pebate in the Deputies on the Tonquin

PARIS, Nov. 25.—In the chamber of deputies to day the debate was resumed on the Tonquin credit bill. Freppel defending the government and advocating colonial expansion, said it behooved France as a great maritime and civilizing power to possess colonies. He contended that the conquest of Tonquin was worth the sacrifices it demanded. De La Forge opposed the bill and declared the Chinese question may orthy the sacrifice of a single French soldier. He considered the colonial policy of the government as being out of the question while the previnces of Alsace and Lorraine were in the hands of foreigners. Granel (republican) and others pressed the government to make clear statements of its intentions regarding the Chinese question.

Granel (republican) and others pressed the government to make clear statements of its intentions regarding the Chinese question.

Berlin, Nov. 25.—A definition of the Congo basin has been adopted by the committee of the Congo conference. It is virtually recommended by Stanley, comprising all the centre of Africa and the western littoral, extending from the river Loge south to Sette, close to the French Gaboon frontier on the north. The definition is almost certain to be adopted.

Berlin, Nov. 25.—A definition of the or south, is a reckless and shameless false-hood. If Sherman had any letters purporting to be written by him which will sustain his accusations, he demands that he shall produce them or wear the brand of a base slanderer. Sherman says he will settle the matter with Davis.

CHORGE BROWN IN BRONZE

DEFINITION OF STATUE IN QUEEN'S PARK UNVEILED.

Hon. Alex. Mackensic Officiates and Hon. Oliver Mowat Delivers an Oration—

Note that Hon. George Brown as his old-time friend and colleague, Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, pulled the cord which unveiled the statue in Queen's park yesterday. The flakes fell thick and fast, and no doubt kept many away from the ceremony. Those who braved the storm numbered upwards of five hundled the sto and the way in which the committee have done their duty. In the name of the committee I now surrender the statute to the public and to Canada.

The speaker then gave way to Hon.
Alex, Mackenzie, who wore a Persian lamb overcoat and looked pale and thin. The ex-premier pulled a cord and the veil that enveloped the statue fell to the ground and the figure was exposed to view. It stands on a gray granite pedestal ten feet high and is considerably larger than life size. The soulptor, Harvey Birch, has done his work well. The strong and familiar features of the honorable gentleman are well and faithfully represented, as he stands in the attitude of delivering an oration, the form leaning slightly forward with the right foot extended, his right hand holding a scroll by his side, the left raised to emphasize a point. The material is bronze. An expenditure of nearly $600 was entailed in the work. When the mingled hush of awe and admiration inspired by the ceremony had died away Mr. Mackenzie said: I teel deeply at being called upon to perform the last act in memory of one who was my brother and friend. Thirty-three years ago this month I assisted at the first election of Hon. George Brown. I was associated with him during all the succeeding years of his eventful life, and I can truly say that his example was one that should be a guide to Canadians of the present day. As others are to speak I will not attempt to deliver an address.

All the while the snow was falling, rendering further proceedings in the open air disagreeable and dangerous to health. The gathering therefore adjourned to Convocation hall of University college, kindly thrown open by Dr. Wilson. When all had been seated Hon. Oliver Mowat came te the front and delivered an oration of considerable length, the following paragraphs being taken therefrom.

Mr. Brown is the first public man in Ontario in whose memory a statue has been tario in whose memory a statue has been erected. Of our public men who have passed away, not one had more friends than he had, and I venture to say not one was more generally lamented.

The springs of action which governed his life are, to a very great extent, to be found in his early training and associations. By paternal example and early teaching he was in religion a strong protestant and an earnest presbyterian, and in politics a liberal and a loyalist.

All his life he loved his queen and the grand old islands beyond the sea over which she has reigned so long and so happily. All his life he loved British connection and British institutions; and all his life he did his part in maintaining like sentiments wherever his influence extended.

Nor had any loyal British subject anywhere a kinder and more appreciative feeling than he had towards the great great American republic on our borders, or towards its energetic and progressive people.

He loved freedom with the profoundes love, and sympathized with all oppressed or ill-governed people. Slavery he hated with intense hatred, whatever its locality was or whatever the color of the slave or

Regarding agriculture as the basis of the country's wealth and prosperity, he took a warm and active interest from an early period in all things relating to the calling of the farmer, and he at length established a farm of his own, cultivating nearly 1000 acres under his own personal direction and management, according to the most improved modern methods, and collecting on his farm a herd of throughbreds said to be the largest herd of thoroughbreds in the

One of the most striking characteristics of our lamented friend was his boldness and his sanguine nature. The enormous private business which he carried on affords striking illustrations of these qualities, and his public life did so in no less a degree. The political platform which he adopted is one great example.

In the social circle he was always a conversable and delightful companion; and in the domestic circle a loving, appreciative, and attentive husband, an affectionate, happy and considerate father.

I claim for his memory that he was a man of wonderful power of intellect, wonderful energy and wonderful industry, an exceptionally effective public speaker, a man who had all his life many strong friends. He began public life with strong convictions, embracing almost the whole field of public questions was the result of these convictions.

The Court House Question. The council will be called on on Monday night to vote on two important issues, and seeing that the elections are just ahead, and knowing the financial condition of the city and the need there is for sound administration of the civic exchequer, aldermen can not afford to rashly commit themselves to extravagant schemes. About Ald. Turner's motion, on which they will be asked to vote, considerable misconception prevails. It does not call for a change in site. He simply takes the ground that as only $300,000 is appropriated by act of the egislature to build a court house, and as it is generally admitted that $200,000 of this amount will be needed to buy the land, he thinks that before we proceed any further the consulting architect should report as to what the estimated cost of the court house will be apart from the land, so that if another $150,000 is needed to complete the work we ought to delay proceed the consent of parliament to the increased outlay. express an opinion.

The report that the British government ion of a number of vessels of war in private shipyards, as a means of relieving a trade now in prevailing distress, is repeated. This is a fair example of the good that governments have it in their power to do, if only they understand their duties, and have the courage to act accordingly. Say that there is some important government work in prospect, which must be done at no very distant date. To a private individual a year or two's interest on a contemplated expenditure might be an item; but to a government it might be nothing at all in comparison with certain contingencies. Generally speaking, the credit of the government is good, and it can borrow at any time at ordinary rates. But in what are to delay, and to take its own time. Priand hence the peculiar duty which the government owes to the community.

The general inference from all which is that as a rule government work ought to the gap, to its own profit and the good of the field against him, he the community as well. How would it do to apply this rule in buildings, which must be put in hand one of these years? Say that it were determined to hold off as long as building was brisk and contractors busy, but to have everything in readiness for a quick start whenever it should appear that a decided slackness in the building trades had set in? Co-operation in Higher Educatio Some prominent persons in the methodist hurch of Canada take the position that as a matter of principle the denomination is bound to maintain a great methodist university, in order that the church may have ome guarantee of the soundness from a logical point of view of the scientific ulture imparted to candidates for its ministry. If this stand is taken by the methodist body as a matter of principle how is it that the principle can be ignored when onsiderations of expediency demand it? In Montreal the methodists have a theoogical college, which is, we believe doing cellent work in its own line of education. It has at its head one of the most eminent of our methodist clergymen, Rev. Dr. Douglass, and it enjoys the unlimited confidence of the whole denomination. If we are correctly informed-and if not, we shall no doubt elicit the facts-the students of this methodist theological school take their literary and scientific courses in McGill college, which is, like University college in this city, a purely secular institution. him a whit more free or more happy. Women of that sort were not for him— women whom one could not see familiarly without falling in love with them, and whom it was no use to fall in love and whom it was no use to fall in love with unless one was ready to marry them. The light of the summer afternoon and of Miss Mildred's pure spirit seemed suddenly to flood the whole subject. He saw that he was in danger, and he had long since made up his mind that from this particular peril it was not only necessary but honorable toffee. He took leave of his hostess before her sister reappeared, and had the courage even to say to her that he would not come back often after that; they would be so much occupied by their brother and his wife! As he moved across the glassy-bay to the rhythm of the ears he wished either that the sisters would leave Naples or that his confounded commodore would send for him.

When Kate returned from her errand, ten minutes later, Milly told her of the captain's visit, and added that she had never seen anything so sudden as the way he left her. "He wouldn't wait for you, my dear, and he said he thought it more than likely that he would never see us again. It is as if he thought you were going to die too!"

"Is his ship called away?" Kate

"O, he will—after a while—when I am gone. Then he will explain; that, at least, is clear to me." "My poor precious, as if I cared!"

Kate Theory exclaimed, smiling as she distributed her flowers. She carried them to the window, to place them near her sister, and here she paused a moment, her eye caught by an object, far out in the bay, with which she was not unfamiliar. Mildred noticed its momentary look, and followed its direction.

Her sister stared, then caught her by the dress, as she passed from her, drawing her back with a weak hand. "O, my dearest, my poorest!" And she drew Kate down and down toward her, so that the girl had nothing for it but to sink on her knees and bury her face in Mildred's lap. If that ingenious invalid did not know everything now she knew a great deal.

CHAPTER V.

Mrs. Percival proved very pretty. It is more gracious to begin with this de-claration, instead of saying that, in the first place, she proved very silly. It took a long day to arrive at the end of her silliness, and the two ladies at Posilippo, even after a week had passed, suspected that they had only skirted its edges. Kate Theory had not spent half an hour in her company before she gave a little private sigh of relief; she felt that a situation which had promised to be embarrassing was now quite clear, was even of a primitive simplicity. She would spend with her sister-in-law, in the coming time, one week in the year that was all that was mortally possible. It was a blessing that one could see exactly what she was, for in that way the question settled itself. It would have been much more to some if Agnes had been a little less ob ous; then she would have had to hesit and consider and weigh one thing against another She was pretty and silly, as distinctly as an orange is yellow and round; and Kate Theory would as soon have thought of looking to her to give interest to the future as she would have thought of looking to an orange to impart solidity to the prospect of dinner. Mrs. Percival traveled in the hope of meeting her American acquaintances, or of making acquaintance with such Americans as she did meet, and for the purpose of buying mementoes for her relations. She was perpetually adding to her store of articles in tortoise shell, in mother-ofpearl, in clive wood, in ivory, in filagree, in tartan lacquer, in mosaic; and she had a collection of Roman scarfs and Venetian beads, which she looked over exhaustively every night before she went to bed. Her conversation bero Her conversation bore mainly upon the manner in which she intended to dispose of these accumulations. She was constantly changing about, among each other, the persons to whom they were respectively to be offered. At Rome one of the first things she said to her husband after entering the Coliseum had been: "I guess I will give the ivory workbox to Bessie and the Roman pearls to Aunt Harriet!" She was always hanging over the travelers' book at the hotel; she had it brought up to her, with a cup of chocolate, as soon as she arrived. She searched the pages for the magical name of New York, and she indulged in infinite conjecture as to who the people werethe name was sometimes only a partial cue—who had inscribed it there. What she missed most in Europe, and what she most enjoyed, were the New Yorkers; when she met them she talked about when she met them she taked about the people in their native city who had 'moved' and the streets they had moved to. "Oh, yes, the Drapers are going up town, to Twenty-fourth street, ad the Vanderdeckens are soing to be if Twenty-third street, right back

Theory was capable of repeating statements like these thirty times over-of ments like these thirty times over—of lingering on them for hours. She talked largely of herself, of her uncles and aunts, of her clothes—past, present and future. These articles, in especial, filled her horizon; she considered them with a complacency which might have led you to suppose that she had invented the custom of draping the human form. Her main point of contact with Naples was the purchase of coral, and all the while she was there the word "set"—she used it as if every one would understand—fell with its little flat, common sound upon the ears of her sisters-A NEW AND FASCINATING CONTINmon sound upon the ears of her sisters-in-law, who had no sets of anything. She cared little for pictures and moun tains; Alps and Apennines were not productive of New Yorkers, and it was difficult to take an interest in Madonnas, who flourished at periods when, apparently, there were no fashions, or, at acy rate, no trimmings.

I speak here not only of the impression she made upon her husband's anxious sisters, but of the judgment passed on her (he went so far as that, though it her (he went so far as that, though it was not olvious how it mattered to him) by Raymend Benyon. And this brings me at a jump (I confess it's a very small one) to the fact that he did, after all, go back to Posilippo. He stayed away for nine days, and at the end of this time Percival Theory called upon him to thank him for the civility he had shown his kinswomen. He went to this gentleman's hotel, to return his visit, and there he found Miss Kate in her brother's sitting room. She had come in by appointment from the villa, and was going with the others to seek the was going with the others to seek the royal palace, which she had not yet had an opportunity to inspect. It was proposed (not by Kate), and presently arranged that Capt. Benyon should go with them, and he accordingly walked over marble floors for half an hour, exchanging constant common-places with the woman he loved. For this truth had rounded itself during those nine days of absence; he discovered that there was nothing particularly sweet in

"Yes, of course, we are very dull, and he is like everybody else."

"I thought you thought he was so wonderful," said Kate, "and so fond of us."

"So he is; I am surer of that than ever. That's why he went away so abruptly."

Kate looked at her sister now. "I don't understand."

"Neither do I, darling. But you will, one of these days."

there was nothing particularly sweet in his life when once Kate Theory had been excluded from it. He had stayed away to keep himself from falling in love with her; but this expedient was in itself illuminating, for he had perceived that, according to the vulgar adage, he was locking the stable door after the horse had been stolen. As he paced the deck of the ship and looked toward Posilippo his tenderness crystallized; the thick, smoky flame of a sentiment that knew itself forbidden and was ment that knew itself forbidden and was angry at the knowledge, now danced upon the fuel of his good resolutions.

The latter, it must be said, resisted, declined to be consumed. He determined that he would see Kate Theory again, for a time, just sufficient to bid her good-by, and to add a little explanation. He thought of his explanation very lovingly, but it may not strike the reader as a happy inspiration. To part from her dryly, abruptly, without any allusion to what he might have said if everything had been different—that would be wisdom, of course, that would "It's the captain's gig going back to the ship," Milly said. "It's so still one can almost hear the oars."

Kate Theory turned away with a sudself well in hand. But it would be virtue, that would be virtue. ue terribly unrewarded-it would be virtue too austere for a person who sometimes flattered himself that he had taught himself stoicism. The minor uxury tempted him irresistibly, since the larger—that of happy love—was denied him; the luxury of letting the girl know that it would not be an accident—oh, not at all—that they should never meet again. She might easily think it was, and thinking it was would doubtless do her no harm. But this wouldn't give him his pleasure—the Platonic satisfaction of expressing to her at the same time his belief that they might have made each other happy, and the necessity of his renunciation. That, probably, wouldn't hurt her either, for she had given him no proof whatever that she cared for him. The nearest approach to it was the way she walked beside him now, sweet and silent, without the least reference to his not having been back to the villa. The blace was cool and dusky, the blinds were drawn to keep out the light and noise, and the little party wandered through the high saloons, where precious marbles and the gleam of gilding and satin made reflections in the rich dimness. Here and there the cicerone, in slippers, with Neapolitan familiarity, threw open a shutter to show off a picture on a tapestry. He strolled in front with Percival Theory and his wife, while this lady, dropping silently from her husband's arm as they passed, felt the stuff of the curtains and the sofas. When he caught her in these experiments, the cic rone, in expressive depre-cation, clasped his hands and lifted his eyebrows; whereupon Mrs. Theory ex-claimed to her husband, "Oh, bother his old king!" It was not striking to Capt. Benyon why Percival Theory had mar-ried the niece of Mr. Henry Platt. He was less interesting than his sisterssmooth, cool, correct young man, who frequently took out a pencil and did a little arithmetic on the back of a letter. He sometimes, in spite of his correctness, chewed a toothpick, and he missed the American papers, which he used to ask for in the most unlikely places. He was a Bostonian converted to New York; a very special type.

"Is it settled when you leave Naples?" Benyon asked of Kate Theory.
"I think so; on the 24th. My brother has been very kind; he has lent us his carriage, which is a large one, so that Mildred can lie down. He and Agnes will take another; but, of course, we shall travel together." "I wish to Heaven I were going with you!" Capt. Benyon said. He had given her the opportunity to respond, but she did not take it; she merely remarked, with a vague laugh, that of course he couldn't take his ship over the Apennines. "Yes, there is always my ship," he went on. "I am afraid that in the future it will carry me far away

Opinions of the Press.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon treatment for catarrh. Out of 2000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent, have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent, of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patest medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished, the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him six years age, are cures still. No one slee has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star.

meeting in Glasgow. The members of a methodist church having met to consider whether the building should be repaired or not, the most wealthy man in the society said he would give £5. As he took his seat a piece of plaster from the roof fell on his head, and he rose again and intimated that he meant to have said that he would give £50, whereupon an enthusiastic member cried out "Lord hit him again."

I am as alive as any of you can be to the critical character of this present time. Great questions, affecting not only the relations of the church to the state, but toughing the church to own standards of touching the church's own standards of doctrine, and ritual, and discipline, are in agitation everywhere. We are living in the ferment of a new time. The old order the ferment of a new time. The old order changeth. The democratic principle which is making itself felt in the state every year more and more, cannot but affect the church; and as the gospel of Christ has happily kept itself free from all political attachments and even from all profits. happily kept itself free from all political attachments, and even from all special social conditions, seeking only to infuse its own pure and noble spirit in all institutions and all forms of society with which tions and all forms of society with which it may find itself surrounded, we need not be afraid that the church, if she be free in the spirit and truly taught the mind of Christ, will lose her power of adapting herself to the most novel conditions and changed circumstances of the outward life of men. It was Lord Clarendon's judgment of the clergy that, as a class, they were the slowest of any to discern the sizes of the time, or to deal as a class, they were the slowest of any to discern the signs of the time, or to deal practically with them when they discerned them. Whether the reproach was ever justly deserved or not, I am sure that now with others it allows acquaintance to ripen is a time at each or the social civilities. It will cut some visitors dead the second time it sees them; with others it allows acquaintance to ripen s a time en we have all need to rub our into friendship. eyes and fry to ascertain the tendency of things; and if there be indeed a stream outside ourselves, which makes for righteousness, and the old channels, which once sufficed, are too narrow to contain it, we must see whether those channels cannot be widened, lest the stream becomes a flood, and break down all barriers, and the very ideas of order and rule perish in the outburst of an anarchical fanaticism.

PROCTOR ON THE PYRAMID.

ity College Last Night. Statistics, it is said, can prove anything. If anything on earth shows this it is the stics of the great pyramid. Professor The old man Duncan McCague of the Piazzi Smyth by means of a foot rule and Piazzi Smyth by means of a foot rule and the multiplication table actually proved the from them that the world would come to an end in 1881. Mr. Proctor took this lalse prophet to task in his lecture last night. It is not necessary to tell our readers all over again the old, old story of how the pyramid lies exactly north and south—more exactly than even Tycho Brahe could pyramid lies exactly north and sould have made it, how it covers twelve acres, the same size as Lincoln's Inn, the relations its height bears to its radius, the entrance chamber pointing to the pole star, the great gallery, the king's chamber, the bottomless pit, Cheops, Chefren, and so on, and so on. Suffice it to say that Mr. Proctor explained that, in his opinion, it was built for three purposes: a tomb, a temple, and an observatory, and that he dealt more particularly with the last of these purposes.

By the way, the great gallery, it is generally supposed, was used as a primitive transit instrument. Has anybody yet discovered how the times of the transits were recorded? Were clepsydia then invented? Would they have been of any use if they had been?

The audience listened attentively, and were kind enough to titter at Mr. Proctor's one little attempt at a joke at Piazzi myth's expense.
Our hints in re gas, steam and draughte were taken.

More About Sunday Cars. Editor World: I have been amused ood deal by the Sunday street car discus on. A few suggestions:

If the wealthy find it necessary to work their man servant and their cattle by driving to church; and the well-to-do work the stranger within their gates by hiring coupes, cabs, etc., for the same purpose, why should not the poorer classes be alit a profanation? They why are not the wealthy and the well-to-de tabased former. wealthy and the well-to-do tabooed for persistent wilful profanation of the Sabbath? Are they?

Are they?
Some pious people, humanitarians at that, fear that horses and men will have to work seven days a week. As a matter of fact there is a large number of "extra" men who do not work four days, and a number more who do not get in three days a week. As for the horses, the company understand their own interests better than all these them. Moreover, we have some people in our midst who pay their taxes, who are good citizens, and who do not believe in the Sabbatarian view of the car question. For instance, we have Hebrews, Sunday cars do not clash with their creed, and I do not gians and others who believe that the law of Moses is obsolete (as all other creeds practically admit by first day observance) can see nothing undesirable in the idea from a religious point of view. I leave out the secularists, because they ought to be stoned to death—according to the views of a tew advanced Sabbatarians of my ac-

Let us have less religious cant and more godliness, coupled with Sunday street cars, for it is as sensible to say that the man who blows the church organ, the man who plays it and the preacher who earns his money on that day are profaning the Sab-bath, as to deny worthy people the right to ride to church on the same grounds.

No dog is less frivolous-less addicted to canine vanities. Even as puppies they find out their strength and weight, and the nat ural generosity of their character, so amply expressed in the broad deep-set of the fore head, the expression of thoughtful dignity in the eye make them far more tolerant of trivial affronts, more patient under small provocations than their inferiors in size and sinew.
