MAY BUILD BIG PULP MILL IN NEWCASTLE

It is stated on good authority that the Donald Fraser Co. intend to erect a pulp mill on one of their numerous properties in N. B. and there is some reason to believe that they will choose the Chatham Head site near the end of the Morrissey Bridge. The company's lands on the Miramichi are sufficiently extensive to warrant the erection of a pulp mill, and the site is ideal for that purpose. Such a mill would employ 500 men. This would mean an extra population of between 1000 and 2000 people, most of whom would live in Newcastle, and would raise Newcastle nearly to the status of a city.

Problem of The Disabled Soldiers

The Mother Country Advised to Follow Canada's Example

The London Daily Chronicle, the leading Liberal journal of the Imperial Capital, gives the most prominent place in its issue of Oct. 4 to the following spontaneous and remarkable appreciation of Canada's method of restoring disabled soldiers to active and self-supporting citizenship. In this article the well known writer, Mr. J. Saxon Mills, goes so far as to suggest that the Mother Country in dealing with this problem might follow the example of the Dominion. He says:

One of the most difficult questions England has to face at present is how to deal with the broken men who are new streaming in from the battle-fronts. The adequate answer to that question has not yet been found. It is not even certain that the main principles which should be observed in solving the problem are yet fully grasped. For example, we are in danger of thinking that our responsibility for the wounded soldier is fulfilled when he is no longer fit for military service, and when he is pensioned and discharged from the Army. When thus discharged he loses the benefit of the special treatment provided while he remains in uniform, and he is at once thrown upon the lists of the already over-worked panel doctors. This will not do at all. The nation has a larger and longer responsibility to its disabled veterans than that. It may be useful to notice how Canada deals with the problem. We may learn much from the admirable system which has been established by the Dominion Government.

How Government Intervened

By an order in Council, dated June 20, 1915, the Canadian Government formed, at the instance of Sir Robert Borden, a Military Hospitals and Convalescent Homes Commission, to deal with the provision of hospital accommodation and military convalescent homes in Canada for officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who return invalided from the front. The very able president of this Commission is Sir James A. Longheed and it has an efficient and enterprising secretary in Mr. E. H. Scammell. The Commission has learnt much by experience and is today undoubtedly working on right lines. At first the general idea was that convalescent homes, where discharged soldiers would spend a short time for rest and refreshment, would be the chief requirement, and scores of houses and hundreds of workers were placed at the disposal of the Commission. But this idea was soon dispelled when it was found that the treatment of the disabled soldiers was a more serious and lengthy business. Months or even weeks spent in the atmosphere of such a home would tend to injure rather than strengthen the physical and moral fibre. Let us hear Mr. J. S. McLennan, a member of the Commission, has to say on this subject in his introduction to the Commission's speech bulletin:

"The supply of comforts which in many cases were luxurious, the relaxation of discipline, the treating of men as one treats a civilian patient in the interval between illness and the resumption of ordinary occupation which might do no harm if the experience was to be counted in days, are most seriously detrimental to the best interests of the men when extended over the prolonged periods which have been found unavoidable. The first conception of the homes was that they were places of relaxation; the right one which experience has taught us to realize is that they are places of rehabilitation. In other words we are changing as rapidly as may be our convalescent homes into hospitals where, in the interests of the men, their time will be fully occupied, their physical restoration made as perfect as possible, and from the beginning, the bad effects of idleness obviated by employment."

These are golden words which those who are responsible for our wounded veterans will do well to remember.

It would be interesting to follow the history of a few typical cases of Canadian soldiers wounded in the battle lines. Of course, the injured man may be cured and return to the front; but his case may be hopeless so far as military fitness is concerned, and he may have to be sent back to Canada. When he arrives there he is taken in hand at the port of arrival by the Military Hospitals Commission. If he belongs to Class I, that is, if he is unfit for overseas service but able to take up his former occupation, he receives 15 days' pay and transportation to his home, together with free meals en route. If he belongs to Class II, or III, that is, if he has to receive further treatment as a convalescent, or has a permanent disability of any kind, he is passed on to the appropriate institutions. If he is an ordinary convalescent he will be sent to the hospital nearest his home, but if he requires special, such as orthopaedic treatment, he will go where that is supplied.

The Educational Feature

What I wish especially to emphasize is that at all these hospitals, schools are held where training of an elementary and non-vocational character is given in English, French, mechanical drawing, arithmetic, wood-carving, etc. These classes are open to all inmates, whether they are able to return to their former occupations or not. But, from the homes and hospitals, the men who are not so able can be sent on after they have been pensioned and discharged, to technical institutions, agricultural colleges, schools of telegraphy, etc., where they can be taught new occupations which their disablement does not prevent them from following. And that is not all, for employment is practically assured to them by the Provincial Commissions (under the Federal Military Hospitals Commission) which have charged themselves with the duty of finding work and wages for the returning veterans.

I should add, that the men in the homes and hospitals are fully maintained and that their pay continues. The whole system, which I have sketched in the barest outline, is quite admirable, and fully realises the object of the Military Hospitals Commission which Mr. McLennan defines in these words:

"The aim of the Commission is to do its best for the physical and economic well-being of the man and to bring to bear on him such influences that he may perform for his country a service not less important than those of the fighting line, namely, that instead of being an idle ward of the State, he becomes a shining example to the young, of self-dependence, of courage, and perseverance in overcoming disabilities."

It would be an excellent thing if we had a system similar to this, and based upon the same sound principles, established in these islands.

HEALTHIEST ONE IN THE FAMILY

No Sign Of Dropsy And Kidney Trouble Since Taking "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

HATTIE WARREN
Port Robinson, Ont., July 8th, 1915.

"We have used 'Fruit-a-tives' in our house for over three years and have always found them a good medicine. Our little girl, Hattie, was troubled with Kidney Disease. The doctor said she was threatened with Dropsy. Her limbs and body were all swollen and we began to think she could not live. Finally, we decided to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. She began to show improvement after we had given her a few tablets. In a short time, the swelling had all gone down and her flesh began to look more natural. Now she is the healthiest one in the family and has no signs of the old ailment. We can not say too much for 'Fruit-a-tives' and would never be without them."

THE DOOR TO HEALTH
Is Through the Rich, Red Blood
Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Actually Make

The blood is responsible for the health of the body. If it is good, disease cannot exist. If it is bad, the door is shut against good health. Disease is bound to appear in one form or another. One person may be seized with rheumatism or sciatica; another with anaemia, indigestion, heart palpitation, headaches or backaches, unstrung nerves, or any of the many other forms of ailments that comes when the blood is weak and watery. There is just one certain, speedy cure—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They make new, rich, blood, and this good blood strengthens the whole system and brings good health and happiness. Thousands owe their present good health, some life itself, to the pills. Miss Devina Lalibert, St. Jerome, Que., says—"Last year I seemed gradually to grow weak and run down. I did not sleep well had a poor appetite, and grew pale and generally languid. I consulted a doctor who told me I was anaemic, and gave me a tonic. This I took faithfully for some time, but it did not help me, and I appeared to be growing worse, and finally I was hardly able to go about the house and almost wholly incapacitated for work. While in this condition a friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I got several boxes. It was not long after I began their use when I could see an improvement, which just manifested itself in an improved appetite and better rest at night. From this on the improvement was rapid and I was not long in regaining perfect health. I think Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a real blessing for all weak girls."

Fraser, four sisters, Mrs. Gordon Logie of Peterborough, Ont., Dorothy of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, and Marion and Edna at home; and three brothers, Roderick, of Renfrew, Ont. Lieut. Brydone who after a year and a half's service at the front with the Winnipeg Highlanders, was recalled and is now with the 22nd Battalion at St. John 2nd MacDonagall, now in England recovering from wounds received while a member of a New Brunswick heavy siege battery.

ANOTHER BRAVE TALKER

The election of Charles Evans Hughes, as president of the United States will doubtless excite many Canadians to conclude that the attitude of the American nation towards the respective participants in the present world war will undergo a radical change after the president-elect shall have assumed office. Circumstances do not justify such a conclusion.

It is true that in his campaign speeches Mr. Hughes has declared that he stands "for the unflinching maintenance of all the rights of American citizens on land and sea." This declaration in itself is scarcely more reassuring than the "strict accountability" attitude of President Wilson. When Mr. Hughes becomes president of the United States he will have no more power to maintain the rights of American citizens, and no more power to hold any belittling action to a strict accountability for its acts towards the United States than President Wilson had had. More than bold pharosology, in which the president-elect seems to be fairly well matched, will be required to place the United States in the significant and self-respecting position which it might reasonably be expected that country would desire to occupy in the eyes of the world.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the American people are so disappointed in nothing much more than to have language in their mouths to maintain their rights against another nation. With practically negligible military and naval strength the country is ill-equipped to resist any effort on the part of any chief executive as good as all that any chief executive should have done with the resources at his command, and with the same resources the new president will find himself as impotent as his predecessor.

Until the United States has the power to give effect to President Wilson's demands of "strict accountability" and President-elect Hughes' "stand for the unflinching maintenance of American rights" the United States will continue to occupy the humiliating position in which that country now finds itself. And it will be many, many months before the United States possesses that power. Mr. Hughes may become a most unflinching protester and a very assiduous note writer, in which respects he is not likely to excel Mr. Wilson, but it is highly improbable that he will accomplish anything more towards maintaining American rights than has been accomplished by Mr. Wilson.

It is said that the oldest man in the world is a Mexican-Indian 122 years of age. It certainly is not some credulity to believe that anyone could live that long in Mexico.

Medical science has made another discovery which should contribute to the contentment of people too poor to own motor cars. It is claimed that the auto is responsible for the wide prevalence of infantile paralysis.

The Dominion Royal Commission estimates Canada's total stand of commercial timber at 500 to 600 billion feet. This would not last the U. S. A. more than 15 years, if the latter is allowed a free hand in cutting it. It should be the uncompromising policy of the Federal Government, and of the government of every province possessing timber wealth, to see that the commercial exploiters of no other country are allowed a free hand in removing timber from Canada.

Young Canadians with a taste for sea life, and a desire to do their duty to their country, will find an attractive opportunity to gratify their taste and their desire, by joining the Royal Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve for which the Dominion Government is now calling for 2000 men. The recruits for this service will be sent overseas at once to join the British navy and they will receive the same pay as their Canadian brothers in khaki, who are helping the mother country in her fight against German aggression. Men are as much needed at present for the British Navy as they are for the British Army and the call in this instance is just as surely the call of duty as is the call to arms which already has been answered in such manifold manner by 250,000 Canadians. "Your King and Country need you now"—in navy blue, as well as in khaki!

Ingenious as is The Chatham World's explanation of the circumstances under which alcoholic liquor is sold openly in Chatham, it hardly serves as a refutation of the charge that an agreement exists between the town government and the liquor sellers in regard to the traffic. An agreement is not necessarily a formal document, nor is it necessarily a matter of explicit words. Especially an agreement is the concurrence, either tacit or explicit, by one party in or with the proposal, opinion, desire or act of another party. In the Chatham case the town government concurs in the violation of the Canada Temperance Act by the liquor sellers.

When The World explains away this fact it may convince people that no agreement exists between the town government and the liquor dealers.

It has been officially announced that the Royal Bank of Canada will purchase the Quebec Bank. The proposed sale, which has been approved by the Minister of Finance, will be passed upon by the shareholders of the Quebec Bank, at a special meeting which has been called for that purpose on Nov. 28th. The directors of the Quebec Bank state that after a vigorous and persistent effort to establish a bank in the west, and increase its business elsewhere, they have concluded that it is in the best interests of the shareholders to amalgamate with a larger and stronger bank. As the proposed merger with the Royal Bank will assure Quebec bond shareholders of dividend paying stock in exchange for their present holdings, the merger proposal will doubtless be accepted by them. The acquisition of the assets of the Quebec Bank will be advantageous to the Royal Bank, which is already one of the largest of Canadian banking institutions, and will at the same time result in benefit to the shareholders of the Quebec Bank.

Other Opinions
ROUMANIA'S BLUNDER
Rumania made big blunders in rushing precipitately to grab most of Transylvania without having the strength of army to hold it and fight the Bulgars at the same time. Like Italy, Rumania will get what it seeks, not so much by direct conquest as by the general victory of the Allies. It should have played a military, not a political, game.—Mail and Empire.

WAR AND PRODUCTION
One of the most remarkable circumstances of the war in Great Britain is that, with millions of workers removed from the avenue of production, the country is producing much more than it did in pre-war times and with apparently as little strain. It shows how badly the productive power of the country was estimated and handled in peace times.—Celtic Herald.

WILSON'S LITERARY FAULT
The literary instinct has been a hindrance to President Wilson. It has led him into writing letters when he should have called a policeman. It has caused him to coin phrases that people cannot forget and will use against him, such as his own "march of waiting," and "too proud to fight." These words, used as he used them, ornamented his deliverances, but used by his enemies against him, they are capable of a derisive use that is very destructive.—Toronto Star.

A BROADER FAITH
The men who come back from the greatest war of all time will not split hairs about theology. They have looked both duty and death in the face, and have discovered that the nobler virtues are not confined to the adherents of any one form of sectarian belief. Faith in God is unshaken, but there has been an amazing development of faith in man, regardless of his religious denomination. The world will be the better for the revelation.—St. John Times.

A SPLENDID IDEA
(Grain Growers' Guide)
In revenge for the investigation of graft in the public buildings in Manitoba, the Winnipeg Telegram hints that the Ottawa Government may investigate the record of the late Laurier Government. We are heartily in favor of such an action. If each Government will make a habit of exposing the corruption of its predecessor and putting all the grafters in jail it will clean up public life probably faster than any one method of reform that is proposed.

POPULAR SMALL HOUSES
The demand for bungalows and small houses in the city this fall is an indication of increased and desirable thrift, and also a sign that the demand for domestic help is far in excess of the supply. Residents who are living in rented houses have in many cases decided to move to the smaller and more economical structures, while in other cases the moving is forced because it is impossible to obtain suitable domestic help, and the big houses cannot be kept up by the wife-alone. From the demand for small houses, which the rental agents have experienced this fall it looks as though building conditions might pick up in this line when next spring comes.—Cargary Herald.

The Ottawa "Evening Journal" is one of the papers which has come to recognize this fact, for it has announced that all exchanges, correspondents, copies and others on the complimentary list will be cut off. If you want to read "The Journal" put up your money, which is the only sane, proper and just method of conducting a business. The next step, already under way, will be to sell newspapers at a legitimate price, and when this is accomplished the one cent daily will have disappeared. Selling a product under manufacturing cost must always be poor business, and not in the interests of legitimate journalism, for it places the journal that countenances such practice largely in the power of the advertiser, who is expected to not only make up circulation deficiencies, but add the necessary profit as well.—Toronto Saturday Night.

IN MEMORY OF MAGNUS BETTS
When from the far off fields of France Came the stirring call for men, Resounding o'er the hillside, Through city, town and glen, It reached the ears of one young man And caused him to stand, With the gallant first contingent To fight for the motherland So with thousands of other noble boys He called across the sea, To fight for Britain's glory For honor and Liberty, And although 'we'll never see him more We never will forget. He died a gallant hero Doing his little bit.

Sad was the heart in every breast, When news of the fight came back How Magnus died a hero, To save the Union Jack, It nearly broke his mother's heart, But it lessened her grief to know, Her boy was not a coward, Afraid to face the foe.

For when the war is over, And peace once more proclaimed, Her Soldier Boy will find a place in the honor roll of fame, For dearly did he pay the price, Gave all he had to give, And on the far off fields of France He died that we might live.

Oh slacker, idle slacker, Why are you holding back, Why don't you go and do your bit To save the Union Jack, Come take the place of Magnus Betts And join the lads in Gray, And save the blood stained battle-fields (help them to win the day).

Composed by Beulah P. Rushton, Doaktown, N. B. Mrs. Rushton's husband has been serving his King and Country for over two years. He went overseas with Private Magnus Betts, and is now at the Grange Hospital, Deal, Eng., suffering from wounds received on August 27th, 1915.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

The annual convention of the Women's Institute of N. B. was held in St. John last week, closing on Friday. There was a large attendance; and much interest.

The ladies were addressed by A. S. MacFarlane of the Normal School, on "Physical Culture." Prof. Kelstead of the U. N. B. on "The Use and Abuse of the Movies," and by several other noted speakers.

A thoughtful paper full of helpful hints for those who in rural districts desire to become self-supporting was given by Miss Lenna A. McLean, of Centre Napan. The reasons why country girls so often come to the city are often that at home they see no way of earning money. Various methods were suggested in this practical paper, such as canning and preserving, the making of pickles, the cultivation of plots of ground, raising green groceries, sale of home-made delicacies which are always in demand, cake, bread, candy, etc. "the cook stove route to success" roadside tea rooms with gift-shops are almost always successful if well run. The speaker ended with a statement defining success "The girl who thinks out what she wants to do, then works, will win."

Mrs. Porter of Andover, first president of the first N. B. Institute, supported the following resolution, which was adopted: "That it is the opinion of this convention that medical inspection of schools would be beneficial to the youth of the land, and would advise that members confer with local school boards to bring about this measure."

Mrs. Porter advocated a Convention of the Maritime Institute, which was unanimously favored. The first will be held after the war.

On motion of Miss Lenna A. MacLean of Centre Napan, seconded by Mrs. S. M. Fiske of Florenceville, it was resolved that the convention recommend to the provincial legislature that women other than ratepayers become members of the rural school boards.

It was decided that all British goods as far as possible, and Canadian goods especially, be purchased. A resolution suggested by the Women's Suffrage Club of St. John was passed to the effect that women should be appointed on all boards of public institutions—schools, boards of health, etc., and that a copy of this resolution should be sent to the mayors of St. John, Fredericton, Moncton, St. Stephen and other towns also to members of the legislature and of the government of this province.

The child was the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Young.

Mrs. James S. Fairley received a letter from her son Gunner Tenyson Macdonald. It is as follows: No. 1 Stationary Hospital, France, Oct 2nd, 1916. Dearest Mother: Just a line or two to let you know I am still alive and doing well. I am lying in bed out under the trees on the pavilion in front of our ward. It is good to get out in the fresh air from the groans of the ward. I only have to have my wounds dressed every three days so you will understand I am coming along. Of course it is slowly. It must be. Shell and shrapnel wounds heal slowly. There is so much poison in them. However, Plead God, I will get well and I shall never forget how He has cared for me. I have had the best of care from nurses and doctors since coming here. It is so wonderful the pains they take with patients and there are so many coming and going from England. There is another boy, a Scotch fellow, who came in the same day I did. We have been here weeks longer than the rest, and Dr. Horton certainly has tried to save our legs. Received a nice long letter from you today. My leg is beginning to knit so I will be moved to England before many weeks and should reach Canada sometime before spring.

Will be so pleased to get back to you all again. Hope I continue to improve. No doubt you will be pleased to hear I have been awarded the Military Medal and also recommended again. Love to all. Remember me to Mr. Fairley. Love to my brothers. Ever your loving son TENNS

DOAKTOWN

Memorial Service for Magnus Betts. Rev. S. Stackhouse preached a very impressive memorial service in the Baptist church on Sabbath evening, to the memory of the brave soldier and true Christian Magnus Betts, who was wounded twice in the battlefields in France and died from the effects of his last injuries. The sermon was more than a memorial service. It could be well termed a recruiting sermon. Rev. Mr. Stackhouse (trick) from the shoulder and hit hard those who should but were not in khaki.

Flying Visit. Doaktown was more than pleased to have a visit during the last week from Mr. Wm. McTavish of North Esk. Unfortunately his business was so pressing he was only able to remain in the village one night.

Jaundice in Town. That moment of all diseases the Jaundice is lurking around the village. In fact it is so mean that it tackled one of our best teamsters, compelling him to come out of the woods and leave that team of fancy greys behind in the hands of perhaps some unskilled manipulator of the ribbons.

Passed up Moose. Mr. Gruber the sport from Spring City with B. McDuff as guide returned to Doaktown Thursday of last week. Bradford Gruber was not after big game this year so did not shoot them. This week Mr. Gruber with his wife and Miss Fusk with Mr. Weaver for guide, are in the woods towards Bartholomew River. They succeeded in shooting a very fine deer the first of which Mr. Weaver brought out and shipped.

Rushing Business. John Carr is still doing a rushing business in the beef line. He brought a drove of young cattle from Upper Blackville, some of them he turned into beef, some he intends to winter and some he sold to Mr. Attridge for a few of Arthur's many shing dollars. The village is pleased to see the smiling countenance of Mr. Miles Doak around again. He has been laid up at home several weeks but now seems to be on the road to recovery.

Interest in 132nd. Everybody is pleased, many are delighted, to learn of the safe arrival of the 132nd battalion in England. Doaktown people are more interested in this Battalion than most any other because there are so many Doaktown boys in it.

Back From Toronto. Mrs. Walter Freeze returned home from Toronto very much improved in health for which we are all truly thankful. More Luck. It is understood that Mr. Wathea had another streak of luck. While out hunting last Saturday he came across a place where a beaver had fallen a tree and the tree in falling caught the beaver and killed it, and thus Mr. Wathea secured a beaver skin without breaking the law although it is illegal to catch beavers. Back From Harvest. Mr. Archie McDonald who went to the harvest fields in August last has returned home. Rev. Mr. Stackhouse is paying a visit to St. John this week.

ENGLISH AS TEA DRINKERS

One remarkable feature of English domestic life has been the increase in tea-drinking. In 1876 the consumption of tea per head of the population in the United Kingdom was four and a half pounds. In 1913 it was six and three-quarter pounds. The increase has been all to the good from the point of view of the nation's sobriety. It represents a real change in habit. Formerly it was customary for business men to clinch a bargain over a glass of wine or ale. Now this custom is far more honored in the breach than in the observance. The clerk, the foreman, the operative, the working woman, all drink tea, greatly to the advantage of health and pocket.

The great increase in the consumption of tea is very largely due to the efforts of British planters in India. Formerly all tea came from China. Fortunately, however it was discovered that the tea shrub is a native of Assam, one of the Indian provinces. Energetic Britons started planting in Assam. In the present day Indian planters is a very different individual from the luxurious gentleman of "Tom Cringle's Log" and the romances of Marryat. His life is one assiduous toil, sweetened by all too brief intervals of luxury and extravagance are very far from being inevitable concomitants of his existence.

In Darjeeling, Kotagiri he enjoys that sweet half-English air of which the poet sings. In the Terai, which stretches at the foot of the Himalayas, he has to contend against all the iniquities of a fearful climate. At ways and everywhere he is the same cheery and resolute fellow facing with equanimity alike the risks of disease and the difficulties inseparable from the management of native labor and the many plant diseases which are the enemies of all cultivation in the tropics.

The pioneer planters had before them the task of reclaiming those jungle wastes; of replacing their feeble extravagance of vegetation by well-ordered gardens; of repopulating those bare tracts, supplementing the scanty and inert inhabitants by large numbers of orderly and industrious workers from other provinces.

The planters are men conversant with modern science, and use ingenious machinery well adapted to the purpose it serves. Large gardens, carefully planted, are cultivated by experts. After plucking, the leaf undergoes many processes. It is withered to condense the sap. It is rolled to squeeze the juice on to the surface. It is oxidized to develop the flavor and aroma. It is fired to dry it. It is packed in clean, load-lined, airtight chests.

All these processes are performed by clean automatic machinery. Thus the teas from India are pure and free from all contaminating admixtures coming from healthy, well-nourished plants, they contain all the essential elements in their abundance.

CANADA NEEDS MORE POULTRY. GREAT BRITAIN MORE EGGS

At no time in the history of the Dominion has the necessity for increased production of eggs and poultry been more apparent than at the present time. The demand is unprecedented. This is true whether for export or for home consumption. The average per capita consumption of eggs in Canada this year will be greater than ever before.

The market for Canadian eggs and poultry is very firm. Prices to producers are extremely high. The prospects for a continued demand are every bright in the country in fact a shortage, not only of current receipts, but of Canadian storage stocks as well. So great has been the export demand that we shall be obliged to import to meet our own requirements.

That poultry on the farm is profitable needs no argument. Eggs and poultry are a staple article in the products of the farm. Poultry flocks can be increased materially without much additional outlay for buildings and equipment, and the increased labor involved is not such as will bear heavily upon the time of those charged with the care of the stock. Some object to the present price of food, but when it is considered that the selling price of the product is from forty to sixty per cent. higher than it was two years ago, the margin of profit is such as will compare favorably with that obtainable elsewhere on the farm.

Canadian egg producers have responded well to the call for increased production. The country as a whole has in the aggregate produced more than sufficient for its own requirements this year and last. Between seven and eight million dozen Canadian eggs were exported to Great Britain last year and nearly one million dozen were shipped during the first week of October. Yet the supply on the British market is still short. More and better poultry should be the motto of every Canadian farm and homestead.

Canada has all the requisites for the production of a quantity far in excess of her own requirements and can produce quality equal to the best in the world.

Eggs are scarce in Canada at the present time. Current prices are high and a sharp decline immediately following the conclusion of the war is not anticipated. When prices advance gradually as has been the case in staple food products they decline slowly. It will take some years to re-establish the normal meat supply upon the markets of the world and while prices of meats are high people will continue to use increasingly large quantities of eggs.

B. raise money in aid of the Belgian children, by entertainments on or before King Albert's birthday, (November 23rd) is being loyally responded to. Already over $1,600 has been sent in to the Chief Superintendent. A very successful supper and sale for this fund was held in Nordin school (Miss Sadie Urquhart, teacher) last Thursday afternoon. The ladies of the district turned out to assist. The tables were well patronized, and $19.50 was realized. Several other schools have held similar entertainments lately. Lathrop cut him short with a sharp: "Better get busy—before the train starts. And I'll pay you in advance before you set off the fireworks."

The flippant pained Rev. Charles, but he was reassured by one glance at the bill that Ira trust into his palm. If a man's gratitude for his wife is measured by the size of the fee he hands the enabling parson, Ira was madly in love with Anne. Rev. Charles had a reminiscent suspicion that it was probably a counterfeit, but for once he did not mind.

The ritual began with the pleasant murmur of the preacher's voice, and the passengers crowded round in a solemn calm, which was suddenly violated by a loud yelp of laughter from Wedgewood, who omitted guffaw after guffaw and bent double and opened out again, like an excited umbrella.

The wedding-guests turned on him visages of horror, and hissed silence at him. Ashton seized him, shook him, and muttered:

"What the—what's the matter with you?" The Englishman shook like a boy having a spasm of giggles at a funeral, and blurted out the explanation: "That story about the bridegroom—I just saw the picture."

Ashton closed his jaw by brute force and watched over him through the rest of the festivity.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Foiled Yet Again. Mallory fled from the scene at the first hum of the minister's voice. His fate was like alkali on his palate. For twelve hundred miles he had ransacked the world for a minister. When one dropped on the train like manna through the roof, even this miracle had to be checked by a perverse miracle that sent to the train an early infatuation, a silly affair that he himself called puppy-love. And now Marjorie would never marry him. He did not blame her. He blamed fate.

He was in solitude in the smoking room. The place reeked with drifting tobacco smoke and the malodor of cigar stubs and cigarette ends. His plans were as unclouded as those of a child. He dropped into a chair, his elbows on his knees and his head in his hands—Napoleon on St. Helena.

And then, suddenly he heard Marjorie's voice. He turned and saw her hesitating in the doorway. He rose to welcome her, but the smile died on his lips at her chilly speech: "May I have a word with you, sir?"

"Of course. The air's rather thick in here," she apologized. "Just wait!" she said, ominously, and stalked in like a young Zenobia. He put out an appealing hand: "New, Marjorie, listen to reason. Of course I know you won't marry me now."

"I'm the worst kind of unfaithfulness," she retorted. "You should have known that some day you would meet me. You should have saved your first love for me."

"But last love is best," Mallory interposed, weakly. "Oh, no, it isn't, and if it is, how do I know I'm to be your last love? No, sir, when I've divorced you, you can go back to your first love and go round the world with her till you get dizzy."

"But I don't want her for a wife," Mallory urged, "I want you."

"You'll get me—but not for long. And one other thing, I want you to get that bracelet away from that creature. Do you promise?" "How can I get it away?" "Take it away! Do you promise?" Mallory surrendered completely. Anything to get Marjorie safely into his arms: "I promise anything, if you'll really marry me."

"Oh, I'll marry you, sir, but not really." And while he stared in helpless awe at the cyclic and transcendent that he saw before him, he heard the conductor's voice at the rear door of the car: "Hurry up—we've got to start."

They heard Lathrop's protest: "Hold on there, conductor," and Selby's plea: "Oh, I say, my good man, wait a moment, can't you?" The conductor answered with the gruffness of a despot: "Not a minute. I've my orders to make up lost time. All aboard!"

While the minister was tying the last loose ends of the matrimonial knot, Mallory and Marjorie were struggling through the crowd to get at him. Just as they were near, they were swept aside by the rush of the bride and groom, for the parson's "I pronounce you man and wife," pronounced as he backed toward the door, was the signal for another wedding riot.

Once more Ira and Anne were showered with rice. This time it was their own. Ira darted into the corridor, haling his brand-new wife by the wrist, and the wedding guests pursued them across the vestibule, through the next car, and on and on. Nobody remained to notice what happened to the parson. Having performed his function, he was without further interest or use. But to Mallory and Marjorie he was vitally necessary.

They were undisturbed in their yag for all the other passengers and their noses flattened against the window panes of the other cars—all except one couple, gazing each at each through time-wrinkled eyelids touched with the magic of a tardy honeymoon. For all that Anne and Ira knew, the Great Salt Lake was a sweet lagoon, and the arid mountains of Nevada which the train went scalped, were the very hillsides of Arcadia.

But the other passengers soon came trooping back into the observation car. Ira had told them nothing of Mallory's confession. In the first place, he was a man who had learned to keep a secret, and in the second place, he had forgotten that such persons as Mallory or his Marjorie existed. All the world was summed up in the fearfully happy little splinter who had moved up into his section—the section which had begun its career draped in satin ribbons unwittingly prophetic.

The communion of Mallory and Marjorie under the benison of reconciliation was invaded by the jokes of the other passengers, unconsciously ironic. Dr. Temple chaffed them amiably: "You two will have to take a back seat now. We've got a new bridegroom to amuse us."

And Mrs. Temple welcomed them with: "You're only old married folks, like us." The Mallorys were used to the misunderstanding. But the misplaced witticisms gave them the assurance that their secret was safe yet a little while. At their dinner-table, however, and in the long evening that followed, they were haunted by the fact that this was their last night on the train, and no minister to expect.

And now once more the Mallorys regained the star roles in the esteem of the audience, for once more they quarreled at good-night-kissing time. Once more they required two sections, while Anne and Marjorie's berth was not even made up. It remained empty, like a deserted nest, for its occupant had flown south.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Fresh Trouble Daily. The following morning the daylight creeping into section number one found Ira and Anne staring at each other. Ira was touselled and Anne was unsmug, but her blush still gave her cheek at least an Irish summer glow.

After a violent effort to reach the space between her shoulder blades, she was compelled to appeal to her new master to act as her new maid. "Oh, Mr. Lathrop," she whimpered. "Ira," she corrected, "won't you please book me up?" she pleaded. Ira beamed with a second child-boneliness: "I'll do my best, my little cotsun-tootsuns, it's the first time I've ever tried it."

"Oh, I'm so glad," Anne sighed, "it's the first time I ever was booked up by a gentleman." He gurgled with joy and, forgetting the poverty of space, tried to reach her lips to kiss her. He almost broke her neck and bumped his head so hard that instead of saying, as he intended, "My darling," he said, "Oh, hell!"

"Ira," she gasped. But he, with all the proprietorship he had assumed, answered cheerily: "You'll have to get used to it, ducky dear, but it won't learn to swear." He proved the fact again and again by the remarks he addressed to certain refractory hooks. He apologized, but she felt more like apologizing for herself.

"Oh, Ira," she said, "I'm so ashamed to have you see me like this—the first morning." "Well, you haven't got anything on me—I'm not shaved." "You don't have to tell me that," she said, rubbing her smarting cheek. Then she bumped her head and gasped: "Oh—what you said."

This made them feel so much at home that she attained the heights of frankness and honesty by reaching in her handbag for a knob of supplementary hair, which she affixed dextrously to what was home-grown. Ira, instead of looking shocked, loved her for her honesty, and grinned: "Now, that's where you have got something on me. Say, we're like a couple of cardines trying to make love in a tin can."

"It's cozy though," she said, and slid shyly ran the gauntlet of amused glances and over-corded "Good mornings" till she hid her blushes behind the door of the women's room and turned the key. If she had thought of it she would have said, "God bless the man that invented doors—and the other angel that invented locks."

The passengers this morning were a little brisker than usual. It was the last day aboard for everybody and they showed a certain extra animation, like the inmates of an ocean liner when land has been sighted.

Ashton was shaving when Ira swagged into the men's room. Without pausing to note whom he was addressing, Ashton sang out: "Good morning. Did you rest well?" "What?" Ira roared. "Oh, excuse me!" said Ashton, hastily, devoting himself to a gash his razor had made in his cheek—even in that cheek of his.

Ira scrubbed out the basin, filled it and tried to dive into it, slapping the cold water in double handfuls over his glowing face and puffing through like a porpoise. Meanwhile the heavy-eyed Fosdick regarded with amazement by Dr. Temple and his wife, who were already up and breakfasting.

"I can't imagine," said his wife, "two old couples are the only normal ones." "Some more coffee, please, mother," he said. "But your nerves," she protested. "It's my vacation," he insisted. Mrs. Temple stared at him and shook her head: "I wonder what mischief you're up to today? You've already been smoking, gambling, drinking—have you been swearing, yet?"

"Not yet," the old cregyman smiled. "I've been saving that up for a good occasion. Perhaps it will rise before the day." And his wife choked on her tea at the wonderful train-change that had come over the best man in Ypsilanti. By this time Fosdick had reached the stateroom from which he had been banished again at the Nevada station-line. He knocked cautiously. From within came an anxious voice: "Who's there?"

"Whom did you expect?" Mrs. Fosdick popped her head out like a cork. "Oh, it's you, Arthur. Kiss me good morning." He glanced round stealthily and obeyed instructions: "I guess it's safe—my darling." "Did you sleep, dovie?" she yawned. "No, I didn't. The 'Oh, it's you, Portland car at Granger and I had to sleep in one of the chairs in the observation room."

Mrs. Fosdick shook her head at him in mournful sympathy, and asked: "What state are we in now?" "Nevada," he answered. "Just what are we in Nevada?" "I'm a bigamist, and you've never been married at all." "Oh, these awful divorce laws!" she moaned, then left the general for the moment. "We've got a new bridegroom to amuse us."

Wellington looked from the crowded card to the zealous face. "Divorce Outfitters, eh? I don't quite get you."

"Yes, in the first place—'The folk place, eh? You're from New York.'"

"Yes, originally. How did you know it? By my fashionable clothing?"

"Yes," laughed Wellington. "But you say I need you. How?"

"Well, you've got maybe some beg-gotch, some trunks—yes?"

"Yes. In the first place, I am an ex-pressman. I deliver 'em to your address—yes? Vere is it?"

"I haven't got any yet."

HORSE TAKES TO THE WOODS
Ex-Ald Falconer's crew of five horses, which he received here at Thursday noon, broke out of the stall an hour afterwards and took to the woods. Mr. Falconer searched for it four days, finding it on Monday afternoon in the woods about a mile and a half from Patterson Sidling about five miles from home. The horse, which had lived all that time as the moose live, was as glad to find his Master as was the latter to find him, and the probability is that he'll stay home for the winter at least.

NEW UNDERTAKERS IN NEWCASTLE
Maher Bros who have built up a very successful undertaking business in Chatham during the last six years, have bought the establishment of W. J. Hogan, on Castle street, Newcastle, and will continue the business under their own name. Careful prompt and altogether efficient service has characterized the business of the late Maher Bros, and patrons of the Newcastle branch of this firm will undoubtedly receive the same satisfactory treatment as have their Chatham patrons. The Newcastle business will be at the service of the public day and night.

"BRITAIN PREPARED"
A splendid show pictorially excellent of absorbing interest, highly instructive and patriotically inspiring were the motion pictures exhibited at the "Happy Hour" Theatre Tuesday afternoon and evening of this week under the title of "Britain Prepared." Advances notices of the exhibition had created high expectations among the spectators who filled the theatre in the evening, but it is safe to say that the pictures themselves justified all the favorable comment which preceded their presentation in Newcastle, and that the large number of people who saw them were more than satisfied with the exhibition.

The entertainment, which might more properly be designated as a tremendously valuable lesson in the resources of the British nation, as well as an exemplification of the cheerful, confident spirit and courage with which the British people have undertaken to do their share in the battle for the freedom of the world, was divided into two parts. The first part of the program dealt with the activities of the British army and presented many instructive scenes of activity. It would be difficult to say which feature in the first part of the program was most interesting, as every picture shown had its own particular value, but it will probably be accepted without dispute that the scenes in the munition factories of Vickers Limited showing the various processes of shell making, and the thousands of women and girls engaged in that industry, were at least not inferior to any of the other pictures presented. While of no more educational value than the first part of the program the second part, showing—indeed equately enough it is true, but with wonderful realism—the strength and activities of the British navy, was by far the more impressive portion of the exhibition. The elusive submarines, the watchful and a wifedestroyer, cruiser, battleship and dreadnought were all shown in their respective roles. In many of the marine scenes the photographic effects were magnificent. One particular perfect piece of photography was that depicting the grand fleet on duty in the North Sea in typically cloudy weather and very rough seas. The surging sea and murky fog in the scene are thrown on the screen with remarkable fidelity. Altogether, "Britain Prepared" constitutes a truly remarkable picture show, which many Newcastle people were fortunate in having witnessed.

JUST A MINUTE

Why do you like to deal at one store rather than another. We believe it is because some give "Service" and a "Square deal". This is one of the things the Happy Hour believes in—service and a square deal. It matters not if a picture is of this or that brand, the only thing that matters is, is it shown at the Happy Hour—we believe that's our duty to you. Of course we can't promise that all pictures we show will appeal to you—some probably won't because some like one kind of pictures and some others. But no matter what the type of production, Western, Society, Educational or Comedy, if it appears at the Happy Hour you may rest assured that it is the best production of its type.
