the cost of maintenance. This is what will help them most.

We must tie in this farm legislation with other farm legislation. There is certainly no point in providing this type of credit to the farmer unless you are going to be able to guarantee in some way that the help you are giving him with your left hand is not going to be taken away by your right hand. All these things must be integrated. Under ARDA the scientific use of our land is certainly a national project, but there is no point at all in taking people off submarginal land and putting them on good land unless they are going to retain the important things—the right to own their own land, the right to stand on their own feet.

I think it is a preposterous thing for us to go to the taxpayers of this country and ask them to subsidize any type of corporation. That is my own personal opinion. I do not believe in corporations being subsidized by other people at all. If five wealthy farmers are willing to pool their resources they do not need any help from the government at all. They can go to any bank in Canada and borrow money.

I want to make another point about the question of interest. The bill purports to assist farmers to obtain agricultural machinery at reasonable prices. What is the interest rate going to be? I am trying to keep away from the specifics of the bill, but because the interest rate is left blank the whole principle of the bill to my mind falls down unless we are going to be able to assist farmers to get machinery at a reasonable price and at a reasonable interest rate. Part of the principle of the bill is surely the interest rate. There is no point in lending money to farmers if the interest rate is going to be excessive. I would ask the minister to explain later exactly what interest rate he expects the farmers will have to pay.

When we were in office and introduced farm legislation our principle was that because the farmers were in fact the backbone of the country we should make money available to them over a long period of time at a reasonable interest rate, and so we established an interest rate at 5 per cent on farm loans. With any higher interest rate I do not see how the bill will be of any help at all, particularly to the small farmer.

When the minister travels throughout the country I should like him to make sure he does not add to the rift or arguments between the east and west. I would say that our problems in the northern part of Alberta are much more similar to the problems of the farmers of eastern Canada and the maritimes and the small fruit farms of British Columbia and Ontario than to the problems of the large grain farmer. I am not saying at all that there are not problems in western Canada of pressing importance, but as long as we can maintain our world trade in wheat I think that the major problem of the prairies is temporarily resolved.

I say that the small farms of northern Alberta, northern Saskatchewan and northern Manitoba are the same as the farms of eastern Canada and the maritimes and the problem we are faced with is how to make sure that these small farmers have a minimum income. I do not think it is any answer to say that if a man cannot make money on the farm he should pack up and go to a city. What are these people going to do in the cities? We are faced with automation and excess labour in the cities can no longer be absorbed. They can suceed on the farms and we have to arrive at a happy medium between so-called efficiency and maintaining happy people on the farms.

While it is a desperate step, one solution might be to institute some form of licensing in order to protect the family farm. We must be ready to define a farm. I see that in the bill it has been found necessary to define "farmer" for the purposes of the legislation. This might be a good time to take a look at defining who is a farmer and who is not, and in doing this we would have to get a very clear idea of what type of farmer we intend to assist—not to subsidize but to assist—by creating an atmosphere in which he can operate.

Some years ago the farmers from western Canada came down here and I faced them with this problem. I said, what is a family farmer? Some of the spokesmen for this group were shy about defining a family farmer. I do not know why they were afraid to do so, but I suggest perhaps even within the farmers union there are influential people who have a great stake in farming and who do not want the farmer too closely scrutinized. They do not want to say, this is a farmer and this is not. I am quite sure that when the time comes to administer this measure you are going to have a great deal of difficulty in deciding who is a farmer and who is not, and how much of his income is derived from farming.

I have never hesitated to define a family farmer. I say a family farmer is one who lives on the land. I for one am against subsidizing or assisting or encouraging anybody else through special legislation who is not in fact a bona fide resident on a farm to go into agriculture. I do not believe Canada Packers are farmers. I do not believe the sugar people are farmers, but they are deeply entrenched in the farming business, as you know. This is where these corporations come into the picture. Suppose you are seized with the problem of deciding whether or not a machine for digging sugar beets should come under this legislation. What are you going to do there? Will the Rodgers Company or the Alberta Sugar Refiners be considered farmers? Will they be considered farmers merely because they take up a quarter of cleared land? This is vertical integration and it has gone away beyond bounds in Canada today. It is only a few years since, to my knowledge, one corporation in Ontario was producing 50 per cent of all the broilers. I pose this question for the Minister of Agriculture. This corporation is still in existence. Perhaps they will decide to grow grain for their own chickens, and if you get a few small farmers in southern Ontario with 50 acres and you include this corporation, which I will still leave anonymous, as the third party, are you going to lend them another $100,000 in order that they can buy some farm machinery to put another 30 or 40 farmers out of business?

Are we merely trying to cut down these large corporations and make them standard across the country? Are we going to say that you can no longer farm unless you have a financial corporation as a silent partner?

Mr. Herridge: May I ask the hon. member a question? The hon. member is making a rather unusual speech. He has criticized this bill because he says it benefits the corporation farmer. He criticizes it also because he says it seems to be creeping socialism. These two criticisms seem to be contradictory, and would he explain them to us?

Mr. Bigg: Yes, I will be pleased to do so. Like most other farm problems, this one is not all black or white. I suggest this government does not know where it is going with this piece of legislation. It could go into the field of complete monopoly, with one company, as it has done with the broiler business, or it could get to the point where you are no longer able to keep the family farm. You will either be forced into the corporation farm, or if you are not forced into the corporation farm you will be forced into the communal farm, like the Hutterites in Alberta. They call it simple Christian communism. I would be inclined to go along with the Christian part of it because they have no desire to try to impose their will on anybody. The only difference between socialism and communism is the amount of force required. I say this on no less authority than Mr. Woodsworth, who was for many years a member of this house. I believe it was in February of 1933 that he said it may well be that force may be necessary in the final analysis, so this makes the veil between communism and socialism very thin indeed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; may I suggest to the hon. member that perhaps at this time he is getting away from the principle of the bill before the house?

Mr. Bigg: I was merely being courteous and answering the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). I am sorry if I have strayed from the principle of this bill. Nevertheless I have not strayed very far because I have put up a warning light for my Liberal friends so they will not fall into this socialist trap. If the bill is intended to force us into communal farming, then it is socialism. It may well be communist in its final analysis, if that is the purpose of the bill. I object to it on these grounds. If the purpose of the bill is to cater to large corporations who are trying to take away farms from individual farmers, I am equally opposed to that. I am a Conservative. We Conservatives stand for the maintenance of the standards of our ancestors. We do not have to go too far back, two or three generations. Our ancestors pioneered this country and believed when they established themselves as farmers they would be able to hand on to their children a well established way of life.

They did not intend that at any time their representatives in parliament would sell out to socialism or to the larger corporations. It is not fair. I hope my hon. friend from Kootenay West is not suggesting that the Conservative party is the tool of the large corporations. We are not. If I were, I would certainly have no hope of campaign funds from Massey-Harris or Massey-Ferguson.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-121 brings us to define the role of agriculture in society. It plays one of the greatest, noblest roles because the farmer needs several organizations; he has to work for several segments of the economy before he can reach his objective. The purpose of agriculture is to provide food for individuals, for human beings. We must recognize and appreciate the true value of agriculture. Why is agriculture important? What is its role? What is the reason for its existence?

We absolutely have to admit, as members of parliament and as individuals, that agriculture is the cornerstone, the basis on which rests the whole structure of society.

However, if the foundations of agriculture are undermined as they are at present, then the whole economic and social structure of society will disintegrate. Because if it is recognized that farmers have basic needs, that agriculture, especially in the province of Quebec, is at present in a terrible state of stagnation, members of parliament and several public officials are still not aware of it. If members of the house visited rural counties in my part of the country, they would realize the chaotic state of agriculture in our districts and would see that 70 per cent of farmers have abandoned their farms.

It is real stagnation. Those remaining express the desire to leave the farm from day to day, from month to month. Since no help was provided to the farmers, today the family farm is gradually disintegrating and disappearing. It is the result of our present system, and this phenomenon of the disintegration of agriculture is also evident throughout the economic structure.

Farmers have vital needs. They need a home just as the city worker, as any other individual in the country; they need clothing, they would like to give an education to their children the same as anyone else. And with an average annual farm income of $1,500 in the province of Quebec, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) cannot believe that his Bill No. C-121 could be applied in that province. Does he think that the eastern farmer could take advantage of that legislation?

Everybody knows that 99 per cent of the farmers are already saddled with farm loans; they have a hard time making ends meet and discharging their obligations. The Duplessis government had granted farmers loans which, as he claimed at that time, were to save agriculture in the province of Quebec, get farmers out of the doldrums; but 20 or 25 years later, one finds that farmers are ten times worse off than they were before.

Farm loans proved that they were not the right formula to save agriculture because experience showed that they served only to get farmers into debt and into worse trouble. Farmers operated their farms during 10, 15 and 20 years without showing a deficit and now they wake up with one. Farmers obtain loans offered by the federal and provincial governments and those new loans only serve to pay off the deficits incurred in the last 10 or 15 years.

And the farmer is left with his run-down buildings and his broken agricultural instruments. In fact, there is hardly anything he can use any more. He is then obliged to borrow $15,000, $20,000 or even $25,000 to make up for his deficits in previous years.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot see how this measure can save agriculture. We are not opposed to the principle of the bill. But this measure only favours those who have money; it is of no help at all for those who have none. As a matter of fact 99 per cent of the farmers will not be able to take advantage of this piece of legislation because they are already so deeply in debt that the banks will probably refuse to let them have a loan even if the government does guarantee such loans. I do not see how this bill could solve the farm problem.

Yet, there are solutions to the farm problem. But proper action should be taken to solve existing problems if we really want to help the farmers. Anything else would be of no earthly use and would never solve the problem. Many suggestions have been made over the years, but none were accepted.

Agriculture is more than ever in a state of stagnation, and it is not by making loans to the farmer and by charging him interest that his problems will be solved. As a matter of fact, he cannot even make enough profit to pay the interest and if he has to pay interest on farm loans, it will increase the cost of production and, consequently, the cost of living will rise as is the case at the present time.

As a matter of fact, it seems that there is no end to it.

Are we going to solve the agricultural problem with all the methods that were suggested and the measures that were applied? I do not think so, as agriculture is still in a state of depression and nothing has been settled yet.

Therefore, in order to solve the agricultural problems, I will allow myself to make a few suggestions to the Minister of Agriculture as well as to the house. I know that several members have already made suggestions, but I suggest that since agriculture is in a state of stagnation and the farmer is unable to pay any interest, the money that will be lent him should be interest free. This is one of the first steps to be taken if the agricultural problem is to be solved, for it will never be solved otherwise.

Here is my second suggestion. It was pointed out a while ago that farmers needed homes and farm buildings, and yet taxes have been raised. As a matter of fact, farmers are building the year round. But an 11 per cent sales tax has been imposed on all building materials, with the result that the farmer has to suffer the ill-effects of a tax increase he cannot afford to pay. So let us start by removing taxes which are hurting everybody, but especially the farmer. Let the Minister of Agriculture begin by removing that tax. If he came up with such a solution, I believe good results would follow.

I would also suggest to the minister that all the heavy equipment the farmer needs to clear up and enlarge his farm and to help him do his work, especially when there are many stones on his land, ought to be made available to him and paid in full either by the provincial or the federal government or by both together, or through shared programs under ARDA.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I have to remind him that it is now ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the acting house leader could outline the business for tomorrow, Thursday and Friday?

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall take up the consideration of main estimates, starting with the Department of Fisheries, followed by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, then the Department of Public Works and finally the Department of Forestry.

Mr. Monteith: Would the acting house leader outline the estimates for Thursday and Friday?

Mr. MacNaught: If we finish these tomorrow I would be able to announce other departments at the close of business tomorrow evening.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

AGRICULTURE—POULTRY—INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO MAINTAIN PRICES

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, the reason I asked to have this question debated is because it is of such importance and urgency. On many occasions I have asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) about the low prices for turkeys, and he gave me the answer that they were higher than ever before. When I asked him about the low prices for livestock he gave me the same answer, that they were higher than they ever were, when in fact they were at their lowest.

The other day when I asked why the price for chickens was so low, Mr. Speaker said I should put the question on the order paper; but as I have already said, it is of such importance and urgency that I would like to debate it now.

I have here in my hand a sales slip issued to a farmer in my area, Mr. Olaf Olson, who sold 99 chickens. After they had deducted $9.50 for killing these birds, he finished up with $8.35 for them. Mr. Olson lives about 40 miles from Humboldt. If you consider the 10 cents per mile that is usually charged for travelling, it will be seen that he wound up with only 35 cents for the whole works. In order that hon. members do not get the impression that these chickens were of poor grade I would like to give the record that is to be found on this sales slip. There were 12 grade A's which weighed up to 5½ pounds killed, 60 B's that weighed up to about 4½ pounds, 17 C's, and there were two or three old roosters and chickens of lower grade. But the fact is that any time a farmer sells 99 chickens at grade A, B and C and only receives $8.35, there must be something wrong. It is for this reason that I bring this question to the attention of the house, because when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) goes out in the country and tells us that the price of livestock, poultry and turkeys is higher than ever before, the fact is that this is not the case.

The same thing applies to turkeys. The price of turkeys is lower than it has ever been before. The Minister of Agriculture has not done anything to solve this problem, and I suggested to my good friend Mr. Olaf Olson that what he should have done was take a hatchet, go into his chicken coop, chop the heads off the chickens, give his chickens a decent funeral and forget about the whole thing. He is a good Swede, and when I told him this he looked at me. He did not say very much; he only swore, and I would not like to say exactly what he said.

I would like the Minister of Agriculture to give me and the people in the country an answer to his question. Why does the farmer only receive $8.35 for 99 chickens, when they are bought in the store for a much higher price?

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) for his question and his interest in this particular matter. I am confident of course that he would not want to be inaccurate in what he says. When he suggests that the minister said turkeys commanded a higher price than ever before, and that the price of other poultry and livestock is higher than ever before, I believe he is not correct.

Mr. Rapp: It is on the record.

Mr. Beer: What the minister has said on numerous occasions is that the price of turkeys in 1964 is about consistent with or slightly higher than it has been for the past four years.

The hon. member raised the question of fowl. I think we have to understand the situation a little to appreciate the purchasing problem which confronts those concerned. In 1963 there was an increase of approximately 30 per cent in the number of chicks going to the farms, and this marked increase has placed pressure first on the egg market and second on the price of old fowl going to market in 1964. I think this is the real reason why the farmer we have been considering has a problem. There are a lot of fowl going to the market at this time for which there is a very limited demand.

The hon. member is correct in analysing the prices in the various grades, but I think it is proper to point out that only 15 per cent, approximately, of the shipment was of the top grade, and naturally the balance would not bring the highest return. I hope that with an appreciation of these underlying problems the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale will be able to explain to his farmer that the reason for his complaint is fairly deep seated.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There can be no debate at this time.

SPORTS—REQUEST FOR GRANT FOR 1966 QUEBEC FESTIVAL

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, here is the question I should like to put to the minister and which will be answered, I am sure, by her parliamentary secretary, who is here now, with great ability and in a very appropriate manner.

As recommended by the national advisory council on amateur sport, will the grant which was supposed to be awarded to "La Société des jeux d'hiver de Québec", an organization set up to carry a program of athletic competitions in Quebec city, be paid to that organization?

I have already put this question in the house. The minister then replied, very properly indeed, that she was not in a position to give me a specific reply.

What happened is that because no precise decision has been taken in that respect, the said winter sports association of Quebec city finds itself in a difficult situation. In fact, under the present circumstances, it will have to postpone until 1967 the project it had intended to undertake in 1966.

Having received very recently a written as well as a verbal communication from the president of that association, I thought it was my duty to bring the matter up again so as to know what to expect, in order to be in a position to give a specific and final reply to the interested parties.

I would like to know if that subsidy will be granted according to the recommendation made.

If no grant is forthcoming, I should like to know why. Are there legal, political or constitutional difficulties in the way? That is what I should like to know in order to give an adequate reply to the people concerned who have asked me for information.

Nothing would please Quebec citizens more than to see that project carried out at the very centre of French life in America, so that during the celebration of our centennial, in 1967, all our athletes, united in a spirit of solidarity, will participate in competitions. That endeavour will be a great success if the federal government agrees to give the requested grants.

I have been told, on the other hand, that some correspondence was exchanged between the provincial and federal authorities. I was given to understand that the federal authorities were willing to go along but that the provincial authorities were still reluctant

Those are points I should like to have cleared up, because we, in the federal government, are getting a bit sick and tired of wearing the repulsive mask of the tax collector while the provincial government can take on the beaming look of a Santa Claus handing out all the goodies.

Therefore, if the federal government is contributing to this scheme I would like to see that it gets its fair share of the credit, because I was greatly disappointed when I came across an article in a Quebec daily where the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) was being charged with refusing to co-operate in this endeavour.

That is why I am asking for the required information.

[Text]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it can be clearly stated that there is no suggestion whatever that the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare and the federal government are not prepared to co-operate, and on the basis of what has been taking place I suggest that there has been co-operation and negotiation between the two levels of government, federal and provincial. Negotiations are continuing in the hope that this matter can be resolved. I am sure it is the intention of both levels of government to advance this project.

If there is anything more definite to report in the near future I am sure the minister will be in a position to do so.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—APPOINTMENT OF RUSSIAN PROFESSOR AT UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I sought leave to debate this matter this evening because I was denied the privilege of receiving an answer to my question to the minister this afternoon. He did not even choose to take my question as notice, which would have permitted him to give a brief and concise answer tomorrow.

My question arises from an announcement which appeared in the Leader-Post of September 18, 1964 under the heading "Russian to Teach". This article states:

> A. B. Nicolaev, 41, an economist from Moscow State university has been appointed visiting professor of economics at the University of Saskatchewan, Regina, campus. Mr. Nicolaev is deputy chairman of the department of political economy at the university. He was a guest lecturer at both Cambridge and Oxford, 1962.
> Principal W.A. Riddell said today he believed it was the first time a Soviet citizen has accepted a post to a Canadian university. The invitation was extended with the approval of the external affairs department.

Further to that announcement a release was made to radio and television stations, and a comment was credited to Professor Smythe, who I understand is head of the economics department at the Regina campus, to the effect that this Russian economics professor would be of great benefit and would give intellectual stimulation to the student body.

It might well be that the minister and his parliamentary secretary will say that this is a provincial matter. I believe that questions will be asked of the provincial authorities, but as a member of this House of Commons I do not have the oportunity to do that.

As a result of this announcement made on September 18 I have received several letters from people who are aroused about this professor coming to Regina. Some of those letters were written by parents of students who wonder about the orientation in the university as a result of this visiting economics professor. I do not share in full those fears and concerns which have been expressed, because I am aware of visits being made back and forth between the U.S.S.R. and this country, and our exchange in trade, which is leading to a new understanding. The fact remains that people in communist countries have relatives who are naturalized Canadians. Immediately those Canadians apply to have those relatives released and allowed to come to Canada where they can find the freedom offered in this country, their requests are given short shrift. Yet with apparent alacrity this leading professor of economics from the University of Moscow is permitted to come on a visit to fill a fellowship position in the economics faculty of the University of Saskatchewan, Regina campus.

It is said that this has been done with the full approval of the federal government and the Department of External Affairs. Therefore at the federal level there are questions that I think should be completely answered so that the fears that people have with regard to the spreading of communism in a seductive manner will be allayed and so they will be assured that our security is protected. I think we should have full answers. That is the reason I put the question forward.

All of a sudden we are faced with a visiting Russian economics professor, and it is stated he is the first Soviet citizen to accept such an assignment in Canada. In view of the stringent control normally exercised by the Russians the question is being asked why the Russian authorities have permitted this to happen. I know of no announcement that has been made, but perhaps unbeknown to us there may be an exchange program under which our Canadian professors who espouse our social system have been invited to occupy chairs at Soviet universities. Has this happened or is this a one-way traffic? If it is a one-way traffic, what is the thinking of the department in permitting it to take place on this basis?

I have no fear at all as to our present free enterprise social structure being able to stand on its own feet in the full light of any analysis that searching minds and free people want to make. As far as I am concerned, it is the greatest system on earth and it has provided more goods at better prices to more people than any other social system in the world. Therefore I have no fear about its being able to stand on its own feet. But here we have coming to this country a leading Russian professor who subscribes to an alien system which in most cases locks its doors against investigation and interrogation. We are permitting this man to come here. What is his purpose? How far can he go? What freedom is he to be allowed in this assignment? He will be dealing with adolescent minds and great concern is being expressed.

I hope that rather than mere verbiage about how this happened, how the department permitted it and so on we will receive straight answers. If there is something to be gained, if it is a fair exchange, if the Russian people are being placed in the position of being open to receiving answers to their questions from our people in the same way that our people in Canada will be exposed to answers from this Russian professor as a result of his visit, I think this should be known, because it would allay people's fears. I put these questions to the minister's parliamentary secretary and I hope he will be able to answer them completely tonight so that the fears expressed in some of the letters I have already received in this short time will be allayed so far as the action of the federal government in this action is concerned.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised many questions and in the three minutes allotted me I doubt very much that I will be able to satisfy him completely. I can say, however, that the hon. member in raising this matter has drawn attention to one particular case in isolation from a number of considerations. As he is no doubt well aware, for some years it has been the policy of the Canadian government to agree to cultural exchanges between Canada and other countries, including the Soviet union, whenever we were able to secure conditions of reciprocity. This policy is of long standing and has been subject to periodical review under this and previous governments.

In implementing these general policies it should be obvious that in this, as in other fields, officials carry out their responsibilities under general directives laid down by the government. There was no reason why the case to which the hon. member refers should have been brought particularly to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin). The matter was dealt with according to established procedure.

The arrangements for this exchange have involved the officials of the Canadian government department concerned, both in Ottawa and in Moscow. No objection was taken to the initiative by the University of Saskatchewan to arrange for Professor Nicolaev to come to Canada. Education is of course a matter of provincial responsibility. The decision to bring Professor Nicolaev to Saskatchewan was taken by the university of that province. In this particular case, there were no reasons for refusing to grant a visa to Professor Nicolaev, provided suitable arrangements had been made, as was the case, by the University of Saskatchewan.

For the hon. member's information, the details of this case are as follows: Toward the end of last year the University of Saskatchewan approached the Soviet ministry of higher education with an invitation to nominate a qualified Soviet economist for a visiting professorship at the university's institute of social sciences for the 1964-65 academic year. In response to this invitation, the Soviet authorities submitted the name of Mr. A. B. Nicolaev of the Moscow state university. The University of Saskatchewan accepted the nomination and requested the Department of External Affairs to expedite the issuance of a visa. As I suggested earlier, this visit should be viewed as part of a developing exchange of visits and contacts between Canada and the Soviet union in the academic field. In the past year or so, arrangements have been made for a number of Canadian students and professional people to work in and visit institutions of learning in the U.S.S.R.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, September 23, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN FLAG

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH AND FIFTH REPORTS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's) presented the fourth and fifth reports of the special committee on a Canadian flag, and moved that the reports be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

AMENDMENT OF ACTS ADMINISTERED IN INSURANCE DEPARTMENT

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-123, to amend certain acts administered in the Department of Insurance.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*WEEKLY PRESS SUMMARY, PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Question No. 1,763—Mr. Fisher:

1. What persons select and edit the weekly press summary of the office of the Prime Minister?
2. What are the formal guidelines or policy requirements given to these people in the preparation of this summary?
3. What is the estimated cost of the operation, including any clipping service on which it is based?
4. What allowance is paid or what attention is given to items in the press which are critical of or antagonistic to the administration or the ministry or the Liberal party or the prime minister?
5. What purpose does the summary serve?
6. What is the distribution of it?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. A member of the staff of the Prime Minister's office.

2. To prepare abstracts of press items and comment relating to issues that are of current interest to the government and assemble them into a weekly summary.

3. The salary of the individual concerned plus the cost of producing the document in question. The clipping service is a separate operation for information purposes extending beyond the press summary.

4 and 5. The purpose of the press summary is to provide the Prime Minister, cabinet ministers and members of their staffs with the essence of editorial comment and news reports from various sections of the country on matters of interest to the government. Equal attention is given to all items whether complimentary or critical. The test is whether they relate to matters of government concern.

6. As indicated, the summary is prepared for the Prime Minister and members of the cabinet in the first instance and distributed to them and members of their staffs. Members of parliament, and others who have shown an interest in the summary and asked to be added to the distribution list also receive it and, within limits, it can be made available to additional persons on application.

NORTH SYDNEY MARINE RAILWAY—NAVAL CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,775—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

What steps are being taken by the government to provide employment at the North Sydney Marine Railway Company Limited of North Sydney, Nova Scotia, through the allocation of a naval vessel for refit and/or repairs?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): During 1963 approximately $150,000 worth of allocated refit and repair work was directed to the North Sydney Marine Railway Company in comparison with $118,000 in the preceding year. To date, this year the general refit and repair program available for allocation is substantially down as compared with preceding years, but an appropriate proportion has already been directed to the North Sydney Marine Railway Company, and it will continue to receive a share of any further refit or repair work which may develop this year.

Questions

EFFECTS ON HUMAN HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES

Question No. 1,802—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Is the government conducting or supporting research on the effects on humans of long term absorption and retention of herbicides and pesticides and, if so, at which institutions, and under whose direction is such research being conducted?
2. What is the annual cost to the government of each of these projects?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1 and 2. Under the national health grants the Department of National Health and Welfare is giving support to research on the effects on humans of long term absorption and retention of herbicides and pesticides, as follows: St. Dunstan's University, Charlottetown, under the direction of Dr. John Craig. Approved for 1964-65, $9,275. University of Montreal under the direction of Dr. F. J. Tourangeau. Approved for 1964-65, $19,691. Department of public health, province of Alberta, under the direction of J. H. Brown, M.Sc. Approved for 1964-65, $11,950.

STUDIES OF WATER FLUORIDATION

Question No. 1,886—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. What studies into the effects of fluoridation of water have been conducted by (a) the medical research council (b) the national research council?
2. Under whose direction were such studies conducted?
3. What has been the cost to the government of each of these studies?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as the medical research council and the national research council are concerned, the answer is as follows:

1. (a) Medical research council: 1. Nil.

(b) Studies conducted by the national research council: 1. The only study undertaken by the national research council was a review of recent scientific literature which arose out of other work.

2. Dr. N. E. Gibbons and Dr. W. H. Cook.

3. The cost is estimated to be $2,000.

CONTROL OF USE OF CHEMICAL PESTICIDES

Question No. 1,896—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Are regulations in effect to control the use of chemical pesticides in Canada in (a) national uarks (b) provincial areas (c) areas privately owned, with a view to limiting contamination of lakes, streams, fish and wildlife and, if so, what is the nature of these regulations?
2. Has any research been undertaken in Canada to determine the possible harmful effects of pesticides?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): 1. (a) There are no regulations to control the use of chemical pesticides in the national parks, but activities in that field are carefully controlled in accordance with instructions prepared by experts using the most up to date information available in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Department of Agriculture; (b) this is a matter for provincial control; (c) private land owners are free to exercise their rights to protect their private property.

2. Yes. Such research to provide supplemental information to that obtained from other countries is being carried out in all regions on an increasing scale.

SHIP COLLISIONS, ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Question No. 1,899—Mr. Irvine:

1. What was the total number of ship collisions in the St. Lawrence river since January 1, 1964?
2. What was the total number of lives lost?
3. What was the total monetary loss in equipment and cargo?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): 1. Total number of ship collisions was eleven, eight in 1963 and three in 1964, as follows: April 4, 1963, Mellum/Ascot; June 4, 1963, Carl Schemedeman/Coverdale; July 18, 1963, Seven Skies/Cartier; July 19, 1963, Canadoc/Calgadoc/Bariloche; July 20, 1963, Roonagh Head/Tritonica; October 11, 1963, African Glade/Farrandoc; December 3, 1963, Manchester Merchant/Lionel; December 8, 1963, Procyon/Fort Albany; April 10, 1964, Irish Willow/Wenny; June 12, 1964, Sprucedale/Anette; September 5, 1964, Leecliffe Hall/Apolliona.

2. Forty, 37 in 1963 and three in 1964. in 1964.

3. The Department of Transport does not have a record of the monetary value of lost equipment and cargo.

C.B.C. PAYMENTS TO RADIO NORD INC.

Question No. 1,925—Mr. Laprise:

Since 1958, what amounts did the C.B.C. pay each year to Radio Nord Inc.?

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that it has not been customary to require the corporation to give details of amounts paid to individual affiliated stations as this could be prejudicial to the corporation in its business dealings with its other network stations.

NEW COMPANY ESTABLISHED, PORT ALFRED, QUE.

Question No. 1,936—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

What is the name of the company which has been recently established at Port Alfred and which will benefit from the tax exemptions granted to depressed areas?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): No new enterprise in Port Alfred has signified to the government its intention to benefit from the federal tax incentives to new industry in designated areas.

DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. ON AUTOMOTIVE PARTS INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Question No. 1,946—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the government recently held meetings with representatives of the United States to discuss the automotive parts incentive program of the Canadian government?
2. In view of the urgent and widespread interest in the matter did the government offer to make alterations in the program and what was the nature of such alterations, and what degree of acceptance did such alterations, if any, receive from the United States officials?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1 and 2. Replied to in answer to an oral question on the orders of the day by the hon. member for Danforth, September 22 at page 8287 of Hansard.

EXTENSION OF FUNDY NATIONAL PARK

Motion No. 166—Mr. Bell:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the province of New Brunswick and any others regarding the proposed extension of Fundy national park and/or the proposed Fundy trail during the last ten years.

Motion agreed to.

Question of Privilege

PRIVILEGE

MR. COATES—REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING CLOSURE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all hon. members of the house. Yesterday I posed the following question to the Prime Minister:

> Did the right hon. gentleman state in the course of a press conference in Vancouver on September 17 that closure would be used if the flag committee did not come forward with a near unanimous decision?

To this question I received this emphatic reply from the Prime Minister:

> No such statement was made.

I now have available to me the transcript of the Prime Minister's press conference at Vancouver on September 17, which on page 15 contains the following question and reply:

> If you do face the problem seriously of continued filibuster in your minority position, how long can a government tolerate it without going to the people to get a clear cut decision of the parliamentary majority and parliamentary reform?

To which the Prime Minister replied:

> It is not essential to go to the people in order to stop a filibuster. There are rules for that purpose. They are used as a last resort, but they are there, and they have been kept there by the previous government, so the previous government must have felt it was unwise to take out the closure rule. It is still there, but I don't like to see legislation enacted by closure. It is much better to do it some other way.

As a result of this statement many newspapers across Canada informed their readers that the Prime Minister threatened closure if the flag committee did not reach a satisfactory decision. Yesterday I mentioned the Montreal Star, which on September 18 carried a headline reading "Closure if Necessary—Pearson".

The Prime Minister's reply to me is not in keeping with the facts, and places the flag committee in the same position as the Prime Minister placed the House of Commons with the threat of a general election if his flag design were not accepted. I consider the Prime Minister owes the house an apology for this statement in Vancouver, and the flag committee a categorical retraction of the threat of closure so they might be able to continue their most important task in the proper atmosphere.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, far from owing the house an apology the hon. gentleman, by the statement he has just made quoting from the verbatim record of what I did say, undoubtedly owes the house an apology for misrepresenting this statement.

[Mr. Bell.]

MISS JEWETT—NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY PRESS RELEASE RESPECTING REFORM OF PARLIAMENT

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all members of the house, and in particular the members of the special committee on procedure and organization which is under Your Honour's chairmanship.

Yesterday a press release was issued by the New Democratic party dealing with that party's proposals for the reform of parliament. The committee on procedure and organization, which is a committee of this parliament, has been discussing the problem of the reform of parliament, and has long since agreed that it would try to come to an all party agreement on the proposals that it presented to parliament. Indeed, the representative of the New Democratic party on that committee was one of those who most strongly felt that, if possible, unanimity should be reached before our proposals were presented here.

I think it is an affront to this house, and in particular to the committee itself, that the party which had agreed there should, if possible, be an all party agreement before the committee's proposals for reform of this house were presented, should now break that agreement.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Miss Jewett: It is an invitation to other party leaders now to do the same and it is, in effect, completely pulling the rug from under the committee on procedure and organization that has been set up for this purpose. It is a case of going outside this parliament to make these recommendations instead of bringing them here, which is the proper place for them.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege I should like to say that neither I nor any member of this party wishes to offend the house, and least of all such a gracious and charming member as the hon. member for Northumberland.

However, we do not believe any apology is called for. We believe that the question of the reform of parliament is something that is the concern not only of parliament itself but of the people of Canada, and that it is a legitimate matter for public discussion, as was shown by the Prime Minister himself who publicly stated a short time ago that if the committee were not able to reach some satisfactory conclusion the government itself would have to accept this responsibility. We consider that the members of this party also have a perfect right to assume that responsibility and to ask the people of Canada to engage in a public discussion as to how the procedures of this parliament can be so adapted and changed as to streamline its business and carry on the affairs of this country in a more efficient manner.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I want to endorse the point of privilege taken by the hon. member for Northumberland. The leader of the New Democratic party ignored the opportunity provided by a supply motion last Monday to present his views, and preferred to do so by means of a press conference. It is a matter of record that ten reports of the committee on procedure have been introduced into this house. It is also a matter of record, or it should be—and it is to those of us who serve on the committee—there has not been a protracted, wrangling debate in that committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the special committee on procedure and organization, I am pleased to endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) about the line of action taken by the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas) in this case.

Several of the suggestions made by the New Democratic party were made by members of the committee and several others were accepted by members of other parties.

That is how are being made public, on behalf of one political party, ideas expressed by members of the five parties in the House of Commons since the setting up of this special committee on procedure and organization.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker,—and what seems to me most important of all—if the New Democratic party is really interested to see the committee achieve some results, I think the experience of the past few weeks has shown us that such results will not be obtained by airing our discussions on the public square, but by having instead some sort of unity within the committee itself. It would be much easier, then, to reach our objective and get results.

I feel that, through this publicity, the members of the New Democratic party have just violated two privileges of the house: first, they have taken as their own a study made by the five parties and, then, they have prevented the achievement of immediate results by bringing to the attention of the public, for their own benefit, the ideas of all.

[Text]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cariboo.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): All I want to say, Mr. Speaker, is that it does seem to me that when the chairman of a committee on rules and procedure belongs to a particular party, it is certainly cheap politics—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Leboe: —and I do not think the people of Canada are being fooled one iota by the press release of the New Democratic party.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; but I hope that will not be—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

[Translation]

On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

While the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) rises on a question of privilege to protest against a statement made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), you should like to see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) bringing the debate to a close? It seems to me that it rests rather with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam to set forth his views in this respect, unless the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre speaks on behalf of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

[Text]

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The only reason the Chair recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was that he is a very active member of this particular committee.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert: That is nonsense.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, how far will this debate be extended; because there are other members who also have an interest in this important problem.

Mr. Fisher: They certainly do.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member's point is well taken. Orders of the day.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Three Rivers rising on orders of the day?

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Speaker; I am rising on the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: A question of privilege?

Mr. Balcer: The same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We have had a spokesman from each party, and perhaps considerably more has been said than is necessary.

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, it seems quite in order that I should raise this question at this stage of the proceedings. Here is my question of privilege. We have just heard a very harsh indictment against the leader of the New Democratic party by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) who protested as strongly as possible against the line of action taken by that party as regards the special committee on procedure and organization.

However, at the same time, the Prime Minister's office issued a news release entitled:

Prime Minister's statement about parliamentary reform.

I am happy to have Mr. T. C. Douglas' support with regard to the reform of parliamentary procedure, something which is long overdue. I urged that such a reform be made first as leader of the opposition and then as Prime Minister—

I hope that the views expressed by the N.D.P. will help the committee to continue its work. The government will gladly welcome the support and co-operation of members from all parties on that matter.

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I wish to thank the hon. gentleman for putting that press communiqué on record in Hansard. I am grateful to him for that. Of course there are times when you have to issue a statement to keep the record straight, and in this case we welcome the hon. gentleman and his party to the ranks of those who wish to reform parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless there is a very important contribution to be made at this time it does seem to me that we have all agreed some measure of reform is necessary, and that we do not need to pursue the subject this afternoon. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre speaks the hon. member for Macleod has to be recognized, and I am afraid we would be here for a considerable length of time.

Mr. Knowles: Several of those who have spoken—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: It is now my duty and pleasure to declare that in my opinion there is no question of privilege. Orders of the day.

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege, several of those who have spoken in this house today—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knowles: Several of those who have spoken—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: —have made reference to me by way of an attack.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. gentleman will indicate his agreement with the necessity for reform by accepting the decision of the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Knowles: Yes, sir, I am.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the same question of privilege?

Mr. Knowles: My question of privilege is that several members who have spoken have been permitted to make reference to me—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles: Oh, yes, several references were made to me by name, and I submit that in these circumstances I should be allowed at least a minute to speak on this same question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I am very sorry, but I did not hear the name of the hon. member mentioned. In any event, the decision of the Chair was that there was no question of privilege; therefore I intend to call orders of the day. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Knowles: Since your ruling is based on the fact that you did not hear members refer to me, may I say that I believe the hon. member for Royal did, the hon. member for Cariboo did, and so did other members.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles: At any rate, all I want to do is thank hon. members for drawing attention to those who are trying to get these matters out for public discussion.

Some hon. Members: Abuse of the rules.

LABOUR RELATIONS

S.I.U. ELECTIONS—APPEARANCE OF MARITIME TRUSTEES BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I am not rising on a spurious question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether he has received communications, oral or written, to the effect that in the situation connected with the S.I.U. election there is grave danger that the results of this election will not represent the democratic desires of the members of that union.

Whether that be so or not, is it not about time that the board of maritime trustees were brought before a committee of parliament in order to give them an opportunity to answer an allegation that is being widely made, that Banks or some of his supporters still control the S.I.U.?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have received no representations with regard to the S.I.U. elections. I do know there is a special advisory committee assisting the board of trustees in carrying out this election, on which committee sits a representative of the Department of Labour, of the S.I.U. and of the Canadian Labour Congress. We have no information that proper procedures have been neglected in the carrying out of this election.

With respect to the second part of the hon. gentleman's question, it is proposed to have the board of trustees come before a committee of the house at this session, during the fall. The exact time has not been determined, and I am not in a position to indicate any time in the absence of the house leader.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is another example of postponement. I suggest that these trustees be brought before a committee of this parliament—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —before this election. If the minister has no information I can send him a couple of items which will provide him with information which would cause grave suspicion about the voting procedure which is taking place.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, which I had intended to ask of the Minister of Justice, but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of allegations and suggestions that there may have been some corrupt practices in reference to the administration of law in the Banks case, would the Prime Minister consider setting up a royal commission to investigate the matter and to report why Banks is able to avoid and ignore the law of Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has already dealt with this question, and at some length.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question. Has the Prime Minister and his government anything to report as to the whereabouts of Banks, either in the United States or in Canada?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. I hope my hon. friend was not able to find him in Europe.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe the Prime Minister should look in the city of New York.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN COMMITMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have met today with Mr. Cabot Lodge, the former United States ambassador to South Viet Nam. I should like to ask the Prime Minister what commitments, if any, have been asked for from Canada by the United States representative, and I should also like to ask whether the Prime Minister will give the house his assurance that Canada will not make any contribution to the situation in South Viet Nam other than such contributions as we make through our membership in the international control commission which was set up by the 1954 Geneva agreement.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I were privileged to have some very interesting and useful conversations with Mr. Cabot Lodge, who is a guest of the house in the gallery this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Lodge was good enough to bring us up to date on the situation in Viet Nam as the United States government sees it, and we were very interested in this information. No commitments were asked for.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is Canada making any contribution or giving any assistance in any shape or form at the present time?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has just indicated, and as he said on another occasion, there is no question of any military commitment by Canada in South Viet Nam nor has any military assistance to that country been suggested either by Mr. Lodge or by anyone else. Canada is now providing non-military assistance in the amount of some $700,000 for 1964-65. This includes food, education and certain projects having to do with medical and hospital care. As I indicated yesterday, the government proposes to increase this non-military assistance to Viet Nam pursuant to the expanded program announced in this house last November.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Who administers those Canadian funds? The minister could not possibly leave them in the hands of the corrupt regime which governs the country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend's loose language is not really based on careful reflection. The funds are administered, of course, as a result of bilateral arrangements between the parties concerned, by the external aid office of Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—RUSSIAN SURVEILLANCE OF NAVAL EXERCISES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Do the Prime Minister and the government regard the intensive surveillance by the Russians of the present NATO exercises taking place in the north Atlantic as having any particular significance at this time, and what is the policy of the government in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I myself would not attach any particular significance to this fact. Such naval exercises have taken place in the past, and the exercises are going on on the high seas, which are free to the ships of all nations.

INQUIRY AS TO ALTERNATIVE TO FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has a decision yet been reached concerning the construction of naval ships as an alternative to the general purpose frigates which were cancelled so many months ago? If not, when may we expect a decision in this respect, having regard to the urgent representations made by SACLANT in so far as Canada's commitments for the supply of ships?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the two parts of the question, if it can be called a question, are directly related. The government shipbuilding program is now under review by the defence staff following completion of a study which was undertaken some months ago. I hope it will not be too long before decisions can be taken. There has been no request for additional support for SACLANT, and I think my hon. friend is just referring to a speech made by SACLANT when he was visiting Halifax a few days ago.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister of defence whether what is left of the Canadian navy is taking part in the NATO exercises in the north Atlantic?

Mr. Hellyer: I have already answered that question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps my hon. friend would consult Hansard.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MODIFICATIONS IN WINTER WORKS INCENTIVE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour arising out of recent inquiries received from municipal officials in my constituency. On June 23 the minister stated that the winter works program initiated by the previous government would be continued but that there might be some modifications. Will there be modifications and, if so, can these changes be announced soon so that municipalities can be advised before making their winter works plans?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there will be modifications in the winter works incentive program, and I announced the details of these changes during the discussion of my estimates on the Friday before Labour day.

Mr. Pascoe: A supplementary question. Has any information gone out to the municipalities; because I have been receiving inquiries asking me what changes will be made.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, letters have gone out to the provincial premiers advising them of the terms of the winter works incentive program, as is the custom. The provinces usually advise the municipalities as to the terms.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR REPLIES IN FRENCH TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, last August 28 I put to the Minister of Labour question No. 1,820 on the order paper. My question was in good French.

I received a reply yesterday but it is exclusively in English, even though I need it in French for my constituents.

Could the minister tell us whether there are, within his department, people who are sufficiently conversant in French to answer us in French when we ask questions in that language? I should like to hear from the minister on that point.

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are excellent French speaking officers in the Department of Labour, I am glad to advise my hon. friend. I did make the answer in English, my language, and he asked the question in French, his language. However, I will attempt to co-operate with him and give him future answers in his language.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

As the same thing is happening in a number of departments I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he could not ask his colleagues to answer members in the language in which questions are asked in order to assist the members.

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that seems to me to be a reasonable suggestion.

REPRESENTATIONS BY CONSERVATIVE PARTY RESPECTING VACATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Is it true that the Conservative party is bringing pressure to bear on the government or making representations so as to obtain a recess extending at least two weeks for parliament?

Should this be true, has the Prime Minister considered that such a recess would delay by that much the work of the committee on the Canadian flag and that we could find ourselves without a flag at Christmas time?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have received no such representations.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WINKLER—REFERENCE TO EDITORIAL IN MONTREAL "STAR"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Montreal Star of September 22 has an editorial under the heading "Proper Use of Power", in regard to one of the Liberal members, and the following is stated—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member. I know of the editorial to which he refers, and I believe this question was dealt with by the Chair several weeks ago. I do not see any reason to change that ruling.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, this is a question of privilege which concerns all hon. members. I do not think it is in regard to the matter to which you refer.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. member whether it refers to a particular member who was mentioned in that editorial?

Mr. Winkler: In this particular instance, Mr. Speaker, it refers to myself. The editorial states in part:

> He may not, for a variety of reasons, have much of a political future, but it should be perfectly clear to Mr. Winkler, the Liberal whip—

To correct any error or misapprehension in the mind of any reader of this valuable paper, I trust they will take note. While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just to finish with one matter at a time, has the hon. member seen the latest editorial, or the note on the editorial page of today's Montreal Star, where he is again mentioned?

Mr. Winkler: No, I have not, Mr. Speaker, and I may have to rise again at a later time.

ROYAL VISIT

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF QUEEN'S VISIT TO OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like now to ask the Prime Minister whether he can clarify the arrangements that are being made for Her Majesty's visit to the capital on October 12, so that all hon. members may make arrangements accordingly.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the details regarding the royal visit were made public at one o'clock today, and I believe they have been sent to every member of the house. It was not possible to arrange for Her Majesty to address the House of Commons and the Senate, but it will be possible for members to meet Her Majesty at a reception on that morning.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

MEMBERSHIP OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL—PERMANENT SECRETARIAT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Forestry a question?

After the statement the minister made in Montreal yesterday I should like to know whether he is of the opinion that the Economic Council of Canada Act should be amended in order to provide for a direct provincial representation and participation in the activity of that body?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I spoke about the Economic Council of Canada Act incidentally, but I did not raise that problem.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Will the minister exert pressure on his government with a view to establishing a permanent secretariat on federal-provincial relations at the level of heads of government, based on the principle of the Canadian council of ministers of resources? The minister will agree with me that this matter is very important in view of the inadequacy of means of consultation between Ottawa and the provinces for a better planning of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Sauvé: I think that the question concerns the Prime Minister.

[Text]

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN TRANSPORT OF FEED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister received a request from the province of Quebec with regard to federal participation in a program of freight assistance for forage transport to drought stricken counties in western and southwestern Quebec, including the counties of Châteauguay-Huntingdon and Laprairie? If the minister has received such a request, can he assure the house that the Canadian government will render the fullest possible assistance?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes to both questions.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED ALTERATION IN CHINESE AMNESTY REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Will the minister advise the house whether the regulations have now been altered to allow amnesty in respect of Chinese ship deserters and individuals with forged passports? I ask this question in view of a speech recently made by the Postmaster General to the Chinese benevolent association in Vancouver.

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, we have not modified the amnesty program concerning Chinese.

TORONTO—STATUS OF PERSONS CONCERNED WITH NEWSPAPER STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. On August 28 the minister replied to my question of August 25 regarding Mr. Robert Ameln and Mr. George Hogan, so called official union negotiators from the United States, and suggested that these men were here on a temporary basis. Since their arrival in Toronto there have been many acts of violence of increasing seriousness, and I should like to know whether the minister is giving consideration to terminating what he called the "temporary exercise of their respective callings".

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be quite ready to make an inquiry.

Mr. Ormiston: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that in a recent edition of Printers' Story, a trade publication, Mr. Robert Ameln is described as a strike director and Mr. George Hogan as his assistant, would the declaration of such occupations qualify these men for legal admission and, if not, is the matter being reconsidered?

Mr. Tremblay: I will make complete inquiries.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO SHOWING OF FILM ON LIBERAL PARTY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State?

Would the Secretary of State recommend to the C.B.C. to show on its network the Liberal federation's movie entitled "Youth Year Zero" so that it may continue in this way to publicize the Liberal party to which that crown corporation seems to have dedicated itself?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that this is a real question. However, I shall be pleased to refer the substance of the question of the hon. member to the C.B.C.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Does the Secretary of State not think that this film might be a good substitute for the one entitled "Mr. Pearson"?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen either.

[Text]

ALLOCATION OF FREE TIME TO POLITICAL PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a question I first put to the Prime Minister a week or so ago, and I wonder whether he or the Secretary of State now has an answer. Will the C.B.C. make time available to the leaders of the three smaller parties on national television, similar or comparable to the time recently made available as extra time to the leaders of the two larger parties?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that they do not have any plans for further special programs on the business of the house along the lines of those to which my hon. friend has just referred.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has anyone conveyed to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that it is supported by all the taxpayers of Canada, and is not the private preserve of the Liberal and Tory parties?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend, who has such great interest in the integrity and independence of the C.B.C., would not wish the government to exert any pressure on the C.B.C. in regard to programming of this kind.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it has been conveyed to the C.B.C. that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said there should be a moratorium on the flag discussion?

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question. The two broadcasting questions were not confined to a discussion on the flag.

An hon. Member: That is what you asked for.

Mr. Douglas: That is not what we are asking for. We are asking for equal time. Apparently the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has decided to do otherwise, and in this way shows favouritism, which in turn will have an adverse effect on public opinion in respect of the C.B.C.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in respect of that question, I noticed last night that the C.B.C. quite rightly gave my hon. friend some time to tell the people of Canada about his plans for reforming parliament. I was tempted to phone the C.B.C. to find out whether the Prime Minister could get equal time in respect of this important subject, but I resisted that temptation.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I should like to support the Prime Minister, and urge that he be given time on the C.B.C. tonight to give this press statement he has issued further publicity; also that equal time be given to the hon. member for Northumberland to protest the remarks contained in the Prime Minister's statement.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether his government recognizes the fact that there is some discrimination among the various political parties in Canada, since some parties are allowed to take part in some programs, while others are not?

Inasmuch as the government is responsible for the C.B.C., could the Prime Minister put pressure on the corporation to enable all political parties to be placed on the same footing in this regard?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not see how we could ask the C.B.C., let alone make the C.B.C., to put all political parties on the same footing when the people of Canada did not put them on the same footing.

Mr. Speaker: The Postmaster General.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. One at a time. Time is very short. The Postmaster General.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. The Postmaster General.

[Later:]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a supplementary question relating to the C.B.C.

The Prime Minister stated a short while ago that the Canadian people did not place all political parties on the same footing. We do not contest this statement, but when the C.B.C. submits its budget to the house, we are nevertheless the ones who examine its expenses and I ask the Prime Minister for his personal intervention with the C.B.C. to have all political parties treated equally by that public corporation. The Prime Minister is doubtlessly capable of obtaining a fair treatment for the various parties represented in the house.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I hope the C.B.C. will treat all parties equitably in these matters, and I will be glad to convey to the C.B.C. my hon. friend's observations, in which I think we all concur.

SHOWING OF FILM ON FREDERICTON CONFERENCE ON NATIONAL GOALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka expressed interest in the date on which the film of a certain conference on Canadian goals would be broadcast by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I am informed by the C.B.C. that this program will be telecast on the English network on Thursday, September 24, 1964, at 8.30 p.m. eastern daylight time.

TAPE RECORDING OF QUEEN'S ACTIVITIES TO FOLLOW LIVE BASEBALL TELECAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet may I reply to a question which was asked on Monday last by the hon. member for York-Humber concerning the televising of a certain portion of Her Majesty's visit to Canada.

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the corporation considers the royal visit to be of greater importance than the world series. That is why the corporation is providing extensive coverage of the visit on radio and television in both languages, most of it live, including Her Majesty's visit to the Quebec legislature on the morning of Saturday, October 10.

In the case of the afternoon of October 10 there is no question that, because both events occur at approximately the same time, the corporation was faced with a problem. If it were not for the existence of modern television and radio recording equipment it is obvious that the corporation would have cancelled the baseball broadcast.

However, because this equipment is available the C.B.C. can provide coverage of Her Majesty's visit to the Quebec citadel and of the world's series game for Canadians who want to see both these events.

HOUSING

HALIFAX, N.S.—LOW RENTAL ACCOMMODATION FOR NAVAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I wish to supplement my answer to a question put on August 20 by the hon. member for Greenwood. While I was in Halifax on September 21 and 22 for discussions, with provincial and municipal officials and other interested citizens, on the implementation of the recent amendments to the National Housing Act, I met, as was suggested by the hon. member for Greenwood and other members of the house, with Rear Admiral Brock and several of his staff to consider naval housing problems in the greater Halifax area. The discussion was frank and helpful, and resulted in the formation of a committee comprising representatives of the Atlantic command, Royal Canadian Navy, and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to examine the situation in detail and report its findings and recommendations to the government as soon as possible.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GRÉGOIRE—REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO ASK SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, and I think it is the first time I rise on such a question since the provisional amendment of the rules. Moreover, I am of the opinion that my question of privilege is quite in order and deals with the members' rights in the house.

The Postmaster General has just answered a question that had no relation at all to the supplementary questions we intended to put.

I have asked only one supplementary question respecting the C.B.C., while you allowed the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) to direct three questions.

Moreover, sometimes the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) is allowed three supplementary questions on the same subject. I do not object to that, but in my opinion the members sitting in this corner of the house should be given the same rights as any other members of the opposition, particularly when we want to ask supplementary questions concerning important fields such as the one we have just been discussing.

It seems to me that we ought to be entitled to ask our supplementary questions, and I strongly object to the attitude you have adopted in not allowing us to ask questions, even letting someone change the subject.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I should like to point out that on Wednesday afternoon we have a period of half an hour for questions, and the Chair does its best to distribute the time available among all parties in the house. To my knowledge the member has asked at least two questions this afternoon, and it does seem to me that when I have a list of ten other members who wish to ask one question each, they are entitled to be heard first. The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BROADCASTING

APPROVAL OF TRANSFER OF WINDSOR RADIO STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State arising out of information that the board of broadcast governors has approved the transfer of the Windsor radio station from the general ownership of Royce Frith to that of Geoff Stirling. In view of the fact that several members of parliament, including myself and the hon. member for Essex South, I believe, made representations to the board of broadcast governors on this matter, I wonder whether the Secretary of State could get for the house, because others members are interested too, a full statement as to why the board of broadcast governors approved this transfer, beyond the normal paragraph issued in their press release.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will be pleased to see what I can do to meet the request of the hon. member.

CROWN ASSETS

DISPOSITION OF FORMER R.C.A.F. STATION EDGAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Is he now aware that the R.C.A.F. station at Edgar has been closed, and has he anything to report with regard to this station?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of the great interest that the hon. member has taken in the question of the R.C.A.F. station at Edgar, and I am glad to be able to tell him that when the station ceased to be used by the R.C.A.F. the Ontario government considered the possibility of making use of it, and has now decided to take it over for the establishment of an institution to look after retarded children.

TRADE

BUTTER—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING IMPORTS INTO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska asked me whether I knew that certain concerns were now entering into preliminary negotiations with a view to importing butter into Canada. I am not aware that any particular negotiations are being carried on with regard to the import of butter into Canada. Since butter is under import control, any intention to import must necessarily be brought to the attention of the department.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

1. Departmental administration, including grants and contributions as detailed in estimates, $1,159,000.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Chairman, it has been customary for the Minister of Fisheries, in introducing the estimates of his department, to give a brief résumé of the state of Canada's fishing industry and of the fisheries resources, and to outline the current activities of the department. By doing this now, I may be answering in advance some of the questions which hon. members may have in mind. If there are points which I do not make sufficiently clear, I shall be glad to explain them in detail when we are considering the estimates of the department item by item.

Fishing is a risky and hazardous calling. Every year it takes its toll of lives. During the past year, while there has been no major tragedy, there have been isolated instances of men lost at sea or falling victim to the mishaps which are all too common in the lives of those whose work takes them to sea. I am sure every member of this house will join me in paying tribute to Canada's fishermen and their families. These are the people upon whose strength and skill the entire industry is built and, as you will note in the report which follows, it is a primary concern of the Department of Fisheries to see that they are employed as safely and profitably as possible.

I should like to make a few remarks about the up to date status of the fishing industry from an economic point of view. With the exception of the codfish catch from the trap fishery of Newfoundland, the 1964 season has been generally satisfactory. The first indication came with early fishing for spring salmon in British Columbia which yielded 4.9 million pounds during the first six months of 1964, compared with 3.6 million pounds for the same period in 1963. For the first seven months of this year, landings of all species by commercial fishermen on both coasts totalled 1.2 billion pounds or 30 million pounds more than the landings in the first seven months of last year. This increase was registered despite a decline in the cod catch of 48 million pounds.

The value of the commercial catch is larger so far this year than the increase in landings would suggest. The increase in value to the end of July was about 20 per cent against 2 per cent increase in the volume of landings. This is accounted for principally by a higher proportion of the more valuable species in the total catch. In British Columbia, salmon landings are up by 34 million pounds, and in the Atlantic provinces there have been significant increases in the landings of haddock, small flat fish, swordfish and scallops. The figures just released yesterday for the month of August were most encouraging and show a further trend toward a record year for Canada's fisheries both in quantity and in value.

This expansion in output at the primary level of the industry occurred without any softening of dockside prices. In fact, in some cases the price level moved up over the record level set a year ago. The most spectacular price rise has taken place in the first sale of Newfoundland salted codfish. The short supply resulting from the disappointing trap fishery earlier in the season and competition from Newfoundland freezing plants has been reinforced by strong demands from the major markets. The result has been that Newfoundland fishermen are now getting the highest prices on record, especially for fish in the salt bulk form. If present prices hold through the balance of the season they may offset, on the over-all value of salted fish, the effect of the smaller production. An indication of the situation in the markets comes from the report that Norway, a traditional net exporter of salted fish, is purchasing a substantial quantity of salt bulk fish from Newfoundland. I still express the hope that a better late fall fishery in Newfoundland will bring the cod landings in that province close to normal.

In the maritime provinces the expansion in production and quality of swordfish and tuna, the last just a two year old industry, continues. I want to state here that tremendous improvement in the tuna fishery and processing is expected within the next few months, particularly in the southern section of New Brunswick. I want to take this opportunity to commend those who have been pioneers in this new fishery, Captains Matthews and Savage from Campobello island. I should like also to mention here Captain Norman Ryall from the west coast, who has shown a special interest in the development of the tuna industry, and for whom the largest fishing boat ever built in North America will be launched in a few weeks time at one of the shipyards at Lévis, Quebec.

The United States is the predominant market for these special species. This year the value of scallop landings is up by $900,000 and swordfish by $600,000 over the last season. The average price to the fisherman for these species in the first seven months of this year has been 42 cents per pound for scallops and 31 cents per pound for swordfish, both up slightly from 1963.

In British Columbia the good catches of spring salmon, to which I referred earlier, were followed by unexpectedly large catches of sockeye, which is the most valuable of the British Columbia salmon. Landings of this species during the current season were 17 million pounds, an increase of 10 million pounds over the disappointing catch of last year. By early September the sockeye pack stood at over 343,000 cases—almost double the pack of the same period of 1963. The sockeye run on the Skeena river was well above the earlier expectations which suggested that 300,000 of these fish might be taken. It now appears that the actual catch may be 2½ times that number. Most of the major runs are expected to surpass the preseason forecasts.

The halibut catch, however, has been disappointing especially from area 2, but prices have firmed up considerably from last year. Mediums have been quoted at 27 to 28 cents a pound, which is about five cents higher than last year's level. Herring landings during the January-July period were below last year by about 13 million pounds, but higher prices maintained the value of the catch. The summer herring operation has yielded good results so far. Catches of the minor species, including the cods and soles, continue to expand and reached a total of 32 million pounds by the end of July, an increase over 1963 of 5 million pounds.

The quantity of fishery products exported in any January-July period include a large proportion of the production of the previous year with the exception, of course, of items sold alive or chilled. For this reason, export data at mid-year are not closely related to the level of production data covering the prior six months. The value of exports to the end of June, however, indicates a continuing strong demand for fishery products from this country. For all products this figure for the six months period was $88 million, compared with $72 million to the end of June 1963. The United States continues to be the largest customer in this field and Canadian exporters sold $58 million worth out of the $88 million total to markets in the United States.

The demand for groundfish products continued without abatement. In the first six months of 1964 exports of fillets and blocks totalled 61 million pounds or about 60 per cent of United States imports of these commodities from all countries and an increase of 14 million pounds over the volume imported from Canada during the first six months of 1963. Iceland continues as a strong competitor in the field and is now supplying the United States with about 30 per cent of its import requirements. It is therefore most imperative that our fishermen as well as our processors exercise greater care and better attention in producing the best quality product possible.

The strong demand for Canadian fishery products, and especially that associated with the growing population on this continent, has been accompanied by firm or rising prices. This situation has been apparent for several years and the industry is reacting to it in significant development and expansion. This is particularly true on the Atlantic coast where heretofore capital formation from earnings within the industry was not the rule. The construction of the large plant at Lunenburg and the plans for development at Canso, Georgetown and Summerside are evidence of the optimism pervading the industry. The Atlantic fleet now includes 92 trawlers, most of which are modern and efficient. Five years ago this fleet comprised 53 vessels. This is an increase of 80 per cent, and most of the 53 were used ships which had been purchased from the United Kingdom and the United States. The scallop fleet now contains about 35 vessels over 75 feet in length, capable of exploiting distant beds and landing scallops of high quality. Five years ago there were only nine scallop vessels of this size on the Atlantic coast. Fishermen, alone or in partnerships, are acquiring vessels in the 45 to 65 foot class which fish near and middle distance waters. They are equipped with modern fish location and catching gear, and their owners are actively experimenting with new types of gear and new methods of fishing. Nearly 500 of these vessels have been purchased by fishermen with financial assistance provided by the Department of Fisheries in recent years.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Because of the importance of the subject and the wide interest in it, the matter of territorial limits merits some mention at this time. The Territorial Sea and Fishing Zone Act, proclaimed on July 23, established a 12 mile fishing zone around the coasts of Canada. This means an additional nine mile fishing zone has been added to the existing territorial sea limit of three miles. The act also authorized the governor in council to establish straight base lines from which the territorial sea could be measured. Until such time as the straight base lines are established, the additional nine mile fishing zone is to be measured from the existing territorial sea limits.

While taking this unilateral step of establishing the new fishing zone and proceeding to the establishment of straight base lines, the government initiated discussions with a number of friendly countries which have been fishing off our coasts, some of them for many centuries, to see how their interests might be affected.

We are now on the second round of these discussions with eight countries and hope that they may be concluded soon, at which time the government intends to proceed with the establishment of the new base lines. I wish I were in a position to give the house more details of the second phase of these negotiations, but I am confident that I will have the co-operation of all hon. members in recognizing that such details cannot be made available while negotiations of this nature are under way.

On the high seas, where fishing rights are not a question, there is still need for consultation and agreement with other countries for the protection of the resource itself. This calls for a joint management program entailing a great deal of research and some long range planning. For this reason a number of international fisheries commissions have come into being, and Canada is represented on seven. Four of them are established under multilateral agreements, and deal with the fisheries of the northwest Atlantic ocean, the fisheries of the north Pacific, the stocks of fur seals and of whales. The other three agreements under which joint commissions operate are between Canada and the United States and deal with Pacific sockeye and pink salmon of the Fraser river system, the halibut of the north Pacific ocean, and the fisheries of the great lakes.

In connection with one of the foregoing, the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean, we are even now engaged here in Ottawa on a third round of talks between the three countries involved—Canada, Japan and the United States. The purpose of these talks, which are being conducted in a hopeful and co-operative atmosphere, is to find a better basis for resolving different views as a result of the experience gained during the 11 years the convention has been in operation. A new draft convention is being considered. Again, Mr. Chairman, I wish I were in a position to give more details of the negotiations which are now taking place here in Ottawa, but it would be improper for me to do so at this time.

I hope that at the conclusion of these negotiations I will be in a position to make a statement to the house. As I have said before, after an agreement is reached—and I have confidence that an agreement can be reached—I will refer to the standing committee on marine and fisheries the terms of this agreement before ratification.

I have already mentioned in this house our national fisheries development program the basis of which was set up at a federal-provincial conference on fisheries development which I convened in Ottawa last January. I explained, too, that this was also a forum for the views of industry as well as of government, since briefs were received at that time from the Fisheries Council of Canada and from fishermen's representatives from various areas.

The progress made as a result of this conference is quite heartening, and I think this is the proper time and place to report on it. A number of projects are now well under way as co-operative efforts between federal and provincial administrations. These include the following:

1. The development and demonstration of trawls suitable for rough bottom, so that our Canadian fishermen can exploit grounds now being actively fished by foreign vessels.

2. The modification of small boats for inshore dragging and introduction of Japanese-type mechanical squid jigging equipment—this is in the Newfoundland area.

3. Demonstration of the construction and operation of the western or Pacific trawl in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick waters.

4. The charter of a Norwegian whaling vessel, with her crew, to learn and to demonstrate the possibilities of reviving the whaling industry on the Atlantic coast.

5. The improvement of trawling operations for ground-fish off the Pacific coast.

6. A survey is being made of the Irish moss resources in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and a few days ago I made the announcement that a site had been selected on Prince Edward Island for the construction, with assistance from the Atlantic development board, of an Irish moss drying plant.

7. The exploration of a new scallop bed off Shippegan gully.

8. Experimental and development work in Quebec on fish-finding gear towed by helicopter.

9. The development and introduction of improved lobster processing line techniques in Quebec plants, and

10. Work in collaboration with ARDA on a project to improve the inshore fishery in northeastern Newfoundland.

During the conference it became obvious that there was a need for regional federal-provincial committees similar in concept to the federal-provincial Atlantic fisheries committee which was established in 1958 to co-ordinate programs for fisheries development, and the federal-provincial committee for Ontario fisheries. Consequently we now have a federal-provincial committee for British Columbia fisheries and a federal-provincial prairie fisheries committee. All these federal-provincial regional committees are of inestimable value in that they constitute formal consultative bodies which can discuss and deal with questions of common interest such as marketing, research and fisheries management generally. A sport fishery advisory committee has also been established in British Columbia.

Agreement has been reached to include officials of the departments of northern affairs and citizenship and immigration on the appropriate committees when subjects affecting Northwest Territories development are to be discussed.

Restriction of entry into the lobster fishery has been considered at regional federal-provincial meetings; so has the subject of limitation of entry into the Pacific salmon fisheries, and there have been discussions on fish farming, in particular, with respect to commercial trout farms. A good deal of background material on this subject has been prepared and these matters are under active consideration.

The control of pollution of our waters remains a subject of vital interest and much information has been collected. The fisheries research board has been in consultation with the national research council concerning the establishment of an intergovernmental committee on pollution to ensure the availability of complete information. It is hoped that work on salt-water pollution in the Atlantic region can be started and that the work already carried out on the Pacific coast can be strengthened.

Discussions have taken place with the Department of Labour and with provincial authorities on vocational training and education for fishermen, and my department is creating an educational unit to co-ordinate activities in this connection.

Then again, as a result of recommendations made during the federal-provincial conference, a fisheries-related approach to improvements in harbour works has been discussed with the Department of Public Works and the Atlantic development board. Discussions have also taken place with the Department of Finance concerning improvements to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. The provincial authorities and the industry are being asked for their views concerning credit facilities for fishermen and possible inadequacies in the existing legislation.

In addition to the programs already mentioned, many other industrial development projects are under way. Powered gill-net haulers are being introduced, synthetic cod gill-nets are being tested in areas where they have not yet been used, and we are experimenting with synthetic materials for cod trap construction. We are also working on a prototype of a mechanized gillnet boat capable of multipurpose fishing operations, and we have introduced porbeagle shark fishing gear and techniques in the Atlantic provinces.

Modern methods of seining herring in western and southern Newfoundland also are being demonstrated to ascertain the commercial potential of such operations in those areas. New techniques in salt fish drying, using high speed equipment developed in the department, are being demonstrated on a commercial scale for the benefit of industry, and we are producing, on a pilot plant basis, commercially acceptable instant fish-potato flakes.

We are working on a design of a deep sea stern ramp trawler to meet the specific Canadian requirements for ground-fish trawling operations and are experimenting with an electrified trawl.

In Nova Scotia we are studying the distribution and abundance of herring, whiting, argentines and sandlaunce, which are species of small fish not yet exploited by Canadian fishermen. The object is to develop offshore trawling gear and techniques so that this situation may be remedied. Scottish methods of Danish seining are being tested to increase the efficiency of this technique, and we are hoping to develop a distant water tuna fishery, using large seine boats.

A new and promising design for a plastic lobster trap is being tried out on a commercial scale in Prince Edward Island, where we also hope to encourage offshore herring seining methods, like those used in Iceland, in order to meet European orders for frozen herring. We are aware of the great potentialities of fishing for pelagic fish in the gulf of St. Lawrence and we are prepared to meet this challenge. Crab fishing operations are under way in the Northumberland strait, and we are hoping that a crab fishery can be developed around the Magdalen and Anticosti islands. We anticipate good results from a manually operated hydraulic clam digger developed by the fisheries research board for clam beds in the maritimes.

In British Columbia one of our aims is to diversify fishing operations off the Pacific coast by the introduction of better trawling operations for groundfish, and we are working on an improved refrigeration system for use in the halibut fishery in distant areas.

The foregoing are just some of the many projects by which the department hopes to aid all segments of the fishing industry in all areas by increasing the efficiency of the fleets, the gear and the techniques.

Significant advances have been made by industry in providing facilities to increase their processing capacity and to expand the variety of fish and shellfish products available to an increasingly quality conscious public. The department's program for the inspection of fish plants and fishery products to ensure the production of good quality fish under acceptable sanitary conditions will receive added impetus with the passing of regulations providing for the compulsory registration of fresh and frozen fish plants effective April 1, 1965. This will involve assessment of construction, equipment and processing procedures in some 260 plants across Canada. Initial registration will be granted when a plant meets specified minimum requirements in these categories. The eventual success of the program will depend upon active enforcement of the requirements through frequent plant visits by a well trained inspection staff.

Complementary to the development program for improved product quality at the processing level has been the department's work in the fields of fish boat inspection and dockside grading. As an outcome of the federal-provincial conference on fisheries development, which pointed to the need for improvement in the quality of fish as landed, more emphasis has been placed on these aspects of inspection. Regulations are being developed for adequate sanitation and handling methods on fishing boats. Educational material is being prepared for the assistance of fishermen in handling and caring for their catch, and also for those handling fish at the retail level.

The department's laboratories are responsible for the inspection of domestic and imported canned fish; experimental work on the development of new and improved standards for canned and other types of fish; shellfish toxicity control programs; the bacteriological control of fresh and frozen shellfish plants and the purity of plant water supplies. These services are provided by permanent or mobile laboratories as the need dictates. In this connection it is proposed to replace the mobile laboratory facilities in northern New Brunswick with a permanent laboratory. We hope that this new laboratory which will be established at Shippegan in the centre of a 35 to 40 million pound yearly production will be in operation for the 1965 season.

Unsatisfactory water supplies for processing operations have been a major factor in a number of plants being unable to attain the Canadian government specifications board standards for approved plants, and this will undoubtedly be a factor in the plant certification program. Water supplies received attention in a number of briefs presented to the federal-provincial conference and it is encouraging to note that the Atlantic development board has taken an active interest in the matter of plant water supplies. Survey data, which may lead to the development of projects aimed at improving water supplies, are presently being reviewed. The department's laboratories will continue, and expand where necessary, participation in these surveys.

You will note that the expenditures for conservation and development of the fisheries resources are mainly to provide for the usual supply, maintenance and replacements in our protection organization, which is naturally widespread, as well as to continue and to expand the fish culture programs on both coasts and in the freshwater areas. These programs are increasingly important because fishing pressure, both commercial and for sport, becomes stronger every year. I think that most hon. members are aware that scientific and engineering skills are vital to proper resource management, and I can say confidently that fish culture development in Canada is as advanced as any in the world; in fact, methods we have developed, such as the building of successful artificial spawning channels, are copied in other countries.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Lachance): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Lachance): Does the committee consent to the minister's continuing?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robichaud: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I thank hon. members for allowing me to complete my remarks; I shall not be much longer.

I have mentioned the education of fishermen, but we also have another educational program which extends right across the country, directed at consumers. The object, quite simply, is to get Canadians to eat more fishery products in the home, in restaurants and hotels and in institutions. Departmental home economists work out of test kitchens in the major centres, giving demonstrations of fish cookery and convincing more and more people of the value of fish as food. As a result of these demonstrations and by the use of various kinds of publicity, we distribute thousands of pieces of consumer literature every year, and the highly successful "Canadian Fish Cook Book" is recognized as a final authority—indeed, a United States publisher is even now inquiring about publication rights in that country. Film and filmstrips, produced for the department by the national film board, are widely circulated and in several instances have won international awards for excellence. Departmental publications, as well as displays and exhibits at conventions and meetings where fish is a relevant topic, are also used in our consumer educational program. Other printed or filmed educational material is produced directly for the benefit of the industry and the fishermen themselves.

As I stated at the beginning of this review, conditions in the fishing industry in 1964 have been encouraging. Prices generally have been satisfactory. However, price support was necessary to relieve a 1963 surplus production of sauger in the prairie provinces, where markets were weakened by a temporary reduction in the demand for smoked fish. Assistance also was given by the fisheries prices support board to expand the markets for pickled herring, mackerel and alewives, following a curtailment of shipments during 1962 and 1963 due to political and economic difficulties in some of the Caribbean markets for these products.

The Newfoundland bait service is continuing its program of expansion and modernization. A new vessel, the C.G.S. Arctica was commissioned in July, has a larger capacity and greater storage space than its predecessor, and will provide bait service to many isolated communities in Newfoundland. In addition, two new trucks have been added to our facilities so that we can take advantage of the expanding highway network in the province. We are also making the most out of this year's run of squid so that we should be able to meet all the bait requirements of the coming year. In fact, instructions were recently issued to purchase an additional two million pounds of squid for storage for next year's bait requirements in Newfoundland, in addition to quantities of herring and capelin already in storage.

The department's fishermen's indemnity plan—which provides low cost insurance for small fishing vessels—continues to expand. At the present time more than 6,800 vessels, valued at about $25 million, are covered by this insurance scheme. We have initiated a study of the possibilities of extending the indemnity plan to the inland fisheries, as well as extending the scope of the operations to include fixed fishing gear and shore installations. It is expected that this study should be completed before the end of the year.

The scientific investigations which are vital to successful management of the fisheries are carried out by the fisheries research board of Canada, which is actively engaged in studies of aquatic animals in the three oceans that touch Canadian shores and in several of Canada's many lakes.

An appreciable amount of research is directed to meeting requirements of a number of international fisheries commissions. Investigations are carried out on fisheries technology aimed at improving the quality of fisheries products.

Among the highlights of the current year are the following: 20 authentic returns of pink salmon have occurred to date in St. Mary's bay, Newfoundland, from 2.5 million eggs taken in British Columbia and transplanted in North Harbour river, Newfoundland in 1962. This number may seem small to many of us, but I want to assure hon. members that it is quite significant to the scientists of the fisheries research board who are proceeding with this program. In fact, larger planting involving 10 million eggs is planned for this fall.

Progress has been made in studying the survival of young Pacific salmon in the sea with a view to predicting the abundance of major salmon runs. The important Atlantic fishing grounds were surveyed and valuable information obtained on the condition of various stocks of fish. The behaviour of fish is being studied as a basis for improving the design of fishing gear. Greenland cod have been found in moderate abundance in western coastal Arctic waters. The substance responsible for causing off-odours in Labrador cod fillets has been identified. Significant progress has been made in devising pumping equipment for unloading fish such as salmon. The process for preparing fish protein concentrate has been modified to permit use of a wider variety of fish.

Seventeen new research projects have arisen from deliberations at last January's federal-provincial fisheries development conference. On the Atlantic coast the main research emphasis will be on utilization of underexploited species—capelin, herring, sharks, tuna, swordfish, whiting, argentines, and others. Further work is also planned on lobsters, particularly on the prevention of losses in holding pounds, and intensive work is under way on various aspects of the processing of Newfoundland cod. On the Pacific coast, major efforts will be directed to studies of coho and chinook salmon in relation to sport and commercial fishing conflicts, and on increasing sockeye salmon production on the Skeena river.

Biological aspects of oceanographic research are being expanded to complement the growing program in physical oceanography by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. The board is playing a leading role in the establishment of an oceanographic information service which will provide background for fisheries forecasting.

A new research vessel, the E. E. Prince will be constructed to work out of the biological station at St. Andrews, New Brunswick. Construction of a new laboratory to house the Arctic biological station is proceeding at Ste Anne de Bellevue, near Montreal, and occupancy is expected in mid-1965. Plans are being made for extension of the main building of the biological station at Nanaimo, British Columbia.

I have tried in this review to cover the present situation of the fishing industry and to outline the work being carried out by my department. No doubt further questions will occur to hon. members as the items are considered, at which time I shall be happy to answer them.

Mr. Chairman, before resuming my seat I should like to repeat what I said yesterday in reply to a question regarding the killing of seals. This is an important matter to which reference has been made on several occasions during this present session and in respect of which there is general interest throughout this country. My department has received close to 2,000 letters concerning the seal operations. As I said yesterday, it is our intention to amend the regulations in this regard. A meeting was held on May 19 in Moncton with representatives of the industry, a number of fishermen and a representative of the humane society. The draft amendments have now been prepared and a second meeting will take place here in Ottawa on October 1. We intend to discuss with those parties concerned, and who have a special interest in this operation, the amendment we have in mind, and I am confident that the amendments finally introduced will meet most of the problems which have been referred to us in recent months.

In closing, I want to express my sincere gratitude and appreciation to the personnel of my department, involving approximately 225 employees at headquarters here in Ottawa and some 2,000 in the field from Newfoundland to British Columbia. All are dedicated public servants, conscious of their responsibilities, and anxious to devote their knowledge, time and energies for the betterment of individual fishermen as well as of all those interested in this vital industry.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I know the committee is grateful to the minister for his review of the activities of the fishing industry in Canada during this past year and for his review of the Department of Fisheries. It is not the intention of the official opposition to engage in a prolonged debate, at least on the first item of these estimates, in view of the fact the fiscal year is now well spent, and in addition, in view of the important legislation dealing with fisheries generally that has been placed before parliament this session. That is not to say we will not be critically and objectively, I hope, looking at some of the various items in this department's estimates as they are called one by one.

I am grateful to the minister for pointing out the evident growth of the fishing industry in Canada during the past year. This is something from which both he and I, in common with many thousands of Canadians, can take great satisfaction. I think in all modesty both he and I can, along with 2,000 or more devoted civil servants in the Department of Fisheries, deserve some of the credit. However, this is a phenomenon which is bound to occur as world populations increase, and especially as the total population of North America rapidly increases, because there is bound to be a greater demand put on sea resources, as far as the production of high protein foods is concerned.

I have noted that in total, as far as these estimates are concerned, there is an increase of $602,500 in salaries and civilian allowances over the previous fiscal year, and the total increase in the department's estimates is something like $395,000. So, apart from the increase in wages, which I presume is due mostly to salary raises rather than an increase in staff, there has been a slight net decrease in the main estimates of the Department of Fisheries. As has been said by members of this committee in commenting on these estimates in previous years, I think this is one department where there should be a continuous growth or at least some growth in expenditure, because many additional things have been required in the development of the fishing industry over the years and many things can be thought of that would be beneficial if we had the money to spend on them. Many of these were discussed at the federal-provincial conference on fisheries. The conference in itself is no doubt beneficial because it accelerates and broadens the scheme of co-operation with the provinces that has been going on for many years. Nevertheless there cannot be a very great increase in activities in this connection unless the government and parliament are prepared to recommend greater expenditure in some of these fields.

I am not suggesting that there should be a sudden increase in expenditure but I think there should be an increase sufficient to provide many of the benefits that members of the committee are aware could be provided with additional expenditure. I am thinking not only of research but of the application of new fishing methods, industrial development needs, for example, conservation and inspection and all the various directorates of the Department of Fisheries that on the whole are doing an excellent job, and have been over the years within the limits of the money available to them for expenditure. I realize it is only a few months since the conference was held, but no doubt in the next fiscal year there will be increases such as I have suggested in the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. I would hope that the government would see fit to refer next year's estimates to the standing committee on marine and fisheries some time during the winter months in the present fiscal year so that the committee will have an opportunity to make a thorough review of the activities of the department, to refresh their memories and to be brought up to date on developments in the industry generally.

I was pleased that the minister mentioned the legislation passed by the house regarding the 12 mile limit, but I regret that so far as the general public are concerned there has been a great deal of misunderstanding about what the situation is. I recognize that the minister has not been particularly guilty in this regard, but in recent election campaigns some of his colleagues created the impression that immediately the government came to power our territorial waters would be extended to 12 miles and that conditions within that 12 mile area would be exactly the same as they have been within the historic three mile territorial sea where no foreigners fish.

I am pleased to note that the act has been brought into effect, but I note that an order in council was passed on July 17 which exempts the fishing vessels of a number of countries, the United States of America, France, Great Britain, Portugal, Spain, Italy, Norway and Denmark for the time being at least from the application of the legislation excluding foreign fishing vessels from the 12 mile territorial sea. I hope that at some time during the course of the minister's replies he will be able to give the committee some indication of what the policy of the government is going to be in this regard. If there is going to be a phasing out period for these countries, what are the terms going to be? Are some of these countries going to be excluded from the application of the act indefinitely, I hope the minister will be able to answer no. In actual fact the situation at the present time is much the same as it has been in previous years, with the exception that no additional foreign fishermen can come within the 12 mile limit.

I also hope that at an early date the government will be able to announce the co-ordinates to be established under this legislation which will close off large bodies of water and make them national waters of Canada. I should like to think that this will be done before next spring. In particular, so far as sealing for example is concerned, I would hope it would be done early enough to exclude foreigners from carrying on sealing in the gulf of St. Lawrence and the strait of Belle Isle, those areas where they have customarily killed seals in previous years. I would hope that the co-ordinates would be established in time for that and that there will be no exception so far as sealing is concerned.

I am pleased that the minister brought up the question of sealing. I am concerned not only about the humane aspect of the matter involving the methods of killing but also about the conservation of the resource. We should remember that another valuable species of sea mammal existed in huge numbers in the gulf of St. Lawrence in early times but became completely extinct some years ago. I refer to the type of walrus that existed there. The seal stocks are exploited by a number of countries and they should be the subject of urgent conservation agreements. I commend the minister and the department for taking action to have seals included in the ICNAF treaty.

There are a number of other points I should like to mention. The minister referred to the progress of the negotiations for the extension of the north Pacific treaty. I cannot emphasize too much the importance of arriving at an agreement to protect particularly the species of fish on which Canadian taxpayers have spent considerable sums of money over the years in providing fishways, artificial spawning grounds and so on. I trust that these types of fish will be recognized as ones in which Canada has a special interest and a degree of proprietary ownership, regardless of where they happen to migrate in the Pacific ocean. I hope that something equivalent to the principle of abstention will be included in the new treaty.

I do not want to dwell at length on other aspects at the present time, but when the items are called the minister might bring us up to date on the progress and success or otherwise of the big Qualicum project, the matter of lamprey control in the great lakes with lampricide, and perhaps give us a more extended review of the shipbuilding and replacement plans of the department. I may say that during the period I was the minister, the department found it necessary to replace quite a number of vessels of smaller size. But in addition to that, as I recall. we had to re-engine the Howay and Laurier, build a new Cygnus, also the Cape Freels, the A.T. Cameron, the G.B. Reed and initiated the replacement of the old Arctica which the minister has reported is now in operation. Perhaps the minister would say a word about other major programs so far as ship replacement is concerned.

I was interested, as I am sure other members of the committee were, in the report the minister gave in connection with joint programs with the provinces with regard to the development of the industry, not only in methods of catching, processing and so on, but in other phases such as the possibility of commercial fish farming and matters of that sort. I think he left the implication, and I do not believe it was intentional, that all these programs stemmed from the federal-provincial conference on fisheries. Most of these programs, of course, have been going on for years between the provinces on the one hand and the federal department on the other.

I commend the minister for the interest he is showing in additional educational programs in co-operation with the provinces for fishermen, because this is a highly competitive international industry in which we cannot depend on having any built-in advantage so far as competition with other countries is concerned. We, in many cases, exploit a common resource upon the high seas. Therefore it is essential that the industry is engaged in by people who are of the highest skills and capabilities in order to compete effectively with the high standards of technical training which have been a common situation in Europe, and no doubt in Japan and the other countries with which Canada now competes. Of course the minister no doubt recognizes that the opportunities in this regard are greater than they were because of the great developments in the building of technical and other schools as a result of joint programs between the Department of Labour and the provinces over the last number of years.

I commend the minister for keeping his remarks non-political, because this is a non-political department and we are all interested in its progress. Some statements that have been made by some of his colleagues during previous election campaigns are regrettable. Some of these statements indicated these people were not as knowledgeable as they should be with regard to the fishing industry, and it would seem evident they hoped they were speaking to an audience which was not very well versed in the problems of the fishing industry because they were trying to create the impression that any difficulties of the fishing industry were due almost solely to the minister who happened to be the head of the department at the time. I hope that this sort of thing will not happen in the future. I take no official credit, but when I headed the department I had the honour of being the head of a department manned by some of the finest, most capable civil servants in Canada, and perhaps anywhere in this regard. I would say the main limitation on progress so far as the Department of Fisheries can initiate it and stimulate it, is chiefly lack of funds. There is no lack of technical knowledge, skill and desire concerning what is beneficial to the fishing industry. There have been unfortunate statements made in the past, as I have said, by some of the minister's colleagues.

I note that one of the items which has increased is the cost of publications and advertising. Perhaps the minister might consider running an advertisement in some of the newspapers in the fishing areas stating that the outlandish and extravagant promises made by some of his colleagues in the heat of election campaigns should not be taken seriously by the fishing industry.

Mr. Robichaud: Before you recognize the next hon. member, Mr. Chairman, may I correct now what I am sure the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) inadvertently overlooked. He stated the total amount by which the estimates were increased was $395,000. There is also an amount of $1,588,000 in the supplementary estimates, which makes the over-all increase $1,982,000.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I was aware of that. I was reading the comparison of the main estimates on the sheet in the back of the book.

Mr. Barnett: At the outset of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that I find myself in complete agreement with both the minister and the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean), the former minister of the department, when they referred to the fact that most of the success so far achieved in enhancing the development of the fishing industry in Canada has resulted from the fact that we have a small but devoted band of public servants in the administrative and scientific areas of the department. I certainly wish to join with the minister and the previous speaker in expressing my appreciation, on behalf of this party, of the kind of service they have given to Canada and to Canadian fishermen in particular.

The hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) suggested that this was not a political department. He made reference to some statements which apparently have been rankling him a little bit and which were made by members or former members of this house. I would agree with him that in the sense of the word "political", which was obvious from his remarks, by and large the Department of Fisheries has not been a political department. Nevertheless I would suggest that in the proper use of the term "politics", it is as much a political department as any other department of government and that questions of policy developed with the knowledge of our fishing resources present and potential, are very much matters of urgent political consideration in this country. They certainly should be of urgent consideration to the members in this house.

The minister in his statement gave us as comprehensive an outline of the activities of the department during the past year as I suppose one could expect from him in a single speech. Most of what he said, on the face of it, sounded as if there had been some pracical achievements. However, before the consideration of the estimates has been concluded, we might wish to analyse and discuss some of the particular items to which he referred, and probably raise some questions on matters to which he did not refer.

The hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) has mentioned one or two of these. There are a number of other matters that are of great concern on the Pacific coast of Canada at the present time to which the minister did not refer. I mention for example the question of licence limitation which is, I think, a matter of great and urgent concern. There is the whole question as to what developments can and should take place in the field of the rights of fishermen in the matter of collective organization, a situation which I think the minister cannot but agree is in a rather unhappy state at the present time in British Columbia because of apparent misunderstandings as to where jurisdiction lies. We have had many unnecessary upsets in the fishing industry in British Columbia due in large part to the fact that there seems to have been no proper exercise of jurisdiction at the government level. Here again the question of federal and provincial jurisdiction seems to enter into it.

The minister in his remarks confined himself almost entirely to what I would call the day-to-day operations of the department and the industry within Canada. But I feel perhaps it might be useful, in the context of our initial consideration of the estimates of the department for this year, if someone said a few words about the relationship of Canadian fisheries to the situation in the world as a whole. I certainly cannot pose as any authority in this field so I would like, if I may, to draw briefly from what has been said by someone whom I believe—and I think most members will agree with this—is recognized and regarded as an authority in this field. I should like to put on the record one or two quotations from statements which have been made by the recently retired director of the fisheries division of the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations, Dr. D. B. Finn. First of all, Mr. Chairman, if I may I would refer to an article which appeared in the Financial Times of London which the Toronto Globe and Mail thought significant enough to reproduce in June of last year at a time when Dr. Finn was still occupying the post of director of the fisheries division with the United Nations. This statement is as follows:

> The most recent statistics show that in 1961 man made his best annual fish catch in history—41,200,000 metric tons.

I suppose these figures are slightly out of date today; the minister indicated that there had been a considerable rise in the last year in the total tonnage of catch in Canadian waters and this may very well apply in some other areas of the world. However, Dr. Finn in his article goes on to point out:

> About 80 per cent of this was taken north of the equator, much of it from a few traditionally rich grounds whose names have rung with adventure for centuries—

He goes on to name some of the well known fishing banks adjacent to Europe and adjacent to our eastern shores. He refers to the banks in the East China sea, the Yellow sea and the Kuroshio current, which he says have traditionally supplied the great fish markets of the Far East. Dr. Finn then goes on to say:

> But the traditionally good fishing spots are beginning to show signs of depletion. Within the past few years two trends have resulted. First, as resources dwindle, nations have extended their national fishing waters, increasing international problems. Second, fishing is done much farther from home than ever before and catching is combined with processing at sea by the more developed countries.

I believe those remarks are quite significant in view of the fact that, as the minister has indicated, Canadian negotiations in the international field are going on at the present time. While I do not wish to go into that question today in my remarks, nevertheless I make reference to this matter because I think it points up what some of us in the house have been trying to suggest, namely the urgency and importance of the Canadian government developing satisfactory arrangements with other nations who are interested in the fisheries of the high seas. Dr. Finn in this article goes on to mention another matter. He says:

> Two other significant occurrences have influenced fisheries since about 1956. The first is what appears, from slim statistics, to be an upsurge in China's fishing industry. The second is the tremendous growth of the Peruvian fishmeal industry. Peru now catches more than 12 per cent of the entire world catch—a take composed almost entirely of the finger-length anchovy and used almost entirely for animal feed.

The impact of that activity on the part of Peru has not, I think, been without its effect upon certain aspects of the fishing industry on the west coast of Canada. Then Dr. Finn goes on to put our position in perspective with other fishing nations of the world in these words:

> In terms of amount of fish caught, the greatest fishing nations rank thus: Japan, China, Peru, Russia, the United States, Norway and Canada. The 1955-59 average catches for the top seven add up to more than half the average total catch of the 73 countries which take 98 per cent of the world catch. In 1959, Britain ranked eighth among fishing nations; in 1961 she ranked eleventh, behind Spain, south and southwest Africa and India.
> Part of the explanation for the world catch increase (more than 27 per cent since 1958) lies in today's higher-powered, longer-ranged fishing boats and their modern gear. The largest and most modern of the world's fleets belong to Russia and Japan. Their ships roam almost every sea. Boats of more than 300 horsepower comprised only 6 per cent of the 1960 Soviet fishing fleet, but these boats took 76 per cent of the 1960 Soviet catch.

Then Dr. Finn goes on to describe how both the Japanese and the soviets have developed methods of catching, processing and preserving the fishing products on the high seas in their modern vessels. Later in this article, however, Dr. Finn points out:

> Meanwhile, the majority of the world's fishermen still put to sea under oar or sail, many thousands in craft that have undergone few changes since prehistoric times. In large areas of the tropics, one fisherman catches about one ton of fish a year. The rough figure in developed countries is more than 100 tons per man per year.
> Despite the far-ranging trawlers, man has not yet made more than a gesture towards exploiting the larger potential of the seas. It is estimated that 90 per cent of sea productivity is never harvested by man.
>
> Since 1955 the Japanese have discovered at least nine new rich tuna areas in the south Pacific and Indo-Pacific. Rich catches are reported from the gulf of Guinea and the north Pacific. The southern seas are virtually untouched.

Dr. Finn then goes on to express his considered opinion in this regard:

> The sea can be made to produce more—through species transplantation, for example.

Then he makes reference to the attempt made to transplant Pacific salmon species to the Atlantic coast of Canada and points out that the Soviet union has transferred Baltic herring to the sea of Azov, thereby doubling the growth rate of the species. Later in the article, Dr. Finn suggests—and I quote him again:

> Artificially induced upwelling to carry rich seabed nutrients nearer the surface has been proposed to increase fish catches. Slow nuclear reactors lowered into the deeps may, some time in the future, overcome the problem of the tremendous amounts of heat energy required. Direct fertilization especially in narrow bays, may prove successful. Elimination of the major predators of fish would no doubt increase catches. But in this, and in every other instance, the sea's life balance must be preserved and as yet we know too little of these life cycles.

As I said at the outset of my remarks, there might be some virtue, as we discuss the activities of the Department of Fisheries, in making some reference to the position occupied by Canada in relation to world fisheries problems, placing our own situation in total perspective. I should like, if I may, to refer to another article expressing the views of Dr. Finn—an article written shortly after he had retired from his position as director of the fisheries division of the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations. This appeared in the March, 1964 issue of Western Fisheries:

> The lack of wise management of the world's fisheries resources seriously restricts man's ability to reap a maximum harvest from the sea, according to Dr. D. B. Finn, who retired January 31 as director of the fisheries division of the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations.
> He blamed the inability to get maximum sustained yield from the sea on the intense competitiveness of private fisheries enterprises and the inability of governments to agree on a common code of discipline in exploiting the oceans.

The article goes on to say that Dr. Finn cited the failure of the international whaling convention as one example of this contention. He is then quoted as saying:

> The result is that the blue whale is now economically extinct. It seems to me that the world is now on its way to this state of affairs at a rapidly increasing pace.
>
> Private enterprise in fishing tends to become more oligopolistic, if not outright monopolostic. Although this may increase efficiency and make possible a better use of capital, it does nothing to relieve the competition between countries for the spoils of the chase. In fact, it may make it worse.
> Nor does increased efficiency in catching, per se, do anything to produce wiser cropping to achieve the maximum yield. Under such regimes, the yield of the sea may be far below its potential production. Eventually only the most efficient private expeditions will be able to make fishing pay. This is not necessarily true for state-operated expeditions which may be able to disregard costs as a matter of government policy.

Dr. Finn is then quoted as saying that one of the other problems is the sheer number of organizations now engaged in fisheries research.

In concluding my use of the knowledge and advice of Dr. Finn, I should like to quote the last paragraph of this article. It reads:

Reduced to its simplest terms, world fishing has two elements—the nature of fishing itself, and the living resource and its response to man's exploitation. Describing the first, he said, "Modern fishing is a fiercely competitive hunt. The hunters and their skills increase daily."

I have deliberately introduced the advice and the knowledge contained in these articles because their author, having occupied such an important post for a number of years, is obviously in a much better position to have expert knowledge on the situation than I am, certainly, or indeed any other member of this committee. I think the quotations which I have put on record from these articles place in perspective some of the questions we must consider in relation to our overall fisheries policies. In my view they provide good ground for the concern which all members of this committee should be showing with regard to the results of our efforts in the course of international negotiation—concern, also, that the government of Canada should take seriously the desirability of these negotiations reaching a fruitful outcome.

I think it is apparent, after reading the speeches made during the debate we had earlier when the bill on the fishing zones came before this house, that some of us did not feel the government was taking these matters seriously enough. In fact I sometimes feel the Minister of Fisheries is being left out, in a little corner of his own, away from the centre of government activity. While he may have received some token assistance from our amiable Secretary of State for External Affairs in connection with certain of these negotiations I think the minister and his small complement of officials are left to wrestle with these problems alone, and that the full weight of the government of Canada is not being thrown into these efforts.

The same might be said regarding our attitude toward internal policies. The minister did make some reference to a federal-provincial conference and to this question of a national policy. I listened carefully to his report of some of the activities which, he said, have already resulted from that conference and I had the feeling, shared apparently by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean), that many of these activities were already in progress, up to a point at least, before that conference began. Representations were made at those meetings, as the minister will recall, to the effect that what we need is a real national development program. Perhaps I may recall some of the statements which were made with particular reference to fisheries problems on the Atlantic coast by someone who is certainly a better authority on these matters than I can claim to be. I refer to the premier of Newfoundland. I had the opportunity of paying a short visit to Newfoundland a few years ago when I saw a little at first hand of the fishing industry in that province. But certainly the presentation made by the premier of Newfoundland to the conference last January is much more up to date than any personal knowledge or impression I have of the situation there.

Perhaps I should point out that in his introduction the premier of Newfoundland had this to say when he presented his statement to the conference on January 20 of this year. I should like to make reference to a few excerpts from the premier's statement. He said:

A year ago the government of Newfoundland made a presentation to the government of Canada —a presentation that we entitled "National fisheries development".

That, of course, was at a time when the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) was still minister of fisheries.

In that presentation we talked of a national fisheries policy as distinct from a Newfoundland fisheries policy. We are still talking about a national policy. And we still visualize the regional and the provincial fisheries programs to be developed within the framework of national policy as integral parts of a broad national, all-Canada, coast to coast fisheries development program.

We are not talking about a policy conceived as a system of welfare payments and handout programs. We are talking about policy designed to achieve far reaching development and investment programs that will enable our Canadian fishermen, whether they be in Newfoundland or Quebec, in Manitoba or in British Columbia to make a decent living from the harvesting of the rich resources of the sea the lakes and the rivers of our land. This is what we ask for Newfoundland. This is what we ask for Canada.

Then in the next paragraph Mr. Smallwood goes on to say:

We do not have it today. Today the position of the fisherman is prejudiced by risk and uncertainty in terms of both price and production. Risk and uncertainty means that capital cannot be safely extended; it means that the organization of co-operatives is fraught with difficulty and danger. In the distribution of income resulting from the catch the fisherman, certainly the Newfoundland fisherman, is in a residual and untenable position.

A little further on he goes on to say:

Gradually the fish resource becomes little more than a product that marginally reduces the necessity for social and welfare payments. The accumulative effect in the long run is a downward economic spiral of the fishing industry.

Then lastly he points out:

—to this date despite good intentions and a great deal of unco-ordinated piecemeal activity, we have largely failed our fishermen. The fish are there, the markets are there, the fishermen are there. But the governments across Canada have failed to devise that national policy which can provide real opportunities for the men who live by fishing.

I think that these words which were uttered at the beginning of this year may form a fairly sound basis on which we can assess the merits of the statements which were made by the minister in his opening remarks about what progress has been made in the development of a fisheries program.

The minister may recall that the premier's statement was made against the context of a letter which he had received from the present Prime Minister, and perhaps it might be useful to recall what the Prime Minister had to say in this letter to Mr. Smallwood which was apparently written on February 13, 1963. He said:

Dear Mr. Smallwood:

I am grateful to you for giving me a copy of the presentation of the government of Newfoundland to the government of Canada on national fisheries development and for the opportunity, as leader of the Liberal party, to express my attitude to these proposals for a national fishery policy.

While, during an election campaign, I could not possibly secure the expert advice I would require to make a judgment in detail of the various proposals, your approach to a national fishery policy is right in line with the declared policy of the national Liberal party, to "take parallel action for the welfare of farmers and fishermen;" and with the objective set out in my speech on February 11: "to ensure the farmers and the fishermen of all Canada their fair share of the national income and opportunities for a better life".

I have no hesitation, therefore, in undertaking, if I become prime minister after April 8, to submit the Newfoundland proposals to the Department of Fisheries and other agencies of government concerned for immediate examination and report, to be followed promptly by the calling of a federal-provincial fisheries conference to work out a federal-provincial program for fishery development to be founded on the principle that national action for fisheries should parallel the action already being taken, and action to be taken, for agriculture.

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd.) L. B. Pearson

Well, Mr. Chairman, there again I think that in approaching our discussion of these estimates the letter of the present Prime Minister addressed to Premier Smallwood in February 1963 provides a very good basis for us to assess the progress which the minister claims is being made in this respect in his department. The hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) made reference to the fact that we have had some rather important fishery legislation. We had one item, the matter of the 12 mile fishing zone, but I do not see anything on the order paper today with respect to fisheries or fisheries development, any action which has to do with the expansion of fisheries credit, or any of these matters. Had time permitted today during questions I had intended to ask the Prime Minister, knowing that he might have commitments which would make it impossible for him to remain in the chamber during the entire consideration of the fisheries estimates, whether he had anything to add to an answer he gave me on February 21 of this year. As the committee may recall, this was shortly after the Prime Minister had made his opening speech of the current session. I had asked him what measures he had in mind to parallel this action as far as the fishery is concerned—he had made some reference to farm credit in his speech—and the Prime Minister answered in these words, which are to be found at page 92 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, I am very conscious of the fact that I did not mention fisheries in my statement yesterday. It was an omission, but I can assure my hon. friend that assistance to agriculture in the form of broadening the basis of farm credit and in other ways will certainly be paralleled by help to the fishery.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I did not have a chance to ask the Prime Minister today whether he had anything to add to that, and now he is no longer in the house I hope the minister will arrange that the Prime Minister explain when there is going to be this parallel legislation with the farm credit legislation, the farm machinery legislation and some of these other matters which apparently, in the Prime Minister's view and in the view of the premier of the province of Newfoundland, must be part and parcel of an adequate national fisheries development program. In many ways—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, unless he has consent of the committee to continue beyond his allocated time.

Mr. Barnett: I am just about to conclude, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Barnett: I was simply going to say in conclusion that I think it is not unfair to say that in many ways the Department of Fisheries is the Cinderella of the government departments. From what I have been able to observe, so far at least in this session, I must say that the Prime Minister seems to be acting much more in the capacity of the stepmother to Cinderella than in the capacity of the Prince Charming who is going to come along with a golden chariot to assist his minister to carry forward an adequate fisheries development program for Canada.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, it is always very interesting to hear a résumé of the activities of the fisheries department. I think ministers of fisheries have set a precedent from year to year, and it is now being carried on, in that their introductory remarks have been among the most interesting presented by the ministers of any of the departments. On this occasion the minister has endeavoured to give a fairly comprehensive résumé of the work of his department, for which I wish to express our appreciation. I am not going to suggest that the work has been sufficient to meet our expectations and desires, but perhaps we would never be satisfied and would always look for something better and more far reaching. However, we appreciate the statement the minister has made in introducing his estimates.

Reference has been made to the legislation passed recently which extended the territorial seas and fishing limits. The minister is aware that there was considerable dissatisfaction with the extent of the limits provided by that legislation. We were very desirous of having some additions made to the amendments in order to make more real and positive the policies that were expressed and the objectives we desired should be reached. One of those was, of course, a definite setting of the limits or straight base lines. However, we do trust that the minister is pursuing these particular matters with zeal and industry, and we shall look forward in the near future to further statements, we hope setting out the conclusion of negotiations in order to bring into effect what we really desire in this field.

Reference was also made by the minister to discussions currently in progress in respect of the north Pacific treaty, and to the fact that a new draft convention is being discussed.

[The Chairman.]

We hope in the drafting of this convention the minister has remembered many of those recommendations and representations made by fishermen and fishermen's organizations on the west coast, and I refer particularly to the united fishermen and allied workers union. I believe those recommendations set forth very clearly and positively some of the requirements and needs of the fishing industry in respect of this particular matter. As I have said, I trust the minister will give full consideration to these various representations, and we hope that when the matter is finally resolved it will be to the satisfaction of the fishermen and those who are interested in the fishing industry.

The minister stated that before ratification of the new convention it would be submitted to the committee on marine and fisheries. I do not think this particular committee is being used to its full potential, though during this session the legislation dealing with the 12 mile limit was referred to the committee and considerable discussion was entered into at that time. The committee on marine and fisheries could be used to a much greater extent in an endeavour to resolve some of the fisheries problems, and also to draw public attention to many matters in respect of the fishing industry. A very fine suggestion has been made, that as early as possible in another session the estimates of this department should be submitted for the consideration of the committee on marine and fisheries, and I suggest that whenever it is possible, other matters having to do with fisheries should also be referred to that committee for consideration and recommendation.

The minister referred in his statement to the federal-provincial conference on fisheries development which was held in January of this year. He presented a rather lengthy enumeration of projects under way at the present time, but most of them are, I suggest, of minor consideration. Perhaps that is all we should expect this soon after that conference, but we believe that as time passes, and as additional conferences are held, we will be able to look forward to some very positive legislative action in respect of the fisheries development program. Representatives of various provinces presented recommendations and views in respect of fisheries to the development program, and it would seem to me that we are entitled to expect many of these matters to appear before us in the form of legislation before too long.

The minister's reference to the establishment of regional committees was noteworthy, as this is a very fine development. We are all aware that in various parts of Canada fisheries problems are different, and it is only natural that in order to arrive at solutions to those problems it will be necessary to deal with them on a more or less regional basis. We recognize the importance of overall national policies in this particular field, as well as in any other field, but to be realistic we also recognize the fact that there are local and regional problems which must be resolved at a local and regional level.

I also noted the minister's reference to the sports fishery advisory council which has been established for British Columbia. It seems that the sports fishery is taking an increasingly important place in the fishing industry, and has been the cause of concern to many individuals who are engaged in commercial fisheries. This has also been a matter of real interest to ardent sports fishermen, and therefore it seems only right and proper that this field of interest or endeavour should be given proper consideration.

I hope the legislation to which the minister referred with regard to seal operations will have the desired effect. We all remember the events of the past, when members of parliament were made aware of the very unfortunate practices being followed in hunting seal. It has been stated that these reports were exaggerated, but it does seem that they were of sufficient interest to cause a great deal of concern across this country, resulting in arousing the concern of a great many people about the activities of those engaged in this operation. We trust that the interest the minister has taken and the legislation he will be proposing will be sufficient to take care of this particular situation.

Mr. Chairman, my remarks are very general today in respect of the first item of these estimates, but as we consider the individual items we will perhaps be taking part in further discussions. However, I am sure we are all aware of the tremendous economic importance of the fishing industry to Canada. It has a particular interest so far as food supplies are concerned, the effects of the industry upon our economy, the employment picture and so on. The fishing industry is indeed one of the major industries of our nation.

Coming as I do from British Columbia I cannot help but concern myself with the fisheries as they affect my own province. I have with me today the British Columbia Government News for July, 1964. This issue brings to our attention some of the relevant factors dealing with the different industries of our province and there is a brief statement here regarding fisheries. I should like to place it on the record to show the importance of the fishing industry to my province and, of course, the province of the speaker who preceded me and many others in the house. It reads as follows:

> British Columbia fish products in 1963 had a wholesale market value of $76 million. A further $4.1 million in 1963 income is due to halibut landed in United States ports by provincial fishermen and from local processing of imported tuna. Herring production in 1963 reached an all time high. The wholesale marketed value of fish products increased from $57,234,000 in 1952 to $76 million, up 35 per cent, in 1963.
> Canada in 1961 ranked sixth in world catch of fish—
> According to United Nations statistics.
> —and the provincial industry ranks first in Canada in landed and marketed values.
> 1963 provincial landed catch was worth $38.5 million versus $46.7 million in 1962. About 15,400 commercial licensed fishermen and another 1,250 men were employed on packers and collectors. The 9,746 boats used to land the fish were valued at $70.9 million and gear and shore installations for boats worth $10 million. Landed values were 59 per cent salmon, 15 per cent halibut and 17 per cent herring.
> 1963 exports of fish and marine products of British Columbia were $42 million, and principal markets were United States, United Kingdom, France, Belgium-Luxembourg, and Australia. Western Europe and United Kingdom took over 50 per cent of foreign shipments.

This points out one of the reasons why I am vitally interested in the fishing industry, and I am sure every member of the house recognizes the importance of this industry not only to our province but to the entire nation. Sometimes I think it is a little difficult for members representing inland constituencies to grasp the significance of the fishing industry and to build up the interest that we would like to see. Nevertheless I am sure that every member is aware of its vast importance to the Canadian economy.

One important aspect of the fisheries program is conservation, and we along the coast of British Columbia are very conscious of the importance of conservation programs and procedures. But while we recognize the importance and necessity, many times we become a little irked at the manner in which the procedures followed are implemented.

The minister is well aware of the fact that in past weeks and months the fishermen of the west coast have been quite disturbed about some of the measures being used and the manner of their application. One area of concern involves the inroads by foreign powers into the fishing industry and the fear has been instilled in the minds of the fishermen that the conservation programs being carried on at the expense of Canadian fishermen are possibly being thwarted by concessions being made to foreign fishermen. I know that the fact that these fears have been expressed so often has been a matter of concern to the minister, and I think it would be very useful and advisable that every possible method should be made use of to make the fishermen of the west coast aware of all the factors involved and to make sure that the expenditure of money, as I have said, is not being offset by concessions made to foreign fishermen as opposed to the opportunities that local fishermen enjoy in these particular areas.

Another matter that caused considerable dismay last year was the way in which the closure regulations were applied on the Fraser river. Many fishermen living along the Fraser river depend largely upon the fishing industry for their livelihood, but it almost seems that when the time comes that they can actually make a little money they are faced with closures which make it impossible for them to obtain sufficient income to see them through. Representations were made with regard to this matter, and I would urge that in the implementation of these conservation measures on the Fraser river every possible consideration be given to the local fishermen in order that they may be able to carry on their activities and earn their livelihood from their chosen profession.

Reference was made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni to the matter of licence limitation. This is becoming a very live issue so far as the fishermen of British Columbia are concerned. I do not know to what extent studies have been carried on in this field. I hope the minister will be able to clarify the position of the department with regard to the principle of licence limitation because there is a strong feeling that this is necessary in order to meet the needs of that section of the country. My remarks at this time, Mr. Chairman, are intended to be very general, as I stated, and we shall look forward to taking part in the discussion as we come to the various items in these estimates.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, I echo the sentiment expressed by the hon. member for Fraser Valley that it is always a pleasure to take part in the debate on the estimates of the Minister of Fisheries. This applies today under the present minister and it did under the previous minister, the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean). I believe that members of the house as a whole approach the problems of the fisheries with objectivity and I also believe that not only those members from both coasts of Canada and from the inland fishing areas, but Canadians generally, are aware that the fishing industry is of great importance to Canada and can be and will be, we hope, of even greater importance. As a matter of fact, the intensive expansion of the fishing industry by other nations, many of whose ships appear in the waters off our coast, is an indication of the world wide interest in the fishing industry as mankind strives to find the food that is needed in abundance. Perhaps it is this intensive increase in fishing activity by other nations which provides us with a challenge equally as great as that of the physical needs of the fishermen of Canada. Truly the fishing industry is an industry of great national importance.

Today the minister gave us a very fair résumé of the activities of his department and its plans. I am sure all of us appreciate his efforts to supply the committee with the information it requires. I should like to mention one or two matters in my brief remarks. He referred to the failure of the fisheries in Newfoundland, which is in contrast to the fisheries elsewhere in Canada. Unfortunately Newfoundland did not share in the general increase in productivity which the fisheries of other parts of Canada enjoyed. Although we hope that the latter part of the season will partly compensate for the fisheries failure so far, and although increased prices which fortunately exist will help to compensate for this failure and perhaps will go a long way toward compensating for it, nevertheless it is possible there will be areas in Newfoundland in which the catch will be so small the increase in price coupled with an increase in productivity later in the season, will not compensate for the failure of the fisheries in the early part of the season. I would at this point simply ask the minister to keep in mind those fishermen who are so affected.

I should like to direct the minister's attention also to this matter of the poor catch this year, particularly in the cod fishery. It has been suggested that perhaps intensive fishing off the east coast of Canada is responsible for this. I would suggest that this possibility be not overlooked, and as a matter of fact I would suggest serious consideration be given to this contention. Nevertheless I think it fair to point out that these failures in the fisheries do occur from time to time, and that there does seem to be a cycle with respect to production. I know that in days before there was such intensive fishing by our foreign competitors, such failures did occur. I ask the minister to have his department look into this matter of the periodic failure of the fisheries, what they are related to, what part over-fishing may play in them and what part natural cycles have to play in them.

I was interested in hearing the minister say that an extension in the bait service is planned. This is really good news. At the same time, I should like to compliment him on the provision he has made for increases in the stocks of bait when we go into next season's fishing. This is a very important forward step because actually a shortage of bait plagues many sections of Newfoundland. I do think it is desirable that a greater number of bait holding units be supplied, and that it will be necessary to have additional cold storage boat services. I do believe it has been demonstrated that although these small holding units, which are suitable for small fishing communities, are of great value, to supply them effectively additional bait will be needed. I ask the minister to keep this in mind, as well as the possibility of the development of artificial bait for commercial fishing.

I should like to mention that the minister's department should keep in mind the possibility of shipping fish fresh by air from eastern Canada to European markets. I believe there is a great potential there as the standard of living and ability to pay higher prices obtains in Europe. Opportunity will begin to open up for Canada to get into the more lucrative aspects of supplying fresh fish to these markets, because fresh fish brings a much better price than either the frozen article or the salted article.

There is also the possibility of exploiting the turbot fishery to a greater extent. The market for salted turbot is shrinking and an alternative market must be found for turbot in another form such as fresh, or canned, if the turbot fishery is to continue—and we hope it can continue. The fishing industry is the oldest industry in Canada. Like all old industries, it is bound to accumulate many problems as it goes along. I do not believe there is any problem of the fishing industry which is not capable of solution. What is quite frequently referred to as the fishing problem is not so much one great problem as it is the accumulation of several smaller ones which taken individually and examined thoroughly, will be capable of solution. In the end this could result in an expansion of this great industry which is essential to Canada and essential to the food supply of the world. The harvest of the sea could well equal in importance the harvest of the land.

Mr. Crouse: It is not my intention to speak at great length and delay the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. However, as the member for Queens-Lunenburg, a riding in which is presently located the largest deep sea fishing fleet in North America, I feel I should make some comments on the problems relating to the fishing industry. I listened with interest to the statement made by the minister and it is evident to me he has made a good start on the fundamental problems faced by his department. It is evident also he inherited a well organized department. I believe we can safely say he has been given the tools, and we know he will accept the responsibility and get on with the job.

Fishing is big business in Nova Scotia. In my province alone the landed value last year represented some $35 million to our fishermen, out of a total landed value in the Atlantic provinces of some $49 million. Canada today is the seventh largest fishing nation in the world. Possessing the world's longest coast line, we are only now beginning to learn something about our continental shelf in areas which have produced such a prolific supply and variety of fish. We are receiving assistance today along this line from the research and development carried out by the oceanographic institute, the first of its kind in Canada, which was opened by the previous administration in 1962 at Bedford basin near Halifax.

While this institute was opened under the direction of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, it still has in it a branch of the fisheries department. As a result, our marine laboratories are expanding; graduate students are being trained in all areas of oceanography and research; new research ships are carrying out scientific investigations along our coasts, the latest being the Canadian scientific ship Hudson, which was under construction since 1961 and which was commissioned on February 14 of this year. A floating laboratory, it is capable of hydrographic and oceanographic work anywhere in the world, but it will perform mainly, I understand, in the Arctic and Atlantic oceans. We can therefore expect rapid development in this field. We are not alone in this work, for all major maritime nations are now taking part. Throughout the world roughly 50 research ships are constantly at sea carrying approximately 600 technicians and trained personnel. Through this increase in scientific effort we hope to plug a big gap in our knowledge concerning the earth on which we live. We hope to learn more about the habits of fish which are part of our food resources and which automatically renew themselves.

This study carried on by the department is already producing dividends in the form of a new type of fisheries chart issued by the Canadian hydrographic service to assist fishermen on Canada's east coast to substantially increase their catch. This chart covers Banquereau and Misaine banks which lie off Nova Scotia between Scatarie and Sable island. It is essentially an accurate detailed picture of the shape and depth of the sea bottom, enabling fishermen to select the most favourable areas and banks for fishing. It is a good chart. I have had an opportunity to examine it, and it is very well prepared. This of course is a start; but I cannot urge too strongly upon the minister the need for additional charts of this nature covering many other banks off our coasts which are not now clearly outlined and detailed in this manner. With our expanding fishing fleet it is vitally essential that charts of this type be provided to our captains, who are finding it increasingly difficult to secure greater catches of fish, especially at the present time when our offshore banks are being seriously overfished by large trawlers from other nations.

Speaking of trawlers, Mr. Chairman, I think it is important that I bring to the minister's attention the apparent preference by our maritime fishermen for the wooden trawler v. the steel trawler. When the previous administration was in power they instituted the payment of subsidies to encourage the restoration of the shipbuilding industry in Canada. At that time steel ships were subsidized at 50 per cent of the cost of their Canadian content, and wooden ships were subsidized at 40 per cent of the cost of their Canadian content. As a result, the shipbuilding industry today in Nova Scotia is a substantial contributor to the economy of the province. The current boom in Nova Scotia's wooden boat and shipbuilding industry alone is worth more than $10 million a year. All boatyards from Cape Breton island to Yarmouth are operating at maximum capacity. This speaks well for the subsidy policy.

However, the subsidy payment on wooden ships has recently dropped from 40 per cent to 35 per cent, creating a disparity of 15 per cent on subsidy payments between wooden and steel ships. At the same time the costs of wooden ship construction have been increasing, due in part to recent new tax levies. I would therefore urge upon the Minister of Fisheries that he take steps to remove this discrimination against the wooden ship builder. He may well argue that this matter does not come under his department; that it pertains to transport. But in my view, Mr. Chairman, anything that affects the fishing industry is or should be of vital concern to the Minister of Fisheries.

We have seen many changes in the fishing industry in the last 30 years. When I was a boy growing up in Lunenburg, all deep sea fishing was carried out with dories working from schooners on the banks. It was a tough task, and the list of men and vessels lost at sea in the fishermen's memorial room at the Lunenburg community centre tells the story of disasters at sea in the days of sail in the absence of radio and ship-to-shore communications. In those days a fisherman was lucky if he made $1,000 in a year, and yet they built their homes and raised large families. Today the picture is greatly changed, and the few schooners that are still active in the area have been converted into draggers or long liners. The long-liner is a modification of the earlier form of line fishing from a dory, the only difference being that at the present time it is set from the ship and hauled by an automatic hauler.

Perhaps the greatest innovation in recent years has been the catching of swordfish by using the long line method. Last year's swordfish landings were more than three times greater than in 1962, with a landed value of $2½ million. However, though this type of fishing has eliminated the uncertainties of harpooning, it has encouraged more fishermen in 50 or 60 foot boats to travel further out to sea in search of broadbills.

While ranging far from shore they are at the mercy of the elements. This happened on August 3 of this year when the long-liner Cheryl Ann, under the command of Captain Charlie Fevens of Yarmouth, became disabled in a 60 mile an hour gale due to engine failure on Georges bank approximately 120 miles from Yarmouth. The captain radioed the Yarmouth marine radio station requesting help, and a government ship, the Thomas Carleton was dispatched to his assistance. However upon arrival at the scene the captain of the Thomas Carleton advised Captain Fevens that he was not allowed to pull him in but could only stand by so that the crew could be rescued if the fishing boat sank.

Fortunately, a Russian tug was in the area and its captain volunteered immediately to assist and towed the disabled long liner to Yarmouth and safety, free of charge. Apparently the Russians believed in the necessity of protecting the lives of our Canadian fishermen and their ships; and we know from past experience that a similar code exists throughout the United States coastguard, who automatically tow any disabled ships to the nearest port. I would therefore urge the minister to use his authority with his fellow cabinet ministers to bring about changes in the regulations, especially where our fishermen are concerned, so that an incident like the towing of the Cheryl Ann, which is looked upon throughout the east coast as a disgrace to our government services will never occur again.

At this time I wish to again refer to the necessity of bringing about changes in our scallop and lobster fishing regulations. I had previously raised this matter when I spoke in the house on July 8, and it was raised on June 22 when the standing committee on marine and fisheries met to discuss Bill No. S-17, respecting the territorial seas and fishing zones of Canada. I have pointed out that Nova Scotia is the scallop province of Canada, with our ships accounting for at least 98 per cent of all Canadian scallop production. In Lunenburg and Riverport alone we today have 53 large deep sea trawlers, with the majority engaged in catching scallops. In 1963 over 16 million pounds of scallops were landed in Nova Scotia, with a value in excess of $6 million to the fishermen; and the figures will be even higher in 1964. This industry is of tremendous importance, not only to our Nova Scotia fishermen but to the Canadian government, for the bulk of this production is sold to the United States, thus bringing in foreign exchange and needed U.S. dollars. But the Fisheries Act, under clause 31 states, that fish are not to be caught outside territorial waters when catching is forbidden in territorial waters. I was hoping that the minister in his statement would say something that would encourage me and the house to believe that this act would be changed. I will place the words of this section on the records so that hon. members will know just what it implies. Section 31 reads as follows:

> No one shall leave any port or place in Canada to fish outside the territorial waters of Canada for fish the catching of which is at such time prohibited in the territorial waters of Canada opposite to or nearest the place where such person proposes to fish, and no one shall bring into Canada any fish caught outside the territorial waters of Canada when fishing for such fish is prohibited inside the territorial waters of Canada opposite or nearest to the place where such fish was caught, or shall bring into Canada any vessels, boats, nets, fishing gear, implements or appliances used in such fishing.

If this act were enforced today the scallop fleet operating out of Lunenburg county, could be legally tied up until October 31 thereby creating untold financial hardship in the industry. In my opinion this section of the act not only discriminates against the scallop fishermen but it also prevents the establishment of a deep sea lobster industry in Nova Scotia. As most hon. members are aware, Nova Scotia is divided into lobster fishing zones. Zone four takes in the south shore of Nova Scotia including Lunenburg, Queens, Shelburne, Yarmouth and Digby counties and the fishermen are only permitted to catch lobsters in zone four from December 1 to May 31. During the remaining six months of the year lobsters cannot be caught and legally landed in this area and this applies not only to lobsters caught on the inshore grounds but also to any lobsters which may be caught by deep sea fishermen. Nova Scotia fishermen are thereby prohibited under clause 31 of the Fisheries Act of 1932 from exploiting a deep sea lobster fishery on Georges and Browns banks and also in some areas of the Grand banks, which could be worth over $1 million per year in landed value.

In 1963, the landed value of all fish caught in Nova Scotia amounted to $35 million, a figure which represents an increase of $12 million over a decade ago. Of this total, an estimated 36 million pounds of lobster brought in almost $18 million to our fishermen. Lobsters are therefore the greatest dollar earner for our fishermen with scallops in second place. However, it is evident we are only scratching the surface, for due to prohibitive regulations we are not taking advantage of the opportunities offered by the deep sea lobster industry. We know a great market exists for lobsters both in North America and in Europe. We know that lobster stocks occupy thousands of square miles off our coastal waters, and these could be called our inshore lobster population. We also know that lobsters may be caught in our offshore waters in an area south of Georges bank approximately 100 miles from Yarmouth. What we do not know is the relation between these two lobster populations. Some marine biologists claim there are actually two distinct lobster populations, while others claim that lobsters hatched in the deep waters offshore are carried by strong currents while in the free swimming stage and that these lobsters help populate the inshore banks. This is a matter which should receive the attention of scientists in the fisheries department. In my view, common sense tells us that it is wise to carry out conservation measures in our inshore lobster fishery grounds in order to assure relatively good catches and income to our inshore lobster fishermen. However, I question the soundness of carrying out a conservation policy with regard to deep sea lobsters which, in effect, applies only to any potential Canadian deep sea lobster fisherman, while leaving the grounds wide open to fishermen from any other nation wishing to exploit them.

When this question was raised during a discussion in the committee on Bill S-17, the Minister of Fisheries said:

> There may be reasons to amend the Fisheries Act. There may be a reason to amend section 31. There may be a reason and a very serious one to amend section 31 of the Fisheries Act to take care of provisions such as the one mentioned by Mr. Crouse. I think the government—and I am sure I can speak in its name—would be prepared to do this if such a need occurred. But I feel it does not affect the present bill. I agree with Mr. Crouse that the government should take into consideration amending section 31 of the Fisheries Act if there is such a need.

Evidently the minister questioned the need for making these changes; he questioned the potential of this industry. In reply, I should like to quote from an article which appeared in the Maine Coast Fisherman which states:

> Captain Frank Moore, president of the lobstermen's association—

This is in the United States.

> —told the committee there were 3,178 lobster licences issued in 1962 for inshore lobstering bringing in $31,780 in revenue to the state.

That is the state of Maine.

> He complained that deep sea lobster draggers—a dozen are now working employing about 75 fishermen—are scooping up lobsters from breeding areas offshore. He argued that the deep water breeding areas are the sources of inshore lobsters.

A little further on, the report continues:

> He said the offshore lobster business was worth more than $1 million to New Bedford fishermen last year. Latest bureau of commercial fisheries statistics show that the January 1964 catch by lobster draggers totalled 161,000 pounds worth $94,000 compared to 95,000 pounds, valued at $53,000, in the same month of 1963.

I am sure it would be possible to develop a large deep sea lobster industry centered on Georges bank. In fact, speaking in a lighter vein, I think it is necessary to amend these regulations even if only to protect the minister and his staff. I had an opportunity recently to visit the Nova Scotia fisheries exhibition and there on display was a 28 pound deep sea lobster. When I inquired from a member of the minister's inspection staff where this magnificent lobster had been caught he told me it had been caught on Georges bank and landed at Lunenburg. I said, facetiously of course: "No doubt you will lay charges against the captain who landed this lobster because it has been smuggled into Lunenburg and is illegally on display." The officials laughed and said they hoped this would not be necessary. I tell this story to show that lobsters are being caught and that they are being landed.

I wish to make two proposals to the minister: First, that he bring in an amendment to section 31. If he does so, I can assure him it will receive prompt and speedy passage as far as the official opposition is concerned. Second, I would suggest to the minister that he then equip the A. T. Cameron for lobster dragging for a minimum period of 30 days. This would establish the number of pounds of deep sea lobsters our fishermen could hope to catch and might lead to the establishment of a new industry in Nova Scotia.

I could mention many other items which are also of vital importance, but time will not permit. However, I would specifically mention in closing the necessity for restocking our lakes and rivers with trout and salmon. This would be of great benefit to our tourist industry and any expanded program along these lines would assuredly receive the support of members in all parts of the house.

I hope the minister will give us at a later date a more extensive report on oyster development and the program the department has for restocking the oyster beds. Perhaps he would advise us whether any thought is being given to the artificial breeding and cultivation of clams. I realize the problem is to conserve the clam spat in its early critical stages. Silting, disease, water changes, predators such as starfish all determine the rate of survival of the clam. However, it is evident the Japanese have done great work in this field, and since the raising of clams could provide a supplementary income to our inshore fishermen I hope the minister will give some thought to developing larger stocks of this type of Canadian shellfish.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the acting house leader whether we will continue on Thursday and Friday with the estimates in the order already announced?

Mr. MacNaught: We will continue on Thursday and Friday with the estimates as outlined by me last night. That is to say, we will continue with the Department of Fisheries, then citizenship and immigration, public works and forestry.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, September 24, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

OATHS OF ALLEGIANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PLEDGE BY AFFIRMATION

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-124, to amend the Oaths of Allegiance Act (affirmation).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, although I realize that this bill is unlikely to reach second reading this session, I feel it is of sufficient importance to all Canadians and to hon. members in particular to warrant introduction at this time.

The main purpose of the bill is to declare the right of Canadians and those who want to become Canadians to freedom of conscience in pledging allegiance by providing that any person in Canada may affirm his allegiance as well as swear to it. A second purpose is to enlarge the pledge specifically to include Canada as well as the sovereign. A third purpose is to validate oaths that have been taken in the past, as well as those that may be taken in the future, by persons without religious belief. A fourth purpose is to validate affirmations of allegiance that may have been administered in the past where by law an oath of allegiance should have been administered. Finally, the bill would bring the Oaths of Allegiance Act into conformity with the Royal Styles and Titles Act.

The bill would amend the British North America Act to provide that Senators and members of the House of Commons may swear the oath of allegiance with the words "so help me God" or may affirm it. Also, as this bill would be a Canadian act there would be an official version of the oath in the French language.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FREE TIME POLITICAL BROADCASTS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with standing order 26, I should like to move the adjournment of the house to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), that this house do now adjourn for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the discriminatory attitude of the C.B.C. toward political minorities in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this is a definite and urgent matter. I do not intend to discuss it, only to mention it. Here it is. How can the C.B.C. allow two political parties to make themselves heard on a nation-wide hook-up, at public expense, when the three other political parties, representing over 2 million voters, are refused the same opportunity?

That, Mr. Speaker, is a matter of public importance. Now, in the past when motions for adjournment of the house were brought forward, no definition was ever given of what constituted a matter of public importance. Did it have to be important in itself, because of the very essence of the subject to be discussed, or by accident? That still has to be defined. Therefore, we have to go back to motions which have already been accepted, in order to determine whether our motion is important enough to warrant an adjournment of the business of the house.

Since 1962, two motions to adjourn the business of the house have been entertained. On January 31, 1963, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), then leader of the opposition, moved such a motion in regard to a statement made by the American secretary of state. Recently—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I think I get the gist of the hon. member's motion. Is he proposing to move a motion at the end of his remarks? I do not believe he should go into a long debate at this time. Is it his purpose to move that the house adjourn under standing order 26?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I have already introduced my motion and, at present, I am in the act of explaining why in my opinion this motion is urgent and of public importance, and this has always been permitted in the past for all those who wanted to move similar motions.

I can recall—

[Text]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of order. My point of order is that the hon. member is dealing with C.B.C. programming, and that is something that is not within the jurisdiction of parliament but is within the jurisdiction of the corporation. I would ask you to rule immediately that this motion and these remarks are out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I maintain that the C.B.C. comes directly under the laws passed by parliament and if parliament wishes to make any change in the way the C.B.C. operates and administers its networks, I think the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) is wrong.

Furthermore, in my opinion the question raised by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is quite in order.
