Mr. MANION: No, he was not a civil servant. I do not pay him as much as most private secretaries receive, not because he is not worth it—I think he is worth as much, because he is an excellent man—but before he came with me he happened to be working with a private corporation and getting considerably less than I pay him. I gave him more than he was getting then, and since he has been with me I have raised his salary once. He is still below $4,000. His services are entirely satisfactory and apparently he is satisfied with his position. Probably within the next year he will receive the full salary of a secretary. At the present time, however, he is receiving less than other secretaries receive. The $600 to which my right hon. friend has referred is given in all departments as an allowance to the secretary.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Where the secretary is a member of the service he gets $600 in addition to his regular salary?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: I wish to read a copy of a letter from the Canadian National Railways at Montreal, Quebec, dated October 7, 1930, file No. 1920-217. It is as follows:

Gentlemen:
With reference to your letter for the construction of new station at Rivière du Loup.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Dispense.

Mr. POULIOT: No.

The Department of Railways and Canals has refused to sanction the construction of this new station, and all tenders and deposit cheques have been returned to the railway.
I am therefore returning herewith your deposit cheque for $8,398.30, and if you have not yet returned your set of plans and specifications, I would suggest that you do so at an early date, so that arrangements may be made to also return your deposit cheque for $50.
Thanking you for your tender, I am,
Yours truly,
H. T. Hazen,
Assistant Chief Engineer, Operation Department.

May I ask the minister what was meant by the words "Department of Railways and Canals"?

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend has brought this matter up quite a few times during the present session. The expenditure in connection with Riviere du Loup station was not treated any differently from very many other expenditures proposed by the railway. Because of the fact however that the railway was not earning anything like as much money as it had earned the previous year, and that the earnings were so low that the situation had become serious, the station Riviere du Loup and various other proposed works were not carried out. My hon. friend seems to have the impression that the station at Riviere du Loup is the only station or the only railway building of any kind which was not built as originally proposed. Such, however, is not the case; many other works originally proposed to be carried out by the national railways were not gone on with. The government took the attitude that these capital expenditures should be delayed until later. It is natural that a railway which is earning $30,000,000 less than the interest owing to the public should not be too quick to make capital expenditures. It was the opinion of the government, and I think the stand was properly taken, that at least some of the capital expenditures should be postponed until a later date. The Riviere du Loup station was included with a number of other structures the national railways intended to go on with if earnings had continued in reasonably good form, or as they were in 1928. In 1929 the earnings were decreasing, and with conditions as they were in 1930 I repeat that the government thought unnecessary capital expenditure should not be made. Then, in connection with the Department of Railways and Canals, not referring particularly to the Canadian National Railways, construction of many branch lines, hotels and other projects of that nature is being deferred. In all probability had the earnings of the railway company been in good shape those works would have been proceeded with. My hon. friend has made it quite clear to the house that he would like to have a station at Riviere du Loup; surely there is no hon. member doubts that. Having done so, he has performed his duty to his constituency, and when the time comes the station will be built. With no desire to hurt his feelings, I beg to assure him that he will not get a station any sooner by bringing the matter up very many times in this house, instead of being content with having brought it to the attention of the railway department and the management of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. POULIOT: Two weeks ago the minister said: "Don't mention it again and you may have a chance of getting a station." I have followed his advice for a fortnight and said nothing about it since, but still I am not rewarded. It reminds me of an experience I had when arguing a case before three distinguished judges in the court of appeal. I concluded my argument between four and five o'clock in the afternoon and they did not seem to understand it very well, but next morning after I had recapitulated my argument they told me, "Oh, here is a point that enables you to win your case." I asked my hon. friend a question, but he did not answer me, and I regret to notice that although I have stated it three or four times, he does not yet appear to understand my point, so I shall have to try once more to make it clear to him. The other day the hon. Minister of Railways said that he had had nothing to do with the refusal to build a station at Riviere du Loup, but here is a letter from the Canadian National Railways saying that it is on account of the refusal of the minister to sanction the project that it was not gone on with. In brief, the minister says one thing and the officers of the Canadian National Railways say the direct opposite. If Mr. Hazen does not tell the truth he should be dismissed at once. But there is something more serious than that, Mr. Chairman. I do not come here as a beggar, I do not come here to annoy the house. I repeat, this is a most serious matter, for the other day my hon. friend was contradicted by the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. We are not dealing with the estimates of the Canadian National Railways, we are dealing with the estimates of the Department of Railways and Canals, and I do not think the hon. member is in order in bringing up the question of a station at Riviere du Loup.

Mr. POULIOT: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I have under my hand a letter from the Canadian National Railways stating that it is on account of the refusal of the Minister of Railways and Canals that the station has not been built. I am not speaking of the Canadian National Railways, I am speaking of the Department of Railways and Canals, and the question I have asked of the hon. minister is this: Who was the official of the Canadian National Railways who refused to sanction the construction of that building? This is the only question that I have put to him. Instead of giving me an answer he made a speech, a dilatory speech. I believe I am strictly in order in asking for an answer to my question. I am not discussing the doings of the Canadian National Railways, I am discussing the doings of the hon. member's colleague when acting Minister of Railways and Canals, and if my hon. friend is dissatisfied with him he has only one course to follow—to resign or to ask that his colleague be reprimanded. This is a most serious question. I could speak to it on every item in the estimates, because the money which was voted for this definite purpose was spent for another purpose, but the hon. minister cannot tell me where it was spent.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): I think the point of order is well taken. The matter that the hon. member has reference to does not appear in the item now under consideration.

Mr. POULIOT: I will ask for a vote on the ruling of the chairman.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: Am I in order, Mr. Chairman, when I ask what official of the department has refused to sanction the building of that station?

Mr. MANION: I have explained to the hon. member that I do not know anything about what the officials of the railway may have done. The hon. gentleman one minute says he wants to know what official of the railway—

Mr. POULIOT: What official of the department.

Mr. MANION: I have told the hon. gentleman that the government rightly took the view that the Canadian National Railways were not earning sufficient to spend much on capital account, being already committed to an expenditure of well over $100,000,000. I subscribe to that view. In my opinion the government took the right course. And they did not discriminate against the hon. member. What I said to him the other day was something to this effect: Less talk and more station. But I did not say a station would be built in one year or two years, neither do I say so now. I may tell the hon. gentleman that it is not the best way to get a station to obstruct the business of the house, because that is what he has been doing many times this session.

Mr. POULIOT: I rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman has been inconsistent. He knows it and the house knows it.

Mr. POULIOT: Not a bit.

Mr. MANION: If he thinks he can bluff us into building a station at Riviere-du-Loup, in other words, changing the whole policy of the Canadian National Railways, simply because he calls for a vote, he has another guess coming to him; because he cannot. I wish to treat the hon. gentleman with every courtesy, but again I must remind him that he is not taking the proper course to get a station at Rivière-du-Loup.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask who brought about that refusal?

An hon. MEMBER: You have been told a dozen times.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask the minister who brought about that refusal?

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman has pointed out in this house on a number of occasions that I was up at Fort Churchill when the matter went through council. But although I was not present, I take full responsibility for what was done. I have told the hon. gentleman that the station was not built for the same reason that many other structures on the Canadian National Railways were not built. As a matter of fact he has been treated the same as many hon. gentlemen on this side of the house. I may say that they have given me a pretty severe reprimand privately because they did not get stations and other public buildings that they expected for their constituencies. The hon. gentleman and other members of the house were so treated because of the exigencies of the situation. My hon. friend was not discriminated against. I want to be courteous to him but I cannot go any further than that.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not complain, Mr. Chairman, that I am treated differently from others, but I do complain that my constituents are treated differently from other constituents. The east block is not situated at Napier or in any other earthquake zone—the building has not been destroyed, so the records must still be there. If my hon. friend takes responsibility for what has been done, there must be in the department records to show at whose request this action was taken by the minister.

Mr. MANION: I have told the hon. gentleman that it was done at the request of the government; I am part of the government; I take the responsibility. I repeat that other buildings of this sort were not proceeded with because the government thought that the Canadian National Railways was already committed to a sufficient capital expenditure.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. POULIOT: Has my hon. friend the Minister of Marine nothing to say about this? He is silent.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: No it is not carried at all.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not want to discuss the Rivière du Loup station, but perhaps it would save time if I should ask the minister a question now so that he would be prepared to give the information when the Canadian National estimates come down. Would it be possible to obtain a list of contractors or contracts in the different sections of the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. MANION: Does my hon. friend mean railway contracts?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. MANION: Yes, I shall gladly endeavour to get that for my hon. friend. It is not in my department, but I will ask the railways for it.

Mr. SANDERSON: I notice that for 1930-31 the item for stenographers amounted to $10,980, and for 1931-32 this has been increased to $12,885. Is that increase due to increased salaries or to a greater number of stenographers?

Mr. MANION: If my hon. friend will look at the column on the extreme left of the page he will find that there is an increase of two stenographers. I have been checking up the staff a good deal; certainly mine is one department which has not increased the staff as a whole, and I am informed that this increase in stenographers or clerical help of one kind or another has been caused largely by the auditing that has to be done in connection with the construction of the Montreal terminals, for instance, and other large capital expenditures made by the Canadian National Railways. We have in the department an audit branch whose duty it is to audit the expenditures of the Canadian National Railways. The rather heavy capital expenditures of the railways such as the Montreal terminal, which required some $8,000,000 last year, have necessitated more clerical help. Many of them are temporary.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then it would appear from the remarks of the minister that while the business of the Canadian National Railways is decreasing, together with the earnings, the business of the department is increasing. That is hardly consistent.

Mr. MANION: It might be consistent if the department were checking up very heavy capital expenditures. A very small part of my department has to deal with the Canadian National Railways, with the exception of the audit branch. My friend Colonel Dubuc here, the chief engineer, has nothing to do with the railways. He deals with the canals, the construction of the Hudson Bay railway, the Welland ship canal and so on. I should say at least seventy-five per cent of my department, if not ninety per cent, has practically nothing to do with the railways. The audit branch has been increased, but there has not been an increase in the other work of the department.

Mr. CASGRAIN: There is provision here for $3,720 for an assistant secretary. This is a new position. I should like to know the reasons for the appointment of this new official.

Mr. POULIOT: So much money has been spent on the Welland canal that it is not surprising that the expenses of the department have increased.

Mr. MANION: I am informed that one of the officers of the department who previously was rated as a head clerk was promoted to the position of assistant secretary, and that position was created as far as the name was concerned. This meant a slight increase in his salary, but his previous salary was wiped out, so instead of meaning an additional man it meant only a different rating. As I have pointed out, really there has been a decrease in the expenditures of the department of about $3,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Was that position created by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I see there is also the addition of a principal clerk as compared with last year. Is that a new appointment which was made by the Civil Service Commission, and what was the reason for it?

Mr. MANION: That is part of the reclassification I have been speaking of. I will again point out to my hon. friend that due to the various reclassifications, while the staff remains the same the salaries have been decreased by about $3,000, so there has been an improvement instead of the reverse.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I notice that provision is made for a secretary to the executive. We were told a few moments ago that another secretary to the executive is provided for out of contingencies. May I ask if two secretaries are required?

Mr. MANION: This position was in existence previously. Mr. Pugsley is secretary of the department, and this man is the assistant. This has nothing whatever to do with my personal staff.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The minister made a statement a moment ago which struck me rather forcibly. He said his department audited the capital expenditure of the Canadian National Railways. I think the minister made a mistake. The capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways are voted every year, and there is a firm of auditors, Price, Waterhouse and Company, or somebody else, who audit all the accounts of the Canadian National Railways. Once a capital expenditure has been voted in the form of a loan I do not believe it is audited by the department. That must be so, since the minister stated that he has nothing whatever to do with the administration of the Canadian National Railways. What has the minister to say in that regard?

Mr. MANION: I will explain to my hon. friend. In regard to statutory capital expenditure, where the government provides the money, we conduct an audit. Where the railway itself makes expenditures without statute, we do not have an audit. Price, Waterhouse and Company are general auditors for the railway; my hon. friend is correct in that, but with regard to expenditures such as the Montreal terminal, the different branch lines, the Toronto terminal, the Hudson Bay railway and so on, those are all statutory. They are audited by the department, because they go through our department by statute.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am afraid the minister used the word "statutory" in a wrong way. The minister means money which is provided by a special vote, but that is not what we call statutory with regard to these estimates.

Mr. MANION: Yes, the money provided by statute. The Montreal terminal was incorporated in a statute, and that was the case also with the Toronto terminal, the branch lines and so on. They were all bills passed by the house.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The minister can assure us that the audit branch of the Department of Railways and Canals has nothing to do with the audit of the accounts of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MANION: It has nothing to do with the operating expenditures of the railway.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Will the minister tell me whether the Auditor General has anything to do with auditing the accounts of the Canadian National railways?

Mr. MANION: He has not.

Sir EUGENE FISET: In other words, the only audit which is carried on, as far as the Canadian National railways are concerned, is the independent audit by Price, Waterhouse and Company, who report to the Canadian National Railway officials and to no one else. And this parliament, notwithstanding the fact that we are supposed to be shareholders in the Canadian National Railways, has nothing whatever to say in respect of any one of those expenditures made by the system. Am I correct?

Mr. MANION: The independent audit of the books and records of the Canadian National Railways is conducted by Geo. A. Touche and Co., but of course, that is a matter over which I have no control.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I beg the minister's pardon; I should not have asked that question. The only reason I asked it was that he himself had mentioned something about auditing.

Mr. MANION: My understanding is that the Canadian National Railways have their own official auditors, and in addition to that there is an outside group of auditors who do auditing as well. But where there are statutory expenditures we have an audit branch which audits those expenditures. They audit the expenditures that go through our department, as they also do the canal expenditures.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Expenditures authorized by special act of parliament?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: On what date was the order in council passed granting $1,500,000 to both the large railway companies in order to provide work for unemployment relief?

Mr. MANION: There was $1,500,000 taken out of the $20,000,000 fund to provide for the railways the interest on certain works which they did and which they would not otherwise have done for perhaps a year or two, and in some cases four years. That sum was divided between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National for works which they chose to do—various works scattered around from one end of Canada to the other. These undertakings amounted to something like $22,000,000, and out of that $20,000,000 fund the interest was provided for, amounting to $1,500,000.

Mr. POULIOT: At what date was the order in council passed?

Mr. MANION: I do not think I can tell my hon. friend. It was passed shortly after the brief session of last September. I should imagine it was passed some time in October.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the minister be kind enough to give the information to-morrow on the orders of the day?

Mr. MANION: Yes; I can look it up.

Mr. POULIOT: The date of the order in council granting the $1,500,000 to both railways.

Mr. MANION: As a matter of fact, I do not know that there was an order in council. I am not sure there was. But an arrangement was made with the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific. The Deputy Minister of Railways and myself met with officers of the two railways and we discussed the works they proposed to do, but I doubt whether there was an order in council. There was an agreement with the two railways but I am sorry I cannot inform my hon. friend offhand as to the date. I should imagine, however, it was towards the middle or the end of October.

Mr. POULIOT: Can I get the date of that agreement, please.

Mr. MANION: Yes; I will do the best I can to get it.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the minister give it to-morrow on the orders of the day?

Mr. MANION: I will try.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you.

Mr. GARDINER: In these agreements between the railway companies and the government, were the works to be done specified?

Mr. MANION: Yes, they were.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have been somewhat interested in listening to the explanations of the minister. There has been no change from the custom followed by the late government in dealing with the Canadian National Railways, and it seems to me that my hon. friend is taking upon himself a good deal of responsibility in relation to the works of the Canadian National. My understanding was that after the moneys were appropriated by the government, which moneys were for capital account, the responsibility in regard to stations, maintenance and everything else in connection with the national railways rested entirely with the management and was altogether free from interference on the part of the government.

Mr. MANION: That is quite right.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot, therefore, understand why my hon. friend should be responsible for Rivière du Loup or why he should have anything to do with that or any other station.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend has misunderstood me. I did not say that we had anything to do with these expenditures except in so far as they are statutory. Rivière du Loup is on a government line, and in the case of government railways the contracts have to come before the government. Such contracts came before the government of which my hon. friend was a member. There has been no change, and I have not implied that there has been any change, with respect to the handling of the affairs of the Canadian National Railways or the auditing of the accounts.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That applies only to government-owned railways that are now operated by the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can understand that. But I was desirous of knowing whether any change had taken place with respect to the Canadian National Railways generally—

Mr. MANION: Not at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): —because, if that were the case, I think my hon. friend would be taking on a considerable responsibility.

Mr. MANION: I might tell my hon. friend that, by reason of the decreased earnings, the government has taken the attitude that there should be no unnecessary expenditures on capital account. Beyond that, there has been no change.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I understand that. The government must find the money; but having found it, neither the government nor the minister has any further responsibility.

Mr. MANION: That is quite right.

Mr. HEENAN: I wish to refer for a moment to the definite pledge given the electorate at Woodstock, Ontario, on June 24, 1930, by the present Prime Minister. There was depression in the country at that time, and the right hon. gentleman promised the construction of national highways and the building of branch lines, as reported in the Mail and Empire of June 26.

Mr. MANION: I may say there are a number of branch lines still being built.

Mr. HEENAN: The point is that this was an undertaking to build branch lines to take care of unemployment. Here is an hon. member who wishes to have a station built, a station which is essential to the commerce of the country. I would point out to the Minister of Railways that this work would give relief to the unemployed in that particular town.

Mr. GOTT: Mr. Chairman, I beg to direct your attention to the fact that it is eleven o'clock.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, May 13, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

First report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Matthews.

Second report of the select standing committee on railways and canals—Mr. Harris.

QUESTIONS

(Question answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP—AFFIDAVITS

Mr. RALSTON:

1. Is it true that the Post Office Department are sending communications to postmasters asking them to prove themselves innocent by signing an affidavit denying political partisanship, and that failure to sign and return the affidavit will result in dismissal?

2. If any communications relating to the matter of making affidavits are being put out, will the Postmaster General lay on the table of the house a copy of the letter which is being dispatched?

3. To how many postmasters has this been sent?

Mr. SAUVE: Dropped.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The hon. member who put that question is not in the house. In his absence I think the question should not be dropped, unless some arrangement has been made between him and the minister.

Mr. SAUVE: The question is dropped because I understand the hon. member has asked that it should be.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Very well, that is all right.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

POINTE-AU-PIC, QUE., SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Was Mr. Joseph Villeneuve, superintendent of the public works at Pointe-au-Pic, Charlevoix county, dismissed from his duties?
2. If so, why?
3. By whom was he replaced?
4. By whom was he recommended?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. No, services terminated on completion of work.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

4. Appointed by the Civil Service Commission.

ABOLITION OF CUSTOMS PORTS

Mr. EULER:

1. How many customs ports or outports have been abolished since July 28, 1930?
2. What are the names of such ports or outports?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Ports, nil; outports, 4; preventive stations, 6.

2. New Campbellton, N.S., Port Dalhousie, Ont., Souris, Man., Virden, Man., Lingan, N.S., Port Dufferin, N.S., Vogler's Cove, N.S., Sonora, N.S., Mowbray, Man., Sybouts, Sask.

POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP INQUIRY COMMISSIONERS

Sir EUGENE FISET:

1. Are all commissioners nominated to inquire into charges of political partisanship appointed by or through the Department of Justice, or independently by each department?
2. Are these commissioners given a blanket authority to inquire into any case of alleged partisanship, as they think fit, or have they to wait for instructions either from the Department of Justice or any other department, before taking action?
3. Are their emoluments and all other expenses paid by each department concerned or by the Department of Justice, or are their accounts simply assessed by the Department of Justice and then paid by the departments concerned?

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. CAHAN:

1. The commissioners are appointed by orders in council upon the recommendation of various ministers.

2. The instructions to the commissioners are given in their commissions, and vary to some extent. They have to wait instructions from each department in cases concerning that department.

3. The Department of Justice does not tax or pay the accounts of commissioners for other departments. They are paid by each department separately.

ST. ZACHARIE, QUE., CUSTOMS EXCISE OFFICER

Mr. LACROIX:

1. Was Edouard Groleau, customs excise enforcement officer, at St. Zacharie, Quebec, dismissed from the service of the Department of National Revenue?
2. If so, on what grounds, and on whose recommendation?
3. Who was appointed in his stead?
4. On whose recommendation?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Yes.

2. On a charge in writing of a member of parliament that to his personal knowledge the officer had been guilty of active political partisanship.

3. Thomas Chabot.

4. Appointed by the honourable the minister for a period of thirty days pending an appointment by the Civil Service Commission.

CLORIDORME, QUE., UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. BRASSET:

1. What amount was allotted out of the unemployment fund for the municipality of Cloridorme, county of Gaspe?
2. How many men were employed and for what work?
3. Is the government aware that the payroll has not yet been paid, although the work was completed in December last?
4. Will the government give the necessary instructions to have the cheques issued?

Mr. GORDON:

1. Cloridorme township $2,800.

2. 388. Road improvements and clearing along river.

3. Payroll received by Department of Labour April 15th.

4. Payment of Dominion proportion $2,799.59 mailed to provincial government May 8th.

QUEBEC—BLANC SABLON, TELEGRAPH SUPERINTENDENT

Mr. LARUE:

1. What is the name of the federal government superintendent of telegraphs on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, from Quebec to Blanc Sablon?
2. When was he appointed, by whom recommended, and what is his salary?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. J. A. Bilodeau.
2. (a) February 18, 1929; (b) Appointed by Civil Service Commission following public advertisement for applicants; (c) $3,480 per annum.

MATANE QUE., POST OFFICE CARETAKER

Mr. LARUE:

1. When was Louis Gauthier, former caretaker of the post office building at Matane, dismissed?
2. Was an inquiry held before his dismissal?
3. If not, why was he dismissed without an inquiry, and at whose request?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. May 31, 1924.
2. Yes.
3. Answered by No. 2.

THOMAS MARSHALL

Mr. BLAIR:

1. Is Thomas Marshall employed by the Dominion government?
2. If so, in what department, in what capacity, and at what salary?
3. Was he appointed by the Civil Service Commission, and were examinations held after public advertisement, and an eligible list established in connection with the position which he now occupies?
4. Was the said Thomas Marshall secretary of the Temiskaming South Conservative Association?

Mr. GORDON:

1. Yes.
2. By the Department of Mines, to assist in a survey of the Canadian coal mining industry being made by the Dominion Fuel Board. Salary $225.00 a month.
3. No. The appointment was made under the provisions of order in council of November 25th, 1922 (P.C. 2381) and approved by order in council of November 29, 1930 (P.C. 63/2766).
4. No information.

IMMIGRATION AND MINES EMPLOYEES

Mr. BLAIR:

What are the names, duties and salaries of any employees added to the Department of Immigration and Colonization or the Department of Mines, since August 7, 1930?

Mr. GORDON:

Department of Mines

ST. LUC—STE. GERMAINE MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. BOULANGER:

1. Is the carrying of mail from St. Luc to Ste. Germaine, in the county of Dorchester, given by contract?
2. If so, when does the present contract expire?
3. Does the government intend to renew said contract with the present holder?
4. If not, have tenders been called and received?
5. What are the names of the tenderers and the amount of each tender?
6. To whom was the contract granted?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. 20th May, 1931.
3. No.
4. Yes.
5. Adelard Côté, Lac Etchemin, $600; Alfred Mercier, Dijon, $750; Napoléon Gosselin, Dijon, $780; Vve. François Laflamme, Dijon, $850; Camille Pouliot, Dijon, $870; J. Ludger Audet, St. Luc, Dijon, $875; Rosaire Bolduc, Lac Etchemin, $1,000; Philémon Leclerc, Lac Etchemin, $1,150; R. Choinard, $750.
6. Adélard Côté.

WATERHEN LAKE DRAINAGE

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. When was the contract let for draining Waterhen lake in northern Saskatchewan?
2. Who was the contractor and what was the cost?
3. What was the acreage reclaimed?

Mr. MURPHY:

1. October 26, 1920.
2. (a) Lount Engineering Company; (b) $186,911.21.
3. 13,880 acres were dewatered.

LITTLE CASCAPEDIA, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has an investigation been held in the Little Cascapedia post office, county of Bonaventure?
2. If so, by whom, and with what result?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2. By commissioner Gerard Simard who found the postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.

BONAVENTURE, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the postmaster of Bonaventure, Quebec, been dismissed, and if so, for what reason?

2. If an investigation was held, by whom was it held and what was the result?

3. Has an appointment been made? If so, who recommended the new postmaster?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. The postmaster's dismissal on account of active political partisanship has been authorized by council but not effected yet.

2. An investigation was held by commissioner Gerard Simard who found the complaints founded.

3. No.

MATAPEDIA INTERPROVINCIAL BRIDGE

Mr. MARCIL:

1. How much was expended on the Matapedia interprovincial bridge during the fiscal year 1930-1931, for materials and wages, respectively?

2. What was the amount paid the foremen of this work, who were they and what amount was received by each?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. Materials, $6,194.57; wages, $6,420.25.

2. John A. Adams, $290; Alexander Pratt, $200.

NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre):

1. What was the national debt of Canada as at Decemer 31, 1930?

2. How much of this sum is owing to Canadian organizations, corporations or individuals?

3. How much is owing to other portions of the British Empire?

4. How much is owing to foreign countries?

Mr. BENNETT:

1. Funded debt of Canada, $2,354,705,224.46.

2, 3 and 4. Funded debt is payable as follows: in Canada, $1,777,123,188.07; in London, $311,668,136.39; in New York, $265,913,900.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

COMPENSATION FOR SLAUGHTERED ANIMALS

Mr. TETRAULT:

For a copy of all documents, letters and correspondence, in connection with indemnities to be paid by the federal government for slaughtered animals in the province of Quebec, under the system of reserved zones, since the establishment of said system; also a return showing the number and the average indemnity of the slaughtered animals by counties, and the average indemnity per head of cattle ranging from the age of one, two, three and over, for registered animals and cross-breeds.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

DEPORTATION OF AUGUST GABERT

Mr. HEPBURN:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports, other documents, on file in the Department of Immigration dealing with the deportation by United States authorities of one August Gabert, formerly of Toronto and Welland, to Germany, and with the pending deportation of his wife, Bertha, to the same country by the Canadian authorities.

DOMINION CENSUS

Mr. TOTZKE:

For a copy of all schedules, portfolios, instruction books, and generally all the formulae and instructions issued by or to the Dominion Statistician, the census commissioners and census enumerators in connection with the taking of the decennial census of 1931, together with schedule of fees payable to commissioners and enumerators.

ROUYN MINES RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. NICHOLSON:

For a copy of all orders in council, agreements, and other documents, relating to or in any way connected with the organization of the Rouyn Mines Railway Company, the construction and operation of the said railway and the leasing of the same by the government of Canada from the Rouyn Mines Railway Company and to the Canadian National Railway Company;

Also a copy of all correspondence between the Prime Minister of Canada or any member of the government and the promoters, directors or officers of the Rouyn Mines Railway Company or the executive or any officer of the Canadian National Railway Company in any way relating to the financing, construction and operation of the said railway;

Also a copy of correspondence, letters and telegrams between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Quebec, the Noranda Mining Company or any other person or persons relating to the subsidizing or bonusing of the above railway.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

DEPORTATION OF ROBERT CAMPBELL

Mr. McINTOSH (for Mr. Howard):

For a copy of all correspondence and other communications between the Minister of Immigration, Ottawa, or his officials, and the immigration officials at Lake Megantic, in the county of Compton, Quebec, regarding the deportation of Robert Campbell from Lake Megantic to Glasgow, Scotland;

Also a return showing upon whose recommendation this man was deported and who lodged the complaint against him.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to tabling the papers in connection with this motion, except as to the last part, namely:

Also a return showing upon whose recommendation this man was deported and who lodged the complaint against him.

I do not think it is advisable in the public interest that information of this character should be published, because in many cases if the informant knew that his name would be made public the information would not be given. Therefore in regard to the latter part of the motion I take the position that the return will not be made.

Mr. POWER: The member in whose name the motion stands is not here, but I happen to know something of this particular case, having had some correspondence on it myself. I do not think the minister is correct in taking such a stand. The deportation of a British subject is a serious matter, and all the circumstances of the case should be developed in the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. BENNETT: Not unless it is amended. The mover is not here anyway.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the mover the resolution will be allowed to stand.

Motion stands.

BLACK LAKE, QUE., PUBLIC BUILDING

Mr. ROBERGE:

For a copy of all orders, correspondence, reports, memoranda and other documents in the possession of the government or any member thereof, written by any member of parliament, minister of the crown or any other person, regarding the decision of the Minister of Public Works preventing the construction of a public building at Black Lake, Quebec, for which a sum of $26,000 was voted in the estimates of the year 1930-1931.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, this motion can hardly be said to conform to the rules of the house. It assumes that letters have been written for the purpose of preventing the construction of a certain public building. If my hon. friend would change his motion to read, "relating to the construction of a public building at Black Lake, Quebec," I think he will make his motion entirely in order; but as it stands it assumes something as a fact that has not been established.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the resolution as amended carry?

Motion as amended agreed to.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

PRIVILEGE—Mr. YOUNG

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In votes and proceedings on Monday the 27th of April, at page 125, the following resolution appears:

Order of the house for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between any or all of the Canadian oil refining companies and any department of the government, since May 1, 1930, in regard to the importation of oil or oil products.

That resolution was accepted by the government and passed unanimously by this house. Yesterday we received an answer from the Commissioner of Customs which I will read:

No period is stated, but in any case, it is contrary to the established policy of the Department of National Revenue to give information which would disclose the customs transactions of individual concerns.

Here we have, Mr. Speaker, an order of this house, passed unanimously, instructing the officers of the crown to supply us with certain information, and we find a civil servant, sitting in his castle over in the customs building, snapping his fingers in the face of parliament and defying its order.

Mr. HARRIS: I ask the indulgence of the house to revert to the order of presenting reports.

Mr. YOUNG: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if he will take the matter up and see that the information is supplied to the house.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under the rules no debate is possible at this time with respect to this matter. I would assume that the hon. gentleman knew this, and I doubt whether he should have brought it up. There is a time and place for it, and I do not propose to debate it now. Observance of the rules of the house, as the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) observed the other day, is somewhat important, and there is a responsibility resting upon whoever is for the moment the leader of the house to see that the rules are observed, and when in opposition I ventured to point out the desirability of that practice being observed. There is a tendency, as may be noticed, to disregard the rules. I shall endeavour as long as I am here to see that the rules are observed. If the house desires, by unanimous consent, to depart from them, that of course is within the discretion of the house, the rules being made merely for the purpose of expediting the transaction of business. In this instance my hon. friend from Weyburn (Mr. Young) has raised a question of very serious concern, it touches the whole conduct of public business, and I prefer to deal with it in the manner prescribed by the rules.

NATIONAL CENTRAL BANK

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH NATIONAL SYSTEM OF BANKING AND CREDIT CONTROL

Mr. G. G. COOTE (MacLeod) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, there should be established in Canada a nationally owned central bank.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the question of establishing a central bank in Canada has been before the country and before this house for the past twelve years. As long ago as 1918 the then president of the Royal Bank was reported as being strongly in favour of the establishment of such a bank. The Canadian Bankers' Association, I believe, have always been opposed to this proposal officially, and have thrown cold water on it, so that it has not made much headway in this house. But I believe there is a large and growing body of opinion in Canada in favour of the establishment of such a bank, and that the present would be a very opportune time to raise the question.

Of late some financial papers have been urging the establishment of a central bank, and some of our eminent economists have also been urging this in leading articles in the press. Both Professor Day of McGill and Professor Curtis of Queen's university have written some very interesting articles dealing with this question, and recently I had the pleasure of reading an article by Miss M. L. Savage, of McGill university, dealing with the question of credit control in Canada, in which she strongly urged the establishment of a central bank. I should like to quote the foreword to this article by Miss Savage. It says:

It is estimated that at least ninety per cent of the business of Canada and the United States is carried on by means of credit and credit instruments. For this reason credit is sometimes described as the life blood sustaining the business body. Decrease its flow through one member and it languishes; divert it and it dies. A good system of creating and distributing credit is therefore of prime importance in the economic development of the country.

The creation, control and distribution of credit are the most important factors in our modern business life, and credit no longer should be left to take care of itself; it should be intelligently and scientifically controlled. The responsibility of providing adequate credit facilities in Canada rests on this parliament. The chartered banks of Canada, which are established under an act of parliament, until 1914 were practically the sole source of credit for business in this country, but in that year the Finance Act made available to the banks the full credit of the country and furnished for the first time in Canada what amounted to a rediscounting agency for our chartered banks.

I should like to quote the words of Sir Thomas White, who introduced the Finance Act of 1914, in a speech in explanation of the reason for the introduction of the measure. This quotation is taken from Hansard of 1924, at page 3936. Sir Thomas said:

We said to the banks: The Dominion government will loan you in dominion notes, which are legal tender, twenty-five, fifty million dollars; we put no limit, if you need it, you probably will not, but if you do, we will loan without limit on securities approved by the minister. You bring in high class securities, or commodity bills, because they represent their full value in goods, and we will lend to you at 5 per cent dominion notes that will make you liquid, and you need not worry about your reserves. There was no more panic after that announcement was made. From that day to this there has been the utmost confidence in the Canadian banking situation, no sign of panic. That gave flexibility to our banking system, made our bankers confident that they could meet any situation that could arise, and, of course, they could give the public very much more extensive credits than they otherwise would have got.

In order to give the house an idea of the extent to which the facilities afforded under this act have been used by the banks, I should like to place on Hansard a statement of the amount of advances under this act to the chartered banks, outstanding on the 30th of November of each year from 1914 to 1930.

If a central bank were established in Canada I presume it would take over many of the duties which are now carried on by the Department of Finance, including the administration of the Finance Act. The bank also could assume the duties now carried on by the trustees of the central gold reserve, and provide a more efficient system of inspection of banks. This bank could act as the fiscal agent of the government and the officials of the bank would be able to advise the government at all times with regard to financial matters. Such a bank would provide us with a national bank note issue and might possibly take charge of the issue of Dominion notes for the government. It would also take over the administration of the post office savings bank. The control of this bank should be vested in a board representative of the various industries in Canada, on which board the government should be represented as well. Such a bank would enable us to mobilize all our credit resources in Canada to a greater extent than has been possible in the past, and should provide intelligent and effective control of credit in the interests of the people of Canada.

The principal business of the central bank, of course, would be to take over the administration of the Finance Act. It is a matter of extreme importance to the people of Canada that rediscounting under this act should be under the most careful and intelligent control, and that any board entrusted with that control should be served by the best experts obtainable. The official attitude of the banks towards this question, I think, always has been that the Finance Act made it unnecessary for us to have a central bank in Canada, but our bankers are overlooking the most essential service which such a central bank could render to this country. In a book published recently, entitled "Central Banks," by Kisch and Elkin, the foreword for which is written by Sir Montagu Norman, the chairman of the Bank of England, who I suppose is regarded as one of the greatest authorities in the world on financial matters, I find these words, at page 149:

> The preservation of stable prices in association with the maintenance of stable foreign exchange is the great service which the world hopes to receive from a sound central banking policy conceived and carried out in concert between the central banks.

I am quite sure that anyone who has examined the workings of the Finance Act since 1914 will agree that in the operation of the act, no effort has been made to secure stability of the price level. How can Canada do her share in achieving this stable price level for the world unless she has a central bank to represent her? In the article by Miss Savage, which I have already mentioned, dealing with the question of credit control and price levels, she points out that such control cannot be exercised without a careful analysis of the price level, and that no attempt is being made to exercise such intelligent control by either the bankers' association or the Department of Finance. She refers to the evidence given before the banking committee in 1924, and I think I cannot do better than quote briefly from that evidence. This will be found in the journals of the House of Commons for 1928, at page 54, and the journals for 1924, at page 296.

Mr. GEARY: Would the hon. member mind telling me to what act he is referring in 1914? Surely he means the Dominion Notes Act and not the Finance Act.

[Mr. Coote.]

Mr. COOTE: No, I mean the Finance Act. The deputy minister was being examined before the committee, and he said:

> Q. Do you have a special knowledge of the problems, for example, of inflation or deflation?—A. I do not consider myself an expert, but I naturally have a little experience and knowledge of it.
> Q. Do you recognize the interest rate, that is, the raising and the lowering of the interest rate, as an effective instrument, not perhaps thorough, but an effective instrument to cause deflation or to assist inflation?—A. Not in that light, no. It has always been considered as meeting the needs of the banks in their commercial business and work outside in the business world.

The assistant deputy Minister of Finance, before the same committee, in 1928, said:

> The Finance Act has been used very little by the banks in the last few years, and any change in rate made by the treasury board I do not think would have any effect on the speculators.

To show how badly mistaken the assistant deputy minister was at that time, may I say that the advances under the Finance Act increased from 1927 to 1928 by practically $50,000,000, and from 1928 to 1929 by another $50,000,000, or an increase of $100,000,000 in those two years.

Mr. BENNETT: What years did the hon. gentleman mention?

Mr. COOTE: From 1927 to 1928 and from 1928 to 1929, taken as of November 30 in each case.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What was it in 1930?

Mr. COOTE: It dropped to $38,700,000. Another of our leading bankers before the committee in 1924 was questioned as follows:

> Q. I understand that you disclaim any power on the part of the bankers' association to control credit in respect to inflation and deflation?—A. That is so.
> Q. Would you say that it is better that we have an uncontrolled credit system?—A. I would say so.

Apparently it is entirely uncontrolled. Then the question was asked:

> Q. Just left anyway it wants to be?—A. The bankers, as bankers, must exercise their intelligence.

The past president of the same association voiced practically the same sentiments in respect to the control of credit, when he appeared before the banking and commerce committee, in 1928.

The question naturally arises whether the bankers are using their intelligence to increase the profits of the shareholders of the banks or whether they are acting in the best interests of the people of Canada. As Miss Savage says:

> They base their contentions on the old Smithsonian argument that the bankers, in acting according to their best interests, are incidentally acting for the best interests of all.

Conditions during the past year, however, seem to disprove this contention. I would think that when the banks were acting according to the interests of their clients they would be incidentally acting in their own best interests. There is always a danger that with such a system as we have in Canada, where a few large banks control most of the banking business, the adoption of an unwise policy by one of these banks might be followed by serious consequences to the whole banking system. It would surely be in the best interests of Canada to establish a central bank which could exercise some measure of control over the policy of banks chartered under authority of this parliament. The situation at present seems to be that the Finance Act is meeting the rediscounting requirements of the chartered banks, but not sufficient consideration is being given to the effect of such rediscounting operations. Miss Savage, in referring to this act, says:

> Its operations in this respect have apparently necessitated the suspension of the gold standard in Canada.

Under such circumstances, it is vitally important that somebody should be responsible for the intelligent application of some recognized policy of general currency control, both in the present emergency, and in case the same situation should recur in the future. The Finance Act completely fails to provide for such control, or even to suggest its desirability. Moreover, all evidence seems to show that nobody in the banking system has, on his own initiative, undertaken to apply any general control policy.

It is quite natural, under these circumstances, that thoughtful people, even though they may have the utmost confidence in the excellent abilities of Canadian bankers themselves, are beginning to realize that there is something lacking in our present banking system.

Another matter which is emphasized by so many economists at the present time is the need of cooperation among the central banks of the world to effect economy in the use of gold. Some of the leading authorities who have made a study of the gold situation agree that estimates of the world's gold production indicate that unless the banking institutions institute economy in the use of gold, there will not be sufficient gold to maintain the present price level.

Mr. Gustave Cassels states that an adequate restriction of the demand of the central banks for gold reserves is a very important part of the policy which must be pursued if stable monetary conditions are to be restored to the world. He says:

> If for the future gold is to attain any stability of value, it is absolutely essential that the central banks should cooperate with one another in suitably limiting the demands for gold reserve.

To those who are interested in this matter I would suggest that they read the interim report of the gold delegation of the League of Nations issued at Geneva in 1930. This committee of the league seem to be quite positive that we may anticipate a reduction in the world's output of gold to take place in the near future.

I do not intend to deal with the question of whether or not Canada should adhere to the gold standard. Whether we do or not, I believe it would be to our advantage in either case to have a central bank in Canada. If we are to remain on the gold standard, we should have a central bank to take care of all our gold holdings and, particularly, to represent Canada at any meeting of the central banks of the world which may be held to endeavour to arrange a common policy in economizing on the use of gold, and to endeavour to arrange for the free movement of gold.

If time permitted I would like to quote from Professor Curtis, who points out the desirability of a stable price level. He expresses the opinion that some control over the price level might be effected through intelligent operation of the Finance Act, and recommends that a central bank should be established to handle the rediscounting which is now done by the Finance Act.

In referring to the operation of this act during the period of inflation in Canada, the peak of which was reached in 1929, Professor Curtis says:

> Such a condition was precisely what developed in 1929, with the result that Canada extra-legally, but effectively abandoned the gold standard.

After referring to the fact that apparently no attempt had been made to prevent the inflation, he says:

> Another less drastic means of control would have been to increase the rate charged on advances.

Then he goes on to deal with the large increase in loans which took place in Canada in the years following 1926. There is a chart in connection with this article, giving current loans in Canada and call loans in Canada and elsewhere. Professor Curtis proceeds:

An examination of this chart shows that until the end of 1923 there was a great increase in all of these and then a very sharp reduction. Current loans in Canada were well below the billion dollar mark in 1925, and these increased to a maximum of $1,473,000,000 in 1929. Call loans in Canada, which in 1925 were running around the $100,000,000 mark, increased to $280,000,000 in 1929. Call loans elsewhere than in Canada, which in 1925 and 1924 were below the $200,000,000 mark, increased to $330,000,000.

From this it can be seen that there was a large absolute growth in all classes, with a tremendous percentage growth. There can be little doubt that this extension was brought about by reserves, and it caused a substantial price inflation in Canada and a virtual abandonment of the gold standard. In Canada the maximum rediscountings were ten times that of the Canadian borrowings, which seems to be out of proportion. Clearly some restriction upon the obtaining of reserves is very much needed in Canada.

I anticipate it will be said that I am taking up the time of this house to discuss a purely academic question when I am dealing at such length with the question of price levels and the stability of price levels. Anticipating such criticism, I should like to quote Sir Josiah Stamp, as reported in Commerce of the Nation, February 1931:

A stable price level is the most bitterly practical of all questions.

I could not get anything more practical than that. And Owen D. Young, a prominent financier of the United States says:

Price stability is one of the most important factors facing the capitalistic system.

The Right Hon. Reginald McKenna, former Chancellor of the Exchequer and chairman of the Midland Bank Limited of London, has this to say:

A stable price level is a thing to be desired second only to international and domestic peace.

I do not need further to emphasize the importance of this question. Now I should like to quote a Canadian banker, and I am glad to be able to offer the testimony of Mr. C. E. Neill, vice president and managing director of the Royal Bank of Canada. Here I wish to compliment Mr. Neill on the speech which he delivered at the last annual meeting of the Royal Bank of Canada in Montreal. It was certainly a very great improvement upon the speeches generally heard at annual meetings of Canadian banks. At this meeting Mr. Neill said:

If on the collapse of the stock market boom the principal central banks of the world had decided that drastic contraction of currency and credit was not to be permitted, a drastic fall in the price level could not have occurred.

What has caused all this trouble through which we are now passing but a drastic fall in the price level? He goes on:

[Mr. Coote.]

Thus the countries with fiat currencies, such as Argentina, Uruguay and Spain are not suffering anything like as acutely as the gold countries.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Page the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. COOTE: The quotation continues:

If the central banks of all the countries on a gold basis should deliberately adopt a common policy they could within a certain time lag, raise or lower the price level almost at will. Without a common policy, movements of gold would in due course arrest action of one country not in harmony with the policies of others, although the United States, with a huge stock of gold, could probably afford to loose a quantity which no country or group of countries would be willing to receive. On the other hand, she has during the period of 1921-25 received gold on an unprecedented scale without allowing such receipts to creat inflation.

For the future it is absolutely essential that means should be devised to prevent the drastic changes in the price level which have been characteristic of the period since the close of the war. Such changes in their effect are not much less damaging to civilization than those produced by war.

I do not think a stronger statement could be made to this house than that as to the necessity of preventing these drastic changes. The quotation continues:

To change the present situation permanently it may be necessary to revise the charters of all the principal central banks and to come to some clear understanding regarding cooperation. The object to be attained is quite clear—

I want to emphasize these words—

—namely, stability. The artificial exhilaration of inflation, and the agony of deflation must be avoided at all costs. If we go on as we are at present, prospects over a long period point to further reductions in the price level, depressions and unemployment, such as were characteristic of the period of 1870-1896, but accentuated in the proportion that volume and tempo of business has increased.

That is not a very pleasant prospect, but Mr. Neill suggests a way out through cooperation among the central banks of the world. The quotation continues:

I am well aware that the question of central bank policy and its influence on prices is a much debated one; even in recent times, for example, many bankers in the United States have expressed the opinion that the federal reserve system exercises no dominant influence in the price field. Followed to their logical conclusion on a world-wide basis, these opinions indicate a belief that the stability of the world's medium of exchange is practically at the mercy of the elements; that man is incapable of controlling an instrument of his own devising; and that the instability which for generations has caused untold losses to business and suffering to workers must continue to exert its evil influence as chance dictates. I cannot subscribe to any such views. The situation can be remedied. It must be remedied.

The wisdom of that view must commend itself to all who have given earnest thought to this question. I agree absolutely with Mr. Neill that the situation must be remedied. I believe Mr. Neill would favour the establishment of such a bank, and how else can Canada cooperate in this movement which he suggests unless through such a bank? There is a disposition on the part of many hon. members of this house, and perhaps the majority, to say that the present depression is due to world-wide conditions over which we have no control and, therefore, we must wait until they improve. It seems to me it would be only common sense for us to say that we will do our part to restore these conditions to their former state, and how else and in what better way can we do that than by the establishment of a central bank in Canada to cooperate with the central banks throughout the world in an endeavour to bring about a remedy for the situation? Canada is almost the only country in the world without a central bank. I have not a complete list, but the following will give an idea of those countries which have central banks:

Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Chile, Columbia, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, England, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Lithuania, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Russia, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United States.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the Bank of England be regarded as a central reserve bank?

Mr. COOTE: It is generally regarded as such, and I am treating it in that way; the book from which I took this list treats it in that manner. It is well known that many New York bankers refer to Canada as the thirteenth federal reserve district, and I think there is more truth than poetry in that statement. That does not help us to carry out the policy of Canada first about which our Prime Minister is so enthusiastic at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not catch my hon. friend's last sentence; what is it I am enthusiastic about?

Mr. COOTE: The Canada first policy.

Mr. BENNETT: And I will continue to be.

Mr. COOTE: I hope the Prime Minister will continue to be enthusiastic, but I think if he would establish a central bank in Canada he would be helping to further that object. Anyone who has made a study of the administration of the Finance Act must realize that the present method of control is not very satisfactory. There seems to be no intelligent control over the granting of advances or consideration of the effect which such advances may have upon the general business situation, particularly with regard to price levels.

Mr. BENNETT: It is no use for the hon. gentleman to say that a central reserve bank would be better than something else unless he shows wherein it would be better. I should like to know just wherein a central reserve bank would at this time better serve our conditions than the present Finance Act

Mr. COOTE: I will endeavour to do that in just a moment.

Mr. CHAPLIN: My hon. friend asks the government to establish such a bank; will he tell us how to do so?

Mr. COOTE: I do not know whether my time will permit my dealing with that question, but I will do the best I can. I doubt very much if any attempt is made by those administering the act to ascertain for what purpose the money is loaned and for what purpose it is to be used.

Mr. BENNETT: That is always covered by the character of the security given to obtain the advance.

Mr. COOTE: I would draw the attention of the house to section 6 of the act:

Such securities shall be desposited with the minister or with an assistant receiver general; and the minister may request the trustees of the central gold reserves to make a valuation of and recommendation as to the amount which in the judgment of the trustees may properly be advanced on any securities offered in pledge under this part.

Some time ago I was advised that these trustees were the Bank of Montreal, the Royal Bank of Canada, the Canadian Bank of Commerce and the Royal Trust Company, the latter being a subsidiary of the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. BENNETT: No, not a subsidiary.

Mr. COOTE: These banks are the heaviest borrowers under the act, and it was a very frank admission by the minister at the time this act was passed that no proper machinery was available for the handling of the administration of the Finance Act; there was no one in the department qualified to place a valuation on the securities which were brought to them and for that reason this section was placed in the act whereby the trustees of the central gold reserve would give this advice. The treasury board is charged with the administration of this act, and the secretary of the treasury board is the real administrative head. If I am wrong in that statement I have no doubt the minister will correct me.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is his name?

Mr. COOTE: The treasury board is composed of cabinet ministers, who I presume do not claim to be banking experts—as a matter of fact I have heard some of them admit that they were not experts.

Mr. BENNETT: May I tell my hon. friend how this is done in practice. Suppose a bank desires an advance of a million dollars. It lodges with the receiver general's office a million dollars' worth of security and receives a like advance in Montreal or Toronto. As a matter of fact this act has been little used during the past year, but occasionally banks require a million dollars or so, sometimes five millions, and they take the very securities which I urged this country to issue, namely, four per cent treasury bills, and deposit them with the receiver general, whereupon, as I have said, they get a corresponding advance of legal tender to enable them to carry on, and upon which they pay interest. What more than that could a central reserve bank do?

Mr. COOTE: According to the records of the committee the former deputy minister admitted that he did not know very much about this matter. For many years we have been without a deputy minister.

Mr. BENNETT: No, we have not.

Mr. COOTE: The former assistant deputy minister is serving a term in the penitentiary for defalcations from the department. The present method of administering the act is certainly not very satisfactory. No bank would think of running its affairs in the manner in which we administer the Finance Act.

Mr. BENNETT: I take strong exception to that statement. I think my hon. friend cannot know how the act is administered. It is done with great precision and the utmost care. If my hon. friend will come with me to-morrow morning, I shall take him to the Finance department and show him how an advance, if one is made,—I do not know if one will be—is made of half a million or a million dollars. The banks as yet are borrowing very little under the act.

Mr. COOTE: I quite realize they are borrowing very little under the act, but possibly in 1928 and 1929 they borrowed too much under the act.

Mr. BENNETT: How much did they borrow?

[Mr. Coote.]

Mr. COOTE: The borrowings amounted to $66,000,000, in November, 1928, and $112,000,000 at the end of November, 1929. I do not know whether that is the greatest amount advanced or not. My idea is that if we had a central bank established in Canada, that bank would be staffed with a few experts just as capable as the experts now in the employ of the chartered banks of Canada. One man said to me: When the banks come to the Department of Finance for a loan under the Finance Act, the department has no experts to advise as to whether the loan should be made or not. I suggest they always have the experts of the banks to advise them. It is clear that is the intention under the Finance Act, namely, that the trustees of the central gold reserve shall advise the Department of Finance at least in regard to the value of a certain class of securities. The act is administered something like a machine. The banks, if they want advances, bring bonds or securities to the department and they receive the advances. I doubt whether in 1928 and 1929 sufficient thought was given to the propriety of making those advances to the banks. I do not wish in any way to be regarded as criticising the banks in Canada generally. I do not know the individual borrowings of the different banks. I know one bank never made use of the Finance Act at all until 1926. Some banks have made more use of it than others. I am not blaming the banks at all. If there is any blame in this connection—and possibly there is none—it would lie with the treasury board. Again I say that the treasury board is not composed of banking experts. The present Minister of Finance (Mr. Bennett), of course, has the advantage over some of his predecessors, in that he knows something more about banking.

Mr. BENNETT: May I interrupt my hon. friend? I do not want to curtail his time, but the question he has just asked is a very important one, that is, as to whether or not an inquiry is made as to the use to which the advance is to be put. Is it suggested that under the Central Reserve Act of the United States, if a member bank deposits securities, there is a discretion on the part of the reserve bank to decline to make the advance?

Mr. COOTE: I think there is. It is quite clear there is.

Mr. BENNETT: It is never used.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It certainly should be.

Mr. BENNETT: Why?

Mr. COOTE: The evidence given by John Skelton Williams, a former comptroller of the treasury in the United States, I think in 1923 or 1924, made that very clear.

Mr. BENNETT: That the reason there are so many failures in the United States is because of that discretion?

Mr. COOTE: Bank failures in the United States are due to the business depression through which they are passing in that country. I was interrupted before I got through completing by last point.

Mr. BENNETT: I trust my hon. friend will accept my apology for interrupting him. I had no intention of reducing his time.

Mr. COOTE: Certainly I shall. As far as we can study the operation of that act superficially from the outside, I think the banks come for the advances when they want them. Of course if they do not want them, they do not come. No thought has been given to this aspect of the case: Will the granting of this advance affect the amount of credit outstanding in Canada to the extent of causing an inflation of prices? Will it make possible too much speculation on the stock exhange? I am not giving my own opinion when I say this, but I have been told it by men who, I think, know more about the case than I do, that the stock speculation which took place in Canada in 1928 and 1929 would not have been possible to such an extent if we had not had these borrowings under the Finance Act.

No doubt someone will oppose my proposal because of the cost. Of course it will cost the government of the country something to start a central bank; but it certainly would be money well spent. I think the money which it would cost the government to run this institution would be easily saved if the bank acted as the fiscal agent of the government. Over a billion dollars of our bonded debt matures in the next five years. The refunding of these loans could be handled by this central bank, if it is established, and there is no doubt in my mind that a considerable saving could be effected if this were done. During the last seven or eight years, no attempt was made by the government to place their bonds in the hands of the small investors of Canada as was done during the war. That is very much to be regretted, and if an effort had been made to place these bonds in the hands of small investors, possibly these people would not have been so apt to speculate with their money.

The average annual income from the Finance Act since its inception has been approximately $1,300,000, and in one year it reached the figure of $3,500,000. It appears to me that the advantages to be gained from the establishment of such a bank far outweigh the comparatively small cost involved. We know that in some other countries the central banks have made very handsome profits. I have not time to give the house an idea of what they are except to state the total earnings of the federal reserve banks in the United States in the year 1927, the last year for which I could find a report of the Federal Reserve board. The total net earnings of all federal reserve banks in 1927 amounted to $593,000,000, divided, in round figures, as follows:

New York	197,000,000
Philadelphia	52,000,000
Cleveland	58,000,000
Richmond	23,000,000
Atlanta	22,000,000
Chicago	77,000,000
St. Louis	22,000,000
Minneapolis	12,000,000
Kansas City	21,000,000
Dallas	17,000,000
San Francisco	47,000,000

The earnings of the Minneapolis reserve bank amount to $12,000,000, the smallest in the list. I would not suggest that our earnings would in any way compare with those of the federal reserve banks in the United States, but certainly in the earnings of the Minneapolis reserve bank, there is an indication that a reserve bank in Canada would pay very handsome profits. That is one reason why I would urge that, if such a bank is established, it should be owned by and operated for the benefit of the people of Canada, so that the profits might return to the people who really created them.

I should like to refer to the Bank of International Settlements which was established primarily to facilitate the payment of reparations. I think it is likely to become a clearing house for the whole world. I understand provision is made for a board of governors tc be selected from representatives of central banks of all countries. Canada should have a central bank so that she may be represented at the time when these governors are being selected. It has recently been announced that the British government has been able, because of an arrangement with this bank, to withdraw from New York $100,000,000 in gold which it had been holding in that city. To secure some voice in the affairs of this international bank would be an additional reason for the establishment of a central bank in Canada.

May I quote again just a paragraph from this book on Central Banks, by Kisch and Elkin? They say:

> The contribution that a sound policy on the part of central banks, cooperating all the world over, can make towards creating and maintaining stable conditions for industry and employment is immense. This power is perhaps second only to that of government in the broadest sense, which according as it is directed, wisely or not, affects for good or ill the destiny of whole communities.

In conclusion, I would urge that we immediately set about the task of establishing a central bank here and place Canada in the position where she can do her part towards creating and maintaining stable conditions for industry and employment, the need for which is so apparent to-day.

Mr. GEARY: I would like my hon. friend to clear my mind on one or two points. First, is it the plan that the rediscounting operations to be carried on by the central bank would not be dependent in any way on the maintenance of enough gold to give the required credit against the issue of new Dominion notes?

Mr. COOTE: That would be a matter of policy. At the present time I am not suggesting any change except that advances under the Finance Act should be administered by a central bank rather than by officials of the civil service as is done at the present time.

Mr. GEARY: My hon. friend's point is that instead of a board, as we have at the present time, there should be a bank. The bank would perform the same function the board is now performing?

Mr. COOTE: Yes, of course it would have other functions as well. In regard to the Finance Act however, that is correct.

Mr. HACKETT: Would the hon. gentleman define the word "subsidiary." He has used that word, stating that the trust companies are subsidiaries of the banks. I was not aware of any provision in the Bank Act that provided for subsidiaries of that character?

Mr. COOTE: I simply said that I understood this trust company was a subsidiary of one of the banks. I think the trust company really is owned by the bank; at least certainly it is controlled by it.

Mr. LAWSON: My interest in the subject matter under discussion prompts me to ask for some information which undoubtedly my hon. friend has. In view of the fact that an 8 per cent rediscount rate with the federal reserve bank in the United States, resulting in a call loan rate of at least 4 per cent in excess of that amount, at times did not restrain the orgy of speculation in the United States, on what ground does the hon. gentleman urge that the control of the rediscount rate by a central bank in Canada would in the year 1929 have had that effect?

Mr. COOTE: I think Mr. Neill's statement would almost answer the question by my hon. friend. It was quite within the power of the treasury board to have refused at any time to give advances. Whether by making these loans they were making it possible for speculation to continue and to increase would be a matter for them to determine.

Mr. LAWSON: Then, the hon. member is advocating a control of credit by the present treasury board and not the establishment of a central finance bank for that purpose.

Mr. COOTE: I am advocating the establishment of a bank to do that very thing.

Mr. HACKETT: Does the hon. gentleman think—

Mr. SPEAKER: I must remind the house that we are not in committee, and that hon. members are confined to one speech each on the subject before the house. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GEARY: The question was not put; am I in order?

An hon. MEMBER: With the indulgence of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has already spoken on the subject.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): With unanimous consent I think the hon. member might speak.

Mr. GEARY: I did ask a question, but it has been the practice of the house to allow questions during a speech. I do not think a question should be construed as a speech.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Unanimous consent.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not rule the hon. member for South Toronto out of order.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): I may be to some extent trespassing on the good nature of my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote). I really would have liked to ask him further questions, because I seek information; I do not propose to give it. While my hon. friend quotes from Mr. Neill, with whose speech I am quite familiar, he does not draw from Mr. Neill's speech anything indicative of his opinion that the Dominion of Canada should establish a central reserve bank. Mr. Neill has made the statement that all central banks in combination might have some influence, that they might even have an absolute influence on price levels throughout the world. There is nothing incompatible however in that declaration with the situation we have at the present time. In effect we have a central bank for all purposes. The treasury board in the Dominion of Canada is in effect a central bank. My hon. friend now seeks to substitute for that treasury board a central bank operated along certain principles which he thinks are not the principles in use by the treasury board and armed with certain powers which he thinks are not the powers of that board. I take issue with my hon. friend because the federal treasury board has as much power as that with which my hon. friend would like to endow the proposed central banks. The only question is: How are those powers being used? I think my hon. friend will agree with me that despite his objection to the gold standard being used in Canada, the fact remains that during the years with which he has dealt we were not under a gold standard at all. As a matter of fact we were nominally under such a standard, but in 1929, according to the London Times, Canada was struck from the list of countries holding to the gold standard. Under the pressure of the war in 1914, the Finance Act was passed, and the passing of that act allowed certain operations which became known as rediscounting. That is, instead of adhering to a gold reserve for the issue of notes we established a procedure by which advances could be made to the banks not on the deposit of gold but on the deposit of securities with the Treasury Board of the Dominion. In the year 1923, those temporary provisions made for the first time in 1914 at the time of the war were to some extent built into our financial structure. They have been acted upon ever since. Since that time rediscounting has been done by the treasury board to the extent indicated by my hon. friend. Are we to establish an institution called the central bank to perform the same functions as those now performed by the treasury board but which is directed to make advances in such fashion or with such care as to ensure the amount of credit so advanced being used in a particular way? I think probably that is the object my hon. friend has in mind. Over and above all other considerations he would like a credit so created by a deposit of other securities with the central banks to be admitted in certain defined channels, and in no other way. If my hon. friend seeks to that extent to guide the credit used by banks I think he is embarking on a rather perilous journey. I hope this matter receives the careful consideration of not only my hon. friend but of other hon. members in the house or in committee before we attempt to consider what might be done through the creation of a central bank.

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask a question?

Mr. GEARY: Yes, but it will probably be a hard one.

Mr. IRVINE: Does my hon. friend think there is a relation between the volume of credit in circulation at any time and the price level at such time?

Mr. GEARY: No.

Mr. IRVINE: There is no relation?

Mr. GEARY: No.

Mr. IRVINE: Well then, there is no need of a bank of this kind?

Mr. GEARY: I would not want to go so far as to throw my case away by answering my hon. friend without very careful consideration. My remarks should not be dignified by the term "argument." It was called to the attention of hon. members that we could not continue asking more questions because we were not in committee. So in this cursory manner I have spoken shortly to the house on some of the points which arose in my mind while listening to my hon. friend. It does not seem to me that we should think of boldly passing a resolution which might involve us in the actual creation of a central bank without being able to see the path which would lie before us after the establishment of such a bank. I should be very much pleased if some opportunity were given to increase my store of knowledge from that possessed by my hon. friend and others who have given this subject careful study. It seems to me that having introduced this motion he has done that which at the outset should be done, called attention to what in his mind is a great need, and that he would agree that it might be discussed in some other place at some other time. But that of course is at his option.

Hon. J. D. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, during the course of the address by the member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) I asked him a question as to how he proposed to have this central bank established. I took it from his speech that he expected the government of Canada would go into the banking business. I can say right off as my own opinion that I do not want to see the government of Canada go into the banking business any further than it is in it at present.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is in it now.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is in it now quite enough. I do not want any manager of a government bank to decide who is going to be its creditor. I do not think that is a good thing for us to have in this country. I am opposed to the government going any further into the banking business. Who is going to run such a bank? Who is going to be the manager? Who are going to be the officials? Are the appointments to be political? What else can they be? If, on the other hand, the capital is to come from the general public, then I ask: How long is it going to be before the bankers' association or some of its members control this bank? Why, then, the need of it as far as Canada is concerned? I must confess that I have not given the matter a great deal of study, but I am judging it more from what I heard the hon. member say than anything else. Certainly he has given us no clear idea of how the bank itself is to be established; and that I think is the main and the practical thing in connection with the matter.

There is another point. Who is to control the policy of the bank? I asked a minute ago who was to control the giving of credit by a government bank as applied to Canada with the other banks in competition. I assume from what the member for Macleod said that the issue of all paper money would be in the hands of this bank. What effect would that have upon the other banks? Would it tend to make a lower rate of interest, or a lower rate of discount to people who would be borrowers of money? I do not know. I am inclined to think that it would not, but that it would add to the general expenses of the banks at present without doing any good whatever to anyone.

Mr. R. C. MATTHEWS (Toronto East Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the address of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote). At one stage of it I was about to ask him a question, but I decided to abstain because he had already been interrupted, and I did not wish to make any further encroachment upon his time. When he was speaking of the examination of securities offered by banks for rediscount, he made a statement to the effect that in Canada in the Finance department there appeared to be no one who was competent to pass upon the value of the securities offered, and the inference to be drawn was that in a country with a central bank that difficulty would not arise. One would naturally conclude that in the United States, for example, where they have experts in charge of the central banking system, that difficulty would not arise. While the hon. member was speaking I happened to be reading an article in The Banker on American banking during 1930. The following paragraph is on the very point that he was dealing with, and that is why I was about to interject a question:

> In practice, many of the reserve banks have paid little attention to this question of liquidity,—

That is of the securities offered to obtain loans.

> —and have devoted themselves entirely to the getting of collateral security to protect the paper they discounted. Indeed, they might as well have made direct loans to the member banks on the notes of the latter supported by collateral, and without any inquiry into the use to be made of the funds by the banks which received them.

That was the very question that the hon. gentleman was discussing. He said that probably the Finance department in Canada made no inquiries as to the use to be made of the funds by the banks that received them. This article says that the United States member banks are open to that very charge. Let me continue the quotation:

> As a consequence, the various banks have gone on doing practically as they pleased, with the result that at the opening of the panic they were, perhaps, in an unprecedently "frozen" condition. Thus a situation had arisen which cannot be regarded as other than most regrettable from the standpoint of the central banking system of the country.

It is just on that one point that I have risen to take part in this debate. Without knowing much about it, I would venture to say that the loans made by the Finance department of Canada to the chartered banks would compare favourably, from the standards of security and liquidity, with the loans made by the central reserve system in the United States.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make any extended observations this afternoon on this question, except to say that I trust the hon. member who has introduced the motion (Mr. Coote) will regard the discussion which has taken place as sufficient for his purposes, for it is a matter that necessarily engages the attention of all governments—governments that are anxious to provide facilities of the very best that it is possible for a country to provide for its citizens.

We have a banking system in this country of which I think we may be fairly proud. That banking system is predicated upon the assumption that the amount of money borrowed from the people—who are the depositors—by the banks will enable the banks to so use it as to have it safe for the depositors when they require it and furnish a maximum of service to the people who are served by the banks. Can anyone say that in a broad and general way that is not the Canadian experience? I think not. In other words, the chartered banks of Canada, deriving their corporate existence from this parliament, and exercising the functions conferred upon them by law, are borrowing money day by day from those who deposit their money with them at their several branches, and that money is in turn being loaned to those who are able to satisfy the banks that there is a likelihood of their paying the money they borrow back to the banks that lend it. I need hardly point out that sometimes there has been a tendency to induce people to believe that banks should lend money regardless of security. How can banks lend money without regard for security if what they lend is only what they borrow?—for the capital of the banks is utilized almost entirely in the legal tenders which they acquire under the statutes and in bank premises. It therefore follows that if Canadian banks were to lend money under such circumstances as would place the loan in jeopardy, or under such conditions as would ensure that the loan would not be repaid, the credit would be frozen and the bank would not be able to meet the demands of its depositors and would fail.

That is what has happened in the United States. That is what happened in the instance to which the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) has just directed attention. Do we want that condition in this country, or do we not? That is the real question at the very threshold of any inquiry we may make, and all this complicated discussion which sometimes takes place with respect to banks and their place in the community in my judgment must always resolve itself in the end into this simple, single inquiry: Has the bank, through its management, had due regard in lending money to the fact that it may be called upon to repay that money to the source from which it was borrowed?

That is the problem, Mr. Speaker, and the whole science of banking is the maintenance of an equilibrium between time deposits and time loans on the one hand and demand loans and demand deposits on the other, and if for a single moment you disturb that equilibrium to the point that you over-loan on the demand side, it is obvious that you cannot meet the demands of the depositors. It is equally obvious that if you make loans for longer periods of time than the life of the deposits you will find yourself in a similar position. Our banking system has defects; no one will deny that. If you are hypercritical you may be able to say that our system has not done all that we would like it to do, yet our system of branch banks, with the mobility that is possible in the movement of credit from one portion of the country to the other, makes possible loans being made on a large scale by a branch with very indifferent deposits, insured by the easy mobility of credits from a point where there may be an excess of deposits and very limited loans to the point where there is a demand for loans with limited deposits. That is the strength of our branch bank system.

I need hardly point out that during recent years a strong agitation was carried on in the United States for the establishment of a central reserve or federal reserve bank. The result was that, under conditions which need not be referred to now, a very distinguished financier in the senate of the United States evolved the plan which has taken concrete form in what is known as the federal reserve banks of the United States. Mr. Harding, who came here at the instance I think of the hon. member for Macleod, pointed out that he did not believe a regional system of reserve banks could be made serviceable to the community in Canada. I suppose perhaps it is for that reason, among others, that the hon. gentleman's resolution provides for a nationally owned central bank for Canada. That looks like one bank. I will not further discuss the branch bank system, except to say that in the United States there is now a growing tendency to have branch banks established; I will do no more than say that in Great Britain, where they have a great concentration of banking power in joint stock banks, which in turn carry on rediscount operations to some extent either through sales to bill brokers on the street or through the bank of England, they have a very large number of branch banks, more numerous even than they are in Canada. The branch bank system, which has worked so well there and, I submit, so well in Canada, from what I have read and from my own view of the situation will I believe be extended in the United States beyond the extent which it now reaches. But in that regard I think it is well to point out that in the year 1930 no less than 1,345 banks suspended payment in the United States of America, and that during the month of January of this year 197 banks suspended. During the year 1929 there were 642 banks suspended.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Suspended by whom?

Mr. BENNETT: Suspended payment; that is, they were unable to meet the demands made upon them by their depositors because of the fact that they had loaned money without having due regard to the relationship between time deposits and time loans and demand loans and demand deposits. During the nine-year period which elapsed between 1921 and 1930 inclusive, a total of 5,642 banks suspended payment in the United States, involving deposits amounting to more than $1,700,000,000.

The history of this country, as compared with that of the United States, I submit has been singularly fortunate, and I can only refer hon. gentlemen who are so doubtful as to the steps we have taken to provide for the contingencies which have been mentioned to a book written by the assistant professor of banking at Columbia university, Professor B. H. Beckhart, in collaboration with Mr. Parker Willis, entitled "Foreign Banking Systems." That book contains these words:

> While we know little regarding the policies of the Canadian banks and the methods they employ in exercising credit control, in the sense of lending stability to business, we do know that they support the business man in periods of recession, which, according to Walter Bagehot, is the correct method of crisis financing. We do know that to do this the banks call home their foreign loans and deposits and put pressure, if need be, on the large business man. We do know that the chartered banks have a more or less mechanistic concept of the proportion of cash they ought to maintain to liabilities and that this acts as a check on over-expansion as effectively as would legal minimum cash reserves. Then we know that each bank follows the balance sheets of the others and so develops what might be termed a "balance sheet" concept of credit control. Then at times it seems apparent that the government and the banks have reached a common understanding on loans and investments as during the war period. However, all things considered, we know little compared with our knowledge of the policies followed by the federal reserve banks. But we do know that Canada, whether because or in spite of the stabilizing influence of her banking system, has had more years of prosperity per years of depression than any other nation.

[Mr. Bennett.]

That is the considered judgment of two gentlemen writing an authoritative book upon foreign banking systems. I commend that conclusion to the judgment of the house. But, of course, human plans are imperfect, and the establishment of the credit of a people is something more than the mere putting of money into a bank, the withdrawing of it by cheque and the lending of it in the meantime to someone whom you feel certain will return it. I have always thought the sentence uttered by President Hoover not long ago was one which might be well remembered. He said:

> It is not possible for the debtor to borrow himself out of debt.

Could a more pregnant sentence be uttered? We have always had in mind in this country the necessity of making provision for expanding credit. How have we done it? We have established the principle of a central gold reserve, a central reserve bank. We have placed the Finance Act upon the statute books. And what are the essential provisions of that act? We have provided by that act that the banks of this country that are compelled to provide for the demands of their depositors, and have therefore invested your deposit and mine in sound securities by lending it to their customers, or purchasing bonds, may be able to come to the Finance department and, by depositing those securities, obtain an advance from the Dominion of Canada of its notes, its national notes, its promises to pay—what we call legal tenders. With what result? Let me give an illustration that must suggest itself to most hon. members. A few years ago the Minister of Finance of the day required $45,000,000 with which to meet an obligation of Canada. He did not desire at that moment to make an issue on securities. What he did was to borrow from the banks of this country at 4 per cent and give them the promises of this Dominion to repay in five years. When the banks required additional credit for their customers they deposited those treasury bills at the receiver general's office in any one of the provinces of this Dominion and at once had released to them credit dollar for dollar with the deposit so made. Could anything be more elastic? Could anything better serve the purpose of the customers of the institutions that have credit to grant. During the days when the grain was moving and large credits were required, the banks continuously expanded their credit facilities by just such operations as I have referred to.

My hon. friend from Macleod thinks that the Department of Finance has not a proper appreciation of how to conduct business. Well, all I can say is this: that while during the last few months the requirements under the Finance Act by the banks have been very limited. there was a time, within the last ten days, when one of the banks of this country required $5,000,000. It merely went to the receiver general's office in Montreal and deposited $5,000,000 of these treasury bills, which it had bought with depositors' money, and obtained release of $5,000,000 of credit of the legal tenders of this country. What could a central reserve bank do more than that? Could it do it as effectively? Could it do it more rapidly, with more expedition, with more certainty, or with greater service to the country as a whole?

Now let us go a step further, because it will be observed that in that case neither the country nor the bank took any risk. The bank had invested depositors' money in the promise to pay of the Dominion of Canada—the collective credit of this country. And that collective credit in the hands of the bank was released the moment it was required, by the deposit of these securities with the receiver general as a pledge against the release of $5,000,000 of legal tender with which the bank could then expand its credit.

My hon. friend refers to the extent to which this power may be used. Every year the Department of Finance determines the extent to which advances will be made to the chartered banks of this country under the provisions of the act. There is a fixed regulation indicating the extent to which advances will be made on given kinds of security. It is 100 per cent on the treasury bills of this country; it is 90 per cent on Canadian guaranteed securities; it is only 65 per cent on other forms of security about which no question may arise; it is a 20 per cent margin on some forms of industrial bonds. But the regulations—I will not go through them this afternoon—are clear-cut and exact. They provide, for instance, that bills with respect to grain or meat or agricultural products may be rediscounted at that central reserve institution under the Finance Act for the purpose of ensuring a continuous flow of credit at the time it is most required. Thus it is that at the beginning of this year the banks of this country were entitled, if they so desired, upon the determination of those responsible for the conduct of treasury affairs, to $200,000,000 of credit. That is to say, if the various chartered banks of this country had so desired, and had lodged proper securities, the Department of Finance had fixed maxima to which it was considered the banks were justly entitled—in the case of the largest, $40,000,000, and in the case of the smallest, $700,000, that bank having since been absorbed by another.

So that you had available, through the operations of the Finance Act and through the Department of Finance, over $200,000,000 of credit if it was required. But what is the extent to which it has been used? My hon. friend gave the figures for a number of years. I will supplement them, giving round figures in every case. They are:

1919	112,000,000
1920	123,000,000
1921	108,000,000
1922	60,000,000
1923	40,000,000
1924	37,000,000
1925	30,000,000
1926	28,000,000
1927	32,000,000
1928	73,000,000
1929	112,000,000
1930	56,000,000

And in 1931 the maximum to date is something less than $15,000,000—$12,500,000, I believe.

An hon. MEMBER: Are those the peak figures for each year?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; those are peak figures. Now, why was the peak figure $112,000,000 in 1929? Because western Canada required additional credit and it was there for the asking. There was a large grain crop, demanding additional credit. The tying-up of the movement of grain necessitated that additional credit and it was available under the act to enable the banks to meet the requirements of their customers. The very purpose which my hon. friend from Macleod desires to serve was served by the banks through the operation of that statute. They borrowed this huge sum of $112,000,000, putting up security—not makeshift security but substantial security which the department itself had fixed and determined should be adequate for the purposes intended. Those securities are either, on the one hand, the securities of the country or, on the other hand, first class securities which the bank itself acquired.

You have, therefore, a continuous revolving credit. Look at the operation: acquirement of securities by the bank; deposit of securities with the Finance department; release of credit for an amount varying from 100 per cent down to 65 per cent of the value of the securities deposited. What could be more complete? It may well be that the time will come in this country when it is deemed desirable to expand our present system. I am not saying it will not. I am one of those who believe that you cannot to-day, with respect to financial operations, say with certainty what it may be desirable to do to-morrow—using the word to-morrow, not in its literal sense but in relation to time as we employ the term in financial operations. It may well be that a change may be desirable, but at the moment nothing that has been said this afternoon indicates anything which would warrant a change—not a word. My hon. friend has said: so-and-so is not good; but that is not enough—he must have more than that before attacking an existing system by saying it is bad. In a court of law it would be necessary to give particulars but not one has been given. It is all right to repeat what somebody has written or said, but this system should be tried in the light of known facts and of our own experience and not by the glittering generalities and theories of others. I am talking of the use made by the chartered banks of Canada of the deposits of the people and the service rendered by their use in obtaining credit through the Finance Act.

The hon. member for Macleod was at one time associated with a bank and I wonder if he will say that the system which prevails in England could be applied to this country. How are money and credit obtained in that country? I will give the house an illustration taken from my own experience. I drew a bill for £100,000. I will say that it was drawn upon the Bank of British North America, which is now out of business. That bill was drawn payable either to myself or to someone else and the bill went to London and was accepted by the Bank of British North America, that bank having its home office in London. That bank, whose credit was high, accepted the bill and the bill brokers sold it—the prices prevailing are known from day to day—but when it was sold to a joint stock bank, for example, what did it do with the bill? The bill having been sold, it was taken to the Bank of England and rediscounted so as to release a certain amount of credit. When the war broke out there was one well-known acceptance firm that had £70,000,000 worth of acceptances on the market. That is the way business was carried on. For a long time one of the greatest institutions in the United States carried on its business so far as credit was concerned by drawing bills upon the greatest private bill banking firm in London—I will not give the name of that firm because they are still doing business—the bills were sold and the money came back to the United States, and they were enabled to carry on their operations in that way. Look at what we have here and compare our method with that system. Let us compare the two methods. I am trying to induce my fellow Canadians to understand that we are not in any sense backward in this matter. This is not an archaic sort of system which has been evolved, it is modern and up to date. This system meets the demands made upon this country and establishes by known means a method of supplying the legitimate credit demands of the people. We should keep in mind the remark of President Hoover, that no debtor can borrow himself out of debt. Compare the two systems and see the excellence of our own. I could give many illustrations to throw more light upon this subject, but I am sure that the house does not require them.

My hon. friend stated to the house that the establishment of a central bank would do something towards establishing greater supervision over the operations of the banks. But we have ample supervision already. First, the shareholders have their auditors, and having had some experience in the past as a director of a bank, I can only say that no statement is ever submitted to the shareholders which does not, first of all, have behind it the certificate given by the general manager and the managers of the banks with respect to every outstanding loan, with the possible exception of a few thousands of dollars in small loans. Then there is the auditor's report, and, third, the scrutiny of the shareholders themselves of the operations of their property by their managers. Then there is another supervision altogether.

Mr. SPENCER: Was that the case with the Home bank?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. My hon. friend will admit that this parliament paid certain moneys to Home bank depositors because of the very inspection which I mention. That inspection disclosed a state of affairs which caused the commission to state that it would have been the proper thing to have taken steps to wind up that bank instead of permitting it to go on. Does my hon. friend remember that famous phrase: "a moral claim in equity"? That was the basis of the action taken, and the reason thereof.

But, as I said before, there is still another supervision, a supervision for which perhaps the hon. gentlemen who sit opposite and to my right were to no inconsiderable extent responsible, and for which I think they are to be congratulated, that is, the supervision by the inspector general of banks. I think in fairness it should be said that to no inconsiderable extent the action resulting in that appointment was strongly urged by them upon this parliament. It will be remembered that the general manager of one of our great banks constantly urged that auditors should be appointed—some hon. members will recall that gentleman; he was a Nova Scotian but has now gone to his reward—but that suggestion did not meet with immediate approval, although later on it was adopted. Hon. members opposite urged because of what had transpired that it was desirable that there should be a constant investigation, by some person moving to and fro, of the securities of the banks, and so we have the inspector general. He is constantly on the go and it was largely upon his report, as will be recalled, that the Weyburn Security Bank concluded that they could no longer continue to function because their credits were frozen. In other words, no fresh deposits were coming in and their immediate deposits being invested in loans which could not be collected, they either had to obtain fresh capital from other sources or say to their depositors when they came for their money: We have not got it. After the inspector general had given his advice, they concluded that the best thing to do would be to link up their fortunes with an older established bank able to supply the requisite capital to enable them to continue to serve their customers through that older bank.

There is no lack of supervision of the operations of banks in this country. The inspector general would report to the minister anything out of the ordinary, and the minister, sensible of his responsibility, would take immediate action if it was disclosed that there was such a condition in a particular bank as to cause apprehension on the part of those whose fortunes were linked up with it, namely, the depositors. Most hon. members of this house will realize that neither the inspector general nor the auditors are greatly concerned with the shareholders; that is not a matter of great public concern, which is purely a question of safeguarding the interests of the depositors. The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) has referred to an incident which became so exigent and pressing upon this house that action was taken to provide part of the loss which the depositors had sustained in the Home bank.

Mr. EULER: How often are these inspections made?

Mr. BENNETT: The Inspector General is continuously engaged in checking the securities of the banks.

Mr. EULER: Could the Minister of Finance say whether there is any definite period of time that should elapse between inspections?

Mr. BENNETT: As far as I know the Inspector General endeavours to see to it that his inspections are made so that there is no longer period of time between them than the average length of commercial paper that is outstanding. The hon. gentleman knows the average length is less than three months because there are so many short date loans. In the course of time the efforts of the Inspector General will have to be supplemented by others. I do not like to take up too much of the time of the house in dealing with this matter, but I might add that with the large number of branch banks, obviously the supervision is exercised not by visiting the branch banks themselves, but by checking the reports of the managers of the banks at the head office. Then the head office operations are of course scrutinized by him in person as well as the character of the securities which are held and the extent to which the deposits of the debtors of the bank are invested in reliable securities so that they may be at all times available to meet the demands of the demand or time creditors of the bank. That is the position. I think it would serve no useful purpose if I were to take up time to elaborate that.

All I can say to my hon. friend and the house is this: that without stating for a single minute that the system is perfect, I claim for it the following: First, that for a population of ten million people we enjoy the privileges of a banking system that gives as great security to depositors as it is reasonably possible to have—and unless you have security for depositors, you have no banking system at all and there is no development of the country; that is clear—secondly, that the use to which the banks may put the securities required for the protection of depositors ensures such an expansion of credit as enables our banks to meet every demand that has been made upon them; and never has a request been made for more than 60 per cent of the amount which, under the Finance Act we could advance. I have had some knowledge, secondhand, from those who had learned much of the operations of central reserve banks in other parts of the world. When we talk about state banks, we are talking about something entirely different from the system that prevails in Canada. A state bank if set up in Canada would not be analogous to the state bank of Finland or of Jugoslavia or of Greece.

My hon. friend I am sure knows that to set up a reserve or central bank such as has been set up in some other countries, would not do a single thing beyond what we are doing now through the operations of the Finance Act without maintaining a bank at all.

I am not, however, closing the door to convictions which may come to my mind with respect to the matter. I want the hon. member for Macleod and the house generally to realize that. I am conscious of the fact that for the last one hundred years the great desire of people on the American continent has been to secure a stable and safe banking system. Think what this means to a country! Think what has happened to the United States in that regard! No theorists' lectures on credits will get away from the simple, single fact that we have had a more stable and safe banking system than most other peoples in the world and the tribute to it which I have just read to the house should convince us we have some reasons for the faith within us with respect to the present system.

One step more and I shall have concluded. As population increases, as the centre of population changes, as the centres of wealth change, it may well be that the system we now have may not be found to work as conveniently as is desired. When that time comes, time has come for a change; but in the very nature of things a Conservative does not believe in change for the sake of change, nor does he believe that it is essential to make a change merely because you may alter a name. I think most of us believe with Tennyson:

> That man's the true Conservative
> Who lops the moulder'd branch away.

And there is no suggestion of our Finance Act and the operations under it being properly designated as a mouldered branch. Effective and efficient, vital, a part of the organization of the financial structure of this country, it serves the people of Canada steadily and well, and if there be opportunities, as there will be, to improve from time to time the personnel of those who are charged with the responsibility of the Finance department —and I hope to make a change myself at a not distant date—I am sure the house will agree that those changes will always be forthcoming and the necessary action taken. But I ask my hon. friend not to press his motion to a vote at this time because this country is not prepared to make the change that his motion involves, and until it is apparent it is, there is no good reason why the action should be taken. But I assure my hon. friend I am sufficiently alive to human progress to realize that time may come, and if when it comes, we are here, as we probably shall be half a century hence, that action will be taken.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The Prime Minister gave an illustration of the federal treasury borrowing $40,000,000 from the banks on treasury bills. Then I think he said that the banks came back to the government under the Finance Act and secured 100 per cent back again. I wonder just what difference it would make in the system if you cut out the third party to the transaction altogether, and if the government itself secured it by coming to parliament in a particular case of this kind without having the bank in the picture at all. Would that make any particular difference?

Mr. BENNETT: I had expected someone would ask some such question as that, and it involves a discussion that perhaps is not entirely pertinent to the resolution under consideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I realize that.

Mr. BENNETT: Possibly when the Finance estimates are under consideration I shall take some time and give my hon. friend a complete answer to the question as I understand it. I think that would suit him better. I have under my hand the figures which would enable me to give the answer, but in view of the fact that my hon. friend would desire, as I go along, to ask questions and because he could not well do that with the Speaker in the chair, if he will defer the matter for the moment until the estimates of the Finance department are under consideration, I shall give him the answer then, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That will be quite satisfactory.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) on the able address he delivered this afternoon stating the reasons why a central bank should be established in Canada. I was delighted to see the keen interest he invoked among the various members of the house, and particularly on the government side, with regard to his address. I must congratulate him also on having drawn out the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) by this address to make certain statements which, although we may not entirely agree with them, are at least interesting. The Prime Minister, in referring to the address of the hon. member for Macleod, laid a good deal of stress on the issue from the treasury board under the Finance Act. He spoke at length regarding the failure of various banks in the United States, but he did not say a single word about the most important point of the address of the hon. member for Macleod, regarding some action to control price levels, which I think, was the kernel of his address this afternoon. He wanted to avoid the continued drawback of extraordinary inflation and deflation, and with that idea in mind he suggested the formation of a central bank of rediscount in Canada so that by the businesslike regulation of currency and credit such a condition as we have at the present time could be avoided.

There seem to be two distinct and basic schools of thought with regard to this money question. At least some hon. members on this side of the house in connection with our banking system of to-day—which in reality is a system of bookkeeping—say that the loan creates the deposit. According to the Prime Minister however, and some who agree with him, the deposit creates the loan. I will have more to say in that regard later. For a moment I would like to refer to a book written by Sir Thomas White entitled "War-time Finance" wherein he stated that during the war years Canada not only surprised herself, but surprised the world when her people subscribed in war loans twice as much money as all the money in Canada and then had ample money to carry on her growing business. I wonder how that was done if only savings deposits were loaned.

Mr. YOUNG: How was it done?

Mr. SPENCER: I will tell you later. My hon. friend from Macleod referred to the fact that so far as banking is concerned the treasury board did not do a great deal. As a government and a country—except in a small way—we have small banking facilities through the treasury board under the Finance Act. In my opinion the banks come into this picture rather largely. So largely in fact do they appear that they are all-powerful, and it is because they are all-powerful that a great many of the public characterize them as the unseen government. We know full well that when a person goes to a private bank he is very much at its mercy if he wishes to make use of his credit. So, to a certain extent, is a country, if it has no banking facilities and has to go to those same banking concerns from time to time to secure various lines of credit. When all is said and done the banking institutions of this country are of a private nature. I admit, and I am very glad to admit, that our banks are in some respects very wonderful. They are probably as good as banks anywhere in the world as far as their interests are concerned. I will not say as much however when I consider the interests of the public. If in dealing with governmental or state affairs the banks find private and public interests clash, then certainly their private interests will not be neglected. Canada's business turnover, in round figures, amount to about $400,000,000. Surely the handling of such an amount should be through a bank of our own. Bankers are not in business for their health; they are there for the profit which can be derived from their operations, and there is no reason why we could not do our own banking through a central bank. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) said he would be afraid to go to such an institution to obtain a line of credit. I do not suggest for a moment that a central bank should give credit to an individual, but as a county and a state I think the time has arrived when we should do our own banking. Money is largely a matter of created credit; it is drawable by cheque. In 1923 Sir Edmund Walker speaking before the banking and commerce committee stated that ninety-six per cent of our transactions in Canada were carried out by the chequing system. Credit is largely created against securities which are lodged as collateral. For the benefit of the hon. member who asked a question a minute ago I might say that credit is secured in the following way: A friend of mine went to a branch bank some years ago, during war time, and wanted to buy certain victory bonds. If necessary he offered to put up extra collateral to cover the loan. He was a wealthy man, but had no cash. The banker said, "That is perfectly all right; we will take your extra collateral. However, the minute you buy those bonds turn them over to us as security and we will see that you get the loan." The purchase of the victory bonds was made possible by the fact that he had security to put up to get a loan backed by the victory bonds themselves. Until the loan was repaid the bonds were not his and if repayment was not made they were sold and the loan liquidated in that way. In my opinion it was not necessary to have a savings deposit ready to make it possible for that particular man to buy his bonds. As I have said, credit is created largely against securities lodged as collateral. All federal securities are gilt-edged. There is no possibility of loss. The cost of bookkeeping which, as I have said, describes our banking system, is less than half of one per cent. To-day even on treasury bills we are paying seven or eight times that amount. The Prime Minister referred to a time in 1928 when the government of the day, through the Minister of Finance, gave treasury bills to the extent of $45,000,000 to the banks in Canada. In turn they charged 4 per cent for their bookkeeping. As the Prime Minister said they had the opportunity of bringing those treasury bills back and having Dominion notes advanced to them.

Mr. BENNETT: For which, I should have added, they paid interest.

Mr. SPENCER: Yes. The interest at that time was three and three-quarters per cent. The banks were charging the government 4 per cent, or one-quarter per cent more than the government was charging the banks on exactly the same security. For a moment I would like to read a statement by Mr. H. D. MacLeod in the "Elements of Banking." I have no hesitation in putting these quotations on record, in spite of the fact that the Prime Minister may criticize me for so doing. I make the quotation because such men as Mr. MacLeod know the subject thoroughly, and I am very glad to quote them. The quotation is:

> The essential and distinctive feature of a "bank" and a "banker" is to issue credit payable on demand, and this credit may be put into circulation and serve as money.

Further on he says:

> When it is said that a great London joint stock bank has perhaps £25,000,000 of "deposits," it is almost universally believed that it has £25,000,000 of actual money to "lend out," as it is erroneously called. It is a complete and entire delusion. These "deposits" are not "deposits" in cash at all, they are nothing but an enormous superstructure of credit.

Then I bring to my support an authority who is very well known in the financial world, the head to-day of the largest joint stock bank in the world. I refer to the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna. With regard to the question of how can a supply of money be increased he says:

> The amount of money in existence varies only with the action of the banks in increasing or diminishing deposits. We know how this is effected. Every bank loan creates a deposit, and every repayment of a bank loan destroys one.

That is the big difference between the opinions held by some of us on this side of the house and those expressed by various hon. members opposite. The Prime Miniter said that the banks loan only what they borrow—in other words, intimating that the banks loaned only what they borrowed from their saving depositors. I absolutely disagree with that statement. It is entirely a matter between the two schools of thought as to which is right, whether loans create deposits, or whether you must have saving deposits to create loans.

As the hon. member for Macleod said, if we are going to have an international understanding with other banks, then we need a government central bank to represent this country. Mr. Neill of the Royal Bank has said that there is no reason at all for thinking that if the banks of the world had co-operated they could not have stopped this extreme situation that we have to-day with this world unemployment and this general misery. In a world so full of goods, so full of men not only willing and able but anxious to produce more goods for the people to use, there is no reason at all, if we had a reasonably sensible financial system, why poverty should exist in the midst of plenty.

The Finance department, through the treasury board, is virtually a bankers bank. That is to say, as we were told by the Prime Minister, the bankers bring various securities to the treasury board and get them discounted for dominion notes. I understand that some five cabinet ministers are represented on the treasury board.

Mr. BENNETT: The treasury board is composed of members of the cabinet.

Mr. SPENCER: Yes, I understand that. Here again, without being in the least critical of cabinet ministers, I question whether any of them have ever made a study of this problem, and they certainly cannot do so after they become ministers, because then they are far too busy. As the hon. member for Macleod said, under the Finance Act the treasury board is authorized to ask the advice of the trustees of the gold reserves as to what value it shall put on certain securities. Now, of the trustees of the gold reserve a majority are representatives of the chartered banks, and as the hon. member who introduced this subject said, the banks with members on that board at the time he mentioned were the largest borrowers under the act. Therefore they were in many cases putting a value on their own securities. That being so, it seems to me the treasury board is relegated to second place more or less in relation to the bankers association, and I for one object to this. No matter what party is in power, the government represents the whole country, and I object to the government taking second place to any private institution, even though it be the Bankers' Association of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps my hon. friend would not mind saying just what he means by that.

Mr. SPENCER: Section 3 of the Finance Act makes it possible for the minister to request——the trustees of the central gold reserves to make a valuation of and recommendation as to the amount which in the judgment of the trustees may properly be advanced on any securities offered in pledge under this act.

I understand—I shall be glad to be corrected if I am wrong—that a majority of the men now acting as trustees of the gold reserves are representatives of the chartered banks. That being so, when they put a value on securities they are in effect valuing securities that they themselves are pledging to the treasury board.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend from Battle River has hardly done justice to himself. That is only in the event of any difficulty arising, because the transaction has long been completed before that. The minister may ask the trustees to value the securities, but the rules and regulations fix the margin to be maintained before the advances are made. That is only an additional assistance to the minister if he desires to use it. I am taking up a little of the hon. member's time.

Mr. SPENCER: It is all right.

Mr. BENNETT: It is just as though the banks sent an inspector to see a lot of cattle to determine whether or not they are really worth what has been suggested by their owner. So in this case where we have fixed rules as to market values, we also have the expert opinion of those who know these securities as to whether or not the minister's judgment is right. That is all.

Mr. SPENCER: I am glad to get the information from the Prime Minister, but I hardly imagine that any of the banks whose securities were brought to the treasury board would put the value of those securities any lower than the value that had been placed upon them by the treasury board.

It does seem to me—and I am supporting the hon. member for Macleod entirely in this—that the government of Canada might well have a monopoly of all note issues. First of all, because it is a government prerogative; secondly, the issue of private bank currency is unfair against the savings bank depositors. I say this because in the case of the failure of a bank the notes are a first call on the assets of the bank, and the depositors rank about fourth or fifth with respect to their claims. Now, there is a clause in the Bank Act as to double liability of the shareholders, and this is supposed to provide ample protection to depositors; but that double liability does not always sufficiently protect them, as hon. members will find by referring to an answer that appeared in Hansard a few days ago in reply to a question of mine respecting the Home bank. The shareholders of that bank did not come through by a long way with their double liability. There is also a note circulation redemption fund which is supposed to take care of such an emergency. But the note circulation redemption fund, which I believe sometime ago amounted to over $6,000,000, can be drawn upon by a bank only to the extent of the money put into it by the individual bank. I believe I am correct in that statement.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the whole fund is available for the redemption of those notes. I am glad my hon. friend brought up this matter; I may say to him that in fifty years not a single dollar has been lost in this way. It does not matter if the bank fails; the bank note is payable at one hundred cents on the dollar.

Mr. SPENCER: Then I understand that the whole note circulation fund may be drawn upon, if need be, to redeem the notes of a bank which has failed. I am very glad to get that information, because in the commitee of 1923 we were led to believe that was not so.

Mr. BENNETT: That is my understanding of it. The point arose only in the case of one bank, and my hon. friend will remember that its capital stock was something over $6,000,000 and the circulation at that time about the same. The notes were taken out of circulation without regard to the redemption fund. It never has been called upon to any extent, as a matter of fact. My appreciation of the language of the statute is that the whole fund is available to make good any deficiency in the bank notes.

Mr. SPENCER: I am very glad to hear that statement. Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in regard to loans, and their effect on the price level. This angle of the subject is by far the most important we have to face. In my opinion the control of credit means very largely the control of prices; if money is increased or decreased to any great extent without taking into consideration the alteration in the production or consumption of goods, naturally you will have an alteration in prices. Here is an absolute necessity for something to be done. I agree entirely with the hon. member for Macleod in his reference to certain statements made before the banking and commerce committee in 1923, and also in 1928. The bankers came before us and admitted that there was no concerted action at all in regard to the extension of credit or the making of loans in an effort to prevent either inflation or deflation. In both years they said, "Oh, we do this as individual banks, as well as we can and as far as we are able." The result, of course, is absolute chaos at times. If hon. members think for a moment that control of currency and credit has nothing to do with the extraordinary upsetting of the price level at the present time, with the troubles which have resulted, I should like some suggestion as to what they think is the reason. I quote again from Mr. H. D. MacLeod, who said:

> They (the banks) issue credit payable on demand, and this credit may be put in circulation and serve as money.

There is the statement again that the banks have the power to create credit, and he says nothing about lending savings deposits.

I was glad to hear the hon. member for Macleod refer to the most excellent statement made by Mr. C. E. Neill, of the Royal Bank. I am not going to take up the time of the house in repeating what he said, but I should like to quote this time a statement by Mr. T. B. Macaulay, president of the Sun Life, taken from the Montreal Gazette of November 15, 1930. Referring to monetary control Mr. Macaulay said:

> Finally, we have those whose outlook is that "We always have had periodical depressions and they have passed away; we need not worry unduly, for this one will also pass away in time." May I suggest that we are not content to allow epidemics slowly to burn themselves out. We rejoice over every medical discovery which can prevent or cut short such scourges. Economists have now discovered a remedy for depressions as effective as a vaccine. Why should we not endeavour to cut short financial epidemics?

If this central bank were established there is no reason why one of its duties should not be to take over the funds of the post office savings bank. I should like to direct attention to the fact that under the act the rate of interest that can be allowed on these small deposits is four per cent, but under pressure brought to bear on a former minister of finance the rate was cut down to three per cent. On the one hand we give the private banking corporations four per cent, as we did in 1928 against treasury bills, but we give these very small depositors who put money in our post office saving banks only three per cent. The result is that the business has lagged very badly and it is not developing. I think it is something to which we might give more attention.

In conclusion I wish to place on record a resolution passed by the United Farmers of Alberta at their convention last January. I do this because, wherever we sit in this house, we each represent a particular part of the country, and I think it is our duty to put forward the expressed views of the people whom we represent. The resolution reads as follows:

> That we as delegates assembled, recognizing the inadequacy of the existent credit system in meeting present economic stringency, and believing that adequate distribution of credit is absolutely essential to the carrying on of the agricultural industry, recommend:
> (1) That this organization continue to advocate at all times the complete nationalization of our credit system.
> (2) That as an intermediate measure the federal government take steps to organize a federal reserve bank of issue and discount which bank shall be entirely under government control and shall provide credit at a reasonable rate of interest for all necessary productive and comercial enterprises.
> We are convinced that the above proposal is imperative in order to get away from the present intolerable position in which the credit requirements of the public in general are sacrificed to the professed necessity of the charter banks to protect to the utmost their savings deposits.
> (3) We specifically recommend that the directors of the wheat pool should thoroughly canvass the possibility of their financing the marketing of their grain through utilization and extension of our present Finance Act.

In putting that on record I wish to refer for a moment to the fact that under the Finance Act one of the various securities which our private banks can take to the treasury board and get discounted is provincial bonds, yet the provincial governments are not given the same privilege. The provincial governments have not the same chance to take these same bonds to the same treasury board, and get the same service that is given to private banking interests.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in this debate, but I am encouraged to do so because of the attitude taken by the house in the matter. I observe that the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) has aroused the interest of all sides on a question which undoubtedly to-day is one of the most important, if not the most important, facing all countries.

In his closing remarks the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) emphatically asked us to try the system, as in court of law, in the light of known facts. I am afraid that if we were to do that there would be nothing but general condemnation for the system which is largely responsible for the condition in which the people find themselves, not only in Canada but throughout the entire world. Using one of those glittering generalities to which the right hon. gentleman took exception, may I quote the words of the Right Hon. Ramsay MacDonald, as given in the New Age of January 8, 1931. Mr. MacDonald on that occasion said:

> A few financiers in New York, in London, or in Paris, pursuing their own ends and looking after their own fortunes, are able to destroy the fruits of good harvests and the productive accomplishments of human energy.

That is the fruit of an uncontrolled monetary system left in the hands of private individuals, whether it be in Canada or in any other country, operated by private interests for private profit. And that is the case throughout the world to-day.

There is no truly nationally-owned system anywhere, and in this regard I take exception to the suggestion of the hon. member for Macleod. I do not think he has made out a strong case for a central bank on the ground that other countries have central banks; because in other countries, we find, the central banks created there have not only failed to remedy the condition and prevent a recurrence of periods of financial and business depression, but have actually been a party to them. I remember not so long ago seeing one of the most effective cartoons I have ever come across in my life. It appeared in that well known international London publication, Punch, and was by a famous cartoonist. It depicted a dear old lady crossing the street, very much to the obstruction of traffic, while the policeman shouted, "Hurry up, ma'am!" The woman was the Bank of England. That was an accurate picture. Punch was right. And economic authorities in England were equally right in the view that the Bank of England, in precipitately restoring the gold standard, thus curtailing credits and making for deflation, was responsible for a condition of depression which has not lifted since the day that standard was re-established.

The other day there occurred a revolution in Spain; and one of the first rumours I have heard in connection with that occurrence is that a primary cause of the upheaval, apart from distrust of and dislike for the monarchy, was the attempt on the part of that country to restore the gold standard and so bring about deflation, with all the horrible effects that follow that unwise policy. Let me not be misunderstood: I regard an unwise policy of inflation as an evil second only to deflation in its effects. But here you have this system we are asked to try upon its merits. In the spring of 1929 in this very city I was watching the call money issues as daily reported and I found call money quoted day after day at 1½, 1¾ and 2 per cent—an encouragement to speculation. First, there was a borrowing of money at this rate, the lowest possible rate of interest commensurate with business dealings, enormously facilitating speculation. Then suddenly we find the policy reversed: almost over night—according to the federal reserve board in the United States and other authorities the call money rate begins to advance rapidly, going to 5, 6, 8 and 10 per cent. Before the peak is reached there is a pause, and presently more money is forthcoming.

Mitchell, of the National City Bank of New York, broke away from the federal reserve board and rejecting its policy, threw tens of millions of dollars into the call money market. Then more cash money was forthcoming. The high rate of interest encouraged other cash reserves to make their appearance upon the market. What hapened was this. The cash reserves of great corporations were used—probably most illegally, but nevertheless effectively—to bolster up a market which it was the bankers' policy to deflate. That there was self-interest behind the action, there is no doubt; because, through that flood of new money coming into the call money market, in spite of curtailment of bank loans, and in spite of the persistent advance of money rates, from 15 to 18 and finally 20 per cent for call money, the price level of many stocks was raised above the price level of 1928, reaching in some instances new highs. And it was not until the fall of 1929, when these cash reserves were just as suddenly withdrawn, that the whole bottom fell out of the market and the cataclysm was upon us.

Hon. gentlemen opposite, and indeed to my right, have in times past contended that the bankers could not affect price levels and that they did not bring about deflation. To-day we have witnesses, fortunately among the bankers themselves, to the fact that our allegations back in 1923 and 1924 were correct, and that it is the banking policy that brings about periods of deflation. All you need do is turn to the report of Mr. Neill as quoted to-day. You have only to turn to the report of the president, Sir Herbert Holt, and a dozen other reports of bankers not only in this country but in the United States, to find that they charge now that it was a deliberate policy of deflation, emphasized by high interest rates, that was primarily responsible for the present depression. That is the policy of private bankers. Let me give a quotation to buttress this statement. Sir Herbert Holt says:

> There can be no doubt that the abnormal credit conditions during 1928 and 1929 must be held primarily responsible for initiating the present world-wide depression. High money rates had their inevitable effect of depressing business and paralysing development.

These are very effective words. I turn now to Mr. Neill:

> This year the primary difficulties with which this country is confronted—

Not some other country, but this.

> —are world-wide in character and find their origin in disruption of the international financial structure. . . . . It would seem that the outstanding cause of the present world-wide depression was high interest rates.

Not long ago I had the great privilege of having a conference with one of the eminent bankers in this country, and in the course of the discussion I asked him what was the outlook for the future. He astonished me by admitting at once that the first thing we might expect would be an all-round, general reduction in the wage level. But, I said, that means, inevitably, smaller purchasing power, a lessening demand for goods. He said, yes; but it is inevitable. I said that that would be followed by a lower price level. He said, yes. How long will it continue—I asked. He said, "I cannot say; it may be for a generation." That, Mr. Speaker, is the fruit of this much boasted banking system—the possibility of a generation of low price levels, a lower standard of living, and a reduction in wages. Proceeding, I asked him: Is there nothing we can do in this country? Cannot your banks do something? He said, "No. As ordinary commercial institutions, we have neither voice nor effect in regard to general money policies throughout the world. And as this depression that visits us is in part due to world depression, we are ineffective in bringing about any modification in the conditions." I asked, further: What about trying to adjust matters in this country? How about a little inflation? Would it not be possible to reduce the rates to your own borrowers in Canada and thus let out more money? He said, "That would mean going off the gold standard." And so the dear old fetish, the gold standard, was once more appealed to—that piece of superstition which is more evil in its effects, more effete to-day, than the most time-worn and despised medieval superstition. That fetish of a gold standard is brought in to rescue an eminent banker who is unable to offer any other solution for the present problem, than the drift to lower living and wage standards, and which calls urgently for some intelligent international action to regulate the monetary system. Consider his position, that failing international action we drift in depression; for there is confronting us our inability to take any action as private commercial banking interests in Canada. It is alleged then that our own banks cannot affect or remedy the situation in Canada. I disagree with this position and I agree with the hon. member for Macleod that an intelligent application in this country of an inflation policy carefully regulated and controlled would improve our present condition and tide us over the period of adjustment of the world depressions. However, he says that we must not do this because it would mean going off the gold standard. Most people, except the hon. members in this corner of the house, say that we must not go off the gold standard. The other proposition is that we must have international regulation of money. As Mr. Neill indicates in his report, the best way to overcome deflation is by an anti-deflation policy, and an anti-deflation policy can mean only one thing—an inflation policy, carefully regulated and intelligently adjusted. At the bottom of the second page of his report, Mr. Neill says:

> When all financial centres feel that business does not require more money, then is the time to increase the supply, just as truly as it is time to reduce supply at the moment when inflation begins to appear. If on the collapse of the stock market boom the principal central banks of the world had decided that drastic contraction of currency and credit was not to be permitted, a drastic fall in the price level could not have occurred.

It must be remembered that this is a banker who is speaking, not a theorist, a crank, a faddist or any of those things which we in this corner of the house are sometimes called. I wish to emphasize these words:

> Thus the countries with fiat currencies, such as Argentina, Uruguay and Spain,—

He might have included Australia.

> —are not suffering anything like as acutely as the gold countries.

That is only too true. I am not urging at this stage that we should not have some basis of currency; we must have some basis of regulation of currency, but the gold basis has become altogether too narrow—as was pointed out by the hon member for Macleod —especially when we find that the volume of gold is not only diminishing but is being concentrated to a greater extent every year in two countries. The two countries controlling the gold situation are France and the United States, with England still retaining a measure of control but not nearly as effective as the two mentioned. Of all the countries of the world, the United States is the one to which we should be able to look for intelligent action because of the position she occupies and because of the vast reservoir of gold held by her. However, I do not think that is possible because, although they have a national bank of a kind, the federal reserve bank, I do not think there is any doubt but that the policy of that bank is dictated not by the best policy for the industries of the country but by the political interests of the party which may at the time have jurisdiction over the board. I agree with the hon. member for Lincoln that any national bank to be created in this country should not have the slightest taint of politics about it if it is at all possible to avoid it. One great curse in connection with the federal reserve board of the United States is the fact that the secretary of the treasury is the ex-officio chairman of the board and as such can exercise—I do not say that he always does, but he has the power—a tremendous influence upon the policies of that board.

We find the bankers of this country agreeing almost unanimously that the present depression could have been avoided and should have been avoided by the federal reserve board taking intelligent action in 1927 to prevent further inflation. It is claimed that that action was not taken because of political reasons. The whole machine got out of hand and when the time to deflate had come, the crisis had been reached and the calamity followed. That is not intelligent action, and yet that is the system, or one equally ill-controlled, prevailing in all countries I know of on a gold basis or that have central banks. Therefore, a resolution moved for the purpose of simply setting up a central bank does not appeal to me. If, however, by the setting up of a central bank is meant the creation of an intelligently organized and controlled machine which could be used for the purpose of adjusting the volume of currency in a country to meet the requirements of business both in and out of that country, to cooperate with similar central banks in other countries for the regulation of the monetary standard and volume throughout the world, then I say that that thing is only too sadly needed; we have needed it for many years and we have never needed it so much before. We have bankers, economists and politicians stating that this depression is due to deflation. Others say it is due to the demonetization of silver; that we must remonetize silver. Others say it is due to a mistaken federal reserve policy, while others say it is due to this, that and the other thing. If the world is in such chaos as a result of an unintelligently operated private banking system in every country, surely the time has come when in the national interest it is the duty of the government to study the problem and find out if it is possible to create, first, a national banking system which will before everything else take recognition of the necessity for keeping the volume of currency always in proportion to the value of goods to be consumed; second, to see that neither inflation nor deflation occurs; and, third, to undertake cooperation with other national banks throughout the world in order to retain the stability of money and price levels.

We are making an intelligent request. May I say to the hon. member for Lincoln that I have discussed this matter with the hon. member for Macleod. He is not dogmatic on the question, he does not insist on any particular form of national bank, but what we really seek at this time is a discussion of the problem in an endeavour to find out if some system can be evolved by which the present wrong conditions may be adjusted.

I hope the hon. members of the Liberal party caught the significance of the generous remark of the leader of the government (Mr. Bennett) when he said that under the present banking system, the country has been carried on to periods of greater prosperity than had been enjoyed by any other country in the world.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well I did not say that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am very sorry because I would be the last to do any injustice to the right hon. gentleman. I happened to take a note as the words were uttered because they interested me considerably. I noticed that shortly afterwards the hon. gentleman suggested something to the effect that we could not get rid of debt by continuing to borrow. That was a most significant statement.

Mr. BENNETT: I was quoting President Hoover's observation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Quite right, but I presume the hon. gentleman made the quotation his own.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not in the habit of making quotations my own; the hon. gentleman is a past master at that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then I cannot understand the purpose of making quotations in a speech unless it be for the purpose either of accepting or rejecting the philosophy or argument contained therein. In this instance, the quotation was uttered as though the right hon. gentleman completely approved of it.

Mr. BENNETT: So I do.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am glad to hear that. We have in our world banking system a debt creating structure unequalled in its ferocity and effect. The mind of man has never devised anything which could so satisfactorily involve the people in debt and keep them there. I would like to quote from the Monthly Review of the Bank of Nova Scotia, one of the best written works we have on current affairs, as follows:

> The completion of these adjustments (for the problem is world-wide) would, of course, be considerably hastened by a better distribution of the total available purchasing power, among the countries of the world; for the creditor countries are not lending to the debtor countries as they were lending during the years of prosperity, and must again lend, if their own export trade is to revive; and some of the debtor countries, lacking the loans which previously fortified their purchasing power, can scarcely do more, at the present time, than pay their current obligations.

The conclusion inevitably to be drawn from this statement is that unless the creditor nations proceed to assist the debtor nations to go further into debt, international trade cannot be restored. Of course it cannot. Mr. Neill in his report says much the same thing. He referred to the whole problem and suggested that it was largely because "long before the 1929 collapse high money rates had almost entirely shut off new loans to borrowing countries and with them the concomitant ability to purchase foreign goods."

So we have something that the Prime Minister quite properly objected to and yet supported, namely, a monetary system which compels us to go into debt if we are to continue under the system. Nations to-day under this condition of affairs cannot continue to buy from other nations if they happen to be debtor nations, unless there is some regulation of the whole monetary machine throughout the world, some adjustment of international debts, some modification of the present method of supplying credits. There you have the statements of an economist and a banker, Professor Jackson and Mr. Neill, both of them intimating that until the creditor countries lend more money to the debtor countries, international trade cannot be revived. Is it necessary to say anything further in regard to the shortcomings of a system of that kind?

The Prime Minister said either too much or too little, when he told us the story of the bank that recently—I think he said within a few days—had come to the treasury board or rather, to the office in Montreal, had deposited there treasury bills which had been purchased with depositors' money and had secured in return $5,000,000 in Canadian currency.

Mr. BENNETT: I may say that this has been paid off.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is very satisfactory and relieves me of obligation of further comment at this time. But we are in a tangle; I dislike the idea of this resolution being hastily dealt with, and I would prefer to see it go to a committee for further consideration. All members in the house have signified their willingness to consider it further, even the Prime Minister who was good enough to say he had not a closed mind. I therefore move:

> That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after "house" in the second line and substituting therefor the following:
> "the question of establishing a nationally-owned central bank should be referred to the committee on banking and commerce for consideration and report."

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, May 14, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

ASCENSION DAY

QUESTION OF PROPRIETY OF SITTING ON RELIGIOUS HOLIDAY—MOTION TO ADJOURN FOR ASCENSION DAY

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, before the house proceeds with the regular business of the day, I rise to a question of privilege. I am a member of one of the chief religious bodies in this country which observes this holiday, namely Ascension day, as fully as it observes Sunday. I wish to ask the government to relieve us from the necessity of sitting this afternoon. I give the following reasons:—

Mr. SPEAKER: I gather from what the hon. member has said that he is not raising a question of privilege. To-day the house is sitting regularly and in accordance with the rules. The only way the house could dispense with the sitting is by a motion to adjourn. At the close of the last sitting there was no such motion, and consequently the sitting to-day is perfectly in order. In addition the hon. member is not raising a question of privilege.

Mr. DUPUIS: Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for your—

Mr. SPEAKER: I call the hon. member to order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DUPUIS: I hope the cries of "order" I hear from the other side of the house do not mean that hon. members object to my speaking on the subject.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have called the hon. member to order. He is out of order in continuing to address the house at this time.

Mr. DUPUIS: May I quote—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The ruling has been given.

Mr. DUPUIS: I rise to a point of order. Probably not according to the rules, but at least according to the jurisprudence of this house, Ascension day is a legal holiday.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am quite familiar with the passage in the book to which the hon. member refers. Whether the house sits on public holidays or not lies within its own discretion. It has not chosen to adjourn for this holiday, and the sitting is in order. If the hon. member who has just spoken or any other hon. member did not wish the house to sit to-day it was his privilege to move the adjournment. However, that has not been done. The hon. member should not attempt to stress the point when he has been called to order.

Mr. DUPUIS: Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the adjournment of the house.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member is too late.

Mr. DUPUIS: I think not. I move the adjournment of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Who seconds the motion?

Mr. DUPUIS: The hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis).

Mr. SPEAKER: A motion for adjournment is not debatable.

Mr. DUPUIS: I would ask that we take the vote.

Mr. QUINN: More obstruction, absolutely.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is moved by Mr. Dupuis, seconded by Mr. Denis, that this house do now adjourn.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Dupuis) which was negatived on the following division:

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

PROPOSED CHANGE IN METHOD OF DEALING WITH APPLICATIONS FOR BAIL

Mr. FINLAY MacDONALD (Cape Breton South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 46, to amend the Criminal Code (Bail).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): This bill is intended to repeal the section of the criminal code dealing with the granting of bail to convicted persons. Under the present arrangement, when a person is convicted only the chief justice or some judge designated by him may grant bail. This is very inconvenient for lawyers practising in the country, because the chief justice usually resides at the provincial capital. This amendment is designated to give any trial judge the right to grant bail to a convicted prisoner, if he thinks fit, until his appeal has been heard. As a matter of fact I know of cases where bail has been refused and the prisoner has remained in gaol for two or three months until his appeal was heard. Then, on the hearing of the appeal, the conviction has been quashed. This amendment is designed to do away with that situation and to enable any trial judge to give bail, under proper circumstances, pending the hearing of the appeal.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

APPOINTMENT OF SELECT STANDING COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER ACCOUNTS AND ESTIMATES

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved:

That standing order 63 of the House of Commons relating to the appointment of the select standing committees of the house, be amended by adding to the select standing committees of the house for the present session a select standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, to which will be referred the accounts and the estimates of the Canadian National railways and the Canadian government merchant marine for the present session, for consideration and report to the house.

Provided, however, that nothing in this resolution shall be construed to curtail in any way the full right of discussion in committee of supply, and that the said committee consist of Messrs. Beaubien, Bell (St. Antoine), Bothwell, Cantley, Chaplin, Duff, Euler, Fiset, Fraser (Cariboo), Geary, Gobeil, Gray, Hanbury, Hanson (York-Sunbury), Heaps, Kennedy (Peace River), McGibbon, MacMillan (Saskatoon), Manion, Power, Rogers, and Stewart (Lethbridge).

Mr. DUFF: Are the Canadian National steamships included in the Canadian Government Merchant Marine?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

REPARATIONS COMMISSION

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER RESPECTING ARMENIAN CLAIMS

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): I desire to lay on the table of the house a report made to His Excellency the Governor General in council by Errol M. McDougall, K.C., commissioner on reparations, dealing specially with Armenian claims. If the house would permit it, and at the request of hon. members on both sides, I should like to make a very brief statement as to the purport of the findings of the commissioner.

These claims arise out of the Armenian massacres in 1915, when the Armenian population of Turkey, which was then estimated at 1,800,000, was two-thirds wiped out, one-third by death and one-third by deportation and dispersal in other countries. Apparently one-third survived, dispersed throughout Turkey. There are a number of Armenians who are naturalized British subjects residing in Canada, and who therefore came within the definition of Canadian nationals within the terms of the treaty of Versailles. The commissioner on reparations has disallowed these claims, to the number of some 270, on three grounds, which may be briefly summarized as follows: First, the property destroyed in Armenia as to the majority of claims, was, according to his findings, the property of Armenians who were Turkish nationals at the time of such destruction, and not the property of their relatives who were then resident in Canada who have proved that they were Canadian nationals at that time. This conclusion rests upon the facts disclosed by the Bryce report and by the findings of the Canadian commissioner, that the destruction of the property took place concurrently with or before the massacre of the Armenians, to the number of 600,000.

There occurred, in fact or constructively, a seizure of the property by the Turks before the claimants resident in Canada inherited the property from their relatives then resident in Armenian Turkey. The commissioner therefore finds that the claims of the Canadian claimants did not fall within sections 231 and 232 of part 8, and the annex thereto, of the treaty of Versailles.

The second ground is that by an international convention of November 23, 1923, an international commission was set up at Paris, La Commission D'évaluation des Dommages subis en Turquie, which is known generally as the Paris commission of 1923.

These claimants filed their claims with the Canadian custodian during the term of the late government, and their claims were by that government, through the Canadian custodian of that date, referred to the international commission sitting at Paris. The claimants appeared by counsel before the Paris commission, submitted to that jurisdiction, and put their cases before the commission, offering evidence both documentary and oral. The Paris commission granted awards to certain Canadian claimants for the loss of wife or children at the time of the massacres, but dismissed the property claims of the Canadian nationals on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to support those claims. The documentary and oral evidence submitted before the Canadian commissioner, Mr. McDougall, was practically identical with the evidence submitted before the international tribunal at Paris, and therefore the Canadian commissioner has dismissed these property claims on the ground that the claimants were estopped in respect of claims which they had submitted already to the Paris commission whose findings were against them.

The third ground is that even although the Canadian commissioner were to assume jurisdiction, the evidence submitted to him, including the evidence submitted before the Paris commission, does not constitute proof of the claims preferred and cannot form the foundation for awards by the Canadian commissioner. In other words, the bulk of the claims made by the Canadian nationals, that is by Armenians who were naturalized British subjects and resident in Canada, were not valid because there was no legal title vested in them prior to or at the time the massacres took place, and when the destruction of property occurred, but their claims were based on title by inheritance to property which would only vest in them upon the death of their compatriots and relatives who were massacred in Turkey; and the commissioner holds that at the time of its destruction the property was vested in Turkish nationals—Armenians then resident in Turkey—and not vested in the Canadian nationals who would have inherited by reason of the death of their relatives by massacre. There was no proof of title nor proof that individual Canadian claimants became exclusively entitled to inherit. Some 600,000 Armenians survived and became dispersed, and there was no proof available to show that even in respect of title by inheritance these Canadian nationals would necessarily have exclusively inherited the property. The commissioner finds also that there is an utter lack of concrete, conclusive evidence as to the value of any property alleged to have been destroped.

These are the general grounds upon which Commissioner McDougall disallowed the 270 Armenian claims. A large number of the hon. members are interested in this matter and I am told that it is likely to be brought up again for discussion.

By leave of the house, I beg to move, seconded by the right hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley):

That four hundred copies in the English language and two hundred copies in the French language of the special report by Errol M. McDougall, K.C., Commissioner on Reparation, upon Armenian claims laid on the table of the house this day be printed forthwith and that standing order 64 in relation thereto be suspended.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Inasmuch as these Armenian claims have been dismissed, is the hon. minister (Mr. Cahan) in a position to state when we are likely to have the final report of the commissioner on the other claims? Is it the intention of his department to recommend a vote of money to cover these claims when the report is brought down?

Mr. CAHAN: I cannot answer that. I gave a very conclusive answer to the hon. gentleman the other day as to the number of claims outstanding which have been heard, and those still to be heard. The commissioner has devoted his whole time to this work and at the earliest moment at which it is possible to give a reliable statement, I will furnish such a statement to the house. As to asking for a vote to cover these claims, that would depend entirely upon the final report being approved by the governor in council and the action taken thereon with respect to it.

Mr. RINFRET: I understand that the claimants covered by the interim report have been paid already.

Mr. CAHAN: The claims covered by that report were paid out of an appropriation made at the last long session of parliament for the payment of such awards as were made during the past year. That appropriation which expired on March 31 was used before that date for the payment of those awards which had been approved by the governor in council in accordance with the procedure of previous years.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. RINFRET: I have some doubt as to whether or not the money voted last year was properly used to pay the claims covered by the interim report; I do not object to the principle of those payments but I do not think the money was voted for that purpose.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman can raise that question at the proper time. The advice of the proper officers was taken and it was quite conclusive in respect to the legality of the payments made.

Motion agreed to.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. MAURICE BRASSET (Gaspé) moved the first reading of Bill No. 42, to amend the Bankruptcy Act as respects locality of a debtor.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. BRASSET: Mr. Speaker, this bill has reference to the province of Quebec and would require a petition to be filed in the judicial district wherein the debtor resides, such district to be as defined by the Quebec statutes. This bill would lessen the expenses of insolvents. For instance, at the present time the courts in Hull or in Montreal may accept a petition to declare insolvent a resident of Gaspe county, and that person is obliged to come to Hull or to Montreal in order to defend the petition. The purpose of this bill is to obviate that trouble and expense.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*PACIFIC SEALING AWARDS

Mr. NEILL:

1. Has the government received petitions or applications for the reconsideration of the sealing award in relation to the Pacific seaboard?

2. If so, will such petitions receive favourable consideration?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, an answer to this question was prepared by the hon. Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) but in his absence I think it can be answered directly. The answer to the first question is yes. The answer to the second question is that the petitions are receiving consideration but whether or not the action taken will be favourable depends upon the decision arrived at after consideration.

*CANADIAN COOPERATIVE WHEAT PRODUCERS, LIMITED—BANK LOANS

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri):

1. Is the government aware that the Canadian banks have advanced, in loans or guarantees, the sum of $68,000,000 to the Canadian Co-Operative Wheat Producers, Limited?
2. Has the government, to date, guaranteed the banks interested in these loans in favour of wheat pools, for said amount of $68,000,000, totally or partially?
3. If partially, up to what amount?

This question, Mr. Speaker, was before the house on May 4, 1931, and was allowed to stand at that time on the suggestion of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) that the question should be modified to permit an answer being given. Will he suggest how this question could be modified in order to permit this information being given?

Mr. BENNETT: As the question now reads, the answer to the first part would be no. The answer to the second part would depend upon what portion of the first part it has reference to. No guarantee has been given for $68,000,000. An arrangement was made. At the moment I think the responsibility would be $2,000 or $3,000, provided the security upon which the advances by the banks are made is liquidated at reasonable prices. At present market prices there will be practically no liability.

*BEAUHARNOIS POWER DEVELOPMENT

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Has the program of construction provided for in condition No. 12 of the order in council No. P.C. 422 of March 8, 1929, been submitted and approved by the minister?
2. If so submitted and approved, will the government table a copy?
3. If not submitted and approved, when will the government require its submission?
4. What is the meaning and purpose of said condition No. 12?
5. What constitutes the "works" referred to in line 1 of condition No. 11 of said order in council?
6. What constitutes the "works" referred to in line 1 of condition No. 13 of said order in council?
7. What constitutes the "works" referred to in line 1 of condition No. 14 of the said order in council?
8. Have the engineer or engineers referred to in condition No. 14 of the said order in council been appointed by the government, if so, when and what are their names, what are their duties in respect to: (a) the canal; (b) works to be constructed in the St. Lawrence river?
9. Why were fixed spans permitted as set out in condition No. 10 of said order in council if the canal is to be used for navigation purposes?
10. (a) Has the province of Quebec executed and the Dominion government accepted the agreement referred to in condition No. 24; (b) if this agreement has been executed and accepted, will the government table a copy?
11. (a) Have the plan and detailed construction provided for in condition No. 11 of said order in council been submitted and approved of by the minister; (b) if so approved, will the government table a copy?
12. Will the government procure from the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited (a Dominion company) and table the list of shareholders of said corporation?

Mr. BENNETT: I think it well to say to the hon. member for Acadia that during the week we shall endeavour to work out an answer to this question. Without giving offence, may I say that the departments do not undertake to construe the meaning to be given to the word "works." I think he will quite readily understand that the administrative side of government should not undertake to exercise the functions of the judicial branch, so we cannot answer those questions asking what meaning is put upon the word "works."

Mr. SPEAKER: Answered.

Mr. BENNETT: In part.

Mr. GARDINER: May I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that you declared this question answered, but the Prime Minister answered only in regard to questions 5, 6 and 7. If you turn over the page, there are other questions having no relation to what the Prime Minister answered, and I ask that those be permitted to stand and be answered at some future time.

Mr. BENNETT: I said "in part." The hon. gentleman did not hear my observation.

Mr. SPEAKER: Question No. 4 answered in part and allowed to stand.

AUSTRALIAN TREATY

Mr. LAFLECHE:

1. Is the treaty between Canada and Australia still in force?
2. If so, when will it expire?

Mr. BENNETT:

1. Yes.
2. The Australian Trade Agreement Act, 1925, provides that the governor in council, upon giving six months' notice to the government of the Commonwealth of Australia of his intention so to do, may order and direct that the tariff concessions extended to Australia by that act shall cease and determine.

L'ASSOMPTION-MONTCALM TESTED AREA

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. Does the Department of Agriculture intend to establish a reserve zone against bovine tuberculosis, in the county of L'Assomption-Montcalm?

2. If so, when will said zone be established, and will it include the whole county?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. Yes.

2. The area will cover the whole county but the department is not yet in a position to state definitely when the test will commence.

MR. FORSYTH—NATIONAL REVENUE DEPARTMENT

Mr. DUGUAY:

1. Has Mr. Forsyth, of the collection branch of the National Revenue department, resigned?

2. If so, when, and who will replace him?

3. Was Mr. Forsyth a lawyer?

4. Do the duties of this position require some legal knowledge?

5. If there is a substitute to Mr. Forsyth, is he a lawyer, ex-service man, an employee of the department from some other branch?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Yes.

2. April 14, 1931. A. A. McGrory.

3. No.

4. Yes.

5. Lawyer, ex-service man, employed in Income Tax division, Department of National Revenue.

QUEBEC FRUIT INSPECTOR

Mr. LAFLECHE:

What is the name of the fruit inspector for the province of Quebec, and does this man speak both languages?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There are a number of fruit inspectors employed in different parts of the province of Quebec, but Mr. R. E. Robinson is the district fruit and vegetable inspector for eastern Ontario and Quebec. He speaks both languages.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SALARIES OF OFFICIALS

Mr. CAMPBELL:

1. How many officials are there in the service of the Canadian National Railways drawing salaries of $15,000 per year and upwards?

2. What are their names, the position occupied and the salary of each?

3. What was the expense account of each, including the president, for the past year?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MANION:

1. 35.

2. The Canadian National railway management does not consider it in the interests of the railway to publish such information.

3. Answered by No. 2.

MR. RODOLPHE DUPUIS

Mr. DESROCHERS:

1. Was Rodolphe Dupuis appointed to the position of pensions advocate at Ottawa?

2. If so, when was he appointed?

3. By whom was he recommended?

4. Amongst his recommendations, were there any from ex-service men's associations?

5. What was Mr. Dupuis' military service in Canada, England and France?

6. For how long did he serve in each case, and in what capacity?

7. Does Mr. Dupuis' name appear in the Canadian army list?

8. Were there any other applicants for the position?

9. If so, were any of these applicants ex-service men with overseas military records?

Mr. MacLAREN:

1. Yes.

2. 1st March, 1931.

3. The Canadian Legion, the Hon. Arthur Sauvé, M.P., and Mr. Louis Coté, K.C.

4. Answered by No. 3.

5 and 6. Service in Canada only.

Non-permanent active militia service. Appointed Lieutenant, 70th Regiment, 9-5-15.

Reappointed reconstituted Regiment de Hull and finally retired 11-10-22.

Canadian expeditionary force service. Appointed 230th Battalion, C.E.F., 10-4-16.

Appointed technical lieutenant 7-5-17.

Unable to accept this appointment and struck off strength, having resigned, 8-5-17.

Attached 2nd Depot Battalion, Eastern Ontario Regiment, 17-5-18.

Unable to accept appointment, due to administration of Military Service Act. (Appointment cancelled).

7. No.

8. Yes.

9. Yes.

MR. J. A. HAMEL

Mr. BELEC:

1. Is J. A. Hamel, bailiff of Maniwaki, Quebec, in the employ of the Department of National Revenue?

2. If so, when was he appointed, by whom recommended and what salary does he receive?

3. Did the department have some trouble with him, and if so, was an inquiry held?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Yes.

2. Mr. Hamel was appointed the 2nd May, 1930, as an acting customs excise enforcement officer, without salary, on the recommendation of the late Mr. F. W. Cowan, Chief, Customs Excise Preventive service.

3. It was verbally intimated that a quantity of seized alcohol was being improperly disposed of, but upon investigation it was found that there were no good grounds for the statement. The officer was also instructed to ascertain if a seized Nash coupe had been sold to the highest tenderer. He found that it had. Proceeds were remitted to the department.

GASPE RAILWAY TERMINUS

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the Right Honourable Prime Minister and the Honourable Minister of Railways received a petition from the municipalities of the county of Bonaventure, protesting against the change of the terminus of the Gaspe railway from Matapedia, Quebec, to Campbellton, New Brunswick, and what action was taken, if any?

2. Did Sir Henry Thornton receive a visit from a deputation on this subject during the present week?

3. If so, who composed the deputation and what was the result of the interview?

Mr. MANION:

1. In consequence of petitions and correspondence received by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways and Canals, Sir Henry Thornton was requested to defer action until people of Matapedia had had opportunity to present their case to the management.

2. Yes.

3. Hon. Eugene Paquet, Bonaventure; Alex. Pratt, J. H. Adams, and George Lynch, Matapedia; J. A. H. Larue, Amqui; George M. Kempffer, New Carlisle; Thomas Maher, Quebec; John Ahearn, Montreal.

As a result of the interview the matter stands for further consideration.

BULL CLUB POLICY

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron):

1. How many animals have the Department of Agriculture bought and placed with farmers' clubs under the minister's new bull club policy between October 1, 1930, and April 1, 1931?

2. Who purchased these animals, and what prices were paid?

3. From whom were these animals purchased?

4. Were said animals purchased by private sale or under public auction?

5. What is the breed and ages of the animals purchased?

6. Give the constituency, names and addresses of the individuals or clubs with whom these animals have been placed.

7. Does this policy apply to all parts of Canada, if not, to what districts or sections in Canada does it apply?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. None.

2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7. See answer to No. 1.

SWINE BREEDING

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron):

1. How many sows have been bought, bred and sold to farmers under the minister's swine policy between October 1, 1930, and April 1, 1931?

2. Who were said sows purchased from?

3. What prices were paid?

4. What percentage of these sows bred and placed with farmers have proven to be pregnant?

5. To what sections of Canada does this swine policy apply?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. 1,275 sows.

2. Maritime provinces: Maritime Live Stock Marketing Board. Quebec: Canadian Co-operative Live Stock Producers Ltd.; Canada Packers Limited; Charles F. Mitchell; U. Lauzon; Maher & Roberts. Ontario: United Farmers of Ontario; Canada Packers Limited, Toronto; J. B. Shields, Toronto; G. & R. J. Cook, Toronto; Dunn & Levack, Toronto; Rice & Whaley, Toronto; Dumarts, Ltd., Kitchener; J. M. Schneider & Sons, Kitchener; Saskatchewan—Moose Jaw and Regina: Saskatchewan Co-operative Livestock Producers Ltd.; Swifts Limited; Live Stock Pool; L. Willows; Dewey Gardner. Prince Albert: Burns Limited, Milne; Saskatchewan Co-operative Livestock Producers Ltd. Saskatoon: Provincial government; Weiller & Williams; Claude Campbell Comm. Co Ltd. Melfort: A. Dobson; H. J. Robson; Saskatchewan Co-operative Livestock Producers Ltd. British Columbia and Alberta—Calgary: Adams, Wood & Weiller, Calgary; Alberta Co-operative Livestock Producers Ltd.; Parslow & Denoon; Burns & Company; Union Packing; Swift Canadian Company; J. Walls. Edmonton: Weiller & Williams Co. Ltd.; Claude Campbell Comm. Co. Ltd.; O. A. Brown; Alberta Co-operative Livestock Producers Ltd.

3. Market prices.

4. Estimated 90 per cent to 95 per cent.

5. This policy applies to all the provinces.

PEACE RIVER CENSUS OFFICIALS

Mr. BUCKLEY:

1. Who was appointed census commissioner or commissioners for the electoral division of Peace River?

2. By whom were they appointed?

3. What are their ages, occupation and residence?

4. What salary is paid?

5. What persons were appointed by them as census enumerators in each district or subdistrict of the said electoral district?

Mr. STEVENS:

1. Mr. R. C. Fitton for Peace River North and Mr. Alfred Koch for Peace River South.

2. By the Hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

3. No information as to Mr. Fitton's age. Occupation: farm lands, real estate, notary public. Residence: Spirit River, Alberta. No information as to Mr. Koch's age. Occupation: barrister-solicitor. Residence: Edson, Alberta.

4. They receive an allowance of $600 each to cover organization expenses and for viseing of the returns made by the enumerators; checking them and forwarding to Ottawa; verification of enumerators' accounts and the general supervision of the census within the district over which they are appointed as commissioner the following rates are provided: 1 cent for each name on the "population" schedule; 3 cents for each "agricultural" schedule; 1 cent for each entry on the "animal and animal products, not on farm" schedule; 1 cent for each record of blind and deaf persons; 1 cent for each record of merchandising and service establishments.

5. No appointments have been made as yet.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

BRITISH COLUMBIA PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. Are there employees being sent from outside of British Columbia to work on Dominion government work in British Columbia, by the national parks of Canada?
2. Will the government consider giving the preference for this work to those unemployed resident in British Columbia?
3. Will the government consider giving the preference to ex-service men on work on the Dominion government highway, known as the Big Bend road in British Columbia?
4. What opportunities will be given ex-service men to earn a livelihood on this Dominion government work, if any?

TARIFF BOARD

RESOLUTION TO PROVIDE FOR THE CONSTITUTION, FUNCTIONS, DUTIES AND SALARIES

On the notice of motion:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure for the appointment of a tariff board, to prescribe the constitution, functions and duties of the board, and to provide for the salaries to be paid the members, officers and employees of the board.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The notice of motion standing in my name since May 6 with respect to the constitution of a tariff board, I desire now to move, seconded by Mr. Stevens. This resolution has been submitted to His Excellency the Governor General; it has been approved by him, and is recommended to the favourable consideration of the house. It provides merely for the constitution, functions and duties of a tariff board. On the second reading of the bill, an adequate explanation will be given.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is there a bill coming?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the bill is ready.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the motion for consideration to-morrow?

Mr. BENNETT: This notice has been standing on the order paper since the 6th May. Is it necessary to make a further motion that we should go into committee on another day? I have seen different practices in the house and a moment ago I was discussing the matter with the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). As the matter stands, the notice has been on the order paper for eight days, and when it is said that consideration must be given on another day, it seems to me that the practice is certainly a waste of time.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think we should go ahead.

Mr. BENNETT: I am only desirous that the practice should be settled, because clearly I could not give notice to-day for consideration to-morrow, for that would not be ample time; but when I have given eight days' notice on the order paper, it seems to me that to move now for consideration to-morrow, is only moving now what was done in writing on the 6th May. I mention this only for the purpose of having the practice cleared up.

Mr. DUFF: The question is one of assent.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a question only of practice.

Mr. SPEAKER: Notwithstanding the fact that the motion has been on the order paper since the 6th May, the actual notice of it is given to-day. Standing order No. 60 appears to govern the case. It reads:

If any motion be made in the house for any public aid or charge upon the people, the consideration and debate thereof may not be presently entered upon, but shall be adjourned until such further day as the house thinks fit to appoint; and then it shall be referred to a committee of the whole house, before any resolution or vote of the house do pass thereupon.

I think the resolution comes within that description.

Mr. BENNETT: If Your Honour thinks it comes within that description, well and good. My desire was only that the practice should be settled. It seems to be a needless waste of public time to put upon the order paper a notice a week in advance and then move it. This is not public aid or supply; this is merely a public bill involving the expenditure of public money and it therefore must be preceded by a resolution. Whatever the practice is, I desire to have it settled, and that is the reason why I now bring the matter to the attention of the house.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I imagine there will be no objection to proceeding with the next stage to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might point out to my right hon. friend that at any time since he put the notice on the order paper he might simply have said that to-morrow he would proceed with the resolution.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To preserve the rule is to the advantage of everyone because it ensures at least one day's consideration of an important matter in advance.

Mr. BENNETT: I have had in mind what the right hon. gentleman says, but as the custom of the house is, preceding adjournment, to ascertain the business to be taken up next day, I cannot see that the purpose that is apparently in mind is not served in the manner indicated. That is the only reason why I bring it to the attention of the house although it seems to me that some of these rules are archaic. I remember this matter came up once before and as it did so, I desire to have settled definitely what course the house wishes to pursue with respect to it. I shall be governed by the ruling of the Speaker in that regard, although I cannot think this is one of the cases that come within the rule at all, because it is not a matter of public aid. The Speaker, however, having so ruled, we shall take the matter up to-morrow.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But with the assent of the house—

Mr. BENNETT: I do not want to proceed in that way. I therefore move:

That the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure for the appointment of a tariff board, to prescribe the constitution, functions and duties of the board, and to provide for the salaries to be paid the members, officers and employees of the board.

Motion agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): I wish to ask the Acting Minister of Labour whether the local governments cooperating with the federal authority in the expenditure of money under the Unemployment Relief Act are required to make returns in detail of their expenditures? For instance, is the government of New Brunswick required to make a return in detail, submitting the pay sheets, with respect to work done under this act on roads and bridges?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): The practice that has been followed where work is being done by the Dominion and the provinces is to have a statement from the province concerned, certified to by its provincial treasury and sworn to by its proper officers, stating in every instance that the amount certified to and sworn to by such declaration has been spent pursuant to the act and in accordance with the agreement. It has not been the practice to go into further detail, the department accepting such certification and proof as being correct and proper from each province.

Mr. VENIOT: There are no pay sheets submitted?

Mr. GORDON: No.

DOMINION CONVERSION LOAN

NO CHANGE TO BE MADE IN CLOSING DATE FOR APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I think I should say to the house that in view of the fact that the response received to the invitation to exchange securities for the conversion loan of 1931 has for the first three days so greatly exceeded our expectations, and in view of the further fact that small holders throughout the country are just beginning to send in their applications, and cables are being received from Great Britain and other overseas countries where some of these securities are held, we have concluded that it would be only fair to give every person a reasonable opportunity to convert his bonds, and therefore the date named for the closing of the loan, the 23rd of May, will not at the present moment be changed.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION DURING PRESENT SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): I desire to ask the Prime Minister a question, based on a speech delivered by Mr. Val Switzer, provincial organizer for the Conservative party in the province of Manitoba. Speaking at Dauphin on May 10, he is reported thus:

> With regard to the old age pension subject, Mr. Switzer said that the premier had not repudiated his election pledges, but that it was a question whether he would bring down the legislation at the present session or at a subsequent one.

The question I wish to ask the right hon. gentleman is whether he can inform the house whether the legislation will be brought down at this session or subsequently.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in order that this house may preserve some semblance of dignity, may I point out that such a question as has just been put is wholly improper on the orders of the day. Had the hon. gentleman desired to ask the question that he did, it was wholly unnecessary for him to precede it with a statement from a newspaper as to what somebody else had said somewhere in Manitoba. The question will not be answered.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not think the right hon. the Prime Minister has any right to accuse me of violating the rules of this house or lowering its dignity. There is no member whose conduct in this house has been more dignified than my own. I have my rights as a member representing a constituency in this house, and I say that the Prime Minister has no right to speak as he did.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING): (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask the Prime Minister, so that there may be no mistake about the form, is it the intention of the government to introduce any legislation this session with respect to old age pensions, and if so, what legislation?

Mr. BENNETT: That will be answered in due course.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INQUIRY RESPECTING APPOINTMENT OF CHIEF OF PREVENTIVE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri): May I ask the Acting Minister of National Revenue if the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. F. W. Cowan, chief of the preventive service, has been filled; and if not, when it will be filled?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Acting Minister of National Revenue): The hon. gentleman will have to allow that question to stand. I have no personal information with respect to the matter, but I shall make inquiries.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): But you know that Mr. Cowan is dead?

Mr. CAHAN: Since I have been acting minister of that department I suppose I have one hundred or more things coming before me every day. I do not remember distinctly that particular matter of his replacement having been brought to my attention, but I shall make inquiries. In any case it is a matter with respect to which notice should be given, especially to an acting minister who has to make inquiry of his officials as to facts which are not within his personal knowledge.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PERSONNEL OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): May I ask the hon. minister who represents the Minister of Labour in this house who are the delegates and advisers who are going to represent Canada at the International Labour Congress to be held before the end of this month. If the hon. gentleman has not the information at hand, I should like to have an answer to-morrow.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): I am not prepared to answer the question now, but I shall make inquiries and give an answer to-morrow.

ROYAL GRAIN COMMISSION

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF REPORT OF SIR JOSIAH STAMP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Some ten days ago I asked the Prime Minister when we might expect the tabling of the Stamp report. The Prime Minister replied on that occasion that it would be some ten days thence, but probably he would make a statement prior to that time. I wonder if he is now in a position to make that statement.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The Stamp report will be tabled just as soon as a cable is received from Sir Josiah Stamp. I had prepared a precis of the report, but it was thought undesirable to present it to the house until Sir Josiah Stamp had himself seen the final proof of the report which he had completed before he left America.

SMITHFIELD BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. FRASER (Northumberland): May I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) if he is now in a position to inform me whether it is the intention of his department to replace the Smithfield bridge on the Murray canal?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I did look up that matter some time ago, and my recollection is that the engineers do not recommend that this bridge be replaced; I say that subject to correction. If the hon. member will put his question on the order paper, I shall be able to give him a definite answer.

RIVIERE DU LOUP STATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): May I answer a question that was asked by the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) a day or so ago with regard to the station at Riviere du Loup? He asked me to give, on the orders of the day, the dates of the agreements that had been made between the different departments and the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National Railways as to the extra works which these railway companies were doing under the Unemployment Relief Act. I wish to say that the report on the Unemployment Relief Act was tabled six weeks ago and gives all those details. I mention that in order that the hon. member may have time to study it and have his material ready when next my estimates come up.

PEACE RIVER OUTLET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. OLOF HANSON (Skeena): I do not like to trouble the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) but I would like to ask if he has the report concerning the Peace River-Pacific outlet, and if so when it will be tabled.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The report for which my hon. friend has asked is of a provincial nature, and I do not know that I can obtain it. The provincial government has been discussing it. I suggest to the hon. member that he ask the provincial government to supply him with a copy. I might inform him that they have not supplied us with one.

Mr. BENNETT: They paid for it, not we.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): I do not wish to appear to be in a hurry, but five or six weeks ago I asked for certain returns. Probably it was longer ago than that. Up to the present time they have not been submitted. I have before me a list of the returns six in number to which I referred. We are going on with the estimates. The estimates to which these returns refer may be taken up any day and I will be deprived of the information I desire. The Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) is not in his seat, and for that reason I call the attention of the Prime Minister to these facts. The returns referred to are the following:

Dismissal of postmasters from September 1, 1930 to opening of house.

All papers connected with dismissal of postmaster at Lakeville, New Brunswick.

Papers, etc., connected with mail contract between Sonier office and Tracadie, New Brunswick.

All papers connected with contract, Hatfield rural route.

All correspondence touching payment of fish bounties in Gloucester county.

Correspondence relating to appointment of preventive officers at Campbellton, New Brunswick.

I do not wish to appear impatient but I would like to have the returns as soon as possible.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I will see that the matter is brought to the attention of the proper minister, I think however, the period of time which has elapsed since the passing of the motions is somewhat shorter than my hon. friend has intimated.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. BENNETT: The list of dismissals of postmasters is very difficult to supply because of the fact that the character of the partisanship is becoming so much more apparent that the list changes every day in consequence of the additions which have to be made to it.

Mr. VENIOT: For the information of the Prime Minister may I add that I did not say—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: That is not very dignified.

Mr. VENIOT: For the information of the Prime Minister may I explain that he did not understand my request. I did not say that a period of six weeks had elapsed—

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say there was a period of six weeks.

Mr. VENIOT: —between the time the motion was passed and the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say anything about six weeks.

Mr. VENIOT: I said between the present and the time I made my application.

Mr. SPEAKER: The matter is not one for debate.

Mr. VENIOT: Surely—

Mr. SPEAKER: The matter has been called to the attention of the government, and further debate is not necessary.

Mr. VENIOT: But surely I am allowed to explain.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister gave an undignified answer.

Mr. SPEAKER: This matter does not require debate. The matter brought up by the hon. member is perfectly clear to the whole house.

Mr. VENIOT: But a mistake was made and a misunderstanding has arisen.

Mr. SPEAKER: I hesitate to call the hon. member to order, but I must remind him that at the present time he is out of order.

Mr. VENIOT: All right, Mr. Speaker, but I shall bring it up again.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): May I remind the Prime Minister that he was kind enough to promise to expedite the tabling of one or two small returns for which I asked some months ago.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. NEILL: I think the Prime Minster did not hear me.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Yes, I did.

Mr. NEILL: Some time ago the Prime Minister was kind enough to promise that he would expedite the tabling of some returns in connection with the Department of Fisheries.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The promise still stands.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend understands that the minister has been ill, and as a result has been out of the city. I will look into the matter and see if I can obtain a report to-morrow.

RESTIGOUCHE RIVER BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): The legislatures of New Brunswick and Quebec having agreed each to pay one third of the cost of the interprovincial bridge over the Restigouche river between the provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) if the matter has been called to his attention. Because of the fact that the matter is of an urgent nature I know the minister will give it his attention.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): I am sorry I cannot to-day give my hon. friend the answer which he desires. However, I shall investigate the matter and be prepared to answer to-morrow.

CANADIAN HIGH COMMISSIONER

REPORT OF SPEECH DELIVERED BY HON. G. HOWARD FERGUSON AT LEEDS, ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to appear to be, as the French say, trop exigeant in the matter of a question I asked some days ago. I would like to ask if the Prime Minister has received, since I brought the matter to the attention of the house, the official report of Hon. Mr. Ferguson's speech, made on April 28 at Leeds, and if so, will the Prime Minister lay it on the table of the house.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any such official report.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Last night at the adjournment the Prime Minister intimated that among other matters we would proceed to-day with the estimates. Would he inform the house what department will be considered?

Mr. BENNETT: Trade and Commerce, and then Railways.

Mr. MANION: No, Public Works.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, Public Works.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Those are the only two departments to be taken up to-day?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, Public Works and Railways.

EXCISE TAX ON CIGARETTES AND TOBACCO

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): I had intended asking a question of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman). With reference to a question asked by me and answered on May 4, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in answer to queries 3 and 4 I find the notation on page 1234 of Hansard that the questions——will be answered by the Department of National Revenue.

I wish to advise the Acting Minister of National Revenue that I have not as yet received the information.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

The Canada Grain Act, including management, operation, maintenance and equipment of elevators, administration of, $2,681,000.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): There was a question before the committee in regard to certain transactions by the board of grain supervisors, and by the wheat board, in the years 1917, 1918 and 1919. This question arose out of certain letters which passed between a gentleman named Whiteside and the minister of the day, Sir George Foster. As a matter of fact, the more one searches and looks into this matter at this late date, the more one is puzzled to know just why the matter has been stirred up in the way it has, because it must be clear to members of the committee that it is very difficult for the officers of the department, thirteen or fourteen years after the events have happened, and it having been assumed for the last ten years that the matter was closed and ended, to place their fingers on all the records, particularly when those records were very largely in the hands of the two boards.

However, I have here a statement regarding the board of grain supervisors, audited by George A. Touche & Company, which shows that the business of the board was very properly handled and all the funds accounted for. Such amount as may have been left, and the records of the board, were handed over to the wheat board which followed. Then in turn the wheat board completed its business in 1921 and there was printed and supplied by order of parliament in that year, although I have not the exact date, a complete report of the wheat board, with financial statement. This brought the matter to a finality, and showed a certain sum, approximately half a million dollars, left in the consolidated revenue fund. Under order in council the government which preceded this government paid out to the western provinces $560,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: And to the eastern provinces as well.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, to all the provinces. I have the figures here. The order in council is P.C. 193, dated 7th February, 1925, and the moneys were paid out as follows:

Saskatchewan	$284,200
Manitoba	128,800
Alberta	112,000
Ontario	26,600
Quebec	6,440
British Columbia	1,960

This memorandum indicates that a further sum of $175,000 was sent to the Department of Finance and is still in hand, less a small amount which was deducted for certain expenses, leaving a net amount of $173,235.53. Very briefly that is the outcome of these transactions.

Mr. TOTZKE: Before the minister leaves those figures I should like to ask a question. He said there was some amount transferred by the board, which was in charge in 1917 and 1918, to the wheat board in 1919. Can he tell us how much that was?

Mr. STEVENS: There was remitted to the receiver general at that time $428,781.94. That was the cash in hand, but the records and books and the other paraphernalia were turned over to the wheat board.

Mr. TOTZKE: No money was turned over to the wheat board?

Mr. STEVENS: No. I notice there was a small item of about $500 paid to the Royal Bank of Canada at Winnipeg, which was a small amount held against some local account.

Mr. BROWN: So that $428,000 was actually the proceeds of the transactions that had been carried on with those two crops?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. VALLANCE: Then I should like to ask the minister, in view of the fact that $428,000 was turned over from the operations of the 1917-18 crop by the wheat supervisors, what was meant by the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) when he stated there was no profit made?

Mr. STEVENS: I think I can very easily explain that to my hon. friend. Certain very small charges were made by the board of grain supervisors for the handling and storage of the grain. They had a revenue, according to this statement, which arose from a small assessment on all grain which was exported, and which was used to cover their expenditures, amounting to $7,302,000. That was the revenue from the handling of 350,000,000 bushels of wheat. Then they had a domestic assessment of $3,017,420, or a total income of $10,320,161.06 under that head. This, of course, was spent in carrying charges for street wheat and for wheat held by or for flour mills. The amount expended in this way was $7,211,112.77. The Department of Agriculture seed grain purchasing committee received $146,000, and there were ordinary disbursements and expenses.

The administration expenses were very small. I commend these figures to the attention of the house, as they are about as good a guarantee as could be secured of the manner in which the business was done. Administration expenses amounted to $183,727.37. No salaries were paid to the members of the board, but wages were paid to employees, clerks and so on. The board secured their offices from the Winnipeg grain exchange, and paid nothing for rental as far as the head office was concerned. Travelling expenses amounted to about $25,000; there were rentals outside of head office; telephones and telegrams amounted to $6,000, and so on. A number of miscellaneous small expenses make a total of $183,000, so that is an indication of a very moderate expenditure in that regard. After all this work was done there remained the sum to which I have referred, which was handed to the receiver general.

Now I should like to make just a brief statement with regard to a report from Doctor Magill which we have succeeded in finding, made in March, 1920, with regard to the board of grain supervisors. Perhaps before I refer to that I should draw attention to a condition which obtained in 1916-17. In 1916 there was a large crop, and there was a considerable amount of tough grain which it was very difficult to market. I think I am right in saying it was the winter of 1916 and 1917. And when the overseas purchasing countries were drawing their usual purchases of high grade Nos. 1, 2 and 3, there was a shortage of these grades for their purposes. There was a tendency for the market to be cornered. But there was in Canada a very large quantity of this tough or off-grade grain. It was in connection with that particular work, I believe, that the hon. member for South Winnipeg, who was then a member of the government, rendered such excellent service while in the old country. I think it was largely through his efforts that satisfactory arrangements were made with the overseas purchasing countries to take this grain off our hands. I recall, as I believe he will bear me out, that some of the purchasers over there—and, mark you, at this time they were largely government purchasers, later on solely such—were afraid to risk the transportation of this damp or tough grain to the old country under war conditions, and naturally they were looking for the usual high grade wheat from Canada. After negotiations by the Canadian government they undertook to take this wheat off our hands, and they did take it at an excellent price to the producers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What was the price?

Mr. STEVENS: The price was around $2 a bushel.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But what was the price paid by the purchasing commission on the other side? Was it not $2.21 plus cost of delivery in United Kingdom?

Mr. STEVENS: The prices varied. I have here a statement prepared by the bureau of statistics, showing the average price of wheat in Chicago and in Winnipeg. I shall give these statements in detail to Hansard, and in the meantime, if the committee so desires, I will quote a few figures. For No. 1 Manitoba northern the average price in 1917, Fort William and Port Arthur basis, was 220·5. In Chicago the average for that year was 2·278. In 1918 the average in Winnipeg was 222·1 and in Chicago 2·209. In 1919 the average in Winnipeg was 221·0 and in Chicago 2·35—2·39.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is 1918, is it not?

Mr. STEVENS: That is 1919.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In 1919 it was under the old wheat board, you know.

Mr. STEVENS: Of course, it was a fixed price in both countries. These are the figures that have been given. In 1919 there was a free market in Chicago.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: And in Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: But in regard to this last figure it must be recalled that, as mentioned the other day, there was a second distribution which brought the Canadian price up to 2·63 or 2·64. That is about correct.

Mr. BROWN: The initial payment was 2·15 that year.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. These are the official figures which I have given. I will hand the statements in to Hansard:

Monthly Prices of Wheat No. 1 Manitoba Northern, 1917-1919

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister has given us everything except what we want. What we wish to know is how much wheat was sold those two years and what it brought in the British market. That is really the crux of the whole matter.

Mr. STEVENS: The amount sold was 350,000,000 bushels.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is about right, for the two years.

Mr. STEVENS: That is the amount that was sold. I can give only what we have from the board of grain supervisors. I have the report in detail, and therein the statement is made that they marketed:

> The balance of the wheat crop of 1916 and the whole of the wheat crops of 1917 and 1918, making a total of 350,000,000 bushels.

The question my hon. friend has asked as to the total amount received by the board of grain supervisors is one which unfortunately I am unable to answer. There is no record in my department in that regard. The board of grain supervisors did not make any profit out of the wheat. They handled the grain and assessed a small charge to cover expenses —that is to say, administrative and handling expenses. That statement I have under my hand and from it I have already quoted. It is audited by George A. Touche & Company, and that is all they handled, so far as I can find. The settling of the purchases was made by the British government, through the Wheat Export Company, a public body. Settlement was made direct, through the usual channels, with the farmers here, who got the full amount, whatever it was, less the small assessment which was made. The assessed amount was the only sum handled by the board of grain supervisors. Does that clear the matter up?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am very sorry to say it does not. The government handled the farmers' grain in trust. It is true it was bought at a figure, but at the same time it was entrusted to the government to handle it and dispose of it to whatever body was purchasing wheat on the other side on behalf of the allies. And as was said the other day, we were quite satisfied to take a low price of $2.21 then because, if there was a residue, it was going to the benefit of the allies. But now there is a residue, in regard to which we desire to have a statement. True, it is not considerable, according to such records as we have so far seen; but it went into the federal treasury. Surely, with a large volume of produce like this, there must be some record. And as a matter of fact we have a record with respect to the volume; that is known through the bureau of statistics. But there must be some record also as to the amount of money realized for that grain. No one handling a commodity or a property in trust could be satisfied unless he furnished a record of the amount of money involved, and I do not think my hon. friend is himself satisfied with the report. There must be a report somewhere to correspond with that of 1919 which he has just read. After $428,000 has been handed over to the treasury, why should not the documents be available? There was an open market, and there was an advance payment made in 1919 of $2.15, the total being $2.63. I am speaking, of course, of the old wheat board; the board of grain supervisors was entirely another body. Now, I should like my hon. friend to give us the facts as to prices, together with any other documents bearing on the operations of the board of grain supervisors in 1917 and 1918. Why is there no record of that? It looks very mysterious to us.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is not doing justice either to himself or to myself.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Possibly not.

Mr. STEVENS: I would ask the committee to note this. I have avoided anything in the nature of the tu quoque argument; I have not asked, "Why didn't you do it"? May I call attention to the fact that from the close of the operations of the wheat board in 1920—their report was presented in 1921—down to nine months ago, my hon. friend was a member of the government in office during that period—the government that had all these things in their custody.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We had not any complaint except 1919.

Mr. STEVENS: The information in connection with forty-five cases was found to have been stored by the government of which my hon. friend was a member in a building down on Wellington street. As fas as I know, every scrap of paper which was used by the two boards is there. Surely it is not suggested that we, because of absolutely unsupported suggestions—

Mr. DONNELLY: They are not unsupported.

Mr. STEVENS: If my hon. friend will pardon me—unsupported suggestions should reopen this whole question and spend an unknown amount in the reexamination of these transactions. If any hon. member or other responsible person will come forward and say that of his own knowledge there are grounds for suspicion that everything is not correct, then parliament would be justified in considering the reopening of this question and having all the documents examined. The committee should not forget that I have here the report of the board of grain supervisors and the auditor's statement of the amount handled by the whole system, which was a system of control in all parts of the world. No dissatisfaction was expressed; as a matter of fact those few years were the most prosperous years we have ever experienced, if we eliminate the war period. It is now being suggested that without any evidence being produced this government, my department and my officials should be able to give a complete statement of the transactions of these two boards operating in western Canada with headquarters in Winnipeg. Let me read briefly from the report of the Canadian wheat board, season 1920.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is the wheat board of 1919?

Mr. STEVENS: That is the title upon this parliamentary document, printed by the king's printer by order of parliament. In this parliamentary record we have a history of the whole business, the transition from one to the other.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand those are the records handed over by the board of grain supervisors to the wheat board of 1919.

Mr. STEVENS: It discusses the appointment of the wheat board. It refers to the two years previous wherein the transaction had been carried on under the control of the government and the board of grain supervisors. It discusses the armistice; it deals with the activities of the grain corporation in the United States under Mr. Julius Barnes, and it gives the plan of the organization of the board. There is one heading entitled "A Thorny Path", so I do not imagine it was all a bed of roses. It discusses the relations with the United States, seed grain, prospects for selling crops, the course of the world's demand, the decontrol of flour, the payment of dividends on participating certificates, the question of spread, branch offices of the board, and so on. At the end of the report is the financial statement which indicates the expenses of the board. This statement does not give all the figures, that is, the total amount received and paid out, but it does show that there was a balance of some $65,000,000, which amount was dispersed under regulations 119 and 127 at the rate of 48 cents per bushel on 135,000,000 bushels.

Mr. TOTZKE: That is the balance from the wheat board?

Mr. STEVENS: I am speaking of the wheat board.

Mr. VALLANCE: We are agreed on that. I would point out that the minister is bringing forth new evidence, and I would again submit that because of that new evidence this whole thing should be referred to the committee on agriculture. This matter could be cleared up more easily in that way. We do not desire to take up the time of the committee in discussing this matter.

Mr. SPENCE: Why does not the hon. member tell us what is in his mind?

Mr. DONNELLY: I will tell the hon. member in a moment.

Mr. VALLANCE: It seems to me it would be easier, both for the minister and for his department, to handle this matter in the way suggested. I cannot understand why the minister can produce a report submitted by the grain supervisors which gives the volume but does not give a financial statement. He has been able to obtain that report; possibly he could obtain the financial statement from the same source.

Mr. LOUCKS: Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a suspicion in western Canada that a certain fund was left over, and I would like to answer the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) in that regard. The farmers of western Canada individually, and not the government received that $2.21 per bushel. As was pointed out by the hon. member for South Winnipeg, each farmer received about $2.21 at his station.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We all agree on that.

Mr. TOTZKE: The hon. member for South Winnipeg stated that the farmer got everything which was paid for the wheat.

Mr. STEVENS: So he did.

Mr. TOTZKE: Where did the surplus come from that is mentioned by the minister?

Mr. LOUCKS: With a volume running into hundreds of millions of bushels there will always be a surplus, and there was a surplus.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We agree on that.

Mr. LOUCKS: The suspicion as outlined by Mr. Whiteside is that instead of the government selling this wheat at $2.21 less an expenditure for handling, it was sold at around $3 per bushel, which created a surplus of millions of dollars.

Mr. VALLANCE: The Hon. Sir George Foster stated:

> The wheat was sold during the season of 1917 and 1918, as purchasers were found and, of course, for different prices owing to changes in the world's market price.

Mr. LOUCKS: That was on the basis of $2.21 for No. 1 northern; the lower grades would be at a different price.

Mr. VALLANCE: It was on the basis of $2.21 for No. 1 northern.

Mr. LOUCKS: If Mr. Whiteside's contention was right we would have millions of dollars of a surplus, but I do not think any hon. member of the opposition suggests that any such surplus exists. I received for my 1917-18 crop that amount, less a small expenditure, and I think most hon. members will agree with the statement that the farmers of western Canada as a whole received that amount less a small expenditure for handling.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The farmers got $2.63 in 1919 and the provinces received a refund on a pro rata basis from the late government aggregating about half a million dollars, resulting from an operating surplus by the wheat board.

Mr. LOUCKS: That was in 1919, under the wheat board.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Why should we not get it now for 1917 and 1918?

Mr. LOUCKS: Let us get this point clear. We cannot expect, as I have already indicated, to get now for 1917 and 1918 what was paid to us individually. When we marketed our wheat in 1917 and 1918, we got the whole proceeds of that crop, all we expected. Are hon. members not agreed on that?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. LOUCKS: I think we are agreed on it. I want to ask this question: If we did not get it, why should we wait twelve or thirteen years to raise the question?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Because we did not know of it until last fall.

Mr. LOUCKS: Will hon. members not agree with me that a man named Whiteside sent out a suggestion, let me say—he had no proof—

Mr. YOUNG: He had a letter from the minister.

Mr. LOUCKS: —that we had millions and millions of dollars in the treasury from the fact that wheat was sold at a profit of fifty or sixty cents a bushel. That is the contention Mr. Whiteside made.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is the point we want to clear up.

Mr. LOUCKS: That is where the whole suspicion lies in western Canada. Do hon. members not agree with me the suspicion is, as I have said, that the government profiteered on us in 1917?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We want the government to show they did not.

Mr. LOUCKS: Are we not agreed to take the explanation?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Let us conduct business in an orderly fashion. One member at a time should address the chair.

Mr. LOUCKS: The government could not show in dollars the amount of money involved in the sale of millions and millions of bushels because it never went into the treasury at all; it went to the farmers in 1917 and 1918. The government never handled that money at all.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. YOUNG: To whom was it paid?

Mr. LOUCKS: The money was paid to the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. YOUNG: Through what body?

Mr. LOUCKS: Through the trade. Through whatever elevator the farmer delivered his wheat to. That is one way it was paid at that time.

Mr. YOUNG: Was it not paid through the board of grain supervisors?

Mr. LOUCKS: Not at all.

Mr. TOTZKE: What did the trade sell the wheat at?

Mr. LOUCKS: At $2.21, I understand. As far as the individual was concerned, the money was paid to him in western Canada through whatever elevator the wheat was delivered to. If the minister will forget about 1919 and the wheat board and clear up the 1917 and 1918 transactions, the latter is what the dispute is over; there is no dispute over the 1919 crop at all. It is in regard to 1917 and 1918 that this man Whiteside says those profits were made that we did not get.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The problem resolves itself into this: the minister has before him and has already given to the house the total crop value for the years in question. He has also stated that the average price in those years was so much, but of course the minister knows very well the average price for a year does not in any way indicate the price received for the total crop; that would depend upon the quantity sold at various price levels throughout the year.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: And the grades.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes; and in order to get an accurate picture of the situation, one ought to be able to place before the committee the total sum received from the wheat. We can then deduct what the farmers got for the wheat and deduce whether or not there was any profit. Until that is settled, this will remain a cloud over the administration of that time. I submit to the minister that after all the requests are very reasonable; this is not being made a party question at all. All that hon. gentlemen to my right have asked is that the matter be referred to the committee where witnesses may be examined, documents tabled and facts ascertained. I strongly support them in that request. Even my hon. friend who belongs to the minister's own party, and who has just concluded his remarks, considered it fair that we should clear this matter up now. I think it should go to the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Would the minister clear up this point—it seems to me we are in doubt about it also? Did the board of grain supervisors actually handle the cash for the wheat, or was it handled through the trade for 1916, 1917 and 1918? Did they receive the money for the wheat and in turn pay it out to the farmers, or was the money handled by the trade, the board of grain supervisors merely supervising the matter and collecting certain handling fees?

Mr. STEVENS: As nearly as I can answer that question from the documents, the board of grain supervisors did not handle the money which was paid for the grain in 1917 and 1918. The board of grain supervisors, by a decision of the board, worked through the grain trade. The only sums that the board of grain supervisors handled were the sums to which I have referred and for which I hold in my hand an audited statement by George A. Touche & Company. The total amount handled by them was $10,478,000 for which they have accounted in every detail, with an audited statement from George A. Touche & Company Payments were made to the farmers by the trade through the usual channels. In his report Doctor Magill refers to that and says they had before them the option of two courses, if I am not mistaken, and that they adopted the course of working through the trade. Therefore, as far as I can see, the board did not directly handle the funds.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They must have handled some, when they had nearly half a million in overages, elevator fees, storage.

Mr. STEVENS: That was an assessment. Let us get that point clear and then I think we can get nearer to a solution of the matter. That was a small assessment they made upon all the grain they handled. Out of the proceeds of that assessment, plus certain earnings they made by investing their surplus holdings in that regard in certain securities, they got a total revenue of $10,478,000. Then they disbursed that. Most of it was disbursed for carrying charges and then there were certain administrative charges and so forth. That left them with the small amount, comparatively speaking, of $428,781, which was turned over to the receiver general. If my hon. friend will permit me, may I attempt to make the point clear that out of the handling of that wheat for those two years, the board of grain supervisors had $428,781 left. It was that, plus a small surplus from the wheat board, which constituted what was remaining in the hands of the government. The government in 1925—and my hon. friend was a member of the then government—disbursed that to the provinces in part, leaving still in the treasury $173,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: For possible outstanding claims.

Mr. STEVENS: There were no other funds left with the government than this. The records are, I think, clear on that point, unless hon. gentlemen go to the extent, which I do not think is reasonable, of having a reaudit of all the transactions of the board of grain supervisors and the wheat board. That I think all would agree would be a very foolish thing in the face of the evidence that we have before us, which I think is quite convincing that the matter was handled properly and effectively.

Mr. BROWN: There is one point that does not seem quite clear. We are told that all the money that the board of grain supervisors handled was that ten million dollars, but it has not been shown to the house yet who handled the money that was received from the sale of those 350,000,000 bushels. Who received that money when that wheat was sold?

Mr. GARDINER: Who sold the wheat? That is the first question that should be answered.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): One at a time, please.

Mr. GARDINER: Then I will go on. Was the board of grain supervisors responsible for selling the wheat, and for making the bargains? They bought our wheat in those two years, 1917 and 1918.

Mr. STEVENS: I suppose if I read a few pages of this file I could make it clearer, but will hon. gentlemen take my word for it when I summarize in this way.

The board of grain supervisors, acting for the government of the day in Canada, in collaboration with the government of Great Britain and other countries purchasing through them, arranged for the sale of the wheat, but the actual transaction, that is, the passing of the money to the farmers from the wheat export board, which represented the British government in Canada and the United States, was done through the regular channels, that is, through the elevator companies, and so forth. In the meantime the trading in futures on the Winnipeg grain exchange was shut down. The elevator companies, however, were still operating in the normal way, and the report shows that they cooperated very satisfactorily in this respect with the board of grain supervisors.

Let me repeat: The board of grain supervisors did not handle the money. They made the arrangements officially, representing the producers or vendors on this side, with the governments of the purchasing countries on the other side. The governments of the purchasing countries bought through the wheat exporting company, and they paid the farmers through the regular channels, namely, through the grain elevator companies and the grain handling companies of Canada. I wonder if that is clear.

Mr. BROWN: There is a point that is not clear yet. It is true that the farmer received that price of $2.21 a bushel. There was no question of our getting more out of it at that time, no thought of its being an initial or an interim payment. We received that money. Now somebody took charge of that wheat and sold it on the markets of the world, and the amount sold is stated at 350,000,000 bushels. We are told that that was handled by a grain exporting company. If they sold that wheat, according to the letter of Sir George Foster, at the market prices that prevailed from time to time, the proceeds from the sale of that wheat came to them, and no accounting of that money has since been given to anybody. It is true that we sold that wheat as farmers and took the price of $2.21 a bushel, and were given no reason to expect we were going to get any more, but we did think that when the government guaranteed us a price of $2.21, that wheat was going to the allies at that price, plus whatever handling expenses were necessary. That was our understanding of the matter. It now appears that that was not exactly what happened.

Mr. STEVENS: Oh yes.

Mr. BROWN: No, it is not, because according to the letter of Sir George Foster, the wheat was sold on the markets of the world at varying prices from time to time. There was an amount of 350,000,000 bushels sold, and we have no record of what was received for that wheat by the body that was handling the sale of it for the farmers of Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: I think that we are getting nearer to an understanding. My hon. friend has made one mistake. He said that the board of grain supervisors undertook to sell the wheat.

Mr. BROWN: No. I accept the minister's statement as to that.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend used that phrase, and I think that is where confusion is being caused in the minds of some. Let me read an extract from the report of Dr. Magill, which I think will at least assist in clearing up that point. He says:

> For the crop year of 1917 there was no difficulty in this respect. The allies needed the whole exportable surplus wheat of Canada. They were willing to buy the whole surplus at the price fixed—

Which was $2.21, I think.

> —and they gave a guarantee to that effect. In this respect wheat was in a different position from coarse grains.

That is 1917. Let us stop there for a moment. The allies, all of them, I imagine, represented through the wheat exporting company, undertook to take all our wheat and to pay a fixed price. Now what was the duty of Canada? One only, and that was to provide the mechanical means of getting that wheat to the allies. What did we do in that respect? We used all the existing machinery; physically, the elevators; from the financial point of view, the banks and the grain companies. The grain companies handled it just the same as they had done in any other year, but instead of going to the farmers in various localities and offering them a price, they paid a fixed price to all and that was the end of it, and the farmer got the full amount. The money was paid to him as he delivered his wheat at the station or at the car. That ended the transaction so far as Canada was concerned. The board of grain supervisors never touched the money. I again quote from the report of Dr. Magill:

> It was different with the crop of 1918. No guarantee was obtained from the representatives of the British royal commission with regard to the surplus of the crop of 1918, and when the armistice was signed there was considerable difficulty in selling the balance of wheat still remaining in Canada. Having, however, fixed a price for the wheat of 1918, and having arranged for the purchase of wheat from the farmer by the trade on that basis, a guarantee was necessary and it was given by the Dominion government.

That was in the year 1918. That guarantee was given in the absence of a guarantee by the British or allied governments, or the wheat exporting company. The Canadian government guaranteed that that price would be continued through the season to the farmer, and that was done. The report continues:

> Fortunately the allied countries needed the wheat, and in the end the balance of the crop of 1918 was sold at the fixed price.

That was the end of the activities of the Canadian government through the board of grain supervisors, so far as those two years are concerned. If there is any clearer way in which I can give it, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. BROWN: What the minister has said was done, is exactly what we thought was being done; I say that frankly. But it does not seem to harmonize with the statements upon which Mr. Whiteside acted. He understood from Sir George Foster that the wheat was sold at varying prices from time to time. There is that conflict of statement.

Mr. STEVENS: Suppose we look at Mr. Whiteside's letter again.

Mr. BROWN: So far as Mr. Whiteside personally is concerned, I never heard of him till I got down here at the beginning of the session.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think my hon. friends really wish to embarrass the government in this matter.

Mr. BROWN: No, we want to get the facts; that is all.

Mr. STEVENS: May I ask them in all fairness this question? I do not wish to reflect on Mr. Whiteside at all. He is a citizen of this country and, as Sir George Foster frequently states in his painstaking reply, he takes him to be an honest citizen looking for information. Sir George Foster, I repeat, painstakingly answered him, and anyone who peruses these letters will find the complete answer in the letters themselves, I am sure, because Mr. Whiteside deals with nothing but rumours or conjectures that are in his own mind.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, no.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is based upon Sir George's own letter.

Mr. STEVENS: No, no.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. VALLANCE: Let me read the quotation.

The CHAIRMAN: The minister is making a statement, and he should have a chance to finish it.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the hon. member give me the date of the—

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister will find the extract from the letter on page 1525 of Hansard.

Mr. STEVENS: That is in Hansard.

Mr. VALLANCE: It is Sir George's own statement.

Mr. STEVENS: What is the date?

Mr. VALLANCE: January 27, 1920. It was not ten or twelve years after. The letter states:

> The wheat was sold during the season of 1917 and 1918, as purchasers were found and, of course, for different prices owing to changes in the world's market price.

Sir George Foster, the then Minister of Trade and Commerce, must have had available all the information that the minister has to-day. He makes that statement emphatically, on which Whiteside bases his whole argument.

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot find that letter on this file.

Mr. BROWN: It is the letter which has been read by the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) that has led to all the confusion.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Anyone who knows of Mr. Whiteside knows that he is an authority on most subjects. If my memory serves me correctly this very subject was in the press of Saskatoon in the year 1920, 1921 or 1922. At that time hon. gentlemen opposite had an opportunity to go into the matter; they did not need to leave it until 1931.

Mr. BROWN: I want to protest against the doctrine which has been promulgated again and again in the house this session. It seems to be the opinion of hon. members opposite that because certain reforms were not enacted by the previous government we have no right at this time to advocate reform. So far as Mr. Whiteside is concerned, may I say I never heard of the gentleman until the beginning of this session. We are getting tired of the statements made by the Prime Minister and by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin and all—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Order, please.

Mr. BROWN: —on this subject generally.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member must confine himself to the item under discussion.

An hon. MEMBER: The matter is under discussion.

Mr. BROWN: I think my hon. friend will get the meaning of what I have said.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Pardon me, but that is not exactly the point either. My hon. friend will excuse me for saying so, but no complaint came before the previous government regarding the years 1917 and 1918. If the files show the contrary, let them be produced. We dealt only with complaints concerning 1919 overages, and that was settled by sending the money back to the provinces on a pro rata basis. What is the use of asking why we did not cure all the difficulties in 1917 and 1918 when as a matter of fact they never were brought before us? If any hon. member can show where it was brought to the attention of the previous government why does he not come across with the information now, instead of harking backwards and forwards. We did not settle the matter because there was no complaint made about it.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh yes, there was.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Why is it not settled now? Why do not hon. members opposite prove that it was placed before the late government? No protest was placed before us regarding 1917 or 1918. I want to point out another assurance Sir George Foster gave us. Replying to Mr. Whiteside he stated that if after the 1919 transactions under the wheat board were cleaned up there were any overages, they would be sent back to the farmers. Is that not right?

Mr. VALLANCE: Yes, that is right.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But was it? It was not Sir George Foster's fault if they were not sent back, I admit.

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Just a minute. A new government took office, and that new government, with Mr. Meighen at its head, seeing that the previous overages of 1917 and 1918 went back into the treasury, did the same in 1919. That action was contrary to the promise made by Sir George Foster. I am not holding Sir George Foster responsible, however; he had nothing to do with the 1919 overages when the time came for disposition. Those overages were put back into the treasury of Canada as they had been in the years 1917 and 1918. If hon. members opposite want to know, they may dig up the information and see for themselves.

Mr. BROWN: I am not criticizing the present government—

Mr. VALLANCE: And neither am I.

Mr. BROWN: No, we do not intend to criticize the present government. However, a situation has been reported, and we as representatives of the farmers want to get at the facts.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Even if it involves only $428,000.

Mr. BROWN: If I can go back to my constituency and say there is nothing in these rumours, I am content to do so. The minister must understand we are not criticizing him or any member of the government. He does not need the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan) to come to his defence.

Mr. STEVENS: I should like at this time to deal with the point raised by my hon. friend from South Battleford. My hon. friend has inferred—and I want to be as charitable as I can—that certain sums of money were held back and not distributed. I have told the house that those sums amounted to approximately half a million dollars. Why were they not sent back? I ask every sensible member in this house this question. How could half a million dollars be distributed among tens of thousands of farmers whose interests would be measured by the quantity of wheat they sold? What was done? There was about $60,000,000 over, and the wheat board distributed that $60,000,000 or $65,000,000 pro rata according to legitimate claims.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is for the 1919 crop.

Mr. STEVENS: That is what my hon. friend is speaking about. I think we had better clean these matters up as we go along. The hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell), the ex-Minister of Agriculture, has referred to a letter from Sir George Foster in which it was intimated that Mr. Whiteside has been assured of certain things. I will read the clause to which my hon. friend has referred:

> Now as to the year just passed, 1919, the Canadian wheat board was established with the same interests represented thereon. This board also is in the main giving its services to the country freely and without pay. Of course, clerks, etc., and managers have to be paid for the work they do, but that has to be done whether the marketing is done by the government or private traders, as you quite well understand. The farmers receive a stated amount as a first payment upon their wheat. This, of course, they receive whether the market price goes up or goes down. As in the case of the two preceding years the government, if the price goes down, will be liable for the deficit. If the price maintains its level or advances, the government nor any member thereof receive nothing of that amount.

Then, this is the part to which my hon. friend referred:

> After the expenses of marketing are paid, if there is any surplus, as I believe there will be, this is divided amongst the farmers who were the original sellers of the grain. That is under the arrangement, the farmers get all that the world's market price makes possible. He gets a first payment on his wheat on the basis of $2.15 No. 1 northern and gets his proportion of the surplus which may be left at the end of the transaction.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is not the reference I made. That refers to the years 1917 and 1918.

Mr. VALLANCE: No, that is 1919.

Mr. STEVENS: That is in regard to 1919, and it is a quotation from Sir George Foster's letter in which he gave the assurance to Mr. Whiteside.

Mr. VALLANCE: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: Let us clear the matter up. Did the wheat board and the government discharge that obligation? Yes, certainly they did.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There was still an overage of over half a million dollars and that was put into the treasury.

Mr. STEVENS: I am trying to get the matter down to a narrow point.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend is pinning himself down.

Mr. STEVENS: Usually my hon. friend from Melville is not so easily riled.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, I try to be fair.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend says there was still approximately half a million dollars left. We will agree to that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: The question narrows down to what was done with it; was it properly handled.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes—was'nt it?

Mr. STEVENS: I have an order in council in my hand passed in the year 1925.

An hon. MEMBER: There is no dispute about that, surely. We are satisfied with that.

Mr. STEVENS: If the committee is content that in so far as that surplus is concerned it was properly handled we will leave that matter alone.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, we have been pleading for that for two nights. Forget 1919.

Mr. DONNELLY: My hon. friend says that $400,000 was put into the general revenue and was not disturbed; that is what the hon. member for Melville refers to.

Mr. STEVENS: The amount of $428,000 was sent to the receiver general and my opinion is that it formed part of the total which was disbursed in 1926.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is for the year 1919.

Mr. VALLANCE: Might I ask—

Mr. STEVENS: Now, let us have it right. My deputy is unable to advise me whether or not that was included. However, for the sake of argument, or clarity, let us assume that it was not included in the total amount. Let us understand that it was still in the hands of the receiver general. I must make that answer subject to correction, because—

Mr. BROWN: It would be very interesting to have the facts.

Mr. STEVENS: —because my conviction is that it is part of the total which ultimately was distributed to the provinces and of which $173,000 still remains. I confess I do not know whether it was included or not.

Mr. YOUNG: I understand that a bargain was made with the allied governments that they were to have our wheat on a basis of $2.21 No. 1 northern, plus cost of handling.

Mr. VALLANCE: Yes.

Mr. YOUNG: That the farmer was to receive $2.21; that an assessment was made of so much per bushel to cover the cost of handling, which was paid by the allied governments, that this surplus of $428,000 is the residue of that assessment. Therefore it would be my opinion that this $428,000 does not belong to us at all but belongs to the allied governments.

Mr. VALLANCE: I am afraid I cannot agree with the hon. member for Weyburn. I think when Hansard is read to-morrow it will be found that the minister did read the statement that the $428,781 was handed over to the old wheat board. If that is so, the 1919 wheat board had a surplus of only about $200, because they had less than half a million left after their operations in 1919. When the minister gave the figures I understood him to say that the wheat board received $428,781, so they must have showed a surplus of less than $300.

Mr. STEVENS: I think we can clear up that point. I said that when the wheat board was organized in 1919 it took over the mechanism of the old board, largely the staff, office equipment and that sort of thing. It did not take over the $428,781; that was paid to the receiver general. I hope we have that clear.

Mr. DONNELLY: What became of it?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have been listening with a good deal of interest to the explanation of the minister. He has very clearly explained the transactions of 1917, which undoubtedly covered 1916 as well, but where did the $428,000 come from? If I understood his explanation, there was no surplus from the 1917 transaction, so the surplus must have come about in 1918.

Mr. STEVENS: I think my hon. friend was not in when that part of the discussion occurred. The $428,781 is a balance which was left over, not from the purchase or sale of wheat at all but from a fund which was set up by the board of grain supervisors through an assessment on all the wheat handled. The total amount of that fund was $10,478,000, which was disbursed in carrying charges, administration and so on. After their thirty-two months of administration they had left this sum of $428,781.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Which covers the whole thirty-two months?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: There is one point on which I am not quite clear. I understand that 350,000,000 bushels of wheat were handled, and according to the hon. member for South Winnipeg the British government agreed to buy that wheat at $2.21 per bushel. The question in my mind is this: Not all of that wheat was required by Great Britain for her own use; doubtless part of it was turned over to France and perhaps to Italy and other countries. Did those other countries pay more than $2.21 for their part of this 350,000,000 bushels? If they did pay more, does the minister know just what was paid?

Mr. STEVENS: I think no one in this country could answer that question categorically, but the evidence is all against any profit being made in that transaction, because the allies acted together. We have it in the record that the board of grain supervisors were acting with the allies, and Doctor Magill refers to it in that sense. I believe I am perfectly safe in saying that whatever price was paid by Great Britain was the price paid by Italy or France or whoever got a share of that wheat. I think there is no question of that.

Now we may be able to clear up this point of the half million dollars. We know that the board of grain supervisors placed in the hands of the receiver general the sum of $428,781 from the transactions of 1917-18. In 1919, the year the wheat board was in operation, the following resolution was adopted unanimously at a general meeting of that board held on the 11th of August:

Whereas the board's financial statement shows a surplus of $569,016.13;

Resolved that a cheque be issued for the sum of $560,000 in favour of the Receiver General, to be forwarded through Sir George Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce.

And be it further resolved that the Canadian wheat board, in general meeting assembled, strongly recommends to the Dominion government that the above amount be distributed to the provincial governments pro rata, on the basis of the quantity of wheat delivered by the producers in each of the said provinces to the board, such moneys to be used for the immediate relief of distressed farmers in the western provinces.

In 1925 the government of the day distributed this amount pro rata to the provinces, as indicated.

Mr. BOTHWELL: What was the date of that resolution?

Mr. STEVENS: August 11, 1921.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The government of that day did not distribute the money; that was done by the following government. The matter was not brought to the attention of the following government for quite a long time.

Mr. STEVENS: No one is quibbling about that. The general elections came on shortly after this resolution was passed; our party went out of power and hon. members opposite came in.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: A casual reader would think we were six years in carrying out the recommendation of the board.

Mr. STEVENS: The facts speak for themselves, and I have the order in council here if it is of interest.

Mr. TOTZKE: If we admit, as I think we all can admit, that the government made no money out of these transactions of 1917 and 1918, we must remember the statement made by Sir George Foster in his letter, in which he says:

I do not know whether or not you will take my word for it, but whether you do or not, I can assure you it would have been impossible for a member of the government or the government itself to have appropriated a single dollar of the proceeds of the wheat sales of 1917 and 1918 to their own purposes.

What is not clear to me is this. The minister says the British government bought wheat from the Canadian farmers. Now, the Canadian farmer was paid on the basis of $2.21 per bushel, plus handling charges. Can my hon. friend assure us that that was the price at which the allied governments bought our wheat? Because, further on in the letter, Sir George Foster states:

The wheat was sold during the season of 1917 and 1918 as purchasers were found and, of course, for different prices, owing to changes in the world's market price.

There is the difficulty with us. Did the allied government get the Canadian wheat at the price at which the Canadian farmer sold it, or did someone else make an extra profit?

Mr. STEVENS: The excerpt read from Sir George's letter—

Mr. VALLANCE: Of January 27, 1920.

Mr. STEVENS: —was correctly quoted. The facts disclosed in the official report are those I read a moment ago. I fancy it would be more profitable at the moment to take the official report rather than an extract from a letter. I should not wish to reflect upon my venerable predecessor,—

Mr. VALLANCE: We have not done so either.

Mr. STEVENS: —but he was dictating a letter to an individual and might possibly have been slightly in error. But here are the facts as disclosed by the chairman of the board. It might be profitable to read this again. For the crop of 1917 there was no difficulty.

The allies needed the whole exportable surplus wheat of Canada. They were willing to buy the whole surplus at the price fixed, and they gave a guarantee to that effect.

That is as regards 1917. I wonder whether we can close the book there, so far as that year is concerned.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, surely; it was never open.

Mr. VALLANCE: I should like the hon. member for South Winnipeg to correct me if I am wrong in the statement I am about to make regarding what he said the other night, that when they took over the residue of the 1916 crop they sold it at $3 a bushel. Was it included in the 1917 sales?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. VALLANCE: Then we are now dealing with 1918?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. To proceed:

It was different with the crop of 1918. No guarantee was obtained from the representatives of the British royal commission with regard to the surplus of the crop of 1918, and when the armistice was signed there was considerable difficulty in selling the balance of wheat still remaining in Canada.

I pause to point out the harmony between that statement and Sir George's. But the following words will clear the situation.

Having, however, fixed a price for the wheat of 1918, and having arranged for the purchase of wheat from the farmer by the trade on that basis, a guarantee was necessary and it was given by the Dominion government.

Now then, the British government, or the allies, in 1918 did not give a guaranteed price. As Sir George Foster stated, there was a variation in prices. But the Dominion government guaranteed the price. The reason for this was that there was an expectation on the part of the allies that they would not require the wheat, but that expectation was not realized. The report now goes on:

Fortunately the allied countries needed the wheat, and in the end the balance of the crop of 1918 was sold at the fixed price.

I think we have pretty well cleaned up the whole question.

Mr. TOTZKE: Is it a fact that they sold all the crop of 1918 at a fixed price?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. TOTZKE: I did not gather that.

Mr. STEVENS: The report says:

Fortunately the allied countries needed the wheat, and in the end the balance of the crop of 1918 was sold at the fixed price.

Mr. VALLANCE: I understand the minister to say that the Dominion government guaranteed a portion of the crop before the allies realized that they needed the rest of the crop that was still there. So that if there is any wheat over it must be that portion of the crop which the then government sold and guaranteed.

Mr. STEVENS: Let me quote the statement in its entirety. This clause was not written in the light of Mr. Whiteside's ideas. It was written as a formal report and should be received in that sense and given due weight. Here is the statement.

No guarantee was obtained from the representatives of the British royal commission with regard to the surplus of the crop of 1918, and when the armistice was signed there was considerable difficulty in selling the balance of wheat still remaining in Canada. Having, however, fixed a price for the wheat of 1918, and having arranged for the purchase of wheat from the farmer by the trade on that basis, a guarantee was necessary and it was given by the Dominion government. Fortunately the allied countries needed the wheat, and in the end the balance of the crop of 1918 was sold at the fixed price.

Mr. YOUNG: To the allies?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. YOUNG: They took it all?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. TOTZKE: But prior to the disposal of the balance of the crop, what price were the allies paying?

Mr. STEVENS: It is a question of the interpretation of language. In this clause, undoubtedly, Dr. Magill, when he refers to selling the balance of wheat—that is, with respect to the surplus of the crop of 1918—means the exportable surplus. I do not think there is any question of that. The words, and in the end the balance of the crop of 1918 was sold at the fixed price, have reference to the exportable surplus of the crop.

Mr. VALLANCE: He speaks of the balance of the crop. There must have been a portion of the crop which was sold not at that fixed price, and the government either made money, broken even, or lost money. Now, that is what we want to know.

Mr. STEVENS: I can assure the hon. gentleman—

Mr. VALLANCE: The government gave a guarantee.

Mr. STEVENS: —that neither the government nor the board of grain supervisors made money out of the transaction.

Mr. TOTZKE: Can the minister assure us that no one else made money?

Mr. STEVENS: Absolutely. Of course, if my hon. friend suggests that there was some dishonesty here and there, I have nothing to say. But the evidence from every quarter is that the business was carried out in the most exemplary manner. It might be just as well to put on the record the personnel of the board of grain supervisors, whose report, I submit, ought to receive weight. These gentlemen were:

Robert Magill, of Winnipeg, Manitoba.
H. W. Wood, of Carstairs, Alberta.
Samuel K. Rathwell, of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan.
Thomas A. Crerar, of Winnipeg, Manitoba.
William L. Best, of Ottawa, Ontario.
John Charles Gage, of Winnipeg, Manitoba.
William R. Bawlf, of Winnipeg, Manitoba.
William A. Matheson, of Winnipeg, Manitoba.
Lionel Clarke, of Toronto, Ontario.
Joseph Ainey, of Montreal, Quebec; and James Stewart, of Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Those are the gentlemen comprising the board of grain supervisors. And here is the order of the board fixing the price of wheat in 1918—the order which my hon. friend enquired about a moment ago:

[Mr. Stevens.]

It is hereby ordered by the board of grain supervisors of Canada:

1. That the price of wheat from the 12th September, 1917, until the 31st August, 1918, inclusive, shall be—

No. 1 hard	$2 21
No. 1 Manitoba northern	2 21
No. 2 Manitoba northern	2 18
No. 3 Manitoba northern	2 15
No. 1 Alberta red winter	2 21
No. 2 Alberta red winter	2 18
No. 3 Alberta red winter	2 15

These prices are basis in store public terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur.

Price Out Of Private Elevators

2. That on wheat loaded or shipped out of elevators licensed as private, hospital or mixing elevators the above prices shall be maximum prices, and that the minimum for such wheat shall not be in excess of 4 cents per bushel less than the maximum, and that upon all such wheat the buyer shall pay the jobbing charges.

Diversion Privilege—Interior Western Flour Mills

3. That flour millers whose mills are located west of Fort William and Port Arthur may pay a maximum of one cent per bushel in excess of the above fixed prices.

4. That the above prices have now legal authority and any deviations from them will be regarded and treated as violation of the orders of the board of grain supervisors for Canada.

(Sgd.) Robert Magill,
Chairman.

(Sgd.) A. R. Macdonald,
Secretary.

Mr. TOTZKE: I do not wish to convey the impression that I doubted the word of any of these gentlemen who formed the board of grain supervisors, but in view of the statement made in Sir George Foster's letter I am not satisfied that the farmer in Canada received the price paid for wheat by the allied governments. Can the minister assure us that a profit was not made, say by the grain companies?

Mr. STEVENS: No, no profits were made by the grain companies. I am confident I can state quite definitely that neither the grain companies, on the one hand, nor the representatives of the allies on the other, profited out of the handling of this wheat.

Mr. DONNELLY: What was the date of the order in council authorizing the formation of the board of grain supervisors?

Mr. STEVENS: Monday, June 11, 1917.

Mr. DONNELLY: Was the board to be formed immediately or at some fixed date in the future?

Mr. STEVENS: I think it was formed immediately. The order in council was dated June 11, and on July 20 we have order No. 1 of the board.

Mr. DONNELLY: It was in effect at that time?

Mr. STEVENS: I presume it went into effect immediately upon the ratification of the order in council. Order No. 1, dated July 20, 1917, headed "Wheat Price—Maximum—1916 crop," reads as follows:

It is hereby ordered by the board of grain supervisors for Canada that so far as the balance of the present crop is concerned and until further notice, the maximum price of wheat, basis one northern in store, Fort William, shall not exceed $2.40 per bushel, effective the first August, 1917, inclusive from 9.30 a.m. o'clock.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That was the price.

Mr. STEVENS: That was signed by Robert Magill, chairman, and A. R. Macdonald, secretary.

Mr. YOUNG: Is that the wheat which was sold to the allies at $3 per bushel, as stated by the hon. member for South Winnipeg?

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member had reference to the crop year of 1916, which was prior to these transactions.

Mr. BROWN: Those who are not interested in wheat sometimes think that the farmers of western Canada were given an extra deal in that price fixing, but the committee should understand that the price fixed was lower than that prevailing for some time previously on the open markets.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was $2.40.

Mr. BROWN: For the 1916 crop.

Mr. ROGERS: Oh, no, the hon. member is mistaken.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is referring to the order in 1917?

Mr. BROWN: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: If the hon. member will refer to the schedule which I put on Hansard a few moments ago he will find that there was a very slight difference between the price fixed and the prices prevailing on the Chicago and Winnipeg exchanges. It was for a few days only that the prices began to leap.

Mr. BROWN: But for a time wheat did sell at a higher price than the fixed price.

Mr. STEVENS: Certain sales were made in the winter of 1916-17 prior to this control coming into effect. Those were actual contract sales of Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and when the time for delivery came in the spring those grades were pretty well cleaned up. There was a large residue of the lower grades, but there was practically a corner on Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and that, to a large extent, precipitated this order. The speculators, and not the farmers, would have made the profits. The board made a successful effort to take the lower grades off the hands of the farmers.

Mr. DONNELLY: Mr. Chairman, I want to associate myself with several hon. members who have referred to this matter already, and state that this is not a political issue. I do not believe any hon. member thinks that there was anything wrong in connection with the 1917 or 1918 crops, and none of us thought anything about it until this letter from Mr. Whiteside was referred to. The hon. minister stated a moment ago that we have no grounds for our argument, but I disagree with him. We have this letter written by Sir George Foster, and that is the first intimation we had of any difference in the price. We knew that Sir George Foster was a responsible person; we had his definite statement that this crop had been sold at different prices from the 1917 and 1918 crops, and that information was not in accordance with what we knew to be the facts. We are simply trying to get at the facts. The minister has stated that $428,000 was taken from the board of grain supervisors and put into the consolidated revenue fund, the same action being taken with the five or six hundred thousand dollars taken from the wheat board. I believe that $428,000 is still in the consolidated revenue fund and has never been distributed, and it was to bring out these facts that we started this discussion.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, there is another reason for our starting this discussion besides the representations of Mr. Whiteside. That gentleman took this matter up before the municipal union at Prince Albert early this winter, and that body, representing all the rural municipalities of Saskatchewan, after hearing his representation, sponsored his proposal and presented it to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister replied and his letter appeared in the press. His reply indicated clearly that he did not understand the situation at all, because it was directed entirely to 1919, about which Mr. Whiteside had not inquired at all. I do not know whether that correspondence is on this file or not.

Mr. VALLANCE: I do not think so.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That correspondence shows that a responsible body like the municipal union of Saskatchewan sponsored the request of Mr. Whiteside, and presented it to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister's reply showed that he quite misunderstood the question—just as it is evident that some hon. gentlemen present do not understand it—because he referred almost entirely to 1919, which was not a matter of consideration or dispute at all.

Mr. VALLANCE: I am not at all apologetic for having interjected this question at this time. It is a matter that should be cleared up. I want to assure the minister that we appreciate the manner in which he has dealt with the whole matter and his sincerity in trying to clear it up. I still believe that if we had the privilege of taking the question to the committee on agriculture, where we would not have to occupy the time of the house in dealing with it, we could settle the matter. In spite of the fact that I may have convinced myself, or the minister by the arguments he has adduced may convince me, that there is no amount of $100,000,000 that rightly belongs to the farmers of western Canada in this connection, we still know, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Willow Bunch, there is about $428,000 and some residue from the old wheat board, and in view of the present hard times among the wheat growers of western Canada I suggest that the government devise ways and means of helping to relieve agricultural distress with this money, plus the interest compounded from the day it went into the treasury of Canada.

Mr. YOUNG: May I refer for a moment to the surplus of something like $100,000 that is still in the treasury from the wheat board. I understand that this was retained in case any of the participation certificates held by the farmers should turn up. A few of them have turned up since. I think some of them were sent to the hon. member for Melville with the request that he endeavour to have them cashed. Some were sent to me. I endeavoured to have them cashed, but officials of the department coolly told me they would not cash those certificates because it was too much trouble to dig up the records. Would the minister look up the records and see that these certificates are cashed, in spite of the fact that it may cause a little trouble to his officials?

Mr. STEVENS: I can assure my hon. friend no reasonable amount of trouble will be spared to arrange for taking care of any proper obligation. One thing which I think should be kept clearly in mind is that the money should be paid only to those properly entitled to it, that is, to those to whom the certificates originally belonged, or, in case of their death, to their legitimate heirs.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Probably I can explain what occurred. I received a number of requests in connection with certificates that turned up after a lapse of a number of years. The government of that day kept the account open for several years.

Mr. STEVENS: Eight years.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I had some correspondence with the deputy, who is at present sitting in front of the minister, with regard to the question of what we were going to do with the occasional lost certificates that turned up. I cited one instance of a gentleman who had $400 or $500 coming to him on a certificate. He had been very kind to the government in presenting a whole square mile of land for experimental purposes. After he died, this was all to be provided for in his will and in the registry office, yet we were holding back $400 or $500 that we owed him on a found certificate. I agreed with the deputy that it was inconvenient to open up these files again, but I made the suggestion that a vote be included in the estimates to take care not only of this gentleman but of all the rest of them which were found. There is plenty of money available to do this. I think it was quite reasonable on the part of the deputy to take the ground he did, and he will find in the department a file showing my concurrence. But there is still another way of handling the matter. In the Department of Agriculture in past years we used to bring down an item covering fifty or sixty head of animals that had been slaughtered, but in regard to the conditions under which they were slaughtered the law had not been complied with. That vote was never objected to and the money went to the individuals who were entitled to receive it. The same thing could be done with regard to these lost and later found certificates.

In 1925—of course that is five or six years ago—the then government dug up all the information which was necessary to find out about the 1919 surplus. It must be remembered that the late Mr. Robb had to be satisfied that he was justified in paying out the money, and it is not easy to satisfy any minister of finance on such a point. The evidence must be irrefutable. It took two or three years to do this. It was done, but the complaint was never made that there was any difficulty with regard to getting the information. The information was gathered without any difficulty, and as a matter of fact I saw all the documents. That is hardly six years ago. What has become of them since? There should be no insuperable difficulty in getting for 1917 and 1918 information similar to that which was got so comparatively easily five years ago for 1919.

Mr. STEVENS: Franly I may say all the documents to which my hon. friend refers are before us. I really do not want to go back over the question again.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not just catch that, but I understood from the minister in the early part of the afternoon that all the documents went over to the wheat board the following year. The cash went into the treasury of the Dominion; the documents went over to the wheat board, but there is no record of the wheat board receiving them or handling them.

Mr. STEVENS: Except the auditor's report and these other reports.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is a very flimsy way of doing business, and if the farmers are going to ask the government, as apparently they are, to handle their business for the coming year, they certainly want to know how it is to be handled.

Mr. McGIBBON: Why did my hon. friend not clean up the mess?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have answered that two or three times. I do not think my hon. friend was in the chamber at the time.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. member told the house the other night he did not know anything about it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Because it was not presented to us. How can a government solve a problem before it is presented to it?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. DONNELLY: Just before six o'clock we had arrived at some kind of understanding with regard to the 1917 and 1918 crops, but one thing that is not yet clear in my mind, is with regard to the 1916 crop.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE (Montmagny) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. Being indisposed this afternoon I was obliged to keep my room, and I was therefore not present in the house when a vote was taken. I wish to state that had I been here, I would have voted for the motion of the member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis).

Mr. DONNELLY: The hon. member for South Winnipeg, speaking of the 1916 crop, at page 1528 of Hansard of May 12, says:

> We considered the crop on the basis of No. 1 northern at $3 a bushel.
> Mr. Young: Was that f.o.b. Fort William?
> Mr. Rogers: Yes.
> Mr. Motherwell: The 1917 crop?
> Mr. Rogers: The 1916 crop.

Again, at page 1530 of Hansard of May 12, he was asked this question:

> Mr. Donnelly: My hon. friend said a portion of the 1916 crop was confiscated, and that $3 a bushel was paid for it.
> Mr. Rogers: No, it was sold at that price.
> Mr. Donnelly: To whom did you pay the $3 a bushel?
> Mr. Rogers: The people got it. Whoever had wheat in this country got every cent of it.

I questioned that at the time, but the hon. member for South Winnipeg still maintained that $3 a bushel was paid. Now I find by looking at page 376 of the Canadian Annual Review of 1917 this statement:

> The first important action—

It is referring to the actions of the grain supervisory board.

> —was the fixing of the maximum price for 1916 wheat, then in storage, at $2.40, to come into effect on August 1.

Mr. MANION: That would be the price for 1916?

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes. There again we have a variance. The hon. member for South Winnipeg said that we got $3 a bushel, and he made the deal. Now we find by the Canadian Annual Review that we got $2.40 a bushel, and I remember that that is what we did get. Whether the government or someone else made the deal and got $3 a bushel and the farmers were paid only $2.40 a bushel, we do not know. There is a conflict of figures again, just as there is with regard to the 1917 and 1918 crops. The Minister of Trade and Commerce of that day, Sir George Foster, said that the 1917 and 1918 wheat was sold at the market price from day to day, and we find that it was not sold at the market price from day to day at all, but at a fixed price of $2.21 a bushel. As a matter of fact, if I remember rightly, and perhaps the minister will be able to confirm this from his records, we got $2.24 instead of $2.21 a bushel for 1917 and 1918 crops. I may be wrong, but I have an idea that we were paid $2.24. There are such differences of opinion and divergencies of view on the part of different individuals in connection with this matter that even yet I am at a loss to know whether we have got down to the real facts, to what is fair and square. Has the minister any information to give us with regard to the 1916 crop?

Mr. STEVENS: I think my hon. friend is referring to what I might call a different portion of the 1916 crop from that which is referred to by the board of grain supervisors.

Mr. DONNELLY: No, it is the same thing.

Mr. STEVENS: If my hon. friend will pardon me, in the autumn of 1916 the crop of that year was being poured on to the market, and there were difficulties; there is no question of that. My hon. friend from South Winnipeg and other ministers of the government of that day were in London at the time, and they made certain arrangements while there in connection with that crop. That was in the winter of 1916-17, before New Year's day, I imagine, of 1917.

Mr. McINTOSH: The negotiations took place in the latter part of 1917.

Mr. STEVENS: No, in the fall of 1916, I am quite certain, and they were dealing with the conditions of the moment. They made certain arrangements—I have not a record here of what those arrangements were —out of which arose the obvious necessity of appointing someone to take charge. Then in 1917, under the War Measures Act, on June 11 an order in council was passed appointing the board of grain supervisors. On the 20th of July, 1917, the board of grain supervisors fixed the price for the balance then remaining of the 1916 crop.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is what I refer to.

Mr. STEVENS: That would be some six months after the incidents to which my hon. friend from South Winnipeg referred.

Mr. DONNELLY: I do not think so. I think it is the same thing. It was the balance of the 1916 crop that was left over and which was bought at that time, and the hon. member for South Winnipeg said that they agreed to pay $3 a bushel for the balance of the 1916 crop left over. The market was then open; in fact I remember quite well selling some wheat myself for over $3 a bushel at that time.

Mr. STEVENS: I still must insist that there was a difference between the action of the board of grain supervisors in July 1917 and the action of the ministers who were overseas in the fall and winter of 1916. In this report of the board of grain supervisors they do refer to a condition on the exchange. I do not know that they give very close dates, and that is one of the difficulties that we have in running these very obscure matters down. But they said:

> The effect of all this was not only an increase in the price of wheat, with occasional violent fluctuations, but was in a word the disintegration of the grain exchanges both in Canada and the United States.

The report goes on:

> This disintegration appeared dramatically in Winnipeg in the spring of 1917. During the previous winter months the agents of the allied governments had bought wheat freely to be delivered in May and July.

That is what I referred to this afternoon.

> They bought this wheat mainly, if not altogether, from the operators of country elevators who, as they bought the wheat from the farmers from day to day, sold it for May and July delivery.

That was in the winter months. The report goes on:

> Neither the buyers for the allied governments nor the elevator operators who sold the wheat were gambling in futures. The buyers were providing to the best of their judgment for future needs of the countries they represented, and the sellers were securing their loans from the banks by hedging their purchases in the only way known to commercial men of providing against risk. These future contracts called for grades 1, 2 and 3 northern. It turned out that much of the wheat thus sold or hedged did not measure up to these contract grades. As a rule, and under normal conditions, this presents no great difficulty, because the buyers are willing to accept lower grades on the contracts at fair discounts. This, indeed, is a well-established commercial practice. In the spring of 1917, however, the British representatives intimated that they were unwilling or unable to accept lower grades at discounts, and that they would require the contract grades. This forced the sellers to try to buy the higher grades on the open market, with the result that the prices of these grades went skyrocketing. As prices soared the sellers were called for increasing sums of money, and the limit of their credits was soon reached. In effect the market was cornered and a disaster upon a large scale was impending.
> To avert this the Winnipeg grain exchange investigated the conditions, found them as above, closed the market for futures, and by the aid of the Dominion government secured the consent of the British authorities to a settlement along commercial lines. As a result the British accepted the lower grades of wheat on the contracts at fair discounts, the discounts were speedily fixed and the situation cleared up.

I think that fairly well explains the situation. It must be borne in mind that we cannot differentiate as to the exact date, because many of these transactions were in the winter, but for spring and summer delivery. When it came to June and July of 1917, this is the condition which developed. Then the board of grain supervisors stepped in. Having cleaned up the situation the price was fixed at $2.40 per bushel. I think that is as fair as I can make my explanation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is August 12.

Mr. STEVENS: July 20, of 1917.

Mr. BROWN: That is for the balance of the 1916 crop.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was pegged from then up to the time that the board of grain supervisors started out on the $2.21 price. It was pegged right up to that time at $2.40.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I would ask the minister if the following statement which I find in the Canadian Annual Review of 1917 is correct:

On September 12 the board—

He has referred to the board of grain supervisors.

—announced the fixing of prices for the 1917 crop of wheat on bases identical with those of the United States for the same grades at Minneapolis and Duluth; No. 1 Manitoba northern, $2.21, No. 2, $2.18, No. 3, $2.15; No. 1 Alberta red winter, $2.21, No. 2, $2.18, No. 3, $2.15. As in the United States, American millers and the allies were required to pay to the United States grain corporation one per cent on the wheat purchased, in addition to the fixed charges, and in accordance with a request from the United States government, the board decided that Canadian flour millers, the allies and other consumers of Canadian wheat would be required to pay, in addition to the fixed prices, a sum of two cents per bushel to the board, and the allies, including the United States, a further amount not exceeding two cents per bushel—the money to be used in carrying-charges on wheat held in country elevators.

I would like to ask the minister if that was the basis on which our wheat was sold, $2.21 plus two cents per bushel for handling charges?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, that is correct. I have an order in my hand which I am looking at for the first time. While my hon. friend has been reading I have turned it over in my hand, and I think this order is the one upon which this statement is based. It reads:

Wheat shipments east from Fort William and Port Arthur; collections to carrying charge fund.

It is hereby ordered by the board of grain supervisors for Canada that for the purpose of supplementing order No. 8 of the board, there shall be paid to the board upon all shipments of wheat by rail or boat from Fort William or Port Arthur a charge of two cents (2c.) per bushel if destined to Canadian points, and not less than two cents (2c.) and not more than four cents (4c.) if destined to points outside Canada. These charges shall be paid to the Lake Shippers' Clearance Association, the duly authorized agents of the board.

That is the authority upon which the statement is made. Apparently my hon. friend was not here this afternoon when I fully accounted for the $428,000 balance of the board of grain supervisors given at the end of their thirty-two months operations and vouched for by George A. Touche & Company, chartered accountants.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I heard that statement given, but I still wondered how that surplus was made up. How was there a surplus if the statement made by the hon. member for South Winnipeg the other night was at all correct?

Mr. STEVENS: Does the hon. member understand the matter now? There was $2.21 paid for wheat, and in addition to that there was a charge of two cents a bushel for handling charges. Out of that arose a fund of $10,000,000 odd.

Mr. BOTHWELL: My point was in connection with the two cents per bushel. I do not think we understood this afternoon what the handling charges were.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, that is correct. Out of that was built up this fund of $10,000,000, and disbursements show it was made up largely of carrying charges. They are charges ordinarily made in the business, leaving the surplus to which we have referred, which was paid to the receiver general.

Mr. BOTHWELL: There is one other question which if possible I would like to have cleared up. I find in the Canadian Annual Review of 1917 a statement, that on November 21 the grain board received a cable from London which closed matters up for the 1917 crop. The cable reads:

Have received cable from royal commission on wheat supplies whereby they authorize us to guarantee to you that the Wheat Export Company will accept grain from grain supervisors, all allocations of Canadian wheat for the balance of season, basis of price of $2.21.

Will the minister confirm that as being the authentic cable from the old country?

Mr. STEVENS: I can say that the facts as stated seem to be in harmony with the general reports that we have; but I am afraid I could not verify a cable of that nature.

Mr. DONNELLY: I must say that so far as the 1916 portion of the crop is concerned I am not able to make the figures agree in any way. I do not see how the hon. member for South Winnipeg could have sold 100,000,000 bushels of wheat at $3 a bushel, as he said he did, for the 1916 crop, when in fact he had no wheat to sell. There is something altogether wrong in that. In the Canadian Annual Review it is stated that the price was $2.40. Either the one or the other is wrong. That $2.40 is for the remainder of the 1916 crop which in July was lying in the elevator. That is a portion of the crop referred to by my hon. friend; that is the only thing he could sell. When the wheat was confiscated and taken over he could not sell my wheat and other farmers' wheat and say what price we were going to take for it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think we might stay here until doomsday and not reach a satisfactory solution. Why does not the minister accept the suggestion to refer this matter to the agriculture committee? At such time we could have witnesses who could tell in a minute through what medium our wheat was sold in the years 1917 and 1918, whether it was the export marketing board or the board of grain commissioners. I think it was the export marketing board. I remember discussing the matter with Mr. Dunning, who had a great deal to do with it. There was Mr. Henry Wise Wood, Mr. Crerar, Jim Stewart, and Jim Richardson who could be called as witnesses before the agriculture committee, but who were not all on the board of grain supervisors. Imagine a board of six or eight or ten prominent grain men supervising something so thoroughly that you have no record as to what they received for the wheat, and do not know who sold it or who bought it or at what average price. Is it wrong for us to want to know what that wheat was sold for and who sold it on behalf of the farmers?

This would not be a matter for us at all, since we got the full price we agreed to take, but the understanding was that any advantage in the selling of wheat at this low price would go to the allied purchasing commissions. We know the history of wars in regard to food prices. You have only to look to the American war of independence to see what they had to do to control food prices. See what happened during the French revolution with regard to profiteering in connection with food prices, and the extreme measures that had to be taken to hold it down. We agreed to this measure to hold down prices. May I quote Herbert Hoover without its being objected to? He was food controller in the United States during the war, and this quotation is taken from the Winnipeg Free Press of May 16, 1917. While this is not an authoritative document, I would remind the house that the Free Press at that time was no rip-roaring Liberal paper, but was always a reliable paper editorially and as a news gathering agency also. There is a long article here having to do with Herbert Hoover, and among other things it gives the following quotation from him:

> If, however, the whole world, allied and neutral, is to have the unrestricted run of our markets in competition with each other and in competition with the speculator in this country, we may expect to see $5 wheat before the year is over.

We knew that, yet in the face of that knowledge, in the negotiations which were conducted a little later between the Canadian Council of Agriculture and Sir George Foster, he tried to keep the price down to $1.30 a bushel on the basis of Fort William. The Canadian Council of Agriculture finally agreed to take $1.70, which was refused. A little later the government would have been very glad if that price of $1.70 had been in effect, because wheat kept going up until finally the price of $2.21 was agreed to.

This quotation to which I have referred is not from any government file; it is from the Winnipeg Free Press. My hon. friends may object to it, but let them produce anything better, and then we will not have to produce this. I have been securing further information with regard to prices in 1917. I have taken these prices from the Winnipeg Free Press, and you will get exactly the same prices in the Winnipeg Tribune or any other western city daily newspaper of that time. On May 3, 1917, the price of No. 1 northern at Fort William was $2.82. That was just a little while before the time to which we have been referring. On June 1 the price dropped to $2.33; on June 14, it was $2.62; on June 30 it was $2.26; on July 4 it was $2.20; on July 23 it was $2.40. On July 25 it was the same, $2.40, and on July 28 it was $2.46. On August 1 it was $2.38; on August 10 it was $2.40, and then on August 20 the price was set by the board of grain commissioners, until August 31, at $2.40. Between those dates it was pegged at $2.40 continuously. I think the files indicate that this was the period when they were completing negotiations with the United States as to what would be the fixed price for the balance of the grain year. They finally agreed that the price in Canada would be $2.21, and that in the United States it would be $2.17 on a Minneapolis basis and $2.20 on a Chicago basis.

This information is from an unofficial source, but I can assure the committee that as far as I know it is absolutely correct. It demonstrates the fact that the farmers were ready to agree to very much less than the ruling prices of that day, and that they knew the prices would go much higher if they were not fixed. However, it was on the condition that the advantage of that low price of $2.21 would not go to the Dominion treasury that this agreement was reached. We thought we had already contributed pretty heavily to the treasury through our taxes, and we understood this advantage would go to the allied nations with whom we were in very strong sympathy.

It would be the simplest thing in the world to let this matter go to the agriculture committee, and call as witnesses the members of this board of grain supervisors. We will take their word for it; they know the price that was received for the wheat. If we can just find out the aggregate amount obtained through the sale of wheat we will do the mathematical calculation necessary to obtain the price per bushel. We know there were 350,000,000 bushels sold, so it would be a simple matter of long division to get the price per bushel, but we lack one essential factor; we do not know what was received for the wheat abroad. Are we entitled to that information? If we are not entitled to it let the minister say so. If we are entitled to it, why does he not come across?

This would not be the first matter to be sent to the committee on agriculture. That is not a terrible place to go. We have solved many difficulties there; we have considered and solved the wheat mixing question, the immigration question and so on, and our solutions have been satisfactory and acceptable to all. I do not know a single question that has been sent to the agriculture committee that has not been dealt with satisfactorily. Will the minister give the reasons why he does not want the matter to be sent to that committee? Does he think it will prolong the debate? I am led to understand from his remarks that these wheat files are still in the department. If he could say they all went over to the wheat board of 1919 and were destroyed as being out of date, we would know there was no hope of getting this information, but we have been told that all the files are in the department, and the information is there to be obtained. Why does he not dig it out? I want to tell the committee that I had some experience with matters of this kind in the Department of Agriculture. There was the matter of the old food board which used to be ragged so badly, over which Mr. H. B. Thomson presided. That board did a lot of good work, and the files were stored in the basement of the Department of Agriculture. On several occasions information was required which was contained in the files, and no matter how long it took we dug it out. We did not tell the applicant that it was too much trouble, that there were too many files to look over, or anything like that. I am only asking my hon. friend to do in this instance what I did myself when I was asked for information contained in files which were just as old as, indeed older than the files in this case. We do not like to prolong this discussion—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will stop it now if it is referred to the agriculture committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I should like to see where the joke is. I will tell hon. members that if it is not referred to some committee they must take the responsibility of voting down the proposal, and then they will hear something about it.

Mr. VALLANCE: During the dinner hour I was looking over some of the evidence which has been brought out during this discussion. I have suggested to the minister on various occasions, as the hon. member for Melville suggested just now, that this matter be referred to the committee, and therefore I would move:

That item 363 stand for further consideration until the operations connected with the disposal by the government or any of its appointees of the wheat crop for the years 1916, 1917 and 1918 be referred to the committee on agriculture and colonization for the fullest investigation.

Mr. STEVENS: May I say at once that there has not been the slightest disposition on my part to resist the reference of this matter to the agriculture committee. I did seek, however, to point out to hon. members opposite that the discussion has been very broad. I think we have run down practically every point that has been raised, and there is nothing to be gained by referring it to the agriculture committee. If, for instance, there were some specific statements that could be referred to; if there were some point supported by reasonable evidence that there was something wrong, then there would be ground for referring the matter to a committee. Personally I have no objection at all to the agriculture committee exploring this business, but I feel that we have gone to a great deal of trouble. We have gone into the matter from every conceivable angle. I have answered, I think, many of the points time after time, and the point last raised by my hon. friend I can answer in a moment. Now, I think that for these reasons the matter should be disposed of. My hon. friend has proposed a motion which is perhaps not quite ordinary, and I was going to suggest before he did so that I should be quite prepared to have one of these items held over—this is constantly done in matters of this kind—on the understanding that any questions left undiscussed could be taken up later under such item. And in the meantime we could consider the question of referring this subject to the agriculture committee. If it is to be referred to the agriculture committee, this must be done by means of a substantive motion before the house, with the Speaker in the chair; the subject cannot be referred to a committee from committee of the whole house. That, however, is a matter of form, and I would not put anything in the way. I should not like, however, to commit myself definitely and finally and say that we will refer the matter to a committee in its present nebulous form. Let us try to get together and outline what is to be referred to the committee so that that committee will not, shall I say, be wandering all over the field. My hon. friends will perhaps accept that suggestion on the understanding that if no agreement can be reached on the matter we will open it again at some future date to their entire satisfaction in committee of the whole. I wish to make it abundantly clear that I have not the slightest objection to the agriculture or any other committee exploring the subject.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Before the hon. member for South Battleford replies, I would point out that, apart from the particular subject under consideration at the moment, there are a number of other questions bearing upon this vote which we desire to discuss.

Mr. STEVENS: I should like to proceed with them; that is the point.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But we cannot proceed with them all at once.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not complaining.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There are other questions connected with this vote besides the Whiteside letters or, better still, the communication from the rural municipal union of Prince Albert, forwarded to the Prime Minister. For example, I wish to discuss the Hudson bay elevator at Churchill. I should like to see it operated by the government.

Mr. STEVENS: That is under the railways.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is under the Department of Trade and Commerce as well.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh yes; all these elevators are under the Department of Trade and Commerce: that department has complete authority in respect of them. The railway department may, and do, build them.

Mr. STEVENS: We are quite ready to go on with that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But we desire to dispose first of this other question. I would point out again to the minister that, even if the matter now before the committee—Whiteside's letters and Sir George Foster's reply—were out of the way, there are still further questions to be considered in relation to the grain act.

Mr. VALLANCE: I have no objection to the suggestion made by the minister, but I would impress upon him and the government, as the Prime Minister is already aware, that Mr. Whiteside is not the only individual who has been pressing this question. As has been pointed out by the ex-Minister of Agriculture, the rural municipalities held a convention in Prince Albert in February. They passed a resolution, a copy of which was sent to the government and we are in duty bound to insist that some means shall be found of disposing of this matter during this session of parliament. The minister nods his head, and if it will facilitate matters by allowing the item to stand, as he has suggested, then, as the individual responsible probably for introducing it, I am frank to say that the proposal is satisfactory to me, provided it meets with the approval of the committee.

Mr. McINTOSH: I have listened to this discussion now for a considerable time, and as a member from western Canada I am very much interested in it, as are my fellow members on both sides of the house.

The name of Robert Whiteside has been brought up in connection with the promulgation of this question in the press. It seemed to me this afternoon that there was an atmosphere of apology surrounding the name of Whiteside whenever it was mentioned. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Whiteside is to be commended. What did he do? He did what an awful lot of other people do not do when they write to the press. I am a newspaper man myself and I know whereof I speak. We get letter after letter without any name and often merely with a nom de plume. Such letters must, of course, be thrown into the wastepaper basket. Mr. Whiteside did not do anything of that sort. He made certain explanations and certain accusations and he revealed his identity. It seems to me, therefore, he is pretty nearly all white. He is not afraid to say what he thinks. In a letter to which he signed his name he states:

> Every farmer in western Canada is under the impression that our federal government—

The government of that day, of course.

> —premeditated and entered into an agreement to handle the wheat crop to make gains for themselves at our expense.

Sir George Foster, replying to this, takes up Mr. Whiteside on the expression "every farmer". He replies to Mr. Whiteside's statement in this way:

> Therefore, "every farmer" is too strong, and you will certainly have to modify that, and I am not going to take up my time or yours in controverting a statement of that kind. I do not think you really believe it. It is impossible that such should be the case, and it is contrary, of course, to the fact.

It will be observed that, in this reply, Sir George is arguing that Mr. Whiteside, when he used that expression "every farmer", meant quite literally every farmer in western Canada. But that was not Mr. Whiteside's meaning; he was using a definite term in an indefinite sense. Everyone knows that this is a common characteristic of either poetic or prose licence; and Mr. Whiteside is absolutely justified in using the expression "every farmer" to mean a great number of farmers. He does not mean literally every farmer in western Canada, but a great number of the farmers there. He is absolutely on solid ground and I see no reason for the reply which Sir George Foster made.

Now, that being the case, that point being established that thousands and thousands of farmers in the west believe the statements that Mr. Whiteside made, I think it is rather important for this house to take due notice of every statement which he did make. It seems to me we should do our best to clean up the situation, and I am under the impression that the best way to get the whole thing clarified, to have the problem analysed and properly presented to western Canada, especially to the farmers, is to have it sent to one of the standing committees of the house. I do not care to which committee it is sent. The suggestion has been made that it be sent to the agriculture committee. I noticed, as the discussion proceeded this afternoon, that Canada was concerned, the empire was concerned, the allied nations were concerned. So far as I can see, therefore, this is an international question and might very well be sent to the committee on international relations just as properly as to the committee on agriculture. But it does not make any difference which committee considers it. The matter involves money, and therefore the banking and commerce committee might consider it. My point, however, is this. Will the minister make up his mind to have this question referred to one of the standing committees of the house in order to have it thoroughly investigated for the purpose of giving the evidence to the country and clearing up the situation once for all?

Just one word in conclusion. To my mind, mathematically the question for us to examine is a simple one. We have the number of bushels. That is factor No. 1 in the equation. We have the price per bushel. That is factor No. 2. We do not know the price received—that is the unknown quantity. If you take the number of bushels, plus the price per bushel, you have next to ascertain what we received. All you have to do is to work out that equation: number of bushels, price per bushel: what is the value of the unknown quantity?

Mr. STEVENS: The only thing wrong with my hon. friend's last remarks was that he was adding instead of multiplying. But that is a mere incident.

Mr. McINTOSH: I would direct the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that it is not all multiplication; from his knowledge of mathematical equations he will realize that if it is not addition it is division.

Mr. STEVENS: I have stated already that I am quite willing that this item should stand and that we should consider the question of referring it to a committee with a proper order of reference. We are not prepared tonight to do that, because every hon. member seems to have a different view of the matter. The only reason I suggest that another item be taken up is that this is a large item covering different activities.

Mr. DONNELLY: I asked the minister yesterday if he could tell me how much money had been collected for the handling of grain since the grain act came into effect, as well as the amount expended. The impression seems to be abroad that the handling of grain has not paid its way.

Mr. STEVENS: I am quite prepared to answer that question, but I should like to know just where we stand. Are we going to continue with this item, or is it to stand?

Mr. VALLANCE: I will withdraw my motion if the item is allowed to stand.

Mr. TOTZKE: Would the minister table the reports and articles from which he read so that hon. members will have an opportunity of studying them? Would the hon. member for South Winnipeg table the memoranda from which he read?

Mr. STEVENS: In answer to the hon. member for Willow Bunch I give the committee the following information. From 1902-3 to 1912-13 the inspection and weighing of grain was carried on under what was then known as the Inspection Act. During that period the revenue was $1,556,868.13 and the expenditure, $2,131,474.34. The Canada Grain Act came into force in 1912, and from that date until 1930-31 the revenue amounted to $33,027,437.67 and the expenditures to $25,038,860.84. The total revenue from 1902 to 1931 amounted to $34,584,305.80, and the total expenditure to $27,170,335.18, leaving a surplus of $7,413,970.62. However, there is an item of $10,871,706.69 covering the cost of construction of government elevators from 1912-13 to 1930-31. No interest is allowed on this item nor has any part of the principal been a charge against the total revenue.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I received a letter some time ago from one of my electorate in connection with the participating certificates. I wrote to the department and received a very courteous reply from the deputy minister. This man claimed that he had delivered a certain number of bushels of wheat in 1919 but had not received any money for his participating certificates. I understand that when the money left from the wheat board of 1919 was turned over to the provinces, $100,000 was kept in the consolidated revenue fund to take care of any further participating certificates. If I am wrong in that belief, perhaps the minister will correct me. I do not know just how valid a claim this man has, but I would like some information in this regard when this item is next before the committee.

Mr. STEVENS: I will do my best to supply that information.

Item stands.

Commercial intelligence service, including miscellaneous expenditure in connection with Canada's trade, $700,000.

Mr. YOUNG: Does this item include anything for newspaper advertising in Canada?

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Could we have an explanation of this item?

Mr. STEVENS: The commercial intelligence service deals with overseas trade and is made up of thirty-five trade commissioners located in different countries. I have a list of the names of the commissioners and where they are located, and so on, but I do not think these details are necessary at the moment. These trade commissioners act in the interest of Canadian trade, not only by keeping the government and the department advised of trade conditions in the different countries, but by making actual contacts between Canadian exporters and likely importers in the countries in which they are located. I think without exception the business public of Canada speak most highly of this service. The vote this year shows a decrease of $50,000 which is accounted for by a curtailment of travelling expenses. Last year a number of the senior commissioners were changed from one country to another and the cost of moving them with their families was considerable. That expense will not be incurred this year, and there is also a little stiffening up of the restrictions on other travelling. This vote is required chiefly for salaries, to pay rents of offices, travelling and sundries.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is an amount being expended this year for assisted advertising to seek business abroad, particularly with respect to new products? I understand that a sum of $50,000 has been expended for this purpose during each of the last two years.

Mr. STEVENS: That will be covered by another item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What new offices, if any, have been opened during the past year?

Mr. STEVENS: Only one new office was opened in the fiscal year 1930-31, and that was at Cairo under Mr. Lamontagne, who was formerly trade commissioner in Brussels, but who was loaned nearly four years ago by the government of Canada to the government of Egypt as an expert adviser in the drawing up of the customs regulations. His engagement with Egypt expired and it was thought advisable to appoint him as trade commissioner in Egypt. His territory would cover the Soudan, Palestine, Cyprus, Arak, Syria and Persia. He covers a very extensive territory and his appointment, we believe, will have very good results.

Mr. GERSHAW: How many trade commissioners are there and how are they chosen?

Mr. STEVENS: Thirty-five at the present time.

Mr. HANBURY: How many altogether are employed in these different offices and what are their classifications?

Mr. STEVENS: To give this information with the classifications is quite a task.

Mr. HANBURY: I shall amend my question to just the total number of employees.

Mr. STEVENS: There are thirty-five trade commissioners, twenty-two assistant trade commissioners. That includes eight vacancies.

Mr. HANBURY: Not filled?

Mr. STEVENS: Not filled, but they are about to be filled, as the next item will show. Then there are eight junior trade commissioners, one commercial agent, one inspector of trade commissioners' offices. That is vacant at the present time.

Mr. HANBURY: What are the qualifications for these commissioners and what is the nature of their appointment? Are they appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. STEVENS: Absolutely. The service has been graded on a pretty high scale. The system was inaugurated first by Sir George Foster between 1912 and 1920, I am not sure just in what year. The system adopted then has been followed throughout the years down to the present time. The Civil Service Commission call for applications and hold an examination, which is based upon a university degree in economics with a high standing in that branch of university training. An important part of the examination also consists in languages, that is, commercial languages such as French, German, Spanish and, I suppose, some others, but those are the chief ones. I may say the recent examination resulted in 140 applicants passing, all with excellent standing, and there were only six vacancies. Following the written examination the practice is for one of the examiners of the Civil Service Commission and a senior officer of the department to give an oral examination, the object being, as is known, to check the qualifications as to personality and other such matters, and these are all strictly graded by a system of marking. As a result there will be chosen this year the six junior trade commissioners who will then come to Ottawa where they will spend a year in training. After that they will be sent out as assistants to the commissioners in different parts, and subsequently they will be drafted into the complete service.

Mr. HANBURY: Is any length of residence in Canada necessary for these positions?

Mr. STEVENS: Recently the time fixed has been fifteen years.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The minister has so well explained exactly what I wanted to know that there is only one thing I should like to ask him in order to complete the information I desire. To whom should the applications be addressed of these young students who wish to enter the competitive examinations? Should they be directed to the deputy minister or to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. STEVENS: The Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SANDERSON: When the committee was sitting the other day I directed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce with regard to the negotiations that have been carried on for the sale of Canadian wheat in China. If my recollection is correct, I think he said he preferred to discuss the matter under another item. Is this the item?

Mr. STEVENS: If my hon. friend will recall, he referred more particularly, I think, to Mr. Marler's visit to China. I suggested that it would be better to discuss that under External Affairs, but I may say that Mr. Marler is now in Canada. He was in Vancouver or Victoria yesterday and will reach Ottawa, I should say, within the next week.

Mr. SANDERSON: Has the minister any orders with him?

Mr. STEVENS: I am not quite sure, but Mr. Marler is quite a capable salesman, and as I notice by the press, he will have some hopes in any case. But I think it would be advisable to let this particular subject rest until Mr. Marler reaches Ottawa and reports to the Prime Minister under whose direction he is.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not quite agree with the minister that this should come up under External Affairs with the Prime Minister. This really comes under the Department of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. STEVENS: May I make myself quite clear; I was referring to Mr. Marler's visit. I have no objection to discussing any other matters coming under this item.

Mr. JACOBS: Is Mr. Lamontagne being permanently appointed to the position at Cairo?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. JACOBS: I remember discussing the matter with the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce and I suggested that a person more conversant with oriental languages, such as Hebrew, Assyrian and so on, should be appointed, because, after all, we are dealing not with French trade but with oriental trade. I thought if Mr. Lamontagne could be further loaned to the Egyptian government and if some person more conversant with those languages could be appointed, this might be of some benefit.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend will be most happy when I inform him that Mr. Lamontagne speaks not only English and French most fluently, but also Egyptian and Arabic. That is a fairly well rounded linguistic qualification for the position.

Mr. JACOBS: I am particularly interested in knowing whether he speaks Hebrew.

Mr. STEVENS: I am quite satisfied all the Hebrews there will understand him.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Have we any trade commissioners in India, and if so, how many?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, one at Calcutta.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): We have only one trade agent for the whole of India?

Mr. STEVENS: That is correct.

Mr. JACOBS: May I be permitted to ask the minister whether any port in Palestine is to be made a port of call in this new arrangement?

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend I suppose is thinking of Jaffa. The Elder-Dempster line, a most excellent line, which has given us a splendid service to India, was giving us a test service to the ports which my hon. friend has mentioned. That has been withdrawn because of lack of business. Now that Mr. Lamontagne has been appointed to that district, we hope to restore that service.

Mr. JACOBS: I was referring particularly to the port of Haifa, where great improvements are being made and a very large sum of money is being spent by the British government to make it one of the best ports in that part of the world.

Mr. STEVENS: We did call there, but at present the service is not in operation.

Mr. GERSHAW: As this is a rather important item, would the minister be good enough to put on Hansard a list of the countries where we have trade agents?

Mr. STEVENS: I shall be very glad to do so. We have trade commissioners' offices at the following places: Athens, Auckland, Batavia, Bristol, Brussels, Buenos Aires, Calcutta, Capetown, Chicago, Dublin, Glasgow, Hamburg, Havana, Hong Kong, Rotterdam, for Holland and Switzerland; Kingston, Jamaica; Kobe, Lima, Peru; Liverpool, London, and as well a special fruit commissioner there; Melbourne, Mexico City, Milan, New York, Oslo, Panama, Paris, Port of Spain, Rio de Janeiro, San Francisco, Shanghai, Tokyo.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Have not the trade policies of the present administration an important bearing on the possible activities of this commercial intelligence service? If I understand the Canada-first policy of the administration aright, it is that commodities shall not be imported into Canada which can be produced or manufactured here. If it is the policy of the government to enact tariffs which will prohibit the importation of any goods which can be manufactured or produced in Canada, I fail to see what service can be rendered the country by these agents in other parts of the world, because, with the exception of a few things that are produced in tropical regions, we may be able, albeit at great cost to ourselves, if the worst comes to the worst, more or less to manufacture and produce whatever may be required for existence in the country and without exchange we cannot trade.

Mr. STEVENS: We would prefer our own interpretation of the government's trade policy to that which my right hon. friend has offered as his interpretation of it. Our policy is not indiscriminately to shut out the goods of other countries. Our policy is certainly that Canadian necessities shall stand first in the attention of the government of the country. Our policy is also this, so far as the manufacture of goods in Canada is concerned, that wherever it is possible for Canadians to develop and manufacture their own ressources, they should have every opportunity to do so, and that we intend, so far as we are able, to encourage. But while that is the case, we recognize that all countries, even those following most rigidly the so-called protective policy, have much trade also with countries outside, and we intend to bend every possible effort to the sale of our goods abroad and to purchases abroad. But we find goods coming into Canada from countries in which our goods are not so largely sold, and that business could well be delivered by a government policy to countries that are better customers of ours. Our efforts, therefore, will be bent, so far as I am concerned in this department, to encouraging imports and purchases from countries that are our best customers.

An hon. MEMBER: Great Britain?

Mr. STEVENS: I do not wish to digress into an analysis of that subject to-night, but one could give some very interesting data with regard to it. So far as the trade commissioners are concerned, their purpose primarily is to look after the market for our goods in the countries in which they are located, to keep Canadian exporters advised with respect to markets that are open for our goods and the possibilities of sales, and at the same time to keep us fully informed on other activities in those countries.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister on the 17th of September 1930, at the special session of parliament, made this statement:

> This government is not only not neglecting it, but I may tell them that within half an hour after entering office we took steps to assist in the marketing of and the extension of the markets for western grain and we have achieved some encouraging results.

At that time the minister was not in a position, he pointed out, to go into any lengthy detail, but as the Prime Minister then intimated that we should have ample opportunity at this session to rehash all that was done in the special session, I would ask the minister to tell us now just what they have achieved and what encouragement there has been.

Mr. STEVENS: When the government took office, it was faced with very serious conditions in this country, as were governments elsewhere in their respective countries. We immediately sent out instructions to our trade commissioners throughout the world to bend every possible effort towards the extension of our trade in wheat and flour. I do not wish to prolong my statement and be tedious, but there are perhaps a few things one might profitably say in this regard. We have reports on the subject which perhaps it would not be wise to lay on the table, although I shall be very glad to show them to any member of parliament who wishes to see them.

Mr. JACOBS: Our loan has been oversubscribed, so there is no danger.

Mr. STEVENS: Happily so. The people of this country know a good government when they see one.

Mr. HANBURY: And a good rate of interest.

Mr. STEVENS: Certain facts came to light. One was this: In the fall of 1929-30 a condition arose in Europe which was really an attitude of resentment rightly or wrongly, against the North American continent in regard to wheat. Rightly or wrongly they conceived the idea that to their detriment we were attempting unduly to advance the price of wheat. Hearing that rumour the European buyers turned their purchases in other directions. For instance, the Argentine got a very distinct advantage, and further we found that many of the flour mills in the consuming countries of Europe—Holland, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, and I think, France—had changed or readjusted their screens so as to mill the Argentine wheat instead of ours. Then this year we found that millers in those countries were very reluctant to change their screens back again. In the meantime the governments of Europe had inaugurated a drastic policy of protection of agriculture in their own countries, encouraging the use and production of more of their local wheat. To this end they raised tariffs against foreign wheat ranging from 87 cents to $1 per bushel. In addition to that nearly all those countries fixed a quota on foreigh wheat. Furthermore, a strong propaganda was carried on to encourage the use of black bread or bread made from rye flour or flour prepared from grain other than wheat. All these things combined to injure in those countries the market for Canadian wheat in favour of wheat from other foreign countries. In the meantime, recognizing that situation, we have been doing our best to correct it and to disabuse the minds of the European people of the thought that we had any intention of cornering the wheat market. At the same time we have been trying to establish connections elsewhere in the world. That cannot be done in one year; it must be a matter of development which in some respects undoubtedly will be very slow. We do feel however, that some progress has been made; in certain instances new markets have been opened up. For instance a market was opened up in Columbia. I will admit it was a very small market, but worthy of mention; and the same thing has been done in other countries as well. Our exports to China this year have been very satisfactory, although the low price of wheat has been more or less accountable for that. The Australian discount has prevented us getting as large a share of that market as otherwise we would have secured. Every effort however is being made to broaden and extend our wheat market. At the same time we are seeking to establish or to reestablish relations with European countries which were so seriously injured in the fall of 1929 and 1930.

Mr. SANDERSON: Since the minister has opened up the question of export trade for grain and flour I think the committee would be interested if he would give us a report, even if it be only an interim report, on the negotiations with China in regard to selling wheat in that country. I have in my hand a report of an interview with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, dated January 3, 1931. It appeared in the Toronto Daily Star, and was really in the nature of a New Year's message to the people of Canada. Truly it was a very optimistic message. I will not take the time to read it, but I may point out that the Minister of Trade and Commerce covered the ground thoroughly in regard to the expansion of trade and commerce which he prophesied for the year 1931 under the regime of the new government. I have also a copy of the Regina Daily Star under date of Wednesday, December 31, 1930, in which there is a report of a meeting held in the city of Regina at which the Prime Minister was the chief figure. And may I add that the paper carries a very good photograph of the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull). The report of the remarks of the hon. member for Regina reads thus:

Frank W. Turnbull, M.P., introduced the Prime Minister. The member for Regina stated that he was glad that Mr. Bennett had chosen Regina for delivery of his great message. He reminded the meeting that Mr. Bennett was not only known for his business ability, his success in the marts of trade, his wide experience in legislative halls, and his intimate knowledge of world affairs, but that he also was known as one of the outstanding figures in the halls of the empire.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am glad my hon. friends agree with that. Then I want to quote at least some of the remarks of the Prime Minister. During the course of his speech he touched the question of finding new markets for Canada. I have not time to read all that he said, but let me quote at least part of it. The Prime Minister is regarded as saying:

What great world markets then remain unexplored by us? I do not have to suggest the answer to you of the west, who for years have been turning inquiring eyes towards the Orient. There we have half a billion people to whom we should be selling our natural products, yes, and our fabricated products as well. Why have we not done so?

It is not my purpose to-night to condemn the indifference and apathy of the late Liberal government. In its lifetime many difficulties barred the way to the development of a great oriental export trade. Those difficulties yet remain. But as I believe they are not unconquerable, the government of to-day propose to overcome them. We will by all means in our power strive to secure a great market in the Orient for your products.

Mr. SPENCE: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Sanderson.]

Mr. SANDERSON: The hon. member for Parkdale says "hear, hear."

Mr. SPENCE: My hon. friend has read that extract at least twenty times before.

Mr. SANDERSON: In passing I should like to say to my hon. friend from Parkdale that I have sat in this house now for about six sessions and I have not heard a single, solitary, sensible statement from him while he has sat in the house.

Mr. SPENCE: And I have heard less from my hon. friend.

Mr. SANDERSON: When the hon. gentleman was in opposition he used to let a couple of grunts out of him every day. Now he gives only one grunt.

Mr. SPENCE: My hon. friend is giving two grunts now.

Mr. SANDERSON: That is the sum and substance of his career in this house.

An hon. MEMBER: My hon. friend talks nonsense all the time.

Mr. SANDERSON: Now, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Parkdale will pay attention, I will proceed to read from the paper.

Mr. SPENCE: Well, I guess I will have to accept the punishment.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am prepared to hold this item up for any length of time, if my hon. friends on the other side of the house wish to interrupt.

An hon. MEMBER: Send for the Prime Minister.

Mr. SANDERSON: The Prime Minister's address is further reported as follows:

I have no doubt but we will succeed. It is purposeless to discuss the difficulties. You know many of them. And it is not in the public interest that I should now disclose the means by which we plan to overcome them. But I can tell you these plans are maturing, and we will not relax our efforts until they are in effective operation.

Then in larger type I find a paragraph to which I would like my hon. friend from Parkdale to pay particular attention:

Our minister to Japan, the Hon. H. H. Marier is, I hope, at this very hour on his way to China to discuss with the government of that country the purchase of millions of bushels of our wheat. Nor will the government hesitate, if necessary, to assist by providing credit facilities and by any other means in its power the establishment of so incalculably valuable a channel of trade.

Then he follows:

Do you realize what a great market in the Orient would mean to you? I think you do, but I fear you have come to believe that the door to it which has been so long closed, it cannot be opened. We believe it can. The Orient is Canada's logical customer. We have the goods it needs. We have its good-will. We have a geological advantage over many other great trading countries.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SANDERSON: Whether or not that means "geographical" I do not know; I am quoting word for word.

And you have a government which will capitalize these facts and on them will build a trade route which will mean a reorientation of the trade of this nation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. QUINN: I did not know you were a comedian.

Mr. SANDERSON: In view of the remarks of the Prime Minister, and in view of the public statements of the Minister of Trade and Commerce since this government came into power, together with the fact that Hon. H. H. Marler is now back in Canada, surely the government should have something to report to the house and to the country in regard to whether they have succeeded in establishing a trade with China for our wheat or our flour. I think this is an opportune time for the minister to make some statement.

I will pay this tribute to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I think he is endeavouring in an honest, efficient manner, to do his very best to increase the export trade of this country, but apparently the Prime Minister, being leader, has led his Minister of Trade and Commerce up a blind alley as far as trade with China is concerned. If the minister has anything to report I know it will be agreeable news to hon. members on this side and to the whole country. I should like the minister to be good enough to take the committee into his confidence and tell us whether anything has come out of these negotiations with China, and especially whether the visit of Mr. Marler was productive of any results.

Mr. STEVENS: As I stated before, so far as Mr. Marler's visit is concerned, I think it only proper that the matter should rest with the Prime Minister, under whose department he comes. Mr. Marler does not report to me. He is the minister plenipotentiary to Japan; he undertook the mission to China at the express request of the Prime Minister, and I might say his visit was more diplomatic than concerned with trade.

Questions of trade, trade commissioners under my control and direction and so on, are matters pertinent to this item and to the Department of Trade and Commerce. I may say very frankly to the hon. gentleman that I am not in a position to give him now a report of Mr. Marler's visit. But I will say this, on the general theme: it would be most unfortunate indeed if there were to go out from this house any impression that we treated this north China trade with levity or frivolity.

Mr. SANDERSON: I can assure the minister I am not treating it with levity at all. I am serious.

Mr. STEVENS: I am speaking now in general terms. I am certain that in the north Pacific we are on the very threshold of an era of development and expansion which perhaps will surpass in magnitude anything that has been seen in the lifetime of anyone in this house. That does not mean that this year or next year we are going to have a boom; booms are things to be avoided, but it is obvious to any thinking person who is watching the trend of events that there is gradually being brought about in China a settlement of conditions which inevitably will result in an expansion of trade. I am not saying that we are responsible or can claim the credit for this; the point is that conditions are becoming settled and ordered in that great country. Our explorations and investigations demonstrate very clearly that in north China a really remarkable field is opening up. It is true that with the constant fall in the value of silver the purchasing power of that country has been curtailed, and during the past year the fall has been so precipitous that is has interfered very materially with external trade. However, there is a general conviction among students of the situation that bottom has been reached and that there is likely to be a recovery. I think it only reasonable for me to invite the attention of hon. members to the fact that scarcely a day passes that the public press does not refer to the great international problem of silver currency which, after all, is a very important factor in this oriental situation. I am not going to say to-night that the one solution of the economic difficulties of China and the orient will be found in the silver question; I am not seeking for the moment to discuss that phase of the matter, but I do present this as evidence of the interest that is being taken in this great problem. I say further that the indications are that the Nanking government of China has so stabilized its position that now it can be looked upon as a stabilized government, and there is a strong probability that it will succeed in bringing about an economic stabilization in that country. In my opinion this will be followed by a tremendous expansion of trade. What we are seeking to do is to prepare ourselves to take advantage of that expansion, and at the same time we hope to be of some service to the great Chinese republic. So far as the present year is concerned, we have shipped, chiefly since the beginning of the new year, about 6,000,000 bushels of wheat to that country. That is not a tremendous amount, but I think it is much more significant than at first glance the figures would indicate.

Mr. DUFF: How does that compare with the previous year?

Mr. STEVENS: In the previous year we shipped 2,460,000 bushels. I do not want to give the impression that I am just putting those two figures side by side with the idea of indicating that we have accomplished something great. I do not think that is so; I want to get the proper perspective. These 6,000,000 bushels, in my estimation, are not at all indicative of what we have actually accomplished in the realm of good will.

Mr. SANDERSON: Does the minister say 6,000,000 bushels have been shipped since January 1 of this year?

Mr. STEVENS: I said that was largely so, although I am not certain of the exact quantity shipped since the first of the year. There are considerable shipments going forward at present.

Mr. SANDERSON: What about shipments of flour this year?

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot tell the quantity of flour shipped this year, but it does not greatly exceed that of last year. However, within the last week I have had conferences with the flour trade of Canada; in fact I have been in contact with them a good deal lately, and special efforts are being made now to increase our flour shipments to China. But I wish to direct attention to a fact which I have already mentioned and which it seems to me is not properly appreciated. Our shipments of flour and wheat to China this year would have been very much greater had it not been for the unusual fall in the exchange values of Australian currency, which has enabled that country to get into the market very much below our prices. That is to their advantage. Their exports of wheat to China this year amount to nearly double ours, something like 12,000,000 bushels.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. HANBURY: Can the minister give a comparison showing their previous shipments to China?

Mr. STEVENS: They have shipped considerable quantities for many years, but this year they have been much in excess of the normal quantity owing to the condition to which I have referred. The point which I wish to emphasize, however, is that the indications are that we are going to have a steadily improving market in China. I have referred to wheat and flour. But we have done very well indeed in lumber also. For instance, we have increased our lumber exports to north China from 20,000,000 feet board measure to 39,000,000 feet board measure.

Mr. HANBURY: That would be by reason of the subsidy.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes; it is due almost entirely to that. That, however, I should prefer to discuss under the other item. What is the significance of this figure I have given? While we have increased our lumber sales to China from 20,000,000 to 39,000,000 feet, with the anticipated exports for the current year of 50,000,000, the United States exports, which, of course, are larger, have dropped from 250,000,000 to 170,000,000. In other words, we have increased our sales to China in lumber while United States sales have fallen off. That, I think, is a very good indication of what I am speaking of in the way of improved trade conditions.

There is much more that one might say. There are other lines which we are getting into China. But what I wish to impress upon the committee is this: I look upon the north Pacific trade, chiefly with China and Japan, as offering a remarkably profitable field for the future, and we are extremely anxious that the relations between this country and China in that respect shall be maintained on the most cordial basis, and that appreciation shall be evidenced by the Canadian parliament of the possibilities of a developing trade with that great republic.

Mr. SANDERSON: Before the Hon. Mr. Marler went to China, and while negotiations were being carried on before he was sent there, did the minister satisfy himself that financially China was able to purchase large quantities of wheat or of anything else from this country?

Mr. STEVENS: We certainly made examinations in that respect. I have already indicated that, synchronizing perhaps with that visit, or about the same time, there was, as there has been since, a serious drop in the price of silver which militated against the achievement of all that we had hoped for.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am a little surprised to hear the statement of my hon. friend that we should not say anything detrimental to China for fear of injuring our trade with that country. I would remind him of what transpired in 1922 and 1923, when I occupied a seat on the other side. When something was said about the desirability of increasing trade with China—the Immigration Act being under review at the time—the present minister and other hon. members from Vancouver and the coast did not fail to register a strong protest against the government's admitting nationals of that country into Canada. I mention this in passing to show the difference between sitting on this side and sitting opposite.

Mr. STEVENS: We will discuss that, if you like.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I fail to see why there should not be a splendid opportunity to sell wheat in China, and I fail also to understand why a drop in silver should have anything to do with the question, taking into consideration the drop that has occurred in the price of Canadian wheat. If silver has dropped, wheat has dropped correspondingly.

Mr. HANBURY: More.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend interjects, more. I do not see the force of the minister's argument. If we cannot ship our goods now by reason of a depletion in silver in China, it must not be overlooked that there has been an enormous depletion in the value of the goods we have to sell and which we are offering to the public. I repeat, I do not at all appreciate the minister's argument; and if there is an opportunity of selling wheat in China, I do not see that the drop in the price of silver has very much to do with it, so long as our commodities, wheat, lumber and others which we are seeking to sell to them, have fallen correspondingly in value. I doubt whether there will be much of a market in China beyond that which we have already captured. Austrilia is very much closer to that country. We can sell in China our lower-grade wheats from the prairies, as we have always done, and we have sold flour in considerable quantities. I was surprised to read the report of the Prime Minister's speech in Regina when he was discussing this very question. It goes to show, however, as I have said, that there is a vast difference between being in opposition and being in office. Hon. gentlemen opposite are discovering now that there are some real difficulties when once you accept the responsibility of governing the country.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is good for them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): And they will find greater difficulties if they persist in their present policy of shutting out trade, almost to the point of exclusion. I want to voice a strong protest. It will not be tonight—

An hon. MEMBER: The death knell.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes; the death knell is being rung very properly now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You are doing it fine; I never conceived that you could do it so well, and I shall be delighted to see how you succeed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You are doing it in first class order. Keep it up and you will succeed in disgusting everyone in Canada, as they are disgusted in other countries, with high protection, which in this case is not protection at all but complete exclusion. However, this is not the place for a discussion of that question; I shall have an opportunity some other time to go into it in detail. I would observe again, though, how surprised I was at the warning given by my hon. friend, now that he is in the seats of the mighty, so to speak, to us on this side of the house, that we must be very careful about what we say lest we interfere with international trade. That was not the case when hon. gentlemen were on this side. But, Mr. Chairman, we learn wisdom through responsibility.

Mr. GRAY: With much that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said respecting the increase of trade with China, due to their increased purchasing power in the future, I agree. But I wonder whether he seriously wishes to leave the impression in this house that there will be any large increase in the purchases of wheat from this country by China. I shall be corrected if I am wrong, but I am reliably informed that China at the present time is producing in the north sufficient wheat to meet its own needs. Moreover, China is not a wheat-eating nation. The people live largely on maize and rice cakes, and it would take years of education to cultivate among them a genuine taste for bread made from our flour. Is the minister really serious in his assertion to-night that, as the Prime Minister has intimated, we have a market there for millions upon millions of bushels of our grain? Is he serious in that?

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is a little awry in some of his facts. As a matter of fact, China produced last year—at least she produced in one year recently—about 600,000,000 bushels of wheat. That, of course, is not anything like sufficient to supply requirements. It is practically all of the soft variety. The belief that the Chinese are almost exclusively a rice eating people is not correct. Generally speaking, they will eat rice in preference to wheat and other cereals if the rice is cheaper, but within China wheat is usually cheaper than rice. These facts are not generally known or accepted.

Mr. HANBURY: That is Chinese wheat?

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot agree with the statement of my hon. friend that it would necessitate a serious process of dietetic education to induce the Chinese to use flour. Two different grades of flour are required in China. In southern China it is used mostly for what they call noodles and other forms of pastry which call for a soft variety. Farther north they use rolls and other forms of bread, which call for a different grade. The milling industry is exploring this enlarging market in the north. I say with perfect candour to the committee, as I did the other night, that there are those who seem to hold to the view that the Chinese will never import much wheat, that we have reached the point of saturation. I do not concur in that view. We intend to press the sale of Canadian flour and wheat in the Chinese market.

Mr. YOUNG: Does the minister expect that China will pay largely with silver for the wheat he hopes to sell? Does he hope by some international action to increase the value of silver? If he should succeed in that, then would we not be forced to take just half as much silver in exchange for our wheat?

Mr. STEVENS: I have no desire to get into an academic discussion of obscure economics. In the first place I did not say that we were going to sell wheat for silver only.

Mr. YOUNG: I said "largely."

Mr. STEVENS: Or even largely.

[Mr. Gray.]

Mr. YOUNG: Will the minister take goods in exchange?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, my free trade friend, we will take goods in exchange.

Mr. YOUNG: Will the minister let them come into Canada?

Mr. STEVENS: We will let as much come in as we require and as we are able to use intelligently.

Mr. CAYLEY: The hon. minister has intimated a possible increase in the trade with China in wheat and lumber. What will Canada purchase in return?

Mr. STEVENS: I will outline what we are buying.

An hon. MEMBER: Laundries.

An hon. MEMBER: Rattles for the hon. members over there.

Mr. YOUNG: We did not hear that remark.

Mr. STEVENS: First there are peanuts, which my hon. friend can put in his pocket and take to the zoo; we imported about $996,000 worth last year.

Mr. JACOBS: The minister told us that we must not treat this subject with levity.

Mr. STEVENS: I am talking about imports, not exports. Then a small quantity of vegetables, amounting to nineteen or twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. JACOBS: What about tea?

Mr. STEVENS: Strange to say, that item is not very large.

Mr. JACOBS: It comes from Ceylon and India.

Mr. STEVENS: We may have an opportunity to expand our trade in tea.

Mr. YOUNG: And take it away from the empire?

Mr. STEVENS: We could get it from Hongkong. The imports last year of this commodity amounted to 370,000 pounds, with a value of $63,000. Imports of oil for refining amounted to $138,000. There are a large number of items here, such as drugs, bones or ivory, dried fish, and $107,000 worth of undressed furs.

Mr. JACOBS: Those may be coming from Russia via China.

Mr. STEVENS: No, they come from China. When I was in China many years ago I saw some of the finest furs I have ever seen in any country in the world.

Mr. JACOBS: Were they on the animals when you saw them?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, but on human animals. Here is an item which will interest my hon. friend—bristles.

Mr. JACOBS: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. STEVENS: Another item, manufactures of hair.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is for me.

Mr. STEVENS: No. Then cotton laces, cotton clothing, silk manufactures, a small quantity of furniture, manufactures of paper. This last item covers that fine paper usually termed India paper. There are small items covering books and printed matter, drugs and medicinal preparations.

Mr. JACOBS: Does that include opium?

Mr. STEVENS: No, the item is too small for that. I am afraid that most of the opium comes in through the underground route.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Ginseng.

Mr. STEVENS: The total imports made up of miscellaneous items amount to about $3,000,000.

Mr. HANBURY: What is the total value of the imports during the past five years?

Mr. STEVENS: I have not the information for the past five years, but for the past two years it has been about $3,000,000 per year.

Mr. HANBURY: And Canada expects to expand her trade in wheat and lumber?

Mr. STEVENS: For some years China has been in a very depressed economic condition, but we are convinced that she is now on the threshold of a renewed or stabilized economic life. That may not develop rapidly, but in my estimation China offers one of the finest virgin fields for the development of trade in the whole world.

Mr. JACOBS: That $3,000,000 compares with $50,000,000 of trade with Japan. Is that difference due to the fact that we have a minister in Japan and have not one in China?

Mr. STEVENS: I am afraid my hon. friend is out in his figures. The imports from Japan amounted to $12,000,000, not $50,000,000.

Mr. JACOBS: That is for last year?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, for last year and the year before.

Mr. JACOBS: I understood our trade amounted to about $50,000,000.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is considerably astray.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I have listened with much interest to this discussion on our export trade, and I appreciate the interest taken therein. For many years we have been looking eastward for a potential market, and we trust our hopes will be realized. The minister mentioned the diversion of British purchases of wheat from North America to other countries including the Argentine, and indicated as one possible reason the impression which had arisen in Great Britain that possibly we were holding up the price of wheat beyond what might be considered a reasonable figure.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not wish to be put in the wrong light; I was referring to the European importing countries rather than to Great Britain. I just want to make that correction.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I apologize; I rather misunderstood. I was going to ask the minister whether the diversion—which we of course must recognize—of a part of the British purchases of wheat from Canada to the Argentine republic, was not due to the necessity on the part of Great Britain of buying more largely from those countries which could accept more largely her own goods in exchange. I am not now speaking politically at all; I am not even discussing the effect of political policies; I am simply suggesting something that has become an obvious fact. It is a much simpler matter to carry on international trade in a large way as between an industrial country and a country that is almost purely agricultural, than between two countries both of which are largely industrial. In the last thirteen years—and I am discussing this from the point of view not of political policy but of actual fact—we are finding that we do not offer the same opportunity for extended trade with industrial countries as we did thirty or forty years ago. Possibly the minister will agree that one difficulty in the way of our trade with Great Britain and one advantage which an almost purely agricultural country like the Argentine republic must enjoy, is the necessity on the part of Great Britain to purchase their goods in order that they may be able to purchase hers.

Mr. STEVENS: I am afraid I cannot agree with my hon. friend in his analysis. He has overlooked entirely two important factors in our trade with Great Britain. One is the interest we owe, which amounts, roughly speaking, to $100,000,000 a year.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I appreciate that.

Mr. STEVENS: Then there is the amount, which I have estimated, in the best examination I could make of the figures, as being between $100,000,000 and $150,000,000 a year, that we are bound to pay Great Britain for carrying charges. Great Britain's excess of imports over exports, which has been so marked in many years, is largely due to the income she is receiving from carrying charges and interest. Taking the figures I have given, we should have an excess of exports to Great Britain over imports of approximately $250,000,000 a year to break even. Our trade with Britain, therefore, is on a more even basis than is generally admitted or understood. I believe our trade relations with Great Britain are on a very sound economic basis. We are hoping to improve them somewhat by the policy that we are following, which will no doubt be discussed when the budget is brought down.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I do not want the minister to imagine for a moment that I did not take into account such items as interest charges and so on, which during past years have certainly helped out the balance of trade and made up the difference in that regard. But the fact remains that during the last two or three years there has been a great diversion of wheat purchases on the part of Great Britain from Canada to other countries, including the Argentine, and more lately Russia. There must be a reason. It may be the difference in price, but I still believe, although the minister does not agree with me, that another factor is the greater ease with which Great Britain can sell her goods in those countries which are not themselves very largely manufacturing the goods which Great Britain has to sell.

Mr. STEVENS: There were two main factors. One was the fact that Argentine money was at a discount of as much as 30 per cent. That was a very important factor. The other was this—and I do not want to harp on it—the British grain trade were tremendously hurt, whether rightly or wrongly I am not expressing an opinion, at the attitude of the grain trade of Canada in the fall of 1929. I had meetings with the corn exchange of London seeking to iron this out. We had representatives meet them and give them a clear statement of the western position, but I doubt whether it made a great impression on their minds or immediately removed the prejudice. With the change, however, that has been brought about in the last three or four months, there is a marked difference in British corn circles, if I might so describe them, towards Canada, and I think a marked improvement in the attitude towards the Canadian grain trade.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Is there a marked improvement in the proportion of Canadian grain purchased?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. I think the whole situation is likely to be corrected.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Even with the Russian wheat purchases, which are growing very rapidly?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. HANBURY: By "carrying charges" I presume the minister means transportation and insurance?

Mr. STEVENS: Services generally.

Mr. HANBURY: The minister stated that the grain trade in Great Britain in the fall of 1929 rather resented what they felt was being done to them by the grain trade of Canada—

Mr. STEVENS: And the United States.

Mr. HANBURY: I would ask the minister whether the grain trade in Great Britain did not change their attitude and feel very grateful to the Canadian people following the bringing down of the Dunning Budget?

Mr. STEVENS: I should not like to be asked to give an endorsation of the Dunning budget.

Mr. HANBURY: The minister referred to the attitude, at one particular period, of the British buyer toward the Canadian grain trade.

Mr. STEVENS: I shall answer my hon. friend, and I do it reluctantly. The time I speak of was the months of October and November.

Mr. HANBURY: 1929?

Mr. STEVENS: 1930; last year when I was there.

Mr. HANBURY: The minister referred to 1929 when he was speaking of the date at which they took exception to our methods.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, and the Dunning budget came down in May, 1930. I was overseas in October and November, 1930.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: After the general election.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, and after the Dunning budget.

Mr. YOUNG: And after the tariff was raised.

Mr. STEVENS: I found just what I stated, but I never intimated that the Dunning budget had any influence one way or the other. The point I was making was that rightly or wrongly the impression was abroad that the Canadian and United States grain interests as a whole had not dealt fairly with the purchasing countries of Europe. That was the impression. I do not wish to be misrepresented in this. I took to a conference highly representative men of western Canada and I thought they made a most excellent presentation of their case; but I say again that I doubt whether it made any impression in the way of removing the prejudice from the corn exchange of London, Liverpool and other centres. I say that regretfully, but that was the fact and that was a very important factor in the falling off of purchases of Canadian grain on the European market.

But there has been a change in that situation. The grain trade of western Canada has changed its policy in regard to marketing in Europe and Great Britain, and that has been followed without question by a very much better feeling over there. I think happily the former splendid relations will be restored.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: With Mr. MacFarlane in charge of the selling, selling the grain at anything he can get for it, shooting it over as fast as they will accept it, of course one would expect they would be feeling better about the matter. But it was only by a departure from the original policy of the pool that that was accomplished. They were trying to get as directly as possible in touch with the consumer and cutting out as far as possible the middleman—quite a commendable attitude for them to take in view of their cooperative character. But now it is under the administration of a regular grain trade salesman and a very good man. I am not criticizing him. An entirely new order has been introduced and of course more wheat is being sold, but at what price?

Mr. VALLANCE: Are we to understand it was because of the negotiations that were made during the Imperial conference by those who were taken over in the interests of the grain trade that the entire sales policy was changed?

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot speak for the change in the policy of the pool.

Mr. CAMPBELL: During the last few months I have been reading articles in the newspapers about an arrangement supposed to have been made between the minister and the Prime Minister of South Africa while they were in London attending the Imperial conference. The story carried in the newspapers was that this involved an enormous importation of manganese from South Africa, and the sale of large quantities of Canadian lumber to South Africa. The manganese, according to the papers, was to be refined in a refinery to be built in Montreal, and then shipped to the United States. I Wonder if the minister could tell us anything about that arrangement.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a question just how far one is justified in discussing a subject which is substantially a matter of private business and private enterprise. The department, so long as I am the head of it, is prepared to lend every assistance and cooperation to any Canadian industry in the extension of its trade and business; but in order to do that, I confess, one should be very careful in what one says in regard to any negotiations that may be carried on. There has been a certain amount of publicity with respect to this matter, however, and it may not be out of place to make a brief statement.

While I was in England I was approached by certain Canadians and asked if I could assist them in getting contact with those who might supply them with manganese ore. I took the matter up with the colonial office and secured a direct contact between these Canadians and east South Africa, where the manganese ore is located. The contact was made, and out of that has grown a proposal which it is hoped will be successful. I question very much the advisability of premature publicity, but what was in mind was the establishment of a large plant near Montreal which would refine from one hundred thousand to two hundred thousand tons of manganese ore a year. That would mean the bringing in of that much ore from east South Africa each year. We then explored the possibility of return cargoes. Our South African trade at the present time is rather one-sided, we shipping much more to South Africa than we get in return. We are improving that, though, by taking sugar and some other articles which they are now producing successfully. If this manganese business develops, the situation will be reversed, and we would have empty space on the return trip to South Africa. I then took up the question of lumber as a return cargo, and we are still working on that phase. It would have to be lumber from eastern Canada, because we are already shipping the heavy types of lumber from western Canada; that is a direct line. It is hoped that we can find lumber in eastern Canada which will be able to compete with Swedish, Norwegian and other classes of lumber. I would not care to say anything more than that. The matter is going ahead, and so far as my department is concerned, it is rendering every assistance possible in the development of this trade.

Mr. REID: A few moments ago the minister spoke of our grain trade with China as compared with Australia's. Is it not a fact that for the past number of years Australia has done a greater trade in grain and flour with China than Canada has? Was not that the case even before Australian money was at such a discount as it is to-day. I was wondering what method the minister intended to pursue to increase our trade in grain and flour with China in competition with Australia, all things being equal. My information is that for a number of years past Australia has always done a greater trade in grain and flour in China than we have.

Mr. STEVENS: I have not the Australian export and import figures under my hand. I have said two or three times already that the Australians certainly got a large share of the China grain trade this year, due to the heavy discount to which Australia exchange is subjected at this time. As to the methods, I have been trying to explain as well as I could for the last hour what we are trying to do. We shall follow our usual method in dealing with this matter, use our trade commissioners' offices and render to Canadian exporters every possible assistance.

Mr. RINFRET: A few minutes ago the name of the Hon. Mr. Marler was mentioned, and the minister stated that his mission in the orient was rather of a diplomatic character than that of a trade commissioner. I have now before me a copy of the Montreal Daily Star of this date, Thursday, May 14, which contains an interview given by the Hon. Mr. Marler in Victoria, either on board ship or shortly after his arrival ashore. If the minister has read that interview he must have found out for himself that Mr. Marler, according to his own representations, acted very much in the capacity of a trade commissioner during his mission in China.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. STEVENS: I said he was acting in both capacities.

Mr. RINFRET: But I think the minister added that he would report to the Prime Minister on his return and until that was done the minister did not think he would have anything to tell the committee about Mr. Marler's mission. Mr. Marler's mission apparently being largely of a commercial and trade character, I would regret very much if it had been conducted without any contract with the Department of Trade and Commerce. The Prime Minister already has a kind of monopoly of portfolios in this government. He is not only Prime Minister, but Finance minister, Secretary of State for External Affairs, and for a time he was Acting Minister of Labour. I hope that in addition to all that he has not taken a slice out of the department of my hon. friend, because I think my hon. friend will prove to be a good minister, as good a minister as may come from the ranks of his own party. I therefore hope that he will make sure that he keeps complete control of his own department.

Mr. STEVENS: I can assure my hon. friend that the Prime Minister in all his relations with his ministers acts in the most courteous manner. I would also say this: I do not know of anyone that I would rather have cooperating with me in matters of this character than the present Prime Minister of Canada. My reference to Mr. Marler was simply this, and I think it is quite proper: Mr. Marler is the representative of this government to the government of Japan. He is in direct contact with Prime Minister of Canada, and I have no right, except through the proper channels, to discuss matters with Mr. Marler. We have our own trade agents in China and Japan, and they cooperate with Mr. Marler and have done so through all his term of office. There are the most cordial relations between my department and Mr. Marler in the orient, but he does not report to me, and I think it is a little unfair to ask me to discuss Mr. Marler's mission to China because I feel that it is a matter that should wait until his return. The Prime Minister will undoubtedly wish to talk personally with Mr. Marler following upon any report that may have been received. It is a matter—shall I say?—of common sense to let the matter rest until Mr. Marler returns.

Mr. RINFRET: But what would happen if Mr. Marler's report to the Prime Minister conflicted with the report of the minister's agents in China or Japan?

Mr. STEVENS: No conflict whatever.

Mr. RINFRET: The minister says they would not conflict; how does he know?

Mr. STEVENS: I know that the trade commissioner in Tokyo from our department is Mr. Marler's special secretary. There is a most cordial relationship between them. However, Mr. Marler has wider duties than merely reporting to the Department of Trade and Commerce. He represents the Canadian government in Tokyo.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am interested in the debased or discounted currency of Australia, and the fact that through the use of such currency Australia has been able to negotiate trade with China better than if her pound was at par. My hon. friend from Macleod has been preaching the doctrine of depreciated coinage, and I did not take much stock in his remarks. I do not like the thought of Canada's currency being debased. We have been proud to think that our currency has remained at par. However, we are told that Australia with her currency reduced in value to the extent of 25 per cent can sell wheat better in the interests of the farmers than if her pound was at top notch. Would that work the same way in Canada? If our dollar were down to a 75 cent valuation would we be able to sell our wheat to better advantage in the markets of the world than we are selling it at the present time? If we could I am willing to consider the advantage of such a condition.

Mr. STEVENS: Before the hon. member decides definitely that he would be willing to welcome a drop in the value of the Canadian dollar to 75 cents he had better ask himself what he could buy with that depreciated dollar.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is the point. When we come to buy we have a horse of a different colour, have we not?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, it is a piebald horse then.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Where do we stand then in regard to that question? Do the advantages overcome the disadvantages, or the contrary?

Mr. HANBURY: During the past year the Conservative party, through its chief spokesman and also through the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, made the statement to the country on many occasions that after they were elected to power they would cancel the trade treaties which were entered into by the Liberal government. Have any changes been made in any of the trade treaties?

Mr. STEVENS: None, other than the present negotiations being carried on with Australia, and the cancellation of the New Zealand order in council. The whole question of trade treaties will be considered during the coming year. It is a large question affecting some twenty treaties. There are very complex and difficult features in connection with it which I think my right hon. friend and other gentlemen opposite who were ministers in the previous government will recognize. There is no disposition on the part of the government to deal rashly or recklessly with these treaties. However, there must be certain readjustments. At this time I should not care to enter into a discussion of the matter which has been brought up by my hon. friend; the treaties are still in existence, and I think it desirable that the matter should not be discussed until actual proposals are brought forward suggesting possible amendments.

Mr. HANBURY: The minister has stated that he would not like rashly to discuss these treaties. Surely when the Conservative party promised that they were going to cancel all these treaties they must have had full knowledge of what the treaties contained and what they hoped to do by their cancellation. Under those circumstances I cannot understand why it should take a year and a half or two years after the government assumes office to correct a situation of which they were fully aware when they made the statement.

Mr. STEVENS: It will take considerable time.

Mr. HANBURY: When the Conservative party were telling how quickly they would cancel the treaties they did not say that it would take a considerable time to do it. The impression I received from hearing their statements was that we needed only to select a Conservative government and our treaties would be cancelled immediately. As a resident of British Columbia the question whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce would permit the Australian treaty to be cancelled gave me a good deal of worry. I must say I was much relieved when I learned that the present Prime Minister had included the present Minister of Trade and Commerce in his cabinet; I felt that there would be some protection for the Australian treaty. At the same time however, if there are features about these treaties which require changing it would be well for the minister to explain each treaty to this house and to tell in what way it should be changed.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think I could give such an explanation under the present item. There are twenty or thirty treaties largely centering around the French treaty. The matter of treaties is of a complex nature and certainly I would not wish to enter into a discussion of them at this time. I might remind my hon. friend however, that the present government was engaged in the Imperial conference last fall, and so far as I am concerned I have been occupied to the limit of my strength and have not had the time to deal with the matter.

Mr. HANBURY: I wish to assure the minister that I did not expect the treaties would be changed, and I do not anticipate they will be changed for a year or two. Like many other Canadians however, I resented the extravagant language used by the Conservative party during the election campaign when, among other things, they were discussing these treaties.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before this item is carried I should like to obtain from the minister further particulars concerning the fiscal policy of the administration and its bearing upon the all-important matter of Canada's trade. If hon. members on this side have a wrong conception of the government's policy I for one would like to be corrected. It seems to me that the fiscal policy of the government as announced is a policy of restriction of trade. The department over which my hon. friend presides is one concerned largely with the extension of Canadian trade. The item we are now discussing is one relating to the intelligence service, to Canada's trade representatives in different parts of the world. If the fiscal policy of the government cuts athwart all that my right hon. friend is seeking to do in the way of the extension of trade through commercial agents and commercial representatives in different countries, it seems to me that this item might as well be cut out or reduced. If we on this side have misunderstood the policy of the government let us be corrected. I shall state what I understand to be the government's policy in the matter of trade and if I am wrong I would like to be corrected.

In the first place, during the general election campaign in this country and at the Imperial conference in Great Britain, the Prime Minister stated that his policy was Canada first. Canada first is a slogan, and as such it may mean one thing or it may mean another and quite a different thing. As a slogan it may have one meaning or one value politically and quite another economically, as for example in its consequences upon trade and revenue. When I asked my hon. friend the minister in charge of the estimates what was meant by the term "Canada first" he replied in an offhand way: "It means that Canadian interests stand first in the attention of the government." That statement is equally true as the objective and purpose of any and every party which has held power in Canada. My right hon. friend will not say that his political opponents have not the interest of Canada as much at heart as he has. They may have a different point of view as to policies which will further those interests, but I think my right hon. friend would frankly admit that Canadian interests have always been the chief concern of the ministry of the day, no matter which of the old political parties may have been in power. The real significance of a slogan from a national point of view lies in the meaning to be attached to it not as a slogan which may have a general meaning, but as representing a concrete proposal, and I think in this connection the Prime Minister has been straightforward in his statement of what the "Canada first" slogan means. The Prime Minister says:

> "Canada first," means adequate protection of Canadian industry, both agricultural and industrial.

That is the definition which he gave in Great Britain at the time of the Imperial conference. The question arises: what is adequate protection? There again the Prime Minister was equally definite when, in effect, he said:

> Protection sufficient to save from the effects of competition from abroad those products or those articles which we can produce or manufacture in Canada.

In a word, it is the making of Canada into an economic unit,—a self-sufficient economic unit. That is the theory of the present administration, as I understand its policies. That may be an excellent thing, although I do not believe it can be done, and I believe if it were done, it would be a mistake. Similarly, going a step further, I think the administration have in mind making out of the British Empire a so-called imperial economic unit. This they believe would be a good thing. I think even were it capable of achievement it would be a mistake from the point of view of what would be in the best interests of all concerned.

Let us see if we are agreed as to what are the policies. As I say, in the first instance, the policy of the administration is adequate protection in order to make Canada an economic unit, and that is to be done by so restricting trade that commodities shall not come into Canada from other countries when we are capable of producing or manufacturing them ourselves. The minister says, "We can do our best at producing and manufacturing, but still some things will have to come in," and I assume—rightly I presume—that the first part of the world from which my hon. friend would admit commodities, where they are to be admitted at all, would be the other parts of the British Empire. That at all events was the statement made at the Imperial conference. The Prime Minister in that connection again was specific and direct at the conference. He said, "We will admit your goods into Canada on a preferential basis. You must subscribe to the principle of reciprocal preferences, but this principle of reciprocal preferences as applied to the empire shall be based in the first instance upon this idea of adequate protection which is held by the Canadian government. We will make an imperial preference by adding ten per cent to our existing tariff. You must do the same thing; you must have a protective tariff and as against the rest of the world add to it ten per cent, and in virtue of the relatively lower rate thus effected within the empire such trade will flow as comes on a reciprocal basis."

This means, from the point of view of hon. gentlemen opposite, three barriers, strata or layers, so to speak, over which trade may flow or come into Canada. In the first instance, in the creation of Canada as an economic unit, there is protection of existing industries by tariffs adequate to permit of our producing and manufacturing here all that can be manufactured or produced in this country. Then we will admit into Canada from other parts of the empire, over that tariff, on a reciprocal basis founded on tariffs, such goods as may flow in here, but we will keep them out from other parts of the world by a ten per cent or some other increase in tariff as against those other parts. Before this point is reached I think we will have come to a place where trade from any other source is hardly likely to come to Canada at all.

That is my understanding of the policy of this government. If that is not a correct understanding I should like to be corrected, because I do not want to misrepresent hon. members opposite. If that is a correct statement, I say that policy is making for the restriction rather than the expansion of trade; it renders practically nugatory the work of commercial agents and trade representatives in other parts of the world. Only yesterday we had an interesting address by the right hon. member for Argenteuil with regard to his recent visit to the Argentine and other South American countries. I listened to hear him say whether or not he had expressed to one of those countries wherein Canada's trade policies would facilitate their trade with this country, would assist in the exchange of goods between the two countries, but he said nothing on that point. I do not see how he could say anything of advantage while the policy of the administration is what it is at present. If I am wrong in my statement of the fiscal policy of this administration perhaps my hon. friend would correct me, but if I am right I think what I say is true, that despite the efforts of my hon. friend to increase trade—and I am sure he wishes to do that—he will be frustrated from the very beginning to the close by the fiscal policy of the administration of which he is a member.

Mr. STEVENS: As I said about an hour ago, when the right hon. gentleman made a similar statement, I do not think he can expect us to accept his analysis of our policy. I do not wish to go into it at the moment—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Give me your interpretation.

Mr. STEVENS: My right hon. friend said, for instance, that our policy virtually shut out trade. He may interpret it in that way if he so chooses, but that is not our view of the situation at all. Then the right hon. gentleman asked for a declaration of the principles of the government in connection with trade. Would not that come more properly from the lips of the Prime Minister when he delivers his budget speech, in the course of the next few days?

It is well known that this party stands for protection, in the generally accepted meaning of that word. It is well known that we stand for the development of Canada industrially and for the utilization of our resources to the greatest possible advantage. These things are well known. The right hon. gentleman and his colleagues have argued this matter with hon. members on this side, to my own knowledge and participation, for at least twenty years. I do not want to say that we never could get together, but generally speaking we have agreed to disagree on our interpretation of what these things mean. But the country has decided that question; we have been placed here for the purpose of carrying out the policies which the country understood us to enunciate, and we are trying to carry them out.

My right hon. friend is quite correct in saying that we are anxious to develop trade within the empire. We are bending our efforts in that direction. I may say that we are hoping that the trade arrangement with Australia may be closed in the very near future. Really the cause of the delay has been the disturbed economic and political conditions in that country. These have had nothing to do with us directly, but undoubtedly they have embarrassed the government of Australia somewhat in determining this matter. We hope it may be decided in the near future, and the trade agreement placed before this house for its approval. We hope also to work out a satisfactory agreement with New Zealand, something we never had before. We simply extended to that country by order in council certain relationships which existed with other countries, but we are working on that matter now. The same thing applies to South Africa. We really have expectations of improving trade relations between this Dominion and the rest of the empire, to the advantage of all concerned.

At this time I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the fiscal policy of the country, which comes more properly on the budget debate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to get into a discussion of fiscal policy, but certainly I do think that on an item dealing with trade and commerce and relating to commercial agencies in different parts of the world it is not only appropriate but obviously desirable to attempt to discover how far the fiscal policy of the government is operating either to improve or to injure conditions of trade. My hon. friend has spoken about what the government hope to do with regard to South Africa, New Zealand and Australia. He has said nothing about trade with Great Britain. Within the last couple of days we have had in this city a trade mission from Great Britain, consisting of three gentlemen who have been speaking their minds pretty openly with regard to the effect of the government's policy on trade between Canada and Great Britain. My hon. friend will not say that is a subject which we should not discuss at this moment. It bears on this very question of trade.

What is the fact in regard to the policies of this government and how they operate? Last year, before the Imperial conference, hon. gentlemen opposite virtually wiped out the British preference by increasing the tariff against Great Britain. I do not think they had any mandate from the people to do so. Apparently they took this action on the theory that they were going to make of Canada an economic unit, whether that unit bore relation to foreign countries or to other nations within the empire. Under that theory they made it as difficult for the most part, for goods to come into Canada from Great Britain, as to come in from other parts of the world. The effect of that action has been materially to reduce the volume of trade between Great Britain and Canada. My hon. friend is now asking us to vote the same amount of money for commercial agencies in Great Britain as was voted under a previous administration, following a different policy. If the government persists in its present attitude towards Britain, and, with respect to goods of a kind manufactured or produced in this country, raises the duties to such an extent as to prohibit all importation of such goods from the mother country, then there is no need of trade representatives there at all, and we might as well decide to give up that trade altogether. We cannot trade without exchange of commodities. That is the point I wish to emphasize now, for it is a very vital one. The Prime Minister has been most explicit in his statements. I know that my hon. friend would prefer to indulge in generalities and to skirt around the outside of the subject. But the Prime Minister has put his intentions in the form of a proposition comprising very distinct and self-evident statements, and each of those statements, it seems to me, must be debated on its merit.

If I am wrong, I wish my hon. friend to correct me. But as I understand it, the policy called Canada first means "adequate protection". It does not mean having at heart the interests of Canada or anything of that sort. As a slogan it is Canada first, and as an economic or fiscal policy it is a concrete proposal or principle synonomous with a system of adequate protection. Am I wrong in that? My hon. friend does not reply, and I assume his silence signifies assent. Adequate protection, then, is what is intended. The Prime Minister has said, "We will be the judge of what is adequate protection; and we intend, in judging what constitutes adequate protection, that nothing shall come into this country from abroad which can be produced or manufactured in Canada." Again I pause to have my hon. friend correct me if I am wrong. The Prime Minister goes further and says, "We want to trade with other parts of the empire, but we will not begin until we have attained for Canada the ends of adequate protection at which we aim; and if other parts of the empire wish to trade with us they must follow our example in the matter of creating protective tariffs. And we will increase by ten per cent, or whatever percentage is necessary, the duties against foreign countries to make it still more difficult for trade to come in from foreign countries; such trade as on a reciprocal basis thus established can flow in from within the empire may come in." That policy means a serious restriction of trade, and the country to-day is beginning to feel the very serious effects of it. It is not only crippling the trade of Canada but is also very vitally affecting the revenues of the country, as the Prime Minister himself, in his capacity of Minister of Finance, will make very apparent when he brings down his budget.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): This discussion has been very interesting to me and I have been indeed pleased to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has acquitted himself admirably in his very difficult situation. When he was explaining recently his conception of the trade policy of the present government, I happened to open Hansard of last September and I saw that the Prime Minister told us then very explicitly what the policy of this government was in that respect. He said:

> We propose therefore to provide that so far as may be reasonably possible the requirements of the 10,000,000 people living on the northern half of this continent shall be provided by Canadian producers.

There is no equivocation in connection with that policy. Anyone who can read plain English ought to know what it means. It means that he is going to exclude from Canada any goods that we are capable of producing in this country. In other words, they are going to try to sell goods to the world, without buying goods in return. Now, surely it is an economic principle which every reasonable individual should appreciate, that if we are going to sell goods we must be prepared to buy goods in return.

I think the statement which was made by the Prince of Wales at the opening of the exhibition at Buenos Aires was one from which we might learn a lesson. That statement is instructive to people in all sections of the British Empire and throughout the world at large. His Royal Highness said that the real objects of trade, the purpose of trade was the interchange of products. I do not need to tell this house a second time that I do not believe that the representatives of this government met with any degree of success in their mission to the old country when they attended the Imperial conference last fall. It is my candid opinion that the chief reason for their abject failure was that the Prime Minister and his colleagues seemed to have been convinced that we should not import from abroad goods which we can produce at home, and that the very idea of allowing Canadian industry to meet with competition was unacceptable to them. They did not believe that competition should be encouraged.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my experience in life in every particular convinces me that the spirit of competition, the spirit of healthy emulation, is the best thing for any nation or individual, if you wish to bring out the best that is in them. We see, on the other hand, what the policy of the present government is; and that policy being what it is, what is the use of spending $700,000 on trade missions to other countries? What is the use of such an expenditure when evidently the government does not wish to encourage reciprocal trade?

There is one other matter to which I should like to refer. The Prime Minister and his colleagues went to Great Britain, to attend the Imperial conference. The Minister of Trade and Commerce took a number of wide-awake officials with him, and we know they have broken down the entire sales service of the wheat pool. They have thrown the selling of wheat right into the hands of those who for years have been the determined competitors of the pool. If that is the best thing to do in the selling of our wheat, then I fail to see how the wheat pool is going to be able to pursue its business in the future as it has done in the past. I am not one of those who think that the wheat pool, those who had in hand the sale of our wheat, have never made mistakes. Nevertheless, I do think that the government is mistaken in its attitude. So far as western Canada is concerned, we know what has been the result of the establishment of the wheat pool and the work which they have done in the last few years. We know what was the situation of the grain growers in the west when they were at the mercy of the grain trade, and I cannot see how the action of the government in withdrawing the sales force which we have had, and placing the whole business of the grain trade in the hands of their competitors, will be of any benefit to the wheat pool in the west.

Mr. GRAY: Will the minister tell us what has been the decline in the trade of Canada for the month of April 1931, as compared with the month of April 1930?

Mr. STEVENS: The figures for April are not yet available.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Perhaps the minister will permit me to give them. The figures for April, in imports, are $51,189,376 for 1931 as against $71,401,839 a year ago. The exports this year were $33,935,075, and last year, $50,744,139. The total trade for April of this year amounted to $85,863,487, and for April of a year ago, $123,910,008, a reduction in one single month amounting to $38,046,521.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The hon. member should take the place of the minister.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): For the seven months previous, September, October, November, December, January, February and March, the total reduction in trade, as compared with the same period one year ago, amounted to $396,700,947.

Mr. RINFRET: Apparently we have three ministers of trade and commerce, the Prime Minister, the minister whose estimates are now being considered, and the hon. member for South Huron.

Mr. HANBURY: The Canadian government merchant marine or the Canadian National Steamships have some very fine boats which they use during the summer season. We listened the other day with a great deal of interest to the right hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) when he gave the house a description of his trip to South America, and I would suggest to the hon. minister that one of these boats, which are ordinarily tied up during the winter months, should be fitted up as a floating exhibition to visit the countries on the west coast of South America. I am sure many Canadian manufacturers would take advantage of an opportunity to exhibit their goods to probable purchasers in South American countries. During the winter these boats require a certain staff to look after them, and perhaps a small addition to the staff would enable them to be put in service.

I think the minister should consider the exchange of students with South American countries as well as with Japan and China. Much could be done in this way to encourage a feeling which would develop the trade of Canada with those countries.

Mr. STEVENS: I will take the first suggestion of my hon. friend into consideration. In regard to the second, I may say that we are working on that matter.

[Mr. Gray.]

Mr. CAYLEY: I understand that the trade commissioner in Egypt was the only new one appointed during the past year. What is our volume of trade with Egypt, and what are the prospects for increased business?

Mr. STEVENS: For some three or four years prior to this past year Mr. Lamontagne had been loaned by this government to the Egyptian government as an advisory expert in the preparation of a system of customs, and I can say that they were pleased with the services he rendered. Prior to that he had been located at Brussels, but it was thought advisable to appoint a commissioner in Egypt to look after the possible trade with that country, northern Africa, and the near east as far as Persia and Syria, which would include Palestine. Our trade with Egypt is not very large, amounting to about $145,000. It must be remembered that much of this trade is transhipped at London, and quite frequently the figures are not reflected in the returns. We are endeavouring to correct this discrepancy in our returns so that we will get credit for the imports from the country in which the goods originate and vice versa in connection with exports.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): The minister made a statement earlier in the evening relative to our trade balance with Great Britain, and mentioned that our favourable trade balance was offset by carrying charges, interest charges and insurance charges.

Mr. STEVENS: By service charges.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Is it to be the policy of the department to figure invisible balances or just straight commodity or merchandise balances?

Mr. STEVENS: In making an estimate of trade one must take into account the invisible as well as the visible in the trade balances, that is that deal solely with trade, which will reflect only the trade figures.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): If that is followed in connection with one country, it should be followed in connection with all others, the United States, for instance.

Mr. ILSLEY: Has the minister received any representations with regard to the possibility of increasing our apple trade with Germany?

Mr. STEVENS: We have perhaps one of the finest trade commissioners in the service in the person of Mr. Wilgress whose headquarters are at Hamburg. In addition, we have Mr. J. Forsyth Smith at London, who is one of the most able agents in his particular line, that of fruit. Unfortunately I have not the information at hand from which I could give my hon. friend a specific answer.

Mr. ILSLEY: Nova Scotia is increasing her trade in apples with the continent of Europe. Only a few years ago this trade was confined mostly to Great Britain, but during recent years larger quantities are being shipped to continental Europe. The trade commissioners of Canada have done a great deal to push this trade in Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark and other Scandinavian countries. There is a large potential market in Germany, but it is almost impossible to sell apples in that country because the duty against American apples is only about one half the duty against our apples. During recent years, representing the largest apple growing constituency in eastern Canada, I have received many representations from the fruit growing interests asking that an attempt be made on the part of the Canadian government to better our trade relations with Germany.

Trade treaties have been mentioned this evening, but I am not so much interested in the cancellation or modification of existing treaties as I am in the attempt being made to negotiate new ones. One should be negotiated with Cuba in connection with potatoes, about which a great deal has been said this session, and another one with Germany with a view to facilitating the entry of our apples into that country. I do not know whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce is the minister to whom these representations should be made. Perhaps they should be made to the Minister of Finance, but certainly I wish to impress upon the government as emphatically and earnestly as I can the importance to Nova Scotia and particularly my part of it, of improving our trade relations with Germany.

Mr. STEVENS: I shall take note of what my hon. friend says.

Mr. DUFF: A few minutes ago the minister, speaking of the personnel of trade commissioners in different parts of the world, referred to the fact that the Civil Service Commission in the examinations made a point of the educational qualifications that were necessary. I notice he said nothing as to whether these men should have business training or qualifications. It is very important that men who go out into the world to negotiate with other countries for the sale of our goods, should have certain business training and know how to talk with business men in other countries.

I also notice that one of the trade commissioners has been appointed to Cuba and lives in Havana. As the hon. member for Hants-Kings said, it is most important especially at the present time that some trade arrangements be made with Cuba not only with regard to potatoes but also with regard to fish. Perhaps the minister can give the committee the figures, but I think I am correct in saying that more Canadian goods, especially fish and potatoes, are sold in Cuba than in any other island in the West Indies. If the minister looks up the returns for the last few months I think he will find that this trade in both potatoes and fish has dropped off considerably, due particularly to the fact that a short time ago the Cuban government, adopting no doubt a policy similar to that of the present government of this country, increased very largely the duties on fish and potatoes. This has crippled business, especially in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, with regard to both the potato trade and the fish trade. It is most important that something be done by the government to better these conditions. It is true, of course, that one of the ministers, the hon. member for Kings, was sent to Cuba a short time ago. Although he made a statement to the house a day or two ago, it was not a very definite statement and perhaps it was not the time that such a statement should be made with regard to what he was able to accomplish on his mission. I notice he said nothing with regard to the trade in Cuba for fish. That is a very important trade in the maritime provinces, and especially in the city of Halifax, the county which I represent and the county in which I live. Would the minister tell the committee if he receives reports from the different trade commissioners every month? I should like especially to know whether he has reports from the trade commissioner in Cuba for the last six months, whether they are monthly, fortnightly or weekly, and whether we can find from those reports what the commissioner says with regard to the falling off in trade in fish and potatoes in Cuba.

Mr. STEVENS: We have very full reports weekly from all our trade agents and these are published in the Commercial Intelligence Journal. I think every member receives a copy regularly. They are widely distributed throughout Canada in business circles. I have not under my hand a special report from Cuba regarding the last few months to which my hon. friend refers. I have the figures for 1929 and 1930. In 1930 they were:

Exports	$4,245,000
Imports	3,500,000

Mr. DUFF: That is prior to the end of March this year.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. The chief commodities were:

Potatoes	$2,081,000
Fish, dried, smoked and pickled	713,000

Then there are milk, condensed; newsprint and other items of that kind.

Mr. DUFF: Can the minister make a comparison with the previous year?

Mr. STEVENS: The figures are almost identical. They are as follows:

	1929	1930
Exports	$4,442,000	$4,245,000
Imports	4,900,000	3,500,000

Mr. DUFF: The figures just given by the minister for the two years do not show much difference, but if he looks up recent reports from the commissioner in Cuba I think he will find that, in view of the fact that this extra duty was not imposed until two months ago, the trade has been affected very considerably since then. Last week I received a report from my own office stating that shipments of fish to Cuba—and every fortnight a boat leaves from Halifax—had fallen off and that on the last two boats practically no fish had been shipped owing to this increase in duty. Perhaps the minister has not the information under his hand, but I should like to know whether his trade commissioner has made a report in regard to the serious situation which exists in connection with the trade from Nova Scotia of that particular item.

Mr. STEVENS: I shall check up and get that information. May I ask that after the rather full discussion to-day, this item should be allowed to pass? It is almost eleven o'clock.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, May 15, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State) presented the first report of the special committee to which was referred Bill No. 4 to amend the Copyright Act as follows:

Your Committee recommends that it be granted leave to print 400 copies in English and 150 copies in French of its proceedings and of the evidence to be taken by it, together with such papers and documents as may be incorporated with such evidence, for the use of the Committee and for the use of the members of this House; and that Standing Order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Your Committee further recommends that it be given leave to sit while the House is sitting.

Mr. CAHAN moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS

First report of the select standing committee on standing orders—Mr. Bury.

Mr. BURY moved that the report be concurred in.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I should like the hon. gentleman to give some explanation so that we may know why this permission should be granted. I think in a matter of divorce, as I understand this to be, the rules of procedure should be strictly observed.

Mr. BURY: I may tell my hon. friend that the explanation given the committee was that it was impossible to locate the respondent in the case until May 4, when he was personally served. Therefore it was impossible to file the petition in time.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think this motion should stand so that we may see for ourselves what is at the bottom of it.

Motion agreed to.

GENERAL ACT OF 1928

PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL DISPUTES —APPROVAL OF ACCESSION IN RESPECT TO CANADA

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That it is expedient that parliament do approve of the accession, in respect of Canada, to chapters I, II, III, and IV of the General Act of 1928 for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, subject to the following conditions:—

1. That the following disputes are excluded from the procedure described in the General Act, including the procedure of conciliation:

(i) Disputes arising prior to the accession, in respect of Canada, to the said General Act or relating to situations or facts prior to the said accession;

(ii) Disputes in regard to which the parties to the dispute have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to some other method of peaceful settlement;

(iii) Disputes between His Majesty's government in Canada and the government of any other member of the League of Nations which is a member of the British commonwealth of nations, all of which disputes shall be settled in such manner as the parties have agreed or shall agree;

(iv) Disputes concerning questions which by international law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of states; and

(v) Disputes with any party to the General Act who is not a member of the League of Nations.

2. That His Majesty in respect of Canada reserves the right in relation to the disputes mentioned in article 17 of the General Act to require that the procedure described in chapter II of the said act shall be suspended in respect of any dispute which has been submitted to and is under consideration by the council of the League of Nations, provided that notice to suspend is given after the dispute has been submitted to the council and is given within ten days of the notification of the initiation of the procedure, and provided also that such suspension shall be limited to a period of twelve months or such longer period as may be agreed by the parties to the dispute or determined by a decision of all the members of the council others than the parties to the dispute.

3. (i) That, in the case of a dispute, not being a dispute mentioned in article 17 of the General Act, which is brought before the council of the League of Nations in accordance with the provisions of the covenant, the procedure described in chapter I of the General Act shall not be applied, and, if already commenced, shall be suspended, unless the council determines that the said procedure shall be adopted.

(ii) That in the case of such a dispute the procedure described in chapter III of the General Act shall not be applied unless the council has failed to effect a settlement of the dispute within twelve months from the date on which it was first submitted to the council, or, in a case where the procedure prescribed in chapter I has been adopted without producing an agreement between the parties, within six months from the termination of the work of the conciliation commission. The council may extend either of the above periods by a decision of all its members other than the parties to the dispute.

And that this house do approve of the same, subject to the said conditions.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I assume that hon. members of the house have had an opportunity of reading the General Act of 1928, which has been distributed through the distribution office. It will be observed that the motion, in terms, approves of the accession in respect of Canada to chapters 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the General Act of 1928. This act is called the General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, and under that act the first methods to be applied are conciliatory methods, the first chapter being entitled "Conciliation." Article IV of that chapter provides that the commission of conciliation shall be composed as follows:

> The commission shall be composed of five members. The parties shall each nominate one commissioner, who may be chosen from among their respective nationals. The three other commissioners shall be appointed by agreement from among the nationals of third powers. These three commissioners must be of different nationalities and must not be habitually resident in the territory nor be in the service of the parties. The parties shall appoint the president of the commission from among them.

To the other provisions I will not refer, because I take it that hon. members are probably quite familiar with the general act itself.

Chapter 2 refers to the judicial settlement of disputes:

> All disputes with regard to which the parties are in conflict as to their respective rights shall, subject to any reservations which may be made under article 39, be submitted for decision to the Permanent Court of International Justice, unless the parties agree, in the manner hereinafter provided, to have resort to an arbitral tribunal.
> It is understood that the disputes referred to above include in particular those mentioned in article 36 of the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Article 39, which comes under the provisions of the General Act, refers to the reservations, which do not apply to those who accept the General Act. I do not think it necessary to take up the time of the house in reading them. So far I have dealt with chapter 2.

Chapter 3 deals with settlement by another method altogether—that is, by arbitration: first, conciliation; second, by course to the International Court of Justice; and third, by arbitration. Article 21 reads:

> Any dispute not of the kind referred to in article 17 which does not, within the month following the termination of the work of the conciliation commission provided for in chapter I, form the object of an agreement between the parties, shall, subject to such reservations as may be made under article 39, be brought before an arbitral tribunal which, unless the parties otherwise agree, shall be constituted in the manner set out below.

It is, perhaps, unnecessary to do more than observe that the tribunal shall consist of five members, each of the parties nominating one member, who may be chosen from among their respective nationals. The two other arbitrators and the chairman are to be chosen.

by common agreement, from among the nationals of third powers—very much like the provisions with respect to commissions for conciliation.

Chapter 4 deals with the general provisions of the act itself. I do not think it necessary to refer to the articles of that chapter, because it will be observed that the resolution provides that it is expedient for Canada to approve of the accession to chapters 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the act. Then follow the provisions, in the resolution, with respect to the exceptions from the operation of the act. These are important. May I direct the attention of the house to them:

1. That the following disputes are excluded from the procedure described in the General Act, including the procedure of conciliation:

(i) Disputes arising prior to the accession, in respect of Canada, to the said General Act or relating to situations or facts prior to the said accession.

That is a reasonable provision inserted by the governments of Great Britain, Australia and Canada, for it takes out of the operation of the General Act, the settlement either by way of conciliation, by recourse to the courts, or by arbitration, of such disputes as arose prior to the accession of this country to the General Act or relating to situations or facts prior to such accession.

(ii) Disputes in regard to which the parties to the dispute have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to some other method of peaceful settlement.

It frequently happens, for instance, that methods may be devised by countries for the settlement of disputes peacefully, which would take such disputes out of the operation of this act. In other words, we will rely upon this act with respect to the matters which we have agreed to settle peacefully. Then:

(iii) Disputes between His Majesty's government in Canada and the government of any other member of the League of Nations which is a member of the British commonwealth of nations, all of which disputes shall be settled in such manner as the parties have agreed or shall agree.

That, of course, is a much wider question. It has been felt that members of the same family should settle their differences, if any, by recourse to methods entirely different from the methods that would be adopted for the purpose of settling differences between a member of the family and strangers. Discussions have taken place from time to time as to the method by which a court could be constituted within the empire for the settlement of empire differences. This provides that members of the commonwealth of nations known as the British Empire, who are members of the League of Nations, shall not have recourse to the provisions of the General Act for the settlement of any disputes or differences that may arise between them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: How would that affect India?

Mr. BENNETT: As India is now constituted, it clearly provided that India's case would not be settled by recourse to the provisions of the General Act, if, for example, they had any dispute with us or with South Africa or Australia or New Zealand.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: India is a member of the league.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, India is a member of the league; that is the reason. India is a part of the British commonwealth of nations and is also a member of the League of Nations. Therefore disputes arising between two parts of the British Empire, which are members of the League of Nations, will not be settled under the provisions of the General Act, but by some other method which has been or which may hereafter be agreed upon.

It is not necessary at this time to discuss in this chamber the question as to the establishment of some empire tribunal for the settlement of differences of that kind. Suffice it to say that discussions have gone on now for a period of some ten years, and those discussions are still going forward. Personally I look for the establishment some day of a tribunal that may be agreed upon, so that in the event of there being differences they may be settled by recourse to that tribunal and not to some tribunal outside of the empire itself.

(iv) Disputes concerning questions which by international law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of states.

That, it is needless to say, is a very important reservation. International law recognizes the rights of a state to settle certain domestic problems without having to arbitrate them or to yield to conciliation from without, or by recourse to the decisions of any tribunal, whatever it may be. The other evening we had some slight indication of what might be involved. International law does not countenance the idea that a sovereign state may have to listen to another sovereign state indicate how that state shall settle its domestic problems. We may, if we have agreed so to do, make arrangements by which we offer our services; and frequently in diplomacy we know that states have offered their good offices for the purpose of bringing about adjustments. But international law recognizes that there are certain matters of a domestic nature which should not be regarded as a subject for discusison before tribunals set up, for instance, under the provisions of an agreement such as this.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Do I understand the Prime Minister to say that such a question as we had under consideration the other evening, with respect to the Ukrainian problem in Poland, would be precluded from consideration under these provisions?

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend has not followed me. By international law it is not competent for a sovereign state to interfere with the domestic business of any other sovereign state, unless there is an agreement permitting it to be done. I did not allude to the matter under discussion the other evening in order to illustrate my point, because both parties are members of the League of Nations. I was dealing with what would happen if they were not members of the league and had not agreed to settle their disputes in certain ways. The very recognition of the existence of a national community involves the right of that national community to carry on its own domestic business in a manner which is acceptable to the majority of the people within the area constituting that national. It is true that by international agreements such rights have to some extent been settled during the years. But those hon. members of this house who recall the cablegram which the then German emperor sent to President Kruger, with its repercussions, and who also recall the discussions in the House of Commons when Sir Austen Chamberlain and the chancellor of the German empire began at long range a discussion which ended in rather acrimonious observations being made by both, will realize that the general principle of international law is that there is no right in one country to interfere in the domestic business of another unless it be that by agreement that other country has afforded the opportunity for such action being taken. It has been a constant practice in diplomacy, almost crystallized into a recognized procedure under international law, for disinterested states to offer their good offices for the purpose of arriving at adjustments which might prevent near revolutions, but not to interfere in the domestic affairs of any given country. This reservation is prepared for the purpose of recognizing the general principles of international law, the non-interference by outside communities in the domestic concerns of this country or any other country that may be a party to the act.

The next dispute excluded is No. 5, which reads:

(v) Disputes with any party to the General Act who is not a member of the League of Nations.

That reservation was inserted in the accession resolutions of Great Britain and Australia and is now being submitted to this house because it is felt that disputes as between two communities, one being a member of the League of Nations and the other is not, should not be subject compulsorily to determination and settlement by recourse to the provisions of the General Act itself. Those reservations, as I say, were inserted by a general agreement between the governments of Great Britain, Canada and Australia. When the matter came before the British House of Commons on March 9 of this year the foreign secretary moved a resolution approving of the accession of Great Britain to the General Act. Sir Austen Chamberlain moved an amendment against acceptance on the ground that it diminished the authority of the council of the league and constituted a procedure tending to encourage international disputes. The matter was discussed by some very eminent members of the House of Commons, such as Sir Rennell Rodd and Major Hills, and others, who emphasized that ground and contended that the provisions for arbitration where no rule of law exists, practically gave five men power to legislate on what were distinctly political matters. I need hardly say to this house that one of the great difficulties in arriving at peaceful settlements between countries by recourse to arbitration or other methods of similar character, whether it be conciliatory or judicial, has been the unwillingness of sovereign communities to submit political differences to the judgment of any arbitration tribunal. One might say in the broad and general way and without exaggeration, that in the main that difficulty is what has brought on war, the unwillingness of communities to submit political questions to the determination of an arbitration tribunal however eminent it may be.

It will be recalled that before the war the Bryan treaties for arbitration were approved by the United States Senate, and I think one was approved by this house and adopted by Great Britain, but in general there has been the difficulty in having nations believe that political matters should be settled by recourse to arbitration because it was feared that there would be interference with what they conceived to be the right to settle their own disputes in the way they thought best.

The records will show that some of the Labour members of the British House of Commons objected to the extensive character of the reservations, particularly that one which excluded signatories who were not members of the League of Nations. However, Sir Herbert Samuel, Sir Donald Maclean, Mrs. Manning, Mr. Noel-Baker, and others contended that the General Act did not supersede the work of the council, but merely supplemented it where experience had shown it could not reach finality. They urged that the reservations safeguarded the points as to which the greatest uncertainty might arise until such time as additional experience could be obtained as to how far they were necessary, and pointed out finally that accession at the present time would extend only until 1934, when additional reservations could be made or present reservations could be reduced in the light of intervening experience. That is a fair precis of the attitude taken in the House of Commons in England with respect to this matter when it was under discussion.

The British house voted down the amendment of Sir Austen Chamberlain. The resolution of the assembly of September 26, 1928, does not seem to have been referred to although, in my judgment, it would seem to dispose of Sir Austen Chamberlain's argument. That resolution reads as follows:

> The assembly invite all states to accept arbitral decisions for the settlement of all disputes either by becoming parties to the annexed General Act or by concluding conventions with individual states. For the same purpose, they specifically declare that undertakings such as the General Act are not to be interpreted as restricting the duty of the League of Nations to take at any time whatever action may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of the world, or as impeding its intervention in virtue of articles 15 and 17 of the covenant where a dispute cannot be submitted to arbitral or judicial procedure, or cannot be settled by such procedure, or where the conciliation proceedings have failed.

That resolution declares the principles and purposes of the league with respect to this act. If the act is read in the light of that declaration and of the reservations which, after all, are reservations which this or any other country would be expected to adopt in the light of our present practice and knowledge of international affairs, there should be no difficulty in this house giving its accession to this General Act.

This act is not preceded by a protocol. As all hon. members who have looked at it will have observed, it is signed by the president of the ninth ordinary session of the assembly of the League of Nations and by the secretary-general, and communities who were members of the league were invited to indicate their accession to it by appropriate resolutions by their legislative bodies charged with responsibility in the premises. In our case, that is the Commons House of Parliament and the Senate House of Parliament, and the resolution which is now being submitted for the consideration of this house seeks the approval of Canada's giving her accession to this General Act. I doubt not that most hon. members observed the other day that the French republic adopted this General Act with certain reservations, which I am bound to say I have been unable to secure at the moment. There are a considerable number of them and if my general information is accurate, one is somewhat more extensive in its operations than any of the reservations contained in the submission to-day. Mr. Briand, the foreign secretary, indicated his intention of himself depositing at Geneva the accession of the republic of France, he considering it to be a matter of very considerable importance in the preservation of the peace of the world.

We have now the following safeguards of peace: the covenant of the League of Nations, the Kellogg-Briand pact, a declaration against war as an instrument of national policy, arbitration treaties, and before the war we had the court at the Hague. We now have our permanent Court of International Justice.

This resolution is one asking the House of Commons of Canada to approve of the Dominion acceding to the provisions of the General Act, with the reservations indicated, believing that it is one step more towards the pacific settlement of international disputes. I do not intend to dwell upon the desirability of that and one of our most eminent historians has pointed out that the very existence of democracies is opened to the maintenance of militarism. As to that I think there can be no question, and while I am hopeful, I am not so hopeful of the future as not to realize that, human nature being what it is, as long as armaments are made and nations invest money in them, just so long will there be danger of a spark creating the explosion that will result in war. The other evening, just by accident, I picked up an old magazine, and I observed there a translation by Dryden of a poem by Lucretius. It was an appeal for peace 2,000 years ago. I could not but reflect that after 2,000 years mankind is still striving for peace, still endeavouring by pacific methods to make our civilization respond to the demands we make upon it, realizing and recognizing that war is waste: that it cannot in any sense be approved as an instrument of national policy, and that we at this time are paying the penalty that all the nations of the world are paying for the wastage of men, material and money that took place from 1914 to 1919. Under such circumstances I should think there would be little difficulty in this new democracy giving its accession to a method of settlement of differences that, happily, I think, will not arise in our time between this and other countries, for we ourselves have made provisions for the settlement of our difficulties on the American continent to a large extent by the international treaty which we made in 1908. Happily, I say, if we have differences, they will be composed by resort to conciliation, or to the courts that may be established to ensure the great principles of international law are more firmly asserted and more clearly understood with the lapse of time, or by arbitration when that becomes the last resort to which men may appeal for the settlement of differences between their country and another. I commend the approval of the accession of this General Act to the favourable consideration of the house.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this resolution as a new move in the organization for peace, as a new link in the chain of the machinery to secure the prevention of war. After the foundation of the League of Nations and the various instruments and agencies which were established for discussion and conciliation, the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has said that the most important step was the creation of the world court. But only justiciable disputes, and even at that, only a certain category of justiciable disputes, could be submitted to that court. In 1928 came the treaty of Paris, ordinarily called the Kellogg pact, by which Canada with most of the other nations of the world agreed to outlaw war, and took the pledge to see to it that every difficulty between our country and the others should be settled by pacific means. When the Kellogg pact was submitted for the approval of this parliament, I took occasion to state that it was of great value; that it was certainly most important for the people of the world that all nations should consider war as a crime and should outlaw it, but that the value of that pact would consist mainly in the measures which might be adopted afterwards to make it effective.

The first measure that was adopted, as far as many countries are concerned, was the acceptance of the optional clause of the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, whereby we bound ourselves to accept the decision of that court in regard to certain disputes which might be submitted to it by us and other countries. At the time Canada assumed the leadership in the British commonwealth of nations for the acceptance of that optional clause. Indeed, Britain was rather doubtful; it was against British tradition to submit to a tribunal outside of the empire, on which tribunal foreigners would sit, any dispute concerning the empire. Canada stated both at the League of Nations and at the Imperial conference that we were ready to accept the optional clause and we merely agreed to postpone our declaration to that effect until a final decision was reached by the other nations of the empire and this was done, I believe, in 1929. The General Act was drafted by the League of Nations in 1928 and submitted to the various countries. Our delegates at the League of Nations—and I refer more particularly to Senator Dandurand—took a strong attitude in favour of arbitration, and indeed it is gratifying to us that to-day this attitude is endorsed and supported by the other countries of the British commonwealth. Arbitration, security and disarmament—they are the three fundamental principles which seem to be linked together and which are pointed out as the goal to be reached by all nations.

By the approval of this resolution and the acceptance of arbitration as the means of settling our disputes with other countries, we and the other countries which accept it are clearing the road for the momentous gathering which is to take place next February for the disarmament of the world. All countries will be represented there, even those that are not members of the League of Nations. In that connection Mr. Speaker, I was reading the other day that in the British parliament they have appointed members of the three parties to the imperial defence committee in order to prepare the case of Great Britain to be submitted to that very important conference. In the United States they have adopted the practice of sending members not necessarily on the side of the government in office to conferences on disarmament. I would suggest to the Prime Minister that he consider the advisability instead of having solely the government of Canada represented at this most momentous gathering, of having the parliament of Canada represented there. I believe that the parliament of Canada should be represented at that world conference to ex press the unanimous voice of Canada in favour of disarmament, and in favour of that great work for peace.

Justice and peace, I might say, are twin sisters. The one cannot exist without the other. The obligation, the compulsory nature of the pacific solution of difficulties is an essential condition, a sine qua non condition, for the prevention of war. Arbitration is an act of moderation. It is an act of patience. It is the desire to do what is right, and it affords the means of redressing injustices between nations without resorting to the still greater injustice of war, because, after all, bullets and machine guns cannot be considered as the instruments of fair and impartial justice.

The world has always craved for peace. This is not new. What is new is the organization for peace. War has always been organized, but peace has not been organized in the past. Peace was often a subject for discussion and debate, for fine words, but deeds for peace have only come to exist since a few years ago. This resolution before us to-day is one deed in the organization for peace, in that organization which is necessary to effect a change in the conditions that exist. Arbitration accepted everywhere, will be a greater security than armaments. I was amazed the other day to hear an hon. gentleman say in this house: If you want peace, prepare for war. It was simply repeating that old saying of centuries; "Si vis pacem, para bellum." That was the doctrine of the nations prior to 1914—prepare for war and you will have peace, and it is because of that doctrine that the world has been drenched with blood. It has been proved futile and vain. It is in organizing for peace, and not for war, that peace can be secured.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does my hon. friend think that if England had been prepared for war in 1914 the Great war would have come?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The result has demonstrated that the nations which were not prepared were the victorious nations in the end.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): How does the hon. member prove that statement? That is an assertion of fact.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am afraid there are still some gentlemen who will vote for resolutions, of this kind, but who do not believe in them. I shall not try to convince my hon. friend.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is no answer.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: We do not think alike on these things.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I agree.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I know that, but I prefer my own views to those of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is your privilege.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is right. If my hon. friend will discuss this matter and give us the benefit of his opinion, I shall be quite pleased to listen to him, but in the meantime I would ask him to listen to me.

By arbitration it is intended to apply to nations the same rational principle for the settlement of differences as all the civilized countries have accepted for the settlement of disputes between individuals. Even during the war, as early as 1917, I remember that Pope Benedict XV preached the doctrine that the nations which would refuse arbitration ought to be considered as the aggressors. Arbitration provides at least a way to try to prevent war, and I think it should enlist the support of hon. gentlemen everywhere.

The resolution before the house provides for accepting a tribunal of conciliation, or conciliation and judicial settlement by way of the Permanent Court of International Justice, or, if the nations prefer, by arbitration before an arbitral tribunal.

In the first place, all disputes may be submitted to conciliation. Then disputes as to the respective rights of nations are to be referred to the Permanent Court of International Justice or to an arbitral tribunal; but, by agreement, they may also be referred first to conciliation. In the third place, non-legal disputes, if not settled by conciliation, are to be referred to an arbitral tribunal. There are at least four reservations, which are the same or about the same as were put into our acceptance of the optional clause. The last one reserves disputes with any party which is not a member of the League of Nations. I suppose that owing to the conditions mentioned in section three of this resolution that reservation had to be placed there, because nations which are not members of the league could not submit their differences to the council of the league.

My only regret so far as the last reservation is concerned would be that it excludes the United States. After all the main difficulties or the greatest sources of trouble we might have in Canada necessarily would be with our neighbours to the south. As the Prime Minister has stated, however, fortunately there exists a tribunal for the settlement of differences. The general impression is that the International Joint Commission exists merely for the purpose of settling difficulties concerning boundary waters. For the information of the house I would state that its powers are wider than that. Sections 9 and 10 of the treaty of 1909 permit either of the two countries to submit any difficulties to the International Joint Commission for investigation and report, if the two countries agree the decision shall be binding. I do not think Canadians fully realize the great significance of the powers of the International Joint Commission whereby if the two countries agree, the decision of that court is binding. Further, by the Kellogg-Briand pact signed by the United States and Canada both countries bind themselves to exhaust all pacific means of settling difficulties before resorting to war. In connection with the treaty of 1909 I submit the Kellogg-Briand pact places an obligation on the part of the United States as well as on the part of Canada to submit to the International Joint Commission any trouble or difficulty which may have arisen between the two countries. Up to the present time the International Joint Commission has proved its usefulness in the settlement of international difficulties. Only recently it came to a unanimous decision on a matter which had created much friction between the state of Washington and the province of British Columbia with regard to damage by fumes and smoke passing from the plant of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company into the state of Washington. The farmers of that state complained of damage occasioned by the fumes from the works at Trail, B.C.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course they dealt with that only by consent.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, by consent. By agreement the difficulty was submitted to the International Joint Commission, it could not have been submitted otherwise. Fortunately a unanimous decision was reached and accepted by both parties, with the result that the trouble has disappeared.

I have but one thing further to state. I do not know whether my right hon. friend the Prime Minister remembers that once he told me in this house I was taking my policies from Geneva.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am glad to see that he is taking some policies from Geneva.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but there is a great distinction between the two.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This resolution is one of them. My right hon. friend says there is a great difference between the two. It is fashionable among certain business circles to speak contemptuously of idealists. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that there is no antagonism between ideals and action. Ideals inspire and animate action; they control action and direct where it should go. I think that not only in that sphere but in other spheres the right hon. gentleman may, if not take his policies from Geneva, at least act in cooperation with the other countries of the world. The progress of the last fifty years has changed the world. The combined efforts of scientists and industrialists have absolutely revolutionized economic conditions. Until fifty years ago, provided certain conditions existed, a nation could live by itself and for itself. Not so to-day. The slightest dislocation in the trade of the world has its effect everywhere. The last dislocation we know has had its effect in many countries, and probably everywhere. In some countries the effect has been rebellion or revolution; in others, as in this country, the result has been a change of government. Sir, in this house the other day an hon. member said we were too much inclined to think internationally. I do not agree with him. We are not thinking internationally enough and I state that at the present time the most important concern of a statesman is to undertake nothing without first considering not only the interests of his own country but the result of his action on other countries. Modern progress has made the world accessible by a trip of twenty days. Every country is our next door neighbour and surely we must cease to think in terms of mail coaches and paddle boats. These are the views I hold, Mr. Speaker, and it is because of these views I congratulate the right hon. gentleman upon bringing forward this resolution. It is in the hope that the resolution will go further that at this time I give it my support.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, with most of the admirable sentiments expressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and by the late Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) I heartily agree. It is with the greatest pleasure that I support the present resolution which I think is but another step in the right path towards peace. At the same time, as an old pacifist not only between wars but during wars, may I express the view that perhaps some of the reservations contained in this resolution could have been dispensed with. The right hon. gentleman, who is always at his best when he advances principles of law, has rightly said that these reservations, at least those of a general portent, are in accordance with the principles and practices of international law. He is quite right, but following the words and the line of argument followed by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) is it not true that the tendency, and the right tendency, at the present time is not only to render war more difficult but to make peace easier, and therefore to change the spirit and practice of international law and international relations, so as to make peace more readily acknowledged and create more obstacles in the way of war?

I have given some little time during my life, sir, to the study of modern history, and I have been struck with one feature. Either with regard to the last war, which some are beginning to understand, or with regard to previous wars let us say only in the last century, one thing is striking. Most of the men who were responsible for the policies of the various countries who declared war or against whom war was declared did not want it at heart. Take the last war; whether in Germany or in England, in France or in Russia, in Italy or in Roumania, I believe—though I did not always believe it—that most of the statesmen responsible for the diplomacy and the policies of those countries did not want war. But, as Mr. Lloyd George has expressed it most tersely, they all tumbled into war. Why? There were various causes, into which I will not go, but the main reason was because the instruments of peace were not at hand while the instruments of war were simply surrounding them. In each of those countries there was a huge army or a powerful navy headed by officers full of military ardour. I do not think those officers were much more desirous of war for the sake of war than politicians or diplomats, but with them war was a trade, and they realized that they could not keep up very long the efficiency of these instruments of war in any other way. With the day of war close at hand, they thought it was the duty of their rulers to strike the first blow at the most opportune moment for their own country. That was the thought of such a noble man as Lord Fisher. I refer frequently to him because, having known him, I know what was in his mind and in his heart. He wrote, over his own signature, that the great fault of his country was not to have struck at Germany at a more opportune moment, so that Lord Fisher's name and his words have been quoted in Germany as Bernhardi's words and arguments have been quoted in the other camp, to show that England on the one hand or Germany on the other was bent on making war. I think that was untrue of both countries and of their responsible statesmen. I believe the same thing could be demonstrated with regard to every other great country in Europe and in America.

Surely in this country, whatever position we may have taken with regard to the merits of the war and the moral duty of Canada to participate in that war or, as I took it, the moral duty of Canada to abstain from that participation, I think we all agree that if it had been possible we should not have been there. I think we all agree that as one unit of the great British commonwealth of nations—I do not like the word, but I make use of it since it is accepted now—our influence in the councils of that commonwealth always should be towards safer guarantees of peace, towards arbitration and conciliation rather than towards the organization of war for the empire or by the empire, against the rest of the world. I am sure in that statement I express the sentiments of the Prime Minister and of my friends to my right as well as my own. In that respect I entirely agree with the Prime Minister, and I think he has expressed admirably the broad sentiments of all classes of Canadians. He can count upon the support of such old pacifists as myself in this direction, as I think he can count upon the support of his own friends who approved of the participation of Canada in the last war.

Let me repeat, however, that if we want to lend our help and exercise our influence in the direction which is implied in this resolution, we could dispense with some of those reservations. Let us take them one by one. In the first reservation we exclude from our adhesion to the act "disputes arising prior to the accession, in respect of Canada, to the General Act, or relating to situations of fact prior to the said accession." Why make an exception of that kind? Those past difficulties, if there are any, are of the same nature as difficulties that may arise in the future and therefore, if we think proper to adhere to any international compact the object of which is to settle by peaceful means future disputes, why not make it retroactive so that past difficulties, or difficulties the causes of which may have arisen in the past, also may be covered by the same act? If that act is good for disputes not yet arisen, surely it ought to apply equally to disputes that have been already launched or which are possibly under discussion, but susceptible of being settled by arbitration.

I think everyone can agree to the second reservation, because it is in the spirit of the resolution. I might even say that it broadens the scope of the resolution. It indicates that we are prepared to submit to other peaceful means of arbitration questions that could not be settled under this act, and that we do not shut the door upon other means of peaceful action.

With the third reservation I at once agree and disagree. I would welcome the day when this government, as representing the senior partner in the association of nations outside of Great Britain itself, would take the initiative in bringing about the creation of a board of arbitration as between the various partners of the British commonwealth of nations. I consider the Prime Minister, in spite of many differences of opinion we may have had in the past or may have in the future, well qualified to bring up, at the proper and nearest possible occasion, this question of creating a board of arbitration as between the various partners in the British commonwealth of nations. The idea already has been suggested in this house; I hope it will make its way. If we accept as true—and I think it is now accepted by all, including even those who at first disputed the principle—that Canada, Australia, South Africa and Ireland are full-fledged nations, equal in status with Great Britain, and subordinate to no other nations even within the sphere of the British Empire, then surely, as among ourselves, we are all in the position of nations enjoying equal rights, having to fulfil equal duties, including the supreme and primary duty of agreeing solemnly before the world to submit all our internal disputes to a proper tribunal. The voluntary recourse to such a tribunal, either by Canada, in some difficulty with Australia or New Zealand, for example, or by Ireland, in some misunderstanding with respect to the interpretation of their treaty with England—the voluntary recourse to such a tribunal, I say, even within the realm of the British commonwealth, would be in our day the greatest standing lesson in peace, accord and amity which the British Empire could give to the world at large. If, therefore, it is the intention of the government to encourage the devising of some means of settling international disputes—and I insist upon the word international, since we are all equal nations within the empire—between British communities, then I have no objection to our withdrawing from the operation of the General Act any question in dispute between ourselves.

Paragraph 4 provides for "disputes concerning questions which by international law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of states."

It is in respect to that point that I think it well to clear the atmosphere just now. The Prime Minister has stated, concisely and with precision, the state of international law as it has obtained up to our day, and perhaps as it still is in the letter of the law. The ex-Minister of Justice stated that up to 1914 no nation acknowledged any supreme authority over itself or over other nations to prevent international disputes. Upon this point I beg to differ from both the right hon. gentleman and my hon. friend. My hon. friend says that up to fourteen years ago there was no such thing as international arbitration. That compels me to introduce a subject which might, perhaps, be a bone of contention between some of us. But as a student of history I wish to present the question in no spirit of dogmatism.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend has misunderstood me. The treaty of 1909 with the United States—

Mr. BOURASSA: I am not speaking of individual treaties; I am speaking of universal policy. I understood my hon. friend to say that up to 1914 the old Roman dictum, that if you wish for peace you must prepare for war, was practically the only rule among nations. May I refer him to a man who certainly never displayed any narrow, bigoted, sectarian spirit—the late John Morley. I shall have to rely upon my memory for what I am about to say, after many years of recollection. But as I remember, in one of the finest chapters of his Life of Gladstone, either in connection with the situation that arose at the time of the Franco-Prussian war, or more probably still in reference to the ever-recurring oriental question, at the time of one of the innumerable occupations of the island of Crete, John Morley refers to the attitude of Gladstone. Morley, as everyone knows, was a thorough agnostic; and analyzing the state of mind of one of the pillars of the Anglican church, who a few years before or after made use of his powerful pen to denounce the papacy, Vatican and vaticanism, he showed that Gladstone was nevertheless big enough to recognize the part which the papacy had played in international misunderstandings. Both Gladstone and Morley knew enough of their history to know that, for centuries, for nearly a thousand years, by common consent of all the nations comprising what has been called Christendom, there had existed a spiritual power of arbitration in the Holy See. The exercise of that power, in international affairs, was a purely human function. The exercise of that political power was in the hands of the pope by common consent of the nations. No pope and no council of the Catholic church, including the Vatican council, has ever held that this was a prerogative of the Roman pontiff by reason of his claim to the apostolic succession. It was a purely political power to which all the nations gave allegiance because, in the eternal words of Edmund Burke, they considered that the pope, even when some of the nations had seceded from Rome, was still the spiritual head of Christendom. To come back to Gladstone's reflections, as analyzed by John Morley. Ever since the treaties of Munster and Osnabruk, ever since the peace of Westphalia, so-called, which in the words of some of the highest authorities on modern history has changed the operation of international law in modern times, the power of arbitration exercised by the papacy has been rendered vacant. Catholic nations have not, any more than Protestant nations, acknowledged it. One of the articles of the secret treaty concluded in 1915 between England, France, Italy and Russia, excluded the pope from the councils of nations, at least in the settlement of the last war. But, in the words of John Morley, no substitute was then created. The League of Nations is an attempt to replace the old spiritual authority of the Holy See by something more akin to the principles and practice of democracy. Whether we like or dislike democracy, whether we believe or not in its power, nevertheless the League of Nations is an attempt to constitute such a substitute. Not all-powerful, I admit; its weaknesses and deficiencies have been proven on several occasions since the war; but, nevertheless, it is an attempt to approximate the old ideal and practice of previous days when that power of arbitration was exercised. The League of Nations, with its council, is no more capable of stopping all wars than the old papacy was capable of doing so. Yet, it can stop some, as it did. We should strengthen the hands of the league as much as we can in all disputes. We should multiply all the instruments for peace by means of arbitration and common understanding, which may supplement the work of the League of Nations and prolong its usefulness. To that end I agree with this motion. But if we want it to be operative, all nations should decide to renounce that pagan principle which is no more in conformity with the democratic spirit of the League of Nations than it was with the spiritual ideals of ancient Christendom: that the nation's pride, that the nation's pretensions, that the nation's spirit of exclusiveness should prevail over the good of the whole world. Nations should be prepared to submit questions—I will not say of internal policy because I agree entirely with the Prime Minister that that is not the business of other nations—but such questions of internal affairs, pretensions and national pride as come into conflict with the pride, interests and affairs of other nations; because, when that conflict happens, it ceases to be exclusively a national affair, it becomes international, just as the right of every individual to his own liberty ceases to be a right the moment it interferes with the liberty of another man who in turn has equal rights. The ignorance of this truth was one of the causes of many wars during the last century.

I mentioned a moment ago the Franco-Prussian war. The records in Germany are now available because of the revolution, and we are enabled to read what the statesmen of both countries did at that time. We know enough of French history to realize that the man who, for many years, was held responsible for the declaration of war against Germany, Emile Ollivier, was opposed to that war; but he was afraid of popular sentiment. As he said: I must now make popular a war which I abhor. Why was that necessary? Because national pride would not submit to any external arbitration.

The late Czar of Russia offered to submit to arbitration the difficulties which arose between his country and Austria. The records disclose that the ex-kaiser was just as opposed to war as was the czar. He knew that he would have to suffer just as much as would the czar, but there was the question of national pride. He thought that Austria would be opposed to submitting a question of that nature to an outside tribunal; and because of a narrow minded view of national pride and interest this tremendous calamity occurred. Whether it be kings, statesmen, publicists, although in their hearts most of them were opposed to war, they actually launched upon the world this horrible curse which cost the lives of twenty millions of people and brought about the economic disasters with which this government, as well as all governments, are now confronted. National pride precluded a resort to outside arbitration.

This reservation seems to me to be the greatest obstacle to the carrying out of this agreement; but I hope my remarks have been accepted by the house as the remarks of one friendly to the object in view. I will support this motion because I believe that every step in the right direction, although it may be too short or too slow, is a step towards the accomplishment of the end, not only by our country but by the world at large. In this, I agree with the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe).

The world is being tossed about by two currents, extreme nationalism and extreme internationalism. There is a right path between those two extremes, the path towards the truth. Surely upon God's earth there should be room enough for all races, for all nations and for all communities to develop their own genius and enjoy their proper freedom. The duty lies upon every nation to have that respect for others which they in turn expect to receive. That is what I call internationalism. Internationalism is not the eradication of national sovereignty and of national pride, it is the adaptation of the interests of all nations towards those of others. The general application of the golden rule is the only way by which peace and amity can be brought about between nations, as well as between individuals.

Motion agreed to.

TARIFF BOARD

RESOLUTION TO PRESCRIBE THE CONSTITUTION, FUNCTIONS AND DUTIES AND PROVIDE FOR SALARIES

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure for the appointment of a tariff board, to prescribe the constitution, functions and duties of the board, and to provide for the salaries to be paid the members, officers and employees of the board.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this resolution is antecedent to the introduction of a bill which will provide for the creation of a tariff board—by statute and not by order in council—to exercise the functions mentioned in the bill. This board will be comprised of three members. It will be a court of record, and in addition to carrying on the duties of a tariff board it will exercise certain powers which are now exercised by the officers of the Department of National Revenue as well as by officers under the combines act.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to discuss this matter at any length at the moment, but I would point out to my right hon. friend that so far as the existence of a tariff board is concerned, its constitution, personnel and the provisions for carrying on its several functions were in existence at the time my right hon. friend came into office. This legislation becomes necessary solely by virtue of the fact that he abolished the then existing board and now introduces a bill to create another board. The Prime Minister stated that the previous board had been appointed under an order in council. That is perfectly true but—

Mr. BENNETT: Without any authorizing statute.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —parliament had appropriated moneys specifically for the creation of a tariff board in that manner. I agree with my right hon. friend that a statute is preferable but I would point out to the house a rather significant circumstance; the one board was abolished the instant my right hon. friend came into office, but he has waited until late in this session to introduce his bill creating another board. It would seem that my right hon. friend had had in mind, immediately he came into office, the drastic changes in the tariff which were made at the last special session, and that he did not wish to have in existence at that time any tariff board to which by any possibility the proposed changes might have been referred for consideration before they went into effect. I think he will agree that a tariff board, even of his own creation, would not have countenanced changes as excessive and drastic as those made in the tariff at the last session.

There is one other point of which I should like to make mention. Yesterday, in referring to this particular matter, my right hon. friend said that we could get full particulars on the second reading of the bill. I hope the Prime Minister will give to us, immediately we go into committee, some of the particulars. I believe the country would like to know what the differences are between the powers and functions of the board that is now to be appointed and those of the previous board. It is desirable that before we discuss the second reading of the bill, there should be an opportunity of getting from the different parts of the country, through the medium of the press and in other ways, some expression of view on the changes which my right hon. friend is proposing in the powers and functions of the board he is about to create as contrasted with those of the previous board. When we go into committee I shall ask him if he will favour us with something more in the way of detail than he has been prepared to give thus far.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the unavoidable absence of the deputy speaker I shall ask the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury) to take the chair.

The house went into committee, Mr. Bury in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman opposite suggests that it might be desirable to give some further particulars at this time with respect to the contemplated legislation. I think I am within the rules when I say that the principle of the bill must be determined on the second reading, and the resolution before the committee now does not involve a statement of the provisions of the bill except in the most general terms.

First, there was no statutory authority for the former tariff board. It had not behind it any authority of any kind, shape or form, except the authority to pay it. It existed by order in council, an administrative act, without legislative jurisdiction or authority, and being that sort of board it was not a court of record; it had no power to administer an oath and it had no power to institute inquiries except in so far as people saw fit to attorn to it. The result was, in the words of the chairman of the board in his last report, that he was able to establish relations with various manufacturers. With that kind of board this country has no part; that kind of board this country will not tolerate. It became in the words of Mr. Darby, in his letter to a Toronto paper, a political organization sitting in a red parlour, doing things with the least possible difficulty, with the purpose of having people make statements, read briefs and then go on with a little further inquiry. After that speeches were made by the consumers' league, and that is all there was to it. I defy any hon. member to say that there was any shadow of legislative authority for that board.

Mr. TOTZKE: Never intended.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course there was not; it was never intended there should be. In other words, it was just what the hon. gentleman would have it appear to be, a gigantic bluff without power, without authority, with the semblance of being clothed with the outward and visible signs of authority, but lacking them, so far as parliamentary action was concerned, except in the estimates to provide for its own pay. That is all.

This bill proposes first of all to create by statute a board. That board will be a court of record; it will administer oaths. It will hear evidence under oath and it will also hear evidence touching every matter which affects the application of a tariff to this country.

Mr. TOTZKE: Will it have legislative authority?

Mr. BENNETT: It will not. That rests with parliament.

Mr. POWER: The other board had power to examine witnesses.

Mr. BENNETT: Not under oath.

Mr. POWER: It examined them.

An hon. MEMBER: Is that the only distinction?

Mr. BENNETT: There are several others.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We shall know the old board by its tariff fruits.

Mr. BENNETT: The action of the former administration in setting up its tariff board by order in council was an endeavour by order in council to set up the board that Sir Thomas White provided for in the legislation introduced in 1912. After the Conservative party came into power in 1911, it promised a tariff board. It had done so before the election. The bill was introduced into this chamber; it passed this chamber; certain amendments were made in the Senate and the bill never became law.

Mr. POWER: That was because there was some kind of legislative sanction to its decisions.

Mr. BENNETT: There was not in any way, shape or form, directly or indirectly.

Mr. POWER: I think that was the objection taken.

Mr. BENNETT: It was my business to know it was not.

Mr. POWER: That does not convince me.

Mr. BENNETT: I merely indicate it was my business to know it was not.

An hon. MEMBER: It was.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman will read Hansard, he perhaps will know and he would not subject himself to the humiliation of acknowledging himself to be wrong.

Mr. EULER: What then prevented it from passing?

Mr. BENNETT: There shall be a board to be called a tariff board, and the board shall be a court consisting of three members with power to make inquiries under oath and with a seal. It will be a court of record. The inquiries will be for the purpose of ascertaining—

(a) the price and cost of raw materials in Canada and elsewhere, and the cost of transportation thereof from the place of production to the place of use or consumption;

(b) the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere, and what increases or decreases in rates of duty are required to equalize differences in the cost of production;

(c) the cost, efficiency and conditions of labour, including health of employees, in Canada and elsewhere;

(d) the prices received by producers, manufacturers, wholesale dealers, retailers and other distributors in Canada and elsewhere;

(e) all conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumers in Canada;

(f) generally, all the conditions affecting production, manufacture, cost and price in Canada as compared with other countries.

That is the report to the minister. The purpose of it is obvious to any hon. gentleman who desires to protect the Canadian producer from unfair and unjust competition from other countries.

Mr. TOTZKE: Will the board hold public hearings?

Mr. BENNETT: It will; it is a court of record.

Mr. SANDERSON: Will it travel around the country or just sit in Ottawa?

Mr. BENNETT: There are provisions for hearing evidence in towns other than Ottawa.

Mr. EULER: Will it have power to make actual changes in the tariff rates?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. EULER: That power will be left with parliament?

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely.

Mr. EULER: A rumour has been published in the newspapers that the power now held by the board of customs will be enjoyed by the tariff board; is that right?

Mr. BENNETT: I was just coming to that.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the board make recommendations to the government?

Mr. BENNETT: It will make reports.

Mr. BRADETTE: Will the officers be appointed by the Civil Service Commission or the tariff board?

Mr. BENNETT: The commissioners will not be appointed by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. TOTZKE: Will the board replace the consumers' league?

Mr. BENNETT: Well, it will be where it belongs, I think.

Mr. TOTZKE: The consumers' league belongs before the tariff board.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand that. I hope they will be provided for by Canadians and not by competing industries outside of Canada.

Mr. TOTZKE: Never outside Canada, but always by Canadians.

Mr. BRADETTE: Will the employees of the board be appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BENNETT: They will be appointed by the board. May I point out in answer to the hon. member for North Waterloo that it is proposed that the duties of the customs board shall be taken over by the tariff board from a date to be fixed by the governor in council. At the present time, as the hon. gentleman knows, those who sit in judgment upon appeals from the board of customs are the very men who make the ruling.

Mr. EULER: Not all of them, not a majority.

Mr. BENNETT: Not all, but my hon. friend will agree that very often in practice that is what it means, and it is felt that in accordance with the modern practice in other countries it is better to have some tribunal that is free from any antecedent inclination in the matter.

Mr. EULER: Is this board modeled upon the practice of some other country, and if so, which country?

Mr. BENNETT: No, but I pointed out to my hon. friend that in modern practice there is an appeal.

Mr. EULER: I understood the Prime Minister to refer to the modern practice in other countries.

Mr. BENNETT: In the United States, as my hon. friend knows, there is provision for appeal. It is called a court of some kind.

Mr. VENIOT: Will there be an appeal to council from the board?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will the sittings of this new board last longer than the inquiry over which the Prime Minister presided last fall with regard to agricultural tariffs?

Mr. BENNETT: They will probably not last quite as long as the sittings that were held by the order in council board. May I add that the seven or eight volumes of evidence taken by that friendly gathering—it was not a tribunal—will be found in the library. When my right hon. friend referred to the tariff of last session, which I shall be prepared at the proper time to discuss, I think he overlooked the fact that the items to which most objection was taken were the items dealt with by that inquiry board, and the record is there. I do suggest that if hon. members will read that evidence they will conclude that the action that was taken by the government last session was not more than was necessary to save the industries in question from disaster.

Mr. POWER: The glass industry, for instance?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The potato industry.

Mr. TOTZKE: Does the Prime Minister mean that the tariff changes of last session were based on evidence given before the tariff board?

Mr. BENNETT: He did not say that. He said that the evidence was very useful. If the hon. gentleman would go into the library and look at it—I suppose he has never read the evidence—

Mr. TOTZKE: I have read most of it.

Mr. BENNETT:—he will find a great deal of evidence upon which no action was taken by the former government, and which, if it means anything, means that the Canadian producer was not having an equal opportunity and a fair chance in his work.

Mr. TOTZKE: Has the right hon. gentleman considered the Canadian consumer?

Mr. BENNETT: That is provided for in the bill, which provides for such steps being taken as in the opinion of the board may be necessary for the purpose of preventing exploitation of the consumer.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps this question may have already been asked and answered. Under the old customs board there was an appeal to the governor in council. Will that be possible under the new legislation?

Mr. BENNETT: Not as it reads at the moment.

Mr. EULER: But there is an appeal?

Mr. BENNETT: Not at the moment in the bill as prepared. The provision is that it shall not come into force until an order in council is passed. The bill provides that the board shall cause its decisions to be published in the Canada Gazette, and part two provides that it shall not come into force until an order in council has been passed by the governor in council. It is left that way in order that the house may discuss the matter freely and fully and conclude what action should be taken in that regard. There is also a provision whereby the powers of the Combines Act for initial investigations may, if it is thought desirable, be exercised by the board itself. The board is also empowered to make the investigations which the judge of the exchequer court makes under the Customs Tariff Act as it now stands.

Mr. VENIOT: Has the Prime Minister considered leaving the customs board as it is, that is, the board consisting of members of the customs department and members of the Finance department, dealing with interpretations of the tariff act, and allowing appeals from their rulings, if objection is taken to them by the financial interests of the country, to the new board that is to be created?

Mr. BENNETT: It is thought that the method I suggest would be the best method. The officials in the department thought it desirable.

Mr. EULER: Have there been any protests from the general public or from business men as to the rulings given by the customs board under the former practice? I do not think there can have been more than two or three appeals a year if that many, from the decisions of the customs board. I am asking merely to ascertain whether there has been any dissatisfaction. I am not finding any fault with the practice now to be followed, because possibly it is more logical than the practice that obtained before. This is true, that the customs board consisted of the commissioner of customs, the assistant commissioner of customs, and three others who were not identified with the customs department at all. It is also true that where an appeal was taken by some importer the customs board itself was headed by the very same commissioner of customs who had given the decision in the first place, and possibly to that extent he might be prejudiced. There is this, however, to be said for the old practice, that the decisions of the board on appeal were never appealed to the governor in council, and one may therefore conclude that the decisions were, after all, fairly satisfactory. That is the point I desired to make. I do not know of two or three appeals a year. I can recollect only one appeal from the customs board so long as I was a member of the council, and that was by the very gentleman whom my right hon. friend did not appreciate perhaps as much as he should have, the representative of the consumers' league, who appealed with respect to magazines.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask the Prime Minister if I am right in this, that the new board combines the functions of the old tariff board as an advisory body to the government on applications for changes in the tariff that may be submitted to it, with the functions of the customs board, which gave rulings and decisions with respect to matters that were referred to it?

Mr. BENNETT: Not referred to it. As the hon. gentleman said, it is purely a matter of administration. As my hon. friend from North Waterloo has said, in the end the appeal was heard by a body which the commissioner of customs himself presided over. There were no great complaints that I know of, but sometimes there were some. I have heard of dissatisfaction in one or two instances, but no general dissatisfaction. It was thought, however, that the new board would be a very excellent body for that purpose, it being free from the difficulties which the hon. gentleman has mentioned. The board is a body to which an appeal can be taken in matters of administration, and administrative powers have certainly been very large in connection with the Customs Act and the tariff of this country.

Mr. EULER: Apparently the Prime Minister has not quite decided whether the decision of the new tariff board with regard to appeals shall be final.

Mr. BENNETT: I intend that the matter shall be dealt with by the house, if hon. members think it desirable.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to clarify my understanding as to the functions of the board in regard to tariff legislation. Am I right in assuming that this board will be an advisory board to the government, that it will not itself define in any particular what the tariff is to be but will deal with applications which may be referred to it by the government for consideration, and give to the government upon the facts its advice with respect to those various applications?

Mr. POWER: Advice without any recommendation?

Mr. BENNETT: A report is made by the board to the minister. The proposed bill contains the following section:

> It shall also be the duty of the board to inquire into any other matter or thing in relation to the trade or commerce of Canada which the governor in council sees fit to refer to the board for inquiry and report.
> Inquiries under this section shall be conducted in a summary manner, and the respective reports to be made pursuant to its provisions shall succinctly state the facts as ascertained; and each report shall be accompanied by a copy of the evidence, if any, taken, and by a copy of all information obtained in connection with the inquiry.

It is not intended that the board shall make recommendations, but shall submit a finding of facts. I take it my right hon. friend, as is his custom, has been following with some interest the proceedings of a similar board in the United States. I commend to this house the findings of that board concerning maple sugar. An application was made to the board to reduce the duty on maple sugar and the report to the president on which action was taken and the duty by executive action reduced was one of the most—if I might be pardoned for saying so—scientific documents I have been privileged to read. It showed in great detail the comparative costs of producing maple sugar in Quebec and in the United States, referring particularly to the state of Vermont. There was consideration of the sugar groves, the cost of getting the sap, the cost of transportation, the cost of production, and marketing details. Upon that report of the facts the president of the United States, under the statutes of that country, had the authority to take action. As I have stated it is intended in this case that the tariff board after hearing the evidence under oath shall make a report or a finding of facts, succinctly stating the facts as ascertained from the evidence. Such evidence shall be transmitted to the executive so that such action may then be taken by parliament as may be thought desirable.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With the exception of the power to take evidence under oath it would seem that the powers of the proposed board are similar to those of the tariff board which is being abolished.

Mr. BENNETT: Which has been abolished.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, which has been abolished. My right hon. friend stated that the former board had no statutory authority. I am afraid those words will be interpreted to mean that it had not the sanction of parliament, and that parliament did not authorize its establishment. If my right hon. friend intended to convey that impression I say that he is quite wrong. Parliament explicitly voted money for a tariff board; the functions of the board were explained to the House of Commons at a time when my right hon. friend was leader of the opposition. If he was not leader at that time at least he was leader during part of the time that the board was in existence. I do not think he ever raised the objection he is now raising as to the necessity of having the power to take evidence under oath. That is the only feature as stated thus far in which the two boards differ. I do not think he raised that question, nor do I think he raised the question of the necessity of a statute. He may have, but I doubt it. The point however is that the value of any course of action or procedure is to be judged by its fruits. The Prime Minister knows that boards of arbitration may be constituted on a voluntary or on a compulsory basis, and the fact is that for the most part boards of arbitration which have been voluntarily constituted have been more effective than those operated on a compulsory basis. So long as all interested parties are satisfied with the facts which are being brought to light the additional feature of taking evidence under oath rather than having it given voluntarily is of quite secondary importance. With respect to all the reports submitted by the late tariff board I think it is fair to state that as regards the facts on which conclusions were reached, there was no difference in the views of the different interests which wished to be heard and had the opportunity of being heard before the board.

My hon. friend made reference to the bill which was introduced by Sir Thomas White in 1912 for the formation of a tariff commission. I believe that prior to that date the Conservative party had intimated that there would be a tariff commission and gave the public to understand that that commission would have the power to decide what the tariff should be.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend says "no".

Mr. BENNETT: I was in the house at the time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I accept my right hon. friend's word for that. Sir Thomas White's first pronouncement in regard to the tariff commission is found at page 5010 of Hansard, 1912, and is as follows:

> Now I come to the question of the tariff. In view of the legislation of this session providing for the creation of a tariff commission, whose duties it will be to obtain and submit for the information of the government evidence and data from which the question of customs duties may be considered with greater certainty of knowledge than has been possible in the past, we have no tariff changes to propose at the present session.

That is the one reference made to the tariff commission which the government of that day was to appoint. The commission was put forward as a reason for not making any tariff changes at the time.

The next year Sir Thomas White made this remarkable reference to the proposed tariff commission:

> Having regard to the prevailing prosperity of the Dominion, as disclosed by the trade statistics which I have presented to the house, and the fact that there is always a delicate adaption of business to the rates of the tariff, there is, I believe, a general consensus of opinion that anything in the nature of an extensive revision of the tariff is not called for by existing conditions and would be contrary to public interest.

Sir Thomas White's attitude toward the tariff commission was to make it a means of avoiding any excessive tariff changes or, indeed any tariff changes at all. My right hon. friend's attitude toward the tariff board has been to get rid of it altogether so that he could make, without possible reference to a board, the most drastic changes that have ever been made in the history of the tariff in this or any country.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The Prime Minister has indicated that certain functions now exercised by the customs board would be taken over and exercised by the new tariff board. As there is a vague idea in the country and among hon. members of the house as to the actual details of those functions now exercised by the customs board I would suggest that when the bill reaches the committee stage it would be well for the Prime Minister to go into detail as to those duties. The information he could supply would be of value to hon. members.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall be very glad to see that that is done. The duties are defined by statute, but I shall have the statute here and read it when the bill is before the committee.

Mr. HEAPS: There has been a great deal of interest and discussion concerning the new tariff board. I also am interested in its creation. From what I have heard to-day I am under the impression that the net result of passing the bill would be that there would be an appointment of three good Conservatives to take the place of three bad Liberals. I do not know whether or not my supposition is correct, but that is my impression at the moment. If a tariff board is to be appointed, I should like to see on that board experts who will give their time and thought to these questions, who will be removed from any influence of this house, men of reputation and standing as economists. However, during the past few weeks I have listened to speeches from hon. members opposite claiming that industries in this country are now in a fairly prosperous condition.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. HEAPS: I hear some hon. gentlemen opposite say "hear, hear." If our industries are in a prosperous condition what is the need for the creation of a tariff board at this time? There are other elements in the country now which are far from prosperous, yet the purpose of this measure is to give industries that protection which is necessary to keep them in the state of prosperity which hon. members opposite claim exists at present.

Mr. MORAND: Would my hon. friend tell me who said industries were in such a prosperous condition? I never heard that statement.

Mr. HEAPS: Within the past few weeks hon. gentlemen opposite have been telling us of new industries springing up and working overtime and all that sort of thing, and when I mentioned that fact some hon. members opposite said, "hear, hear." Articles have appeared in eastern papers telling of the tremendous prosperity which was brought about as a result of new tariff legislation, but now I hear a member of the Conservative party rise in his place and question the assertion that these changes which were made in the tariff have brought prosperity.

At the present time there are industries in this country which, comparatively speaking, are in a prosperous condition and which pay good dividends to their bondholders and shareholders. I do claim, however, that there are other elements in our community, the great mass of the primary producers, the farmers and the men and women employed in industry, who to-day are having a much greater struggle than the men whose money is invested in industries. It may be very commendable for the government to introduce legislation which will give to the manufacturers the measure of protection which they desire or which the government thinks should be given them, but the time of the house could be spent to much greater advantage in caring for those who are in dire need at the present time.

As far as the tariff is concerned, it means practically nothing to the men and women employed in industry, and I make that statement with some little knowledge of the facts. There never have been such widspread wage reductions as have taken place since last September, when these increases in the tariff became effective. The industries which received the benefits of protection from parliament are among those which have been making the largest reductions in wages. Now the right hon. Prime Minister comes to this house with a measure which he says will create a board to inquire into the industries of this country and see what measure of protection they deserve. I claim our first duty is to see to it that the people who are protected are the men and women employed in industry. Figures were given to the house by the hon. member for Sherbrooke—and they cannot be disputed—showing that people employed in the textile industries are receiving wages of from $2 to a maximum of $17.50 per week. I have in my hand a communication from men employed in the textile industries in Ontario, showing that there have been great reductions in pay. During the past few months men have been compelled to go on strike in order to protest against wage reductions, but to-day we are asked to consider legislation which will give increased protection to the owners of the industries in which wage reductions have been made.

Unless there is something in this measure which will help the men and women employed in industry I say the whole thing, as far as the workers are concerned and to use the words of the Prime Minister himself, is nothing more than a gigantic bluff.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question with regard to applications which have been made for increases in the tariff, of which I understand there are between one thousand and two thousand. Will these be referred to the tariff board before any further tariff legislation is introduced in the house, or is it the intention of the government to proceed with tariff legislation before referring these applications to the tariff board?

Mr. BENNETT: I hardly think this is a question which arises now. The budget speech will disclose the answer. Surely my right hon. friend knows that the intention of the government with respect to tariff applications cannot be said properly to arise out of legislation with respect to the creation of a tariff board.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My point is this: My hon. friend now is asking parliament to make provision for the investigation of applications for increases in tariff. Undoubtedly the legislation is supported by strong arguments that these matters should be carefully investigated in the first instance. I think it is most important that we should know whether the government intends this legislation to apply to applications at present pending or whether by the legislation now introduced, the government intends simply to create a board which will function after this session of parliament, and to put through in the meantime far-reaching tariff changes on the representations of one only of the parties interested and without an opportunity being given other parties to be heard.

Mr. BENNETT: I repeat that this question has nothing to do with the measure now proposed. The bill to be based on the resolution is to enable parliament to create a tariff board, and what action is taken with respect to given matters will be apparent from the result. It is quite obvious that to anticipate by asking whether or not a given application will be referred to a board that does not exist, cannot have anything to do with legislation which proposes to call that board into being.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should just like to make quite clear to the Prime Minister what I believe to be the feeling of the people. They believe that something was put over them at the last session of parliament, in the vast changes made in the tariff without any investigation whatever which enabled either workingmen, farmers, or consumers to present their points of view with regard to the proposed changes. That was done by getting rid of the tariff board in advance of introducing the legislation. Now I hope my right hon. friend is not going to endeavour to introduce further tariff legislation in advance of royal assent being given this proposed measure. He ought to make it clear at the earliest possible date that in finding it advisable to have a tariff board at all, that tariff board should be given the opportunity of very carefully investigating all applications for increases in the tariff from this time on and before any further tariff legislation is enacted by the house. In other words, further tariffs should not be framed in this parliament solely on the representations of the special interests which my hon. friend opposite is seeking to help, and without any representation from either the consumers, the farmers, or the workingmen.

Mr. YOUNG: There are three or four questions which suggest themselves to me in this connection. Will the hearings before this tariff board be open to the general public? Will ample notice be given to all parties when the hearings are to be held? Will it be permissible for any citizen of Canada to appear before the board and plead the cause of any person or group of persons who may be opposed to any application being made? Will all the evidence be printed, together with the recommendations made by the board, so that we shall be in a position to judge whether or not the recommendations are based on the actual evidence submitted?

Mr. BENNETT: The question which the hon. gentleman has addressed to you, Mr. Chairman, might properly be dealt with after he has seen the bill. It is never customary to attempt to answer questions of that character at this stage. When the resolution is adopted there will be a motion for the first reading of the bill, and before the second reading the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to study its contents carefully. On the second reading he can, as doubtless he will, express his disapproval of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. YOUNG: Does the Prime Minister expect I shall disapprove?

Mr. BENNETT: Well, it would be very odd—

Mr. POWER: The Prime Minister cannot think much of his bill if he expects the hon. member to disapprove of it.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Weyburn is unlike the hon. member for Quebec South. He is always saying that no good can come out of Nazareth; the hon. member for Quebec South says, "I really wholly agree, but I am sitting where I am and therefore I disagree." There are, of course, many details that have to be dealt with. When reference is made to the alleged fact that the tariff board was dismissed, may I point out that what happened was this: An order in council was rescinded and the board was without a chairman. That chairman is now a member of this house, having early in the days of June resigned from the duties of the board to run as a Liberal candidate on July 28.

An hon. MEMBER: And was elected.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly he was elected; in view of the observations he made, why shouldn't he be?

Mr. HANBURY: Does the Prime Minister suggest that it was for the same reason that the government were returned—because of their observations?

Mr. BENNETT: I should think that to some extent that might be so. It certainly was not the reason why the hon. gentleman was elected, though; there were matters that went far deeper than that. However, to meet the difficulty there is in the bill a provision that no member of the board shall be eligible to be a candidate for election to the House of Commons until after the expiration of two years from the date he ceases to be a member of the board. At least, we shall not have a repetition of what we have had.

Mr. VENIOT: Why make it two years? You are taking away his liberty.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not probable that the hon. gentleman will fill one of these positions and therefore I thought two years was ample.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask the Prime Minister whether there is anything discreditable in being a member of this house or in being a member of a tariff board? I think the provision is most gratuitous, and the implied reason for its being in the bill is as unworthy as it is self-evident.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The bill lacks a good deal of dignity.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Hon. members are going outside the purview of the resolution, which concerns merely the question whether or not it is expedient to bring in a measure.

Mr. McLURE: I wish to ask one question with respect to this resolution. At the last election we heard a great deal about the consumers' league in conjunction with the tariff board.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And butter.

Mr. McLURE: The two were linked together as one great concern. The question I wish to ask in this connection is this: Will there be associated with this new tariff board now proposed a consumers' league with a franking machine for political propaganda?

Mr. BENNETT: In reply to my hon. friend's question, I can assure him I have a very large quantity of literature franked by various members of parliament, prepared by the mouthpiece of the consumers' league. It is not proposed that that scandal shall continue.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Good heavens! What about last year?

Mr. VENIOT: What about the franking during the elections by the party opposite?

Mr. TOTZKE: The offenders were not to be found on one side alone. The Prime Minister is quite right in deciding that the franking privilege shall be curtailed to some extent, but I submit he would be wise in applying the restriction to the members of his own party. That, however, is apart from the question I wish to ask. In this discussion the impression seems to prevail that only applications for increases in tariffs will come before the board. Will it not be possible for the board to hear applications for reductions as well?

Mr. BENNETT: I am grateful to the hon. gentleman for asking that question, because it was his own leader who kept on insisting upon increases in the tariff. I intended to remove that misapprehension, but I assumed that when the bill was in committee there would be ample opportunity to do so. I have never heard for a single moment, except from the right hon. gentleman, that only applications for increases would come before the board.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: You couldn't expect anything else now.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman would interrupt less, he would probably—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Be more dignified?

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so. I am glad the hon. gentleman suggested it, because consideration for his feelings forbade my doing so.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The Prime Minister forgets that he interrupts more than any other hon. member in this house.

Mr. BENNETT: The applications that will come before the board may be applications for either increases or decreases.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The latter will remain mere applications.

Mr. MARCIL: In 1912, Sir Thomas White introduced a bill for the creation of a tariff commission. I have not read lately the literature on the subject, for it is nearly twenty years ago. Is the present measure based largely on the same lines as the proposed bill of that day, or are there changes?

Mr. BENNETT: All tariff board legislation is based upon the same general principles, whether it be the tariff board of the Free State or of South Africa, or the investigating body in Australia. They are all based upon the general principles that were found in the bill of 1912, but which, of course, do not appear in their entirety in this measure; because there are changes which time, observation and experience, have indicated to be desirable. But in a broad and general way, the theory of a tariff board measure is that opportunity shall be afforded for the purpose of ascertaining facts, upon which facts it will be possible to conclude what action should be taken to enable the citizens of one country, in competition with another, to carry on their industrial life as well as other phases of their existence. That is the theory of this bill.

Mr. SANDERSON: I understood the Prime Minister to say that there was provision in the bill that no member of the new tariff board shall be a candidate for parliament until the expiration of two years after his resignation from the board. Has he made provision that no defeated Conservative candidate shall be a member of this board?

Mr. BENNETT: The only point I do not understand about the hon. gentleman's question is why he did not ask it sooner. He is rather tardy in putting the question. There is no such provision.

Mr. COOTE: From reports which have been current in the country during the last six months, it seems natural to assume that there will not be very much work for a tariff board after the forthcoming budget is brought down. Does the Prime Minister anticipate that there will be sufficient work for the tariff board to do to justify our passing such a measure as this?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member will observe that there are three additional duties cast upon the board: one with respect to the Combines Act, another with respect to the Customs Act, and a third with respect to the customs board of appeals. So that it is quite probable they will be fully occupied.

Mr. IRVINE: Do I understand the Prime Minister to say that this tariff board will not only find facts but submit to the government their finding on those facts?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think the hon. gentleman followed what I said. I stated what the board should report: that is to say, that they should report the facts as ascertained, together with a copy of the evidence. Inferences are not to be drawn by the board.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Unfortunately I was not in the chamber when the Prime Minister made his preliminary statement. Will it be the duty of the chairman of this new board to prepare the budget speech for the incoming minister of finance?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think the present custom will be departed from.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Bennett thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 47, for the appointment of a tariff board.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

London—salaries and expenses of the office of the High Commissioner for Canada, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, or any of its amendments, including $2,000 additional salary for the high commissioner to that authorized by chapter 92, R.S.C., $132,260.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What was the date of the appointment of the present high commissioner to London?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not recall the exact date, but a return was tabled today by the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) in connection with this office. My memory is the appointment was made some time in December.

Mr. TOTZKE: What is the explanation of the increase in this item?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With the permission of my hon. friend, may I interject a question? The Prime Minister has stated that the present high commissioner was appointed in December.

Mr. BENNETT: I have the exact date now; it was November 28.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend's government came into office early in August and at that time the Hon. Vincent Massey was the High Commissioner for Canada to Great Britain. Why was Mr. Massey obliged to resign that position?

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the use of the word "obliged" is rather strong, but he did resign. The position is this: there is a High Commissioner's Act, and the duties of the high commissioner are covered by a return tabled to-day. The High Commissioner for Canada is not a diplomatic officer in the sense in which that term is used with respect to external affairs. His position with respect to the government is one of the most confidential character and in my judgment the High Commissioner for Canada should be in touch with the government of the day in Ottawa in such a way as to indicate that it has his confidence and he has the confidence of the government. I stated at the last session that this was my conception of the duties of the high commissioner. I intimated that to Mr. Massey and I read to him the statute which enumerates the duties of the high commissioner. Apparently Mr. Massey felt that if that was my conception of the position and he not being, shall I say, a supporter of the policies of the administration, then he should resign. I did suggest that he would not be able to reflect the policies of this government in London in the manner in which I should like them to be expressed. Mr. Massey had left a diplomatic office to take a political office, and having done so he felt that he could not properly interpret the views of the administration, and therefore he resigned.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I differ with my right hon. friend in his view that the position of High Commissioner for Canada is a political office. In my opinion that position is the highest of all diplomatic offices which can be held by anyone belonging to this country. The act which creates the office refers to the commissioner as the agent of Canada, not as the agent of a political party. That is the difference in essence between the view of my right hon. friend and the view which we on this side entertain. The last thing in the world which should be countenanced is that any person representing this country, whether in Washington, Tokyo, Paris or London, should be regarded as other than a representative of the country as a whole and not as a representative of a political party. When Mr. Massey accepted the position in London he did so on the understanding, which was publicly stated, that the London office was the highest of all diplomatic offices in the gift of the government of Canada. He had filled the office of minister at Washington for more than three years, I think everyone in this country will say most acceptably, not as a partisan but as a faithful, loyal and distinguished representative of Canada in the United States. His representation in the United States being what it was and being so generally commented on by members of all political parties in Canada as of the most exemplary character, he was appointed by the government of the day to London when a vacancy occurred in that office. The construction which my right hon. friend has just placed upon the nature of the London office means that those who go into the service of the country abroad will have no reason to look to London as a possible post to which they may ultimately attain, and that the position will be filled only by political partisans. May I say, having regard to the record of those who have filled that high position in the past, there is ample precedent to show that it has not been regarded as one necessarily identified with the government in office at the time. Probably no one represented Canada with more distinction in the high commissioner's office in London than did Lord Strathcona. Lord Strathcona was a Conservative who sat in this house as such; he was appointed by Sir John A. Macdonald's government to the position of High Commissioner in London. When Sir Wilfrid Laurier came into office, he did not take the attitude that because Lord Strathcona had been a Conservative member of parliament and had been appointed by a Conservative administration, he should not continue in the post of High Commissioner for Canada in London. Sir Wilfrid Laurier continued Lord Strathcona in that position and he held it throughout the fifteen years Sir Wilfrid was in office and, if I am not mistaken, as long as he lived. That was, it seems to me, the correct way of proceeding. It will be most unfortunate for this country, in its relations with Great Britain and other countries as well, if an all important precedent of that kind is departed from and an entirely different view taken of the character of that position.

Mr. Massey's letter of resignation was brought down in a return last year and I shall read it to the house, because it gives the grounds on which Mr. Massey tendered his resignation. This is the letter:

Batterwood House,
Near Port Hope, Ontario,
August 14, 1930.

My Dear Prime Minister,—

I appreciate your courtesy in arranging our conversation of yesterday in answer to my letter requesting an expression of your wishes concerning my appointment to the high commissionership in London.

I left the legation at Washington and accepted a transfer to London on the understanding that the office of high commissioner was an integral part of our service abroad differing, of course, in its procedure from our foreign diplomatic offices but akin to these in the qualifications of its personnel and in the relation of that personnel to the government which it serves. I now realize that our ideas regarding this are at variance. In our discussion on this subject you were good enough to make clear your view that the office of high commissioner should be held by someone in close political association with the government of the day, and I understood from what you said that you had in mind plans for this post as a result of which my own appointment could no longer stand. In these circumstances I, of course, at once offered you my resignation from the high commissionership which I now confirm—the resignation to take effect whenever you so desire.

In resigning from this post in our service abroad, of which I have been a member for three and a half years, I should like to say that no one belonging to the service and who has been engaged in its work, could retire from a post in it without a feeling of having been greatly privileged.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

Vincent Massey.

The Hon. R. B. Bennett, P.C., K.C., Prime Minister,
Ottawa, Ontario.

No one could read that letter without appreciating the fact that in as dignified language as it is possible for anyone to use, Mr. Massey was making it quite plain that he had been forced by the Prime Minister to resign, and for the reason that the Prime Minister wished to have a close political associate given that particular office. Before we increase the salary of the High Commissioner for Canada and vote further moneys for that office, we ought to understand definitely whether the position of high commissioner is to be regarded as primarily in the nature of a political post to be filled only by a political partisan, or whether it is to be regarded as a part of the service of Canada abroad. In using these words, I am referring to the Prime Minister's view of the office, that it is a political office, and I say: You cannot give to the word "political" any significance in regard to an office which means the representation of Canada as a whole, excepting "partisan political" as distinguished from "diplomatic." I regard that office as a diplomatic office in the truest sense of the word. Diplomacy as used in reference to matters of state is simply the art of conducting negotiations as between governments. The fact that one or both of the governments is not a foreign government but is a government of a country within the empire, does not make the post any the less a diplomatic post. It is a diplomatic post because the person who holds that office is the representative of his country in another country. He is not the representative of some department of government. He is not a government official in the ordinary sense of the word. He is the representative of the government of his country, the agent of his country, and not of a political party.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

I should like in this connection to read to the house the language of the act which created and governs the office of high commissioner. It is in a return to which my right hon. friend has just referred as having been brought down. I have not the return under my hand, but the following will be found as part of the terms. The statute creating the office of High Commissioner for Canada is chapter 92 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927. Section 2 reads:

2. The governor in council may, under the great seal of Canada, from time to time, appoint an officer to be called the High Commissioner for Canada, who shall hold office during pleasure.

3. The High Commissioner shall—

(a) act as representative and resident agent of Canada in Great Britain, and in that capacity, execute such powers and perform such duties as are, from time to time, conferred upon and assigned to him by the governor in council;

(b) take the charge, supervision and control of the immigration offices and agencies in Great Britain, under the Minister of Immigration and Colonization;

(c) carry out such instructions as he, from time to time, receives from the governor in council respecting the commercial, financial and general interests of Canada in Great Britain and elsewhere.

Those are the essential sections in the act referring to the functions and duties of the high commissioner. I would ask my right hon. friend to point out wherein those functions as between Canada and Britain differ in any essential particular from those of an ambassador resident in the capital of another country. It is true, as my right hon. friend pointed out last year, an ambassador is appointed by His Majesty and represents the king as well as his country. The king's representative, however, where he is an ambassador, is appointed on the recommendation of the government of the day. His Majesty does not select some personal friend for an appointment of the kind; His Majesty appoints the one whom the government of the day recommends for the office, and the ambassador thus appointed is the representative of his country resident at a foreign capital. The words in the statute describing the position of high commissioner are: "act as representative and resident agent of Canada in Great Britain." He is a resident agent. That likewise is the essence of the position of the ministers of foreign countries who have come to reside in this city. They are the resident agents of other countries in Ottawa. Our ministers at Washington, Tokyo, and Paris are resident in the capitals of those countries as the agents of the government of Canada, and speak with the authority, not only of the government, but also of His Majesty, in conducting negotiations. All the qualifications of character, ability, tact and judgment, which are essential in a minister or an ambassador abroad, are equally essential, if not indeed more necessary in a representative of Canada in Great Britain than in Canada's representatives elsewhere. I cannot see how my right hon. friend can draw an essential distinction between the two classes of positions.

To change the essential nature of the position of high commissioner at this time, when there is admittedly equality of status as between this country and Great Britain, makes the matter a great deal more serious than would otherwise be the case. Let me illustrate what I have just said. We have in Canada at the present time a representative of His Majesty's government in Great Britain in the person of the High Commissioner for Great Britain in Canada. If the same interpretation is to be applied by the British government to that post as the Prime Minister to-day is applying to the post of High Commissioner for Canada in Great Britain, then the British government should appoint to Canada in the position of high commissioner a political agent, a representative of the Labour party in Great Britain who would be in close association politically with the Labour government in Great Britain. Has Great Britain taken that attitude in appointing her high commissioner? When Sir William Clark was appointed to Canada, he was appointed by the government of the Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin, a Conservative administration. Mr. Baldwin's government changed, and the government of the Right Hon. Ramsay MacDonald came into office in England. If the interpretation of the high commissioner's office is that which the Prime Minister of Canada has put upon it, then the moment the government in Great Britain changed, there should have been a change in the person of the High Commissioner for Great Britain in Canada. If he had been appointed originally as the agent of one political party and another political party came into office in Great Britain, then that other political party should have sent a political representative here. I ask hon. gentlemen how we in Canada should feel if a change of that kind were made? I ask the Prime Minister how he would have felt, or would feel to-morrow, if the Ramsay MacDonald government said: We are of the opinion that our representative in Canada should be someone in close political association with the Labour party in Great Britain, and we are therefore sending as high commissioner to Canada a political partisan in order to see that our policies are carried out in the particular way we think desirable and in order to make those policies prevail in the Dominion. I venture to say our confidence in the high commissioner would be lost at once.

I should add this further fact. The position that Sir William Clark held prior to the time he came to Canada was that of a member of the diplomatic service who had gone into the diplomatic service as a career. In exactly the same way as Mr. Massey had taken up public service—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER: He was a Liberal candidate first.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In exactly the same way—I do not know what hon. gentlemen are laughing at—the Hon. Mr. Massey accepted the position of minister to Washington in order to devote his life to the diplomatic service of Canada. That was the reason he gave up his business connections and many other associations when he accepted that position. He accepted that position as a career position, exactly as Sir William Clark accepted his position in the foreign service of Great Britain as a career position. Subsequently Sir William was appointed to his post in the Dominion by the Baldwin government.

May I say further I fail to see wherein it should be a reflection upon any man that he has belonged to a political party. I do not believe that the record of the services of those who have left politics for diplomatic posts will justify any jeer on that score. Take the ambassadors of Great Britain. The right hon. Lord Bryce, who was appointed to Washington, had been a member of a Liberal government in England. He was retained in Washington by a Conservative administration. The Right Hon. Lord Crewe, who was ambassador of Great Britain to Paris, had also been a minister of the crown in a Liberal administration. He was retained as ambassador and filled that same position under different governments. Names like Lord Bryce and Lord Crewe are not any the less honoured because these gentlemen previous to their appointments as diplomats were associated with a political party. They are judged by the manner in which they discharged their duties after accepting office.

Take the position of members of the judiciary in this country. No one thinks of raising a question with respect to a member of the bench on the score of his having been a Conservative member of parliament or a Liberal member of parliament. When an hon. member accepts a position on the bench he leaves his party views behind him, and he accepts the position knowing that it will remove him entirely from political strife and political life, and I say that exactly the same view should be taken with respect to anyone who accepts the position of High Commissioner of Canada in Great Britain. He ought to look upon the position as one which demands in the strictest sense of the word an absence of partisan actions of any character. He must certainly be prepared to carry out the instructions and directions of his government. He must carry out their policies, and the government always has it in its own hands to remedy the situation if he fails to do so. Any ambassador in a foreign country is obliged to carry out the policies of the administration that may be in office in the home country. If he does not agree with those policies and feels it on his conscience not to further them, he must resign, but so long as he fills the position of ambassador, which is in every country a very trusted post, his duty is to further the policies that are those of the government of the day. That has been found to work admirably in the British foreign office and in the British diplomatic service all over the world. We in Canada at this time when this country is coming more and more to the fore as a nation, with all the attributes of a nation, and with a status politically that is equal to that of Great Britain herself in reference to international questions, cannot be too careful to follow the highest example, and I submit that in this regard there is no better example than that of Great Britain herself.

Last year my right hon. friend did give to the house a statement of his point of view on the position of High Commissioner and the office. I read from Hansard of September 20, 1930:

> With regard to the position of high commissioner I can point out only that it is a statutory office. Provision is made for that office by a statute passed by this parliament in the days of Sir John A. Macdonald. From that day until this the position has been of a political nature, using the word in the large and proper sense of the term. In the judgment of this administration the high commissioner should not only reflect the policies that are originated and initiated by the government of Canada, but enjoy to the fullest degree the confidence of the administration and reflect the spirit and attitude of mind of the administration towards the problems with which they have to deal. It therefore follows that the incumbent of that office is practically a member of the administration so far as the discharge of his duties in London is concerned. He is not a diplomat, for under the convention of 1926 communications are from prime minister to prime minister. Between nations such as the United States, France or Japan, communications are through the minister and from the minister to the governments of those countries. In addition to that of course it is known that a minister is appointed by the sovereign while the high commissioner is appointed by the government. The statute has provided in terms that the high commissioner shall be the agent of Canada in Great Britain; that he shall be responsible for discharging the obligations of practically the Minister of Immigration in Great Britain and that he shall deal with such other financial and commercial matters as may be entrusted to him.

The one sentence there that seems to me to sum up everything is this:

> The statute has provided in terms that the high commissioner shall be the agent of Canada in Great Britain.

He is the agent of the country, not the agent of a political party, and I think my right hon. friend has already found out that he would have been a little more fortunate in his choice if he had held to one who had had some diplomatic training and experience and had justified his selection, and had not ventured quite as far as he did into the political arena.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman the matter may be put very simply: Whoever is High Commissioner for Canada in London must have the confidence of the government of this country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my right hon. friend if that is not true of ambassadors in all countries?

Mr. BENNETT: It is a different matter, however, if the incumbent of the office has so voluntarily expressed himself as to make confidence in him impossible. The recognition of that fact by the gentleman in question undoubtedly induced him to resign.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I take exception to the remarks of my right hon. friend. The letter to the Prime Minister was worded courteously. He handed in his resignation when he was compelled to do so.

Mr. BENNETT: He was not compelled.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He was not compelled?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On that point I differ from my right hon. friend. Mr. Massey would never have resigned if the present Prime Minister had not told him plainly that he intended that post to be of a political nature and that he wanted someone to fill the position who politically would be his personal friend.

Mr. BENNETT: It may be that Mr. Massey discussed the matter more fully with the leader of the opposition than he did with me. I say that Mr. Massey was not asked for his resignation. He was asked this, however: "Do you think in view of the fact which I mention you could possibly maintain the confidence of the government, or give it yours?"—and he resigned. Properly so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What answer did he make to that question?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer he made was this: I put to him the circumstances under which he came into public life; I put to him the circumstances in connection with the duty on agricultural implements and his expressions of opinion concerning the then Prime Minister and government of the day. I put his statements to him fairly; I put to him the communications which he had had with the then leader of the opposition. I put the fact to him that within a few months later he accepted office under the man whom he had thus described. He sought from the electors of the county of Durham a seat in parliament; that seat was denied him. I refer hon. members to the speeches he made and the attitude he took concerning the policies he espoused. Then I turned to him and said, as I now say to his spokesman in the house: "Can you possibly represent the administration of this day anywhere, at any time, in any place?" Do hon. members think he could? Would any man give such a man a power of attorney to act as his representative, in view of those facts? In business could that be done? Could it be done in commerce? I ask those questions, as a matter of fair dealings between men. How could I carry on? How could any Prime Minister carry on business in London with that man as his representative? He had made statements publicly; he had made statements regarding the then opposition which made it impossible for one charged with responsibility to open his heart to him. How could one open his heart to him? How could it be done? And in turn how could he open his heart to that Prime Minister? Let us be fair about these things. The conduct of the business of government is not the easiest thing in the world. It is a complex matter; it involves checks, balances and adjustments. The statutes provide the conditions under which a man shall be high commissioner. What are they? Among other things he represents the Department of Immigration. Listen to the words of the statute: "under the Minister of Immigration." Yes, "under the Minister of Immigration." In other words the high commissioner is a civil servant appointed by statute, which provides for his salary and the services he shall render as a civil servant. Under the circumstances was there anything left to do but to say to him, "Do you think under such circumstances you could represent this government as its agent, and as the alter ego of the government or speak for it?"

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does Mr. Ferguson do that?

Mr. BENNETT: We will come to that presently. That was the difference between us. On one hand an ambassador is appointed by the sovereign and the high commissioner by order in council. One is the appointee of the government and the other on the recommendation of the government is appointed by the sovereign. One is a civil servant and the other is not. One discharges political duties and the other discharges diplomatic and political duties. One is an agent of the government under the terms of a statute. Where is the statute which defines the duties of a minister? Where is it? Would anyone think of appointing a minister to represent—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would call your attention to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that it is six o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it is six o'clock.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 26, respecting the Restigouche Log Driving and Boom Company—Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury).

Bill No. 20, respecting a certain patent of A. R. Wilfley & Sons, Incorporated—Mr. Anderson (High Park).

GRAIN INSURANCE AND GUARANTY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 13, respecting Grain Insurance and Guaranty Company—Mr. Kennedy (Winnipeg South Centre)—Mr. Geary in the chair.

Sections 1 to 3 inclusive agreed to.

On section 4—Rights of holders of preferred stock.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Has this bill passed the committee, and were any amendments or changes suggested?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): In the absence of the sponsor of this bill I might say that the bill was fully considered this week in the banking and commerce committee and unanimously reported without amendment. Everything that is sought to be done in the bill could be done under the Companies Act by supplementary letters patent if this were a company incorporated under that act, but because it is an insurance company it is necessary to come to parliament.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Is the whole change in the bill the increase in capital stock?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, the capital structure is being changed by the creation of preferred shares out of the present common stock.

Section agreed to.

Sections 5 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ANCIENT ORDER OF FORESTERS

The house in committee on Bill No. 27 respecting the subsidiary high court of the Ancient Order of Foresters in the Dominion of Canada—Mr. Chevrier—Mr. Geary in the chair.

On section 1—Management fund.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I assume this bill was approved by the banking and commerce committee as well?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): I have a note on the back of the bill that it was reported from the committee.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BURRARD INLET TUNNEL AND BRIDGE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 31, respecting the Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company—Mr. Munn—Mr. Geary in the chair.

Sections 1, 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Power to replace span.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Just for the sake of information I should like to know whether the new span will be sufficiently wide to allow ships to pass without the danger of another similar accident happening. I have had complaints from the masters of ships that the old bridge was quite unfit. Owing to the tide the boats could not possibly be sure of getting through without damage. I would ask the mover for some statement on that point.

Mr. HANBURY: In answer to my hon. friend's inquiry, may I inform the house that the width of the span will be the same as previously. It is anticipated, however, that regulations will be made by the harbour commissioners of Vancouver to control the traffic in such a way as to reduce to a minimum the possibility of accidents in the future.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was not on the committee, but that arrangement does not seem to me to be at all satisfactory to the masters of ships. They tell me that it is impossible under certain conditions of tide to go through without danger of ships running foul of the piers.

Mr. HANBURY: I can assure the hon. gentleman that the shipping people of Vancouver have given the suggested changes their careful consideration. Until probably a week or ten days ago they felt as the hon. member does; but having been given full information in connection with the proposed permanent changes, which will be made in the course of a few years, they have agreed, I understand, that the span should be replaced, and they will offer no further opposition.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead) moved the second reading of Bill No. 28, to amend the Bankruptcy Act (Priority of Claims).

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

On section 1—Priority of claims for wages, salaries and commissions.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Explain.

Mr. HACKETT: Mr. Chairman, bankruptcy offers a method as well as a means for distributing among his creditors the property of a man who is unable to pay his debts in full. According to the act, creditors are divided into two classes, ordinary and preferred. Among the preferred creditors are servants who work for a salary. That class has always been recognized as being entitled to preferential treatment and to be paid their wages for a period of three months preceding a winding-up order. The purpose of this amendment is to provide for a class of servants hitherto unprovided for. A large number of salesmen receive their renumeration for their work either when the goods sold have been delivered, or have been paid for, or at some fixed time after either events. Travelling salesmen are now going throughout the provinces selling goods to be delivered next autumn, and most of them will receive payment for their efforts thirty, sixty and ninety day after the goods have been delivered or after they have been paid for. The purpose of this amendment is to entitle these men to preference for their wages when a period of not more than three months has elapsed from the date their wages became due. If a salesman were to sell a bill of goods to be delivered on January 1st, and under the terms of his contract he is to receive his salary, wages, commission or whatever you choose to call it, thirty days after the goods are paid for, and the goods were to be paid for on March 1, he would have a preferred claim should the firm for whom he is working happen to go into bankruptcy within three months after March 1.

Mr. VENIOT: That is not now the case.

Mr. HACKETT: No. But there is nothing new in the principle involved. There are forty odd thousand travelling salesmen in this country who are denied the benefit of a preference for their wages falling due during the three months which precede a bankruptcy. This amendment seeks to give to that large class the privilege extended to others.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I have no antagonism to the principle of this bill except that I find that it will give to these men working on commission a double priority. They will be given priority for the three months following the date of the assignment, but there will be commissions falling due before that from previous transactions or possibly cash sales—these men do not sell exclusively on a basis of payment in three months; sometimes they sell for cash—and they would be given priority for the three months prior to the date of assignment as well as a further three months following the assignment.

Mr. HACKETT: I do not think that that would happen. After earning their commissions some of these men have to wait from six months to a year before receiving them. There might be cash transactions within the three months preceding bankruptcy which would entitle them to preferential payment.

Mr. NEILL: And earnings falling due within that period.

Mr. HACKETT: Yes. At the proper time an amendment to this section will be offered.

Mr. HEAPS: Is there any such thing as a legal definition of the term "travelling salesman"?

Mr. HACKETT: I merely took that class as an example. The section of the bill reads as follows:

> Thirdly, all wages, salaries, commissions or compensation of any clerk, servant, travelling salesman, labourer or workman, in respect of services rendered to the bankrupt or assignor during three months before the date of receiving order or assignment:

Mr. ILSLEY: Will the hon. member explain the necessity for the words:

> —moreover, that any advances made on account of such commission shall be deemed to have been legally paid on account thereof;

Mr. HACKETT: The Bankruptcy Act provides that certain payments made within thirty or sixty days prior to a bankruptcy are presumed to have been made in anticipation of bankruptcy and are therefore illegal. An exception is made in the case of wages, and this section would put the payment of commissions in the same class and exempt them from the presumption of fraud which attaches to ordinary payments made in anticipation of bankruptcy.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I would point out to the hon. member that if he desires to make any amendment, this is the appropriate time.

Mr. HACKETT: I move:

> That the word "or" in the eighteenth and twenty-first lines be deleted and the words "or payment" be added in the eighteenth line after the word "delivery" and the words "or paid for" be added in the twenty-first line after the word "delivered."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I would like to point out that the hon. member cannot amend his own bill.

Mr. GEARY: I move that amendment

Mr. NEILL: Would the introducer of the bill be kind enough to read it as it will be when amended, beginning with the words "provided that commission."?

Mr. HACKETT: It will read:

Provided that commission earned more than three months before the date of a receiving order or assignment, but not payable (by the terms of the creditor's agreement) until the shipment, delivery or payment of the goods sold, shall be deemed to have been earned within three months of the date of the receiving order or assignment, when the said goods have been shipped, delivered or paid for within three months of the receiving order or assignment.

Mr. NEILL: Would the hon. member in charge of the bill not think it better if it read: "delivery of or payment for the goods sold"? It is better English anyway.

Mr. ILSLEY: I think the hon. member's point is well taken.

Mr. HACKETT: Yes—"Shipment, delivery of or payment for."

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni a few minutes ago raised a point that was not cleared up, at least to my satisfaction, and that is whether there might not be more than three months' priority. Suppose a travelling salesman were working on a cash basis during the last three months before bankruptcy. He would receive priority for his full time for those three months. Then if commissions fell due for previous transactions, he really might be crowding into those last three months much more than three months' priority. Is that not correct?

Mr. HACKETT: I think that is correct, but that is exactly where the difficulty lies, that people who work for those commissions are precluded from payment for six, nine or twelve months, and in that event the man would be receiving merely what he would have received months before had he been receiving a daily, weekly or monthly stipend. This is a peculiarity of the commission arrangement.

Mr. ILSLEY: I understand that, but there is a possibility, under this amendment, that he may be getting priority for much more than three months' pay for his work. Is that not correct? Let me put the case again, because I doubt whether the sponsor of the bill understood it before. This is the case I have in mind; Suppose a travelling salesman were working on a cash basis, getting paid day by day for what he does—that might or might not be possible—during the last three months before bankruptcy. Under the bill as it stands he gets priority for three months' remuneration. Then, under the proposed amendment he also gets priority for such commissions as may fall due during those three months for work that he has done six, nine or twelve months previously. In other words, in the case I have put, he gets a priority that an ordinary wage earner does not receive. There may be some explanation. The point has just occurred to me.

Mr. HACKETT: That is quite correct, but I do not know that it is altogether a likely case. Let us suppose that a man were working on commission, he might finish his work at the end of May, his commissions might not fall due until early next year. On June 1 he goes to work on a cash basis for someone else. The situation would be identical, but still, under the amendment, he would preserve his right to priority in the event of bankruptcy to all commissions falling due within three months of a receiving order.

Mr. NEILL: In that case he would have lost his right of priority, would he not? Does the law not require the man to be in the employ of the bankrupt right up to the date of the assignment?

Mr. HACKETT: The amendment would give him that priority.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Why should the commission man be preferred in any way to the ordinary wage earner who may have earned wages over a period of, say, a year before the assignment?

Mr. HACKETT: He is not. He comes in as an ordinary employee. The only difference is that under this system the man, instead of receiving wages, weekly, fortnightly or monthly, has to wait six, nine or twelve months for his commission. This merely gives him a priority in regard to amounts which fell due within the three months preceding a receiving order.

Mr. NEILL: That is exactly what the bill does not say. It does not say a priority for three months' earnings. It says, "commission earned more than three months before." He might earn twelve months' commission and it is all to be considered as coming in under the three months' priority. That priority should be limited at least to three months' earnings of commissions. Now he can get priority for twelve months' earnings.

Mr. HACKETT: Only if the commission falls due within the three months.

Mr. BURY: I think the difference between the commission man as dealt with in the bill and the ordinary wage earner is this, that the ordinary wage earner can sue for his wages that have been earned prior to the three months, as soon as they have been earned, whereas the commission man is tied up; he cannot sue. In other words, he may have earned his commission and he may see his employer going on the rocks, but his hands are tied by reason of the agreement that his commission is not to be paid until the goods are delivered or paid for. He has absolutely no protection. In other words, he is in quite a different position from the wage earner who can take immediate summary proceedings to cover his wages earned prior to the three months; the commission man cannot do so.

Mr. BOTHWELL: The commissions of the commission man, I presume, are falling in from month to month and he is being paid commissions from time to time throughout the year. This amendment will permit him to get commissions which have been earned beyond the three months period, but not payable before the three months period. That will mean that he has priority over the claims that fall in during the three months prior to the assignment and also will have priority for the commissions that have been earned, say, during the twelve months before that. The commissions have been earned but are not payable. By way of illustration an ordinary farm labourer who is working for a period, say, of eight months, and is to be paid in the fall, has priority for only three months' wages. Suppose he works eight months at $40 a month, payable in the fall; he has priority for only three months' wages.

Mr BURY: He can sue for his wages.

Mr. BOTHWELL: He cannot sue until his wages become due, which may be at a date after the assignment. This commission man has clearly a preference over the ordinary wage earner.

Mr. SMOKE: It seems to me that a number of hon. members are labouring under a misapprehension. If they will refer to line 21 and following lines of the amending bill they will see that it is limited to the goods which have been shipped or delivered within three months of the receiving order or assignment. Surely it cannot be contended that the preference amounts to more than the commission on the goods shipped in the last three months prior to the assignment.

Mr. NEILL: There might have been a whole summer's trade done in the three months.

Mr. SMOKE: That might accidentally happen.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

FORGING OF TRADE MARKS—SALE OF GOODS FALSELY MARKED

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto) moved the second reading of Bill No. 34, to amend the criminal code (trade marks).

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. At page 1517 of Hansard, in the debate on May 12, you ruled as follows as to this particular bill:

> Yet rule No. 3 as it appears and has been quoted at page 348 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms has not been complied with in the preparation of the bill now before the house.

I cannot find, sir, that it has been complied with since, because the bill is in exactly the same form in which it was last Tuesday.

Mr. GEARY: Is my hon. friend taking the point of order that the bill is not in order, or that his point of order taken against the bill when it was last before the house was considered favourably by your honour? I think there was no ruling by your honour. The last words of your honour were to the effect that it would be well to refer the bill to the law clerk for consideration. Following your honour's suggestion in that regard the bill has again been referred to the law clerk, who says that it is perfectly in order in every way.

Mr. NEILL: The law clerk says so?

Mr. GEARY: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: With all due deference to the law clerk, this bill and several others on the order paper do not in all particulars comply with the rules. I have looked at several of these bills and most of them are proposed amendments to existing legislation. I do not think it would be well to delay the passage of the legislation or to incur the expenditure necessary for reprinting the bills. I do not think the house or any member will be misled by the form in which the bills appear at present, and the discussion that has taken place will serve as a notice to hon. members who are introducing legislation in the future. My ruling will be that Bill No. 34 is in sufficient compliance with the rules to be proceeded with.

Mr. NEILL: I accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but will it not be necessary to pass a resolution to rescind your ruling of last Tuesday?

Mr. SPEAKER: My ruling made just now is plain enough.

Mr. NEILL: All too plain.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. GEARY moved that the house go into committee on the bill.

Mr. NEILL: The bill has not been read a second time yet, Mr. Speaker, We are waiting for the hon. member to move the second reading. It was the point of order that we were discussing.

Mr. GEARY: When the order was first called I rose and moved the second reading, the first time I was on my feet.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion to go into committee is not debatable.

Mr. NEILL: This is really beyond the limit. Surely any hon. member is entitled to speak on the second reading of the bill, and whoever heard of an hon. member speaking to the second reading of a bill before the member in charge had given an explanation. It would have been considered discourteous if I had butted in ahead of my hon. friend from South Toronto. There must be some courtesy and decency in the debate, I should think.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

On section 1—Forgery.

Mr. GEARY: I should like, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. NEILL: I would ask, Mr. Chairman, that you read each section. I think that is the rule when the reading of the sections is requested, so that we can get some faint idea of what the bill really means.

Mr. GEARY: If my hon. friend had not interrupted, he would have seen that I was proceeding, with your permission, Mr. Chairman, to explain the sections of the bill.

Mr. NEILL: It is not your explanations that we want, at present, but the reading of the sections by the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Is it the pleasure of the committee that I read the sections? Section 1 reads as follows:

1. Section four hundred and eighty-six of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—Criminal Code, chapter thirty-six of the

"486. (1) Every one is deemed to forge a trade mark who either

(a) without the assent of the proprietor of the trade mark makes or reproduces in any manner that trade mark or a mark so nearly resembling it as to be calculated to deceive; or

(b) falsifies any genuine trade mark, whether by alteration, addition, effacement or otherwise.

(2) Any trade mark or mark so made, or reproduced, or falsified is, in this part, referred to as a forged trade mark."

Mr. GEARY: This bill is introduced at the request of certain persons who have been interested in the protection of trade marks, whether used as labels or in any other way in which a trade mark is used. The right to the use of a trade mark is for the protection of the person owning the trade mark and applying it to goods of his manufacture. If that trade mark be allowed to be reproduced and applied to goods which are not of his manufacture the manufacturer is being deprived of his rights, and at the same time goods, possibly of an inferior quality, are being imposed upon the public by some manufacturer other than the one in rightful possession of the trade mark. I understood from those who asked me to promote this legislation that section 486 of the criminal code was not clear enough to enable a conviction to be had for an infraction of such section 486. It was found that if a man had trade marks and packages together in his premises obviously with the intention of applying the trade mark to the packages and going into the market with the substituted goods, he could not be convicted unless it was proved he himself forged the trade mark. If he had the forgeries prepared by others and only had the forged trade mark in his possession, there was no offence. Moreover it was found that unless he had actually applied the trade mark or label to the package there was no offence under the code. It was quite obviously the intention that no one should secure forged trade marks and packages which were designed to carry a certain trade mark and place himself in a position whereby he could issue goods of a spurious nature deceiving the public as to the true source of manufacture. In a good many industries matters have come to a serious pass and I understand the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) agrees that this legislation will remedy the fault which now exists under section 486. The proposal is that the section should have added to it in the second line of section (a) the words "or reproduces in any manner." That is, if the offender does not forge the trade mark but by means of a die reproduces it, he is equally guilty. That would seem to be sound common sense. Subsection 2 is amended by adding the word "reproduced." Any trade mark so made or falsified is referred to as a forged trade mark. It is quite obvious, however, that a reproduction would be an equal forgery, and that point is cleared by the amendment to subsection 2. I am quite frank to say that the unsatisfactory condition of the law in regard to trade marks has created some havoc in a good many rather popular industries; at least it is creating difficulties among the consumers of certain of the manufactures of those industries.

Mr. NEILL: I wish the hon. member would particularize the industries to which he has referred.

Mr. GEARY: In my province and in other provinces the government of the day has seen fit to ensure that the people who are consumers of well known—

Mr. VENIOT: Spirits?

Mr. GEARY: —commodities in the production of which Canada I understand stands second to none, are sometimes deceived by reproductions of the product being forged upon them at the price of the original and proper product. We do not want that to occur, because it would seem to be a dangerous practice.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the product?

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. GEARY: For instance it might even be Quaker oats.

Mr. NEILL: I am indeed saddened to hear the reputation given to the province of Ontario by the hon. member for South Toronto. I have always understood that that city was preeminent for its virtues. I assure him that the difficulties which he describes are a surprise to me; we are not troubled in that way in the province of British Columbia—at least we have the decency to keep quiet about it. We do not have to go to parliament to have our grievance remedied. The hon. member who introduced the bill, either out of kindliness and courtesy or out of some lingering sense that he had not given me a fair deal on the second reading, has been now allowed contrary to the rule to give a general explanation of the bill. I appreciate the courtesies which have been extended to him and ask that I be allowed the same latitude. You are aware, sir, that what has been called the principle of the bill is generally discussed on the second reading. I was looking for that principle in order to discuss it, but I have had great difficulty in finding it. I am not using the word "principle" in the sense of the difference between right and wrong, but in the sense of a line of thought running through it or a line of action running through it intended to arrive at certain desirable ends. However I cannot find any principle in the bill. To my mind it is an incoherent collection of amendments, some contradicting each other, in others wholly needless.

To begin with, my first comment on section 486 as amended is that it pains me to point out that in addition to complying only to a very limited extent with the rules as to form, whoever drew up this bill erred in another way. I think I am paying the hon. member for South Toronto a real compliment when I say that I hesitate very much to think that he was the originator of the bill. In all charity I believe some other lesser light handed it to him and placed upon him the responsibility of putting it through the house. With the respect I have for him, his brilliant legal career and the position he occupies in that great city of Toronto, the Babylon of Canada, I do not believe he originated this bill. If hon. members think I am not right in the use of the word "Babylon," I would ask if the conditions described by the hon. member himself could not be likened to that of Babylon. When we look at the fourth line of section 486 we find certain words underlined, showing that those words are being introduced anew into the bill. I do not believe there has been any deliberate attempt to deceive the house; the mistake may have been made unintentionally or inadvertently, but certainly the result is to misrepresent the case because one of the words underlined is, in fact, in the original act. May I point out that the word "makes" is in the original act, although, in this amended section we are led to believe that the word "makes" is not in the original. Under ordinary circumstances the addition of a word here or there might be of little consequence, but in this particular case it makes a great deal of difference. I cheerfully agree—

The CHAIRMAN: It is now nine o'clock.

Mr. NEILL: Oh, I am sorry.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering item No. 300 on page 62 of the estimates, concerning the office of the High Commissioner for Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: When the committee rose at six o'clock I was continuing my statement with respect to the position of the Minister at Washington. My right hon. friend suggested that he had been—

Mr. DUFF: London.

Mr. BENNETT: No, Washington. My right hon. friend suggested that he had been transferred to London. I think that is an improper term to use. The truth is the order in council was passed on July 24, 1930, appointing Mr. Massey to London. It is not correct to say that he was appointed to London in the month of May or any other date, because the order in council was dated, as I say, July 24, 1930. It was approved on that day, the order being passed the day before. It reads:

The committee of the privy council, on the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, advise that the Honourable Vincent Massey, a member of His Majesty's Privy Council for Canada, be appointed High Commissioner for Canada in London from the 23rd July, 1930, under the act, chapter 92 of the revised statutes of 1927, in succession to the Honourable Peter C. Larkin, deceased; and that his duties include supervision over the various agencies of the Canadian government in the United Kingdom as described in the order in council (P.C. 330, 10th February, 1922) by which Mr. Larkin was appointed.

The committee, on the same recommendation, further advise that His Majesty the King in respect of Canada be humbly moved to issue Mr. Massey's letter of recall from the United States, and to indicate that Mr. Massey has fulfilled his mission to the entire satisfaction of His Majesty in respect of Canada.

That was the order in council which removed Mr. Massey from Washington and appointed him to London. I said it removed him from Washington; that is hardly a correct term. It asked that his letters of recall be granted, and as a matter of fact the way in which a minister is withdrawn is not by order in council. He has his letters of recall signed by the sovereign on the application of the government affected, and in this instance the letters of recall were actually signed on the day this government came into office. They subsequently came back to Ottawa from London; they were signed on the 7th day of August, 1930, so on the 23rd of July Mr. Massey was appointed, the approval being given on the succeeding day, and his letters of recall were actually signed by the sovereign on the 7th of August of last year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Have they been presented as yet to the president of the United States?

[The Chairman.]

Mr. BENNETT: I think not. The order in council appointing Mr. Larkin, to which reference has been made, contained these words:

The minister considers that this is an appropriate occasion for defining the duties of the Canadian High Commissioner. The statute creating this office (43 Vic. chap 11) provides that the high commissioner should act as the duly accredited representative of Canada and resident agent of the Dominion in London to watch over the growing interests of Canada in the United Kingdom. The policy embodied in the original act creating this office has been departed from in that there are in London at the present time direct representatives, having practically independent and separate offices, of the Departments of Immigration, Trade and Commerce, Soldiers' Civil Reestablishment and Board of Pension Commissioners, also other departmental representatives carrying on their work outside the control of the High Commissioner.

The minister submits—

That is my right hon. friend opposite.

—that there is necessity in this connection to coordinate these activities, and prevent overlapping. It has frequently happened that the same matters were dealt with by different offices and agencies at the same time, thus producing confusion and injury to Canada's reputation and the effectiveness of its administrative methods.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs therefore, both on the grounds of economy and efficiency, and with the concurrence of the ministers concerned, recommends that all the official activities of the various agencies of the Canadian government in the United Kingdom should be placed under the supervision of the high commissioner.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs further recommends that the high commissioner should in all matters of public policy communicate direct with the Prime Minister.

The committee concur in the foregoing recommendations and submit the same for approval.

That order in council was passed on February 10, 1922, and reference was made to that order in council in express terms when Mr. Massey was appointed on the 23rd of July, 1930. It is the basis of the observation I made last session, that the high commissioner must be taken to be practically a member of the administration. Mr. Larkin was sworn of the privy council shortly after his appointment. Mr. Ferguson was sworn of the privy council. It was felt that one who is charged with the responsibility for the conduct not of one but of several departments of the public service in London must occupy a position almost analogous to that of a member of the government, and he is so treated. Now, for instance, in the office at London at the present time you will find lodged the high commissioner, the immigration office, a branch of the Departments of Trade and Commerce, Agriculture, Customs, Soldiers' Civil Reestablishment and Secretary of State, and there are also branches of the Archives and the air force in other offices.

The result is that to all intents and purposes the High Commissioner for Canada is minister in London, apart from being high commissioner, for immigration, trade and commerce, agriculture, customs, soldiers' civil reestablishment and secretary of state. I say to this committee that during all the time Mr. Massey was in the United States he discharged no duties analogous to these at all, and no minister from this country to Tokyo or Paris discharges any such duties or exercises any such oversight in connection with the activities of Canada in those countries. There is such a clear distinction that all you have to do is go into the offices and observe them. I did say to Mr. Massey that I thought he had discharged his duties at Washington with credit and distinction alike to himself and to this country, but he discharged what might be called the ornamental duties which appertain to the office of minister. For instance, he had a commercial attache, Mr. Mahoney, at Washington, who looked after these matters in that city. That cannot be said in any sense to be analogous to the departmental activities of our representative in London, and in the duties discharged so effectively by Mr. Massey, the social obligations of a great office in Washington, he had nothing analogous to these duties which must be discharged by whomever is the high commissioner in London, because these branches of the departments of government of this country which are under that roof in London must be administered by the high commissioner.

Sir Alexander Galt was the first high commissioner from this country. He was appointed to London by Sir John A. Macdonald. Part of the correspondence between Macdonald and Galt has been published. Part of it will be found in the letters of Sir John A. Macdonald; part will be found in the life of Sir Alexander Galt, and part has not been published at all. There is no doubt, however, that while on the one hand Sir John Macdonald regarded Sir Alexander Galt as a Canadian ambassador, on the other hand he treated him as reflecting the mind of his government, and he was very clear in that regard. Then there came Sir Charles Tupper. Would anyone for a moment say that had the government of the day been defeated, Sir Charles Tupper could have remained in London representing a Liberal government in Canada? Has anyone ever taken the trouble to read the debates in this house showing the attitude of the Liberal party towards Sir Charles Tupper and his administration of the affairs of Canada as high commissioner in London? Would anyone for a moment say he would have been accepted as high commissioner had the Liberal government succeeded in the days of Mr. Blake, or later in the days of Sir Wilfrid Laurier? When Sir Donald Smith, afterwards Lord Strathcona, was appointed to succeed Sir Charles Tupper at London, it will be recalled that Sir Charles Tupper came to Canada to take over the position of Prime Minister. He came over as the Conservative Prime Minister. Previously he had come to Canada to participate in a general election; he took part in that election and then returned to his office as high commissioner. The relations between him and Sir John A. Macdonald were of such a character that they are well described by the mention of that famous cablegram which Sir John Macdonald sent to him, saying that the situation was getting rather complicated and his presence here was greatly desired. Sir Charles Tupper cabled, "Sailing to-morrow," and he came to Canada and took part in the election. Then he went back and remained as high commissioner until he came out to Canada as Prime Minister. Following that, Sir Donald Smith, afterwards Lord Strathcona, was made high commissioner.

While Sir Donald Smith was high commissioner, the general election of 1911 took place. Lord Strathcona came out and offered his resignation both to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and to Sir Robert, then Mr. Borden. Neither accepted it. The one said it was not for him to accept it and the other said he was not yet in a position to do so, and he remained there as high commissioner until he died. But it is also known that Lord Strathcona, at a public banquet on Dominion day in London, indicated that he proposed to retire from the office. It is well known that his successor was selected and was named, in so far as a successor could be named without its being made public. That is well known. His position was an extraordinary one. He was a man of advanced years when appointed, a man of great wealth, and he occupied a position that could not be said in any sense to be political. He discharged his duties without regard to the government, by merely carrying into effect the instructions he received. Those who are familiar with the work he did then will realize that the office at 19 Victoria street was an entirely different place from Canada House on Trafalgar square to-day, both from the standpoint of the work that had to be done, the personnel and the staff employed, and from the point of view of the general attitude which a high commissioner must observe towards the problems that come before him for consideration.

When Lord Strathcona vacated the office the Right Hon. Sir George Perley occupied it; and during a portion of that time, be it known, he was a member of Sir Robert Borden's government. There are those who believe that it is in the interests of this country and of Great Britain as well that the incumbent of that office should be a member of the government of the day in this country. I know that Sir George Perley entertained that opinion and still does, and there are many who share the view. It will be recalled that when Sir George Perley surrendered the office he offered his resignation to my right hon. friend opposite and in due course retired. I do not say that, had he desired to remain, the right hon. gentleman might not have permitted him to do so; but I should be inclined to say he would not. It would not have been his view at that time that the High Commissioner in London should be a former member of a Conservative administration. And indeed, I have always felt—there is nothing new about this—that he would have been entirely right in viewing the situation in that light. Then came the success of my right hon. friend opposite, and with the retirement of Sir George Perley, Mr. P. C. Larkin was appointed high commissioner. Mr. Larkin was a gentleman of large business experience and interests, and he discharged his duties well. But certainly, from any conversations which he ever had with me, I do not think he would have looked upon the office as a political one. He did indicate, however, that had the party with which I was associated been successful in 1925 or 1926 he would have resigned. Whether his resignation would have been accepted or not is, of course, a matter with which the government of that day would have had to deal.

Then Mr. Larkin died and the office fell vacant. Mr. Pacaud, as acting commissioner, has discharged the duties of the office, one of very considerable importance, just as he would normally have discharged them had he been merely secretary. He was appointed acting commissioner and was given a small additional compensation. I may say that he did not receive the emoluments and fees that were paid the commissioner, although he discharged the duties. Then, the office having been vacant from 1929 until July, 1930, Mr. Massey, who was then minister at Washington, was appointed to the post. It well may be that had the post been started on the basis which my right hon. friend mentions it could have been maintained as a diplomatic position. But I think I have indicated sufficient to any hon. member of this house to show that, according to the records of Hansard and the history of the period during which the gentlemen named were high commissioners, in every instance these gentlemen were, shall I say, colleagues, in the large and broad sense, of the Prime Minister and his ministers of the respective governments. And when Mr. Massey found himself in the position he did—and I am free to say that I had no knowledge that action had been taken until after I saw the order in council under which he was appointed, of which, naturally, I was not aware in view of the fact that we did not come into office until August 7—is it not apparent to the house, under these circumstances, that Mr. Massey would be the last man in the world to expect to remain as high commissioner in London?

It is common knowledge in Washington, as it is elsewhere, that Mr. Massey felt perfectly certain that the then government would be sustained. Had he remained at Washington he would not have been dealt with differently from Mr. Marler or Mr. Roy. These gentlemen are still occupying their positions as ministers, and Mr. Marler is a former member of a Liberal administration. He occupies the office in Tokyo and is at present on leave of absence in Canada. He has not been removed from his office, and it has not been suggested that he should be. He is still there. Mr. Roy was a former Liberal senator, appointed for Alberta in 1905, a Liberal by conviction and declaration—indeed, I should say, by warm declarations in recent years. But Mr. Roy occupies his position still and no one questions it. No one has suggested that Mr. Marler should resign. I have not done so. Nor has anyone suggested that Mr. Roy should resign; I have not, nor has the government. These gentlemen are both in the positions to which they were appointed.

But I do draw a sharp distinction between a minister and one who occupies the statutory position of high commissioner, as a civil servant charged with administrative responsibility for a given department of the public service of Canada in London. And for that reason I believe that Mr. Massey felt it was clearly his duty to resign, as in fact he did.

I can only say that the same considerations that moved the government with respect to the positions of Mr. Marler and of Mr. Roy would undoubtedly have moved the administration with respect to Mr. Massey had he remained at Washington. The situation is so entirely different in a foreign country from what it is in Great Britain: it involves so many different problems, so many different angles from which the same problem may be viewed, that I cannot conceive of any Canadian occupying the position of high commissioner who does not command at once the confidence, in the widest sense, of the ministry of the day. He reports directly to the Prime Minister in accordance with the minute which was passed when Mr. Larkin was appointed, and he gives his confidence to the Prime Minister. Mr. Massey was the first to realize the situation, and so resigned.

There is the story, and I am confident, as confident as one can be, that no man can properly discharge the duties of high commissioner who has not, in the large, broad and true sense of the term, that confidence in the policies of the administration which has appointed him, which will enable him successfully to fulfil the functions of his office. For that reason the resignation of Mr. Massey was accepted. And I am bound to say that a high commissioner's resignation would be accepted again to-morrow; and so long as the administration holds the views it now holds, that action must be taken should a similar situation arise at any time.

But let us test the question in another way. Will my right hon. friend say that if he were in office to-morrow he would not expect the present high commissioner to tender him his resignation? It seems to me that one must always test these questions by some practical inquiry.

An hon. MEMBER: Precedent.

Mr. BENNETT: No; there can be no precedent if the right hon. gentleman's views are right.

An hon. MEMBER: He should be recalled now.

Mr. BENNETT: The high commissioner is not here to speak for himself, but in Canada he was well able to do so. The gentlemen who are so vociferous in their attacks at this moment would be silent in his presence. May I venture to say—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Bring him here.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, urge me no more. The hon. member remembers Regulus before the Roman Senate. Should there be a change in the administration I have no doubt the right hon. gentleman would expect the present incumbent to resign. Apart altogether from any other considerations which might be in his mind or in the mind of the incumbent, that would be so.

I do not think I can usefully take up the time of the committee any longer. I have endeavoured to explain frankly my appreciation and understanding of this office. I have done that by appealing to the record of history; because I have had to accept responsibility I have not suddenly arrived at an opinion with respect to it. From the opinion which I have held since I first knew of this office I was able to appreciate its historical record. The attitude of mind of the various incumbents of the office towards the government of the day impels me to believe that that office is one in which the incumbent must occupy a position practically analogous to that of a member of the administration. There are those who believe that the incumbent should be a member of the administration, as was the right hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) when he was a member of the government of Sir Robert Borden.

I may have imposed a little longer than I had intended upon the patience of the committee, but I was desirous that hon. members should understand the principles which actuated the government in accepting the resignation of Mr. Massey. I repeat that I pointed out to him that he had discharged his duties in laying the foundation for the future administration of his office in a manner acceptable to the Canadian people, and that he had brought credit and distinction upon both himself and them. I said with great frankness to him then, and I say it now publicly in this house, that that had nothing whatever to do with the principle which was involved, the application of which resulted in the acceptance of his resignation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, when a few minutes after six o'clock I directed your attention to the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) had gone past the time for recess, I thought he was going too far in other directions as well. After listening to his words this evening, I am inclined to think that he has been reflecting upon what just at the hour of adjournment he was saying in respect to the Hon. Mr. Massey.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall repeat it if desired.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I must confess I was somewhat surprised to hear the Prime Minister of Canada make a personal attack of the kind my right hon. friend did upon the character of one who has represented this country in the United States during the past four years with, as he himself now says, such distinction. The right hon. gentleman has just taken to task an hon. member on this side for speaking of a gentleman who is not here to answer for or to defend himself. The Prime Minister knows better than anyone else the care which should be taken by one in his position in making attacks upon any public man who is not in a position to answer and be heard immediately in reply. He gave what purported to be a private conversation between himself and Mr. Massey.

Mr. BENNETT: I must challenge that statement. The right hon. gentleman has a habit of talking about private letters and private conversations. He asked me what I did say to Mr. Massey, and treating him as Mr. Massey's spokesman in this house I answered his inquiry; otherwise it would not have been done. He asked for it and he got it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why the heat? There is nothing wrong about that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This afternoon my right hon. friend indicated how he had put the thumbscrews on Mr. Massey, how he had subjected him to a species of inquisition during that interview, and his own words will bear that out. He finally drew from Mr. Massey the statement that unquestionably if such were the views of the Prime Minister of this country it would not be possible for the two of them to work together. My right hon. friend knows better than anyone else that his interviews with Mr. Massey were directed with a view to forcing his resignation, and as Mr. Massey is not here to answer for himself as to the position which he took, I would refer again to the letter which he sent to my right hon. friend, and which sets forth the basis of his resignation.

Mr. BENNETT: And which I am informed the right hon. gentleman wrote.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to say to my right hon. friend that that is—

Mr. BENNETT: Which I am advised, I should say.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is an absolute falsehood, and the Prime Minister of this country has no right—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —to direct a statement of that kind to anyone in this house.

Mr. BENNETT: We shall discuss it presently.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I had no knowledge of the letter which was sent to my right hon. friend or the terms in which it was sent.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly, or the terms in which it was sent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I use that phrase.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman knew all about it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I knew a letter was being sent to my right hon. friend but I did not know its terms.

Mr. BENNETT: Having regard to the rules of this house, I think the right hon. gentleman will have to withdraw the word "falsehood."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister had better withdraw what he said in the first instance.

Mr. BENNETT: The Prime Minister will accept the language of the right hon. gentleman opposite because he is bound to, but the right hon. gentleman must withdraw that word. Not that I care myself, because the statement coming from him has no effect upon the record; but the rules of the house require that it be done.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no one quite so sensitive as my right hon. friend in regard to any matter with reference to himself.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, it is the use of the word itself which is outrageous, and if the hon. gentleman will reflect a moment he will realize—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What word?

Mr. BENNETT: The word "falsehood."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I would suggest to the right hon. gentleman that he had better withdraw that word.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I said the statement was a falsehood, but I am quite prepared to follow the rules of the house—

An hon. MEMBER: No quibbling.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —if there is a desire that the word should not appear as being applied to my right hon. friend. I am only too happy that it should not apply.

Mr. BENNETT: I said that I was informed that the right hon. gentleman wrote that letter, and I changed the word "informed" to "advised." The right hon. gentleman said that that was not so, but he admitted that he knew that a letter was being written. I will give him the further history of it later on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps my right hon. friend will tell me who informed him of that fact.

Mr. BENNETT: I will not do that, although my right hon. friend referred to a private letter the other day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend shields himself behind an anonymous individual, and yet when I mentioned a letter which was given to me as a public letter, not as a private letter—

Mr. BENNETT: It was marked "private".

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The letter was sent to me as a public letter and I will if desired produce it and lay it on the table of the house.

Mr. BENNETT: Was it marked "private"?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The letter was an answer to a public communication.

Mr. BENNETT: Was it marked "private"?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The letter sent by the Prime Minister was an answer to a public communication. It was marked "private" so that it could be used as an answer but might not according to his present interpretation be produced publicly. The person who received that communication sent it to me with the request that it should be made public, and I have since received a further communication asking why it was not made public. If my hon. friend would like that letter laid on the table of the house I shall be pleased to put it there.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman knows that he has himself written letters by the hundreds marked "personal." The letter I referred to this afternoon, which I have not seen, was marked "personal." The attitude taken by my right hon. friend during the elections of 1925-26 was that once he had put "personal" on a letter it could not be made public without his consent. That is the universal rule—the writer determines that, not the receiver.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think that is a debatable question with regard to public communications on public matters. When communications are sent to ministers of the crown asking for information, and they are replied to by ministers of the crown, ministers of the crown have no right to protect themselves with respect to their replies simply by writing the word "personal" over their communications.

Mr. BENNETT: I agree with that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the point with respect to the letter to which I have just referred.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend has spoken about an informant. If the statement made by the Prime Minister is correct, whoever was his informant told him something that was not true. When my right hon. friend refers to an informant, he owes it to the house to give the name of his informant.

What I wish to say, however, is this: my right hon. friend before the six o'clock recess indulged in a personal attack upon a distinguished gentleman in public life who was not in the house or in any way in a position to defend himself. I shall give again to the house on his behalf the only statement which it is within my power to give, namely, the one contained in that gentleman's communication to the Prime Minister himself. It is in a letter which I read this afternoon under date of August 14, 1930, and the point at issue is contained in the following sentence:

> In our discussion on this subject you were good enough to make clear your view that the office of high commissioner should be held by someone in close political association with the government of the day, and I understood from what you said that you had in mind plans for this post as a result of which my own appointment could no longer stand.

As a result of the plans which the Prime Minister himself indicated to Mr. Massey, the latter's appointment could no longer stand. For this reason he continues:

> In these circumstances, I, of course, at once offered you my resignation from the high commissionership, which I now confirm.

May I say that if there ever was a gentleman who filled a public office in a manner which was acceptable to men and women of all political parties in this country, it was the Hon. Vincent Massey in the distinguished manner in which he filled the position of the first minister from this country to Washington. Not only did Mr. Massey win the praise of men of all political parties in Canada, but distinguished public men and officials of the highest rank from Great Britain were loud in their praises of the services which Mr Massey had rendered not only to Canada but to the British Empire. During the time Mr. Massey was at Washington we had visiting Canada two British prime ministers, at least one secretary of state for foreign affairs and we have had visits from two British ambassadors who were his associates at Washington. All of these very distinguished gentlemen have been more than loud in their praise of the great service which was being rendered at Washington by Mr. Massey not only to Canada but to the British Empire as a whole. It is generally admitted that no minister or ambassador at Washington filled his position with greater credit to himself and the country which he represented there than did the Hon. Mr. Massey. In these circumstances it was owing to Mr. Massey to receive rather the public thanks of the Prime Minister of Canada for the services which he had rendered, than the personal attack which was directed against him just before the six o'clock recess. My right hon. friend, however, has evidently upon reflection thought better of his words and he has seen well this evening to intimate that with his own lips he told Mr. Massey he had represented his country most acceptably during the time he represented Canada at Washington.

But I must take exception to the view expressed by the Prime Minister as to the significance of the position of minister at Washington. The Prime Minister said that Mr. Massey had fulfilled certain ornamental duties; that he had discharged social functions will great satisfaction and credit. If the Prime Minister thinks the position of minister at Washington is one concerned primarily with ornamental duties and social functions, he has an entirely erroneous view of what the position of minister at Washington amounts to. I hope he has taken other things into consideration in connection with that appointment than the merely ornamental duties and social functions that are to be performed. The right hon. Lord Bryce, who was British ambassador at Washington for many years, stated on one of his visits to Ottawa that two-thirds of the business of the British ambassador at the time he occupied that office was concerned with all-important affairs with respect to Canada. Later Sir Esme Howard, who was British ambassador at Washington at the time Mr. Massey went there, made a similar statement. Sir Esme Howard indicated that the duties of the Canadian minister at Washington were most extensive and responsible. With a neighbour as near as the United States is to this Dominion, with border questions of the character they are, with the extent of territory what it is, there are in the nature of things any number of all-important questions. Let us take a matter such as the St. Lawrence waterways: does my right hon. friend think that matters pertaining to the St. Lawrence waterways are in the nature of an ornamental duty or a social obligation: that it requires one possessed only of those qualifications to handle matters of that kind? Then there are questions with respect to deportations, to emigration matters to the tariff and what not. There is no end of all-important questions. Indeed, it would be very difficult to imagine two countries that have more important questions arising between them than those which arise and are certain to continue to arise between the United States and Canada. What is required in a minister representing Canada at Washington are the very highest of qualifications of a character that would be expected from one holding an all-important position in public life.

My right hon. friend spoke about the different distinguished gentlemen who have held the position of High Commissioner in London. In that connection it seemed to me his remarks served only to emphasize the difference between the point of view the Conservative party is now taking through the Prime Minister and the point of view the Liberal party has always taken. My right hon. friend pointed out that Sir Charles Tupper was a strong political controversialist; that Sir Alexander Galt had equally been very strong politically as a controversialist. He did not need to point out the controversial powers of the present High Commissioner, but he altogether skipped over mention of the fact that during the entire time that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was Prime Minister of Canada, the position of High Commissioner in London was held by Lord Strathcona who was a political opponent. For many years, including the fifteen years of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's administration Lord Strathcona continued to occupy the position of High Commissioner in London long after Sir Alexander Galt had filled it, after Sir Charles Tupper had filled it and prior to the time Sir George Perley filled it. Lord Strathcona was not discharging merely an ornamental function in London; he was not acting on his own initiative in matters over there, with the Canadian government indifferent to what was transpiring in London. Lord Strathcona was acting under the direction of the government of Canada: he was the agent of the government of Canada and he was fulfilling his duties under the direction and in accordance with the instructions of the Prime Minister of the day. During the time that Lord Strathcona held the position of high commissioner many very important negotiations were conducted between the Canadian and British governments. Though himself a conservative, he reflected the mind of the Liberal administration in his negotiations with the British Government just, as I said this afternoon, Lord Crewe, who had been a member of the Liberal government in Great Britain, reflected the mind of a Conservative cabinet when he was ambassador in Paris; just as Lord Bryce, when he was ambassador at Washington, reflected during a part of his term of office the mind of a Conservative cabinet, although he himself had previously been a member of a Liberal administration in England. The point of view which Sir Wilfrid Laurier took throughout the whole of his administration was that Lord Strathcona had filled the position acceptably prior to the time that he Sir Wilfrid had come into office; that he was a gentleman whose name, ability and influence were recognized, that it was in the interest of Canada in its relations with the British government to maintain every confidence between the government there and the government here, and that Lord Strathcona, being a public man and broad in his views, might be expected to discharge his duties as high commissioner in an acceptable manner, and he did discharge them in a most acceptable manner during the entire time he was Canada's High Commissioner.

My right hon. friend asks, would I agree to the Hon. Mr. Ferguson remaining in office as High Commissioner for Canada should I again come into office. May I say this, that if the Hon. Howard Ferguson, during four years of office in the United States as the representative of Canada had discharged his duties in the highly acceptable manner that Mr. Massey did, had he gained the esteem and regard of the Canadian people and of the British people to the degree to which Mr. Massey gained it in that time, I should certainly, had he been appointed to London at a time I came into office, have thought twice before I would have asked him immediately to forego that position. If the Hon. Howard Ferguson were to be asked by me to resign immediately, it would not be on the score of partisanship exhibited before the election, though heaven knows that no man ever exhibited more in the way of partisanship; it would be for the manner in which he has discharged the duties of high commissioner since he has been in London.

In this connection I think I may as well proceed to see to what extent the present High Commissioner in London is reflecting the mind of the present administration. My right hon. friend says that the duty of the High Commissioner in London—he repeated it this afternoon—is, first of all, to reflect the policies that are originated and initiated by the government of Canada. That is the first thing—to reflect the policies that are originated and initiated by the government. The second is to reflect the spirit and attitude of mind of the administration. The third thing is that he is practically a member of the administration. My right hon. friend has added to-night a fourth role which the High Commissioner in London fills, and that is that of civil servant. I do not know how flattered the Hon. Howard Ferguson will be with his new title, but at any rate my right hon. friend has stressed it this evening.

Now I wish to read one or two utterances of the present high commissioner, and I shall ask my right hon. friend, because he and not the present high commissioner has to take the responsibility, how far the views expressed by the high commissioner reflect the policies of his administration, reflect the spirit and attitude of mind of the administration; how far the high commissioner is acting as a member of the administration, and how well he is qualifying himself to be continued in office as a civil servant.

My right hon. friend told us this afternoon that the Hon. Howard Ferguson was appointed on the 28th of November. As a matter of fact, he was not sworn in, I think, until some little time after that. He was sworn into office on the 18th of December, but he was appointed by order in council on the 28th of November. Now, between the date on which he was appointed by order in council and the date on which he was sworn in, the present High Commissioner for Canada in Great Britain gave a public address in which he outlined his conception of the aims and duties of the high commissioner. The address was delivered with that end in view. It was a public utterance, so that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister could not fail to understand to the full exactly what view the Hon. Howard Ferguson took of the appointment which had been given him on the 28th of November and to the fulfilment of the duties of which he was formally sworn on the 18th of December. I will read from a Canadian Press report which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of December 5, and in other papers of the same date. I will read the account through and then ask my right hon. friend afterwards, if he will permit me, with respect to the policies and views therein set forth, how far they reflect the mind and the attitude of the present administration.

Before I read the statement of the present high commissioner's views as to his own duties and functions, let me remind the house of what was said by my right hon. friend only this afternoon in discussing another measure at the opening of the sitting. My right hon. friend was talking then of sovereign powers, of not interfering with each other's domestic affairs. He said that one country had no right to interfere with the affairs of another country, and he made a very strong point of that. Now I assume that in that particular he does not regard one rule or practice as existing for a country which is a foreign country and another and different rule and practice existing for a country which happens to be a nation within the British commonwealth of nations to which we belong. I would assume, at least, that he would expect any representative of the government of Canada to be as careful about not interfering in the internal affairs of another part of the British Empire as he would be about a representative of this country not interfering in the domestic affairs of some foreign nation, and particularly not interfering in the domestic affairs of Great Britain.

Last week the hon. member for Vegreville spoke with respect to conditions in Poland, and my right hon. friend then laid down the doctrine which should govern this country in discussing the internal affairs of other countries. This is what he said on May 8th last:

> When you begin to discuss the internal government of a friendly power you are on very dangerous ground. It is not the duty of this Dominion to undertake to advise people how they should govern themselves. That is their business.

He also said:

> There is an obligation upon us as a member of the League of Nations, and it is a rather serious obligation, not to reflect upon the other members of that league.

Now Great Britain is a member of the League of Nations as well as Canada and Poland, and the words which my right hon. friend used in reference to Poland I take it would in his mind be equally applicable to Great Britain. Having made clear the position as he has stated it himself, I would ask my right hon. friend to be prepared to tell us how far the expressions of view by his representative in London reflect the spirit of his administration and their policies:

> Toronto, December 4—A detail of his aims and ambitions as High Commissioner for Canada in London and a diagnosis of the ills which are now afflicting the British empire as a whole, and Canada and Great Britain in particular, was given by Premier G. Howard Ferguson, of Ontario, to the members of the Technical Service Council at their second annual dinner here to-night.

Remember, this was after Mr. Ferguson had been appointed high commissioner by order in council, but before he was formally sworn faithfully to discharge the duties of that office. Had the Prime Minister felt that these views did not reflect those of his administration, all he had to do was to say to his friend that he did not see very well how he could be sworn to office in view of his entertaining those particular views. In the absence of that step, we must assume that these are also the views of the Prime Minister:

> "If I can," said Mr. Ferguson, "revive the invaluable stimulus that for centuries has been the basis of British progress and achievement, if I can contribute somewhat to direct the thought and endeavours of the British Isles toward cooperation with those portions of the empire outside the isles, if I can help to create a new attitude toward empire problems, I shall feel that I have been amply rewarded for some of the things that I leave behind me here in Canada, and for the efforts that I intend to make to accomplish my aims."
> "I am not going over there to sell wheat. I am going to London with the hope that I may be able to do something to remould, or revise the contemporary spirit of the British people," said Mr. Ferguson.
> "My observations over there are brief, and, perhaps, unreliable." Premier Ferguson said, "In the old country patriotic fervour, British persistence, British traditions, have to a large extent broken down. You all know the pride the Britisher has always taken in his country, in his production, in his position in the business and industrial world.
> "Unfortunately the fact that they have tens of thousands of grown men that never did a day's work, the fact that they are paying what is termed the 'dole' to fifteen-year-old children and up, has contributed to the destruction of the morale of the British people. I think that is what is wrong with Britain more than anything else.
> "I can assure you that I never would have thought of leaving the happy hunting grounds, which I have enjoyed here for some time, if I did not think there was a real need for somebody to revive the old spirit of pride and self-respect for their country. I may not be the man, I doubt very much if I am. My spirit has been puddling round with the comparatively little things in the province of Ontario; and, when one goes out into the larger field—not only unknown to you—you are dealing not alone with national, but international affairs.

"Nevertheless, if I may use a clerical expression, 'when the call came' to me, and was pressed upon me, and it was pointed out that I might be of some service, I felt that, if I was to remain in the public service, that if I was imbued with the proper patriotism, that it was my duty to try. I am, therefore going to England to try to do something to revive that invaluable spirit."

Great Estates Ruined

Referring briefly to his recent visit in Great Britain the premier described "examples of where the extreme socialistic doctrine now prevailing in the motherland have led. It makes my heart bleed," he declared, "to see the great and traditional estates cut up and ruined by death duties, estates responsible for the greater and better part of our Canadian live stock, to quote only one instance of their value to us and the motherland. The education bill now before the English house raising the age of obligatory attendance at school to fifteen years, and providing for the subsidization of parents for loss of labour in this manner is another example of bad conditions now existent."

"Never in the history of living men has there been such a critical situation in the British Isles as at this moment and never has the whole people been so deeply concerned and stirred with national conditions as they are to-day. That, in my judgment, is the best evidence that they will, at a reasonably early stage, arise in their might and put a stop to this downward trend toward destruction."

I do not think I need read any more from that speech. I have read sufficient to indicate what in the mind of the present high commissioner is his duty in the old land, his conception of the policies of hon. gentlemen opposite and of their attitude of mind with respect to those policies.

A few minutes ago my right hon. friend said he did not regard the high commissioner as an ambassador or as having a diplomatic position. That being so I would ask him how it happens that he undertook to remind the high commissioner after that gentleman had made the speech I have read of what had happened to Sackville-West. Sackville-West was an ambassador who had been somewhat indiscreet in a letter he had written and as a result was recalled. My right hon. friend took occasion to administer a sharp rebuke or reprimand to his political friend and to say that he was so doing by way of example, indicating clearly that despite his present remarks in his view the position of high commissioner is supposed to carry with it some of the responsibilities of a diplomat, that the position in fact is diplomatic in character. Speaking of the reprimand by my right hon. friend and bearing in mind his conception of the high commissioner as a civil servant, I would remind the house that the occasion upon which the reprimand was administered was that of the opening of the Albany club, a Tory political club, in the city of Toronto on January 6, after the high commissioner had been appointed by order in council and had been sworn to the duties of his office. On that particular occasion the Prime Minister himself in his speech reminded the audience that the Albany club was the very cradle of Conservatism in Canada. I should like to know from him whether he holds the view that as a civil servant Mr. Ferguson is to have the right of attending banquets at political clubs, is to be free to enunciate all kinds of views; and in particular does my right hon. friend say that what was expressed by Mr. Ferguson in the address I have just read represents the policies of the government and the spirit of the present administration towards the problems of Great Britain? If those statements do not represent the policies and spirit of the government I ask the Prime Minister what steps he purposes to take or what steps if any he has already taken to make clear to the British people that Mr. Ferguson in thus speaking did not express the views of the administration.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Give him a raise in salary.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my right hon. friend thinks the order is a little too large perhaps I can take it up sentence by sentence. First of all Mr. Ferguson says:

I am not going over there to sell wheat.

When the Prime Minister was in London attending the Imperial conference he stated that the main purpose of his visit to London and to the conference was to find a market for Canadian wheat.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What did he say?

Mr. BENNETT: Read what he said; he did not say that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not playing upon words. I am taking the intent—

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what he said.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am speaking of what my right hon. friend meant.

Mr. BENNETT: And neither is that the sense of what I said.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will leave it to the house and to the country to judge what was said. What he meant was that the main object of his mission was to try to further in Great Britain the market for Canadian wheat. I hope I am putting it broadly enough.

Mr. BENNETT: That is somewhat better, but still it is not quite right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall leave my right hon. friend out of the picture, because apparently he can never be quoted accurately anywhere, either in the press or in parliament. I shall confine my remarks to the high commissioner. The high commissioner said that he was not going to Great Britain for the purpose of selling wheat. Are we to understand from that that the present high commissioner had been instructed by the government not to endeavour to find a greater market in Great Britain for Canadian wheat, or that having been so instructed he has defied the administration and has said that he does not intend to go to England to sell wheat? The committee is entitled to an answer.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not a bit of it. We all know of the readiness and the alacrity with which my right hon. friend makes replies to questions. When he finds it necessary, in order to cover his confusion, to draw pictures, and does not rise to his feet to make reply, we know he is pretty hard pressed.

I shall direct my right hon. friend's attention to the next matter. Mr. Ferguson states further:

> I may be able to do something to remould, or revise, the contemporary spirit of the British people.

Has my right hon. friend instructed the high commissioner to embark upon a regenerating service? The Prime Minister has nothing to say, but keeps on drawing.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: He is drawing Mr. Ferguson's picture.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Bearing in mind the Prime Minister's statement that the high commissioner reflects the spirit and attitude of the administration, I ask if the spirit and attitude of the Conservative government in Canada towards Great Britain is as described in the following:

> In the old country patriotic fervour, British persistence, British traditions, have to a large extent broken down. You all know the pride the Britisher has always taken in his country, in his production, in his position in the business and industrial world.
> Unfortunately the fact that they have tens of thousands of grown men that never did a day's work, the fact that they are paying what is termed the "dole" to fifteen-year old children and up, has contributed to the destruction of the morale of the British people.

Is that the view of the administration? Does my right hon. friend think this expression with regard to the British people by the high commissioner for Canada will gain for him any confidence on the part of the government or people of Great Britain? Does the Prime Minister think that the administration represented by the high commissioner, which keeps him in that position despite utterances of this character, will command any respect from any government in Great Britain or from the people of that country? Then he proceeds:

> . . . . a real need for somebody to revive the old spirit of pride and self-respect for their country . . . . I am therefore going to England to try to do something to revive that invaluable spirit.

Then we come to another part of the speech. At the time this utterance was made the British government had before it certain legislation dealing with educational matters. The high commissioner was not in doubt as to the existence of the bill or the stage which it had reached, because he said:

> The education bill now before the English house raising the age of obligatory attendance at school to fifteen years and providing for the subsidization of parents for loss of labour in this manner is another example of bad conditions now existent.

May I ask the Prime Minister this question: If the High Commissioner for Great Britain, who represents the British government in this country, made a similar statement with regard to legislation before any of the provincial legislatures of Canada or before this parliament, would my right hon. friend remain silent and utter no protest, or would he ask for the recall of the high commissioner? I say there is nothing—and I agree with my right hon. friend in this—in connection with which a representative of one country must be more careful than interfering in the domestic affairs of another country. When the representative of Canada accredited to Great Britain deliberately endeavours to destroy legislation which is being promoted by the government to which he is being sent, surely the time has come when someone in the country should draw the attention of the ministry to the fact and place upon the ministry the responsibility for permitting that sort of thing to continue.

In what I am saying now I am not reflecting upon the present high commissioner. He has reflected upon himself, but I am concerned with the ministry of Canada. I am concerned with my right hon. friend and the attitude which he takes towards the representative of Canada in Great Britain. I say that unless he is prepared to endorse these sentiments he owes it to Great Britain to make some public explanation not only to this house but to Great Britain as well with respect to the attitude of his government in regard to these matters.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am in a sense sorry for the right hon. Prime Minister, but on the other hand he certainly has brought this calamity upon himself. I do not think the right hon. gentleman was fair to himself or to the position he occupies when he endeavoured this afternoon and to-night to reduce the status of the High Commissioner for Canada in Great Britain to that of the servant of a government, the tool of a party, instead of the representative of a whole country. I do not think that is a fair position to take.

My right hon. friend referred to the statute. That statute was passed in the old days when Canada was a colony and had not reached that equality of status of which my right hon. friend now is boasting, as I am. The language of the statute is specific. It says:

> The high commissioner shall
> (a) act as representative and resident agent of Canada in Great Britain, and in that capacity, execute such powers and perform such duties as are, from time to time, conferred upon and assigned to him by the governor in council.

Since then the various Imperial conferences have considered the status of the High Commissioner for Canada, and it has been decided that Great Britain should send a high commissioner here as we are sending a high commissioner to Great Britain. The high commissioners in London have been given high precedence at court and elsewhere, coming after the ambassadors. I repeat that the high commissioner represents the whole of Canada and all the people of this country. If we were to accept the views of the right hon. gentleman I am sure some of us would not feel at home when we went to London and visited the Canada building. Previously every Canadian thought he was at home there, but now he will have to be a Conservative and a supporter of the right hon. gentleman to have that feeling.

My right hon. leader has referred to one of the numerous speeches made by the present high commissioner. I will not go as far as a newspaper went sometime ago, after one of his outbursts at a banquet in England. That newspaper, which is not at all a supporter of the leader of the opposition, said, "Every time Mr. Ferguson speaks, Canada blushes." I would not go so far as to say that, but I will say that it relieves her dignity to some extent when the right hon. gentleman takes the stand that Mr. Ferguson speaks only for the government, that he speaks as a civil servant and for his party, and that he does not speak for me or for the rest of the people of Canada. It is a good thing that the people of Great Britain should know that we in this country who are not supporters of the right hon. gentleman do not share the views of the high commissioner as he has been expressing them to the people of Great Britain.

The office of High Commissioner for Canada in London is the highest in our diplomatic service. That view has been accepted by the people of Canada, and our representative there should act as a diplomat, as an ambassador, as the representative of one country to another. What are the duties of a diplomat? He has to use tact and judgment; he must be unobtrusive. I remember hearing Sir Esme Howard, who was a very distinguished British ambassador at Washington, speak before the Canadian Club in Ottawa. At that time he said, "Go everywhere in the world; you will not find any monument erected to a diplomat. We work in silence."

Mr. BENNETT: That is hardly accurate.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is accurate. I quote another definition by another diplomat, Sir Edward Mallet, who was at one time British ambassador at Berlin. He said:

> The world is a huge body clad in a garment of state. We diplomatists, studded all over the earth, are unobtrusive buttons which hold the garments together. As long as we perform this function satisfactorily we pass unnoticed, because the garments continue to sit properly. It is only when we break loose or come off that we become an object of attention or discussion.

The trouble with our High Commissioner in London is that he breaks loose, and that is why he is attracting such attention and so much discussion. And I know that my right hon. friend regrets it more than we do on this side of the house.

As my right hon. leader has noted, Sir William Clark, who occupies the same position in Canada, was appointed by a Conservative government, and he was retained in the office by the present Labour government. I do not know whether he is still in office, but I know that the High Commissioner for Australia,

General Ryrie, who had been appointed by Mr. Bruce, was retained when the Labour government took office in that Dominion. I know also that the High Commissioner for New Zealand kept office after Mr. Coates had resigned and had been replaced by the present government there. My right hon. friend opposite seems to be the only one who holds the view that the high commissioner must be his servant, or tool, or supporter, or by whatever term you choose to describe him, instead of being the representative of the country.

I saw in the newspapers yesterday the statement of an admirer of our representative in Britain to the effect that he was selling Canada to England. Well, I must admit that his methods have more the appearance of salesmanship than of statesmanship. I do not think there is any doubt about that. My right hon. friend made reference to Sir Charles Tupper's having taken part in an election in Canada while he was high commissioner. Surely my right hon. friend does not consider this desirable. Surely our representative in Britain to-day ought to be the representative of all Canadians and not merely of a party. I do not think it is fair to take that stand, and even if it was done in the past it should not be done now.

During the last general election I had the pleasure of visiting some constituencies in the province of Ontario. Do not blame me for anything that may have happened, for I believe that we won in most of the constituencies in which I appeared—

Mr. BENNETT: You picked them with care.

Mr. LAPOINTE: —except where the hon. friend for South Timiskaming (Mr. Gordon) was elected.

Mr. GORDON: I thank my hon. friend for having come there.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I knew the hon. gentleman would say that. I anticipated the remark, for I believe he has said that I rather helped him. However, Mr. Ferguson took exception to a minister representing Quebec going into Ontario and addressing the people of that province. May I suggest that a federal minister is minister for the whole Dominion of Canada, and therefore I had more business speaking in Ontario on federal matters than Mr. Ferguson has speaking in Britain on British matters.

Before concluding, I wish to join with my leader in paying tribute to Mr. Massey. Mr. Massey was not the tool of a party while he represented Canada in Washington. I remember attending a dinner of the Pilgrims Society in New York in honour of Mr. Massey. There were five hundred representative Americans present and they had invited twenty public men of Canada, more than half of whom were Conservatives. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Fisheries was one of the guests, and if he were here he could bear me out when I speak of the high esteem, the affection and the respect in which Mr. Massey was held in the United States of America. Indeed, I have never heard a eulogy so eloquently expressed as the praises of Mr. Massey by Canon Cody of Toronto, who is certainly not a Liberal and was not politically a friend of Mr. Massey. My best wish for Mr. Ferguson would be that some day he might merit the same tribute.

Mr. DUFF: The leader of the opposition, in his remarks, read from the report of a speech made by the High Commissioner in London, in which he is represented as having said that he was not in the old country to sell wheat. My memory is not particularly good, but when that speech was quoted, my mind went back to a despatch which I saw in a number of newspapers in which I observed that the hon. gentleman who holds the important office of High Commissioner for Canada in London was supposed to have visited Rome for the purpose of attending a conference, in connection, I presume, with the sale of wheat. It appears, therefore, that Mr. Ferguson, between the time he made that speech in Toronto and the time at which he arrived in Rome to attend that important conference, must have changed his mind or else have received instructions from the Prime Minister intimating that he had certain duties to discharge in regard to the business of this country which would take him to that conference. The ex-Minister of Justice also referred to the fact that Mr. Ferguson had expressed disapproval of a minister in the Liberal cabinet, representing the province of Quebec, going into Ontario and taking part in the last federal election. Mr. Ferguson evidently has also changed his mind with respect to Quebec ministers; because in a despatch which I noticed in the Toronto Mail and Empire of April 2, 1931, I find the following:

Pope's apostolic blessing is bestowed on Ferguson.

That is the heading, and the despatch is by George Hambleton, Canadian Press staff writer. The article reads:

Rome, April 1.—Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Canadian High Commission to London, who is attending the world wheat conference here, and Mrs. Ferguson, to-day were received by the pope in private audience.

"It was merely a courtesy call," Mr. Ferguson said afterwards to the Canadian Press. Later he would pay his respects to His Holiness on behalf of the Dominion, Mr. Ferguson said.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson were presented to the pope by G. A. D. Ogilvie-Forbes, Chargé d'Affaires of the British Ministry to the Holy See.

The chief delegate of the Argentine to the world wheat conference, Tomas LeBreton, who is Argentine Ambassador to Paris, was also presented to the pope to-day.

His Holiness discussed Canada in a most cordial and interested manner, with Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson, and imparted an apostolic benediction before they left.

We are all glad that the high commissioner, after despatching his business in Rome, had the courtesy to call upon His Holiness, who graciously bestowed upon him the apostolic blessing. I am sure that you, Mr. Chairman, as well as I, after following Mr. Ferguson's political career in Ontario—and I am bound to say that there is much about him that I admire, for he is a bonny fighter and I admire a fighter—must be glad that, as I say, he had the courtesy to call upon the pope. I might say, on behalf of a certain section of the province of Nova Scotia, that I am delighted to think he went and saw the pope and got his blessing. But I wonder whether, before he called upon His Holiness, he also got the Prime Minister's benediction.

Now what is the reaction in Canada to Mr. Ferguson's visit? On April 3 the Toronto Globe published an editorial under the caption, An Awkward Situation. I quote the following:

Now the fat is in the fire. Canada's High Commissioner in London has received the blessing of His Holiness the Pope. There is nothing unusual in this. Other eminent men from many countries have been recipients of the same attention while in Rome. But the point lies in Mr. Ferguson's fraternal affiliations in this country in the days before he ceased being a politician and became a diplomat.

After listening to the remarks of the Prime Minister I am convinced that Mr. Ferguson is still a politician and not a diplomat. The article continues:

It is unfortunate that this incident occurred just after the grand lodges of the province have held their annual meetings. But surely something can be done about it. In view of this news from Rome, can a man who has been familiar with the inner circles of the order be honoured any more? The only official and prompt action that seems possible just now is to change the password. It seems improbable that a former high official of the lodge, fresh from an audience with the pope, should have the daring to present himself before the tyler; but Mr. Ferguson is nothing if not courageous, and may try it.

The question to be decided is whether the present High Commissioner for Canada, former Premier of Ontario and honoured member of an influential order, is making progress or slipping backward. This will be answered in different ways by the people of the province. Grand knights and members of the Knights of Columbus may be depended upon to approve Mr. Ferguson's action; to them it will look like a gain. But the grand masters and the rank and file of the other order will think otherwise. It will be hard for them to arrive at a satisfactory and at the same time diplomatic decision.

There is no question but that Mr. Ferguson has "gone over to Rome," but he was dealing with the wheat problem. He has bent the knee before and been blessed by the head of a church that is known to have no great friendship for the order. This cannot be denied, as other people were present. Why did the high commissioner create such a situation? Probably because when in Rome he followed the example of other distinguished diplomats. And in the splendour of the Vatican he may have forgotten temporarily about old days in Ontario politics.

Let us hope he did. That article is from the Toronto Globe, but perhaps I should give the other side of the question. It may be said that the Toronto Globe is not very friendly to Mr. Ferguson, but I hold in my hand a paper, the editor of which is good enough to send copies to all members of this house, no matter what may be their politics or religion. This is The Sentinel.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not get it.

Mr. BENNETT: Nor do I.

Mr. DUFF: I can assure the hon. members it is worth reading. In the issue of Thursday, April 9, just eight days after Mr. Ferguson made his obeisance to His Holiness the Pope, there appeared an article headed "Pope Blesses Ferguson" which reads as follows:

Hon. G. Howard Ferguson's visit to the pope, and getting the papal blessing, will come as a shock to the Orangemen of Canada.

The blessing presages disaster for the high commissioner, as in numerous other cases. The Spanish armada set sail with the pope's blessing, and see what happened to that. Innumerable other cases could be cited in which the pope's blessing preceded calamities to its recipients.

It will be said that diplomatic precedent required the Orange ex-Premier of Ontario to visit the pontiff. That will not go down with the Orange lodges in Canada. It would not have caused a rupture of any kind if Mr. Ferguson had left Rome without seeing the pope.

I do not suppose the pope would have become ill. The article continues:

One sure thing is that he was not thinking of his Orange friends back home when he paid his homage to the head of Romanism. There is, of course, no violation of his Orange obligation in getting the blessing of the pope, but to seek it is repugnant to every instinct of a true orangeman.

This is the statement of a paper which has supported Mr. Ferguson for many years; this is what they think of Mr. Ferguson's actions while acting as high commissioner in London.

The amount of this vote this year is $132,260 as compared with $117,260 for last year, an increase of $15,000. We have been told that the government is economizing because of the financial conditions in this country, but here we are faced with an increase of $15,000. The increase includes an addition of $2,000 to the salary of the Hon. Mr. Ferguson. Apart from any criticism which might be made of Mr. Ferguson, the fact remains that under present day conditions he should not receive an increase in salary. I object to Mr. Ferguson's receiving that extra $2,000 when there are other important matters which should be looked after. Civil servants are being dismissed people are out of employment, public works are being curtailed, and I object to and protest against this increase. What was Mr. Ferguson's salary before this increase was granted?

Mr. BENNETT: The statute provides for a salary of $10,000, but an additional $2,000 has been paid for many years. The position of high commissioner necessitates his residing in London. There is no residence in London as there is in Washington, and the increase is to provide something in the way of accommodation. No doubt something will have to be done with regard to a residence in London. The high commissionership must not be left open for rich men alone, but unless some provision of this sort is made, only rich men can accept it. To one having an income of $900,000 or $1,000,000 per year, the office was worth three or four hundred thousand annually because the incumbent does not have to pay income tax. Something has to be provided in the case of men in moderate circumstances. Since the days of Sir Charles Tupper it has not been found necessary to make this provision, until the present instance. The office in Paris carries with it a residence at a very low rental. It was first rented immediately after the war, and the minister told me that the rent was something between one and two thousand dollars. When the estimates were being prepared a cable was sent to the minister to make certain about that rental.

So far as the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) is concerned, I suppose the correct answer to his remarks would be that contained in the school textbooks: When at Rome do as the Romans do.

Mr. DUFF: A better answer would be: whilst the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return.

[Mr. Duff.]

Mr. BENNETT: There is still hope for the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough.

Mr. DUFF: I am referring to Mr. Ferguson and not to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Quebec-East (Mr. Lapointe) has been singularly unfair in his remarks, more so than he would like us on this side to be. I said that Mr. King was a civil servant.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. King?

Mr. BENNETT: I meant to say Mr. Ferguson. It is long since my right hon. friend was a civil servant.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Please do not confuse me with him—with anyone else if you like.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman should not let his animosity extend so far. First, may I suggest the statute provides:

> The high commissioner shall act as representative and resident agent of Canada in Great Britain.

He represents all Canada, just as I frequently used to say that the right hon. gentleman himself was not only Prime Minister and leader of his party, but leader of the House of Commons; just as the government is the government of Canada and not the government of a party. So Mr. Ferguson under the statute is the representative and resident agent of Canada in Great Britain. I think it was not cricket for my hon. friend to try to assert that I had lowered Mr. Ferguson's status by referring to him as I presently shall again, as a civil servant. But his position is as the representative in Great Britain of Canada, of all provinces, of all Canadians, of all classes and creeds. He is the Canadian representative, and no one would more quickly than Mr. Ferguson himself disown the thought that in that position he represented the party. That is number one.

The second is:

> The high commissioner shall, in that capacity, execute such powers and perform such duties as are, from time to time, conferred upon and assigned to him by the governor in council.

To that extent he is the instrument of the government to do what the government by order in council directs to be done. The third is:

> The high commissioner shall take the charge, supervision and control of the immigration offices and agencies in Great Britain, under the Minister of Immigration and Colonization.

There his chief is the Minister of Immigration; there his direction is from the Minister of Immigration; there he is to all intents and purposes a deputy minister with regard to that particular work. The fourth is:

> The high commissioner shall carry out such instructions as he, from time to time, receives from the governor in council respecting the commercial, financial and general interests of Canada in Great Britain and elsewhere.

I think my hon. friend will now agree that in the first instance the gentleman in question represents Canada; second, he is in the position of a civil servant, and I am using that word in its proper sense, in that he is carrying into effect the directions received from time to time by (a) the governor in council, and (b) the Minister of Immigration. An ambassador, a minister from Great Britain, is a civil servant and is classified as such.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In that sense he is.

Mr. BENNETT: When the term is used, therefore, in that sense, as I used it, I think the hon. gentleman was not quite fair in endeavouring to have it appear that the expression had been applied to the High Commissioner in some derogatory sense. For no higher praise can be given to any man than that he is serving the state faithfully as a civil servant. The permanent civil servants of Britain are the men who have maintained the continuity of her policy and her supremacy for instance, in finance, commerce, and so forth.

Mr. LAPOINTE: All this lecture is useless. I did not say it was because Mr. Ferguson had been referred to as a civil servant that my right hon. friend had degraded the office. It was because my right hon. friend said that the high commissioner had to represent the spirit and mind of the government and be a tool of his party.

Mr. BENNETT: I accept the hon. gentleman's word, but I took down his opening words, and he referred to the high commissioner as having now become a civil servant. He may not have meant it in that sense, but that is the only reason I am speaking of it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hansard will show.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, Hansard will show.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And I will not touch it as others do.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman need not look so hard at his friend beside him.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I resent very much the remark of my right hon. friend in that regard. If he will just pay attention to himself, he will have more than he can handle.

Mr. BENNETT: If my right hon. friend will look at the speech he made in the house on the address at the opening of parliament and the speech printed and sent out through the country, he will see exactly what I mean.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I challenge my right hon. friend to mention any single change made by me in Hansard with respect to any matter of fact. As regards grammatical changes, transpositions and matters of that sort—well and good.

Mr. BENNETT: It was what went to the printer and what was printed in the speeches that were distributed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. BENNETT: There is nothing to withdraw.

Mr. HANBURY: Was it Hansard the right hon. gentleman referred to?

Mr. BENNETT: The official copy sent out of the right hon. gentleman's speech on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Go and look at it.

Mr. YOUNG: What is the matter with it?

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say there was anything the matter with it. Let us go a step further. The hon. gentleman has referred to the speech made by Mr. Ferguson after he was appointed and before he was sworn in as High Commissioner for Canada in Great Britain. All I can say is this, that Mr. Ferguson gave an assurance he had no idea that his speech was being published. To start with, it was at a small gathering of people, although the impression was given that it was a large one; and I wonder how many hon. gentlemen there are, if there be one, who have not talked with their neighbours about the policy in England regarding the dole and its effect. How many have not talked about the effect of the dole?

Mr. YOUNG: We are not commissioners.

Mr. BENNETT: That is quite clear. I was not in Canada at the time and Mr. Ferguson assured others as well as myself—and I believe it is a fact from independent inquiries I made—that he thought all he was doing was talking to a small number of people and there was to be no publicity.

Mr. SANDERSON: Does the Prime Minister endorse the speech?

Mr. HANBURY: Is it suggested—

Mr. BENNETT: Do not all try to rise at once. Take a little time about it. That is the explanation I received of that incident, and I think it is a reasonable one. The right hon. gentleman opposite has referred in terms, paragraph by paragraph, to a report of that speech as well as to other speeches that were made by Mr. Ferguson in England. All I can say is this: I have not seen other than the reports of the press with respect to the speeches delivered in England, but I do recall the report which I read in a paper of one speech that I happened to listen to, and that is the speech into which the right hon. gentleman says I interjected some reference to Sackville-West. The occasion was the opening of a building, and as a matter of fact how you say things when you are talking together is vastly different from what they look like when they are printed. Is there one hon. member that does not know that? You may say something as a joke with a smile on your face, but the paper records neither the smile nor the joke.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The right hon. gentleman was not fully reported, but not misreported?

Mr. BENNETT: This is not a question about what I said at all. I am speaking about what somebody else said. I am quite willing to be interrupted; it does not in the least disconcert me. I am reciting what must be known to most hon. members.

Mr. HANBURY: Is it suggested that the Prime Minister was the joker?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman's observations have not added anything thus far to this discussion. The reason he is there and I am here is perhaps apparent from that, if that is what he is asking for.

Just let me proceed a step further. It is easy to criticize the observations of public men as reported in the press in that way when such observations may be said to be but a passing joke. I happen to know the Sackville-West incident very thoroughly, and it just crossed my mind from a criticism I had been reading of the high commissioner. He had been joking with me because of something that had transpired, and he said he might be back here with his carpet bag or his valise, or something of that sort, and I said, "Do not forget Sackville-West." That is all that was said, and that was the basis of that remark.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The Prime Minister was smiling at the time.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the gentleman who is now high commissioner that I am speaking of at the moment. I do not propose to-night to enter into any elaborate defence of Mr. Ferguson. He needs none at my hands. He is a very well-known Canadian, and the principal difficulty that seems to be experienced by most hon. gentlemen opposite is that he contributed to their discomfiture on more than one occasion.

Mr. EULER: Not so very much.

Mr. BENNETT: I think that is a fair statement, and its truth is generally recognized. I am quite willing to agree that the hon. member for North Waterloo would not be greatly discomfited because he thinks so nearly as we on this side of the house think with respect to the great fiscal policies of this country. The high commissioner is rendering great and useful service to this Dominion. The Englishmen with whom I speak have no criticism to make of his observations and remarks in England. They regard him as an admirable incumbent of that office, and one whom they are delighted to honour and for whom they have the warmest regard. That is the information that I receive, and I regard it as equal to the information that has been given to this house as to the high regard in which our neighbours to the south held the former minister to Washington. I can assure the house that I have seen no Englishmen or residents of Great Britain who have not spoken in the highest terms of our high commissioner.

I should like to make one further observation with respect to Mr. Massey. I did not bring about the discussion of the circumstances under which Mr. Massey resigned. That was asked for. I would gladly have refrained, in view of what I said at the last session, from discussing the interview that took place between us. He came to see me, not privately, but as the Prime Minister of this country. He asked me to make an appointment; I did so, and he came. I discussed frankly, as I told the house this afternoon, the circumstances to which I then alluded, and Mr. Massey wrote his resignation. I said that I was informed that the right hon. leader of the opposition had written it. He says that that is a false statement, and I gladly accepted his statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It certainly is.

Mr. BENNETT: But Mr. Massey left the hotel and went to visit the leader of the opposition that evening, as was his right and as one would expect he would. I believed, therefore, when the information was given to me, that he discussed the matter very fully with the leader of the opposition, and it did not seem unreasonable that the right hon. gentleman would have assisted him in connection with what was written. I did not make that statement in any censorious sense or as not being within his rights. The right hon. member says that my information was not correct, and that is quite satisfactory so far as I am concerned.

I accepted Mr. Massey's resignation, having first given him the reasons for the attitude which I took in connection with that office. I have not changed my opinion with respect to it. I still say that that office is an office in which the high commissioner represents Canada as a whole, but owing to the peculiar language used in the statute and the obligations that rest upon him in connection with the administration of the day, charging him with ministerial responsibilities of administration, he cannot discharge those responsibilities unless to the fullest possible extent he enjoys the confidence of the administration, and the administration gives him its fullest confidence in the same sense.

I think it was not quite worthy to suggest that I believed the office of minister to Washington was one in which the discharge of social duties and obligations was the only obligation upon whomever held that office. I do not think that is quite in keeping with the tenor and character of this debate. No one knows better than I that that is not so, and no one knows better than I that Mr. Massey left what you might call the administrative features of that office largely to others and himself attended to what I called the addresses made to universities—a volume of which has just been published, excellent, too, in every way—and to the great social duties of his office. I do not think that Mr. Massey would be the man to take care, for instance, of the situation arising out of the St. Lawrence waterway. For the very same reasons I do not think either by training or experience or otherwise he would undertake the duties in connection with it. When I say that I think it is not quite worthy of hon. members to suggest that I had that thought in mind in view of the appointment which I made to that office. I think the house is perhaps getting into an attitude of mind with respect to it that does not reflect the highest ideals of public service in connection with an institution such as this. But I am content to leave that criticism to those who read it.

I can only repeat that when we came into office we found that, three weeks before, Mr. Massey had been appointed High Commissioner for Canada in London. He sought for and obtained an appointment with me, not privately, but in my public position. I did not conceive, as the leader of the opposition has said, that it was a private discussion. Mr. Massey did not suggest it was. He may have said since that it was, but he did not so indicate to me. I stated as clearly and emphatically as it is possible to do in the course of a conversation just what my views were. I got the statute and showed it to him, and then he admitted, at least, in this sense, that if my views were as I indicated it was quite clear that he was not in accord with them, and he sent me his resignation. That is the story. I give it to the house because it is entitled to receive it. I put it on Hansard last session, on the second last day before the house rose, I think. I repeat, that if similar conditions again arose I would regard it as my duty to do what I did at that time because I do not believe it is possible to maintain the office in London except on the basis I have indicated. I assure the committee that had the letter of recall not been issued, Mr. Massey would still be minister at Washington as Mr. Marler is at Tokyo and Mr. Roy is at Paris.

As to the increase in this particular item, it is accounted for by the reasons I have given. It is quite apparent that with freedom from income tax a rich man can afford anywhere from three to four hundred thousand a year in connection with that office, but a man of moderate means or a poor man cannot afford to do it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let us examine for a moment what my right hon. friend has just said as to what he would have been prepared to do about having Mr. Massey returned to Washington.

Mr. BENNETT: No, no; he would not have been removed from Washington.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He would not have been removed from Washington had the letter of recall not been issued. I asked my right hon. friend, and I ask him again now, whether the letter issued by His Majesty for the recall of Mr. Massey has been presented to the president of the United States up to this time.

Mr. BENNETT: I say, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So the fact is that at this moment, while we are discussing this matter, His Majesty's letter recalling Mr. Massey has not yet been presented to the president of the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: It was signed on the 7th of August.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend is trying to have this house and the country believe that he had no other object in view with respect to Washington than to have kept Mr. Massey there provided the letter of His Majesty asking for his recall had not been issued. I say that if my right hon. friend had wished to use the letter of recall as a means of keeping Mr. Massey at Washington, he could quite easily have taken advantage of the fact that at the time the letter of recall had not been presented to the president of the United States; up to the present time it has not been presented, and until the letter has been presented Mr. Massey has not been recalled. The position at the moment is that Mr. Massey has not yet been recalled from Washington. My hon. friend however has made another appointment. Before we have completed the discussion concerning the minister to Washington no doubt he will give the house the reason for the appointment. When he tells the country that his reason for not leaving Mr. Massey at Washington is because of the letter of recall, I think the country ought to know that the letter of recall has not yet been presented and will not be presented until the gentleman whom my right hon. friend has appointed presents it in person to the president of the United States.

So far as Mr. Massey being the best of all persons to fill that position, I do not think we need repeat what has been said concerning Mr. Massey's extraordinary fitness for the post. The press of all shades of politics not only endorsed Mr. Massey's appointment to Washington and the manner in which he discharged his duties while there, but also in the strongest terms endorsed his appointment as High Commissioner for Canada in London.

May I say, as it may be a matter of interest for hon. members to know, that at the time of the death of the Hon. Mr. Larkin when the government was considering the appointment of a successor I had a long distance telephone conversation with the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, the then Premier of Ontario, with respect to a matter on which negotiations were pending. In that conversation Mr. Ferguson said to me, "If I may be permitted to do so, I would like to make one suggestion, that you appoint Mr. Massey to London as high commissioner. No better appointment could be made." The view held by Mr. Ferguson at that time was one held by gentlemen like Canon Cody and others high in the ranks of the Conservative party. I venture to say that with the exception of my right hon. friend, and that for the personal reasons he has mentioned to-night, almost everyone in Canada who has been interested in the representation of Canada in Great Britain would have been quite content and more than pleased to have seen the appointment of Mr. Massey continued.

My right hon. friend has not yet indicated his views with respect to the utterances of Mr. Ferguson in London which I have read this evening. My right hon. friend said I had referred to Mr. Ferguson's speeches in Canada and in London. To-night I have not referred to any speeches made in London, but before this item is finally passed I intend to do so. I hope to get from the Prime Minister some expression of his views as to how he regards the various opinions being expressed in Great Britain by the high commissioner. Having relation to the time of Mr. Ferguson's appointment, his speeches may be divided into three classes. There are those which took place before he was formally appointed, those which took place after his formal appointment and before he left for England, and those which have taken place since he has been in England. I have read only from one address which he delivered after he had received his formal appointment and before he went to England. I think the first public utterance made by Mr. Ferguson in regard to the appointment was an announcement made before the Prime Minister himself had informed the country about the appointment. I do not know whether that announcement was made in accordance with the views of my right hon. friend, but if the high commissioner was not checked up for that indiscretion, I must say the attitude of the Prime Minister toward his London representative must be very different from his attitude toward most people.

I have been attempting to discover why my right hon. friend will say nothing with regard to Mr. Ferguson's speeches in London, and in particular nothing with respect to the speech to which I have just referred in which the high commissioner stated his views concerning the people of the empire. I think I have the reason; it was given very plainly by the high commissioner himself in his first speech after reaching the old country. The high commissioner served very prompt notice on the Prime Minister that if the Prime Minister ventured to criticize him a resignation would be handed in and he, Mr. Ferguson, would again be back in Canada. I do not think there are many who fail to perceive that there is hardly room for both these gentlemen in Canada at the same time, and the purposes of my right hon. friend for the present are served very well by having the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson on the other side of the ocean. Speaking at the Canadian Club in London on February 10, Mr. Ferguson said:

> The moment I have to keep silent about the British Empire, that moment will my resignation be received by the Canadian government. . . . I hope not only to proclaim my faith, but, if it is necessary, to proselytize any doubting Thomases.

Is it the view of my right hon. friend that it is the duty of the High Commissioner for Canada in London to spend his time proselytizing doubting Thomases in regard to empire matters? We all know that the speeches which have been made in Great Britain by the present high commissioner have been in the nature of what might be termed proselytizing speeches by an imperial missionary, a missionary of empire. At this point may I draw the attention of hon. members to what appears to be a very marked difference between certain policies advocated by the Prime Minister of Canada in Canada and the policies advocated in Great Britain by the high commissioner, his representative in Great Britain. In Canada we hear from the Prime Minister a great deal about "Canada first"; in Great Britain on the part of his political associate it is "Empire first." In Canada the Prime Minister speaks about "Canada first" and his Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) publishes highly priced advertisements containing the following words, "Buy Canadian-made goods." In Great Britain the High Commissioner for Canada finds fault with the British people because in that country there is an advocacy to buy British goods. Let me quote from a speech delivered on March 10 by the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson before the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in London. This is an Associated Press despatch which appeared in the Evening Citizen, and also on the same day in other newspapers of Canada:

> When I see in England such slogans as "Buy British goods made in England by British labour" it seems to me to be forgotten that goods of Canada and other parts of the empire are equally British. Imperial consolidation cannot be effected on the lines of discrimination.

I ask the Prime Minister if that statement by the high commissioner reflects the policy of the present government? Is that the attitude of the government towards British goods? Are we to have one doctrine in this country of buying Canadian goods made by Canadian labour to the exclusion of British goods, and at the same time are we to have the people of Britain told that when they suggest the buying of British goods made by British labour they are discriminating against Canada and working against empire consolidation?

Referring to the coming Imperial conference at Ottawa the high commissioner is quoted indirectly as follows:

> It was not expected that the recent Imperial conference would produce more than the development of a certain atmosphere, he said: The problem involved the whole reconstruction of the economic fabric of the empire.

I would ask hon. members to notice those words:

> The problem involved the whole reconstruction of the economic fabric of the empire.

"Reconstruction of the economic fabric of the empire." That is the policy of the Canadian government in Britain: "Canada first" is the policy of the same government here.

The CHAIRMAN: I would draw the right hon. member's attention to the fact that it is now eleven o'clock.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, May 18, 1931.

The house met at three o'clock.

TAXATION OF INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I should like to ask the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs if he has received a request from the Minister of Finance of British Columbia asking for permission to assess Indians employed in industry in that province a special 1 per cent duty.

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): No such request has been brought to my notice.

PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I should like to repeat the question I asked the Minister of Pensions and National Health the other day as to whether or not it is proposed at this session to bring down legislation amending the Pension Act.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): This matter is now under consideration.

UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

REPORTED EMPLOYMENT AT CHURCHILL OF WORKERS FROM EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Railways and Canals. I have before me a despatch appearing in a morning newspaper, entitled Eastern workers go to Churchill.

Mr. SPEAKER: Why cannot the hon. member ask his question? There is no necessity for reading this article.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am laying the foundation for the question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Ask the question and be done with it. There is no need to read anything.

Mr. McINTOSH: All right. If it comes to a matter of asking a question, I can soon do that. The question is this: Is it true that workers from eastern Canada are being sent to Churchill? This article states that unemployed men paraded at the Pas as a demonstration against eastern workers being sent to that part of Manitoba. I should like to know if that has been done, because this is a question of interest to the whole of western Canada.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I am rather glad the hon. member has brought up this question, because during the last few hours I have been inundated with this statement from various people in the west. I see according to one newspaper sent me that Premier Bracken made the statement that large numbers of men were being taken to Churchill from the east, and the mayor of The Pas is reported to have made a similar statement. I was looking into the matter, without knowing anyone was going to bring it up, so I think I can give a fairly intelligent answer.

The number of men taken to Churchill as working on the line from The Pas to Churchill amounts to approximately one thousand, but of that number about one half are men who have been in there for a number of years, who have some special qualifications and who have been reemployed. In round figures, some four hundred men I am informed have been taken from The Pas, or about a third of the total number employed. The men taken from other sections of the country, and certainly those taken from the east, with very rare exceptions, were men who had been there in previous years and who had some special qualifications. There were some men taken from Renfrew county, men who have been there for a number of years. They are called adze men; they have special qualifications for working timber. Other men were taken from the maritime provinces; they were steamship men, who have been there for some years. I do not think the numbers of these men have been increased.

With regard to The Pas, there is no doubt that many men went there looking for work this year. I am informed by people in the west that hundreds of men went to The Pas on freight trains and in other ways, in the hope of getting work. Of course it is impossible for the Department of Railways and Canals to supply work for all these men. They went in on their own responsibility, and we have taken as many as we can take. Probably 90 per cent of all the employees on the line from The Pas to Churchill and at Churchill have been taken from Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and I think that is a very fair proportion.

There may be very good arguments advanced in support of the contention that men should not be brought from other sections of Canada, but only those men who have special training or who had previous knowledge of the work were taken from other parts of the country, and their numbers are very small. I think it well that this fact should be made known to the people of western Canada. I can assure my hon. friend and the country that The Pas and western Canada have been treated very fairly in this matter. It may be pointed out that Winnipeg, for instance, has thousands of men unemployed. We did take perhaps 150 men from Winnipeg, but surely that city has some right to be considered. There were a few men taken from Regina, a few from Selkirk and a few from various other sections, and I may say that I was approached from all over western Canada, asking me for positions at Churchill. I suppose for each position we had to offer there were from ten to twenty applications.

Mr. McINTOSH: Do I understand from the minister that only 10 per cent of the men have come from the east and that these men are all specialists in their work?

Mr. MANION: That is correct. Those men were brought from different parts of the east; some were brought from the maritime provinces and a few came from around Port Colborne. Some of them came from the maritime provinces, some from the town of Port Colborne, and a few from Renfrew county, but they were all men with special training.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) to a despatch from the staff representative of the paper Labour in Washington, dated May 19, as follows:

Canada will reply in June to the American note asking if this country is prepared to go ahead in the near future with the development of the St. Lawrence waterway. It will say that the Dominion is favourable to the improvement provided satisfactory joint financial arrangements can be made but will state that there need be no—

Mr. SPEAKER: I will ask that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) direct his question to the government. What happens to be published in some foreign newspaper is of no particular interest to the house and does not necessarily form a basis for a question. If the hon. member has a question to ask which is of interest to the country and to this house, he can ask it without reading from a foreign newspaper.

Mr. HEENAN: Would the Prime Minister advise the house if the report is correct that the Dominion of Canada will answer the note from Washington to the effect that there is no need to start the development of this waterway before one year.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of the communication to which the hon. member refers, nor as to who inspired it; it is without authenticity so far as the government is concerned.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BEAUHARNOIS LIGHT, HEAT AND POWER COMANY, LIMITED

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Has the right hon. the Prime Minister, received the departmental report of the investigation regarding Beauharnois which he mentioned at the special session as having been undertaken by him?

2. If such a report has been received, will he table it?

3. Have plans for remedial works of the Beauharnois development been filed and approved by the government?

4. Are the plans under which the Beauharnois development is now being proceeded with the same plans which were approved by order in council, P.C. 422, dated May 8, 1929?

5. If the present plans are not the same as above approved, have they been approved, and if so, how and when?

6. If any change has been made in these plans, what are the changes and why were such changes made?

7. Has the program of construction provided for in condition No. 12 of the order in council No. P.C. 422 of March 8, 1929, been submitted and approved by the minister?

8. If so submitted and approved, will the government table a copy?

9. If not submitted and approved, when will the government require its submission?

10. Have the engineer or engineers referred to in condition No. 14 of the said order in council been appointed by the government, if so, when and what are their names, what are their duties in respect to: (a) the canal; (b) works to be constructed in the St. Lawrence river?

11. Why were fixed spans permitted as set out in condition No. 10 of said order in council if the canal is to be used for navigation purposes?

12. (a) Has the province of Quebec executed and the Dominion government accepted the agreement referred to in condition No. 24; (b) if this agreement has been executed and accepted, will the government table a copy?

13. (a) Have the plan and detailed construction provided for in condition No. 11 of said order in council been submitted and approved of by the minister; (b) if so approved, will the government table a copy?

14. Will the government procure from the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited (a Dominion company) and table the list of shareholders of said corporation?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that questions numbers 1 and 2 be allowed to stand as the engineers of the department are having some difficultiy in understanding them. An endeavour will be made to work out a satisfactory answer.

Questions stand.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—EMPLOYEES, GASPE RAILWAY

Mr. MARCIL:

1. What are the names of the eight employees of the Canadian National Railways main line who have been appointed to positions on the Gaspe railway, at what stations are they located and what is their salary?

2. Are any of former employees still in the employ of the Canadian National Railways, who are they, what position do they fill and what is their salary?

Mr. MANION:

1. Stanislas Lemieux, Nouvelle Station, $4.70 per day; J. M. Trottier, Percé, $127 per month; P. Columbe, Bonaventure, $127 per month; F. McDonald, Matapedia, 72 cents per hour; N. Methot, Gaspe, 72 cents per hour; P. Allen, New Carlisle, $190 per month; W. Ward, New Carlisle, 46 cents per hour; P. Mercier, New Carlisle, 55 cens per hour.

2. No; for the following reasons: Stanislas Lemieux replaced a deceased section foreman. J. M. Trottier replaced an agent dismissed for irregularities. P. 4. Will this building be remodelled so as to be used as a post office?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. The old city hall building, Maisonneuve, was purchased by the government from the city of Montreal, January 15, 1929. At that time the radium institute of the province of Quebec was occupying the building. The city of Montreal was required under its charter to obtain the approval of the provincial government of Quebec to the sale. In passing the Act of Approval the provincial government added a clause that the radium institute for which the province has to provide premises, should have two years to move from their present place. The period mentioned in the Quebec Act expired January 15, 1931. This date at the request of Premier Taschereau on June 18, 1930, was extended to May 1, 1931. Premier Taschereau again writes on the 16th May, 1931, as follows:—"We are in a very difficult position in regard to our radium institute. It is the only one in the province and we had expected to have it removed to the new building of the University of Montreal. Unfortunately it is not advanced enough to receive the institute and unless you are good enough to grant us an extension of our occupancy of the building until the university is completed the institute will have to be closed. Thousands are receiving treatment for cancer and it would be most unfortunate if the treatments would have to be discontinued. May I be permitted to appeal to your good-will to grant us an extension".

In reply it has been pointed out that this situation cannot be prolonged indefinitely and request has been made that the province fix a definite date when the new university building will be ready to receive the radium institute.

2 and 3. Answer by No. 1.

4. Appropriation of $25,000 in current year's estimates to fit up building for postal purposes.

ROSEMONT, MONTREAL, POST OFFICE

Mr. ROBITAILLE:

1. Will the government establish a post office at Rosemont, Montreal, during the fiscal year 1931-32?

2. If so: (a) when; (b) will a building be erected for this purpose; or (c) will a building be bought or rented?

3. If not: (a) why; (b) when does the government intend to establish a post office at Rosemont, Montreal?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. The establishment depends on the needs of the service. There is no need for a postal station at present.

2. The accommodation to be provided will depend on conditions at the time when the establishment becomes necessary.

3. See answers to 1 and 2.

LA MALBAIE, QUE., EXPERIMENTAL STATION

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Is the government aware that the experimental station conducted by the federal Department of Agriculture, located at La Malbaie, district of Riviere Mailloux, under the supervision of Mr. Rene Villeneuve, has been moved to another location?

2. If so, why was this change made?

3. Had complaints been made against Mr. Rene villeneuve regarding the way this station was being conducted, and if so, what was the nature of said complaints, and by whom were they made?

4. Who replaced Mr. Villeneuve as superintendent of said experimental station?

5. By whom was he recommended?

6. What is the salary of the superintendent of the said experimental station?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. No experimental station is conducted by the federal government at La Malbaie, Quebec.

2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. Answered by No. 1.

DISMISSAL OF MR. PIERRE TRUDEL

Mr. DESROCHERS:

1. Was Pierre Trudel, an employee of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, Quebec agency, recently dismissed from the service?

2. If so, on what grounds, and on whose recommendation?

3. Was the dismissal as the result of an inquiry?

4. Before taking action did the government give consideration to the fact that Mr. Trudel had given twenty years' faithful service to the department?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. Yes.

2. Dismissed by order in council dated 21st March, 1931, as the result of charges of political partisanship made by Mr. Charles N. Dorion, M.P.

3. No.

4. No.

ST. SULPICE, ICEBREAKER

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. Was Mr. Médéric Lacombe, who was acting as superintendent of the works for the erection of an icebreaker at St. Sulpice, Quebec, from August 18 to September 15, 1930, dismissed from his duties?

2. If so, at whose request?

3. Were complaints made against him, and if so, by whom?

4. Who asked for the appointment of Mr. J. E. Robitaille, his substitute?

5. Were complaints made against this appointment, and if so, by whom?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. Yes.

2. Engineer in charge of work.

3. (a) Yes; (b) Engineer in charge of work.

4. District engineer.

5. No.

BONAVENTURE, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Is the Postmaster General aware of the death of Charles F. Forest, for many years postmaster at Bonaventure, Quebec, whose dismissal had been authorized by council but which had not yet been effected at the time of his death?
2. Is it the intention of the department to appoint the widow of the late postmaster, who has been temporarily acting as assistant for many years?
3. Was any complaint made against this office while Mr. Forest was postmaster?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. Permanent appointment will rest with Civil Service Commission.
3. No complaints received against management.

LITTLE CASCAPEDIA POST OFFICE

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has a temporary appointment been made to Little Cascapedia post office, county of Bonaventure?
2. If so, on whose recommendation and who has been appointed?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. No.
2. See answer to Question No. 1.

BUTTER IMPORTS

Mr. RHEAUME:

1. How many pounds of butter were imported to Canada from February 1, 1931, to May 1, 1931?
2. What quantity came from New Zealand?
3. What quantity from Australia?
4. What duties were collected per pound?

Mr. CAHAN:

1 and 4. Total imports of butter from all countries entered for consumption in Canada: February 1 to April 30, 1931, 2,147,494 pounds. Rates of duty collected: 8,462 pounds at 14 cents per pound; 57,176 pounds at 12 cents per pound; 398,440 pounds at 8 cents per pound, less 10 per cent; 1,683,416 pounds at one cent per pound.

2 and 4. Imports from New Zealand entered for consumption in Canada: 286,440 pounds all at 8 cents per pound, less 10 per cent.

3 and 4. Imports from Australia entered for consumption in Canada: 1,683,416 pounds, all at 1 cent per pound.

CERTIFICATES OF NATURALIZATION

Mr. RINFRET:

1. How many certificates of naturalization were granted according to section 4 of The Naturalization Act, during the year 1930?

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

2. How many certificates were granted according to section 6 of the same act, during 1930?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Certificates issued under section 4, 10,307.
2. Certificates issued under section 8, 587.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

DISMISSALS OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. GOBEIL:

1. How many postmasters were dismissed in Canada from January 1, 1922, to August 4, 1930, and how many for each year?
2. How many by counties were dismissed during the above-mentioned period?

POPULATION OF CANADA

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre):

1. What is according to the best available information the present population of Canada?
2. How many people in Canada are now drawing pensions, either war pensions, old age pensions or any other form of retiring pensions, grants or annuities, from the state?
3. What is the total amount of such pensions paid in Canada during 1930?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that only a very limited amount of the information asked for is available so far as the Dominion government is concerned. Efforts will be made to secure the necessary information, but in the meantime this question will have to stand as an order for return. It may be very difficult to answer some of the questions.

INTEREST ON LOANS

Mr. RAYMOND:

1. What is the sum of interest paid by the government of Canada for the years 1928 and 1929, respectively, on account of loans effected by the issuance of bonds subject to income taxation?
2. For what portion of these various loans did the government issue bonds payable to bearer?
3. For what portion of said various loans did the government issue bonds entirely nominative?
4. According to reports made to the Minister of National Revenue regarding income taxation for the years 1928 and 1929, respectively, what is the total amount of incomes derived from the interests on said bonds so issued, and subject to income taxation?
5. What is the total amount of taxation received by the Department of National Revenue during the years 1928 and 1929, respectively, on account of interests received by the holders of these bonds, issued by the government, and subject to income taxation?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, this question, as well as another one asked by the hon. member, involves an enormous amount of work. For instance, the second question is:

For what portion of these various loans did the government issue bonds payable to bearer?

To answer this question would entail tremendous work on the part of the department, and it should stand as an order for return.

Mr. SPEAKER: Question stands as order for return. Shall the other question stand as an order for return?

Mr. BENNETT: No, just this particular one.

MR. OSCAR DROUIN

Mr. DORION:

1. Did Mr. Oscar Drouin, of the city of Quebec, from December 29, 1921, to August 1, 1930, conduct any inquiries for the Post Office Department, and if so, what inquiries were held, and what was the amount paid to him?
2. How many postmasters were found guilty through inquiries made by him?

MR. WILFRID STE. MARIE

Mr. DORION:

1. Did Mr. Wilfrid Ste. Marie, lawyer of Hull, Quebec, from December 29, 1921, to August 1, 1930, hold inquiries for the Post Office Department, and if so, what number were held and where, and what amount was paid to him for said inquiries?
2. How many unfavourable reports were made against postmasters, and how many of them were found guilty through the inquiries so held?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

DRYDEN MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. HEENAN:

For a copy of all documents, letters and correspondence, in the possession of the government or any member thereof, in connection with the contract for carrying mail between the railway station and the post office at Dryden, Ontario, from August 1, 1930.

DISMISSAL OF MR. ISAIE DESCHAMPS

Mr. PARENT:

For a copy of all orders in council, documents, correspondence, memoranda, in connection with the dismissal of Isaie Deschamps as postmaster at Val David, county of Terrebonne, Quebec, together with all reports of proceedings of any inquiry or investigation made into the conduct of the said postmaster since January 1, 1931.

ST. SULPICE ICEBREAKER CONSTRUCTION FOREMAN

Mr. SEGUIN:

For a copy of all documents, letters, correspondence, complaints and recommendations regarding the appointment of Mr. Médéric Lacombe as foreman of the works for the construction of an icebreaker at St. Sulpice, in 1930, and his replacement by Mr. J. E. Robitaille.

ST. TITE DES CAPS RURAL MAIL SERVICE

Mr. POWER (for Mr. Casgrain):

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, requests and other documents, exchanged to date between the Postmaster General, the officers of his department at Ottawa and Quebec, and the citizens of St. Tite des Caps, county of Montmorency, regarding the establishment of a rural mail service, known as rural route No. 1, in the parish of St. Tite des Caps; also a return showing list of tenderers and the amount of tenders in each case, in connection with the said service.

FIXING OF WHEAT PRICES

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

For a copy of all correspondence and other communications between the hon. Sir George Foster, then Minister of Trade and Commerce, in 1916 and 1917, or any of his departmental officials or colleagues, and officers of the Canadian Council of Agriculture or any other farm organization functioning on the prairie provinces, with respect to the fixing of wheat prices in Canada, in order to avert, if possible, wild and speculative food prices prevailing during war times.

ST. EUGENE POST OFFICE

Mr. FAFARD:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, reports, requests and other documents, exchanged between the Post Office Department and any other person or persons, since July 29, 1930, with reference to the post office of St. Eugene, in the county of L'Islet, Quebec?

L'ISLET STATION POST OFFICE

Mr. FAFARD:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, reports, requests and other documents, exchanged between the Post Office Department and any other person or persons, since July 29, 1930, with reference to the post office of L'Islet station, in the county of L'Islet, Quebec.

MEDICAL EXAMINER OF PILOTS

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South):

For a copy of all correspondence, applications, reports, memoranda and recommendations in the possession of the Department of Marine or any of the ministers of the present government, relating to the employment by the Department of Marine as medical examiner of pilots for the district of Quebec, of Dr. L. A. Dussault.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I want to draw the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that a similar motion was adopted in April last as will be seen by a reference to page 862 of Hansard, except that to the present motion my hon. friend is adding the words:

Or any of the ministers of the present government.

I have no objection to the passing of this motion if it reads—

For a copy of all correspondence, applications, reports, memoranda and recommendations in the possession of any department of the present government except the Marine department.

—because the Marine department has already brought down what it has in its possession.

Mr. POWER: The Minister of Marine probably misunderstood the purport of the order. The order to which he refers, which was granted previously and in response to which documents were brought down, asked for documents relating to the dismissal of Doctor Vaillancourt and the appointment of Doctor Dussault in his stead. In the present motion the request is only for a copy of all correspondence, reports and recommendations in the possession of the Department of Marine or any of the ministers of the present government relating to the appointment of Doctor Dussault. This is quite different from the former order. No doubt in the Department of Marine and Fisheries there will be found correspondence and recommendations, with respect to Doctor Dussault, and possibly some of the other members of the government have such recommendations.

Mr. DURANLEAU: In accordance with the former motion adopted we had to bring down any documents concerning the dismissal, if you call it such, of Doctor Vaillancourt, and the appointment of Doctor Dussault, and we have complied in each case in so far as we have documents of that nature.

Mr. POWER: In the motion which is now before the house, a request is made for applications for and recommendations to the position now occupied by Doctor Dussault. I do not think that was included in the former order to which the minister refers. I shall, however, be quite satisfied if the minister brings down whatever information he has.

Mr. DURANLEAU: If I have anything else I shall bring it down, but I think the motion should be amended to include all the departments except the Marine department.

Mr. POWER: No; I am asking from the Marine department certain things which were not asked for in the other order.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister said he would bring them down.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

NATIONAL HEALTH

PROPOSED GRANT TO PROVINCES IN AID OF FULL TIME HEALTH UNITS

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the advisability of carrying into effect the decision of parliament made on the 3rd March, 1930, to make grants to the provinces equal to one-third of cost of establishing, and to cover permanently, such full time health units as may be organized.

He said: Mr. Speaker, a year ago I had the pleasure of introducing in this house a resolution somewhat similar to the one we are considering to-day. That resolution read:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the advisability of making grants to the provinces equal to one-third the cost of establishing, and to cover permanently, such full time health units as may be organized.

During the discussion, which I am glad to say was participated in by hon. members from various parts of the house, every one of the seventeen members who took part was favourable to the resolution, and the result was that the house unanimously endorsed the principle. The question might well be asked: If that were the case last year, why bring a similar motion to the house again this year? I do so for the simple reason that since that time we have had a change of government, and although the members of the present government were very sympathetic to the resolution I introduced a year ago when they were in opposition, I thought it just as well to test out their opinion now that they are in office.

To-day, both in provincial and federal legislation, we are giving consideration to many things that were at one time left to the individual. One of those subjects of course, is that of education. We realized that education is a national asset, and we make it compulsory that all boys and girls shall devote so many years of their lives to acquiring an education of some sort. We are now more and more coming to the opinion, generally speaking, that health should be put on exactly the same basis as education, that the health of the nation is a national asset, and that its care cannot be left entirely, as has been too much the case in the past, to the individual. In world competition to-day an unhealthy nation can no more compete against a healthy nation than can an ignorant nation stand up against a well-educated one. It is with that idea in mind that I am bringing forward this resolution in the hope that the government will look upon it as sympathetically to-day as they did when in opposition and assist in carrying out the proposals that I am putting forward.

Speaking in support of a resolution with regard to health some weeks ago, I mentioned that to-day the health of a man and his family is governed practically by the length of his purse, if he has any purse at all. One hon. member on the other side of the house who happened to be of the medical profession said in reply that he did not think that such was the case. He felt that the medical profession generally never hesitated to take care of the sick when they needed care, whether they had any more money or not. I am proud to be able to say that I think that is so in most cases, but unfortunately there are cases, and I have come across them, where the medical official does not always take that generous attitude. I well remember the case of a family in 1918 during the flu epidemic. This family was attended by a medical practitioner, but as soon as he found out that they had no money and that he was not likely to get paid, he left instructions with them how to take care of themselves and said that he was too busy to come again. But just as soon as the municipality decided to guarantee all the medical bills of those who were suffering from influenza, this same practitioner came back and continued to visit the family regularly. The same man told a friend of mine that if the flu had lasted for only two years more, he would have been in a position to retire for good. I just throw that out in answer to the criticism of my statement that was made the other day.

Under present conditions, too many people, fearing the cost of medical or hospital care, put off calling in the necessary medical assistance until it is too late. It is to get around this difficulty that I am proposing this resolution to the house. Through preventive medicine a lot of people can be guarded against sickness. That is much better than allowing themselves to become ill, and then attempting a cure.

I am very glad to give praise to the splendid work that has been carried on by the Canadian Social Hygiene Council in educating the people throughout this country to the importance of taking care of health. Many organizations are engaged in health educational work, and many suggestions are being made. The one before us to-day is that of the full time health unit. This system of preventive medicine, of course, has been very successful indeed in the United States, where they have between 300 and 400 health units, working with splendid results. This system has been encouraged in this country and elsewhere. Some parts of this country have taken advantage of the offer of the Rockefeller Foundation, which very generously provides one-third of the cost of these health units for the first three years. When they have been going three years and the Rockefeller Foundation steps out, according to the agreement, the extra expense has to be taken care of locally by the provincial government or some other body, and what I am asking in this resolution is that the federal government shall assume its share and bear one-third of the cost of these full time health units.

Mr. ILSLEY: After the first three years?

Mr. SPENCER: Yes.

Sickness is not local or provincial; it is interprovincial, and as the federal government look after various matters of interprovincial concern, I ask that they assume the responsibility of looking after one-third of the cost of these health units for the purpose of preventing sickness, because sickness so far as we are concerned is interprovincial. The various provinces of Canada have begun to organize to a considerable extent full time health units. The province of Quebec has been ahead of all the rest. It has to-day twenty-three health units, and is organizing three more. British Columbia has five, and is very enthusiastic indeed over their success already; Alberta is organizing two health units this year.

As to the cost of these organizations, I was reading some literature from the province of Quebec this morning, which shows that the average cost of a health unit is from $12,000 to $13,000, and they are serving anywhere from 15,000 to 53,000 people, according to the density of the population.

I should like to quote from a letter that I received the other day from Dr. H. E. Young, who is a provincial health officer for British Columbia. He sent me a booklet on health, and he says:

> On page 41 there is an account of the Saanich unit, the first one established. I would particularly call your attention to the improvement in school attendance, the correction of defects and the saving in money, particularly in regard to the amount of money saved as a result of our work in reference to retarders, or what may be called the cost of educating children who have to repeat grades. You will note that while retardation cost Saanich $17,000 in 1928, the cost was reduced to $11,000 in 1929, and this has been further cut down to $600 in 1930. This has been largely due to our work in conjunction with the inspector of schools, who is a very able man. This has been a remarkable saving in cost.

He says further:

I have not a printed report of North Vancouver health unit, which was opened last September, but the response of the people after the first few months of operation has been wonderful.

The letter ends as follows:

We began this work in the autumn of 1927 and the results have more than justified our predictions. In a unit the work is consolidated, the nurses are well trained, the medical man in charge does not practise, but devotes his whole time to preventive work, and the people are realizing the real purport of our efforts, and public education on health matters is progressing in a most satisfactory manner.

There is so much good material from which I could draw for the purposes of this address I find some difficulty in knowing what to leave out. I wish particularly to put on record a statement made by Sir William Arbuthnot Lane which deals specially with preventive medicine. Sir William Arbuthnot Lane was one of the foremost physicians and surgeons of Great Britain. He pointed out the folly of the present system of treating the sick instead of saving lives by the prevention of disease. The quotation is as follows:

The great development of the future in medicine, as I see it, will lie in the scrapping of present ideas and the concentrating upon keeping people fit and enabling them to build up physical power and energy to resist disease.

And the quotation goes on as follows:

More and more doctors are beginning to realize that it is archaic folly to treat only the sick.

I am informed by medical men that such diseases as diphtheria, typhoid fever and scarlet fever are largely preventable. Yet in spite of this fact great numbers die annually of these diseases. To give some idea of the extent to which these diseases may be controlled, I find by records which I trust are correct, that during the war period typhoid was so controlled that from this disease we did not lose a single Canadian soldier in France. We find from the records that within a period of one year tuberculosis is responsible for the death of over 7,000 people. Yet, according to literature put out by the Canadian Social Hygiene Council this disease could be completely eliminated by the exercise of health control. Similar figures are available with respect to cancer and heart disease. I think, however, for my purposes the figures I have quoted are sufficient. In closing I should like to quote from one of the addresses given in the house about a year ago. Hon. members will recall that the then Minister of Finance, although speaking in support of the resolution, simply asked the question: "From where is the money to come"? At this time I am going to quote from the remarks of the right hon. gentleman who is now the Finance minister. Speaking in the debate which took place on March 3 last year the Hon. R. B. Bennett made the following statement, as at page 234 of Hansard:

Touching the necessity for the establishment of health units nothing need be said; I think the case is complete almost before it is stated.

At a later stage he said:

"A nation's health is a nation's wealth." We as a parliament are concerned in the health of the Canadian people as a whole. To the extent to which men are able to labour, free from disease, we have added to the national wealth; to the extent which citizens by studying preventive medicine obtain knowledge, from clinics and other methods, for which the nation might well pay, we have added to the national wealth of Canada.

And, further he states:

We are asked merely to make a grant in aid of the effort which the provinces will carry forward to ensure the health of the Canadian people as a whole, not provincially but nationally, not in a narrow and circumscribed area but throughout this Dominion as a whole, in order that the knowledge of preventive medicine may become universal and in order that the greatest means known to man to increase the national wealth, namely, measures to ensure the national health of our people, may become an accomplished fact.

I am in support of this resolution for that reason.

Those were the words of the present Prime Minister of this country. I have not the slightest doubt that he believes the same today. I know that he is very much interested in the subject of health, because for some years he was closely connected with the work of the Red Cross. Whether or not we may agree with him concerning certain subjects we recognize that our present Prime Minister is a man of action. Having heard his words last year, I hope he will this year repeat them. In view of the fact that he holds the most important portfolio, that of finance, I hope he will see his way clear again to support this resolution which was so well supported last year by hon. members behind him.

Mr. ILSLEY: Can the hon. member give any information as to what has been done in the maritime provinces?

Mr. SPENCER: No, I have no figures concerning the maritime provinces.

Mr. F. W. GERSHAW (Medicine Hat): I rise to support the principle of this resolution because if adopted it will carry to the door steps of the people of this country the very best that has been learned along the lines of preventive medicine. I believe the suggestion is sound in theory, reasonably easy of application and possible under present financial conditions. If adopted it will represent a progressive step toward a more even distribution of the benefits of the best that the age affords in the way of preventive medicine and health insurance. Every province has done much to assist in curing disease. For instance, the province of Alberta has encouraged the building of twenty-two municipal hospitals and pays grants to eighty-seven approved hospitals. That province supports a provincial sanatarium and was the first to construct a special hospital for the treatment of infantile paralysis. Those of us who know about the deformities left by this dread disease will be most enthusiastic in the support of this movement. That province also provides some physicians in outlying rural districts, and travelling clinics do much to provide dentistry and minor operations for people in districts who otherwise would not receive such care. A health unit is something which will appeal to the people who dread or shrink from the necessity of travelling long distances or going among strangers to receive advice or care. The health unit would bring to the homes of the people the advice they are entitled to receive.

What is a health unit? In Alberta there is a proposal to establish two units during the present year, one at Red Deer, and one at High River. The total cost is expected to reach about $10,000 or $12,000 per year. The Rockefeller Institute will provide one-quarter of the sum for the period of three years, the province will provide one-half and the remaining quarter will be raised by the municipalities included in the unit. The staffs have already been appointed consisting of a medical officer specially qualified in public health work, a sanitary inspector, a secretary and a public health nurse. This is not some new or untried venture. Health units have proven their usefulness for a period of twenty years. The first unit was established in Yakima county in 1910 and there are now 500 health units in the United States. Quebec has twenty-three, Saskatchewan has two, New Brunswick three or four and British Columbia four.

Now, briefly what is the work of these health units? It falls naturally under four heads. The first is child welfare, and has to do with examination of school children and children of pre-school age. Are hon. members aware that thirty out of every hundred children attending school have defective eyesight? This is often neglected and it results in much sorrow and much discomfort later in life. A large number of children have diseased tonsils and teeth, defective heart and lungs, and suffer from malnutrition. These health units will have officers right on the ground who will go to the homes and talk to the parents on the disabilities that their children are labouring under and advise them as to the best means of obtaining treatment. The second division of this work covers control of contagious diseases. Something has been said about the prevention of diphtheria, smallpox and scarlet fever. It has been stated on good authority that diphtheria and scarlet fever should be unknown in the next generation of children, there being methods of immunization which in the great majority of cases will prevent these diseases. The health unit also takes control of venereal disease, tuberculosis and infantile paralysis. Certainly this offers a great field of activity, and if the work is properly conducted it will bring glorious results. The third heading has to do with public health education, that is, sanitary inspection, testing of water supply and food, vital statistics, disposal of sewage, as well as education along the lines of cleanliness.

I have left to the last perhaps the most important work which could be done locally by a health clinic; I refer to life extension work. In one of these districts there are probably 3,600 school children, and the activities of the health unit would effect a saving of $1,800 right there. What are the causes of sudden death among men and women during the years of their active life? Tuberculosis is no longer the dreaded disease that it once was, but there is still a great deal of mortality attributable to heart disease, kidney trouble and diabetes. What are the causes of these deaths? Some are caused by complications resulting from infectious diseases suffered in childhood. Many deaths are caused by improper habits of living, by unwise diet, and by the presence of infectious foci which are slowly poisoning the system. Where is the man or woman approaching fifty who should be examined to see if any of these diseases are present in their early stages? Acting on what such an examination discloses the proper means of treatment may be taken advantage of. We hear of the sudden death of many people at fifty and onwards, and I am convinced that a little money spent in encouraging the establishment of health units would do much to prevent this mortality, because appropriate treatment could be taken in time to eradicate or control the trouble.

It used to be said, "If you wish to be healthy go to the country." That advice does not apply at the present time because the death rate in the country is 8 per cent in excess of that in the cities. Modern preventive medicine has done much to lower the death rate in urban centres. Due to sickness and disease we have an economic loss of $300,000,000 a year. We do much to prevent fire hazards. Surely we should do much more to prevent premature death and thus preserve the precious asset of healthy people. In short, the aims of health units would be to make growth more perfect, decay less rapid, death more remote, and life more vigorous, happy and successful. The watchword is prevention.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Mr. Speaker, the house is indebted to the mover of this resolution (Mr. Spencer) and the hon. member who has spoken in support of it (Mr. Gershaw) as well as to other members who last session took part in the presentation of this important subject of health units, for its discussion familiarizes hon. members and the public with this special method of caring for public health. In Canada public health units were established only a few years ago, and even in the United States, as the hon. member has just said, it was only about twenty years ago that they were there established.

Before I deal with the subject matter of the resolution I should like to draw the attention of the mover to its wording—

> —the decision of parliament made on the 3rd of March, 1930, to make grants to the provinces—

As far as I understand it, the resolution referred to was that the house commend the subject matter to the favourable consideration of the government.

Mr. SPENCER: I have the resolution and will hand it over to the hon. minister.

Mr. MacLAREN: I thank the hon. member. It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the advisability of making grants.

Well, that does not say that it is the decision of parliament to make grants.

Mr. SPENCER: Parliament decided last session to accept the resolution.

Mr. MacLAREN: Yes, but the resolution does not state that parliament would make grants. Money could not have been voted under that resolution. I think if the mover will refer to the debate last session he will find that this house simply commended to the favourable consideration of the government the making of grants to establish health units.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, is it not true that always resolutions of this character must be framed in that way, because a private member may not introduce a resolution or motion which involves the expenditure of public funds? The decision of the house was undoubtedly that work should be done along that line.

Mr. MacLAREN: I do not quite accept the explanation of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). The resolution last year was correctly framed, but I do not think the present resolution is, for undoubtedly parliament did not make a grant as stated. I simply mention this for the sake of accuracy. I think that the mover intended both by the resolution he moved last session and by the one now before us that health units be looked upon favourably by the government. The present situation, as we know, is that within the past few years the development of health units has progressed very considerably in Canada, and at present in Quebec there are some twenty-three of these units. Let me say that the province of Quebec has led in this special activity.

Sir EUGENE FISET: But may I direct the attention of the minister to the fact that in Quebec at present the burden falls on the municipalities as much as it falls on the provincial government. That is why this resolution will be of great help, even in the province of Quebec, if it is accepted.

Mr. MacLAREN: As I said before, the province of Quebec has led in this activity—I am not referring to the provincial government especially—and it has been particularly fortunate in that the movement has received the confidence and support of the people generally to a marked extent. The secret of the spread of health units in Quebec is that their establishment has been acceptable to the people generally. The people of that province, together with the clergy, have done what they could to further this advance, and it is well known that one of the secrets of success in health work is to obtain the hearty cooperation of the people. There have been many instances in the past where people were indifferent to or resisted health measures, but in this case the country has been fortunate in having these proposals received with open arms, as far as I have been able to observe.

There are a few units in British Columbia, and of course that is the way we must start. Some hon. member asked a moment ago about the maritime provinces. I am afraid he is not here at the moment, but in this connection I may say that I am informed that some philanthropic organization, some large insurance company or in any case some organization desirous of doing good, has undertaken to finance two health units in Prince Edward Island, which will cover that province. Not long ago it was announced that the province of Ontario proposed to institute health units, and while these plans are being held in abeyance at the moment I think the people of the province generally are looking forward to the organization and establishment of these units.

Within the last few years there has been a very considerable advance in this direction, and certainly there has been much evidence of the approval of the people and of health authorities. This is a sound, practical method of dealing with public health. Perhaps I should have mentioned also that in the United States, where this work was started before it was begun in Canada, there are something over four hundred units at the present time.

It seems to me that these health units very well might be called rural health units, because I think their great usefulness is in the rural districts. Cities of any size have health units to-day, many of which are doing excellent work, but the rural population is not supplied to any extent with the protection and comfort of these health measures. It has been thought desirable, not only from the standpoint of health but for the good of the country, to offer this protection and comfort to the rural population so that they may enjoy the advantages which are afforded the people living in cities. Other things being equal, one would have reason to suppose that the health of the rural community would be better than that of the city, but that is not the case. I think the obvious explanation is that health measures are not available in the country to the same extent that they are available in the cities, and the health measures of the city are sufficient to overcome the advantages of the pure air and sunshine of the country.

There is one thing we should not forget, and that is that these health units may be of great advantage in maternity welfare. Of course they will do good work in connection with contagious diseases and so on, but maternity welfare is going on, or should be going on all the time, no matter how healthy a community may be. Unfortunately, in the country the care given mothers must be very inadequate, and I believe this method may do a great deal towards meeting this very important need.

As hon. members are aware, these units are composed of four or five individuals; there is a health officer, a sanitary inspector, one or two trained nurses and perhaps a clerk. The great advantage lies in the fact that there is a full time health officer. The day has gone when we can depend on any general practitioner being an efficient health officer. The work is too great and the advances in public health are too frequent to enable us to look for efficiency in public health matters in a general practitioner.

I do not think we need over-emphasize this matter of health units; there is no doubt they are very excellent things. The question is how to establish them. As the mover of this resolution has pointed out, this subject has received the warm support of the present Prime Minister, and I am sure his opinions have not changed in this regard. We have had several very important health matters discussed in this house during the session, and hon. members will notice from the order paper that there are still others to be considered. I believe they must be worded out in some systematic way, for it would be hardly possible to start them all at the same time. It is proposed that a conference shall be held to which will be invited the health officers of the different provinces. I cannot state definitely just when that conference will be held, but it will be at some convenient and suitable time.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): To whom will invitations be issued, the provincial ministers or their deputies?

Mr. MacLAREN: To the health officers, but I do not wish to be too definite about that. The health authorities of the different provinces will be invited to come to Ottawa to take part in this conference.

Mr. SPENCER: Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that the Dominion health council, comprised of the health officers of the provinces, met in Ottawa in 1928 and went on record unanimously as being in favour of full time health units?

Mr. MacLAREN: I believe that is a fact. I remember reading something about that not very long ago but I cannot say that I have actually seen the resolution. These different health officers will be invited to this conference to consider the proper methods to be adopted and the parts to be played by the Dominion and provincial governments. Under these circumstances action on this specific resolution cannot be promised at the present moment, but it will be considered at the appropriate time.

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I desire to express my entire accord with the resolution. I am decidedly in favour of municipal health units, or full time health units being established wherever they are needed in Canada. There are many districts in Canada where such a service is needed. As I intimated on a former occasion, I would like to see the government go farther and establish periodic medical examinations for the entire citizenship of Canada. I would like to see facilities provided for the people of this country to obtain medical treatment at such times as it was necessary. The establishment of full time health units is a decided step in the right direction. There are sparsely populated districts which cannot possibly undertake the establishment of health departments, and this is an excellent substitute. I have nothing more to say on this matter at the present time other than to express my entire accord.

Sir EUGENE FISET (Rimouski): Mr Speaker, I was rather struck with the minister's statement that it is the intention of the government to invite this year the heads of the various health departments.

Mr. MacLAREN: I did not say this year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We had hoped it would be this year.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Although I have no definite knowledge as to what is taking place outside of my own province, I can speak with authority as to what has occurred in Quebec. Great strides have been made during the past few years in that province. Rural Quebec has been divided into ten districts, at the head of which is a permanent health officer. In each unit there is one fully qualified doctor, two nurses and a sufficient executive staff to carry on the work. Marvellous work has been carried on in the rural districts during the past two years, but there is no question that the maintenance of these health units is becoming quite a burden on the municipalities. The success obtained is due to the education of the people, to the efforts of the clergy and to the efforts of the medical profession. Should the minister decide to call a conference either this year or next year I would suggest that not only the heads of the different health departments be invited, but also the men in charge of each district who would derive tremendous benefit by being present at this conference and listening to the discussion. I sincerely hope the resolution which was proposed last year and accepted unanimously by this house, and out of which we expected some action, will be considered even more favourably this year and if no immediate relief can be given to the provinces this year, we hope that something will be done next year.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of saying more than a very few words on this subject because there seems to be complete unanimity in the house. Several facts stand out as definite and as being accepted by this house. The first is that the maintenance of public health, both by preventive and curative measures is essential for the nation. The second is that there is perhaps no better method of ensuring that health than by means of health units, particularly so in the sparsely settled districts where it has been found very difficult to provide medical and hospital attention. This is a matter which the public in one capacity or another should support. When I say the public, I mean in a financial sense as municipalities, provinces or the federal government. Every effort should be made to avoid wastage and to assure that the proper results are reached. Every method of coordination should be used, and one definite plan should be adopted from one end of the country to the other. To achieve that end we must have the financial cooperation of the municipalities, who have a certain definite responsibility and who understand as no other authority can understand the peculiar circumstances of each particular case; we must have the cooperation of the provinces with their knowledge on a wider scale of the necessities of their particular districts, and as germs and disease know no provincial boundaries, any more than they can be kept closed in by the wire fences of any particular municipality, we must have some federal cooperation expressed in the terms of financial assistance. In my opinion the one practical step which should be taken at the moment is that when such a conference is held, as has been suggested by the minister, and when the matter is discussed, it would be not only of value but almost essential that the different representatives in meeting should know exactly how the different authorities view this matter; that they should know whether in the plans which they may discuss and which they may be prepared to draw up, they may depend upon the effective support of all those three authorities, because the plans which they might lay at such a conference must rest to a very large degree upon their knowledge of the attitude which the federal, provincial and municipal governments will take when these plans are put into effect. To that end I would again suggest it would be well for the house as it did a year ago, once more to express its opinion—I am not speaking about division or a recorded vote—and pronounce definitely by the acceptance of this resolution, thus giving assurance to those representatives when they meet, that when they draw up their plans they may depend again upon the definite sympathy and financial support of parliament as well as of the provincial and municipal authorities. Therefore I feel that this resolution should be accepted unanimously, and the government should continue to give that consideration which would enable them to supplement with effective support those plans at the time they are definitely drawn up.

Mr. G. D. STANLEY (East Calgary): The resolution before the house brings up a very interesting discussion of the whole question of health activities as they affect the federal government, provincial governments and municipal governments, the division of jurisdictions, and the degree of activity which should be pursued by the various governments, all pressing upon us the necessity for some definite decision, after proper conference, between the different governments in regard to the division of their jurisdictions. The other day when we were discussing the question of state medicine, preventive medicine was brought forward as one of the great functions of the state, and I for one am quite prepared that, as far as the resources of the country and as far as the financial resources of the various governments will permit, the state should stand behind preventive measures in connection with health activities.

When we come to the question of health units, we have one of the best efforts of scientific minds to-day in advancing preventive measures. Real undertakings in some of the provinces are being advanced. In the province from which I come, as an hon. member has already pointed out, two health units are being established, fairly well organized and ready to start functioning. I believe Ontario has announced a wider program and the provincial ministry of health intends to establish in different parts of the province health units carried out on a more extensive scale than is the case at present.

Mr. TUMMON: It is twenty years ago since they first started.

Mr. STANLEY: Yes, but the idea of a health unit, as we understand it to-day, is wider in its definition than it was twenty years ago. The hon. member to my left is correct when he says that Ontario started health units twenty years ago, radiating from the city of London. May I say here that the undertaking of that health unit in those days was one of the pioneer movements of a real advance in preventive medicine on this continent. There is no question about that. If parliament makes a grant to the health activities in the provinces it should be with the idea of encouraging a further and wider development. Personally I would not be in favour of extending grants to the provinces simply as a substitute for some of the money which they are now spending on present health projects. At present they have undertaken in some instances and have already announced programs in other instances for the establishment of health units. Beyond that there is no question the provinces are preparing themselves for a more extensive program along that line. That is as it should be and the grants from this government should be made with the idea not of being a substitute for money which the province is already spending or which it intends to spend for that purpose, but only of making wider application of preventive measures that will be undertaken in health units.

That of course brings up the whole question of what should be done in regard to health activities on the part of the various jurisdictions. I cannot emphasize too strongly the necessity for a conference between the provinces, the municipalities and the federal authorities in regard to matters of this kind and the measures which they propose to take. A definite system should be adhered to, and it would not be wise for the federal government simply to make a grant to this, that and the other provinces without some definite system being established.

May I point out just a few of the difficulties which are presenting themselves to the governments and which should become proper subjects for discussion in a conference such as has been suggested. The other day I received a resolution and the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw) received a similar one from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta, calling our attention to the fact that the number of narcotic drug addicts in the various provinces of Canada is very considerable and is increasing at an alarming rate. The responsibility for the enforcement of the Narcotic Drug Act lies with the federal government. If I understand scientific measures in regard to the treatment of drug addicts, they cannot be dealt with except by institutional treatment.

It is the only way in which effective results can be secured. The efforts of private physicians to treat the addicts to narcotic drugs is sure to meet with failure. At the present time the drug addicts in our province, and I presume it is the same in most of the provinces, are either given treatment in their homes by private physicians, or they are sent into the general hospitals for treatment, or as is done in our province, in some cases they are committed to a mental hospital for treatment. Now in the great majority of the mental hospitals in this country, and in practically all of our general hospitals, there are no facilities for the proper treatment of drug addicts, and if any advance is to be made in their treatment there must be special institutions for their special treatment. The question at once arises, who shall provide those institutions? Shall it be the municipality, the provincial government or the federal government? Who shall provide for their maintenance? That is a proper question, I think, for discussion at such a conference as has been suggested.

May I go just a little further in regard to some of the difficulties that present themselves? To-day the question of caring for mental cases in all the provinces is becoming a tremendous task. It is a burden that is resting upon the taxpayers of our province almost beyond endurance. I am informed, and I believe it is correct, that there are more mental cases in the mental hospitals of Canada than there are patients in all the other general hospitals in this country put together. If that statement is correct it gives the house some idea of the problem that presents itself, and the sad feature is that the number of mental cases is increasing year by year. The question arises, are we going to be able in the provinces and in the municipalities to deal with the cases in the way that is required? Is the burden going to be carried as it has been carried in the past? Those again are questions that I think might properly come under the survey of the proposed conference.

If the federal government is going to enter further into health activities, may I in that connection point out that the greater portion of the cost of sickness is included in the hospital costs. To-day most of our hospitals are finding their financing a great burden, which is becoming heavier every day. Heretofore the provinces have been giving grants, small as compared with the great work that has been done by the hospitals. If the highly expensive care of the patient which is given in our hospitals is to be continued and if the preventive medicine side of the work that has been asked of our hospitals is to be extended, measures must be provided for the necessary financing. That again is a proper subject for discussion at the proposed conference.

Hence, Mr. Speaker, while I am in favour of any action by any government that would advance the cause of preventive medicine, whether it be the promotion of health units, greater activity in our health organizations in the municipalities, in the provinces or in the federal sphere, at the same time it seems to me that the problem is of such magnitude and such great importance that the federal government should very carefully deliberate just how it can be most effective in its assistance, and where financial assistance is given to preventive medicine, how it can be given most effectively, and where the jurisdiction should lie. All these considerations impress upon me the necessity of a conference between all the various governments and health organizations concerned with a view to arriving at the conclusion that will give the best results.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): On the 3rd day of March, 1930, this house unanimously agreed to the following resolution:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the advisability of making grants to the provinces equal to one-third the cost of establishing, and to cover permanently such full time health units as may be organized.

The motion now before the house is:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the advisability of carrying into effect the decision of parliament made on the 3rd March, 1930, to make grants to the provinces equal to one-third of cost of establishing, and to cover permanently, such full time health units as may be organized.

In other words, the resolution is that the government should take into consideration the advisability of considering the advisability of taking the action in question. That is what it means. There is only one method by which that can be done, and that is by considering the matter with the provinces. To do that involves the discussion not only of the question of overlapping of effort, but the question of the extent to which effort should be made by the provinces and the Dominion and the character of the work which should be done by the health units, also the question of the financial burden that would be involved.

It is unquestioned that any effort that ensures the health of the people of this country adds to its national wealth. But it is equally true that the direct measure of benefit in the first instance is largely through those branches of our activities that are covered by the ninety-second section of the British North America Act. I have not in any sense changed the opinion that I expressed formerly as to the desirability of making a very vigorous effort through the united endeavour of the Dominion and the provinces to ensure improved health conditions of the people of Canada, but I am certain that the mere adopting of a resolution in a new House of Commons, commendable though it is, will not accomplish that purpose any more than the passing of the resolution a year ago last March did accomplish it. But it does do this: It directs public attention to the desirability of action being taken to induce the people to think in terms of preventive medicine, realizing the soundness of the old saying that prevention is better than cure.

If I were to take the time this afternoon, I could point out that already very considerable sums of money provided by the Dominion are being expended through the provinces, for this purpose. The hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Stanley) has referred to some of the work done in connection with the treatment of narcotic drug addicts. Hon. members will observe in the estimates that there are $100,000 being provided by the Dominion treasury for the benefit of social services rendered to health departments of the provinces. Contributions from the Dominion treasury bring up another matter mentioned by my hon. friend from Battle River (Mr. Spencer) concerning the desirability of maintaining some of the voluntary organizations which have done such excellent work in connection with the arousing of public interest concerning the health of the people. From the very nature of things, in the end these voluntary organizations would go out of existence. Their effort is to arouse public opinion to such an extent that action is taken, and when necessary action has been taken the necessity for further effort on their part ceases. That has been the experience in connection with two or three such movements in the Dominion in the last twenty-five years. Groups of high-minded public-spirited citizens have organized as a voluntary association and as such have promoted public measures. Such measures have been promoted through educational effort, by the use of posters, by lectures and various other means. Private subscriptions have been made and in many instances these have been supplemented by grants from provinces and from the Dominion exchequer.

The result has been that when public opinion has been aroused it has expressed itself in the manner by which the will of democracy is made known, namely by the enactment of legislation giving effect to the aims and purposes of the voluntary associations to which I have referred.

I need hardly say that is the British way by which reforms are accomplished. Those who will take the trouble to think back for a moment will realize that almost all great reforms, whether it be the load line on ships which we owe to the efforts of Samuel Plimsoll, the social reforms secured by Howard and Lord Shaftsbury, or the improvements of medical services and nursing in the army resulting from the efforts of Florence Nightingale, have come about through the voluntary effort and sometimes through months and years of toil on the part of those who have set up and maintained voluntary organizations for the purpose of creating a public opinion which would place upon the statute books of the country the desired measures.

Measures to improve public health are based in the first place upon a selfish desire on the part of the state. It realizes that ultimately disease means loss, loss of earning power, loss from inability to create new wealth, loss through maintenance during periods of illness, loss to families sometimes resulting in poverty itself. To no inconsiderable extent the state has been governed by selfish considerations. Such considerations may not be the most desirable in the world, yet they are those which in the end perhaps have weighed as highly as any other upon the minds of legislators themselves. Then there is the individual to be considered. There is the thought in every man that he should make some contribution to the welfare of the community in which he lives, and the taxes which he pays, and which after all constitute the revenue of the country, should be made useful and effective for the purpose of promoting health and happiness in those who have not been so fortunate. Sometimes the thought is prompted by an experience in connection with disease or illness. A person may thus have an earnest desire by preventive measures to make it impossible for others to become ill, and to ensure the freedom of others from the disease or illness from which he has suffered.

Let us consider the use of vaccines. Let us consider the problem of rendering the people of this country immune from disease. There are vaccines for many ills, antitoxins for typhoid and diphtheria, and in an indirect way the Dominion is constantly making contributions to health work. Health units go deeper than that; they go farther than that. They aim to create, if possible, a healthy community by commencing even in the prenatal days of the child, to ensure conditions which will bring about health in the citizen. From a time prior to the birth of the child and until he or she has attained manhood or womanhood and after, the health unit is in constant service. Consideration is thus given to the responsibility of the state for the health and happiness of the individual. Steps are taken first to prevent the recurrence of disease and ensure protection from centres of infection such as the teeth and tonsils. Children's diseases such as scarlet fever and measles are given consideration. Then when those children reach the teen age they are surrounded with conditions which will ensure their strength of body and mind to meet the problems of the life which lie before them. We are doing work along that line all the time. The Dominion is indirectly making its contribution to these health units. I believe it is possible to attain the operation of health units in every part of the country and in every part of this Dominion only through the joint action of federal and provincial authorities.

It is quite clear that in the realm of taxation, for instance, there must be a clearer understanding than heretofore there has been. It is not possible for the Dominion to raise money by any mode or process of taxation merely for the purpose of passing it on to the provinces, if before it is raised it is felt that such money is raised for provincial purposes. If however for national ends the Dominion regards it as necessary that contributions should be made to further the efforts of the provinces carrying on their work within their more restricted areas, I think very little difficulty will be experienced. That of course involves very close study and consideration of the problem by provincial and Dominion authorities.

I need hardly say that, since August 7, this administration has not had the opportunity, owing to the conditions which prevail in this country, to call the conference it will call to deal not only with problems of taxation but also with problems concerning which there may be duplication of effort by the Dominion and the provinces. There is a federal health department. Most of the provinces have provincial health departments. It is quite clear that unless there is a clear defining of the respective services to be carried on by these departments there will be duplication of effort and loss caused through such duplication. Early in his term of office I think it was contemplated by the Minister of National Health that he might be able to call a conference, but matters of more supreme importance in connection with the other branch of his department prevented such a conference. A conference was called which lasted but a day to deal with a constitutional matter. Knowing that to deal with problems connected with taxation and activities over which both the Dominion and the provinces have jurisdiction, such as agriculture, health and matters of that kind, a conference will take several days, probably weeks; that some of those matters would involve an amendment to the constitution and others an agreement merely to define the work to be undertaken, we can agree only that this motion may pass as the motion last year passed. However I direct attention to the terms in which the motion is drawn, lest it should be said that the decision taken last year was a decision that meant more than the terms signify, and that the result of passing the resolution would be that this government is instructed by the house—as was the government that was in office before this administration—to take into consideration other than the advisability of carrying into effect the decision of parliament last year, which charged the then government to take into consideration the advisability of considering the establishment of full time health units, to the cost of which one-third was to be contributed by the federal authorities and two-thirds by the provincial authorities. Without in any sense committing the government as to the extent to which contribution may be made, or as to the terms under which assistance may be rendered, or as to when it may be possible to have the matter dealt with, because I can hold out no hopes that it can be dealt with this week or next week, this month or next month—without, I say, in any sense committing the administration to any of these details, we are quite content that the resolution should be unanimously adopted by the house; for the opinions that were expressed unanimously last session, are, I take it, still the unanimous opinions of the house.

Mr. SPENCER: I rise, Mr. Speaker, to express my very hearty appreciation of the most excellent support that has been given to the resolution by members from all parts of the house. I wish to congratulate the Minister of Health (Mr. MacLaren) upon not doing what his predecessor did a year ago—take shelter behind the British North America Act. Instead, the hon. minister came out flatly with the declaration that this was a sane, practical method of dealing with public health. I wish, however, to draw attention to one point, the calling of a conference. I am only too glad to think that a conference is going to be called. But when the Minister of Health was asked by someone on this side whether it would be called this year, he intimated at once that possibly it would not be. I would have been much better satisfied had the Minister of Health or the Prime Minister been able to give us some definite idea when the conference will be called. We all know how easily these things are put off. If we could only have some promise that the conference will be called at the earliest opportunity, it would be something to look forward to. The Prime Minister mentioned that certain contributions are already being made by the federal government to the provinces in aid of health work. I would point out that so far as I am aware there is no new contribution being made this year beyond what was being made a year ago. I want, however, sincerely to thank the Prime Minister for the support which he has given to the resolution.

As to the wording of the resolution, under the rules of the house I had no other way of presenting it. I gladly accept the suggestion of the Prime Minister that the matter be left to a further conference, and I hope that that conference will be called at the earliest possible date.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL CREDITS

PROPOSAL TO ENABLE THE FARMER TO SECURE LOANS ON FAVOURABLE TERMS

Mr. W. T. LUCAS (Camrose) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, consideration should be given to the setting up of a system of intermediate credits for agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the statement is heard repeatedly to-day that if Canada could find a satisfactory market for her wheat, we would speedily recover from the depression in which we are now involved. It is more readily recognized to-day than formerly that agriculture and industry are becoming more and more interdependent, and that one cannot continue to succeed at the expense of the other; both must march forward together. Up to the present time agriculture has not received proper consideration, in so far as credit facilities are concerned, but has managed to carry on because of homestead and cheap fertile land. That period is past Conditions have so changed that no longer can the farmer be described as the most independent man on earth. To-day he is part and parcel of the great world industrial machine, and while our prairie farmer may be situated in the centre of the North American continent thousands of miles from the sea, he is as vitally interested in the daily reports of world happenings and conditions as is the individual in any other walk of life.

The farmer is being told to-day that he must reduce the cost of his production. I realize that that is true, but I believe I am right when I say that the Canadian farmer is faced with greater handicaps in the matter of distance from markets and high interest rates than is the farmer in any other country. And yet I say without fear of contradiction that there is no country in which the per capita production is so great as in Canada, and it is my opinion that there is no one thing that would go further to assist the farmer to reduce his cost of production than lower interest rates. Dr. Tory, who gave a great deal of study to this question a few years ago, brought in a supplementary report in 1925 on Agricultural Credit, and I wish to quote a few excerpts along the line of the handicaps under which the farmer is labouring. On page 9 of that report Dr. Tory says:

> It ought to be clear to anybody that Canada is slowly passing through the stage in her agricultural development that the United States was passing through some years ago, viz., the best lands of the country have been taken up, wealth accumulating from the rise in land prices will, in a large measure cease, and land mortgages based on growing prices will be harder to carry.

Further on he says:

> In addition, he finds himself in competition in the markets of the world with countries where complete and ample financial organizations have been created for agricultural purposes. For example, in all the countries of western Europe capital is obtainable at a rate not exceeding 5 per cent and current money at similar rates. This has been brought about by special legislation in the interest of agriculture.

Again, he says:

> The distances from the markets of the world also place the western provinces and to a limited degree the eastern provinces also at a great disadvantage.

My object, Mr. Speaker, in moving this resolution, is not to get any special privilege for the farmer, nor to get what might be termed easy money, but rather for the purpose of placing agriculture more on an equality with other industries in so far as securing legitimate credit is concerned. Europe recognized this question years ago and dealt with it. The United States recognized it almost twenty years ago, and the government sent a very able commission to Europe to study the various systems of agricultural credit, and later they introduced a very comprehensive plan to deal with the matter. With the permission of the house I should like to quote from a speech made by Harvie Jordan, a member of the commission.

> The governments of every European country which our commission visited took the broad position that the strongest foundation upon which any great nation could be built was one which was supported by a progressive, happy, and contented agricultural population.
> From this standpoint the governments of the best agricultural countries of Europe have for the past half century given every possible co-operation and assistance to the development of their agricultural industry.
> It is a singular fact in this connection, that while foreign farmers secure their borrowed capital at 4 per cent per annum, the average rate of interest on commercial loans for the same countries is from 5 to 6 per cent.
> This condition of affairs is just the reverse in the United States. Our merchants, manufacturers, and railway corporations secure loans at from 5 to 6 per cent, while the average rate of interest charged our farmers is from 9 to 10 per cent. Not only this, the government of the United States has for the past 50 years bent its best efforts, energies, and powerful influences, through the enactment of federal legislation, to foster and protect the great industrial businesses of the nation, leaving American agriculture to carve its way along as best it could.
> In the establishment of the national banking system of this country farm lands were outlawed by federal enactment as a class of security upon which loans should not be negotiated. Yet it must be admitted that the safest and highest class of gilt edge securities in the nation to-day are its improved farm lands, upon which the government, the people, and all other industries of the nation must depend for support and progress.

That statement applies equally to Canada to-day. It is not my purpose at this time to criticize our banking system. I believe it has been excellent for the needs it was designed to meet, but in its present form it does not and cannot adequately serve the present day needs of agriculture. It is my opinion that the average business man does not fully realize the change that has taken place in agricultural conditions during the past thirty or forty years, and the urgent need for credit to-day as compared with former times. I believe a better understanding of this question by the urban dweller would work to the benefit of all concerned.

[Mr. Lucas.]

> Let us keep in mind, in our discussion of this subject, the relative importance of the city and the country. Destroy the city and the country surrounding it would soon rebuild that city, but destroy the country surrounding a city and the city could not rebuild the country, but of itself could not long survive. The more prosperous the country, the greater and more prosperous the city, and as the city becomes greater and more prosperous it is stronger position to render financial assistance to the country. As the city increases its manufacturing output and enlarges its industrial activities, its population of consumers increases and a greater market is thereby made for the products of the country. There is indeed an interlocking of interest and a consequent need of "cooperation" between the city and country, and the best results can only be obtained by a spirit of harmony and proper understanding.

I wish I could impress forcibly upon every member of this house the importance of that statement. Let me say to our manufacturers and our business and professional men, if you want to help yourselves, the quickest and surest way to do it is through the farmer. It is a well known fact that when agriculture is prosperous so likewise are other industries.

With regard to the changed conditions of agriculture, no greater proof can be offered than to recall to those hon. members who, through the courtesy of the International Harvester Company, witnessed a short time ago a moving picture entitled Romance of the Reaper, an illustration of the development of the machinery of production from 1831 down to the present time. But, Mr. Speaker, while labour-saving machinery has solved the problem of production and removed from farming a great deal of the drudgery and hard work, it has brought in its train other problems equally important and, I believe, more far-reaching in their consequences which must be faced to-day. I refer to the problems of finance and distribution. While the introduction of machinery has increased production and taken much of the drudgery out of farming, the present method of financing, with high interest rates, has more than offset this benefit. I believe that to-day the farmer is more of a slave than he was in former times. but in a different way; for it is a trite saying that work never killed a man but worry did. When I think of the state of mind of the vast majority of farmers in western Canada to-day because of the staggering burden of interest they are carrying, with very little hope of ever getting out from under, I cannot help but admire the courage and fortitude with which they are carrying on.

I feel confident, Mr. Speaker, that if the same energy, the same intelligence and determination were applied to the solution of the credit problem as have been applied to scientific and technical questions, equal success would result. Sir Josiah Stamp, who is recognized as one of the outstanding British economists, is reported to have made the statement that science and invention might well take a holiday for twenty years, and he proposed that business men and financiers should give more time to the study of elementary economics.

The problems and difficulties with which we are faced at the present time are man-made problems. They are not caused by lack of raw materials or by our inability to convert those raw materials into usable form; rather the reverse is the case. I am convinced that since man has created this problem man can solve it, if only he will set himself seriously to the task. As I said before, Europe has dealt with the question of agricultural credit, and in Germany and France we have perhaps the two outstanding rural credit systems, by which money can be obtained at very low rates of interest.

Mr. BOURASSA: And Italy.

Mr. LUCAS: Yes, Italy as well. In 1894 France passed the first fundamental law creating machinery for the provision of agricultural credit. Two years later, when the charter privilege of the Bank of France expired, it was renewed by the government only on condition that the bank should advance to the government forty million francs, free of interest, to be used in the subsidization of the rural credit banks. There was a further condition that the bank was to pay yearly a sum calculated at one-eighth of its circulation, but not to be less than two million francs, to be used for the same purpose. In reality this has amounted to between five and six million francs yearly, and this amount has been made available for agricultural credit. Loans are made to agricultural cooperative societies, with interest as low as 2 per cent. Let me pause here, Mr. Speaker, to say it might be well to insert a clause of this nature when we revise our Bank Act in 1933.

Just here I should like to read another short excerpt from the report of the United States commission:

> Our rural population is justly entitled to receive credit direct from reserve banks in the same degree that urban population enjoys this advantage; and the method of bank organization should be such that residents of country districts can successfully overcome the disadvantages of their environment.

The general advice given the farmer today is to go in for mixed farming. I have tried to point out that credit is just as essential in agriculture as in any other industry. Our present banking system serves admirably the needs of industry and commerce, but it does not serve the present day needs of agriculture, though it is true that our banks do provide a certain amount of short term credit. It is also true that in 1926, after repeated urgings from this corner of the house, parliament passed the Farm Loan Act for the purpose of providing long term credit for farmers. There is however a gap between these two systems which might be termed intermediate credit, and with this my resolution proposes to deal. I refer to a system of credit for periods of from six months to three years.

Everyone who understands the needs of agriculture knows that a bank loan for from three to six months is of very little use to the man engaged in live stock production. It takes from one to two years, and sometimes even longer, properly to mature cattle, and under present conditions the farmer often finds that he is forced to throw his stock on the market at a time when it is not fully matured and often when prices are depressed. The very fact that Mr. Beatty, along with other financial interests, has seen fit to promote the Dominion Agricultural Credit Corporation Limited to supply the very form of credit I am suggesting, if I understand it correctly, is an added proof that there is such a need. I am confident, however, that the capitalisation of that corporation, which is $5,000,000, will prove totally inadequate to meet the needs, and I would suggest to the government that if they cannot see their way clear to set up an intermediate credit system of their own in competition with the private corporation, at least they cooperate with the Beatty plan by subscribing dollar for dollar. This will not only give financial support but will add to the importance of the organization and assure its permanence as an integral part of our financial structure rather than as an emergency measure. I think it will be admitted that this new corporation, backed by business interests such as these, would be carefully supervised and managed along strictly business lines, and with these precautions the government should be prepared to take a risk equal to that taken by private capital for the benefit of agriculture.

A few days ago, the right hon. the Prime Minister, speaking on the question of a central bank, quoted President Hoover as saying:

> It is not possible for the debtor to borrow himself out of debt.

While that statement taken by itself may be true, under our system where the large percentage of business is run on credit, it is or should be possible to borrow money at a reasonable rate of interest and by using that money in legitimate business, along with energy and skill, make sufficient profit to repay the loan and at the same time reduce the original indebtedness. That is the theory upon which business is conducted to-day and it was with that end in view that I introduced this resolution in the hope that a better system of credit might be evolved which would place agriculture in the same position as that which other industries now occupy in this respect. The question of intermediate credits was introduced in a very able manner last year by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) and after debate was referred to the banking and commerce committee for further consideration. Unfortunately parliament dissolved soon afterwards and the matter was not dealt with. I trust this question may at least be referred to this committee for consideration, for it is my opininn that if agriculture is to survive it will require wholehearted cooperation of every interest in the country in the matter of working out a better and cheaper form of credit.

It is not my intention to debate this question further, but I hope the house will give to it the consideration which it merits.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): If the hon. member will have his resolution amended so that it may be referred to the committee on banking and commerce I think it would serve a very useful purpose and discussion could take place in the light of knowledge which we have as to the proposed operations of the credit organization to which I referred the other day. The experience in the United States in connection with a similar organization was that practically only ten per cent of the amount subscribed was used. It may well be that in the light of the information which will be forthcoming, the government will be enabled to assist in the work in a more practical manner than has heretofore been the case. In view of these observations, I trust the hon. gentleman will see his way clear to have the appropriate motion made and that the matter be referred to the committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I am sure hon. members were pleased with the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the spirit in which he has received this resolution. After a very few remarks, I will move the amendment which he suggests.

[Mr. Lucas.]

While I am on my feet, I should like to say that this matter of credit for agriculture is one which should be settled as soon as possible. I intend to discuss this question from the viewpoint of a westerner because I am most familiar with the western situation. Western Canada has been settled by a body of men many of whom never borrowed any money in their lives until they went to that district. They were not familiar with any credit system under which they could borrow, but they have been educated by the agents of the mortgage companies and of the banks to do their business on credit. The moment they secured a recommendation for a patent for their homestead they were solicited by the agents, particularly of the mortgage corporations, to borrow money in order to improve their farms. From that time on they have done a large percentage of their business on credit. Perhaps there is nothing strange in that, because ninety per cent of the business in this country is carried on on a credit basis, but no attempt has been made to evolve a system of credit suitable to agriculture, particularly in western Canada, although I think the same remark would apply to the east.

Bankers have appeared before the committee on banking and commerce and have told us that the Bank Act contemplates that the business which they do should be only the financing of industry by the granting of short term loans, and I believe that that is the intention of the act. The mortgage companies do not pretend to finance farmers except for long terms, and it has been generally admitted that there always is what the bankers term a barren area of credit. It is true that in many cases the bankers in western Canada have financed the farmer, and I agree with a recent statement by one of the past presidents of the Canadian Bankers' Association that the banks have loaned too much money to farmers in the west. That statement may be true, but the responsibility rests largely upon the banks themselves. I must be fair and state that this would apply only to certain banks; I have no desire to indict the bankers as a whole. The farmers could not have obtained these large loans unless the banks had been willing to grant them.

What the farmer needs is a system of credit which will be fairly constant, one which will not advance him more credit than he needs at certain times and withhold it at other times when he is badly in need of it. That is the trouble with the present credit system in western Canada; it makes credit much too easy to get at certain times. On many occasions farmers have been urged by local bank managers to borrow money for purposes for which they should never have borrowed it, and as a result many farmers have suffered. I have personal knowledge of men being persuaded to go into the ranching business. The local managers assured them that the banks would advance them sufficient money for the purpose, and what happened? The banks had to take security on everything they had, and before many years had passed the value of live stock dropped to such an extent that these men had to be sold out. That is not a proper banking policy; the Bank Act never contemplated that the banks of this country should go into that kind of business.

I think it is time we had in Canada a proper system of credit for agriculture. I do not like to come to parliament and criticize the action of the banks in any particular part of Canada, but the criticism which we have already heard this session proves the need of a system better suited to the requirements of the agricultural industry. I do not desire to take up the time of the house in a discussion of why the banks in western Canada have lost so much money—a point stressed by the bankers' association—but I do want to say that if they have lost money in western Canada it was their own fault. They have taken huge sums out of western Canada in the form of interest, and if they have lost money it is because of the poor policy they have followed in making their loans.

I want to quote very briefly from the report of the committee on banking and commerce of last year with reference to the matter of agricultural credits, which was referred to them. They say:

> Two sessions of the committee were held, during which this reference was under discussion.
> As directed in the order of reference, the committee conducted a study of intermediate credits for agriculture, but owing to pressure of other work they have not been able to give it the attention so important a subject deserves.
> Mr. C. S. Tompkins, the Inspector of Banks, was examined and requested to obtain sundry information.
> It is recognized by the committee that the basic industry of agriculture is handicapped for want of such credit facilities as are called for by the resolution.
> It is true that short term loans are taken care of by the banking system, and those covering long terms more or less by the Long Term Loan Act, and mortgage companies; but that, with the slow turnover of the farmers' business, the third type of credits as mentioned above is essential to his success.
> Your committee, therefore, recommend that the subject is of sufficient importance that the matter be given attention by the Department of Finance, and if possible, bring it to the attention of a future parliament.

In the last paragraph of this report it is stated that the matter was to be brought to the attention of the Department of Finance. Officials of that department were asked to obtain certain information in regard to it, so that they should now have information which would be available to the committee in considering the matter. Therefore, without taking up any further time of the house, I would move:

> That the motion be amended by adding the following words:
> "and to that end that this question be referred to the select standing committee on banking and commerce, with instructions to consider and report thereon."

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): The house will be as happy as I that the general acceptance of the motion as amended renders it unnecessary for me to say what I had intended to say. There are, however, three or four points which I wish to lay before the house in reference to the scope of this inquiry

By the proposed reference the committee on banking and commerce will be afforded an opportunity of carrying on an inquiry very essential at the present time, having to do with the credit system of this country as it applies to agriculture. The committee will have an opportunity not only of considering the motion itself, but of acquiring a better understanding of the proposed operation of what is popularly referred to as the Beatty plan, of which very little is at present known but concerning which vague surmises are floating throughout the country. It would be of benefit to the originators of the plan, to Canada and to agriculture, if that system were properly understood. But still more important, the committee will be given an opportunity of inquiring into another very important aspect of the matter, namely the present relationship between the banks and agriculture in Canada. It is not good for the banks, for agriculture or for the country generally that such a dispute as has now arisen should continue. Many statements and accusations have been made, and it is apparent that a complete misunderstanding and misapprehension prevails throughout Canada, particularly amongst those engaged in agriculture, as to the functions of our banking system as related to agriculture.

I hope that the motion will be understood in its broadest terms and that the scope of the inquiry will be fairly wide. It is desirable that this misunderstanding be thoroughly cleared up so that we may be able to ascertain definitely and without peradventure whether the banks have been functioning as they should, whether the demands made by agriculture have been reasonable or unreasonable, and whether the statement made by the heads of the banks that credit has been given in the usual way and on the usual security is correct or not.

The committee will have an opportunity of perhaps recreating our credit system as it relates to that important branch of industry, agriculture, of obtaining a better and more complete understanding of the situation as it exists, of setting at rest much ill feeling, much misunderstanding, and of bringing about a greater degree of friendly cooperation between these two essential units in our whole social organization, finance and agriculture.

Motion as amended agreed to.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION

PROPOSED CONTINUANCE OF FEDERAL GRANT FOR ANOTHER TEN YEARS

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville) moved:

Whereas the discontinuance of the federal grant in aid of technical education has imposed a heavy liability upon the provinces, which they find it difficult to sustain;

And whereas the future industrial and commercial development of Canada depend in large measure upon the creation of a well trained personnel;

Therefore be it resolved—that, in the opinion of this house, the grant should be continued at least for another ten years.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the resolution which I now propose to the house has been on the order paper for the last four years. It is needless for me to say that it has always been defeated. Perhaps this year it will meet a different fate. I am not going to utilize the forty minutes allowed to me according to the rules of the House of Commons. I shall be very brief; indeed, I do not believe my remarks will last more than five or six minutes. My motivating reason for curtailing my remarks on this very important subject emanates from the very sympathetic speech that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) made when the resolution was before the house last year as well as from the intimation in the speech from the throne that something would be done this year for technical education. Pending a statement from the Prime Minister as to the government policy with respect to technical education, I shall, as I have said, not utilize my whole time but shall be as brief as possible.

In presenting this resolution I am absolutely certain that I am reopening a question that is not only of extreme importance to a very large proportion of the population of Canada but is also very closely connected with the welfare and prosperity of this Dominion, namely, federal government grants to technical education to aid industrial development.

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that the latter part of the resolution calls for a continuance of the technical education grant for a further period of ten years, implying that such a grant has been in effect during some previous period. How was technical education legislation first placed on the statute books of Canada, and what were the events leading up to that legislation? Hon. members are no doubt aware that technical education always has been and always will be a vital question in a country with such great potentialities in trade and commerce as Canada. For almost half a century this question has agitated the minds not only of those who direct our industries but also of those who are engaged in them. It has, in a word, been a most vital subject in those quarters where the need for skilled workmanship was found to be essential. Indeed, so rapid was the growth of public opinion in favour of more and better technical education that it soon became apparent that it was only a question of time when the matter would come up for discussion in the House of Commons. That anticipated discussion did come up some time in the year 1909, in which year a royal commission was appointed to investigate the whole subject of technical education. The commission consisted of seven members, who visited many parts of Europe and the United States and held over one hundred meetings in the Dominion of Canada alone. When you consider, Mr. Speaker, that over 1,400 witnesses were heard in Canada alone, and that the total expense bill of the commission was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $100,000, you will have some idea of the tremendous task which the commission had on its hands, a task that took about three years of investigation and study before the commission was finally in a position to submit its report to the House of Commons in 1913. In 1914 the great world war broke out and the matter was left in abeyance until after the armistice was signed. It was not long, however, before parliament took the question up with renewed vigour, which finally culminated in the act of 1919, now known as the Technical Education Act. That act provided for the expenditure of an aggregate sum of $10,000,000 over a period of ten years, to be paid to the provinces according to a graduated scale, as follows: in 1920, $700,000; 1921, $800,000; 1922, $900,000; 1923, $1,000,000; 1924, $1,100,000; and a like sum for each of the five succeeding years, ending with the fiscal year 1929. The sum of $10,000 was to be paid in each year to the government of each province and the remainder of the appropriation was to be allotted and paid in proportion to the population of each province respectively as determined by the last federal decennial census.

The money has been paid, Mr. Speaker, but the act is no longer available. The federal technical educational grants have been relegated, at least by the government that preceded this one, to the junk pile of forgotten things. I conclude with the hope that the present government will not relegate this act, as it was relegated last year, to the junk pile of forgotten things, but that it will take action to aid in the development of technical education as was intimated in the speech from the throne.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I trust that the hon. gentleman will withdraw his resolution. The government will take the appropriate action at the proper time in accordance with the statement made in the speech from the throne at the opening of this session. There really is no purpose served by placing on the order paper a resolution with respect to a matter that has already been anticipated in the speech from the throne. The budget will disclose the action that will be taken.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I should like to let the right hon. gentleman know that I had this resolution on the order paper before the speech from the throne was delivered.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I beg leave, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw the motion.

Mr. BENNETT: Thank you very much.

Motion withdrawn.

EXPORT ACT

MOTION FOR REPEAL AND NEGOTIATION OF TREATY IN SUBSTITUTION THEREFOR

Mr. S. C. ROBINSON (West Essex) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the statute entitled An Act to amend the Export Act, being chapter 19, 20-21, George V, passed during the first session of 1930, should be repealed, and in substitution therefor a treaty should be negotiated for which Canada will get something in return for the loss of revenue this country is suffering in consequence of our good-will gesture, which apparently United States does not appreciate.

He said: When the bill to amend the Export Act was passed by parliament on March 25, 1930, strong objection was raised on the ground that Canada should get something by way of treaty in return for the loss of revenue, and also the loss of legitimate business in this country. In this connection I might quote from the remarks that were made by hon. gentlemen now sitting in this house. The right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), then leader of the opposition, at page 630 of Hansard of March 14, 1930, said:

We have failed to avail ourselves of one of the greatest offers that could be made by one nation to another, namely, to make reciprocal the operations of a treaty. They say, you give us this, we will give you the same. Moreover, sir, I might again point out that the proper method of international contract is by treaty or convention. As I pointed out a moment ago, this parliament cannot legislate for the United States of America. The United States Secretary of State said: Let us make a new convention amending the old convention.

The hon. the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) is reported at page 873 of Hansard of March 24, 1930, as follows:

It seems to me that if the mind of the Prime Minister radically changed in August last, as I understand it did, then there was ample time for him to negotiate an amendment to that treaty under which reciprocal duties and obligations would be imposed upon the governments of the two countries. It seems to me that such a treaty would have been far more consistent with the self-respect and dignity of this country than to place ourselves in the position, as seems to be the view of many of the leading newspapers of the United States, where we have been compelled to pass legislation because of the insistent demands of the United States that we should do so.

And again at page 875, I find the following:

Therefore I say that we should have either a reciprocal agreement in the form of a treaty or some form of reciprocal legislation, which would give to Canada the same protection from smugglers from the United States as the United States now ask us to give with respect to smugglers of Canadian products into the United States.

In Hansard of March 24, 1930, pages 875-6, the present Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) is reported as follows:

I entirely agree with him (the member for St. Lawrence-St. George) who took exactly the same attitude, that in justice to Canada we might well have preceeded by way of reciprocal legislation, either a treaty or a convention, or concurrent legislation as suggested by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, because in that way we could have obtained for Canada some rights in return for what we are now giving up at the request of the United States.

And further at page 876:

"In other words the Post (Washington) asks what does Canada get for giving up this revenue and for the loss to private interest in this business, and for the extra expenditure which will be put upon this country by this legislation? What is the quid pro quo? Do we get anything in return, or are we to draw the conclusion that this legislation, like the Prime Minister's tariff legislation, is a made-in-Washington policy, or a don't-provoke-Washington policy—not a Canadian measure, but a United States measure?

The right hon. the leader of the opposition, the then Prime Minister, is reported at page 909 of Hansard of March 24, 1930, as follows:

However, now that it has been decided that we shall continue our efforts to get a treaty that we hope will appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite as well as to ourselves, we shall make a further effort to see that the application of the treaty to merchandise generaly is taken full note of, and, that the treaty goes as far as it is possible to go to improve the conditions of dealing with the problem of goods being smuggled between the two countries.

I may say that about that time the then Prime Minister made an announcement to the house that already he had considered the question of making a treaty with the United States in connection of the cancellation of exports.

I wish to place on Hansard a quotation from the Toronto Mail and Empire. This is a report of an interview with Clarence Darrow, the famous criminal lawyer of Chicago:

Darrow Sees No Need For Export Ban
United States Rich "Enough to Take Care Of Its Own Laws," He Asserts Is Visiting Toronto
England Should Not Pay War Debts To Republic, He Contends

Toronto, July 26.—Canada should not concern itself with preventing liquor from being exported to the United States, Clarence Darrow, famous criminal lawyer of the United States and anti-prohibitionist, stated in an interview here. "The United States is quite wealthy enough to take care of its own laws," he said.

"So Much Richer"

"Why should Canada spend its money when the United States is so much richer and can better afford the expense?" continued Mr. Darrow.

On the question of war debts, Mr. Darrow declared England should never have taken on herself the payment of war debts to the United States. "We were in the same war," he said, "and we should help to pay for it. If it is not the debt of the United States, we should never have been in the war."

"I am awfully sorry for England," Mr. Darrow said. "She has packed up the whole expense of the war. Her debt should be cancelled, for she has fought the world's battles.

I wish to make reference to the Wickersham report, which caused considerable comment throughout the United States and Canada. At page 25 of this report I find the following:

It would be a mistake to assume that the cutting off of clearances of liquor from Canada to the United States has achieved its helpful intention.

[Mr. Robinson.]

If this is the conclusion arrived at in the United States after two years of investigation by the National Commission on Law Observance and Enforcement why continue the ban on exports to the United States? What have we received in return for Canada's gesture of neighbourly good will? First there was the Hawley-Smoot tariff, which as hon. members know prevented nearly all our agricultural and dairy products from entering the United States. That tariff legislation affected my constituency very seriously. Thanks, however, to the efforts of the present government and the new dumping clauses, the farmers and market gardeners in my riding are happy and contended to know they have a home market and that the surplus products of the United States will not be dumped here in competition with our products.

Then there is the commuter problem, a very serious matter in my constituency and in other border points of the Dominion of Canada. On April 1, 1927 a joint agreement was negotiated by the Hon. Vincent Massey entitled General Order No. 86, which for the information of the house I should like to place on Hansard. I may say that very few Canadians seem to understand what the general order meant. During 1930 this order practically became null and void. Thousands of residents of the border cities had paid their head tax and the cost of their visés. These charges were for head tax $8; visé $10, birth certificate $2.50 and four photographs, $1, making a total of $21.50. That was practically confiscated from the Canadian commuter. In 1927 there were as many as 15,000 commuters living in the border cities and working in Detroit and district. I venture to say that to-day their number would not be more than 2,500. This marked reduction has seriously affected our community. But the United States authorities are still combing the country to deport Canadians who, they claim, illegally entered the United States some years ago. For the benefit of the house let me read this general order 86 of the United States Department of Labour:

United States Department of Labour
Bureau of Immigration
Washington
April 1, 1927.

General Order No. 86

Subject: Land border crossing procedure

1. Hereafter aliens residing in foreign contiguous countries and entering the United States to engage in existing employment or to seek employment in this country will not be considered as visiting the United States temporarily as tourists, or temporarily for business or pleasure, under any provisions of the immigration law which exempt visitors from complying with certain requirements thereof; that is, they will be considered as aliens of the "immigrant" class.

2. However, the following aliens of the said "immigrant" class residing in foreign contiguous countries and who are now enjoying the border crossing privilege may continue so to enjoy it upon the payment of head tax, provided such head tax was assessible on aliens entering permanently at the time of original admission and, provided further, that they are not coming to seek employment.

A. Aliens whose original admission occurred prior to June 3, 1921.

B. Natives of non-quota countries whose original admission occurred prior to July 1, 1924.

C. Natives of quota countries whose original admission occurred subsequent to June 2, 1921, and, prior to May 11, 1922, who at the time of such admission had resided in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, or countries of Central or South America, or adjacent islands, for a period of one year.

D. Natives of quota countries whose original admission occurred subsequent to May 10, 1922, and prior to July 1, 1924, who at the time of such admission had resided in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, or countries of Central or South America, or adjacent islands, for a period of five years.

3. Aliens of all nationalities of the "immigrant" class whose original admission occurred subsequent to June 30, 1924, will be required to meet all provisions of the immigration laws applying to aliens of the "immigrant" class. Aliens of this class already enjoying the border crossing privilege, however, will be granted a reasonable time, not to exceed six months from June 1, 1927, within which to obtain immigration visas and otherwise comply with the laws.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON: When the house rose at six o'clock I was reading general order No. 86 of the United States Department of Labour, in connection with the commuter situation. The remainder of the order is as follows:

4. Aliens who have already complied with the requirements of the immigration laws and this general order may be permitted to continue to enjoy the border crossing privilege.

5. Aliens who have complied with the requirements of this general order governing permanent admission will be considered as having entered for permanent residence.

6. The use and issuance of identification cards to all classes of aliens entitled to same will continue as heretofore.

7. Identification cards held by or issued to aliens of the "immigrant" class shall be rubber-stamped as follows:.. .. ..

8. Identification cards held by or issued to aliens of the "non-immigrant" class shall be rubber-stamped as follows: .. ..

9. To insure uniformity stamps furnished by the bureau, only, shall be used and blank spaces, including that for signature, shall be filled in by the use of indelible pencil.

10. All identification cards heretofore issued, held by aliens who can not, or do not, meet the requirements of law, regulations and this order, will be taken up and cancelled upon an incoming trip of the holder and appropriate action taken.

11. The work of validating outstanding cards should proceed slowly, systematically, steadily and persistently, and in such a manner as to avoid confusion, congestion, interference with proper routine administration and the giving of just grounds for complaint upon the part of the travelling public.

12. The status of holders of identification cards shall be enquired into periodically, preferably every six months from date stamped, where practicable, but in any event not less frequently than once a year. When enquiry has been so made, it will be evidenced by a notation to show date of such enquiry and initials of the officer upon the reverse of the card. When the holder of a "non-immigrant" identification card qualifies as an "immigrant," a new identification card shall be issued, stamped to show the correct status.

That order was perfectly satisfactory, and it remained in force until 1930, when it was treated as a scrap of paper. The cards were taken from the holders even if they had been out of a position only a month or so; other technicalities cropped up, until the number of commuters was cut down to the figures I gave this afternoon. During 1930 this order became practically null and void, and thousands of the residents of the border cities and other parts of Canada, who had paid their head tax and secured a visé, lost their papers and had no money returned, with the result that in many cases they lost their positions as well. To add insult to injury, many were deported for a year and a day, with the warning that if they returned to the United States they would be put in prison. Compare this treatment with that accorded residents of the United States working in Canada.

The third point upon which I wish to touch, in order to show that the United States shows no good will towards Canada following what was supposed to be a neighbourly act on our part, is this: We all remember the drastic action of the United States coastguards, who fired upon Canadian vessels, with resultant loss of life. One case was that of the I'm Alone, and the other case that of the Josephine K., when Captain William P. Cluett of Lunenburg was killed. I have in my hand a statement showing the estimated annual loss to national revenue and to the distillery and brewing industries which has resulted from the amendment to the Customs Act passed last year, prohibiting the export of liquor and beer to the United States. I have also added a careful estimate of the business which has been lost to the trades manufacturing supplies, such as glass bottles, wooden and cardboard containers, labels, wrappers and so on, together with the loss to the farmers in regard to grain, the loss to labour and to the railways. These figures are from the Bureau of Statistics, and can be readily confirmed. They are as follows:

ESTIMATED ANNUAL LOSS TO NATIONAL REVENUE AND TO DISTILLING AND BREWING INDUSTRIES AS A RESULT OF AMENDMENT TO CUSTOMS ACT

A despatch from Ottawa, dated January 20, 1931, reads as follows:

Officials of the Department of National Revenue, after a study of the excise returns, to-day estimated that Canada has already suffered a loss of revenue of over $15,000,000 as a result of the stoppage of the direct flow of Canadian liquor across the border.

I might remind the house that this is three-quarters of the amount voted for unemployment at the special session last September. The house may be interested in the fact that for several years following prohibition the United States exported to Canada quantities of liquors and fermented wines. The figures are as follows:

[Mr. Robinson.]

	Liquors (including whiskey, brandy, gin and rum) Proof Gals.	Fermented wines Impl. Gals.
1922..	65,737	10,545
1923..	28,045	7,168
1924..	10,582	1,793
1925..	3,623	756
1926..	2,633	280
1927..	2,168	1,864
1928..	2,011	190
1929..	1,729	33
1930..	(figures not available)	27

The above figures have been supplied also by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. In 1928 the United States exported to the Bahamas 20,892 proof gallons of whiskey valued at £20,367, and in 1929, 3,679 proof gallons of whiskey valued at £1,272. It would be well to bear in mind that these exports are made from a country supposed to be as dry as the Sahara desert.

In conclusion I cannot see any good reason why the amendment to the Customs Act of March, 1930, should not be repealed when the Wickersham commission stated that it would be a mistake to assume that the cutting off of the clearances of liquor from Canada to the United States has achieved the hopeful intention. Reports appear every day that the United States is still getting its liquor, but this government is not receiving any revenue therefrom at a time when our national treasury shows a heavy deficit.

Motion negatived.

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES

Mr. MARTIAL RHEAUME (St. Johns-Iberville) (Translation) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the compensation of $60 provided for each head of cattle, male or female, as stipulated in chapter 6, section 14, subsection 2 (a) of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, be raised to $90 and that the compensation of $150 stipulated in section 2 (b) of the same section be raised to $180.

Mr. RHEAUME: Mr. Speaker, I trust that the house will not hesitate to give its approval to this resolution. In my opinion, farmers whose cattle have been subjected to the tuberculin test, in Quebec or throughout the country, for the last four or five years, did not receive an indemnity proportionate to the valuation of the cattle slaughtered. It was in 1927 that we inaugurated in the county of St. Johns-Iberville, which is situated south of the St. Lawrence, the tuberculin test. The highest price paid for cattle worth at least $100, was $38. I therefore think that the farmer was not sufficiently compensated for the losses he sustained, and that we should increase the indemnity from $60 to $90 as proposed, and from $150 to $180 for thoroughbreds. The remuneration for cattle that undergo the tuberculin test and are slaughtered, is only two-thirds of their valuation. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) could verify this statement by looking over the statistics in his possession. Most of the cattle I think which were slaughtered, at least in my county and to my knowledge, have never been paid, on an average, more than $30. You will readily understand that it is difficult to apply a system for the tuberculin test. It has happened, in my own constituency, in the spring during April, May, June and July, after cows had been wintered and at least 8 or 9 dollars per month had been spent per head, that farmers were obliged to slaughter them and only received $28 or $30 per head, althought the cows were in a fit condition to give good returns. In the present instance, I do not think that the government proved themselves generous, the act should be amended within the shortest delay possible because, as everybody knows, agriculture has already suffered too much. It is but fair and reasonable that the act should be amended and applied without further delay. There are a number of members in the house who represent rural counties. I hope that they will share my views and support this resolution.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I listened with special interest to the remarks made by the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr Rhéaume). This question embodied in the resolution was often raised in the Quebec legislature where I had the privilege of sitting. In the course of the 1929 session, I introduced a motion which was entirely in keeping with the views expressed by the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville. We then contended that the indemnity paid to farmers whose cattle had been slaughtered, as reactors was not sufficient, and the legislature unanimously adopted a resolution requesting the Quebec government to come to an understanding with the Dominion government in order to grant a more substantial indemnity to farmers. Unfortunately, I regret to state, that the Quebec government would not abide by the resolution adopted by the legislature and refused to make arrangements with the Dominion government in order to settle this question. I am amazed that the hon. member for St. Johns did not mention this fact to the house. This refusal justifies the Dominion government in not intervening as long as the Quebec government does not express its desire to cooperate with this government to settle this problem.

To-day, the question is more complicated than it was then, since the Quebec government at its last session had a half-measure enacted for the purpose of increasing, as it may see fit, the indemnity to be granted to farmers whose cattle are slaughtered. I think that this question should be better studied and more time given to its consideration. It is, at present, quite a complicated and difficult question and, as stated in the Quebec house, it is one that concerns not only one province but many others. Since the Quebec government has, this year, stepped in to pay part of the indemnity as agreed upon—at least, that was the pledge given by the prime minister of Quebec during the election which

I have reason to remember—that is to grant some part of that indemnity to farmers whose cattle were slaughtered, it is but fair to ask the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville to postpone this matter so as to allow the Quebec government and other provincial governments to meet and agree upon equitable terms, and thereby satisfy the farmers as to the indemnity requested.

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to second the resolution of the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume), and congratulate him for having had the courage of raising this question, although knowing that his chances of success were small, as we have just been made aware, the reason for this is that we sit on one side of the house where governmental favours are seldom distributed. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) recalled that he had personally moved such a resolution when he was leader of the opposition at Quebec. No one among us will doubt the good intentions of the hon. Postmaster General. Personally, I have always admired his courage; I have always been one of those Liberals who willingly acknowledge the praise due to an opponent. However, in answer to the criticism directed against the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville: that the Quebec government should have had a conference with the Dominion government so as to come to an agreement, I regret to have to tell the hon. Postmaster General that, perhaps, his old fighting spirit has vanished and turned to an incomprehensible tameness since he occupies an important post in the administration of this country. I expected that the hon. Postmaster General, after being sworn in as a member of the cabinet, and as soon as he made his appearance in the house—he was so honourable and good-natured, he had always championed the interests of the farming class, guided by Conservative principles, as he understood them—I expected, I say, that at the first opportunity, he would endeavour to convince his colleagues and get them to bring down a measure for the purpose of granting a more generous indemnity to the farmers and thus help this class of people which, in his own words, were so dear to him. I, therefore, cannot approve the stand taken by the hon. Postmaster General, that he is waiting for the Quebec government—which in no way can be called upon to take a hand under the circumstances, since the tuberculin test is a question which concerns the Dominion government—that he is waiting for the Quebec government to confer with Ottawa so as to come to an understanding.

[Mr. Sauve.]

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): With pleasure.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I know that the hon. member for Laprairie is too fair-minded that I should ever suspect him of wanting to misinterpret my thoughts as to what I stated a moment ago and also as to the attitude I took when in Quebec. I rather think that it was through an oversight that he made such a statement with reference to the Quebec legislature. Personally, I am not waiting for the Quebec government to act.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): Is that a question?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I wish to rectify a statement, and I have the permission of the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): With pleasure.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): No speech.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Since the hon. member for Laprairie allows me, I cannot see why the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) objects. The legislature ordered the Quebec government to come to an understanding with the Dominion government on the question of indemnity increase, and I answered.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER (Text): I would remind the Postmaster General that he has already spoken to the resolution.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): That is the way, I am well aware.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to show all deference possible to the Postmaster General, that is why I allowed him to make a second speech to rectify the first. I do not want to take advantage of an opponent.

I therefore shall proceed with my remarks. I was unable to make out what the hon. Postmaster General wished to rectify. If I am not mistaken, he stated that he was waiting for the Quebec government to communicate with the Dominion government.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I beg your pardon, I never said that.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I accept the hon. Postmaster General's word.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): May I rectify this matter?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I stated that I was awaiting some move by the Quebec government. The legislature declared itself in March, 1929; it ordered—

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Order, order.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The legislature ordered the Quebec government to come to an understanding with Ottawa in order to settle the question of indemnity. The legislative assembly did its duty, but the government did not.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Postmaster General, commenting upon the action taken by the legislative assembly, stated that it had adopted a half-measure. I wish to state, to the credit of the Quebec government—although not obliged but aware of the inaction of the Dominion government—that it took upon its shoulders the responsibility of helping the farmers in regard to this question of indemnity for cattle slaughtered as a result of the tuberculin test.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): When?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): At the last session held in Quebec.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): How?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): If my hon. friends on the right would only be patient, I would be very grateful to them. It would afford me the opportunity of making some comments this evening.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): We shall have them undergo the tuberculin test.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): The Quebec legislature, at the last session, voted a measure by which it undertakes, to pay part of the indemnity when cattle are slaughtered, on condition—this is quite legitimate—that the farmer, in order to qualify for that part of the indemnity which is from the provincial government, must, as far as possible, purchase cattle of the same value as that slaughtered. This indemnity should come from the Dominion government. The latter did not think proper to grant it. However, I am quite certain that if the country had maintained the Liberal government in office, at the last election, there would have been no necessity for the Quebec government to adopt such a measure which the hon. Postmaster General unfairly branded a half-measure.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Why not at the last session?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): The hon. Postmaster General might ask the same question many times and he knows the answer without my telling him: that Paris was not built in one day. May I put the same question to my hon. friend? I recall that during the last election my hon. friend, who is now, Postmaster General, travelled through his county, like all Conservative candidates in Quebec, and probably throughout the country, condemning the Liberal government and criticising it for not being generous towards the farmers when compensating them for their slaughtered cattle. They carried on a bitter fight over this question, when tired of discussing butter, they took up the indemnity as regards the tuberculine test. They pledged themselves—indeed, that was our opponents tactics to increase the number of their pledges, forgetting that those whom they addressed were level-headed and keen-minded people for whom they should show some deference—they pledged themselves to settle that question if they assumed office. To-day, we find that, notwithstanding the pledges made, although they endeavoured to prove that if the farmers were suffering from depression it was due to the negligence of the Liberal government, notwithstanding these facts, the Conservative party once in power neglect to fulfil their pledges. The Conservative party promised that once in office, they would settle those questions—the most pressing problems are surely those that refer to farming, which is the foundation of the whole social fabric. They have now been in power for ten months; and when this evening a member representing the farming class, the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rheaume) rises in his seat to move a resolution, an hon. minister has the hardihood to rebuke the member for bringing up this question and asks him to withdraw his motion.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I beg your pardon.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): He calls on him not to press his motion, but to postpone all discussion until the Dominion and provincial governments confer in the hope that the questions might be put off indefinitely.

I said that the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville was right in raising this question. In making such a statement, I am in no way influenced by partisanship, for like himself and many other members of the house, I have the privilege of representing the farming class. I am aware, as my hon. friends on your right, sir, are, that the farmers are suffering. We listened to interesting speeches in the house, on the sad plight of the western farmers. It is perhaps in order that representatives of the eastern farmers be heard from in regard to the financial state of the farming community in Quebec, Ontario and the maritime provinces. If they do not complain it is not because they do not feel the depression which prevails at present among all classes of society, but it is because they understand what our opponents do not seem to realize, namely, that the Liberal government, which was at the helm of public affairs previous to the last election, is not responsible for conditions existing to-day. May I repeat what I told my constituents: that the present economic situation which is a cause of distress to so many Canadians cannot be traced back to the government of this country. I wish to state that the depression prevailing is not due to the Conservative government. It might be said, perhaps, that the present administration which made so many pledges is responsible for the aggravated situation. May I point out, sir, in this connection, the difference between the tactics of our opponents and ours during the last election, our appeals to the people were founded on facts, sound and wise judgment, while their appeals were simply based on sentiment, while fully realizing that the Liberals were not responsible for the economic crisis. They were fully aware that such was not the fact. To-day, when in office, how do they act? I plainly ask the hon. Postmaster General to admit that if it be impossible to entirely remedy the present economic depression, at least the resolution of the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville aims at alleviating the present plight of farmers. I am quite aware that the hon. Postmaster General is somewhat annoyed at this resolution being introduced in the house, when deep in his heart he knows better than anyone that he should, himself, as a member of the Dominion cabinet, have discussed this matter with his colleagues and presented a bill bearing on this question. In acting thus, he would have given proof that he wished to fulfil the pledges he gave at the last election. May I suggest to the Postmaster General—

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Mr. Speaker, may I address the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): No, no.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): May I inquire from the hon. member—

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I would like to have my full time and I would therefore ask the Postmaster General to allow me to finish my remarks.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I ask the hon. member to tell the truth.

Mr. SPEAKER (Text): Unless the hon. member speaking permits a question, another hon. member may not interrupt.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): The hon. member has no right to state that I did not tell the truth.

[Mr. Dupuis.]

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Withdraw.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I suggest to the hon. Postmaster General, in all fairness, that he should withdraw that expression.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I state that I told the truth when I requested the hon. member for Laprairie to tell the truth as to what concerns me. The hon. member for Laprairie has not the right to attribute to me what I have never said, he has not the right to state in the house that I do not carry out the pledges which I give.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Order, order!

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): If those are the words which I used, I gladly withdraw them, because I have much respect for the hon. Postmaster General. What I did say, is that I feel certain that the hon. Postmaster General will insist on fulfilling his pledges. In closing my remarks, I would suggest to him that instead of blaming the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville for having introduced this resolution, he should confer immediately with his colleagues and the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) so as to have legislation passed by the house in order to help the farming class, something similar to the resolution of the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville.

Mr. F. H. PICKEL (Brome-Missisquoi) (Translation): I am very much interested in the indemnity paid to the farmers by the government for the loss of tuburculin tested cattle. As regards the first test that was made in my section of the province, we were adequately paid; the valuation was reasonable, but in the subsequent tests the valuation was in many cases too low. I am in perfect accord with the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume) in respect to the valuation of cattle at a maximum of $90 for cross breeds and $180 for thoroughbreds, but throughout the country there are many cross breeds that are not worth $90 and there are many thoroughbreds that are not worth $180, and I think the amount be left to the discretion of the veterinary who makes the test.

Mr. GOULET: It is left already.

Mr. PICKEL: This is a business proposition and no private individual going into a thing of this kind could make a uniform valuation on this kind of cattle.

The hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville and the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) quoted me as saying that I was in favour of the farmers getting their extra one-third for the cattle they had lost. I have no objection to the hon. members alleging what I said, but I take exception to their citing the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) as saying that I was circulating around the country the statement that he was in agreement with me. Such is not the case. I never spoke to the Prime Minister about the matter and he never signified his intention to me in that respect.

So far as the measure proposes an increase in the valuation of the cattle slaughtered, subject to the qualification I have made, I am in perfect accord with it and would support it.

Mr. ALFRED GOULET (Russell) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, as representative of one of the finest agricultural sections of Eastern Ontario, I will support the motion presented by the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume), because I believe it to be in the interest of the whole country. I have closely studied the question and I can state that the farmer is certainly not sufficiently compensated for the slaughter of his cattle. It is spring time when these cattle are first tested, a time when the milch cow produces the most, and yet when it is slaughtered the price paid is only that of beef-meat. Generally, at that time, the milch cow is not fit for market purpose, it is however fit to give good returns to the farmer. One must not forget that the government does not pay the two thirds of the $60 allotted for an ordinary cow. As the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville stated, the farmer only receives $28, or $30 to $32 for each animal. Not only should this resolution be adopted, but the act should be retroactive, that is in the counties where the test has been carried out the farmers should be further compensated because in replacing the cattle slaughtered they were put to heavy expenses.

Mr. ARTHUR DENIS (St. Denis) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of shocking some hon. members to your right—seeing that I represent a Montreal constituency composed mostly of workingmen—I wish to state that agricultural questions, and the farmers' interests are dear to me because I was brought up on a farm, and I have never forgotten my early years. One reason for being so attached to the farm, is that my father was one of those who laboured unceasingly to improve the lot of the farming class in Quebec. The resolution which has just been submitted to the consideration of the house, and which was so ably presented by the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume) deserves not only the approval and support of the representatives of the farming class but also that of a representative of the working class. I therefore take pride in supporting this resolution, at this time when we are passing through a period of depression, and from which farmers are not exempt. In my opinion, the farming class deserves our deepest sympathy. For a number of years the tuberculin test has been applied in this country, and on numerous occasions, assisted by some representatives of the farming class, we requested the government to increase the indemnity granted to farmers. Two thirds of the value is not sufficient to compensate farmers for the loss of cows fit to give them better returns than if they were sold for market purposes. The government through its numerous pledges during the last election, undertook to help the farming class. The hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Sauvé) for one, travelled over his county stating: "If you do me the honour of electing me to represent you in parliament, my first duty will be to help the farming class." The hon. member gave us a summary of his admirable behaviour in the Quebec legislature. He could have dispensed himself with talking about his doings while in Quebec. The Quebec government realized its duty when it found out that the Dominion government was opposed to granting farmers a sufficient indemnity to cover the loss of their cattle. It strikes me that if the hon. Postmaster General had been in earnest during the last election, his first duty in the house would have been to present a bill purporting to increase the indemnity granted to farmers, especially at a time of economic depression. The farmers are much affected by this depression. The hon. Postmaster General is well aware that one of his friends was charged, in the Quebec house with bringing into the county of Laval-Two Mountains tuberculous cattle and selling them to the farmers of that county, thus spreading the disease. This was a more serious offence than one is apt to realize at first sight. In order to make some compensation for the offence committed by his friend, it seems to me that he should have been the first to rise in the house and move the resolution which the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume) had the courage to present for the purpose of assisting the farmers he represents here with so much dignity and honour. I therefore wish to state again that I am strongly in favour of this resolution. I trust that the government will realize the propriety of our comments and that, at this session, it will present a bill purporting to increase the indemnities granted for all cattle slaughtered owing to the tuberculin test.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I invite your attention to the terms of the motion now under discussion. Resolution No. 23 on the order paper is as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the compensation of $60 provided for each head of cattle, male or female, as stipulated in chapter 6, section 14, subsection 2(a) of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, be raised to $90 and that the compensation of $150 stipulated in section 2(b) of the same section be raised to $180.

My objection is that if the resolution passed in its present form an expenditure of public money would be required. I am aware that opinions may be expressed by motions, but not on a motion such as the present one. Paragraph 558 in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms is in part as follows:

Motions advocating public expenditure, or the imposition of a charge, if the motion be framed in sufficiently abstract or general terms, can be entertained, and agreed to by the house.

The present resolution if passed, however, would express a positive opinion of the house that the action outlined in the resolution should be taken, and that the expenditures therein mentioned should be made. I submit it is beyond the powers of any hon. member to place such a resolution before the house.

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri): I should like to speak to the point of order raised by the minister. First I should like to know if the objection should not have come from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), who has the right to introduce such a measure. In Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms I find at page 63, paragraph 549, the following sentence:

The rule also applies to releasing or compounding any sum of money due to the crown and to the imposition of any state tax upon the people, but not to pecuniary penalties necessary to the operation of a bill.

If after a tuberculin test of an animal it is found necessary to slaughter it, to a certain extent a penalty is exacted by the department. For that reason I submit that the present resolution does not involve the expenditure of money but rather the increase of a penalty which already exists in a law on the statute book. I submit the point of order is not well taken. If the resolution involved expenditure of money by the crown or any transaction of a monetary nature I would say the objection was well taken, and that a private member should not have brought the resolution before the house. But the present resolution, as I have stated, merely provides an increase in a penalty already imposed by a statute.

[Mr. Denis.]

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): During the past five or six years resolutions of a similar nature have been brought before the house, and I think on some occasions a similar objection was taken to that now raised by the minister. For instance, there was a resolution proposing the expenditure of about $10,000,000 on highways, another for the expenditure of a large sum of money for technical education, and another for the relief of unemployment. Those resolutions all came before the house on previous occasions and the same point of order was raised. Probably in the strictest sense of the word the point is well taken, but on the other hand I think hon. members will agree that the usage and custom of late years has been to permit debate on such resolutions. Paragraph 558 in the rules which have been quoted states:

Motions advocating public expenditure, or the imposition of a charge, if the motion be framed in sufficiently abstract or general terms, can be entertained and agreed to by the house.

The resolution with which we are now dealing begins with the words: "That in the opinion of this house." The construction is of a general character; the house is not bound by the resolution. If passed it merely expresses an opinion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not agree with that.

Mr. POWER: The house is not bound by the resolution. The minister knows of dozens of resolutions which have passed this house but have never received legislative sanction or been enacted into law. I recall one occasion when without a dissenting voice a resolution was passed in favour of proportional representation. Time and again such resolutions have been passed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That resolution did not involve the expenditure of money. My objection is based on the fact that the present resolution involves a money vote.

Mr. POWER: My point is that the resolution if passed represents merely an expression of opinion.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): If a member of the government brings down a resolution for consideration in committee of the whole, such resolution may form the basis of a bill, which after first, second and third readings may receive the royal assent. In the present case, however, we are merely dealing with a resolution, and ask only for an opinion from hon. members. I understand quite well that if an expenditure were involved the resolution would have to be introduced for consideration in committee of the whole.

Mr. SPEAKER: When the question was raised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) I was looking into the rules myself. I was of opinion that if the present resolution was not a violation of the rules and practice of the house it was very close to it. Several members have quoted paragraph 558 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. This, a repetition of May's statement at page 518 of the thirteenth edition, is as follows:

> Motions advocating public expenditure, or the imposition of a charge, if the motion be framed in sufficiently abstract or general terms, can be entertained, and agreed to by the house. Resolutions of this nature are permissible because, having no operative effect, no grant is made or burden imposed by their adoption.

I think this resolution goes further than that. It is practically an order to the house. It sets out the amount of compensation paid now, and says that in the opinion of the house that compensation should be raised to particular and stipulated sums. If the motion were agreed to, I should think the government would be bound to act on it. If on the other hand the resolution had said that the government should consider doing so and so, it would be in terms broad enough to come within the usages of the house and the rules.

I must rule that the resolution as at present framed is not one that can be introduced by a private member, and is therefore out of order.

TREATY OF VERSAILLES

PROPOSAL TO GIVE EFFECT TO PRINCIPLE OF EIGHT HOUR DAY

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River) moved:

> Whereas, the Dominion of Canada is a signatory to the articles of peace of the Treaties of Versailles, thereby subscribing to the principle of a maximum working day of eight hours;
> Therefore be it resolved that this house is of the opinion that the government of Canada should take appropriate steps to ensure, throughout Canada, the fulfilment of our treaty obligations and conventions arising out of the peace treaty, relating to hours of work.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it will be noticed that this resolution does not direct the government to take any specific steps but to take appropriate steps to ensure throughout Canada a maximum working day of eight hours. No doubt hon. members will recall the treaty of peace signed at Versailles on June 28, 1919. Part XIII, known as the labour section, lays down certain principles governing a maximum working day and a maximum working week. That treaty was signed on behalf of Canada by the then Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden. Arising out of the treaty a conference was held in Washington in October, 1919, and again the government of Canada was represented. At the conference the principle of the eight hour day was accepted and recommended to the respective governments of the several countries that were there interested and represented. For the information of the house I will read that section one of the Treaty of Versailles embodying the principle of the eight hour day:

> Whereas the League of Nations has for its object the establishment of universal peace, and such a peace can be established only if it is based upon social justice;
> And whereas conditions of labour exist involving such injustice, hardship and privation to large numbers of people as to produce unrest so great that the peace and harmony of the world are imperilled; and an improvement of those conditions is urgently required: as, for example, by the regulation of the hours of work, including the establishment of a maximum working day and week, the regulation of the labour supply, the prevention of unemployment, the provision of an adequate living wage, the protection of the worker against sickness, disease and injury arising out of his employment, the protection of children, young persons and women, provision for old age and injury, protection of the interests of workers when employed in countries other than their own, recognition of the principle of freedom of association, the organization of vocational and technical education and other measures;
> Whereas also the failure of any nation to adopt humane conditions of labour is an obstacle in the way of other nations which desire to improve the conditions in their own countries:
> The high contracting parties, moved by sentiments of justice and humanity, as well as by the desire to secure the permanent peace of the world, agree to the following:

Then follows chapter 1, dealing with the establishment of a permanent organization, which afterwards became known as the international labour organization. As I said, in October, 1919, arising out of that provision in the treaty of peace a conference was held at Washington. At that conference it was agreed that a majority of two-thirds of the delegates present should be necessary on the final vote for the adoption of the recommendations of the draft convention. It is evident that the matter was well thought out and discussed at length. The principal of the eight-hour day was adopted at Washington and the convention was referred to the different member countries for ratification. When the ratification of the convention was considered by the Canadian government there arose the question of conflicting federal and provincial jurisdiction. In some quarters it was contended that it was a Dominion matter inasmuch as the treaty had been signed by the Prime Minister of Canada. In other quarters it was contended that it was a provincial matter under the British North America Act. So in 1925 the question of jurisdiction was submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada, which decided that the regulation of hours of labour came within the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities, but that of course the Dominion government had sole jurisdiction over its own employees. In 1930 the federal government implemented its part of the convention by legislation as far as it was possible for it to go. On the 27th of March, 1930, there was passed an order in council, which in brief, gives the eight-hour day to all Dominion employees. There was also passed an act respecting fair wages and the eight-hour day for labour employed on public works of the Dominion. This act was assented to on May 30, 1930. Representations have been made to the various provinces, from many quarters, that they should implement their part of the treaty.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but would he state whether the legislation passed last year had the effect of giving the eight hour day to all employees of the Dominion government?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: All Dominion government servants now are under the eight hour day legislation?

Mr. HEENAN: There are certain exceptions.

Mr. GEARY: There are certain postal employees who are not under that legislation.

Mr. HEENAN: I will read the order in council, if it is desired. The exact terms have gone from my memory.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like that point cleared up, if possible.

Mr. HEENAN: This is order in council P.C. 670, approved by the Governor General on March 26, 1930. It reads as follows:

The committee of the privy council have had before them a report dated March 19, 1930, from the Minister of Labour, submitting as follows:

1. That it was recognized in the labour part of the Treaty of Versailles and the corresponding provisions of the other treaties of peace that the well being—physical, moral and intellectual—of the industrial wage-earners is of supreme international importance, and that although differences of climate, habits and customs, economic principles and industrial traditions make strict uniformity in the conditions of labour difficult of immediate attainment, there are methods and principles for regulating labour conditions which all industrial communities should endeavour to apply, so far as their special circumstances will permit.

[Mr. Heenan.]

2. That approval was expressed in the peace treaties of the principle of the eight hour working day.

3. That a draft convention was adopted at the first session of the conference of the international labour organization (League of Nations) in 1919, to limit hours of work in industrial undertakings to eight hours per day.

4. That the draft convention above mentioned was referred in 1924 to the select standing committee on industrial and international relations of the House of Commons of Canada for examination and report.

5. That on the recommendation of the committee on industrial and international relations of the House of Commons, approved by the House of Commons, the draft convention of hours of work in industrial undertakings was referred by order in council to the Supreme Court of Canada, with a view to determining the jurisdiction of the federal and provincial authorities respectively, on this subject.

6. That the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada contained the following declaration: "The subject matter is generally within the competence of the legislatures of the provinces, but the authority vested in these legislatures does not enable them to give the force of law to provisions such as those contained in the draft convention in relation to servants of the Dominion government, or to legislate for those parts of Canada which are not within the boundaries of a province."

That is to say, the legislatures could not legislate for territory under the jurisdiction of the Dominion government, or for Dominion public servants. I continue to read:

7. That a report from the Civil Service Commission, which was submitted to Your Excellency in Council under date of February 16, 1925, showed that the standard daily hours of work of monthly rate employees in the government departments are from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., with an interval for luncheon, and a half holiday on Saturday, and that the standard hours of prevailing rate employees, numbering 1,576 in Ottawa and 18,264 outside Ottawa (of whom 12,247 were postmasters paid on percentage basis) are 44 hours per week, based on an eight hour day for five days and four hours, or a half holiday, on Saturday.

Certain exceptions to these standard hours of work were also noted in the report of the Civil Service Commission.

8. That request has been made to the government for the granting of the eight hour day to its own employees.

9. That it is desirable that the principle of the eight hour day should be applied to any branches of the public service of Canada in which it is not now observed.

Then comes the recommendation of the minister:

The minister accordingly recommends that, excepting in cases where the work of employees is intermittent in character, or the application of this rule is not deemed to be practicable or in the public interest, the hours of work of any employees of the Dominion government who are still required to work more than eight hours daily be reduced to eight hours daily, with a half holiday on Saturday.

The committee concur in the foregoing recommendation, and submit the same for approval.

So when that was approved by His Excellency in Council, every employee of the Dominion government was placed on the eight hour day with the exception of those in connection with whom the minister would say it was not deemed to be practical or in the public interest. In other words, the employees of the Dominion government automatically went on the eight hour day the moment that order in council was passed, and it was then up to the different departments to say what was not practical or what was not in the public interest.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Would the hon. member say when this order in council was passed?

Mr. HEENAN: March 27, 1930.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): That was during the hon. member's administration as Minister of Labour?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Could the hon. member tell me, then, why the eight hour day was not enforced in the various penitentiaries in Canada with regard to the guards, if that was the policy of the government?

Mr. HEENAN: I am not trying to lay the blame on this or any other government; I simply want to point out that this order in council was passed in March, 1930, putting every employee of the Dominion government on the eight hour day except where the minister would say it was not in the public interest. I take it for granted that either minister of justice, of that day and of this day, must have said that it was not in the public interest to have penitentiary guards on the eight hour day.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Was there not an act passed last session superseding this order in council?

Mr. HEENAN: No. I think I know what my hon. friend has in mind. The legislation having to do with fair wages and the eight hour day applied to public works and contracts. The order in council I have just read applied to Dominion government employees, while the act with respect to fair wages and the eight hour day for labour employed on public works of the Dominion of Canada, which is chapter 20-21, George V, assented to on May 30, 1930, provided:

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. This act may be cited as The Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act, 1930.

2. In this act, the expression "minister" means the Minister of Labour.

3. (1) Every contract made hereafter with the government of Canada for construction, remodelling, repair or demolition of any work shall be subject to the following conditions respecting wages and hours:—

(a) all persons in the employ of the contractor, sub-contractor, or of any other person doing or contracting to do the whole or any part of the work contemplated by the contract shall be paid such wages as are generally accepted as current from time to time for competent workmen in the district in which the work is being performed for the character or class of work in which they are respectively engaged; provided that wages shall in all cases be such as are fair and reasonable;

(b) The working hours of persons while so employed shall not exceed eight hours per day except in such special cases as the Governor in Council may otherwise provide, or except in cases of emergency, as may be approved by the minister.

(2) The provisions of this section shall not apply to persons employed in the fabrication or manufacture of materials, supplies or equipment for use in the work contemplated where such fabrication or manufacture is carried on in any established plant or factory other than a plant or factory established for the purposes of the work contemplated.

4. The wages and hours of all workmen employed by the government of Canada on such works as are described in section three, and who are excluded from the operation of the Civil Service Act, shall be those set forth in paragraphs (a) and (b) of section three.

5. (1) The Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the minister, may make regulations with regard to wages and hours herein provided for and without limiting the generality of the foregoing may provide by regulation for,—

(a) the method of determining what are current or fair and reasonable wages and the preparation and use of schedules of rates relating thereto;

(b) rates of wages for overtime;

(c) classifications of employment or work;

(d) the publication and posting of wage schedules;

(e) payment of wages to employees in case of default by the contractor or other party charged with such payment and recovery thereof from such contractor or other party;

(f) the keeping of proper books and records and the examination of the same by government officers;

(g) persons who may be employed on works referred to in this act;

(h) the subletting of contracts;

(i) the penalties to be imposed for breaches of the provisions of this act or regulations made hereunder;

(j) generally for the due enforcement of the provisions of the act and regulations.

(2) All regulations made under this act shall fifteen days after the date of the first publication thereof in the Canada Gazette have the same force and effect as if they had been included herein.

It will be seen that the Dominion government has gone about as far as it is possible to go in a legislative way; the problem is how to get the provinces to carry out their obligations under the treaty. I do not believe that Canada because of its peculiar constitution desires to evade its treaty obligations. There is only one province which has put into effect the eight-hour day—the province of British Columbia, where my good friend (Mr. Mackenzie) comes from. When I was a member of the Ontario legislature in 1924 I moved a resolution and secured its passage, after it had been amended on motion of the premier of the day, to provide for an eight-hour day in all private and public undertakings. The motion passed the legislature but up to the present time has not been implemented in a general way. That is the result in the province of Ontario which is not considered to be at all backward.

This treaty was signed in 1919 and we have now reached 1931 without any action being taken. It is time the Dominion government as a signatory on behalf of the whole of Canada should take the necessary steps to see that our treaty obligations are carried out. While this resolution which I have the honour to move this evening does not suggest what steps the government should take, hon. members will realize that there are many ways by which the desired result can be obtained. One is by the calling of a conference between the Dominion and the provinces and pointing out that inasmuch as Canada has certain treaty obligations they as provinces should implement them so far as their jurisdiction will permit. If by chance any province or provinces still desire to remain in a backward state and thus take advantage of other provinces which are more progressive, then I think it is the duty of the Dominion government to ask for an amendment to the British North America Act to enable it to carry out its treaty obligations in that regard. I hope that that step will not be necessary, and that the provinces will be unanimous in their desire to carry out these obligations.

Because of the position which he took when leader of the opposition, and again at the last session, perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), by attaching conditions to proposed tariff amendments, will take steps to implement these obligations. My motion leaves the matter wide open. I am not criticizing anyone because it may be felt that the action proposed by this resolution might have been taken long ago; but I do suggest that now is the time for the government to take appropriate steps to see to the fulfilment of our treaty obligations respecting hours of work.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, while I have every sympathy with the hon. member who has introduced the resolution (Mr. Heenan), I must say that it would have come with better grace had he taken action a year or two ago when he was Minister of Labour in a government which had the power to do the very thing he now proposes. However, it is well that he is at last converted to the necessity of fulfilling our obligations under the treaty. In fact I believe he has been converted to the necessity all along; it was a question of the government of which he was a member accepting his advice in this regard. Now that a new government is in office, I hope they will not dilly-dally until they are again in opposition before seeing the necessity of action.

We meet again with our old friend the British North America Act. I do not intend to traverse the ground covered the other day in the discussion which took place as to the necessity of Canada's having the power to amend her own constitution, but it would seem to me as a layman—I cannot say how it may seem to some of the legal minds in the house—that if Canada had the authority to sign a peace treaty she has a very definite responsibility to see that the terms of that treaty are carried out. We have been very censorious with regard to certain nations who have not fully lived up to their obligations under the peace treaty, but we must remember that the labour clauses of the peace treaty are just as solemn and just as binding as those which relate to boundaries, reparations, disarmament, and so on.

We have our responsibilities, and it was felt when these clauses were inserted, that labour, having suffered a great deal and having waived its claims during the war, had a right to certain consideration after the war was over. Therefore these labour clauses were inserted in the treaty. It must be remembered that unless we on our part live up to our obligations, it is going to be very difficult for other nations who signed the treaty, to live up to theirs. The idea was that we should have certain recognized standards pertaining to labour, and the eight hour day was amongst them. It would seem to me that in our British North America Act there is already ample provision to carry out our obligations under the treaty. There are certain residuary powers left to the Dominion, and I think we have fairly good judicial ground for saying that these residuary powers are sufficient to enable us to carry out our obligations.

The mover of the resolution made this statement: "There is only one province that implemented its obligations under the peace treaty." To me these words show the utter absurdity of the present position. No one province has obligations under the peace treaty. It was not a province that made the war; it was not a province that signed the treaty. It was the Dominion that went to war; it was the Dominion that signed the treaty that brought the war to an end, and it is the Dominion and not an individual province that is responsible. Therefore we do not get anywhere by assuming that any province has obligations under the treaty. It is we as a Dominion who signed the treaty and it is we as a Dominion who should hold ourselves responsible for implementing the clauses in the treaty. I cannot help thinking after all it is because organized labour in Canada is comparatively weak that we have had such a long delay in carrying out these clauses in the peace treaty.

The fact is that until very recently we have had a considerable number of employees in the public service who have beeen working more than the eight hour day, and I believe there are still some in the public service who are working longer hours. Someone has called my attention to the fact that we have persons in the postal service and so on who are in this position. I cannot very well believe any minister can take the ground that it is in the interest of the people of Canada that men should work longer hours.

Let me call attention also to the seamen, certain grades of whom are working ten and twelve hours a day. They are a class of men who should be considered as coming directly under the Dominion authority; certainly they do not come under any provincial authority, and yet no one so far as I am aware has made any effort to modify our shipping act so that the men who go down to the sea in ships should work only eight hours a day. This is something that comes directly under Dominion jurisdiction.

A year ago attention was called to a large number of people in Canada who were working not only eight and ten hours but even twelve hours a day, and during certain periods, twelve hours a day for seven days a week. Every hon. member who was here a year ago must recall the debates which took place in the house in connection with the steel schedules and the proposal that some of us put forward that increases in the tariff should be made contingent upon the adoption of the eight hour day in the steel works at Sault Ste. Marie and at Sydney. Somebody asks: Who was the Minister of Labour then? The Minister of Labour then was the mover of this resolution (Mr. Heenan). I do not want to press that too hard, because not only did the government of that day refuse to do anything, but I recall that although the opposition gave us some support for a time, when the motion was actually pressed to a division they would not stand behind it. At that time we had a splendid opportunity of insisting that increases in the tariff should be made contingent upon the eight hour day, but it was not taken advantage of. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) promised, however, that unless changes were made within the year, the eight hour day would be enforced in the steel works. I understand some of the men have since been put on the eight hour day and some on a ten hour day, but no legislation has been brought into effect.

It is several years since the premier of one of the provinces wrote a letter urging the Dominion government to call an interprovincial conference at which this matter could be discussed and some uniform action taken. That request was not complied with by the late government. I would urge that the present government should call such a conference at an early date so that an understanding might be arrived at with regard to this matter. For example, as regards the steel workers it would be quite possible to have Ontario and Nova Scotia agree on the eight hour day proposal, and the other provinces would probably fall into line. Indeed it seems to be very late in the day that we in Canada should be discussing the desirability of adopting the eight hour day when economists almost all over the world are urging that it is necessary to have less than an eight hour day, to have a six hour day and possibly a five day week, if we are to overcome the present difficulty arising because of the large number who are unemployed. I recognize that unless concurrent legislation along other lines is passed, the eight hour day might work a hardship in some of the factories in Canada. There are some people engaged on piece work who are driven very hard on a very low wage and it is impossible for them during an eight hour day to make a sufficient wage to bring their standard of living up to anything like decency.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): They could be exempted.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It has been suggested that they could be exempted. I would say no; rather side by side with the legislation for the eight hour day we ought to have minimum wage legislation which would make it impossible for any employer to hire men at less than a decent living wage. We are coming to that stage when we ought to regard men as at least of as great importance as cattle and horses. If owners starve their cattle or horses, we summon them for cruelty; surely we ought to insist that employers, if they are going to hire employees at all, should pay them a decent living wage. If then we are to have an eight hour day in this country, we should have concurrent legislation providing for a minimum wage so that men would receive a total annual wage sufficient to support themselves and their families. As one studies the industrial life across the country, one realizes that we are facing a new situation. Hundreds of thousands of our citizens are unemployed; people are going without work for weeks and months in the year. We ought to distribute work more evenly, and so, if we are producing more, as we seem to be, than the people have the power to purchase, one of the next steps would be to cut down the hours, as has been suggested, to a six hour day and a five day week. The distribution of the work over a larger group, would enable industry to absorb many of the unemployed. Of course there again we would have to have such legislation as would ensure that a lessening of the number of hours per week would not mean a lowered wage. The time has come when we must give very serious consideration to the great industrial problem that is now facing us. We cannot simply drift along allowing some employers to overwork their men for a few months and then turn them adrift, and allowing other employers to put in machines and turn out thousands of employees without giving them any chance of getting a job at all. I thought that we were worse off in the west than they were in the east. Probably we are, but only a few minutes ago I was talking to some gentlemen from Quebec who were telling me something of the conditions there. The same serious difficulties are beginning to develop in the east, with men drifting about on freight trains from city to city finding it impossible to get any sort of job at all. The resolution I know does not go beyond the implementing of our obligations under the peace treaty, but in view of the serious unemployment situation it seems to me that we ought to give more careful attention than ever before to the idea of a general limitation of hours of labour.

Further may I point out that we are holding back reform legislation in other countries? I can never read the information bulletins as sent out from the labour office at Geneva and observe how far behind the other nations Canada is without a sense of shame coming over me. Instead of being in the van, we are rather a drag on the wheels of progress.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. BROWN: A good deal of emphasis has been laid on the fact that Canada is not living up to its obligations assumed under the peace treaty. Would the hon. gentleman give some information on that point? In what respects are we more remiss than other nations? Can the hon. gentleman give us the facts?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am sorry I have not the documents of the International Labour Office here with me, but I fancy that a good many hon. members receive the information published monthly from the labour office at Geneva. There is a table showing the ratifications of the various conventions by the nations that are members of the league. A glance at that table shows that many nations have lived up to their obligations. Canada's space is almost a blank. I recognize that as we are a federal nation it is more difficult for us to carry out some of these obligations than it is for some other nations, but that does not altogether absolve us from responsibility in the matter. Certainly in this matter of ratifications we are far behind a number of the nations of Europe. We try to tell our immigrants how happy they should be to live in Canada. We believe that Canada is one of the most highly civilized countries, yet a great many of these immigrants who have come to us from the nations of central Europe have been accustomed to the eight hour day and other conditions which make for a high standard of living. If there were an opportunity later in the debate, I should be very glad to supply my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown) with the information that he asked for.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I hesitated to rise to my feet, Mr. Speaker, first of all because I had no desire to enter into this debate, and secondly because I was waiting in expectation that the established custom would be followed, and that some member representing the government would make a statement of policy on such an important matter. These private resolutions are brought before the house necessarily in a somewhat vague and academic way because we know the rules prohibit their being brought forward in a more positive manner. We had an illustration of that a few minutes ago when, after discussing a resolution that appeared to be perfectly in order, it was ruled out on a technicality. Nevertheless, these resolutions are brought in because it is the only method the representatives of the people have of informing the government of the temper, feeling and desires of the people they represent in these public matters. It is generally supposed—perhaps it is more honoured in the expression than in the actual fact—that some member of the cabinet, more particularly the one whose department is concerned, will at least attend in his place and give some expression of the policy or intentions of the government in the matter. I would not have got to my feet at all if we had heard some expression from the minister who I presume represents in this house the Minister of Labour who is in another chamber.

Something has been said about the eight-hour day being in force in government departments throughout Canada. I am sorry that the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Plunkett) is not in his seat, because no doubt he would be able to tell me whether the conditions still exist which I heard of a few months ago, of an employee of one of the government offices in Victoria working twelve hours a day and seven days a week and fifty-two weeks in the year. When some protest was made, a subordinate official in that department expressed the opinion that it was quite all right. I think he said that this employee got three weeks' holidays in the year, and that should suffice him. Suffice him, after working twelve hours a day, and seven days a week, fifty-two weeks in the year, except for the three weeks' holiday?

I recall some years ago, when the agitation first became more or less pressing for legislation to provide for old age pensions, the government of the day issued some kind of manifesto in which they admitted that they were pledged to carry out the provisions of the Treaty of Versailles or of the conventions adopted at Washington, one of which was the one before us. Another related to old age pensions. In that manifesto the government said that they were fully seized of their responsibility in the matter, and they deemed that they had discharged their duty to the fullest extent of their ability and obligation by informing the various provinces that it was up to them. Then they washed their hands of the matter and were quite happy to leave it like that. As the hon. member who preceded me (Mr. Woodsworth) said, they appeared to think that Canada had assumed no responsibility as a nation when she signed the treaty. But the pressure of public opinion, particularly labour opinion grew stronger and stronger, and by and by it was discovered that the Dominion did have some power in connection with some of these matters; that while they could not exclusively deal with such things they did have such power as would enable them to help and assist the provinces in carrying out the obligations which, while technically provincial, were really in the upshot of a federal character. So legislation was brought down giving assistance to the provinces in carrying out at least one of the nation's obligations, and that was with regard to old age pensions. We all recall the objections that were raised by those who were then sitting on this side of the house, and how they pointed out how very unconstitutional it was for the federal government to take that action. It was butting into provincial matters, they said, and nothing but harm could come of it; it would be resented by the provinces and would lead to all kinds of disaster; it was going too far, on the one hand, and was not going to get anywhere, on the other. Since then, possibly in response to the pressure of public opinion, and possibly with some faint regard to the prospect of an election in the immediate future, we find that one of the big parties pledged itself, if not to grant 100 per cent of the old age pension, to grant 99 per cent; thereby admitting that they could from the first have assumed practically the whole obligation. So I hope that we are advancing step by step until finally we shall be able to adjust between the two contracting parties, the provinces and the Dominion, the carrying out of some of these obligations which up to the present, with very few exceptions, we have been decidedly ignoring.

As a nation we are ignoring our obligations. We boast of our nationality and we signed the treaty of Versailles as a nation, but we are not living up to the obligations we then assumed. The suggestion has been made, and very aptly I think, by both hon. members who preceded me, that there should be a conference called. In the absence of any light or leading on the part of the government I would again urge that the conference be held. A meeting between the provinces and the Dominion is very urgently required to solve several matters, such as that of affording relief during the coming winter. Every day the authorities in the towns and cities in the province of British Columbia are passing resolutions demanding this conference and saying that it must be held to take care not only of the certainty of need of relief for the next winter but also of the relief actually needed at the present time. People do not realize that although we are in the middle of the so called busy season every city has a substantial problem of relief assistance on its hands. If such a conference as I suggested a few days ago was held, it would be an appropriate time for the Dominion government to lay before the provinces this aspect of the case. Federal authorities might say at such a time that they were prepared to give with a liberal hand and might ask the provinces not to forget their obligation. They might say to the provinces "If we help you on the one hand, what will you do to carry out your obligations in connection with matters with which you are as deeply concerned as we?" Such a conference would afford an appropriate opportunity to make some reasonable negotiations with the different provinces who are not in a position to flout this government or to say that they will pay no attention to its recommendations.

Mention has been made of men working less than eight hours a day. There are now a large number of men working less than eight hours, many of them because of hard times and other through a sense of loyalty to their fellow workmen. They are willing to work shorter hours so that the work may be spread around. Some employers are taking advantage of the labour situation, requiring their men to work short hours and in return giving equally short wages. On the other hand there are many firms which have realized the gravity of the situation and in order to spread the work around have put the men not only on eight hour shifts but on six hour shifts, and in most cases the men cheerfully agreed in the attempt to help their fellow men in distress.

The last speaker (Mr. Woodsworth) mentioned the conditions in the steel works of the eastern provinces. Taken by and large the average employer, like the average worker, is a pretty decent man; he will not abuse his employees or take advantage of an unfortunate situation. I am speaking about the bulk of them. Of course there are some who are consciousless and disregard their obligations. There are some who would take advantage of their fellow beings for the sake of making a little money—at least they think they make a little more money, but perhaps they do not. Those men, however, for the sake of some slight pecuniary reward will, as it is stated in scripture, "grind the faces of the poor." Those numbers are comparatively small. It would seem wise for us by legislation to lend our weight to assist those men who are willing to do the right thing rather than handicap them by having to compete with men who are false to their God, their neighbour and themselves.

It has been alleged, and truly I believe, that our lack of action has given an excuse for similar lack of action in other countries. I think one hon. member asked to what extent Canada had fallen short of the standards of other countries. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre answered in a general way, not having his data before him. I am in a similar position, in this connection I shall refer to the records of the labour conventions passed at the meetings of the League of Nations at Geneva. In passing I would remark I think it was a mistake that those resolutions were called "conventions." If they had been called "resolutions" the people would have understood that they were binding thmesleves to something. People have a vague idea of the meaning of the word "conventions", and they do not understand they are binding themselves to a solemn obligation and agreeing to do such and such a thing. If the word "treaty" had been used I think the position would hve been clearer and the actual contractional obligations would have been understood. I am speaking from memory and am subject to correction, but I think that the conventions dealing with labour situations throughout the world issued by the League of Nations at Geneva numbered about four hundred. I believe the exact figure was in the neighborhood of four hundred and thirty. The number to which Canada agreed was, I am sorry to say woefully few. I should not like to go on record as to how few, but I think the exact number was in the neighbourhood of thirty-five. So that no matter what other nations have done we have a long way to go before we overtake some of those nations which, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, have obligated themselves to carry out a large number of the conventions, and have done so. The debate is not closed, and in fairness, and with no intention to criticize the government, I would suggest that the minister give us a lead in the matter by outlining the intentions of the government, if any. We should know whether the government purposes to do anything or to disregard the matter. I think that hon. members should be taken into the confidence of the government. Many times during this session when questions have been asked on the orders of the day we have been told that here and now is not the moment to discuss such and such a matter. We have been given assurances, we have been promised that at some distant and unmentioned date declarations of policies would be made. I suggest that now one of those auspicious moments has arrived; the time seems to be ripe for the government to declare its policy on the subject which has been brought up for discussion. The resolution has not been proposed for the sake of hearing ourselves talk or for the sake of taking up the time of hon. members—we would rather be at home. I think this matter is one of sufficient importance to merit an expression of policy or opinion on the part of the government of the day.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that I express the view of every hon. member in the house when I say that none of us, if given the opportunity, would be slow to take any steps which would assist the workingmen or those who for the time being may not be getting just as much of this world's goods as some others. I am not in agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) when he brings Canada to task for being behind the other nations of the world in connection with social legislation. It is true that during the short time I have been connected with the Department of Labour I have not had occasion to inquire into conditions in all the provinces. But I do know that in Ontario, with whose laws I am probably more familiar than with those of any other province, many measures have been enacted seeking to alleviate—yes, I will say it—the unfair position in which workers have been placed. The Workman's Compensation Act passed by the legislature in the days of the late Sir James Whitney was, I think we will all agree, one of the best pieces of social legislation that was ever enacted on this North American continent or in any other part of the world. That legislation was not thrown together indifferently and passed hurriedly; it was the result of years of careful study and investigation. It is based on a firm foundation, and provides for a fund to which industry contributes in sufficient measure to ensure the success of the legislation. I believe that all the other provinces have enacted similar legislation, and to-day we no longer see our workmen obliged to seek redress in the courts for damages arising out of accidents.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think the hon minister recognizes that applies to industry only, not to agriculture. In a number of countries of Europe workmen's compensation applies also to agricultural workers.

Mr. GORDON: I am not acquainted with the countries where workmen's compensation applies to agriculture, but I hazard the opinion—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have a table before me giving the countries.

Mr. GORDON: I do not know of any studied attempt in this country to have agriculture brought under the terms of the Workman's Compensation Act.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is where we happen to be behind other countries.

Mr. GORDON: I very much doubt if agriculture would be content to share the same burden as is assumed by industry to contribute to the fund necessary to render effective the legislation in this province. Then we have statutes in Ontario and in the other provinces to provide assistance for those engaged in industry.

Now, the pact to which reference has been made does not, I think, cast upon any of the signatory powers the obligation to invoke its very terms. The treaty with respect to labour conditions is more in the nature of a guide for those who signed it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A chart.

Mr. GORDON: A chart if you like, although perhaps I will not use the word because it has not yet been adopted by this side of the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): You need one badly.

Mr. GORDON: It is more in the nature of a guide towards bringing into effect the suggestions contained in the treaty. The treaty begins:

> The high contracting parties in order to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war, by the prescription of open, just and honourable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments, and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized peoples with one another, agree to this covenant of the League of Nations.

Reference has been made to part XIII of the treaty. It is as follows:

> Whereas the League of Nations has for its object the establishment of universal peace, and such a peace can be established only if it is based upon social justice;
> And whereas conditions of labour exist involving such injustice, hardship and privation to large numbers of people as to produce unrest so great that the peace and harmony of the world are imperilled; and an improvement of those conditions is urgently required: as, for example, by the regulation of the hours of work, including the establishment of a maximum working day and week, the regulation of the labour supply, the prevention of unemployment, the provision of an adequate living wage, the protection of the worker against sickness, disease and injury arising out of his employment, the protection of children, young persons and women, provision for old age anl injury protection of the interests of workers wher employed in countries other than their own recognition of the principle of freedom of association, the organization of vocational and technical education and other measures:

Now, I hazard the opinion that not a nation in the world, let alone those that have signed this treaty, has been able to accomplish anything like that. The treaty never contemplated that its signatories would go back to their respective countries and pass laws to bring these things about. Following that preamble the treaty set up the machinery whereby all these subjects could be brought before the accredited representatives of the countries concerned for discussion and investigation, in the hope that the suggestions therein contained might be realized.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But a large number of the signatory countries have actually passed such legislation.

Mr. GORDON: They may have passed such legislation, but I doubt if it has accomplished what this preamble seeks to accomplish. For instance, I should like to know what nation in the world to-day is not troubled with unemployment. Those countries may have solemnly passed such legislation, but probably it is just as effective as some of the resolutions which we pass concerning the abolition of war and establishing the world on a permanent peace basis. In section 2 of part XIII I find the following:

The high contracting parties recognize that differences of climate, habits and customs, of economic opportunity and industrial tradition, make strict uniformity in the conditions of labour difficult of immediate attainment. But, holding as they do, that labour should not be regarded merely as an article of commerce, they think that there are methods and principles for regulating labour conditions which all industrial communities should endeavour to apply, so far as their special circumstances will permit.

Now undoubtedly that and other sections of the treaty were designed to take care of just such a situation as we have. Remember, I am not quarrelling with the spirit of the resolution at all, because if by conference or by arrangement with the provinces and with industry, yes, with agriculture, we can bring about a state of affairs that will enable us to lend assistance to any class of people in this country, then I am sure the government would work towards that end, and I believe it would receive the support of every hon. member. Some effort has been made in this direction. True, ten or twelve years have passed since this treaty was signed, and I do not know whether any conferences were called in view of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in 1924. But at any rate, whether we like it or not, our constitution divides certain powers between the Dominion and the provinces, and how we can get away from that division and still preserve the rights of the provinces I have not yet heard anyone suggest.

Mr. NEILL: What was the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in 1924?

Mr. GORDON: The substance of their judgment in 1924—

Mr. GUTHRIE: 1925.

Mr. GORDON: My colleague says the decision was given in 1925. Its substance was that under the British North America Act the Dominion government did not have complete power to bring into being or establish the principles contained in the treaty and render them binding upon the provinces, as no doubt my friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) knows, on account of the division of authority between the Dominion and the provinces under certain sections of the British North America Act. At any rate, at least it is hopeful to see that the federal government has passed legislation going as far as the government of the day felt they could go towards making the law applicable to work undertaken by the Dominion and to employees of the Dominion government. Probably it is to be regretted that steps were not taken to confer with the provinces sooner with a view to investigating the situation within the various provinces in the hope that common ground could be found where joint action, if necessary, could be taken by the federal and provincial authorities in order to satisfy, in so far as it can be satisfied, the principle laid down in the treaty.

So far as this government is concerned, certainly we will not be unmindful of the rights of those who would be concerned with the acceptance of the spirit of this resolution. There are some matters in connection with it which undoubtedly would give trouble, other than the division of legislative authority. Personally I know that in a number of industries a very considerable number of workers would not be satisfied with the eight hour day. The workers to whom I have particular reference are those working on community contracts. They would prefer to work longer hours in order to get the additional remuneration which would result from those longer hours of labour.

Mr. NEILL: What kind of work are they engaged in?

Mr. GORDON: I have particular reference to those engaged in contract mining.

Mr. NEILL: In metalliferous mines?

Mr. GORDON: Yes. They do not constitute any large class, but there are other classes of labour who carry on in the same way and by whom complaints undoubtedly would be voiced.

I am not here for the purpose of criticizing any government of the past for not having gone further than they did go; I think criticism of that character would serve no useful purpose. There may have been good and sufficient reasons why the matters were not investigated further in the past. On behalf of this government I can only say that this whole situation will be given consideration and study in the hope that something may be evolved which will be at least a partial solution of the subject matter of this resolution.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure the country will appreciate the promise made by the minister that at least consideration will be given this important matter by the government, but if consideration is along the lines of the early part of my hon. friend's speech, I am afraid the result will not amount to very much. It did seem to me, in listening to my hon. friend, that, in so far as it might place obligations upon the provinces, he was seeking to relieve the government of all responsibility whatever with respect to the treaty, at least I took that to be the significance of his remarks.

I do not agree with the minister in that, though I agree with him entirely when he says the provinces and the Dominion each have different obligations in the matter of legislation. However, if there is a treaty which imposes upon the country as a whole an obligation with respect to such a great question as the eight-hour day, it does seem to me the Dominion is thereby brought into a very special relationship with the provinces, to see that in some way, if at all possible, the provisions of the treaty in that particular are made applicable in the provinces as well as in the Dominion.

Mr. GORDON: Would the right hon. gentleman be satisfied if this government equated in time and effort the work of the late government in bringing about anything of this character?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I only hope this government will begin to approach what was done by the late government. I can hardly think they will do so, but I hope very much they will. Matters of this kind must necessarily be proceeded with by stages. Undoubtedly where an obligation is placed upon both the Dominion and the provinces, the provinces would expect the Dominion in the first instance to fulfil in letter and spirit alike the obligation as it bears upon the Dominion. The ex-Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) has given to the house this evening a résumé of the legislation enacted by the late administration when it was in office. He made it clear, and I think it is apparent to all, that while the late administration was in office it did place upon the statutes legislation with respect to the eight-hour day, which went just as far as it was possible for this parliament to enact legislation of the kind. We made a provision with respect to all public work—

Mr. GORDON: What year was that?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That was in 1930, during the last session of the last parliament.

Mr. MANION: Just before the election.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was the last session of the last parliament. Prior to that, we had been working up to the point, bit by bit, where an all embracing enactment would be assured of more or less general support in the house; we had applied the eight hour day to the employees first of one department and then of another, or to one class, then to another, gradually extending its application to all. At the time the general act was introduced there were a few remaining odds and ends, and the general act made applicable to all fields and virtually to all employees what had been the policy of the government with respect to the application of the principle of the eight hour day. As I was saying when interrupted, with respect to public works, the provision of the eight hour day was made generally applicable to all employees engaged upon Dominion work. With respect to employees of departments other than those working upon contracts of the Department of Public Works the eight hour day was made applicable by order in council, in so far as it was believed to be in the public interest to regulate the hours of employees of all departments in that way.

That was the first necessary step towards a general application of the eight hour day throughout Canada. The next step it would offer would be for the Dominion government to call the provinces into conference and point out to them their obligation under the treaty with respect to the application of the eight hour day. Once the Dominion has made its own position clear and unassailable it is then in a position to speak with some force and effect to the different provinces. I believe an evening or two ago, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) suggested with respect to amendments to the British North America Act, that it was desirable that we of this house should have a conference to decide in the first instance upon what amendments we could all agree. That was to be followed by a conference with the provinces, to see if they could not be brought into line with respect to the proposed necessary amendments.

I had rather hoped that the minister who is representing the Minister of Labour in this house, in speaking this evening, would on behalf on the government have taken advantage of the proposed conference referred to by the Minister of Justice the other night and said that the government, at the time of the coming conference with respect to amendments to the British North America Act, would consider with the provinces this question of the eight hour day. Perhaps the Minister of Justice will speak later in the debate and give the house and the country this assurance. If he would go that far I think we would be moving one step further in the right direction, and it seems to me this is a step that should be taken. If, as was intimated earlier in the debate, only one province is at present complying with the provisions of the treaty having to do with the eight hour day, clearly that province to some extent is being handicapped in its competition with others by virtue of its own legislation, which is along right and proper lines. In other words, because its standard is high it is being defeated in its very aims to improve conditions, by the fact that its standard is being undermined through other provinces not falling into line. A Dominion cenference which would show the necessity of a uniform standard with respect to hours being made to prevail in all the provinces would be assisting those provinces which to-day are maintaining a high standard or which in the near future are likely to maintain it. That is a step which I think might be taken with respect to the situation as it is at the moment with all due regard to what has been done in the past or to what has been left undone. Having made our own position impregnable so far as our obligations under the provisions of the Versailles treaty with respect to the eight hour day are concerned, we are now in a position to use our best efforts through conferences and the like with the provinces to have them adopt a similar course. If as a result of a conference, it becomes obvious that the necessary enactments cannot be obtained in that way, then it would seem to me to be in the interests of all concerned that careful consideration should be given to a possible amending of the British North America Act so as to make possible uniformity of legislation throughout the Dominion on such all important matters as this.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the concluding words which have just fallen from the lips of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). He has summed up in a sentence the whole matter, namely, that something will have to be done in regard to the British North America Act before any further practical steps can be taken in the direction suggested by the motion moved by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan). Last Monday night we discussed in this house the question of amendments to the British North America Act with a view to granting to the parliament of Canada the right to amend Canda's constitution, a right which is enjoyed by all the provinces in respect to their own constitutions, but is not enjoyed by the federal parliament. No advance can be made in regard to the proposal embraced in this motion until an amendment to the British North America Act has been passed.

My right hon. friend the leader of the opposition said that it is the duty of this government to take such a position in regard to this matter that it can speak to the provinces with force and effect. My view is that the provinces value their rights and their privileges under our constitutional charter just as highly as we in this parliament value ours, and the moment this parliament seeks to speak to the provincial authorities with force and effect, trouble is bound to ensue. We sometimes forget that our constitutional charter is just as much the constitutional charter of the provinces as it is of the Dominion, and they value it just as highly. The question involved in this motion is one as between employer and employee. It is a question of hours of labour, purely and simply, a question of civil rights, and questions of civil rights are expressly stated in the British North America Act to be within the legislative jurisdiction of the provinces. I assume that no one knows better than the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition that this matter has been determined by the highest tribunal in the land. From the year 1921, when the government of my right hon. friend took power, down to 1924, neither he nor his government nor his then Minister of Labour made a move or took a step in regard to the implementing of any obligations in respect to the eight hour day which were cast upon Canada by the covenant of the League of Nations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is not correct.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The matter was brought to the attention of this house by hon. members representing labour; upon their motion a discussion took place and the question was referred to a committee of the house, the committee on international and industrial relations. That motion was moved in 1924. It received the support of the whole house, and the question was referred to that committee and occupied their attention for some time. They examined witnesses, they considered our constitutional charter, they called before them the Deputy Minister of Justice; they covered the case very fully and made a report to the house to the effect that the matter should be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada for an opinion. It was not the government which initiated these proceedings, it was the Labour party in this house supported by a majority.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The majority was a government majority.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The majority was the unanimous vote of this house and not a government majority. Had the government had its way probably the matter would never have been brought before the house. The question was put up squarely to the Supreme Court of Canada in 1925. I have not the report of the case before me, but I quote from the order in council referred to by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, as follows:

> That the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada contained the following declaration: "The subject matter is generally within the competence of the legislatures of the provinces but the authority vested in these legislatures does not enable them to give the force of law to provisions such as those contained in the draft convention in relation to servants of the Dominion government, or to legislate for those parts of Canada which are not within the boundaries of a province."

That was the answer of the supreme court, and that answer portrays a real difficulty. This parliament is powerless to carry out a convention applicable to the Dominion of Canada save only in respect of our own employees. While the provinces agreed to adopt any obligations which were cast upon Canada by that treaty, the country and the house are aware that there is a clause in the British North America Act, clause 132, which is applicable to international treaties. That clause reads as follows:

> The parliament and government of Canada shall have all powers necessary or proper for performing the obligations of Canada or of any province thereof, as part of the British Empire, towards foreign countries arising under treaties between the empire and such foreign countries.

That clause enables this parliament only to deal with foreign treaties so far as national rights and interests are concerned, and does not give us the power in any way to dispose of, to impose upon or to limit the rights, duties or privileges of any of the provinces.

As I view this motion in the form in which it is moved I can see no objection whatever to its adoption at the present time by parliament. Speaking on another motion a week ago I stated that it was the intention of the government at some time in the not too distant future to summon a provincial conference for the express purpose of considering questions relating to the amending of the British North America Act. I realize and we all know that there is throughout the provinces of Canada a very strong desire that certain amendments should be made to our constitutional act; in fact requests in this regard do come from time to time, both from the east and from the west, particularly in regard to matters of taxation.

There is another question which will occasion a distinct cleavage between provincial and Dominion authority. I do not know that there is any right more sacredly held in the provinces of Canada than their right to legislate on all matters pertaining to property and civil rights. I would not be one who would dictate or seek to dictate to any province as to what line of action it should take in regard to matters distinctly under provincial control. I would not be one who would seek to speak with that force and effect which my right hon. friend mentioned we would have if we took a lead in regard to this matter. I realize that this question is one which the provinces themselves will have to decide, and if they are willing that in regard to this matter of civil rights, hours of labour and employment in the provinces, the federal government shall represent them in carrying out this convention, all well and good. On behalf of the government I say that we agree, but I shall be no party to dictating to or coercing the provinces in this or any other respect upon a matter which lies purely within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. NEILL: The language which I used was "give a lead." I did not suggest coercion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I was not referring to my hon. friend. I was referring to the language of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I interrupt my hon. friend for a moment? I think he is placing upon my words a construction that they were certainly not intended to have. If by "force and effect," he means compulsion, I quite agree with him that the Dominion has no right in any way to attempt to compel the provinces to do anything. But if by " force and effect" is meant what I meant, "speaking with some degree of authority," or if we put it the other way, "not without some force or without effect," as would be the case if our own skirts were clean, then that would be the interpretation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I cannot agree that we could speak with authority in this matter because the authority is not in the hands of this parliament. The authority to legislate in this matter is in the hands of the provinces. I repeat: If the provinces will agree, the way is made plain for us in this parliament; but if the provinces fail of agreement, there is no way of coercing them and you cannot get an amendment to the British North America Act to give you authority to coerce them unless the provinces agree that such an amendment be made. That is the practical, the whole difficulty. There is no use in beating about the bush. No one knows the difficulty better than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He is a student of these matters; he has a very wide knowledge of them; he speaks with great authority upon this question, but he realizes just as fully as I do or as any other hon. member does that there is this real practical difficulty ahead of us. But I am willing to say that when the conference is called this is one of the matters which may fairly be submitted to it. For my part I would much rather that the provinces themselves introduced such a question. I know they will introduce at such a conference many other questions which affect their rights and some which involve ours; but I believe the best way to reach a conclusion, and a satisfactory one, upon this and many other questions, is to have that conference and to have it just as soon as it can conveniently be held.

The motion is a pious aspiration in the right direction and I think the house may well agree that it should carry in its present form.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): I am glad to hear the statement just made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie). At the present time there is no question of greater importance than that of the hours of labour worked in industry. Under the circumstances it is far better that the federal authorities take the lead in this matter than that we wait until the nine different provinces do so. It is much easier for the central authority to assume the lead than to wait until the nine provinces can come together on common ground.

The question of hours of labour has ramifications outside the provincial aspect. The hours of labour in one country naturally affect the hours of labour in another, and the hours of labour worked in one province affect the hours of labour worked in another. In exactly the same way, as the acting Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) pointed out, when Ontario introduced the Workmen's Compensation Act in that province, other provinces in the Dominion followed suit. So it is with the hours of labour. I am satisfied that ultimately the hours of labour will have to be regulated, not merely provincially or federally, but internationally. For one country to be on an eight hour day schedule and another to be on a twelve hour day schedule is unfair, because it is obvious that a country where long hours are worked and the wages are low will find it much easier to compete with a country where there is a high standard of living. That is one of the reasons given why some countries cannot reduce the hours of labour or give increased remuneration to the workers engaged in industry.

I contend, therefore, that the federal government ought to make every possible effort to strengthen the League of Nations in its attempt to bring about international legislation along the lines indicated here this evening. Already several nations have carried out the recommendations of the League of Nations, not merely by adopting resolutions but actually by passing legislation. Amongst the countries which have adopted the eight hour day are Belgium, Bulgaria, Greece, Portugal, Roumania, Czechoslovakia and several others. In addition there are several countries which as yet have not put through such legislation, but the eight hour day is more or less effective as it is throughout the whole of the British isles.

The question of the eight hour day is not a new one. It has been before the peoples of different parts of the world for many a long year. In fact, when members of the present government chided the opposition for being so slow in their activities, I want to point out that away back in 1919 a commission known as the Mathers commission was appointed by the then government. It toured the country and brought in a rather comprehensive report in regard to labour conditions and legislation.

I should like to quote just one recommendation of that commission. Recommendation No. 52 reads:

In many industries in Canada the eight hour day has already been adopted, and it has been recognized by the Peace treaty. We recommend that it be established by law throughout Canada, with due regard for the above consideration. Such legislation should provide for a weekly rest of at least twenty-four hours which should include Sunday whenever practicable.

So that away back in the summer of 1919 we had a commission which, after it had toured the country, brought in a recommendation in favour of an eight hour day. From 1919 until the present time very little progress has been made in Canada with regard to implementing the recommendations of either the peace treaty or the Mathers commission of 1919.

I said a moment ago that the hours of labour would be far more effectively regulated by international convention than by national legislation. Therefore I believe that anything we can do in this house to strengthen the only body in existence at the present time that is dealing with this question, should have the sympathy of all concerned. The only body of an international character dealing with these matters is the League of Nations. I believe it should be our duty to strengthen the League of Nations, and the only way in which we can strengthen it is by this house bringing in legislation implementing the peace treaty of Versailles. I was very glad indeed, therefore, to hear the pronouncement this evening of the Minister of Justice, that a conference with the provincial governments will be called at an early day. I hope that when that conference meets the Dominion government will themselves take a firm stand and go on record as being in favour of the eight hour day, and when it has been approved by the provinces, I hope we shall then be in a position to carry out the recommendations of the peace treaty.

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): For the first time, Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the session I wish to congratulate every speaker who has taken part in the debate. I wish to say just a few words about what happened in my constituency with regard to hours of labour. A return that has been brought down to the house shows that the mayor of Riviere du Loup wrote to the federal director of unemployment relief to the effect that labour there was being paid only $2.25 per day, and that he was not familiar with the regulations. I quote:

(Translation) The facts are that, not having any knowledge of such regulations and, furthermore, having begun work in a hurry in order to be of some help to the unemployed before the very cold season of January set in, as at that time it is impossible to carry on with the work, we did our best.

As previously stated, the practice followed here as regards work, is the 10 hour day at 22½ cents per hour, or $2.25 per day and we have followed that practice. I wish to add that on such a wage basis, our people were quite satisfied to carry on, and we had to choose among them in order to employ those who were most in need.

I note that the hon. Minister of Labour asked you to advise us that, under the circumstances, our accounts will be settled by authority which is granted for work carried out before December 31. I must thank you for attending to this matter, and we also wish to extend our thanks to the Minister for his liberal attitude, you may rest assured that as regards the work carried out since January 1, the eight hour clause with wages of 30 cents per hour is strictly adhered to.

(Translation) I do not wish to delay the house too long. There are other municipalities for which requests were made but not granted: St. Edwige of Clifton, county of Compton, Disraeli, county of Wolfe; St. Samuel de Horton, county of Nicolet; St. Tite, county of Champlain; Paspébiac, county of Bonaventure; St. Pierre and St. Paul, of Bay St. Paul, county of Charlevoix; Escuminac, county of Bonaventure; La Sarre, county of Abitibi; Notre Dame de Palmoral, county of Abitibi; St. Narcisse, county of Champlain; St. Nazaire, county of Chicoutimi; Hope, county of Bonaventure; St. Antoine de Gros Morne, county of Gaspé and others.

What happened, Mr. Speaker, was this: Low wages were being paid for long hours of labour in Rivière du Loup, and that continued until the 31st of December last. Correspondence was exchanged between the federal director of unemployment relief, the deputy director of the province of Quebec, and the mayor of Rivière du Loup in that connection, and the federal director decided that although these low wages were against the regulations which had been accepted by the federal and provincial ministers of labour, the low wages and long hours should continue until December 31 last, and then cease. I think that was unfair, and I bring it to the attention now of the Acting Minister of Labour so that he may take the matter up with the Minister of Labour with a view to seeing that the city of Rivière du Loup shall pay the rate of wages decided on by the federal authorities. I hope that the Acting Minister of Labour will be kind enough to see to the matter at his earliest convenience.

May I congratulate the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) upon bringing forward this resolution? He has done much for the labouring classes, and his work has always been very much appreciated, especially the legislation which was enacted on his initiative and which has been greatly to the benefit of the labouring classes.

Mr. J. H. STITT (Selkirk): I hesitate at this late hour to rise and address the house but the question of the eight-hour day was a very live issue in the constituency of Selkirk, which I have the honour to represent, and which is populated by so many working people. When I first saw this motion on the order paper I thought it was remarkable that it should be proposed by the ex-Minister of Labour (Mr Heenan) in view of the conditions prevailing in my constituency in relation to a matter under the supervision of the late government. I refer to the fact that in the constituency of Selkirk there is a federal penitentiary at Stony Mountain. I have not been able to understand just how it was, if the late administration was in favour of the eight-hour day, that they allowed the guards at that penitentiary to work in shifts of eleven and thirteen hours—and I may add that at the present time they are still working long hours. Many of them are returned soldiers drawing a pension for disability incurred on active service, and they are called upon to perform the task of keeping guard for eleven and sometimes thirteen hours a day. One who has had military service knows that a man who has been on guard for a period of four hours, and often less, is very much inclined to go to sleep and is not able to perform his duty adequately.

I was interested in the remark of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) to the effect that the provinces expected the Dominion to fulfil to the letter the wording of this resolution. If he realizes that the provinces expected the federal government to live up to the letter of this resolution, how was it that in all the penal institutions of this country the late administration allowed the guards to work for periods of eleven and thirteen hours a day? That is one thing that I have never been able to understand.

In the province of Manitoba there is also a provincial penal institution at Headingly, a very large institution housing more inmates than the federal penitentiary. In this provincial institution they have been able to establish an eight-hour day for the guards, and I see no reason why the eight-hour day could not be established in our federal penal institution as well.

This question of hours of labour is one which is agitating the mind of every thinking man in Canada at the present time. We all know that by specialization of functions men are able to accomplish more in a lesser period of time than they were heretofore. The great problem we are facing to-day is not that of efficiency of labour, is not that of the production of the largest quantity of goods in the shortest period of time at a minimum cost. It is the problem faced at the present time by every nation in the civilized world, that of the distribution of work. As indicated the other day by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) we have to a great extent solved the problem of production, but we have not solved the problem of distribution. If the late government was really in earnest in the matter of carrying out the terms of the peace treaty, it is remarkable that this conference was not called long ago. If the late government was really honestly endeavouring to carry out the obligation of Canada to the other nations of the world, such a conference should have been held. I realize that if the resolution were adopted and the law of the land became such that in Canada the eight-hour day should be compulsory, a great hardship might be inflicted on many of our workers. When I make that statement I am thinking of the iron and steel industry in the town of Selkirk in my constituency. In that constituency there are many men who are working—

Mr. HEENAN: I was wondering if the hon. member heard the acting leader of the government say that he was willing the motion should carry. I would remind the hon. member that it is now just one minute to eleven o'clock.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): I am quite satisfied that the motion should carry if the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) expressed his willingness. If the motion is carried all will be accomplished which reasonably could be expected at the present time. I have sat in my seat and listened to member after member speak on this matter. I represent a great number of workingmen in the constituency of Selkirk and no member representing my constituency could sit in this house and continue to represent those workingmen unless he raised his voice in support of this motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: It being eleven o'clock the house will stand adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, May 19, 1931.

The house met at three o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTION THAT RETURNS TABLED BE PREPARED IN DUPLICATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, would it be possible for the different departments to arrange to table returns in duplicate, otherwise we will have to continue to go to the trouble of having these papers copied. A duplicate could easily be made at the time the original is being prepared.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER CORPORATION

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT TO DISCUSS MATTER OF URGENT PUBLIC IMPORTANCE

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask leave of the house to move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), the adjournment to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance respecting order in council P.C. 422, dated March 8, 1929, passed under circumstances that amount to an abuse and infringement of the privileges of this house and constituting a serious reflection upon the honour and integrity of the parliament of Canada, and also to discuss the unauthorized and illegal action of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company in proceeding to construct the Beauharnois canal in contravention of the terms of order in council P.C. 422, dated March 8, 1929, and the plans provided therein, and in further contravention of the terms of the British North America Act, the building of the said canal being brought about in such manner as unjustly to deprive the people of Canada of a vast part of the national domain, thus causing a great and irreparable loss unless immediate action is taken by the government in respect thereto.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. member the leave of the house to move the adjournment.

The Clerk Assistant having stated that thirteen members had risen:

Mr. SPEAKER: As less than twenty, but not less than five members have risen in their places, I will now put the question as to whether the hon. member has leave to move the adjournment of the house.

The house divided on the question which was resolved in the affirmative on the following division:

Mr. GOTT: I was paired with the hon. member for Kent, (Ont.) (Mr. Rutherford). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. HEPBURN: In view of the importance of this matter, I wish to announce that I am paired with the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Spotton); otherwise I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. HEENAN: I have a standing agreement with the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short), so that when either one of us is not in the chamber, the other will not vote on any question. But had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. MURPHY: I was paired with the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I was paired with the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. BELL (St. John): I was paired with the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Dubois). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. CANTLEY: I was paired with the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I was paired with the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. McDADE: I was paired with the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. PERRAS (Translation): I was paired with the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. MARCIL: I was paired with the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley).

Mr. ROWE: I was paired with the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Lacroix). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Speaking on a question of privilege, there is, I believe, in the taking of votes in the house a custom whereby the Assistant Clerk is expected to look first to the Prime Minister on the government side in order amongst other things that the views and wishes of the administration in the matter of recording a vote may be made known. When I saw the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) did not rise when the yeas were called, I assumed that he was taking a view somewhat similar to my own with respect to this matter, namely, that if the matter were one of great importance some notice should have been given in advance of a motion of this kind, so that members who were interested and who had a special knowledge of the matter, might be present. When the Prime Minister did not rise, I assumed that such was his point of view. I could not understand how a matter relating to a transaction of two or three years ago, could just at this moment become one of urgent public importance; I therefore felt that I would join with him in seeking to preserve what I believe to be the best procedure under the rules of the house in the matter of debate and governed my actions accordingly. That was the reason why at the outset some of us on this side of the house did not support the motion but conformed to the order in which votes are generally taken in giving our vote only after the other side of the house had recorded its vote.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Speaking to the question of privileges of the house I may say that the Assistant Clerk did not look to his right when the vote was called. He called first the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner). It is my opinion that only questions of urgency should be the subject matter of a motion to adjourn the house. My personal opinion is that this is not a matter of such urgency.

Mr. McINTOSH: Why did the right hon. gentleman vote for it?

Mr. BENNETT: Just a moment. The chair having decided that it was a matter in which the hon. gentleman should have leave; the chair having called upon twenty members to rise, I not being one of that number and the house having indicated clearly its desire that the motion should be put, the will of the house should govern. But I still think this is not a matter of urgency within the rule. I merely desire to make that statement, because, after all, the will of the house governs with respect to the matter, and the house decided that leave should be given.

Mr. POWER: I rise to a point of order. When such prominent members of the house as the leader of the opposition and the Prime Minister press the opinion that this is not a matter of public importance, I raise the point of order as to the possibility of changing the recorded decision.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question cannot properly be raised at this time; it is not a point of order. Subsections 3 and 4 of standing order 31 cover the matter completely, and I would refer the hon. member to the same.

And leave having been granted:

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the sentiment which the house has expressed in answering the question affirmatively and by such a large majority. It is unfortunate that on a question of this kind, unless you want to throw the whole matter into the purely political arena, you must adopt this method of obtaining a hearing before the house. It would have been quite possible to bring the matter up on a motion to go into supply, but unless you confine the discussion to an amendment to the motion to go into supply you will not have the question you desire to bring up discussed in the manner in which you wish it to be discussed. Furthermore, the government of the day always feels that an amendment on a motion to go into supply is a motion of want of confidence, and therefore I chose this method rather than a motion of want of confidence.

On the 22nd May of last year I asked leave of the house to move the adjournment to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance in connection with the hydro electric development of the Soulanges section of St. Lawrence river. On that occasion I reviewed, more or less inadequately, the history of its development and I hope I succeeded in convincing hon. members that this development was brought about and was being proceeded with in a manner which called for action by the house. The then Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) listened throughout the debate and did not say anything in reply. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), then leader of the opposition, took advantage of that occasion to make some observations, and I shall refer to what the present Prime Minister is reported then to have said. As reported at page 2419 of Hansard of May 22, 1930, the present Prime Minister is reported as saying:

> But what position are we in? The power that once belonged to Canada and to all the people—and I have a very strong conviction when I use those words—has now passed irrevocably out of our hands. The price at which that power is to be sold for Canadian development is to be passed upon by three managers for the next ten years. That is what it means.
> Let us look at this thing fairly. There are the names of the persons concerned; some of them are friends of mine. Does that deter me from the discharge of my public duty here? It does not. My public duty here is to point out just what I am pointing out to this country, that the power development of the great natural resources of power and energy that infuse life into factories and make them efficient instruments for the purpose of making this country great, can come about only by a realization that this development must be under terms and conditions that enable such power to be available to the Canadian people on the cheapest possible terms. These resources are held by us from Providence in trust, not for the few but for all; they are held in trust for the Canadian people and not for the few. I am the last man who would deny to the man with enterprise, initiative and courage just compensation for his efforts, but I ask any hon. gentleman sitting opposite, whether he be a capitalist or otherwise, to read the figures given this afternoon and say whether this country of ours has had a fair deal. We are the beneficiaries; the crown in the right of the Dominion has been the trustee; they and they only could grant the permission, and when they granted that permission did they impose a single restriction or condition that would secure to posterity and to this generation as well the use of that great natural power given to us by Providence, the extent and value of which is such that it should make Canada equal any nation in the world?
> That is the question. When we talk as we have been talking about the necessity for protection and why it is necessary to put ourselves on terms of even and fair competition with those who are carrying on mass production in other countries, we must remember that one of the most valuable factors, namely, the great hydro-electric possibilities of Canada, is now passing out of our hands and cheap production is then rendered less and less possible. I say, sir, that while I sat in my place and listened, as I did this afternoon for the first time, to those speakers and remembered what I have read as to the prices at which securities upon the stock exchanges are being sold, I realized that in its possibilities this was one of the most gigantic enterprises this country has ever had to consider, and the question is well worthy of the consideration of parliament even if it were the day before dissolution. I am only sorry that it should not have been considered before this. I have been recreant to my duty in that it has not been so considered and after all I heard during this discussion this afternoon I realized that fact.

I do think, and I say it to the Prime Minister, that this matter should be the subject of judicial inquiry. It should be inquired into; there have been statements made which necessitate that procedure being adopted. Why should $3,500,000 be spent for little or nothing? What is the reason for this vast financial scheme? Why, there are now several thousand shares apparently available for sale on the market at $15 per share which, in itself as you will observe, involves a vast sum of money. What is the reason for these things being done without our having some knowledge of just what Mr. Sweezey meant when he pointed out what had to be done in order to secure the results which he has attained?

Go to the United States and watch what they are doing there. We talk about our institutions; the United States Senate lays bare everything. What are we doing in this country? We are pussyfooting about matters of this kind, because men think that your friend or my friend may be associated with this matter, and we have not the courage to stand up and talk about it. Well, sir, I value my position in public life, but I would rather be relegated to private life and be there forever than remain silent on an occasion of this kind.

That is what I have to say; let there be no misunderstanding about it. It may mean that I will be subjected to the threats of the great financial powers that are behind this venture. I snap my fingers; that is my answer.

I confess, Mr. Speaker, when I contemplate this matter and when I regard all that is involved in it, not to thousands but to millions of people who some day will fill this great valley around the St. Lawrence, which might become one of the greatest industrial centres in America—the Ruhr of Canada; when I contemplate what those figures meant this afternoon, my feeling of resentment gets the better of me. I ask hon. gentlemen if this thing is to be tolerated. It rests with us, with each of us, to say whether or not it shall be tolerated, and I believe that in the end the common sense of the Canadian people will prevail and that, great and powerful though the promoters have been, they are not sufficiently powerful to control the common sense of the people of Canada.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

I just want to mention now in passing that the Prime Minister was undoubtedly mistaken in saying that "the power has now passed irrevocably out of our hands." I am sure on more mature reflection he will agree with me that that power still belongs to us and not to the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, and that he may still secure for the people of Canada their heritage which Sweezey and his friends are attempting to acquire by fraud and conspiracy.

Hon. members will recall that it was pointed out on May 22 last that the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company first applied to the Dominion government for permission to divert the whole flow of the St. Lawrence river through the Beauharnois canal, beginning with an initial 40,000 cubic feet per second and the approval of its plans to effect such diversion.

This application was so preposterous that the then Liberal government was forced to refuse to entertain it, but only after the most vigorous protests had been made against it. Hon. gentlemen will note that the then Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) in an apparent endeavour to help Mr. Sweezey and his senatorial friends, limited the protests to the question of navigation only, thus preventing any protests being made with respect to other and most important features of this transaction.

Having failed, however, to secure the approval of the original application by which they would get the whole flow of the river, these promoters, with their real object still in view, agreed to amend their application. The application was amended and finally assumed this form:

> The application of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company now pending before the governor in council is purely and simply for the approval of plans for hydraulic development which will be subject to a condition that not more than 40,000 cubic feet per second shall be diverted from the river—from lake St. Francis to be returned to lake St. Louis and used for power purposes by the company between these two points: and any condition that the government may exact, in any wording satisfactory to the government, involving that limitation is accepted in advance by the applicant. If the engineers think that the plans should be altered to meet this declaration the company will submit to any such alteration.

It is beyond question that the amended application of the company was for the purpose of securing from the Dominion government authority to proceed with a hydraulic development which included the right to divert water through the canal the use of this water to produce power, and the approval of the remedial works; the company being specifically limited, however, to a maximum diversion and use of 40,000 cubic feet per second.

The government had no authority to receive or to approve of this application under the powers conferred on it by the Navigable Waters Act or any other act, and of this I am satisfied that some members of the then government should have been aware.

The government in receiving and granting this application conferred on their friends no rights whatsoever. The order in council is illegal because, let me repeat, the government had no authority under the Navigable Waters Act to grant the right to divert and use this water for power development, and the whole Beauharnois development is without real legal foundation and contrary to the laws and treaty obligations of Canada.

But there is another serious aspect to this situation and of immediate interest to the people of Canada as a whole. By one of the terms of the lease of imaginary and wholly non-existent rights which this company secured from the province of Quebec, the company acquired a lease of:

> The rights of the province of Quebec to such part of the hydraulic powers of the St. Lawrence river that can be developed between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis, through a derivation canal on the right (southern) shore, having a maximum flowing capacity of 40,000 cubic feet per second, the province reserving the ownership and free disposition of the surplus.

Their lease, size of their canal, the order in council, their plans filed, all absolutely limit them to a diversion of 40,000 cubic feet per second.

Does this lease and the order in council represent the honest and real intentions of those concerned? Was it an honest transaction? What are the real facts? Scarcely had the ink dried on this order in council when these very same promoters proceeded to violate not only the letter but the very spirit of the provincial lease and of the order in council. They prepared plans that provided for the diversion of the whole flow of the river; they sold their bonds on the representation that they would eventually get the whole flow; and they are now building without authority a canal which will take the whole flow of the river. Further, they have acquired 13,000 cubic feet from the Montreal Cottons. To add insult to injury, they have secured this past winter 30,000 additional cubic feet from Quebec, and are awaiting a favourable opportunity to ask for another order in council from this government.

It is apparent the then government and these Beauharnois promoters entered into an agreement which they never intended should be carried out. I say the then government was not evidently sincere in limiting the diversion to 40,000 cubic feet, because it is plainly evident from subsequent events that they knew when they imposed this limitation on the company that neither they nor the company ever intended to abide by the terms of this order in council, a single condition of which, designed to protect the people, has not been observed or enforced. Later in the same year a second order in council was passed giving to this company the right to divert this 13,000 cubic feet which they had bought from Montreal Cottons.

Mr. EULER: When?

Mr. GARDINER: Late in 1929. I have the evidence under my hand. You see therefore, Mr. Speaker, that when the first order in council was passed it was quite evident that the promoters were not satisfied that they were going to be limited to 40,000 cubic feet. Therefore, when they had an opportunity of securing a further order in council which permitted them to acquire this 13,000 cubic feet, they proceeded to do so, and the government obliged them in that regard. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that the government of the right hon. the leader of the opposition was unfortunate, in a measure, in somewhat misleading the people of this country in the passing of this order in council, P.C. 422.

The Dominion government and these Beauharnois promoters were either guilty of conspiracy or the government was negligent in respect to the duty it owed to the people of Canada to maintain for the people their possessions and in preventing these from being stolen or illegally acquired by others.

But there are other matters to consider. I ask the Prime Minister, fully believing that he has given this subject serious consideration since May 22 last, if there is any doubt in his mind as to the illegality of the foundation of this whole Beauharnois development from its very inception? And more especially so, as a result of the Montreal Cottons deal and in view of the action of the Quebec government in attempting to grant the company a lease of the power resulting from an additional 30,000 cubic feet which means, coupled with other facts, that the company will continue to secure additional water until the whole St. Lawrence river between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis is dewatered and flows through the Beauharnois canal, or, as the corporation's advertisements say, "forms a new river." I, for one, have no doubts about it.

In addition to this serious phase of the situation we have the amazing spectacle of a number of members of the Senate, all appointed by the former Prime Minister, no doubt in his efforts to reform that august body, identified with this transaction by which they and the other promoters of this enterprise were able to secure possession of the national domain to the nauseating extent of hundreds of millions of dollars, without having one dollar of their own money invested in the enterprise and without giving to the people of Canada one actual dollar's worth of value for the concession. They may say "we are giving the people of Canada a ship canal 600 feet wide, 28 feet deep and 15 miles long." Mr. Speaker, that is an outrageous lie. What deception! An investigation will show that they had to dig this power ditch that size in order to get the necessary quantity of water for their power production; even their literature says so. It was not dug at all, as they and the then government represented, for a navigation canal and given to the people.

If there is any doubt about this deception will the right hon. the Prime Minister and will the right hon. the leader of the opposition explain to the people of this country why it is necessary to have the Beauharnois canal 600 feet wide when the Welland canal which is to form part of the deep seaway is only 310 feet wide? I challenge contradiction and proof thereof, of this statement.

The association of these senators with this enterprise does not make for good government, nor does it tend to create confidence in the minds of the people of Canada in governmental institutions, and no greater danger confronts us to-day than the loss of such confidence. The circumstances which resulted in these senators becoming identified with this enterprise must be inquired into. Senator McDougald was a member of the national advisory committee on the St. Lawrence waterway. The committee reported to the government on January 11th, 1928. This report was divided in two parts—a majority report and a minority report. Senator McDougald was found among those who subscribed to the majority report. This is what Senator McDougald, with others, reported and advised the government to do on January 11th, 1928, page 19, paragraph 4:

> We believe that the first concern of this committee should be, and of the government will be, the national aspects of the proposed undertaking, and we regard it as most desirable that the initial development take place in the purely domestic section of the river lying within the province of Quebec. We believe that if a reasonable time were permitted in which to enable the resultant power to be economically absorbed the development of this national section would be undertaken by private agencies able and willing to finance the entire work including the necessary canalization, in return for the right to develop the power.

Hon. gentlemen will note the date, January 11, 1928. On April 18, 1928, the Globe and the Mail and Empire published certain articles suggesting, among other things, that Senator McDougald was interested in the Beauharnois Power Company, the Mail and Empire adding a suspicion that Senator McDougald was one of the three men on the advisory committee who advised the government to develop the national section first by private agencies. Senator McDougald felt it necessary to rise in his seat in the Senate on the 19th of April, 1928, and, to use his own language, repel the above implication reflecting on his honour and integrity both as a member of the Senate and as a private citizen. His remarks in respect to the Globe are reported in Hansard as follows:

> I want to say here, and to say it with emphasis, that I do not own a dollar's worth of stock in this enterprise, and have no interest in or association with that company in any way, shape or form.

And further:

> Speaking for myself, I want to make a further positive and absolute denial of the implications and suspicions of the Mail and Empire. So far as I myself am concerned I cannot add too much emphasis to my denial of the suspicions and aspersions which these despatches have cast upon me as a member of the advisory committee, as a member of this honourable body and as a private citizen. Perhaps I may take some slight comfort from the fact that this sort of thing seems to be one of the ordinary penalties of public life.

The people of Canada to-day are asking if that statement made by Senator McDougald is true. If it is not true, then Senator McDougald deliberately deceived the Senate and the people of Canada. I am simply going to state the facts which are known to the public. Senator McDougald was interested in the promotion of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company in 1927 before the legislative assembly of the province of Quebec. The company subsequently, in 1928, again applied for and succeeded in getting a revision of its charter. In 1929 the company came to the Dominion government and succeeded in securing the passage of order in council P.C. 422. In October, 1929, the Beauharnois Corporation Limited purchased from the Beauharnois syndicate the shares of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company. The members of the Beauharnois syndicate received for each unit they held forty shares of the corporation stock and $150 in cash. I have this information before me in a document entitled The Financial Post Survey of Corporation Securities. Senator McDougald received 208,000 Class A common shares and $780,000 in cash from the Beauharnois syndicate for his share in an enterprise which several months previously he had disclaimed any interest in or association with. I have also under my hand documentary evidence as to the allocation of these shares, because I have had the share registers searched, and I have an affidavit under my hand as to the result of the search. He received securities valued, according to their prospectus, at over $30,000,000. That is the statement they make in their prospectus, that the potential value of these 208,000 shares is over $30,000,000.

An hon. MEMBER: Potential.

Mr. GARDINER: That is what they state, and they have given the figures to show it, too.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They are conservative in their estimates.

Mr. EULER: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not want to be interrupted, but the hon. member may proceed with his question.

Mr. EULER: All right.

Mr. GARDINER: Senator McDougald is the chairman of the enterprise. He is also one of the three members who have complete charge of it for the next ten years. What do hon. members think and what will the country think of the facts surrounding Senator McDougald's connection with this enterprise? If it was a reflection on his honour and integrity as a member of the Senate or as a private individual to be suspected of or referred to as being interested in the Beauharnois Company on April 19, 1928, the Canadian people are wondering just what bearing his present position will have in this respect.

Furthermore, the press despatches carry the startling news that these same gentlemen have been accused of corrupting the administration of justice in the province of Quebec in relation to certain matters in dispute between themselves and another company, in whose affairs I have not the slightest personal interest. A dispute arose between the Beauharnois company and this other company, with the result that a lawsuit was started in the courts in the city of Montreal. As to the outcome of the lawsuit I am, of course, entirely disinterested. But in the course of the proceedings last winter Chief Justice Greenshields—one of whose relatives is identified with the Beauharnois corporation—interfered with the trial, as stated in the press, by withdrawing Mr. Justice Patterson, the trial judge who had started the hearing of the case, and substituting in his place Mr. Justice Boyer.

Mr. JACOBS: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making an attack upon the Chief Justice of the province of Quebec.

Mr. GARDINER: No, I am not.

Mr. LAVERGNE: He is not the Chief Justice of the province of Quebec anyway.

Mr. JACOBS: He is acting as such. The hon. gentleman must not be allowed to proceed with his attack.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, some years ago I drew attention to a similar case. I have followed the hon. member with great care and I notice he said "as stated in the press." If he quotes from the press he is not making an attack against the judge. The former Speaker ruled against me when I raised the question in the course of an attack made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr Bourassa) on the late Lord Chancellor Cave.

Mr. JACOBS: Does that make it correct?

Mr. BENNETT: No, but that was the ruling of the Speaker at that time.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, I have the press reports before me from which I drew my information.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman would be well advised to leave out any reference to the judges of this country, but I cannot control his speech. If he had made the statement on his own authority I certainly think it would be the duty of the Prime Minister of the day to challenge the statement and draw the attention of His Honour to it; but he said—I followed him with extreme care—"as stated in the press."

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does my hon. friend suggest that an hon. member can attack the judiciary merely by referring to attacks in the press?

Mr. BENNETT: Far from it. I am merely pointing out that on a former occasion, like the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) now, I felt it my business as a lawyer to interpose, but the Speaker ruled against me. The attack on that occasion was against Lord Chancellor Cave—a much worse attack than this.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But that is different from an attack on a present member of the judiciary in this country.

Mr. GARDINER: I think if hon. members will wait until I have concluded what I desire to say on this point it will clear the matter up.

Mr. JACOBS: No, we will have the ruling of the Speaker.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman would be well advised to leave out any reference to the judges of this country. It does not strengthen his case or add to the dignity of the discussion so to refer to the judiciary.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member must not cast reflections upon the judiciary. It is not any more in order to read a newspaper attack than to make the attack first hand.

Mr. GARDINER: In explanation, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I have never cast any reflection upon any judge in anything that I have stated to-day. I am merely calling attention to a situation that should be investigated and cleared up.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the way to do it.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, the circumstances surrounding the removal of Mr. Justice Patterson by Chief Justice Greenshields led the counsel who was acting for the plaintiff to protest in open court against what he characterized as an improper interference with the administration of justice.

Mr. JACOBS: Are we going to listen to this after the ruling made by your Honour?

Mr. GARDINER: I am speaking of the charges made by counsel in open court.

Mr. JACOBS: There is a way of attacking the judiciary.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. SPEAKER: In Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, quoting Bourinot, under standing order 41, will be found the following:

> 293. (j) Members are prohibited from casting reflections upon the conduct of judges of superior courts unless such conduct is based upon a substantive motion.

It is further dealt with in paragraph 305 under this standing order:

> All references to judges and courts of justice and to personages of high official station, of the nature of personal attack and censure have always been considered unparliamentary, and the Speakers of the British and Canadian houses have always treated them as breaches of order. Members have even been interrupted in committees of the whole by the chairman when they have cast an imputation upon a judicial proceeding. The proper course for persons who feel called upon to attack the conduct of a judge is to proceed by way of a petition in which all the allegations are specifically stated so that the person accused may have full opportunity to answer the charges presented against him.

I hope the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) will keep these rules in view.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, a certain accusation was made in open court by the counsel for one of the parties to the action. I am not saying whether his accusation is well-founded or not, but I do say that this is a situation which must be cleared up. Some action should be taken, first of all, to find out whether the counsel was correct in the statement he made in open court before Chief Justice Greenshields. If on investigation it is found that he was making an incorrect statement he should be punished. That is what I am coming to.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a provincial court; that is not this parliament. Further, was there not an appeal taken in that case and was the appeal not disallowed? I am only speaking from memory, because I do not follow all the proceedings in the courts, but if that is the case, surely this house can only deal with an allegation against any judge in the manner and form provided by law that is by impeachment, and not in the manner which has been adopted by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. GARDINER: I have made all the remarks I desire to make in that connection. It does appear to me, however, that this is a matter which should be investigated, to see whether or not it is correct. I stated that our judges should be protected from persons making statements which they cannot substantiate, and that is my attitude in the whole matter. Hon. members are absolutely wrong when they make the statement that I am attacking a judge.

When a member of parliament profits by the exploitation of the public domain, Mr. Speaker, to the extent of approximately $30,000,000, and when this exploitation is only made possible—

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What does the hon. gentleman mean by a member of parliament.

Mr. GARDINER: I said a member of parliament; I did not say a member of this house. When this exploitation was only made possible by concessions granted by a government at the head of which was one of his intimate friends, the right hon. leader of the opposition, then Prime Minister, a situation is created which demands the most far-reaching and thorough judicial investigation. To neglect or refuse this investigation will forever destroy the confidence of the public in the integrity of the House of Commons and of the Senate. Furthermore, to neglect this demand for judicial investigation will forever identify the Prime Minister as a party to the machinations of this group. Perhaps I can do no better than put it in the words used by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) last year, in speaking on this question. He said:

> I would like to ask the government to consider whether it is not now in the position of lending itself to the schemes of these promoters.

Furthermore, in view of the fact that this same company of promoters saw fit to acquire from the province of Quebec the right—which I submit is ultra vires—to enlarge their canal from six arpents to twenty-one arpents, after this order in council was passed, it becomes doubly apparent to the people of Canada that the government of the right hon. Prime Minister in particular will have lent themselves to these schemes if it fails to conduct an investigation, to stop this work at once, take over this development and declare it to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

I asked the Prime Minister if he would produce the report which he secured last fall as a result of the departmental investigation which he ordered. The right hon. gentleman refused to produce this report, taking advantage of the old doctrine that this report was privileged and that it was not in the best interests of the people that it should be produced. I say to the right hon. Prime Minister with the greatest respect that he was wrong in taking that position. That report will disclose the utter fraud of these promoters in inducing the then government to pass order in council P.C. 422, dated March 8, 1929, because in that order in council the company is limited then and for the future to a canal six arpents or 1,100 feet wide, and this report discloses amongst other evidences of fraud the fact that they are building a canal twenty-one arpents or approximately 4,000 feet wide. I ask the right hon. Prime Minister if this statement is not true. If it is true, what explanation has he to make of his action in withholding from the people of this country the knowledge that this company has deliberately disobeyed the order in council, and in withholding from the people the certain knowledge that this canal company is now building a canal wide enough to absorb the whole flow of the St. Lawrence river instead of 40,000 cubic feet? I am sure the people of this country will feel very much aggrieved.

I have under my hand indisputable evidence that this company acquired from the province of Quebec, the imaginary right to build this 4,000 foot canal on March 20, 1930, over one year after P.C. 422 was passed, and that they are building a canal the plans of which never have been approved, a canal totally and entirely different from the canal referred to in and approved by the order in council. The people of this country are asking and demanding to know all the facts in connection with this Beauharnois development. They are demanding the reason why it was possible for the government of the right hon. leader of the opposition to have granted certain concessions whereby the Beauharnois promoters were able to make such vast and staggering profits out of the public domain. They are demanding to know how it was possible for certain members of the Senate, who are intimate friends of the right hon. leader of the opposition, to acquire the public domain to the extent of tens of millions of dollars, without giving anything in return.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Now, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is going a little too far. He is not only reflecting upon members of the other house who are not in a position to speak for themselves, but he is now attempting to reflect upon members of this house. I would draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to standing order 41, which says:

> No member shall speak disrespectfully of His Majesty, nor of any of the royal family; nor of the governor or person administering the government of Canada; nor use offensive words against either house, or against any member thereof. No member may reflect upon any vote of the house, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

My hon. friend's remarks this afternoon, for the most part, have been in the nature of reflections, not merely upon individuals but upon both Houses of Parliament as well. He has reflected upon the judiciary, and upon members of the Senate, and now he is reflecting upon members of the House of Commons. As a parliamentarian he knows as well as anybody else that if he has a charge to make against any person and wishes an investigation, all he has to do as an hon. member is to stand up in his place and say he is prepared to make a charge and is ready to put his seat in jeopardy in order to prove it. If he will make a statement of that kind with regard to any hon. member or if he will make a specific charge against any individual, I will join him in asking the government to see that there is the fullest investigation carried on, but unless he is prepared to put his own seat in jeopardy and deal with the matter in an open, manly and parliamentary way, he should not be permitted to violate the rules of the house in this way.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) will not be greatly handicapped in stating the facts and the circumstances which exist without making reflections upon those who were perhaps responsible for the state of affairs.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER: I intend to say just what I did say, without any reflection on anyone or without insinuating that this house or any member of this house is in any way responsible for what the hon. member for Acadia is complaining of. I do suggest to him. however, that he can make his statements of fact without casting reflections upon anyone, or contravening the rules in this regard.

Mr. GARDINER: I intend to make my statement of fact as best I can. In my judgment I did not cast any reflections upon the right hon. leader of the opposition. I stated merely that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) was a close personal friend of Senator McDougald, and I believe that statement is correct. I do not think that is any reflection.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am a close personal friend of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) but I would not stoop to make insinuations of the character which he is making at the present time.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that my time has nearly elapsed.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): The hon. member should make his suggestion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): No hon. member is allowed to read his speech.

An hon. MEMBER: You read all of yours.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. gentleman does not know the difference between an hon. member reading his speech and following his notes closely. As I stated before, I do not know how much time I have left and I will close my remarks with an appeal to the Prime Minister.

I realize that this is a very important matter. A year ago the Prime Minister felt it was his duty as the then leader of the opposition to suggest a judicial investigation. I realize that I am placing a mess on the doorstep of the Prime Minister, but I think that mess should be investigated and cleared up at the earliest possible moment. I have considerable evidence under my hand to which time will not permit me to refer. A commission should be appointed and I would be very pleased to go before such a commission and give the evidence in my possession of this whole transaction. The matter is too important for this government to permit it to go any further. I ask the Prime Minister and his colleagues to order an investigation of this matter as soon as is humanly possible.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) is one of great national importance. The St. Lawrence river is more than a river, it is the most important waterway in Canada and one of the most important waterways in the world. The Beauharnois canal enterprise was brought to the attention of this house last year and I made certain observations at that time as to my appreciation of the importance of the matter and of the desirability of the facts being known to the public because of the allegations then made. However, I pointed out that securities had been sold and were in the hands of innocent purchasers. Upon the advent of this government to power and before I went to England I arranged that certain information should be obtained and on my return that information was available. I stated the other day that I did not believe it was in the public interest to bring that information down because it was only what one might term an interim report.

The St. Lawrence river is undoubtedly being dewatered if the cubic feet per second provided for by the original lease granted to the company by the province of Quebec, plus the leave to take 30,000 second feet additional is given effect to. The river is being dewatered and the water turned into a canal which is not being built as a canal but as a communication between two lakes formerly provided by the river itself.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That would total 70,000 second feet?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that would be the result of the two grants. I have steadily endeavoured, without in any sense being hurried, to secure additional information with respect to the matter. I have been furnished with the opinions of leading counsel that under the Navigable Waters' Protection Act there is power to do certain things and that the jurisdiction of the federal government in the premises is solely as defined by that statute. I have not had time to consider these opinions in detail but when the hon. gentleman says that the canal is larger than was provided for by the order in council issued by the late government he is stating the fact; the engineers' report clearly indicates that.

I deprecate very greatly the references made by my hon. friend to the judiciary. I do not think it serves any useful purpose at this time, although perhaps it may serve one purpose. The government is of the opinion that from the facts which have been stated in this house both last year and this year, an investigation into this matter should take place without delay. I propose to prepare a motion to submit this question either to the consideration of the standing committee on banking and commerce or to a select committee to be appointed by the house. The hon. member may indicate in what terms he would like the order of reference to be made and I promise him that the government will give to his suggestions its closest attention and consideration. The matter is too important even when considered from the standpoint that it only concerns differences between individuals or what profit individuals may or may not make, to be allowed to remain as it now stands. Without anticipating what may be said or making any aspersions upon the good faith or interest of those who have been engaged in the undertaking, we will prepare the necessary motion to submit the matter either to a standing or a select committee of this house.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable pleasure and satisfaction that I have listened to the promise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). I had felt for some time that the departmental investigation which was undertaken and which he now refers to as an interim investigation was hardly in keeping with the promise made to the house last year of a full judicial inquiry. While we may be satisfied for the time being with an inquiry by a committee of parliament—I understood the right hon. member to suggest a committee of parliament?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I said either a standing committee or a select committee. Parliament is in session and the observations made this afternoon with respect to the judiciary make it impossible to impose upon any judge of this country a burden which under the statutes he is not required to assume.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am inclined to believe that an investigation by parliament might on the whole be even more satisfactory than a judicial inquiry, although it is quite possible that a judicial inquiry may arise out of the investigation by the committee.

The right hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat referred to the Navigable Waters Protection Act as being the authority under which the order in council was passed which permitted the diverting of these waters by the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company. I submit that there is not a single line, sentence or section in that statute which gave the late government power to divert this water. I have examined the matter somewhat closely, and I find the different events appearing in a regular fashion. The order in council P.C. 422 at the bottom of page 1 refers to the lease granted. This was referred to by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) and reads as follows:

> The rights of the province of Quebec to such part of the hydraulic powers of the St. Lawrence river that can be developed between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis through a derivation canal on the right (southern) shore, having a maximum flowing capacity of 40,000 cubic feet per second, the province reserving the ownership and the free disposition of the surplus.

To put it in simpler language, all that this part purported to do was to lease to the company 500,000 horse-power to be developed from the St. Lawrence river between the two lakes which I mentioned. Before that power could be developed, it was necessary for the company to secure certain other things somewhere else, and so the company came not to parliament, but to the Dominion government and secured the passage of the order in council to which reference has been made. Let us look at the order in council and find out what they asked for. They asked for the following:

First: approval of the proposed development.

Second: in connection therewith they applied for all such authority from the Dominion government as might be necessary to divert water.

Third: they applied for authority to use an "initial" flow of 40,000 cubic feet per second, pursuant to the provisions of section 5 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Fourth: the company applied for approval of the plans and site of works to be constructed in the St. Lawrence river with respect to the diversion of the flow of water mentioned above.

Fifth: After the happening of certain events and the doing of certain things, the company was to have the right to enlarge its canal and divert through it and utilize for the development of power all the flow of the St. Lawrence river, if their original application had been granted.

All of the original application is embodied in the order in council, and the only alteration that has been made in it is in the amended application which is also in the order in council. The amended application limited the flow to an actual and final flow of 40,000 cubic feet per second. I wonder whether hon. gentlemen realize the implication of that. The company had asked for the right to launch a project for the development eventually of the entire power of the St. Lawrence river. They amended that application, and in the amendment they said in effect: Very well, since the objections have arisen, we shall content ourselves with applying for only 40,000 cubic feet. That is all they got; that is all the order in council purported to give them. As has already been said, they have gone ahead and prepared plans and done actual work for the production of more power than that, but that is aside from this particular point. This amended application was really brought about by the refusal of the late government to grant this company power to divert the whole flow. The company amended their application on representations made. The amended application reads at page 5:

> The application of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company now pending before the governor in council is purely and simply for the approval of plans for hydraulic development which will be subject to a condition that not more than 40,000 cubic feet per second shall be diverted from the river—from lake St. Francis, to be returned to lake St. Louis, and used for power purposes by the company between these two ponts; and any condition that the government may exact, in any wording satisfactory to the government, involving that limitation, is accepted in advance by the applicant.

In the amended application there is not a word regarding navigation; it deals solely with power.

Therefore we now arrive at this point where we can ascertain and determine what the Dominion government undertook to accomplish by this order in council. We ascertain this:

First: they approved the hydraulic development.

Second: they approved the plans of the company for the proposed hydraulic development.

Third: they assumed the power to grant to the company the right to divert water from the St. Lawrence river through the proposed canal.

Fourth: they attempted to grant to the company the right to divert a total flow of 40,000 cubic feet of water per second from the St. Lawrence through this canal.

Fifth: they approved the plans and site of the company for remedial works that became necessary as a result of such hydraulic development, the remedial works being that part of the development which necessarily had to be constructed in the St. Lawrence river itself.

Sixth: in the amended application, the company applied for the use of a flow of 40,000 cubic feet. That means they asked the Dominion government to grant them the right to the use of 40,000 cubic feet of water for the production of water power.

I assert again that the Navigable Waters Protection Act does not give any government authority to authorize the diversion and use of 40,000 cubic feet or 50,000 cubic feet or any flow from the river.

Mr. EULER: It is quite useless without that power.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The authority to grant this is vested somewhere, but that authority is certainly not vested in the executive council; it is not vested in the government. It is vested, as I shall show in parliament itself, and only by act of parliament could these alleged rights or privileges be extended, because there is no legislative sanction or authority for what has already been done. I submit that most respectfully. In order to make this clear, let us examine the Navigable Waters Protection Act. "Work" is clearly defined in section 2 whereby work is said to include:

> any bridge, boom, dam, aboiteau, wharf, dock, pier, or other structure, tunnel or pipe, or telegraph or power cable or wire and the approaches or other works necessary or appurtenant thereto, or any work, structure or device, whether similar in character to the foregoing or not, which may interfere with navigation.

Section 4, which is really the purpose of the act, enacts:

> No work shall be built or placed in, upon, over, under, through or across any navigable water unless the site thereof has been approved by the governor in council, nor unless such work is built, placed and maintained in accordance with plans and regulations approved or made by the governor in council.

It will be seen that first of all the works are clearly defined. They must be works of such a character that they involve one or both banks of the river. Secondly, they must be in the river or across the river or under the river, or, in short, between the two banks of the river. By what stretch of the imagination can it be argued that the act under which this authority is incorrectly claimed, gave the government power to authorize the diversion of water and to sanction the plans for the construction of a development which for its greater part is a long distance from the river? Of course I am not a lawyer and that may be my excuse in this connection, but I cannot understand where one can find in any section of the act any authority whatever for the passing of the order in council. There is no question that the proper authority, as I said a moment ago, is parliament. This whole matter should have come before us as an act of parliament. It should have been dealt with by the house and not by order in council.

In connection with this there are other points that might be taken up. It might be argued, for example, that the government had the right to give sanction to or approve plans for the works. The remedial works only could be involved, and remedial works in this case mean works in the river. Remedial works are not the canal, but this order in council purports to give sanction for plans for the creation of a canal, its curvature, depth, width, breadth and all the rest of it. In my opinion—and I am only a layman—my reading of the act would indicate that the government had no right whatever to approve plans for this canal. They could approve remedial plans in the river itself if such plans were proper to the undertaking and satisfactorily safeguarded navigation, but that is the limit to which the government could have gone under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Let us examine that phase of the matter for a moment.

The plans for the remedial works have, in my opinion, and so far as the evidence to my hand goes, never yet been sanctioned. I doubt very much whether the Prime Minister or the Minister of Public Works can inform the house that satisfactory plans for remedial works have ever been placed before the department. They certainly were not sanctioned by the order in council, for the order in council itself points out that the plans already submitted—

Mr. BENNETT: No plans of any shape or form in connection with Beauharnois have been approved by this administration.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am glad to hear that. I could hardly understand how an administration that took cognizance of the legal facts in connection with this matter could approve of these plans for remedial works. On page 6 of the order in council I find the following:

> With respect to the effect of works on river or rapids navigation—

That is the remedial works:

> —the committee—

That is, I imagine, the committee of the cabinet:

> —finds that the diversion of 40,000 cubic feet per second will adversely affect navigation in the Soulanges section and that the works proposed by the company for rectification purposes in this section are not satisfactory.

Could language be clearer? In the order in council itself reference is made to the plans submitted and referred to on page 3 at the bottom of the first paragraph of the present application of the Beauharnois company, these plans consisting of twelve sheets of description. These are the plans to which the order in council refers, and the order in council says that the plans now submitted, and upon which the order in council is presumed to be based, are not of a kind that are satisfactory and that they will not protect navigation. Then it goes further and says:

> The committee finds, however, that with modifications therein there is a reasonable likelihood of the present condition being largely recovered. It is pointed out by the committee that these works are largely experimental, are relatively costly, and, in view of the possibility of the balance of power being developed in a short time, the expenditure involved is likely to be lost before many years.

Mr. EULER: Is the hon. member not aware that the engineers passed upon the question whether the diversion of 40,000 cubic feet per second would interfere with the navigation of the stream?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): All I know is that under the authority of the Navigable Waters' Protection Act the plans approved should have been without question sufficient to protect the navigation rights of the St. Lawrence, but in the order in council itself it is admitted that at the very best, in the opinion of the engineers, it is "reasonably likely" that the interference with navigation may be "largely recovered." That is the position with respect to the remedial works in the St. Lawrence. As a matter of fact, it may easily be contended that not even the Navigable Waters' Protection Act gives the government power to approve of plans of the character that would be necessary to an enterprise of this kind. Apparently there is no certainty in the minds of the engineers of the department that any remedial works will be satisfactory or that navigation will be fully and properly protected.

I say, then, that the whole basis upon which the Beauharnois development is now being proceeded with is illegal, that it has no foundation or authority in any statute whatever, and that the government had no jurisdiction for passing the order in council; certainly no jurisdiction can be found in my reading of the Navigable Waters' Protection Act, and, under this development, unfortunately, a gigantic alienation of the natural resources of this country to private interests for exploitation is taking place under the monstrous financial scheme that was fully disclosed to the house last year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is the argument of the hon. gentleman that the government had no authority by order in council to agree to this diversion because it is not specifically mentioned in the section of the Navigable Waters' Protection Act which my hon. friend read?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): All that the Navigable Waters' Protection Act gives the government power to do is to approve of certain works in navigable waters, "in, upon, over, under, through or across any navigable water." That is all.

Mr. JACOBS: Does not the hon. gentleman know that the St. Lawrence river at that point does not belong to the Dominion of Canada at all, but belongs to the province of Quebec?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I cannot for the life of me see what the point of my hon. friend's question is. It has no relation whatever to the subject matter of my discussion.

Mr. JACOBS: I think it has.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am discussing the order in council passed by the late government giving certain interests power to divert water through the medium of works without authority for the diversion of such water and without having proper plans filed and approved.

Mr. JACOBS: The Dominion government has power merely to protect the navigability of the river, nothing more.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman would add to his statement this, to divert water the property of the crown in the right of the province of Quebec for which they have received a licence, it would be complete.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): On that point we might debate for days, because, as the right hon. gentleman himself pointed out in the debate last year, the order in council itself casts serious doubt upon the ownership of the power by the province of Quebec.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh yes, of the power.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And therefore of the water. If the late government was justified in authorizing the diversion of water for the production of power, then it may be argued they owned the water.

Mr. JACOBS: Merely the navigability of the water, and nothing else.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is open to argument whether it owned the water, and thereby the power also. The supreme court judgment left the whole matter entirely in the air. The court refused to make a decision one way or the other on the question referred to it, and to this day neither this house nor the province of Quebec nor anyone in this country knows to whom the power that may be developed on the St. Lawrence river belongs. Not a soul in this country can say: Here we have legislative, statutory or judicial authority stating that we alone own the power. Nobody knows. Why the order in council itself in one of its clauses on page 5 points out:

> That in view of the combination of the two questions of power and navigation, it was deemed advisable to refer to the Supreme Court of Canada a series of questions to the end of determining the respective rights of the Dominion and provincial governments in the development of power.

The order in council says:

The supreme court has recently submitted the result of its consideration of the various questions asked. The conclusions of the court do not furnish sufficient ground to establish a well-defined line of action with respect to power.

Of course they do not. The whole thing is still undecided. If hon. gentlemen would turn to clause 21 of the conditions, found on page 10 of the order in council, they will see that it reads:

The approval hereby granted is given upon and subject to the condition that in case it should be judicially determined that His Majesty in the right of the Dominion is entitled to any of the power now or hereafter to be developed in connection with the works the subject of this approval or any works hereafter to be constructed by virtue hereof by the company or which His Majesty may construct then and in such event the company shall pay to His Majesty—

And so on. That clause can be read as meaning many things, but one thing certainly, that it was the intention, implied at least, of the government to make further examination into the ownership of the power. It says here that it is given upon and subject to the condition that in case it should be judicially determined— "in case."

Mr. BENNETT: There is a distinction between power and water; I should like my hon. friend to keep that in mind.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes; in case it should be judicially determined. In other words, if it be argued that, in order to develop power, it is necessary to grant a diversion of the water, then you have the thing still further confused. The order in council implies that the matter has not been settled by any authority anywhere, and it implies that further examination will be made before the court in respect to ownership. And although the government had themselves, within a few days of that very time, through the Attorney General for the Dominion of Canada argued before the supreme court that the Dominion alone had the right to the power; in spite of the fact that they had prepared an extensive and expensive factum which was signed by many legal authorities, including the former Solicitor General: in spite of that fact the Solicitor General of the late administration himself rose in the house, a few days after having contended in the court that the Dominion had the power, and challenging hon. members on this side, argued that the province of Quebec owned the power and should be given authority—a most absurd and ridiculous position to be placed in.

Mr. JACOBS: Perhaps he was merely devil's advocate.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It may be that lawyers lend themselves to that sort of thing; but I submit that in both cases he was speaking or should have been speaking, in the interests of the people of the Dominion. He should have been speaking, first, as their advocate as Attorney General before the Supreme Court of Canada; and, secondly, as a minister of the crown in this house In neither capacity was he representing the interests of Quebec or the point of view he held with respect to Quebec; he should have been concerned to preserve, and contend for, the rights of the people of the whole Dominion. Does it appear that he was doing so in both cases? One day he argued in the court to the effect that, "of course, the Dominion has the power; there is nothing to the argument opposing this contention. We own this power; here is the proof." And a few days afterwards he says, "The Dominion has no jurisdiction; it is a matter for the province of Quebec." Well, Mr. Speaker, that is an additional matter that might be investigated.

I do not wish unnecessarily to prolong the debate, Mr. Speaker, because I am more than satisfied with the agreement of the Prime Minister that this whole matter should be sent to a special committee of this house. I do submit however that it certainly is time this be done. If there is one thing that the country is demanding at this time it is that the fullest possible investigation, as full as has been made in the past before a committee of the United States Senate, should be made in regard to power matters in Canada. I say without fear of contradiction, that the gigantic control, on the part of small groups of powerful financiers, of these immensely valuable natural resources upon which, as the Prime Minister said last year, the life, the welfare, the happiness and well-being of millions of people in the future depend—the right hon. member used words to that effect, I believe—is a matter of the gravest concern to the people of this Dominion. And any alienation of these resources to private interests by order in council must be investigated; we must look into such questions as cost of production of power and the prices charged the consumer. In my opinion the time is coming when, if necessary, amendments to the British North America Act must be secured in order to give this government authority to preserve the rights of the consuming public in this country. I say therefore that the narrower and narrower, the smaller and smaller these groups become—such financial groups as the Sweezey and the Holt concerns who are now more and more controlling this great resource —the more certain is it that we must by legislative interference on the part of the Dominion of Canada protect the rights of the consuming public of the country.

It has been suggested that as third parties are now involved by the purchase of the bonds and shares certain vested rights have been created and therefore nothing can be done in connection with the matter. Let me however point out that under section 12 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, under which the whole thing is purported to have been made possible, parliament may take action. Let me quote from the act:

> Parliament may, at any time, annul or vary any order of the governor in council made under this part.

Therefore, if it be found that the inferences I have drawn from the facts as I have set them out are correct, that this government had no legal authority for the order in council, and that the plans have not been ratified nor sanctioned—because no plans suitable to enterprises of this character could yet have been before the Department of Public Works then I say that the whole basis upon which this development has taken place is illegal and the agreement should be cancelled forthwith.

Then comes the point I suggested a moment ago, namely, the question of third party interests. We did not worry about the third party interests in the form of the taxpayers of Canada when we abandoned development at Port Nelson upon the recommendation of Mr. Palmer. The former Minister of Railways advised, and the house agreed, that the development at Nelson should be abandoned, and Fort Churchill was decided upon instead —properly and wisely in my opinion. But that involved the loss of $6,242,000 of money expended at Port Nelson. It was profitable and wise to take this course, and I venture to say it would be found profitable and wise in this instance to forget the third party interests involved especially as this Dominion is not concerned in any way, by law or otherwise, in the matter. The stock and bonds of the corporation were disposed of to certain associates of Mr. Sweezey and others through their companies, the Dominion Securities Corporation and Newman Sweezey and Company. These companies in turn sold to the public. The issue is therefore as between the public and these bond companies, not as between the public and the Dominion, nor between the public and the provinces, unless it be found that fraud has been perpetrated on the public. In that event these associates of Mr. Sweezey, and Mr. Sweezey himself, should be assailed in the courts and made to pay over the necessary amount to make good their exploitations.

If I had time, Mr. Speaker, I would direct the attention of the house to other illustrations to bear out my contention in this regard. I have in my hand the examination which was made by the Commission of Conservation of Canada with regard to Long Sault rapids, and development in connection therewith, in the St. Lawrence. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that in that case the development involved a tremendous amount of public money, and the whole project was cancelled by law. It happened in the United States, in the state of New York—not in this country—but it is an illustration of the wise action taken to protect the whole public interest even though at the sacrifice of a few investors. I certainly hope therefore that investigation before a committee of this house of the question now before us will be as full as possible.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): The proceedings of this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, illustrate better than anything that has happened thus far this session the importance of adhering in spirit and in letter to the rules which have been framed with a view to the protection of members in the course of debate, and the rights of the public to the fullest discussion of matters of public interest. To bring up a particular matter as one of urgency is permissible under the rules. It is generally conceded, however, that there must be some special ground of urgency in order to have questions discussed under that special heading; if such is lacking some other course should be followed. The question of the Beauharnois canal and matters incidental thereto is a very large question. It involves matters affecting the rights of the provinces and of the Dominion. It involves the question of the jurisdiction respectively of the Dominion and of the provinces. It involves the question of power rights which in part, as yet, are undetermined judicially, I believe. The whole question, I imagine, is as large as any likely to be brought up for discussion in this house, and yet, with the exception of the two hon. gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon, no member, so far as I am aware, had any knowledge until the time of opening the proceedings this afternoon that this question was to be brought forward to-day. I do not assume that the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) advised the government in advance of what he had in mind. I know that he did not advise me in advance, until three o'clock, when I received the following note:

Ottawa, May 19, 1931.

Dear Mr. King:

I propose this afternoon to move the adjournment of the house to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the Beauharnois project.

Yours very truly,
R. Gardiner.

Mr. BENNETT: I received a similar note.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister says he received a similar communication. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that if the object of my hon. friend from Acadia had been solely that of the public interest, which he has put forward so professedly and so profusely this afternoon, I think he might have advised both the Prime Minister and myself, at least this morning, if not a day or two ago, that he intended to bring this subject up for discussion to-day. I have had no intimation from any source this year that this question was to be brought up in parliament at this session. I have known that there were present in the city two or three individuals—I do not know whether they are lawyers or not—who for motives best known to themselves have been preparing a brief on the Beauharnois case, which brief was read in this house this afternoon by the hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. GARDINER: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I ask the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) to take back his statement, for it is not correct.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If it is not correct, Mr. Speaker, I will take it back, but it is so nearly correct that I think everyone must feel the force of it.

Mr. GARDINER: Again I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The statement the right hon. leader of the opposition has made is not "nearly correct," and I ask him to withdraw it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am quite prepared to withdraw the statement in that form, but I repeat, it is a matter of common knowledge that within the capital for the past few weeks two or three individuals have had their headquarters at the Chateau Laurier, where they have been preparing some briefs on the Beauharnois canal situation.

An hon. MEMBER: Two months.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: For the past two months I am informed. I do not know that it is possible to state definitely just for whom the particular briefs were being prepared, but I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the house, that with respect to the speech delivered this afternoon by the hon. member for Acadia every word of it was read from a manuscript which he had upon his desk, and that manuscript has been in course of preparation for some time.

Mr. GARDINER: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not read from a manuscript; I had very extended notes before me.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says he had very extended notes before him. I think he might have given to the Prime Minister and myself at least an opportunity to have, I will not say extended notes, but some knowledge in advance that this question was coming up, so that we might have been in a position to discuss intelligently some of the points raised. As I have said, the matter is very involved, and with the number of subjects which it is necessary for hon. members to carry in their minds from day to day, unless there is given some opportunity of looking up the statutes and referring to the orders in council, I do not see how any member can be expected to reply intelligently when these particular documents are referred to in debate. The hon. member for Acadia might have advised this house at any time that he was going to bring up the subject. Even if he did not wish to do so on the floor of the house, we do not live so far apart in this building that he might not have given us an intimation at least a few hours in advance that he was going to bring the question up.

Now, the fact that the hon. member has come here prepared in the fashion in which he was, and supported by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), who also has had considerable time for the preparation of what he said to-day, I assume—I notice he does not rise to a point of order—I say the fact that although they have had ample time to prepare their speeches and have pleaded the urgency of the situation as their reason for making them, causes me to feel that there is some object other solely than the public interest which they are seeking to serve by bringing up this matter in this way at this time.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

An hon. MEMBER: You don't like to take it, do you?

Mr. GARDINER: I am ready to take anything that is coming to me right. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The leader of the opposition has just stated that we have some ulterior motives in bringing this subject before the house. All we want is to secure an investigation by this house; we have no other motive.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: In view of the hon. member's objection I think the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) should withdraw his imputation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, no, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to withdraw what I have just said.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The right hon. gentleman knows that he must not impute motives to any hon. member.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was not imputing motives, I was judging the situation in the light of what has taken place to-day, and I said if what the hon. member for Acadia had primarily in mind was a full and thorough discussion of this subject on the floor of the house to-day, we would not have been precipitated into this debate without any knowledge in advance of his intention to bring this matter up. Let me say at once that I for one am more than delighted that the Prime Minister has undertaken to grant a committee of investigation into this matter, because some of these hon. gentlemen in the far corner will then get a chance to make good some of the general statements and reflections that they have been making on the floor of the house about judges, members of parliament, and everyone else who does not happen to be one of their number.

With respect to the so-called Beauharnois project, it is advisable that it should be made perfectly clear to the house and to the country just what the relation of the federal government to this matter has been and is. As I have already said, I must ask the indulgence of the house in speaking without having had an opportunity of looking at any of the past records. I do not wish to be held too closely to technical exactness in what I am about to say. Broadly speaking, the outstanding facts, as I understand them, are these. The St. Lawrence river is, having regard to the territory through which it flows, in part, an international waterway; in part, a national waterway exclusively in the province of Quebec or in a part of the adjoining province. Where the St. Lawrence river is exclusively in the province of Quebec this parliament has not jurisdiction over the power rights or any other matters affecting the water, except in so far as there is imposed on it the obligation of safeguarding navigation under the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

May I go a step further? In order to incorporate a company such as the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, it is essential that a charter shall be obtained from the government of the province, not from the government of the Dominion. This government has given no charter to the Beauharnois company respecting power rights, nor has this parliament or any federal government given any right to the Beauharnois company with respect to power rights. Those rights have been obtained from the government of the province of Quebec. If they have been illegally obtained, or if there are matters that are not as they should be with respect to any phases of the transaction, the place in which those matters should be discussed is on the floor of the legislature of the province of Quebec and not on the floor of this parliament, though I have no objection to this parliament taking up its time with provincial matters if, even indirectly, they can be shown to have a bearing in so far as federal matters are concerned.

Mr. LAVERGNE: The St. Lawrence is not a provincial matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, the St. Lawrence is not a provincial matter, but the St. Lawrence in the province of Quebec is regarded by that province as being within its jurisdiction so far as the granting of power rights are concerned, and those rights have been granted by the province of Quebec to this company. If the government of the province of Quebec had no authority to grant those rights then surely, under the laws of the land, there are methods of restraining the government in that particular and of preventing the granting of those rights.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the Prime Minister tell us what those methods are?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is a legal matter; it is not for me to explain it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Prime Minister has suggested that there are methods; would he indicate them?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend means leader of the opposition at this moment. I thank him.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, the leader of the opposition. I presume he had something definite in mind when he said there are methods by which this work can be stayed. I would like him to indicate what are those methods.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I were an expert in the law and had been paying special attention to this phase of the question, I could answer my hon. friend offhand, but I must say to him at the moment that he will have to accept the statement, as I think he will be prepared to accept it, that if a province does a thing which it has no right to do, then under the laws of this country there are methods at law whereby the province can be restrained.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: And if the Dominion government does something it has no right to do?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is equally so in regard to the Dominion government; it can be restrained under the law.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is not this the place to introduce the matter?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, and I am glad my hon. friend has now brought the matter to a head. The function of the Dominion is to pass upon any power rights or diversions of water granted by provinces with respect to their not interfering with navigation. I will read the clause under which the Dominion has authority in these matters:

No work shall be built or placed in, upon, over, under, through or across any navigable water unless the site thereof has been approved by the governor in council, nor unless such work is built, placed and maintained in accordance with plans and regulations approved or made by the governor in council.

That is the extent of the functions and duties of the federal government and of this parliament with respect to such matters as power rights and diversions of water on the St. Lawrence in connection with a company such as the Beauharnois company. The plans are submitted to the government; they are then submitted by the government to its engineers and on the technical advice which is given to the administration it acts in granting approval of those plans. But its function is confined to the approving of plans. That is what was done by order in council, and the statute says that the approval is to be given by order in council. It makes that quite clear. The government in proceeding by order in council is not usurping the functions of parliament. Parliament passed this act; parliament gave to the government or placed upon the government of the day the responsibility of approving of plans by that method, by order in council. To listen to hon. gentlemen who have spoken one would think that because the government of the day passed some order in council instead of getting an act of parliament, they had been going behind parliament in order to confer some special powers or favours upon political friends

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GARDINER: At this point I should like to ask a question. Does the act give the government power to divert water?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I have made clear what the powers of the federal government are and what is the method of procedure. In all this matter the action of the government has been entirely regular Now let me read this further section, and I will ask my hon. friends who have spoken to pay particular attention:

Parliament may, at any time, annul or vary any order of the governor in council made under this part.

In other words, this order in council was passed, so far as the federal government functions in the matter, over two years ago; it was passed in March, 1929. For two years hon. members who have spoken to-day have had the right to introduce in this house a motion which would annul that order in council, and this parliament had full authority to annul it. All they had to do was to make out a case before parliament why the order in council should be annulled. They have not done that, but they have come here and have made insinuations against pretty nearly every person other than those who belong to their own particular group, as if no one in this world possessed aught in the way of integrity except themselves. I wish to say to one or two of my hon. friends in the far corner that the public will believe that hon. members of the old political parties in this country have just as fine a sense of honour and just as high a sense of integrity as members of any group in this house who may not happen to belong to one or other of those two parties. It ill behooves them, when there is a statute which was passed by parliament expressly to provide a means of dealing in a parliamentary way with a matter such as this, and when they have not availed themselves of that means, to come and make insinuations of the general character which we have had this afternoon.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that is perhaps about all it is necessary to say at this time. I hope I have made clear first of all that so far as the Beauharnois company is concerned, it is a company which obtained its charter from the government of the province of Quebec. It obtained whatever rights it has with respect to power from the government of Quebec and obtained whatever rights it has with respect to diversion from the same government. As far as the government of Canada, whether under the old administration or the present administration, is concerned, it had nothing to do with this matter except to approve of those plans from the point of view of the protection of navigation. If there has not been the protection of navigation on the St. Lawrence in the approval granted that there should be, then certainly the administration which granted the approval without sufficiently safeguarding navigation should be criticized and taken to task in the matter. My hon. friend said this afternoon, "Why is it that you have made the canal twice as wide in Quebec as you have made the Welland canal?" My answer is that we wished to be doubly sure that the rights of navigation would be fully protected in that part of the St. Lawrence river. That is the answer to that question. There were no ulterior motives of the character which have been insinuated here this afternoon. That is the position, and may I say that I believe the public of this country, as well as hon. members of this house, will be more than gratified when this matter of the Beauharnois development and anything that can be brought up incidental to it is finally referred to a committee. There everyone will be given a chance to prove any charge he may bring, but he will be obliged to prove it not by insinuation under the privilege which he has as a member of parliament, but by evidence of a character which would be accepted in a court of law.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very satisfactory statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) I had hesitated to continue this discussion, but now that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) has spoken, all my hesitation has vanished. He worked himself up into a righteous indignation with regard to the methods adopted by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), which may or may not have been quite correct; but that is not what we are concerned with to-day. We are concerned with certain facts which we wish to lay before the house. It was only by a very narrow margin, that we were able this afternoon to bring this question before the house, and so it seems to me that we should not let slip this opportunity of informing the general public with regard to the whole situation.

I do not think the public of Canada are informed either as to the facts or as to the great issues at stake. It might well be said that the committee which has been promised will discuss the details of this matter, but on the other hand I would like to call attention to the fact that the corporation has been carrying on a very extensive and persistent publicity campaign across Canada ever since this matter was taken up a year ago. The leader of the opposition seemed to be rather surprised that the matter should come up before the house this year. In view of the charges which were made last year, and of the definite statement of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) that he would bring the matter up again, I cannot quite understand why the right hon. member did not understand that it would be taken up again. Hon. members have received resolutions and letters in regard to it, and it would seem to me to be a matter of course that this question should be brought up for further discussion. The one thing I did not like in the statement of the Prime Minister was the suggestion that because securities had been sold there might be some difficulty in regard to cancellation. I think that was the idea in his mind.

Mr. BENNETT: That is correct; I stated that there were vested interests on the part of people in all parts of the American continent who had purchased securities.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I protest against that attitude. It seems to me that if this undertaking has been illegally acquired the public who have invested in its bonds cannot be said to have a legal interest or to be entitled to legal protection. My lawyer friends tell me that if a man receives stolen property he is not given protection. I know the Prime Minister will say there is no analogy, but lawyers generally see no analogy between big steals and little steals.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend's aversion to lawyers should not prompt him to make his statement so general. The courts have held that where a company is found to be ultra vires, those who expended their money in good faith believing it not to be ultra vires have a right to be protected.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If that is the law then there should be some decided amendments, because the rights of the people should be protected. If a corporation is required only to issue a few bonds and manages in some illegal way to get its proposition before the public in order to be secured, it is time the country knew about it and had the necessary amendments passed. With the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) I see no reason why an annulment should not take place.

In view of what the leader of the opposition has said I should like to state my interest in this matter. I believe first of all in public ownership; that is one of my prime interests in this question. The recent administration alienated the Seven Sisters falls in spite of the protests made. I have never been convinced—

An hon. MEMBER: That was Taschereau power.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not want to get into Quebec, I am in Manitoba at the present moment. The Seven Sisters falls should have remained the property of the people for the use of the people. I would direct the attention of this house to the fact that already the Insull interests have acquired a large part of the stock of the Winnipeg Electric interests. I think it is an outrage thus to alienate the patrimony which we have inherited, and turn it over to American interests.

Further, I am firmly convinced that the Beauharnois corporation is not legally entitled to the power in the St. Lawrence. That being the case it seems to me that as a public man I have to do everything in my power to call attention to the situation.

It has been suggested by the leader of the opposition that there was something sinister in the fact that certain hon. members have been working on this power proposition. I will say very frankly that I have been furnished with information by interested parties on both sides, as have, I presume, nearly all hon. members. In relation to almost every important question which comes before the house it is a common thing for us to obtain memoranda from the various parties interested. I have no hesitation in saying that I have received information in this case. I did not use any of these memoranda or documents without carefully considering them and making them my own.

It has been said that those who are opposing the actions of the corporation now in control are playing the game of a rival corporation. There is always a danger of that, but I want to state that I will be the first to protest against any irregular procedure on the part of any other corporation. I have no particular antagonism to the Beauharnois Company as such, but I protest against the irregularities connected with their obtaining this power.

Whether or not power in Quebec is Taschereau power, private power or public power, I need not argue. I maintain that the water powers in the St. Lawrence river should be under public control and if possible under public ownership. Let me direct attention to some of the legal aspects of this case. The other evening we were discussing the British North America Act and at that time, as in the past, we heard a great deal about provincial rights. I should like to take a few minutes to talk about Dominion rights, a matter about which we hear very little, although I acknowledge that we did hear something of this the other day from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie).

The claims of the Beauharnois Power Corporation are based on the original rights of the Roberts. The present undertaking is simply an extension of earlier works. If any hon. member has any doubt in regard to this matter I would refer him to the Exchequer Court Reports, volume IX The judgment appearing there gives an outline of the history of the Beauharnois power proposition. I think I will take about five minutes of my time to summarize that history.

The history of the Beauharnois begins with the Marquis of Beauharnois, owner of the seigneury of the county of Beauharnois which he acquired from King Louis of France. The marquis or his descendants erected a feeder running from lake St. Francis to the river St. Louis and drew water from lake St. Francis through the feeder for the purpose of developing power at Beauharnois to operate a mill which belonged to them. This feeder or canal was constructed early in the last century by the then seigneur of Beauharnois, through his own lands for the purpose above indicated, and from that time to the present, he and his grantees have continued to use the water supplied by the feeder for the purposes mentioned. Later in the century when the Beauharnois canal was constructed by the government of Canada it was found that it had the effect of raising the water along the south shore of lake St. Francis. To overcome this difficulty a dyke was constructed, the contract being dated March 1, 1855. This dyke crossed the feeder. The gates at the head of the feeder which the seigneur had built were removed when the dyke was constructed and replaced by gates constructed as part of the public works and which formed part of the dyke. Title was acquired in some way by the crown to the land upon which the dyke and the gates were built. This dyke and the gates were the property of the late province of Canada, the title of which passed to the Dominion in 1867 by the British North America Act. After the construction of this dyke and head gates the seigneur remained in possession of the feeder and in disposing from time to time of mill properties on the St. Louis river, of which he was the owner, he granted to the purchasers a right to the use of the waters supplied by the feeder. This condition of affairs continued until 1882 or 1883 when the Dominion government took possession of the head gates and feeder as well as the St. Lawrence river, and made improvements on the river, deepened and improved the feeder, constructed a bridge over it and took out and rebuilt the head gates.

The Dominion government remained in possession until 1888. In that year some arrangement was arrived at between the late J. B. Robert and the government whereby he was given the keys to the head gates and allowed the use of the feeder until 1892. In the meantime he had acquired practically all the rights of mill owners in the vicinity of the feeder of the river St. Louis. In February, 1892, the government resumed possession of the feeder and control of the head gates against the will and consent of Robert who gave up the keys of the gates to avoid difficulty but without waiving any of his rights. This condition of affairs continued until 1904 when an action was brought by the Roberts against the government for possession of the head gates and feeder. This action was tried in the exchequer court and decided against the Roberts. Negotiations continued until 1909 when an agreement was reached whereby the government passed an order in council authorizing the minister of public works to lease to the Roberts the head gates, feeder and the use of the water to be diverted to the feeder for the production of power at and for the sum of one dollar per year.

In 1902 the Roberts incorporated the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company, to which they transferred certain of their rights. In 1910 the agreement with the government referred to was assigned to this company, which has continued to lease the head gates, the feeder and the water, paying to the government the agreed rental. This condition of affairs has continued up to the present time.

I have summarized that statement from the judgment in order that the house may have something of a background, and also to reinforce my statement that to-day all the extensions that have been made and the powers claimed go back to the original rights of the Roberts. That is clearly recognized from the fact that the present corporation is paying a rental to the Dominion government. I think this letter might be of interest:

Your file No. 804-1 B

The Deputy Minister,
Department of Public Works,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir:

We enclose herewith our cheque for one dollar ($1) in payment of the annual rental due by Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, as assignees of the interests of the lessees, in an agreement dated December 29, 1909, between His Majesty the King and Dame Sarah Roberts et al.

This agreement was assigned to Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company by deed of transfer dated March 26, 1910—authentic copy of which was filed with your department on June 27, 1927, and acknowledged by the secretary of your department under date of June 29, 1927—file No. 804-1-B.

Will you please acknowledge receipt of this rental in due course.

Yours faithfully,
Hugh G. Griffith.

There was a similar letter dated October 20, 1928, another similar one dated October 17, 1929, and then I have here a copy of a receipt from S. E. O'Brien. These documents indicate that the ownership and control of the St. Louis river feeder by the Dominion government were clearly recognized; otherwise why was this annual rental paid?

Not only is this the case with regard to this particular work and feeder on the St. Lawrence, but there are certain other public works that are distinctly the property of the Dominion. The hon. member for Bow River referred incidentally to the factum on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada in the Supreme Court of Canada. This factum is the case of the Dominion government as argued before the Supreme Court of Canada:

In the matter of a reference as to the relative rights of the Dominion and the provinces, respectively, in relation to the proprietary interest in, and legislative control over, waters with respect to navigation and water-powers created or made available by or in connection with works for the improvement of navigation.

The factum is dated 1928. On page 67 of this factum we observe that "all those portions of the St. Lawrence navigation, from Kingston to the port of Montreal, improved at the expense of the province," were vested in the crown and eventually became the property of the Dominion by virtue of the British North America Act of 1867.

The leader of the opposition is trying to evade the issue by making the Beauharnois development a purely provincial matter. It is not in any sense a provincial matter. Under the British North America Act of 1867 this was one of the properties that distinctly became the property of the Dominion of Canada. Since the leader of the opposition wants to throw discredit on those of us who are taking up this matter—although I do not know why he should—I think I had better read from the factum itself. On page 67 I find:

94. By section 108 of the British North America Act, 1867 (App. p. 83, lines 32-33) the public works and property of each province enumerated in the third schedule (App. p. 85, lines 21-22) to this act were declared to be the property of Canada. The third schedule enumerates, under the caption "provincial public works and property to be the property of Canada," the following amongst others.

This can be found in the British North America Act, a copy of which I hold in my hand.

1. Canals, with lands and water-powers connected therewith.

This is the statement of the Dominion government itself that the powers in the St. Lawrence enumerated here belong to the Dominion government?

Mr. LAVERGNE: Who represented the Dominion government?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) mentioned one of the representatives: the former Solicitor General. This, however, is the statement, and while I am not always quite sure with regard to my legal grounds, I fancy this presentation as put forward by the Dominion government stands until in some way it has been overturned by legal decision, and that has never taken place. This then is the position of the Dominion government itself. Under and by virtue of section 108 of the British North America Act and the third schedule, this canal and the water powers connected therewith, passed to the Dominion government in 1867, and having so passed, they still belong to the Dominion government. Thus as a matter of fact, Quebec has no jurisdiction whatever.

Let me go a step further. In the lease of this corporation, the province claims the right to all the water powers. I would refer the house to order in council P.C. 422, in which these words are used:

The province reserving the ownership and free disposition of the surplus.

I would point out that in addition to the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company which is still paying a rental to the Dominion government, we have the Dominion government leasing part of the hydraulic power in the St. Lawrence river between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis to the Montreal Cotton Company.

Mr. BENNETT: Acquired by Beauharnois.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, but my point is this: that the lease is given by the Dominion government; it is not a provincial matter, although in some curious way, I am informed that the province is receiving a sort of second rental for this. I do not know how they have the right to do this, but the province itself is charging a rental.

Another corporation, the Canadian Light and Power Company, has leased power from the Dominion government, and there is also a possibility that the Cedar Rapids Power and Manufacturing Company, one of the other companies in this district, has also leased power from the Dominion. I would refer to the factum at page 105.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a condition in the lease that the Beauharnois would have to pay any damages that would accrue with respect to Cedar Rapids.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, and there have been some cases of compensation with regard to this matter. My submission is that if the Dominion owns part of the hydraulic powers of the St. Lawrence river, the exclusive claims of the province are untenable. Indeed, the presumption is that the Dominion government is the agency which has legal authority and right to lease this power.

At this stage in some way or another, Quebec comes on the scene—I say advisedly, "in some way or another," because I do not know how it was managed.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Behind the scenes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps behind the scenes, as my hon. friend suggests. But in any case, in the act of incorporation of 1902 of the Beauharnois Company, they were given the right to build a canal 120 feet wide between this feeder and the river St Louis, and in 1910 the act of incorporation was amended to allow the company to build a canal of six arpents or 1,100 feet wide. In 1928 the act of incorporation was further amended allowing them to change the location of the intake on lake St. Francis and the position of the outlet from river St. Louis to lake St. Louis. In 1930, when the securities were already in the hands of the public, further amendments were secured, allowing the company to widen the canal to 4,000 feet.

Let me point out again that the enlargements and extensions are based on the original rights of the Roberts. There is no other basis. That was the position taken by Mr. Geoffrion in seeking the amendments in 1928. I have his statement here, but have not time to read it; as I understand it, however, the whole claim was based essentially on the original rights of the Roberts.

Let me pass to another phase of this question, in which I think we shall see that the province has also exceeded its jurisdiction. By subsection 11 of section 92 of the British North America Act the province is permitted to incorporate companies with provincial objects only. That is as far as the power of the province goes. If a company's works and undertakings are of such a character as to extend actually or potentially beyond the limits of a province, they are manifestly not provincial objects for the establishment, control and operation of which a provincial company can be incorporated. Again, Mr. Speaker, I am drawing my statement from the factum itself.

The Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company was incorporated by the legislature of the province of Quebec, chapter 72 of 2 Edward VII, 1902. Section 12 of the act incorporating the company gives the company the right to supply, sell and distribute light, heat and power in any direction within a radius of thirty miles of the town of Beauharnois. By a later amendment, that radius was extened to within forty miles from the town of Beauharnois, within which the company may supply, sell and distribute light, heat and power. As a matter of fact, while these I suppose are more or less standard clauses, before you come to the limit of thirty or forty miles from Beauharnois you come to the boundary of the province of Ontario and to the international boundary. It was the evident purpose of the company to distribute power in Ontario, or possibly in the United States; that is, the company was permitted to transmit electricity within this radius, which contemplates the erection by the company of transmission wires entering the United States or the province of Ontario or connecting with transmission wires at the boundary. That was the object of the company. Let me read again from the factum:

> Where the objects of a company fall within section 92 No. 10 (a) it is clear that the Dominion has exclusive legislative power to incorporate such company and grant it all powers required for the construction and operation of the proposed work, including, inter alia, the power of expropriation.

I am not going into the rather technical details which are contained in the factum. But I would urge that the act of incorporation is ultra vires, since the company's objects were not local or provincial but rather interprovincial.

I might go on to show that not only had we the original company, but this company formed a sort of subsidiary known as the Beauharnois Transmission Company, evidently for the purpose of taking electricity from the point of production and distributing it throughout the territory served by the company.

The company was formed by a Quebec charter, and inasmuch as these wires go outside the province and are evidently designed to carry on works outside the province, I urge that this company also becomes a company having interprovincial objects. It is clear that the Dominion government alone has the exclusive authority and jurisdiction to incorporate a company to undertake a development such as is now being undertaken by the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company.

But I come to an even more important consideration than that, and one which some of us emphasized last year, namely that the whole St. Lawrence scheme is essentially a Dominion project. It ought never to be considered a merely local matter; in fact, that situation is more or less recognized by the Beauharnois company itself, because in its prospectus issued on December 8, 1930, it says:

> In providing deep water navigation in its power canal, the Beauharnois Power Corporation is providing one of the major links in the deep waterways by canalizing all the wholly-Canadian section of the river, save for the stretch around the Lachine rapids at Montreal.

We all know that the St. Lawrence system extends all the way from the head of the great lakes right through to the sea; and here is one of the major links, acknowledged as such by the corporation itself, and yet we are going to allow it to go into the hands of a private corporation. I think it is absolutely absurd. We have spent I do not know how many tens or it may be hundreds of millions of dollars in the Welland canal, and yet the whole of that important project may be rendered useless if we allow the control of Beauharnois to pass to a private corporation.

Mr. LAVERGNE: They could stop navigation in a day if they wanted to.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, that is true, and a friend of mine, Mr. R. K. Finlayson, a good Conservative in politics, wrote a letter not long ago to the Manitoba Free Press, urging that we can do that and should do that. We can plug the canal, but I fancy that there are vested interests at stake which, if they can prevent us from annulling the lease, would protest vociferously if the government undertook to plug the canal.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I say that the company could stop navigation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I misunderstood my hon. friend. I suppose they could, although navigation is supposed to be protected by the order in council. May I here read a statement from the factum that I could not find a moment ago when I was dealing with the limitations of provincial companies. At page 106:

> It is now well established that it is the potential scope of the authorized objects and not the area of their actual exercise or operation which determines the character of the work or undertaking as being federal, and where the authority conferred covers works or undertakings which may extend beyond the limits of a province, such works or undertakings are therefore non-local and fall to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Dominion by virtue of section 92, 10 (a) of the British North America Act.

But, Mr. Speaker, this is not simply a question as between the provincial authorities and the federal authorities. It is not simply an interprovincial question, but an international matter as well. I submit that the works contemplated by the Beauharnois development are of such a class as to bring them within the jurisdiction of the Treaty of Washington of 1871, or the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, or within a treaty to be entered into between Canada and the United States with respect to the St. Lawrence deep seaway. Being works of such a nature, they would be subject to the exclusive legislative control of the Dominion. That, too, is clearly substantiated by the argument as contained in the factum at page 95:

> Article 3 (App. p. 50), further provides that, except as provided elsewhere by the treaty or by special agreement, no further or other uses or obstructions or diversions, whether temporary or permanent, of boundary waters . . . should be made.

At page 97 of the factum certain fundamental principles are laid down. I quote:

> The Attorney General submits that the Dominion has the exclusive legislative control over water-powers created or made available by the works referred to in this question, for the following reasons: The parliament and government of Canada alone are empowered under the British North America Act to carry out and perform the obligations of Canada under such a treaty.

In order that Canada should obey the spirit as well as the letter of the various treaties which have hitherto been entered into between Great Britain and Canada, on the one hand and the United States, on the other, and in order that we may be free with regard to the proposed treaty between the United States and ourselves, parliament should at once annul the lease which has been granted to the Beauharnois corporation by order in council.

There is another matter which I must touch upon, however briefly, and which I regard as of very great importance, and that is the fact that the order in council goes directly in face of the advice of the joint board of engineers, whose recommendation is against such a scheme as is proposed by the Beauharnois people.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Why?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I too should like to ask, why it is that the late government went directly in face of the advice of their own engineers. That question has never been answered. And again let me say to the leader of the opposition, if he is in the house, that we are not taking our cue merely from some people who happen to have personal interests. This action in disregard of the engineers' report is dealt with in the articles to which I have referred and which may be elaborated later in the discussion—I hope they will—as published in the Manitoba Free Press, one of the leading organs of public opinion and one that has generally supported the late government.

We had several years ago considerable trouble with regard to the Chicago drainage canal, and we protested very vigorously against the waters there being diverted for United States purposes, even though they were for sanitary purposes; and if you will look at the factum you will find a certain order under which the waters may be diverted. But we must admit that the United States government during the last ten years has consistently refused to grant any rights on the international section of the river. Canada should do at least as much. We have hopes of some day having a deep waterway scheme realized, and it does seem to me that by this action the late government has impaired the success of that scheme. And, incidentally, it has not lived up to the treaties or the understandings which existed between Canada and the United States.

Let me now summarize, in closing, the points I have tried to make. The claims of this corporation are based essentially on the old claims of the Roberts. The Dominion government owns the Roberts' works, as is shown by the fact that the present corporation is paying a nominal rental charge to the Dominion government. Under the British North America Act, public works on the St. Lawrence were definitely put under Dominion jurisdiction. There is no doubt about that. If any hon. member questions it, I would advise him to read the British North America Act. Further than that, provincial claims to water-power have apparently no foundation; I have never seen any ground on which these claims are based. Moreover, the province can incorporate only such companies as contemplate distinctively provincial objects—and the objects of the Beauharnois corporation are decidedly not provincial but, in fact, interprovincial in character. The St. Lawrence system is essentially a great Dominion project, and if we are ever to carry it through successfully we cannot allow anything to stand in the way. Finally, this whole question involves our international obligations.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the whole matter should be given the most careful consideration, and I should like to think that some of us at least may be free from any imputation that we are personally interested. There are some people who have stock in Beauharnois. There are some people who have bought the corporation's bonds. There are some people who hope to get something out of it. And there are some who perhaps hope to get something out of those who are opposed to Beauharnois. But some of us are in the happy position of being able to declare that we do not hope to get a red cent out of the business. We feel that it is in the interests of the public as a whole that this question be brought into the full light of publicity and that, if it is at all possible, this great waterway, with the enormous potential water-powers which it carries, shall be saved for coming generations in Canada.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Was there any excuse for the order in council?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think it was very clearly shown by the hon. member for Bow River that the late government quite exceeded its powers as granted under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Perhaps it might be well for me to put on record one pertinent section. Section 4 reads:

> No work shall be built or placed in, upon, over, under, through or across any navigable water unless the site thereof has been approved by the governor in council, nor unless such work is built, placed and maintained in accordance with plans and regulations approved or made by the governor in council.

This appears in chapter 140 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, section 4. There have been no such plans made and approved, and certainly the operations that are now being carried on by the Beauharnois people have not received any sanction, even by order in council from the late government. Nor, as we have been informed to-day, have they received any sanction from the present government. So that undoubtedly the recent government went entirely outside the terms of this act when it granted the lease.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Why?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The question is asked, why? I am not so much concerned why they did it; that might bring the discussion into the realm of imputation, and to-day I have made no imputation. I have confined myself to what I consider to be the facts, and for the most part I have read from the official documents concerned.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

BORDER CITIES COMMUTERS

CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT TABLED

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I desire, with the consent of the house, to lay on the table certain correspondence that has taken place between the State Department of the United States of America and the Department of External Affairs of the Dominion of Canada. It deals with commuters, and consists of a note from the Canadian Legation to the State Department on December 26th, an acknowledgment from the State Department of December 30th, and the full reply dated May 11th.

The main provision in the reply of the Secretary of State is that commuters who have been properly admitted as immigrants under general order No. 86 will be accorded the same consideration as if they had actually taken up their residence in the United States. It is further implied that loss of employment in the United States by aliens of the immigrant commuter class of less than six months will not involve abandonment of status. It is provided that commuters who visit European countries without securing reentry permit or a new immigration visé on their return will be assumed to have abandoned their status, inasmuch as one of these documents is required of an alien resident in the United State to secure reentry. The information as to procedure in the latter part of the Secretary of State's note indicates certain concessions from the usual practice to facilitate reconsideration of the cases of persons already rejected. The final paragraph of the note permits persons rejected as commuters to apply for temporary entry to the United States as visitors, and constitutes a general exception to the regulation that persons who have been rejected may not be admitted to the United States within one year except by special permission of the Secretary of Labour.

I lay two copies of the correspondence on the table.

PRIVATE BILLS

CAUGHNAWAGA BRIDGE

The house in committee on Bill No. 22 respecting the construction and maintenance of a bridge over the river St. Lawrence at Caughnawaga—Mr. Dupuis—Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Submission of plans for approval.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): This bill, I believe, is similar to the bill introduced near the close of the last session of the last parliament. At the time my right hon. friend the present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), who was then leading the opposition, took exception to the bill on the score that it necessitated payment of tolls. I had rather imagined that any bill that might be introduced at this time would not with the government's consent have included that particular feature, but apparently this bill is altogether similar to the previous one in that regard, and as the plans will have to be approved by the governor in council, I think this is an appropriate moment at which to ask the government whether it is the intention to insist on the bridge being free of tolls.

My right hon. friend, speaking during the recent campaign at Ormstown on June 29th, 1930 made this statement, which I quote from the Ottawa Citizen of the day following:

Mr. Bennett added that he favoured Dominion assistance towards a bridge across the St. Lawrence at Lachine, but not a toll bridge which will prevent farmers getting their products to the market cheaply.

Then at Ormstown on June 30,—

Mr. BENNETT: I was not at Ormstown twice.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No. I should say at Ormstown on June 29, but the Montreal Star of June 30 reports my right hon. friend as follows:

> "Now, everyone is in favour of this bridge. Most of all I am. But I believe in free bridges and free highways. After all the king's highway has been always free, ever since mediaeval times and the dark ages. It belongs to the people, and so should a bridge, for it is simply an integral part of the highway. When the Conservative party takes office," Hon. Mr. Bennett concluded, "we will help you build a bridge—but it won't be a toll bridge."

Now that the Conservative party is in office and I presume by the approval to be given by the governor in council is helping to build a bridge, I ask the Prime Minister if he is going to carry out the pledge made to the electors at that time that the bridge would not be a toll bridge.

Mr. BENNETT: The question put by the right hon. gentleman is easily answered. This bill is a private bill in charge of one of his supporters from the province of Quebec. The government has been neither asked for nor has it sought to give assistance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government is giving assistance to the hon. member in getting his bill through.

Mr. BENNETT: This is a bill reported by the private bills committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He could not get it through without the assistance of the government.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, it is almost impossible to think that anyone with the parliamentary experience and education of the right hon. gentleman could make such a statement and expect no one to reflect on him for having made it. To say that a private member cannot get a bill through the house without the aid of the government is rather indicating that the government he is accustomed to is not the kind of government that this is. The hon. member has introduced a private bill under the rules of this house. The bill has been reported upon by the private bills committee and the fees necessary to enable it to be considered have, I assume, been paid. The bill as reported on is now before this committee, and had not the hon. gentleman given me further particulars of it I would only have known of it because of something brought to my attention yesterday as to a clause inserted in the bill. I most strongly resent the thought that private members' bills must have the aid of the government in order to pass this house. Parliament is free to anyone who desires to present a bill, and the rules and regulations are framed for that purpose. This bill is properly before the house, and no assistance has been sought or suggested to be given by the government for the purpose of enabling it to pass.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to remind my right hon. friend that I prefaced my remarks by drawing attention to the fact that the section read requires approval of the governor in council of the plans before there can be any construction of the bridge. Either my right hon. friend is misleading the house and particularly the hon. member who is introducing this bill, in causing him to believe that this requirement is of some value and the approval of some assistance—

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is that the lieutenant governor in council?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, by the governor in council, and unless my right hon. friend is in a position to implement the promise which he made, that this bridge will be free of tolls, he is simply not carrying out a pledge given to the electorate by himself in specific terms during the last general election.

Mr. BENNETT: As far as the approval of the governor general in council is concerned, this bridge crosses the St. Lawrence river, and the law provides that a bridge shall not cross the St. Lawrence at that point unless this parliament, not the governor in council, has given its approval. The manner in which parliament gives its approval is to provide that the detail plans are to be submitted to the governor in council. In other words, this parliament has been asked, under the terms of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, to do what has been suggested by my hon. friends opposite and to my right this afternoon, which is to obtain the approval of parliament and not the governor in council for the crossing of the St. Lawrence river. This parliament has stipulated that such approval is contingent upon the plans being approved by the governor in council, and that is all there is to it. That is the whole story, and the question of tolls or anything of that kind is not a matter over which parliament has control.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely my right hon. friend will agree, however, that this is not the reason the bill is before parliament. The bill is here to get authority to construct the bridge.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is not; that authority comes from Quebec.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But you cannot have a bridge across the St. Lawrence river without the governor in council approving the plans. I see no difference between this and the bill of last year.

Mr. BENNETT: As usual the hon. member for West Edmonton has not taken the trouble to inform himself as to the facts. This is entirely a Quebec arrangement.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is there any difference between this bill and the bill of last year?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot say with regard to the bill of last year. This bill provides for the crossing of the St. Lawrence river, which has to be approved by parliament, but the company which is to build the bridge will do so with the aid of the provincial authorities, who will guarantee the bonds. That is purely a provincial matter, over which we have no control.

Section agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead) moved the third reading of Bill No. 28, to amend the Bankruptcy Act (priority of claims).

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead) moved the second reading of Bill No. 33, to amend the Companies Act (auditors).

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Auditors not to be directors or officers.

Mr. GEARY: It seems to me the proviso is a little cumbersome and probably does not quite effect the object the promoter of the bill has in mind. I would suggest, and move accordingly, that the proviso be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

Provided however, that the subsection shall not apply to any private company, nor to any company whose shares, bonds, debentures or debenture stock are not offered for public subscription.

The present proviso excludes a company which prohibits any invitation to the public to subscribe for shares, but I do not believe that would afford the protection which is desired. A company may be a private company or a company not offering its bonds or shares for public subscriptions, although still not prohibiting such action. It might be, also, that the proposed provision is too broad, that any company could take advantage of the proviso by simply passing a resolution to the effect that public subscription is not to be invited. It seems to me if we confine the proviso to private companies or to other companies which, while not nominally private companies, do not in fact offer their stocks, shares or debentures to the public, that would be what this parliament would wish, and I move accordingly, seconded by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling).

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, I have no particular desire to offer very harsh criticism of the proposal, but I do question the loosening up or the slackening of the present restrictions in connection with auditors participating in the management of companies of which they are the auditors. I believe the principle is bad. If we are to do anything under the Companies Act or similar acts to affect auditing, we should make the position of the auditor clearer, more definite and more responsible than it is to-day. The value or merit of an auditor's report rests in the thoroughness with which his work is done. I have not the amendment in my hand, but from my memory of it I would draw attention to this possibility: a company might organize, publicly offer for sale its debentures and carry on business for a certain time with its auditors being permitted to act as directors. It might be the intention of the company to list its stock at some later date, which it could do by obtaining an amendment to its original charter. I desire only to draw attention to the danger of loosening the restrictions which already exist, which are meagre enough, as to auditors taking part in the management of companies of which they are auditors.

Mr. RINFRET: I have no desire to prolong the discussion on this bill, but I rise to say that I share fully the views expressed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). The Companies Act was amended at some length last year, and this is one of the matters which came before the committee. I believe there was unanimity in having our present act include a clause concerning this very matter. I think it appeals to everyone's common sense that a man who is an auditor of a company should not be a partner, associate or director of that company, otherwise he would be auditing his own accounts, and that is not a good principle. Subsection 3 of section 123 of the act reads as follows:

Neither the auditor of any company nor any partner associate in any accounting or auditing company or business with the said auditor shall be capable of being appointed a director or officer of the company.

That provision is as complete and extensive as it could be. It makes it very clear that the books of a company must be audited by someone who is not associated with or interested in the company. That is a good principle for all companies, and it should not be departed from even when dealing with private or small companies. They might as well not be audited as to be audited by one of their own personnel because, as I said before, if a man is a director of a company and is the auditor of that company, he is practically auditing his own work. I associate myself with the Minister of Trade and Commerce—and it is a great pleasure to associate with him—in opposing the amendment embodied in this section.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that something very important is being lost sight of in the objections offered to this bill. Many companies which are practically family corporations are carrying on business throughout the country, and the purpose of any auditing they do is to audit the books of a servant of the company, such as the secretary treasurer. Instead of employing a firm of auditors or chartered accountants, these companies save money by auditing the books of their own officers. As the bill now stands, this practice would be made illegal. It seems to me that the present bill was meant to take care of situations such as this.

Mr. HACKETT: Mr. Chairman, there can be no doubt as to the wisdom of the enactent of the last session. It is undesirable that the affairs of the company should be audited by those who are managing it, but it is not desired that legislation should react unfavourably against those whom it is intended to protect. When this subsection 3 was passed it was found that it wrought a great hardship on innumerable small companies. There is a large number of companies represented in Canada by auditors from the old land. They have offices here from which they transact business, but their affairs are controlled and supervised by auditors who are at the same time directors and managers of the companies. I am sure many hon. members can recall at least half a dozen such concerns in the larger cities of the Dominion. I venture to say that half of the hon. members in this house hold shares in small private companies, and this amendment is offered to enable those companies to carry on their business as they have in the past, without prejudicing the public, their neighbour or anyone else. It might be called a poor man's amendment; it offers that measure of elasticity which is desirable in all legislation if it is to be effective, and it need not reduce the quantum of supervision and careful scrutiny incidental to good business management. Large companies, companies in which public funds are invested and the shareholders of which must look to the auditors for protection, are in no way affected by this amendment. It applies only to private companies, and private companies are very insignificant entities as compared with those which the measure of last year aimed at protecting. If one were to take a census of the number of companies that are placed under a hardship by the legislation of last year, I think one would reach the conclusion that there is behind this amendment an element of wisdom and forbearance which makes it altogether desirable. It in no way attacks the principle to which the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) has referred.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. gentleman referred to a hardship. Is it the expense of outside auditors?

Mr. HACKETT: It is not only the expense of an outside audit. The people who own the company have to choose between being the auditors of the company, as stated. for instance, by the hon. member for East Algoma, for the purpose of auditing the accounts of their own business, and being directors of their own business. They are faced with that alternative.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No doubt there is a great deal of merit in the proposal embodied in this bill, but I think the course in the house heretofore has been, perhaps not invariably, but almost so, to refer bills of this kind to the banking and commerce committee. The bill of last session was referred to that committee. I do not know whether the promoter would have any objection to that course being pursued now.

[Mr. Hackett.]

Mr. HACKETT: I have no objection.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Perhaps that course should have been pursued before the bill was read the second time, and before it came into committee; but if the committee has no objection, my suggestion is that a motion be made to refer the bill to the banking and commerce committee in order that they may thoroughly understand it and report to the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I move that the committee rise and report progress. With the consent of the house I shall then move that the bill be referred.

Progress reported.

Mr. GUTHRIE: With the consent of the house I beg to move:

That Bill No. 33, to amend the Companies Act (Auditors), be referred to the select standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. NEILL: If I am in order—and I would like to be in order for once—I have no objection to the motion—

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion as put is not debatable.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT

PREFERENCE TO CANADIAN VETERANS RESIDENT IN CANADA FIVE YEARS

The house resumed from Friday, May 1, the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Boulanger for the second reading of Bill No. 18, to amend the Civil Service Act (returned soldiers' preference).

Mr. W. W. KENNEDY (Winnipeg South Centre): I desire to make a few observations in connection with this bill which is sponsored by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger). It proposes to amend the Civil Service Act of Canada in two respects: first, by adding to section 29 of the said act a further subsection (5) reading as follows:

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in this section, or in any regulations made by the Civil Service Commission, the preference mentioned in subsection 4 of this section shall be granted only in the case of Canadian nationals as defined in section 2 of chapter 21 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, or as defined in any amendment or reenactment thereof.

The explanatory note set out opposite this subsection in the bill reads:

The object of this subsection, which is new is to provide that the preference, commonly referred to as "the returned soldiers' preference" shall be granted Canadian soldiers only.

The second amendment proposed by the bill relates to section 33 of the act and has to do with the residence in Canada required as a condition precedent to the admission to examination of British subjects desirous of entering our civil service.

It is in respect to the first part of the bill that I wish to direct the immediate attention of the house. What is the purpose of the proposed amendment? I think I can do no better than give to the house the answer of the hon. member for Bellechasse who is sponsoring the bill. As reported in Hansard at page 1196, the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) asked this question:

Is it the declared object of this bill to cut off the preference to veterans of the British army?

This is the reply of the hon. member for Bellechasse:

Yes. The intention is to restrict the preference to veterans of the Canadian army.

I ask the house to examine briefly that purpose, with some of its implications, in relation to the British Empire of which Canada is still, thank God, a part. This bill seeks to draw a line of demarcation between Canadian nationals and all other soldiers of the empire who fought the battles of the empire in our hour of need. I know it is a far cry back to 1914, but I should like, if I could, to take hon. members back for a few moments to those days so that they might realize in this year 1931 what was the situation in 1914 and by what means the empire met that crisis.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that it was not a problem for Canada alone, for the motherland alone, for Australia or New Zealand or South Africa alone, but it was an empire problem, and the keynote of the force with which that crisis was met was unity of force and purpose and not lines of demarcation. You will remember the call that went out in this country and how it was answered. From the little cabins of the miners along those creeks in the Yukon, from that great province of British Columbia, from the foothills of Alberta, from the plains of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, down through old Ontario to Quebec and the maritimes, who answered? Were they Canadian nationals alone? I ask hon. members to mark the calls that went out and to observe whether or not in those days the call was to Canadian nationals as distinct from imperials, and I shall give just a few of those slogans. What are they?

Hear the dead calling you, strong men and able
For Canada's honour respond to your name.
Here's your chance. It's men we want.
Each recruit brings peace nearer.
In her hour of need your country calls you.
Join the brave throng
That goes marching along.
Brothers, will you come?
The Prussians want to make this the dark continent. Will you let them do it?
"Fall in."
Answer now in your country's hour of need.
If ye break faith
We shall not sleep.
Boys, come over here. You are wanted.
You come across or Germany will.

Here is another one:

Young men!
The privilege of service is yours, that your country may live and that freedom may not disappear from the earth.

This one for the hon. member for Bellechasse:

Unis pour la paix avec la victoire.

Another:

It is always fair weather when good fellows get together. You will find a lot of good fellows in the Kilties. Why not join the 73rd Cameron Highlanders of Canada?

I want to place beside those slogans the words with which our troops were sped to the front. I want to give one extract from the speech of the late Sir Sam Hughes, then Minister of Militia, and a great minister he was, to the troops at Gaspé, on October 2, 1914, as they were about to go:

That you will render a splendid account of yourselves for king and country is certain. You come of the right breed,—English, Scotch, Irish, French and Welsh.

No line of demarcation there. Again I should like to quote from the message of Sir Arthur Currie to the Canadian corps after the enemy had advertised its last great onslaught and had struck. You, Mr. Speaker, and many other hon. members of this house will keenly recall that message, which was dated March 27, 1918:

In an endeavour to reach an immediate decision the enemy has gathered all his forces and struck a mighty blow at the British army. Overwhelmed by sheer weight of numbers the British divisions in the line between the Scarpe and the Oise have fallen back fighting hard, steady and undismayed.

Measures have been taken successfully to meet this German onslaught. The French have gathered a powerful army, commanded by a most able and trusted leader and this army is now moving swiftly to our help. Fresh British divisions are being thrown in. The Canadians are soon to be engaged. Our motor machine gun brigade has already played a most gallant part and once again covered itself with glory.

Looking back with pride on the unbroken record of your glorious achievements, asking you to realize that to-day the fate of the British Empire hangs in the balance, I place my trust in the Canadian corps, knowing that where Canadians are engaged there can be no giving way.

Under the orders of your devoted officers in the coming battle you will advance or fall where you stand facing the enemy.

Canadians, in this fateful hour, I command you and I trust you to fight as you have ever fought with all your strength, with all your determination, with all your tranquil courage. On many a hard fought field of battle you have overcome this enemy. With God's help you shall achieve victory once more.

A few days later all ranks were addressed by Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, and I should like to put beside these extracts I have given his message to all ranks of the British army in France and Flanders. It is dated April 11, 1918:

Three weeks ago to-day the enemy began his terrific attacks against us on a fifty-mile front. His objects are to separate us from the French, to take the channel ports and destroy the British army.

In spite of throwing already 106 divisions into the battle and enduring the most reckless sacrifice of human life, he has as yet made little progress towards his goals.

We owe this to the determined fighting and self-sacrifice of our troops. Words fail me to express the admiration which I feel for the splendid resistance offered by all ranks of our army under the most trying circumstances.

Many amongst us now are tired. To those I would say that victory will belong to the side which holds out the longest. The French army is moving rapidly and in great force to our support.

There is no other course open to us but to fight it out. Every position must be held to the last man; there must be no retirement. With our backs to the wall and believing in the justice of our cause each one of us must fight on to the end. The safety of our homes and the freedom of mankind alike depend upon the conduct of each one of us at this critical moment.

In addition to those, Mr. Speaker, we have at the beginning of the story in the memorial tower in this building these words:

Read how free men throughout this land kept faith in the hour of trial and in the day of battle, remembering the traditions they had been taught, counting life nothing without liberty.

There answered the call from this country 619,636 men. An analysis of those figures will prove of interest. Of those born in Canada there were 318,728; of those born in England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales and other British countries, 237,586; from other than British countries 59,505; not stated, 3,817. The call in those days was not to Canadian nationals alone, but to all citizens of the empire wherever dwelling. It is a matter of record that among the first to go from this country were many of those here from the motherland as well as many Canadians. From the farthest reaches of this country the British-born answered that call, and so anxious were they to rally to the mother country that many thousands of them at their own expense, paying their own transportation, left Canada to join their regiments in the old land.

This bill, if it passes this house, would now draw a line of demarcation between those who served in the Canadian army and the imperial veterans who served in the imperial army. I ask hon. gentlemen whether it is the desire of the people of Canada that this distinction should be drawn. I ask this house to remember that the preference given to all those who served in the allied armies, so far as the Civil Service Act as it now stands is concerned, was not prompted by charity but as a measure of re-establishment of those who served, and as such I submit that it should remain.

Last Sunday there took place in cemeteries in various cities and hamlets up and down this country the ceremony of burying ex-service men who had died in various hospitals and elsewhere during the winter. The Last Post was sounded, the press was eulogistic of the services of these men, editorials were written.

I urge the hon. member for Bellechasse to reconsider this amendment. I would point out to him that already, with the lapse of time, even the youngest of those who served now border upon or have passed middle age. A few years more and with the flight of time all those who were united in those days of stress will again be united in death. Can Canada not wait a little longer?

The hon. member for Bellechasse appeals to this house in his closing words and purports to invoke the Canada first policy as enunciated by this government. Here is what he says:

I believe the spirit of the bill is in accordance with the Canada first policy of this government.

Let me remind him that the "devil can quote scripture for his purpose." The Canada First policy as enunciated by the Prime Minister of this country, and as I apprehend it, has to do with the welfare, happiness and prosperity of all Canada and of all who dwell therein, irrespective of origin, race, creed or party.

This amendment to the Civil Service Act proposes to draw a line between those who stood together and served our empire well in her great hour of need. I submit that the spirit of the bill is wrong. The bill is wrong and I protest against it; I trust that at the hands of this house it will receive "no quarter."

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): All of us, I think, appreciate the lofty and patriotic sentiments expressed by my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Kennedy). But the bill as submitted should at least be allowed to go to the committee in order to be carefully studied. If hon. members will turn to the provisions of the Civil Service Act, section 29, subsection 4, they will find that it deals with the preference given to returned soldiers, and I think they will agree with me that that section as it stands calls for some sort of amendment. I am not prepared to say that the amendment suggested by my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) is the one which will meet the views of every member of this house, but I do think that if the bill is allowed to go to the committee, where proposals can be given careful consideration, amendments can be suggested which will meet with the approval of the majority of hon. members.

I will read the section of the Civil Service Act to which this bill refers. Section 29, subsection 4, reads:

In all examinations for entrance into the civil service the persons named on such special list who are found to possess the necessary qualifications shall be named, in the order of merit, on the list of successful candidates above all other candidates; and all other persons who have been on active service overseas—

This is the list of persons preferred.

—on the military forces or who have served on the high seas in a seagoing ship of war in the naval forces of His Majesty, or of any of the allies of His Majesty, during the war, who have left such service with an honourable record or who have been honourably discharged, or when any persons who have served as aforesaid have died owing to such service, the widows of such persons, and who, in either case, obtain sufficient marks to pass such examinations, shall, irrespective of the marks they have obtained, be named in the order of merit, on the list of successful candidates next after any candidates who are on the special list mentioned in subsection two of this section and above all other candidates.

The act is very badly drafted. I do not know who drafted it, but with all respect I must say a terrible mess has been made of its English. In any case it means that on the preferred list, apparently indiscriminately, there shall be placed all those who served in the forces of His Majesty, naval or military, as well as all those who served in the forces of armies allied to His Majesty's.

I believe a number of the members of this house will agree with me that, whatever patriotic motives we may have had at that time in inserting such a provision, it is no longer necessary that we should give a preference to those who served in the allied forces. Let me give an example which, while it may be personal, I believe will apply to other members of this house who served overseas. I have a son of seventeen. In another year or two he will be eligible to enter the Civil Service of Canada. I hope and pray he will never desire to do so, but the fact is that he will in due course become eligible. Should he desire to enter the civil service he will be obliged to submit to a preference in favour of a Portuguese or a French Senegalese or some other soldier who at some time or other served in the allied forces. This seems to me absolutely ridiculous. There is no reason why the children of Canadian returned soldiers should be obliged to give precedence to some one who served in any one of the allied forces.

An hon. MEMBER: In the Foreign Legion.

Mr. POWER: Yes, in the Foreign Legion. But I am giving examples of armies from which it would be very difficult for us to obtain the real military record—armies of Montenegrins, of Serbians and of every nation on earth.

An hon. MEMBER: Russians.

Mr. POWER: Such men may come to Canada and, provided they have the residential qualifications, having become British subjects perhaps only two or three years ago, just long enough to make them Canadian nationals, may have the preference over children of returned Canadian soldiers. I submit that the act as originally drawn, in section 29, subsection 4, should be changed; and if this bill is allowed to go into committee I propose to submit an amendment which will eliminate the preference given to members of the allied forces. So far as members of the imperial forces are concerned, I would propose this amendment:

In all examinations for entrance into the civil service, the persons named on such special list, who are found to possess the necessary qualifications, shall be named in the order of merit on the list of successful candidates above all other candidates, and all other persons who have been on active service overseas, in the military or naval forces of His Majesty during the late war, and were at the time of their enlistment—

This covers the 30,000 mentioned by my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre.

—or at the date of passing of this act—

That is, the present time.

—domiciled in Canada, who have left such service with an honourable record, or who have been honourably discharged, or when any persons who have served overseas as aforesaid, have died owing to such service, the widows of such persons, and who, in either case, obtained sufficient marks to pass such examinations, shall, irrespective of the marks they have obtained, be named in the list of successful candidates next after any candidates who are in the special list mentioned in subsection 2 of this section, and above all other candidates.

The proposal is first of all to eliminate the preference given to members of the allied forces and, secondly, to give a preference to members of the imperial forces who were domiciled in Canada at the time of enlistment or who are at the present time—at the date of the passing of this act—domiciled in the Dominion. That is to say, it is not intended to give a preference to those who may come here after the passing of the act.

That is the proposal which I hope to make if the bill goes to committee. It is a proposal which I believe will commend itself to many members of this house who may be under the impression that the bill now under consideration is designed to do away with the returned soldier preference. I believe an amendment such as I have suggested would fully safeguard all those returned soldiers whom it is the interest of this house to protect.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for public bills having expired, the house will revert to the discussion of the special motion to adjourn.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER CORPORATION

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT TO DISCUSS MATTER OF URGENT PUBLIC IMPORTANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gardiner.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): I shall address the house very briefly, and I wish to do so because, in my opinion, it has been too often true that the natural resources of Canada have been given away to promoters. This policy, which we have followed fairly consistently in the past, has created millionaires on the one hand and struggling Canadian citizens on the other; and it is because I believe that the Beauharnois project comes within this classification that I wish to discuss it. There seems to be something in the nature of giving away the natural resources of Canada.

In the first place, as has been made clear in this house many times, both in this debate and in former discussions, the prospectus made claims that could not be substantiated by the facts. It does seem clear that the Beauharnois corporation could not have sold their bonds as successfully as they did, or possibly could not have sold them at all, had it not been that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario entered into a long-term contract with them to take 250,000 horse-power. It is curious to find that the hydro-electric enterprise, the pride of all those who stand for public ownership in Canada, should have put itself in this position. We recall that Sir Adam Beck when he founded the enterprise wanted, through it, to develop the water powers of the province for the use of the people at cost. Those of us who were in the house when Mr. Church was a member knew what an avowed friend of public ownership he always was. In an interview as reported in the Toronto Globe of Tuesday, April 14, 1931, I find he said in relation to the hydro-electric commission:

It could not have been put over—

That is, the Beauharnois project.

—without Mr. Ferguson's guarantee to take 250,000 horse-power, which guarantee financed the whole deal.

In following other utterances on this subject, one can hardly miss the interview that Mr. Sinclair, the Liberal leader in Ontario, or the former Liberal leader—I am not quite clear on this point—gave to the Toronto Globe, as reported in its issue of April 22, 1931. He said:

Hydro agreed to purchase 250,000 horse-power from Beauharnois, another block of 150,000 horse-power was contracted for by another concern. These contracts enabled Beauharnois bonds to be sold. Their prospectus showed these contracts would pay more than all operating expenses and the interest and sinking fund on all the bond issues. There remains 100,000 horse-power still to be marketed at a clear profit. Such being the case, hydro is buying power at more than its cost of production, and the excess over cost goes to the promoters of Beauharnois.

And may I add for Mr. Sinclair—at the expense of the people of Ontario. Then, too, Mr. McQuibban, speaking in the Ontario legislature, used this very significant sentence as reported in the Toronto Globe of March 30 last:

Hydro has hoisted the white flag of surrender.

It really does look like that. A public ownership scheme started, as I said a moment ago, to develop power at cost, has become a distributing corporation for private concerns —concerns that have no particular interest in developing power at cost, but rather in developing power at profit. So I believe I can say without fear of contradiction that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario has aided and abetted the schemes of its adversaries. If more power is needed in Ontario why is it not possible to develop the power resources of the international section of the St. Lawrence river? That would seem to me to be a policy in keeping with the practice of the hydro-electric commission in years gone by.

There is one other aspect of the question with respect to which I wish to say a word or two. The development of the Beauharnois project, in the opinion of those who have given most study to it, prevents the development of the St. Lawrence waterway. It naturally occurs to one that if a depth of 35 feet is needed for ocean boats below Montreal, the same depth would be needed above Montreal. May I again refer to Mr. Church? And one must say this for him, that as we look back over his record in the house we cannot help but feel that many times he championed causes here when they were very unpopular, and that he did it because he believed it to be in the best interests of his own city and province that he loves so much and of the whole Dominion. In this connection he said, as reported in the Toronto Globe of April 14, 1931:

There will be no St. Lawrence waterway. The whole public canal policy of Canada has been upset by this deal and the company given power to build an artificial navigation canal 27 feet deep on the St. Lawrence in exchange for the power, whereas from Montreal to Quebec the navigation channel is 35 feet. The canal feature is a myth.

Then Mr. Sinclair in the same interview to which I have already referred stated:

In the Beauharnois development, the depth of the ship canal is limited to 27 feet. Below Montreal the river is now being dredged to a depth of 35 feet to allow large ocean boats to reach Montreal, which will thus become the head of navigation for all such vessels. If it is good for Montreal, would it not be good for all ports in Ontario, including the $40,000,000 harbour of Toronto? The construction of the ship canal also provides for fixed spans in bridges crossing it, indicating there is no thought of navigation using the canal, because all other canals will remain as at present, and can be used as at present for all traffic west of Montreal. Montreal seems to control the situation, and promoters of Beauharnois have seen to it that navigation in a big way stops at Montreal.

And Mr. McQuibban speaking in the legislature of Ontario, as reported in the Toronto Globe of March 20, 1931, said:

If this gigantic scheme—

Speaking of the Beauharnois scheme.

—is consummated it has postponed the seaway for one, or maybe more, generations.

It seems clear that the fact of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power commission buying power from Quebec for a period of fifteen years will in itself retard the development of the deep waterway. For that period of time at least Ontario will not be in a position to buy power from the international section of the St. Lawrence should it be developed. Then, too, Quebec can claim that since she is exporting this great block of power to the province of Ontario she is short of power for her own use, and so can bring pressure to bear upon the Dominion government to allow her the full flow of the river.

I would not have said a word as the Prime Minister has agreed to a parliamentary committee to investigate the whole Beauharnois scheme, except that I do feel that since the inception of the hydro-electric enterprise in Ontario the danger to its continuance as a public-owned enterprise has never been as grave as it is at the moment, and I believe that all lovers of public ownership in Ontario should bring to bear whatever influence they have as a whole to ensure that if possible the contract is cancelled, and certainly that the present policy of the hydro-electric commission shall not be followed in the future.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discuss at any great length the history of the Beauharnois project. That has been very well covered by hon. members in this corner of house who have preceded me. Suffice it to say that the development of power on the St. Lawrence river has been conceded to the province of Quebec with regard to that part of the river lying in that province. Under the constitution, however, the federal government controls navigable rivers. I know there are some legal arguments in connection with these points, but in substance that is the attitude which has been taken by the federal government in regard to this question. Therefore the power rights that were granted to the Beauharnois company by the province of Quebec were of no use to that company until they secured the authority of the federal government to use the water of the river. The federal government granted the right to the company to divert 40,000 cubic feet per second from the St. Lawrence river to their fifteen-mile power canal. This will enable the company to develop 500,000 horse-power of electrical energy, with an annual commercial value of about $15 per horse-power.

The government secured nothing in return for the granting of this natural resource, and the late King government has been very severely criticised for its failure to secure some compensation. However, the company are obligated to permit navigation through that canal if required. That navigation, however, will be made possible only by the construction of locks, which it is estimated will cost about $25,000,000. Perhaps the most severe criticism of the action of the late government is that they did not stipulate for the construction of these locks by the company. This criticism is accentuated by the fear that this diversion may interfere with the development of the St. Lawrence deep waterways scheme. Since the United States has treaty rights in the St. Lawrence river, also, it is even asserted in some quarters that there may be international complications.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the deep waterways development there would seem to be three courses open to us in regard to the navigation of this river. First there is the present Soulanges canal, about fifteen miles long, on the north shore of the river, which will accommodate vessels drawing fourteen feet of water. All the navigation of that portion of the river going around the rapids must use that canal at present. The Beauharnois power canal when completed, will accommodate vessels drawing twenty-seven feet of water, and this canal also is about fifteen miles in length. This may or may not conform to the requirements of the engineers of the deep waterways scheme. If it does, then I presume the canal can be used, but I am not quite clear on that point. I have heard it asserted that it does conform to the requirements of the scheme, and on the other hand I have heard it said that it does not. There is also a shorter canal suggested by the joint board of engineers, which would be about five miles in length, and at the head of which there could be developed about 2,000,000 horse-power.

It seems to me that in dealing with this question parliament first must see that nothing is done which may interfere with navigation on the river. I think that is the first thing that must be decided, and that should be consistent with the development of the maximum amount of electrical energy. Electrical energy is one of Canada's most valuable assets; it is one of the things which we expect to give Canada her place in the industrial world in the years to come, and I believe I am safe in saying that no other country in the world is possessed of the great potential water power which we have in Canada. Therefore I say that in any scheme of this kind we must first protect navigation and in the second place we must consider the development of the maximum amount of electrical power.

The obvious duty of parliament, therefore, is to secure something for the people for the valuable rights which have been granted to the company. So far in the debate only one suggestion has been put forward, namely that the whole undertaking be cancelled, on the assumption that the government itself would operate the development. That could be done, if the government has a legal right, as has been asserted, by the cancellation of the present rights granted to the company; or it could be done by the government declaring the whole work to be for the general good of Canada. In either case I assume the government would be called upon to reimburse some of those who have put their money into this project, at least those to whom the Prime Minister referred as the innocent third parties.

It seems to me, however, that there is an alternative. The history of governmental action in Canada in the past would give us very little hope that any such cancellation will be made. The alternative, it would seem to me, would be to grant the extra diversion requested on condition of a consideration therefor, possibly the construction of some public work which would adequately and properly protect the public interest and give the people of Canada something in exchange for the valuable concession made.

With regard to the question of cancelling the project, as the Prime Minister has indicated there would be difficulties. There is the question of financing; there are the innocent third parties, the persons to whom bonds have been sold and by whom common stock has been purchased. Then again there is the question of operation. If the government took it over it would have to build up an organization to operate it. Whether or not we have enough confidence in ourselves and in the government to undertake a great work of this kind is a matter open to question. Then there is another point in regard to the lease of power. I understand the company has already contracted for all the power it proposes to develop. Industries are being built up and developed on the strength of these contracts, so the ramifications of the enterprise are very great and the whole thing is very complicated.

Now let us consider the second proposition, that we should secure something from the company in return for what has been granted to them. In that connection it seems to me the difficulties are not so great. The question is simply what we can secure for the people as adequate compensation for the right that has been granted the company. Let me say again that any arrangement entered into must make absolutely certain that navigation is not prejudicially affected. The Soulanges canal, I think it is admitted, is not suitable for the deep waterways scheme; that canal would have to be reconstructed or entirely rebuilt in order to fit in with that proposition. Probably the Beauharnois canal comes much closer to the specifications any such canal would be required to meet. In this connection I would like to draw the attention of hon. members of the house to two very excellent articles appearing in the Manitoba Free Press, and written by a man named R. K. Finlyason. These articles show a very thorough and thoughtful study of the whole question, both from the standpoint of navigation and with regard to the development of power, and I would commend them to hon. members. The first article appeared in the Manitoba Free Press under date of December 19, 1930, and deals more particularly with the question of navigation. Referring to power, however, Mr. Finlayson says:

Harnessing power presents the same economic difficulty that would follow if an equal number of horses walked out of the stream. They must be used, or destroyed, or sold abroad. It will require some 30 to 40 years in Canada to absorb the St. Lawrence Canadian power into use.

There is another problem also. The company securing the right to develop power must secure a market for that power, because there is no use developing power unless it can be sold.

Mr. FACTOR: The Prime Minister having promised an investigation into this matter, what is the object of all this discussion which is taking place now?

Mr. CAMPBELL: If my hon. friend will just listen until I am through I will tell him the object. I think we have a right to discuss the question here, and to perhaps give some lead to the committee.

Dealing with freight rates, Mr. Finlayson says:

The picture of all the great vessels of the world coming to Port Arthur has vanished, and with it those fanciful claims for savings which were to equal the present cost of shipment from Port Arthur to Montreal.

His argument is that from a navigation standpoint the project is not feasible; it is feasible only by the development of power supplementary to navigation. Dealing with transportation, he says:

But while transportation is arguing, power considerations are acting.

He then goes on to give the details of the grants to the Beauharnois company. Referring to the rights to divert water granted to the company, he says:

If the main river development for navigation is feasible in spite of this diversion and is eventually followed, the Dominion of Canada without any consideration whatsoever has surrendered such right to revenue as it had from 500,000 hydro electric power with a preemption of the power market in the St. Lawrence basin for five years.

Editorials appeared in the Manitoba Free Press apparently inspired by and based upon the articles from which I have just quoted. An editorial in the Free Press of December 20, 1930, in part reads as follows:

The present condition of the waterways question is well described in the articles contributed to the Free Press by Mr. R. K. Finlayson. The surrender by the King government of the Dominion position—outlined by Mr. Lapointe in his statement of 1927—in the face of political pressure from Ontario and Quebec, the absence of any political support from other parts of Canada, and the failure of the supreme court to give a clear judgment upon the questions submitted to it, as indicated by its action in the matter of the Beauharnois lease, has placed the whole enterprise in jeopardy, as is clearly shown by Mr. Finlayson. The advantages of the canal are not sufficient to justify the people of Canada in building it out of the public funds, without assistance from water-power rentals. Whether the Dominion's right to share in the power which it creates can be regained is doubtful.

Another editorial which appeared in the issue of April 29, 1931, in part reads as follows:

The whole Beauharnois situation is to be reviewed in Ottawa this session, and there is still time to snatch safety for the seaway from the clutches of the hitherto invincible power interests.

There has been too much politics in the Beauharnois situation up to the present. The primary aim is too often lost sight of. The St. Lawrence deep waterway project must be carried to completion. This is the aspect of the situation which is national in character. The disposition of St. Lawrence power, save as it affects the seaway, is not a national problem. It happens, however, to be the only lever with which the seaway can be built.

That is the particular point to the whole argument. The editorial continues:

The power on the Canadian section of the St. Lawrence is in the right of the Quebec government, which can dispose of it as it sees fit.

And again:

The Dominion has the right to step into the situation and say that not another horsepower shall be installed at Beauharnois until plans are adequately laid, and under way, for the development of the whole St. Lawrence scheme. If Mr. Bennett does not do this, he will betray his election pledges.

And further on the editorial continues:

He has the chance to block further grants to Beauharnois until such time as the whole seaway is assured.

If he does not care to take so drastic a step, another course lies open to Mr. Bennett. He can drive a bargain with the Beauharnois interests such as should have been driven by the King government. He can say to them that they can take more water, but only if they hand over not only a fully equipped canal on the Beauharnois section, but also the necessary canals and locks on the Lachine section further down the river. He can force the Beauharnois interests to do this, or refuse to make them any further grants.

It seems to me that that is the real crux of the whole situation. I agree with the suggestion made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) that this matter should be sent to a committee of the house for further investigation. Hon. members should be allowed to interview these men in order to ask questions. They should come here, place their cards on the table and give us all the information we need to discuss this matter intelligently. We would not have been in possession of all the information we now have in connection with the Beauharnois project had it not been for a rival financial group who had been worsted in the fight for this power. Both these financial groups should be called before the committee and asked to give us all the information they possess. It should be discovered whether or not the present Beauharnois canal will adequately serve the needs of navigation for the purposes of the St. Lawrence deep waterway. Technical advice should be available as to what should be secured to the people of Canada in exchange for the company being allowed to go ahead.

Mr. L. G. BELL (St. Antoine): Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from the city of Montreal only twenty-five miles from the Beauharnois canal, and in view of the fact that a great many distinguished citizens of that city are directly or indirectly concerned with the Beauharnois project and are working for its completion, I rise not to protest against the motion of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) that an investigation be made of this project, but to say that I believe such an investigation will be welcomed as much by those connected with the Beauharnois Company as by those making the charges.

Hon. members should realize that this is one of the biggest projects ever undertaken by Canadians. Next to the Panama canal, it is possibly the biggest canal in the world. It will cost in the neighbourhood of some $75,000,000 when completed. I do not protest against the charges made this afternoon by the hon. member for Acadia, but in making those charges he must realize that the responsibility rests upon him and other hon. members in his corner of the house.

Several questions will be involved in any investigation regarding Beauharnois. In dealing with this subject the hon. member for Acadia referred to a citizen of Montreal, an outstanding engineer, a man with a genius for engineering possessed by very few Canadians, and who has worked eighteen years on this project. That man is attacked in the House of Commons by the hon. member for Acadia in these words: Sweezey and his associates are trying to acquire certain rights by fraud and conspiracy. The hon. member must realize the full purport of those words. When the investigation, suggested by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is being conducted, I hope the hon. member will then make his charges as they should be made, directly to the people charged. They should be given an opportunity to defend themselves against the charges, the evidence of which the hon. member claims to possess. Unless the charges are made in such manner, the purpose of asking hon. members to acquiesce in his demands is useless, the fact being that he along with other members in that corner of the house had ample time during the last two years to make those charges. I have no doubt that the action of hon. members in that corner of the house is in their view to all intents and purposes fully justified. I have full faith in their integrity, but I might say that the house is entitled to be given in no uncertain terms the facts upon which those charges have been based. First of all, the charges against those associated with the Beauharnois proposition should be clearly set forth, because charges have been made against them. Charges have been made against members of the upper house, the Senate, and those charges should be set forth in no uncertain terms. Charges have been made against hon. members on the opposition side, and possibly against hon. members on this side of the house, and those charges should be fully explained. Charges have also been made against the judiciary. Occasion was taken to refer to some lawsuits that are pending in the courts of Quebec, and I trust the hon. member for Acadia will be just as frank in making those charges against the judiciary of that province.

Mr. GARDINER: I did not make any charge against the judiciary of Quebec. I merely made a statement with regard to press reports.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): The hon. member for Acadia, if my memory serves me aright, mentioned the name of Acting Chief Justice Greenshields of the province of Quebec, and he must have had some reason for mentioning that gentleman's name. Will he, in making his charges, explain if he made any charges against the acting chief justice or will he make it quite clear why the acting chief justice's name was mentioned?

I do not intend to dwell upon the vastness of the Beauharnois project. As I stated, it is the greatest undertaking ever contemplated by Canadians. I was thoroughly amazed by what the undertaking really meant. There is in operation at the Beauharnois plant one piece of machinery costing more than half a million dollars, and there has been expended on machinery alone more than $5,500,000 so far. For excavation purposes material has been removed amounting to more than 4,000,000 cubic yards. During the past year—and this is a very important matter for the city of Montreal—2,200 men have been on the payrolls every month, and at present 3,000 men are employed with an estimate of 3,000 other men making materials for the Beauharnois project. I am bringing these facts to the hon. member's attention, so that he may realize that, in submitting this question to the house he is making a very serious charge and one which affects Canadians everywhere. It affects not only the rights of Quebec but also the rights of the Dominion, and it is a question which, if it is possible for an investigation to settle it, should be settled by such a method. If the people connected with the project are not given a fair chance to proceed with their work, the work will be stopped and some action should then be taken whereby their interests and those of the people who have invested money in the Beauharnois project will be protected. I think hon. members in that corner of the house are assuming a little too much in advance that this canal will be taken over by the government. We in the province of Quebec, rightly or wrongly, have so far believed in private ownership. We may, be wrong. The people of Ontario may believe in public ownership, but strange as it may seem, the Beauharnois promoters, out of the 500,000 horse-power which they propose to develop, have already sold to Ontario by contract 250,000 horse-power.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Does my hon. friend contend that we in Quebec believe the navigation of the St. Lawrence should be in the hands of a private company?

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): I do not intend to enter into any argument with my hon. friend regarding the navigation question, but my hon. friend surely realizes that the canal, which, when completed, will be twenty-seven feet deep, should take care of any navigation to the sea.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Undoubtedly.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): The channel from Montreal to Quebec, as my hon. friend knows, is not as deep as that.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Undoubtedly; but will it be the property of a private company and not of the Dominion.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): Surely my hon. friend realizes that neither the Beauharnois company nor any other private company will control navigation so far as Canada is concerned. No government would be so foolish as to permit navigation of the St. Lawrence to be left in the hands of any private corporation. There would be something wrong with any government that would handle that particular problem in such a way.

I come to a more serious part of this question, and I hesitate to make the statement. I am not interested in the Beauharnois; I am not retained by the Beauharnois, nor have I any connection with the Beauharnois. I am interested in Montreal, and I am interested in the development of Beauharnois if it is going to bring industries into the vicinity of Montreal. When that company has expended more than $5,000,000 in industrial lands, proposing to bring industries to Montreal and to give them power cheaper than it can be had in any other country on the face of the earth, naturally I should like to see such a project proceed to completion. That is the primary object which those of us have who look to the future of the Beauharnois development. I know nothing about the financing of it.

I am going to enlighten my hon. friend in regard to the other side of the picture. He has put forward certain views; undoubtedly he believes that they have been presented to him by people who have given him the facts. The facts of Beauharnois as I understand them are these: The original rights, as mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), were in the hands of one Robert. Robert had a charter from the Quebec government as far back as 1910. That was the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company. Robert gave an option to the Transportation and Power Company for $10,000. Now comes the controversial question: Did he give an option or did he sell the rights to the land? On one side you have certain clients claiming he gave an option, and on the other the Transportation and Power Company claiming they bought the land. Naturally the hon. member for Acadia and those on the left will agree that the only way that question could be settled was in the courts. They went to the courts and after a decision had been given in Robert's favour, Mr. Sweezey and those associated with him, I understand, proceeded to deal with Robert Was that the end of the matter? Not at all. From then on the people who were dealing with Robert in the first instance immediately began their attacks on Sweezey and Beauharnois. Mr. Sweezey and those associated with him went to the Quebec government for an extension of their charter rights. That involves another question that will have to be decided as between the provincial and federal governments. He got the powers under his charter extended for the widening of the canal and for the diversion of more water from lake St. Francis to lake St. Louis, as well as the right to build a power house on lake St. Louis instead of on the river St. Louis. He proceeded with that work.

The financing of this company was not done in a day. Four months after the actual construction work was started the first public financing was done. Several months later my hon. friend from Acadia brought this matter up in the house. I do not want to reflect in any way upon the intergrity of hon. members in that corner of the house. I wish to make that quite plain, but it does seem strange to me that all the time that Sweezey and those connected with the Beauharnois project were engaged in this gigantic engineering scheme, the greatest ever launched in Canada, involving the diversion of the railway line of the New York Central, the building of a bridge—

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Two bridges.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): —the making of arrangements with four different townships so that the public roadway could pass, they should at the same time be faced with attacks from these other men who claimed that they had no rights to the canal proposition at all. An action was taken in the courts against those associated with the Beauharnois company to the amount of $7,000,000. What happened to that action? It was tried by Mr. Justice Duclos, and as my hon. friend from Acadia knows, on the second day of the trial the plantiffs desisted from the action. The principals of the Beauharnois company must have then felt that they were through with these constant attacks which were being made upon them. But a few months later an action was brought against the company or its associates in the amount of $10,000,000. It is not fair for the members sitting in that corner of the house to get up and accuse all those interested in Beauharnois. I am not at all concerned in the political faith of any member so far as this particular project is concerned. But there is another side to this picture. These men who have been bringing these actions at law have access to the courts. I refer particularly to Cantin, Regan, the Transportation and Power Company, and to Ecremont, none of whom is known to me, but these men claim, and my information comes from as reliable a source as I believe is open to hon. gentlemen in that corner of the house, that amounts running from one million down were demanded for settlement; otherwise they would bring the matter up on the floor of the House of Commons.

The hon. member for Acadia has made his charges on the floor of the House of Commons, and has been promised a committee for the investigation of the charges against the Beauharnois company. I want him to be fair towards those associated with that project and to put everything before the committee in the most straightforward manner. I feel sure that he will do so. There is no reason so far as I can see why this investigation should not settle once and for all the question of provincial and federal rights so far as Beauharnois is concerned, and why the people who have invested their money in Beauharnois should not be given a fair opportunity to see the project develop. As I say it is a project owned by Canadians, financed by Canadians, in Canadian territory, and built for the purpose of attracting industries and providing them with the cheapest power in the world. I do not see why thousands of men should be thrown out of employment, and their families made to suffer for a day longer than is absolutely necessary, and I appeal to the right hon. the Prime Minister, as soon as the charges have been properly brought forward, to expedite this investigation and let us have an end of it, and the settling once for all of this Beauharnois argument about which we have heard so much

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (West Middlesex): It is not my intention to dwell at great length on the arguments which have been adduced by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) and other hon. members who have spoken in this debate, but there are one or two phases of the argument to which I should like for a short time to direct the attention of the house.

First of all may I invite attention to the argument made by the hon. member for Bow River, an argument following somewhat the line of his remarks on the subject a year ago except that his main argument to-day is that there was no right in the federal government to approve of plans for the diversion of water. The hon. member made a speech in his usual excellent manner on this very subject during the session of 1930, but then he never raised the main argument which he has used to-day as one of his objections to the scheme. To-day it is his main objection, that the government had no jurisdiction to approve of the plans, that the Minister of Public Works and the government in granting approval were going beyond their jurisdiction. He cited section 4 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act in proof of his statement. May I read section 4 of that act, which has been read already a couple of times:

No work shall be built or placed in, upon, over, under, through or across any navigable water unless the site thereof has been approved by the governor in council, nor unless such work is built, placed and maintained in accordance with plans and regulations approved or made by the governor in council.

That is what he based his whole argument upon. Apparently he has not read paragraph (b) of section 2 of the act, which defines "work" as follows:

. . . . "work" includes any bridge, boom, dam, aboiteau, wharf, dock, pier or other structure, tunnel or pipe, or telegraph or power cable or wire and the approaches or other works necessary or appurtenant thereto, or any work, structure or device, whether similar in character to the foregoing or not, which may interfere with navigation.

If my recollection serves me aright, that last part was inserted after the act had been in force a couple of years so as to make it cover practically everything. That act has been administered ever since by a department of this government; diversions of water have been granted under its terms and have been dealt with by the various governments which have been in power in this country since that time. That I want to make perfectly clear. There is, I submit, no work that might interfere with navigation which is not covered under this act; and I think it will appeal to hon. members of this house that the spirit of the act could not be carried out if any work which might possibly interfere with navigation were omitted from the purview of that legislation.

What was the position of the government when this application was made? My hon. friend from Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) spoke about the policy of public ownership. That matter, I may say, had been settled when the application was made. This was water belonging to the province of Quebec. Unless it belongs to the province of Quebec, then there is no approval granted for diversion of it. The terms of the order in council make that perfectly clear. I do not wish to deal in detail with the terms of the order in council, but all reasonable safeguards which could have been taken will be found upon investigation to have been taken. The lease which was brought to the government by the applicant was a lease from the province of Quebec of such flow of the river St. Lawrence at that particular point, not exceeding 40,000 cubic feet per second, as belonged to the province. It was not water that belonged to the Dominion of Canada; it was not water over which the Dominion had jurisdiction, except in so far as navigation was concerned.

That application was brought in, and the whole question for the department to decide was as to whether or not that 40,000 cubic feet of water per second could be diverted without interfering with navigation. That was an engineering problem which it took months to settle definitely; and the duty of the department, and of the government of which that department was a part, was to refuse to approve of the plans if it was going to interfere with navigation. And the duty was just as obvious to approve of the plans if it did not interfere with navigation.

The matter was reported upon by the most competent engineers in the land—and I believe my hon. friend the present Minister of Public Works will agree with me that they are very competent engineers in that department. They were very busy and they called in the assistance of other engineers, most capable men; and after very careful consideration they decided that if certain safeguards were observed they would approve of these plans, provided the water were diverted by a channel. And the channel is defined, I think, as 600 feet in width. It will be one of the best canals in the world, a canal which will not only not interfere with navigation but which will make for better navigation than there is at the present time along any other section of the St. Lawrence anywhere in that district.

So that so far as navigation is concerned, those interested are amply protected by the conditions which were imposed at the time the plans were approved. So far as the province of Quebec is concerned, they have rights to whatever water belongs to them and over which they have control. And they have a right to have the government say whether or not the plan that they propose shall be followed. What would be the position of this government if a lessee should come to them and say, "I have a lease from the province of Quebec of certain water rights. If the rights do not belong to the province they are not covered by this lease, but we want approval by you of plans to divert such waters as are owned by the province of Quebec". Suppose they put forth plans which our engineers inform us are sufficient to provide for these waters and to give good navigation —and I do not think anyone will contend that it will not be the very best navigation possible; the government, I sumbit, has no alternative in that event but to approve of these plans, provided the conditions are complied with.

That is the situation so far as jurisdiction to approve of the plans is concerned. It is not the first time it has been exercised. That question was never raised before. It was not raised by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland in his address last year. Perhaps the most capable lawyers in this country were opposing the approval of these plans at the public hearing which took place, and not one of these lawyers suggested for a moment that there was no right, no jurisdiction in the department to approve of the plans. The plans were approved, provided all these safeguards were taken. The condition was attached that if at any time it should be discovered that any part of this 40,000 cubic feet of water did not belong to the province of Quebec and was not properly conveyed in that lease, then the approval should be void and the diversion should cease.

I think there is a great deal of misapprehension as to what the present situation is. I am sure the hon. member for Acadia would not intentionally mislead the house, but I rather gathered that he thought the water had been diverted without the plans having been approved. If my recollection is correct —and the present Minister of Public Works will correct me if I am wrong—none of this water has been diverted up to the present time.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It is going to be.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend has great faith. I think he is right. But there is a certain bank of land left at the point from which the water is to be diverted, and that, I understand, will not be taken away until the plans are all thoroughly approved by the minister. I do not understand that any of the water has been diverted up to the present time.

I had not intended to speak at any length, and I am very glad that the Prime Minister has intimated that he will have the matter referred to a committee. I hope that, in looking into the question, the committee will go thoroughly into every aspect of it which has been brought up from time to time by various critics of this scheme.

I wish to say just one word more. When the debate took place a year ago on the motion of the hon. member for Acadia to adjourn the house to discuss a matter of urgency, the motion was withdrawn. The matter was one of urgent importance at that time and apparently, a year later, it is still urgent, only, the urgency is of a little different nature from what it was at that particular time. Several of the reasons for the urgency were not given at that time.

I think it is well in business matters—and this is one of the most important that ever came before any department of government—that they should be thoroughly considered, and I am confident that when the committee go carefully into the matter they will be satisfied that the most complete safeguards were placed around the approval of the plans and the manner in which the water was to be diverted.

There is some question, of course, as to the ownership of the whole flow of the St. Lawrence, which, if I recollect correctly, is about 200,000 cubic feet per second. Part of this flow had been leased to various other concerns, and with the 40,000 cubic feet per second leased to the Beauharnois company there still remains a balance perhaps double what this diversion amounts to. But the government could not justify waiting to have the question of ownership settled, for the reason that when the matter was before the supreme court hon. members will recall that their lordships stated in effect: "We cannot find specifically upon the points submitted to us. We must have a concrete case. We are not going to give judgment upon theories. When a concrete case arises it will be decided, and until then it cannot be decided." So that the absolute ownership of all the flow of water cannot be settled until a concrete case arises and is decided by the courts. But this portion of the river being situated entirely in the province of Quebec, I think there can be no question that at least the 40,000 cubic feet proposed to be diverted by this particular work will prove to be the property of that province. If not, we are protected by the order in council, and the right to divert ceases upon any judgment being given by the supreme court that the whole or any portion of the water does not belong to the province of Quebec.

I do not propose to discuss the matter further at the present time. I have no doubt it will be thrashed out before the committee. But I did want to place before the house in as fair a way as I could just what question was submitted to the department and just what position the department took in dealing with it. The action taken was in accordance with what has been the practice of the department for years, and I think the committee will find that the department acted with as much care at least as has been exercised in any similar case which has ever come before it.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Will my hon. friend allow me a question on the ownership of the water? Suppose the department had come to the conclusion that the water to be diverted belonged to the Dominion, would the late government have granted the permit to the Beauharnois company?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Of course my hon. friend is asking me the same kind of question that the supreme court refused to answer, and I think I should follow the precedent then established.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Their case was not yours.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I can add anything of value to the discussion which has taken place, but apart entirely from the interest which a member should take in a question of some importance, I have perhaps a peculiar interest from various points of view. In the first place, I happen to come from the province of Ontario, which perhaps more than any other, with the exception of the province of Quebec, is interested in the development and use of this power from the St. Lawrence river. In the second place, I am and have always been a strong advocate of public ownership—public ownership of water powers, natural resources and other services which are in a sense monopolistic, or may become monopolistic, and upon which the prosperity and welfare of the people generally depend. I have always felt that in such cases I would even go further than we have gone in this country in some respects. I have always felt that water powers and other services of like nature should remain, if not in the ownership and operation of the people themselves, at least very definitely under the control of the people. Then, finally, I have a peculiar interest in the question because I happened to be a member of the government which passed the order in council that we are now considering.

As I have said, I have always been predisposed to public ownership, and when the matter of the Beauharnois lease came up I, for one, as did most of my colleagues in the government of that day, hesitated to pass the order in council, not feeling quite sure whether we had the right to do so, and it was only when I felt satisfied that we had not only the power but were under a moral obligation to issue the order in council, that as a member of the government I consented to the passing of the order.

The matter then to my mind had to be considered from three points of view: first of all, that the water power does belong to the provinces; second, that the 42,000 cubic feet per second allotted did not interfere with the navigation of the river; third, that the government had legal authoritiy to pass the order in council. I am not a lawyer, I am not an engineer, and so far as I was concerned I felt, as also I think did most of my colleagues in the government of the day. that we had to take the advice and the opinion of those who were best qualified to judge in these technical matters.

Mention has been made of the reference to the supreme court of questions in regard to the ownership of these water powers as between the provinces and the Dominion. While no definite opinion was given by the supreme court, I think it was pretty well understood from the judicial deliverance later handed down that water powers situated entirely within a province do belong to the province itself. I do submit that with respect to a stream which is not navigable and is entirely within the borders of a province the water power does undoubtedly belong to the province; therefore it is logical to conclude that where a navigable stream is entirely within the confines of a province, the water power should also belong to the province so long as navigation is conserved.

I might say further—and perhaps in this my right hon. leader will correct me—that I think we, as a government, also came to the conclusion that as a matter of policy and as a matter of moral right it was advisable and proper that the water-powers of any stream, whether navigable or not, always having regard to the protection of navigation where appropriate, should and do belong to the provinces themselves. That was proven, I think, by the fact that when the former premier of Ontario, Mr. Ferguson, made application to develop hydro-electric power on the international section of the St. Lawrence no objection was raised, and permission was given, although the project was never gone on with by the Ontario government. I might say further—and it was referred to by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) this evening—that I believe it is true that had it not been for the contract made by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario to take some 250,000 horse-power for a period of 40 years at $15 per horse-power, it would have been practically impossible for the Beauharnois corporation to float their bonds and continue their financing. I do regret that the power to be developed on the St. Lawrence river does not remain under public control, perhaps developed by the provinces. However, as has been stated here by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Bell), while the people in the province of Ontario very largely believe in public ownership, the people in the province of Quebec are not of that opinion. They have a perfect right to believe in the benefits and the merits of private ownership as compared with those of public ownership.

I have stated that we were convinced that the water-power in this section of the river, being entirely within the province of Quebec, belonged to that province and that all the Dominion government had to do was make certain that in the development of the power derived from the 40,000 cubic foot diversion, navigation was safeguarded and not interfered with. Some reference was made this afternoon by one of the speakers to the fact that the abstraction of 40,000 cubic feet from the river did interfere with navigation, or at least that there was some doubt about it. I am not very clear on all the details of this transaction. I have not had time to look them up, to write them out or have somebody else write them out for me, but I am very firmly of the impression—and the former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) bears me out in this—that the most capable engineers we could possibly secure said very definitely that the abstraction of the 40,000 cubic feet per second did not interfere with navigation on the St. Lawrence river. Therefore, assuming that the power did belong to the province; if it was also a matter of policy as far as the government was concerned that the water-power should go to the province—and I for one am in favour of that—further, if we were quite sure that navigation rights were protected, I was of the opinion and the government of the day was of the opinion that we had no moral right to refuse to sanction those plans. I never had any doubt as to whether the government had legal power to pass the order in council; as far as I am concerned I did not know the question had been raised. However, that is a legal question, and I do not see how even a committee can decide as to that. I should think it would be up to the courts to decide finally, though possibly in view of the reflections which have been made upon certain judges my hon. friend to my left will not even consent to have the courts decide it.

[Mr. Euler.]

I am glad a committee is being appointed, although I believe the committee may have its difficulties. For instance, the Beauharnois corporation is a provincial company, and I have some doubt as to the jurisdiction of any committee of this house to investigate anything that is of provincial origin. However, it will be well to have the committee. I do not know how far it can go, but I trust that in making the reference to that committee my right hon. friend the Prime Minister will make it sufficiently broad and specific so that the pharisaical accusations which have been made this afternoon will be cleared up, together with other points of law and of policy.

Mr. GARDINER: If no other hon. member wishes to speak I should like to say just a few words to conclude the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member for Acadia speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. GARDINER: It is not necessary for me to say very much in closing the debate, Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister has consented to the appointment of a committee of this house to investigate this whole matter. With the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Euler) I also suggest to the Prime Minister that the reference to this committee be wide enough to include all matters which might come within the scope of such an inquiry.

The former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) made a few statements during his address to which I think attention should be directed. In the first place, he was thoroughly convinced in his own mind that this water belonged to the province of Quebec. Then later on in his address he said he was not quite sure whether it belonged to Quebec or to the Dominion of Canada, because that matter was not definitely settled, so the latter part of his address was rather a contradiction of the first part. I am of the opinion that this matter should not be proceeded with until the rights of the provinces and of the Dominion are determined. I am also of the opinion that all this trouble would have been largely avoided if the Dominion government had resorted to the final court of appeal for a decision as to who owns the water in this river.

I will go further, Mr. Speaker; I will say that we in western Canada believe we have some rights in this river. We maintain, and I think we are right in maintaining, that this is not only an international river but a national river as well, in which all the people of Canada are interested, those of the maritime provinces as well as those of the west and central Canada. I maintain that before any such authority as this should have been given, the rights of the provinces and the Dominion should have been determined. This should have been done before the order in council was passed and work permitted to proceed; because after all is said and done the claims of the whole people of Canada are more important than the claims of the people of any province. The court of last resort should have been appealed to in order to determine this point.

The former Minister of Public Works quoted the Navigable Waters Protection Act, reading subsection (b) of section 2 and section 4. After he had read those sections he said, "Why, here is our authority to pass this order in council to divert water from the St. Lawrence." I will challenge any member of this house to show me any section in this act giving the government power to pass an order in council to divert water from a navigable stream. There is no such section in the act and there is no reference to that power being given any government. If the bill had come before parliament, this house would have had the right to permit the diversion of water from a navigable stream, but there is no question in my mind that the act gives no power to any government to permit that diversion by order in council.

This is one of the important points at issue, and it is a matter which should be inquired into. My hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Bell) made reference to certain companies which were contending with each other in the courts with regard to certain alleged wrongs done by one to another. I do not know very much about those matters; I have heard rumours, but I have not inquired into the merits of the claims of these companies. I am not interested in any company, whether it is the Beauharnois company or a company claiming damages from that company. I do not know anything about these companies beyond the odd references which have appeared in the press from time to time. I am not connected with any of them and am not interested in the success or failure of any of them. We have not raised the issue on that point, and we are not bringing up the matter on behalf of either of those companies. My hon. friend may rest assured that that is not the case as far as I am concerned.

I stated a few moments ago that I hoped the Prime Minister would make this reference wide enough to include all matters of importance in regard to this particular question. In order to obviate any possible recurrence of what has taken place in regard to the development of this particular section of the St. Lawrence river, it should be the duty of the present government or any government which may be in power to have this matter referred to the court of last resort so that the people of Canada will know where they stand.

With the permission of the house I will withdraw my motion.

Motion (Mr. Gardiner) withdrawn.

SUPPLY—GRAIN RATES

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I desire to discuss a question which I believe to be of urgent importance, namely the matter of domestic freight rates which are at present affecting adversely the farmers of British Columbia, and before I sit down I intend to move an amendment to the motion to go into supply.

I realize that this question has been before the house many times, but I doubt very much whether the question of domestic freight rates was ever of more importance or presented graver possibilities to the poultrymen and those who keep dairy stock in the province of British Columbia than it is at the present time. It is not my intention to labour the question with a mass of statistical data, or unduly to delay the business of the house, but speaking on behalf of those in British Columbia who are dependent on the poultry and dairying industries for their livelihood, I must say that the time has long passed for the reduction of the present discriminatory domestic freight rate on grain and its products moving west to British Columbia. The matter, I say, is urgent; I believe it is important and serious enough to warrant the immediate attention of the government.

It is quite true that the question of railway rates has been discussed previously in this parliament and has been argued before the Board of Railway Commissioners in years past, but the fact remains that the poultrymen in British Columbia have never been in such dire straits as they have been during the past few months, and the same may be said of the farmers on the prairies who have their grain to sell. I intend to plead as best I can the case for these people in the sincere hope that the government will take speedy action to remedy what has been a long-standing grievance.

Since coming to Ottawa I have been surprised at the seeming lack of information on the part of many hon. members with regard to the position of British Columbia in her fight for a revision of the domestic freight rates. I intend to review the situation as briefly as possible and to show that the domestic freight rates to British Columbia from eastern points are discriminatory and unfair, not only in relation to export rates but as compared with the rates applicable to other sections of the Dominion. I believe I will be upheld in my argument by every fairminded member, because I do not think any hon. member will deny that the province of British Columbia is just as much entitled to equitable treatment in the matter of railway rates as is any other province in Canada. To my mind British Columbia since confederation has been treated more as an orphan than as a rightful and important member of the confederation. To obtain an intelligent view of our case it will be necessary to cite authorities dating from before confederation down to the time of our becoming a part of the Dominion in 1871.

One of the inducements offered to British Columbia, then a colony, to join the Dominion was a promise to construct a railway to establish speedy communication with other parts of the Dominion of Canada and at the same time to link up the Atlantic with the Pacific. To present the full facts it is necessary to go back to crown colony days. The preamble of the British North America Act of 1867 sets out that the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick desired to be united with a constitution similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom, and that such a union would conduce to the welfare of the provinces and of the British Empire. The dominating influence was that confederation was necessary to the empire as a whole, and provision was made for the admission of other parts of British North America into the union. It is the violation of this spirit of unity which has brought about the unjust conditions which we are now requesting should be removed. The inducement offered by the imperial government to British Columbia to join confederation is contained in the following quotation from the despatch of Earl Granville:

> Most especially is this true in the case of internal transit. It is evident that the establishment of a British line of communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans is far more feasible by the operation of a single government, responsible for the progress of both shores of the continent, than by a bargain negotiated between separate, perhaps in some respects rival, governments and legislatures. The San Francisco of British North America would, under these circumstances, hold a greater commercial and political position than would be attainable by the capital of the isolated colony of British Columbia.

The proposed terms of the union which were drawn up read as follows:

> Inasmuch as no real union can subsist between this colony and Canada without the speedy establishment of communication across the Rocky mountains by coach road and railway, the Dominion shall, within three years from date of union, construct and open for traffic such coach road from some point on the line of the main trunk road, and shall further engage to use all means in her power to complete such railway communication at the earliest practicable date, and that surveys to determine the proper line of such railway shall be at once commenced, and that a sum not less than one million dollars shall be expended in every year, from and after three years from date of union, in actually constructing the initial section of such railway from the seaboard of British Columbia to connect with the railway system of Canada.

Negotiations varied the proposed terms to some extent, but the dominant thought throughout was railway connection between the Atlantic and the Pacific. Section 11 of the terms of union agreed upon as a result of Earl Granville's despatch reads as follows:

> The government of the Dominion undertake to secure the commencement simultaneously within two years from the date of union, of the construction of a railway from the Pacific towards the Rocky mountains, and from such point as may be selected, east of the Rocky mountains towards the Pacific, to connect the seaboard of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada; and, further to secure the completion of such railway within ten years from the date of union.
> And the government of British Columbia agrees to convey to the Dominion government, in trust, to be appropriated in such manner as the Dominion government may deem advisable in furtherance of the construction of the said railway, a similar extent of public lands along the line of railway throughout its entire length in British Columbia, not to exceed, however, twenty (20) miles on each side of the said line.

It will be noticed that British Columbia was called upon to contribute a large grant of land in addition to her share of the other burdens put upon the nation by the construction of the transcontinental railway. In addition to this huge land grant British Columbia gave up many years before the railway was completed her customs tariff, which under the agreement she had the right to retain until the completion of the railway. An important fact which is not generally known is that the Dominion Railway Act, in force in 1871, made illegal any discrimination of toll. Subsection 6 of section 12, chapter 68, reads:

> All or any of the tolls may by any by-law be reduced and again raised as often as necessary for the interests of the undertaking, but the same tolls shall be payable at the same time and under the same circumstances upon all goods by all persons or class of persons by any by-laws relating to tolls.

Some hon. members have said that they are not lawyers. I have made it clear that I am not a lawyer and I have no desire to be one, but I would say that no discrimination would have been possible under that section. In the Railway Act of 1879 the same proviso was included, providing against discrimination of tolls. However, we may differ as to that, the construction of the transcontinental railway was the dominant factor in inducing British Columbia to enter confederation, and I think I am stating a well founded belief when I say that had the people of British Columbia at that time known or been told that higher railway tolls would be exacted from her people than from the people of other parts of the Dominion, it is doubtful whether at that time she would have entered confederation and so become part of the Dominion of Canada.

The Dominion, as many hon. members know, entered into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to construct a line. It may be argued that the terms of union were not binding upon the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. When were any terms binding on the Canadian Pacific? The Canadian Pacific Railway Company certainly knew at that time that the Railway Act of 1868 did not allow them to discriminate as to freight tolls.

Regarding the construction of the first railway to the coast, it is not as well known as it should be that a route had been surveyed and laid out by the Dominion government over which the Canadian Pacific had contracted to build a railway to the Pacific coast. The Canadian Pacific did not adhere to that contract, and, instead, built the railway some 200 miles south of the proposed route and over the Rockies. Had the Canadian Pacific adhered to the route contracted for, there would not have been any mountain grades or mountain construction in British Columbia. As many hon. members know, the land in the Dominion of Canada slopes to the north, and the route which the Canadian Pacific abandoned as being no good is now the excellent route that was chosen by the Canadian National Railways and is now used by their line from Vancouver to Edmonton, and which by the way is some 1,600 feet lower than the route chosen by the Canadian Pacific. If the Canadian Pacific had taken the Yellowhead pass route, the mountain differential in all probability would never have been put into effect. If, however, the Canadian Pacific blundered, and the parliament of Canada erred in permitting the change, that is no justifiable reason why British Columbia should be called upon to pay the whole cost of the error of the whole of Canada. The grades over the Canadian National railway route are nothing like those over the route used by the Canadian Pacific. It has sometimes been remarked: Look at what the Canadian Pacific has done for Canada. But having regard to the large subsidies paid by this country to the Canadian Pacific and the enormous grants made to them of the best of our lands, I think hon. members will agree with me when I say: Look at what this country has done for the Canadian Pacific. I am going to mention some of these subsidies. In cash the Canadian Pacific received $25,000,000; in constructed railways and services, another $38,000,000; in cash in exchange for subsidy lands, over $10,000,000, and a total of 18,000,000 acres of some of our best lands. In this way the Canadian Pacific easily received well over $110,000,000 from the Dominion of Canada.

The rate discrimination of the Canadian Pacific has always been resented by British Columbia. In 1906 and 1910 it was contested before the Board of Railway Commissioners, without result. Failure to obtain a removal of the discriminatory rates was one reason for the agreement of the Canadian National Railways to construct its line over the route originally contemplated by the Canadian Pacific, and this agreement was justified largely on the ground that such a road would reduce rates in that province and permit British Columbia to get into the consuming markets of the prairies on rates that were reasonable and just, and that the rates known as mountain scale rates would be eliminated.

In order to be certain that there would be no misunderstanding of what these new rates would be, the government of the day entered into another agreement intended to guarantee absolutely the promised reduction in railway rates. The agreement is contained in chapter 3 of the statutes of British Columbia, but at the moment I have not time to read the section dealing with it. The province at that time was very much alarmed regarding the rates, and was taking every precaution to see that there would be no further discrimination. The object of the then premier, Sir Richard McBride, in entering into the agreement, was not only to secure lower rates on the Canadian Pacific but also to force the general rates down to a reasonable point on any other transcontinental railway. British Columbia at that time was willing to guarantee $40,000,000 to another railway, so resentful did she feel over the Canadian Pacific. This, however, was going to place a competitor in the railway field, a factor which was not at all relished at the time by other private interests, and especially with the province of British Columbia backing those new railways to the limit. But, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to note what happened. The Dominion of Canada was, I believe, importuned to some extent, and passed an act in 1914 simply declaring the Canadian National Railways, to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, thus at one stroke taking the power of fixing rates out of the hands of the province of British Columbia. I believe I am right when I say that the Canadian Pacific were the first to suggest such a line of action to the Dominion government. That is a brief history of the railways and railway companies of British Columbia since the day the province entered confederation, and I believe it should be more fully known that it is at present; for it is well, in my opinion, that these facts be had in mind before one proceeds with arguments as to the merits of our claim which are even more convincing.

I do not intend to make any extended argument in regard to freight rates generally, because, first, I do not wish to take up the time of the house in any general discussion, and, second, I want to keep to the main purpose of my address, which aims at this time only to bring about the necessary relief to the many purchasers and users of grain in British Columbia. The arguments from the point of view of the prairie farmers as sellers of grain can very well be left to hon. members from those districts. I intend, therefore, to confine my remarks to the discriminatory domestic freight rate which is operative against the province of British Columbia and which we in British Columbia are called upon to pay on all grain and its products purchased in Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba for domestic use. The freight rate on grain for export from Calgary is some 20 cents per 100 pounds, while the rate for domestic use is 41½ cents per 100 pounds. We claim not only that the rates on grain for domestic purposes are excessive, but that the rates on grain for export are much higher through the port of Vancouver than they are to eastern points.

I contend that a domestic rate of 41½ cents per 100 pounds as against 20 cents for export is both excessive and discriminatory and is acting as a real barrier to our progress and development. While I am aware that the principle advanced by the railway companies is that export and domestic rates on any particular commodity, being based on different conditions as to marketing, may properly differ in amount for the like per mile service, I affirm, however, that from all the arguments advanced or presented on behalf of the railway companies before the Board of Railway Commissioners, no statistical evidence has yet been given, so far as I am aware, to substantiate the rates charged on grain westbound to Vancouver by either the Canadian Pacific or the Canadian National.

British Columbia, as we all know, produces less wheat than any other province in proportion to her population, and so the question of rates on grain and flour for local consumption is of far greater importance to every section of her people than to those of any other province of Canada. We in British Columbia at least should have rates the same as the lowest accorded to any of the other provinces. From prairie points eastward to Fort William, there is no difference between the rates on grain and flour for export and those on grain and flour for domestic use. Why should there be such a difference to British Columbia? The population at the head of the lakes get the full benefit of an export rail rate on their domestic supplies, which are, by the way, not large enough to be considered as a factor in the case. In fact they are hauling grain for domestic purposes from points in Saskatchewan to Fort William or Port Arthur for as low as 19 cents as against 41½ cents per 100 pounds to British Columbia, although the distance is only half as great. In this way the greater part of the two larger provinces of the Dominion may receive the bulk of their domestic supplies of wheat and flour at export rates.

Let us bear in mind also that the domestic rate which we pay is for inferior grades of wheat, not for No. 1 or No. 2 northern. Let us see just what some of these rates are. The all rail export rate from Fort William to Montreal is 34½ cents per one hundred pounds. The domestic rate is 37½ cents, which is just three cents higher than the export rate. Mark this; the rail distance from Fort William to Montreal is 992 miles, which is greater by more than one-half than the distance from Calgary to Vancouver, which is only 642 miles on the Canadian Pacific railway. In the face of those figures, surely British Columbia is entitled to some fairer treatment than she now receives at the hands of the railway companies. A domestic rate of three cents over the export rate from prairie points to Vancouver would represent the same difference between domestic and export rates as now prevails on the all rail grain movement from Fort William to Montreal. But it would not put us in the same favoured position as Montreal, because central Canada generally, including Montreal, gets the bulk of its domestic supplies at export rates.

The argument is generally put forward that the reason the rates on grain and flour are much higher westbound than eastbound is found in the so-called physical difficulties in getting into British Columbia. I would point out, Mr. Speaker—and I believe it is important information which should be more fully and generally known—that according to evidence submitted before the Board of Railway Commissioners in 1926, not only were the construction costs greater in some of the other provinces than in British Columbia, but the cost of maintenance is less in British Columbia than in many of the other provinces. The wrong impression in this respect which has prevailed for a considerable time should be corrected, and in my opinion now is the time to make the correction.

I am going to give a few instances as to the cost of construction at other points in Canada as compared to the cost through the Rockies. From Kamloops to Hope, 168 miles, cost $133,563 per mile; eastern Canada, Montreal to Ottawa, 111 miles, cost $178,614 per mile; British Columbia, Hope to Fraser River junction, 77 miles, cost $51,544 per mile; eastern Canada, Joliette to Garneau Junction, 61·49 miles, cost $62,394 per mile; British Columbia, Fraser River Junction to Grandview, Manitoba, 1,381 miles, cost $55,572 per mile; Montreal to Winnipeg, 1,451 miles, cost $59,313 per mile.

With regard to the cost of operation, the Canadian Pacific Railway have submitted a statement, which can be found at page 142 of the report of the Board of Railway Commissioners for the year 1925, setting out the operating cost per gross ton mile throughout its system by districts.

The Canadian National Railway shows that the operating costs in 1925 per mile of road in British Columbia were $3,825.50, and in the prairie districts, $4,707.34 per mile. In British Columbia the operating expenses were shown to be about the same as in Ontario, and less than in Quebec and New Brunswick.

It is perfectly clear to me, Mr. Speaker, that unless the rates are adjusted to allow all traffic to move more freely, and with the proper degree of freedom between the prairies and the Pacific coast, the purpose of the construction of the Canadian National railway to Vancouver will not have been achieved and the money paid by the Dominion treasury to secure its construction will in a large measure have been thrown away.

I have endeavoured to place before the house important and general statistical facts, such as:

1. The conditions under which British Columbia entered confederation.

2. The conditions under which British Columbia was asked to enter the Dominion of Canada, and the inducements offered to her, which were rail connections with the Atlantic.

3. The large grants of land which British Columbia gave for the building of the railway.

4. The fact that the Railway Act of that day prohibited the imposition of discriminatory tolls.

5. The varying of the act of 1868 so as to permit an inequality of treatment, being a direct violation of the spirit of the terms of union.

6. The fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company changed the excellent route laid down for them by the Dominion and chose for themselves a more difficult route, because it was shorter by some 130 miles.

7. The fact that the Dominion government took away from the province of British Columbia the right British Columbia had, up to that time to fix and control the rates and tolls of the Canadian Northern Pacific by simply declaring the work to be for the general benefit of Canada.

8. I have also given figures which have been sworn to before the Board of Railway Commissioners, proving that the cost of construction was greater in some of the eastern provinces than from Alberta to British Columbia, and

9. Figures submitted by both the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian National Railways showing that operating costs were less in British Columbia than in many other provinces in the east, and

10. The pusher mileage is also less in British Columbia.

In regard to the Canadian Pacific railway rates, I would just mention this fact for the benefit of hon. members. The Canadian Pacific Railway are to-day charging for an extra 130 miles from Calgary to Vancouver which does not exist, and are levying rates on that non-existent mileage. They get a further advantage over the Canadian National Railway in that the present terminus of the Canadian National is located at Port Mann, seventeen miles from Vancouver, and it costs the Canadian National over $13 for every car of grain they move from their terminus to Vancouver. So the Canadian Pacific Railway have that advantage of $13 per car over the Canadian National, together with the advantage of levying rates on a non-existent mileage of 130 miles.

In view of the ten very important arguments which I have presented to this house, I ask hon. members, is it just and equitable in the face of all this evidence that freight rates, both export and domestic, but especially domestic, should be higher west to British Columbia than to points in eastern Canada? Think of the injustice of the people of British Columbia being called upon to pay a toll of 41½ cents per 100 pounds for the grain they have to purchase from the farmer on the prairie, whereas the people of eastern Canada can procure this grain and grain products for domestic use at export rates, and can export at rates which are even less than the export rates charged to Vancouver. Is it any wonder that the people of British Columbia are dissatisfied with such treatment?

I should like to give one figure as to the loss on grain that went into British Columbia for domestic use last year. From figures that have been furnished to me, approximately over two million bushels of grain and grain products were shipped into British Columbia for domestic use last year, and with the domestic rate over twice the rate charged on grain for export purposes, the farmers of British Columbia lost, due to this rate, the sum of $260,000. If the rate had been the same as the export rate that money would have been saved to the people of British Columbia.

Let me say a word as to the effect which this discriminatory domestic rate has upon the whole province. It has helped to put many of our poultrymen out of business. Some explanation is necessary in this connection of the physical characteristics of the country. The land in the lower Fraser valley comprises, generally speaking, two classes of soil, alluvial lands and lands of volcanic nature, all of which were heavily timbered lands. I believe I am safe in saying that the greater proportion of our lands cannot be looked upon from a strictly agricultural point of view alone. We have thousands of acres of beautiful soil and these are admirably adapted to the raising of poultry and fruits of both small and large varieties. The lands are generally speaking, in the lower Fraser valley, subdivided into small holdings and great numbers have embarked upon the poultry business. Had it not been partly for these conditions, I believe that many thousands of our acres would not have been cleared of stumps and occupied as they are to-day. It costs between $400 and $500 to bring one acre under cultivation, and the owner has to accept a distinct monetary loss if he wishes to dispose of the land on the open market after he has cleared and put it under cultivation. The poultry industry has been primarily responsible for the great progress and development of the lands in the lower Fraser Valley, and, as I have stated, no farmer would spend the large amount of capital and labour required to clear these lands for purely agricultural purposes. But with the climatic conditions equal to if not better than those of California for poultry raising, hundreds of families have embarked on small holdings, and with great energy and some zeal not only have endeavoured to earn a decent livelihood for themselves and their families, but have helped in large measure to the building up of our country as well.

Ranching, as it is generally called in British Columbia, is not by any means a lazy man's job; only those of us who have tried it, know of the very exacting and heavy work required. And let me tell some hon. members who are prairie farmers something: there is no branch of farming that is of so exacting a nature and calls for longer hours of work every day, 365 day a year, than does that of poultry farming; and in your spare time, if you have any, you can wrestle with stumps 4 to 7 feet in diameter. British Columbia, however, although the finest and best adapted province in the whole Dominion for poultry and for stock-feeding, is by nature removed from the great grain areas of Canada. The poultry industry has however steadily increased during the past number of years, and whilst the people of British Columbia have worked hard and paid out many millions of dollars during those years for the produce required from the prairies, we should not have had to pay this extra money if British Columbia had only had the same treatment as the other parts of the Dominion. We have now reached the point where great numbers are leaving the ranches. Numbers of others heavily in debt are being carried along by the feed companies, and the rest of the ranchers are holding on because they can do nothing else, conditions being as they are, all in the hope that price conditions will change or that markets will be found, or may be that freight rates will be so adjusted as to allow them to purchase grain much more cheaply than is possible at present. Many thousands of birds have been sacrificed since the beginning of the year, and if this continues the railway companies will have no grain freight at all to carry. If the poultrymen and dairymen of British Columbia are to continue in business, the cost of production must be lowered; and the first essential step in that direction is the lowering of the unjust discriminatory freight rate on grain and grain produce. It is within the power of this government to grant relief. British Columbia has been bled almost white and cannot much longer continue.

We have listened to speeches in the house about the great crops of barley that are in store on the prairies. Farmers, it is said, cannot even give it away. I say to those farmers, "A good market awaits you in British Columbia but we cannot afford to purchase your barley. We can procure corn more cheaply from the Argentine, and so you have to keep your barley. The barley you have for sale is shut out of our province on account of the excessive railway rates." I repeat, the farmers in the prairies cannot sell their grain. We in British Columbia cannot afford to purchase that grain and even exist. British Columbia is the logical outlet and the logical market for that grain for stock feeding, dairy and poultry purposes, on account of the fine climatic conditions and with the ports of the Pacific Ocean open to the world every day in the year.

Large sums of money are being spent abroad in an endeavour to find markets for our wheat, while the markets in our own country are stifled. This, in large measure, is due to the excessive and unjust freight rates. I wish we had a little more of the motto of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, "Canada first," with regard to our grain products. It would certainly mean that the poultry industry of British Columbia might, at least, be given some consideration, which in turn would mean that more grain would be sold by the farmers of the prairies to us in British Columbia. This would all result in greater volume of business being done by the railway companies. As it is now, the volume of railway freight will be reduced. The farmers in the prairies are seeking markets, but at present the discriminatory rate on grain and grain products westward acts as a distinct barrier between the farmer on the prairies and the greater market for his grain in British Columbia. If the rates on grain to Vancouver for domestic use were the same as those to the man in Japan and China it would mean a saving of $4.20 per ton. To the average individual poultry farmer in British Columbia it would mean an actual saving of 21 cents per year on every chicken he possessed, which on the average flock would mean an actual saving of over $100 per year. Eggs have now reached a point in Canada like unto wheat, where we must find a market abroad for our surplus production. We are now producing volumes of eggs that we in this country, with our population of ten millions, cannot consume; and so we are compelled to compete in the markets of the world with our surplus product. How can we do it and, as I say, carry on, with eggs at 11 cents a dozen? And this may yet be even less. How are we to carry on and purchase our grains from the prairies with the present discriminatory freight rates against us?

Let me give you, Mr. Speaker, a striking picture of our predicament, one that I believe will show at a glance the rotten state of affairs. Say that a train leaves Edmonton or Calgary for Vancouver with wheat, comprising a shipment all from one company with, we will say, 60 cars. We will assume that the first part of the train is for the people of Japan and China, the back part of the train destined for the people of British Columbia. What do we find? Although the cars are all linked together and drawn by the same engine, handled by the same crew, over the same track, at the same time, the cars in the front part of the train, which may be booked for export to Japan or China, are carried at less than half the cost of the cars at the back destined for the ranchers of British Columbia.

Representatives from Japan, I believe, are at present purchasing great numbers of pure-bred poultry, as Japan intends to embark in the production of eggs and poultry on a large scale. They will very shortly become strong competitors of ours in the world markets with their eggs. I would just point out, Mr. Speaker, that the railways of this country, with their discriminatory domestic freight rate, are certainly giving them all possible encouragement to enter the egg markets with us and so add to our present misery primarily on account of the fact that the people of Japan or China, can purchase their requirements of Canadian grain, from Canada and have it hauled over our Canadian lines cheaper right past our very doors, and at prices less than one-half of the freight toll we in British Columbia have to pay.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, May 20, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

ORLEANS ISLAND—BEAUPRE BRIDGE

The Clerk of the house laid upon the table the fifteenth report of the clerk of petitions, stating that he had examined the following petition presented on the 19th instant, and finds that the time for receiving petitions for private bills under standing order 92 having expired, it should not be received:

Of the government of the province of Quebec; praying for the passing of an act to authorize it to construct a bridge across the St. Lawrence river between the island of Orleans and the coast of Beaupré, in the province of Quebec.—Mr. Dorion.

M. C. N. DORION (Québec-Montmorency) propose:

Mr. C.-N. Dorion (Quebec-Montmorency) (Translation): That the petition of the government of the province of Quebec praying for the passing of an act to authorize it to construct a bridge across the St. Lawrence river between the Island of Orleans and the shore of Beaupré as well as the report of the clerk of petitions be referred to the select committee on standing orders and that standing order No. 92 in relation thereto, be suspended.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY COMMITTEE

Third report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. Harris.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALGOMA CENTRAL AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. T. E. SIMPSON (West Algoma) moved the first reading of Bill No. 48 (from the Senate), respecting the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): The purpose of this bill is to confirm an arrangement between the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company, the Algoma Central Terminals, Limited, the holders of the first mortgage bonds of both of these companies, and the Lake Superior Corporation which guaranteed payment of the bonds. A previous arrangement between the same parties was confirmed by the Dominion parliament in 1916, and the present scheme requires similar approval in order to make it operative.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

*BEAUHARNOIS POWER CORPORATION

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Has the right hon. the Prime Minister, received the departmental report of the investigation regarding Beauharnois which he mentioned at the special session as having been undertaken by him?

2. If such a report has been received, will he table it?

3. Have plans for remedial works of the Beauharnois development been filed and approved by the government?

4. Are the plans under which the Beauharnois development is now being proceeded with the same plans which were approved by order in council, P.C. 422, dated May 8, 1929?

5. If the present plans are not the same as above approved, have they been approved, and if so, how and when?

6. If any change has been made in these plans, what are the changes and why were such changes made?

7. Has the program of construction provided for in condition No. 12 of the order in council No. P.C. 422 of March 8, 1929, been submitted and approved by the minister?

8. If so submitted and approved, will the government table a copy?

9. If not submitted and approved, when will the government require its submission?

10. Have the engineer or engineers referred to in condition No. 14 of the said order in council been appointed by the government, if so, when and what are their names, what are their duties in respect to: (a) the canal; (b) works to be constructed in the St. Lawrence river?

11. Why were fixed spans permitted as set out in condition No. 10 of said order in council if the canal is to be used for navigation purposes?

12. (a) Has the province of Quebec executed and the Dominion government accepted the agreement referred to in condition No. 24; (b) if this agreement has been executed and accepted, will the government table a copy?

13. (a) Have the plan and detailed construction provided for in condition No. 11 of said order in council been submitted and approved of by the minister; (b) if so approved, will the government table a copy?

14. Will the government procure from the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited (a Dominion company) and table the list of shareholders of said corporation?

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps in view of the reference that is to be made in regard to this matter, these two questions may be dropped, for the papers such as are available and producible will be available before the select committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the hon. member in whose name the questions are put, perhaps we had better allow them to stand.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I did not notice the hon. member was absent.

Questions stand.

LA MALBAIE, QUE., DEMONSTRATION STATION

On the question:

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Is the government aware that the experimental station conducted by the federal Department of Agriculture, located at La Malbaie, district of Riviere Mailloux, under the supervision of Mr. Rene Villeneuve, has been moved to another location?
2. If so, why was this change made?
3. Had complaints been made against Mr. Rene Villeneuve regarding the way this station was being conducted, and if so, what was the nature of said complaints, and by whom were they made?
4. Who replaced Mr. Villeneuve as superintendent of said experimental station?
5. By whom was he recommended?
6. What is the salary of the superintendent of the said experimental station?

Mr. CASGRAIN: With reference to this question, it would appear to have been answered on Monday last. The answer was that there was no experimental station in that district. My question was put in French and it asked for information regarding a demonstration farm which is different from an experimental farm. I find that in the English version of the orders of the day the wording is "experimental station." This must be an error on the part of the person who makes out the orders of the day. I would ask that in the English version the word "experimental" be struck out and the word "demonstration" be inserted, and I shall expect to receive an answer from the minister at an early date.

Question stands.

BRANDON EXPERIMENTAL FARM—TEAMSTERS' WAGES

Mr. WOODSWORTH:

1. What wages are being paid to teamsters employed on the experimental farm at Brandon?
2. Has there been any recent reduction in wages?
3. If so, how much?
4. Do these wages conform to the fair wage schedule?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. Twenty-five cents per hour, for the hours worked.
2. Yes.
3. Five cents per hour.
4. The above wages conform as nearly as possible to the average rate of pay for farm labourers in the Brandon district.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING BUREAU

Mr. DORION:

1. Is the government printing bureau considered an open shop?
2. Is the government aware that only printers who are members of the International Typographical Union may be employed at the government printing bureau?
3. Is the government aware that only printers who are members of the International Typographical Union are called upon to work overtime?
4. Is the government aware that Mr. P. M. Draper, director of the Government Printing Bureau, is president of the Ottawa branch of the International Typographical Union?
5. Is the government aware that the International Typographical Union has caused considerable annoyance to several printing companies throughout Canada, during the past year?

6. Does the present situation at the government printing bureau, as regards the International Union, exist with the consent of the King's Printer?

7. Does the government intend to allow the present conditions to continue?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. All civil servants and printing trades employees are appointed by the Civil Service Commission and the question of open or closed shop does not, so far as the government is aware, arise.

2. No.

3. No.

4. No.

5. No.

6. The King's Printer reports that no representations have reached him respecting "the present situation at the government printing bureau, as regards the International union."

7. The government is not aware of any labour conditions at present existing in the printing bureau which require investigation or radical change.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLE INSPECTORS

Mr. LAFLECHE:

1. What are the names of the fruit inspectors for Canada?

2. What is the date of their appointment and the salary received by each of them?

3. Are they permanent?

4. Are special studies required for this work?

5. Is it the intention of the department to increase the number of these inspectors?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1, 2 and 3. See attached list.

4. Qualifications required for the position of fruit and vegetable inspector include education equivalent to high school graduation; at least five years of experience in the growing, picking, packing, and marketing of fruits and vegetables; thorough knowledge of the Root Vegetables Act, and of the Fruit Act.

5. Not for administrative purposes, but where necessary to provide the service for requested inspections which are made on the basis of approximate cost.

4. How much was spent by the organized municipalities in the various provinces taken collectively?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST THAT RETURNS TABLED BE PREPARED IN DUPLICATE

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to call the attention of the Prime Minister to a request which I made yesterday regarding the production of returns to parliament. I have in my hand a return comprising fifty-two pages, which I must hand back to the clerk of the house. My request yesterday was that arrangements might be made in the departments by which a duplicate could be made of these returns at the time the original is being made, and the duplicate could be given to the member of the house who had moved for the return. It would save lots of trouble, would entail no additional labour, and would be a great convenience to members of the house. The same thing is done with questions now.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): So far as my inquiries go, I am satisfied that this has never been done before, and it does involve an amount of extra labour. Whether a new departure is to be made now depends entirely upon the view of those who have to be responsible for the doing of it, I suppose. I shall look further into the matter and advise the hon. gentleman, but why this sudden departure should be made now—

Mr. POWER: Because it is better business, and we know that this government wants that.

Mr. BENNETT: These returns come from many different departments, and if an extra copy is to be made it would have to be filed either with the clerk or with the keeper of these records, because equal facilities should be offered to all who desire to see the returns. I have frequently desired to see a return myself which was in the hands of someone else at the moment. If two copies of the return are to be made, then, of course, they should be available to all members of the house who wish to see them, rather than the extra copy being given to the member immediately concerned. If it is desirable to make an extra copy and the rules are altered to that effect, I suppose it can be done, but not for the purpose of giving the mover for the return the extra copy, because all members are interested in the return, and it would have to be made available to all. It well may be that one copy is not sufficient. We will look into the question and see whether we cannot make two, so that there will be two copies available for the use of the house.

Mr. MARCIL: As I said, the practice of making a duplicate has been followed in regard to questions on the order paper. The answers are given in duplicate, and one copy is given to the member who put the question. I think the same practice might be followed with returns.

[Mr. Marcil.]

Mr. BENNETT: Some of these returns are not made for weeks after the house rises. Last year I recall one very long return comprising several hundred pages. We were working steadily on it, but it was not filed in the proper office until after the house had risen.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

TRENT CANAL—ACCOUNTS

Sir EUGENE FISET (for Mr. Bouchard):

For a copy of all telephone and telegraph accounts, by months, in the Trent canal office at the city of Peterborough, during the years 1930 and 1931.

TRENT CANAL—WATER LEVELS

Sir EUGENE FISET (for Mr. Bouchard):

For a copy of all letters and other communications and documents, passing between the Department of Railways and Canals and all lumber companies and lumbermen in the county of Peterborough, during the years 1928 to 1931, inclusive, in respect to the water levels in the Trent canal system, and all correspondence between officials of the Department of Railways and Canals and the said companies and officers of the said companies.

ROBERT WHITESIDE CORRESPONDENCE

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence and other communications addressed to the Prime Minister of Canada from Robert Whiteside, Saskatchewan, or any of the officers of the Union of Saskatchewan Rural Municipalities concerning the alleged surplus remaining at the conclusion of the operations of the board of grain supervisors for the years 1917 and 1918, and subsequently deposited in the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the letters have been used during the debate that took place with respect to this matter. I have looked through the correspondence, and so far as I could find, there were only two letters written. Mr. Whiteside wrote a letter to me and I sent a reply based on the information that I had received. I believe that both letters have been read during the progress of the debate that took place.

Mr. VALLANCE: If the right hon. gentleman will pardon me, the letters that were read were those passing between Mr. Whiteside and Sir George Foster.

Mr. BENNETT: The information that I gave is the information that I received from the department.

Motion agreed to.

RESTIGOUCHE RIVER BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): On Thursday last the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) asked for certain information in connection with the proposed construction of an interprovincial bridge between New Brunswick and Quebec at or near Crosspoint and Campbellton. I find that on February 27, 1928, the Department of Public Works of the province of New Brunswick forwarded a certified copy of an order in council of that province undertaking to contribute one-third of the cost of this bridge on condition that the province of Quebec make a similar contribution and the Dominion of Canada a like contribution. No communication has been received from the province of Quebec to the effect that it approves of the proposed undertaking, and no further action has been taken by the Public Works Department. The estimated cost of the bridge is $1,300,000; that is not for a railway bridge, but purely a traffic bridge.

PRIVILEGE—MR. MACKENZIE KING

APPEARANCE ON ORDER PAPER OF UNNECESSARY IRRELEVANT AND OBJECTIONABLE QUESTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): On a matter of privilege, may I direct Your Honour's attention to a question which appears in yesterday's votes and proceedings under Notices of Motions and Questions, as follows:

Mr. Laflèche—On Thursday next—inquiry of ministry—

1. On what date was Mr. Edward Tobin appointed senator?
2. Did he possess the required financial qualification at the time of his nomination?
3. Is it the intention of the government to make an inquiry in this matter?
4. What division does he represent?
5. Does he possess the necessary education?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Mr. Tobin at the time of his appointment to the Senate had been a member of this House of Commons for something like thirty years, during which time he not only earned but enjoyed the respect of hon. members on all sides of the house. I know that at the time of his appointment to the Senate there were expressions from the other side of the house quite as appreciative towards him as many of those that came from his own side. I submit that a question such as the one I have read should not be permitted to appear in the votes and proceedings or to appear upon any order paper of this house. In the first place, it constitutes a reflection upon a member of parliament, a most offensive and uncalled-for reflection. In the second place, as Your Honour knows, each house is the custodian of its own rights and privileges and dignities, and if questions are to be asked with respect to any hon. member of the Senate, it is in the Senate chamber and by members of that body that the question should be asked. I feel quite sure that Your Honour's attention could never have been directed to this question, for I am certain that had such been the case you would not have permitted the question to appear.

While on this subject, may I say that looking over many of the questions, it would almost seem that a not inconsiderable number owe their origin to some personal vendetta rather than to a desire to secure information in the public interest. I suppose there is no way to control the questions that may be asked, and certainly I for one would not wish to see the rights of any hon. member of this house restricted or circumscribed in the matter of securing ample information on any question; but, after all, the House of Commons is a body of representative gentlemen, I hope, and there must be something in the nature of amenities between the different sides of the house which it would be well to observe with respect to matters of this kind. If I may make a respectful suggestion, it would be that Your Honour, as the presiding officer of the house, take occasion to have the Clerk of the House confer with Your Honour in regard to questions that seem on the face of them to be of a questionable character, and at least have them withheld until there has been opportunity for some consultation with respect to them. I hope Your Honour will rule immediately that this particular question should not appear upon any order paper of this house, first on the score that it concerns an hon. member of the Senate and secondly because it is of a most offensive character.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with the remarks of the leader of the opposition. What he has said applies perhaps with equal force to both sides of the house. The present instance is not a case of the pot doing more than calling the kettle black. The other day my attention was directed to a question, but the question was on the order paper and any possible injury resulting from its appearance thereon had already ensued. If I so desired there are two questions at least to which I might refer which would be better left off the order paper. The point is, however: Who is to determine how a question is to be kept off the order paper? The hon. member files his question and in the ordinary course of routine the clerk places it on the order paper. As I understand the procedure, the Speaker does not or need not see it until the following day, when he has the opportunity of seeing it in the votes and proceedings which it is his duty to sign.

The particular question in the votes and proceedings to which my right hon. friend opposite has just referred is one that need not be discussed at all, for the simple reason that this house has no jurisdiction in the matter. Had the question appeared on the order paper I would have answered it at once by directing the attention of Mr. Speaker to the fact that this was a matter affecting the Senate and with which the Senate alone could deal. However unless the Speaker had given permission I could not strike the question off the order paper once it had been placed thereon. I wholly agree with the right hon. gentleman that a question which affects another branch of parliament and which clearly is not a proper question to be asked in this house should not appear on the order paper. I think that point is fairly clear. As to the other aspect of the question, namely whether or not good taste and other considerations which should weigh dictated the asking of it, I am afraid that the clerk has no option, that he could not say that the question should not appear on the order paper.

Mr. POWER: The Prime Minister has, though.

Mr. BENNETT: The Prime Minister does not see the questions until after they are placed on the order paper.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He has enough to do.

Mr. POWER: He has a duty as leader of the house.

Mr. BENNETT: The Prime Minister has no duty with respect to the order paper until it is before the house; then he has. I think my hon. friend is not quite fair when he says there is a responsibility upon the Prime Minister before the questions appear on the order paper and the order paper is before him.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Quite right.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to matters which do appear on the order paper he then has a responsibility, and a very great one.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. POWER: I withdraw that remark, Mr. Speaker; I quite agree that the Prime Minister has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BENNETT: My right hon. friend would be the first to say, as I would have said when leader of the opposition, that after all, the order paper is the sheet anchor of the opposition. The Prime Minister has no more to do with making up the order paper than any other hon. member of the house. If he had it would be a very sad day for representative institutions. I put it that way because I felt my remark would be appreciated by my hon. friends opposite. I felt perfectly certain they would realize there are so many questions that offend against the judgment of the Prime Minister that the order paper would be bereft of many indications of the contentions that hon. members sometimes make. At any rate the obligation of the Prime Minister begins the minute the order paper is before the house at the opening of the sitting. He must see to it on behalf of the house, and not on behalf of any one party, that it does not offend against the traditions of the house, the amenities of debate or the decencies of life. I think my hon. friends will not say that in any instance have they seen any indication on my part that the order paper of this house should not be of the character I have indicated. I have not had long experience—only a few months, but at least I have a great regard for the traditions of parliament; sometimes my friends say I have entirely too much regard for them. At any rate I assure the house that as long as I am in power I shall endeavour not to be an unworthy successor of those who have preceded me concerning the regard the house should have through the Prime Minister for maintaining the traditions of the house as reflected in the order paper. I cannot, however, undertake any responsibility antecedent to questions appearing on the order paper; when they do appear I shall endeavour to discharge my duties to the best of my ability.

I wholly agree that the question to which attention has been directed should be stricken from the records of the house. I do not know how it is to be done, once it has been placed thereon, unless the Clerk of the House arbitrarily but properly takes the view that the question concerns another chamber over which this house has no jurisdiction and with respect to which its rights to criticize can arise only by proper parliamentary action and in the manner prescribed by constitutional procedure.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to thank the Prime Minister for his remarks. It is a great satisfaction as well as a pleasure to know that we are in entire agreement on a matter of this kind. I agree that the responsibilities of the Prime Minister should not be added to, but might I mention to him with respect to this matter of questions that there is a procedure which I think the clerk legitimately might adopt, and a procedure which would be appreciated by all hon. members of the house. When a question comes before the clerk which obviously from its nature is certain to occasion comment because of its offensive personal character he might bring it to the attention of one or other of the leaders or of the Speaker so that His Honour might confer with the hon. member asking the question before it is placed in printed form on the records of the house. On one occasion quite recently the clerk directed my attention to a question asked by an hon. member on this side of the house with respect to an hon. member on the opposite side and asked me if I thought the question as asked would serve any useful purpose or if it was a desirable or proper question. I asked him to allow the question to stand a minute or two and I would communicate with the hon. member in whose name the question was to appear. As soon as I spoke to him the matter ended. The question had been placed under his name, having been handed in as many of the questions are. To my mind a practice of that nature would avert many unnecessary offensive and irrelevant questions.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question referred to does not appear in the votes and proceedings of the house as of yesterday as signed by the Speaker. It appears in a list of notices of motions and questions upon which action will be taken at a future date. As hon. members know, the course has been as a matter of routine, to hand the questions to the clerk of the house, and I have known of instances such as that described by the right hon. the leader of the opposition when the nature of a question has caught the attention of the clerk; suggestion having been made to the hon. member offering the question that it was not a proper one, it has thereby been prevented from appearing on the orders of the day. I shall see to it, whatever the procedure may be, that the question referred to, and which I quite agree with the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition should never have appeared on the record, shall not appear on the orders of the day.

IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING REPRESENTATION OF DOMINIONS AT OTTAWA MEETING

On the orders of the day.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question which was yesterday asked in the British House of Commons and in reply to which the Secretary of State for Dominion affairs said the arrangements were in the hands of the Canadian government. Have all the dominions signified that they would attend the coming economic conference in Ottawa, and if so will they be represented by ministers?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I reply subject to my memory being defective because I had no notice of the question. The position, as I recollect at the moment, is that all the countries affected have tentatively agreed to the meeting being held in August this year, but since then events in Australia and New Zealand, as indicated by despatches received from the Prime Ministers of those overseas dominions, indicate the possibility of a general election in each country, and it may be that that will cause some little difficulty. The matter is now under negotiation in view of the information received during the last ten days from Australia and New Zealand.

As to the representation, that matter has not been determined so far as this government is advised by the governments affected, except that the two dominions in the southern seas indicated that each had hoped to have a very strong delegation, and were greatly disturbed by the present political situation. I think that is as fair an answer as I can give at the moment, but as soon as anything definite is settled having regard to the disturbed political situation to which I have referred, I will advise the house.

SUPPLY—GRAIN RATES

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bennett for committee of supply and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Reid.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned last night I was speaking of the grievances of the farmers of British Columbia by reason of the fact that we in that province have to pay twice as much for the hauling of grain to Vancouver as have people living in countries like Spain and Japan. I had come to that part of my address where I was pointing out that it certainly was unfair and unjust that we should be called upon to pay such high rates, and that this discrimination was acting as a barrier to the progress and welfare of the farmers of British Columbia. To-day our producers of eggs in that province are getting less than 10 cents a dozen, which is the lowest price that has been received in 40 years. The situation is becoming so serious that it is practically impossible for the poultry men and others in British Columbia to carry on. We have to bring in our grain from the prairies, and the high domestic rates are tending in large measure to force our farmers off their holdings. My grievance is that not only are these excessively high freight rates bringing about this very serious condition of affairs, but that no action has been taken on the petitions that have been filed on behalf of the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan against a decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners in the matter. This application has been before the board since September of last year, that is, eight months have passed without that appeal having been heard, and the delay is causing British Columbia heavy financial loss.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Was not the appeal heard?

Mr. REID: Not since September of last year; that is my information. Two very important things are required to help stabilize the poultry and dairying industries of British Columbia; greater markets abroad and cheaper grain at home. Cheaper grain would result from reducing our domestic freight rates to substantially the same level as the export freight rates.

If the export freight rates on grain from the prairies to countries like China and Japan, which grain is carried through British Columbia, are fair and equitable, then the rates on domestic grain to British Columbia are certainly excessive. On the other hand, if the rates for export are too low, and the railways are losing money on the traffic, why should British Columbia be called upon to carry the whole burden? Why should the burden be placed on grain and food destined for domestic purposes in that province? The hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) not very long ago said, that due to present traffic and other conditions it was a bad time to discuss the lowering of freight rates. Well, I say to the hon. minister that if the freight rates are not adjusted so far as British Columbia is concerned, the volume of business is certainly going to be less than it is at present; and I believe it is good policy to encourage the volume of business to British Columbia by lowering these rates.

I am now going to move the following amendment, seconded by Mr. Donnelly:

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

Whereas on September 30, 1930, petitions in appeal from a decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners were filed by the representatives of the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, praying for a hearing and decision on the claims therein set forth for a reduction of the domestic freight rates in effect within these provinces, and—

Mr. BENNETT: Did the hon. gentleman give the date of the decision of the board?

Mr. REID: No, I was giving the date of the appeal of the provinces to the privy council.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the date of the decision?

Mr. REID: August 27, 1926—I am giving the date from memory.

Mr. BENNETT: When was the appeal heard by the privy council?

Mr. REID: In 1929. Then a further appeal was made on September 30, 1930. It is the further appeal I am speaking of now.

Whereas the delay in rendering such decision has brought about a condition of confusion and instability which has seriously affected the poultry and dairying industries of British Columbia as well as certain important interests in the other provinces.

This house is of the opinion that an early date should forthwith be fixed for a hearing of the said petition.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last evening I greatly sympathized with the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid); this afternoon my sympathy is not quite so great. Last evening he was speaking for himself and the people of British Columbia; to-day he is endeavouring to speak for a party. Yesterday his amendment was an amendment which he had himself prepared; to-day it is the amendment of the Liberal party—the opposition. If he was greatly interested in this matter, if he was as sincere as he would have us believe, he would not seek to destroy this government for the purpose of asserting his position. If his motion carries, this government resigns; that is his interest in this question. I wonder if he knows just what the facts are, I wonder if he realizes that the judgment he is discussing is the judgment which was delivered by the Board of Railway Commissioners in 1926? In accordance with the promise made in this house by the then Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) the Board of Railway Commissioners, being seized of the facts under the reference, heard evidence and gave judgment. That judgment was delivered in 1926; that is the reason I asked the hon. member for New Westminster as to the date of the judgment. The judgment having been delivered, an appeal was taken to the former government, which he now supports and whose mouthpiece he is in connection with this amendment, in his desire to assist British Columbia poultry growers, which appeal was heard in 1929. This hon. gentleman now asserts that there has been a delay, when the former government which he supported and which is now in opposition heard the appeal in 1929, before the general election. Although they had weeks in which to give judgment, no judgment was given; the Privy Council, as then constituted, vanished after the election of July 28, 1930.

That is the position, Mr. Speaker. Now the hon. gentleman seeks to destroy this administration with an amendment on going into supply, as a vote of want of confidence, because he says that since September, 1930, this government has not had an opportunity to hear this appeal. Because in a time of great economic distress and of great difficulties for governments; because with the Prime Minister and several members of the administration away during the months of October, November and December, this government has not been able to hear that appeal—which could not be heard while parliament was in session—this hon. gentleman asks that this government be destroyed. Is that fairness? Is that his sense of justice? Is that his sense of what you might call elementary fair play? Doubtless there were good reasons which members of the late administration will advance as to why they were not able to hear that appeal from the time the judgment was delivered in 1926 until 1929. I think I can give reasonably sound reasons why this government has not been able to hear that appeal. I may say for the information of the hon. gentleman that twice we had, amongst ourselves, tentatively concluded that we might be able to hear the appeal on a given date, but the pressure of other matters made that impossible. With the burden of government which is being carried at this moment; with falling railway revenues; with conditions as they are, we are now told that because between September, 1930, and to-day, with the session of parliament beginning on March 12, and with the Imperial conference and all the problems with which this government has to deal before us, this appeal was not heard, the house is of the opinion that an early date should be forthwith fixed for the hearing of the petition. That would have been quite all right, but if the amendment passes this government goes out.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That would be a calamity.

Mr. BENNETT: There are many Canadians who would think so, and I may say there are many Canadians who formerly supported the government of the right hon. gentleman who would think so also. Their numbers are increasing every day, for when they hear members of a former administration going to and fro saying they are so grateful that they have not these responsibilities, and how glad they are that they have not to carry this load, the people of the country know perfectly well their inability to carry it. If the people had not known that hon. gentlemen opposite might have been in power still.

That is the position with respect to the matter. I said last evening I had some sympathy with the hon. gentleman. Thirty years ago the problem which he has discussed in this house was a problem to which I gave some little attention. I always found it difficult to understand, as a new settler in western Canada, why it cost more money to bring freight to Calgary than to Vancouver, from eastern Canada. I always found it difficult to understand just on what basis the rate structure of the country was fixed, but I took the trouble to investigate the matter. The classic case in this connection is the Spokane case, which ultimately went to the supreme court of the United States. It is a very interesting study in the whole question of freight rate structures and of terminal rates, as distinguished from intervening local rates on freight. The position is this, that by universal practice in railway rate structures you have first a cheaper through rate to terminals than you have to intervening points on a mileage basis, and although railway legislation of most countries provides that there should be no discrimination, nevertheless the application of the general rate per mile on the distance covered by the cars laden with the freight is held not to be applicable where you have water competition at a terminal point.

Mr. NEILL: And water competition only.

Mr. BENNETT: Permit me to amplify it in my own way. I am sure I am indebted to my hon. friend, but I will have to proceed in my own way. Water competition is the factor that determines that terminal rate. So far have the courts gone in upholding that principle that it was held that freight rates to St. Louis were to some extent regulated in the United States by water carriage to points on the Pacific slope. Vancouver is a harbour, and is situated on the ocean. Therefore the water rate factor enters into the question of the Vancouver terminal rate, altogether apart from the factor of what you might call terminal rates. That is the determining factor in reality; the water rate and all that is involved in it really determines the terminal rate in this case.

That is the first point. The next point is this: There has grown up in the commercial world the application of the principle of export trade being carried on a free trade basis. I suppose hon. members who have followed the tariff with care will realize that from time to time items are introduced that permit of drawbacks with respect to commodities produced in the country for export. That is what is called the application of the free trade rule in export trade, so that all countries are on a parity with respect to export trade. Germany carried that principle to a very great length during the years immediately preceding the war. In England the same principle prevails with respect to tariff items affecting goods that were destined for export. In the United States of course it has been applied during all these years, as it is unnecessary for me to say to this house, and we have applied it in this country as well. So you have these two factors which determine the question of the rate charged by railways for the transportation of freights of various classifications between points in Canada to Vancouver. There are other factors which are of minor consideration, which I will not mention at the moment, because I would be only endeavouring to discuss in this house a matter which I think should be discussed before the tribunal created for that purpose.

Those principles were recognized in the judgments of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and may I point out to my hon. friend that in his zealous and enthusiastic support of his proposition perhaps he has overlooked the fact that this parliament is hardly the tribunal to deal with this matter. Yesterday he was asking parliament, or the government, having a majority in parliament, forthwith to direct the railways to carry freight at a price named, that is, without giving the rate but at what might be called the export rate or the through bill of lading rate for export. To-day he does not do that; he only asks that there shall be further consideration by the privy council. Now let us analyse what is the position. This parliament has created a court of record known as the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. This is not a voluntary tribunal nor an association; it is a court of record, provided by statute in the exercise of our powers over matters of that kind. That is a court which has been established in the same way as the Supreme Court of Canada is established, or the exchequer court. It is presided over by a chief commissioner, with associate judges or commissioners, just as the Supreme Court of Canada has a chief justice and associate judges. That court has complete control and authority over all questions relating to the operation of railways, including the charges to be made for the handling of traffic. The word "traffic" of course is defined as meaning both the carriage of passengers and of inanimate freight. That tribunal having been created, we have endeavoured to the best of our ability to ensure it from interference by parliament. Why? Because parliament is composed of partisans. Whether we like it or not, we are all partisans and it is extremely difficult for any of us—

An hon. MEMBER: Not very much.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, it is so pleasing to hear that there are non-partisans on the other side. They will not long remain so. May I point out, however, that it is because we are partisans that the very earnest endeavour has been made to ensure that we shall not sit as judges. The very problems to which my hon. friend has directed attention are problems for judicial determination; and the judicial determination of these problems depends first of all upon the evidence submitted, and, secondly, upon a due and proper appreciation of the relation of that evidence to the relief sought. You seek relief; the evidence is adduced, and the relation of that evidence to the relief sought must determine the judgment given by the board. The board, or the court—because it is a court—gives judgment. That judgment does not support the views which have been put forward by those who are interested—my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Reid) for example. There is a right of appeal to the governor in council—that is to say, a right of appeal to the partisans. There are those who think that this right of appeal should not exist. The reason it exists is probably that it is a remnant of the old power which, before the court was created, rested entirely in the governor in council. The administration of railway matters, freight tariffs and everything connected therewith, was all in the hands of the governor in council, the partisan tribunal. Now, the privy council is a court in this instance, and to that court an appeal was made. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Justice sat, if my memory serves me, in that court when it heard the appeal. The appeal was heard by the late government. It was heard in its entirety, and that council reserved judgment.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I say to my right hon. friend that I heard only part of the appeal. The first argument proceeded while I was away at the Dominions conference on legislation in London. I heard only a small part of it.

Mr. BENNETT: The ex-Minister of Justice reminds me that he did not sit through the whole argument, which lasted a considerable time—there were adjournments. One of the members of this house, before he became a member, was present at that argument, and counsel engaged were eminent members of our profession. What happened? Judgment was reserved. But in the meantime an election was held and the court vanished. That means a new hearing, because while the personnel of the court is gone, the appeal still exists. It means, I say, a complete new hearing, for it cannot be taken up where it was left off.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The testimony is there.

Mr. BENNETT: I am speaking about the appeal, and I say that it means a reopening of the matter in its entirety before council.

I just put it again to this house, and I put it to my hon. friend: Does he not think that the amendment he has proposed has served its purpose and should be withdrawn? Does he think it is fair to any body of men—suppose he were one of them—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver). Will the Prime Minister give us the assurance that, so far as he is concerned, he will expedite the proposed hearing as much as possible after the close of the session.

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that; I think it is a highly proper question and, indeed, it was not necessary to ask it. On two occasions the government was of the opinion that it should fix a future date on which the matter could be heard; but considerations of moment came up that made it impossible to fix a date. It is the intention of the government, however, to hear that appeal just as early as it is possible to do so, consistently with the duties of the administration while parliament is in session. We cannot hear it while parliament is in session. It is true we heard an appeal the other day. Why? Because the Board of Railway Commissioners was appealed to on a question which affected the interests of a city with respect to level crossings in certain areas. That matter had been taken to the Supreme Court of Canada, who had decided that there was no question of law to be considered, whereupon appeal was made to the privy council. They asked that the matter might be remitted back to the board with a view to having that body hear the evidence on a point with respect to which they said they had not been afforded the opportunity which they would have liked. The privy council limited their right to that one particular. It was admitted by counsel that there was no question of law involved, but it was felt there was a question respecting the equitable administration of the act. An opportunity was therefore given to have the matter considered.

I may say to the house that this government will not—unless it is a case in which a palpable error has been made that requires only an insignificant exercise of power—undertake to deal with these highly technical matters. I do not regard the Privy Council, either as at present constituted or as it has been in the past, as fitted by training to determine these questions. There is a body of men appointed for that purpose, trained men who have their experts to assist them. And if it is clear or reasonable from the appeal—one cannot anticipate the judgment—that the matter should be reconsidered, that, of course, will be done. It requires no direction or order of the house to bring that about. But I should be unfair to the government and to the country if I were to go further than to say that the matter is one of very considerable importance to the Dominion. And it is of more than considerable importance to those directly affected. My hon. friend must always bear in mind, however, as I learned so long ago myself, that it is easy to put one side of a case without sometimes thinking of the other side. I am sure he will learn, as most of us have done, that before the tribunal equal opportunity is afforded all, and the testimony is sifted with a view to determining the action to be taken in the light of the facts which are elicited from witnesses under oath, as occasion may necessitate. Thereupon judgment is given, based upon a due and proper appreciation of the facts and their implications. And this will be done with respect to the matters to which the hon. gentleman has referred.

I assure this chamber—it is a commonplace—that no government desires that there should be occasioned, in the transportation of commodities, delays greater than the Canadian people should bear. On the other hand, no government desires that this service rendered by the transportation companies should be provided at a loss. Now, between these two principles there must be a medium, and that medium determines the freight rate, that is to say, a fair compensation for the service rendered. It is difficult sometimes to arrive at that rate. I wonder whether hon. members realize just what the effects of modern conditions have been upon the revenues of transportation companies, of buses, and of mechanical transportation of all kinds. When later on the house has to consider the relation of these facts to our own properties, it will have perhaps a clearer appreciation of all that is involved in the work of preparing, understanding, appreciating, sifting and analyzing testimony to determine properly the problem to which the attention of the house has been directed.

Mr. EULER: Merely with a view to expediting the matter, would it be possible for the present privy council to accept in a measure the evidence and arguments which were presented to the former privy council? I realize that further evidence might be desirable because of changing conditions, but would it not be possible for the present privy council to take advantage of the work that has already been done?

Mr. BENNETT: I have not any doubt that any privy council that hears this must take advantage of the work that has been done, but whether or not, in the light of present-day conditions, the matter could be then decided without further reference to testimony, and arguments or representations of council, I cannot antecedently determine.

Mr. EULER: I realize there are changed conditions.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. It is now five years since the judgment of the board.

Mr. EULER: I am referring to the hearing before the privy council in 1929.

Mr. BENNETT: Clearly the answer to that is in the negative. The personnel having disappeared, the body continuing, the new personnel must hear the arguments unless they are submitted in writing.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): A different court and probably different advocates.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver Centre will recall the decision of the English courts that the death of a judge necessitates a trial de novo. There may be an agreement between the parties affected as to a method to pursue whereby part of the representations previously made might be considered.

Mr. EULER: It is all a matter of record.

Mr. ILSLEY: I just want to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to an opinion which was given by the former deputy minister of justice, Mr. Newcombe, to the effect that in these appeals the privy council exercises administrative rather than judicial functions. I happened to come across it at page 124 of Beauchesne, and I thought it was pertinent to the question of my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: I am much obliged to the hon. member for Hants-Kings. I am well aware that the distinction between administrative and judicial with respect to appeals to the privy council from the Board of Railway Commissioners or other bodies, is not very clearly defined. There is a distinction, perhaps philosophic, but nevertheless the privy council are quasi-judicial if they are wholly administrative, and if they are administrative they are partly judicial. They could merely as a matter of administration decide to refer a matter back for rehearing; but if they undertake to adjudicate upon the merits of the application, their position would be judicial. That is the distinction between the judicial and the administrative function. If merely as a matter of administration they say: We will send this back for further hearing and evidence, that is clearly an administrative power. If on the other hand, they say: Call your witnesses; we will hear this case de novo, or hear further testimony in addition to the written record, as the council might if they so desired, then clearly, before they arrived at a judgment, their function would be judicial.

Mr. VENIOT: Would that be about the practice in an appeal of that kind?

Mr. BENNETT: It is competent under modern practice to receive additional evidence in the Court of Appeals. Even in the House of Lords itself testimony is sometimes given before the final hearing. One of the most noteworthy cases in that regard is one that originated with respect to a Nova Scotia ship. That however, is not a matter of importance.

I have endeavoured to put the case before the house as fairly as possible. I am not in any sense passing upon the merits of the controversy; that is not my business at the moment. All I know about it would be merely what I read in the newspapers, without having any opportunity to familiarize myself with it, and if I were familiar with it, I am speaking only in the absence of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) who is in Quebec to-day. If I did familiarize myself with it, I would then be endeavouring to pass judgment while one party to the proceedings had not been heard. By the terms of his motion my hon. friend is asking one party, the government, to vote that it is advisable that an early date should forthwith be fixed for a hearing, and knowing that we have a majority and have no intention of giving up office at present, he must realize we shall have to vote that it is not desirable so to do. Therefore this means that he does not want the appeal to be early heard.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the central portion of the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). He commenced his lecture on an unfortunate note in seeking to impute motives to my good friend the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), who has brought this important question to the attention of parliament. On the contrary I submit that the hon. member for New Westminster has performed a public service to his own constituency, to his own province of British Columbia and to the Dominion of Canada by bringing this important question at this time to the attention of parliament. The Prime Minister in the course of his remarks said that parliament is not the tribunal to which this matter should be directed. I suggest to him that the Privy Council of Canada is the court of last resort so far as the people of Canada are concerned in all matters affecting freight rates, and the only opportunity we have to get the privy council to take action in these matters is to bring them to the notice of the privy council who sit opposite to us as ministers of the crown.

He said also that the late administration was somewhat dilatory in that it heard the appeal in 1929 and hand not rendered judgment up to the time it went to the country in July, 1930. I would suggest to him in that regard that we who are bringing this matter to the attention of the house are not in the slightest degree concerned with the alleged dilatoriness or slackness of the former administration. We are here; our duty, our purpose is to see that the present administration takes action immediately or as soon as possible in regard to a final hearing and determination in respect to this matter and all other matters arising out of the circumstances to which reference has been made. Since the hearing in 1929 before the then privy council, the late administration, economic conditions in the Fraser valley have undergone a tremendously marked change, and I want to remind the right hon. gentleman and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), who knows the situation as well as I do, that to-day the removal of this differential between the export rate and the domestic rate is a matter of life and death to the poultry raisers in the Fraser valley, British Columbia. The situation is this, that you can export to-day to Kobe, Japan, or portions of China, our cheap grain, so that hens may be raised there and their eggs imported to undersell our eggs in the United Kingdom. The grain produced by the prairie provinces is permitted, by the present iniquitous structure of freight rates, to be sent to oriental countries, giving them an entry into a $50,000,000 market so far as the egg importation business into the United Kingdom is concerned. This is done under the aegis and commendation of an administration that was ushered into office last July after preaching about the benefits of the home market.

The Prime Minister seemed to be very much perturbed because my hon. friend, in carrying out his duty, moved an amendment which the Prime Minister appeared to think imperilled the life of this precious administration. He knows full well, sitting in the seats of the mighty across the floor, that no amendment moved from this side of the house can at the present time endanger the life of that administration which he leads so splendidly. But we desire to bring this matter to the attention of the house in the only manner at our disposal, and so far as I am concerned, having received the promise of the Prime Minister that this matter, which is a question of life and death to the poultry raisers of British Columbia, will be brought to the attention of the government for hearing and decision as early as possible after the session, I am satisfied to have my colleague withdraw the amendment that has so terribly perturbed my right hon. friend at this time.

The difference between the 20-cent rate and the 41½-cent rate cannot be defended.

We on this side of the house appreciate equally with my right hon. friend the Prime Minister the difficulties confronting our two great railway transportation systems at the present time. We know they are faced with falling revenues and a time of depression, a depression that is accentuated by the hopeless policies of the administration opposite. But while we appreciate the difficulties confronting our two great railway transportation systems, we are also acutely aware of the difficulties of the men who are struggling to live from one year's end to the other in the Fraser valley and other portions of British Columbia, and in other parts of the Dominion as well. There must be a middle course. Justice to the railways, yes; but justice to our people in British Columbia also.

In conclusion, while I appreciate the constructive portion of the address of the right hon. Prime Minister I deprecate very much his opening and closing remarks. I thank him for the promise of an early hearing of the freight rate situation, and I am sure that with this promise my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Reid) will feel that he has achieved his purpose and will be prepared to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): While possessing neither the rugged persistence of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) nor the facile eloquence of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) I should like to say a few words on this motion, and I propose to adhere rigidly to the amendment because I wish to say something on the main motion after this is disposed of. Although he seldom agrees with me, I agree with the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) to some extent in his criticism of the amendment. My conception of an appropriate amendment would have been one somewhat similar to that he referred to, which would have been of a general character and would not have hesitated to allocate the blame for the delay equally between the past government and the present one.

On the other hand, the Prime Minister makes a great point of this being a motion of want of confidence. He is well aware that no matter in how mild terms the amendment had been framed, it would have been to all intents and purposes, under our rules, a motion of want of confidence.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so; that is what I said.

Mr. NEILL: Then it mattered very little whether the hon. member made it a straight party question calling for a straight party vote, or one dealing with the issue at large. The Prime Minister is also aware that owing to his assured majority it is only a mere matter of detail whether or not this is a motion of want of confidence. He is also aware that there is practically no other way of bringing a matter of this kind before parliament. There is probably many a man here who regrets that equally with myself, not only with respect to this question but other questions.

Mr. BENNETT: There is ample opportunity for discussion in committee of supply—on the estimates of the railway board, for instance.

Mr. NEILL: It makes very little difference whether we discuss it on going into committee on the railway estimates or on the agriculture estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: I mean that there is ample opportunity when the house is in committee.

Mr. NEILL: That is so, of course, according to the precise rule, but we all know that if we want to get any serious attention to a matter we have to bring it up on a motion for going into supply, not on some particular item of the estimates when the discussion is strictly confined by the chairman, and properly so, to the item before the committee. A discussion in committee of supply has not the same effect and does not give you the same scope. To some extent I regret that this is a motion of want of confidence, but on the other hand I can recall that my hon. friends opposite made no complaint when I voted against the late government on a similar amendment a couple of years ago, and for the same reason, that I saw no other way of emphasizing the importance of the matter than by pushing it to a conclusion on a vote of want of confidence.

The question before us is an old one—I have under my hand a record of six occasions on which I have brought it up in the house—beginning with 1923 and the last occasion being ten days ago. I do not propose to inflict upon the house a rehash of my remarks on those occasions, but I should like to quote a greater authority perhaps than myself. Bulletin No. 80 published by McGill university, dealing with the hog export trade says:

> There is one modification in connection with the present discussion which we unhesitatingly endorse. And it is this: That freight rates on grain and feed for domestic consumption should be as favourable as those on grain and feed for export.
> A more favourable rate on export than on domestic grain amounts to a bonus on exports to that extent.

I might also mention the question of mill feeds, bran and shorts, which I hope the Minister of Agriculture will take into his consideration. Our laws compel bran and shorts to be sold pure in Canada, but not outside Canada. The consequence is that adulterated shorts, with the low export rate, can be landed in Denmark at much lower rates than the pure shorts can be delivered in British Columbia, with the result that Denmark can compete with us in the bacon trade. The law should be altered so that adulterated shorts should not be allowed to be sold in either the domestic or export trade.

On a previous occasion, in 1928, I think, I dealt with this matter, and I referred to what I called the desperate condition of the poultry industry in British Columbia; I did not think it could possibly be any worse than it was then. I cited the case of one man with five thousand birds, who said:

> Last month I shipped over 10,000 eggs, and I only received over the cost of the month's feed bill $14.20, for a month's work every day, including Sundays, 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

On the same occasion I made allusion to the fact that the products of the hen alone—not the poultry—brought in a gross revenue per year of something like $80,000,000. Hon. gentlemen will hardly credit that. Conditions have grown, I am sorry to say, much worse. I wish to quote a couple of short extracts from letters that I have received recently. One is from a gentleman who adheres strongly to the party in office, so this cannot be called an ex parte statement. He is a practical farmer, with 500 birds laying well, with 76 per cent extras, that is, high-class eggs. Here is his record for the last four months from January to April. His feed bill, bought at best prices through a cooperative, for January was $80.10, and what did he get from the egg pool that month? He got $6.20 over his feed bill. In February he got 25 cents over his feed bill. In March he went behind $14.60. In April things looked up and he made a gross profit of $3.75. His total feed bill for the four months was $346.50, and he took in $342.10, so he only lost $4.40 on his four months' operations, and of course, all his work, seven days a week, as well as rent, depreciation, insurance, upkeep of buildings and all the other expenses. Then that man is expected to go to church on Sunday and sing a hymn, one line of which goes like this: "Peace on earth, good will towards men."

Mr. BENNETT: What would have happened had we not increased the duty on eggs nine cents a dozen last fall? He would have lost his farm.

Mr. HANBURY: He has lost it now, or it is on the way.

Mr. NEILL: He is living on his capital.

Mr. SPENCE: He is not the only one.

Mr. NEILL: I would like you to take notice, Mr. Speaker, that the expression that this man is living on his capital has caused some amusement among hon. members on the opposite side of the house. If I may be permitted I shall quote a letter from another man. It is as follows:

> Lower freight rates are the only hope I can see for the industry in this province and this includes the dairymen and swine breeders as well. If you need any figures on the poultry production costs, or the cost of producing eggs I would be glad to supply you. I enclose some quotations on feed showing how the present freight rates are as great as the cost of feed f.o.b. Edmonton.

Enclosed are some price lists from a wholesale house in Edmonton. It shows that the ordinary stuff needed for chickens, Nos. 4 and 5 wheat, runs from $12.50 down to $9 for stuff which would be suitable for pig feed. The freight rate for that material is $10.80 per ton. In some cases the freight rate is actually more than the price of the feed. In addition to that $4 has to be allowed for sacking and grinding. That makes a total of $14.80, or about $3 a ton more than the original cost of the grain. No wonder the hon. members from the prairies are also kicking about the prices to them.

There is another aspect to which I wish to direct the attention of hon. members which I do not think has been mentioned before in this debate. On a previous occasion when I spoke in the house I set out the difference between the export and domestic freight rates; I figured the difference to be $3.80 a ton. Previous to that it had been $3.20 and now it is $4.10. For the sake of argument let us assume that it is right that the export rate should be higher than the domestic rate. In my opinion that is not right. Let us suppose that that would be a proper condition, and let us consider that since the year 1922 there have been two reductions in the export rate and no reduction in the domestic rate so that at the present time the spread is nearly double what it was previously. If the first spread could be justified certainly the last two could not be. At this time I wish to quote from the Province, a well known paper in the west.

> Meanwhile, feeders, instead of using surplus wheat and barley from the Canadian prairies in their barns, are using Argentina or American corn or imported prepared feeds of one sort or another. If the government of Canada desires to aid the prairie farmer in his distress—and there appears to be no doubt it does—

An hon. MEMBER: Who says that?

Mr. NEILL: The Province. The quotation continues:

—it can aid him by making it possible for him to find a home market for that part of his crop which he cannot send abroad.

Of course it will help equally the consumer in British Columbia and in the eastern provinces as well. I fully agree with the remarks of the Prime Minister concerning the difficulty of a political partisan body—because that is what the Privy Council of Canada is—dealing with a matter of this kind. However that is at present the only means of redress we have. I suggest that the matter should be referred not to the privy council but to the supreme court, which is not a partisan body and which has more time, opportunity, facilities and experience in weighing evidence properly in a matter of that kind than has the privy council. The supreme court could not be accused of being partisan in its views. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I am wrong in saying so, but I think if these men would take the law into their own hands and break it, the matter would be brought more rapidly to a head than by any other means. If five hundred of the poultry men in the vicinity of my friend from New Westminster, under the guidance of their local cooperative association, were to buy a carload of feed from the prairies, and when it arrived if they were to pay the agent at the little station the export rate and then open the car and each take a sack away from the car and decline to pay any more for it,—well they could not all be put in gaol.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would direct my hon. friend's attention to the fact that they are not permitted to break the seal or to open a car until they have paid the freight rates.

Mr. NEILL: I suggest that they take the law into their own hands and break the seal after they have paid what they think would be a proper rate. Such action would bring the matter to a head and to the attention of the various courts of Canada. Five hundred men could not readily be put in gaol, and as I say their action would bring the matter to an immediate head. Such action would bring the matter before the public and receive its sympathy and attention. If such action were not considered practicable I would advise the cooperative association to sue the railway company for the return of moneys. Such action could ultimately reach the Supreme Court of Canada. I think if any groups of fair size of any political party were determined to block the estimates to be considered in the house they would receive some satisfaction. However, at this time four or five men could not so block the estimates, because a few years ago, through the adoption of the forty-minute rule, we abandoned our right of free speech and sold our birthright for a mess of pottage. May I add that we did not get the pottage. At that time four or five determined men could have got some action. A man who would take such an attitude might be termed a bolshevik; it would be said that his action was absurd. Yet minorities have some rights under our laws. I wonder what advance would have been made on the Irish question in the old country if Irish members had not resorted to methods of obstruction. We would now be spending half our time listening to divorce bills had it not been for the action of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). At the time his action may have been deemed a nuisance—it was a nuisance—but he got results. At last, as in the case of the importunate widow, we said, "Oh, fix the thing, for the sake of getting rid of it." That is the way the law was established. If a comparatively small number of men in this house said: "We are not going to vote money to carry on the business of Canada until we see more immediate prospect of action," they would get it. We do not expect the government to do the thing in a day. Before a promise of definite action however there should be no money voted. It would be wonderful to see how such a group of men would gain strength. Not only the little party itself but other people who are not in the party would say, "What is the trouble?" Eventually they would say, "It is right; why do you not deal with it?" Public sentiment would be aroused. The public would say, "These people are right; why do you not give them justice?"

I would like to mention one other point. Two or three hon. members from the prairies have been talking about two or three million dollars about which they are asking the government. They want to know whether or not the government has this money up its sleeve. Apparently the money was received from the sale of wheat in the years 1919 and 1920. There seems to be some doubt about it. They are talking about it, and they want it. Perhaps some day the British Columbia farmers will say, "We want a repayment of the money which has been taken from us illegally since this rate has been put into effect. On two occasions the export rate was lowered, but the domestic rate has not been lowered at all." We will be coming forward asking for a long overlooked redress. I am not referring especially to the present government. As I said the last time I spoke on it, the late government stalled on this question and the present government are stalling on it. That is the exact situation. Why do they do it? Is it because they do not wish to antagonize the railway interests, or what is it? I ask the question and leave it to anyone who can to answer it.

Most of the propositions which are brought forward in this house asking for reform or for the promulgation of certain policies are made with the idea and the contention that they will produce improved conditions throughout certain parts of the country. The matter at present under discussion however may be viewed from two angles. First, it is a matter of simple, common barefaced justice, and it has the further angle or inducement that it would prevent a whole industry from being wiped out. Hon. members can go along the roads through parts of British Columbia and see house after house standing empty. This man used to grow chickens; this man tried to make a living raising pigs, but he could not compete with Denmark, and so on. The acceptance of this amendment would prevent the wiping out of these industries. As I say it is a matter of equal justice to all. There seem to be double-barrelled reasons why the government should take action immediately. I would have liked to see the Prime Minister a little more emphatic in his decision that at an early date he would settle the matter. His suggestion seemed to be more in the way of sending the matter back to the railway board. However the railway board has already dealt fully with the matter and turned it down. If we could get a more emphatic assurance from the government I would be heartily in accord with the suggestion that the amendment be withdrawn.

Mr. HARRY J. BARBER (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, representing a district perhaps more affected than any other in the province of British Columbia by the high domestic freight rates now prevailing, to which reference has been made this afternoon, I cannot let the opportunity pass without making a few remarks.

I agree with the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) that up to the close of the house last night I was very much in sympathy with the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), but when to-day he presented his amendment and injected party politics into the case I found myself unable to vote for the amendment. I repeat, I was quite in sympathy with the hon. gentleman yesterday for he put up a good case and covered the ground thoroughly. He said that we have been somewhat negligent in bringing this matter to the notice of the House of Commons in years gone by. I would remind him that it has been brought forward every session for the last five years to my knowledge.

Mr. NEILL: Hear, hear.

Mr. BARBER: In this connection I give great credit to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). He is in a little different position from the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) because he has taken an independent stand. It was amusing to hear the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) rise in his place and with great indignation condemn the government for the serious condition of these industries in British Columbia. We had an election there last summer just the same as you had down here, and on that occasion hon. members should have heard the hon. member and others during the course of the campaign. To assist them they had the present right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). When he arrived in British Columbia his political friends and advisers told him, "Now, you will have to make some announcement with regard to the freight rates question. The discriminatory character of the domestic freight rates is a very important issue here, and the election or defeat of a number of your supporters in this province will depend upon your announcement." The right hon. gentleman appeared in my constituency and also in other parts of the Fraser valley and made an announcement. I want the house to bear in mind that when he did so he was speaking as a member of the privy council before whom the question of these domestic rates was then sub judice. On a platform in the city of Chilliwack he said in effect: "This question of freight rates, I want to tell you ladies and gentlemen, we are working up to a successful decision, a decision that will be favourable to you. Now, I cannot go any further than that."

An hon. MEMBER: Was that after the hearing?

Mr. BARBER: A decision had not been given. It has not been given yet.

An hon. MEMBER: It was after the argument.

Mr. BARBER: Yes, after the argument had been heard. On that platform in Chilliwack he spoke along these lines: "Now, send down this gentleman"—my opponent; I am going to say something about him later—"send him down and I am sure we can fix this matter up satisfactorily to you people." Mr. Speaker, please bear in mind that this was not the first time that the right hon. gentleman had made that statement. He came out to the coast in 1925 and visited Vancouver. This question of discriminatory domestic freight rates was then an issue; it has always been an issue in British Columbia. It is a very important matter to us and it was brought to his attention. In 1925 he said in effect: "The government that I represent fully realizes the seriousness of this condition, and we will proceed at once to fix it up." He came back in 1926 and again referred to the freight rates to this effect: "This is, we know, a very serious problem and one that must be adjusted immediately, and I promise you people that the Liberal party will get busy immediately after the election and will adjust this to the satisfaction of you people." But in spite of those promises in 1925 and 1926 nothing was done, and yet he comes back in 1930 with the same old story. Now, my friend from New Westminster brings down an amendment which involves a vote of want of confidence in a government that has not been in power more than nine months. Well, even if the government was a Liberal government, and I was in opposition, I do not think I would feel justified in supporting such a want of confidence motion. I do not believe that any member on this side of the house would do so. But I think the hon. member for New Westminster, being a fair-minded man, would not hesitate to vote want of confidence in the preceding government before whom this question was under consideration for nine years. During all that time they did nothing, they made not one cent reduction in the domestic freight rates. What happened? The hon. member for Vancouver Centre mentioned the name of the man who ran against me. I may say—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I did not.

Mr. BARBER: Well, he called him by his first name.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No, I did not.

Mr. BARBER: Then I take it back. Perhaps it was the member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury). The hon. member for Vancouver Centre, as the house is aware, for a short time occupied a position in the government of British Columbia. When this freight rates question was before the Board of Railway Commissioners, and before the privy council, it was brought to the attention of the Liberal government then in power at Ottawa that we had a Liberal government in power at Victoria under the leadership of the Hon. John Oliver—a particular friend, I believe, of the hon. member for New Westminster. What happened? They employed a legal gentleman to come down to Ottawa and present the case not only to the railway commission but to the privy council. Of course, the Liberal government in British Columbia thought that a Liberal lawyer would appeal to the right hon. gentleman who then occupied the position of Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). The provincial government of which my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre was a member, employed this lawyer.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is not correct.

Mr. BARBER: You were later.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is correct.

Mr. BARBER: I believe the hon. member was never reelected after appointment to the position.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I was always elected.

Mr. VENIOT: Stick to the facts.

Mr. BARBER: That is a fact. That Liberal lawyer came to my riding and distributed copies of a newspaper from one end of the constituency to the other with the statement "I have worked for you for years and years for nothing; therefore I expect you will send me down as your representative." Immediately I got in touch with Victoria and received a copy of his account and found that the former Liberal government of the province had paid him $168,000 for his services extending over a period of less than six years.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): May I remark that I hope my hon. friend does not give the impression that he is referring to me.

Mr. BARBER: No, no, I am referring to your party in Victoria and to your party here as having some bearing on the case. The point I am making is that for nine years while we had the Liberal party in power here and the Liberal party in power in British Columbia, and a well-paid Liberal lawyer was sent to Ottawa to appear before the privy council, not one cent reduction was made in the domestic freight rates that bear so heavily on British Columbia. Yet notwithstanding that long delay, this hon. gentleman from New Westminster now moves an amendment involving a vote of want of confidence in this government that has been in office only nine months, and his reason for moving the amendment is that in nine months—not nine years—the present government should have adjusted the matter I think this is unfair. As to the problem facing us, I agree with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) and with the case as presented by the hon. member for New Westminster that the matter is serious, but I feel sure from the statement of the Prime Minister to-day and from statements which have been made by the Minister of Agriculture that this matter will receive serious consideration at the hands of the government. I believe they understand the conditions which exist in our province and the problems facing us, and I am sure they will make every effort to solve it. As I said before, if this resolution had been left as it was placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) and brought in as it should have been brought in, I should have been only too glad to second the motion, but we find again the same old game, the injecting of politics into this question. That has been done by a few Liberals in British Columbia in every election, and this question made a political football. I will say, however, that the producers, the dairymen, the poultrymen and the boards of trade of that province do not want this question thrown into the political arena. I think as citizens of that province, as business men, farmers and poultrymen we are all of one opinion.

Mr. REID: Would the hon. member be in favour of getting a favourable decision right now, in view of the conditions which exist at present?

Mr. BARBER: I am in favour of the privy council giving a decision at the earliest possible moment; I do not know whether that decision will be favourable or unfavourable. I know it took the government supported by my hon. friend a long time to deal with the question; it went over for a year, and there was no decision. It was still under consideration when the election was held.

In conclusion let me repeat that I would have supported the original motion, for the purpose of educating some of the hon, members of this house and some of the people in eastern Canada in one of the many problems faced by the people of British Columbia. In that province we have problems which are perhaps peculiar to us, and this is one of them. I think that would have been the proper way to bring up this matter, instead of using it as a weapon with which to attempt to destroy a government which has been in power only nine months, and which has not had time to consider the matter.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): I do not desire to take up much of the time of the house on this matter, and perhaps I would not have spoken at all had it not been that this matter affects the maritime provinces just as much as it affects the province of British Columbia. The domestic freight rate from west to east, from Winnipeg to the maritime provinces, is such that we in that section of the Dominion cannot take advantage of the opportunity to purchase wheat in order to develop the flour milling industry in the maritime provinces. If British Columbia has proper and reasonable grounds on which to ask for a lowering of the domestic rate in comparison with the export rate, we in the maritime provinces feel that we have an equal claim.

I should like to ask the government, in considering this matter, not to consider the application of British Columbia alone but to consider domestic rates generally throughout the Dominion of Canada. Now, when the price of wheat is so low, if we in the maritimes could take advantage of reduced domestic rates in order to purchase that wheat in large quantities, we would have established in the province of New Brunswick no less than two large flour mills to-day. I may say for the information of the house that in 1896 the provincial government of the day subsidized improved roller process mills for the manufacture of flour, intending thereby to encourage the growing of wheat in the province of New Brunswick. Quite a number of mills were established under that subsidy, but it was discovered that we could not raise wheat, owing to our climatic conditions, in sufficient quantities to warrant these subsidies being maintained. Lately a movement has been started in the maritime provinces for the establishment of one or two large flour mills in the city of St. John, but it has been found that the domestic rate on wheat from Winnipeg to the maritimes is so high that this wheat cannot be brought from the west. If a reasonable domestic rate could be given, the western farmers would find in the maritimes an increased market for their wheat and for their coarse grains as well. In that way both the western and the eastern provinces would benefit, and it is for this reason I am interested in the question now before the house, in the hope that the government may take our case into consideration. I know that without an appeal from the maritime provinces against a decision of the railway commission the privy council cannot deal directly with the maritimes, but in dealing with this whole question of domestic rates from Winnipeg to the coast I hope at the same time the privy council will direct the railway commission to deal with domestic rates from west to east, from Winnipeg to St. John and Halifax.

While I am on this question, there appears to be a misunderstanding as to the date on which the appeal was heard by the privy council. The hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) stated that this matter has been standing for nine years, and that the Liberal government was dilatory in dealing with the matter. The decision of the railway commission was given in 1926. The appeal from that decision to the privy council was made in 1929.

Mr. STEVENS: Was it not the hearing that was held in 1929? I think the appeal was lodged some time prior to that.

Mr. VENIOT: The hearing was held in 1929. The appeal may have been lodged some time previous to that, but if hon. gentlemen will look up the records they will find that while one province was ready to proceed, another province was not ready, and in order to bring them together a date was fixed some time in September or October, 1929. Even that hearing was postponed at the request of some of the provinces, and the hearing did not actually take place until late in January, 1930. Parliament met on February 7, 1930, and during that session the former government had no time to deal with the appeal, so that no decision was given. If the reason, therefore, given by the right hon. Prime Minister this afternoon for the inaction of the present government since September is good, that reason has equal force in regard to the action of the former government. The former government did not hear the last presentation on the appeal until late in January, 1930, and it was not their fault. They were not to blame.

In conclusion, I should like to say a word with respect to this want of confidence motion. It was surprising to me that the Prime Minister should find fault with any one on this side of the house for moving a motion that might have the effect of a want of confidence in the government of the day. The hon. member who has moved the amendment or motion, as the case may be, is a new member of the house. He is not supposed to know, perhaps as fully as old members of the house do, what the effect of such a motion might be. Yet in face of that, instead of being generous to the member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), the Prime Minister, to use a rather common expression, jumped down his throat. He reprimanded the hon. gentleman for bringing forward a motion that might entail the defeat of the present government. I was surprised, I say, that the right hon. gentleman should take that attitude, because in all the years I have been in parliament I have never known anyone to move more frequently motions of want of confidence in an existing government than did the present Prime Minister when he was in opposition. If the hon. member for New Westminster proposed a motion which amounted to a want of confidence in the government, he was only following in the footsteps of the present Prime Minister; and when he does so the Prime Minister no doubt considers that the hon. gentleman is taking a safe course. The Prime Minister, I presume, feels that the hon. member is following the proper path when he follows his own example.

Mr. GEARY: The hon. member knew what he was doing, then.

Mr. VENIOT: Well, even if he did know what he was doing, had he not a right to do it?

Mr. GEARY: Certainly.

Mr. VENIOT: Then why reprimand him? Why impute motives to the hon. gentleman and say that he proposed the motion merely in order to place the government of the day in a trying position? Surely, with the majority which the Prime Minister has at his back to-day, he need fear no vote of want of confidence in this house. I know he has a majority that will stand behind him through thick and thin no matter what he does so far as policies are concerned. I feel, therefore, that the hon. member for New Westminster should not have been taken to task by the Prime Minister. But it is not the first time that the Prime Minister has found pleasure in doing this, because it seems to be delightful to him to take to task new members on this side of the house. We old members who are used to the ways of the right hon. gentleman do not feel at all offended when he takes us to task. Indeed, we rather take it as a compliment when we are lectured by one who to-day stands up and blames us for doing the very things which he did when he occupied the position of leader of the opposition—things which he did quite frequently and evidently with considerable gusto.

Mr. W. G. WEIR (Macdonald): I am not particularly interested in what may have taken place in the past concerning this important matter; what I am interested in is what is likely to take place in the future Conditions have changed materially since the appeals and representations that were made in days gone by, so that in my opinion it is essential that this important question should be reviewed again.

I congratulate the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) upon having brought this matter to the attention of the house. I wish particularly to congratulate him on the able manner in which he has presented the subject, and I would go so far as to congratulate him on the excellent burr he had on the letter R.

The seriousness of the situation with regard to our domestic freight rates has been brought home to us very forcibly during the past few months, particularly as it affects our coarse grains in western Canada. The reduction in the price of grains has emphasized in no uncertain way the present cost of freight rates. When the prices of grain were higher and our grain was moving more freely into export, we were not concerned with the freight question to the degree that we are to-day, so far as our feed grains, particularly western barley, are concerned. But now that tariffs have been imposed against our grain going into those countries that import grain, we find the situation quite different, and it is for that reason that we are obliged to view the whole subject from a slightly different angle.

If I understand correctly the policy of the Conservative party, it is Canada first. We farmers in the west have feed grain for sale, and the live stock and poultry producers in both eastern and western Canada want this grain. Now, if the Conservative party are consistent and desire to carry out their policy of Canada first, I should think that this is one of the matters that would receive their very earnest consideration, and that early action would be taken in the matter. The hon. member for New Westminster has discussed the matter particularly from the point of view of the poultry producers of British Columbia and also as it affects the live stock feeders. I desire to discuss it from the point of view of the producers in western Canada, and, as well, of the feeders in the east.

The question of domestic freight rates is of special interest to the province of Manitoba. Manitoba is one of the oldest of the three western provinces and, as one might naturally expect, the fertility of its soil is somewhat impaired. We are therefore obliged to turn more towards the production of coarse grains, particularly barley. The significance of the situation, so far as Manitoba is concerned, lies in the fact that practically half the barley grown in the three western provinces is grown in that province. Consequently this question is of far-reaching importance to us.

I shall read a statement showing the differential in freight cost in shipping barley from the producing sections to Fort William and Calgary:

DIFFERENTIAL IN FREIGHT COST IN SHIPPING BARLEY FROM THE PRODUCING SECTIONS TO FORT WILLIAM AND TO CALGARY

Barley is now available for shipment at Souris, Man.

Distance from Souris to Fort William	569·7	miles at freight cost	17c.	per cwt. or	8·16c. per bus. barley
Distance from Souris to Calgary	680·5	miles at freight cost	38½c.	per cwt. or	18·48c. per bus. barley
Extra miles Souris to Calgary	110·8	Extra cost Souris to Calgary	21½c.	per cwt. or	10·32c. per bus. barley

Barley available in normal years at Arcola, Sask.

Distance from Arcola to Fort William	671·8	miles at freight cost	18c.	per cwt or	8·64c. per bus. barley
Distance from Arcola to Calgary	578·4	miles at freight cost	36c.	per cwt. or	17·28c. per bus. barley
Less miles Arcola to Calgary	93·4	Extra cost Arcola to Calgary	18c.	per cwt. or	8·64c. per bus. barley

Another interesting situation develops in the differential in the freight cost in shipping feed grains to the west coast for export and for domestic consumption. This has been referred to already this afternoon, but I should like to set out in figures what the situation is. It is as follows:

Oats and Feeding Wheats available at North Battleford in Normal Years

Distance from North Battleford to Vancouver. 1,015·3 miles at freight cost for export..24c. per cwt. 14·40c. per bus. wheat per bus. oats 8·1c.
Freight cost for domestic. 50c. per cwt. 30c. per bus. wheat per bus. oats 17c.
Against domestic consumption.....26c. per cwt. 15·60c. per bus. wheat per bus. oats 8·8c.

Vancouver to Shanghai January shipment $3 per short ton.... 9c. per bus. wheat.....5·10c. per bus. oats
Fobbing at Vancouver.....1·75 per bus. wheat.....1·75 per bus. oats

Cheaper for consumption in Shanghai than Vancouver by 4·85c. per bus. wheat 1·99c. per bus. oats

Barley available at Arcola, Saskatchewan, in Normal Years

Distance from Arcola to Vancouver, 1,219·9 miles at freight cost for export..... 29c. per cwt. 13·92c. per bus. barley
Freight cost for domestic..... 53½c. per cwt. 25·68c. per bus. barley
Against domestic consumption..... 24·50c. per cwt. 11·76c. per bus. barley

Ocean freight Vancouver to Shanghai..... 7·20c. per bus. barley
Fobbing at Vancouver..... 1·75

Cheaper for consumption in Shanghai than Vancouver... 2·81c. per bus. barley

If we look at this from the other direction, the difference in rail costs in shipping barley to the maritime provinces for export and for domestic consumption is as follows:

Distance from bay ports (Goderich) to St. John, N.B., 1,099·8 miles at freight cost for export.. 16·04c. per cwt. 7·7 per bushel barley
Freight cost for domestic..... 41·5c. per cwt. 19·9 "
Against domestic consumption..... 12·2c. "
St. John, N.B. to Liverpool, February shipment 1/6 per quarter.. 3·6 " Fobbing at St. John, N.B..... 1·75 "
Cheaper for consumption at Liverpool than St. John by..... 6·85 "

I have under my hand the record of a shipment of grain to which I would like to refer. On October 16, 1930, a shipment was made from Fort William of 116,101 bushels 3 C.W. barley to Sorel, Quebec. This steamer was unloaded at Sorel on November 10, 1930. The actual cost of moving the shipment all water was made up as follows:

Lake freight and lake brokerage, 8¾ cents per bushel.
Fobbing at Fort William, 1½ cents per bushel.
Marine insurance and outturn, ½ cent per bushel.
C.I.F. brokerage, ¼ cent per bushel.
Actual cost in store, Sorel, 11 cents per bushel.

The domestic rail freight rates are as follows:

Sorel to Stanley, N.B.—
30 cents per 100 pounds or 14·40 cents per bushel barley.
Sorel to Aulac, N.B.—
31 cents per 100 pounds or 14·88 cents per bushel barley.
Sorel to Judique, N.S.—
40 cents per 100 pounds or 19·20 cents per bushel barley.

[Mr. W . Weir.]

The actual cost of 3 C.W. barley on track at these three points on March 3, 1931, is as follows:

Stanley, N.B.—
Winnipeg closing spot price, 24⅛ cents per bushel.
Lake transportation costs to Sorel, 11 cents per bushel.
Loading on car at Sorel, 1 cent per bushel.
Rail freight Sorel to Stanley, N.B., 14⅜ cents per bushel.
Cost on track Stanley, 50½ cents per bushel.
Aulac, N.B.—
Winnipeg closing spot price, 24⅛ cents per bushel.
Lake transportation costs to Sorel, 11 cents per bushel.
Loading on car at Sorel, 1 cent per bushel.
Rail freight Sorel to Aulac, N.B., 14⅞ cents per bushel.
Cost on track Aulac, 51 cents per bushel.
Judique, N.S.—
Winnipeg closing spot price, 24⅛ cents per bushel.
Lake transportation costs to Sorel, 11 cents, per bushel.
Loading on car at Sorel, 1 cent per bushel.
Rail freight Sorel to Judique, 19¼ cents per bushel.
Cost on track Judique, N.S., 55⅜ cents per bushel.

On March 3, 1931 3 C. W. barley sold c.i.f. German ports for May shipment at less than the same barley could be quoted on track to maritime feeders by:

10½ cents per bushel less than at Stanley, N.B.

11 cents per bushel less than at Aulac, N.B.

15⅜ cents per bushel less than at Judique, N.S.

Another very interesting and serious point is to be taken from these figures. Souris, Manitoba, has a freight rate of 8⅛ cents per bushel for barley to Fort William. That means that the farmer received from 3 C.W. barley on March 3 at the country elevator, 16 cents per bushel, and this allows nothing for commission or local elevator charges. In order that the feeder at Stanley, New Brunswick, may secure this barley, he has to pay 34½ cents per bushel in transportation charges alone, or more than twice as much as the barley is worth to the man who is actually producing.

I have under my hand some quotations under date of January 22, 1931, of prices c.i.f. United Kingdom ports, for February-March shipment. This has been translated into Canadian weights and currency as follows:

Russian barley, 34⅞ cents per bushel (48 pounds).

Danubian barley, 34⅞ cents per bushel (48 pounds).

3 Canada western barley, 40 cents per bushel (48 pounds).

On the same day 3 C.W. Canadian barley was quoted at 40 cents for 48 pounds c.i.f. Hamburg,—and at 40.04 cents c.if. Antwerp or Rotterdam. An English farmer can buy Canadian barley at a less freight cost than farmers in most parts of the maritime provinces.

I propose to set that out in this way:

Comparative Rail Rates for Export and Domestic Use

Rail rate from bay ports to St. John, N.B. for export: 16·04 cents per cwt.; 7·7 cents per bushel barley.

Ocean rate February shipment St. John, N.B. to Liverpool: 1/6 per quarter; 3·6 cents per bushel barley.

Fobbing at St. John, N.B.: 1·75 cents per bushel barley.

Total cost c.i.f. Liverpool: 13·05 cents per bushel barley.

Rail rate from bay ports to St. John, N.B for domestic use: 41·5 cents per cwt.; 19·9 cents per bushel barley.

Cheaper c.i.f. Liverpool than in store St. John, N.B. for domestic use by 6·85 cents per bushel barley.

Going to the other side of the country, we find that barley c.i.f. Shanghai is cheaper than for domestic consumption in British Columbia. The figures are as follows:

Rail rate from Arcola, Saskatchewan—

Arcola being in one of the more westerly producing sections.

To Vancouver, B.C. for export: 29 cents per cwt.; 13·29 cents per bushel barley.

Fobbing at Vancouver, B.C.: 1·75 cents per bushel barley.

January ocean freights, Vancouver to Shanghai, per short ton: $3·00; 7·20 cents per bushel barley.

Total cost c.i.f. Shanghai: 22·87 cents per bushel barley.

Rail rate Arcola to Vancouver, B.C. for domestic use: 53½ cents per cwt; 25·68 cents per bushel barley.

Cheaper c.i.f. Shanghai than in store Vancouver for domestic use by 2·81 cents per bushel barley.

Another interesting situation has developed which, I think, perhaps some of us may be overlooking. I have under my hand comparative statements of disposition of stockers and feeders, calves and hogs, as follows. I am giving only the totals:

Comparative Statement of Disposition of Stockers and Feeders, Union Stock Yards, St. Boniface, Man.

That indicates to me, Mr. Speaker, a very decided change in the policy of the live stock producers of this country. In my opinion more live stock is going to be shipped to eastern Canada for feeding purposes. It is therefore essential that our eastern feeders be permitted to secure our western feed grains at a reasonable figure. In my view, the responsibility is on this house to see that a policy in that regard is carried out.

I want to repeat that so far as freight costs are concerned the poultry raiser of British Columbia has to pay 4·85 cents per bushel on wheat, 2·81 cents per bushel on barley, and 1·99 cents a bushel on oats more in freight costs than the same grain can be delivered in store at Shanghai. Also, it costs 6·85 cents per bushel more for freight charges to deliver barley at St. John for domestic purposes than it does to deliver the same barley at Liverpool and many other European ports.

We ship our grain across the Atlantic to farmers for feeding purposes at a less cost than we will allow our Canadian farmers to secure it at, and these farmers in turn feed this grain which they secure from Canada to their live stock which, in turn, comes into direct competition with our Canadian live stock in the British market. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this is unfair discrimination against our Canadian producers not only of live stock but also of grain. It is something which needs very careful and very earnest consideration at an early date.

Some observations have been made in this house as to the effect on our railway earnings of a reduction in domestic freight rates. I do not know that we should dwell at too great length on that. The situation simply is that the producers of grain and the consumers of grain are in an even worse position than the railways themselves, and in my humble opinion—it may not be worth much—I feel satisfied that if the railway companies would carry this grain at a reasonable rate, at a rate to encourage shipment and consumption, their earnings would be more than made up by increased traffic, which, in turn, would give greater employment. I feel satisfied that if the scheme were worked out on a basis of equity in that regard it would be to the advantage of all concerned—the producers of live stock, the people who want to feed these grains in various parts of Canada, the railways, and to the unemployed as well. In my opinion one of the reasons for the falling off in railway earnings in western Canada to-day is the high domestic freight rates which prevent grain from moving from one place to another. I am therefore very glad that the situation has been brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for New Westminster, and I have very great pleasure in supporting his amendment, which I think has been introduced at a very opportune time.

Mr. T. F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): I wish to associate myself with the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) who has made this motion. Freight rates are always a matter of interest in western Canada. In fact, there is no set of farmers in the world who are so much interested in freight rates as the farmers of western Canada. Geographically we are situated in the middle of a continent, and the result is that on any produce we have to sell we have to pay a long freight haul to get it to the markets of the world, and on anything we buy, no matter whether we buy it in eastern Canada or elsewhere, we have to pay a long freight haul. If we want to buy lumber, we have to pay a long freight haul from the Pacific coast. If we want to buy fruit, we have to pay a long freight haul from the Pacific coast. On everything that we consume in western Canada, whether manufactured or raw products, we have to pay a long freight haul before we can get it, and on anything that we produce we have to pay a long freight haul before we can get it to the markets of the world. Naturally, therefore, Mr. Speaker, no other people in the world are so interested in rates as the farmers and people of western Canada.

Speaking in this house the other day on the question of wheat, I pointed out that it costs the farmer of western Canada from 15 to 20 cents a bushel more than any other farmer to get his wheat on the markets of the world. We have a long freight haul to put our wheat on the markets of the world which costs from 30 to 35 cents a bushel, whereas the Argentine, Russia and Australia can put their wheat on the markets of the world at a cost of from 15 to 20 cents a bushel. So there is always in their favour, on account of their having water haul instead of rail haul, an advantage of from 15 to 20 cents a bushel.

Freight rates have always been a burden. Therefore we appreciated very much the action that was taken some years ago when the Crowsnest pass rate was granted. It is only in the present year practically, when we have such a quantity of feed and coarse grains that we are not able to get a price for, that we have realized that our local domestic rates are too high as compared with our export rates. As has been pointed out in this debate, we find that in shipping for export, we can ship our barley and coarse grains via Vancouver to Shanghai for a far less rate than we can ship them to Vancouver. We find that the people of Vancouver can practically go to Shanghai and buy Canadian barley there and ship it back to Vancouver, and in the end get it as cheap as if they bought it direct from the prairies. This does not seem right because we are asking the people of British Columbia to produce eggs and poultry, and yet we are sending our coarse grains over to China and Japan to be used by the farmers there in producing poultry and eggs which will compete with the products of our own people. We are giving the farmers of China and Japan cheaper feed than our own people in British Columbia. That surely is not the Canada-first policy. I say that the Canada-first policy is a good policy when not carried to extremes, but I say that in all cases we should help our own Canadians just as much as outsiders, and if we are going to give the people of China and Japan our coarse grains and other products cheaper than we give them to our own people in British Columbia I say that we are not using our own people right.

Again, with regard to grain coming to eastern Canada, we have been told here this afternoon that we are laying our barley down in Hamburg, Copenhagen and other European ports cheaper than in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. We have been told that we are sending our barley and oats and feed wheat to people over there in Europe to feed their hogs and cattle, which are then sold in England in competition with our own hogs and cattle, cheaper than we are sending them to eastern Canada. Surely that is not a Canada first policy. Canadians should get their feeds just as cheap as the people over in Copenhagen and Hamburg and other European ports. In western Canada at the present time we have all kinds of barley and rye and feed oats and feed wheat in storage, and we cannot sell it. Let me give a few illustrations. A man, R. Christie, of Grenfell, had a carload of rye which he shipped to Fort William. When it got there he had a freight bill of $18.35 to pay. So he gave the rye away, and had to pay $18.35 besides to get somebody to take it. Here is another case. C. Bohn of Broadview, had three carloads of rye in the elevator ready to ship. He was preparing to ship when the elevator man said, "I won't ship that out; you have a carload of your good wheat; go to the bank and draw money on that to pay your freight." He went up to the bank and tried to draw money, but the bank would not advance any, and the result was that he had to take the rye back home again or give it away. These are conditions which exist in the west in regard to feed, showing how plentiful and cheap it really is. In the prairie provinces a certain amount of barley and feed has been sold. Our governments out there pay half the freight rates to different parts. I myself sold some grain which was shipped from one section of Saskatchewan to another half the freight being paid by our local government. In that way we were able to get rid of some of our wheat. In the same way, if the domestic freight rates were cheaper in Saskatchewan the farmers in the western provinces would be able to ship their feed from one part to another, and produce hogs to sell on the markets of the world.

When I was in the west in the month of December I had presented to me another startling illustration concerning freight rates. At that time No. 1 northern wheat, the best in the world, was selling on the street for 30 cents a bushel. Imagine, No. 1 northern wheat at 30 cents a bushel, half a cent a pound. On the very same day I went down to the premises of one of the milling companies,—the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, to be exact,—and I found that they asked $15 a ton for bran, or three-quarters of a cent a pound. We are paying $15 a ton for bran and selling No. 1 northern wheat for $10 a ton. In other words it required a ton and a half of the best wheat to buy a ton of bran. The same statement applies to flour. In western Canada we grow the wheat, and yet our flour is as highly priced as it is in other parts of the Dominion. Flour in the province of Saskatchewan, where the wheat is grown, is more highly priced than it is in most other parts of Canada or the British Isles. The reason is that no matter where the flour is milled the price is based on Fort William. The price operates just as though the wheat were shipped to Fort William, milled there and the flour shipped back under local freight rates to the province of Saskatchewan. The local freight rates are so high that in Saskatchewan we pay more for our flour than does any other part of Canada. The same is true with regard to bran. That is why I say it required a ton and a half of No. 1 northern wheat to buy a ton of bran.

I wish to refer to only one more point. The excuse may be put forward that a change in the rates will cost the railways too much money, and that at the present time the railways are not making any money. The statement is made that the railways are from day to day losing money and that a reduction in rates would result not in giving them more business, but in financial embarrassment. The suggestion is made that the rates should be increased rather than decreased. I say that if the rates were reduced the business of the railroads would increase and they would do more business. If their rates were reduced more men would be employed. Under the present rates the cost of rights-of-way are just the same, the costs of facilities are just the same, their cars are in their yards and should be in use. If the rates were reduced they would be in use. The coarse grain from western Canada would find its way into eastern Canada. For the last few years we have been importing from Argentina and the United States somewhere in the neighborhood of 10,000,000 or 15,000,000 bushels of corn to feed the cattle of this country. If that is so we should put a duty on corn. The freight rates on coarse grains should be reduced so that they may be brought east, at a cheaper rate and be placed in competition with the corn from the Argentine. True some stock raisers say that animals cannot be properly finished without the use of corn. Some people believe that, and I do not think we should reject their views and say that they must do without corn. I say however that we should place our barley and coarse grains in eastern Canada at low or moderate rates so that we could compete in price with those of Argentina and the United States, thereby preventing corn from coming into this country. Why should corn be brought from the Argentine, thereby helping the Argentine farmers, while our own barley is left to rot out on the prairies? I trust the government will consider the matter of rates, and have it referred to a committee so that before very long some remedial action may be taken for the benefit of the western farmers as well as the feeders in eastern Canada.

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): The question of freight rates which has been raised in the amendment moved by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) is one of very great importance. At this time I would like to direct a few remarks to some of the statements which have been made with regard to the general question of freight rates, and particularly in relation to the observations of the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Donnelly). It has been said that the export freight rate on wheat from western Canada is the highest in the world. It may be true that it costs more to send wheat from western Canada to the European markets than to send it from the Argentine republic, Australia or some country where carriage by water is a predominating factor. However, if hon. members would compare the freight rates from western Canada to the markets of the world with the freight rates from the United States over the same distances I think they would learn that Canadian freight rates are as advantageous as those of the United States, if indeed they are not more so. The chief point is as to whether the domestic and export rates shall be equalized. The point arises as to whether the people in British Columbia, for instance, would be prepared to have their export and long haul rates equalized with domestic rates all over Canada thereby bringing the whole freight structure up to the point where the percentage of cost of moving a carload of similar product in any part of Canada would be equalized on a mileage basis. That virtually is what is asked for. Let me put this question: Would the wheat producer in western Canada be in favour of having export rates applied on wheat from western Canada to Fort William, Vancouver, Quebec, Montreal, St. John, New Brunswick or any other exporting point on the same basis as domestic rates for the same character of product to the people all over Canada? On the other hand would producers of lumber, apples and canned products in British Columbia be prepared to defend a freight structure which would cost them on a mileage basis as much to ship a carload of lumber, a carload of apples, a carload of canned salmon or a carload of eggs from Vancouver to Montreal as it would cost an Ontario farmer or lumberman on the same mileage basis to ship his product to the same market. For the information of hon. gentlemen and in no controversial spirit whatsoever I can tell them this, that you can ship a carload of lumber from a mill in Vancouver to Montreal cheaper than you can ship the same commodity from a northern Ontario mill to the same market; you can ship a carload of apples 100 miles into the Montreal market for less money than you can ship a carload of apples 25 miles in Ontario to the same market.

Mr. NEILL: Lumber has an alternative water haul.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There is an alternative water haul. But the same thing applies to Toronto, Buffalo, North Tonawanda, or any other large distributing centre in the east; it is the question of the long haul and the short haul. The cost of shipping feed into Ontario has been discussed. It costs more to ship a carload of mill feed, coarse grains, from Fort William 500 miles to some distributing point in Ontario than it costs to ship wheat from Calgary to St. John, New Brunswick, for export. Would anyone suggest that you bring the export rates up to a basis that would make it possible for the railways to earn a revenue upon which they can live, and have them predicated upon the domestic rates?

Mr. REID: But we are asking that the domestic rates east be on the same basis as the rates west to Port Arthur and Fort William.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The export rate is a low rate on every commodity, but we have to bear in mind that we must provide a rate structure that will make it possible for the railways to earn sufficient revenue to pay their operating costs. I am not disputing the difficulties we are under in view of the adverse rates, not at all. But the whole point comes back to this: Can we ask the railway commission to create a rate structure that will equalize all rates in Canada without affecting export business? I do not think we can. There may be cases such as my hon. friend has cited this afternoon where some injustice exists, but when we discuss the matter of equalized freight rates throughout the country we are going in the face of what has been clamoured for, particularly by western Canada as long as I can remember anything in regard to freight rates, and that is a cheap rate for the long haul exportable product. My hon. friend from Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) who has just taken his seat referred to the fact that there were products in western Canada that you could not ship into any market where they could be sold at a price that would give back the cost of the freight haul. There are many, many cases of that character in all parts of Ontario. Let me cite just one that I happen to know something about myself. There are 20,000,000 laths in the lumber yards of firms with which I am associated, and there is a market for those laths in New York. It will cost 50 cents a thousand more to ship those laths from the point of production to New York than they can be sold for when they arrive there. That is due to the depressed condition in business of that character all over the world.

An hon. MEMBER: Water competition.

Mr. NICHOLSON: No, not at all.

An hon. MEMBER: It is due to the tariff.

Mr. NICHOLSON: No, it is not due to the tariff either. There is not any tariff applying. We ship the produce free, and if the exporter in the United States could ship it across here it would come in free. The trouble is due to the low value of the product and the cost of haulage. In fact there is virtually no value in the product after the freight is paid. These things apply in a hundred different ways. For example, take the long haul and the preferential freight rate. It will cost a farmer in the Ottawa Valley more to ship me a carload of potatoes for one of my lumber camps than it will cost the farmer in New Brunswick to ship a carload of potatoes to the same place. If someone suggested that we equalize those rates as between the Ontario and New Brunswick farmers, I am afraid the maritimers in this house would raise the same cry as has been raised in western Canada. Everybody sympathizes with the situation we are in, but when you approach the question of a rate structure based on equalized rates, and say you are going to have the same comparative rate between Alberta and Vancouver as between Alberta and Hong Kong, I am very much afraid you are defeating the very object you are endeavouring to attain in creating an export market for the goods that we produce so largely in this country, and that we must export.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Are we to assume then that export freight rates are not profitable?

Mr. NICHOLSON: If the matter was analyzed from A to Z, it would be found that the railways could not live on export rates; for instance, they could not live on the rates on export wheat from western Canada to the European markets.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There is plenty of evidence to the contrary on the Crowsnest pass grain rates.

Mr. NICHOLSON: In the course of that discussion it must be borne in mind that you leave out of the picture entirely the whole capital cost behind the construction of the railways, the maintenance of their equipment and everything else that goes with it—absolutely inescapable charges. If you distributed the export business in grain alone over twelve months of the year, instead of the short period during which grain has to be hauled, you could reduce the rolling stock of all the railways in Canada 50 per cent.

Mr. HANBURY: That is true in British Columbia where we have a twelve month period.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Why is it true? Because this equipment is idle eight months out of the twelve.

Mr. HANBURY: Not in British Columbia.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Good heavens! that is not true.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Excuse me, it is true.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But my hon. friend can take the actual statistics of the railroads and find that the haulage of wheat continues fairly steadily throughout the year with the exception of the winter months.

Mr. NICHOLSON: It continues, yes, to some degree; but will my hon. friend suggest that the statement is not correct, that the period of the year when the heavy wheat traffic prevails is September, October, November and December?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Quite correct.

Mr. NICHOLSON: And if that traffic was equally distributed over the whole twelve months, I repeat my statement—and I know it to be correct—50 per cent of the rolling stock that has been brought into being in this country for the purpose of carrying that freight would never have been required to be purchased.

Mr. NEILL: But the domestic business is more all-the-year-round than the export; therefore it should get a lower rate.

Mr. NICHOLSON: That is perfectly true; if you lower the domestic rate and increase the export rate, and so make it possible for the railways to live, all well and good; but you cannot reduce both sets of rates.

Mr. MUNN: If my hon. friend will come to Vancouver he will find that they have seed grain moving every day of the year for export. Our contention is they should reduce the domestic rate and get the resultant increased tonnage.

Mr. NICHOLSON: And increase the export rate?

Mr. MUNN: No.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Will my hon. friend take the balance sheets of the Canadian National Railways for the last ten years and find out how much money they made on these rates?

Mr. NEILL: They paid 10 per cent.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The Canadian National Railways?

Mr. NEILL: Oh, the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. MUNN: If the domestic rate was reduced the increased volume would mean cheaper haulage.

Mr. NICHOLSON: No.

Mr. MUNN: It happened when the differential was cut 50 per cent.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman can make a speech for himself later.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I do not propose to take up the time of the house very much longer in connection with this matter. I merely rose to point out what was prevailing all over this country. I would point out that if people in the west or in the far east, who are constantly referring to these things, are anxious to have an equalization of freight rates, domestic and export, they should study the problem with some degree of thoroughness before making any suggestion of that kind. I am afraid it would be the people in the west who would suffer to a very great degree.

Mr. BROWN: Is not my hon. friend overlooking the fact that the chief contention has been that grain is not moving at all under the existing rates?

Mr. NICHOLSON: That is perfectly true; lumber is not moving either, and there are hundreds of commodities which are not moving under the existing rates. Do we suggest that we are going to load the whole thing on the railroads and ask them to carry goods for nothing? That is virtually what it would amount to. As an hon. member suggests, where would they carry those goods? This matter should be left with the railway commission.

Mr. REID: We have left it with the railway commission too long.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I say to my hon. friend, do not urge too strongly an equalization of short and long haul rates, because it will be the people at the extremities of this country who will suffer most from any such equalization.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up very much of the time of the house, but no hon. member from Alberta has had a chance to say anything as yet in regard to this resolution. I want to assure the hon. member who brought up the matter that he has almost the unanimous support of the people of Alberta in demanding a lower domestic freight rate on grain. Sometimes in my district we have low grade grain which we would like to ship to the poultrymen of British Columbia, but we cannot do so because of the high freight rate. I have under my hand a letter from the assistant chief traffic officer of the Board of Railway Commissioners, under date of May 2, 1929, in which he says that the rate for export from our station to Vancouver and New Westminster is 20 cents per hundred pounds, but that the rate on grain for domestic consumption to the same points is 42 cents per hundred pounds or more than double the export rate. The rate to Victoria is 45 cents per hundred pounds, considerably more than double the rate for export.

Just in reply to the remarks of the last speaker may I say that we believe the increased traffic under a lower freight rate on domestic grain would make up for any loss which might be sustained in moving the quantity now being handled at a lower rate. I do not think there is much doubt about that, and we might all receive the benefits of such a reduction. In order to show the house that the farmers of Alberta are solidly behind the people of British Columiba in their efforts to secure a reduction on the rate on domestic grain, I should like to quote a resolution which was passed at the last annual meeting of the United Farmers of Alberta. I think resolutions similar to this have been passed by this organization annually for the past eight or nine years. The resolution reads:

Whereas the freight rate on wheat for domestic use in British Columbia is one hundred per cent higher than the rate on wheat for export;

Be it resolved that we ask the federal government to lower the rate on domestic wheat to the same level as for export wheat.

I should like also to read a resolution passed at a general meeting of the wheat pools of western Canada, held in Winnipeg on March 13:

Whereas, the Canadian surplus of feed grains is increasing year by year due to increased production and the difficulties faced by the Canadian live stock industry; and

Whereas, millions of bushels of Argentine and American corn are imported each year into Canada for feed purposes; and

Whereas, the logical outlet of large quantities of the surplus feed grains from western Canada lies in the live stock industry of the Dominion; and

Whereas, the domestic market for feed grains is the only sure market in these difficult times; and

Whereas, there is very marked disparity between domestic and export freight rates on feed grains to the extent that western Canadian barley, for example, has been laid down in such European ports as Hamburg, Bremen, Antwerp, Rotterdam, Copenhagen and Liverpool at from six to thirteen cents per bushel cheaper than the same grain could be supplied to feeders of live stock in the maritimes of Canada;

Be it therefore resolved, that this interprovincial conference, representative of the pool grain marketing agencies in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, go on record as strongly urging the necessity for a thorough investigation into this disparity in domestic and export freight rates on western grain, both east and west, with a view to bringing about an equalization of such rates; and that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the governments of Canada and of all the provinces, the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, and also to each member of the House of Commons.

I believe that resolution expresses very clearly and very fairly the opinion of the grain growers of western Canada in regard to this matter. I had intended to quote some of the actual rates in effect between different points, but that has been so well covered by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Weir) that I will not bother to do so at this time. However, I do wish to say that I think it is time the government of Canada took some action—because we cannot get action from the railway commission—to see that the egg producers of Japan and the bacon producers of Denmark do not secure Canadian grain for less than is paid by Canadian producers of these same commodities.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Would my hon. friend suggest that we should abolish the railway commission and make the whole question of freight rates in this country a political question?

Mr. COOTE: No, I will not go that far at present, but I never could understand some of the judgments of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Just here I should like to say a word of appreciation of the work of Hon. Mr. Oliver, a former member of that board. I should like to quote very briefly from the dissenting judgment rendered by Mr. Oliver in connection with this very matter under discussion. He said:

The all-rail export rate Fort William to Montreal is 34½ cents per 100 pounds. The domestic rate is 37½ cents which is three cents over the export rate. The rail distance Fort William to Montreal is somewhat more than one-half greater than that between Calgary and Vancouver. There would not appear to be any reason why the difference between export and domestic rates on grain of export standards from prairie points to Vancouver should be greater than that between domestic and export rates on the longer haul, Fort William to Montreal.

If the domestic rate on grain coming east is only three cents per bushel more than the export rate, why should it be more than double on grain going west? That is what we cannot understand. The judgment proceeds:

Although a domestic rate three cents per 100 pounds over the export rate from prairie points to Vancouver would be the same difference between domestic and export rates as now prevails on the all-rail grain movement from Fort William to Montreal, it would not put the respective populations of Vancouver and Montreal in the same relative positions as to cost of their domestic supplies, because central

Canada generally, including Montreal, in fact gets the bulk of its domestic supply by rail and water at the export rate.

Then Mr. Oliver goes on to deal with the question of damaged grain:

Damaged grain is not as suitable feed for live stock as sound grain, but if it can be secured at a sufficiently lower price, it answers the purpose fairly well and will be used accordingly. The present domestic rate of 41½ cents per 100 pounds practically excludes such grain from use by the poultry and dairy farmers of the coast region and compels them either to pay the full price for grain of export quality, with the 41½ cent transportation cost added, or to buy corn imported by ship from the Argentine. Either way the country suffers an economic loss and their difficulties in carrying on their operations are materially increased.

I commend that paragraph to the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson). It explains the case fairly well, and indicates why the domestic rate should be lowered. Then again:

The feed value of low grade or damaged grain is not sufficient to allow the British Columbia consumer to pay a price that will enable the producer to haul to the railway station and pay the present domestic rail rate as well, in competition with corn from the Argentine, delivered by ship in Vancouver. The railroad therefore altogether loses the haul on this grain, while the producer loses the selling value of the grain and the British Columbia poultry and dairy farmer pays his money for a foreign supply. . . . The transportation of grain of these lower grades at export rates would not by any means place the consuming population of British Columbia in the same favourable position in regard to their domestic food and feed supply as that at present enjoyed by the people of central Canada, but it would be in that direction and would be of substantial advantage to the prairie producer and to the railway as well.

I should like to quote the last two sentences of his judgment. He recommends:

That the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways be notified that rates on grain and flour for domestic use shall not be more than 3 cents per 100 pounds higher from prairie points to Vancouver than the rates from the same points on grain and flour for export.

He does not suggest the same rates, but he does suggest that the same rate might apply on low grade grain.

Provided that the rate on grain below export quality, that is, wheat of a quality below the grade of No. 4 northern, and other grains below the grade of No. 3 C.W. (Canada Western) shall not exceed the export rate.

I am quite unable to understand why the other commissioners should not have agreed with the judgment given by Mr. Oliver. It seems to me to have been reasonable. I would simply say in closing that I hope the government will take such action as may be necessary to adjust this situation. Certainly it should be remedied, and in my opinion such action would be as fine a part of the Canada First policy as this government could possibly take.

Mr. W. J. LOUCKS (Rosetown): I want to endorse what has been said in regard to this question. I am in sympathy with the suggestion that something should be done in connection with this domestic rate problem. The time is ripe for it, and now that the matter has been submitted to the Prime Minister I am sure something will be done. I trust it will not be a football for years to come but that we shall get results.

On motion of Mr. Willis the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, May 21, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

RAILWAY COMMITTEE

Fourth report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Harris.

INDUSTRIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Mr. F. W. TURNBULL (Regina) presented the first report of the select standing committee on industrial and international relations, as follows:

Your committee recommend that 500 copies in English and 200 in French of the evidence to be taken, together with such papers and documents to be incorporated with such evidence, be printed and that standing order No. 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. TURNBULL moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 49, to amend the Bank Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. SPENCER: The purpose of this bill is simply to enforce that clause of the Bank Act which limits the rate of interest which may be charged. According to the act the highest rate that may be charged is 7 per cent, but banks in the three prairie provinces very largely, and in other provinces to a certain extent, are charging more than the lawful rate.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

BEAUHARNOIS POWER CORPORATION

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Has the right hon. the Prime Minister, received the departmental report of the investigation regarding Beauharnois which he mentioned at the special session as having been undertaken by him?

2. If such a report has been received, will he table it?

3. Have plans for remedial works of the Beauharnois development been filed and approved by the government?

4. Are the plans under which the Beauharnois development is now being proceeded with the same plans which were approved by order in council, P.C. 422, dated May 8, 1929?

5. If the present plans are not the same as above approved, have they been approved, and if so, how and when?

6. If any change has been made in these plans, what are the changes and why were such changes made?

Mr. BENNETT: I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, yesterday that in view of the near appointment of a parliamentary committee to investigate the matter referred to in this question, probably the hon. member would drop the question. He does not seem to be in his place, but perhaps one of his colleagues would speak to him about it.

Mr. SPENCER: I shall draw it to his attention.

Question stands.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Who were the chairman of the various select standing committees of the House of Commons for the sessions of 1927, 1928, 1929, and 1930?

2. Who are the chairman of the select standing committees of the House of Commons for the session of 1931?

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

Mr. NICHOLSON:

In the 12th annual report, Canadian National Steamships, dated March 25, 1931, at page 7, there is shown in the capital liabilities, 6,609 issued shares of $100 each; also at page 19 of the same report covering Canadian National West Indies Steamships Limited, there is shown capital stock authorized and issued, 400 shares at $100 each.

Have these shares been sold to the public or are they held by: (a) the Canadian government; (b) the Canadian National Railway Company?

Mr. MANION:

On page 7 of the annual report of the Canadian National Steamships (Canadian Government Merchant Marine Limited) 12th annual report, the capital stock outstanding is shown as 3,013 shares, 3,000 of which are held by the Minister of Finance on behalf of the Canadian government and the balance, namely, 13 shares, representing directors' qualifying shares, are held by the Canadian National Railway Company. The difference between 6,609 and the 3,013 shares is represented by 3,596 shares which have been cancelled, as shown on page 7 of the said report.

The 400 shares of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited, shown as issued on page 19 of the same annual report, are held by the Minister of Finance on behalf of the Canadian government.

PAYMENTS TO COKING PLANTS

Mr. CANTLEY:

What amounts were claimed by and paid to coking plants during the years 1928, 1929 and 1930 under the provisions of the Domestic Fuel Act, chapter 52 (1927)?

Mr. GORDON:

Calendar years	Amounts claimed	Amounts paid
1928	nil	nil
1929	$6,202 61	nil
1930	5,050 00	$6,202 61

Payment has not yet been made of the amount of $5,050 recommended for the year 1930.

EXPERIMENTAL SHIPMENTS OF CATTLE

Mr. DONNELLY:

1. At what time last fall was the experimental shipment of cattle to Great Britain made by the Canadian Department of Agriculture?
2. Were there prior shipments in 1930 to this experimental one made by Canadian live stock cooperatives or other shippers?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. November 1, 1930.
2. Yes.

STOCKER AND FEEDER CATTLE SHIPMENTS

Mr. DONNELLY:

1. When was the embargo against Canadian stocker and feeder cattle removed by the British government?
2. When did the shipments of Canadian stockers and feeders begin thereafter?
3. By whom was the first shipment of stockers and feeders made, and by whom was such shipment supervised on arrival abroad?
4. How many cattle were shipped each year from Canada to Great Britain between the years 1923-1930 inclusive?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. April 1, 1923.
2. March 20, 1923.
3. Harris Abattoir for self; H. P. Kennedy Co. for United Grain Growers. Supervised on arrival by Hon. Duncan Marshall.
4. Canadian cattle exports to Great Britain, 1923-1930 inclusive:

1923	57,672
1924	79,435
1925	110,868
1926	79,985
1927	8,263
1928	405
1929	nil
1930	5,400

TRENT CANAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. BOUCHARD:

1. Were two carpenters employed on the Trent canal at Peterborough in the fall and winter of 1930 and two ex-service carpenters with families dependent on them, dismissed, to make way for the men recommended?
2. Are the two carpenters who have not seen war service still employed on the Trent canal staff at Peterborough?
3. Are the ex-service carpenters who were dismissed, still out of work and obtaining unemployment relief?
4. Upon whose recommendation were the two ex-service carpenters dismissed?
5. Upon whose recommendation were the two carpenters without service engaged?

Mr. MANION:

1. No carpenters were dismissed to make way for men recommended. Last fall eight extra carpenters were employed for special jobs:—Building cribs, work since completed; building dredge hull, work since completed; building scow, work about completed; placing two new guard gates, work since completed; repairs to two houses, work since completed. Five of the eight carpenters were returned soldiers. One of the civilians was the captain of one of our dredges who was employed at a near equivalent of his summer rate. He was entitled to half pay during winter but preferred working to lying idle, consequently a saving of $68.35 per month was affected by his employment.

Another of the civilians employed on the guard gates, was employed in the winter of 1929-30 at the same class of work and was re-employed, with the consent of the local member, to take charge of similar work because of his experience.

The other civilian employed on building the dredge hull was the only experienced ship carpenter known in Peterborough and was employed on that account.

As these works were completed or neared completion the service of so many carpenters were not required.

2. Carpenters now employed at Peterborough:—

Regular staff

1 Carpenter foreman ship construction, civilian; 1 carpenter ship construction, civilian.

Special staff

1 Carpenter, returned soldier; 1 carpenter foreman, civilian. Consequently, of the special men employed last fall, one returned soldier and one civilian remain employed until work in hand is completed.

3. No ex-service carpenters dismissed. Cannot answer as to unemployment relief. Their employment throughout the winter by the department would hardly justify such application.

4. No ex-service carpenters dismissed.

5. All carpenters employed on recommendation of local member.

ALWICK RESERVE INDIAN AGENT

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland):

1. Has the Indian agent at the Alwick reserve in Northumberland county been dismissed?
2. If so, when, and for what reasons?

Mr. MURPHY:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

CATTLE SHIPMENT TO GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. SWANSTON:

1. What number of cattle were shipped to Great Britain from Canada in 1928, and on what dates?
2. What number of cattle were shipped to Great Britain from Canada in 1929, and on what dates?
3. What was the date of first shipment of cattle to Great Britain from Canada in 1930?
4. What was the total number of cattle shipped in 1930?
5. What number of cattle were shipped to date in 1931?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. June 14th, 304; July 6th, 101. Total, 405.
2. None.
3. August 20th, 1930.
4. 5,400.
5. 2,587.

PURCHASE OF OTTAWA PROPERTIES

Mr. SPENCER:

1. What amount of money was paid by the government of Canada for the following individual properties in the city of Ottawa: Russell Hotel Company, the Egan Estate, W. J. Irvine, Ottawa Electric Company, the Bangs Estate and the Matthewman Estate?
2. What money, if any, was paid in each case for the realty, or for the disturbance of business?

Mr. CAHAN:

1 and 2. (a) Amount paid by the Federal District Commission for purchase of properties contained in the Russell House block.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—ACQUISITION OF GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY SECURITIES

Mr. NICHOLSON:

In the Drayton-Acworth report, sessional papers, 1917, volume 12, at page 25 there is set out a list of securities of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company but not guaranteed by the government of Canada. The list is as follows:—

Per cent
4	Series A prairie division	$10,206,000
4	Series 4 mountain division	9,963,000
4	Lake Superior division	7,533,000
4	Perpetual debentures	34,879,252
5	Secured notes, secured by pledges of 4 per cent debentures	9,720,000
	Total	$72,301,252

1. Has the Canadian National Railway assumed responsibility for principal and interest on any or all of these securities?

2. (a) At what date and under what statutory or other authority was such responsibility accepted; (b) under what terms and in what amount in relation to each issue?

3. Do these securities form part of the long-term funded debt as set out at page 15 of the Canadian National Railways balance sheet for 1930?

4. By what net amount do these securities increase such a long-term funded debt?

5. Is it the intention of the executive of the Canadian National Railways to accept responsibility for whatever portion of such securities as are still outstanding?

Mr. MANION:

1. It has as to the first three amounts mentioned. The Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada guaranteed the interest on the fourth item to the extent only that the gross earnings of the Grand Trunk Railway should show a surplus available for the purpose after deducting certain preferential payments, such as all working expenses of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, all interest and other moneys payable by said Grand Trunk Railway on their loan capital, bonds or liabilities. These debentures were exchanged in 1927 for Canadian National Railway Company 2 per cent debenture stock guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada.

The $9,720,000 of 5 per cent secured notes matured on March 2nd, 1921, and were retired from advances made by the Dominion government under vote 126, 1921.

2. (a) The Canadian National Railway Company are successors by amalgamation to the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and under such amalgamation they assumed all of the liabilities and obligations of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada. The amalgamation was made under agreement dated January 30, 1923, which agreement was confirmed by order in council P.C. 181, dated January 30, 1923. The authority for assuming the liabilities and obligations was by virtue of the said agreement which was made in accordance with and subject to the provisions of sections 152 and 153 of The Railway Act, 1919.

(b) Answered by Nos. 1 and 2 (a).

3. Yes, with the exception of the 5 per cent notes in the amount of $9,720,000 which were redeemed in 1921. The amount of the 4 per cent perpetual debentures, now the 2 per cent guaranteed debenture stock, has, however, been reduced to $30,559,114, as shown on page 28 of the annual report, this reduction being made by means of a sinking fund as provided for under an agreement with the debenture holders at the time these securities were exchanged.

4. The amount of these securities that are now in the hands of the public is $58,261,114, and same is included in the total amount of long-term funded debt as shown on page 15 of the annual report.

5. The Canadian National Railway Company, as stated in answer to question 2 (a), are responsible for the liabilities and obligations of the former Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

TRENT CANAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. BOUCHARD:

1. Did Superintendent Killaly ascertain that the ex-service men, who were not reengaged in seasonable employment in 1931 on the Trent canal, were inefficient, if so, when?

2. When did he notify these men that they were inefficient?

3. When did he report them as inefficient?

4. In what way were they inefficient?

Mr. MANION:

1. Yes. In that connection Superintendent Killaly reports: "Services of men not reemployed were known to be unsatisfactory for some years. The fact that they were returned soldiers created sympathy for them resulting in their being retained. They have been reasoned with, appealed to, ordered and threatened with dismissal by myself and other officials on many occasions but all to no effect."

2. On many occasions in past years.

3. Not required to report unsatisfactory service of labourers to department.

4. Did not give reasonable service. Loafing until superior officer appeared on work.

FEDERAL LEGAL STAFF IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. REID:

1. What are the names of the lawyers retained by the Department of Justice or any other department of the government since September of last year, having their offices in the city of Vancouver and the federal district of New Westminster, up to the present time?

2. What amounts have been paid for such services, and to whom were said amounts paid?

3. Were all legal accounts properly taxed and by whom?

4. What amounts are still owing to these lawyers?

Mr. GUTHRIE:

1. A. Alexander, Vancouver, B.C.; C. G. Beeston, Vancouver, B.C.; Burns & Walkem, Vancouver, B.C.; Burton & Hodgson, Vancouver, B.C.; Collins & Green, Vancouver, B.C.; Cowan & Cowan, Vancouver, B.C.; Craig, Ladner & Co., Vancouver, B.C.; E. P. Davis, Vancouver, B.C.; W. S. Deacon, Vancouver, B.C.; L. C. Ford, Vancouver, B.C.; A. M. Harper, Vancouver, B.C.; Harris, Bull & Mason, Vancouver, B.C.; R. Rowe Holland, Vancouver, B.C.; R. S. Lennie, Vancouver, B.C.; Lucas & Lucas, Vancouver, B.C.; McNeill, Pratt & Co., Vancouver, B.C.; McPhillips, Duncan & McPhillips, Vancouver, B.C.; W. G. McQuarrie, Vancouver, B.C.; R. L. Maitland, Vancouver, B.C.; A. H. MacNeill, Vancouver, B.C.; C. M. O'Brian, Vancouver, B.C.; P. E. Pierce, Vancouver, B.C.; Reid, Wallbridge & Gibson, Vancouver, B.C.; T. Todrick, Vancouver, B.C.; Charles White, Vancouver, B.C.; Whiteside, Wilson & White, Vancouver, B.C.; A. D. Wilson, Vancouver, B.C.; W. G. McQuarrie, New Westminster.

2, 3 and 4. Payments are made by the various departments concerned after taxation by the Department of Justice.

HON. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX

Mr. LAFLECHE:

1. Was the Honourable Rodolphe Lemieux, during his term of office as Speaker, authorized to use the automobile belonging to the state for the use of his family?

2. Was he authorized to employ a chauffeur paid by the state?

3. Were the servants of his private dwelling paid by the state?

4. If so, what amount was paid to them?

Mr. BENNETT:

1. No. Mr. Lemieux used an automobile which he purchased himself.

2. Yes. A member of the House of Commons staff acted as his chauffeur when required.

3. Yes.

4. $33,430.18 during Mr. Lemieux' term of office, 8½ years.

BULL LOANING POLICY

Mr. BUCKLEY:

1. How many applications in respect of the bull loaning policy of the Live Stock branch of the Department of Agriculture have been received by the department, and from whom?

2. What are the names and addresses of the parties whose applications were accepted?

3. What are the names and addresses of the parties whose applications were not accepted?

4. Why were said applications not acceptable to the department?

5. Will the department accept applications now, and if not, why not?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): With regard to the fourth question, it would take weeks to prepare the answer. If there is any special information which the hon. gentleman requires in that connection I shall be very glad to get it for him, but the department would like to be relieved of giving a full answer to this question on account of the labour involved; and only for that reason. I would ask that the question stand as an order for return.

Mr. BUCKLEY: That will be quite acceptable.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stand as an order for return.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

COMPENSATION FOR SLAUGHTERED CATTLE

Mr. TETRAULT:

1. Have indemnities been paid by the federal government for slaughtered animals in the province of Quebec under the system of accredited herds since 1920, inclusive?

2. How many animals were slaughtered under the accredited herd scheme, by counties, and what is the amount of indemnities paid in each county?

3. How many head of cattle have been slaughtered in the province of Quebec, under the supervision of the federal government, without indemnities being paid, and how many in each county?

4. How many of said animals were aged one year and over?

ACCREDITED HERD SCHEME

Mr. TETRAULT:

1. Were animals, in the province of Quebec, tested and slaughtered under the supervision of the federal government, since the establishment of the accredited herd scheme, without any indemnity being paid?

2. If so, how many in each county?

3. What ages were the said animals?

TESTING OF CATTLE

Mr. TETRAULT:

1. Does the federal government make free tests, without indemnity, of herds outside of reserve zone and not entered under the accredited herd scheme?
2. If so, since what date?
3. How many farmers in the province of Quebec have taken advantage of said tests during the years 1929 and 1930?
4. How many of said farmers have applied to date and are waiting test?
5. What are the details by counties?

BULL LOANING POLICY

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron):

1. How many bulls have been bought for distribution under the bull loaning policy of the Minister of Agriculture between the first day of September, 1930, and the 15th day of May, 1931?
2. From whom were these bulls purchased?
3. What were the individual prices paid?
4. What were the breeds of the bulls purchased?
5. Where and in whose keeping have these bulls been placed?

HUDSON BAY INSURANCE RATES

On the orders of the day.

Mr. B. M. STITT (Nelson): May I be permitted to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) whether or not he has a statement to make to the house with regard to his efforts to secure fair and equitable marine insurance rates for the port of Churchill, Manitoba.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member implied, the department has been working on this question for a long time—in fact ever since we came into power. However this is a question beyond the control of the department. Insurance rates are largely within the control of the imperial shipping committee which the other day gave out a ruling. I must confess that the ruling is rather indicative of high rates from Churchill. May I add that we are working on the matter and shall continue to do so in an endeavour to secure a more suitable rate.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): May I ask the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gorlon), who is acting for the Minister of Labour (Senator Robertson), for some information? He promised to give me information as to who will be the delegates and advisers of Canada at the International Labour conference to be held this month.

[Mr. Tetrault.]

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the delegates to the International Labour conference of the League of Nations will be H. W. Macdonnell, secretary of the industrial relations committee of the Canadian Manufacturers Association; Mr. P. M. Draper, secretary-treasurer of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, as delegate appointed by the Trades and Labour Congress. There will be the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, High Commissioner for Canada in London and Doctor W. A. Riddell, Canadian advisory officer of the League of Nations at Geneva. There will be no advisers to the representatives.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In view of that answer may I say that when an opportunity presents itself I shall take occasion to protest against that representation.

DOMINION CENSUS

PREFERENCE GIVEN TO RETURNED MEN AS ENUMERATORS

On the orders of the day.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) if any instructions have been issued to the census commissioners to employ returned soldiers where possible?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Such instructions were originally given and were reiterated recently.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): But those instructions were not carried out.

Mr. MARCIL: I have a letter from a returned soldier in the province of Quebec. This gentleman is the father of a family of several children, but his application has been rejected.

Mr. STEVENS: I would like to receive further information in that connection.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Probably he is not a Tory.

Mr. STEVENS: I am afraid the hon. member has an evil mind.

SUPPLY—GRAIN RATES

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bennett for committee of supply and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Reid.

Mr. ERRICK F. WILLIS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, the debate on the amendment to go into supply has furnished the house with many important facts regarding freight rates in western Canada. In particular I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Weir) upon placing on Hansard various freight schedules. It seems to me however that as the matter is now under appeal to the privy council, and as the Prime Minister has agreed that he will press the appeal as early as possible, the hon. member who has moved the amendment should withdraw it. I say the amendment should be withdrawn because it is of vital importance that this problem should not become a political football. Like other western members of the house I am interested in securing lower freight rates for western Canada. At the same time however I am also interested in securing a market for western barley. It is because of my interest in the market for barley that I have risen to my feet at this time. During the debate the statement has been made that the poultry men of British Columbia cannot use western barley because of the prohibitive freight rates. I say that such is not the case, nor is it the real reason. I make that statement because I have under my hand statistics to show that in the Fraser valley of British Columbia and in Vancouver barley can be purchased more cheaply than corn. Of course, in addition, those rates also apply to wheat. I say that the poultry men of British Columbia still have an opportunity of feeding barley instead of corn. The figures in this connection are these:

Prices of barley and corn for domestic use, Vancouver, May 18, 1931

Barley, No. 3 C.W., bulk, Vancouver and Fraser valley points, $20 per ton.

Corn, Argentine (No. 2 or better), bulk carlots, Vancouver, $25 per ton; Fraser valley points, $27 per ton.

Corn, American, quotations delivery 10 days, Vancouver and Fraser valley points, $26 per ton.

These figures show that wherever corn is being fed in the province of British Columbia the poultry men of that province could save 20 per cent of their cost by feeding barley.

An hon. MEMBER: The hens will not eat barley.

Mr. WILLIS: An hon. member has interrupted me by saying that the hens will not eat barley. The answer to that statement is that the agricultural experts of Canada are either experts or they are not. Through these experts experiments have been made in the provincial agricultural colleges of Canada, and through the Department of Agriculture for the Dominion which show that the two grains are practically interchangeable. That is to say, for poultry purposes barley may be fed as well as corn. I say these men either are experts or they are not. Their judgment should be accepted or they should no longer be classed as experts of the Department of Agriculture. The argument may be used that the barley which is available in British Columbia is the product of that province. Such is not the case. In the year 1930 the province of British Columbia produced only 295,000 bushels of barley. In the province there are 22,800 farms whereon among other things 64,700 swine are being fed. Hon. members will readily see that the supply of barley would last for only a few days. I am informed by the agent of the Dominion seed branch at Vancouver that the barley available in British Columbia is practically all western barley. Again, the seed branch of the Department of Agriculture is right or it is wrong. I say that the correct reason as to why the British Columbia poultrymen are not feeding western barley has not been given. If hon. members wished to go further in the matter of poultry feeding they might turn to pamphlet No. 128, new series, Department of Agriculture, which gives the general conclusion that barley is interchangeable with corn. The statement has been made also that eastern Canada cannot feed barley because it is too dirty. May I bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that in Toronto the spread in price between barley and corn is 25 cents, and there are at the lake head at the present time 8,000,000 bushels of barley. If barley is dirty it can be cleaned for about 2 cents a bushel. It is available in Toronto for the use of poultrymen, swine feeders and live stock feeders at a saving of 23 cents a bushel as against corn. That is the saving which could be made by feeding barley instead of corn. During the last year there were brought into British Columbia 520,000 bushels of corn, the large part of which was fed to poultry. In my opinion by a tariff that corn should be made less available, and then they would have to feed western barley. The real reason behind the fact that the poultrymen of British Columbia do not feed barley is not a question of freight rates; the true reason is that these men who feed corn will not change the diet of their pet hens. If we are going to work together in this country they must feed barley. The reason they are not doing so at this time is that they do not agree with conclusions arrived at by the Department of Agriculture. They do not believe the experts in that department, those experts who in the past have done so much to help them. That is the real reason, and I say the time has arrived when the poultrymen of this country must come to the point of view of considering those Canadians in the middle west who are trying to make a livelihood by raising barley, rather than considering the dietetic eccentricities of any hen that ever laid eggs.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) made some statements with regard to export freight rates that I do not care to let go unchallenged. The hon. member expressed the opinion that export rates were, in effect, subsidized rates, that domestic business had to carry the whole burden not only of its own logical rates but the loss on export business. If this were so of course it would mean that the country as a whole is subsidizing export business. I do not agree with that view. It may be true of some commodity rates, but with respect to the particular rates that are under consideration—grain rates—I submit that the figures certainly prove the very opposite. I do not blame the hon. member or anyone else for holding such views, because the railway officials have for years past spent a great deal of time getting out propaganda to convince people that some of these commodity rates, such as the Crowsnest pass rates on grain, were a loss to the railway company. For instance, when testifying before the special railways committee in 1922, Mr. Beatty, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, predicted that if the Crowsnest pass rates were permitted to come into effect that year it would mean the Canadian Pacific Railway would fall short by $15,000,000 of paying its fixed charges and dividends. But what was the actual result? The Crowsnest pass rates did come into effect that year, and we find that the Canadian Pacific Railway, instead of being in the financial position predicted by Mr. Beatty, not only paid its fixed charges and dividends, but had a larger surplus than it had the previous year. Mr. D. B. Hanna, testifying for the Canadian National Railways, made a similar statement, and predicted that the operating deficit on the Canadian National system that year would be not less than $26,000,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: Was that with respect to the whole system or just the western part?

Mr. CAMPBELL: The whole system. Of course, that was only the predicted operating deficit; he did not take into account the fixed charges. I find that that year, instead of the deficit being, as he predicted, $26,000,000, it was considerably less than in the previous year $15,000,000.

[Mr. Willis.]

In this connection I might quote some figures published by the Canadian Pacific Railway with regard to their net earnings, which would seem to disprove the statement that the Crowsnest pass rates are losing rates to the railways. Let me take first the figures for 1924. In the first four months of that year, January, February, March and April, the net earnings on the Canadian Pacific system were a little over $5,000,000; for the second four months they rose to $9,000,000. Now, in those eight months there is a minimum of grain handled. But take the last four months, that is, September, October, November and December, the months in which the great bulk of the grain crop is handled, the months in which grain as a commodity furnishes a very much heavier percentage of the total traffic than it does in the other months of the year, and we find that for those four months the net earnings rose to the huge total of $22,000,000. Taking 1925, the net earnings for the first four months were $4,980,000; for the second four months $10,000,000; for the third four months —the very period in which according to the predictions made by these railway officials they ought to have had a heavy loss, the net earnings showed the enormous total of $26,000,000. Surely, sir, if these figures mean anything at all they mean that the grain crop handled under the Crowsnest pass rate is a profitable commodity to the railway. In 1923 I find that the total net earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway were $23,000,000, but the last four months accounted for $20,000,000 of the total, that is, the greater proportion was earned in the last four months. The Canadian National Railways show figures very similar. For 1924 the net revenue was $11,197,000, and almost all of this was earned in the four months in which grain was the largest part of the traffic.

Now let me take the operating ratio of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The operating ratio, I may explain, is the number of cents that a railway must spend to earn a dollar. In 1921, the last year in which the old grain rates were in effect, the operating ratio was 82.28; that is, the Canadian Pacific Railway had to spend 82.28 cents to earn a dollar. In 1922, the year that the Crowsnest pass rates came into effect, and the year in which Mr. Beatty had predicted the enormous loss to which I have referred, the operating ratio dropped to 80.55 cents; that is, it cost the Canadian Pacific Railway less to earn a dollar that year than it did in the preceding year.

In testifying before this same committee in 1922, Mr. D. B. Hanna stated that the Canadian Northern Railway had always paid its way when it was operated as a western railway, and 1915, the year it was linked up with the eastern section, was the first year it has shown a loss. On the western section of the railway grain is by far the largest part of the traffic, and naturally if grain was handled at a loss the figures would be altogether different.

Let me take some further Canadian Pacific Railway figures as published by the company. These show that for the five-year period, from 1907 to 1911 inclusive, the system produced net earnings on the eastern section of $44,500,000, and on the western section $91,500,000. In the next five year period, 1912 to 1916 inclusive, the eastern section showed net earnings of $70,000,000 while the western section showed net earnings of $144,000,000. This again would certainly seem to indicate that grain is not handled at a loss.

Now I am going to touch another angle of this question. It seems to me that the passenger service is one of the services of both railways on which there is a heavy loss, and this ought to be given more consideration than has been given to it up to the present time. It is difficult usually to secure figures of the relative passenger and freight earnings. It is only when a rate case is being heard by the railway commission or by the courts that the railway companies produce figures that throw some light on this particular question. In 1922 the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway did produce such figures before the railway commission. Those figures showed that for that year the freight service on the Canadian National Railways produced a net operating surplus of $20,000,000, while the passenger service resulted in an operating deficit of $8,500,000. That is, the railway company had to dip into the money earned by the carriage of grain, cattle, coal, lumber and other commodities, and take out $8,500,000 to pay the loss on the passenger service. In the same year even the Canadian Pacific Railway, efficiently managed though it may be and built as one unit from the very beginning, operating under the most favourable conditions, showed an operating deficit on the passenger service. These figures do not take into account at all the enormous investment in the passenger equipment of both railways. If these figures could be secured, they would show an enormous loss on the part of the passenger services, and it seems to me something could be done and in fact something must be done to cut down the cost of passenger service. I know people will complain when a train service is reduced, but the time has come when they will have to be allowed to complain. I think the duplication between the two great roads is almost a national disgrace. We have luxurious trains going across this continent every day; there are two of them leaving Winnipeg almost at the same time, and between Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal we find a tremendous amount of unnecessary duplication. Go through those trains to-day and you will find that in many cases not more than twenty-five per cent of the space is occupied. It seems to me the time has come when the government will have to talk business not only with their own railway but to the Canadian Pacific Railway as well, and show them that there must be some reduction in the duplication of these services. In that way it seems to me some relief may be given in the matter of freight rates.

Let us consider the question of the Canadian National hotels, which are linked up with the passenger service. We are told it is necessary for the Canadian National Railways to spend millions of dollars in building hotels in order to hold the passenger service. If the passenger service is being carried on at a loss, why need we spend this money to bolster up that losing service? Look at the enormous amount of money which has been spent during the last few years by the Canadian National management. It is a national disgrace. Four million dollars was spent in Saskatoon, in my own province. Perhaps the hon. member for Saskatoon might not agree with me, but I say it was a totally unnecessary expenditure, even though it was spent in my own province. That is one of the things saddled on our freight service, with which we must deal one of these days in order properly to reduce freight rates.

But perhaps I am getting away from the subject matter of the resolution before the house. The question of the disparity between domestic and export freight rates on grain is one that is exercising public opinion to a great extent in western Canada to-day, and it should be exercising opinion in eastern Canada as well, because after all the eastern farmer is paying the bill. While we are losing our market for a large quantity of our coarse grains, the eastern farmer is paying very much more than he should pay for his hog feed and chicken feed. There have been so many figures placed on the record during this debate already that I do not propose to cover the ground again, but I will just quote a few figures to show the extent to which this disparity exists. The freight rate from Saskatoon to Liverpool to-day is about 62 cents per hundredweight on grain, while from Saskatoon to Sherbrooke, Quebec, it is 70½ cents. From Saskatoon to Truro, Nova Scotia, the rate is 74 cents; to Guelph, Ontario, it is 65½ cents. Now take the figures via Vancouver. From Saskatoon to Liverpool via Vancouver and the Panama canal the average rate is 57 cents, but the export part of that rail rate is only 24 cents, whereas to ship grain to Langley, British Columbia, just a few miles from Vancouver, costs 50½ cents.

This is a matter which, it seems to me, must engage the attention of parliament to some extent. Of course since it is now sub judice, so to speak, perhaps we are not in a position to deal with it here, but I do believe the debate has served a useful purpose in giving to the public information which they should have in connection with this all-important question.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister has pointed out that if I press the question to a vote it will defeat my object; in view of the fact that he has given the assurance that he is seized of the importance of the matter, and that as soon as possible it will receive attention, I ask permission of the house to withdraw the amendment. In doing so I assure hon. members that I brought this matter before the house in the utmost sincerity on behalf of the farmers of British Columbia.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent leave is granted and the amendment is withdrawn.

Amendment withdrawn.

SUPPLY—DEPARTMENT OF MARINE

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I presume I will be in order now in discussing the main motion. As we are going into supply to discuss, among other things, the estimates of the Department of Marine, I wish to draw the attention of the house and the government to a matter of importance. I am sorry the Prime Minister is not in his place, because it was to him I particularly wished to address myself in pointing out the extent to which this department is lending itself to political jobbery.

I am not introducing an amendment to the resolution, expressing want of confidence in the government for the reason that this is largely a matter for the Prime Minister. He cannot be aware of the circumstances which I am going to mention. If after having heard them he takes appropriate action to cause justice to be done, then he is not deserving of a vote of want of confidence but rather a vote of confidence. If on the other hand he ignores the situation and, by clever jugglery of words and phrases, proceeds to minimize it and to support the department in its action, then a vote of want of confidence which would be rejected by a majority of thirty would not particularly affect the situation. I would rather leave it in that way, in his hands, and if he does not see that the justice is done which the conditions as I will represent them, warrant, then the censure of his action will be rather in the form of loss of esteem by the people of Canada generally.

In an ordinary way I would say that the minister in charge of the department could not be held blameworthy, but in one of these cases to which I will more particularly refer, he is unmistakably to blame, because I informed him in writing of the whole circumstances and he never answered my letter, which was written more than a month ago. So far as I know he has done nothing to remedy the situation. I have not attempted to make political capital out of this matter, as I think will be proved by the correspondence I will presently read; all I ask is that justice be done. As I say, under ordinary conditions, I would not be prepared to blame the minister; he is new to his position and it is generally admitted that he is in charge of a somewhat weak department. I am not here to take advantage of my parliamentary immunity to slander men in any branch of the service, and I want to say emphatically that there are very many good men in that department who would be only too willing to make a success of their branches and bring the whole department to a creditable standard if they received the least encouragement, or if they even received permission, but it is a well known fact that for years the department has been run under a formula something like this: Change nothing; do nothing; stand still. Ignore the fact that Canada is growing, with ever increasing requirements of service, and above all block anything that savours of progress or of improvement.

That sounds like a strong statement; I wish I had more time and I would demonstrate it to the fullest degree. Take the case the other day, when the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) introduced a bill to amend a few of what he considered the grosser errors in the Canada Shipping Act. I see that the Province somewhat misquoted me by saying that I had expressed the opinion that the bill was obsolete. I was not referring to the hon. member's bill but to the whole act, and I might have added at the same time, with a good deal of truth, that the whole department was obsolete. I am aware that the negotiations that have been going on in Britain for some time past—for the past two or three years or, at the outside, four—have somewhat precluded the idea of our revising the Canada Shipping Act at the present time. But that has been a matter of only two or three years. The fact is that the act has been rotten and obsolete for twenty years, yes, and thirty years. In 1908 or possibly 1911, I am not sure which, but over twenty years ago, somebody woke up in the department and drew up a complete revision of the act, and at that time, I believe, it was a wise and suitable one. I never heard any strenuous objections made to it. But they never got any further than that. That effort cost them so much exertion that they stood pat; and if any member came into the house full of fresh energy, and filled with a consciousness of the absurdity of our shipping act, and asked that action be taken, then the bill would be brought down from the shelf and dusted off, and they would show it as a proof of what they were prepared to do. Yes, they were prepared to do something. But the trouble is they never did anything. There was always some excuse: this man or the other was sick. It was always a case of "manana," as the Mexicans say. Literally it means "to-morrow", but the idiomatic significance of the word is that there are a whole lot of to-morrows—why, therefore, bother about to-day. Well, that is the spirit in which the act has been regarded during the last twenty years, and, as I say, it is still produced to-day to show what the department is prepared to do.

I can give many instances, much nearer the present time than that, to show where there have been neglect, evasion and failure to take action that has been vigorously called for. But what is the use of my wasting the limited time at my disposal? Those who have never had any business with the department are not interested, and to those who have had busines with them I do not need to state my case because my words find an echo in their own experience. It is possible that a strong, vigorous and determined man, taking hold of the department, might have reorganized it and made it a credit to the government of Canada. My hon. friend in charge of the department (Mr. Duranleau) sits opposite me, and, I admit, he presents all the appearances of having those characteristics of strength, vigour and determination. But unfortunately, so far as I have been able to find out, he has hitherto devoted all those energies only to making a strong, vigorous machine of his department, instead of making a strong and vigorous department.

I will cite three cases, the last the worst of them, and I could go on much longer if time permitted. The first is the case of a man named Beattie, who was on a seasonal patrol job on the west coast for three years. I have here certain letters with reference to the matter but I shall read only the pertinent portions of them, for there is no use going into a lot of preliminaries. In November last I wrote to the agent as follows:

> Beattie was on for three years running and did splendid work. Was on two years running at Pacheena. He is a returned man.
>
> He applied this season.
> Why was he rejected in favour of a non-returned man?

This is the reply I received:

> I regret that I am unable to reply to the query contained in this letter.

In desperation I then took the matter up with the minister himself, to whom I wrote:

> Dear Sir:
>
> A man named Beattie acted as patrolman on the west coast for three years running, and did very good work, which was admitted by all who came in contact with him. He is a returned man.
>
> He applied this season, as usual, and was rejected in favour of a non-returned man. Beattie took no part whatever in politics.
> Why was the preference given to a non-returned man?

The reply I received from the minister three weeks later was as follows:

> Dear Mr. Neill:
> Replying to your letter of the 8th April re Beattie, patrolman, west coast trail, I would point out that these positions are purely of a temporary and seasonal character. They do not continue from year to year. Last winter the Comox-Alberni men were taken from Bamfield.

To deal for a moment with the expression "non-permanent." The positions are non-permanent in that the work lasts only three months each year. But these men are classified, according to the Civil Service Commission, as "permanent seasonal." They are put on year after year. There must be thousands of men in all the departments who maintain their positions year in and year out, doing work regularly, re-appointed in a seasonal capacity. They are in that sense temporary, but it is not the custom to change them every year. If, however, that is to be the practice, how can you expect good service from men who know that their only requisite for employment is to stand in with the political powers of the moment? They know they will be fired the moment their party goes out. How, therefore, can they take an interest in their work? Indeed, they may be fired at the end of the next year, and I submit you cannot expect good work under those circumstances. No reference whatever is made to the fact that this man, a returned man, who had given three years of good and faithful service, particularly good service, was let out and his place taken by a non-soldier.

The next case is that of a man named Dean, from whom I have a letter and an affidavit. I will read the affidavit, which is explanatory.

Mr. DURANLEAU: What is the name?

Mr. NEILL: O. S. Dean. The affidavit reads:

I.. .. .. .

I received the following reply:

I beg to advise that it has now been ascertained—

After I stirred up the matter:

—that Evans is not a returned man. He was, however, properly recommended for the position and the appointment approved by the department.

Mr. HEAPS: Who recommended him?

Mr. NEILL: Ah! The next is a letter written a little later on by Mr. Martin-Cameron to myself, as follows:

I wrote to Mr. Graham (your late opponent), asked most politely if he would kindly explain how he came to recommend Evans when my application was in first and had three years' previous service besides being a returned man.

I said I felt that as he had offered himself as a candidate for parliament he would not deliberately act against one who had voted for him and also against the laws of the country unless he had some reason I could not fathom.

And later on in the letter he states:

If any person obtains money under false pretences I believe it is a criminal offence against the laws of the country, and this is what Evans or his friends have done, so that I shall be glad and much obliged if you will put my case as I state it before the proper minister at Ottawa. Unless the minister is prepared to compound a felony he has only one course open, that is to cancel Evans' appointment and appoint me in his place.

When Mr. Martin-Cameron states that he voted for Mr. Graham, there are three reasons for my believing that that is the truth. First of all, before the election he said to a friend of mine that he was going to vote against me; after the election he told me quite frankly that he had voted against me, and, furthermore, I know the man and I know his type, and when he says that he voted against me, I believe him. In fulfilment of the request contained in Mr. Martin-Cameron's letter, I took the matter up with the proper minister, as I was in duty bound to do. I wrote to the minister under date of April 15, as follows:

In October last there was a vacancy on the permanent crew of the Clayoquot life boat.

Tofino is the same place. The letter continues:

Mr. T. Martin-Cameron, a local resident, applied for the position in the regular way. He is a returned man, and had the further qualification of having acted on the winter crew of the life boat for three years. I may explain that a small crew is kept on the year round as permanent employees, and in the winter time four extra men are taken on as temporary.

On the recommendation of Mr. Thomas Graham, defeated government candidate, a man named V. Evans was appointed. He was represented as being a returned man.

Mr. V. Evans is not a returned man. Therefore, the position was obtained by misrepresentation and should be cancelled and a returned soldier, qualified by three years of experience, appointed in his place. Mr. Evans is probably still on probation.

These men are put on probation for six months and it would not be necessary to discharge this man, he could be told that he was not needed. My letter continues:

This is not a case of my trying to help a political supporter, because Mr. T. Martin-Cameron, I have every reason to believe, voted for my opponent; but it is a case of a qualified man wth years of experience, and a returned soldier, being turned down in favour of a man lacking these qualifications. I only ask that you should see justice done in the matter.

I was trying to shield the minister's reputation, and I put this matter up to him privately. I told him that if justice were done nothing would be heard of this matter. However, I did not receive an answer to that letter and, so far as I know, no action was taken. In due course I wrote to Mr. Martin-Cameron, as follows:

Rather than merely make political capital by explaining this matter in the house, which would not do you any particular good, I thought I would try to arrange it privately with the minister, and I wrote a letter to him, copy of which I enclose. You will see it is dated April 15th, and up to date I have received no answer. If that is to be the way, then the only alternative is to bring it up on the floor of the house and expose the deal, but if they would have agreed to do you justice I would not have said a word about it.

Mr. Martin-Cameron's reply reads as follows:

As you say, to have this matter brought up in the house might not do me personally any particular good, but I assure you my circumstances or feelings don't matter twopence as long as it helps in some way to stop or expose the political prostitution and abuse of patronage that seems so rampant in this province and possibly throughout the country.

Apparently he had written again to Mr. Graham, because he enclosed me a copy of the letter he received in reply. I would direct attention to one sentence in Mr. Graham's letter, reading as follows:

I see no reason why I should make any explanation re my actions.

That is the whole trouble with this system of political patronage—power without responsibility. Elections, yes and wars have been won on less popular slogans than that. What made the United States break away from the old country? It was taxation without representation, but is taxation without representation much worse than power without responsibility? I would not have dared to write such a letter to anyone because I am responsible to the people who sent me here. What happened in Comox-Alberni during the elections?

Did they elect two men, one to be a member and the other to be a tyrant; one man to represent them and the other to tyrannize over them? What is it but tyranny and oppression when the mass of the people have to be ordered and dictated to at the will of one man who acknowledges no responsibility and holds no mandate from the people whatever?

In another part of the district another instance occurred. A returned man, a Conservative all his life, had got a chance of getting a small job on relief work, but the secretary and the president of the local Conservative association laid their heads together and told the powers that be that this man was a Liberal, and one of the two recommended the other and he got the job. The returned man did not get it although he was a Conservative and was well known to be such when the matter was exposed. It is only an instance of the way these things are juggled with when you get power into the hands of irresponsible people, irresponsible in the sense of having no responsibility to the public. There is a body or party being got up in the province of British Columbia to try to do away with just such transactions. Among the evils of the party system which they list is this one:

> Appointments are not made by the heads of departments but by the patronage committee, a group of supporters who know of nothing and care for nothing but the services the applicant has rendered to the party.

One of the planks in their platform of reform reads as follows:

> To use every endeavour to destroy the party system for all time.

Then again we find the Province, a Conservative paper, saying editorially with reference to patronage:

> The public is ill served by such a system. There is no stability in it. A man who does not know from year to year whether he is to go on in his job or not, merely at the will of a change of government, cannot be a really good citizen. He becomes a time-server and a pusillanimous fellow of little worth.

That is from the Province, and I say more power to them. Some of our newspapers make a practice of publishing in their daily issues news that appeared in newspapers one hundred years ago, and by a curious coincidence, almost on the date that this transaction I have mentioned occurred, this excerpt from the Observer, of September 26, 1830, was reprinted. The Observer was a well-known British paper, and I commend this excerpt to the consideration of the house:

> The Duke of Newcastle has caused notices to be served on all his tenants who voted for Mr. Serjeant Wilde at the late Newark election—not only those who gave plumpers against him, but those who gave half a vote only to his nominee. The number of persons who will thus be turned out of their houses, many of them perhaps born in them, amount to fifty-one.

In those days it was open voting, and they knew how people voted. To-day it is only necessary to be a suspect. In those days they turned people out of their houses; to-day they turn them out of their jobs. Is there much difference? Have we advanced very much in the last hundred years, after all? That is the curse of our public service. Is the government big enough to end it or is it only going to make excuses and pass it on? A gentleman on the opposite side of the house the other day said that if the government did not do something that he wanted done in his district, they were writing his political epitaph. The idea struck me that a suitable epitaph under these circumstances would be something like this. I would not apply it to the government. I would not say that it was appropriate to the department or to the minister, or even to an individual, but I would suggest that it should be put upon the grave of political patronage. I would suggest a cross of brass, the most brazen of our metals, and this inscription, which I am quite sure would be welcomed by every well-thinking man and woman in Canada:

> If heaven is pleased when sinners cease to sin,
> If hell is pleased when rascals enter in,
> If earth is pleased of grafters to be rid,
> Then all, all are pleased, for—Patronage is dead.

So let it be.

SUPPLY—NEW BRUNSWICK—UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): There is something which I wish to draw to the attention of the house in connection with the expenditure of unemployment relief moneys in the province of New Brunswick. It will be remembered that last September I strongly opposed the placing under the supervision of provincial governments, especially the government of the province of New Brunswick, the expenditure of the unemployment relief grant that was voted at that session. I am not going to take up the time of the house to-day to repeat what I then said, but I wish to call attention of the hon. member who represents the Minister of Labour in this house to the manner in which this money has been spent in the province of New Brunswick under the supervision of the present provincial government.

I shall not enter into any details of the political discrimination that was exercised in certain counties of the province of New Brunswick, beyond pointing out one or two facts which I am in a position at any time to prove by the production of proper evidence. I wish, however, to call the attention of the house to an investigation that is now going on under a royal commission in the province of New Brunswick into the expenditure of provincial moneys under the Department of Public Works of the province. I refer more especially to the expenditure of moneys on roads and bridges. This investigation was asked for on the floor of the provincial legislature of New Brunswick last session, and a royal commissioner, the deputy attorney general, was appointed to investigate the charges. That investigation is now proceeding. Already five or six road supervisors have come before the commissioner and admitted their guilt in the padding of pay sheets. Some supervisors have admitted their guilt in that respect to the amount of thousands of dollars, others to lesser amounts. I find, Mr. Speaker, that of the five or six supervisors who have openly admitted their guilt, out of the sixteen or twenty who are to be brought before this royal commission, five are men who were employed as supervisors of roads to expend the money voted by this parliament for unemployment relief in the province of New Brunswick, under the supervision of the Department of Public Works of that province. The investigation that is now going on—I want to make this clear—does not touch the expenditure of the $20,000,000. It touches the expenditure of the revenues of the province on ordinary public works such as roads and bridges in the province of New Brunswick. But when I find that five or six supervisors have already admitted their guilt—

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): What have we got to do with that?

Mr. VENIOT: You have this to do with it. When I find that five or six supervisors who have already admitted their guilt before the royal commission now sitting in New Brunswick were the same men who were employed last fall and winter in supervising the expenditure of the moneys voted by this parliament for the relief of unemployment in New Brunswick, I think it is time that the Department of Labour took cognizance of the matter.

The other day I asked the hon. gentleman who represents the Minister of Labour whether the department received detailed accounts from the Department of Public Works of the province of New Brunswick. He replied that the department did not, that they received merely a certificate issued by the head of the department in the province, or by somebody connected with it, as to the proper expenditure of this money. If five or six supervisors have been guilty of padding pay sheets when they were spending the provincial moneys, there is every reason to suppose that they were equally guilty of padding pay sheets when they were expending money under the supervision of the provincial government, which had been voted by this parliament for the relief of unemployment in the province. However if that is not sufficient to stir the Department of Labour to demand an investigation into the doings of the Department of Public Works in the province of New Brunswick, I am going to cite still another instance. I have in my possession a certified copy of a statement showing expenditures made on a certain bridge in my own county called the Connell bridge. The bridge is twelve miles from my own residence. The bridge superintendent was a defeated candidate in the provincial elections which took place in the province of New Brunswick on June 19, 1930. I find by the pay sheet in my hand that the superintendent of bridges is given credit for ten hours work per day at the rate of 60 cents an hour, while the workmen under him were working only eight hours a day. If that is not padding a pay sheet, I want to know what it is. I have—

Mr. McDADE: Why does the hon. member not lay a charge?

Mr. VENIOT: I am laying a charge, right now. I am prepared to lay a charge and to put my seat up for it. I am laying the charge right now.

An hon. MEMBER: Let my hon. friend lay a charge.

Mr. VENIOT: I am laying a charge, right now. I am laying the charge that in this particular case the money expended by the Department of Public Works, of the province of New Brunswick, and money voted by this parliament, was not honestly expended.

An hon. MEMBER: Whom are you charging?

Mr. VENIOT: The superintendent of bridges, Mr. Theo. Hackey of Bathurst.

An hon. MEMBER: Whose appointee is he?

Mr. VENIOT: The appointee of the provincial government.

An hon. MEMBER: What has he to do with us?

Mr. VENIOT: He was appointed to spend your money; the money voted by this parliament.

Mr. CASGRAIN: He is a Tory.

Mr. VENIOT: I have objected to it. I have stated that the provincial government should not expend this money, because I have noticed the loose way in which the Department of Public Works of the province of New Brunswick has been administered.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the charge?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Hon. members opposite do not see anything wrong with it.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not wish to take up more time of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. VENIOT: I do wish, however, to give a further instance or two of the way in which money was expended, and these instances I can prove. One particular case refers to a certain man in the parish of St. André, in the county of Madawaska, who contracted to do some hauling of stone given by him free providing he would be paid for the hauling. His offer was accepted. After he had started work it was learned he had not voted the right way in the provincial election, and the supervisor in charge who had been the defeated candidate in the provincial election, ascertained that this man was receiving money from the unemployment fund provided last September was instrumental in having him thrown off the job because he had not voted properly in the provincial election. That is another charge I make and I can prove it. If the house wants names I can give them.

An hon. MEMBER: That is an old custom down there, apparently.

Mr. VENIOT: It is no worse than the customs which have prevailed in the province of Ontario. In that province fraud after fraud was proven against a certain government.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member cannot prove it?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes I can. And that is no worse than—

Mr. COTNAM: That government has been out of power for thirty years.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. LAPOINTE: One at a time.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Stick to New Brunswick.

Mr. GOTT: I suggest that the hon. member—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. VENIOT: I think I shall have to send the hon. gentleman across the line to interview another customs officer. Then he might perhaps get better—

Mr. GOTT: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. GOTT: All right.

Mr. VENIOT: Let me give another instance or two. Up to within a year or two ago it was the practice of the Department of Public Works of New Brunswick to forward directly to individuals cheques for work performed by them. I do not know when the change took place whereby cheques were not sent directly to the individual, but were sent to the supervisor for distribution to the workmen. What happened? In my own town and in my own parish men had worked and earned money under the Unemployment Relief Act. Three days before Christmas the time for payment came and their cheques were sent for distribution to the two defeated candidates in the provincial elections.

An hon. MEMBER: Shame.

Mr. VENIOT: This was Dominion money. Those cheques were not distributed to the men on Christmas eve. At a public conference called in Bathurst to deal with the unemployment situation I asked one of these defeated candidates why the cheques were not distributed. He said they were held back because all the cheques had not come. Those men had to spend Christmas without a dollar to buy anything for their families. That is how the unemployment money was spent in my district. Let me go further.

Mr. SPENCE: We had better vote.

Mr. VENIOT: It is all right for the hon. member to interject, but let me say to him that while he may have had sufficient money in his pocket to buy his Christmas dinner those poor people had not one cent. Not only were the cheques held up by the defeated candidates but they were handed to merchants in the town of Bathurst to some of whom moneys were owing by the workmen. Money due two years back was kept out of their cheques, and their families were left without a cent.

An hon. MEMBER: Were they postmasters?

Mr. VENIOT: They were not postmasters, and they were not ex-postmasters. In the lower end of the county of Gloucester some ex-postmasters may have been treated in that way since the present government has come into power. Their heads are being cut off right and left. Now, I wish to go one step farther.

An hon. MEMBER: Fire another shot.

Mr. VENIOT: Let me go one step further. Let me relate another harrowing case. I cite the case of a man who was to receive $9.90 under the Unemployment Relief Act. He was a poor man and had only one arm. At home his wife and child were sick in bed. Although his cheque came, it went to the supervisor. The supervisor called him in and said, "Your cheque for $9.90 is here." The man replied, "I am glad to get it; you know about the state of affairs at my home; I am glad to get it." "No," the supervisor said, "you cannot get this cheque. You owe $14.35 to the agricultural society for two years and you will not get the cheque." That cheque he never got. They threatened to gaol him for the amount, and he had to go out and borrow the difference between $9.90 and $14.35 and pay it over to the supervisor. He had not a dollar left. Next day his wife and child were both dead and he had to borrow money to bury them. That is the way this money has been spent to relieve unemployment.

Mr. McDADE: What did you ever do to relieve unemployment?

Mr. VENIOT: I never did anything like that. One thing is certain, if I did undertake to do anything for unemployment I would so surround it with safeguards that a poor man would not be robbed.

Mr. McDADE: While you were in power you did not do anything.

Mr. VENIOT: No poor man ever came to my door to be turned away with a harsh word. I do not know whether I can say as much for the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. McDade). He seems to be very much touched by the story I am relating. Right in his own county the cheques were never sent to the men who worked on the Tabusentac hill; they were sent to the supervisors and distributed among the merchants.

Mr. McDADE: Not at all.

Mr. VENIOT: I make that statement and the hon. gentleman cannot deny it.

An hon. MEMBER: The human heart is touched.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not think there is any human heart at all in the distribution of this money. I am going to appeal to the acting Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) to obtain from the Department of Public Works of New Brunswick certified paysheets such as the one I hold in my hand, so that the matter may be looked into . I will give him the names on the paysheets I want, and I ask him to obtain those sheets. Further, when they are obtained I want a special investigation, based on the charges I make with respect to the paysheet I hold in my hand now. This is no hearsay. I know what I am talking about. Besides this paysheet showing this man working for ten hours a day at 60 cents an hour while the men only worked eight hours a day on the bridge according to the paysheet, that paysheet shows this superintendent employed for every day the men worked, and I can prove he was not on the work every day. Is that charge definite enough? Surely it ought to be. When I ask for an investigation I do not want any investigation held in the haphazard way that investigations are now being held in the province of New Brunswick. Into the charges I make I want an investigation held by a judge of a county or superior court, who can hear both sides and before whom we can have the parties represented by lawyers. I do not want the investigation held by a partisan commissioner. I make these charges and I am prepared to stand by them on the one condition—that a judge of a county or superior court shall be appointed to hold the investigation.

Mr. B. F. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, had it not been for some of the references which have been made by my hon. friend the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) I would not have said a word to prolong the discussion, but I think it only fair on behalf of the Minister of Public Works in the New Brunswick government and the other officials of his department who are and have been conducting the work, that something at least should be said in their defence. I am inclined to think, however, that it would have been advisable to have left the whole question in abeyance until some report had been received from the royal commission that is now making an investigation. Until that report is received by the people of New Brunswick I am thoroughly satisfied that it would have been much better to have left this question entirely alone. On behalf of the Minister of Public Works of New Brunswick I do want to say that when the report is made to the provincial government I am fully satisfied that if it be found that any persons have been found guilty of taking funds out of the exchequer of the province, or of receiving moneys unfairly or unjustly, not only will they be asked to make restitution but they will be prosecuted according to law. I am also satisfied that no one should attempt to defend any person who has unjustifiably appropriated public funds, and I am convinced that no member of the present provincial government in New Brunswick has been charged with one single act such as my hon. friend the ex-Postmaster General has endeavoured to impute to that government.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not charge any member of the government of New Brunswick.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): My hon. friend left that impression.

Mr. VENIOT: Not at all. I made no imputations and no insinuations. I ask that the hon. member withdraw his remark.

Mr. SPEAKER: Having heard the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) make his statement, I think what the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Smith) has said is fair comment.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there was no question in my mind, and I do not think there could have been any question in the mind of any hon. member of this house, but what the hon. ex-Postmaster General desired to impute was that the government of New Brunswick had wilfully and wrongfully taken the money that was voted for the relief of unemployment, that they had filched it, that it had gone through the hands of dishonest people.

Mr. VENIOT: That is a poor defence.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): I would recall this to your mind, Mr. Speaker. In New Brunswick we have 1,300 supervisors of roads, and they are selected from men in every walk of life, in some cases men of very little education, and in some cases I doubt if we are able to get thoroughly honest men.

Mr. POULIOT: Might I ask a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): There is no one who understands that statement better than my hon. friend the ex-Postmaster General. He knows what happened during his regime as Minister of Public Works in New Brunswick. During that time I went to his own county of Gloucester and held an investigation myself. He would not allow me, a layman, any legal assistance. Being an ordinary farmer and knowing very little about the law, I conducted the investigation. What did we find? We found that boys under eight years of age were on the payroll when the ex-Postmaster General was Minister of Public Works in New Brunswick. We found, as the hon. gentleman well knows, that men's names were on the payroll who had never seen the locality or done a day's work, and who admitted to him that they had been working on the sea during that whole period. I ask my hon. friend what sort of justice he meted out to those people. He came back to the legislature of New Brunswick and exonerated every one of them. He held them blameless, and said there were no charges against them, but that the province had received full value for all the money expended.

Mr. VENIOT: I wish to correct my hon. friend.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): You would not permit a question while you were speaking.

Mr. VENIOT: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. GOTT: I rise to a point of order, too.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Gloucester says he is raising a point of order, which he has a right to do.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman is making a statement which cannot be borne out by the facts. I do not think he is doing it intentionally, but the records will show that the commissioner referred to by him was dismissed and punished, yet to-day he is one of the supervisors under the Tory government.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): I would ask the ex-Postmaster General who held that investigation.

Mr. VENIOT: I held it. It was a departmental investigation. If the hon. gentleman will take his seat I will answer his question.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is all out of order.

Mr. VENIOT: I was asked a question and I am answering it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. gentleman was not asked to make a speech. Someone must enforce the rules and I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, to do so.

Mr. VENIOT: There was a departmental investigation held by the minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): If the hon. member wants to make a speech I suppose he can do so.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not want to make a speech, but the hon. gentleman asked me a question and I am answering it.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): But I want to point out to this house the unfairness of the ex-Postmaster General in making such a reference to the government of New Brunswick. He knows that he went to Gloucester county and held the investigation to which I have referred. He knows that the facts I have stated are absolutely correct.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): We of the province of New Brunswick know the ex-Postmaster General; we know how fair he is in his references to any political matters.

Mr. VENIOT: They know you too.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): I am perfectly willing that they should know me. Let me say this in closing: The other night when the hon. gentleman was speaking he referred to himself as the lone star from New Brunswick. I was not surprised that he compared himself to a planet, but I am sure he did not mean the north star, because the north star still shines in the heavens as much as it ever did, while my hon. friend has lost his hold in the province of New Brunswick, as he knows. He does not shine down there as brilliantly as he once did. I regret having had occasion to take up so much of the time of the house on a question of this kind, but I did feel it was only fair to do so on behalf of the government of New Brunswick. I think we should wait until that royal commission has brought in its report in order to see what action is taken upon it.

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): I do not intend to speak at any length on this matter, but since the nightshirt of Long Lake told me to sit down, I will get up. When you were a student at the university, Mr. Speaker, do you remember being told that the greatest orator of all times, Demosthenes, used to put stones in his mouth when speaking on the beach, in order to have a louder voice? I noticed with pleasure that my hon. friend from Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Smith) did not put potatoes in his mouth when he spoke, which explains why he spoke with so much fluency. I am always interested when people from New Brunswick discuss the topics of their beautiful province; it is a great entertainment for all of us when they get into the heat of a discussion. To sum up that debate between my good friend the ex-Postmaster General and my new friend the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, may I say that it will be better for the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton if he does not speak so much about this matter, because it smells very badly.

Mr. GOTT: Speak sense.

Mr. POULIOT: I was not referring to the hon. member; I am not within range of his halitosis. I am speaking of the situation which exists there. I have been told repeatedly that things are so bad in New Brunswick that ex-Premier Baxter resigned in disgust.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE

Department of Marine—salaries, $432,530; contingencies, $70,000.

Mr. POWER: May I ask the minister if the rumour which has been circulated is true, that Mr. Lucien Dansereau is to be appointed deputy minister?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I suppose my hon. friend knows that these appointments are in the hands of the Prime Minister. According to law and practice, the heads of the various departments are appointed by the Prime Minister, so the question will have to be directed to him.

Mr. POWER: On the recommendation, I suppose, of so important a member of the ministry as the Minister of Marine?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I can answer my hon. friend in this way: There is no vacancy at the present time.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous services relating to navigation and shipping, $53,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is the minister prepared now to publish the report in regard to Ripple rock in British Columbia?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The report is now in the hands of the printer and we expect to have it in a day or two.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): And table it?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Can the minister give some explanation with regard to the statement which I understand was issued by his department a few day ago in regard to insurance in connection with Hudson bay? The matter came up to-day on a question asked by the hon. member for Nelson. The Minister of Railways indicated that he had further representations to make, but I should like to know what this statement means in terms of dollars and cents in relation to rates of insurance via Hudson bay and also in relation to the present rate of insurance on grain via the St. Lawrence. I would direct the minister's attention particularly to this paragraph:

> The report also says the joint hull committee has agreed to reduce the rate of the additional premium for suspension of the North American warranty, with respect to vessels passing Cape Sidley inwards on and after August 10 and leaving the last landing port in Hudson bay on or before September 30. The reduction will be from 60 shillings to 50 shillings per cent per hundred pounds insured value, plus 2 shillings per ton on gross registered tonnage.

I do not know what this means, but no doubt the minister does, since this statement was issued from his department. We should very much appreciate an explanation.

Mr. DURANLEAU: In a few days we shall have the report of the committee and we will then give the information.

Mr. HEENAN: The wages of the men in the Halifax shipyards have been held back for some time through a dispute between themselves and the shipyard authorities. Has that question been settled yet?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The matter is going to arbitration and we are now looking for an arbitrator.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not just understand what the minister means in this case by arbitration. The Acting Minister of Labour is in his place, and between the two they might furnish me with the information. I am not criticizing; I am only asking for information. As I understand the situation, a minister of the crown gave a decision as to what were fair wages in the construction of an icebreaker in the Halifax shipyards. Under the laws of Canada that decision was final; no other tribunal had a right to decide the matter, according to the laws of the country. I asked the Marine department to retain a sufficent sum in order to pay these men what is due them. Do I understand that the question is to be arbitrated as to whether or not the men are entitled to their money, or is the question of arbitration merely one between the government and the company to determine who shall pay the money?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I understand there is a disputed item in the contract of the company who employed these men. I do not think there is any dispute as to the money being due the men. If I remember rightly, when I had a conference with the Minister of Labour some time ago he told me that the amount due the employees was around five or six thousand dollars. We have in hand the sum of ten thousand dollars deposited by the company, which is a security that these men will be finally paid. At present we are trying to get the consent of the company to pay the men out of this fund, but if we cannot succeed in this we shall take action. The men are fully protected. It is merely a question of time.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not want to labour the question but I do desire to see justice done these men, because I know something about the matter.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Justice will be done.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not mind if the question of arbitration lies between the government and the contractors as to which of these two parties shall pay the men; but there should be no arbitration proceedings as to whether or not they are entitled to the wages.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is no doubt that the men are entitled to their wages.

Mr. HEENAN: Thanks, very much.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Is the construction of the Ile-aux-Coudras pier in the St. Lawrence completed?

Mr. DURANLEAU: That question will come up under another item.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Then I will ask it at that time.

Mr. POWER: Can the minister give any details regarding the construction of a new building to provide quarters for the pilots in Quebec?

Mr. DURANLEAU: That will come under the item of administration of pilotage. I shall have no objection to giving the information then.

Item agreed to.

To continue subsidies for wrecking plants—Quebec and British Columbia, $70,000.

Mr. REID: What are these wrecking plants?

Mr. DURANLEAU: They are salvage plants.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What companies in Quebec have subsidies?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is one company in Quebec and there is one on the Pacific coast.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is the name of the Quebec company?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company, Limited.

Mr. CASGRAIN: How much do they receive?

Mr. DURANLEAU: They have been receiving $60,000 a year, from last year. They have a contract.

Mr. POWER: Is the minister aware that within the last year or eighteen months the control of this company has passed from the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company to an American concern, the Chaplin Company of New York? I do not ask the question by way of criticism, because the change probably occurred long before he became a minister; but I would ask him to endeavour as soon as the period of the subsidy has expired to see to it that control gets into Canadian instead of American hands.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Does the hon. member mean that the majority of the shares are in the hands of Americans? I have not heard a word of that.

Mr. POWER: I am giving that information so that when the contract comes up for renewal the minister will be aware of the situation.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Has the minister received an application this year for a subsidy from the Maritime Wrecking Company, who have lately established quarters at Rimouski?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not think we have received any requests of that kind.

Mr. QUINN: Have any applications for subsidies been received from dredging companies in the maritime provinces?

Mr. DURANLEAU. I do not think so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: How long does that contract run?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The hon. member means the contract with the Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It will expire on May 1, 1932.

Mr. NEILL: What proportion of this vote will go to the British Columbia wrecking plant this year, and what sum was expended last year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is an existing contract between the department and the Pacific Salvage Company Limited of Victoria. This contract is for a period of ten years and will expire on July 2, 1935, and is for $10,000 per year.

Mr. PLUNKETT: Why is there such a difference between the amount expended in the province of Quebec and the amount expended in British Columbia? I understand that Quebec is to get $60,000 while British Columbia will receive only $10,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Quebec is larger than British Columbia.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I was not in charge of the department when these contracts were entered into. These companies probably knew at the time they entered into the contracts just what the service was worth. The wrecking company in Quebec has had a lot to do during the past few years. While I was on the western coast I was met by the directors of the Pacific company and they intimated that the amount they received was not adequate for the services rendered. I was inclined to increase the contract price had business conditions improved.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Do not offer anything, they will ask for it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: During these times of depression we have to be very careful about expenditures, and I think this contract should be allowed to stand.

Mr. MARCIL: How many wrecks occurred on the St. Lawrence river last year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I would have to read a long list.

Mr. MARCIL: I would be satisfied with the number.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The cases are not numbered.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the number been reduced as the result of the improvements made in the river?

Mr. DURANLEAU: They have been reduced in number.

Mr. PLUNKETT: The information given by the hon. minister is very comforting, but upon inquiry of the department I am informed that the grant to Quebec this year has been increased from $35,000 to $60,000.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This year?

Mr. PLUNKETT: That is the information I received, for the year 1931.

Mr. DURANLEAU: If I am not mistaken, that was the amount paid last year.

Mr. PLUNKETT: The information is for 1931.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is nothing new in the item this year.

Mr. PLUNKETT: It is given as $60,000 for Quebec and $10,000 for British Columbia, while last year it was $35,000 for Quebec and $10,000 for British Columbia. That is the information contained in the order for return.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The amount of $35,000 was voted in 1929-30, and then a new agreement was entered into increasing this amount to $60,000 for 1930-31, and that was the amount paid last year.

Mr. PLUNKETT: I would suggest that a new agreement be made with the British Columbia company as soon as possible.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It would depend upon the amount of work they have to do.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is a list received from these salvage companies as to the amount of work done during the year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We receive such reports.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is the amount of subsidy based on the services rendered as outlined by the report?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The amount voted is governed by existing contracts for the maintenance of certain plants. For instance, in the case of the western company, the contract will continue until 1935.

Mr. MacINNIS: The hon. minister stated that when he visited the coast early this year the salvage company had suggested that they were not receiving enough for the services performed. He stated that if the financial position had been better he would have been inclined to increase the amount paid. Would that increase be justified by the report made to the department?

[Mr. Marcil.]

Mr. DURANLEAU: According to the information I have received from the department, it would be justified, and from what I saw when in the west I am of the same opinion. Navigation is increasing every year and very often they are called upon to assist wrecks, so in better times probably we will increase this item.

Mr. MacINNIS: I do not suggest that the item be increased unless it is warranted.

Mr. NEILL: This company keeps up a very valuable plant. They are not paid for what they do in the way of assisting wrecks, as the boats assisted pay for that service, but the subsidy is paid for their maintaining a plant in constant operation. They keep steam up all the time on one or two boats in the harbour of Esquimalt. The minister stated that shipping was increasing and consequently these companies had more to do, but that is an argument which would work both ways; if they do more business they would be entitled only to a smaller subsidy. If the minister contemplates increasing the subsidy I trust he will do it along the lines of my request to the late government, that is that this company keep a boat at Bamfield at least during the three winter months. The present service is maintained by one of the naval boats and one of the fishery protection boats, but neither boat is really suitable for the work. The Givenchy and the Armentiere are fairly good sea boats, but they are very light and if required to put out in a heavy storm in order to rescue a ship they would not be able to do very much. They have not the weight of vessel nor the power of engine to do the work, and it would take them all their time to take care of themselves. These boats are well manned and I know they would make a very gallant effort in case of emergency; nevertheless they are not the right type. The boat required is similar to those maintained by the salvage companies, and if an additional $10,000 were paid, I think this company should be required to keep one of their boats at Bamfield for at least the two worst winter months; for the other two winter months the naval or fishery protection boats could meet the situation. I think if he looks into the matter he will find that what I have stated is the fact.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The department has in mind the change suggested by my hon. friend if the subsidy is increased.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous and unforeseen expenses, $12,000.

Mr. ROSS: I wish to bring to the minister's attention certain recommendations that have been made by the Canadian Navigators' Federation. Would it be appropriate for me to bring this matter up on this particular item?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. ROSS: The Canadian Navigators' Federation come to Ottawa every year and present their recommendations to the minister, and as a rule after they have made their recommendations and presented their petitions to the minister the house and the country never hear anything further of them. I must admit, however, that it is the opinion of the federation that this year they received the best hearing they have had in the existence of the federation. Their recommendations affect shipping and the whole country so far as navigation is concerned, although perhaps they may be more directly applicable to the great lakes.

First they ask that consideration should be given by the department to the load line for vessels on the great lakes. This is a very important matter. Many vessels have been lost with all hands owing to their being overloaded, more especially in the fall months of the year when ice forms freely on an already overloaded vessel.

I do not know whether the minister wishes to reply to each recommendation as I mention it or whether he would prefer that I give them all first and then let me have his opinion on them afterwards, but certainly I would like to have an expression of opinion from the minister as to these recommendations.

The second recommendation is that an inspection be made of all gas and diesel driven vessels over ten gross tons. They state that there are over three thousand of these vessels now on the great lakes, including lake Winnipeg, and as they are engaged in competition with steam driven vessels in carrying passengers, the federation ask that they be inspected and be required to carry life-saving equipment. There is no inspection of these gas and diesel driven vessels at the present time as there is in the case of steam driven vessels, and to the layman it does look as though we had now reached the stage where an inspection of these boats is necessary.

Next they ask that direction finders or wireless be provided on all great lakes vessels. The government is now spending thousands of dollars erecting radio beacons on the lakes, and yet only a few vessels are equipped with direction finders.

They also request an annual inspection of all compasses of vessels over ten gross tons. That is not done, and I think the time has come when it should be done. If the compasses are found defective they should be adjusted, the federation urges, and a deviation card furnished to the federal inspector, the owners, and to the master of the vessel. Three-quarters of all the disasters to vessels, they claim, are caused by faulty compasses, yet there is no law to compel owners to have their vessel compasses inspected or adjusted.

Next they urge that increased life-saving apparatus be provided on the great lakes. This has more particular reference to the next item, for the life-saving service, which item I am sorry to see is reduced. At the foot of the great lakes every year there are wrecks involving loss of life, and no life saving apparatus is available unless we solicit the aid of our American cousins. There are several wrecks at such a point as the Main Ducks, and yet we have no life-saving apparatus of any kind at this important point on the great lakes.

They also ask that the sick mariners' fund be extended to apply to the great lakes. At the present time it covers only as far as Montreal, in other words the head of ocean navigation. They claim that it should be extended to Fort William; for the greatest volume of shipping in the world exists on the great lakes.

They also recommend that seventy-five per cent of all Canadian products be carried or transported on British or Canadian vessels.

They also ask that investigations into wrecks be held before a judge and jury of shipmasters instead of by a one-man court as at present. Why should one man be vested with such powers? The shipmaster should be given the same chance as any other man to defend himself. I have come across several cases where I thought it was rather unfair that the shipmaster and the officers should not have been given a hearing.

Next they ask for a revision of the Canada Shipping Act. I think it is quite apparent to this house and to every person who is interested in shipping that there should be a revision of that act.

They also ask for compulsory pilotage on the upper St. Lawrence. I know that the shipowners oppose this, and claim that they hire their own pilots. That is not objected to by the federation, so long as there is a pilot on board and the pilot is a certificated official of the government. At the present time if a wreck occurs there seems to be no way of placing the responsibility.

They also ask for a change in the coastal laws. This has been a favourite subject of my own for some time. It is a question as to which there should be some discussion, as to the abrogation of the present coastal laws.

They also ask that in support of our own Canadian dry docks an amendment be made respecting the assessment of repairs. At the present time the United States charges 50 per cent duty on any repair work done in Canada. Canada, on the other hand, charges only 25 per cent. What is the result? Last fall a wreck occurred at the Main Ducks, involving repairs to the amount of about $70,000. That work went to Ogdensburg instead of a Canadian dry dock, and the vessel was a British bottom.

These are some of the points which the Canadian Navigators' Federation has brought up, and unless we get from the minister an expression of opinion with regard to them, or some answer is made to the deputation which waited upon him, these recommendations will simply die as has happened in years past. It is for that reason I am bringing the matter up in the house, and I trust that the minister will give me a reply respecting these recommendations.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I thank the hon. member for Kingston City for his kind remarks with respect to the reception which the navigators received when they came to my office. I was very much interested in all the suggestions they made at that time, and I am pleased to say that their brief has been put into the hands of the experts of my department. I am not myself an expert in these matters, but I have issued a direction that the experts in the department study each of the points dealt with in the brief and make reports thereon. My department and myself are prepared to give every possible attention to the views expressed by the navigators. I hope my hon. friend from Kingston City will notice that within a short time we shall be giving attention to the views of the navigators of Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister has said that he is not an expert in these matters but has asked his officials to bring in certain changes. May I urge that changes with regard to these matters are very long overdue?

The Canada Shipping Act is founded on the British Shipping Act of 1854 and there have been very few changes in our act since that time. In that interval the British shipping acts have been almost entirely revolutionized: ours remains practically unchanged. I understand that in 1913 a revision was proposed, but the war intervened and nothing was done. I wonder whether the action of the minister in referring this brief to the officers of his department means that after another twenty years we may hope to have some sort of report. I understand that regarding some provisions of the Canada Shipping Act we cannot take action because of our relationship with Great Britain; any amendments we propose might come into conflict with the British shipping laws. In the meantime however we are hopelessly behind the shipping legislation of Great Britain. It seems to me that although the men who go down to the sea in ships are not directly represented here, something ought to be done in their behalf. Indeed the very fact that they are not directly represented places upon hon. members of the house a greater responsibility to see that something is done to protect their interests.

Sir EUGENE FISET: What about Admiral Duff?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Admiral Duff may represent certain interests on the Atlantic, but I doubt whether he represents the interests of a great many of the sailors and marine engineers. I do not wish to go into details concerning the Canada Shipping Act, but I could not better indicate how far behind we are than to point out that the forms in use to-day giving the accounts of wages of seamen are still in pounds, shillings and pence. That may not be of great importance but at least we should compute the wages of seamen in dollars and cents rather than in English terms. Probably I should not use the word "compute." In practice dollars and cents replace the pounds, shillings and pence. Our form however follows that in use in Great Britain, and it seems to me that when we are talking about the status of Canada Canadians ought at least to consider themselves as having attained the status which should enable them to use forms that conform to the ordinary commercial papers we use in this country. I give that only as an illustration of the present state of the Canada Shipping Act and its administration. It is hopelessly out of date, and I hope that before we pass the estimates of this department the minister will give us definite assurance that the matter will not again be pigeon-holed for a number of years. I hope it will not be put into cold storage and brought out years hence. We should have some assurance that the Canada Shipping Act will be revised in the near future.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Will my hon. friend tell me to what form he refers?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The wage account form.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Because I have before me the forms as provided by the statute, and I see that dollars and cents are mentioned, and not pounds, shillings and pence.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have before me a form actually used showing an account of wages. It was used in connection with one of our ships in the Canadian government Merchant Marine, and the particular document in question is dated December 24, 1930.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a definite statement from the minister as to when the anomalies of the Canada Shipping Act will be corrected, and when we shall have consideration of revisions to act.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is no doubt that there have not been many amendments to the Canada Shipping Act within the last few years.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think 1854 is correct, is it not?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There have been amendments since that time.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Very slight.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is no doubt that the act is an old one. My hon. friend is right when he said that it should be revised completely. It is the intention of the Department of Marine to study the act, having in mind a complete revision. As soon as the Statute of Westminster has been adopted we will see that a complete reform of the act is made.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Thank you.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Trés bien.

Mr. MacINNIS: I would like to make a few remarks to show how much superior the British act passed in 1894 is to the Canada Shipping Act of to-day. With regard to the scale of provisions for seamen I would refer hon. members to the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. DURANLEAU: What section?

Mr. MacINNIS: Schedule A, page 238.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, I have it.

Mr. MacINNIS: About ten items are included in the schedule of provisions, including bread, beans, pork, flour, peas, tea, coffee, sugar and water. That is the fare at the present time provided under the Canada Shipping Act. Now we shall turn to the British Shipping Act of 1906 where we find a very extensive list, including water, soft bread, biscuits, salt beef, salt pork, preserved meats, fish, potatoes, vegetables, split peas, green peas, beans, flour, rice, oatmeal, tea, coffee, sugar, milk, butter, marmalade or jam, syrup or molasses, suet, pickles, dried fruits, fine salt, mustard, pepper, curry powder and onions. All hon. members know the important part played by proper food in the life of the ordinary man. Under the Canada Shipping Act men go to sea with provision for only a few essential items of food. At this moment I am not saying that is all that is carried by ships at sea, but that is all they need to carry in order to comply with the act. I think that in this one essential something should be done. There is also the fact that no medical examination is required by the Canada Shipping Act. It very often happens that seamen are taken ill with infectious diseases very shortly after leaving port, and because of the confinement and the limited quarters on board they are a much greater menace to those working with them than they would be on shore, and of course they cannot be properly taken care of until the boat reaches port. I agree with the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), and I am glad to have the assurance of the hon. minister that very shortly steps will be taken to revise the act.

Item agreed to.

Life saving service, including rewards for saving life, $75,000.

Mr. NEILL: This is one of the few items showing a decrease—a very substantial one of 25 per cent. As this is for life saving, I should like to ask the minister how is the economy going to be effected; will they save this man and not the other, or will they discriminate according to the race or religion or politics of those shipwrecked?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have reduced the amount by reason of the fact that the amount voted in previous years was never expended. For instance, in 1929-30 only $60,478 was expended, in the previous year $53,380; in fact we have never expended more than $60,000, so we thought this year we could reduce the amount to $75,000.

Mr. NEILL: There is plenty of opportunity to spend the whole vote. The condition of the buildings at Bamfield and Tofino is such that they require attention.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I understand they are being taken care of at the present time.

Mr. ROSS: Will the minister give the number of life-saving stations on the great lakes?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have stations at Cobourg, Port Stanley, Southampton and Point Pelee.

Mr. ROSS: I hope that before another year the minister will take into consideration the need for some life-saving station at the foot of the lakes. There is no doubt that the Cobourg station would be too far away to be of any use to those wrecked, for instance, on the Main Ducks and at points beginning at the islands. We have had great difficulty in saving men wrecked at those points.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This question was dealt with by our official whom we sent there and was favourably reported on by him, so it is being considered by the department at the present time.

Mr. CAYLEY: Is there any life-saving station on lake Huron?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have a station at Southampton.

Mr. CAYLEY: Nothing north of that?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Mr. CAYLEY: What is the service on the great lakes costing per year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The annual cost is about $10,000.

Item agreed to.

Hydrographic and tidal and current surveys and to provide for the maintenance and repair of hydrographic steamers, $570,000.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, this vote, I presume, includes one for a new hydrographic steamer for the Pacific. I wrote to the minister about this last fall, and the correspondence fell by the wayside—I got no answer. As soon as I saw he was calling for tenders for this steamer I urged upon him that, as in the past, he should require a boat burning coal instead of oil, our coal industry being in a very bad condition. Later on we saw in the papers that a tender had been accepted for a boat burning oil. I understand there was some hitch about the details of the machinery or something, and that it was possible to stall it off; so a delegation waited on the Prime Minister in that regard. I hope the minister can give me an assurance now that the specifications have been changed to cover a boat burning coal. If not, there will be a revolution out there.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This item does not include the necessary amount for the construction of the hydrographic boat for the Pacific.

Mr. NEILL: It does not?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is not included in this item. This item is to provide for the continuation of hydrographic surveys, and the maintenance of automatic gauges for the determination of water levels in the St. Lawrence and great lakes, and for the operation and maintenance of permanent tidal stations, and the equipment of temporary stations during the summer months. There is no increase in the amount. As to the hydrographic survey boat, if my hon. friend has not received an answer I am sorry.

Mr. NEILL: So am I.

Mr. DURANLEAU: But I am pleased to say his suggestion, also made by the hon. member for Nanaimo, has been accepted and I have ordered a change in the specifications in order that the boat will burn coal instead of oil. Unfortunately that change will mean an increase of about $35,000 in the construction costs, we having had to lengthen the boat by 14 feet and build a double instead of a single bottom. We have done so because we thought the suggestion of my hon. friend should be accepted. We want to encourage Canadian mines instead of foreign producers. I may add that the tender had not been definitely accepted because there was a little discussion about the rate of wages to be paid to the employees of the firm which was the lowest tenderer, but that matter has been straightened out and I think within a few days we will sign a new contract. If so, there will be a supplementary estimate for it.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I have much pleasure in expressing my sincere appreciation of the action of the minister in this regard. It will make quite a difference to us on the coast, and I trust he will always continue to adopt my mild suggestions.

Mr. DURANLEAU: When they are sound most assuredly they will be considered.

Mr. REID: Is a survey of the Fraser river made every year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think that comes under the Department of Public Works.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I should like to know what portion of this money will be expended on the Pacific coast.

Mr. DURANLEAU: We will spend $115,000 on the Pacific coast, $90,000 with the steamer Lillooet, $15,000 with the auxiliary house boat Pender, and $10,000 with the auxiliary house boat Somass.

Mr. CASGRAIN: How much was spent in the province of Quebec?

Mr. DURANLEAU: $135,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where were these works conducted?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The surveys were made first by the Cartier and the Bayfield. As my hon. friend knows, the Cartier was working on the north shore.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Are there any works to be done this year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, we have the same vote and the same works will be continued.

Mr. LAPOINTE: With the same crews?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot say exactly, but, with a little change, perhaps with better crews.

Mr. CARDIN: Do I understand that this item covers the work in Hudson bay?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. CARDIN: Does the department propose to continue this work this year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): What amount is intended to be spent this year on the Pacific coast?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I gave the figures a moment ago of what we propose to spend this year.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): What amount was spent last year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not that information, but I suppose it was about the same amount.

Mr. McINTOSH: What about the expenditure in Hudson bay this year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It will be practically the same.

Mr. McINTOSH: How much will it amount to?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We expect to spend $110,000, with the steamer Acadia.

Item agreed to.

Radiotelegraph service, and to provide for the construction and maintenance of radiotelegraph ship to shore stations and the general administration of the provisions of the Radio Act and regulations throughout the Dominion, $832,000.

Mr. CARDIN: This item covers a very important service and I should like the minister to explain the reason for the reduction. I am rather inclined to think there should be an increase.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The decrease was occasioned by a reduction in revenue. We have tried to reduce expenses to the minimum in every department without interfering with the efficiency of the service. The chief of that special branch of my department reported that we could go on this year with this reduction, so I thought it my duty to accept his report.

Mr. CARDIN: It may be due to the fact also that certain works undertaken last year have been completed.

Mr. DURANLEAU: That may be so.

Mr. NEILL: The amount indicates that no great change is contemplated in the service, but I want to tell the minister that there is a very well grounded rumour on the coast, almost too definite to be wholly without justification, to the effect that a private company proposes to purchase and take over the stations from this government. I want to tell the minister that I believe this action would meet with the unanimous disapproval of all shipping people and of a great many others whose business takes them up and down the coast. They do not want the radio services handed over to a private corporation. Later on, when the estimates of the Minister of Public Works are up, I intend to make the same protest in regard to the telephone and telegraph services.

There are many reasons for this feeling. One reason is that a private company is out to make money, and will not extend its service unless it is sure the extension will be profitable. That is not the case with a government department; its province is to help shipping and develop the country. If it were thought advisable they would put in an extra station to assist shipping when they knew that station would not pay, but a private company would object to that expenditure. I hope the minister will go into the question very thoroughly before any action is taken. I know of my own knowledge that negotiations have been going on having in view the handing over of the radio stations of Canada to a private company, and I should like some assurance from the minister that no action will be taken immediately at all events.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Two services are performed by these stations; they are, first, aids to navigation, and second, they aid the business interests in the west through a radiotelephone service. I can tell my hon. friend that this question has not been considered as yet by the department. When I was in the west the point was brought up, not in connection with the aids to navigation but in connection with the aid to business interests. It was contended that if the department abandoned that part of the work to a private company, possibly better service would be given, but I can tell my hon. friend that we are not inclined to accept that view. Nothing will be done this year, at any rate, because as yet we have not considered the matter at all.

Item agreed to.

Radio service—to provide for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners, $225,000.

Mr. CARDIN: As all the members of the committee know, some years ago a commission was appointed to investigate the propriety of changing the present system of broadcasting into a publicly owned or controlled system. The department decided that, pending the consideration of the report of that commission, no new licences should be issued. I know that not very long ago a new licence was issued in favour of a firm or syndicate or association of some sort in the western section of Ontario. What reasons justified the departure from the principle I have just stated in regard to the issuing of licences? So far as I can remember, that principle was recognized and accepted by the whole house.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Is the hon. member referring to the Windsor station?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have not departed from the policy adopted by the former administration in this respect except in that particular instance. In that section of Ontario, on the American border, the people have been complaining for months, indeed, years, that they have been able to receive nothing else than American topics and music. There seems to be a sort of curtain, if I may use that term, between Toronto and Windsor, and the people in Windsor have been complaining of inability to get anything in the way of Canadian news or music. There has been a delay in deciding the question of a change in the administration of radio stations in Canada, the province of Quebec contending for certain rights in radio matters. The question was referred by the Minister of Justice to the supreme court and the case will probably go to the privy council. The delay will probably be lengthy, and we thought, under the circumstances, we should give a small station to Windsor. It is only a small station, about one thousand watts for day and five hundred watts for night operation. I think we have acted in the best interests of that part of the country.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Why did the minister decline to entertain the application of Dr. Landry of Mont Joli for a renewal of his licence under the old terms? He was refused on the ground that the department was contemplating an absolutely new system.

Mr. DURANLEAU: My hon. friend is mistaken when he asserts that we have refused a renewal.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The department refused to renew his licence on the previous terms; they wanted to impose new conditions and charge a higher fee. Perhaps the minister will give me some information in the matter.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I shall be glad to supply that information later.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not desire to criticize the minister for having made an exception in the case of Windsor. I am quite familiar with the peculiar and unsatisfactory conditions there from the point of view of reception. As I remember, the matter had been under consideration in the department for some time, and I may say that I was myself somewhat inclined to make an exception in favour of that city. But rumour has it that instead of granting a request which had been made by very responsible people in that section of Ontario, the department issued a new licence in favour of a Conservative organization. That organization, I see by the press, is not yet complete; it is awaiting the appointment of a certain number of directors. According to the reports, it is going to be purely and simply a Conservative organization. Now, I do not criticize the desire of a Conservative association to broadcast; I feel that the two parties are entitled to have their views broadcast over stations of their own. In a case like this, however, I do feel that if an exception had to be made it should not have been made in favour of a political party; it should have been in favour of those who made the strongest representations in support of the establishment of a station at Windsor. If I remember rightly, the Border Cities Star made a request of the department to be allowed a station for themselves in conjunction with some other concern. That request was refused, and a petition made by a certain number of friends of the government was granted. I have already expressed the view in this house that, as a general rule and as a matter of principle, these broadcasting licences should be given first to newspapers, whenever a newspaper is in a position to undertake the expenditure involved in the establishment of a broadcasting plant. I do not think it is fair to turn down the applications of newspapers; and, in my opinion, if a request was made by the Border Cities Star it was not the proper thing to have refused that request and, instead, granted a licence to a Conservative organization. I should be glad of an explanation. I repeat, I am not criticizing the minister for having made an exception; had I been in his place when he granted the licence I should probably have made an exception in favour of Windsor myself. Indeed, I had practically made up my mind to grant a licence to the city of Windsor because, as I have said, I know the conditions there are certainly unsatisfactory; they cannot get any Canadian programs and must be satisfied with what is broadcast from American stations. It is only fair, therefore, that the people there should be afforded an opportunity of broadcasting Canadian programs. What I am complaining of is that the exception has been made in favour of a Conservative organization.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am glad my hon. friend shares my views with respect to the granting of a licence to a radio station in Windsor; I am sorry I am not prepared to share his view that radio licences should be granted primarily to newspapers. My hon. friend may be right and he may be wrong; that is a matter for consideration. Is it better to grant radio licences to newspapers or to business concerns who are ready to accommodate both newspapers and others who are interested in broadcasting? That is a question. My hon. friend states that this licence was granted to a Conservative organization. I think he is wrong. We received twenty-one applications from Windsor. Some were received from other parts of Ontario, but they were all for a Windsor radio station. A licence was granted to a concern which will accommodate everyone, and I did not grant that licence before I was assured that everyone would be well served; especially the Border Cities Star.

Mr. CARDIN: What was the concern?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The Border Cities Star were assured that they would have the best service from this station.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What is the operating company?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The licence was granted to Mr. Campbell and Mr. Morgan Dean.

Mr. CARDIN: In their own names?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. CARDIN: Has any request been made for a transfer of the licence to another company?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Mr. SANDERSON: Where do these gentlemen reside, in Windsor?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is it a company or a partnership?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Not yet. I understand there may be a company formed. Perhaps hon. members would like to hear the hon. member from Windsor (Mr. Morand).

Mr. MORAND: I rather believe that the ex-Minister of Marine has been making political capital of this radio licence for the last four years. The city of Windsor and surrounding country has been without Canadian broadcasting—

Mr. CARDIN: We know that.

Mr. MORAND: Licences were granted for other places, and Windsor was probably the only place in the whole Dominion of Canada that could not get Canadian broadcasts.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Who got the licence?

Mr. MORAND: Mr. Malcolm Campbell and Mr. Morgan Dean, who, I can assure the committee, are very good friends of ours. I do not think there was any question at any time but that a good friend would get it. Before the elections this broadcasting station was peddled through my constituency for the purpose of obtaining support for the various Liberal members and was probably held up for that purpose.

Mr. VENIOT: You happened to be successful; you were the best peddler.

Mr. MORAND: These men are the type who will see that justice will be given to everyone who desires to use the station.

Mr. SANDERSON: When the hon. member says they are good friends, does he mean good political friends?

Mr. MORAND: Both.

Mr. SANDERSON: But mainly political.

Mr. MORAND: No, not mainly political. Mr. Malcolm Campbell is the president of the Kelsey Wheel Company, Limited, and is a business man of good standing in the community. Mr. Morgan Dean is a well-known business man of Windsor. It is probable that a stock company may be formed in which people so desiring will be given an opportunity to take stock.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is the Conservative party taking any stock in that company?

Mr. MORAND: The Conservative party, not having the same amount of money during the last elections as had the Liberal party, will not be able to take any stock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CARDIN: Before six o'clock the hon. member for East Essex had intimated to the committee that while I was Minister of Marine I used the radio service to help political friends, or something to that effect. I desire to state that during my term of office as Minister of Marine nobody could complain that I used the authority which was mine in order to help political friends and to prevent others from making satisfactory arrangements to broadcast their speeches. I think the records of the department will show that the requests that were made to me by Conservative organizations were in all cases—I will not qualify it by saying where circumstances permitted—met. I did all I could in order to meet their requests, and if any politics has been played in the matter I think my hon. friend from East Essex is more responsible than I am.

Mr. SANDERSON: When the minister finally decided to issue another licence at Windsor, what steps did he take in regard to the applications? I think he said that he had received twenty-one applications. How did they come to him? How did these people know that the department was going to issue another licence?

Mr. DURANLEAU: When I said there were twenty-one applications, I had in mind applications extending over a period of two years, most of which had been abandoned. We therefore considered the last ones, and we came to the conclusion that the two parties mentioned by my hon. friend from East Essex were the best on account of the assurance they gave us that they would provide a first-class service and would accommodate everybody, the newspapers and others who might need the services of a radio station. Having that assurance, we issued the licence in favour of those two men. They were strongly recommended by the member for that division.

Mr. SANDERSON: And I presume the minister took that recommendation.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think I had to, to a certain extent.

Mr. McINTOSH: The minister has made mention once or twice of certain newspapers. Would he indicate to which newspapers he refers?

Mr. DURANLEAU: After the licence had been practically issued—at all events the correspondence had closed the matter—representatives of the Border Cities Star came to me. I had previously discussed with those who had applied for the licence whether they would accommodate the newspapers, especially the Border Cities Star, because that paper had applied for a licence, I think, nearly two years before, and I was given the assurance that they would receive the best of service. I repeated that assurance to the representatives of the Border Cities Star. They appeared to be satisfied.

Mr. SANDERSON: In addition to the recommendation of the hon. member for East Essex, I suppose the minister had recommendations from the two other members from that district?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think at least one other member recommended those two men.

Mr. SANDERSON: Did the minister have any recommendation from the Conservative association of Essex county?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am not prepared to say yes or no to that question. It may be so, but I would have to look up the record. I am sure, however, that the members for the district recommended these two men.

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister would not forget if a recommendation came to him from the Conservative association. Naturally he would pay attention to it, and I think no fault could be found with that. Does he not recall whether he received any recommendation from the Conservative association of East Essex, West Essex or South Essex?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not think we received so many recommendations as that.

We may have received one, but I am not sure, and I should not like to mislead the house on that point. I can look it up and give the information to my hon. friend if he so desires.

Mr. SANDERSON: Would the minister state from which of the Essexes he got the one recommendation that he apparently recollects?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The reason I recollect it pretty well is because I had an appointment with those members.

Mr. ROBINSON: There was no recommendation so far as I am aware from any Conservative organization in Essex county. There was just the recommendation from the three members, for East Essex, South Essex and West Essex.

Mr. SANDERSON: I was asking the minister whether he got any recommendations or not.

Mr. ROBINSON: If he got any others I do not know.

Item agreed to.

Lighthouse and coast services—agencies, rents and contingencies, $236,000.

Mr. HEENAN: Would the minister tell us who had charge of the work of painting the buoys and lighthouses on the lake of the Woods last season?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am told that the work was done under the supervision of Mr. Parrott.

Mr. HEENAN: That was last season. Is this work being done the same way this season?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It has not been done yet, but I suppose it will be; I am not sure.

Mr. HEENAN: I am referring now more particularly to the fact that last season and for the past three or four seasons Mr. Parrott engaged the men himself to paint the buoys and lighthouses, and I was wondering if the same gentleman would do the engaging this season.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It will be done in the same way this year by the same man.

Mr. HEENAN: Then would my hon. friend be surprised to know that the defeated candidate in that constituency has advised the people of Kenora that he is authorized by the department to engage the men, and that he is appointing single men instead of married men?

Mr. DURANLEAU: So far as I am informed, nothing of the kind will be done. The same man, our agent, will hire the employees and will attend to the job, and no one else.

Mr. HEENAN: I am glad to know that. I am glad to have the point cleared up, not only in my own mind but in order to appease the citizens of that part of the country, because I understand that this gentleman not only claims the right to do it but has already done it. I am speaking of the defeated candidate, who is going around Kenora boasting of the fact that different departments of the government have authorized him to say that except through his representation nothing can be done.

Mr. ARTHURS: That really would be a good thing for the riding.

Mr. HEENAN: It may be better than it was before. However if matters are going to be that way we would like to know it so we may all bow the knee to the defeated candidate, who was defeated by the electors. The people indicated very plainly that they did not want him to represent them; notwithstanding their wishes, however, he claims to represent them at the present time. If that is the way matters are to be handled, perhaps it may be the better way. However I would like my hon. friend to clear up the matter. I have no objection so long as the work is done and the married men who are out of work in that particular part of the country are given employment, I do not care whether they are Conservatives or Liberals. But I wish to ask my hon. friend whether or not his department is going to allow a man who was defeated and discarded by the electors to go about among the citizens telling them that they shall not receive their rights as citizens unless he so wishes.

An hon. MEMBER: That was the rule last year.

Mr. HEENAN: Before my hon. friend answers I would like to say to him that another department with which I shall deal at the proper time has assisted this man in an action whereby he is guilty of framing persons in northern Ontario to deprive them of their jobs.

Mr. McGIBBON: Did my friend not do the authorizing a year ago?

Mr. HEENAN: I will deal with my hon. friend any old time he likes, and in any way he likes.

Mr. McGIBBON: Well, why postpone it?

Mr. HEENAN: My hon. friend is familiar with pretty nearly everything in the world except the particular subject about which I am talking at the present time. The gentleman of whom I am speaking was the defeated candidate. He was not a Conservative but was used by the Conservative party during the campaign in order to split the Labour vote in our riding. At the present time he is boasting that he has authority from the heads of different government departments to say that nothing may be done and no man may be hired unless with his approval, and through him. A married man went to the gentleman in charge of the job and was told that the matter was out of his hands and that he had nothing to do with it. These men have had to go to the defeated candidate and bend their knees to a man who was discarded by the electors. If that is the way the Department of Marine is going to be handled in that district I have no objection, so long as we know definitely. If however as the minister says this man is not telling the truth, we ought to know it so that the people may be acquainted with the fact.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As to the other department I have no authority to answer.

Mr. HEENAN: Oh, no.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As to my department, however, I can say that no instructions whatever have been given to the defeated candidate concerning the works mentioned by my hon. friend. The department with which I am connected will see that the works are carried out by the agent of the department and not by any defeated candidate. That is the policy of my department.

Mr. HEENAN: I am glad to know that. I have one further question, and I shall have finished. Will my hon. friend tell me whether or not any instructions have been issued to this the defeated candidate either directly or indirectly concerning the methods he must adopt to engage or recommend men for this job?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I suppose my hon. friend would have no objection if a defeated candidate suggested to an agent or foreman the name of a man who might be employed, provided that man is efficient and can do the job properly. It may be that a defeated candidate would suggest some man to the agent, I do not know. From my own point of view however there have been no instructions issued and no authority given to a defeated candidate. I am informed by the head of my department that no such instructions were issued from the officials of the department to the defeated candidate about whom my hon. friend has been speaking. I think that settles the question and that my hon. friend will be satisfied with the works as they will be carried on.

Mr. HEENAN: I accept the word of the minister, and I am grateful for what he has said. However I cannot accept the gospel that a man who has been rejected by the electors and told that he is not wanted to represent them should have any preference in making a recommendation in respect to anything. I will say that I believe that gentleman should be allowed to live, the same as any other citizen—

Mr. STEVENS: I hope my hon. friend will not get bitter.

Mr. HEENAN: He has a right to live, and I am perfectly willing to let him live until after the next election campaign, but he has no more authority and his word should carry no more weight than that of any other citizen. I am prepared, however, to accept my hon. friend's word. Will the minister tell the committee what is the rate of wages paid to the men on this work?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I understand the prevailing rates have been paid to the men.

Mr. HEENAN: What is the prevailing rate? What is the rate being paid?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Offhand I cannot give the rate exactly. I can say however that the prevailing rate is being paid to the men on the work.

Mr. HEENAN: I hope my hon. friend will take an opportunity to verify his impression, because I think he will find that the rate paid is not the prevailing rate. I have another matter to bring to the attention of the minister. The Dominion government has not a boat on the lake of the Woods, not one to use to take out painters and distribute buoys. I understand that in former times tenders were asked from different boatmen to do this work. I would ask the minister if my understanding is correct, but before he answers I would like him to tell me whether tenders have been called for similar work this season?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not that information from the agent.

Mr. HEENAN: I beg the minister's pardon?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not received that information from the agent.

Mr. HEENAN: I am afraid the minister is behind the times, because I have had that information for over a month. I would like to know whether or not it is correct. Is it correct that tenders were not called for at all on this particular occasion but that the department instructed the overseer or superintendent to engage a certain man and his boat.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I say frankly that I have not that information, and neither has my department. However we shall have it to-morrow.

Mr. HEENAN: To-morrow?

Mr. DURANLEAU: If my hon. friend has the information he may be satisfied.

Mr. HEENAN: Oh, no.

Mr. DURANLEAU: If he wishes to have it from the department, I shall have it for him to-morrow.

Mr. HEENAN: I would not ask the minister to accept the information I have, because I must tell him that it does not reflect favourably on the department.

Mr. DURANLEAU: If the information is accurate it will be satisfactory to me. As I say, however, if it is the desire of my hon. friend I shall have the information for him to-morrow.

Mr. McGIBBON: Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in this new doctrine propounded by the member for Kenora-Rainy River. Going back into history, the only analogy I can find is the case of Saul of Tarsus. The late minister has got a new light, he has seen a vision; hence he thinks it a crime for the ministers of this government to consult their representatives in the various ridings. But the hon. gentleman was for eight years a member of a government that practised the doctrine of consulting defeated Liberal candidates, and those defeated candidates distributed the local patronage. Yet in spite of that record he comes here to-night with a new doctrine. We have had many new doctrines from that side of the house lately. The other day the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) propounded this novel doctrine: "Why," he exclaimed, "the Liberal party paid their penalty on the 28th of July last for all their sins of omission and commission; the slate has been wiped clean of all their sins—"

An hon. MEMBER: They have been atoned for.

Mr. McGIBBON: Yes, they have been atoned for, absolution has been granted them. He said: "It is a crime to go back behind the 28th of July last. We are a new party, we have got a new doctrine." This means, of course, that they are scrapping the old doctrine just as they scrapped the platform of the convention of 1919—a platform which at first they took as a chart, then for a compass, and finally they threw the compass into the sea.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Let us vote this item, doctor.

Mr. McGIBBON: Now we have a new doctrine. We are told that we must not criticize anything the Liberal party did; all their sins of omission or commission are to be forgotten. Now, I wonder what port they are heading for to-day. It will be very interesting to watch their tactics for the next few months. I think we already see signs that the old ship is being scuttled—at least it is being headed for a new port, and it will be navigated by a new pilot and manned by a new crew. In other words, there will be a new policy enunciated by the Liberal party before very long. They are going to bury the past. I wonder what pilot will direct, and what crew will work the ship in the next few years, I wonder what port they will be heading for. I suspect they will go back again to the old doctrine.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. NEILL: No, Mr. Chairman, I want to speak after that hon. gentleman.

Mr. McGIBBON: My friend from Comox-Alberni is always ready to fill in a gap at any place on any subject.

Mr. NEILL: The gap is very evident just now.

Mr. McGIBBON: Well, I might retort that the gap in the mental machinery of the hon. member is very evident, but I will not do that. I protest, Mr. Chairman, that these people should object to tactics which for eight long years they took advantage of themselves. I think there should be some consistency and some honesty in the practices of the different parties in this house.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, let us get back from doctrines and ships to the item before the committee, which, as I understand, has to do with lighthouses. I think this is an appropriate moment for me to carry out the very definite instructions given me a few weeks ago by the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion). At that time we were discussing a bill providing for compensation to government employees injured in the course of their work, and I put in a plea to have the benefits of the bill extended to lightkeepers' assistants. The hon. Minister of Railways assured me that the proper course for me to follow was to go to the Minister of Marine and request aid from him. Therefore with this authority behind me I presume I am in order in bringing the matter before the committee at the present time. This item is for various things, including salaries and allowances for lighthouse keepers. The point is this, that there is a class of employees called lighthouse keepers' assistants, who, technically, do not come under the provisions of the bill sponsored by my friend the Minister of Railways because they are employed by the lighthouse keepers, not by the government; although their payment is provided by the government, actually it comes out of the pocket of the lighthouse keepers. Suppose the lighthouse keeper receives a salary of $900, and is required to keep an assistant, the government will give him a salary of $1,500, but this extra $600 is not enough to secure the services of an outside man, so some member of the lighthouse keeper's family, his wife, or son, does the work. I appeal to the Minister of Marine that when providing the miserable salaries—because they are miserable, when these lighthouse keepers have to provide an assistant—that he would add a very little extra sum—I do not suppose it would exceed $10 a year—to enable the lighthouse keeper to pay to the provincial board of workmen's compensation the small contribution necessary so that if any of these assistants were killed or injured the compensation received would help to take care of their families. If the minister would kindly consider this proposal—he need not put it in this item—it would be of advantage to the service and would be doing justice to these men according to the very spirit of the act. Not only the Dominion, but all the provinces protect their workmen by way of giving them compensation for injuries received in the course of their employment. I am not saying the lighthouse keepers' assistants should not be paid by the lighthouse keepers, because it is a desirable arrangement, but the small addition to their pay that I have suggested would enable them to meet the situation.

Mr. ARTHURS: I have very great pleasure in endorsing the plea made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. There are many places where the lighthouse keeper has one or more assistants, and they are hired simply for the season. They at least run as great a risk in every way as the lighthouse keepers themselves, and I think some provision should be made to bring them within the scope of the legislation to which my hon. friend has referred.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The question is very important, and I will give consideration to it.

Item agreed to.

Construction, maintenance and supervision of aids to navigation, including salaries and allowances to lightkeepers, $2,354,600.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Is the lighthouse keeper still at Bicquet in the county of Rimouski?

Mr. DURANLEAU: If my memory serves me right, I think he has not been changed yet.

Mr. VENIOT: What branches of the service are affected by the reduction of $530,400?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The branch affected is the construction branch.

Mr. VENIOT: While I have no objection to this item passing just now, there is a question to be discussed in connection with the salaries of lighthouse keepers. Would the minister consent to let this item stand so that the matter may be taken up at a later date? There is certain information which is desired, and if the minister would consent that this or any other item stand on which we could discuss the question of lighthouse keepers, we might be able to make some progress.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This is the item, if there is any information desired.

Mr. VENIOT: Would the minister allow this item to stand for the present? We want to discuss the matter and we need certain information. It is not an unusual thing to have the minister let an item stand so that we can discuss even his whole department. That has been asked numerous times and there never has been any objection.

Mr. DURANLEAU: If it is the desire of the committee I have no objection to letting this item stand.

Sir EUGENE FISET: For general discussion.

Item stands.

Amount required to pay compassionate allowance to John Davidson, formerly lightkeeper at Cape Mudge, B.C., $500.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Is this an annual expenditure? Why is this allowance made?

Mr. DURANLEAU: This man was appointed keeper of Cape Mudge light in June, 1898, and gave faithful service until October, 1918, when he was forced to resign his position through loss of eyesight. He became practically blind at that time. There was no means at the disposal of the department—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): I want the minister to finish his explanation; I do not care who calls "carried." The minister had not finished his explanation, and I want to get it.

The CHAIRMAN: Hon. members called "carried."

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): It does not matter what hon. members said.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. gentleman will take his seat, the item is carried.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This amount has been paid for years, and everyone admits that it is a deserving case.

Item agreed to.

Administration of pilotage, $225,000.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I have received, not only this year but for several years past, applications from students of the province of Quebec who are anxious to become apprentice pilots. I understand that two years ago the regulations of the department were changed, and that notwithstanding what may be the political complexion of the candidate, his name is entered on the list provided he possesses the necessary qualifications. He has only to apply to the director of pilotage to file his application, and forms are sent to him containing all the necessary instructions and directions as to medical examination and so on. May I ask the minister if the same procedure still applies?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The same policy has been followed since this government came into power.

Item agreed to.

Maintenance and repairs to wharves, $6,000.

Mr. RALSTON: Has the matter of water supply for the lighthouse at Cape Forchu, in Yarmouth, come before the minister, and has he given it his consideration? It is a matter which has been pending for some time.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think the question of the digging of a well has come before the department, and it is under consideration.

Mr. RALSTON: Has any progress been made?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have made no decision yet, and I cannot say exactly the position of the matter now.

Mr. RALSTON: I should like to press the minister for favourable consideration, not merely consideration.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I will give the matter my consideration.

Mr. VENIOT: Can the minister state whether the wharf at Pointe du Chene, in the county of Westmorland, formerly held by the Department of Marine, is still held by that department or whether it has been transferred to the Department of Public Works?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is still the property of the Department of Marine.

Mr. CARDIN: I understand that this sum of $6,000 is to provide for small repairs to the wharves administered by the Department of Marine. I understand that the wharves are constructed by the Department of Public Works and passed on to the Department of Marine for administration, and the Department is responsible for the state of repair of all the wharves under its control. As the minister knows, the government has acquired wharves which were the property of the Canada Steamship Lines in the town of Sorel, along the Richelieu river. These wharves are in very bad condition and need repairs. I should like to enlist the support of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine in order to help the Minister of Public Works come to the conclusion that these wharves should be reconstructed. Will the minister be favourable to the reconstruction of these wharves on the Richelieu river?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As my hon. friend knows, under this small item of $6,000 we do only the very small repairs, costing up to $25. All other repairs are made by the Department of Public Works. With regard to the wharves mentioned, we have drawn the attention of the Department of Public Works to the repairs which are required.

Item agreed to.

To provide for breaking ice in Thunder bay, lake Superior and other points deemed advisable in the interests of navigation, $44,000.

Mr. VENIOT: A question was asked by the hon. member for Beauce on May 15, as follows:

1. For how many days did the government icebreaker N. B. McLean work in the gulf of St. Lawrence and Chaleur bay during the months of March, April, and May, 1931?
2. To what point in Chaleur bay did she succeed in cutting a channel through the ice?
3. What was the daily cost of the operation of this vessel, including wages of crew and fuel?
4. Was the vessel obliged to abandon this work on account of an accident?
5. If so, for how long will the vessel be laid up, what is the estimated cost of the repairs required in order to put her back in working condition?

So far the question has not been answered. Perhaps if the minister has not the information to-night he could give it to us when we take up at a later date the item which has been allowed to stand. Will he also say at whose request this boat was engaged to break ice in the baie de Chaleur and up the Restigouche river as far as Dalhousie?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There were no ice-breaking operations in Chaleur bay this year. I intended to answer to-morrow a question which has been asked in this regard.

Mr. VENIOT: Was a request received by the department for breaking ice in Chaleur bay? If so, from whom did that request come?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think a gentleman from that locality, connected with the plant there, applied to the department verbally for relief this spring.

Mr. VENIOT: Would the minister remember the name if I mentioned it? Was it Mr. W. S. Montgomery?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I believe that is the man.

Mr. VENIOT: He is not connected with the plant there.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Well, he came to my department and represented that if an ice-breaker could be sent it would advance navigation by fifteen or twenty days.

Mr. POWER: I might assist the minister by telling him that I read the documents produced some days ago and it appears that General J. B. White of the International Paper Company requested the minister to send an icebreaker to Chaleur bay, which request was acceded to. That appears from the documents filed a week ago.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not think we had a request direct from the paper company.

Mr. POWER: From General White.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Mr. Montgomery asserted that it was the wish of the company that we should send an icebreaker.

Mr. POWER: But the minister produced certain documents which I had the pleasure of reading two or three days ago. They showed that the International Paper Company, through its manager, had requested that the icebreaker be sent.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This year?

Mr. POWER: Yes. The papers were produced at the request of the hon. member for Beauce, and I read them two or three days ago. The hon. member is not here, but no doubt I could find the papers.

Mr. DURANLEAU: That, I am informed, was in the year 1930.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps the minister is right, but I was under the impression that it was this year.

Mr. VENIOT: In 1929 Mr. Montgomery made a request of myself by telegram which I passed on to the Marine department, but no request was made by the heads of the company at Dalhousie. In fact, I communicated by telegram with the company at that time, asking them if it was necessary. It was in the fall of the year, after the freezing-up. There was a vessel loaded with sulphur and it was feared that she would not be able to reach the dock and that some damage might be done her. I wired the company, asking if it was absolutely necessary to have an icebreaker go there, and after a delay of twenty-four hours they wired in reply that the necessity no longer existed, soft weather having intervened. The vessel in consequence was able to reach the dock. But during that winter of 1929-30 Mr. Montgomery interceded on behalf of the company to have an icebreaker go down the St. Lawrence and through the gulf, opening the ice in the baie de Chaleur and up the Restigouche river as far as Dalhousie. It was contended that this would open navigation two or three weeks earlier than usual. It was considered at the time that there was no necessity for granting such a request, and as no application had come direct from the company interested, the matter was left in abeyance. Nothing was done. I understand that this year Mr. Montgomery again made a request. While I should like to see the bay open to navigation three or four weeks earlier than it would be in the natural course, I cannot see that it would be of great advantage to shipping on the north shore that we should go to the enormous expense of opening the gulf of St. Lawrence, Chaleur bay and Restigouche river. We have daily communication by rail with Dalhousie and anything which it is necessary to import or export at that season of the year can be shipped by rail. There is therefore no necessity for going to this heavy expenditure. I wanted to explain that to the committee. Perhaps the minister could look up the records and see whether any request has come direct from the company through either the superintendent or manager at Dalhousie, or the general manager at Montreal. I do not think there has been such a request.

Mr. DURANLEAU: No icebreaker was sent there this year.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Has the minister received from the chamber of commerce of Rimouski an application, supported by several navigation companies that operate between Rimouski wharf and the north shore, to try during the winter to keep the deep water channel clear? This year navigation was interrupted for barely two months, and I understand that the services of an icebreaker about once a week will be quite sufficient to keep that channel open and ensure communication between the south shore and the north shore. I hope that if the minister, who is familiar with the situation, has received an application, he will give it due and, if possible, favourable consideration.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot say offhand from whom such an application has come.

Sir EUGENE FISET: It came from the chamber of commerce.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I believe I received an application and it is under consideration.

Item agreed to.

Loan to harbour commissioners of Montreal, with interest at a rate to be fixed by the governor in council, for such period and upon such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine, and to be applied in payment of deficits resulting from the operations of the Montreal harbour bridge, $681,600.

Mr. CARDIN: In view of what was said a few days ago in regard to the building and operation of a bridge in the harbour of Montreal, and of the importance of this question, I would ask that this item be allowed to stand.

Mr. DURANLEAU: If it is the desire of the committee I have no objection to allowing it to stand.

Item stands.

Construction, maintenance and supervision of aids to navigation, including salaries and allowances to lightkeepers, $2,354,600.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I suggest to the committee that this item be carried, and I will provide an opportunity to discuss any questions relating to marine matters when the remaining items are before the committee.

Mr. CARDIN: I think that is satisfactory.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am holding item 326.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The minister will allow us to discuss anything concerning his department when that item is before the committee?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, concerning any marine question.

Mr. VENIOT: Under those conditions I am satisfied to allow this item to pass.

Mr. HEENAN: I received a letter some time ago pointing out the dangers to navigation existing in the lake of the Woods. I am sure the hon. member to the minister's right (Mr. Rogers) will substantiate what I have to say in this regard. This lake, which is international in character, is usually kept at a level ranging between elevations 1062 and 1056. When it is at a level of about 1061 there are many rocks which lie just about six inches or a foot below the surface of the water. Hundreds of pleasure and commercial boats ply this lake, and some have been caught on the rocks with a consequent endangering of life. At the present time the lake is down to the low level of 1056 and it would be an easy matter for the minister to have a few holes drilled in these rocks and blow them up. In the interests of safe navigation would he ask some of his officers to make a report on this work?

Mr. DURANLEAU: This is a matter which would come under the jurisdiction of the Public Works department.

Mr. HEENAN: Only after the Minister of Marine had said what was required for the purposes of navigation.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I will do that with pleasure.

Mr. POWER: Before we next return to a discussion on the estimates of the Marine department, would the minister see to it that due diligence prevails in his department in the bringing down of certain returns which I asked for in the early days of the session, particularly those relating to the Quebec harbour?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I believe those will be ready very soon.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Railways and Canals — civil government — salaries, $283,235; contingencies, $46,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to offer any objection to this item, but our understanding was that the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce would be taken up after we had finished with the Department of Marine, and hon. members on this side have governed themselves accordingly.

Mr. MANION: The acting leader (Mr. Guthrie) tells me that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not ready to go on.

Item agreed to.

Canadian government railways: to provide additional car ferry and facilities for car ferry service between the mainland and Prince Edward Island, $1,059,310.

Mr. POWER: Is this the car ferry which was completed yesterday?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. POWER: And at the baptism of which the minister officiated?

Mr. MANION: I did not officiate; I was simply one of the spectators.

Mr. POWER: He made a speech anyway. What was the cost of the vessel?

Mr. MANION: The contract price is $2,112,600.

Mr. POWER: Any extras?

Mr. MANION: There usually are in these government contracts, but we know of none.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is almost inviting them.

Mr. MANION: I am not inviting them.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Where was this car ferry built?

Mr. MANION: At Lauzon.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Power.]

Hudson Bay railway and terminals: construction and betterments, including E. B. Jost at $2,500 (revote, $1,375,000), $6,000,000.

Mr. BROWN: On a previous occasion this session I asked the Minister of Railways if it was the intention of the government to do anything towards implementing the promise made during the election to build the Mafeking cut-off. I understand from statements made by the Minister of Railways during the campaign that the party opposite considered the Mafeking cut-off as part of the Hudson Bay railway. I would like to know if there is anything included in this vote for the building of the Mafeking cut-off. Perhaps the committee would like to know just what that is. I am told that the minister on one occasion said he did not know what it was himself, but under any circumstances he would build it.

Mr. MANION: I have already corrected that statement once or twice in the house, and I wish to correct it again. I never made any such statement. I would like to make another correction. I did not say that I considered the Mafeking cut-off a part of the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. BROWN: In that case I shall have to read a report of a speech by the Minister of Railways at Dauphin, June 29, 1930, as follows:

"Mr. Bennett has promised to build the Mafeking cut-off."

Mr. Bennett does not consider the Mafeking cut-off a branch line of the Canadian National railways, but a part of the Hudson Bay railway system to be built by the Dominion government.

To build the Mafeking cut-off will not mean political interference with the Canadian National Railways. No public man has ever given a more solemn or emphatic pledge on any matter than has Mr. Bennett that he will preserve the integrity of the Canadian National Railways.

That is the report of a meeting held at Dauphin on June 29, 1930, in which the Minister of Railways is quoting Mr. Bennett as saying that he did not consider the Mafeking cut-off a part of the Canadian National Railway system, but as part of the Hudson Bay railway and that it should be built by the Dominion government.

Mr. MANION: What is my hon. friend quoting from?

Mr. BROWN: From a statement that has been given to me of a report of a speech given by the minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER: Who reported it?

Mr. BROWN: This is a matter of some importance. I may say for the benefit of hon. gentlemen who perhaps are not familiar with the railway situation in that part of the country that Mafeking is situated on a branch line of the Canadian National that runs up to Prince Albert. It is about twenty-five miles from the Saskatchewan boundary and about seventy miles from Hudson Bay Junction. For the people of Manitoba to get to Churchill they have to go to Hudson Bay Junction, and then the road comes back at an angle of sixty degrees to The Pas. This Mafeking cut-off, which was promised by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways, would form the third side of the triangle, and if we remember our mathematics aright, any two sides of a triangle are together greater than the third side. This cut-off would save probably seventy miles. There has been a strong demand in the province of Manitoba for a shorter line to Hudson bay than the present one, and the Mafeking cut-off has been very strongly supported by some constituencies in Manitoba, those lying to the west, principally the constituencies of Nelson and Dauphin. This question formed one of the chief issues in the election campaign last summer in that part of Manitoba, and it can safely be said, I think, that the present member for Dauphin owes his election entirely to the promises that were made by the present leader of the government to build the Mafeking cut-off.

Mr. COTNAM: Where does the hon. gentleman get this report?

Mr. BROWN: It was furnished to me. If it is not true, the minister can say so.

Mr. MANION: I did not make that promise. I will speak as soon as my hon. friend is through.

Mr. BROWN: I have said that the Mafeking cut-off formed one of the chief issues in the election in that part of the country. The former Minister of Railways, Hon. T. A. Crerar, speaking at a meeting in Dauphin, declined to give any such promise. He was questioned on the matter of the Mafeking cut-off and he came forward and made a straight statement.

Mr. COTNAM: More than he ever did in this house.

Mr. BROWN: He made no promises that he knew he was not in a position to fulfil. I have been told by a number of people in that constituency that because the Hon. T. A. Crerar did not make rash promises that he knew he could not carry out, Mr. Ward, the Liberal candidate, lost the election in that constituency.

Mr. MANION: As my hon. friend has quoted from a statement which is supposed to be a report of a speech of mine, would he mind quoting from a report of Mr. Crerar's speech?

Mr. BROWN: I am just going to do that. The Hon. T. A. Crerar, speaking at Dauphin on July 19, 1930, said:

> I am not here to tell you that the Mafeking cut-off will be built. The Mafeking cut-off is a branch line from one point to another on the Canadian National railways and is not a departmental matter. I cannot ask parliament to advance the money to build this road unless it is recommended by the directors of the Canadian National Railways. A study is being made of all phases, and if the directors of the Canadian National Railways recommend this construction I will give the matter consideration. From the standpoint of freight rates the Mafeking cut-off should not be built.

It is quite easy to understand, Mr. Chairman, that when a responsible minister of the crown, speaking in a constituency in which the Mafeking cut-off was perhaps one of the chief issues, comes forward with a plain statement of that kind, making no promises that he knew he could not fulfil, a large measure of support would be withdrawn from the government candidate and go to the men who made the promises.

Here is an extract from a poster that was used in the election of Mr. J. L. Bowman, the Conservative candidate in that constituency:

> If you want the Mafeking cut-off, there is only one way to get it. Vote Bowman. Printed by the Dauphin Herald and Press, Dauphin, Manitoba, by the authority of J. N. McFadden, official agent for J. L. Bowman, Conservative candidate.

The present Prime Minister, speaking at Winnipeg on June 9, 1930, said:

> We pledge ourselves to the improvement of the whole scheme of Canadian transportation northward by the completion of the Hudson Bay road and the construction of such branches as may be necessary to render it most readily available to every part of Canada. The Conservative party which commenced the construction of the Hudson Bay railway will see it through. . . .

That does not happen to be true, because the Conservative party did not commence the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. The extract continues:

> . . . will see it through with all auxiliary works and development necessary to its effective operation.

The present Prime Minister at Brandon said:

> The Mafeking cut-off is one of the works which should now be under way, not only as a needed public improvement but as a means of relieving unemployment.

Undoubtedly the commencement of that work would do a great deal to relieve unemployment, and it was expected by those who were foolish enough to believe the promise made that the work would be carried on during the winter and that a right of way would be cleared. As I have said, this was one of the chief issues in the constituency of Dauphin. I think the hon. member for Dauphin is in the position of a man who has been the recipient of goods obtained by false pretences.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BROWN: His election was won on the campaign promises of hon. gentlemen who are now members of the government to the effect that the Mafeking cut-off would be constructed. That has not been done. I do not believe the Mafeking cut-off should be built. To my mind it would not give the best service to the province of Manitoba, and would not furnish the most direct connection with Hudson Bay. However the promise was definitely made by the Minister of Railways and Canals and by the Prime Minister that this road would be built. The fact is that it has not been built.

Mr. MANION: I should like to have the evidence from which my hon. friend is quoting. What has he besides a written statement handed to him by someone? How does he know I made any such statement? I ask him to give the evidence. He has stated three or four times that I said certain things, and I should like to know the source of his information.

Mr. BROWN: The information was furnished me in the form of an extract.

Mr. MANION: By whom? What party supplied it?

Mr. BROWN: Perhaps the hon. member—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BROWN: I have no hesitation in saying it came to me from the man who was the Liberal candidate in that constituency.

Mr. MANION: I should like to say—

Mr. BROWN: And I accept it as the true evidence.

[Mr. Brown.]

Mr. MANION: I should like to say that the Liberal candidate was not my reporter on that occasion. He was not even present at the meeting, so I do not choose to accept the statement made by him.

Mr. BROWN: Will the minister say he never under any circumstances directly or indirectly promised that the Mafeking cut-off would be built?

Mr. MANION: When the hon. member has completed his statement I shall make mine. He had better go ahead and give some evidence other than the statement from which he quoted. I do not wish to hear the unsupported statement of a gentleman who was deprived of his election.

Mr. BROWN: Here is an extract from a poster that was used in the campaign.

Mr. MANION: I did not put up the posters.

Mr. BROWN: "There is only one way to get the Mafeking cut-off."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BROWN: I know it is a common practice for hon. gentlemen opposite to deny newspaper reports. They claim they are misreported and repudiate anything credited to them.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend produced not a newspaper report but a statement prepared by the defeated Liberal candidate. I have not contradicted any newspaper reports, but I am asking my hon. friend to produce the newspaper reports.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps I might do that. I quote from a report which appeared on June 23, 1930, in the Mail and Empire, an organ of hon. gentlemen opposite, of a meeting addressed by the present Prime Minister at Brandon on June 21, 1930. It quotes the leader of the Conservative party as follows:

> Let us put Crowsnest rates in effect on the Hudson Bay railway. Let us finish the port. Let us get the lowest possible insurance rates and aids to navigation without delay.

Of the same meeting the Mail and Empire report continues as follows:

> Endorsation of the suggested Mafeking cut-off to afford Manitoba a shorter route to the Hudson Bay railway was voiced by the Conservative leader. Supporting the proposal Mr. Bennett said that this would be a proper national undertaking to be started to relieve unemployment and he asserted such was his intention.

Mr. MANION: I was asking for newspaper reports of my speeches.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is a report of a speech made by the present Prime Minister, and I would ask my hon. friend if he would not regard a statement of the Prime Minister as a pledge just as binding on the part of the government as any the hon. minister himself might make.

Mr. MANION: Yes, and since my right hon. friend has brought up the matter I may tell him that last winter at considerable expense we had surveys made in connection with the Mafeking route. I was waiting for my hon. friend to finish his statement before replying to him.

Mr. BROWN: I may say to the minister that these are newspaper reports which have been sent to me by the defeated Liberal candidate.

Mr. MANION: From what newspaper?

Mr. BROWN: The importance of the matter does not depend upon the newspaper in which the report was contained but rather upon the statement made by the minister in connection with the matter referred to.

Mr. MANION: The importance of a statement rests in the truth of it. I do not choose to accept the statement made by a defeated candidate. I spoke at various places in Manitoba, and in Dauphin I did refer to the Mafeking cut-off. I said we would investigate it, and if we thought it satisfactory or advisable to build the cut-off, on the advice of the Canadian National Railway, we would build it, or something to that effect. We have moved in the matter. During the past winter a survey has been made, but as yet no report or recommendation has been handed to me. I am told however by my deputy that the survey is completed. It would seem that the present government has gone a good deal farther than my hon. friends went when they were in power. I do not know whether or not the cut-off will be built; that will depend to a great extent on the report that is received and the financial condition of the country. The possibility of construction will depend on many factors.

Mr. BROWN: It is certain that the people of Dauphin came to the conclusion that there was a very wide difference between the straightforward and honest statement made by the Hon. T. A. Crerar, the then Minister of Railways, and the statement made by the present Minister of Railways.

Mr. MANION: I rise to a point of order. Three or four times the hon. member has referred to the honest and straightforward statements of the late Minister of Railways and Canals, and implied that I had not made straightforward statements. I object to the implication that I have made dishonest statements, or statements which were not straightforward.

Mr. BROWN: It is clear that there was such a wide difference between the statements made by the Hon. T. A. Crerar and those made by the present Minister of Railways that a large majority of the people of Dauphin came to the conclusion that it was the statements of the present Minister of Railways that swung the vote from the Liberal to the Conservative candidate.

Mr. MANION: I am very glad I did well in some places. I spoke in many places in Manitoba and I must say that we got quite a number of seats in that province. I am pleased that I was well received in some constituencies.

Mr. BROWN: The minister did not come to my constituency.

Mr. MANION: I did. If it had not been for a rainstorm the hon. member might not have been here, criticizing, to-night. As a matter of fact my hon. friend was lucky. He is pretty good at prayers, and I think on that occasion his prayers must have saved him because there was a heavy downpour of rain and we did not hold the mass meeting which had been scheduled. I am informed that even a dub speaker like myself could have swung the election against my hon. friend if he could have got there to speak to the people.

Mr. BROWN: The hon. minister has no small opinion of himself. The intervention of the rainstorm was a most fortunate occurrence because it saved a good deal of embarrassment for some of those who were campaigning against me. At a later date however the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) came in his place, but he did not succeed. The Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Railways and Canals may settle between themselves as to which is the better man.

Mr. MANION: No, not as to which is the better man, but as to which is the worse man for allowing my hon. friend to get back into parliament.

Mr. BROWN: I would ask hon. members to bear in mind that the Mafeking cut-off was to be undertaken immediately to relieve unemployment.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend does not suggest that before a survey is made we should begin to build the line?

Mr. BROWN: Not at all, but—

Mr. MANION: "But" what? The survey has been made at considerable expense, and as yet the report has not been received. That is the best I can do.

Mr. BROWN: Just another instance of unfulfilled promises.

Mr. MANION: Oh, no.

Mr. MULLINS: The constituency of Dauphin adjoins the constituency of Marquette. I attended several meetings in Mr. Bowman's constituency, and the question of the Mafeking cut-off was never once mentioned at any of them, nor did it in any way affect his election. I am sorry that through sickness he is not in the house to deal with the accusation made by the hon. gentleman. Mr. Ward's defeat is well known to my hon. friend. He went down to defeat because he was a little progressive and was not needed by the constituency of Dauphin any more than one was needed in the constituency of Marquette.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give the various amounts making up the total?

Mr. MANION: Yes. The item is for $6,000,000 and is made up of $1,000,000 for the line between Le Pas and Churchill and the other $5,000,000 is for work on the terminals so far as we expect to go this year. Those are the two larger items. If my hon. friend wishes I can give him more details in regard to the terminals.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give any details of the progress of the work?

Mr. MANION: Yes. The work has been progressing very satisfactorily. In fact I am informed by my engineers, and by the contractors with whom I took the matter up very recently, that they are further ahead of their schedule than they expected to be, and unless something unforeseen happens trial shipments of grain will go out of Churchill this fall. We have no reason at the moment to think that that will not be possible. If my hon. friend wishes to know about any particular item I shall be glad to give him the details, but that in a general way covers what is being done.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I presume the $5,000,000 is to be spent for the completion of the works?

Mr. MANION: The details of the $5,000,000 are as follows:

Wages	$ 750,000
Transportation of men	60,000
Freight	75,000
Timber, 5,600,000 ft. B.M. (including freight)	250,000
Building lumber	25,000
Coal, 9,000 tons (including freight)	100,000
Dredge parts	50,000
Other equipment	25,000
Gasoline and oil	25,000
Hardware	25,000
Crib iron	25,000
Water supply, tanks, pumps, etc.	25,000
Fill by Canadian National Railway, 400,000 yards at 75 cents.	300,000
Elevator, 2,500,000 bushels	3,100,000
Sundries	165,000

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I thought the elevator was practically completed.

Mr. MANION: Oh, no, my hon. friend is wrong as to that. When I was there last October the foundations and base had been laid. The superstructure is to be completed this summer.

Mr. POWER: How many men were employed there?

Mr. MANION: Around 1,000 between the contractor and ourselves. We had about 600 men and the contractor 400. That does not include the men doing the work on the railway itself. I may say that the railway at that time was in excellent shape. We went over it at an average speed of something more than 20 miles an hour, and although I had rather expected it to be a little disjointed and heavy, I found it was in excellent condition. With the amount of work to be done this year I think the road will be in splendid shape to handle the freight that is expected to go out this fall.

Mr. POWER: How many men is it proposed to employ this year?

Mr. MANION: My engineer informs me there will be 2,000 men employed in the middle of summer, but at the present time there are 1,149 men including the railway gangs—because the Canadian National Railways are acting as our agents on the construction of the line—and the men working on the terminal itself.

Mr. McINTOSH: How does that number compare with the number employed last year?

Mr. MANION I thought the number would be about the same, but the engineer tells me that owing to the construction of the elevator and the cribwork we will have more men working than we had last year. He states the figure for last year was about 1,000 while this year it will be about 2,000.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) mentioned that he attended several meetings in the constituency of Dauphin and the question of the Mafeking cut-off never was mentioned. I quite believe him. There was no necessity to mention it. Every telephone post, every backyard fence was plastered with posters reading just like this:

If you want the Mafeking cut-off there is only one way to get it—vote Bowman.
Printed by the Dauphin Herald and Press of Dauphin, Manitoba, by the authority of J. N. McFadden, official agent for J. L. Bowman, Conservative candidate.

There was no necessity for the hon. member for Marquette to mention the Mafeking cut-off in that constituency, because, as I said before, these posters were pasted all over the constituency and surely the member for that constituency and the people who are responsible for the Conservative organization there must take some responsibility for these posters. Every man in Manitoba, whether a member, a defeated candidate, or a private citizen knows that the Mafeking cut-off has been one of the chief issues for the last two or three years. I know the preceding government was blamed for not taking the action that many people thought they should take in regard to the cut-off. I do not know whether the Mafeking cut-off is right or wrong, but I feel pretty certain that the Canadian National Railway officials will never endorse it. There is no man in this house could tell us how many people are interested in the Mafeking cut-off other than the hon. member for Nelson himself. He knows it has been a live issue in the north country to get a short line to Churchill, and he knows also that practically everybody in that constituency, starting from Portage la Prairie and going straight north to Le Pas, has been interested in advocating the Mafeking cut-off. Personally I do not agree with them, I think they are wrong.

Mr. MULLINS: I said the Mafeking cut-off was not discussed at any of the meetings I attended or took part in. What was said at other meetings I do not know anything about.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: There was only one thing discussed where my hon. friend held meetings, and that was the cow and the cream can. He had a miniature cream can depicting the old cow outside the building.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Just to verify what was said by the hon. member for Lisgar, I have taken the trouble to get the Free Press files and I find that in the issue of June 28, 1930, the Minister of Railways is quoted as stating at Dauphin on June 27, 1930, that his policy for unemployment would include the building of highways, the St. Lawrence scheme, the construction of the Mafeking cut-off, the finishing of the Hudson Bay railway and many other works.

Mr. POWER: Now is the time to say you were misquoted.

Mr. MANION: Of course my hon. friend from Quebec South knows that nobody could be misquoted more easily than myself, because I speak so rapidly, though I do not think I have ever before accused a newspaper of misquoting me. After all, without offence to the newspapers, I do not suppose any man can speak very often and very rapidly, as I do, without being misreported occasionally. So far as the Winnipeg Free Press is concerned, that is a very fine newspaper, but I should not care to hold myself responsible for everything it happens to say about me. I went into Manitoba for about a week and held a couple of meetings a day. For the first three or four days the Winnipeg Free Press used about half its space in describing what a terrible citizen I was, and I spent about half my time at the meetings in telling what a rotten newspaper it was, so I think honours were about even, though we managed to get more candidates elected than the Winnipeg Free Press did. Without saying they have misquoted me, I have already told the hon. member for Lisgar what I said.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Was the minister speaking over the radio at that time?

Mr. MANION: Yes, I think I was speaking over the radio, and there was a reporter from the Free Press there as well. I spent some fifteen or twenty minutes paying my compliments to the Manitoba Free Press and telling how often they told untruths about us; I did not have to exaggerate at all because the Manitoba Free Press went the limit on all occasions. On the other hand I did not leave anything unsaid about the Manitoba Free Press, and apparently I said it very successfully.

Mr. RINFRET: Did the radio misquote the minister?

Mr. MANION: No; the results in Manitoba would seem to show that the radio quoted me correctly.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: During the last ten years I have listened to the minister speaking in this house on many occasions, and I know he is very fast but a very pleasant speaker to listen to.

Mr. POWER: Not always.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: His words are not always pleasant, but he has a pleasant voice, and after listening to his speeches in this house and the next morning reading Hansard, we find that everything he said in the house was taken by the reporter just as he said it. I think the Minister of Railways speaks really faster in the House of Commons than he does on the public platform, so I do not see how all these reporters and other people listening could misquote the minister all the time.

Mr. BROWN: Speaking about the Winnipeg Free Press reports of the speeches of the Minister of Railways, I saw one report which I felt at the time must have been a mistake. The hon. member was speaking at some gathering, I do not know where, about the progress that had been made in connection with the Hudson Bay railway, and he undertook to give some credit to the former government for the rapidity with which they had pushed forward the work. I felt that must be wrong, because I had heard the Minister of Railways use all the adjectives in the dictionary in denouncing the incompetence of the former government. I felt that surely that report appearing in the Winnipeg Free Press must be wrong.

Mr. MANION: We might just as well clear up this question of who built the Hudson Bay railway. I will admit to my hon. friend from Lisgar that the Liberals apparently began it. I am looking at the recorded figures of expenditures. The Liberal party apparently began it in 1908 and 1909, and my recollection is that Hon. George P. Graham turned the first sod. I will give the figures of the money spent.

Mr. BROWN: I know there was a change of government in 1911.

Mr. MANION: In 1908-09 the amount spent was $92,000, in round figures. In 1909-10 the amount was $53,000; in 1910-11 it was $184,000 and in 1911-12 it was $159,000. That would be the end of the Liberal regime, because they went out in the fall of 1911. Apparently $184,000 was the highest amount spent in any one of those four years. In 1912-13 the sum of $1,009,000 was spent by the Conservative government, and we spent in succeeding years amounts as follows: in 1913-14, $3,071,000; in 1914-15, $3,256,000; in 1915-16, $2,981,000; in 1916-17, $1,792,000; in 1917-18, $1,288,000; in 1918-19, $641,000, when active construction ceased. In every year during all that period the Conservative government spent very much more than the Liberal government spent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What was there to show for it when it was all spent?

Mr. MANION: Good progress was made on the railway itself to which the expenditures just quoted apply. I will admit that the port at Nelson was not very much of a success, but both parties were agreed as to the selection of that port on the advice of engineers. The terminus was changed to Churchill by my predecessor, not Mr. Crerar but Mr. Dunning, also on engineering advice. The change was made in 1927 and I quite admit that while the late government were in power they spent very large sums of money on this project. In 1926-27, for example, they spent $2,800,000, in round figures mostly on the railway. Then in 1927-28 they spent on the railway and terminal $3,544,000 and in 1928-29, $6,159,000. In 1929-30 it reached $6,396,000 and in 1930-31 they spent $4,175,000. This year we are spending $6,000,000, five millions of which, as already explained, is on the Churchill terminal, including $3,100,000 on the elevator, and the other million for the railway.

I do not wish to go into the political aspect of the question, but certainly during the first four years of the construction of this line, under the Liberal regime, hon. gentlemen opposite spent very little. The real expenditures began in 1912-13, when over $1,000,000 was spent. I will put myself on record here, where I cannot be misquoted, since hon. gentlemen can quote Hansard, as saying that in my opinion both parties have done a great deal of work on the Hudson Bay railway line. I think both parties have rather vied with each other to see which would deliver the goods. We are going to deliver the goods, as a matter of fact; we happen to be in power, and we are going to finish the job, but I think both parties did very good work on the project.

Mr. BROWN: There is nothing in what the minister has said to disprove the statement I made, that the Liberal government began the work on the Hudson Bay railway. That was the only statement I made. The minister has sought to smother all arguments under a multitude of figures with which I do not disagree. I simply said the Liberal government began to build the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. MANION: I did not say the hon. gentleman's statement was wrong; I think that is the only statement he made that was right. Most of the other statements he made have been proved to be wrong, but I will admit that the statement he made in this respect was correct.

Mr. BROWN: The minister took a long time in an attempt to disprove a statement which he now admits was correct.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman was on his feet for half an hour, in the course of which he gradually disproved his own statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I wish to ask the Minister of Railways a plain, simple question: Did he or did he not promise, at Dauphin or other places, that he would complete the construction of the Mafeking cut-off?

Mr. MANION: I did not.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Anywhere?

Mr. MANION: No, I did not do so anywhere.

Mr. MERCIER (St-Henri): What is the total amount spent on the Hudson Bay railway since 1908?

Mr. MANION: The total expenditure to March 31, last on the railway and terminals combined has been $44,655,722. This years expenditure will bring the amount up to $50,000,000. That includes both railway and terminals, as well as the six millions spent at Nelson. It does not include three millions expended by the Department of Marine.

Mr. BURNS: Mr. Chairman, I think the fact should be emphasized again that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Bowman) is not in his seat to-night. No member of this house has been more faithful in attendance than the hon. member for Dauphin. He was called away suddenly because of illness at home, and I hope his absence has not been made the occasion for certain hon. members of the opposition to make an attack upon him here to-night. I can assure them that the hon. member is away from unavoidable causes, and that the electors of the constituency of Dauphin have no apology to make for sending here a man of the calibre of the hon. member.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I should like to ask the minister whether it has been determined as yet how the government propose to operate the elevator when it is built. A great majority of the people in Saskatchewan are anxious that it be operated by the government rather than by a private company. I wonder whether anything has been decided with respect to this very important matter.

Mr. MANION: So far as any question has ever come to me, I may say that we have not even considered leasing it to a private company. The department intends to carry on the operation of that elevator just as it has done the elevators at Port Colborne and Prescott. Some elevators are operated by the Department of Trade and Commerce, but unless there is a change of policy, which is not intended, the Department of Railways will continue to operate the elevator to which reference has been made.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: After the minister's courteous reply I should be sorry to introduce a controversial question. I suggest, however, that before my hon. friend repeats the allegation that both parties agreed to the road going to Nelson he should try to confirm that statement by something of a nature which can be accepted as correct. I have discussed the matter many times with the Right Hon. George P. Graham and he always told me that the government, before they went out of power, had refrained from letting the whole contract to Nelson or anywhere else until it should be decided which was the better port of the two. The contract was left for 100 miles past The Pas, and then the matter was left in abeyance pending the completion of that stretch of 100 miles. The government changed in 1911 and the incoming government was entirely and alone responsible for sending the road to Nelson. I wish to be corrected on that point if I am wrong, but I have information direct from the Right Hon. Mr. Graham. I have searched Hansard on more than one occasion for information in contradiction of that statement, but I have not found any evidence of such a character. Perhaps there is no evidence in support of what I have said except the word of the gentleman who was familiar with the conditions at that time. There may be no documentary evidence, and I believe my hon. friend is telling exactly what he believes to be correct; I am not even suggesting that he is misrepresenting the situation. Indeed, the statement has been made so frequently that some people have come to believe it, that both parties were responsible for sending the road to Nelson. But my information convinces me that that is not correct.

Mr. MANION: I should not care to be unjust to Right Hon. George P. Graham, who sat for many years with me in this house and who is now in a quieter and happier atmosphere. I would not do him an injustice under any circumstances because he is a very dear friend of mine and I am fond of him. My information as well as my reading on the subject leads me to the conclusion that no positive decision had been arrived at as to the selection of a terminus until Mr. Cochrane came in.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is right.

Mr. MANION: I have read the reports of the engineers and they reported strongly and repeatedly in favour of Nelson. Mr. Cochrane visited Nelson personally and finally that port was selected. I asked the engineer, while my hon. friend was speaking, why it was, if the original construction was not aimed at Nelson, that the road was located as it was. If my hon. friend will look at the map he will see that the road runs almost directly east towards Nelson from The Pas and diverges only after it gets near to that port, swinging then directly north. If it had been the intention of my hon. friend's party when in power to go to Churchill, they need not have taken in two sides of the square; they could have followed a different route. But I do not wish to place Mr. Graham in a false position. So far as I am aware, no definite decision was reached until after Mr. Cochrane came in.

Mr. EULER: Can the minister give an estimate of the quantity of grain that can be carried out of that port in a season of average length, provided the full facilities are utilised?

Mr. MANION: That depends, of course, on the length of the navigation period.

Mr. EULER: The average period.

Mr. MANION: One of the most unpopular pastimes nowadays is the attempt to contract that period unduly when one is discussing western Canada, and personally I am loath to venture an estimate. Some time ago I saw a fine old gentleman there, Bishop Turquetil, who has been in the district for thirty years, and he made an estimate of the open season which I have always regarded as quite reasonable. He says that if you have a very ordinary boat, you are sure of three months' navigation through the straits; if you have a boat of a protected or reinforced type, you may have four months; and if in addition to that you have icebreakers, you may reckon upon five months. After all, conditions in the straits are controlled by the ice which comes in. But let us suppose you have four months of navigation: that would be about 120 days. The elevator is supposed to handle about 500,000 bushels per day, and 500,000 multiplied by, say 100 gives you 50,000,000 bushels. I am informed that there is a maximum capacity of 72,000 bushels per hour, but elevators do not often handle to capacity 24 hours a day, so that 500,000 bushels is a fair estimate, and for 100 days that would be 50,000,000 bushels. There is no reason, however, why one elevator should handle all the traffic.

Mr. EULER: Would the port be capable of handling the output of more elevators than the ones which are being established now?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. EULER: Does the minister's assumption apply to the season in which grain is produced, or would it overlap into the second season?

Mr. MANION: It would overlap. The season would be probably from the middle of July, extending through August and September and a part of October, perhaps the whole of October. It would run probably from the first of July to the end of October, so that early July would be too soon for that year's crop. The elevator would therefore have to handle the wheat of the previous season.

Mr. EULER: They would not be able to handle, during more than two months, any of the crop of that season.

Mr. MANION: That is a fair estimate, but I do not wish to be dogmatic.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is a carry-over at every port, even at the Pacific. At present Fort William has only just begun to empty, and shipping will be going forward until the new crop comes in.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): For the benefit of hon. gentlemen opposite I might give some information regarding the length of season during which it may safely be assumed the port will be open. I have here statements made by captains who have navigated the northern waters and I will give the names and the number of years they have navigated, together with their opinions as to the periods at which the port opens and closes. I may add that I have taken this information from a booklet with reference to the Hudson Bay railway, prepared by the Natural Resources Intelligence department of the government.

The first name that appears on the list is that of Captain F. Anderson, Canadian Naval Service, in command of expeditions, 1911-14.

Years in northern waters, 4; navigation begins July 15 and ends November 15; duration, seventeen weeks.

Next is Captain H. E. Webb, SS. Bonaventure: years in northern waters, two; begins July 25 and ends October 15; duration twelve weeks.

The next name is that of N. B. Saunders, agent of the Department of Railways and Canals. According to Mr. Saunders, navigation begins on August 1 and ends October 28, the duration being thirteen weeks.

Captain William Wakeham of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, who spent several years in northern waters. According to him, navigation begins between July 1 and 10 and ends October 15-20, the duration being between fourteen and sixteen weeks.

Captain M. Bartlett, with Commander Lowe, steamship Neptune, July 31 to November 1, thirteen weeks.

Captain A. Kean, steamship Prospero, August 1 to October 31, thirteen weeks.

Captain C. Couch, Newfoundland, July 15 to October 5, twelve weeks.

Captain C. R. Sinclair, merchant navy, six years in northern waters, three and a half to four months.

Captain Adams, whaler Artic, June 20 to October 25, eighteen weeks.

Admiral Markham, British navy, seventeen weeks.

Doctor Robert Bell, F.R.S., geologist and scientist, June 15 to October 20, twenty-two weeks.

Commander Gordon, July 1 to October 10, twelve to fifteen weeks.

Lieutenant Schwatka, United States navy, two years in northern waters, four months.

A. P. Low, F.R.G.S., July 20 to November 1, fifteen weeks.

J. W. Tyrrell, explorer and engineer, July 15 to November 15, sixteen to eighteen weeks.

W. A. Bowden, chief engineer, Department of Railways and Canals, August 1 to November 1, thirteen weeks.

Captain J. E. Bernier, explorer and navigator, nineteen years in northern waters, seventeen weeks.

Walter Dickson, Hudson's Bay Company, twenty years in northern waters, five months.

Captain Silsby, July 1 to October 31, eighteen weeks.

Captain Thomas McKenzie, whaler, New Bedford, July 15 to October 15, twelve to thirteen weeks.

Captain E. B. Fisher, whaler, East Falmouth, thirteen to fifteen weeks.

Captain T. C. Clisby, fourteen years in northern waters, July 1 to October 31, eighteen weeks.

Captain John Spicer, whaler Grotan, twenty years in northern waters, July to September, thirteen weeks.

The average for the twenty-seven opinions is about seventeen weeks. I believe this evidence was given before the Senate committee which investigated this matter. I could go on and give the committee opinions and information obtained from expeditions such as the Hudson Strait expedition carried on by the Royal Air Force at the request of the government. I could read extracts from the reports which would be enlightening to the committee.

Many people seem to believe that the bay and the strait freeze over, but that is not the case. The bay and the strait never freeze over, although at times the strait is packed with ice. There is a tide of from sixteen to eighteen feet in the bay; a large amount of water has to go in and out of the strait and the current is so strong that it carries the ice away. I have talked with many seafaring captains, men who have sailed the seven seas, and many of them tell me that with proper aids to navigation—I may say that these various expeditions and explorations have been carried on without any aids to navigation—they would rather take a vessel into Fort Churchill or Port Nelson than into Montreal. And yet, I understand, the marine insurance rate on grain out of Fort Churchill has been set at twenty-six times the rate out of Montreal. Many of these Captains consider it more dangerous to navigate the St. Lawrence river than to go through the strait and into Hudson bay.

In order to obtain first-hand information, the government sent a fleet of aeroplanes into the strait in 1927 and 1928 with orders to fly as often as they could during the winter months, to photograph and obtain information as to ice conditions in the strait. A few extracts from the report of this expedition might prove to be interesting to those hon. members who may be a little curious as to the length of time the ice remains in the strait. This expedition had three bases in the strait, and they report that at base B the ice was first seen in 1927 on November 16; at base C it was first reported on December 3, and at base A, on November 30. The planes were flying every day from the bases located at different positions in the strait, and they were continually taking observations and photographs. This information will probably change the opinions of some hon. members as to the ice conditions in the Hudson strait.

An hon. MEMBER: What page is that?

Mr. STITT (Nelson): That appears on page 15 of the report of the Hudson Strait expedition, 1927-28.

Mr. REID: Has the hon. member any figures as to the rate on grain from Fort Churchill to Liverpool? If we had the rate we would be able to find out whether or not it would be worth while to ship from that port.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I have read the rate as published in the newspapers, but we cannot always believe such reports. I understand it has been set at something like three per cent, but I am not sure that that is correct.

Mr. REID: It should be known.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): If the committee desires, I can give more data from the report. Any hon. member can secure this book and I am sure it will be found to be very enlightening, especially to hon. members who believe that the strait is frozen over for several months in a year.

Mr. BROWN: The hon. member for Nelson has given us a great deal of information in regard to the Hudson Bay railway, and perhaps he can give us some information in regard to the Mafeking cut-off. It was very significant that the hon. member did not come to the defence of the Minister of Railways when this matter was under discussion. Perhaps he could tell us whether the people in the constituency of Nelson were given the impression that this cut-off was to be completed by the government.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I will be honest enough to admit that I used the Mafeking cut-off a good deal in my campaign, but I used it only after I was informed that the right hon. the Prime Minister had promised to complete it if it was found to be a practical route. I am a member of the executive of the Mafeking Cut-off Association, and I have worked very hard to have it built and I am still working. I have not only requested but I have insisted on several occasions in writing to the Minister of Railways and Canals that a physical survey be made of this route. I was informed unofficially that an economic survey had been made and that the engineers did not consider it to be a practical proposition. I refused to accept that economic survey because it is nothing more than the opinion of one man, and I do not consider that to be good enough. The Minister of Railways and Canals kept his word to me and put a survey over this route last winter. I inquired a few days ago if he could give me any information in connection with this cut-off, but he informed me that he had not received the report. I am very much interested in getting this work started as I have quite a few hundred unemployed men in my constituency and that would be a good opportunity to give them employment. I do not think any hon. member can state honestly that the government has no intention of building this cut-off. I take it that it will be built if the Canadian National Railway engineers recommend it as a practical proposition. If they say that it is not a practical proposition, I for one will not be unfair enough to ask that the Canadian National Railways throw a lot of good money after bad.

Mr. BROWN: I thank the hon. member for the statement he has made. He said that after he saw the reported speech of the Prime Minister he promised his constituents that the cut-off would be built.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): If it were practicable.

Mr. BROWN: The Prime Minister did not say that.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): That was what was reported to me.

Mr. BROWN: The report of his speech does not show that he said that. Take that in conjunction with the statement of the Minister of Railways that the Prime Minister did not consider it a part of the Canadian National railways, but rather a part of the Hudson Bay railway—

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I never heard that statement made.

Mr. MANION: Did my hon. friend say that I intimated something about the Prime Minister?

Mr. BROWN: The Minister of Railways is reported to have said that the Prime Minister did not consider the Mafeking cut-off as part of the Canadian National Railways, but as a part of the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. MANION: The Hudson Bay railway at the present time is not a part of the Canadian National railways. If the Mafeking cut-off were built, I should say it would be part of the Hudson Bay railway, but when all is said and done, that is a matter to be decided later.

May I say one other word on behalf of my hon. friend from Dauphin, who is not here to-night to speak for himself? The hon. member for Lisgar has said a number of times that there were certain reasons why the hon. member for Dauphin was elected. I do not wish to reflect on Mr. Ward at all. He was a very estimable gentleman, but Mr. Bowman was elected over Mr. Ward because the people of the constituency of Dauphin thought him the better man. I was in that riding and I thought him the better man, and evidently the people agreed with me.

Mr. POWER: The hon. gentleman is shifting his ground. He said before that the hon. member for Dauphin was elected because the minister himself had been up there helping him with speeches.

Mr. MANION: They helped to show how good he was.

Mr. POWER: Much as I dislike to depreciate the hon. gentleman in his own estimation, I take it, from what has transpired here to-night and what has been read, that the primary factor in the election of the hon. member for Dauphin was that the Prime Minister had promised that the Mafeking cut-off would be built. I gather that even the hon. member for Nelson, who has just spoken, was under the impression that the Mafeking cut-off would be built. The Minister of Railways as a member of the cabinet is jointly responsible with his Prime Minister for any pledges the Prime Minister gave. If the Prime Minister made that particular statement, and it has not been denied by anybody on the other side of the house, I think it binds the government and binds the Minister of Railways. He is bound by that and by all the other pledges that the Prime Minister gave. It seems to me that the Minister of Railways cannot simply brush this aside by saying: We shall have to consider the matter later. He should make a more definite statement as to whether or not this cut-off is to be built. Knowing the right hon. the Prime Minister, I do not believe he ever made any promise that ended with the words, " if it is practicable," or "if it is advisable," I heard the Prime Minister in the election campaign, and according to him everything he mentioned was practicable and should have been done already. If I remember rightly, I think he said in this particular instance that it should have been done already, and that if he got into power he would do it. He did not talk of the practicability of anything because he can do everything. He said it, and he has been trying to do it ever since, with very little success. I think the Minister of Railways ought to make some definite statement on the attitude of the government with respect to this cut-off.

Mr. MANION: I have made the statement already. I am afraid my hon. friend could not have paid me the compliment of listening. I said that I had directed a survey to be made of the Mafeking cut-off route, that that survey was made last winter, but that we have not yet received the report. I said that so far as the building of the Mafeking cut-off was concerned it would depend on that report, on the attitude of the Canadian National Railways in regard to recommending it, or the reverse; also on the financial condition of the country, and perhaps, on the success of the Hudson Bay railway as well, because it must be remembered that the Hudson Bay railway has not yet been tried out, and until some shipments have gone forward and we have thoroughly tested the route it is difficult to say whether or not the Mafeking cut-off is necessary. We are going to look into the matter. Regarding the promise of my right hon. leader, he is not here to speak for himself, but he can usually speak for himself without my assistance or that of my hon. friend.

Mr. POWER: I would not give him much if I could.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is not giving me much either.

Mr. POWER: Oh yes, I am.

Mr. MANION: I stand by any pledge the Prime Minister made, and I think he has carried out within nine months a larger proportion of his pledges than are usually carried out by any leader of a newly-elected government. I say with very great confidence that no leader has ever come into office in Canada who has carried out so large a proportion of his promises in so short a time as my right hon. leader.

Mr. POULIOT: After nine months no child is born.

Mr. POWER: I made a very broad statement when I said I was not prepared to help the Prime Minister. But in view of the barrenness and sterility of the government as pointed out by the hon. member for Témiscouta, I will be quite prepared to help the Prime Minister carry out the second part of most of his pledges—to perish in the attempt.

Mr. MULLINS: I wonder why the hon. member for Lisgar and the hon. member for Provencher do not mention the Mafeking cut-off being discussed on the platform throughout the constituency of Marquette. Marquette is just as much interested as Dauphin is in the Mafeking cut-off, and yet it was never once mentioned in my constituency in any shape or form. It is remarkable that they should talk so much about it in the constituency of Dauphin and not mention it at all in Marquette. The reason is, Mr. Chairman, that more important matters came up for discussion before the constituents of Marquette. They are not interested in narrow political questions. The people of my constituency take a broader view of things. Hon. gentlemen know very well that the trouble with my hon. friend from Lisgar is that so few of the Progressives came back. The right hon. leader of the opposition said in Neepawa that there would not be one of them in the house this year. Well, I give him a lot of credit for that prediction. He showed pretty good judgment, because there are only two of them here, and they would not be here if I had my way. I prefer a good Liberal any time to a Progressive-Liberal.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I direct the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to two features of the statement made by the Prime Minister with respect to the Mafeking cut-off? There were two very positive assertions. One was that it was to be a national undertaking. The other was that it was to be an undertaking for the purpose of immediately relieving unemployment. There is no doubt about the present Prime Minister having given that pledge to the electorate, because he did not in any way repudiate it when in his presense I read his statement to the house at the last special session. If the Prime Minister had any cause to take exception to the statement he would have taken exception to it at that time. As a matter of fact, he did quite the opposite. He expressed rather admiration for the number of promises he had made and the care with which I had recorded them. So there is no doubt that the statement I have read was the one made by the Prime Minister to the people of Manitoba. May I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals this question? He says that he is now having a survey made of this route. Does that survey relate to this route as a national undertaking? In the second place, does it relate to this undertaking as a national undertaking for the purpose of immediately relieving unemployment?

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. MANION: If the road is built it will be a national undertaking, there is no question about that, because I do not know anyone else who would build railroads in Canada at the present time. So that part of my leader's pledge will be carried out if the road is built. Secondly, in regard to relieving unemployment, if there is any unemployment at the time of the building of the road it certainly will be relieved. I am not attempting to be facetious at the expense of my right hon. friend. I am simply giving the answer which occurs to me if there is unemployment it will be relieved. If such a promise was made, these are the easiest parts of it to fulfil—at least that is the way it strikes me.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Did that promise relate to unemployment last winter or to anticipated continued unemployment in the winter to come?

Mr. MANION: Since we have not begun construction, obviously it does not relate to last winter. Probably it refers to future unemployment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I regard it, that was only part of the pledge given by the present Prime Minister. The pledge of the party as a whole in reference to transportation matters was contained in the following words:

> We pledge ourselves to the improvement of the whole scheme of Canadian transportation northward by the completion of the Hudson Bay route, and the construction of such branches as may be necessary to render it most readily available to every part of Canada.

Would my hon. friend tell us the branches that are being built at the present time or what branches are being contemplated with a view to carrying out the undertaking given in that particular pledge of the Conservative party as set forth by the Prime Minister?

Mr. MANION: That pledge included the completion of the Hudson Bay railway, and we are carrying out that part of the pledge. At least we are carrying on the work as rapidly as my right hon. friend's government would have carried it on had they been in power. So far as branch lines are concerned, outside of the Mafeking proposal I do not know of any branch lines that are being projected. At the present time of course, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railway are building branch lines in different parts of the country, but I do not know of any other branch lines. I could name a number of branches that are being built but they come under the estimates of the Canadian National Railways and I have not the list before me at the present time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is also an undertaking to improve port facilities:

We pledge ourselves to aid existing traffic channels and to increase port facilities on the great lakes, Hudson bay and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

One Hudson bay port has been mentioned by the minister. What port facilities at Hudson bay, other than the port terminus mentioned, are contemplated?

Mr. MANION: I think my right hon. friend has not read the sentence correctly because it is obvious that my leader meant the port facilities at Churchill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: One place?

Mr. MANION: Yes. I imagine one port would be sufficient to try out the route.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, I would have thought so.

Mr. BRADETTE: What about Moose Factory?

Mr. MANION: I understand that the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway are building towards Moose Factory. At the present time we are not doing anything in that vicinity.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: In order that we may have this "Ma-fake-ing" matter, as my hon. friend from Quebec South called it, straightened out, I think we had better read again the statement made by the Prime Minister as reported in the Mail and Empire. Before I do that, however, may I tell the hon. member for Rosetown that nobody on this side of the house made an attack on the hon. member for Dauphin. I think all hon. members have a very high regard for the hon. member for Dauphin. If he was led astray by his leader in regard to the Mafeking cut-off, naturally he cannot be held responsible. No one on this side of the house has said anything disrespectful about him; on the contrary I think all hon. members hold him in the very highest esteem. I am sure, however, that if the hon. member were here tonight he would make the same statement as was made by the hon. member for Nelson; certainly he would not try to camouflage, as the hon. member for Marquette has done. The hon. member for Nelson came out with the straightforward statement that during the campaign he used the argument in connection with the Mafeking cut-off, and he will admit, I am sure, that his statements in regard to that stretch of railway were beneficial to him and secured for him a certain number of votes.

Mr. POULIOT: He is honest.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What did the Prime Minister say? The Mail and Empire contained the following report of the speech delivered at Brandon by the Prime Minister on June 21, 1930:

Endorsation of the suggested Mafeking cut-off to afford Manitoba a shorter route to the Hudson Bay railway was voiced by the Conservative leader. Supporting the proposal, Mr. Bennett said that this would be a proper national undertaking to be started to relieve unemployment, and he asserted such was his intention.

Let me read that statement again. I would ask the Minister of Railways to pay special attention:

Mr. Bennett said that this would be a proper national undertaking to be started to relieve unemployment, and he asserted such was his intention.

When the Prime Minister said it was a proper undertaking to relieve unemployment, he was not anticipating unemployment during the coming winter because he made the statement that he would end unemployment. In fact the Minister of Justice said he would end it in a much shorter time than promised by the Prime Minister. I shall read this statement again, because I know the minister will understand it if it is read three times.

Mr. MANION: I hope my hon. friend himself understands it.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I have understood it for a long time, but the minister has tried to avoid the issue. I have before me a statement referred to by the hon. member for Lisgar and said to have been made by the hon. minister himself. I listened to it over the radio.

Mr. MANION: Does my hon. friend mean to tell me that he paid me the compliment of listening to my speech over the radio?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I certainly did—when I had nothing else to do.

Mr. MANION: I wish my hon. friend had profited by what I told him. If he had he would not be sitting over there.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The Minister of Railways was billed to speak in my own home town. On that occasion a rainstorm did not stop him, because we have hard surfaced roads.

Mr. MANION: I assure my hon. friend it was not because I was afraid to go into his riding.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I should have been pleased to extend to him a welcome.

Mr. MANION: I will come next time.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I would have extended to him a personal welcome. Now, I have not read this statement the third time, and probably I had better do so:

Mr. Bennett said that this would be a proper national undertaking to be started to relieve unemployment, and he asserted such was his intention.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Here endeth the third lesson.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: When the Prime Minister made that speech he was considering the unemployment situation which existed at that time. As I said before and now repeat, the Prime Minister said he would end unemployment, so it is obvious he was not contemplating unemployment during the coming winter. It seems to me that the Minister of Railways and Canals, as the head of the department, is in duty bound to carry out the pledges of his leader.

Mr. MANION: Would my hon. friend suggest that in building the Mafeking cut-off we should start to build a road through the bush without a proper survey?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But the minister had that information before.

Mr. POWER: Absolutely; the Prime Minister should have known that before the promises were made.

Mr. MANION: We would have known it had my hon. friend's government made the survey that we were making last winter.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will the Minister of Railways let me finish my speech? I know he does not like to listen, but I am making statements because they are true. When the Prime Minister made his Brandon speech he led the people to believe he intended to construct the Mafeking cut-off in order to relieve unemployment existing at that time. He was referring not to unemployment that is going to exist three or four years from now, but to unemployment that existed then. Now the Minister of Railways asks: Do I expect that the Department of Railways could have started building the Mafeking cut-off last year? Why certainly they could.

Mr. MANION: Without a survey?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The Canadian National engineers had made some kind of survey.

Mr. MANION: They had not.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Was the Prime Minister going to build this railway without making a survey?

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. MANION: The Prime Minister did not say he was going to build it without a survey. According to the report that my hon. friend has read, the Prime Minister said he would complete the Mafeking cut-off; but the Prime Minister is a man who has had a very wide experience both in business and in politics, and he certainly would not suggest building a road without a survey through the bush where even the feasibility of the road is disputed. I do not think anyone with any sense would suggest it.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The Prime Minister has had a great deal of experience in politics and in business, and he has had a tremendous amount of experience in promises. He led the people to believe that he was going to start this Mafeking cut-off, and if he intended to build it knowing no survey had been made, he is much more of a superman than I think he is. No, Mr. Chairman, the Mafeking cut-off was a vital issue in the province of Manitoba, and the promise made by the right hon. Prime Minister to build it deprived several gentlemen who are not supporters of his from sitting in this house to-day, because he and his Minister of Railways led the people to believe that they were going to start that cut-off immediately. The words of the Prime Minister that I have quoted prove it beyond any question of doubt. I do not care what interpretation you put on those words, you cannot change their plain meaning that he was going to start the Mafeking cut-off in order to relieve the unemployment that then existed there.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I point out to my hon. friend what the Prime Minister did say with reference to this as well as to other promises? Speaking in the special session, as reported in Hansard of September 9 at page 38, he said:

It must be remembered that promises with respect to policies are matters of profound importance to the Canadian people, and the policies we promised to put into effect we propose to put into effect immediately.

There was no reference to a year hence; it was to be done immediately.

When the right hon. gentleman—

Referring to myself.

—placed upon Hansard the speeches which I made, I am bound to say that they read much better than they sounded when they were delivered. and I congratulate him upon the process of education to which he this afternoon has subjected his followers. It is a matter of profound satisfaction to me to know that so many of them think as I do upon the matters to which he referred.

That was the statement made by the Prime Minister in this house with reference to this among other promises. Is my hon. friend as a member of his right hon. leader's administration going to repudiate at this time the promise that the Prime Minister made, and which he admitted he made by the very words that I have read? It seems to me this is a matter that cannot be dealt with lightly. This was a very large undertaking, it was an undertaking described by the Prime Minister himself as a "national undertaking." It was so described in relation to the most serious problem with which Canada was confronted at that time, and the promise was made to the electorate in order to win him support, and undoubtedly he did get support on the strength of that promise. Now my hon. friend cannot get away from a promise of that kind by saying that the Prime Minister is not in his seat. He is one of his colleagues and is the one primarily responsible for matters affecting railways. I submit he ought to say quite frankly to the house and to the country either that this is one more of the promises intended for nothing except to get the Conservative party into office, or that this railway is going to be proceeded with as a national undertaking as was promised by the leader of his party in the last election.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to repudiate any of the promises made by my right hon. leader. Whatever promises he made I have no doubt he will carry out. So far as this work is concerned, a survey has been made, and that is as far as we can go at the present time. What will be done in the future I have already indicated to the committee. In regard to promises, I do not wish to bring up political issues, but it must not be forgotten that my right hon. friend made many promises in the past, and I can recall some that he paid very little attention to later on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say that that is not an answer to the present case.

Mr. MANION: Perhaps not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And may I go so far as to say that I made no promises that were not carried out.

Mr. MANION: I cannot agree with my right hon. friend. What about the ringing tones in which he promised to reform the Senate in speeches he made from one end of Canada to the other during the election of 1925-26? The only reform of the Senate he attempted was to put a few more reformers into that chamber. But surely that is not what the right hon. gentleman meant when he preached Senate reform. I am sure he would be the last to claim that that was his intention. However, I do not wish to go into the question of broken promises, but I repeat that, so far as my right hon. leader is concerned, any promises he made that affect my department, to the extent that I am able I intend to carry out, including the promise in question, but I may tell the house and the country that until we get the report on the survey I have no thought of spending a dollar.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will the Minister of Railways be kind enough to tell me what unemployment the Prime Minister meant when he said "the undertaking to be started to relieve unemployment?"

Mr. MANION: Surely my hon. friend does not expect me to tell him what the Prime Minister meant by a passage from a speech which may or may not have been properly quoted. I did not hear the speech.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But he admitted in this house that he was properly quoted.

Mr. MANION: I do not think so. I heard him reply to the right hon. leader of the opposition who had quoted certain promises, and he did not take them up seriatim, he simply dealt with them in a general way as indicated in the quotation which my right hon. friend gave the house a minute ago. I do not know what my right hon. leader had in his mind in regard to unemployment at that time. I have not any doubt that if the Mafeking cut-off had been built then it would certainly have helped to relieve unemployment. And when it is built, particularly if my right hon. friend should be in power, it will undoubtedly help to relieve unemployment, as it would if we were in power and we built it.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But surely if my hon. friend's right hon. leader felt certain he was going to be placed in power he would not anticipate any unemployment after he had been in power a reasonable length of time. The plain implication of the words of the Prime Minister lead me to believe that he meant to start the Mafeking cut-off immediately in order to relieve unemployment; because he said in his campaign speeches that he would end unemployment, and I believe he was sincere. I think he sincerely believed that after he was in power a short time unemployment would be at an end. I believe he was sincere when he said, "As soon as I have a chance to put my tariff policies in force unemployment will end." So in the speech he made at Brandon, when he said this work would be undertaken to relieve unemployment, he really inferred beyond any question of doubt that he intended to start that work immediately in order to relieve the unemployment which existed at that time. That is my belief.

Mr. HAY: I take issue with the statement of the hon. member for Provencher that the Mafeking cut-off was a live issue in the province of Manitoba. It was not a live issue in Manitoba during the last election; it was not a live issue in the constituency of Springfield, in the constituency of Selkirk or even in the city of Winnipeg. To some extent Winnipeg is interested in the Mafeking cut-off, but only as a temporary expedient to provide a shorter route to the bay until a more direct route can be provided. At the present time Winnipeg is interested in a direct route between the lakes and Hudson bay on the east side of lake Winnipeg. That is what Winnipeg wants and that is what the eastern portion of Manitoba wants and expects. That is what we intend to press for. The hon. member for Marquette stated that this was not a live issue in his constituency, which is much further west than the city of Winnipeg, so on the whole I think I am safe in saying that the Mafeking cut-off was not a live issue during the last election.

I must take exception also to the statement of the hon. member for Lisgar, in which he gave the Liberal party credit for the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. Some four years ago the Conservative party in Manitoba started to build the Hudson Bay railway, and actually concluded the construction of some forty miles of line at that time. The hon. member for Marquette was a member of the Manitoba legislature then, I believe. Because of financial difficulties the project was not completed; Manitoba was sparsely settled at that time and the money available was limited. As a result we were unable to carry out the project, but the Conservative party have always stood for the development and upbuilding of Canada generally. Our faith was illustrated by the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway, and it always has been stronger, with respect to the development of Canada, than has been the faith of the Liberal party.

I do not wish to delay the estimates, but I felt that I must set the hon. member for Provencher right in that respect.

Mr. EULER: To change the subject for a moment, I should like to ask the Minister of Railways what I regard as more or less of a practical question. The minister stated some time ago that the total cost of the road would be something over $50,000,000, which I think the committee will agree is a very substantial sum.

Mr. MANION: That includes the road and the terminals.

Mr. EULER: Quite so. The primary purpose of the road, I think, was for the movement of grain from the prairie provinces to Great Britain, so I should like to ask the minister if it is possible for him to say—although I do not desire to press him too much—whether the cost of moving a bushel of grain from any point in the prairie provinces to the British market by the Hudson Bay route is less than the old route, and if so what is the difference.

Mr. MANION: I am afraid I cannot say. Even the test movement has not been carried out, and I imagine we will not be able to judge fairly for at least a year or two to come. Many considerations are involved. There is no doubt that under the Crowsnest pass rate, the movement of grain through Churchill will be shorter than via the head of the lakes and Montreal, but at the same time there are other questions to be considered. There is the question of insurance, which is very important, and there is the question whether or not it will be possible to charter vessels, though I believe there will be no great difficulty about that, for three or four months in the year at least. Probably the big question is that of insurance, and as to that much will depend on the results achieved in the operation of the route. After the ships have been coming to Churchill for a year or two, if it is found that there is reasonable freedom from accidents, and that ships can come in and out without difficulty, no doubt the insurance rates will come down immediately. The rates on the St. Lawrence formerly were very much higher than they are to-day, and that is true of any new route. It all depends on experience. If experience shows this to be a safe route the rates will come down. Every effort will be made to make the route safe and I do not think there will be any difficulty in entering or leaving the harbour during a certain number of months of the year. Hudson strait is 600 feet deep and very wide; there will be modern aids to navigation, and so long as there is no ice there should be no difficulty in the way of ships entering or leaving. Once the experiment is started and successfully carried on for a couple of years, there is no doubt that insurance rates will be reduced to what we might call a normal basis.

I might just add that very often, since I was a boy in school, we have been mistaken in our judgment of northern Canada. So often we have found that some section of the north, which we looked upon as an Arctic region capable only of raising Eskimos and polar bears, had many other possibilities. So I should not be surprised to find that the Hudson Bay route may be quite successful. I have been in this house for some fourteen years, and although I have been interested in the matter, and rather against it, living at the head of the lakes, I have never raised my voice in or out of this house in opposition to the project. As a Canadian I sincerely hope it will be a success, though it may take a certain amount of traffic away from the port from which I come. Having spent over $50,000,000, for which both parties are responsible, it would be too bad if the route were not something of a success at any rate. I know my hon. friend feels just as I do in that connection.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The hon. member for Springfield said a few moments ago that the Mafeking cut-off was not a live issue in the province of Manitoba during the last campaign. I was just referring to the remarks of the hon. member for Nelson, and the hon. member for Springfield must know that resolutions were passed by a great many boards of trade and strong influence was brought to bear to have the Mafeking cut-off constructed. During the last session our mail was flooded with petitions in regard to that cut-off, so it cannot be said it was not a matter of great interest. The controversy in the newspapers between the hon. member for Nelson and Hon. T. A. Crerar will prove beyond question that the cut-off is a live question in the province of Manitoba. It might not have been so important in my hon. friend's constituency; probably it was not so much to the front in my constituency, but to a large extent it was a provincial issue.

I should like to ask the minister if the right of way has been surveyed, or how far the engineers have gone.

Mr. MANION: I am sorry I have not that information. I have not any report at all, except that the engineers have made their survey.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Would the minister expect a report during the session?

Mr. MANION: I do not know. To be perfectly frank, I have not inquired, but I know I have not received the report. I may tell my hon. friend I am not in any particular hurry for the report. I am not rushing it, but neither have I asked the railway to delay it. The engineers have been instructed to make that report; I understand they have completed their work, and it is up to them to hand in their report when the time comes. After this discussion I imagine they will get it in.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: If the Minister of Railways has not taken very much interest in the project, as he admits himself, then he is not in any great hurry to carry out his leader's promise.

Mr. BROWN: I wish to place before the committee again what I regard as the essential feature of this situation. The Hon. T. A. Crerar went to Dauphin on July 19, 1930, and made a statement on the government's policy at that time. He made what might be called a conditional promise with reference to the Mafeking cut-off. He said:

> I am not here to tell you the Mafeking cut-off will be built. The Mafeking is a branch line from one point to another on the Canadian National railway, and is not a departmental matter. I cannot ask parliament to advance money to build this road unless it is recommended by the directors of the Canadian National Railways. A study is being made of all phases, and if the directors of the Canadian National Railways recommend this construction I will give the matter consideration. From the standpoint of freight rates the Mafeking cut-off should not be built.

After the Hon. Mr. Crerar had made that speech it was felt that he had thrown cold water upon the campaign of the Liberal candidate in that constituency. The Minister of Railways has made the statement that the people of Dauphin chose the present member for the constituency rather than the former member because they considered the hon. gentleman a better man. Now I am not going to institute any comparison between the two gentlemen, for I have not heard anything to the detriment of either of them. But the Minister of Railways knows perfectly well that often it is not the personality of a candidate that determines the outcome of an election; it is the policies of the government or of the opposing party. And it was the policy of this government as enunciated by the present Prime Minister with reference to the Mafeking cut-off that determined the election in the constituency of Dauphin. The Hon. Mr. Crerar made a statement there and the Minister of Railways went at a later date and made another statement. These two statements were before the people of Dauphin, and if the Hon. T. A. Crerar had made the same sort of speech as the minister has made to-night, there would have been no difference between the policies of the two parties. But it is well known, and the hon. member for Nelson has admitted it, that it was on the representations made by the present Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways in regard to this matter that the people of Dauphin made their choice as between the two candidates. The statement made by the Minister of Railways at that time was not a conditional promise. The people accepted it as unconditional, and, comparing it with the conditional statement made by the Hon. Mr. Crerar, they acted accordingly. I say, therefore, that the present member for Dauphin sits in this house because of the promise made in regard to the Mafeking cut-off by the present leader of the government and his Minister of Railways.

Mr. MANION: I might suggest that Mr. Crerar, the late Minister of Railways, was not accepted even in his own constituency.

Mr. BROWN: That has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. MANION: He was beaten by 2,000 in a constituency that knew him well, so that they did not pay much attention to his promises of any kind. I followed him even in his own constituency and he was not very careful in his language. We knew him in this house. I sat with him in this house for a number of years and he was not any more particular with his promises than my hon. friend from Lisgar—or myself—

Mr. BROWN: Speak for yourself; don't speak for me.

Mr. MANION: He was not as good a politician as my hon. friend; the results show that. He was not thought very much of in his own constituency.

Mr. BROWN: Camouflage.

Mr. MANION: At any rate, the results show that the people of Dauphin thought that Mr. Bowman and not his opponent should be here, and we shall have to stand by that for a while.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): This is a considerable item—$6,000,000—for the Hudson Bay railway and terminal, and under it I presume I am at liberty to discuss the general railway situation. As this is probably the only opportunity I shall have for the purpose, I wish to refer the Minister of Railways to pledge No. 5 in the Prime Minister's famous Winnipeg speech. This reads:

We pledge ourselves to the improvement of the whole scheme of Canadian transportation northward by the completion of the Hudson Bay route, and the construction of such branches as may be necessary to render it most readily available to every part of Canada; to the Pacific slope by a Peace river outlet, and east and west by the development of the St. Lawrence waterways.

I had fondly hoped, Mr. Chairman, that there would be in the estimates some amount to implement that pledge given by the Prime Minister in his famous keynote Winnipeg speech in regard to the Peace River situation; and much as I am impressed by the representations made by hon. members from Manitoba with reference to the Hudson Bay route, I wish to impress upon this house the fact that, as a national asset to Canada, the development of the Peace River outlet is of far more consequence than the development of the Hudson Bay terminals, because there is no question in the world—

An hon. MEMBER: Be careful.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am being careful. I am going to support this item, but I wish at the same time to impress upon the house the fact I have just stated, that, as a national asset, the development of the Peace River outlet is of more importance than the construction of the Hudson Bay terminal upon which we are spending, according to the minister, the gigantic sum of $50,000,000, for a limited season ranging from twelve or thirteen weeks to a maximum of fifteen weeks a year.

Now, I do not want the Minister of Railways to come back with the statement that the late administration was in power nine years and did not carry through the Peace River outlet scheme. We have a new administration in power to-day, and the present Prime Minister's clearcut and explicit promise has been given with respect to the matter. He gave a specific promise in that pledge, No. 5, to proceed with the Peace River outlet. Let me point out to the minister that we are not dependent on the Pacific coast upon a landlocked port, open only three or four months of the year. In the city of Vancouver, at Prince Rupert and at Stewart in the far north we have three beautiful harbours, among the finest in the world, to any one of which this outlet could be constructed.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, because he is a delightful speaker. But I would point out to him that the Peace River outlet hardly comes under the Hudson Bay vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am coming to that.

Mr. MANION: I am not averse to discussing it, although it is now nearly eleven o'clock, but the hon. member is really out of order in dealing with the question under this vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): My only reason for bringing it up now is that, before I can support this item of $6,000,000, it is necessary that I should have a declaration of policy from the Minister of Railways in regard to that pledge given by his leader. I have read the pledge; it is No. 5. If the Minister of Railways is not prepared to unfold to parliament and the country the intentions of himself and of the administration in regard to the Peace River outlet, then I think it is incumbent upon this house to leave this item over until the Prime Minister is in his seat; because those of us, on both sides of the house, who have come from British Columbia, are absolutely pledged to work night and day for the construction of this Peace River outlet, which is a most vital question to us. And it is really not a political question.

The CHAIRMAN: Does the hon. member really think it comes under this item?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes, Mr. Chairman. I am discussing the relative merits of this vote of $6,000,000 and the Peace River outlet. An item can be discussed in two ways, either absolutely or relatively by comparing the proposal involved with other projects. I am discussing this item in the latter way.

The Minister of Railways came to the city of Vancouver and made speeches just as facile and voluble as the one he delivered in Dauphin on June 27, when he pledged himself to start the construction of this Mafeking cut-off. However, his remarkable lucidity, facility and volubility of expression did not avail him very much.

An hon. MEMBER: You were there, that is the reason.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is the hon. minister now in a position, remembering the declaration of the Prime Minister during the special session that all these promises were to be implemented immediately, to inform the committee and the province of British Columbia, which is most vitally interested, what the policy of the administration is going to be, either now or in the near future, in regard to the construction of an outlet from the Peace River area to the Pacific ocean?

Mr. MANION: If my hon. friend will take this matter up on the railway estimates I will give him a statement. The matter of a Peace River outlet is being investigated by the two railways. I think my hon. friend heard me state in the house that a report had been made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I have a copy in my office, although I have not the company's permission to table it, but when Mr. Beatty returns from England he and Sir Henry Thornton are to meet in my office early in June to discuss the whole question.

The CHAIRMAN: This discussion is out of order, because speeches in committee must be directly relevant to the item under consideration.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): It can serve as a notice of motion.

Mr. RINFRET: Mr. Chairman, I think it is within the knowledge of every hon. member who has sat in this house for any length of time that it is relevant to point out in regard to certain proposed expenditure that some other expenditure might have been undertaken somewhere else. Otherwise there would be no opportunity for an hon. member to complain that a certain work had not been undertaken in his own riding. Where would be the opportunity for an hon. member to ask questions with reference to a public work in, or affecting his constituency, not provided for in the estimates, unless in connection with an item covering a similar work in some other part of the country? I submit that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is perfectly in order.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member by his remarks has confirmed me in my opinion. Ample opportunity is afforded to discuss any item which is submitted, and every reference must be strictly relevant to the item under consideration. I rule this discussion out of order on the ground that it is irrelevant. I base my ruling on standing order 58, paragraph (2), which reads as follows:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With all due deference to you, Mr. Chairman, I must say that this house is representative of all parts of Canada, and an hon. member from eastern Canada or an hon. member from western Canada is hardly in position—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Do I understand that you have ruled, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will appeal from the ruling.

The CHAIRMAN: All those in favour will please say "aye".

Mr. NEILL: I rise to a point of order. The appeal is made not to the committee but to the house.

The CHAIRMAN: I am putting my ruling into writing for the purpose of reporting to the Speaker, so that the hon. member's point of order is not well taken.

Mr. POULIOT: May I make some observations in the meantime?

The CHAIRMAN: I am sorry, but I cannot allow that.

Mr. POULIOT: It would distract the committee and you would be interested in hearing my observations.

The CHAIRMAN: I am sorry to disappoint the hon. member.

And Mr. Speaker having resumed the chair:

Mr. SPEAKER: It is moved by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion), seconded by the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) that the committee report progress—

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is no report, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): There was no motion made; the committee rose to appeal to the house from a ruling of the Chairman.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is eleven o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER: It being eleven o'clock, this house stands adjourned until to-morrow afternoon at three o'clock.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, May 22, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

ORLEANS ISLAND—BEAUPRE BRIDGE

Mr. A. U. G. BURY (East Edmonton) presented the second report of the select standing committee on standing orders, as follows:

Your committee have had under consideration the fifteenth report of the clerk of petitions, presented to the house on Wednesday, 20th May, together with the petition of the government of the province of Quebec; praying for the passing of an act respecting the construction of a bridge over the river St. Lawrence, between the island of Orleans and the coast of Beaupré, within the said province.

Evidence adduced before your committee shows that final approval authorizing the construction of the above named bridge was not obtained until 15th May. Immediately following such approval steps were taken to present petitions to the parliament of Canada; such action, however, was effected after the expiry of the time fixed for recovering petitions in this house.

Your committee therefore recommend that standing order 92, in relation thereto, be suspended and the said petition be received.

Mr. BURY moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRECEDENCE FOR GOVERNMENT BUSINESS ON AND AFTER MONDAY JUNE 1

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That on and after May 25, next, and all subsequent Mondays till the end of the session, government notices of motion and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except questions and notices of motions for the production of papers.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this notice of motion stands in my name as of May 18. In view of representations that have been made to me I would like to move that the date be changed from Monday, May 25, to Monday June 1 next, so that next Monday will be the last day for private members' legislation. Owing to the interruption of one Wednesday and the desirability of affording ample opportunity to private members I move, seconded by Mr. Guthrie:

That on and after, Monday, June 1, next and all subsequent Mondays till the end of the session, government notices of motion and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except questions and notices of motion for the production of papers.

Motion as amended agreed to.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

PROPOSED ANNUAL EXPENDITURE OF $750,000 CONDITIONAL UPON AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide for the promotion of vocational education in Canada, and to appropriate the sum of $750,000 per annum for fifteen years for such purpose, payments to be made conditional upon agreements with the respective provincial governments.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

RADIO LICENCES

APPLICATION OF BORDER CITIES STAR FOR PERMIT TO OPERATE BROADCASTING STATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before the orders of the day are called may I say that at page 1844 of Hansard I observe my colleague the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) stated last night that he had communicated certain information to the Border Cities Star and that they appeared to be satisfied with the granting of a radio licence to another applicant. As a matter of fact when that statement was made I was not present in the house. I desire to inform the chamber at this time that a representative of the Border Cities Star, Mr. H. A. Graybill, the local representative of that paper, saw me in my office in this building and objected to the licence being granted. Having ascertained when the communication was sent out to the successful applicant I did not communicate further with my colleague and he was not fully cognizant of the fact when he stated no objection had been made by the paper. Mr. Graybill has sent me a telegram reminding me of that communication. If I had been present last night I would have been able to communicate the information that he did make a protest to me accompanied, as he was at the time, by a local representative of the paper.

WORLD WHEAT CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO OFFICIAL STATEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS AT LONDON MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he would be prepared to-day or next week to make a statement respecting the wheat conference being held in London, England?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The daily press gives a record of what transpires from day to day at the conference. At the close of each day's business the High Commissioner has sent a communication which in no sense has amplified what has appeared in the press. When the conference closes I shall be glad to give the house any information I may receive in connection with the conference.

PRIVILEGE—MR. MACKENZIE KING

PROPRIETY OF CERTAIN QUESTIONS APPEARING ON THE ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day.

Right hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Recently on a matter of privilege I drew attention to the appearance on the order paper of certain questions which to my mind should not have been permitted to be placed on the records of the house. To-day one of these questions continues to appear on the order paper. It is under date May 15, and is question 23, asked by Mr. Lafléche. It is as follows:

1. During the term of office of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, as Speaker of the House of Commons, were certain pieces of furniture, the property of the state, transported to his summer residence, at Point au Pic, Quebec?
2. If so, what were said pieces of furniture?
3. Has said furniture been returned?
4. If so, at whose request?
5. Who paid for the transportation of the said furniture?

To any one not familiar with the facts the question I have read would, I submit, leave the impression that certain furniture had been taken by the former Speaker from the House of Commons to his summer residence, had been brought back to the speaker's apartment in the city and that transportation had been paid by the state. To-day the Hon Senator Lemieux called upon me at my office and asked me to make the very positive statement that at no time was any furniture taken from the Speaker's apartment to his summer home during his term of office or at any other time, and of course that there was no transportation of furniture one way or the other at the expense of the state. If the question in the form it is put were not protected by the privileges of parliament it would constitute a libellous statement.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is equivalent to such.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Any person reading the question would consider it a very serious reflection upon the character of the former Speaker of the House of Commons. I do not think it should be allowed to remain on the order paper, particularly in view of the statements I am now making to the house in the name of the former Speaker as to the true facts of the case.

In the same connection, to indicate the injustice of these questions, simply as questions, I would say that yesterday a question was answered relating amongst other matters to the automobile used by the former Speaker. One would have thought from the wording of the question that the automobile used by the former Speaker had been the property of the state, whereas, as a matter of fact, the answer to the question made clear the fact that the automobile was the personal property of the Speaker himself. It was purchased by the Speaker himself. Meanwhile owing to headlines in the press arising out of the question a different impression has gone abroad, one which the reply may never serve to overtake. Similarly there has been a question regarding the payment of servants of the former Speaker. The hon. Senator Lemieux advises me that before he assumed the office of Speaker he obtained from the Sergeant at Arms a memorandum with respect to the staff of His Honour the Speaker and the perquisites of the office generally and that during his term of office he acted entirely in accordance with the memorandum then given to him, a copy of which I have in my hand at the present time. As Your Honour knows in former years the residence of the Speaker was part of these houses of parliament. After the fire which destroyed the then House of Commons and incidentally the residence of the Speaker, His Honour the Speaker made use of a private residence as the residence of the Speaker, but was allowed some equivalent for service and the like. If a definite allowance were not given, certain perquisites were allowed with respect to servants and other incidentals in an attempt to equalize the position of the Speaker as it had existed formerly when the premises of the Speaker were connected immediately with the House of Commons. As regards servants employed, the then Speaker was but following the traditions of the house since we have had a parliament. It is a great shame that questions of the kind, which through what they carry in the way of innuendo reflect upon one who was three times elected speaker of this house, should be permitted to be circulated through the press, and I would ask that certainly as respects the one question which remains Your Honour give instructions that it be deleted from the records of the house.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that you or anyone else has the right to delete from the order paper of parliament any question that affects the expenditure of public moneys. One may doubt the propriety of putting the questions, but three of them touch the expenditure of public moneys. The Auditor General's report will indicate who got the moneys and what they were spent for, and the circumstances may be inquired into by the public accounts committee. It may not be desirable—and with respect to that I think perhaps there is a little difference of opinion between the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie King) and myself—to make inquiries by way of questions as to these expenditures when the method for doing so is provided through the public accounts committee, where it may be determined what moneys have been expended in connection with the maintenance of the Speaker's quarters and the circumstances under which they were so expended. I would certainly think that that was a matter which being in the Auditor General's report should be dealt with before the public accounts committee.

Question 23 has now been answered by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). I do not think it is a proper question, for another reason altogether—that there is nobody I know of who would be in a position to answer it except the former Speaker himself, unless it be some official of the House of Commons.

In that regard it may be explained that there was some feeling in this country last year in connection with the attitude of the former Speaker of this chamber, who retained the exercise of his powers as Speaker even after he had become a senator and who participated in the campaign which culminated in the election of July 28. I can readily understand the curiosity of people, whether legitimate or not, to determine if the former Speaker, having been appointed to the upper house of this parliament, was continuing to exercise control over the expenditures of this house. That question has been seriously raised in this country, and the return that was furnished the other day indicated—there is no dispute about it—that the former Speaker of this house, now Senator Lemieux, did continue to exercise control over the expenditures of this house until the meeting of parliament in September last. Under those circumstances that answer is part of the records of parliament that he so controlled those expenditures. It is said that the statute enabled him to do so. It may be that that is the proper interpretation of it. I am not expressing any opinion at the moment. I had my attention directed to it by several correspondents who wanted to know who was Speaker of the House of Commons and how control and direction of the staff should be continued by a gentleman who had been removed from our midst and appointed to the upper chamber.

I would point out that the question in the form it is asked is not libellous. It does not insinuate or assert that public moneys have been spent; it asks if certain pieces of furniture were taken to the summer residence of the Speaker.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is untrue.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman says it is untrue. I say the question is asked; there is no assertion made that it is so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The form of the third question "has said furniture been returned?" would lead anyone to assume that the furniture had been taken.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely you must read the second question with the first. I am bound to say with the right hon. gentleman that I would prefer that the question had not been there, but I do not think it is a question that can be summarily disposed of in that way. I will give the reason why—the further question, "Who paid for the transportation of the said furniture?" My right hon. friend says that that question and question No. 3 are not sufficiently inquisitorial, that they are statements rather than questions, and with that view I confess I do not wholly disagree except that the questions should be read together as a whole. I quite agree the question as a whole should be now dropped from this order paper. I feel that the third and fifth questions should be preceded by the words "if so." Those questions, in terms, are not different from the questions which appear in courts of equity on interrogatories. I certainly think that the question can properly be dropped, but I desire to say very emphatically that there is no uncertain view held by many people in this country, and I am one of them, as to how the direction of the expenditures of this house and its administration could be carried on by one who had ceased to be a Speaker and had become a senator, and who immediately after actively participated in an election campaign and made a speech, the offensiveness of which will never be forgotten by many people.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to intervene in the discussion as to the propriety of this particular question, but my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) having referred to certain comments which may have been made because the former Speaker continued to exercise the duties of his office after having ceased to be Speaker, I may say, in justice to Senator Lemieux that he did so after having secured the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice and of the law officer of the House of Commons as to the interpretation of the statute, and I have seen both those opinions.

Mr. LAVERGNE: May I ask my hon. friend if he has forgotten the wonderful campaign which was waged in the province of Quebec against a former Speaker of this house with respect to a victrola?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will not enter into a debate with my hon. friend on that.

Mr. SPEAKER: The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) having on behalf of the former Speaker of the house answered the question, it perhaps had better remain on the order paper until it is called in its order, when the answer to the first question will of necessity dispose of the second, third, fourth and fifth questions. That in my view would be more desirable than to have the question removed from the order paper as if someone was ashamed of it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Of course, I defer to your wishes, Mr. Speaker, but I do think a question worded in this way carries with it an innuendo and should not be allowed on the order paper for that very reason. All that is desired in the way of information can be obtained by a question that does not carry any innuendo. I should rather hope that the hon. member who has asked this question (Mr. Laflèche) would take advantage of what he has heard to-day and request that it be immediately withdrawn.

Mr. BENNETT: We have not reached it yet.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is apparent that the various sections of the question might have been worded in a different way. The first section of the question is:

> During the term of office of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, as Speaker of the House of Commons, were certain pieces of furniture, the property of the state, transported to his summer residence, at Pointe au Pic, Quebec?

If the answer to that is "no," the answer to the other four sections is also "no," and that would be the end of the question. But since the question has not yet come on to be answered before the house in the ordinary course, I think we had better not anticipate it.

IMMIGRATION ADVERTISING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to draw the attention of the government to the fact that in the English papers advertisements are still being inserted by the Dominion government for boys and men to come to this country to be placed on farms, with free passage offered. I have quite a number of these advertisements, which I do not care to read.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I think, Mr. Speaker, I can say that these advertisements are being continued under contracts which were made by the previous administration and which as yet have not lapsed. In the one case into which I inquired I found a contract for a year, which had not been fulfilled. If the hon. gentleman will send these advertisements to the department, I will have inquiries made to ascertain if they are not in the same position.

Mr. HEENAN: My intention was to direct the attention of the government to the fact so that if there were any contracts which had been entered into by any government, they could carry out their policy and cancel those contracts.

RAILWAY COMMISSION

AMENDMENT OF JUDGES ACT TO PROVIDE ANNUITIES FOR CHIEF AND ASSISTANT CHIEF COMMISSIONERS

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 40 to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Annuity to judge appointed as chief commissioner or assistant chief commissioner of railway board.

Mr. MARCIL: I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if an appointment will be made in the near future to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Vien. The province of Quebec is not represented on the board at the present time. I have had urgent letters from my constituents in regard to this matter, and I think an appointment should be made very soon.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am not personally familiar with the situation in that respect, since it comes under the Department of Railways and Canals. This amendment is merely to provide for the position of chief commissioner or assistant chief commissioner, when a judge is appointed to one of those offices. I understand, though, that my hon. friend will not have long to wait until an announcement is made that all the vacancies are filled.

Mr. MARCIL: I make the request because Mr. Vien was assistant chief commissioner of the board, and I think some appointment should be made in the very near future.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am rather in favour of this bill, but I would ask my hon. friend if some similar provision did not exist previously. I understand that when Mr. Justice Killam was made chief commissioner there was some arrangement by virtue of which he was granted his pension after the expiration of his term.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think it has been done in the past by special vote. The idea of this amendment was to make it a permanent arrangement, because I think it is realized that the position of chairman of the board is one that an outstanding judge could fill with great satisfaction, and it would be rather a hardship on the judge to ask him to leave the bench and forego his pension which would be the situation without this legislation.

Mr. POWER: I pointed out to the minister previously that provision had been made for a similar case in the Pension Act. Is this amendment couched in similar terms?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think so.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

APPEAL FROM CHAIRMAN'S RULING

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny): Before going into committee of supply, Mr. Speaker, I wish to state as a matter of privilege that last night in the committee of supply a point of order was raised by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion), on which point I ruled. From that ruling an appeal to the house was taken by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). I have put my ruling in writing, and I now hand it to you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is not a question of privilege. When the house rises at eleven o'clock, the business then being transacted stands at that point, to be resumed at the next sitting. When eleven o'clock came the chairman of committees was in the act of reporting an appeal from his decision, which could not be taken up at that time. If it is desired by the right hon. gentleman who made the appeal that we go on with it, we shall proceed, otherwise it might be dropped. I presume from the fact that the deputy speaker has presented his ruling in writing that it is the desire of the right hon. member to proceed with the appeal.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you would read to the house just in what form the matter is stated.

Mr. SPEAKER: The written ruling is as follows:

Whilst the committee of supply was considering the following resolution:

162: Hudson Bay railway and terminals—construction and betterments, including E. B. Jost at $2,500 (revote, $1,375,000), $6,000,000.

Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver) introduced in the debate the question of the construction of railway branches to the Pacific coast by a Peace River outlet.

The chairman ruled the discussion out of order as irrevelant under section 2, standing order 58, which reads as follows:

(2) Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

From this ruling Mr. Mackenzie King appeals to the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With all deference, I am not quite sure that, as drafted, the statement expresses what was primarily the point in my mind. When the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie), spoke on the question of the Peace River outlet, he distinctly stated that his reason for so doing was that it was part—

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Let us settle this matter, Mr. Speaker. There is an appeal to Your Honour and there is no discussion allowed. The question must be put without discussion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am rising as a matter of right with respect to the interpretation which the chairman has put upon the point in appeal.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That, I submit, should be done if at all in the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: The matter has been referred by the chairman to the Speaker, whose duty it is to submit it to the house in the language reported to him, and to put the question whether the decision of the chairman shall be confirmed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that as submitted to you the language of the reference does not cover the point against which the appeal was made.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I do not wish to contradict my right hon. friend, but if he looks at Hansard he will see what transpired.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On a question of privilege I have the right to state to His Honour the Speaker whether or not, in my opinion, the statement as drafted by the Deputy Speaker in good faith has caught the significance of the objection I raised.

Mr. LAVERGNE: The words of Hansard are there.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The words of Hansard will bear me out.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Hansard is our guide and the Speaker must decide according to the record. If His Honour wishes to take time to examine Hansard, well and good; the record is there.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must rule the question not debatable. I was in doubt only as to whether the house wished to go on with the appeal. If it does, I will put the question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I suggest that it might be well for Your Honour to examine Hansard before the question is put. I do not think that the language of the statement as drafted does express the real point at issue when the objection was raised.

Mr. POWER: May I suggest, with all deference to Your Honour, that the Deputy Speaker, the chairman of committees, should now return to the chair and there, from his seat, as chairman of committees, submit the reference in order that it may be decided by the committee whether or not the reference so submitted was the one which it was proposed to place before Your Honour. That, it seems to me, would be the advisable course to follow.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It was my duty to put the question in writing the moment it was submitted.

Mr. POWER: I suggest that the Deputy Speaker might submit the reference to the committee with a view to ascertaining from the committee whether that reference was the one on which it was desired to appeal.

Mr. SPEAKER: The authority is quite clear:

From the chairman's decision no appeal should be made to the Speaker.

In case of an appeal to the house, it is the duty of the chairman to leave the chair immediately and report in writing the point of order which he has decided. The Speaker must then submit the matter to the determination of the house in language reported to him and put the question, "That the decision of the chairman be confirmed." No discussion is allowed on the appeal. Should the Speaker be absent, the chairman takes the chair of the house and another member takes the chair of the committee for the instant and makes the report of appeal to the Acting Speaker, who will at once submit the question to the house for its decision.

In my opinion, it is not competent for the Speaker to go behind the question as submitted to him by the chairman of committees. I will now put the question: Is it the pleasure of the house that the decision of the chairman be confirmed?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the ayes have it.

Decision of the chairman confirmed.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Hudson Bay railway and terminals: construction and betterments, including E. B. Jost at $2,500 (revote, $1,375,000), $6,000,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): When the committee adjourned last evening I was asking the Minister of Railways a question. Before I supported this item of $6,000,000 for the Hudson Bay railway and terminals, which involves a national system of transportation I wanted to know whether he would indicate to the house what the policy of the administration will be in regard to the Peace River outlet.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The chairman has already ruled that question out of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am not discussing it; I am merely asking a question.

Mr. MANION: I am willing to answer the question, but I understood the chairman to have ruled the whole discussion out of order.

The CHAIRMAN: The house has sustained my decision, whether it is sound or not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Two or three times the minister has intimated that he would be prepared to discuss the Peace River outlet when we came to the railway estimates. We are now considering the estimates of the Department of Railways and Canals, and I submit that somewhere in these estimates there ought to be some item in relation to which we might find it possible to discuss the Peace River outlet. Inasmuch as the discussion of the Peace River outlet, which in our opinion has a bearing upon this item now before the committee, has been ruled out of order, will the minister indicate where, in these estimates, an opportunity will be afforded to proceed with that discussion.

Mr. MANION: The question will come up when the estimates of the Canadian National Railways are under consideration.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why should the discussion stand until then? This railway might be built by the government as a national undertaking, just as it was said the Mafeking railway would be built. I submit again that there ought to be some item in these estimates under which it would be possible to discuss the Peace River outlet, and it should come, in my opinion, within the items presented by the minister in relation to his own department.

Mr. MANION: The estimates of the Canadian National Railways come under my department, and when they are being put through the house the question of the Peace River outlet can be discussed. The Peace River outlet is a matter which at the present time is being considered by the Canadian National Railways in association with the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is distinctly a railway matter. The item now before the committee is, on the other hand, of a different character; it has to do with the Hudson Bay railway and terminals. I have no objection to discussing the other question, but the ruling has been given that the Peace River outlet shall not be discussed in connection with this item. In the course of answering a question last evening in reference to the subject I was myself ruled out of order by the chairman, and naturally I do not wish to be ruled out of order again.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I understood the ruling of the chairman to be given on a point of order raised by the minister himself. Now the minister graciously intimates that he has no objection to making a statement on the situation. Do I understand, then, that he withdraws the point of order he raised last evening?

Mr. MANION: I do not enforce the rules of the house; the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker do that. I am, therefore, in the hands of the chairman. However, I will proceed to answer the question until the chairman calls me to order. The question of the Peace River outlet, I may say, is sub judice. It is at the moment in this position. The Canadian Pacific Railway has made an investigation into the possibility of an outlet from the Peace River district. The provincial government of British Columbia has also investigated the question. There is before my department as well a report of the Canadian National Railways, which report has already been tabled. These reports are still to be considered, and they are more or less at variance. Mr. Beatty some time ago—there was nothing confidential about this—sent me the report of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That report described a certain route. He has not given me permission to have the report printed and tabled, and therefore I have no right to make it public. But he suggested at that time that there might be held in my office a meeting of himself, Sir Henry Thornton and myself, for the purpose of discussing the matter. I agreed, and Mr. Beatty undertook to arrange a date which would be equally suitable to Sir Henry Thornton and himself. It so happened, however, that in the meantime he was obliged to leave for England, and he is either there now or on his way. He intimated that he would not be back until the first of June, and he has proposed that, upon his return, we should have the meeting to discuss the whole proposition. That is the situation as it is at present. I do not think the hon. gentleman should press the question further because, as I have indicated, it is a matter which has yet to be decided. That is a fair statement of the case.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I presume the survey was made for both companies?

Mr. MANION: No, it was made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Working on their own behalf?

Mr. MANION: It was made by that company at an expenditure of some $200,000, and the company has its own suggestions in that regard.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was under the impression it was made for both companies, but my hon. friend assures me it was for the Canadian Pacific Railway alone.

Mr. MANION: A couple of years ago a report was made by the two railways jointly, which report was tabled in this house, not by myself but by the late government. Then there was a survey made by the provincial government.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That was made by the provincial government, with the two railways cooperating.

Mr. MANION: Perhaps that is so, but at any rate it is a provincial government report, because it has never been returned to us. It is in their hands and they are dealing with it. Then there is the survey made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on their own behalf. The three reports have to be coordinated, if we may use that word, or brought to some common relationship before any decision can be arrived at. I think it would be talking at a loss to discuss this matter, at least until after the proposed conference is held between Sir Henry Thornton, Mr. Beatty and myself.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): In view of the fact that the Canadian National Railway cooperated with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the provincial government in regard to that one survey, it should be tabled, because it involved an expenditure of federal money.

Mr. MANION: Probably it will be tabled a little later on. I have been in communication with the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Hanson) and with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) to whom I stated that I have been in touch with the provincial government but so far they have not given me a copy of the report.

I have no desire to delay my own estimates, but I would like to take up a matter raised last evening by the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell), in connection with the choosing of Port Nelson as the terminal of the Hudson Bay railway. In replying to an inquiry made by the hon. gentleman I stated that I understood that the responsibility for the choice of Port Nelson was upon both former ministers, Mr. Graham and Mr. Frank Cochrane. The hon. member contradicted me and said that he understood it was upon Mr. Cochrane alone, and without being very sure of my ground and not wishing to put Mr. Graham in wrong, I more or less subsided and agreed with him. However, since last evening I have looked up this matter and I would like to make two or three quotations from Hansard of 1912 and 1913, which will show that the responsibility was upon both these hon. gentlemen. I think it only fair to the memory of Frank Cochrane to show that the responsibility for the choice of Port Nelson was shared by Mr. Graham. I will quote only the relevant passages from Hansard, and my first quotation will be from Hansard of March 21, 1912, page 5763, as follows:

> Mr. Graham: If I remember correctly, the information I had, it pointed to this—that Nelson harbour would be by far the best so far as the railway is concerned and the railway operations.
> Mr. Cochrane: Yes.
>
> Mr. Graham: No question about that.

And Mr. Graham continues:

> I prophesy that Port Nelson will be the harbour. I know that my hon. friend knows that it is a mistake to prophesy, but prophesying about harbours—well, of course, that is different.

And then Mr. Cochrane continues:

> As to the port, as I have already said, I hope to be able to make a decision in a couple of months. Port Nelson as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Graham) says would be much preferable for one reason, at least—it is 85 miles shorter.

In Hansard of 1913 there are some quotations of Mr. Frank Oliver, now an officer of the railway commission, which show that he took the attitude that Churchill was the better port. I will not read these quotations, but for the information of hon. members they appear on page 10940 of Hansard of 1913. The following appears on page 10947 of Hansard of 1913:

> Mr. Graham: Lest my silence might be construed that I have lost faith in this work, I may say that I have still faith it will be a practicable and profitable undertaking and if I had not I would not have committed the country to the expenditure.

And again:

I always favoured Nelson from the information I had in the department, and that view seems to be confirmed.

And again:

If the traffic is to assume any dimensions at all—and unless the department were satisfied it will, they would not go to the expense of having very costly terminal facilities there—if the traffic is to assume any proportions a good harbour is necessary, and from the information in the department the best harbour is to be found at Nelson—

And Mr. Graham continues:

—but it has always been my opinion that it will be open for between three and a half and four months.

I do not think I need to read any further. I am not doing this for any political reasons, but only that justice be done to both former ministers of railways, Mr. Graham and Mr. Cochrane.

Mr. HEENAN: Assuming that when the national highway is built it will come under the Department of Railways and Canals, and there not being any provision in the estimates for this work, would the minister tell us at what point in the estimates or upon what item we will be permitted to discuss the matter?

Mr. MANION: So far as I know there is no item in the estimates dealing with a national highway.

Mr. RHODES: It could be done on the motion to go into supply.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not believe the minister caught correctly my remarks. Assuming that this matter will come under the minister's department as it did in former days, and there being no provision for an item, how can we discuss this matter of a national highway?

Mr. MANION: There is no item in the estimates which deals with this matter but if my hon. friend wishes to ask me a question about it I shall be pleased to answer it. If the national highway is built it will not be built by this government, but probably by the provincial governments with contribution being made by the federal government.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the committee should revert to the item covering the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. HEENAN: We are not finished—

[Mr. Manion.]

The CHAIRMAN: I ruled last night against the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) and I cannot allow any discussion which is not relevant to the item.

Mr. HEENAN: I appreciate your authority, sir, and your intention to conduct the business of the committee according to the rules, but a discussion has taken place upon the ruling of last night after which the hon. minister very kindly got up and gave the information which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre desired.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not want to be too strict but—

Mr. HEENAN: I hope there is no desire to keep information from the members of the committee, because there are other ways of getting it.

Mr. MANION: May I suggest to my hon. friend—

Mr. HEENAN: The Minister of Railways is as anxious to see the development of a national highway as I am.

The CHAIRMAN: We cannot discuss the national highway on this item.

Mr. HEENAN: I am not discussing it. I want to say to the Deputy Speaker of this house that he ought not to rule until someone asks for a ruling.

Mr. MANION: This item might be discussed on the miscellaneous vote.

Mr. REID: Has the minister any information as to what the rates on grain will be from Fort Churchill to Europe?

Mr. MANION: That question has been gone into by the officers of the department and by some of the steamship officials of the Canadian National Steamships, who have met in my office. I cannot give any conclusive answer but I can say that some steamship companies have indicated that they would be willing to send ships into Fort Churchill and carry grain from there to Europe at a rate somewhat higher but not extravagantly so than the Montreal rates. But of course the whole question is made more complex by the fact that insurance enters into it to a very marked extent, because of the insurance rates were very high, it might counteract any advantage accruing from the shorter haul from the prairies via Churchill to Europe. I do not think an intelligent answer can be given to my hon. friend until later in the season when we have made arrangements perhaps for some private company to take grain via that route.

I may assure him that we are doing the best we can to have a private company handle the whole proposition. May I say at this point that unless some private company does this, and unless we can give a proper estimate of what the cost will be, this will not be a fair test of the port. Of course a shipment this fall will not be a fair test, but it will be the best we can do this year. Any action by the Canadian government itself in absorbing the necessary charges involved in the trial shipments would not constitute a fair test of the route. I can assure my hon. friend—perhaps that is all he wishes—that we have the matter in hand; we are working on it and we shall endeavour in plenty of time before the test is made in September, to have arrangements entered into whereby a shipment or shipments will be made from Churchill.

Mr. REID: Does the minister think this will be the means of diverting much of the Canadian freight that at present goes through the United States?

Mr. MANION: Of course, the whole question depends upon what the ultimate rates will be. If the rates are lower than the present competing rates, naturally a good deal will be diverted. If the rates should happen to be higher, it is natural that the diversion will not be great. Only time can tell what the rates will be and what the answer to my hon. friend's question will be.

Mr. GARDINER: When Fort Churchill was finally decided upon as a port, I understand that certain expropriation proceedings took place with regard to particular lands. Have those expropriation proceedings been completed and payments made?

Mr. MANION: It was in 1927 that expropriation proceedings against the so-called Beech property at Churchill were instituted and a test case to determine the compensation to be offered went before the Exchequer court at Winnipeg in 1928. The decision of the Exchequer court, rendered on March 24, 1929, established a value of $30 a lot. The result of that has been that to date 45 owners have accepted that amount of compensation and have given the crown title to 156 lots out of a total of 1,406 lots. We have received many protests from people who bought the lots at a much higher price when they were put upon the market by Mr. Beech and his associates, but the judgment of the Exchequer court is final and fixes the compensation at $30 a lot. When I was at Churchill last year I saw the property and I know something of real estate values or perhaps I should say, lack of values, because I went through a boom or two myself, and I think the award of $30 a lot was very generous.

Mr. SPENCER: I presume the balance of the lots will be turned over to the government in due time?

Mr. MANION: I have just received a letter from one of the owners stating that he is not willing to turn his lots over. However, they have been expropriated and the only question remaining is what compensation shall be paid the former owners. When that has been cleared up such property as is not required for Dominion public works will be handed back to the province of Manitoba as part of the crown domain.

Mr. SPENCER: The delay will not hold up development of the port?

Mr. MANION: They are so far away from the port that no interference at all will be caused.

Mr. GARDINER: How far away are they?

Mr. MANION: About three and a half to four miles from the docks.

Mr. HEAPS: Towards the ocean or the other way?

Mr. MANION: Well, the ocean is all around. I would say the other way.

Mr. COOTE: Does the government own all the townsite of Churchill?

Mr. MANION: The land has all been given back to the province of Manitoba with the exception of the Beech property, a strip along the railway running through the town, and the industrial sites on the water front. The strip, 250 feet wide, on each side of the railway, the industrial sites along the water front, a lot for the wireless and a few others, including the Beech property, required for various purposes by the government are still owned by the Dominion government, but outside of these they have all been turned over to the province.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Has the Beech estate received payment for those lots?

Mr. MANION: For the lots which they have been willing to accept settlement for on the basis of the Exchequer court award, but some of the Beech heirs have refused to accept the award, which carries interest at 5 per cent from the date of expropriation. Of course there can be no settlement with the former owners until they accept the award and give title.

Mr. SANDERSON: Approximately how much will it cost to complete the terminals and the road after this appropriation is expended?

Mr. MANION: This vote of $6,000,000 this year will largely complete the terminals, except perhaps $700,000 or $800,000 that will have to be expended next year to put the finishing touches upon the works.

Mr. SANDERSON: It will be ready for business?

Mr. MANION: It will be ready for business to a certain extent this autumn, and by the following autumn it should be complete.

Mr. SANDERSON: How much was spent on Nelson?

Mr. MANION: About $6,200,000.

Mr. McINTOSH: How much of that $6,000,000 or more was salvaged?

Mr. MANION: I do not imagine there was much salvaged. Whatever they could float or bring into Churchill was brought, but I do not suppose it would amount to anything like half a million dollars. I am only guessing; I do not know for certain.

Mr. McINTOSH: As a member for a northern riding of Saskatchewan I am pleased to hear the minister is doing his best to complete the road as an operating unit, to build up the harbour facilities and to provide storage facilities at Fort Churchill for western grain and other goods. It seems to me that a very important matter and one which has been brought to the attention of the minister is the insurance rate across the north Atlantic and the price which it will cost to take the grain from Fort Churchill to the markets of the old world. It is not necessary to say that western Canada, especially Saskatchewan and Manitoba, is at the present time, taking just as big an interest in this problem as it has done for the past ten or fifteen years and will until this route has been absolutely tested and the result given to the farmers and citizens generally of western Canada.

Last night I heard an hon. member speaking about the number of days which the port has been open during a certain number of years. I believe that those tests of the past ought to give place to the tests that will take place in the future. It is what we shall find to be the facts during the next four or five years, after shipping has commenced from that port, that will mean something. These figures are all right, but what the west wants now is a real test of that route. The west wants not only the facts concerning the route and concerning that port in particular but we want to know everything possible regarding shipping conditions across the north Atlantic to the ports of the old world. We want the essence of these facts in connection with western development fully made known. While I am on my feet I would like to ask the minister if he has given any consideration to the question of holding a suitable official celebration when Churchill port is opened?

Mr. MANION: No.

Mr. McINTOSH: Some of the hon. members on the other side of the house seem to become excited whenever the port of Churchill is mentioned. I think they had better get their sentiment boiled down because they will have plenty of opportunity to get excited from now on as the development of the port proceeds.

Mr. PRICE: What did your government do?

Mr. McINTOSH: What did it not do? I am asking if the minister has given any serious consideration to the matter of holding a suitable celebration when the port of Churchill is opened?

By that I do not necessarily mean a western celebration but one of a national character. When the port is opened the attention of all the people of Canada should be concentrated upon it, because in connection with that port, so far as the west is concerned, history of far reaching importance is going to be made. I do not know whether or not the minister has considered the question I have brought to his attention. We westerners look at the port from a national point of view. We do not look at it just from the standpoint of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Regina, Saskatoon, Prince Albert, North Battleford or any other area. We take a national view, and it is from that aspect that we wish to have it tested. We want the minister and the government of the day to do their utmost to bring about a one hundred per cent development of this port because westerners are looking forward to the day when the new port will play an important part in building up the purchasing power of western Canada and help to develop to a greater degree than ever that portion of the Dominion.

Mr. MANION: I have tentatively decided that to carry on to a successful conclusion the work at Churchill this fall in time to make even a test shipment of grain, will necessitate the very best efforts of our engineering department and contracting companies. For that reason any celebration or official opening of the port would be more fittingly held in 1932. In other words if we endeavoured to do too much this summer we would perhaps be accused of delaying the test shipments we hope to get out this fall. Great effort will have to be put forth to get the test shipments out because the contract for the erection of the elevator does not call for completion until September 15 and there are not many days between that date and the close of navigation in those regions. Therefore there would not be very much time left to come and go on. For that reason I think it would be wise to leave anything in the nature of an official celebration or opening until the following year. I think that would meet with the approval of all hon. members.

I would like to clear up another point. Various companies have applied for industrial sites and for rights to ship certain goods through the port of Churchill. Some of the applications have been made for advertising purposes. The companies in question wish to be the first to ship goods through that port. Other applications are made on commercial grounds. However, owing to the amount of work which will have to be done between now and September 15 we are making a general rule that these companies will have to wait until 1932. If we allowed private corporations to use the port and interfere with it probably we would not be in a position to get out the test shipments this fall. We do not wish to be accused of delaying the test shipments; if possible we would like to get them out.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Probably the Mafeking cut-off will be built in another year and a shorter route will be available?

Mr. McINTOSH: I am thankful to the minister for his explanation in connection with the question I asked concerning the official opening of the port. I think he is well advised to hold the opening over for another year; next year would be a very suitable time. My point is however that when the official opening is held it should be made an outstanding event.

Mr. VALLANCE: May I ask the minister if it is the intention of the government to allow any private grain companies to establish elevators at that port, or if it is the intention to keep the port open for public elevators only?

Mr. MANION: Up to the present time we have had no applications from any private companies to establish elevators at the port. Until applications are made we will not have to make a decision on that point. If the matter came up I do not know to what conclusion I would come. Frankly, I have not given any thought at all to the question; it will have to be decided when it comes before me.

Mr. VALLANCE: Before the matter concerning elevators is decided there should be some discussion in the house.

Mr. MANION: Why not have it now?

Mr. VALLANCE: I thought it would be better to have the discussion when we were considering the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the grain commission under whose control I suppose the elevators would be?

Mr. MANION: No. The elevator we are building at the port is under the control of the Department of Railways and Canals. Ordinary supervision carried on by the Board of Grain Commissioners for all elevators in Canada naturally will be effective in connection with the elevator at Churchill. The management of the elevator however and the general operation of it will be under the control of my department.

Mr. VALLANCE: Is not the licence issued from the Department of Trade and Commerce? Have they not control over it through the grain commission?

Mr. MANION: I do not know about the licence. The Board of Grain Commissioners have a supervisory right over all the elevators in Canada. They supervise the operations of all elevators from the standpoint of seeing that everything is carried on according to law. However the erection and operation of an elevator may be carried on either by a private company, by the government, by the Department of Trade and Commerce or by the Department of Railways and Canals. My hon. friend knows as well as I do that there are many private elevators as well as those under the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. VALLANCE: The licence would have to be granted through the grain commission?

Mr. MANION: I do not know about that.

Mr. VALLANCE: There should be ample opportunity given in this house to discuss the necessity of keeping Churchill free from private elevators. In connection with the operation of the new Canada Grain Act as consolidated at the last regular session of parliament, those of us who spent a great deal of time on the matter would like to see Churchill left with nothing but public elevators so that we could check up the other ports which have both private and public elevators.

Mr. MULLINS: There is a private company at Winnipeg which is very anxious to build a stockyard. It is not so anxious about elevators as is my hon. friend. We are prepared this year to make a trial shipment out of Churchill and I hope the minister is making some arrangement whereby a stockyard will be provided to help out the situation regarding freight rates to European markets. Another hon. member sitting on this side of the house and myself were living in western Canada when this road was started by Hugh Sutherland many years ago and we are very anxious to see the completion of port facilities for the betterment of the movement of grain as well as live stock out of western Canada.

Mr. MANION: It is not possible this year to provide facilities for the shipment of live stock. I repeat what I said a minute ago in answer to my hon. friend on the other side of the house that we are going to find it difficult enough this year to get out the last movement of grain and there will be no opportunity to ship live stock. The success of the port of Churchill however does not depend on trial shipment this year of grain or live stock. Its success depends on shipments in the next year and in years to come. In 1932 there will be ample opportunity for my hon. friend and his associates to build stock yards there, and we shall be very glad to have him come along with a proposition. We will certainly give it our very best consideration.

Mr. MULLINS: May I say for the benefit of the minister that if he will permit a trial shipment this year to show that the route is feasible, the farmers will go more into live stock so they will be ready for 1932. I am getting along in years, and I do not want to wait any longer. I have waited 45 years to see the completion of this road.

Mr. MANION: It is impossible for us to provide shipping facilities for live stock this year. I regret this, but it is simply out of the question to attempt it. My hon. friend says he is getting along in years, but nobody thinks he is; everybody thinks he is a young man. I have not the slightest doubt that he will be with us in 1932 and help us to ship live stock out of Churchill.

An hon. MEMBER: He is looking younger than ever.

Mr. SPENCER: Is any restriction put on the number of people allowed to go into Churchill?

[Mr. Vallance.]

Mr. MANION: Yes; no one is allowed to go into Churchill, except by permit and we are issuing permits only to those who are going there to work or to points beyond Churchill on business.

Item agreed to.

St. Our's lock: rebuilding, $435,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I notice the estimates of the department are under three headings; railways, canals, miscellaneous. May it be understood that under canals we are at liberty to discuss any canal the administration of which is under the department directly or indirectly?

Mr. MANION: Yes, I should think under this or any other item of canals my right hon. friend could discuss the subject.

Item agreed to.

Welland ship canal: construction and betterments, $3,000,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I notice that $9,600,000 appears as having been expended in 1930-31. I assume that that total includes the $2,000,000 which my hon. friends put in the supplementary estimates to look after a new contract that they entered into themselves?

Mr. MANION: Not a new contract; a continuation of the old contract. We spent the money after we came into power.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was a new contract to the extent of there being another agreement with the contractors.

Mr. MANION: There was no change in the agreement. These contracts were put in force largely by my right hon. friend's administration at unit prices. The contractors simply continued the work with our permission, and we paid them out of the supplementary estimate of $2,000,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They did the work first and they got the money afterwards?

Mr. MANION: Yes, just as they did under my right hon. friend's administration.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I do not think so. I see the amount for 1931-32 is $3,000,000. Does the minister contemplate that there will be any occasion to spend more than that money in the present fiscal year?

Mr. MANION: May I answer first the reference of my right hon. friend, but not in any controversial spirit. I am informed by the department that, for example, on the Hudson Bay railway contract nearly $2,000,000 was overspent on one occasion and the late government paid it. I am not criticizing this, I am simply pointing out it has been the custom to let the work go beyond the amount voted in the estimates for the year, and it is provided for in the supplementary estimates next year. In this work most of the contracts are on a unit basis. I have a list of the contracts here; most of them go back several years. According to the advice of the legal branch of my department, the contractors could go on and complete the contracts when they will, because they are supposed to complete the work in a certain time anyhow, but generally speaking the amount of money provided in the estimates is the amount that our engineers reckon will be needed that year. But last year was exceptionally fine from the standpoint of the contractors, and they were able to get an amount of work done which would have exhausted the estimates for that year a good deal earlier than usual, and in September or October they would have laid off a good many of their men. Consequently it became a question whether they would continue or not, and they decided to continue and the extra money was provided in the supplementary estimates. This year the vote of $3,000,000 will not be sufficient to cover the completion of the canal; about another $4,000,000 will be needed for this purpose. I may say quite frankly that I am not positive from a legal standpoint as to the position of some of the contractors in that regard. Some of the contracts call for the completion of the work this year, so it is obvious that if the contractors chose to go on with their work, irrespective of our ruling in the matter they might do so, but they would have to wait until the money was voted to pay them. If they insist in going on after the appropriation is exhausted they must wait until further money is appropriated next year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They do it at their own risk.

Mr. MANION: Yes. Some of the contractors might insist on going on, and probably we would not object so long as they were prepared to wait for payment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That comes down to the question of control of the House of Commons over matters of expenditure. I think the minister ought to give the contractors to understand that this is the amount of money parliament will appropriate for this year unless he increases that amount by a sum in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. MANION: They understand that already.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It would be unfortunate if in regard to these expenditures, running into millions, it becomes the general practice of contractors to think they can go ahead and incur obligations beyond the specific amount that parliament has voted with any certainty of the moneys being paid later on. I hope the minister will keep that point in mind.

Mr. MANION: The contractors have already been notified as my hon. friend suggests. They know the amount that is in the estimates this year; they have been told so, and their position is not a bit different from what it was in previous years, because they have always been in exactly the same position, as far as I am advised. Their contract, for example, is for so many million of yards of dredging, which would take a number of years to do, and no contractor knowing he could get only $1,000,000 this year would go ahead to the extent of $10,000,000 unless he saw a prospect of getting the money within a reasonable time. This year the condition is different in this way, that the work is nearly finished. One contractor took the matter up with me the other day. He said, "I have $500,000 worth of plant on the job at the present time, I have $100,000 of work to do to complete my contract. Am I permitted to go ahead and do this if I wait until next year's estimates for my money?" I did not want to give him a definite answer. But I think it will be generally agreed that it would be hardly fair to him or to any other contractor to tie up his $500,000 worth of plant this year or next year until he completes the work. I do not think there is anything irregular in what is being done so long as the contract price is not altered in any way; and all these prices so far as I know were established by my right hon. friend's government; we have not changed them or the contractors. I repeat, I do not see any irregularity about the contractors going on with the work if they wait for their money.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Carried to its logical conclusion, my hon. friend's argument would do away with the necessity of estimates altogether. The estimates amongst other things are for the purpose of giving members of parliament an idea of how much money is to be spent on the different enterprises each fiscal year and definitely to limit that expenditure within that period of time. It raises the larger question which we were discussing last night, as to the attitude which members from other parts of Canada may take with respect to these great capital expenditures in localities other than those from which they come. Here is an expenditure of $3,000,000 this year, and $9,000,000 last year, on the Welland canal, and there is an expenditure of $6,000,000 for the Hudson Bay railway. I should think hon. members from British Columbia, for instance, might reasonably expect that their constituents would ask, "What has become of the Peace River outlet? That is the matter of transportation which affects us. How do you justify your voting so many millions for the Hudson Bay Railway and so many millions for the Welland canal, with nothing for a much-needed addition to the transportation system of British Columbia, particularly when it has been specifically mentioned in a pledge given by the Prime Minister with respect to transportation generally?"

My hon. friend said a moment ago I might speak on the Welland canal, or at least any canal, and perhaps this would be an opportune moment to say a word with regard to the St. Lawrence waterways as another part of the large transportation scheme which has been outlined and pledged by the Prime Minister as part of the policy of the present administration. That scheme in its entirety was set out in what has been called pledge No. 5 of the Conservative party, as enunciated by the Prime Minister at Winnipeg. It reads as follows:

> We pledge ourselves to the improvement of the whole scheme of Canadian transportation—

Then it divides the scheme as follows:

> —northward by the completion of the Hudson Bay route, and the construction of such branches as may be necessary to render it most readily available to every part of Canada; to the Pacific slope by a Peace River outlet, and east and west by the development of the St. Lawrence waterways, and we pledge ourselves to aid existing traffic channels and to increase port facilities on the great lakes, Hudson bay and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and to the establishment of a national highway system.

It seems to me all those various projects should be taken together in considering the estimates, and I submit that it would be proper to discuss them together, as being relevant to each other, if there is a desire so to do. Quite clearly the scheme that is set out is a vast transportation scheme relating in part to the Pacific, in part to the Atlantic and in part to the northern region as well as to the great St. Lawrence system, and in order to have these projects properly promoted, it does seem to me that as between the different parts of Canada there must be some relativity in the matter of expenditure, so that one portion will not necessarily receive more consideration than the other.

May I ask my hon. friend whether he can give us, at this stage, a statement with respect to the St. Lawrence waterways, as to what has been done by the administration up to the present time to implement the promise given that the government would immediately proceed with the St. Lawrence waterway development? I think I could give my hon. friend the exact words of the pledge in that regard. Speaking at Cobourg on June 24, as reported in the London Free Press of June 25, the Prime Minister said:

> If elected we will take up the St. Lawrence waterway and complete it at once. There have been nothing but promises from Mr. King.

I should like to ask if there has been anything but promises, up to the present, from the Prime Minister.

Mr. MANION: I think there has been a good deal besides promises from the present Prime Minister; I think he has done a great work so far since he came into power.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am speaking now of the St. Lawrence waterway.

Mr. MANION: As far as the St. Lawrence waterway is concerned, as my hon. friend well knows, this is an international and a national-provincial matter. It is also a matter for the state of New York. All these different parties are interested, the provinces, the state, the Dominion, and the federal government of the United States. I cannot tell my right hon. friend, as he well knows—because he was Minister of External Affairs for a long time—anything about communications passing between the government at Washington and my right hon. leader, but such communications have passed, according to my information. I cannot say as to the exact position of the matter, but I understand that arrangements still remain to be made between the two governments, and perhaps between the state of New York and this government or the state of New York and the federal government of the United States. There are these different understandings to be brought about before anything can be done.

So far as the actual construction of the canal is concerned, I would say it has not progressed very much since we came into power, and as far as that promise goes, my right hon. friend knows very well that once arrangements are made it will take some eight to ten years at least to complete the canal. This is too important a question, I should think, on which to arrive at a decision in the course of a few months. A vast amount of money is involved, and I am sure my right hon. friend will agree that sufficient time should be taken to see that proper arrangements are agreed upon before any final decision is made. I do not say this in any spirit of recrimination, but my right hon. friend had the matter under consideration, and he dealt with the United States for a long time. I remember asking him several times in regard to the status of that question, and in the nine years my right hon. friend was in power not a great deal of headway was made. We have been in power only nine or ten months, and if hon. gentlemen opposite will have a little patience with us we will do our best to carry out every pledge the right hon. Prime Minister made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All that my hon. friend has said with regard to the St. Lawrence waterway involving international problems and the like is exactly in accord with what I said, and is the reason I gave as explaining why, up to the time at which I was speaking, greater progress had not been made. The present Prime Minister, however, took issue with that method of proceeding—I thought at the time most unwisely—and stated he would proceed at once. I thought he would have been well advised, in view of the great responsibilities which lay before him in connection with the many promises which were made, if he had said quite frankly that this was a vast undertaking, with a great variety of considerations of the kind which my hon. friend has just mentioned, which would take a little time to work out, but he did not do that. The Prime Minister said that the government of the day had not been proceeding with the matter because they did not wish to do so. The Prime Minister spoke at several places with regard to the St. Lawrence waterway. For example, at Winnipeg on June 9, he said:

Has anything been done to the St. Lawrence waterway? Why?

He continued:

Because it was the business of the government to do it and the government did not choose; they did not dare.

That was not the reason. The reason that more progress was not made was exactly the reason mentioned by my hon. friend, and I think in his reply he may possibly have been quoting from what I said. The Prime Minister, however, said it was because the government did not wish to go on with it, and elsewhere he made similar statements. Speaking at Cobourg, on June 24, as reported in the London Free Press of June 25, the Prime Minister said:

If elected, we will take up the St. Lawrence waterway and complete it at once. There have been nothing but promises from Mr. King.

Then at St. John, as reported in the St. John Telegraph-Journal of July 1, he said:

We offer you the St. Lawrence waterways; the Chignecto canal is a possibility, yea, even a probability.

The right hon. Prime Minister made all these pledges with regard to the waterway. He said the work was to be proceeded with at once. If I understand the minister aright to-day, he is telling us on behalf of the administration that he is unable to make any announcement about what has been done up to the present time. He says there may have been some corespondence between the government and Washington, but I imagine there has been no more than one exchange of communications. Beyond that I do not think the minister could indicate anything else, and it is nearly a year since this promise was made.

Mr. MANION: My right hon. leader is Minister of External Affairs, and whatever communications are had with Washington naturally would pass through his hands. He has not made any public statement, and any other statement of his naturally would not be for publication. So I am quite sure my right hon. friend has an opportunity any day, on the orders of the day, to ask my right hon. leader as to further communications with Washington, as he has done already on one or two occasions. Of course there is this to remember, that the criticisms my right hon. leader aimed at the right hon. leader of the opposition during the election had to do with lack of action over a period of nine years. It is hardly the same thing to criticize him for lack of action over a period of nine months. There is a difference of some twelve hundred per cent in the two periods of time. I hope everything will be satisfactorily arranged and the canal built, not at once, but within a reasonable time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend forgets that during the period of nine years all the ground work was carried out and everything done in preparation for immediate action. There had to be international commissions and advisory bodies both in the United States and Canada to go over the preliminaries of the whole project. All of that work was successfully cleared up in the period in which the previous administration was in office. The whole ground was well prepared for immediate action. The heavy spade work has been done and now is the time for action.

Mr. MANION: If all the work was cleaned up, as my right hon. friend says it was, then it was cleaned up just before the election, because my right hon. friend is more enthusiastic about it this afternoon than he was before. I read his speeches during the election and it was only late in the campaign, if at all, that he took any particular interest in the St. Lawrence canal. Most of his statements were of doubtful interpretation so far as that canal was concerned. I will admit that my own leader made a definite statement and I am very desirous of seeing all his promises kept. And I think we shall be in power long enough to keep them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With respect to my statements in the campaign, I admit that I was very cautious in what I said, because I appreciated the magnitude of the project and the many considerations involved. But the Prime Minister was not cautious; he went straight ahead. He just went the limit in everything, and that is what is a matter of concern to us all now. We wish to see how far it will be possible to carry out these universal promises with regard to all sorts of projects.

Mr. MANION: Give us a little time and we will carry them all out.

Mr. BROWN: One thing is clear: the minister and his government have departed from the position taken at the Winnipeg convention with respect to the canal being all Canadian.

Mr. MANION: I do not know how my hon. friend can be so sure that we have departed from that position since we have not yet built the canal. I do not see how he can be so sure of his ground. Until the canal is built, it seems to me, it is a little difficult to say whether it is all Canadian or American.

Mr. BROWN: Perhaps I might put it in the form of a question, but I take it, from the reference which the minister made to the necessity for negotiating with our neighbours to the south, that the government had departed from the position they took at the Winnipeg convention.

Mr. MANION: May I point out that we could not build even an all-Canadian canal without such negotiations, inasmuch as these are international waters.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. BROWN: We all know that.

Mr. MANION: Then I do not see what sense there is in my hon. friend's question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To do the Prime Minister justice, I should like to quote what he said with reference to the cost of this canal, as an additional reason why there should not be delay. Speaking at Winnipeg on June 9, the Prime Minister said:

> The money for the construction of the waterway can be secured without ultimate cost to Canada. It could be built and operated without danger to our sovereign powers, and with every safeguard to provincial rights. It will not lessen the merits of competing roads but will be complementary and helpful to them.

Apparently, therefore, the Prime Minister had already looked into all these matters. He had ascertained the cost and concluded that there would be no injury to any competing system. It was all clear sailing. That was on June 9 last. This is May 22, nearly eleven and a half months after that statement was made. It is nearly a year. At that time the project could be carried through without cost to Canada and without injury to any competing system. As I say, it was all smooth sailing. I think my hon. friend ought to tell the Prime Minister that when we ask him, as we will next week, what progress has been made, he should be prepared to give us a little information. There is another point I wish to bring to the minister's attention. I do not see in the estimates anything in regard to the Chignecto canal. At St. John the Prime Minister said that the Chignecto canal was "a possibility, yea, even a probability." Will my hon. friend tell us which of the two it is at the moment?

Mr. MANION: I will say it is a possibility at any rate. I do not like to put my right hon. friend right so often, but he is wrong in saying that there is nothing in the estimates for the Chignecto canal. It may not be in the main estimates, but there is an item of $10,000 for the Chignecto canal commission. It is the same item which my right hon. friend had in his estimates to cover the commission which he appointed, and it will cover the commission which we shall appoint. It is vote No. 176 in the miscellaneous items.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Has the minister's recent visit to Washington anything to do with the St. Lawrence question?

Mr. MANION: My right hon. friend opposite asked a question of a similar character on a former occasion and my leader did me the honour of replying. I should know by now what my visit to Washington was all about; it was a pleasure trip. I had a very pleasant time.

Mr. HEENAN: Now that we have the St. Lawrence canal completed, I desire to return to the Welland canal for a moment. In view of the fact that Canada has now put all its contracts and all its employees on the eight hour day basis, and inasmuch as the employees on the Welland canal work anywhere from ten to twelve and thirteen hours a day under the old contracts, would the minister take into consideration the amending of these contracts so as to permit the Welland canal to be completed under the provisions of the eight hour day law?

Mr. MANION: The only trouble with my hon. friend's question is that he is wrong in point of fact. They are all on the eight hour day and have been for a considerable time.

Mr. HEENAN: I am very glad to hear it. That is one thing in regard to which I do not mind being wrong. May I ask this question: In the event of some of the employees on the Welland canal being found to be working more than eight hours a day, have I the minister's assurance that he will see to it that they are put on the eight hour basis?

Mr. MANION: Throughout the different branches of my department we are gradually putting all employees on the eight hour day basis. There are some employees who work more than eight hours a day—watchmen, for example. But we are gradually putting them on the eight hour schedule.

Mr. HEENAN: I think my hon. friend was in error in his reply to my first question, and I can well understand how he might be wrong. The Dominion government's own employees are on the eight hour day; I think that is what he meant. But the contractors' men are not on that basis. My point—and I want to make it as clear as I can—is this. Under the old contracts they would not work under the eight hour day provision which was adopted last session. That standard applies only to the employees working under new contracts. Now, it would cost the government something extra to change the contracts with a view to having the employees who are now operating under the old contracts put on the eight hour day schedule. I would point out that inasmuch as Canada was a signatory to the peace treaty, and inasmuch as we have adopted an eight hour day, the government might consider the reconstruction of these contracts with the object of paying the contractors the additional amount required to enable them to put their employees on the eight hour day basis.

Mr. MANION: I am informed by the officers of the department that the employees of practically all the contractors are to-day working on eight hour basis. There are a few exceptions. That is what the chief engineer informs me at the moment. As a matter of fact, however, many of the contracts are about completed. They were made largely by the late government, so that—

Mr. ELLIOTT: There can be no objection to them.

Mr. MANION: Well, so far we have not found them objectionable. We have been quite content to carry them on. So far as I am concerned, we shall endeavour to see that the men are all put on the eight hour day basis; and until the chief engineer informed me of the exceptions I was not aware of any. I am told, however, that there are some men who are on a nine hour day. Of course, as my hon. friend points out, the contracts were entered into on a different basis and I do not think we have a right to break them. However, I will look into the matter. That is the best I can say.

Mr. HEENAN: The minister has not caught my point. I am not critical in the matter, and I appreciate the fact that the minister could logically continue the contracts as they stand. That is not the point I am making at all. The contracts were made by another government and at that time the eight hour day was not in force in Canada. Should the contracts be changed, naturally the government would have to pay the contractors a sum to cover the extra outlay, but inasmuch as Canada has now adopted the principle of the eight hour day, I think the government could very well consider having this principle put into effect in respect to the rest of this work. Had I been over on those benches, which I fortunately am not, I would have recommended to my colleagues that this great national undertaking, the Welland canal, might very well be completed on the eight hour day principle. It would not cost very much, and I think for the honour of Canada the principle should be adopted in relation to what still remains to be done.

Mr. MANION: I can assure my hon. friend that any new contracts entered into will be on an eight hour day basis. I do not like to remind my hon. friend of the fact that he was minister of labour for quite a few years and during his time they were working these hours. He had an opportunity to make the alterations which he now proposes, but since he did not I will take this matter into consideration.

Mr. HEENAN: I am afraid the minister has not caught my point, which may be due to my method of speaking. It is true that the contracts were entered into by the late government, and it is true also that I was minister of labour for four years, but my hon. friend will realize that you cannot do everything at once.

An hon. MEMBER: You admit it now, do you?

Mr. HEENAN: During the four years I was minister of labour increases were made in the wages paid to the men on that work. The eight hour day law did not come into effect until May 8, and had the late government been returned to power I am satisfied that they would have been willing to spend some extra money to place these men on an eight hour day basis. The contractors could be called together and told that the government would reimburse them for any extra outlay involved.

Mr. MANION: To my mind the Welland canal has cost enough, the total of $129,000,000 for completion being quite a large amount for a country like Canada to have to pay for one canal. I will give the usual consideration to the proposal made by my hon. friend, but I do not feel like promising to increase the cost of the canal.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Of that total of $129,000,000, how much yet remains to be appropriated?

Mr. MANION: About $4,000,000, after the item for this year.

Mr. LUCAS: When is it expected the canal will be completed?

Mr. MANION: It will be completed next year after the $4,000,000 in next year's estimates has been expended. The estimates for this year will complete the canal sufficiently to permit some of the larger boats to pass through. In fact, last fall some fairly large boats were allowed to go through for special reasons, and the same thing will happen this year.

Mr. LUCAS: Is that figure of $129,000,000 the total for the whole work?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

[Mr Manion.]

Mr. BROWN: Does the minister know what was the original estimate?

Mr. MANION: I do not remember, and my officers say they do not remember, but it was considerably less than that.

Mr. SPENCER: Was it not somewhere around $50,000,000?

Mr. MANION: I have a hazy recollection of that amount, but I cannot confirm it at the moment.

Mr. HEENAN: The extra cost for the last year in connection with the eight hour day would not be very large. Would that total of $129,000,000 be taken into consideration in the event of Canada and the United States joining together on this undertaking?

Mr. MANION: I think it would be.

Mr. HEENAN: In that event would it not be a fair thing to have the United States pay a portion of these wages for the rest of the year?

Mr. MANION: We will give that matter consideration.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: After the present government came into power I understand there were a number of dismissals of employees from the Welland canal, and a number of new employees taken on. Would the minister indicate how many employees lost their positions because of the change of government, and how many new appointments have been made?

Mr. MANION: While my officers are looking up that information perhaps we can go on with some other discussion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Under the general heading of transportation I would like further to refer to the specific pledges made by the Prime Minister. Speaking at St. John, New Brunswick, on June 30, my hon. friend gave his pledge for a national highway. He is reported in the St. John Telegraph-Journal of July 1, as follows:

> We say that the federal government under our administration will build a great national highway in Canada.

Speaking at Cobourg, on June 24, he is reported in the London Free Press of June 25, as follows:

> A national highway for Canadians. A highway in Canada, not through some other country. A highway in which you can leave Cape Breton and arrive in Vancouver without going into any foreign land. Mr. Bennett declared the undertaking must be accomplished by the hands of the federal government.

Then at Woodstock, New Brunswick, on July 1, he is reported in the Ottawa Journal of July 2, as follows:

Connecting as it would the east with the west, old-time maritimers now residing in western Canada could return to their homes by passing entirely through Canadian territory. The people of the east, too, would visit the west, the Conservative leader went on, and the highway would provide a source of cheaper transportation for farm products.

I assume this matter would come under the Department of Railways and Canals. Perhaps the minister would advise if anything has been done since those pledges were given or rather since the present government came into office towards beginning work on this highway, and if so, what is the extent of the work thus far accomplished?

Mr. MANION: Some negotiations have been carried on between the Dominion and the province.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Which province?

Mr. MANION: The province of Ontario, for example. While my right hon. friend is right to a certain extent in saying that this matter would come under my department, it would be merely a grant to the provinces concerned and I am afraid I cannot give my right hon. friend very much information. I am quite sincere in saying that I do not know of any grant having been made as yet and I do not know of any work having been done. I do not think any work would be done by this government because in all probability the work would be done by the provinces concerned.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is the minister making a statement of policy? That is very important, because up to the moment I have understood that this national highway would be a federal project carried out by the federal government. The minister now says that this work will be carried on by means of grants from the federal treasury to the different provinces.

Mr. MANION: I am not announcing a policy in regard to this matter, I am stating simply that my conception is that a certain proportion of the work done would be paid for by the Dominion government. We have no roadway construction officers, either in my department or in any other department of the government. Highways are distinctly within—if I may repeat—the jurisdiction of the provinces.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): They were not last fall.

Mr. MANION: I do not think anything was said which would indicate that we intended to take from the provinces any of their rights.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The Prime Minister said:

The federal government will build a great national highway.

Mr. MANION: I do not think those are the Prime Minister's exact words. That is a newspaper report of what he said. My hon. friend surely is not stating that any man's speech is reported in toto in any of the newspapers. A newspaper reporter, reporting a speech, puts it into his own words.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: These are direct quotations.

Mr. MANION: Some of them are, but many of them are not. I was not saying what was in the Prime Minister's mind, but I was saying simply what was in my mind, that a trans-Canada highway would be built by means of grants to the provinces and in association with them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Surely the newspapers will not come in for all the blame.

Mr. MANION: I am not blaming them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon friend knows, I think, what is called the platform of the Conservative party, the pledges that they made.

Mr. COTNAM: Let the right hon. gentleman tell us about the Liberal platform.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I can understand why my hon. friend would like to hear about anything but his own platform.

Mr. COTNAM: I should like to hear about the Liberal platform.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend had better pay attention to his own field and leave others alone for the present. In regard to the Conservative party platform as given out at Winnipeg, in the fifth pledge in which the appeal was made to the electorate, the concluding words were, starting at the beginning of section 5:

We pledge ourselves—

Then the last sentence of all:

—to the establishment of a national highway system.

These are words that I do not think even my hon. friend will repudiate. They are the words that appear in the specific pledges of the Conservative party.

Mr. MANION: That does not say the construction of a national highway system. The construction must be controlled by any province or an association of the provinces, and it could easily be carried on just as I suggested. I know of no remark in any election speech where the Prime Minister said that he was going to build a trans-Canada highway. He was going, I presume, to encourage the establishment of a trans-Canada highway; but, for example, would it not be the utmost folly for the Prime Minister to propose, where there are good roads crossing certain provinces, to build another road?

Mr. POWER: That is just what he said. He said: We will do it. He said: We want action. We wish it would come.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is more anxious for action now than he was when his own party were in power.

Mr. POWER: I am endeavouring to get action. If my hon. friends opposite would only prod their leaders as much as I did mine when we were on the other side, we might get action.

Mr. MANION: I am willing to admit, in justice to my hon. friend, that a number of times he took issue with his party.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has, as he says, given us his conception of things. I know that he appreciates the significance of the doctrine of cabinet solidarity, and that as a minister he can speak only as a minister. He cannot as Minister of Railways and Canals announce one policy which is his own conception and leave in reserve another policy which might be that of the government. I want to ask the minister now as a minister of the crown, a member of the present administration: Are we to understand that the policy of the government with respect to a national highway is only to make contributions to the provinces; that it is not in any sense a national undertaking, using that phrase in the sense of a federal undertaking in a large way?

Mr. MANION: My right hon. friend and leader makes any necessary statements of policy on behalf of this government when it is a straight matter of policy. It does not affect this vote at the moment, and I have stated my conception of what the Prime Minister meant by what he said. My right hon. friend has apparently stated his conception. We both have a right to our opinions in regard to the statement made by the Prime Minister. If we differ, it is our privilege to do so. My right hon. friend and leader will in due course announce the policy of the government or whatever action he intends to take as to implementing the pledge concerning a trans-Canada highway. I have given my own interpretation and may I suggest to my right hon. friend that he is more particular now about ministers giving personal opinions than he was when he was in power. I remember on a number of occasions ministers of the then government, saying that they were expressing their personal opinions. I am not expressing a personal opinion; I am stating a conclusion, and I think I am right in my conclusion as to what my right hon. leader meant. I am saying simply I am not at the moment making statements of policy for the government, because this question does not affect my department, so far as I know, or the estimates under discussion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I gather from my hon. friend's words that the matter has not been considered in any manner sufficient to enable the minister to put forward the policy of the government.

Mr. MANION: Nobody knows better than my right hon. friend that what is discussed in the cabinet cannot be stated in the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Once a policy is settled in a cabinet, any minister of the crown is at liberty to state it.

Mr. MANION: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why should he not do so? I never before heard of a government where every minister except the Prime Minister, was muzzled as regards statements of policy. Surely my hon. friend had better think twice before he makes that assertion; otherwise there will be no chance for anyone except the Prime Minister to announce a policy on anything.

Mr. MANION: Nobody on this side is muzzled. When my right hon. friend said that once a cabinet decided on a policy, every minister was at liberty to state it, I said no. I meant that there are times when a ministry decides on a policy which is not to be made public for the time being.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Has this one been decided upon but not to be made public yet?

Mr. MANION: I am not attempting to make anything public at the present time; all I am attempting to do is to reply to my right hon. friend. My right hon. leader is quite capable of answering the questions of my right hon. friend, and I would advise him, when he gets an opportunity, to ask my leader what he meant by such and such a statement. I do not wish to be turned into an interpreter of the views of my right hon. leader, because I might, like my right hon. friend, interpret them wrongly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend is becoming more and more like his leader. Each time we ask a question of him we get a lecture in reply, but we do not get much in the way of information.

Mr. MANION: I am sorry if my right hon. friend looks upon this as a lecture; I did not mean it in that way.

Mr. HEENAN: Let me quote these words of the Prime Minister, which I think are emphatic enough to give us an idea of the policy of the government. Speaking at St. John, New Brunswick, on June 30, he is reported in the St. John Telegraph-Journal of July 1, as saying:

> We say that the federal government our administration will build a great national highway in Canada.

That seems to be emphatic enough. The minister just a few moments ago said that he had not read any words of the Prime Minister to the effect that he would build a national highway, but the Prime Minister in that statement, made it very emphatic. Speaking at Cobourg on June 24, as reported in the London Free Press of June 25, he said:

> Mr. Bennett declared the undertaking must be accomplished by the hands of the federal government.

There are two statements within a few days of each other.

Mr. COTNAM: I rise to a point of order. The item under discussion is the Welland Canal. The hon. member is surely out of order in the discussion that is taking place at the present time.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Chairman, before you give your ruling, may I say I notice there was no question of order raised until we had pinned the Prime Minister down to an emphatic statement in regard to building a national highway.

The CHAIRMAN: The item under discussion is the Welland canal and the discussion on a national highway is out of order. One way to enlarge the discussion of an item is to amend it; or an hon. member can move an amendment on the motion to go into supply.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Might I draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that I was careful to ask the minister whether under this particular heading we might discuss these matters that are alleged to be part of the great transportation policy of the government, and the minister agreed. The question of a national highway is one part.

The CHAIRMAN: But if an hon. member raises a point of order, I am obliged to decide it.

Mr. HEENAN: Why did he not raise the point of order before we had pinned the Prime Minister down to a definite statement?

Mr. COTNAM: I think the discussion has gone far enough.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. COTNAM: Hon. members may laugh. The ex-Prime Minister has been talking all afternoon about broken promises, and his preelection speech of last summer, but the public did not listen to it. Surely no hon. member knows more about broken promises than my right hon. friend does. I suggest to him that if he goes back to his own campaign speech of 1921 he will find a trail of broken promises all the way across this continent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that in the last nine months I have learned more about broken promises than I had known in all my life before.

Mr. COTNAM: The right hon. the leader of the opposition talks about broken promises. Up to the present time the government has had no opportunity whatever to implement its promises. If the ex-Prime Minister had been as anxious during his nine years of office to carry out his promises we would not have the situation in Canada with which we are faced to-day.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member would interest us much more if he would tell us whether he is a member of the Klu Klux Klan.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. COTNAM: I rise to a question of privilege. I would ask the hon. member for Témiscouata to explain exactly his meaning, or withdraw the statement he has made.

Mr. POULIOT: I spoke English.

Mr. COTNAM: But it was very doubtful English. If the hon. member calls it English I would like to have an explanation of his statement.

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend did not understand my language, surely he cannot object to it.

Mr. COTNAM: I do object to the language, and I ask the hon. member to withdraw his statement. I do not know anything about the Klu Klux Klan, and I have no connection with it.

Mr. POULIOT: That is all I wanted to know. I am satisfied with the answer made by the hon. member.

Mr. COTNAM: Mr. Chairman, I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his statement.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I think the hon. member for Témiscouata had better withdraw his statement.

Mr. POULIOT: I said I was satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member from Témiscouata ought to withdraw the statement.

Mr. POWER: Do I understand the ruling of the chairman to be that an hon. member suffers injury when he is accused of belonging to the Klu Klux Klan? If that be the ruling, I think there should be an appeal therefrom.

The CHAIRMAN: My hon. friend is a good lawyer. I shall leave it to him whether or not there has been any injury to the hon. member.

Mr. POULIOT: It is fiery language.

Mr. COTNAM: The hon. member has made a statement which is not in accordance with the fact.

The CHAIRMAN: Certainly.

Mr. COTNAM: And I request that he be asked to withdraw his statement.

Mr. POULIOT: I asked a question, only.

Mr. COTNAM: No, I say the hon. member made a statement.

Mr. POULIOT: I shall gladly withdraw what I have said if my hon. friend finds it injurious to be called a member of the Klu Klux Klan.

Mr. COTNAM: Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied with that.

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend does not find the accusation injurious there is no reason to withdraw my statement.

Mr. COTNAM: I ask the hon. member for Témiscouata to withdraw his statement without reservation. He made a statement which in fact is not correct.

[Mr. Cotnam.]

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend finds that the statement I made has been injurious I shall gladly withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN: My hon. friend from Témiscouata knows very well—

Mr. POULIOT: Excuse me; if my statement is not injurious how can my hon. friend complain of it?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member knows that if he makes a statement which is not correct he must withdraw it.

Mr. POULIOT: All right, I shall withdraw it, but in due course I shall put the question to every hon. member from the three western provinces sitting to the right of Mr. Chairman I am satisfied that the question should be withdrawn. We will be given an opportunity to distinguish the black sheep from the white sheep; probably there will be more black sheep with white shirts.

The CHAIRMAN: A point of order has been raised which it is my duty to decide. I am not master of the rules, but to my mind the rule is very clear that—

Mr. HEENAN: May I speak?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. HEENAN: I asked the minister at what stage of the estimates we would be given an opportunity to discuss the national highway, and he very kindly agreed that it would be discussed under miscellaneous items.

The CHAIRMAN: With unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. HEENAN: If at a later time we are to be deprived of the right we should have it now. At a later stage my leader asked another question the answer to which brought out the point that we were to discuss the highway at this time. The highway has now been discussed for about an hour. I am content that further discussion should be postponed until miscellaneous items are reached. I take it however that the deputy speaker is likely even at that stage, even with the consent of the minister, not to allow us to proceed with the discussion.

Mr. MANION: To clear the matter may I say my hon. friend did not ask me when we would discuss the national highway, and neither did the leader of the opposition. My hon. friend asked when an opportunity would be given to discuss the Chignecto canal, and I said that opportunity would be afforded under miscellaneous items. I have no control over the order of business in the house. However, I have no information in my department so far as the national highway is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. Cotnam) raised a point of order and it is my duty to make a decision thereon. It is against the rules to discuss any subject under the sun when the committee is considering a particular item. If there is no item upon which certain discussion may be had which hon. members desire to enter upon, they will have the opportunity to propose an amendment when the motion is made to go into committee of supply. If there is no such motion and no particular item in the estimates to which the subject can be related, the discussion must not take place.

Mr. HEENAN: Surely when an examination of the estimates before the committee discloses the fact that certain work is required for which no item appears, the question ought to be allowed as to why no provision for it has been made in the estimates.

The CHAIRMAN: Not under the present rules. The hon. member could move the adjournment of the house or an amendment to the motion to go into supply.

Mr. BROWN: Hon. members would be faced with an objection similar to that raised by the Prime Minister the other day when the hon. member for New Westminster introduced his amendment. Hon. members will recall that the Prime Minister was angry because the hon. member for New Westminster introduced an amendment to the motion that the house go into committee of supply.

The CHAIRMAN: I can only say that I have made my ruling.

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): If my hon. friend wished to discuss the trans-Canada highway an opportunity would be afforded him under a notice of motion which now appears on the order paper under the name of the hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette).

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): We have no guarantee that the proposed resolution will be reached.

Mr. HEENAN: If the Minister of Railways and Canals has not charge of this highway, who would have charge?

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is out of order.

Mr. HEENAN: I am learning more this afternoon about the rules of the house than I have ever learned before. How can I ask any hon. member on this side of the house what the policy of the government is and where the money would come from to build this highway? My hon. friends have made the trans-Canada highway a plank in their political platform, and if they are ashamed let them get up and say that they did not mean their statements to be taken seriously. I do not think rules of the house should be used to protect a minister of the crown in connection with statements he has made concerning the trans-Canada highway. The minister has said that the matter is one of provincial concern.

Mr. COTNAM: I think the hon. member is out of order. The Chairman made a ruling, but the hon. member continues to discuss the point in question.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. HEENAN: On the point of order I would like to ask the minister a question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HEENAN: Have some of the provinces decided not to go on with the national highway?

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. HEENAN: Are we not going to proceed with the highway?

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for North Renfrew has raised a point of order and I think I must decide in his favour. I must request hon. members to confine their discussion to the item under consideration.

Mr. BRADETTE: Under what department will the trans-Canada highway come?

Mr. MANION: I cannot tell my hon. friend that. If there is no item, apparently the highway does not come under the estimates of any department. Hon. members have the opportunity to speak to the matter on going into supply, and it is their privilege to discuss the matter at such a time.

Mr. BRADETTE: According to a report in the newspapers the Minister of Railways and Canals stated in Fort William last winter that some money was being spent by the federal treasury for the construction of the trans-Canada highway.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MANION :I contradict what the hon. gentleman has said. He had better quote the statement. I object to such a statement being put in my mouth. I do not recollect making it.

Mr. BRADETTE: It was said in connection with work on the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. MANION: That is a provincial undertaking.

Mr. BRADETTE: It is provincial and federal. I will quote the words.

Mr. MANION: You had better quote them. Mr. Chairman, the right hon. leader of the opposition asked me some time ago about the number of men who had been dismissed from the Welland canal since we came into power. The list I have shows 31 dismissed out of a thousand or more.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: How many new appointments have been made?

Mr. MANION: Of those dismissed some were replaced and some were not.

Mr. POWER: What about the Trent canal?

Mr. MANION: One man was dismissed.

Item agreed to.

Chambly, improvements, $55,500.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): May I ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to kindly give us the details as to this amount of $55,500?

Mr. MANION: The details of this item, Mr. Chairman, consist of: a wharf at the upper end of St. Johns, $14,500; a guide pier at the lower entrance to Chambly, $13,000; a roadway in the parish of St. Joseph de Chambly, $28,000; total $55,500.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Is the minister in a position to state when the work at St. Johns will be carried out?

Mr. MANION: When the water in the canal is low enough the work will be begun.

Mr. RHEAUME: You have in mind to fix it up this fall?

Mr. MANION: Oh, yes.

Item agreed to.

Trent, improvements (revote), $116,400.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give particulars of this item?

Mr. MANION: Yes. The improvements are made up of many items. I will read them:

1. Gate building plant, Peterborough (revote, $5,500), $8,500.
2. Dredging (revote, $3,000), $12,700.
3. West lower entrance wall lock No. 19, Peterborough (revote, $2,000), $5,000.

4. New 120 cubic yard dump scow (revote, $2,000), $2,000.
5. New hull for dredge Fenelon; also new dipper and tapered grooved drum (revote, $3,000), $5,500.
6. Drilling and blasting to deepen existing channel above Bobcaygeon (revote, $5,000), $7,200.
7. Steel fixed spans to replace Ops bridge, Lindsay (revote, $30,000), $30,000.
8. New hull, boiler and engine for tug J. B. McColl, $9,000.
9. Concrete superstructures for wharves, $2,500.
10. Construction of concrete dam at outlet of Little Bob lake, $1,400.
11. Construction of concrete dam at outlet of Contains lake, $3,850.
12. Rebuilding timber dam at outlet of Little Bear lake, $2,000.
13. Rebuilding timber dam at outlet of Stormy lake, $1,000.
14. Rebuilding and repairs to Reservoir lake dam (revote, $5,000), $5,000.
15. Dam at lock No. 25 (revote, $15,000), $15,000.
16. Changeover for marine railway winch house, Swift rapids, $2,000.
17. Removing obstructions from prism, $1,000.
18. Gas range lights, Washago, $750.
19. Miscellaneous surveys, investigations, etc. (revote, $1,500), $2,000.—Total, $116,400.

Mr. LUCAS: What has been the total cost of the Trent canal up to the present time?

Mr. MANION: The capital expenditure so far on the Trent canal since confederation amounts to $19,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS: I presume the work has all been completed and that this expenditure is for repairs?

Mr. MANION: No, the work has not yet been completed. At the west end of the canal there is a 16-mile stretch that is not completed though comparatively fair-sized boats are passed by means of marine railways. This vote is for necessary repairs and changes here and there.

Mr. LUCAS: Is there any estimate of what the uncompleted work would cost?

Mr. MANION: Yes, $3,000,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the traffic?

Mr. MANION: A good many boats use the canal, but I am informed that most of them are pleasure boats, although there is some small volume of freight. I have a comparative statement of the traffic for 1928, 1929 and 1930, showing the number of lockages. I am informed that each lockage represents a boat. For 1928 there were 17,486 lockages; for 1929, 16,705; for 1930, 16,098. I may say that each lockage would mean a boat going through at least one lock, and it might go half way or clear through the canal.

Mr. LUCAS: Is there any revenue to the government from this canal?

Mr. MANION: Yes. The revenue for the year ending March 31, 1929, was $95,378; for the year ending March 31, 1930, $95,934; for the year ending March 31 last, $97,447. The expenditures amounted to $286,000—about three times the revenue.

Item agreed to.

Welland ship canal, improvements, $157,450.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like the minister to give the reason for this separate item.

Mr. MANION: I quite understand the question, because I remember asking it myself when I saw the item. This is rather a complicated matter, but for the sake of information I may tell the committee that there were three canals, the original Welland canal, the late Welland canal and now the Welland ship canal, which is the new, enlarged canal. This has to do with the Welland ship canal, for such things as docks and improvements of that kind. I will give two items, which almost entirely account for this amount. There is a wharf at Homer, just outside St. Catharines, costing $50,000, and a wharf at Welland costing $100,000. Those wharves will be used by the various boats going up and down the canal, which pay dues which I am informed give a very good return on the money invested.

Item agreed to.

Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada: maintenance and operation, $321,100.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a few remarks to make with regard to two orders which have been issued by the railway board. The first order is No. 45205. On May 1, 1929.

The general manager of the Atlantic region of the Canadian National railways wrote the secretary of the chamber of commerce of Rivière du Loup stating that the Canadian National railways were willing to build a station at that point. There is also a letter from the principal assistant to the president of the Canadian National railways, Mr. Hummel, dated May 28, 1930, which appears in Hansard of March 31, at page 528. There is also a letter from Mr. Fraser to the joint secretary of the railway board, dated July 12, 1930. I have only a translation here, but in the letter it is stated that in the Canadian National Railways budget there is an item for the construction of a new station at Rivière du Loup. There was also a letter from Mr. Rand, general counsel for the Atlantic region of the Canadian National railway, stating that they were anxious to have the work proceed without undue delay. That letter, dated July 14, 1930, also appears in Hansard of March 31, at page 481.

Tenders were received at Moncton on August 26. The order of the board appears at page 614 of Hansard for April 15. I note that this order is dated August 9 of last year, after my hon. friends came into power, and that order was in accordance with the general policy of the Canadian National Railway. On September 19 the minister told the house the matter was under consideration, and nothing was done until October 7, when the Canadian National Railways notified the tenderers that their cheques would be returned to them owing to the fact that the Department of Railways and Canals had refused to sanction the construction of the station. That letter also appears in Hansard for March 31, at page 531.

I wired the Minister of Railways on October 14, a few days after the refusal to construct the station had been announced. That telegram appears in Hansard for March 30 at page 421. On the following day I received an answer, which appears on the same page of Hansard. Then on November 3 of last year a resolution was passed by the city council of Rivière du Loup, which appears in Hansard of April 15, at page 615, and which was acknowledged by the minister as follows:

(Translation) I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 4th inst., also of a certified copy of the attached resolution.

The construction of the new station at Riviere du Loup will be a question submitted at the inquiry, at the same time as other requests of a similar nature. Your town was not specially signalled out when the subject came up.

I especially draw the attention of the house to this remark.

It was intended to construct a number of public buildings at various places in the district, however the work was not proceeded with owing to the decrease in business.

I thank you for having drawn my attention to that resolution.

I have the honour to be,

Yours sincerely,

(Signed) R. Manion.

The Secretary-Treasurer,
City of Riviere du Loup,
Riviere du Loup, P.Q.

That resolution was also sent to the Board of Railway Commissioners, who answered on November 6 that the matter would be investigated.

On December 9 the assistant chief engineer of the operating department of the Canadian National railways wrote an interesting letter to Mr. Alistair Fraser, assistant general counsel for the Canadian National Railways. I might refer for a moment to the wire from my hon. friend the Minister of Railways under date of October 15, in which he says that necessary repairs to the station have been sanctioned. At the time the minister came to that decision there was an order of the Board of Railway Commissioners approving the plans for a new station. This was a new policy inaugurated by the Minister of Railways, in contrast with the general policy of the Canadian National railway in that connection.

In answering the resolution of November 3, which has appeared in Hansard, Mr. Hazen, of the Canadian National railways reported as follows to Mr. Alistair Fraser:

With reference to your letter to Mr. Appleton of the 14th ult., enclosing copy of resolution passed by the city council of Rivière du Loup and forwarded to the board of railway commissioners, regarding our station at that point, and your memorandum to me of the 5th inst., file 723-6, asking to be advised as to what answer should be file with the board.

It is quite correct that the railway called for tenders for a new station at Rivière du Loup, but these were entirely too high, and it has therefore been decided to thoroughly renovate the present structure in order to meet the requirements of the travelling public.

Dealing more particularly with the various points raised in the above mentioned resolution, I would advise as follows: Paragraphs 5, 6, 7 and 8 (size of station and hygienic conditions).

The present structure, with certain interior revisions, is considered to be large enough for present traffic conditions, and the hygienic conditions complained of will be rectified by completely renewing, with modern equipment, the toilets and lavatories including the installation of tiled walls and floors, hot water, and improved lighting facilities.

In the public waiting-room terrazzo floors will be installed, lower parts of walls tiled, and upper parts plastered, together with improved lighting facilities.

Upstairs, it is the intention to remove the sheathing from the walls, and replace same with lath and plaster; new hardwood floors will be installed, and all toilet and lavatory fixtures to be renewed along modern lines. The exterior of the building will have the brick-work cleaned and pointed, and woodwork painted.

The building, as a whole, is structurally sound, and it is considered that its complete renovation, both interior and exterior, with slight revisions, in the layout, will make it in all respects a station entirely in keeping with the requirements of the community, and in first-class condition from a hygienic standpoint.

Paragraphs 12, 13 and 14 (unemployment relief program).

No item was included in our agreement with the government for the relief of unemployment, to cover any work at Riviere du Loup station.

It is the intention to carry out the improvements outlined above at the earliest possible date, and it is felt that when same have been completed there will be no cause for further complaint.

Sgd. H. T. Hazen,
Assistant Chief Engineer, Operation Dept.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

This time, apparently, the Canadian National Railways have changed their policy in accordance with the policy of the Minister of Railways in respect to this matter. I waited some time and on January 15 I wired as follows to the secretary of the railway board:

(Translation) Riviere du Loup, P.Q.,
January 15, 1931.

The Secretary,
Railway Commission,
Ottawa, Ont.

Your letter, December 24, F36455 Riviere du Loup station, letter Hazen to Fraser, December 9 does not include construction of cellar. Repairs not sufficient. New building required from every viewpoint.

What was amazing in the report of the railways was the statement that "when the proposed repairs were completed there would be no further cause for complaint." But that memorandum made no mention of any cellar nor of improved foundations and so forth. The railway board answered my telegram on January 16, saying that they would look into the matter. On December 27 I had written to the minister asking for some information about the work to be done and on January 19 I wrote him as follows:

Rivière-du-Loup, P.Q.,
January 19, 1931.

Honourable Dr. R. J. Manion,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Doctor Manion,—

I beg to thank you for your favour of the 14th instant.

Following my letter of the 15th inst., I draw again your attention to the fact that the proposed repairs to Rivière-du-Loup station are inadequate on account of the fact that that building has no cellar and that the sewer system is in a very bad condition.

Sincerely yours,
Jean-François Pouliot.

On January 26, 1931, the railway board forwarded me a letter from Mr. Alistair Fraser, general counsel of the Canadian National Railways. That letter, dated January 23, 1931 reads:

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS LEGAL DEPARTMENT
Montreal, January 23, 1931.
Refer to file No. 723-6

P. F. Baillargeon, Esq.,
Acting French Asst. Sec'y.,
Board of Railway Commissioners,
Ottawa, Ont.

File 36455—Appln. of the C.N.R. for approval of plan showing proposed new station at Riviere du Loup, Que.

Dear Sir:—

Replying to your letter of the 16th instant; there is already a cellar under Riviere du Loup station measuring 39 feet 6 inches in length by 23 feet 6 inches in width, located under the second-class waiting room. The floor area is slightly over one-third of the area of the whole building and is ample to take care of all purposes.

This basement is used for furnace, coal bin, and battery room, and when recently inspected was dry and in good condition.

Yours truly,

Alistair Fraser.

But in the spring and fall there is considerable water in that cellar, which is only about one-third of the floor area of the building, as the railway officials admit.

I wrote to the railway board, telling them about the condition of the cellar, of the foundation and of the sewerage system, and they answered me again to the effect that they were taking the matter into consideration.

On January 30, Dr. Lessard, director of the Board of Health of Quebec, wrote to the secretary of the railway board, and the letter will be found at page 482 of Hansard. The report attached to that letter has not been given to this house and I will take the liberty of reading it:

(Translation)
Emile Nadeau, M.D.,
Associate Director,
Provincial Health Bureau,
Parliament Building,
Quebec.

Sir,—

I have the honour of submitting to you the report of the inspection on the cellar and sewer system of the Riviere du Loup station, as requested by your letter dated the 21st inst.

Cellar: It comprises a space of 40 feet in length by 23½ feet in width and 6½ feet in height, on an average. The walls and floor are made of cement. The ratio of the area of the cellar with that of the building which is properly speaking the station (128 feet in length by 27½ in width) is 1 to 4; the remaining part of the station is on an average 2 feet above the ground. In the cellar are located the furnaces, the coal-bunker, a room for wet batteries, a very large chimney, three brick pillars, a staircase and the various pipes in connection with the sewer and heating systems.

Four shafts 2½ feet by 2 feet each, on an average, provide light to the cellar; there is a door for the coal; there does not seem to be any means of ventilating the place, according to the station staff, in the spring, during the rainy season, water filters through to the cellar.

Sewer system: the main pipe lies at one end of the cellar, on a level with the floor. A drain in the cement floor carries the water to the said main pipe, of which the intake end is not closed, this unfortunately allows noxious gases to escape through the cellar.

Two other drain pipes—A.B.—are connected with this main pipe, as shown on the sketch.

The pipe A drains the urinal, a toilet room and a sink; we are told that very often this drain pipe is blocked up, owing to the fittings being badly done.

The pipe B which drains a number of water closets has nothing noticeable except it is hard to repair, owing to there being only a space of 2 feet, on an average, between the ground and the floor of the station almost throughout its length.

We noticed that when we inspected the place there was a leak in the water pipe.

In brief, I doubt that one can say there is a cellar, when its space covers but one-fourth of that occupied by the building, the sewer system moreover is really defective.

(Signed) J. C. Beaudet, M.D.,
Medical Officer

Riviere du Loup, Jan. 28, 1931.

On February 4, I drew the attention of the railway commission to the report prepared by Doctor Beaudet and forwarded by Doctor Lessard, and the last paragraph of this letter reads as follows:

(Translation) I suppose that you have forwarded these documents to the Department of Railways. I would be very obliged, if you would kindly forward to my address a copy of the answer you will receive, at your earliest convenience.

Acknowledgment of letter received by the railway commission, February 12, 1931:

We have not so far received an answer from the company, and as you request, I shall be very glad to forward you their answer as soon as possible.

Another letter to the railway commission, dated February 5, 1931, to inquire whether the commission had received an answer from the Department of Railways. Acknowledgment of letter received February 7:

(Translation) I shall be glad to forward you a copy of the answer we shall receive from the railway company with reference to the last report of the inspection of the station by the medical officer of the provincial health bureau.

I remain.

Yours respectfully,

P. F. Baillargeon,
Acting Associate Secretary.

On February 16, 1930, I wrote to the minister, as follows:

Riviere du Loup, P.Q.
February 16, 1931.

Honourable R. J. Manion,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Dr. Manion,—

Following our previous correspondence, I have sent you last week the third instalment of the story of the intrigues made by some people to prevent the building of a new station at Riviere du Loup.

You wired me on October 15th ult., that the necessary repairs to the station had been sanctioned.

I regret to say that the proposed repairs are wholly unsatisfactory because there is a 6-foot cellar in only one-fourth of the building and the repairs do not include the construction of a cellar nor any improvement in the present sewer system.

This is why I take the liberty to herewith enclose copy of a letter from Dr. A. Lessard, Director of the provincial Board of Health, to the Board of Railway Commissioners and of an additional report on the sanitary condition of the station by medical officer J. C. Beaudet, M.D. May I add that the foundations of the buildings are in a very bad shape.

I am sure that those facts have never been brought to your attention by the Canadian National Railways.

Therefore it is my duty to ask you to kindly reconsider the decision of the department regarding the immediate construction of a new station at Riviere du Loup.

On February 19, I wrote as follows to the secretary of the railway board:

(Translation) Pursuant to your letter dated February 7, would you be kind enough to let me know what answer you received from the Canadian National Railways with reference to the last report of the inspection of the station by Doctor J. C. Beaudet, of the provincial health board?

On February 20 I received the following letter:

(Translation) I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 19th inst. in connection with the business herein mentioned and I must say that we have not yet received an answer from the railway company with reference to the inspection of the station by Doctor J. C. Beaudet, of the provincial health board.

As stated in my letter of the 7th inst. I shall be pleased to forward you a copy of the answer expected from the railway company.

On February 23, 1931, I wrote to the hon. minister as follows:

Dear Doctor Manion,—

Pray find herewith enclosed copy of my letter of February 16th and of the enclosures,

As you have wired me on October 15th ult. that the necessary repairs to Riviere du Loup station had been sanctioned and as the proposed repairs by the Canadian National Railways do not include the construction of a cellar therein nor any improvement in the present sewer system nor repairs to the foundation, be kind enough to let me know at your earliest convenience if it is your intention to reconsider the decision of your department regarding the immediate construction of a new station at Riviere du Loup.

Hoping to hear from you soon and with anticipated thanks.

Sincerely yours,
Jean-François Pouliot.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (Translation): I think the hon. member is reading too fast for the Hansard reporters.

Mr. POULIOT: I shall hand them over the text. It is to save time that I am reading fast.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is contrary to the Rules of the House to hand over the text to Hansard.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. POULIOT: How can we help it? They always ask us to do so and we hand it over to them. If you think, sir, that it may be prejudicial to the house, I am willing to read slower—as slow as the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé).

I have your letter of February 23rd with enclosures. As you are already aware, it has not been possible to provide a new station at Riviere du Loup for financial reasons. As you are also aware, the revenues of the railways, instead of improving, are decreasing, and these revenues in the case of Riviere du Loup and vicinity are further decreased by the twenty per cent reduction from normal rates accorded shippers in the maritime area. Under the circumstances, I can see no early hope or expectation of the provision of a new station at Riviere du Loup. The railway management is, however, partially from revenues and partially by capital appropriation in the estimates, endeavouring to find $15,000 for necessary repairs and improvements to the present structure. I, personally, trust that nothing may occur to prevent this expenditure being made.

On February 25, 1931, I wired to the hon. minister. This telegram which appears already on page 482 of Hansard of March 31, 1931, is as follows:

May I draw your attention to my letters of 16th and 23rd instant. As proposed repairs to Riviere du Loup station do not include construction of basement therein nor improvement to sewer system nor repairs to foundation. Will you sanction same as satisfactory although condemned by board of health? If you do not approve proposed repairs will you reconsider decision regarding immediate construction of new station building?

I was advised by the minister's private secretary that the minister was out of his office at the time of the receipt of this wire.

In answer to the memorandum prepared by Doctor Beaudet, the Canadian National Railways on March 3, 1931, wrote to the railway board as follows:

File 26455—Appln. of the Canadian National Railways for approval of plan showing proposed station at Riviere du Loup, P.Q.

Replying to your letter of the 7th ultimo; I submitted Dr. J. C. Beaudet's report to our general manager at Moncton, and have received his reply, extracts from which are given below:

Paragraph 3. . . . . There seems to be no ventilation. . . .

Originally there were two holes left in the basement wall, but one has become plugged up and the other is used as a port through which electric wires enter the building. Generally in a small building no special provision is made for ventilating the basement, the effect being obtained by the furnace draft and ordinary infiltration of air.

. . . . there is water in the cellar during the spring rains. . . .

It is possible that some water would collect in the basement at some time in the spring when the ground is saturated and the supply augmented by discharges from the rain water leaders, which simply spill upon the ground outside the walls. When an inspection was made by one of our engineers, December 22, 1930, there was no water in the basement.

Paragraph 4. . . . . very offensive odours spread throughout the cellar. . . . .

This is apparently due to the absence of a trap where the cellar floor drain connects with the main sewer.

Paragraph 6. . . . . pipe is blocked due to defective connections.

The piping in general is in poor condition and requires renewal.

Paragraph 8. . . . . water flowing from aqueduct pipe. . . .

This condition has since been rectified and was due to a broken toilet fixture.

Paragraph 9. . . . . doubt whether it can be stated that there is a cellar. . . . .

In stations it is not customary to construct basements the entire area of the building, and the basement area is generally confined to a size suitable for the requirements of the heating apparatus and coal bin.

An item has been inserted in our 1931 budget for the renovating of this building, in the following manner:

Ground Floor

New terrazzo floor on concrete slab.
New plaster work and tile dado.
New toilet fixtures.
New station seats.
Painting and tinting.
New lighting fixtures and wiring.

Upper Floor

New hardwood floors.
New toilet fixtures.
General repairs to plaster work.
Painting and tinting.
New lighting fixtures and wiring.

General

Hot water system to wash basin.
Exterior brickwork painting.

When this work is in progress it will be necessary to disconnect the entire plumbing system and this will call for a thorough overhauling of all piping before again being placed in service.

It is too bad that the railway company provides only a small hole for a cellar in the buildings used as stations; that is not conducive to the health of the travelling public. First of all, in 1929 the building was inspected by the board of health, who reported to the railway company that it was in bad condition. After that report the Canadian National Railways decided to build a new station at Riviere du Loup. The order of the board dated August 9, 1930, reads as follows:

Upon the report and recommendation of the chief operating officer of the board, the city of Riviere du Loup offering no objection, although duly notified—

And it then goes on to approve the plan. The second order, dated March 27, 1931, reads as follows:

Upon reading the submissions filed on behalf of the railway company, the board of trade of Riviere du Loup, the provincial hygiene service, and the city of Riviere du Loup; and upon the report and recommendation of the chief operating officer of the board—

And it then goes on to rescind the previous order. The board of health objected to the present station and wanted a new one built, and their submission will be found in Hansard of March 31 and April 15. The submission of the chamber of commerce will be found in Hansard of April 15 at page 614. The submission of the city council will be found in Hansard of April 15, at page 614, and April 21 at page 914.

In arriving at a decision the railway board used certain documents which had been filed in favour of a new station, and in revoking their order they used the same public documents. The hon. minister is a very brilliant man and he is a very good doctor. When I first started this discussion I said that he was a good minister, but I am not quite ready to say that to-day. I emphasize that he is a good doctor but—

An hon. MEMBER: How is he as a minister?

Mr. POULIOT: I am not ready to express an opinion; I am on the fence.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is a moratorium on that.

Mr. POULIOT: As my hon. friend the former Minister of Justice has said, there is a moratorium on that.

After reports were duly made by people who were perfectly independent of anybody, the statement of the board of health being that it was a very unsanitary building, dangerous to the health of the people, and a disgrace to a promising city like Riviere du Loup, it was then agreed by the railway to erect a new and decent building. All that was settled. I understand the members of the cabinet are jointly and severally responsible for what is done by one of them. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways is not responsible for this as an individual, but he is responsible for it as a member of the cabinet. I do not blame him for that refusal.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Whom does the hon. member blame?

Mr. POULIOT: I blame his colleague the hon. member for Argenteuil, but in fact, as the other members of the government share the responsibility of that hon. gentleman, they will have to be all blamed together. I do not wish to be as cruel as that. I wish to have fair play. I do not understand how the Board of Railway Commissioners could have for the same reason rescinded not long ago a decision that they had given on the 9th of August. They rescinded it in order to conform to what had been said by the hon. gentleman that improvements would be made to the building. I have read to the committee the letter of the Canadian National Railways under date of March 3 in which they mentioned the proposed improvements. They make reference to no improvement to the cellar, no improvement to the foundation, no improvement to the sewer system. As a member who is proud of his constituency and who wishes to be fair to his people—and I shall have an opportunity before the end of the session to tell the Minister of Railways and Canals that I have been just as fair to the Conservatives as to the Liberals in my constituency—I ask him in the name of all my constituents that this injustice be rectified. What has been done is most unfair, and in the name of all my constituents, independently of party, I ask him kindly to see to it that the Canadian National Railways adhere to their first proposal, which would give fair treatment to the people of Riviere du Loup.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman has apparently intentionally talked until two minutes to six o'clock so that there cannot possibly be any reply.

Mr. POULIOT: The matter will come up again. I spoke as fast as possible, and I thought I could conclude. My hon. friend will have the whole evening in which to reply.

Mr. MANION: I want to have it on Hansard so that my hon. friend may not be misunderstood.

Mr. POULIOT: That is quite right.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 21, respecting the Montreal and Atlantic Railway Company—Mr. Turnbull (for Mr. Pickel).

[Mr. Pouliot.]

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

The house in committee on Bill No. 15 respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway—Mr Willis—Mr. Casselman in the chair.

On section 1—Line of railway authorized.

Mr. JOSEPH A. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): Before this clause is passed I should like for a few moments to make certain observations in connection with it. Through this bill the Canadian Pacific Railway asks permission to construct a certain line of railway. Clause 1 of the bill is as follows:

> The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, hereinafter called "the company," may within two years after the passing of this act commence to construct a line of railway from a point on the company's railway between Breslay station and its terminus at Place Viger in the city of Montreal, county of Hochelaga, thence in a generally northerly direction through the counties of Hochelaga and L'Assomption, to a connection with the company's railway at or near L'Epiphanie, all in the province of Quebec.

The distance between Place Viger and Breslay stations is about five miles, figuring in a direct line. By the railway it takes twenty minutes to go from Place Viger to the Mile End station, which is in my division, and I would say that the Breslay station—which by the way is the new station under construction by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at the northern extremity of Laurier-Outremont—is possibly one mile farther away than the Mile End station, making the distance between the Place Viger station and the Mile End station six or seven miles. The railway company may construct this line at any point over this distance of six or seven miles. The northeast section of Montreal has a sufficiency of railway lines. and we who represent the people in that section of the city, which is very densely populated, are opposed on general principles to the construction of any further lines. Speaking more particularly of my own division, I wish to emphasize the fact that there are no vacant lots in the northeast section of Laurier-Outremont. The Canadian Pacific Railway is doing a good work in the construction of the new Breslay station on Park avenue and Jean Taillon streets; much benefit will result in the furtherance of the development of this northern part of the city. I understand the station is to cost about a million and a half dollars, and that it is a handsome structure which when finished will reflect credit upon the part of the city in which it is located.

The question of building this line came up before the railway committee on Wednesday and Thursday of this week. Certain amendments were offered to the bill but were not accepted by the committee. The company submitted a plan on which was indicated the probable line the railway would take. The plan of construction has not yet been prepared, and before the committee the company had no definite plan to offer. As I have stated, the company merely indicated on a map the general direction in which the line was to be constructed. On the plan presented appeared a line in heavy red ink about three-quarters of an inch wide was all that indicated the location of the new line. Mr. Flintoft, the attorney for the company, was asked if that red line indicated any particular point on the present railway line between the Place Viger station and the new Breslay station from which the new line would start. He answered that as yet no plans had been prepared but that the map before the committee simply showed the general direction in which the line was to run, and that the company did not know at which particular point the new line would start. I suppose if the Canadian Pacific Railway is spending over a million dollars for the construction of a new station in the north end of Montreal it intends to use it to the greatest extent possible. The Breslay station is in a direct line immediately south of the station at L'Epiphanie in the county of L'Assomption where the projected line is to join the main Quebec line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. If the company takes the shortest distance between Breslay station and L'Epiphanie the line will pass right through the heart of Laurier ward in my constituency, one of the most thickly populated sections of the city of Montreal, with the result that the property owners in that section of the city will have their property ruined because this is to be an elevated railway. The company, through its attorneys, stated before the railway committee on Wednesday that it was not its intention to build an underground or depressed line owing to the cost of such construction, but that it was its intention to build an elevated road. This means that the property adjoining the projected line will be of no value and we shall be faced with a situation similar to that which confronted us in connection with the construction of the new terminal facilities of the Canadian National Railways, which involved elevated lines into the city of Montreal. As representing one of the divisions of that section of the city, I am strongly opposed to the passing of this bill until such time as the plans are submitted to the committee in order that we may know the exact location of the line. As I said at the outset, the Canadian Pacific Railway has other lines in that section of the city, and it could very easily make use of its existing lines in the construction of this short cut to Quebec. We are all in favour of shortening the line to Quebec, which is one of the heavily travelled lines of the Canadian Pacific into the Montreal district. I understand that by going directly through l'Epiphanie there will be a saving of some fourteen miles. It is only natural that the company should desire to shorten its line, but there is no reason why the same serious situation as arose in connection with the Canadian National Railways should be created in this case, and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the committee should not pass this section until such time as plans are submitted showing the exact location.

I am availing myself of this opportunity to express my dissent in the hope that the electors in that part of the city which I represent will be made aware of the intention of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and will in turn voice their dissent to the construction of the proposed line. I repeat, I hope the committee will not pass the section.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the few remarks which I intend to make with reference to clause 1 of Bill No. 15, will be, so to speak, but a repetition or a second edition of those that I made before the railway committee, Wednesday last.

Clause 1 reads as follows:

1. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, hereinafter called "the company," may within two years after the passing of this act commence to construct a line of railway from a point on the company's railway between Breslay station and its terminus at Place Viger in the city of Montreal, county of Hochelaga, thence in a generally northerly direction through the counties of Hochelaga and L'Assomption, to a connection with the company's railway at or near L'Epiphanie, all in the province of Quebec; and may within five years after the passing of this act complete the said line of railway, and if within the said periods respectively, the said line of railway is not commenced or is not completed and put in operation the powers of construction conferred upon the company by parliament shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the said line of railway as shall not then have been commenced or completed, as the case may be.

The fact that said line will follow a certain route in the county of Hochelaga obliges me to oppose the adoption of this clause. I wish to state, sir, that the county of Hoche-laga and especially that part of my riding which includes Hochelaga and Préfontaine wards, is at present diagonally crossed from the southwest to the northeast by the Canadian National line which runs between Moreau street station and the city of Quebec. This line in use for a number of years runs through church and school areas. Let me point out that it is a serious impediment to traffic. a constant danger to pedestrians and school children, that religious and school authorities, property owners and residents of these two wards of my constituency in Montreal, strongly oppose the building of this line —either as a level, overhead or underground line. It may be somewhat of a surprise to hon. members to hear the member for Hochelaga protesting against the construction of this new railway because many think that a new line almost invariably contributes to the prosperity of the district it crosses. I must say that we think differently and following instructions forwarded to the member for Hochelaga on behalf of property owners, tenants, and the authorities previously mentioned, nothing in the world will induce me to vote in favour of such a clause.

There is another railway which crosses the centre of Préfontaine ward. This overhead line was built by the Canadian Pacific railway and has never been in use owing to the protests made at the time by the city council of Maisonneuve. This line which passes through the centre of this section, like those located south of Ontario street, has been for a number of years detrimental to the erection of new buildings. It was greatly responsible for the depreciation of property in that part of my constituency, and the pillars of this overhead line are a constant danger to automobiles.

Mr. Speaker, owing to the protests which I received, because of the vague wording of this clause, which does not specify the starting point of this line, I must, on behalf of the residents of that section of my constituency, acquaint the house that in order to comply with the objections raised by my constituents, I shall be obliged to vote against clause 1 which requests the construction of a new line which will be, so to speak, but a branch of the present one.

At the last meeting of the railway committee, I was somewhat astonished when a letter received from Mr. Fairweather, of the Canadian National Railways, was read, offering, as a solution for this new difficulty, to allow the Canadian Pacific the use of the present Canadian National lines. May I remind Mr. Fairweather that, in 1929, when the Palmer scheme was discussed in the railway committee, Mr. Brown, chief engineer of the Canadian National, gave his word so as to meet my wishes and that of one of the councillors of that section of my constituency, that the freight passing over the Canadian National line in Hochelaga and Maisonneuve would only be put in the sheds at night when the building of the central terminal of Lagauchetière street would be completed. Can we suppose that this pledge will be carried out if the Canadian Pacific Railway accepts the offer just made by Mr. Fairweather? Then, what would become of the pledges given to the member for Hochelaga and the councillor of the Préfontaine ward when the Palmer scheme was discussed in 1929? The people are at present opposed to the freight being put in the sheds during the day, because this delays the traffic of motor vehicles at the numerous railway level crossing gates which are almost invariably closed. Can one reasonably suppose that my constituents will accept such an arrangement? I therefore oppose, on their behalf, the building by the Canadian Pacific Railway of any new short branch between Montreal and "Epiphanie," if this line is to cross the wards previously mentioned. As stated before I strongly object, because such a line would depreciate property, prevent landlords renting their houses advantageously, because it would be a constant source of danger for pedestrians and school children, would delay traffic, and finally because far from contributing to the general prosperity of these two wards, it would be a burden for that eastern section of Montreal included in my constituency. For these reasons I shall vote against clause 1 of Bill No. 15, intituled An Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Mr. Speaker, not being a member of the railway committee, I had not the opportunity of studying and discussing this clause which gives to the Canadian Pacific Railway company the right of constructing a railway from a point located on the main line, between the Breslay station and the terminal at Place Viger station. I wish to strongly protest against clause 1 because the construction of this line would only serve the interests of that railway company and in no way those of citizens residing in the various sections that said line is to cross. This railway will be built through the centre of Montreal and will cross the best sections, Laurier-Outremont, my constituency (St. Denis) and also Hochelaga and Maisonneuve, counties which are at present well provided for. I therefore do not see any good reason for authorizing the Canadian Pacific to build this line of railway.

Neither can I understand why the company, in its request did not specify the exact starting point; it only mentions "a point located between the Breslay station and the Viger station." Why not specify the exact starting point of this line and thus avoid creating uneasiness among those who object to having their section crossed by a railway which would depreciate the value of their property. As representative of the county of St. Denis, wholly settled and inhabited by a population which has made great sacrifices to comfortably house themselves, I must protest in order to safeguard the interests of the citizens of my constituency preferably to those of the Canadian Pacific company. I would not like to see a railway cross diagonally my county, from the northeasterly boundary to the southwesterly one passing through the beautiful parish of St-Edouard, then across the lovely parishes of St.-Ambroise and St-Jean-Berchmans. I ask hon. members of this house, to fully consider this clause and to reject it. The clause under discussion is not couched in precise language and we should not, by our vote, give a blank signature to this company which will use it to destroy the sections which form a beautiful background to the city of Montreal. In the northern and southern parts of Montreal we have sufficient railways to provide for the population. If the Canadian Pacific Railway needs to shorten its line between Montreal and Quebec, it seems to me that it could come to an agreement with the Canadian National Railway Company, so that trains might utilize the new line which the latter will build in the northern section of the city, instead of disfiguring the picturesque and artistic appearance of Montreal, as well as depreciating real estate in that part of the city. For all these reasons, sir, I strongly protest against this clause and I must ask hon. members of this house to withhold their approval from a move tending to depreciate sections which are an element of beauty, greatness and prosperity for the city.

Mr. ROBITAILLE (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself with my fellow-members, as the representative of the lovely county of Maisonneuve which is situated at the extreme eastern end of the Montreal island.

The proposed railway would no doubt cross the county of Maisonneuve, although its location is very indefinite. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company intends, according to this bill, to construct a line from a point located between the Viger station and that of Breslay, thence mostly in a northerly direction. The north is not specified, whether it be the magnetic or true north; however, if the starting point be near the Viger station, the whole centre of Montreal will be crossed in a northerly direction, if on the other hand, the starting point is near the Breslay station, it will be impossible for the line to take a northerly direction in order to reach the county of l'Assomption, it would necessarily cross the county of Terrebonne. I therefore contend that the committee cannot accept clause 1 in respect to the building of a line through the city of Montreal.

The section of my constituency which would be crossed by this proposed line is partly urban and partly rural.

There is already the proposed railway line of the Canadian National which is to cross that part of my county, however this railway will not extend as far as that of the Canadian Pacific because the Canadian National line would be built towards Longue-Pointe so as to join the main line there, while the Canadian Pacific Railway seems to want to build much further north and would thereby cross prosperous farms and thus be very detrimental to farmers. The committee should not accept such an indefinite clause. Let the railway company submit its plans to us and we may judge then whether our people can approve this scheme. I would be pleased to second the efforts of the Canadian Pacific Company at this time of depression,—if the construction work began soon it would certainly relieve unemployment,—however, for the reasons given it is impossible for us to accept clause 1 as at present worded.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cowan, Port Arthur): Shall the section carry?

And the yeas and nays having been called:

Mr. MANION: Before you take the vote, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word. I thought some other hon. members were going to speak, or I should have been on my feet before you called for the yeas and nays. I have in my hand a letter from the Canadian National railways which was read before the committee, at which I had not the opportunity of being present because I was out of the city. The attitude of the Canadian National railways is expressed in this letter, written by the counsel of the Canadian National railways to the counsel of my department:

For the information of the minister and of the railway committee, I have to advise you that the Canadian National does not propose to appear to offer opposition to Bill 15, entitled, "An Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company."

We desire to suggest, however, that the territory, through which will run the very indefinitely described line specified in section 1, is or will be served adequately by lines of the Canadian National now existing or under construction and that what appears to be economic waste on proposed new construction can be avoided by securing through running rights (the same as they gave us at Port Arthur) if the same be necessary, over the national lines.

In other words the Canadian National itself is not opposing this line, therefore from the standpoint of the two railways there is no reason why anyone—I am speaking now to justify my own vote, because I intend to vote for the bill—should vote against it. But may I say that I sympathize with my hon. friends who have spoken representing that section of the city of Montreal which will be affected. They do not wish their whole city cut up by various railway lines. I also sympathize with the idea expressed in this letter that we should not permit unnecessary duplication of railway lines. We all know that that sort of thing in the past has to a large extent brought about the sad condition of railway affairs in Canada today, and it should be the duty of all members of this house and of all citizens of Canada to avoid as far as possible any further duplication.

Therefore I undertake on behalf of the government to suggest, in writing, to the Board of Railway Commissioners that before the plans of the Canadian Pacific Railway are approved by the board—which must be done in connection with all plans of that kind—the board give an opportunity to the city of Montreal and other interested sections of Quebec to appear before them and show cause why the Canadian Pacific Railway, if it builds this line, and the Canadian National Railway, in connection with lines it has built or is about to build, should get together and obtain common running rights for the two roads over the one line. That appears to me the sensible position to take.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): That is a good explanation; the bill was explained that way in committee.

Mr. MANION: This bill did come before the committee, as the hon. member says, though I was unable to be present. The committee accepted it, but in view of the fact that the government are quite willing to take that attitude towards the two railway companies and ask the board to give an opportunity to all concerned to show why unnecessary duplication should not take place, and why the two roads should combine and receive common running rights, I think this bill might pass.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Are they not bound to give that opportunity in any case?

Mr. MANION: No, I do not believe so. However, to avoid any misunderstanding I will put myself on record as suggesting to the board, on behalf of the government, that this opportunity be afforded.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): There was a suggestion in the committee that the bill should be amended to make the city of Montreal and other interested districts parties to the case, but that suggestion was not accepted.

Mr. MANION: If the government requests the Board of Railway Commissioners to give Montreal and other interested districts an opportunity to appear in this matter, the Board of Railway Commissioners would hardly dare take any other course. I suggest that under these circumstances, the committee, in view of the fact that the Canadian National Railways are not opposed to the bill, and in view of what I have stated on behalf of the government, accept the bill. I do not think there will be any difficulty whatever if these two railways get together and share running rights on terms suitable to both and approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. VALLANCE: I was a member of the railway committee where this bill was discussed, and I think I ought to say a word or two. I was not able to follow the hon. gentleman who spoke in French, but I did follow the hon. member who spoke first. He reechoed the objections which were raised in the committee, the most serious of which was the fact that the city of Montreal was not a party to this application. It was pointed out to them, however, that under the Railway Act, as administered by the Board of Railway Commissioners, it was obligatory to hear all who made representations regarding any application for a charter. It has been suggested that the line is indefinite. Well, I have followed with interest, both before and after I became a member of this house, the granting of charters here, and at no time have I ever known of a railway that was surveyed and a definite route plan laid down before the charter passed through this house. This line is in exactly the same position. As to whether it should be an elevated railway or underground, or a surface railway, that is a matter of policy within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, who will suggest to the Canadian Pacific Railway just where the line should go. This bill was thoroughly discussed in the railway committee, and in order to be consistent I shall certainly have to support it.

Mr. WILLIS: As sponsor of the bill I might say a word with reference to the objection of the city of Montreal. Mr. Flintoft, the solicitor for the Canadian Pacific Railway, has already written the city of Montreal, agreeing to furnish them with plans, maps and all other material necessary to enable them to be heard before the board. The city of Montreal is therefore safeguarded. As has been said, this bill was before the railway committee. There were two hearings and the city of Montreal was represented by its solicitor and, as well, by the mayor. I might read the section of the Railway Act which is of importance in connection with this discussion:

Provided that any complaint made to them—

That is, the Board of Railway Commissioners.

—shall, on the application of any party to the complaint, be heard and determined in open court.

Objection has been made that in some Canadian National case this was not done; but, as I have stated, the Canadian Pacific Railway, in this instance, has agreed in advance that this course will be followed. I am not personally concerned with the bill; I am merely sponsoring it. As a matter of fact, I live thousands of miles away from Montreal. I do think, however, that the bill ought to go to the proper tribunal, the Board of Railway Commissioners, for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 1 carry?

KETTLE VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 14, respecting The Kettle Valley Railway Company—Mr. Stirling—Mr. Cowan (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay) in the chair.

On section 1—Line of railway authorized.

Mr. NEILL: Will the hon. member in charge of this bill tell us the length of the line and give us some reason—probably there is one—for the fact that the charter appears to have been extended sixteen times in thirty years?

Mr. STIRLING: This bill seeks permission to construct a line of railway about eight miles in length on the west side of Skaha lake. The Kettle Valley Railway southerly from Penticton was interrupted by Skaha lake and traffic has been carried on the lake by scow since 1912 or 1913. There is a considerable amount of traffic developing in the southern part of the valley and it has proved most inconvenient to carry all of that service on the lake by scow. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni is not quite accurate in saying that there have been ten extensions of time. The time extensions for this particular piece of work have been three in number: chapter 140 in 1913; chapter 46 in 1915; and chapter 54 in 1918. The other references in the bill do not apply to this particular piece of line.

SECOND READING

Bill No. 48, respecting The Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr Simpson (West Algoma).

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni) moved the second reading of Bill No. 43, to amend the criminal code.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to ask that the bill be read a second time; I asked that you might call it nine o'clock, as it is hardly possible to express my views in five minutes. When I was speaking the other night on the introduction of this bill I said that I would not press the second reading, but I hope that members did not understand by that that I would not move the second reading. My idea was that an opportunity should be granted to obtain the views of both those opposed and those in favour of this amendment. Even during the short time this bill has been on the order paper I have received a lot of valuable data from business firms and associations, which I think might be properly laid before the house. Unless I gave the figures the house would not realize the extent of the evil referred to in this bill. One business men's association in Winnipeg reports that in one year one-third of their members received 70,000 bad cheques aggregating a total of over $5,500,000. That statement alone would show the necessity for a bill such as the one I am sponsoring. If time would permit I should like to read some of the comments both for and against this bill.

Canada is behind other countries with legislation of this kind. A number of other countries have a specific method of dealing with the matter, whereas this country proceeds under the criminal code section dealing wth obtaining goods under false pretences, and which has been found to be quite inadequate to meet the situation. It is nine o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Miscellaneous—Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada: maintenance and operation, $321,100.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, the minister was to give me some information.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend spent some time before six o'clock dealing with a proposal to build a station at Rivière du Loup. May I suggest to him once again that the committee is fully informed on that question, and the matter will be given consideration. The hon. member seems to have the impression that Rivière du Loup is the only place in Canada which has been denied a new station. As a matter of fact, over $8,000,000 worth of additions and betterments of one kind and another for the Canadian National Railways —which sum was voted last year in the estimates—have had to be postponed. In other words, the railway station at Riviere du Loup, which was to cost between $75,000 and $80,000—we will take it at $80,000, to have a round figure—is exactly one per cent of the works which were deferred last year by the railway company; it is just one in a hundred. The hon. gentleman therefore has no right to feel that Riviere du Loup was treated so much worse than many other parts of the country, since projected expenditures aggregating between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000 were similarly delayed.

[Mr. Neill.]

The other evening my hon. friend asked what had become of the money which, as he said, had been voted; why was it not spent on the Riviere du Loup station? Recently he wrote a letter to the Ottawa Citizen in regard to the same question. Let me tell him what became of the money. It was used for some other purpose by the national railways. The national railways have had, in the past at any rate, power to switch moneys voted for one purpose to another. This is a power which has not, as a matter of fact, been possessed by the Canadian government itself, and I do not mind saying quite frankly I do not believe the Canadian National Railways should have this power to any great extent, and certainly not to the extent they have had it in the past. I believe that when appropriations are passed in the house the money so voted should as far as possible be spent upon the item for which it was voted, or it should not be spent at all. Unfortunately, however, that has not been the case heretofore, and I repeat that in the past year between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000 that were voted for certain purposese were used for other purposes than those for which the money was voted. I come back again to tell my hon. friend that the case of Riviere du Loup was merely one of those estimates, totalling between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000 which were voted by the House of Commons last year and which were switched to other purposes. I have endeavoured to answer the hon. gentleman's question as propounded in the house a few days ago in regard to what became of the money and I have tried to show him that Riviere du Loup was treated no worse than many other sections of the country.

Mr. HEENAN: Riviere du Loup has a very good representative here, and I wish I could fight for my riding as my hon. friend does for Riviere du Loup. While unfortunately Riviere du Loup is not in my riding, I want to point out to the minister that an amount of $1,500,000 was paid out of the unemployment relief fund for the purpose of encouraging the railroads to proced with a program of work which the railroads felt they should not have proceeded with ordinarily for, as the minister said, probably one, two and in some cases as long a time as four years. This was done for the purpose of taking care of unemployment. Does it not seem bad business to go on with and spend $1,500,000 on work that will not be required for three or four years when they could have spent $50,000, $60,000 or $75,000, I do not know how much, in one portion of the country where a station has been burned down, and thus enable the commerce of that section to be handled properly?

Mr. MANION: Let me correct my hon. friend. The station at Riviere du Loup was not burned down. In any case the works in regard to which the government gave this one and a half million dollars to meet interest charges, were works proposed by the Canadian National and Candian Pacific Railways themselves. A meeting was held in my office, later in the office of the Minister of Labour, and railway officials were present. An understanding was reached that they would submit a program of works on which the government would pay the interest for a year or a year and a half in view of the fact that the railways were doing the work in advance of the time that they would ordinarily have done it. The railway officials went away, worked over their plans and later submitted them; but I regret to say that among the works which they proposed to do, they did not include the station at Riviere du Loup to which my hon. friend refers. It was never discussed: it was never proposed, and so far as I know, it was never thought of. The matter was not brought to my attention at all. We agreed to the works which the railways themselves proposed, and which they said were the most suitable ones to carry out under the conditions imposed.

Mr. HEENAN: I quite appreciate the fact that neither the Minister of Railways nor the Minister of Labour could think about the station at Riviere du Loup when the railways presented their program of work; but, on the other hand, it might have occurred to someone that the amount required for this station had already been voted under a previous administration, and it is strange that not knowing anything about the territory the railway companies could plan a program of work to relieve unemployment in other parts of the country when they could not spend in my hon. friend's riding money already voted for work to be done in it. I take it for granted that there was unemployment in that riding.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): The same thing applies to Prince Rupert. Last year an estimate was passed for $250,000 for an hotel. Since then the national railways found it necessary to spend money in Vancouver, so we are still hoping for $250,000 to replace the corresponding amount that they have spent in other parts of the country.

Mr. POULIOT: I appreciate very much what the ex-Minister of Labour has said. He is a former railway employee, and if next summer he visits Riviere du Loup, I am sure he will receive an ovation from the people connected with the railways and, indeed, from all the people of that district. I also thank the Minister of Railways for his kind words to-night. I am glad to see that he is in a good humour at this sitting.

Mr. GOTT: Will he get an ovation too if he visits Riviere du Loup?

Mr. POULIOT: That depends on what he will do in the future. If my hon. friend visits us, we shall find a nest for him.

Mr. GOTT: Another one than that which the hon. member has for himself.

Mr. POULIOT: A bird should not speak; it should sing. The Minister of Railways said that the railway officials did not discuss the question of a station at Riviere du Loup when the matter of unemployment relief came before him. The question of the station at Riviere du Loup was before the minister. At the time it was decided, the hon. gentleman was not present, and the acting minister was the hon. member for Argenteuil. But according to the report of the Dominion director of unemployment relief at page 4:

> On September 30, 1930, by order in council P.C. 2292, the Minister of Labour was authorized to enter into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian National Railways, whereby there would be expended by these railway companies the sum of approximately $25,000,000 in the performance of certain works, and the purchase of certain material over and above the normal expenditure of the said railways, such works to be commenced immediately and to be completed within the ensuing fifteen months.

The date of the order in council—please note it, Mr. Chairman, because it will interest you—is September 30, 1930. Then, an agreement dated October, 1930, was signed by the Minister of Labour and the Canadian National Railways. Clause 1 of that agreement reads as follows:

> Now therefore, it is agreed by and between the parties hereto as follows: First to assist in relieving unemployment the company will undertake and carry on to be completed on or about December 31, 1931, the works more particularly described in the schedule hereto attached, or such other work—

And I would ask hon. members to take note of the words "other work."

> —or works in lieu thereof as the parties hereto may agree upon at the estimated cost of $6,654,748 as set forth in detail in the said schedule.

There was also an agreement signed by the Minister of Labour and Mr. Humphrey, for the vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, on October 14, 1930. The order in council was passed on September 30, and the agreement between the Minister of Labour and the Canadian National Railways amounting to several million dollars was dated October 1. The agreement between the Minister of Labour and the Canadian Pacific Railway was dated October 14. I would ask the committee to note that the refusal of the minister to sanction the construction of a new station at Riviere du Loup took place on October 7.

I have before me an interesting letter sent on November 6 by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways to the city of Riviere du Loup. A resolution was passed by the city council on November 3 and is recorded in Hansard, to the effect that a suggestion should be made to the Minister of Railways that some moneys be taken from the unemployment fund to complete the difference between the amount voted by parliament and the lowest tender, an amount approximating six or seven thousand dollars. That resolution was passed by the city council of Riviere du Loup and was certified to by the secretary treasurer and the mayor. I should explain that the mayor is the perpetual Tory candidate in my constituency. Naturally the Minister of Railways was very much surprised to see the name of that gentleman on a resolution asking for money. Naturally the minister was surprised that a resolution should be signed by the mayor of Riviere du Loup asking for money for a new station from the unemployment fund. The minister should have known that that gentleman was in Ottawa on October 7 when the Minister of Railways refused to sanction the building of the station. I think my remarks will explain the illuminating letter from the Minister of Railways and Canals to the city council of Riviere du Loup, which says:

Votre cité ne fut pas proposée d'une manière spéciale lorsque la question fut présentée.

The English translation is, "Your city was not represented in a special way when the question came before us". I congratulate the hon. gentleman on this letter. He wrote when under the influence of indignation, and undoubtedly he was very much surprised to see that the man who blocked the building of the station was interested in one of the tenderers who could not secure the contract. As the gentleman I have in mind could not secure an advantage for his protégé he blocked the whole thing so that the community at large would suffer. He was not the right man to go before the minister and ask him to act in accordance with that resolution. As the mayor of Riviere du Loup he was bound to sign the resolution. He could not go before the people and show his game by saying, "I will not sign it, because on October 7 I blocked it". The minister said plainly not only to the secretary-treasurer of the city of Riviere du Loup but through him to the whole community, that if the city had been represented in a special way the matter could have been arranged. It was not necessary to propose it to the minister. The only course was to let the matter follow its natural course. That would have been done if no obstacle had been put in a previously smooth path.

Mr. GOTT: Did the hon. member say "icicle"?

Mr. POULIOT: I am not paying any attention to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. member got the cold shoulder, so he must have said "icicle".

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend makes a noise but that is all. When I was young I used to hear the noise of fire crackers, and that noise meant as much as the noise now made by my hon. friend.

I shall now read the last paragraph of a letter appearing in Le Saint Laurent on December 31, 1931.

In closing your remarks, you say you are interested in the welfare of our city and you contend that I had sufficient influence to undo in two months what you allege it took you six years to accomplish. You thereby admit that you cannot get the present government to accede to your wishes. Do you wish to prove that you have really at heart the interest of our city? Resign as member. In a month I shall have replaced you, and I promise that the station will be built within two years, not a sketch of it, but the building itself. I promise to do more in two years than you have done in six. According to your contentions which are often wrong, I have enough influence to prevent the construction of the station. Then were I a member, would I not have enough influence to build the station?

Yours truly,

Chs. E. Dubé,
Mayor.

In that letter he boasts of being spoken of as having enough influence to block it; would he not have enough influence to build it? Is it not the kind of log rolling which was condemned by the Prime Minister in his Brandon speech during the campaign?

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: No, just a minute. Our people suffered discrimination, and I am fighting against it as one should fight against discrimination shown in any constituency. At first I asked the board of health to make a thorough investigation of the matter. That was done by independent people who had not the interests of any political party at heart. They said that the building was dangerous, absolutely unsanitary, and reported accordingly to the railway company. In a second report the board of health condemned the station completely and finally the Canadian National Railways agreed to build a new station. As I have already explained, the reason it was not built before was because the Atlantic region of the Canadian National railways had for many years suffered a deficit. The blame for the deficit was placed on freight rates. For this reason they postponed the matter until last year, when after the report of the board of health had been received they deliberately put the item in their own budget.

Now, I wish to pay my tribute to one who was a most distinguished Minister of Railways—the Hon. Mr. Dunning. At my request, as I have already explained, he had the Canadian National Railways Act amended in order to put the old Intercolonial railway on the same basis as any other part of the system and so bring it under the jurisdiction of the board of Railway Commissioners. And it was due to him that the matter was definitely settled by the railway board after the board of health had submitted its report.

This afternoon I read the reports which had been exchanged between the railway board and the board of health. The repairs approved by the railway board—it changed its mind, having first disapproved those repairs—are most unsatisfactory because they do not cover the foundations and the building of a cellar, The doctor who made a careful inspection of the whole building reported that there is a space of only two feet between the soil and the floor over three-fourths of the area of the building, the sewer system passes underneath the floor, and microbes and cockroaches abound. This creates a situation so dangerous to health that I think it would be a fine place for the headquarters of the Klu Klux Klan. Hon. members will realize that any repairs to the present structure could not possibly be satisfactory. The proposed repairs approved by the second order of the railway board are entirely inadequate and unsatisfactory. In a word, the only thing to do is to build an entirely new structure.

I congratulate my hon. friend the Minister of Railways on having had the courage to say that he does not approve of the way the Canadian National Railways switch—a good railway expression—money appropriated for a definite purpose to some other purpose. It cannot be done with the ordinary government estimates, and it should not be done by the Canadian National Railways, because the Audit Act, by virtue of which the estimates are voted for governmental purposes, applies also to the estimates voted for the Canadian National Railways.

I cannot resist the pleasure of saying a word on the question of economy. We all understand that as business is at a standstill at the moment the earnings of both railways have been seriously affected; in fact they are much less this year than they were last year or the year before. But what about the expenses? The item for the building of the station was $77,136 and it was included in vote No. 323 of last year, amounting to a grand total of $51,600,000. My hon. friend the minister said that last year betterments amounting to $8,000,000 were postponed. That may be the case, but the right hon. Prime Minister, speaking as Minister of Finance just before the conclusion of the financial year on March 31, declared to this house that not only the total amount of vote No. 323, $51,600,000, had been spent, but also $11,000,000 that we voted this year to try to fill the hole. This gives us a total in round figures of $62,600,000. Besides that we have the grant to the Canadian National Railways, as stated in the report of the dominion director of unemployment relief, amounting to $6,654,748. There is also another item of more than $5,000,000. I cannot understand this cry of economy, Mr. Chairman, because the greater portion of that money has been spent somewhere else—the Minister of Railways does not know where, I do not know where, the Prime Minister does not know where, and you yourself, Mr. Chairman, do not know where. My hon. friend the minister said that the money had been spent for another purpose. What was that purpose? He does not know.

Mr. MANION: I do know. I would ask my hon. friend to make his own speech and not put words in my mouth.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the hon. minister kindly tell me?

Mr. MANION: I told him a minute ago. It was spent to pay interest on the funded debt due the public, which interest the Canadian National Railways did not earn sufficient to pay. The Canadian National Railways expected to have a deficit of $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 in respect of interest to the public; instead of that they had a deficit of something like $29,000,000 on that account, and they had to use other moneys, including the money for my hon. friend's station, to pay this interest.

Mr. POULIOT: It confirms what I said, but it does not tell me where the money is gone. It might have been spent in British Columbia, it might have been spent at Fort Churchill—

An hon. MEMBER: Perhaps at Long Lake.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, perhaps it has gone to Long Lake.

Mr. GOTT: Will the hon. member permit one question? In view of the fact that he has consumed six hours in discussing this station, will he kindly tell the committee whether he is in favour of building a station there or not?

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend might better employ his time making a six hour speech to defend the rights of his constituents than constantly heckling members in this house. By so doing he would be serving a much better purpose and would be more favourably judged by his own constituents.

Mr. GOTT: Where did you get that information?

Mr. POULIOT: From the press.

Mr. MANION: Might I ask my hon. friend a question? What is his object in delaying the proceedings of the house as he has done? Does he think we do not understand that he wants a station at Riviere du Loup? What is the object of continually harping on the question until he is looked upon as a pest, not only by this side of the house but by the other side as well? The situation has become such that everyone begins to leave the chamber when he gets up to speak; everyone is tired of hearing about Riviere-du-Loup. That is the position with his own party as well as with hon. members on this side. The hon. gentleman has made the position clear; he wants a station at Riviere-du-Loup, but I can tell him that he is going the wrong way about it. I do not intend to be bulldozed by the hon. member; I do not intend that any of us shall be forced to do something by the hon. member. It may be said that we cannot interfere with the Canadian National Railways, but we have to supply the money, so we should have something to say about it. I say to my hon. friend that he is taking the very attitude which will prevent his constituents from getting the station for which he pretends he is working so hard; he is taking the very attitude which will result in his not getting the station at all. I might as well be frank; the hon. member may as well know that now, and his constituents might as well know it also.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not think it is fair for the minister to take that position. The hon. gentleman is sent here to represent a constituency, and he appears to think that the house is not yet seized of the importance of the necessity for this station. I do not think it is fair for the minister to say that if the hon. member represents the needs of his constituency, that fact will make the minister revengeful and he will see to it that the hon. member does not get the very thing he requires. I would have rather thought the minister might have taken this position, that in view of the representations which have been made, he would indicate to the railway company and to the government why the hon. member should get the station as soon as possible.

Mr. MANION: I might inform the hon. gentleman that long ago when the hon. member for Témiscouata spoke on this matter for about the eighth or ninth time, I told him I would give it consideration, and I told him that if there was less talk there probably would be more station. At that time the hon. gentleman was kind enough to thank me for what I said, but since then he has brought up the matter another eight or nine times and he has become a nuisance. Some of the members of this house want to get on with business. We do not want to be delayed here, and neither do the friends of my hon. friend. They do not wish to be tied up here all summer just because of the Riviere du Loup station. Riviere du Loup will get a fair deal just as the other parts of the country will get a fair deal. The hon. member has taken up hour after hour of the time of the house dealing with this station. We understand what he wants; we know that Riviere du Loup would like a station, but Riviere du Loup has wanted a station for many years. The hon. gentleman was elected in 1924; his own party was in power until 1930, but he did not find the matter so very important during that time. We have been accused of giving many promises, but all he got from his own party was a preelection promise, and he did not get the station built.

The hon. member has made it clear that he wants a station. The matter will be given consideration, but certainly we are not going to be bulldozed by the hon. gentleman, and I am tired of sitting quietly by and having him hold up the entire business of the house. That is all he has been doing on every possible occasion, not only in connection with my estimates, but on every other occasion when he could possibly interject the Riviere du Loup matter. I might as well be quite frank about it. I want to be courteous to all hon. members of the house, as I think I have been, but I am getting tired of being courteous when the hon. gentleman himself does not show courtesy in return.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River said the hon. member for Témiscouata is here representing his constituency and that he has a right to take up the time of the house in presenting the needs of his constituents. I am here representing my constituency, and I am not representing it when I listen for hours to such twaddle as the hon. member has been presenting. I cannot possibly represent my constituency if I listen to that sort of thing, and I am not going to sit here if that kind of thing goes on. I have other things to do.

Mr. POULIOT: If the hon. member for Long Lake will come to my constituency and make that speech, I will be elected until I am a hundred years old. Now I wish to tell you something in French, Mr. Chairman. This is a verse by that great poet Racine, as follows:

Je crains Dieu, cher Abner, et n'ai point d'autre crainte.

I will translate that verse into English for the benefit of the Minister of Railways or for anyone who tries to bluff me in this house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: That is the expression the minister used when speaking to me the other day. The English translation is:

I fear God, dear Abner, and I fear no one else.

I give that as a warning to everyone who tries to prevent me from presenting in this house the desires and wishes of my constituents. I have never been afraid of anyone in my life.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: And I can tame anyone who shows lack of manners in a debate. I have always treated people fairly, even those who are ashamed of what they do in the darkness. I have treated everyone in this house fairly; no hon. member can say that I have not given him a fair deal when discussing any matter with him.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member will please get back to the item under discussion.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, I will come back to the item under discussion, and I want to give this explanation as a foreword to what I am going to say about the Riviere du Loup station. The point is this—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: No, it is not carried, and hon. members are wasting time in saying so, because I am going to have a fair deal.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: I will give everyone a fair deal.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member must discuss the item before the chair. We are not here to discuss private or personal grievances. We must discuss the item before the chair and nothing else.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Might I ask whether I will be allowed to discuss the two orders of the board of railway commissioners?

The CHAIRMAN: Certainly.

Mr. POULIOT: The first order was dated August 9 of last year, just two days after my right hon. friend the Prime Minister came into office. It was an independent ruling of the board, based on the desire of the Canadian National Railways to conform to the suggestions or orders coming from the board of health of the province of Quebec. This is easy to understand. That order mentioned the fact that the plans for the building of a new station at Riviere du Loup had been approved and had been recommended by that city. It was said at that time by the present Minister of Railways that it was a bluff, that it was just a promise before the election. An amount of $77,136 was voted by parliament, tenders were called for and the lowest tender amounted to something less than $84,000. Under those circumstances the railway could not build the station without asking for the approval of the minister. This is a former Canadian government railway, the Intercolonial line. The minister had to give his approval, which was required because of that difference of $6,000 or $7,000 between the amount voted by parliament and the lowest tender. The tenders were received on August 26, about two weeks after the date of the first order of the board. According to correspondence which appeared in a weekly publication in my home town, tenders were received at Moncton, but no action was taken with respect to them for some time. The matter was held up by the department.

Now, the Minister of Railways will admit that, so far as this whole question is concerned, I have always treated him with the utmost courtesy. I have never said anything offensive to him in the matter, and when we assembled here for the special session I put a question on the order paper, inquiring whether anything was going to be done and asking whether a tender had been accepted. At that time, in the middle of September, the minister intimated that no action had been taken, the matter was "under consideration". Afterwards he went away, and in his absence the perpetual Tory candidate came to Ottawa and interviewed some of the ministers. A report of that gentleman's interviews with these ministers was published. He said that he had met my good friend the Minister of Marine, whom, incidentally, I congratulate upon his election to the distinguished office of batonnier of the Bar Association of Quebec. I tendered the hon. gentleman my good wishes and I am glad that he has been selected to fill the office. And now, to proceed, the gentleman whom I am discussing at the moment also interviewed my good friend the Postmaster General and my other good friend the Minister of Public Works. But the point is, he did not see the Acting Minister of Railways, nor did he get in touch with the Minister of Labour. He did not see the two gentlemen whom above all others he should have interviewed in order to get some money under the Unemployment Relief Act. That explains why the Minister of Railways, when coming back to Ottawa, was in a position to write to the city of Riviere du Loup, stating that the matter had not been submitted to the government in due course. It explains the whole situation, Mr. Chairman. I submit that, after one of his colleagues had made a decision, the hon. gentleman should either have requested the Prime Minister to censure that colleague or himself have resigned from the cabinet if he did not accept the decision.

The thing was very cleverly done. Those people from Riviere du Loup came here to see the minister. I asked the Minister of Marine the other day, and also the Minister of Public Works, whether anything had been said to them, or to the hon. gentleman who at the time was Acting Minister of Railways, with reference to the amount of each tender. No one answered me; but, as I say, the thing was cleverly done. These people did not see the Minister of Railways nor the Minister of Labour, because they wanted to return to Riviere du Loup and say, "The matter has been decided by the government and we had nothing to do with it."

Mr. MANION: May I say that the mayor of Riviere du Loup saw me on more than one occasion with reference to the matter, and he has done more than my hon. friend is doing at the present time towards getting the station.

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend may be right, but let me say this. If it is a fact that the perpetual Tory candidate in my county has met the Minister of Railways in this matter and requested the building of a new station, and if my hon. friend has not seen fit to grant that request, it is obvious that that gentleman has very little influence with this government. But, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways cannot speak in that way. He was not in Ottawa when that man came here. He was out of town, and what he says now is therefore only hearsay. I inquired of the Minister of Marine, the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General: Is it not a fact that through someone in your department that man ascertained the amount of each tender and that, when he realized that his protégé could not get the contract, he said, "you should not build the station on any consideration because my friend could not get it." There was no answer.

Now that is the whole story. After the Minister of Railways had taken that position and decided that the repairs should be done instead of having a new station built, what happened? He persisted in his request that the Canadian National Railways should change their policy, with the result that we have these stupid reports which are placed on Hansard and which make no provision for a cellar, for improving the sewerage system, nor for solidifying the foundations of the building. These reports cannot be acted upon. No repairs can be done to the building for the simple reason that a new building is absolutely necessary. But after the railway board had decided that plans for the building of that station should be approved, they changed their decision; they rescinded their first order in view, it seems to me, of the decision of the Minister of Railways. It would seem, therefore, that there has been log-rolling not only with the Canadian National Railways but also with the Board of Railway Commissioners, which is a tribunal that should be independent of both parties.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member has no right to make that statement. The Board of Railway Commissioners is a judicial body and he has no more right to criticize it on the floor of this house than he has to criticize other judges in this country.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the last remark of the hon. member with respect to the Board of Railway Commissioners should be withdrawn.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not say it with regard to the Board of Railway Commissioners as a rule; I say it with regard to the board in this special connection. But I remember very well the time when my hon. friends were on this side, and I have some recollection of what they used to say with respect to the railway board. I do not think they should be so touchy when we say what is true. There is something that should be noted in this connection, Mr. Chairman. When the chamber of commerce of Riviere du Loup, when the city council of Riviere du Loup, when the board of health made representations to the Canadian National Railways to put up a new building, they represented that it was necessary because the present building was in very bad condition. Those are the reasons why the first order was passed. And curiously enough the second order makes reference to exactly the same representations made by those public bodies. Now, with the same reasons before them, the board rescind their previous order and decide that the first plans should not be approved. This shows interference and log-rolling.

I regret very much, Mr. Chairman, to have been obliged so many times to bring this matter to the attention of the house. I have repeatedly intimated that the moment I received a favourable reply from the Minister of Railways I would cease discussing this matter. But I have been misrepresented in the house; my views have been given a false interpretation. I have pointed out that it was not a question of economy that accounted for the treatment which Riviere du Loup has been given in this matter, for the reason that most of the money has been spent elsewhere. This was a matter which depended on the action taken by the Minister of Railways, and yet during the course of the debate the minister has said that the Minister of Railways has nothing to do with it.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. POULIOT: When a speaker is interrupted in committee the forty-minute time limit continues from that interruption.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member must resume his seat and then rise again to continue.

Mr. POULIOT: I sat down while the minister was speaking. I do not wish to be unfair to anyone, but I stand by the rules of the house. If the hon. minister had not interrupted me while I was speaking, my time would be elapsed, but as he did interrupt me I can go on to the conclusion of my speech.

An hon. MEMBER: Go on.

Mr. POULIOT: They say to go on.

An hon. MEMBER: You might as well go on.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. MEMBER: Now, you tell the story.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. HEENAN: I am sure the question I am going to put to the minister will please my hon. friend. I understand there are at present two vacancies on the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. MANION: Three.

Mr. HEENAN: As labour has been represented on the board, is it the intention of the minister to fill one of the present vacancies by appointing a representative of labour?

Mr. MANION: The chief commissioner retired, Mr. Vien retired and Mr. Lawrence died, making three vacancies at the present time As to filling one of those vacancies with a representative of labour, I do not think any undertaking was given at the time of Mr. Lawrence's appointment that another appointee would necessarily be a man from the ranks of labour. I do not know that there is any binding obligation in that respect. However the question is under consideration. No one has been chosen for the position, and when that matter is decided this phase will be considered.

Mr. HEENAN: If it were known that a representative of labour was to be given one of these positions it might be well to give the labour bodies an opportunity to make a recommendation. I do not mean that the government would be obliged to accept their recommendation, but they should be given the opportunity.

Mr. MANION: Does my hon. friend happen to know whether that was done the last time?

Mr. HEENAN: I cannot say.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I will now conclude my remarks by reading a report of a speech made by the Prime Minister.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member must confine his remarks to the item before the committee.

Mr. POULIOT: The Board of Railway Commissioners is a judicial body to advise the railways as to what should be done in order to best serve the travelling public. Does the chairman rule that the remarks of the right hon. gentleman, which are rather brief, would not come under the item now under discussion? They are as follows:

Again declaring his opposition to amalgamation of Canadian Pacific and Canadian National railways, Mr. Bennett said he had just heard a new canard to the effect that if elected he would appoint one of the Canadian Pacific railway officers to the presidency of the Canadian National. "Can you imagine anything so ridiculous?" he asked. "I want to say that the Conservatives in power—

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the item before the committee, otherwise I shall have to invoke paragraph 2 of standing order No. 40.

Mr. POULIOT: I will sum up my remarks in order that everyone may understand this matter but I cannot speak to those who are blind because they will not see, or to those who are deaf, because they will not hear.

The city of Riviere du Loup has been discriminated against; that is what I object to, and it should be clear to anyone over seven years of age. The minister has said: the matter must be decided by the Canadian National Railway officials, and he stated in this house—you will not get it. I know now where that refusal comes from; it was first decided by another member of the cabinet, and then the minister says: You will not get it. He is trying to frighten me, but he knows very well that he will not succeed. What will happen, Mr. Chairman, is this: the matter will be explained to the electorate of this county, along with other similar instances and that will be sufficient to bring my hon. friends to their senses. They will be taken out of power and when the Liberals are returned at the next general elections—

An hon. MEMBER: Another pipe dream.

Mr. POULIOT: —the Canadian National Railways will then revert to their old policy, that of taking care of the small centres and providing more work for the unemployed, thereby decreasing the number in the larger centres. The hon. minister stated the truth when he said that he was opposed to the building of a station at Riviere du Loup.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct the hon. gentleman. I did not say that that city would not get a station; I pointed out that the hon. gentleman would not get a station by this method.

Mr. POULIOT: There was no threat in what I said, I was simply pointing out what I wanted done for the people in my constituency. If it is not done, all right; the people will then be able to judge the whole thing.

Mr. RALSTON: Earlier in the evening while a bill regarding some railway project in Montreal was being discussed, the hon. minister stated that he would write a letter to the Board of Railway Commissioners to ask them to give an opportunity for certain interested parties to appear before them. The hon. minister, perhaps inadvertently, let fall an expression which I do not think he would like to remain on Hansard in its pristine sense. He stated that if he wrote that letter he was sure the Board of Railway Commissioners would not dare to do anything else than to accede to the request contained therein, and give an opportunity to these parties to attend the sitting of the board. I am afraid there is a tendency to think that the board is some sort of adjunct to the government or some department of the government. Let me remind my hon. friend—he knows it as well as I do, and I am sure he will take these remarks in the spirit in which they are given—that the Board of Railway Commissioners is a court of record and, as I remember the Railway Act, it acts only on the direction of the government when an order in council has been passed and a special question has been referred to it. Otherwise, the board acts on its own initiative or upon the application of the parties interested in the matters before it. I do not think it is well to have it get abroad in this country that a government or a member of a government can write a letter and thereby have the Board of Railway Commissioners take a certain course in connection with their judicial functions. I say that only because it seemed to me that the assurance which the hon. gentleman gave to the hon. gentlemen interested in this bill appeared to be more of an assurance than it really was, because my hon. friend has no more power—I say this with all due respect—to write to the Board of Railway Commissioners and influence their decision with regard to who shall appear before them, than any other hon. member. The very foundation of the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners lies in the fact that they are a court of record and a judicial body, and they take cognizance of matters before them just as the supreme court does.

Mr. MANION: I do not remember using the word "dare," but I would not deny using it. I pointed out that the Board of Railway Commissioners was a judicial body, and I realize it is such, as my hon. friend has said. What I meant to say and what I have no doubt I did say was that whatever government asked the Board of Railway Commissioners that before they gave a decision in regard to a bill they should hear the interested parties, the Board of Railway Commissioners would not ignore that request. I repeat the statement. I do not see that it is in any way a hint or suggestion or implication that in any way the government or anybody has any control over the Board of Railway Commissioners; but just as a government can submit something to the exchequer court, for that matter, in the same way a government can and so can an ordinary citizen—and I do not say my hon. friend is not right in suggesting that the Minister of Railways has no more power with the Board of Railway Commissioners than he has—suggest to the board that in justice to all the parties concerned they should hear the evidence of various people before they render a decision. I see no harm in and I stand by the remark I made a little while ago in regard to that bill. I do not suggest the board is in any way, shape or form under the jurisdiction of the government or anybody. It is a judicial body. But certainly not only has a member of the government, but so has a private citizen the right to approach the board and ask that certain evidence be heard.

Mr. RALSTON: On account of the rapidity with which my hon. friend speaks, he may not have been aware of the fact, but I have no doubt he will find he used the word "dare"—that the Board of Railway Commissioners would not dare.

Mr. MANION: I meant it in justice to all concerned.

Mr. RALSTON: I want to emphasize that for a moment. A court of record does not listen to representations, particularly by letters, from parties outside. I think we ought to get the idea straight, that the Board of Railway Commissioners is a judicial body, and while we may write letters to them and they out of courtesy may receive them, we have no right to think they act on that sort of thing. I still hold to what I said previously in regard to my hon. friend's remarks, that we cannot give much assurance to anybody by saying that a letter will be written to the board and expect the board to act upon it. They act under the statute. The statute does not provide for their acting on the request of anybody, no matter who he is.

Mr. MANION: But the humblest citizen in the country has the right to write to the board and ask that he be heard on any case, for example, in regard to a railway crossing.

Mr. RALSTON: Surely, when he is the party interested.

Mr. MANION: The government is certainly in no worse position than that of the humblest citizen.

Mr. REID: If a ruling is given by the Board of Railway Commissioners; if on a further appeal the same ruling is upheld, directing a railway company to comply with a certain order, and if that railway company does not comply with it, what procedure would one have to take to compel the railway company to comply with the order of the board? This is a serious matter.

Mr. MANION: The Board of Railway Commissioners is in exactly the same position in regard to that as any other court that renders a judgment. The board can, I presume, order the railway to discontinue its services until it carries out the judgment of the board. So far as I can see, it has all power with the law and the law officers behind it.

Mr. REID: I do not think the minister understands me. If an order is issued, and the railway company does not comply with it, to whom can we appeal to make the railway company comply with the order?

Mr. MANION: To the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. REID: Again?

Mr. MANION: Yes, and point out to them that the railway company has not obeyed the order as rendered by the board.

Mr. ILSLEY: A little while ago the minister made a statement that I should like to have explained. He said that the management of the Canadian National Railways has the power to switch money from certain specific purposes for which it is appropriated, to other purposes. I understood him to say that was a practice that should not be permitted in the future. I understood the case to which he had been referring was the application to payment of interest due the public of money appropriated for certain construction. Did they switch appropriations from one purpose to another on any considerable scale? Has that been the practice in the past?

Mr. MANION: The management of the railways, in making their request for money to whatever government is in power, put in a round figure, but they give to the government, or to the Minister of Railways on behalf of the government, the details of how they intend to spend that money. Those details are not brought down in the house, but they are before the Minister of Railways, and through him before the government.

Mr. ILSLEY: Before the railway committee, too, are they not?

Mr. MANION: Yes. The estimates that will be tabled shortly will be before the select standing committee on railways and shipping, owned and operated by the government, and we can go into them. While they are before the house or a committee of the house, the detailed items are not gone through seriatim as they are for the Department of Public Works or my own department. At the same time, there is quite a bulky list of works to be performed out of the moneys to be obtained from the government. It has been the practice in the past that, instead of adhering even closely to those items, the railways have been permitted to switch or divert certain amounts from one item to another. They have been quite within their rights in doing so, although I believe that last year the Deputy Minister of Railways proposed that any suggested switch of more than $200,000 had to go to the government to be dealt with by order in council, and that any under $200,000 had to be sanctioned by the deputy minister, who of course would consult with the minister of railways of the day. Last year, even with that rule in force, large amounts of money were diverted from one object to another. In this case there was an amount of $28,000,000 for additions and betterments in last year's estimates as brought down to the house by my predecessor. Of that $28,000,000, only $20,000,000 was spent for those purposes; the balance of $8,000,000 was spent, but not for additions and betterments; it went into the pot, so to speak, and was used to meet the deficit on the railway, to help to pay interest to the public which in their estimate they had figured at $8,000,000, and which in reality amounted to $29,000,000. Therefore, that amount of $8,000,000 which parliament had passed for additions and betterments was not used for that purpose, but was switched—I am continuing the use of that expression—and used for the purpose of paying interest due to the public. In addition to that the government had to bring down a supplementary estimate to provide the balance.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. SANDERSON: I should like to ask the minister a question in regard to the three vacancies on the Board of Railway Commissioners. Has he any assurance to give the committee that in the appointment of the three, at least one and perhaps two will be appointed to represent the agricultural interests of the country on the board?

Mr. MANION: My deputy informs me that Mr. Stoneman is a farmer. I think my hon. friend is somewhat confused, as are a great many people throughout the country. On one occasion my hon. friend drew my attention to a petition or a representation made to him. That petition was made not in regard to the Board of Railway Commissioners but in regard to the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. SANDERSON: I did draw the attention of the minister on one or two occasions to some facts concerning the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways. At the present time however I am directing his attention to the vacancies on the Board of Railway Commissioners. In connection with those vacancies will he consider the matter I have mentioned?

Mr. MANION: As Mr. Stoneman is already on the board, consideration will not be necessary.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He is a farmer.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member for Edmonton tells me that Mr. Stoneman is a farmer, and my deputy verifies the statement. I must say that I did not know it myself. Owing to the fact that there is a farmer on the board it will not be necessary to have two. The board has only six members, and to my mind it would not be necessary to have two agricultural representatives.

Mr. SPENCER: The agriculturists represent fifty-four per cent of the population of Canada. Have we not a right to expect more representatives on the board?

Mr. MANION: I do not think so. This is a judicial body; its business is largely judicial in character, and it is not supposed to represent particular classes. It so happens that Mr. Stoneman is a representative of agricultural interests, so that one out of six on the board is an agricultural representative. I think the industry of agriculture, therefore, is sufficiently represented on the board.

Mr. POULIOT: What is the occupation of Mr. George Spencer of the railway board? What is his age and when will he be superannuated?

Mr. MANION: I cannot give the information to my hon. friend, but my deputy informs me that Mr. Spencer is the chief operating officer. My hon. friend knows that there is no direct supervision of the Board of Railway Commissioners by the minister. He is simply the liaison between parliament and the Board of Railway Commissioners in regard to estimates, and that sort of thing. I am not very familiar with the personnel of the board.

Mr. POULIOT: For a long time the state of the railway fences in eastern Quebec was very bad. The Canadian National Railways said that on account of their deficit they could not improve the fences. A similar condition prevailed in regard to ditches. For that reason a considerable number of animals were killed by the trains and a great many lands were flooded in the spring. That is why the law has been changed in order to place that part of the Canadian National Railways under the jurisdiction of the railway board. For a time some improvements and repairs were made to the ditches and fences, but there is much yet to be done. May I ask the hon. gentleman if it will be possible to have these repairs completed within a short time?

Mr. MANION: I think I can tell my hon. friend that the railway act requires the railway companies to protect their lines with fences where necessary. So far as ditches are concerned naturally the railways would build them where necessary to drain their properties. If my hon. friend knows of any cases where there are obstructions in ditches or anything of that nature, I should be pleased if he would bring them to my attention. If any nuisance is created by the lack of ditches or by obstructions therein, any information given to me in that regard would be passed along to the railway authorities for their consideration.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister very much for his answer. Sometimes on account of money shortages the Canadian National Railways postpone the type of work to which I have referred, and in many instances the postponement is not made because of the lack of funds. The Canadian National Railways, even though their business is not always good, should conform to the law. It is the duty of every neighbour to see to it that fences and ditches between his and the adjoining property are kept in good order.

Mr. SANDERSON: Referring again to the vacancies on the Board of Railway Commissioners, may I ask the minister when making appointments not to lose sight of agriculture, the basic industry of this country? If there is any interest which should be well represented on the Board of Railway Commissioners it is that of the agriculturists. Would the minister consider the appointment to the board of a certain number to represent that industry?

Mr. MANION: I shall gladly consider the suggestion, yes.

Mr. HEENAN: I hope my remarks at the present time with respect to the appointment of a representative of labour on the Board of Railway Commissioners will not be considered merely as an attempt to secure another position for labour. I am sure the minister understands, owing to his familiarity with the railroad men in his constituency, that there is no question more complex or the ramifications of which are greater than that respecting the operation of railroads. The fact that a great many railroad men who have been brought up from boyhood fail in their examinations concerning the operation of railroads shows the complicated nature of railroading, and I think the minister would be well advised to have in mind the fact that in the interests of the railway commission itself there ought to be sitting as a member of the board one who would be fully conversant with the rules of railroad operation. That is one of the reasons I have suggested to the minister that it might be well at least to acquaint the railroad men of the vacancies on the commission so that they could make recommendations from which the minister might see his way clear to make a selection. I am sure the men who would be recommended would be fully conversant with railway operations and experts in their line. Mr. Lawrence, the former commissioner, was a man well versed in railroad matters, a man of whom railroad men were proud. It was a source of pleasure to his associates when he was taken into the commission by Mr. Meighen. I am sure a similar appointment would be in the interests of the railroads and the public generally.

Mr. MANION: I will give the matter consideration. I have had representations from labour organizations concerning various men. I do not know how many men have been recommended but I would judge I have at least a dozen names before me at the present time, almost all of whom have been recommended by labour organizations in different parts of the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to say a few words in regard to appropriations for national railway purposes. I do not wish to delay the minister's estimates; for I should like if possible to see him complete them to-night. The minister, however, did speak rather freely in regard to the use the Canadian National Railways might make of moneys appropriated with respect to maintenance and operation. The matter is of too much importance to pass without comment, and that is my sole reason for speaking at the moment. To make clear what I have in mind, the minister will agree with me that as regards appropriations such as we are making at the moment no minister would be at liberty to take any sum appropriated for a specific purpose here mentioned and use it for some other purpose. My hon. friend agrees with me in that; it is a fundamental principle of the control of parliament over public expenditure. I submit that the Canadian National Railways is simply one branch of government; it is a nationally owned institution, and its estimates should be presented to the committee of parliament that has to consider them in precisely the same form and be governed by exactly the same principles as estimates of the departments of the government itself. It is entirely wrong for the railway management to take appropriations for particular purposes and divert any part of them to other purposes. I can understand it may be a matter of convenience to the railway management to be able to do that, but it would be entirely wrong if such a principle were adopted in regard to public funds appropriated in connection with any department of government, and I do not see why the Canadian National Railways should be made an exception in that regard. I go a step further: the fact that parliament has not quite the same control over the Canadian National Railways as it has over matters that come more immediately before it in itself constitutes a reason why in making appropriations for the Canadian National Railways for specific purposes we should be even more exacting in requiring that they be applied only to those specific purposes.

There ought to be a distinct understanding on the matter, and I suggest that the minister discuss it with the management of the Canadian National Railways and mention that the subject has been brought up and discussed in parliament. It is certainly a matter with respect to which, speaking for the opposition, I can say we feel very strongly. The House of Commons has no more important function than that of exercising the closest scrutiny over public expenditures, and this function can be exercised only where appropriations are made for specific purposes and applied exclusively to those purposes. I have in my hand Durell, the standard authority on parliamentary grants. One paragraph will sum up what I have in mind. I think it should be as applicable to the Canadian National Railway estimates as to our own. Durell says:

> When making the grant, parliament appropriates it to the particular vote, and it cannot legally be applied to any other vote though, in the case of the army and navy,—

This has reference to Great Britain.

> —transfers between votes are in certain circumstances permitted, parliamentary sanction being subsequently obtained. Generally speaking, however, the money voted by parliament is granted for a particular vote only, and it is therefore clear that the larger the number of the votes, the greater control parliament is able to secure.

The fact that in the main parliament is exercising its control over the Canadian National Railways through a committee of the house is, I submit, all the more reason why the railway management should submit its estimates in as much detail as possible, the appropriation should be made as specific as possible, and nothing in the way of switching or diversion to other purposes should be permitted.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I am not often in accord with my right hon. friend, but on the present occasion with every word that has dropped from his lips I entirely agree. He has stated my viewpoint in much better language than I could express it. As to discussing the matter with the Canadian National Railway management, that was done some time ago, because I admit quite frankly I was somewhat shocked when I found large amounts switched—I will continue to use the word—from one purpose to another. I think the Canadian National Railways should be in exactly the same position as the government of Canada; and when the government of Canada has no power to spend one dollar upon items for which the money was not voted, I do not think the Canadian National Railways should have that power. I entirely agree with my right hon. friend that the practice should be stopped, and I have already put myself on record with Sir Henry Thornton in this regard. We have his assurance that the management will endeavour to keep as close as possible to the items for which they ask appropriations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thank my hon. friend. I hope he will be very firm with the railway management, and I can assure him that he may count on the entire cooperation of the opposition in this particular.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I rise to make a suggestion, Mr. Chairman. As a minister who has sat on appeals from decisions of the Board of Railway Commissioners it has been borne in on me that the governor in council is not the proper body to hear such appeals. This is no reflection on the legal attainments of the gentlemen who happen for the time being to be members of the government, because they do give serious consideration to the appeals that come before the governor in council, but I must say they have not the time to give proper consideration to such appeals. In looking up the records I find that usually council has ordered a reference back to the board. This causes delay that sometimes is very detrimental to the people who are interested in securing a readjustment of rates or some other matter. I suggest that the government consider the advisability of transferring these appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada, or else make the judgments of the Board of Railway Commissioners final. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that members of the government have not time to give the required attention to such appeals.

Mr. MANION: I agree entirely with what my hon. friend says in that regard. Certainly the governor in council is not a rate-making body and has not the technical knowledge to deal with appeals of this nature. But I have been informed that council has never changed an order of the Board of Railway Commissioners; as my hon. friend stated, it has always referred the case back to the board for rehearing. I suppose the appeal to the governor in council is a relic of the days when there was no board of railway commissioners. The board, I understand, was appointed in 1903, previous to which time such regulatory control of railway rates as existed was vested in the railway committee of privy council. I think my hon. friend's suggestion is worthy of consideration by the government.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Before such a step is taken I submit the matter should be given very careful consideration. I quite agree that rate-making is such a technical matter that few laymen are competent to deal with it. But there are times when questions of rates in a large way may have a very direct bearing on public policy, on the development of certain parts of the country or of certain lines of business, and that aspect must not be lost sight of. In other words, there are times when more than the mere complexity of rates must be considered. I for one would be very sorry to see the appeal to the governor in council dispensed with until the matter has been very carefully considered.

Mr. ILSLEY: The matter just referred to undoubtedly is very important. The hon. member who just spoke has, if I may be permitted to say so, the proper conception of the functions of the governor in council in connection with these so-called appeals. I had occasion to look into the matter a little while ago, and I came to the conclusion that "appeal" is scarcely the proper term. The governor in council is not sitting as a court; it is not exercising judicial functions; it does not have to act on any evidence. When the governor in council hears and decides upon the so-called appeals it is exercising executive or administrative functions, and can take into account broad matters of policy as a government. We are accustomed to speak of these appeals as if they were appeals to an appellate court, such as the Supreme Court of Canada, but if that were the case of course the governor in council could not deal with them as they could be dealt with, for instance, by the Board of Railway Commissioners. There can be no question about that; members of council have neither the time, the training nor the experience to deal with matters in that way.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Nor the patience.

Mr. ILSLEY: My right hon. leader adds that they have not the patience, either, to deal with them. My hon. friend who spoke last has raised a very important point, as to whether at certain times the governor in council should not, as a matter of governmental policy, come to decisions not upon scientific rate-making principles but as executive acts. This is a matter worthy of very careful consideration before that power is taken away. I think the minister is quite correct in saying this is a relic or hang-over from the time when the railway committee of the cabinet dealt with rates. That, I believe, is historically correct, but at present these rates do not need to be determined upon judicial principles at all.

Mr. MANION: Of course no change can be made without amendment to the Railway Act, so there will be plenty of time for consideration. At the same time, I would remind my hon. friend that while the privy council has not taken on the judicial powers, they could do so at any time.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But parliament always has the right to make rates, as was instanced by the Crowsnest pass rate. If it is a matter of policy for the government or for parliament to deal with a certain matter, they have all the power necessary. I merely suggested this short method of dealing with appeals, which are vexatious and which, as far as I can discover, never have led anywhere.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous services: including salaries and expenses of experts employed temporarily, $48,000.

Mr. HEENAN: This is the item in connection with which the minister said we could discuss the national highway, but I do not propose to reopen that question. I think we spent enough time on that matter this afternoon, and there will be other opportunities to take it up. However, I see there is provision here for experts, and while it has nothing to do with the railway I was wondering if the minister would tell us whether he has received any requests from the provincial authorities for the services of experts to survey portions of this highway. Is the Dominion government helping in any way to survey the route for the national highway?

Mr. MANION: To my recollection I have had no such request, although I believe there have been some conversations. I do not wish to go into details, because my memory is hazy about the matter, and in any event the conversations were not with me. I have had no direct requests.

Mr. HEENAN: So far as the minister knows, he has had no official communications?

Mr. MANION: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Can my hon. friend indicate in a word or two just what are the miscellaneous services?

Mr. MANION: There are a number of salaries paid out of this vote, to provide for temporary assistance in emergencies if required. The amount appropriated for that purpose is $5,400, and I have the full details here. There are some general expenses amounting to $13,000; travelling expenses, $1,000; telegraph and telephone, $1,500; printing and stationary, $500; contingencies, $4,780, and then in regard to the Chignecto canal commission there is an item of $10,000. That amount was provided last year for the purpose of appointing a commission to investigate that canal, so there is really a revote of that amount.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is really a small item, but my hon. friend spoke about printing and stationery. It seems to me the next item covers that. Would it not be preferable to have all the printing and stationery under one item?

Mr. MANION: My deputy informs me that this is simply the printing in connection with this vote.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: May I ask if the services of any of these experts have been utilized in connection with the location of the Peace river outlet, or in work of that nature?

Mr. MANION: No, not during the past year. I do not seem to have very full details of this vote, but I do not think any experts were employed last year under this item.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: If experts had been employed I should have liked a little information on the matter.

Mr. MANION: No, we have done nothing in that matter up to the present time.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I should like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the minister and the government the matter of a railway line in my constituency. I have had this matter before the railway company and the government for some years. There is a gap of some 36 or 38 miles extending from Handsworth and Lampman, on the Canadian National railway, in the southern part of Saskatchewan. I mentioned this to the minister some time ago, but I should like to impress it upon him once again. This is about as important in my constituency as the Mafeking cut-off is in certain parts of Manitoba. It is also a live question in the constituency of Qu'Appelle, and the hon. member representing that constituency has been working with me on the matter. If this gap were filled in this line would not only be a feeder for the Hudson Bay railway when completed, but as it extends north and south it would be the means of distributing the coal which we have in vast quantities in the southeastern part of Saskatchewan. We believe that from the standpoint of the railway company it would be a good investment because of the quantities of coal it would be possible to haul up to the central and northeastern part of the province. My idea in bringing the matter up at the present time is to impress upon the minister the importance of this line, so that he may appreciate its significance and pass the information along to the railway company. I have given the company a good deal of data in connection with the matter, with regard to what might be expected in the way of traffic, and as I said before I believe it would be a good investment for the railway.

Mr. MANION: This matter has been drawn to my attention both by the hon. member who has just spoken and by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I believe at one time I made an appointment for them with Sir Henry Thornton, and I will keep the matter before him.

Mr. McINTOSH: Touching the completion of the railway in the riding of the hon. member for Assiniboia, it occurred to me that this might be a good time to ask the Minister of Railways a question with regard to one of the Canadian National branch lines north of the North Saskatchewan river, connecting North Battleford and Edmonton. The road runs through North Battleford on westward into the Paradise hill area about 100 miles, and the same line runs out of Edmonton eastward about 100 miles. There is a gap of 40 miles not completed. When it is completed it will provide another through line from North Battleford to Edmonton.

Mr. MANION: Is that the one that crosses the Saskatchewan river?

Mr. BUCKLEY: The minister has a good many petitions with respect to this matter.

Mr. McINTOSH: No doubt the minister has received many petitions, and I was going to bring the matter up in the house in any event. I thought, however, that this might be an opportune time for the minister to make a statement respecting the matter. It was the desire of the president of the Canadian National Railways to have legislation brought down this session to provide for the completion of that gap. As I say, it is merely 40 miles, and when it is completed it will be a through line. This matter is important to all that area of country. The people there are very much interested in it and a statement from the minister would be appreciated. I think we should be informed, if the construction cannot be proceeded with this year, just when the work will be done. It is imperative that we should have a statement from the minister.

Mr. MANION: I think the St. Walburg-Bonnyville line is north of the line my hon. friend speaks of. That is being proceeded with at the present time.

Mr. McINTOSH: There is work being done on that line.

Mr. MANION: It was one of the lines which, by reason of the conditions prevailing out there, we asked the railways to proceed with. This request was made with a view to relieving the situation in that district rather than because the railway considered it immediately necessary. However, it is being gone on with. With respect to the other line my hon. friend speaks of, I have had a good many representations in the matter and the best I can say is that the Canadian National Railways and ourselves will give it consideration. All these branch lines have to be recommended by the railways and after that the government has to find the money. If the railway were in a position to do the work itself, naturally the government need not come into the picture at all, except in so far as it would have to ask parliament to grant a charter. But it comes into the picture because of the need of finding money; and the finding of money, as my hon. friend realizes, is to-day not the easiest thing in the world. The matter will be given consideration at the proper time both by the railways and by the government.

Mr. BUCKLEY: The engineers of the Canadian National Railways have already recommended the completion of this gap, which has been promised for some years. I represent the constituency, and I may tell the minister that the people are being penalized by having to pay 4 or 5 cents more for a useless back haul. And they are being penalized to a considerable extent. In answer to a question which I placed on the order paper some time ago, the minister intimated that the engineers of the railway company had recommended the completion of the gap.

Mr. MANION: I do not remember having had the matter brought to my attention by the railway; I cannot recall their having recommended it. I have asked the deputy, but he does not seem to have any recollection of it either. At the present time all the branch lines which they feel they can afford are being constructed. This is one of those that have to be considered in the future. The government is certainly desirous of building any branch lines that are necessary to relieve unfavourable conditions in the west, but I must repeat that there are so many requests for branch lines, and it calls for such a vast amount of money, that any application must be given serious consideration before the railway can proceed. As I have said, I do not remember the railway having recommended the building of this line, although I have had many representations from the people there.

Mr. McINTOSH: So far as the completion of that gap is concerned, I realize that it is rather difficult to get the money when it is required; I am satisfied of that. But I am also satisfied that the line from Edmonton to the present end of steel going eastward, and the line from North Battleford to the present end of steel going westward, are both excellent-paying lines. Perhaps I had better qualify that statement and speak particularly with reference to the line running through my own constituency; the hon. member for Athabaska can speak for his own riding. Certainly the line that passes through my constituency is one of the best-paying Canadian branch lines in the west, and if the minister would look into the financial record of that line I am sure he would find that since the line was built out of North Battleford to Meota, and from Meota to Edam, and from Edam to Turtleford, and from Turtleford on through to Spruce lake and the Paradise hill country—one of the most beautiful areas in northern Saskatchewan—it has proved a highly satisfactory branch line from the financial point of view. The money secured from that line by the Canadian National Railways will bear comparison, per mile, with the returns secured from any branch line in Saskatchewan, Manitoba or Alberta. That being the case, I think we have a right to look to the Minister of Railways to take steps as early as possible to have that gap completed. I realize, of course, that the railway must first take action, and that the line must constitute a part of its building program. But I submit that a suggestion from the minister to have the gap completed with the least possible delay would be effective, and it would undoubtedly meet with the approval of the people in that area.

Mr. GERSHAW: Shall we have an opportunity to discuss Canadian National branch lines when the Canadian National estimates are before the committee?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Can the minister make a statement with respect to the Neidpath-Swift Current line? The road is graded and steel has been laid up to the Canadian Pacific railway tracks. We understood that construction work in connection with the freight sheds would be proceeded with this year. The newspapers carried reports some days ago that this was on the Canadian National program for this year. Is this correct?

Mr. MANION: I cannot give the information offhand. As a matter of fact, branch lines should come in under the Canadian National Railways estimates, and inasmuch as I have not those items at hand I cannot reply to my hon. friend's question. Some of the western cabinet ministers wrote me with respect to the works being carried on by the two railways, and I obtained a list of the works from the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific. That information I forwarded, and it must be on the strength of that that the report appeared. I trust my hon. friend's information from the press is correct, but I cannot confirm it.

Mr. BUCKLEY: At page 831 of Hansard there appears a question of mine with reference to this gap. I asked:

> Have the engineers of the Canadian National Railways recommended the construction of either or both of these proposed lines?

The other line, I may say, is the branch from St. Paul, Alberta, to Brosseau. The minister's answer was, "yes, both." I may say that we have had many interviews with Sir Henry Thornton in reference to the completion of this gap and with a view to getting the freight rates equalized. We have been promised by Sir Henry that the construction of this gap will be undertaken. I might remind the minister that this line was built in 1911, and ever since then we have been hoping to see the fulfilment of the promise to have it completed.

Mr. GARDINER: I wish to call the attention of the minister to the condition of affairs in western Canada. Hon. members will recall that the crop of the west was fair last year but losing prices were received. Consequently the people of western Canada lost rather than made money. We had an open winter, and whenever we have a very open winter in the west it is followed by a dry year. That is what is happening now. We have had very little rain in the west, with the result that many crops are suffering, even to the extent of being dried up altogether. No doubt if conditions in the west continue as they are the government will have to come to the relief of the farmers with large sums of money. It would be better for the government to spend the money in the construction of branch lines than to make direct relief grants. There is no doubt that next year there will be a tremendous amount of suffering in western Canada because in many parts of the country the crop has been lost this year, and in other parts they have lost their crops for the past two or three years; consequently all the reserves of the farmers have disappeared. In the event that relief has to be provided for western Canada,

I would ask the minister to take into consideration the construction of these railways rather than the giving of direct relief grants.

Mr. MANION: I can assure my hon. friend that if conditions prove to be as serious as he indicates, this matter will be given fair and just consideration.

Mr. MUNN: Mr. Chairman, I join with the last speaker in his suggestion that the government should build railways rather than pay out money for odd jobs. About a year ago the King government promised that they would start work on the Peace River outlet, and during the last campaign the present Prime Minister promised that within a year his government would start to do something on this line. By building this railway a direct return would be given for the money expended, and there is bound to be considerable unemployment during the next winter which could be taken care of in this manner. The Pacific coast is intensely interested in this Peace River outlet and we are all waiting for the promises to be fulfilled.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. minister is listening to representations with regard to the Canadian National program, and apropos of what was said a little while ago with regard to the use and the application of moneys for one purpose and another, I would direct his attention to an item which appeared last year for a station at Yarmouth. Some expenditures were made, particularly for a roundhouse, but no further work has been done. I ask the minister to use his good offices in taking this matter up with the Canadian National management. I would point out to him what he perhaps does not know, that Yarmouth is a considerable feeder for the Canadian National railways as it is for the Dominion Atlantic railway. Something over 70,000 people came into and went out of that port last year. There are two boats running between Boston and Yarmouth and furnishing a daily service in the summer months, and there is a twice-a-week boat in the summer between Yarmouth and New York. About 40,000 automobiles came into and went out of that port last year. I am sure that the minister will agree that such a fine volume of business warrants facilities in keeping with a great international port, which Yarmouth is. Yarmouth is the terminus of what was the Halifax and Southwestern Railway and is now the Canadian National, and I am sure the railway authorities must be convinced that there should be much improved passenger accommodation in the way of a new station with a view to attracting more passenger traffic to that south shore railway.

Mr. MANION: I am not familiar with that particular question, but I will direct my hon. friend's remarks to the attention of the railway for their consideration.

Item agreed to.

Surveys and inspections, canals: including salaries and expenses of experts employed temporarily, $10,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not desire to delay the passage of this item, but there is only one item remaining in the minister's estimates.

Mr. MANION: No, there are five more items.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wanted to reserve one for discussion.

Item agreed to.

Pensions—J. L. Weller, $3,500.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. MANION: This item covers a pension to an old employee who was retired, I think in 1927. The gentleman named was chief engineer for many years and also consulting engineer for the department, and he was given a pension to carry him along.

Item agreed to.

Canals—staff and repairs, $3,000,000.

Mr. MANION: There is still one item remaining after this one upon which any matter could be discussed.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, May 25, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

INSURANCE DEPARTMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay on the table an abstract of the operations of the insurance department. Always the report is printed as quickly as possible, but as it involves a large amount of detail, it usually has not been completed until after the house has risen. For this reason the abstract is made available as soon as possible.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill No. 52, to amend the Board of Management of the Canadian District of the Evangelical Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio and other states, and to change its name to the Board of Management of the Canadian District of the American Lutheran Church.—Mr. Gershaw.

UNEMPLOYMENT AT NANAIMO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the acting Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) to the very serious, I might say desperate, conditions that exist in the city of Nanaimo. Owing to the closing down of the mines there are more than 800 men out of work. Nanaimo has spent all its available funds. At a conference between representatives of the province, the city council and the board of trade, the provincial representative, a minister of the crown, said that he fully realized the seriousness of the situation and was quite willing to help, but that it was impossible for him to do so unless he got some assurance from the federal government as to what they were going to do. I would urge that the matter be taken in hand at once, so that the situation, which is really desperate, may be given attention. One man said that it is "truly appalling."

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the situation referred to by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) is, as no doubt the house understands, purely a provincial matter. If it is found that the municipal and provincial authorities cannot relieve the situation, there is no doubt that proper steps will be taken and taken without delay, by this government to assist.

IMMIGRATION ADVERTISING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like again to draw the attention of the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) to the advertisements that are appearing in old country papers in regard to immigration. I know the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) brought this matter up the other day, when the Prime Minister replied that the advertisements were being continued under contracts made by the late government which had not yet lapsed. This is the particular advertisement to which I now wish to direct attention:

[Mr. Bennett.]

Youths Wanted for Canada
(14 to 19 years of age)
Free Ocean Passages
Free Training
Assured Employment
A Chance for £500
at 21.

For further particulars apply
Cunard Line, Canadian Settlement
Dept., Pier Head, Liverpool, or any Cunard office or agency.
Cunard.

The house, it will be remembered, unanimously adopted the clause in the report of the agriculture committee of three years ago to encourage the bringing in of these youths, but conditions have so changed in the interim that surely we ought to do something to stop such false information being given to the British people.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): Mr. Speaker, if any such advertisement is appearing in the British papers with the authority of the government it is being done under some unexpired contract that was entered into by the late government. But I am inclined to the view that the advertisement which the hon. member has read, and any others of a similar character, are being circulated on behalf of the steamboat company concerned. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) need not fear that British people are being encouraged to come to Canada at the present time by the government making statements that are calculated to deceive and disappoint them when they get here. The government is not doing anything of the kind. Anyone in the British isles who cares to come to Canada under what I might term "his own steam," is very welcome, but the government is not publishing information calculated to deceive intending immigrants; indeed, no encouragement is being held out to such people. I will inquire into the advertisement referred to and ask the steamship company the reason for its publication.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—ADVERTISING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to direct the attention of the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) to further advertisements, not in the English papers this time but in the Irish papers, along the line of the advertisements referred to by my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown). This time the advertisements are carried by the Canadian National Railways, and I should like to ask the Minister of Immigration to take into consideration the question of whether he should not advise the Canadian National Railways to stop this advertising.

GRAIN SHIPMENTS

CARRIAGE BETWEEN CANADIAN PORTS BY UNITED STATES VESSELS

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) to a certain condition and base a question upon it, but before doing so may I be permitted to read a copy of a petition that has been forwarded to him. It reads as follows:

Honourable Sir:

Although the attention of the respective governments has been drawn to the fact whereas American steamers are carrying our Canadian grain to Buffalo for transhipment to Montreal, and—

Mr. BENNETT: The reading of petitions is out of order.

Mr. MacINNIS: The reading of this petition would make my question more clear, but I will put my question as best I can. The fact is that according to the petitioners Canadian grain is being shipped from one Canadian port to another in American ships, and the petitioners are asking what steps the government intend to take, by order in council or otherwise, to remedy this situation. As a result, American ships are carrying our grain while Canadian ships and Canadian seamen are idle.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's statements are not quite accurate. The question is not a few weeks old, it is years old. It has been before the house, to my certain knowledge, for many years during the time I have been a member. The provisions of the Canada Shipping Act permit of certain amendments to be made without reference to the shipping act passed in Great Britain. We are now in a position to ask this house to petition the parliament at Westminster to enact such legislation as will permit this parliament to deal with the question the hon. member refers to. During the last nine years I have not heard of its having been dealt with by the previous government, and long before the hon. member was in this house the question was raised and discussed. But inasmuch as an order in council of the Imperial government would be required to give validity to any legislation that we might pass, the position, I am unofficially advised, is that such order in council would not be passed in view of the fact that legislation is pending that would confer upon us the necessary powers to deal with it without reference to the Imperial government. That is the position at the moment. I will look further at the hon. member's question when it appears in Hansard, and if any additional statement is necessary I will make it.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am not taking exception to the right hon. member's saying that my statement was not quite accurate, but I do wish to point out that what I was stating was simply based on the petition—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order, the hon. member cannot debate the subject.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am not debating it.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has asked his question, and he cannot now enter into a debate on the subject.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am not debating it.

WORLD WHEAT CONFERENCE

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER COMMUNICATING REPORT OF HIGH COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I promised that when I received the information I would communicate to the house the report of the High Commissioner on the recent conference held in London with respect to wheat. His report, which was received yesterday and decoded this morning, reads as follows:

The final act of the wheat conference drafted and accepted by all delegates reads:

Final act of the conference of wheat exporting countries held in London at the offices of the High Commissioner for Canada from the 18th day to the 23rd day of May, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-one.

The official delegations of the following countries: America, the United States of; Argentine; Australia; Bulgaria; Canada; Hungary; India; Poland; Roumania; Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; Yugoslavia; have met on the invitation of the Canadian government and at the offices of the High Commissioner for Canada from the 18th May, to the 23rd May, for conference of wheat exporting countries.

The conference invited the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, K.C., etc., High Commissioner for Canada, to act as its chairman. At fourth plenary session on May the 23rd, 1931, the report of the committee was presented to the conference and was finally adopted in the following form:

The conference of wheat exporting countries, consisting of delegations appointed by the governments of America, the United States of; Argentine; Australia; Bulgaria; Canada; Hungary; India; Poland; Roumania; Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; Jugoslavia; having studied existing world wheat situation is convinced that among underlying causes for present depressed prices for wheat, the following points should be specially mentioned:

(i) The effect of economic depression throughout the world.

(ii) The fact that there is more wheat produced than can be sold at a profit.

(iii) The absence of sufficiently adequate information regarding movements of wheat, the requirements of certain countries, and quantities which are liable to be placed upon the market.

(iv) The present uncertain state of wheat markets.

The conference, recognizing the serious nature of world economic depression, believes nevertheless that a substantial contribution to an improvement of present situation may be made through a clearer understanding of underlying facts regarding so important a commodity as wheat.

The conference considers that, where possible, a reduction in areas devoted to wheat should be undertaken in whatever way each country considers to be most effective and practical.

It was also felt to be especially desirable that there should be careful exploration of all avenues for greater utilization of wheat, both for food and also for other purposes.

The conference further considered current information respecting supply, the demands and the movement of wheat should be brought together in such a way as to assist wheat exporting countries towards orderly marketing of their surpluses.

The conference of wheat exporting countries has, therefore, decided to establish a committee of the conference consisting of one representative from each state participating in the conference to:

(a) Submit to the governments of the countries participating in this conference a definite proposal for establishing, under supervision of committee of the conference, a clearing house of information to serve wheat exporting countries. For this purpose, the committee shall be empowered to secure from states represented on committee full information as to unloadings and stock of wheat at all importing points, the areas sown to wheat, and crop prospects, thereby assisting orderly distribution of wheat in world markets. This information should be as far as possible in the form prescribed and at times fixed by committee.

(b) To explore carefully all possible avenues for greater utilization of this important cereal.

The conference, convinced that existence of this standing committee will develop contacts already established here between wheat exporting countries, proposes that committee may prepare and recommend a draft agenda for a further meeting of conference at which countries here represented may enter upon consideration of subjects as may then be deemed appropriate.

Executed at London, the twenty-third day of May, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-one.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): May I ask the right hon. gentleman in what way this new method of gathering information will differ from the methods already existing, the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome; the League of Nations; the International Chamber of Commerce and various other agencies?

Mr. BENNETT: I anticipated that possibly the hon. gentleman might suggest some such question, and in communicating with the High Commissioner during the progress of the conference it was pointed out that our Department of Trade and Commerce had very complete figures with respect to Canada and that the League of Nations gathered certain statistics at Geneva and the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome. The High Commissioner uses these words in answer to my inquiry:

The setting up of a special bureau for wheat lending special importance to wheat problems. It does not interfere with good work of office at Geneva or International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, both of which will be of great value to wheat bureau. The former deals with all trade statistics and latter with whole range of agricultural products. The clearing house proposed by conference will cover not only statistics but all other information that may be deemed of value upon the subject of wheat. Discussions throughout conference were vigorous but at all times harmonious and gave undoubted evidence that all exporting countries are seized with gravity of the present situation and seriously desire, by cooperation, to bring about improvement.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister indicate whether, as Minister of Finance, he will be in a position to bring down the budget this week?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): With respect to the introduction of the budget, I hope to make a definite announcement, but it is my present intention to endeavour to bring it down this week.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister indicate whether, in addition to the legislation foreshadowed in the budget, there will be legislation introduced other than that which already appears on the order paper?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): In addition to the legislation which will be foreshadowed by the budget, there will be a few measures that affect departmental matters and administration, with possibly one other matter.

DOMINION CONVERSION LOAN

ANNOUNCEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER THAT APPLICATIONS TO EXCHANGE SECURITIES TOTAL $600,000,000

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems very appropriate that on Empire day I should indicate to this house that the great effort made by the Canadian people with their resources to maintain the integrity of the empire some fifteen years ago, or more, by providing loans which were payable to the extent of $1,082,000,000 during the years 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934, has been continued, and that these securities have been exchanged to the extent of over $600,000,000 for securities that call for the payment of only 4½ per cent interest. The exact amount, since to-day is a holiday and Saturday was a very large day in conversions, I cannot state at this moment, but upwards of $600,000,000 of the securities taken by the Canadian people at that time have been exchanged for securities bearing 1 per cent less interest, for all the securities I have mentioned, except those due this year, carried interest at the rate of 5½ per cent.

I think the house will agree that the Canadian people are to be congratulated upon their confidence in their country, which has been shown by this magnificent tribute to the stability of this Dominion.

ALLEGED PROPAGANDA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny): Before the orders of the day are called, I have been requested to direct the attention of the government and especially that of the Postmaster General to the bolshevistic propaganda carried in an American magazine called The Saturday Evening Post, under the signature of that international bandit Trotzky. I should like to ask the Postmaster General or the government if they intend to take any steps to prevent this propaganda from coming into Canada.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The matter will be brought to the attention of the Postmaster General, who is not in his place to-day.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

Mr. E. F. WILLIS (Souris) moved the third reading of Bill No. 15, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ST. LAWRENCE POWER WATER RIGHTS

*Mr. FACTOR:

1. Has the government received any applications from private corporations for further diversion of power water rights in the St. Lawrence river?
2. What progress has the government made in reference to the plan for the deepening of the St. Lawrence river waterway?

Mr. BENNETT: This question has been standing for some time and I think it will have to be answered verbally. To the first part of the question the answer is, yes. To the second part it is very difficult to make answer other than that at the proper time the house will be fully advised; because the progress which a government may make in reference to a matter of this kind is something with respect to which it cannot give an answer until the question is in some more concrete form than mere discussion.

HON. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX

*Mr. LAFLECHE:

1. During the term of office of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, as Speaker of the House of Commons, were certain pieces of furniture, the property of the state, transported to his summer residence, at Pointe au Pic, Quebec?
2. If so, what were said pieces of furniture?
3. Has said furniture been returned?
4. If so, at whose request?
5. Who paid for the transportation of the said furniture?

Mr. BENNETT: The Speaker's department has furnished the answer, which merely indicates what the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) said the other day. Under the circumstances I think the question and answer had better be filed. The answer in each case is, no.

The question and answer follow:

Question:

1. During the term of office of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, as Speaker of the House of Commons, were certain pieces of furniture, the property of the state, transported to his summer residence, at Pointe au Pic, Quebec?
2. If so, what were said pieces of furniture?
3. Has said furniture been returned?
4. If so, at whose request?
5. Who paid for the transportation of the said furniture?

Answer:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. Answered by No. 1.
4. Answered by No. 1.
5. Answered by No. 1.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—GASPE TERMINUS

*Mr. MARCIL:

Has the Canadian National Railways decided to retain the western terminus of the Gaspe railways at Matapedia, Quebec, and will the place be provided with the usual facilities?

Mr. MANION: Perhaps I can answer this question by stating that the matter is still under consideration by the Canadian National Railways. They have not yet come to a decision.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—NEW YORK PREMISES

Mr. McGIBBON:

1. When was the lease for the new premises of the Canadian National Railways in New York signed?
2. What is the rent per year?
3. What is the name of the lessor?
4. Has the Canadian National Railways any other premises in New York, if so, what rent is paid?
5. Is the place rented at present, if not, why was it vacated?
6. What amount of business was done in the New York office during 1930?
7. Has the Canadian National Railways similar offices in Chicago, Detroit and other American cities?
8. If so, what rent is paid in each case?
9. What amount was spent on each or any of such premises?
10. What amount was spent on furnishings of said premises?
11. What was the amount of current liabilities of the Canadian National Railways unpaid on December 31, 1930, and were these included in the deficit shown in the annual report?
12. Does Sir Henry Thornton receive a salary from the Canadian National Express Company, The Canadian National Hotel Company, Canadian National Telegraph Company, subsidiary railways or any other companies?
13. If so, how much from each?
14. What was the salary of Sir Henry Thornton stated in the last agreement with the Canadian government?

Mr. MANION:

1. December 30, 1929.

2. Annual rental until 1934 gross..	$90,800
Less rents receivable..	32,000
Net..	$58,800

3. Building owned by trustees of Mrs. A. M. Pyle and was under lease expiring April 30, 1934, to 673 Fifth Avenue Corporation with an over-lease held by Cordelia Realty Corporation expiring April 30, 1955, with option of renewal. The Canadian National acquired a lease from 673 Fifth Avenue Corporation expiring April 30, 1934, and has an assignment of the over-lease held by Cordelia Realty Corporation.

4. (1) 505 Fifth avenue annual rental $55,000. (2) Traffic office in the Woolworth building, annual rental, $14,000.

5. In reply the management state:

(1) The office at 505 Fifth avenue at the moment is not rented. At the time arrangements were made to move the offices to the present location at the corner of 53rd street and Fifth avenue, an important real estate firm in New York felt convinced that there would be no difficulty in renting 505 Fifth avenue at a figure substantially greater than the rental we were paying. However, the business depression in the United States went from bad to worse, which could not at that time have been foreseen, and the office is consequently unrented. The location, however, for certain purposes is a desirable one and there is no doubt but what in a relatively short time, a satisfactory tenant will be obtained.

As to why the offices at 505 Fifth avenue were vacated, the following explanation is made: An examination of the movement of important hotels, shops, and similar enterprises, led to the inevitable conclusion that the drift of business was distinctly uptown, and that unless the Canadian National Railways took advantage of the opportunity to secure quarters in the more uptown area, we would either have to content ourselves with remaining in the location at 505 Fifth avenue or pay a much higher price elsewhere. In coming to this conclusion, the advice of Douglas Elliman & Company, an important real estate firm in New York, and a number of outside business people was sought. As a matter of fact when it came to canvassing the situation, it was found that the corner of 53rd street and Fifth avenue was the only remaining corner in the uptown district which could be found. This is an illustration of how rapidly desirable quarters were picked up, and is also indicative of the flow of business. There was another and really more important reason for moving, and that is that the office at 505 Fifth avenue had become too small for the transaction of the company's business, particularly in view of the fact that this office is not only intended as a ticket and tourist office for the Canadian National Railways, but is used generally for the purpose of attracting industries to Canada and advertising the Dominion as a whole.

For all of these reasons, after full discussion and consideration it was considered desirable to make the change.

(2) The office in the Woolworth building is occupied by the traffic department.

6. The total business transacted during the year was $520,364, exclusive of business secured for the hotel department.

7, 8, 9 and 10. Outside agencies in United States cities, as follows:

11. The amount of current liabilities unpaid at December 31, 1930, was $42,469,278.98. To the extent that such liabilities relate to the income and profit and loss accounts they have been included in the deficit shown in the annual report.

12. The Department of Railways and Canals has no information.

13. See answer to 12.

14. $75,000 per year, payable monthly, with reasonable out-of-pocket expenses incurred in connection with the duties of his office.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

Mr. BOUCHARD:

1. Is the government aware of the fact that the chairman of the harbour commission of Montreal has declared that through lack of funds twelve hundred labourers will not be reengaged this summer?

2. Has the government been requested to give authority to said harbour commission to proceed with urgent work?

3. Have any contracts been awarded lately for wharves and piers in said harbour, and if so, what are the names of the contractors and amount of contracts?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. No.

2. No.

3. I am informed by the harbour commissioners of Montreal that the answer is in the negative.

OCEAN RATE ON CATTLE

Mr. DONNELLY:

1. What was the ocean rate on cattle between Canada and Great Britain for each of the years, 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929, 1930 and 1931?

2. Upon what date (year, month and day of the month) were each of these changes of rates, upward or downward, made?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. January 1st, 1926, to February 28, 1927, $20 per head on fat cattle and $18 per head for light cattle under 1,000 pounds.

March 1st, 1927, to date, $15 per head with discount of 10 per cent on cattle under 1,000 pounds.

2. Answered by above.

ICE BREAKER N. B. MCLEAN

Mr. LACROIX:

1. For how many days did the government icebreaker N. B. McLean work in the gulf of St. Lawrence and Chaleur bay during the months of March, April and May, 1931?

2. To what point in Chaleur bay did she succeed in cutting a channel through the ice?

3. What was the daily cost of the operation of this vessel, including wages of crew and fuel?

4. Was the vessel obliged to abandon this work on account of an accident?

5. If so, for how long will the vessel be laid up, what is the estimated cost of the repairs required in order to put her back in working condition?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. The icebreaking steamer N. B. McLean left Quebec 8th March, 1931. She returned to Quebec 10th May, 1931.

2. No icebreaking operations were carried out in Chaleur bay.

3. $460.

4 and 5. The N. B. McLean did not meet with any accident and sustained no damage.

TRENT CANAL—EMPLOYEES

Mr. BOUCHARD:

1. Who is the medical officer or physician employed by the Department of Railways and Canals for the examination of the employees of the Trent canal at Peterborough?

2. Who was the physician who examined Thomas Black, bridge keeper of the Trent canal at Bridgenorth in 1931?

3. How long was he employed and what is his remuneration?

Mr. MANION:

1. No medical officer or physician is employed by the Department of Railways and Canals for the examination of the employees of Dominion canals. When necessity for medical examination of employees arises, the matter is placed in the hands of the Department of Pensions and National Health, which department instructs its local medical officers to act.

2. Dr. A. W. MacPherson, Peterborough.

3. Only for the time required to make the actual examination and report. For this service Dr. MacPherson charged $3. Such charges are paid by the Department of Railways and Canals.

BONAVENTURE POINT, QUE., LIGHTKEEPER

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the light keeper of Bonaventure point, Quebec, been dismissed?

2. If so, was an investigation held and by whom?

3. Who is now in charge of this light and on whose recommendation was the temporary appointment made?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. No, he resigned.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Ovide Bourdages; by direction of the Minister of Marine.

ST. SULPICE, QUE., WHARF

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. Who advised the engineer in charge of the works on the wharf at St. Sulpice, Quebec, carried on by the federal Department of Public Works during the course of the year 1930, to dismiss Mr. Mederic Lacombe as foreman of the said works?

2. Who advised the engineer in charge of the said works, that the services of Mr. Mederic Lacombe were not satisfactory?

3. Who advised the above-mentioned engineer of the works on the wharf at St. Sulpice, regarding the opportunity of nominating Mr. J. E. Robitaille to replace Mr. Mederic Lacombe as foreman of the said works?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1 and 2. Dismissed by engineer in charge of works for not following instructions.

3. District engineer.

RIVIERE DU LOUP, QUE., WHARF

Mr. POULIOT:

1. What is the depth of the water: (a) at low tide, and (b) high tide, at the northeast end of the wharf at Riviere du Loup, Quebec?

2. What is the depth at forty feet from the end of said wharf?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

The following are based on soundings taken October, 1929.

1. (a) Approximately 15 feet low spring tide; (b) approximately 27 feet high neap tide; approximately 31½ feet high spring tide.

2. Approximately 16 feet at low tide with 12 or 16½ feet more at high tide.

PETERBOROUGH, ONT., GOVERNMENT GRADER

Mr. GRAY:

1. Has the Minister of Agriculture received any complaints regarding the failure of government grader, Donald McKinnon, of Peterborough, grading the hogs of the Canada Packers Limited?

2. Has the minister ascertained that one of the weighers of Canada Packers Limited has been grading the hogs at Peterborough plant instead of the government grader?
3. Have the government manifests of the government grader at Peterborough been discovered missing and for what years are these manifests of the government grader missing?
4. Has the minister investigated as to whether there has been a shortage in weights discovered at the Canada Packers Limited plant at Peterborough, between weights given to the farmers on sale tickets and the weights shown by the weighers' records of the Canada Packers Limited at its Peterborough plant?
5. Has the minister instituted the investigation?
6. Does the minister intend to institute an investigation?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. Yes, by personal and confidential letter.
2. The usual practice is followed in administering the hog grading regulations at the Peterborough packing plant. In the event of the official hog grader being called to the country for a hog grading demonstration or other work in connection with swine improvement in the district immediately surrounding the packing plant, arrangements are made for the grading of the hogs at the plant by an official of the plant subject to the supervision and approval of the official hog grader on his return.
3. No; hog grading records for the province of Ontario are filed at the office of the district swine grader, 59 Victoria street, Toronto 2, from which office reports on the grading are issued to the farmers and shippers.
4. No.
5. No.
6. No. Under the British North America Act, authority for such an investigation is vested with the Province.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—EX-CONDUCTORS

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Were Messrs. Noel Plourde and Joseph Plourde, ex-conductors on the Canadian National Railways, reinstated?
2. If so, on what date?

Mr. MANION:

1. The management advise that Noel Plourde has not been reinstated. No record of a Joseph Plourde employed as conductor.
2. Answered by No. 1.

BUTTER IMPORTS

Mr. RAYMOND:

1. How many pounds of butter were imported into Canada during the month of April, 1931, from: (a) New Zealand; (b) Australia; (c) other countries?
2. What was the average price of butter per pound, in Canada during the month of April, 1931?
3. What was the lowest price per pound at which butter sold, in Canada during the month of April, 1931?
4. What was the lowest price per pound at which butter sold, in Canada during the month of May, 1931?

Mr. STEVENS:

1. Canada's imports of butter in pounds, during April, 1931, from (a) New Zealand, (b) Australia, (c) other countries, were: (a) New Zealand, 7,100 pounds; (b) Australia, 489,944 pounds; (c) other countries, 518 pounds.
2. Creamery at retail, 37.2 cents.
3. Creamery at retail, 32½ cents.
4. Creamery at retail, 24 cents.

Note.—All questions are based upon prices as for the 1st of both months.

CENSUS COMMISSIONER, TÉMISCOUATA

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Who was appointed census commissioner for the county of Témiscouata?
2. What is his salary?
3. Who recommended him to the department?
4. How many census enumerators will be appointed in the county of Témiscouata?
5. What salary will each one receive?
6. By whom will they be appointed?

Mr. STEVENS:

1. Mr. Romeo Tremblay.
2. An allowance of $250 to cover organization expenses and for viseing of the returns made by the enumerators; checking them and forwarding to Ottawa; verification of enumerators' accounts and the general supervision of the census within the district over which he is appointed as Commissioner the following rates are provided: 1 cent for each name on the "population" schedule; 3 cents for each "Agricultural" schedule; 1 cent for each entry on the "Animal and animal products, not on farm" schedule; 1 cent for each record of blind and deaf persons; 1 cent for each record of merchandising and service establishments.
3. Appointed by the Honourable the Minister of Trade and Commerce.
4. Information not yet available.
5. Five cents for each person recorded on the population schedule; 5 cents for each absentee family; 5 cents for each closed house card; 35 cents for farms of 5 acres and over; 25 cents for farms of 1 to less than 5 acres; 35 cents for vacant and abandoned farms; for animals, animal products and fruits, etc. not on farms, 10 cents per family; for merchandising and service establishments 10 cents each; for blind and deaf persons 5 cents per name; in lieu of horse hire and all other expenses at the rate of $5 per 100 names on population schedule.

6. By the Honourable the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

ROSEMOUNT, MONTREAL, PROPOSED POSTAL STATION

Mr. LAURIN:

1. Has the government received a petition or delegation requesting that a postal station be erected in the district of Rosemount, Montreal?

2. If so, what action is the government taking in connection with such petition?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2. The department is studying the present postal needs of Montreal district, and as soon as possible the case of Rosemount will be fairly considered.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ACID PHOSPHATE DUTY

Mr. RALSTON:

1. Has the government or the Minister of National Revenue placed a value upon acid phosphate for duty purposes under the dumping clause?

2. If so, what is that value?

3. Why was such value fixed, and when did it take effect?

4. Will the minister bring down copy of order in council or other ruling fixing such value?

5. Is acid phosphate manufactured in Canada?

6. If so, at what places and by what companies?

7. Where is the raw rock used in its manufacture obtained?

8. If there is not at present any acid phosphate produced in Canada, does the government know of any preparations being made for its manufacture?

9. If so, where and by whom?

TRENT CANAL SUPERINTENDENT

Mr. BOUCHARD:

1. During what periods and for what purpose and what were the dates of absences of Mr. A. L. Killaly, superintendent of the Trent canal at Peterborough during the years 1929, 1930 and 1931?

2. What leave of absence was given to other members of the office staff on the Trent canal at Peterborough, and what were the dates and purposes of such leave?

BOARD OF PENSION COMMISSIONERS

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. How many cases were allowed by the Board of Pension Commissioners between October 1, 1930, and April 30, 1931?

2. How many cases rejected by said board were allowed by the pensions tribunals in the same period?

[Mr. Stevens.]

3. How many cases rejected by the pensions tribunals were allowed by the appeal court in the same period?

4. How many cases allowed by the pensions tribunals were rejected by the appeal court in the same period?

5. What was the cost during the same period of: (a) the Board of Pension Commissioners and their administration as such; (b) the pensions tribunals: (1) salaries; (2) travelling expenses; (c) pension advocates: (1) salaries; (2) travelling expenses; (d) commission counsel: (1) salaries; (2) travelling expenses; (e) the appeal court: (1) salaries; (2) travelling expenses?

6. What was the monetary value of all pensions paid during same period: (a) by decisions of the pensions board and not appealed; (b) by decisions of the pensions tribunals and not appealed; (c) by decisions of the appeal court?

7. How many cases (outside the decisions of the pensions board) have been finally disposed of by the appeal machinery in the same period?

8. How many cases were finally disposed of by the old federal appeal board between May 1, and October 1, 1930?

9. How much was the monetary value of such decisions?

10. What was the cost to Canada?

15. Canada's favourable trade balances with the following countries for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930: Australia, France, Italy, Belgium, Netherlands, Japan.

Mr. BENNETT: A question is raised here of considerable importance. I mentioned it the other day. This substitutes for a member's own industry the public service of the country. The ability of the staff of a department to carry on and at the same time answer questions for which the blue books are provided is one which I think hon. members might seriously consider. All these figures are in the trade and commerce reports, and the hon. member or his secretary or someone else could obtain the information in a short time. To turn the staff of the department on this work and other work of a similar character is not customary, at least in the British parliament, and I have not seen it carried to such an extent as it is here. I should hardly think that, on consideration, the hon. gentleman would regard this as a matter on which the members of the statistical branch of the Trade and Commerce department should spend a week or so for the purpose of obtaining information, while they are performing their own work.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I might point out that the nature and the form of the questions were obtained by me from similar questions asked by the right hon. gentleman and his friends when they were in opposition.

Mr. BENNETT: If that is so, the hon. gentleman has no excuse for asking the question, because the answer is before him.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The answer is not up to date.

Mr. BENNETT: Why not ask for it up to date?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I intend to do so later on.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF, RIVIERE DU LOUP

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of pay lists of the unemployment relief work in the city of Riviere du Loup, Quebec, before January 1, 1931.

Mr. GORDON: The Department of Labour has not in its possession the pay lists referred to in this motion. It is doubtful whether such lists would be supplied to the department. In dealing with the various provinces in connection with the payment of these moneys it has not been the practice to demand a detailed pay list, but merely to ask for a certificate that the money was paid in the way it was intended to be paid, which certificates are attested to by the proper treasury officials of the various provinces.

Mr. POULIOT: Could the hon. minister advise whether or not these lists are made out in duplicate, and if so, is a copy left with the minister of public works or the minister of labour of the province?

Mr. GORDON: The department does not receive the lists, it receives only the certificates of the province duly certificated by affidavit.

Mr. POULIOT: Is it within the personal knowledge of the hon. member that duplicate copies of the lists are left with the minister of labour of each province? I would like to know where I could get a copy.

An hon. MEMBER: Ask Taschereau.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. member desire to press the question?

Mr. POULIOT: No.

Motion withdrawn.

[Mr. I. A. Mackenzie.]

CACOUNA, TEMISCOUATA COUNTY, QUEBEC— RURAL MAIL ROUTE NO. 2

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence and reports in possession of Post Office Department in reference to the rural mail route No. 2 of Cacouna, Temiscouata county, Quebec.

Mr. CAHAN: There should be a time limit to this motion.

Mr. POULIOT: Since last August, say August 1, 1930.

An hon. MEMBER: Since the turmoil.

Motion as amended agreed to.

ST. CLEMENT, TÉMISCOUATA COUNTY, QUEBEC— RURAL MAIL ROUTE NO. 1

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence and reports in possession of Post Office Department in reference to the rural mail route No. 1 of St. Clément, Temiscouata county, Quebec.

He said: From August 1, 1930.

Motion as amended agreed to.

ST. CYPRIEN, TEMISCOUATA COUNTY, QUEBEC— RURAL MAIL ROUTE NO. 1

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence and reports in possession of the Post Office Department in reference to the rural mail route No. 1 of St. Cyprien, Temiscouata county, Quebec.

He said: The same amendment, from August 1, 1930.

Motion as amended agreed to.

ST. PAUL DE LA CROIX, TEMISCOUATA COUNTY, QUEBEC— RURAL MAIL ROUTE NO. 1

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence and reports in possession of Post Office Department in reference to the rural mail route No. 1 of St. Paul de la Croix, Temiscouata county, Quebec.

He said: From August 1, 1930.

Motion as amended agreed to.

RAVIERE TROIS-PISTOLES, TEMISCOUATA COUNTY, QUEBEC— RURAL MAIL ROUTE NO. 1

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence and reports in possession of Post Office Department in reference to the rural mail route No. 1 of Rivière Trois-Pistoles, Temiscouata county, Quebec.

He said: From August 1, 1930.

Motion as amended agreed to.

CONFEDERATION OF CANADA AND NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. VENIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada, and W. A. McKay, of St. Johns, Newfoundland, and any other person, relating to the subject of confederation of Canada and Newfoundland.

Mr. BENNETT: If ever there were a question which should not be on the order paper this is one. I have had no official correspondence with Mr. McKay, whom I do not at the moment recall knowing. I received a personal communication from him which I did not treat as an official communication in any sense, and I simply replied to it.

Mr. VENIOT: That is sufficient answer.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. McKay was in no way connected with the government of Newfoundland. I desire to make it perfectly clear that it would be most unfair to leave the impression that someone connected with Newfoundland had carried on official correspondence with myself.

Mr. VENIOT: I have been advised that this Mr. W. A. McKay has been circulating letters in connection with the confederation of Canada and Newfoundland purporting to have come from the Prime Minister of Canada. I am pleased to hear from my right hon. friend that no such letters exist.

Motion dropped.

RIVIERE DU LOUP, QUEBEC—WHARF REPAIRS

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, reports, pay lists (original, corrected or revised), itemized bills of carters and materials, in connection with the wharf repair works at Riviere du Loup, Quebec, since August 7, 1930, to date.

He said: I would like to add the word "chauffeurs" after the word "carters" in the third line.

Motion as amended agreed to.

TOWNSHIP OF VIGER—MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence and reports in the possession of the Post Office Department, in connection with the establishment of a post office and the transportation of mail on the eighth and ninth back settlements of the township of Viger, in the county of Temiscouata.

Mr. CAHAN: Since August 1, 1930.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes.

Motion as amended agreed to.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

TARIFF BRIEF SUBMITTED TO GOVERNMENT BY DOMINION CARTRIDGE COMPANY

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn) moved:

For a copy of the brief or briefs submitted to the government by the Dominion Cartridge Company, or by any other manufacturer or manufacturers of ammunition, in connection with an application for increased duties on ammunition.

Mr. BENNETT: This return cannot be brought down. Part of the information asked for is regarded as confidential: not confidential in the narrow sense of the term, but confidential as such information would be before a tariff board. It involves knowledge of the details of manufacturing costs by rival interests in a particular business, and just as tariff boards in this and other countries have regarded as confidential in the very nature of things such information as the internal operations of enterprises and just as the railway company has declined to bring down information regarding certain matters that will give its competitors knowledge which they otherwise would not possess, so we must decline to accede to the hon. gentleman's motion to bring down the return for which he asks.

Mr. POULIOT: If the ammunition were dropped, it might explode.

Mr. BENNETT: If it exploded in some quarters near at hand, that would be of great benefit to the country.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. member wish to proceed with the resolution?

Mr. YOUNG: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: I am informed by the officials who received this information that it was obtained on the ground that it would be considered as absolutely confidential.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is for the house to decide whether the resolution shall be agreed to or not.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of the statement made by the Secretary of State that officials of the department informed him that when this brief was filed, it was filed on the distinct understanding that some portions of it were purely confidential, does Your Honour think the house should violate their undertaking which is really an obligation in that sense and which, I think, has been so regarded in times past in the house?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This raises a much larger question, namely, whether increases in the tariff are to be given as a result of confidential information. If any interest is seeking to benefit by an increase in the tariff, such interest ought to be prepared to give to the public all the information necessary to enable the public to judge whether the increase has been given without fear, without favour and in the public interest. That is a very large question, and before rejecting this motion, I hope the Prime Minister will give that phase of the question a little further consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: I have given it consideration. The same question arises frequently before tariff boards in the United States and in this country as well. This subjecting of the cost figures of internal operations of a company to a competitor has never been done in any instance. It is not only unfair, but it is not allowed even in the railway committee in the case of a railway of which we are the shareholders. The right hon. gentleman, I think, confuses two things. The responsibility must be assumed by the government with respect to its tariff legislation, and the method by which it arrives at the legislation may, of course, at times be, as has been said, wholly inaccurate, but it gets the best information it can, sometimes from a tariff board, sometimes from other sources, and sometimes from both. But I should be loath to believe that the house is of opinion that confidential information connected with the internal economy of the various enterprises in Canada should be made public in the house and thereby benefit a competitor. In this instance the information was given to the government on the distinct understanding that it was not to be subject to publicity. The government, of course, must assume the responsibility for any action it takes, not upon secret information but upon information which is furnished to a cabinet of Canadians who have to consider and deal with the problems in the best way it can. Under our tariff measure now before the house it is not proposed that this information should be made public. The question involves not only this but many other matters of the same character. I am inclined to think upon mature reflection the hon. gentleman himself will see how unfair it would and must be in the very nature of things to divulge such information when there are competitors—and I shall not go into the question of who they are—who are interested in this particular business and who would be very glad to get this information in this way when they otherwise could not secure it.

Mr. VENIOT: Does the Prime Minister mean competitors within Canada or without?

Mr. BENNETT: Without, partly.

Mr. YOUNG: I might explain in a word why I asked this question. The price of ammunition in other countries has dropped. The price in Canada was about to drop when the Customs department interfered and prevented its doing so. I understand this was done at the instance of a certain Canadian manufacturer who furnished certain information which was contained in a brief submitted to the government. In order to get at the truth and to know why the department interfered to prevent the price of ammunition dropping in this country, I asked this question, and I ask that the motion be voted on.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) assures us that in this particular instance he has given a guarantee that this information will not be made public, I do not think the house can very well override that statement of his. On the other hand, I should like to point out to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) that as soon as a firm of this kind makes representations for an increased tariff which means a burden on the general consuming public, that business ceases to be private in character.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is not debatable, and no one has suggested it is out of order.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggested it was out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not so understand.

Mr. BENNETT: I said that I conceived one part of it so to be, but I was not going to argue the question at length. The ground on which the motion may be opposed is clearly stated in the manual of procedure at page 136 of Beauchesne where it is stated:

> A motion for a return may be opposed on the ground of public policy, such as that the disclosure of the information sought is not for the public interest, or that its supply would involve unreasonable labour or expense.

The latter part the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) will understand. In any event I put it on the larger ground that in view of the statement made by the Secretary of State, the house should not furnish that information. In the main I agree with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said; this is a case where definite information was given on a distinct understanding, and in my judgment the house should not take the view suggested that the information be divulged.

Mr. BROWN: I think we should agree that no such understanding should be given in the future.

Mr. SPEAKER: The citation quoted from the manual of procedure in the public business of the British House of Commons gives a ground for opposing such a motion as a matter of public policy, but I do not think it goes so far as to entitle the Speaker to rule the resolution out of order. It is for the house to deal with it, either pass it or not. Whether it would be in the interest of the public or a matter of public policy to pass the resolution is entirely for the house to decide.

Motion negatived.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

RIGHT OF APPEAL SUGGESTED IN CONNECTION WITH THE PREPARATION OF VOTERS' LISTS

Mr. A. B. THOMPSON (East Simcoe) moved):

For a copy of all correspondence and other communications in the possession of the government, relating to the preparation of the voters' list for the municipality of Port McNicoll, in the riding of East Simcoe, and a copy of the original list as prepared by the enumerator, and of the revised list as prepared by him for use on election day. Also a copy of any communications exchanged between the chief electoral officer and the returning officer or any other person as to the conduct of the poll on election day.

He said: I desire to say a few words in connection with this resolution standing in my name. I want to enter a protest against the manner in which a number of the electors in my riding were deprived on election day of their right to vote. I claim that a number of the voters in my riding were wrongfully deprived, in connection with the preparation of the voters' list, of their right to vote.

Port McNicoll, for the purpose of the Dominion Elections Act, is a rural municipality, and so the preparation and revision of the voters' list is left in the hands of the local registrar. The registrar prepared his preliminary list, which he posted up in the usual way, and then, in accordance with the provisions of the act, he proceeded to revise the preliminary list, and then issued his final or revised list. When his final list was given out, it was found that the registrar had omitted 90 names that he himself had placed on the preliminary list. The registrar in the preparation of this preliminary list is supposed to put on the names of all those whom he believes to be entitled to vote, but when he issued the final list he had taken off 90 names that he himself had put on the preliminary list. The men whose names were struck off received no notice and were given no opportunity to come before the registrar and swear as to their qualifications. They were given no chance at all to prove their right to have a vote. I suppose the reason why this extraordinary power is given to a registrar, there being no appeal from his decision in the matter, is that there is a further provision in the act which says that if the name of a voter in a rural municipality is omitted from the list, the voter may, on election day, go before the deputy returning officer, swear as to his qualifications, be vouched for under oath by a voter already on the list, and then he can demand a ballot. But, sir, Port McNicoll is a lake port town. These men whose names were struck off the list are mariners, forming part of the crews of the four Canadian Pacific steamboats running between Port McNicoll and Fort William. All these boats will not be in port on election day, and in order to give the voters a chance to vote, provision is made in the Act for an advance poll, which under ordinary circumstances would give every one of these men a chance to vote. But, sir, no man can vote at the advance poll unless his name is actually on the list, and so these 90 men—at least from one-half to three-quarters of them—were automatically deprived of the right to vote, because at the most two of these boats, and probably only one, would be in port on election day.

I submit that the elections act should be amended to provide for an appeal from the decision of the registrar, in order that eligible voters such as I have mentioned should not be deprived of their vote. In 1926, with the same number of Canadian Pacific boats in commission and the same number of crews, there were 77 voters who polled their votes at the advance poll. In 1930 this number was reduced to 15, showing conclusively how this thing worked out.

Immediately this revised list was issued by the registrar, my friends directed my attention to it, whereupon I telegraphed to the chief electoral officer. I was in Orillia at the time, right in the midst of my campaign. I wired the chief electoral officer as follows:

Orillia, July 2, 1930.

Registrar at Port McNicoll in East Simcoe, Ontario, acting under instructions from returning officer, has struck off about 90 voters from list. These men come to Port McNicoll about March, and remain there until end of December, sailing in boats from Port McNicoll to Fort William and return. Many of them unmarried with no other permanent residence. Returning officer justifies his action on letter received from you. Think facts cannot have been properly explained to you. Request that you wire registrar to put these names back on list. Kindly answer me.

A. B. Thompson, M.P.

I received this reply:

Ottawa, July 4, 1930.

Question dealt with in my letter to returning officer related to persons forming crew of Canadian Pacific Railway boats registered in Montreal and plying between Port McNicoll and other ports. Port McNicoll being described as vessels' home port by reason of their spending occasional layover days there. On these facts and assuming individuals concerned continuously housed on board, they are clearly not entitled to vote in Simcoe East. I advised returning officer that only persons really resident in Port McNicoll should be placed on lists for that place.

Jules Castonguay,
Chief Electoral Officer.

On receipt of that telegram I wrote the following letter:

Penetanguishene, Ont.,
July 7, 1930.

Chief Electoral Officer,

Re: Port McNicoll Lists

Dear Sir:

In reply to your telegram to me of July 3, I beg to say that the men struck off the list on your instructions go to Port McNicoll about 15th March, and live on shore until about May 15th, when navigation opens and they then go aboard their boats. I consider that every man is entitled to go on the voters' list for some place. I cannot see how these men could go on any other list but that of Port McNicoll, and I claim that these men will have the right to take the oath on election day and be vouched for and vote. To deprive men of their vote is surely not the intention of the act. Some of these men will have to vote at the advance poll. As I read the act, a man's name has to be actually on the list to vote at an advance poll. Is this right, or has he the same right to take the oath as on election day? I would like to hear from you about this point as well.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) A. B. Thompson, M.P.

Then by way of postscript I wrote:

What has the registration of these boats at Montreal to do with the case? They ply between Port McNicoll and Fort William.

To that I received this reply:

Dear Sir,—

I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 7th. The question of the right to vote of persons employed on the Canadian Pacific steamships was put to me as depending upon whether they could properly be said to be resident in East Simcoe by reason of the fact that Port McNicoll was what was described as their "home port," although not the boat's port of registration, the expression "home port" apparently meaning the port at which the boats lay over between trips, the members of the crew, however, remaining on board. I advised, after consulting with Mr. Biggar, that this casual relationship of the ships to Port McNicoll did not give to the members of the crew who lived upon them the right to describe themselves as "resident" in Port McNicoll or entitle them to vote in Simcoe East as having been resident in that electoral district on May 30th inst.

I have discussed the matter further with Mr. Biggar in the light of your letter under reply and he advised me that the fact that the individuals in question came to Port McNicoll in March and remained there until they joined their ships about the middle of May makes no difference to their qualification assuming that whatever lodgings they had during that interval were, as one would expect, given up upon the ship going into commission, and that thereafter they lived on board. If any particular individuals among them could properly claim to have continued, notwithstanding their having joined their ships, to have retained a residence in Port McNicoll, the conclusion with regard to them might be different, but speaking generally, I suppose it may be assumed that once they did join their ships their residence ashore ceased.

Only those persons whose names appear on the list are entitled to certificates to vote at an advance poll. The deputy returning officer at an advance poll has no authority to accept any vote from a voter who has not obtained a certificate, and the registrar cannot issue a certificate to anyone whose name has not been included in the list he has prepared.

Yours truly,

Jules Castonguay,
Chief Electoral Officer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the chief electoral officer has assumed too much, because as a matter of fact the following are the circumstances. These men start their work on shore about the 15th of March and remain continuously on shore until the 15th of May, when they go aboard their boats. These boats do not occasionally call at Port McNicoll; they call there twice a week. When the navigation season closes these men go ashore again, return to their lodgings and work in the locality until about the end of December. January and February are their holiday months, and they may go away for those two months, but as I said before, they return about the 15th of March. Therefore why these men should be deprived of their right to vote at Port McNicoll is beyond my comprehension. It is the only place where they have any residence, and they could not go on the voting list in any other place.

I may say that I addressed a public meeting at Port McNicoll after the lists were prepared and after I had had this correspondence with the chief electoral officer. At that meeting I stated that any man whose name had been wrongfully left off the list, and who was in port on election day, had the right to go to the polling booth and demand a ballot, on taking the oath as to his qualifications and on being vouched for by a man whose name was already on the list. That was my advice to the electors, and I believe it to be sound. But, sir, I desire to call attention to what happened on election day, when one of these boats was in port. I have had two affidavits sent to me which I propose reading. The first is by Alexander Campbell and is as follows:

County of Simcoe, and Province of Ontario.

I, Alexander Campbell, of the village of Port McNicoll, in the county of Simcoe, and the province of Ontario, make oath and say:

That I am 28 years of age, single, and was born in Harris, Invernesshire, Scotland.

That I am employed as a sailor on the SS. Keewatin sailing between Port McNicoll and Fort William.

That I have been in Canada since May, 1927, spent one year in Owen Sound, coming to Port McNicoll in 1928, and have resided continuously in Port McNicoll ever since.

That I took a vacation from December 12, 1929, to April 16, 1930, to Harris, Scotland. The previous winter I spent in Port McNicoll, making my home with Bertram Scott, having no other home in Canada.

That on July 28, 1930, I called at the polling booth in Port McNicoll at 2 p.m. and my name not being on the voters' list I made application for ballot but was refused by the district returning officer. I returned again at 3 p.m. and took the oath of residence but still the ballot was refused me even with my late landlord to swear to the accuracy of my statement as to residence and on the order of district returning officer Daly I was placed under arrest by the polling booth constable I. Bosley. On Mr. Wm. Finlayson assuming responsibility for my appearance when requested I was released.

That I have heard nothing further about the matter or why I was not allowed to vote after taking the oath of residence.

That the above statement is true, So Help me God.

Sworn before me at Port McNicoll, in the county of Simcoe, and province of Ontario, this 7th day of October, 1930.

Alexander Campbell.

Jas. C. Young,
Notary Public.

The second affidavit is by Fred B. Chidwick and is in these terms:

County of Simcoe, and province of Ontario.

I, Frederick Benjiman Chidwick, of the village of Port McNicoll, in the county of Simcoe, and the province of Ontario, make oath and say:

That I am 24 years of age, single, and was born in London, England.

That I am employed as a waiter on the SS. Keewatin, sailing between Port McNicoll and Fort William.

That I have resided in Canada since 1922, with the exception of one year vacation in England during 1925.

That I farmed in Shelburne for 15 months prior to shipping on the SS. Alberta in September, 1924, went to England in 1925, returned to Canada in 1926 and shipped on the SS. Assiniboia. In 1927 I shipped on the SS. Keewatin and I have remained a member of the stewards crew through the intervening years.

That during the closed season or winter months I spend some time travelling and visiting other cities but I always consider Port McNicoll my home as I have none other.

That at 10 a.m. on July 28, 1930, I went to the polling place in Port McNicoll, and my name not being on the voters' list I demanded a ballot which was refused me by the district returning officer Daly. I went back twice that afternoon and was finally told that if I could swear to my residence I would be given a ballot. I took the oath but ballot was withheld from me on the advice of Mr. Harvie, a lawyer from Orillia who swore information against me accusing me of perjury. At the instigation of district returning officer Daly I was placed under arrest by the constable I. Bosley. I was released after Mr. McCormick, general foreman of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Port McNicoll who vouched with Dr. McPhee, for my eligibility to vote became responsible for my appearance to answer the charge preferred against me.

That up to the present time I have heard nothing further about the matter or why I was deprived of exercising my franchise.

That the above statement is true, so help me God.

Fred B. Chidwick.

Sworn before me at Port McNicoll, in the county of Simcoe, and in the province of Ontario, this 7th day of October, 1930.

The prosecution of these men was never proceeded with; it was never intended that it should be proceeded with. The idea was to deprive them of their votes, and I want to know if the Dominion Elections Act can be played with in this manner so that honest men are deprived of their votes. I understand that under the common law of England, if a voter is wrongfully refused a ballot the deputy returning officer is liable to damages up to £200, but in Canada, under circumstances such as I have outlined, there is no such responsibility on the deputy returning officer, because our act specially protects him in these circumstances. It says:

Any resident of a rural polling division may vote notwithstanding that his name has been altogether omitted from the list of voters. In any such case the voter must take the oath E on the card, and he must also be vouched for upon oath by some other resident of the polling division whose name is on the voters' list.

Then it concludes as follows:

Thereupon the particulars of the voter whose name was omitted from the voters' list will be added to it with the word "sworn" following, and the voter must be given a ballot unless he is immediately proceeded against for perjury; the deputy returning officer has no discretion to refuse the voter a ballot unless a charge is forthwith laid before him.

That is the case here. The English common law gives a man some remedy, on the principle that no wrong can exist without a remedy, but in Canada our elections act takes away from the voter that right. No doubt you are familiar, Mr. Speaker, with that passage from the Bible which says:

Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone?

These Canadians asked of their country the right to vote, and what happened? They were arrested. They had a grievance, and they have asked me to bring it before parliament. I have done so, and I leave in the hands of parliament the matter of providing a remedy or affording redress.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise not to oppose the motion, because I can see no objection to its being passed, but with the idea that a word or two might well be said to relieve misapprehension as to where responsibility, if any, lies for shortcomings in the act or its administration. If the facts are —as I am sure they are—as my hon. friend (Mr. Thompson) has represented, it would appear that men who were entitled to vote were prevented from doing so, and that certainly the law either as drafted or as administered should be changed in order to make it quite certain that every citizen shall have the first right of a citizen, namely, to participate in the elections.

The act under which the elections take place is the "act respecting the election of members of the House of Commons and the electoral franchise," which is cited as the Dominion Elections Act, 1920. That will make clear to my hon. friend and his friends the time at which the elections act was drafted in its present form. As I recall it, the act was revised considerably at the time the Union government was in office.

Mr. BENNETT: We have been revising it these last two or three years.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There have been some revisions, but I do not think they have touched the essential points brought up in the remarks of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat.

The fact I would like to make clear is this, that the elections act itself, in the main, assumed the form in which it now appears as a result of the important revision which took place in 1920. Under the act as revised, the business of elections is in the hands of the chief electoral officer, who is an officer of the House of Commons and appointed by this House of Commons. The electoral officer appointed at the time the act was revised was Mr. Oliver Mowat Biggar, whose name has been mentioned by my hon. friend as the legal adviser of the present chief electoral officer. Colonel Biggar was the first chief electoral officer to administer this act as revised, and Colonel Biggar was appointed as a result of a conference, if I remember aright, between the present Minister of Justice and myself, acting together and speaking for the two sides of the house, with a view to securing unanimity with regard to the person who should be chosen as chief electoral officer. All political parties, as a matter of fact, were agreed that Colonel Biggar, having had very much to do with the preparation of the act itself, would be the best possible person to be appointed as chief electoral officer. Mr. Castonguay was appointed assistant electoral officer, and when Colonel Biggar resigned the position, desiring to leave the public service altogether to take up the practice of his profession independently, Mr. Castonguay was by resolution of this house promoted to the position of chief electoral officer.

When the last elections took place the government then in office thought it would be advisable to reassociate Colonel Biggar in some way, if that were at all possible, with the then chief electoral officer, Colonel Biggar being the best informed of any person in the Dominion with respect to the act and its various provisions, and what should be done with regard to any matters which might come up under its provisions in the course of an election.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Will the right hon. gentleman allow me? Is he attempting to state the reason why Colonel Biggar was made counsel to the chief electoral officer? Does he not know that it was the consensus of opinion of the special committee dealing with the elections act last year and the year before that Mr. Castonguay was not qualified to carry out the provisions of the act?

An hon. MEMBER: Where do you get that?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I know, because I was there.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend is taking a very unfair advantage of any privilege he may have as a member of parliament to attack a member of the civil service who is not here in a position to defend himself.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am not doing anything that I did not do to Mr. Castonguay's face last year and the year before, in the committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is a great deal of difference between saying something to a man's face when he is in a position to reply, and taking advantage of the privilege which one has as a member of parliament to make statements which I submit should not be made by any hon. member, seeing that they constitute an attack upon a member of the civil service, who is also an officer of this House of Commons but who is not in a position in any way to defend himself. However, the point is quite clear, that Mr. Castonguay came to the office of chief electoral officer by promotion and by unanimous resolution of this house, having been assistant to Colonel Biggar when Colonel Biggar was chief electoral officer, and that he had as legal adviser, Colonel Biggar who was in a better position to advise on matters respecting the elections act than any other individual.

Now with respect to this case at Port McNicoll which has been referred to, the hon. member has read telegrams which would indicate that Mr. Castonguay, the chief electoral officer, had referred the specific questions at issue to Colonel Biggar for his advice, and that he secured and acted upon the advice of Colonel Biggar, so I assume no better course possibly could have been taken. If the advice was not sound, that is a matter for discussion and might well be brought up when the elections act is being considered, but I can think of no one who would be in a better position to advise soundly on any matter pertaining to the elections act than Colonel Biggar, not only from the circumstance that he, more than any other single person, had to do with its drafting, and himself had acted as chief electoral officer, but also because he is a very eminent counsel.

Mr. BENNETT: It is difficult to understand his advice.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend says it is difficult to understand his advice. That possibly may be so; that is a matter which I would prefer that lawyers settle among themselves, but what I do submit is that with respect to the course taken by the chief electoral officer, it is not open to criticism. He took the precaution to consult Colonel Biggar, and then in the matter acted upon his advice.

The act, as I have said, was passed in 1920 and the pertinent provisions with regard to the chief electoral officer are as follows:

> The chief electoral officer shall be appointed by resolution of the House of Commons—

That was done with respect to both electoral officers whose names have been mentioned. Then subsection (b) provides that he, the electoral officer, shall:

> exercise general direction and supervision over the administrative conduct of elections with a view to ensuring the fairness and impartiality of all election officers and compliance with the provisions of this act;
> (c) report to the House of Commons, through the Speaker, after an election, any matters arising in the course of the election an account of which ought, in his judgment, to be submitted to the House of Commons.

The point I wish to make clear in this connection is that parliament itself has sought to remove and has removed from the possible control of any political party or any government in office the administration of the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. BENNETT: Was this point referred to? I cannot remember, looking through the report, that the chief electoral officer mentioned this point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know of its having been mentioned, but it seems to me that the particular matter that has been brought up to-day is one that properly would come within the kind of report which the chief electoral officer might be expected to make to the Speaker of the House of Commons. As to the question whether or not this matter was brought by the chief electoral officer to the attention of His Honour the Speaker, I would point to another section of the act which touches specifically upon the rights of parties concerned as respects references to be made to the Speaker by the chief electoral officer. Section 75 reads:

> The chief electoral officer shall, after each election, make a report to the Speaker of the House of Commons, suggesting what, if any, amendments are in his opinion desirable for the more convenient administration of the law, and each candidate and the agent of each candidate shall have the right to send written statements to the chief electoral officer suggesting such changes and improvements in the law as to such person may deem desirable, and to make written complaint of the conduct of any officer employed in such election.
> Any such statements and complaints shall be transmitted by the chief electoral officer to the said Speaker, and they shall, together with the report of the chief electoral officer, be forthwith submitted by the said Speaker to the House of Commons if parliament is then sitting, and if not, within fifteen days after the opening of the next session of parliament.

I do not know whether my hon. friend who has just spoken did forward a written statement to the chief electoral officer, suggesting such changes and improvements in the law as to him seemed desirable, and making a written complaint of the conduct of the officer employed in the election. That, I submit, is a step which he would not only have been justified in taking but which he should have taken in a matter of this kind, because as a member of parliament he is interested, as he has shown this afternoon, in bringing to the attention of parliament any deficiencies that exist in the law and in making suggestions as to possible remedies. I am inclined to think that my hon. friend's reason for waiting to bring up the matter in the form in which he has introduced it this afternoon has been due mainly to his desire to make the speech which he has made, and which he has made I think in a very moderate and acceptable way. So far as the remedy to meet such a situation is concerned, the act itself provides, as I now read, that a member of parliament or a candidate may bring to the attention of the chief electoral officer, with a view to having it submitted to His Honour the Speaker, any defect in the law of a character such as has been mentioned to-day. Had that course been pursued, we should not have had to wait until the 25th of May to have knowledge of what took place at Port McNicoll; it would have been the duty of His Honour the Speaker to report the matter at the opening of the house.

I see no reason why the request of my hon. friend for all the information should not be complied with; but I do not think except for the desired publicity there is any reason why he should have made the speech he made this afternoon. In view of what has been said I do see strong reason why just what the act provides should be made clear, lest an inference be drawn from my hon. friend's remarks that the government which was in office at the time of the election was in any way responsible for any defect or deficiency in the law. The act itself was passed by a previous administration, and the chief electoral officer was an officer of the House of Commons, chosen by unanimous resolution of the house. He has sole control of the administration of the act; and, in exercising his functions, he pursued the wisest and best course and was governed by the wisest and best advice which was obtainable. If, in spite of that, someone seems to have been deprived of the right of voting, then it does seem that, obviously, when the act comes to be amended, some remedy should be provided to meet a situation such as that which has been described. And if there are cases of that character, the sooner the act is amended in that particular, the better.

Mr. THOMPSON (Simcoe): What remedy would my hon. friend suggest for the men who were arrested?

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): The inference which I drew from the statement made to the house by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Thompson) was that something was seriously wrong in regard to the votes of these ninety men at Port McNicoll during the last election, and I believe it is the duty of the House of Commons in a case like this to endeavour to fix the blame—because blame there was somewhere. Either, Colonel Biggar, the legal adviser of the chief electoral officer, was not fully informed, or he was misinformed. I cannot conceive of his giving the advice which he did give if the facts were as related by the hon. member for East Simcoe to-day—and I believe the facts were fairly related to the house. Ninety men have as a result been deprived of their votes, and a very serious situation has arisen in regard to that poll.

It would appear that certain information passed from the constituency of East Simcoe to the chief electoral officer, of which we are not aware, because it is certain that information went to the constituency of East Simcoe to have warrants issued, ready to apprehend any person of these ninety who should appear and ask for a ballot, or seek to vote. And the two residents of Port McNicoll who did appear at the polling place and who demanded the right to take the oath and vote were immediately arrested. The warrants were there. The case had been prearranged under someone's authority and instructions, and it was only on the intercession of the Hon. William Finlayson, a member of the Ontario government, that these persons were subsequently released. It looks to me as though there were more in this case than appears on the surface.

We have a tribunal in this house specially charged with the investigation of matters of this kind when they are referred to it; that is, the standing committee of the House of Commons with respect to privileges and elections. I do not know that it would be very much satisfaction to my hon. friend from East Simcoe or to the ninety men who were deprived of the right to exercise their franchise on the 28th day of July last, if the hon. member for East Simcoe should merely write a letter to the chief electoral officer, suggesting some amendment in the law. If a wrong has been done it is our duty to investigate it. On the face of it, I am inclined to think that some kind of conspiracy has existed to deprive these particular men of their votes on election day. My suggestion to my right hon. friend and to the house is that the motion carry, that the papers be produced, and that if they bear out in any way the case which has been made by the hon. member for East Simcoe the matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections in order that a thorough investigation may be made.

Motion agreed to.

MARINE INSURANCE

FEDERAL PROVISION FOR CANADIAN MARINERS ON GREAT LAKES FROM NOVEMBER 1 TO END OF NAVIGATION

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City) moved:

That the continuation of navigation after November 1st, on the great lakes has taken a great toll from the lives of our mariners and while this dangerous period of navigation is continued as a national necessity and is yearly undertaken by a courageous marine body, this house deems it the duty of the federal government to provide insurance for each mariner on Canadian boats from November 1st, to the end of navigation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, to any hon. member who represents a constituency the residents of which are largely mariners this motion will be of interest and should receive sympathy. From the first reading of the motion it might appear to be out of order in that it asks the federal government to provide insurance, but if the house will bear patiently with my remarks I hope to show that it is not out of order on that ground. It might appear also to be out of order because of possible interference with the privileges and rights of the provinces, but I hope to be able to show that this is not a provincial matter.

The period of navigation referred to in this motion is a very dangerous one on the great lakes. I think it was in the year 1902 that a well-known steamer, the Bannockburn, disappeared with all on board. No information respecting that disaster has been obtained up to the present time. Twenty-two lives were lost, mostly men from the city of Kingston. Other disasters have since occurred, practically all during this dangerous period. Other steamships cease to operate on or about November 1, but these boats engaged in the transport of grain carry on later than that. The carrying of grain is a national necessity and is therefore a matter of concern to the federal parliament.

Certain measures have been adopted which have effected considerable improvement with respect to this matter. I am proud to say that the province of Ontario has dealt with it most sympathetically. The compensation act of Ontario contains this clause:

Where an accident happens out of Ontario on a steamboat, ship or vessel or on a railway and the workman is a resident of Ontario and the work or service rendered by him is required to be performed both within and without Ontario, the workman or his dependents shall be entitled to compensation under this part as if the accident had happened in Ontario.

In the summary on compensation issued by the Labour department in January, 1931, the following reference is made to this legislation:

The Ontario and Manitoba acts include within their scope the operation of steam vessels and works for the purposes of the business of a navigation company and all other navigation, towing, operation of vessels and marine wrecking, but in Ontario the employer in these industries is individually liable.

My intention in introducing this motion is to bring to the attention of the house and of whatever department it may pertain to—I am not sure what department will be affected—the fact that this matter should be placed beyond any doubt. We have listened to-day to a discussion on what residence means, and if the same doubt exists in regard to the payment of compensation to mariners or their dependents, it would be impossible for them to go into court and testify as to their rights.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has the hon. member any information with regard to whether or not other provinces pay such compensation?

Mr. ROSS: That is one of the reasons for my bringing up this motion. I know no decision can be given to-day, but the matter should be discussed in order that we may obtain information as to how the other provinces are treating this matter. Last year the province of Quebec accepted the same standards as those applying in the province of Ontario, at least I have been so informed, but many of these steamship companies have their headquarters in other parts of the Dominion and for the sake of the mariners who are engaged in this hazardous work at the dangerous period referred to, there should be no doubt as to where they stand in regard to the payment of compensation when disasters occur.

This matter is or can be made a federal one. The committee on industrial and international relations brought down in 1926 a ruling which still stands, as follows:

Local works and undertakings, other than such as are of the following classes (a) lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs, and other works and undertakings connecting a province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the province; (b) lines of steamships between the provinces and any British or foreign country, such works as although wholly situated within the province, are before or after their execution, declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or to the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

So that the matter can be made a federal one, and I think those of us who represent those ports on the great lakes where so much suffering has been caused in the past by marine disasters will take a sympathetic view of the question and will place it in the hands of some committee or some department of the house where action may be taken so that there may no longer be any doubt with respect to it.

A short time ago the house was sympathetic to a former motion of mine, and I am sure the present motion will command the same sympathy from all parts of the house, having regard to the fact that many constituencies, town and ports that may be concerned are represented here. It may be that some hon. member may have in his constituency a man whose residence may be disputed, but who either has lost his life or may yet lose his life in carrying on this important work, and whose dependents may receive compensation or insurance on that account.

Mr. YOUNG: Farmers engaged in the business to which my hon. friend refers—that is, transporting grain in the winter, but transporting it across the prairies—have been overtaken by a snowstorm and lost their way, and their remains have later been found under a snowdrift. Would my hon. friend be willing to extend insurance to those men also?

Mr. ROSS: I suppose in such a case the wheat belongs to the farmer. The ruling has already been given that if a man owns any part of the boat which goes down, he cannot claim compensation. Even with the law as it is at the present time, if a man takes wheat on a steamboat, the ruling would be against the man who owned the wheat.

Mr. YOUNG: What about the farmer's hired man?

Mr. ROSS: I do not think the hon. member is at all backward about introducing legislation and looking after it. If he will attend to that, I am attending to this.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Do I understand that these mariners are navigating at their own risk?

Mr. ROSS: No, but after November, the insurance rates on boats are very greatly increased. I may be asked why I do not bring in a motion requiring the owners of steamboats to provide this compensation. I have no power to do this with regard to owners of steamboats. The steamboat is insured; the grain is insured; everything is insured except the human life involved in the transportation. We have no power to go after the steamboat companies unless the government can take this action, and that is why I am bringing the matter to the attention of the federal government.

Mr. BROWN: Under the practice that prevails can the seamen take out insurance themselves?

Mr. ROSS: The captains, mates and so forth do, but the deckhands do not.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Although representing a constituency which, since it is far from the ports, contains no considerable number of mariners, I am sympathetically interested in this motion. I do represent a constituency, however, which has to do largely with grain growing and grain shipping, and to us every day of navigation at the end of the season is a matter of deep concern. It is important to us, and I think to the country, that the shipment of grain should be carried on until the very last possible moment, and we realize quite well that during the last days of navigation before the season closes there must of necessity be much danger to the men engaged in that work. Without going into the matter at length, I wish to say merely this: with regard to the constitutional aspect I am not certain where the onus of responsibility should lie. I am not sure just how this should be done, but in the national interest, in the interest not only of those who carry the grain, but of those who are anxious to see that grain carried until as late in the year as possible, I am convinced that this matter should be given most sympathetic attention. Certainly we should consider whether it is possible for parliament to see to it that those who imperil their lives in a national service of this kind should at least be secured so far as they can be, by some form of insurance. If it cannot be done privately; if it is not the duty of the province, then I for one, should be glad to see the federal government and parliament take the matter into consideration, and if possible accede to some measure such as that suggested in the resolution.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): I do not feel at all competent to discuss this matter, but I should like to say that I am certainly in sympathy with the resolution of the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross).

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I think we ought to be very grateful to the hon. member for Kingston for having introduced this motion. The problem involved is one that has been of great concern, not merely to the men engaged in the lake trade but to those also on the Atlantic and the Pacific. There does not seem to be any clear understanding as to how far the provincial law applies. I have not gone into the matter from a strictly legal standpoint, but I know both the seamen themselves and the masters are very much in doubt as to how far workmen can claim compensation for accidents that may happen. Further than that, sometimes a boat may sail from Montreal and arrive at Vancouver. It is not very clear whether the Quebec authorities are responsible or not. Then again, there is the question of where the boat is registered and what is the home port. These are complicated matters, and some authority ought to decide as to just where the responsibility lies, thus enabling the seamen to obtain compensation.

May I call the attention of the house to the fact that in the bill introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) providing for certain amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, there is a clause dealing with this matter and an attempt to secure action. The clause reads:

> Every member of the crew of all such ships shall be entitled to the benefits of and shall be subject to the provisions of the workmen's compensation act in effect in the province of Canada in which the ship is registered.

Whether or not that is the best way of reaching the result aimed at, I do not know. Whether or not that clause is intra vires, I am not quite certain, but something should be done, and I hope the suggestion of the mover will be carried out and that before long we may have definite action in regard to the matter.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I am not very much impressed with some of the features of this resolution. In the first place, the hon. member confines it to the great lakes. Why confine it to the great lakes? If the hon. gentleman wishes to safeguard the lives of our mariners, why not, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) suggested, adopt the proposal of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) and make it applicable to all our sailors? Next the hon. member recites that navigation in the winter months takes a great toll from the lives of our mariners, and what is his remedy? To pay their widows money. Would it not be better to endeavour to save the lives of the mariners? That can readily be done, as was suggested to this house some years ago, by the government fixing a date on which navigation on the great lakes would close in the fall. Would it not be better to prevent this heavy toll of life than to pay the widows of those who lose their lives? Human greed will always take a risk, with somebody else's life, and have boats laden with grain go out on the great lakes after it has ceased to be safe for them to do so owing to the weather, the make of the boat perhaps, and the way she is loaded. I would suggest that it would be more to the point if we safeguarded not the money point of view, but the lives of our mariners by giving power to this government to proclaim, after due investigation a date in the fall on which navigation must close. By such a step this great toll of lives would be, at least to some considerable extent, reduced.

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): This is a humanitarian measure, I will admit, but we cannot make laws merely out of pure sympathy for men who might be endangered. If we are going to insure the life of every man who is engaged in a useful and hazardous occupation, I would like to know where we are going to stop. If we are going to do that, a very good case could be made out for fifty per cent of the citizens of this country who are engaged in active work. It seems to me that we are on solid ground when we say that every industry should carry its own risk. I believe in insurance for these men, but let the industry itself carry it. If you are going to unload everything on to the federal government, who in the end will have to pay for it all? The primary producer, the man you cannot and never do anything for. I am opposed to the resolution.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): This matter touches the question of insurance, and I suppose it is expected that the Department of Finance will at least say something about it. I for once—I almost fancy I may be wrong—find myself at least in partial agreement with the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) when he says that you cannot unload all the responsibility upon the federal government. The question of contract is a matter of property and civil rights and belongs to the province. The question of shipping contracts is governed by the Canada Shipping Act, which in part is a copy of the British Shipping Act. The contracts of sailors are to be found, in the parlance of the statute, in what are called articles; that is, a crew signs articles, or it does not sign, to serve on a ship. If they sign articles, it is then a contract, certain terms of which are fixed by law. It is upon the articles they sign that the sailors rely so far as their rights are concerned, whether on the great lakes or elsewhere. There are, however, special provisions with respect to inland navigation. That contract being governed in part by federal legislation, it would seem to me that the question of compensation must be regulated by this parliament, at least in part, and the application of the compensation acts of the various provinces to those who are subject to the risks and hazards of the sea must be determined by this parliament taking such action as would make those compensation acts applicable and provide for the compensation that is to be paid; in other words, the owners of the ships must make their contributions to the fund out of which compensation is paid by the province to employees of various kinds throughout the Dominion. I cannot think that it is possible to place relatively a few of our population in a position where the hazard which they incur must be insured against by the Dominion. I cannot think that that is any part of the functions of this country at the moment. I cannot think that it was ever intended by anybody familiar with our institutions that this country, as a country, should become responsible for the hazards incident to the risks of those who go down to the sea in ships and do business upon the great waters.

An hon. MEMBER: On inland waters.

Mr. BENNETT: Risks of course are incurred on other waters than inland waters, and the fact that ships have been lost on the great lakes is only a reminder to us that a brand new ship of the White Star line left a great port in England for the United States and was never heard of again. Ships are being lost all the time, even with the wireless. The Vestris was lost not long ago, with the loss of life of many of her passengers and crew. My memory is that there is some provision in Great Britain in their compensation act to take care of those who are articled on ships, and the shipping interests pay into the compensation fund, as the hon. member for Weyburn has suggested they should do in this country; I have not looked into it recently, and I am not speaking therefore with any degree of certainty with respect to it. While every instinct of humanity impels one to desire that the provisions which this motion suggests for insurance should be made, I am sure that the hon. member for Kingston city (Mr. Ross) cannot expect this house to adopt a motion that selects from a large body of our citizenship a few for special consideration, leaving out, for instance, those who are traversing the dangerous waters at times of the Atlantic and Pacific. Anyone who realizes the danger of making shore in foggy weather on the Atlantic or the dangers of navigation at certain times north of Cape Flattery on the Pacific, will realize that the dangers on the waters of the great lakes are not greater than they are elsewhere. While I am of the opinion that when the Merchant Shipping Act is revised, as it must be here ultimately after the statute of Westminster is passed, it will be competent for this parliament to impose conditions to be incorporated in ships' articles that would necessitate insurance being carried by the owners of the ships on the lives of the seamen on the boats, it would not be right or fair to impose upon the taxpayers of Canada as a whole the burden of the duty, as it is here alleged to be, of providing insurance for every mariner on Canadian boats from November first to the end of navigation. I trust the hon. member will not force the motion to a division for to do so would be to ask us to assume as a duty a responsibility which in my judgment cannot properly be placed on the federal authority, although the federal authority in conjunction with the provincial authorities may be able to work out a system by which the contributions by those concerned will be such as will enable compensation to be paid to survivors on the same terms as though the seamen came under the compensation acts applying to industry generally; in other words, that shipping may be treated as a branch of industry for compensation purposes. I do not think I can usefully add more than that to the discussion.

Mr. ROSS: I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has struck the nail on the head—

Mr. HEPBURN: He has struck you on the head.

Mr. ROSS: I am glad to see the leader of the provincial Liberal party in the house, and I hope that he will carry this proposal a step further along the lines suggested by the Prime Minister. I am quite satisfied that, as the Prime Minister has said, this is a matter concerning both the provincial and federal authorities. Now that we have that pronouncement I think it will help in the settlement of this question. Like the Prime Minister, I, too, agree with the member for Weyburn (Mr. Young)—God forgive me.

Mr. YOUNG: I will.

Mr. ROSS: The first step towards bringing about what we are striving for is to set a date for the closing of navigation. But what Prime Minister will dare do that in the face of this great question of wheat transportation? None will. This question has been before us for years, and no Prime Minister yet has been prepared to advise such a step. As the Prime Minister has said, certain shipping interests do voluntarily set a date when in the interests of their seamen they lay up their ships.

Mr. BENNETT: And they set that date when the season opens.

Mr. ROSS: Yes. But because they do so other shipping interests plead it as an excuse for continuing their ships in commission, stating they must do so to meet a national necessity.

An hon. MEMBER: It is a matter of pure greed.

Mr. ROSS: Yes, but my hon. friend's opinion will not settle the matter. We feel that these shipping companies should contribute to an insurance fund, but as long as the law remains in its present form we may be certain that the matter of residence and every other possible objection will be raised by the shipping companies.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. ROSS: I will not promise to answer it.

Mr. POULIOT: I may tell him I am in sympathy with his resolution. But would it not be possible for him to take steps to amend the criminal code and so achieve the purpose that he has in view?

Mr. ROSS: Mr. Speaker, I am accepting the word of the Prime Minister that this matter really can be settled by an amendment of the shipping act. We ask that that amendment shall be made as soon as the other question that he referred to has been settled. I am glad to accept the advice of the Prime Minister, for I regard what he has said this afternoon as a distinct advance towards realizing the object of this resolution.

Motion withdrawn.

A CANADIAN FLAG

PROPOSAL FOR ADOPTION OF FLAG SYMBOLIC OF CANADA AND HER PARTNERSHIP IN BRITISH EMPIRE

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, a special committee be appointed for the purpose of considering the advisability of adopting a Canadian flag, representing Canada as a whole, and in which the British flag shall occupy the position of honour, thus symbolizing the Dominion as an equality partner in the commonwealth of British nations.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the outset may I thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) for the statement he made last Friday to the effect that one more day would be allowed for private members to discuss certain resolutions. I understand the house is adjourning to-night at six o'clock, and in view of the Prime Minister's statement, perhaps at the close of my remarks he will advise the house that the three hours we are going to lose to-night will be made good some other day, in order that hon. members may have an opportunity to express their views on what I think is as important a resolution as any that has ever been brought before this house.

Now, I trust that this resolution will appeal to all hon. members. I should like to see those who sit behind the right hon. Prime Minister give expression to their views. I would not be afraid of doing so if I were one of his supporters. Being afraid gets you nowhere—nowhere in life or in any other place. I should also like to see the members of the Labour party, the Farmers' party and the Liberal party, making up His Majesty's loyal opposition, express their opinions on this subject. I hope the discussion will be on a high plane, that it will be reasoned and logical throughout; not parochial nor provincial, but national and Imperial. I hope that the opinions expressed will not be those of impatience but of patience; not illogical but logical; not impractical but practical; not superheated or jingoistic and noisy, but calm, courageous and dignified. If—

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): May I call the hon. gentleman's attention to resolution No. 30, standing in the name of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne), that the official name of Canada be changed from "Dominion of Canada" to that of "Kingdom of Canada." I am afraid that if we pass that resolution we shall be obliged to change the Canadian flag again.

Mr. McINTOSH: Not necessarily. Now, if our deliberations are loyal and patriotic they will harmonize with the splendid history of the empire, and we, Canadians and Britishers, always venerate our great national, political, imperial and religious heritage. Realizing the great contributions to civilization that have been made by the British Empire, we shall by sane and sensible advocacy safeguard, unify, extend and symbolize the great ideas for which the British Empire stands—here in Canada our national home.

The people of the Dominion from one ocean to the other are watching this debate. All loyal and patriotic Canadians will be anxious to learn the reception of this resolution at the hands of hon. members and the Prime Minister. This being Victoria or Empire day, it is perhaps the most fitting day for a discussion of such a resolution; the discussion is also appropriate in view of the fact that this is the first regular session of the seventeenth parliament of Canada. On this remembrance day, when we should remember the undying splendours and imperishable legacies handed down to us from the Victorian era; when we should remember our responsibilities and our duties to Canada and the empire, and when we should rededicate and reconsecrate ourselves to that continuous labour for freedom, without which freedom is not won, it seems to me the time for our discussion is rather short, but that with a further discussion permitted later on we may be able to go into the subject more fully.

Now, on this day of empire, there are certain calls that come to us, calls of love for the God of nations, honour to the king, obedience to the law, advancement of the highest interests of the empire in peace and war, the cherishing of patriotism, the paying of scrupulous regard to the rights of other nations, the mastery of the principles of citizenship, the following of duty, the acquiring of knowledge, the practice of discipline, the work for others and the considering of the poor and afflicted. These are the commands that come to us on this empire day, the watchwords of which are responsibility, duty, sympathy and self-sacrifice.

With regard to the resolution, Mr. Speaker, which stands in my name on the order paper, might I say that it was inspired by my own national conception of Canada, and that it was not inspired by any province making up Canada. It did not come from Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick or Quebec or Ontario or Saskatchewan, or any other province making up this Dominion.

An hon. MEMBER: What about Winnipeg?

Mr. McINTOSH: Or from Winnipeg either. It will be seen that the resolution is made up of five major parts. First, the opinion of the house is required on this important resolution; second, a special committee should be appointed to deal with the question, just as the government deals with other resolutions, not only with regard to government measures but also coming from private members; third, the advisability of adopting a Canadian flag; fourth, choosing a suitable symbol to stand for Canada in the flag, and fifth, the placing of the union jack in the union or position of honour to indicate our allegiance to the British crown. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that eighty or ninety per cent of the people of Canada are favourable to this action, and the opposition that comes to this progressive move on the part of the Dominion comes only from a few noisy individuals and a few noisy organizations. The same noisy individuals and organizations will fight us if we decide to amend our constitution; they will fight us as they have fought us in days gone by in the evolution of government, and we may expect their opposition in days to come in any progressive step in the direction of adopting a national flag for Canada, but I do not think we need pay very much attention to opposition of that kind. I believe this flag should represent Canada as a political unit, made up of nine provinces reaching from sea to sea, with the union jack occupying the position of honour —that is the vital position; that is the position of union in that flag, thereby showing the cooperation of Canada with the motherland in the building up of our empire and in making it more permanent than ever.

This being the case, Mr. Speaker, it might be well to say a few words on the Dominion of Canada, with which this resolution is concerned in the way of a national flag. Canada has been defined as consisting of three thousand miles of territory made up of one thousand miles of inland lake and river and sea, plus one thousand miles of boundless prairie, plus one thousand miles of mountain. That is the land from the border northward which is being extended day by day; that is the land for which we want a Canadian flag. Again, Canada has been defined as a mighty potential giant, the head of which rests upon the broad Pacific, whose arms make up the Rockies and the Selkirks, whose body is the great plains of the west and whose limbs are the two great water systems, the St. Lawrence and Hudson bay. Our duty, as Canadians, is to develop and make out of that giant on the northern shoulder of this continent one of the great nations of the world. And we will do it.

What do the poets say about this great Dominion, this young giant, this Canada, our native land? Poets have a habit of saying a thing and saying it well. Here is what Charles G. D. Roberts, one of our leading poets in the maritimes, says:

O Child of Nations, giant-limbed,
Who stand'st among the nations now
Unheeded, unadored, unhymned,
With unanointed brow,—

The Saxon force, the Celtic fire,
These are thy manhood's heritage!
Why rest with babes and slaves? Seek higher
The place of race and age.

O Falterer, let thy past convince
Thy future,—all the growth, the gain,
The fame since Cartier knew thee, since
Thy shores beheld Champlain!

Montcalm and Wolfe! Wolfe and Montcalm!
Quebec, thy storied citadel
Attests in burning song and psalm
How here thy heroes fell!

Then in rising splendour the last verse:

But thou, my country, dream not thou!
Wake, and behold how night is done,—
How on thy breast, and o'er thy brow,
Bursts the uprising sun!

The uprising sun of freedom and of nationhood. Surely in this Canada of the present day we ought to have a flag, of a national and a Canadian nature, that will symbolize our Dominion throughout the world. Surely! Then what does Pauline Johnson say about Canada? Here are a few lines by Pauline Johnson:

CANADA
(Acrostic)

C rown of her, young Vancouver; crest of her, old Quebec;
A tlantic and far Pacific sweeping her, keel to deck.
N orth of her, ice and arctics; southward a rival's stealth;
A loft, her Empire's pennant; below, her nation's wealth,
D aughter of men and markets, bearing within her hold,
A ppraised at highest value, cargoes of grain and gold.

Then again Pauline Johnson shows the association of Canada with the empire, in her poem entitled "Canadian Born":

We first saw light in Canada, the land beloved of God;
We are the pulse of Canada, its marrow and its blood:
And we, the men of Canada, can face the world and brag
That we were born in Canada beneath the British flag.

And lastly Grant Balfour says—and these lines are also beautiful, I think:

Dominion of the North, how vast;
Unequalled in the distant past
By proud imperial Rome.
The sister zones o'er thee unrolled
Two giant belts of white and gold
Fair Canada, my home.

It is for this fair Canada, my home, that I am not afraid to stand up this afternoon and tell the members of this house and the people of Canada that the time has arrived when we should, in association with the other self-governing units of the empire, have a typical national or Canadian flag.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me come to the imperial conferences of 1926, 1929 and 1930. At the imperial conference of 1926 a certain amount of splendid work, imperially and nationally, was accomplished, and the work of that conference and the conference of 1929 has been practically endorsed by the conference of 1930. This being the case, it might be well for us to consider for a moment just what that means. In the summary of the proceedings of the conference of 1926 we have the following statement:

> There is, however, one most important element in it which, from a strictly constitutional point of view, has now, as regards all vital matters, reached its full development—we refer to the group of self-governing communities composed of Great Britain and the Dominions.
> Their position and mutual relation may be readily defined. They are autonomous communities within the British Empire, equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs, though united by a common allegiance to the crown, and freely associated as members of the British Commonwealth of Nations.

Further on the statement is made:

> And though every Dominion is now, and must always remain, the sole judge of the nature and extent of its cooperation, no common cause will, in our opinion, be thereby imperilled.

In other words, the day has arrived in the history of the empire when there is no longer force or compulsion; and if there is any appearance of compulsion it is only in form and not in fact or reality.

This empire of ours is, of course, the greatest the world has ever seen. It is not a centralized empire; constitutionally it is rather a decentralized one. And since it is decentralized it would, of course, be impossible to have what we might call a federation of the empire because of the differences in characteristics, the varying stages of evolution, the wide spaces geographically dividing one section from another, and our different histories. The pathway to empire greatness, empire solidarity and empire permanency that of self-government or autonomy, founded on positive and not on negative ideals, is therefore the pathway to greatness and security.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that free cooperation and free institutions are the life blood of the empire. Free cooperation is the instrument which makes possible the functioning of its different parts, and the high objectives ever before the empire, of peace, prosperity and security, will most assuredly lead us into greater epochs than we have known in the past. Since there is an entire absence of compulsion in empire building, it means that from now on the empire must adjust itself to new conditions, and new conditions must become subordinate to new ideals.

That brings me to the question of the Union Jack, the flag of the United Kingdom—in other words, the red, white and blue, which signify all that is brave, pure and true, and what it symbolizes in the life of the empire. The Union Jack is the flag of the United Kingdom. It is made up of three crosses, St. George's, St. Andrew's and St. Patrick's, eight blue triangles plus white borders, all of which is fraught with sacred meaning to the citizens of the empire.

Now, as regards these patron saints, whose lives typify great sacrifice, it might be well to realize just what the flag has stood for in the past. The flag in history has stood for the following:

The flag of the great union of Scotland and England up to 1603, and since 1707 and 1801—the Union Jack, floated on high when the victorious Marlborough went from victory to victory in France and Spain in the war of the Spanish succession.

It was the settled flag of the union when Bonnie Prince Charlie struck for Stuart power once more in Scotland.

It was the flag of Scotland and England when Walpole was named for the first time Prime Minister of Britain.

It waved in the breeze during the Seven Years' war in India, Europe and America; at Plassey, Rossbach, and over Wolfe and his men at the plains of Abraham; battles in which the supremacy of Britain was settled on three continents for good.

It stood for greater freedom of thought and expression when Wilkes dared the authorities in the last half of the eighteenth century to stem his criticism of the government of the day without which liberty of opinion would not have been able all along the line for generations to make democracy as stabilized as it is at present.

It blew in the breeze at Trafalgar, Corunna, Waterloo and Khartum, over Nelson, Sir John Moore and Wellington and Gordon.

It was the flag of the United Empire Loyalists and the other bands of courageous pioneers in the wilds of the Canadas and the maritimes when the Canada of the future was taking form on the northern shoulder of the new world.

It was the symbol of the French Canadians of Quebec when they fought with superb courage for local liberty in 1812 against the United States.

It was thrown to the winds of France when the French Canadians led the van at Courcelette for world freedom.

It waves over India, after centuries of bloodshed and oppression; over the sands of the Soudan, the historic monuments of Egypt, over the cedars of Mount Lebanon, over the hilltops of Palestine, the plains of Mesopotamia and the as yet untamed regions of the northern world and Antarctic wastes.

It was the emblem of freedom that stemmed the advance of tyranny in the world war, and still sweeps the seas in the interests of world peace, world development and world progress and cooperation.

I have described what the flag has stood for in history. Let me now say what it stands for among the nations. It further stands for:

International honour.

National liberty.

Individual freedom.

Empire fellowship.

Maintenance of law and order under democratic institutions.

Constitution in which every man and woman has a voice, in accordance with franchise acts that will in time, we hope, be modernized to the last limit of representative and responsible government requirements.

A system of monarchy providing a vital link of peace, progress, cooperation and unity among the nations making up the British commonwealth of nations circling the globe.

The traditions and history of the British race in peace, commerce, art, science, literature, law, education, industry and war.

Symbol of the common sentiment animating the British people throughout the centuries.

Rallying point of the common force during the emergency periods in our racial development and without which defeat would have rendered impossible a destiny potentially equal to, if not the superior of, any other world power.

The symbol of law, order and discipline in all military and naval movements, making possible the extension of our empire frontiers from century to century.

Past resolves, past deeds and past heroes, apart from which the finest enthusiasm on behalf of home, family pride, family honour, personal devotion, patriotism or religious zeal; all of which, in addition to leadership, numerical forces and discipline have been needed in the past to wrench victory from many a haughty and gallant foe.

Distinguishing mark of armies, fleets, departments of government, parties, rulers, officers, families, clans, dominions, kingdoms, empires, commonwealths and nations.

National growth, power, influence, unity and advancement in the cause of liberty.

National pride, glory, honour and protecting power from wrong, within and without our empire and nation's boundaries.

The unity of ideals and righteousness imperially and nationally which shall unite the world in freedom and justice.

And what about a Canadian flag? A Canadian flag would stand for all these things, since Canada is a self-governing unit in the British commonwealth of nations, and for many more—the developments in Canada since 1801.

The vicissitudes and upheavals nationally from which we have emerged as a portion of the British Empire prior to and subsequent to confederation.

The stirring history of centuries when early Canada was under the influence and sovereignty of imperial France, and when in navigation, exploration, discovery and colonization the foundation work of the Canada to be was grappled with in a spirit of unparalleled courage and devotion.

Institution of representative and responsible government as factors in the development of the country internally, imperially and internationally.

Canada, the Canadian people, their aspirations and visions of continental and world greatness.

The crown and the laws that bind us by golden chains in allegiance to the throne of Britain.

That spirit of sacrifice and service which in the late great war brought so many of our men to national consciousness and manhood, and caused so many of them to express a sincere desire for a nationally distinctive emblem.

The further sacrifices comparable with anything in the way of sacrifice in the history of pioneers; sacrifices of the intrepid French missionaries and martyrs of early Canadian history, British missionaries of the Cross, and the mutual sacrifice, courage, cooperation, service, forbearance, devotion and Canadian and British comradeship that must characterize us as a people if we are to aspire to and attain the great objectives placed within our reach by a thoughtful and beneficial Providence.

All these things would a Canadian flag stand for—a Canada up to date and yet to be.

And may I point out now, Mr. Speaker, that New Zealand, Australia, South Africa and Newfoundland have flags of their own, and India will have a flag of its own under its new constitution. Ireland has a flag of its own and so, I believe, have all the self-governing dominions of the empire. The question then arises, what about Canada?

Mr. LAVERGNE: We had a flag of our own in 1904.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am coming to that. What about Canada? We have now a king closer than ever constitutionally, therefore dearer than ever. We have a royal standard which suggests the United Kingdom. We have an empire flag; we have a British white ensign; a British blue ensign and a British red ensign. We have a new governor general's flag, not made up of the union jack as it was a few years ago, but made up in an entirely different way because the governor general now represents His Majesty and not the British government. How terrible our super-loyalists must feel about this. We have a merchant marine flag which is our flag on the seas, since 1892, simply a red ensign with the arms of Canada in the fly. We have a government service flag, the British blue ensign with the coat of arms of Canada in the fly. On the government buildings outside of Canada such as in Washington, Paris, London and Tokyo, we fly the red ensign as our Canadian flag. We have therefore a Canadian flag in London, but we have not a Canadian flag in Canada. We have a flag which we fly on the Canadian government buildings in Paris and the other world capitals, but we cannot fly that same flag on our own parliament buildings in the Dominion of Canada. That is the situation exactly.

Mr. LAVERGNE: We used to.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman must be mistaken in what he is saying.

Mr. McINTOSH: As I go along perhaps the right hon. gentleman will see that I am not so much mistaken. We have not a Canadian flag to be flown ashore except the union jack, which in 1912 was made the official flag of Canada. Before 1904 we had the red ensign with the coat of arms of Canada in the fly, which flag was our flag from the days of Sir John A. Macdonald down to 1904. That flag was flown across this country from ocean to ocean, it was the national flag from the Atlantic to the Pacific. However, it was hauled down in 1904. Why? The circumstances surrounding the taking down of that flag have never been made known to the Canadian people, but it was taken down and from 1904 to the present day the union jack has been flown in its place. In 1912 the union jack was made the official flag of Canada by the Secretary of State for the Colonies and from 1912 to 1931 as from 1904 to 1912 the union jack has been flown in Canada as our Canadian flag—something distinctly it can never be. The red ensign, differenced by the Canadian coat of arms, is flying outside of Canada, but it is not the official flag in Canada, it was hauled down and has never been put up.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It was hauled down by the Liberal party.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am not concerned so much with the party that took it down as with the party that will put it up. The time has come when some distinctive flag should be sanctioned by the parliament of Canada. My resolution does not suggest tampering with the union jack, it neither adds to nor subtracts from it, neither divides nor multiplies it, neither squares nor cubes it; it has nothing whatever to do with it. Let the union jack be supreme and let it fly in this country from ocean to ocean but let it be used as an empire flag. I submit that that cannot be considered as a national or distinctive flag for Canada. If it is to be considered as such, why do we use the red ensign in Tokyo and on the government buildings in London? We cannot use the union jack because it would not be distinctive enough. I would like to see adopted a national flag which would be sufficiently distinctive to be used at home and abroad, a flag that would be an honour to us and which would increase not only the self respect of Canadians at home, but also the self respect of Canadians abroad.

The missing link in our flag chain is the fact that outside of Canada we have what we call a flag—I would not say it is as distinctive as it should be—but inside of Canada we have not a distinctive Canadian flag; our official flag is the union jack. It would appear as though the Canadian people have not as yet awakened to the flag problem because when they do I am satisfied its solution will be almost immediate.

I do not intend to-day to pin myself down to saying what the design should be, my argument is for a distinctive or a national Canadian flag. That flag should fly all over this country with the union jack, and no loyalist, royalist or patriot in Canada has any business mixing the union jack with the purposes of this resolution. This resolution calls for a distinctive flag, and if I am not mistaken the time is not far distant when we will have such a flag. If one government does not give us this flag, another one will.

Suggested designs of flags received may be divided into six classes. First, we have the flag with the union jack as a base and a maple leaf or some other Canadian emblem superimposed thereon. We should not superimpose anything on the union jack, we should not put on it a maple leaf, a beaver, a wild goose or anything else; we should leave it alone. Hands off the union jack, as our loyalist friends say. Second, we have another set of flags consisting of the blue ensign with the Canadian coat of arms in the fly. Third we have the red ensign with the Canadian coat of arms on the fly. Fourth, we have the white ensign with the same coat of arms. Then fifth, we have other flags containing the union jack in part, and then sixth, another group with no union jack at all. I say however that any proposed distinctive flag should contain the union jack and in it I believe the union jack should be in a position of honour.

This flag question should be taken out of politics altogether. A special committee of this house should be appointed to consider the question, and hear representations made by the leading citizens and organizations in Canada. By doing that there is left in the hands of parliament the control of this important symbol, and I am satisfied that the problem could be solved satisfactorily to ninety-nine per cent of the people of Canada. All it requires is a little attention, a little courage and the utmost cooperation. When this is done the College of Heralds in London is ever ready, when a design is submitted, to take that design and evolve from it a suitable flag. All we have to do is to tell the College of Heralds what we want and we will soon have a flag for this Dominion.

There are three alternatives for the future of Canada. One is absorption by the United States, but I give an unqualified no to that alternative. There should not—and never will—be any absorption of this country by the great republic to the south. Second, there is the pathway of independence, but my answer to that also is an unqualified no. We are now independent, we are free and we are laying the foundations—under the union jack and within the empire of a great and significant future. What is the last alternative? It is an autonomous community within the British Empire owing allegiance thereto and freely associating with the other self-governing communities thereof. By co-operating with those communities, by building up a great empire, by giving Canadians an opportunity to develop and to be free, and by giving them a national symbol that will indicate their aspirations, objectives and beliefs nationally and imperially, I am sure a brighter day will dawn for Canada.

In conclusion, might I say that if I had time this afternoon I could read resolution after resolution passed at meetings held from ocean to ocean. The weekly newspapers of Canada in national convention, assembled in 1929 in London, Ontario, to the number of four or five hundred, passed this resolution, unanimously endorsing a national flag:

> Whereas we believe it is desirable to adopt a distinctive Dominion flag for Canada, the design of which should include the Union Jack, resolved that we appeal to the parliament of Canada to treat this matter on a non-party basis, and we further appeal to all Canadians, irrespective of race, creed or origin, to cooperate towards the solution of this vital national question.

Even among our Conservative friends on the opposite side, the question of a national flag has been brought up. Some years ago at their national convention in Winnipeg a resolution was submitted, although it did not come to anything—it did not get into the light of day. The conviction of those who framed that resolution, if I remember, from the constituency of South Winnipeg, was that the time had come for the Conservative party to take action on this very important matter. But it did not.

A year or two ago the Canadian Legion in convention assembled at Regina passed the following resolution:

> Whereas the question of the adoption of a distinctively Canadian flag is at present agitating public opinion throughout the Dominion of Canada.
> And whereas it is believed that the general feeling of the members of our organization is that the Union Jack, under which we fought and under which our comrades died, should be retained as the flag of the Dominion.
> Yet, nevertheless, the pressure of public opinion may be such that the adoption of an individual flag will become a question which has to be decided.

It will become more and more every day a question which has to be decided. The resolution continues:

> Therefore, be it resolved that this convention instruct the Dominion council that in the event of any concrete proposition for the adoption of a distinctively Canadian flag being presented to parliament, that parliament be advised that no device will be acceptable to the ex-service men of Canada in which the Union Jack is not the predominant figure, and if the question is to be decided that we strongly recommend the retention of the Union Jack, with some device such as the maple leaf or the Canadian coat of arms superimposed thereon.

We desire to retain the union jack as explained. We should not however interfere with the union jack. We should however have the union jack in the upper left hand corner of any flag in the position of honour—absolutely. The problem boils down simply to this: that we must work out a suitable symbol which will be emblematic of all the provinces of Canada, Canada as a whole. And in this flag—at no distant date—the union jack will symbolize our association with the empire. Then we can evolve a flag with a suitable symbol and background that will indicate to the world and the nations making up the empire that Canada is a national unit. Such a flag will be a powerful factor in developing national sentiment, in the growth of national opinion from ocean to ocean, in the building up of national ideas, in inculcating in the minds of our new nationals a love for the Dominion and the empire. And if it succeeds in accomplishing any of these things, we as Canadians ought forever to feel gratified.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny): I am glad to rise in support of the motion moved by the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh). I agree with pretty much everything he said. I was, however, rather surprised to hear it come from that side of the house. When I was in the house many years ago as a young member with the hon. member for Quebec East, the very flag that my hon. friend speaks of, which had been floating at the time, was pulled down by the party then in office.

Mr. McINTOSH: I do not care who pulled it down; I want it put up.

Mr. LAVERGNE: So do I, but I am trying to make clear the history which my hon. friend says is very mysterious. It was not very mysterious. One day we walked up to the house and we discovered that the red ensign with the Canadian coat of arms had disappeared and had been replaced by the union jack. I think it was the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) who protested and the then Minister of Public Works said that he had given orders to have this done. Probably it was incompatible with the nationalistic doctrines preached at that time by my hon. friends from Quebec on the other side, and since then the flag was replaced which had been floating since the days of Sir John A. Macdonald. That is probably the mystery of which my hon. friend has been speaking. In any case, the flag such as is mentioned in the resolution floated doubtless on all the public buildings of Canada from confederation until 1904 under the Laurier government of the time.

I agree with what the hon. member has said in that I think Canada should have a national ensign. I do not, however, see that it needs very much courage to say so. I do not think it is treading on dangerous ground to assert, and so far as I am concerned, I am not afraid to assert that I am a Canadian first; I believe in Canada first, and I believe, to quote the words of, I think, Sir Wilfrid Laurier: "If the interests of my native land come into conflict with those of the motherland, I would turn to my native land." But now that we have won our liberty and that under the British flag we have the most practical independence and equality as a sister nation in the commonwealth of nations, I do not see why anybody should be afraid to assert that he is a Canadian. As my hon. friend has rightly said, Australia has her flag; South Africa is going to have her flag. The question is now before a committee.

Mr. McINTOSH: She settled that question on November 11th, 1927, and May 31st, 1928.

Mr. LAPOINTE: She has her flag.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Ireland has her flag and New Zealand has hers. Unless in our country there is lack of pride somewhere, I fail to see why we should not assert all over the empire, all through the world, that we are Canadians and proud of our Dominion of Canada.

The proposition put forward by my hon. friend is most wise. The union jack, the flag of the empire, the flag of our king, has a part in his project and he wants a symbol to link together all the different provinces. We have that in the escutcheon of Canada as it exists to-day, because all the great races of this country are represented in our coat of arms which, with the exception of the maple leaf, was practically the flag of the English kings until the Georges. I think the fleur-de-lis was in the coat of arms of the English kings until then; it was only under the Georges that it disappeared to be replaced by the repetition of the British lion: lions passant et regardant. I think this proposition should be considered favourably by the house

This is not a criticism, but my hon. friend may have injured his argument somewhat because he has given such a eulogy, and a well deserved one, of the union jack that I am afraid some of our friends on this side of the house may be inclined to retain it. I think in this project the union jack should remain. There may be some timid people or some very loyal organizations who may protest against a change, but those organizations not very long ago, if we go back in our history, were quite willing to put away our flag because the Prince of Wales, when he first came to Canada, did not recognize it. When we are loyal to the empire, we should first be loyal to Canada. The best way to be a good British subject in the empire is to be in Canada a good Canadian, or in Australia to be a good Australian.

It is strange that questions of this kind are not discussed in any of the dominions of the empire except Canada. It seems to me that here the moment we discuss anything which is purely Canadian we are open to the suspicion of disloyalty. Of course, loyalty has been exploited in this country to a very great extent, and I do not put the blame wholly on one side of the house or on only one party. I see my friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) smiling at me. I remember, and I am sure that he does, when the Liberal party was making a tremendously loyal campaign in the province of Quebec in the good old days of 1911, when the Tories of Ontario were quite willing to be allied with the rebels, the so-called nationalists of that day.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why should my impartial friend, the Deputy Speaker, mix up politics with a question of this kind?

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am not mixing up politics; I am just giving history.

Mr. ST-PERE: Was it at that time that somebody was going to shoot holes through the British flag?

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am not afraid to answer that. Yes, it was, and after that he became a member of the cabinet. I do not see why he should deny having said that. He did not invent that phrase; it was first used by Sir Adolphe Chapleau, and it was true. The right hon. leader of the opposition, I am sure, is not going to deny the good old days of Papineau and William Lyon Mackenzie. I am not, as a Canadian. The men who shot holes through the British flag in those dark days won for us the liberties of which we are so proud to-day, which liberties, now that we have them, have made us loyal subjects. I do not see why my hon. friends opposite should make any reproaches.

Mr. POULIOT: We are not making reproaches, but we are very much surprised that afterwards that gentleman swallowed his words.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am not making any reproach, and let my hon. friends opposite have the same courage and approve those words. Here we are in the days of radio, and we cannot say one thing in one province and deny it in another. Those days are past, and I am asking my hon. friends opposite to have the courage of the hon. member for North Battleford, (Mr. McIntosh), for instance, and if they approve of a Canadian flag, let them get up and say so.

Mr. ST-PERE: Of course we do.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am glad to hear it, but I notice that when my hon. friend from North Battleford sat down, not many on that side of the house got up to support him.

Mr. BRADETTE: There was no cheering on the other side of the house.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 6 p.m.

Tuesday, May 26, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

REFERENCE OF MATTERS CONTAINED IN PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have not given notice of the motion I propose to move, Mr. Speaker, but probably there will be no objection whatever to its passing to-day. If there is such objection I shall let it stand as notice of motion, but the reason I ask that it pass to-day is that we have brought a gentleman to Ottawa from Winnipeg to appear before the agriculture committee. It would be a decided convenience to him if this motion carried to-day. Therefore I move, seconded by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion):

That matters referred to in returns Nos. 147 and 147a be referred to the agricultural committee with instructions to examine such records as may by the committee be deemed necessary, and to hear such witnesses as it may desire and to call for such papers in connection therewith, and to report to the house.

This refers to the returns in connection with what is known as the Robert Whiteside correspondence, and is in accordance with an understanding we had the other day to refer the matter to the committee on agriculture.

Mr. YOUNG: Will that include also the investigation of the disposal of the balance of the 1916 crop, mentioned by the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers)?

Mr. STEVENS: It will deal with all this correspondence.

Mr. VALLANCE: I should like to ask the minister if this will also include the file that was asked for by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke), from which the minister quoted rather copiously. I hold in my hand the two returns mentioned. I suppose the evidence submitted by the hon. member for South Winnipeg and also the file from which the minister quoted will be included in this reference?

Mr. STEVENS: The committee is empowered to call for any records or files it may deem necessary to have, and all the files at my disposal are at the disposal of the committee, to the extent of about a ton.

Motion agreed to.

FINGER PRINTING OF CANADIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. SAMUEL FACTOR (Toronto West Centre): Before the orders of the day are called, may I be permitted to draw to the attention of the government recent legislation passed in the state of Michigan, which in effect provides that Canadians and others residing in the United States, who are not American citizens, must be finger printed and registered. I should like to ask the government if any representations have been made in respect of that measure?

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I would ask the hon. member to allow his question to stand until to-morrow. The Prime Minister will not be here to-day. I am not aware of representations having been made, but the Prime Minister will answer the question more fully to-morrow.

RAILWAY COMMISSION VACANCIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Some time ago I asked the Minister of Railways when the government would fill the vacancies on the Board of Railway Commissioners. I now read in the press, that this may be done this week. May I ask the minister if he is in a position to confirm that rumour?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Yes, I will say it might be done this week.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

PROPOSED ANNUAL EXPENDITURE OF $750,000 CONDITIONAL UPON AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide for the promotion of vocational education in Canada, and to appropriate the sum of $750,000 per annum for fifteen years for such purpose, payments to be made conditional upon agreements with the respective provincial governments.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is a motion dealing with what is called vocational education rather than with what has been better known in this house as technical education. I understand that in recent years a distinction has been established between the two terms, and it is now considered among educationists throughout the world that the term technical education has become associated rather with work of a scientific or investigational nature and work of university grade, while vocational education is considered a broader term, including what we formerly referred to as technical education. The new term, vocational education, I understand has been adopted pretty generally in the Department of Labour during recent years, and the publication of that department is now known as a pamphlet on vocational education. I see by newspaper reports also that in some of the provinces of Canada officers of provincial governments who formerly were known as technical education officers now are known as vocational education officers. Therefore the term "vocational" education has been adopted in this resolution instead of the term formerly used, which was "technical" education. Otherwise, the motion in its general scope proposes an annual expenditure of $750,000 for a period of fifteen years next ensuing, to aid in the great work of vocational education and vocational training throughout the Dominion of Canada.

The house will remember that as far back as the year 1919 an act was passed by this parliament providing for an expenditure of $10,000,000 at the rate of $1,000,000 per annum to assist in the work of technical education throughout Canada, in conjunction with the provincial authorities in every instance. That act ran its course and expired in the year 1929, and at that time there had been expended on technical education in Canada by this government the sum of $7,964,000, or an average annual expenditure of $796,000 instead of the $1,000,000 which was provided by the act of 1919.

In the year 1929, therefore, it was found that there was still a substantial balance on hand of the money which parliament had appropriated to this special purpose. The balance in 1929 amounted to roughly $2,350,000, and it became a question whether the work should be continued and the original amount fully expended, or whether the work should be abandoned in that year. In 1929 this parliament passed a further act, which is chapter 8 of the statutes of 1929, making provision for further expenditure in regard to technical education in order to utilize the unspent balance of the money, and it was then provided that the unspent money might continue to be appropriated and spent among the provinces still entitled to a grant until the year 1934. At this date there is still an unexpended balance, amounting in round numbers to a million and a quarter dollars, which is available for the purpose of technical education. It is now proposed to make a new grant to apply to all the provinces upon equal terms and in proportion to their respective populations. The grant now proposed amounts to $750,000 per annum, and the period during which that grant will be paid is the next fifteen years.

The general purpose of this grant will be very largely the same as that of the grant made under the statute of 1919. There are some slight changes, it is true; these will be developed as the matter proceeds before this house. One or two of them I might mention now. In the grant made in 1919 agriculture was excluded as a matter of technical education. Under the present proposal agriculture will not be excluded, but it will be open to the provincial governments to make such representations as they see fit to the government here in order that the grant, or parts of the grant, may be appropriated to special courses such as those provinces desire to have carried on within their respective territories. Another distinction between the present proposal and the former is that under the former proposal a limitation was placed upon the amount of this fund which might be expended by any province for school buildings, equipment and the like. The limitation in the former act was placed at 25 per cent of the amount granted; that alone could be expended on buildings and equipment. That limitation has been removed under the present proposal, and it will again rest with the provincial authorities, in consultation with the government here, to expend such part of that money as is deemed essential for the purposes of buildings and equipment. It is realized that in some provinces the work of vocational education has been carried on to a much greater extent than in other provinces. Some of them have only within recent years seriously taken up the question, and in such provinces the provision of buildings and equipment is a more serious matter than it is in some of the older provinces which for years have been engaged in this work and have carried it on most successfully. There are other minor distinctions between the present proposal and the act of 1919 which will be developed as the measure proceeds through the house.

I do not think there will be more than one opinion as to the propriety of granting money for this special purpose. I had the honour a quarter of a century ago of discussing the question in this house and elaborating as fully as I was able to do the case in favour of a federal grant for technical education. I think it is realized on all hands that the technically trained man has become an essential in a country like this, and that technical education is so closely identified with the trade and commerce of the country—a matter which is entirely within the jurisdiction of this parliament—that we can well justify a grant which is going to improve our trade and commerce position or methods. And I think it is realized throughout the trading world today that technically trained men are necessary not only for production purposes in the various branches of production, but that they are just as necessary in regard to the salesmanship of the various goods produced. I remember last autumn speaking to a large manufacturer from Sheffield, a producer of cutlery goods, and he said, "We find that not only do we need highly trained men in the production of our goods, but that we need just as highly trained men in the salesmanship of our goods." So in both these instances Canada will require the same training, and the grant is made for the purpose of encouraging education along that line.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that at this stage I can usefully add anything to the remarks which I have now made. I have outlined the broad proposal contained in the resolution, and when the resolution comes to the committee stage I shall be able to give full information as desired.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise not to take exception to the object of the resolution, nor indeed have I any exception to take to the remarks of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie). This parliament has already by its enactments given ample evidence of its belief in technical education, and in the power of the federal government to give assistance to the provinces in furthering the work of technical or vocational education. So that with respect to the object or purpose of the resolution and the powers of this parliament, I should like it to be distinctly understood that I have no exception whatever to take. I do feel, however, that this is a moment when it would seem advisable to consider the soundness of the principle of making parliamentary grants from the federal treasury to the provinces in a manner or to an extent different from that which was contemplated in the financial arrangements made at the time of confederation and the various revisions of those arrangements which have since been made. That is the point to which I wish to speak at this time, because it seems to me to have an immediate bearing upon this resolution, and will also have a bearing upon other resolutions which will be introduced, I presume in the course of the present session, by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Confederation, as the house well knows, was effected as the result of a compromise made more particularly with respect to financial matters. When the original provinces were considering the various resolutions at the Quebec conference it became apparent that different views were entertained as to the rights which the provinces and the Dominion respectively should have in the matter of raising the necessary revenues. The provinces theretofore had had the right of raising revenues by indirect taxation; they had their own customs tariffs. It was obvious that confederation could not be effected if the provinces were to continue to have tariffs of their own. An alternative suggestion was that this central government—the federal government—when it came into existence should raise all revenues and distribute a portion to the provinces. To that, obviously, there were certain objections. A third proposal was that the provinces should raise all of their taxation by direct methods, though the Dominion should have the right of raising taxation according to any method that in the wisdom of its own parliament seemed best. The provinces would not hear of coming into confederation on the understanding that they must raise all of their revenues by direct taxation, so the compromise effected was this—that such revenues as they did raise would be raised by direct taxation, but that the federal government out of its revenues would make annual contributions in the nature of subsidies to the provinces to make good what they might be presumed to be sacrificing in giving up their rights to raise any taxation by indirect methods. The subsidies which were agreed to at that time were agreed to as being of a character which would equalize the financial arrangements as between the different provinces of Canada and the Dominion. They were worked out on a per capita basis. That is the fundamental basis on which the financial arrangements between the Dominion and the provinces were made at the time and have existed ever since. As the years have gone by it has been observed that, as agreed upon originally, the subsidies were inadequate, and revisions have been made, but they have always been made with a view to effecting final and equitable arrangements as between the Dominion and the provinces so far as financial considerations are concerned.

If that method is continued I see no danger of conflict over matters of jurisdiction, over questions of raising the necessary revenues or matters of taxation, but if it is to be departed from, if a new custom is to be permitted to grow up whereby this federal parliament is to make grants to the different provinces for all kinds of purposes, grants which are conditional upon agreement with the provinces, grants conditional upon the provinces undertaking work which possibly many of them would hesitate to undertake but for the financial aid being granted, I submit we will soon come into a very serious situation in the relations between the Dominion and the provinces with respect to finances. For that reason, I feel that at this time the ministry might well take into consideration the wisdom of proceeding very slowly in countenancing a custom which, as I am frank to admit, has already grown up but which if continued will, I believe, give rise to serious complications.

The best brief treatise I have seen on the financial arrangements between the provinces and the Dominion is one which was published as McGill University Economic Studies No. 12, by Mr. A. W. Boos, M.A. This treatise was published by the university under the title of The Financial Arrangements Between the Provinces and the Dominion. The writer sums up in a paragraph or two the essence of what I have up to the moment been endeavouring to say. On page 13 appears the following:

> It was provided that the grants authorized by the act were to be "in full settlement of all future demands on Canada." With the exception of the possibility of a limited increase in the per capita grant, owing to an increase in population, for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, these financial arrangements might be said to be inflexible and non-adaptable to changing conditions. There were several reasons for this. On the one hand, the fathers of confederation thought that they had made adequate provision for provincial expenditures and, on the other hand, they thought that by placing an obstacle in the way of additional or increased grants, they would effectively check provincial extravagance and that the local government would be compelled to control their expenses. "And it must be observed," declared Sir Alexander Galt, in the debates on confederation in the province of Canada in 1865, "that the agreement does not contemplate any future extension of this amount. It is hoped that being in itself fixed and permanent in its character, the local government will see the importance—I may say the necessity—of their exercising a rigid and proper control over their expenditures."

And then:

> In this respect, a quotation from one of the Hon. George Brown's speeches delivered in the year 1867, is especially significant. "Let this, too," he declared, "ever be kept in mind, that the $2,630,000 to be distributed to the local government from the federal chest is to be in full and final extinguishment of all claims hereafter for local purposes, and if this from any cause does not suffice, the local government must supply all deficiencies from direct taxes on their own localities."

And in conclusion:

> The financial arrangements were thought to be final and complete; they were consummated in an environment of concession and compromise, in a spirit of fairness, and with a sense of equity.

I believe that the soundness of the position taken at the time of confederation by those who had to do with the framing of the act must be wholly apparent. The argument which was urged most strongly with respect to not making contributions from the federal treasury to the provinces was that any course of that kind would render the executives of the provinces independent to a considerable extent of their legislatures, and, moreover, that it would prevent the effective control of public expenditures being exercised by the government which was responsible for making the grant. In other words, a practice of that kind was viewed as being contrary to what is essential under any system of responsible self-government. I think that must be wholly apparent. If the executives of the different provinces are granted considerable sums of money from the federal government they are in this manner placed in possession of amounts of money which they are at liberty to spend without reference to the legislatures themselves; it may be that the object upon which the money is to be spent may be named, but the executives are at liberty to expend it without encountering the necessity of raising a corresponding amount in taxation in order to have the required revenue. They are put in the position where they, as executives, are rendered wholly independent of the legislatures from which, as executives, they derive their authority. In the old days when revenues in part were derived from territorial and casual sources the executive was in that position. It was free to ignore its following in the legislative assembly because its revenues came from sources other than taxation. Responsible government put an end to that kind of thing because it necessitated that revenues should be raised through taxation and that the executive should be responsible to the legislature with respect to all moneys so raised.

If the amounts contributed as grants were small and incidental the question might not come to assume the proportions it is now assuming, but there has grown up in this country a practice entirely different from anything contemplated at the time the original financial arrangements were made or at the time of any subsequent revision, a practice which seems to me to be most unsound.

The present resolution places in the possession of the provincial governments a sum of $750,000 annually for a period of fifteen years, amounting in all to something like $11,250,000. With respect to that $11,250,000 the executives of the provinces will not have to consider their followers; they will have the money handed to them and quite independently of the legislatures they will be free to deal with it. I submit that the effect of that will be simply that the executives undoubtedly will apply this money for the purpose for which it has been granted, but they will take money which otherwise would have been required and raised for the purposes of technical or vocational education and apply it to some other kind of service which they may find it desirable to initiate. In the way of technical or vocational education there will be neither more nor less than there otherwise would have been. That means that the provincial governments will get into the habit of extravagance; it means that they will not be obliged to control their revenues as they otherwise would, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that surely this is the time, of all times, when with respect to municipalities, provincial governments and the federal government there is need for the utmost scrutiny of expenditures and for economy wherever that can be possibly brought about. To render an executive independent of a legislature, to however small a degree, is a step backward; it is a step in the wrong direction and it is a step which should not be countenanced by this parliament. In addition, a step which will render a provincial legislature more extravagant with its expenditures than it would otherwise be, is not one which should be encouraged by this house.
