I know the late Liberal administration was criticized on the floor of the house and throughout the country for having permitted some of these grants from the dominion to the provinces to expire when the statutory term was reached and for not having renewed them. May I say that the reason the late government took that course was not through any lack of sympathy with respect to the various purposes for which these moneys were voted. It was solely due to the necessity which the government saw, in view of the great obligations which had come upon the federal government as a result of the war, of exercising all the economy possible in the matter of public expenditures and of seeing to it that where great sums of taxation had to be raised to meet entirely new obligations, those sums should be devoted to federal purposes first. In other words, we found, as the present administration I am sure is also finding in its case, that the revenues at the time we came into office were not sufficient to meet the expenditures. There was a great national debt. The country was going deeper and deeper into debt. The right hon. Mr. Fielding, at the time minister of finance, took very strongly the view that unless we could balance the national budget the credit of Canada would continue to suffer from year to year; that the first duty of the administration of the day was to seek to balance the budget; and that having balanced the budget, its next duty was as far as possible to reduce taxation. We felt that unless we kept down debt and taxation, we could not hope to improve the financial position of the dominion. The present administration is now faced with a similar situation. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Bennett) brings down his budget, we shall hear how much the public debt of the country has increased. We shall probably learn that there is a deficit running up into the vicinity of $100,000,000 for the last fiscal year. If that be the case, is it not reasonable to ask the administration to consider whether this is the time that it should begin to extend to the provinces grants for the purpose of carrying on work which is avowedly theirs, or whether it should not first consider the methods that will best serve to reduce debt and taxation.

To make quite clear the point that I have in mind, may I ask this question: Why should the provinces with respect to particular services be dealt with in a manner different from that which governs with respect to any other services which under the constitution they may have to perform? Take for example the administration of justice. Under the British North America Act this parliament appoints and provides for the payment of the salaries of judges. It does not provide for the administration of justice apart from the payment of salaries of judges. The administration of justice is essential; it is something which all will regard as highly necessary. Why should the dominion not vote certain sums of money to the provinces to assist them in the administration of justice? Why limit financial grants to technical education? Why limit them to highways? Why limit them to old age pensions, agricultural instruction, housing or other specially selected services, essential as they may be? If the principle is a sound one, its application should not be limited at all. My contention is that it is unsound to adopt, with respect to any services which are imposed by the British North America Act upon the provinces, a principle that cannot be universally applied.

May I say further in support of the view I am seeking to present, that I am not aware of the provinces making any contribution towards the increased obligations which the federal treasury is called upon to meet, and, with the passing of the years, the obligations of the federal treasury have increased many times over those of the provinces themselves. The federal government assumed practically the whole obligation with respect to the great war. It assumed the obligation of the cost of the war, and practically all of the obligations that have arisen out of the war. It assumed the complete burden of pensions, and we know how vast in their total amount pensions are becoming. The men who are receiving the pensions are citizens of the provinces as well as of the dominion, but the provinces are in no way contributing towards the extra obligation which the dominion has, and to-day federally we are going deeper and deeper in debt. If our national debt and our taxes are increasing, this is because of the extra federal burden which the federal government is assuming but which the provinces do not share in at all. In these circumstances it seems to me that the only wise and sound course to be followed financially is that each party should meet the services it is expected to meet and not go beyond them without some revision of the entire financial arrangements. For example, in regard to the obligations on the part of the federal government in one matter only, a return was called for a day or two ago by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) with respect to pensions. In the return the following figures appear:

On Account of	Pension list
Judges and civil servants	$ 2,489,325
War pensions	44,234,232
Northwest Rebellion pensions	24,756
Militia pensions	865,176
Civil flying pensions	346
War veterans' pensions	318,029
Old age pensions	11,314,670
Total of all pensions in Canada	$59,246,538

Or roughly, $6 per capita of the population, fixing the population at 9,934,500. This is roughly $60,000,000 of an annual pension list, the greater part of which did not exist when the first departure was made from the old practice of making no financial grants to the provinces other than by the subsidies that were arranged as a result of conferences between the dominion and the provinces. If the financial arrangements between the dominion and the provinces are not what they should be; if they are unjust; if they bear unfairly upon the provinces or upon the dominion, they should be revised and care should be taken to see that the revision is just in all particulars. But I do not think it is right that without such a revision, parliament should, little by little, depart from what was the pact of confederation and assume all kinds of burdens which it is not in a position to meet and which are resulting at the present, of all times, in greater extravagance federally, provincially and municipally.

May I give one other quotation from the writer whom I have quoted? This is one that he makes from Mr. Dunkin, who participated in the debates at the time of confederation. The quotation shows very clearly that the fathers of confederation were in no doubt at all where the practice would lead if once there was to be a departure from that laid down by them as the one that should govern in financial matters between the Dominion and the provinces. At page 9, Mr. Boos says:

> In the course of the debates on confederation in the parliament of the province of Canada, Mr. Dunkin, in opposing the subsidy principle, declared: "I am afraid the provincial constituencies, legislatures, and executives will all show a most calf-like appetite for the milking of this one most magnificent government cow" . . . . "With one accord the provincial governments will, in a quiet way, want money, and the provincial legislatures and people will want it more; grants for roads, for bridges, for schools, for charities, for contingencies of the legislature—for all manner and ends they will be wanting money, and where is it to come from? Whether the constitution of the provincial executive savours of responsible government or not, be sure it will not be anxious to place itself more under the control of the legislature, or to make itself more odious than it can help, and the easiest way for it to get money will be from the general government."

The writer goes on to say:

The poignancy of these remarks is revealed to a remarkable extent by subsequent developments and the vicissitudes of the subsidy question during the next sixty years lends a great deal of accuracy to these prognostications.

I do not think I need to stress further the point of the number of services the provinces will wish to have aided or financed by the Dominion. I should like, however, to emphasize where the practice is leading in other directions that in other ways are inimical to our public life.

In the first place, if the practice is to be encouraged of the Dominion making special grants to the provinces for different purposes, to that extent the federal government is going to be put in a position to bring pressure to bear upon the various provinces with respect to the several matters with which they are to deal. That is not a course that should be countenanced. At the last Dominion-provincial conference, if I am not wholly mistaken, the provincial premiers were virtually unanimous in their view that such moneys as were to come to them from the federal treasury should be in the form of subsidies which each province would be free to deal with as its own requirements seemed to warrant. They were opposed to these special grants for special purposes. They wanted all the money they could get, but they wanted to be free to deal with their different requirements as they arose with an absolutely free hand, and not to be bound by any direction from a federal source.

My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) has referred to two or three changes in the present measure from the act which previously passed this house. Those changes help to illustrate the very thing I have in mind. In the first place, my hon. friend says that in this bill provision is made that a province may use for agricultural instruction purposes moneys voted under this resolution for vocational education; in other words, the grant can be switched from one purpose to another. Now the switching of appropriations is another violation of a fundamental principle.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I did not intend to give that impression. I said, subject to an agreement. But no switching.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Exactly, subject to an agreement, but we are now appropriating the moneys for vocational education, and my hon. friend in his speech says that if a province does not wish to use these moneys for vocational education, then by agreement it may use the same moneys for agricultural instruction.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That, I take it, is vocational education.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It may be capable in a broad sense of that interpretation. I will go that far: I am not trying to score any point; I am simply trying to bring out the truth. When parliament previously voted money for technical education, it was found that one province in particular, possibly more than one, but one certainly, the province of Prince Edward Island, I remember, did not wish to start any technical education system at all. That province contended that it was largely an agricultural province, not a manufacturing province, and it did not wish to enter upon a technical education system. Representations were made to the federal government by the province that inasmuch as they had not drawn any money from the federal grant for technical educational purposes, they should be given permission to draw an equivalent amount for agricultural instruction. That request was met, and some of the moneys previously voted for technical education went to the province of Prince Edward Island for purposes of agricultural instruction. But agriculture is something that comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces as well as under the jurisdiction of the dominion, and I submit that it is not a wise thing to begin to have appropriations for agriculture made in this parliament for the work of agriculture as it is to be carried on federally, and, as well, moneys voted in this parliament to give to the provinces to help them in their agricultural work by supplementing their own appropriations for agriculture. It results in confusion, and wherever there is confusion with respect to financial matters there generally comes to be a considerable amount of waste as well. In other words, the making of money grants is practically paying the provinces to relinquish part of their autonomy; that is what it comes to, where grants are made from the federal treasury to the provinces under agreement or with any string attached to them.

But in addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the practice is almost certain to give rise to a very serious problem in our political life, and that is the inducement it affords to a government in office or to a party seeking office to win the support of the electorate of provinces through promises which they may be prepared to make for payment to the provinces on various services out of the federal treasury. I do not wish to go into recriminations with respect to the last general election or what took place then, but I do not hesitate to say that the promises made by hon. gentlemen opposite that if returned to power they would vote moneys to the provinces for technical education, that they would vote moneys to the provinces for highways, that they would vote moneys to the provinces for unemployment relief, that they would vote moneys to the provinces for agricultural instruction, and above all for old age pensions, and for very many other things—I do not hesitate to say that these promises more than anything else are responsible for hon. gentlemen opposite being in power at the present time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say this, to make quite clear what I have in mind? Had the administration which was in office at the time pursued a like course, and it might have pursued it in a way much more effective than the way taken by hon. gentlemen opposite, there is no question as to where the former administration would be in the matter of power to-day. If before the general election the Liberal government which was in office had placed in the estimates which it brought down in this house the sum of $20,000,000 for unemployment relief, to mention nothing else, I venture to say we would have heard very little of the unemployment problem in the last election; but because the government of the day sought to protect the federal treasury with respect to what it conceived to be the obligations of the federal treasury, and took a position which was essential with respect to public expenditures at a time of great obligation and great need, we suffered politically in contrast with the methods adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite. But if we had gone a step farther and had said, we are prepared to give one hundred per cent of the old age pensions, we are prepared to construct a federal highway either through aid to the provinces or by the Dominion itself, we are prepared to aid technical education and agricultural instruction in the same way as it was done before, and if we had put estimates before parliament for that purpose and voted them with the power that we had while in office, I venture to say that there could be no two points of view as to what the outcome of the election would have been. It is a very serious thing, Mr. Speaker, if in our country a course is to be embarked upon which at all subsequent elections is going to lead to competition between the various political parties in their appeals to the electorates of the several provinces as to which is going to be most generous with public money. That I say is a very serious thing. It is easy to make promises. Hon. gentlemen opposite are going to find out how easy it is to fulfil them. But it should not be possible for any government or political party to be able to promise if returned to power to use federal moneys for provincial purposes. The constitution itself should make that impossible and such I believe was the intention. The fact that this kind of thing has happened is the strongest reason why we should now consider, at an early stage, at this second session of the new parliament, whether such a practice should be permitted to grow up in our country. I make that statement with great seriousness. My hon. friend stated that he was interested in this matter a quarter of a century ago. I can scarcely believe that at a time so long ago I had the privilege of being associated with him in connection with this very subject of technical education. A quarter of a century is a considerable portion of a man's life. Looking forward to what may happen within the next quarter of a century, I hope that before we get much farther advanced this parliament, for the country's sake, will find it possible to stop possible competition between political parties as to the use of federal funds for provincial purposes in appeals to the electorates of the provinces. When a grave danger exists it had better be frankly faced. I believe the fathers of confederation perceived the possibility when they made the very wise provision for dividing the duties and functions of governments between the dominion and the provinces and laid down the rule that the authority which expended the taxes should be the one to raise the required revenues. May I point out how fundamentally unsound is any other principle? The body which has to do with the raising of revenue should be the only one to have to do with the spending of it. A thoroughly unsound principle lies at the heart of the proposal now before the house. The proposal is that the federal government which has had and will have to raise the taxes shall transfer to the provinces the moneys received and the provinces will be free to spend such moneys without giving any account to the federal government beyond the assurance that they have received the moneys and are using them for the particular purpose prescribed. The adequate control of public expenditures in this parliament goes farther than the voting of moneys by parliament and their transfer to a legislature allowing the legislature to deal as it pleases with the money. The control of public expenditures, rightly understood, necessitates following to the last stage in expenditure the manner in which public money is expended. This legislation is a denial of that principle. At the special session of parliament a similar right and duty was denied this parliament with respect to the measure concerning unemployment relief. The government said, "When we pay the money to the provinces and the payment is acknowledged by them, our responsibility ends." Hon. members on this side of the house took the position that the Auditor General of this country should audit in detail every dollar of expenditure appropriated by this parliament. If once we get away from that principle not only in regard to hundreds and thousands, but in regard to millions of dollars, where shall we have any sound basis for the control of public expenditures in relation to the financing of the country?

To give hon. members an idea of the proportions these grants are assuming I will quote to parliament what was paid out of the federal treasury to the provinces during the time the late Liberal administration was in office. On occasions the electors have been told that the late administration was heartless, that we made no payments to the provinces and that we were depriving them of all funds from the federal treasury. While in office we carried out the provisions of the statutes we found on the books when we assumed office and made payments in accordance with those provisions. I have the figures before me showing the grants for the fiscal years ranging from 1921-22 to 1929-30. Here is the statement in tabulated form:

Total Grants to Provinces by Liberal Administration fiscal years, 1921-22 to 1929-30

Subsidies	$ 99,334,132
Special subsidies to maritimes	4,800,000	$104,134,132
Highways	16,065,990
Agricultural instruction	1,993,482
Technical education	6,890,375
Amortization of debt against certain school buildings	133,389
Unemployment offices	1,337,032
Eradication of venereal diseases	1,000,353
Old age pensions	3,770,991
Unemployment relief —Labour	1,004,874	32,196,486
Unemployment relief —pensions and national health	3,858,184
War pensions	233,804,397	237,662,581
		$373,993,199
Estimated grants for fiscal year ending March 31, 1931, for above services		71,931,229

From the table it will be seen that in a period of eight years, not quite the whole period of time we were in office, the grants made to the provinces in subsidies by the Liberal administration amounted to $99,334,132. Special subsidies to the maritime provinces amounted to $4,800,000, or a total paid out in subsidies of $104,134,132. The grant for highways was $16,065,990; for agricultural instruction, $1,993,482; for technical education, $6,890,375; for amortization of debt against certain school buildings, $133,389; for unemployment offices, $1,337,032; for eradication of venereal diseases, $1,000,353; for old age pensions, $3,770,991; for unemployment relief paid out by the Labour department, $1,004,874; making a total grant for these services of $32,196,486. In addition the federal government assumed the obligation in connection with the relief of war veterans by the payment of war pensions. In connection with unemployment relief the amount of $3,858,184 was paid out by the Department of Pensions and National Health. The total payment for war pensions was $233,804,397, the two last-named items making a total of $237,662,581. The grand total of payments out of the federal treasury in pensions and relief to persons living in the provinces and for provincial services amounted to $373,993,199. It was estimated that the grants for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1931, for the purposes I have mentioned would be $71,931,229. If that estimate is nearly accurate it would appear that in the time within the 9 years during which the late administration held office $445,924,428 was paid out of the federal treasury to the provinces. If we take an average of the figures I have quoted to ascertain expenditure over a ten year period, we find that within the past decade there was an expenditure of over half a billion dollars from the federal treasury to the different provinces. Certainly such expenditures were never contemplated at the time of confederation when the subsidies were fixed at a definite amount nor were grants to that extent contemplated when subsequent revisions were made.

May I add that in addition to all these grants the provinces in other respects have been dealt with in an exceptionally liberal manner by the federal government. During the time the late administration was in office the maritime provinces had their grievances reviewed by the Duncan commission, and as a result adjustments were made which have resulted in additional payments to the maritime provinces in special subsidies alone of $4,800,000. There have been for provincial purposes many additional payments. The prairie provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have had their natural resources returned to them. In addition to that this parliament has generously continued to those provinces the subsidies which they had been receiving in lieu of their resources. They have received back what was left of their resources, and the subsidies which originally were given in lieu of resources have been continued. In the province of British Columbia the government gave back the Peace River block, the railway belt lands, to which the province had no legal claim and in addition continued to the province of British Columbia the subsidy that province was receiving during the period this government had control of those particular lands. The position taken by the late administration concerning the water powers in the old provinces of Ontario and Quebec was that these powers would by agreement between the dominion and the provinces be treated as though they belonged to the provinces although the matter had not been finally judicially decided. The correspondence reveals that as a matter of public policy we were quite prepared to concede to the province of Ontario with respect to water power on the St. Lawrence exactly the same rights as the province of Quebec asserted were her rights with respect to such water power. I may say that continuously the federal parliament has treated the provinces most liberally with respect to all natural resources, giving them additional sources of revenue, and the like. On the other hand, the federal government has received from the provinces nothing in exchange voluntarily or otherwise. The time I think has arrived when this matter should be made the subject of a conference concerned with a financial readjustment between the dominion and the provinces. If it does appear that the provinces are entitled to something more than the subsidies as fixed at the present time, by all means let the subsidies be revised and an increased amount given. A step which might serve the purpose equally well, and possibly even better, would be for this federal government to take over some of the services which at present are being left to the provinces. Whether this should be done in addition to payment of subsidies, or in exchange, in whole or in part, for subsidies to which the provinces are entitled, would be a matter for negotiation. If, for example, the intention of the administration opposite is to meet one hundred per cent of the cost of old age pensions apart from administration, I submit it would be entirely wrong for this parliament to vote all the money required to pay old age pensions and leave it to the different provinces to administer the vast sums thus appropriated. If one hundred per cent is to be paid, by all means let the appropriations made by this parliament be administered by the government which is responsible for voting the money, and let every cent of the expenditure be checked up by the Auditor General, who is responsible to this parliament and removeable only by an address of both houses of parliament. Any other basis would be altogether unsound. I know that the late Liberal administration did assume half the obligation with respect to old age pensions, and to that extent our action at the time did not conform to what at the moment I am putting forward as the right course to be pursued, but that step was taken at the time because of certain constitutional difficulties believed to exist with respect to the federal government administering an old age pension scheme. If those difficulties still exist they should be removed, before the appropriations are increased. I do submit that fundamentally, with respect to the finances of the country, this parliament should adhere to the essential view that the body which raises the money must be the body which will have the responsibility for expending it and vice versa, and that the responsibility must be exercised in the light of a full and complete audit by the officer appointed by this parliament for that purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just this word in conclusion: The Prime Minister is filling the important portfolio of Minister of Finance, and has given, as we all know, very careful thought and study to many of these financial problems. He has addressed this house on different occasions with respect to what in his view was the position that should be taken by this parliament in financial matters, and he has stressed, as the leader of any political party or any government must stress, the necessity for economy in public expenditures and above all the necessity for a nation, having regard to its credit, not to go deeper and deeper into debt but to seek to balance its budget. May I say that if the budget of this parliament were balanced and taxation were down to a moderate level, perhaps I would feel a little less concerned about being over-generous with the provinces in the way of contributing a portion of our revenues to them for provincial purposes. But when we know the public debt of the country to be what it is to-day, when we know it is going to be increased this very year by something like $100,000,000, then I say this is a time we should begin not to look around to see where we can spend more money, but where we can successfully economize in public expenditures.

The Prime Minister, as leader of the opposition in this house on March 13, 1928, spoke as follows:

> I say that we should place upon the statute books of this country at the earliest possible moment a provision by which a sinking fund will be set up such as they have in Great Britain and in other countries, so that we shall be enabled, within a period to be mentioned, absolutely to wipe out and eliminate the national debt of Canada.

I assume that when the Prime Minister brings down his budget we will find therein some provision in the nature of a sinking fund. If that provision is made, the object will be to wipe out and eliminate the national debt of Canada. I ask my hon. friends who are members of the administration, are you helping in that direction when you ask this parliament, at this of all times, to increase its expenditure by making this contribution in the nature of an additional grant to the provinces for vocational education? Will you be assisting the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister in his great objective when other demands of a similar kind will be made later on? What is the next sentence:

> What is the province of Ontario doing?

This is interesting:

> What is the province of Ontario doing? Do hon. gentlemen realize that in Ontario they have provided for the setting aside, of $3,000,000 every year so that at the end of forty years their debt will be entirely wiped out, half being provided by public utilities, and the other half from the taxpayers of the province itself? Do hon. gentlemen realize that?

Those were the words of the Prime Minister, speaking two years ago from where I am speaking now. May I ask the house, using his words: Do hon. members realize that while the province of Ontario has made provision for wiping out its debt in forty years, by a sinking fund which sets aside $3,000,000 a year, we in this federal parliament are voting in appropriations to the province of Ontario on one account or another a sum, not of $3,000,000 a year but of over $4,000,000 a year to be paid from the federal treasury out of the taxes of the people? Do hon. members realize that? Let us see what was voted to the province of Ontario over a period of eight years, when the late Liberal administration was in office. The figures are as follows:

Highways	4,550,945
Agricultural instruction	590,304
Technical education	2,400,024
Employment offices	519,411
Unemployment relief (Labour)	565,446
Eradication of diseases	336,938

That is an average of just about $4,000,000 a year. That is the amount that goes out of this federal treasury to the province of Ontario, leaving that province free to spend it with respect to the different services named or, as regards the subsidies, as the province wishes, and the province on its part is setting aside not $4,000,000 a year, the amount it receives from us, but $3,000,000 a year, as a sum sufficient to wipe out its entire public debt in that time. When Canada has a debt such as exists at the present time in this Dominion, a debt of over two billions of dollars, why should this parliament pay off the debts of the provinces before it begins to pay off its own public debt? I submit that at this time, when we are seeking to raise the revenues necessary to meet current expenditures, and find this impossible and have to resort to the extremes in taxation to which we have already gone, and may yet have to go, we had better begin to pay off our own debt first and then, when that is done, there will be time to consider what is advisable as regards being more generous to the provinces. Let us be just before we are generous. Following what I have read, the Prime Minister said:

> Suppose we seek to retire only $1,500,000,000 of this debt by a statutory sinking fund, by means of a provision placed upon the statute books of this country, so that the demands and pressure by political supporters would not induce the finance minister to part with public moneys because he would have to meet these sinking fund payments. It would ensure economy in the public service, and what is more, it would make the people of this country increasingly proud as they saw what President Coolidge has described as this greatest menace to our economic development, this great load of debt hanging over our necks, being gradually retired.

There is an interesting phrase used by the Prime Minister in that paragraph:

> . . . . the demands and pressure by political supporters would not induce the finance minister to part with public moneys because he would have to meet these sinking fund payments.

What is this resolution other than the result of the pressure which is being put on the finance minister for political reasons, and no others, pressure mostly of his own creation? Now, I should like to read two paragraphs more of what the Prime Minister said:

> Is this country to continue to be menaced by this economic evil, by this debt hanging over our heads? Are we to continue, of all countries in the world, to make no provision for the future? Are we to be content to expend our patrimony day by day, without putting anything aside to take care of the long days of the future that are before us? I say it is unfair to ourselves, it is unfair to the taxpayers of this country to extract from them each year these increasingly large sums of money and make no provision for the retirement of our national obligations.

A little further on he says:

> It has been said that no government is ever defeated because it is extravagant. That well may be. It well may be that the people may be debauched with their own revenues, and be taught that all you have to do is to spend their taxes freely among them and then you have succeeded, but what is the effect upon the life of the nation as a nation?

I commend that last paragraph to the Prime Minister and the members of his administration. The Prime Minister says: You may retain power by debauching the nation with its own revenues, but he also asks what is going to become of the nation in the long run?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to my hon. friend—and I do so with all respect and sincerity—that he consider how far he should press this resolution at this time in the light of the financial situation of this country as he and his colleagues know it to be. Why fix a term of fifteen years as the period over which this sum of money should continue to be paid? I do not see why we should bind subsequent parliaments and possibly administrations to payments of this kind running on for fifteen years, that is until 1946. The time surely ought to be shorter than that. May I say this? Frequently of late we have heard mention of the Dominion-provincial conference that is soon to be held. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he consider the wisdom of limiting the period of time for which this amount is to be paid to the period that may intervene between the present and the holding of that conference. Or, as an alternative, the withholding of the measure altogether—which would be preferable—until after the Dominion-provincial conference and until after there has been opportunity for careful discussion there of this whole matter. I know my hon. friend is seeking to fulfil an obligation. He has made promises that something of this kind will be done, and being a man of his word, he is seeking to fulfil those promises; but I believe the public at large will credit him with an even finer sincerity if in view of the situation as it is in Canada to-day, he declines to proceed further with this resolution or the bill based upon it until the provinces and the Dominion in conference have jointly considered what should be done with respect to the financial arrangements between them.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, so frequently from this quarter we are obliged to offer adverse criticism that I am very glad indeed to-day to be able to commend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) on the admirable statement which he has given to the house, and I shall be very glad indeed to support the resolution.

The leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), it seems to me, has been attempting to magnify a molehill into a mountain. He tells us that this year we shall probably be $100,000,000 behind. If we are so far behind in our budget, it is well for us to remember that all the expenditure called for by this resolution is three quarters of a million dollars—considerably less than 1 per cent of the deficit that the leader of the opposition believes we shall have to face this year.

I am afraid that if I were in a facetious mood I would have to begin by rather objecting to the resolution on the ground that "it is contrary to the terms of the British North America Act". Really I would commend the Minister of Justice for the skilful way in which he has avoided the British North America Act. I would suggest to the member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) that if she could simply show that peace was in some way connected with trade and commerce, that it tended to promote trade and commerce, she would not have the slightest difficulty about being able to secure a grant for her professorships and scholarships from the present government, notwithstanding the British North America Act.

The leader of the opposition was rather captious in his criticism, when he went so far as to criticise the changes which have been made in the proposed resolution as compared with the terms of the old act. I take it that these changes indicated by the minister represent the lessons which have been learned during the past years. It is surely perfectly legitimate that the great vocation of agriculture should be placed on the same basis as other vocations. There seems no reason why that should not be done. In fact, now that agriculture has developed so many technical features it is eminently in keeping with general developments that this should be the case. Further than that, the other change mentioned, that of permitting the provinces to decide just what percentage of the grant should go into equipment and what into actual teaching, appears to me to be a reasonable one; the provinces ought to be allowed some discretionary power in that regard, especially when we consider, as the minister has said, that their development is at different stages.

The leader of the opposition had a good deal to say about the heavy financial burdens that this country had undertaken, and to offer that as an excuse why his government—the late government—had not continued the grants to technical education. He urged that there ought to be a balanced budget, and then that we ought to have reduced taxation and reduced debt. It is quite true, as he said, that we have a huge annual pension list of $60,000,000, but I would point out to the house that the greater part of that $60,000,000 has not been contracted because of any peaceful expenditures, but because of war, and hence this argument ought not to be used when we are discussing a matter that relates to the civil life of the country.

The leader of the opposition brought forward a number of technical objections, and as I listened to him I could well imagine myself back fifty years in the age of Gladstone with his "retrenchment and reform", because on these matters I do not believe the right hon. gentleman has travelled much in his thinking beyond the age of Gladstone and the ancient Liberals of that day. But the times have moved on. And that, may I say, is the trouble with the Liberal party in Great Britain—and apparently it is going to be the trouble with the Liberal party in this country. They are refusing to recognize the changed conditions, and they satisfy themselves by mumbling old slogans at a time when they will not work.

An hon. MEMBER: Is the hon. gentleman talking as a prophet?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. member can take it that way if he likes. I think that in such a matter prophecy is justified. When you see the decline of the Liberal party in Great Britain, and you find the Liberal party in this country advocating similar policies, it does not take a prophet nor the son of a prophet to know what the outcome is going to be. The leader of the opposition spoke almost as if we had not been in the habit of doing this kind of thing. Let me remind the house that since confederation we have had subsidies to the provinces. Of course, he did mention those subsides, but this is an example of what he would regard as a "vicious principle". Yet confederation itself was founded on what he would term the vicious principle of the collection of moneys by the federal authorities and the turning-over of those moneys to the provinces. Further, it has been a sound and well-recognized principle in British finance that certain higher authorities would give "grants in aid" to other organizations, and it has been lauded as a very satisfactory arrangement. We have had provincial grants in aid of municipalities, we have had provincial grants in aid of school boards. In short, grants in aid have become a commonplace, and in carrying out this idea of the federal government giving grants in aid of vocational education, we are but carrying out an arrangement that has frequently been practised by the British government, and by the federal government ever since confederation.

I should like to direct attention to some other ways in which we have given grants in aid. For example, we have given aid to the Canadian National Railways. I know there are dangers connected with that proceeding, but the Canadian National Railways have not been in a position to raise their own revenue. This house has raised the revenue required and we have turned over the actual expenditure of the moneys and have exercised very little control.

Sir EUGENE FISET: We have done exactly the contrary.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: How so?

Sir EUGENE FISET: We have authorized the Canadian National Railways to raise their own loans.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, they have been given permission to raise loans but we have backed those loans and we have also met deficits. We have stood behind them financially but they have been erected as a separate organization to carry out the details of their business. My colleague suggests that we have also given grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Of course, that is true because hundreds of millions of dollars have been given in subsidies and in land grants, and the company has carried on its own administration. There have been a great many forms in which grants in aid have been given.

I am not here to criticize one party rather than the other, but I would remind the leader of the opposition that if anyone is to blame for the extension of this principle it is he and his government in connection with the Duncan report. I do not know of any action which more directly encouraged the provinces to look to this government for assistance than did the Duncan report. Probably we in the west would be well advised if we asked for a Duncan commission for western Canada and in that way sought to get some of the help we need at the present time.

The leader of the opposition referred to the obligations which this country had incurred during the great war and said that the principle which should be adopted was that we should follow to the very last degree the spending of whatever money was given. I wonder whether the Dominion government was responsible to the last cent for the expenditures during the four years of the war. I am not sure as to how that money was spent in detail, but I am quite sure that we did not follow to the last degree the expenditure of every cent for which we were responsible in connection with the great war.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Every cent of it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman says "every cent," but I do not think so.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I will go further than that and say that the Auditor General had a special branch of his office to audit every expenditure.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In spite of what the Auditor General did, my point still stands. The fact is that as far as Canada was concerned we were not primarily responsible for the conduct of the war or for the way in which it was carried out, as we should have been if the reasoning of the hon. leader of the opposition were followed out.

It is all very well to have a readjustment of taxation as between the dominion and the provinces and I am in hearty sympathy with the leader of the opposition when he says that there should be a conference called for that purpose. That is long overdue. Undoubtedly the relationship in this regard between the dominion and the provinces is very unsatisfactory, but I would like to point out that in addition to that we have to consider other matters such as redistribution of powers as between the dominion and the provinces. It is not right simply to select one out of a number of matters and concentrate attention upon it to the exclusion of all the others. The consideration of who is responsible for unemployment should go along with the problem of who is to pay for unemployment insurance. Because of the development which has occurred in the industrial sphere it is next to impossible under modern conditions for the provinces to handle a matter of this kind.

Further there is a definite trend in the development of the industrial, commercial and financial life of this and all other countries which we ought to recognize. We live in an era of concentration. We know that we cannot have a bank limited to the provinces—that was recognized even at the time of confederation—we must have institutions which are Dominion-wide. As a matter of fact they cannot be limited even to the dominion, they must establish relations between this and other countries. So to-day we are moving in the direction of an international bank. That illustration from the financial field is indicative of the movement going on the world over—a movement of organization and concentration. In the face of a movement of that kind it seems to me to be absolutely futile to suggest that we can revert to the conditions which existed fifty years ago or decentralize in our governmental policies and expenditures. I do not believe it can be done; we shall have to find some other solution than that.

The leader of the opposition suggests certain political dangers which may be met should this policy be persisted in. He suggests political pressure from the provinces, or by the public at the time of elections. He went so far as to say that had his government suggested the grant of $20,000,000 for unemployment relief they might still have been in power. That may be true, but I would have thought that instead of attacking the present government he would have considered that by this time he ought to have learned his lesson. After all, those in authority cannot altogether disregard popular demands. What is a government for? Surely it is to carry out the will of the people. We cannot as a house, or those who are in charge of the government cannot as a government, hold themselves aloof from the needs and the desires of the people.

It is all very well for the leader of the opposition to talk about the necessity of economizing. We all believe in economy; it is a good thing under certain circumstances but one can withhold "more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." There is danger that we may withhold to-day the money which we ought to spend. Whatever our theories of government may be, governments to-day must assume a larger measure of responsibility for social expenditures all along the line. Nearly all governments have been forced to accept that position, and the government of Canada cannot be different in that regard from the other governments of the world.

Mr. YOUNG: Who is going to pay for it all?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That suggestion very well comes from the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young). I suppose he will say the farmer is to pay.

Mr. YOUNG: Yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is the only thing he can say.

Mr. DUPUIS: That is enough.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not enough. The hon. member for Weyburn and those who think with him would be well advised to get away from the narrow philosophy which they hold. The farmers of this country would be far better off if they adopted a different viewpoint. I am proud to belong to the west and I know there are many western farmers who have adopted a viewpoint different from that adopted by the hon. member for Weyburn. It is only as we get a social viewpoint with regard to these things that we will begin to solve our problems.

An hon. MEMBER: What is that viewpoint?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not necessary to go into details, but in answer to my hon. friend let me say that after all this is not so much a question of refraining from spending money as it is a question of where we are to get the money. As long as we have resources that are as great as they are in Canada, as long as we have bank reserves that are piled up as they are in this country, there is no earthly reason why we should fail to spend when the people need the expenditure.

Mr. ST-PERE: How will the hon. member get those reserves from the bank?

Mr. ILSLEY: Does the hon. gentleman not think such a policy as he has outlined has brought grief to Australia?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not discussing the policy of Australia, but I would say with regard to the Australian policy: If it is a fight between the moneyed interests including the Bank of England interests and the welfare of the people of Australia, the people of Australia come first. The situation we have to face in this country is somewhat similar and it is a serious one. We have, I believe, sufficient resources: It is a case of utilizing these to meet national needs. How do they raise their revenue in Great Britain—income tax. Have we done much along that line? We have just a light income tax now long years after the war. We should have raised our war expenditures as we went along, but we refused to adopt that method of financing. Had we done so we should not have had any debt now, our policy differed from that in Great Britain in that during the war we refused to impose an income tax and we came to it later very gradually. Somebody suggests that it would have stopped the war if we had raised the whole of the debt at that time from an income tax. Perhaps, but we did not do so and we have been very cautious in extending it. I think here I shall have to commend the late government that they did not yield when considerable pressure was brought to bear upon them to wipe out that tax altogether, but rather held out for it. My contention is that it ought now to be greatly extended and that the major part of the revenues of this country should be raised through income taxation rather than, as it is to-day, through indirect taxation which bears so heavily upon the people. In this I agree with the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young), and if he and other members on this side of the house would join with me, we would get a great deal further in raising a larger proportion of our revenue through the income tax which ought to be more steeply graded than it is at present. If that were done the $750,000 now proposed to be spent on technical education would be a mere bagatelle.

Another source of revenue that we might use is an inheritance tax. This is being practised to a considerable extent in Great Britain and I do not see why we should not adopt it in this country.

Mr. EULER: The province of Ontario has it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They have it also in my province, Manitoba, but the Dominion does not have it.

Mr. RINFRET: Quebec has it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I know the provinces have it, but I am talking about the Dominion.

Mr. ST-PERE: They have an inheritance tax in the United States and they are trying to get rid of it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I know the moneyed interests there are tremendously strong; but I am speaking about the Dominion parliament. We in the Dominion parliament have never adopted the inheritance tax with the result that we have huge estates being passed on from generation to generation.

Mr. ST-PERE: So the hon. member would favour a double inheritance tax?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would double, treble and quadruple it. Years ago it was stated in the manifesto of the Labour party in Great Britain: We have gone on the principle that our death duties should take a very small percentage off and the greater part should be passed on to the heirs. We should go rather on the other principle that naked a man came into the world and naked he should go out. We should proceed on the principle of allowing an individual simply a sufficient amount of money to educate his family and provide for his dependents, the rest to be retained by the state for state purposes. If we were doing that in this country, we would not need to worry about spending $750,000 on technical education.

What does technical education mean? If we are to progress in Canada and take our place with the other great nations of the world, we must spend a great deal more than three-quarters of a million dollars a year on technical education. We ought to pour our millions into that work, if we would place ourselves beside other nations which have developed to such a great degree.

Mr. ST-PERE: The province of Quebec is already spending money on technical education.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, and the other provinces too. But instead of talking about economizing in these matters, we should rather vie with one another as to how much we can spend when every cent that we spend is going into the lives of our children and into the building up of a finer and better nation.

I know there are theoretical objections which may be and which have been raised this afternoon, but such matters can be straightened out when a conference has been called. That should have been called ten years ago, but it has been put off and put off. I hope the present government will call it in the near future. In the meantime I would say that the quickest way to get a conference is to break in on the British North America Act in this manner, and then when the conference comes, we shall be more inclined to make even greater modifications of that act. The quickest way to get the proper adjustment of taxation is to spend and spend until the people generally wake up to the fact that they have to adopt means of taxation other than those which have so far been adopted in this country.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): I have frequently listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) who has just spoken, and always with a great deal of respect. I should like to say to him to-day that while I have never questioned his sincerity, I believe he would have a great deal more influence in the house if he did not do quite so much scolding in both the manner of his presentation and the tone of his voice. The house will perhaps be surprised that I should make remarks of this kind because I very seldom do so. The hon. member has seen fit to read a lecture to both the Liberals and the farmers in this house. He has referred to the Liberal party in England—and I have no special brief for that party—as being a dying institution. Perhaps that is so, but he might indulge in a little self-examination as to why, as he says, the Liberal party in England is dying and the Labour party is apparently taking its place—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I did not say a word about the Labour party.

Mr. EULER: But I do. I have nothing to say against the Labour party because I am just as strong an advocate of the rights of labour as he is, although perhaps he will not admit it. I may ask: whereas the Liberal party in England is apparently going down and the Labour party is going up, why in the world does the same thing not happen in Canada? Perhaps after all, the Labour party in England is well led and I would put the stress upon the word "England". I say that in all kindness to my hon. friend and I hope he will so consider it.

Just a word in regard to the merits of the question itself. I know it is more or less dangerous for any hon. member to place himself in a position which might be interpreted as opposed to technical education. I believe every hon. member, myself included, is in favour of technical education, and after all, the only question is as to who should carry out the work. My attitude is simply this—and I think it is eminently reasonable: education is a matter for the provinces. Constitutionally the provinces are charged with the work of education. That being the case, why should we depart from that principle? I am entirely in favour of technical education, but unless there is some special reason why the federal parliament should intrude upon the rights and responsibilities of the provincial parliaments, I see no ground why in this particular instance we should violate that principle.

The leader of the opposition has advanced an argument which to me has always seemed strong, so far as contributions to the provincial treasuries are concerned. He has stated that the debt of Canada is enormous, which is true, as a result chiefly of the war, and that our responsibilities by way of expenditures and taxation are exceptionally great. It cannot be successfully contradicted, that the financial responsibilities of the Dominion parliament are infinitely greater than those of any of the provinces. The province of Ontario and the province of Quebec, comparatively speaking, are rich provinces and can well afford to carry out the obligations that are imposed upon them by the constitution. I am in favour of technical education, but I believe that we ought to keep things in their proper compartments, and if the duty of furnishing technical education or education of any other kind is imposed upon the provinces by the constitution, then why in the world should we depart from that? Each should discharge its own responsibility. The father is supposed to take care of his child. It it comes to want, if it needs assistance, its father, and not the father of somebody else, is supposed to take care of it. That is a homely illustration, but I think it holds good. It is merely a question of who should discharge the responsibility, and my argument is that the responsibility is placed upon the provinces, and I can see no good reason—certainly none has so far been advanced—why we should assume a responsibility that is strictly placed upon others, and who can afford to discharge it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: May I offer just a word, Mr. Speaker, before the question is put. I would point out to my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) that this resolution does not propose to take away any power from the provinces nor to take away any responsibility from the provinces, but rather to increase the power of the provinces in one particular direction in which I think it is generally conceded that this parliament, representing the whole Dominion of Canada, has a special and, indeed, a particular interest.

Just a word in regard to the very learned address offered to the house by my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition. This I will say in regard to his address, that the attitude which he has taken to-day in regard to the proposal to make federal grants in aid of technical education in the various provinces has been pretty consistent with his whole course since this question was first brought to the attention of the federal parliament, for I well remember that when I moved for the first time in this parliament a quarter of a century ago for the appointment of a commission to inquire into technical education, my right hon. friend the present leader of the opposition was the one who moved a motion which killed mine, and I was the only one then on the Liberal side who voted in favour of such a commission. However, a year or so afterwards, he decided that the popular demand in favour of something being done by the federal government was so great that it was time to act, and my right hon. friend, who was then Minister of Labour in the Liberal administration of that day, did issue a commission for the purpose of inquiring into technical education, and that commission made a very valuable report to parliament.

During the course of his remarks to-day the right hon. leader of the opposition alluded to the late Right Hon. Mr. Fielding, one of the most eminent finance ministers that Canada has ever produced, a man who for fifteen years was finance minister in the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and was afterwards for five years finance minister in the government of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition. The late Mr. Fielding was a member of the administration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier when my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition appointed his technical education commission, and speaking in this house on June 20, 1919, as reported at page 3924 of Hansard for that year—

Mr. LAPOINTE: 1909.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, 1919, when the bill to make a grant of $10,000,000 for technical education was before the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Fielding was not finance minister at that time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He was a member of the house and was sitting in the house at the time. This was the language that he used:

> As regards technical education, it is worth remembering that this grant, although it is late in coming, is the outcome of a policy which the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier took up some years ago, when we appointed a technical education commission which made a tour of the world and gathered information, upon which they made a most valuable report. It is sometimes made a matter of complaint against the government of a later day that they pigeon-holed that report and did nothing Well, the government is doing something now, and I would rather have them do it in this way than do nothing at all. When the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier appointed that commission, headed by Professor Robertson and including a number of able men, we certainly created the impression that in some degree the matter was a Dominion one, and I look upon this movement as a belated endeavour on the part of the government to carry out the intentions which the Liberal government had in mind when they appointed that commission.

Such was the opinion of a very eminent member of the government of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, a gentleman whom my right hon. friend has quoted once or twice in his address to-day as an authority of very great eminence.

The attitude of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, as I said, has been consistent on this question. Speaking in this house in 1929 he took the same position that he did to-day. In 1929 the matter came up on a bill to renew the grant which at that time had expired, and my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition said on that occasion, as reported at page 162 of Hansard for 1929:

> There was no thought at the outset that the federal government would be called upon to go further than simply to supply the information to the provinces which would enable them to develop their educational systems along lines of industrial training and technical education.

Evidently that was not the view of the late Mr. Fielding, who was a member of the government that appointed that commission, nor was it the view of Mr. Fielding in this house in 1919 when the bill providing a grant of $10,000,000 was passed. But Mr. Fielding was a staunch supporter of the bill and of the principle.

Mr. EULER: It is conceded, and I made the point a moment ago, that education comes within the purview of the province. What good reason is given for departing from that principle? That is what I should like to know.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The easiest way for me to answer that question, I think, is to refer my hon. friend to a very elaborate speech I made on the constitutional point twenty-five years ago.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend will find in the report of the royal commission to which he has referred that there is there printed an exchange of correspondence between the federal government and the governments of the different provinces. The premiers of the various provinces were approached before the federal government instituted the commission, with respect to what its powers should be, and my recollection is, and I think it will be borne out by the correspondence, that they agreed that no exception could be taken to the federal parliament having information gathered on any subject, but that the commission could not go beyond that, that its duty was to gather information and place the information at the disposal of the provinces. That was the intention of the commission at the outset. I recognize that in 1919 the government of the day went much further than was contemplated by the government that appointed the commission—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not according to Mr. Fielding.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Fielding undoubtedly, from what my hon. friend has quoted, said that the action of the government in 1919 grew out of the measures initiated by the Liberal administration but I am sure that the correspondence will bear me out when I say that when appointments of this commission received the sanction of parliament it was with the distinct understanding that its task began and ended with the gathering of information and the making of a report which should be placed at the disposal of the provinces.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to oppose this resolution in committee. I wish however to make it understood that I should like to reserve my right, when the bill is before the house, possibly to make an amendment in accordance with the tenor of my remarks.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Guthrie thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 53, for the promotion of vocational education in Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved the second reading of Bill No. 41, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Edmonton): I understand that this bill contains only one provision, the purpose of which is to change the personnel of the board and to appoint a commissioner. Probably the minister would make a short explanation of the bill.

Mr. GORDON: The bill has for its purpose the abolition of the present board which now consists of a chairman and two members. The intention is to substitute for the board a single individual who, it is suggested, should be called the director of soldier settlement. The reason for the amendment to the Soldier Settlement Act of 1919 contemplated by this bill is that at the present time the board is not acquiring any further land. The work of the board in a great measure has decreased but there has not been any corresponding decrease in the administrative staff. At the present time the head office is at Ottawa, and by reason of having three commissioners on the board nine separate branches are necessary at the head office. Each branch performs work of a similar character, and a great deal of overlapping takes place. With a single director there will be an immediate saving of administrative expense in connection with the board alone of about $26,000. Under the leadership of a single director there will be required only three branches at the head office, namely, the accounts branch, the agricultural branch and the estates and securities branch. The other districts throughout Canada will be made to conform to the organization at the head office, and the total yearly administrative expense will be reduced. I believe the result will be greater efficiency in the administration of the affairs of the board, and a reduction in cost of over a quarter of a million dollars. I am convinced that this reorganization should take place, and that greater efficiency would be the result.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is it the intention of the government to confer more power, so far as accounting is concerned, upon district inspectors, or as heretofore, will the accounting all be done in the offices in Ottawa? I believe the minister mentioned some powers which would be transferred.

Mr. GORDON: There will be no additional powers conferred upon those in the field.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) in the chair.

On section 1—"Board."

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I ask a question before section 1 is carried. In the reorganization I suppose there will be a complete reorganization of the soldier settlement board. Is it a fact that the whole staff will be reorganized?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, that would occur in the course of reorganization.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will any of the services received by settlers be curtailed?

Mr. GORDON: No; no services will be curtailed. After the reorganization is completed the services contemplated by the statute will probably be of a more efficient character.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Commissioner of the board.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I notice the commissioner of the board means the director of soldier settlement under this section, while under section 1, "board" means the director of soldier settlement. Is there not some inconsistency between the two sections?

Mr. GORDON: The reason the commissioner of the board is interpreted to mean the director of soldier settlement is because there are a number of places in the act of 1919, which is being amended, where certain powers of the board are delegated to a commissioner of the board, as for instance in sections 55 and 56. In order to vest in the director of soldier settlement all the authority the board had, acting as a board, and all the authority of the board acting through one of its members, it was necessary to insert that clause in the interpretation of this amending bill, making the commissioner and the board mean the director.

Mr. ELLIOTT: But under section 1 "board" means the director of soldier settlement. Is there not an inconsistency between the two? In one case "director" means the whole board, and in the next section it means the commissioner, which I assume to be only part of the board.

Mr. GORDON: Let me try to make that clear. Section 3 of the Soldier Settlement Act of 1919 provided:

> The soldier settlement board, as constituted pursuant to the former act. . . .

That was the act of 1917.

> . . . . shall continue to consist of three commissioners, each to hold office during good behaviour, but to be removable by the governor in council at any time for cause and to become ineligible upon attaining seventy years of age.

In order to substitute the director of soldier settlement for the board as contemplated by the law, section 1 is inserted. Then I turn to section 56 of the act being amended, which is a good illustration of why the further interpretation was given. Section 56 reads:

> Any commissioner of the board, or any officer or employee of the board authorized, specifically or generally, in writing, by a commissioner of the board . . . .

The amendment contemplates that the director shall not only have all the powers and privileges of the board acting as such, but also those of any commissioner of the board to whom the board might delegate power. The board has the right to delegate its powers under the act, in certain circumstances, to one of themselves, and the amendment has in contemplation that all those powers and privileges now shall be vested in the one director of soldier settlement.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Will the full power at present vested in the board be turned over to this director? The board really functions as two separate bodies, though with the same personnel. The one body deals with soldier settlement matters, while the other deals with general land settlement matters. Under that branch comes the three thousand family scheme, for example and various other branches of settlement. I notice in the act this official is referred to as the director of soldier settlement only. I wonder if the dual functions of the board will be vested in this new director, and if he will carry on the work of general land settlement as well as the soldier settlement work.

Mr. GORDON: The director of soldier settlement, by this bill, will be vested with the same powers heretofore possessed by the board or any commissioner of the board.

Mr. BOTHWELL: My question has reference to section 1, which has been declared carried. I understood the minister to state that according to the original act the soldier settlement board is described as consisting of a certain number of officials. Therefore in the first section should not the word "board" be changed to "soldier settlement board" as it relates to the director of soldier settlement?

Mr. GORDON: If my hon. friend will refer to the act of 1919 he will see that the word "board" is there interpreted to mean the Soldier Settlement Board of Canada. Subsection 1 of the amending act merely interprets the board to mean the director of soldier settlement, following exactly the same phraseology.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Appointment of director.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are no changes here?

Mr. GORDON: None whatever. With respect to this section, after the bill was printed it was drawn to my attention that no provision had been made for the temporary appointment of a director in case of the absence of the director for a short period. It happens almost daily that documents have to be signed on behalf of the board, and I suggest that there be added as subsection 5 of section 3 the following:

In the absence of the director of soldier settlement, an officer named by the minister shall have the powers and perform the duties of such director.

Mr. CAHAN: I move the amendment.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The director has not that power himself, I take it from the explanation of the minister. Of course there is just one director, while there were three members of the board previously, so I suppose it is necessary for the minister to have that power. I was going to suggest, however, that since the director is to be vested with all the powers possessed by the former board, he might have sufficient authority to name a substitute.

Mr. GORDON: This is only to provide for a substitute in case the director should become ill or be absent, for some reason, from his office. I do not know that I particularly want the responsibility, but it was suggested to me that following similar authority vested by other statutes, the minister should be given the right to appoint someone, probably in the office, to carry on the administrative work of the director during his absence.

Mr. CAHAN: The director might be taken ill suddenly and be quite incapable of appointing a substitute. The appointment might well be made by the minister who is administering the act at the time.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Has the minister the figures now as to the number of holdings abandoned during the last year, or would he rather discuss that matter on the estimates?

Mr. GORDON: I do not think I have that information before me.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: As a matter of fact I was just going to bring up the question of a substitute when the minister presented his amendment. From my own experience in connection with the board I know that from day to day there are situations continually arising which demand immediate executive action. I was going to ask what provision had been made to carry on during the temporary absence of the director, but I think this amendment meets that difficulty.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is one clause with respect to the salary of the director of soldier settlement. All his functions seem to be similar to those of a deputy minister. Is it the intention that there shall be any difference between the salary of the director and that paid to deputy ministers?

Mr. GORDON: If the government is able to procure the services of a very efficient man —and I trust we shall be able to do so either from the present staff or elsewhere—he will be adequately remunerated; but the question of salary has not been given consideration.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I agree with my hon. friend that there should be adequate remuneration. But in the public service it creates unrest if officials other than deputy ministers receive salaries higher than those paid to deputy ministers. I wanted to ascertain from my hon. friend whether by leaving the act in its present form, which gives the minister practically a free hand in fixing the salary, it is contemplated to go beyond the salary of a deputy minister, or whether he would give the committee the assurance that this official will not have, by virtue of his salary, a higher rank in the public service than that of deputy minister.

Mr. GORDON: It was never in my mind, nor do I think it is in the mind of the government, that the director should be placed higher in rank or salary than a deputy minister.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Could the minister give an estimate of the number of employees in the central office here who may be retired in consequence of this change?

Mr. GORDON: At the present time there are three members of the board and a staff of thirteen at an annual cost of a little over $40,000. Under the proposed reorganization there will be one director and a staff of four at an annual cost of about $15,000. I have not the figures for the head office, because the reorganization has not been completed, but I can give information with respect to the staff generally. In August last the total staff numbered 526; since then a gradual reorganization has taken place. I thought it desirable not to make a sweeping reorganization at the beginning of winter, but all the staff knew that the reorganization would take place. As of May 26, 1931, the staff had been reduced from 526 to 393, with a reduction in administration expenses from $973,014 to $759,600. The reduction of the staff up to date is 133, and the annual saving amounts to $213,414. From the reports I am receiving I believe that the settlers are more content under the reorganized plan, which I hope will be completed in the course of a year.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: My question was hardly along the lines of the general reorganization; I may discuss that when the estimates are before the house. I wanted to know what the immediate effect of this change would be on the central office, and what number of officials might be retired in addition to the members of the board in consequence of the change.

Mr. GORDON: As a result of the abolition of the board, a staff of 31 will not be required at the head office; 27 of those have already been retired, and possibly 4 others, but I have not been advised as to the latter; that is, both directly and indirectly as the result of the substitution of one director for the original three.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: My question refers simply to this change as indicated in the act, not to the general administration.

SUPPLY—UNEMPLOYMENT

STATEMENT OF MR. NEILL ON MOTION OF MR. GUTHRIE, FOR THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity once more to impress upon the government the urgent necessity of holding a conference with the provinces in connection with the subject of unemployment. I have brought this subject up several times already, and I would not bring it up again if it were not that in addition to the facts that I presented before there has since been a growing weight of circumstances, and also a very definite growth of public sentiment.

On the 31st of March I said:

> I believe that next winter the unemployment situation will be worse than it was last year.

Events are rapidly corroborating that statement. I also referred to the fact that a delegation had gone down from Nanaimo to Victoria asking the provincial government what they were going to do to relieve the situation in the coal mining area, which was then in a very bad condition. It has got worse since. I also mentioned that Premier Tolmie was going to come down to Ottawa to ask that $100,000 be granted to the city of Vancouver, without the city being asked to contribute on a fifty-fifty basis, because they were out of money and in a desperate condition. Later, on May 7, I called the attention of the house to the unemployment situation as regards the logging industry, and also to the fact that two towns in British Columbia, which I named, had advertised that men were not to come to those places because there were already 600 men looking for work and unable to obtain it. I ended by impressing upon the government the need for an immediate conference with the provinces on the question of unemployment. Apropos of this, the following headline appears in the evening papers to-day:

Winnipeg Jobless Wreck Labour-Saving Machine

That shows what men will do when they are desperate. We will go across the continent, beginning with Winnipeg. The following appeared recently:

Hon. W. R. Clubb, Minister of Public Works, is on his way to Ottawa to urge the Dominion government to continue direct unemployed relief during the summer months.

It will be noticed that that refers to the summer months. Before we were discussing winter relief, but we have to face an immediate situation. The report continues:

He will also ask for a readjustment of the basis upon which the relief has been granted.

We come next to Vancouver, where the following was published:

Expenditures of the city relief department in the first four months of this year amounted to $290,403, which is $27,103 more than the sum estimated for the period.

The report continues:

Estimates and expenditures are as follows:

For April:

April, estimate, $43,700; expenditure, $56,545.

That is a month when ordinarily there would be little or no relief required. The report continues:

The relief officer drew the committee's attention to the "continued serious condition of unemployment in the city." Instead of the usual seasonal improvement in April he said there appears to have been a decrease in the number of men employed in Vancouver. Dominion reports, he said, show a decrease of almost 1,700 workers in that period.

These conditions, said the officer, are reflected in the department's records; and since April 1 married unemployed cases have increased to 1,346, an advance of 269. This total, he said, is greater than any in the past winter.

Note that. The report continues:

The city has already drawn this situation to the attention of the federal and provincial governments, remarking that the city cannot adequately cope with it. Acknowledgment of the letter was received, but no further progress has been made.

[Mr. Neill.]

Hence the necessity for bringing this matter before the house. The report continues:

"The present situation shows that the council's forecast was only too correct," states Colonel Cooper. "The city's inability to cope with the situation is even more pronounced than on March 28. I would, therefore, recommend that the strongest possible representations be made, in order to convince the governments of the need for prompt and effective action."

Then we have the mayor of Vancouver, a man of some repute, reported in Winnipeg as follows:

Admitting a national responsibility, Premier Bennett should call the governments of the four western provinces and the mayors of the larger cities to an unemployment conference, Mayor L. D. Taylor of Vancouver stated in an interview here last night. If Premier Bennett refuses to call such a conference, Mayor Taylor declared that he and Mayor R. H. Webb, of Winnipeg would themselves take the responsibility of calling this meeting early in July at either Edmonton or Calgary, whichever city was most convenient for those taking part.

The report continues:

The unemployment situation in western Canada, he told Mr. Bennett, was likely to remain acute "for at least another year," and everybody should recognize it as a national emergency, he declared, and act accordingly.

The city of Vancouver, he told Mr. Bennett, was willing to care for its own. But last winter it had had 10,000 unemployed single men who are non-residents to feed and house. In fifteen months the city had paid $1,000,000 for emergency relief. It could not shoulder this burden for another year.

We should have an adequate program of public works to be carried on throughout the west. This is the belief of Mayor Taylor of Vancouver and of Mayor Webb of Winnipeg, the latter being a well-known friend of the government of the day. The next report comes from Saanich, a semi-rural and semi-urban municipality on Vancouver island, and reads as follows:

The problem of unemployment will be much more serious next winter than it was last year.

Then we come to Nanaimo. I received the following telegram from the president of the board of trade of Nanaimo:

Local conditions very serious. Seven hundred eighty men out employment in this district. City Nanaimo near end of its resources. Council, board trade and merchants met Hon. Bruhn, Minister of Public Works last night. Minister fully understands seriousness situation due to non-operation coal mines and realizes that immediate action necessary but cannot take any steps alleviate situation until federal government decide what proportion inevitable burden they are going assume.

I brought that matter up in the house yesterday and received the usual stereotyped reply that if something else happened something else would happen; that it was a "purely provincial matter", and "that if it is found that the municipal and provincial authorities cannot relieve the situation, there is no doubt that proper steps will be taken, and taken without delay, by this government, to assist." The government has been told time and again that this situation exists. The word of a minister of the crown in the province of British Columbia should not be treated lightly when he says the condition requires alleviation. A report in this connection reads as follows:

The Hon. R. W. Bruhn, Minister of Public Works in the provincial government, paid a visit to the city yesterday, and last night in the city hall, met a large delegation consisting of members of the city council, members of the Retail Merchants' Association, and members of the board of trade.

The chairman stated that there was no immediate hope or prospect of any improvement in the situation, and asked the assistance of the government. The city, he said, had done what it could, and was still prepared to do what it could, but the government would have to find relief for these men out of work. The report continues:

Mr. Bruhn explained that he was quite familiar with the facts of the situation, and realized that something would have to be done and at once. The provincial government was prepared to do its part, but was seeking the cooperation of the federal government. He had sent telegrams to Ottawa but had as yet received no definite reply upon which action could be taken. He could promise nothing until the return of Premier Tolmie, and he could not see that the province could undertake any further relief work until the federal government promised to do its share.

I suggest that some kind of political tracer be sent out to locate this Hon. Mr. Tolmie, because he seems to be lost. Where is our wandering boy to-night? He is not here and he does not appear to be there; he does not appear to be anywhere when he is urgently needed. If he is a requisite necessity in the program, by all means let us get hold of him at any cost. Another local man of good standing reported that the situation is appalling because of the coal mines having been shut down. The same situation obtains at Cumberland—which is in my district and in which I am naturally most interested—where one of the mines have been shut down. They have appealed to the government but have been informed that nothing can be done until some remote and distant period. We now come to Victoria where the Hon. W. A. McKenzie, who is I understand the chairman of the government committee dealing with unemployment, is reported on March 12 as having said:

A national conference on unemployment to be held at the earliest possible date, and to line up plans for handling unemployment relief next winter, was urged in a government statement by Hon. W. A. McKenzie, Minister of Labour.

"Now is the time to shape these preparations and the sooner a conference, national in scope, is called, the better," Mr. McKenzie said.

"What we should do at this time of the year, when unemployment is least serious, is to consider as a nation what we should and what we can do to relieve unemployment in the slack winter months. There is no use putting our heads in the sand like ostriches, as if no unemployment problem would face us again. We look for improving conditions and believe the improvement has set in, but it will be the worst kind of folly to make no plans this summer for meeting an unemployment situation next winter. Let us face this issue and line up definite programs which can be put into prompt and efficient operation if and when the necessity arises."

That is from Victoria, the head of the government, and at least one of the prominent men in it. That is the situation. We find these four cities in British Columbia, and also the city of Winnipeg, which is a very large one, asking not only for some action for next winter but for immediate relief and for the calling of a conference at once. They do not want it next winter or next fall; they want it now, and they say so at length. More than that, they say that some definite allotment of the money will have to be arranged. The cities are not now able to put up 50 per cent of the cost, and it is no use disguising that fact. In British Columbia we are limited by law to a certain amount that we can borrow in proportion to our assessment rolls. Many of the cities have reached that point and they cannot legally borrow more. Where are they to find the money? That situation has to be faced between the provinces and the Dominion, and the sooner it is faced, the better.

There is another thing that will have to be attended to. For example, in the little town in which I live the provincial government, in my opinion, imposed upon us a condition not required by the federal regulations. The undertaking was that we should pay 50 per cent of the cost of the relief work, the province 25 per cent and the Dominion 25 per cent. What did the province do? I cannot find it in any regulation made by this government, and the regulations were printed and distributed. We were compelled to put up all the cost of the material. If we built a sidewalk, we had to put up the whole of the cost of the lumber and we were given only 50 per cent of the labour cost. I cannot find any provision of this kind in the act. I cannot say that this was graft, because it was not graft in the sense of somebody making money by it, but it was a gross injustice to the smaller towns, and I hope when we are discussing the subject of the distribution of more money, we shall be protected. I warned the government at the time that they should keep the control in their own hands, and then they would be responsible. Very little complaint can be made against this government in connection with the way the money was handled, because they gave it to the provinces, and then when we come with our complaints, they say, as I predicted they would: It is the provinces that are handling the money; we cannot control them. In some cases the Dominion officials acted promptly when a complaint was made to them for the purpose of investigation, but it was the provinces who used the money unfairly and politically.

Mr. GORDON: Has the hon. member any instances he can give?

Mr. NEILL: Yes, if the house will give me another forty minutes.

Mr. GORDON: Will the hon. member give me them now or afterwards?

Mr. NEILL: I cannot do so now; but I am quite willing to come to the minister's office and give him the details. I am sorry I have not time to go into them now. There are instances like this: If you go into the matter, they will not say: This is politics. Of course not. They will say: Tom Jones was refused relief because he did not own any land in the district; and then they will say: Bill Smith was denied relief because he had land and therefore did not need relief. That was the way it was done. They do not say: This man voted wrongly; he is not going to get a job.

Mr. ARTHURS: Was that done by the municipalities?

Mr. NEILL: No, the municipalities ran things fairly. This was outside of the municipalities in what is known as unorganized territory and it was done by the province. In the municipalities it was run all right, because they comprised men on both sides of politics. The municipalities did it fairly and squarely; I have not a thing to say against their conduct.

My suggestion is that the conference should be held now, for two reasons: first, to deal with the immediate distress, the distress that is now existing in some parts of the country; and, second, to formulate some scheme to handle the relief that will undoubtedly be needed next winter, and vote the necessary funds. It may be said that it is useless to have this conference now as regards next winter; that we can have it after the house has prorogued. If we wait until parliament prorogues, where are we going to get the money next winter?—because it will be not $20,000,000 but $30,000,000 that will be required. Assuming, however, that $20,000,000 will be required, and parliament prorogues without voting it, where are we to get the money? The obvious answer of course will be by governor general's warrant. But the government could not take that position, because that is the very opposite of the position they took last year. It was thrown up to me time and again in the election that I was not in favour of holding an immediate sitting of the house to vote money for relief. I said that this could be done by governor general's warrant, and this was made the subject of an attack upon me. Surely we cannot conclude that the government will now turn around and do the very thing they rejected last year. If they do so they would be admitting that the session held last September was needless and a wasteful expense. Where is the money to be found if it is not voted before parliament prorogues?

Those are the two reasons on which I base my demand, without any political aspect to the matter at all. A further reason why we should have the conference now while the house is sitting is that it would have the advantage of the presence in Ottawa of able men—whether they belong to one party or the other, it matters not—from the various provinces, who could give the local information needed. For these reasons I wish to impress upon the government the necessity of an immediate conference, in order to give immediate assistance, in order to arrange for a winter program, and in order to have the money voted while we are here to vote it.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) when he has to bring this matter up on the motion to go into supply, has evidently despaired of getting any satisfactory answer from the government with respect to their attitude on unemployment. During this session some attempts have been made, but without much success, to ascertain the attitude of the government. I can recall at the moment the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) asking several times what the government proposed to do with respect to unemployment, but he received no reply. In fact, instead of an answer there was a show of complete indifference with respect to the question. When on one occasion I tried to discuss the subject in the house there was a report in the press to the effect that 6,000 unemployed had paraded in Winnipeg. At that time the house ruled against me; it decided that this was not a question of national importance.

To what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has said I can add by saying that I have a knowledge of what has transpired in my own district. In the towns of Kenora and Fort Frances there are hundreds of unemployed, although those towns are not very large centres. Moreover, we have the spectacle of the provincial government appropriating only $5,000,000 for highway construction this year, whereas last year, just prior to the election, they appropriated $10,000,000. We have endeavoured to elicit from the federal government some indication of what they are going to do in connection with highway construction as was promised by them during the election, but we have not succeeded in getting it. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni, therefore, is quite justified in bringing the matter up on the motion to go into supply, not, as I understand it, as a vote of lack of confidence in the government, but to try to ascertain just what the government proposes to do with respect to this question.

Mr. NEILL: I did not move an amendment.

Mr. HEENAN: That is what I said. I said that I understood the hon. member did not move an amendment. It is difficult to find out where under the procedure we can discuss these matters. The other day, along with other members, I endeavoured to discover where we could discuss the question of the national highway which was promised by the Prime Minister, and we were told that because there was no item in the estimates, we could not discuss it. I should like to find out from the government what they propose to do in the matter. I am interested more particularly in my own riding at the moment, but as unemployment prevails in all parts of the country I should like to know what the government's policy is. Surely there is enough evidence that we have unemployment in this country. I have on my desk now a clipping showing that six young men were fined at Alexandria the other day because, being unemployed, they had not sufficient money to pay their poll tax. I take it for granted that the six young men all voted for the Conservative party at the last election to give the government a chance to carry out its pledge to the electors to end unemployment, yet we find ten months after the government is returned to power that these six men are fined because, owing to their being unemployed, they cannot raise $5 to pay their poll tax. I hope they will know how to vote next time.

I have here an editorial from the Alberta Labour News of May 23 last. I shall not read it as it is quite lengthy, but the editorial pictures the hundreds of men who are out of employment in Edmonton, and concludes with this paragraph:

> The men who are eating the porridge are sleeping in box cars, in any old vacant shed, in the lee of a building, anywhere. Why should Edmonton refuse to do what Calgary has done, in providing a bed and one substantial meal a day for the unemployed, in addition to the operation of the porridge kitchen?

Surely the hon. gentleman who represents the Minister of Labour in this house needs no further evidence that unemployment prevails throughout the country. Yet when the government was asked a question regarding unemployment the other day by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, their answer was this:

> The situation referred to by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) is, as no doubt the house understands, purely a provincial matter.

I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, how it has become a provincial matter when it was a national matter during the campaign. The answer goes on to say:

> If it is found that the municipal and provincial authorities cannot relieve the situation, there is no doubt that proper steps will be taken, and taken without delay, by this government, to assist.

Hon. members will perhaps recall the answer that was given to me when I was Minister of Labour when I suggested that this was a provincial and a municipal obligation. The minister in his answer, which I have just quoted, says that "proper steps will be taken by the government, and taken without delay, to assist." What I, and I am sure the house too, would like to know is, what are the proper steps to be taken by the government, and when are they going to be taken? How long will the unemployed be allowed to remain in their present condition before the government of Canada make a positive declaration as to what they propose to do in the matter? We have evidence that the municipalities are not going on with different public works because they want to know what assistance they are going to receive from the province, and we have the provinces, in turn, withholding action until they find out what the Dominion government is going to do. The question that is now raised by my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni is, as I understand it, what is the Dominion government going to do, and when are they going to do it?

This government, let me remind the house, was elected on a definite pledge to end unemployment. Up to the present time, since the government has come into office, unemployment has increased rather than decreased. After the government gave that pledge to the electors to end unemployment, and assumed the responsibility of office, after their declaration that unemployment relief was not a provincial or municipal obligation, but a national obligation, why are they now simply waiting, sitting in their seats, and not telling the house and the country what attitude they are going to take with respect to unemployment? I had always thought that unemployment relief was a question for the municipalities and the provinces. In that regard I followed the lead of the ex-premier of Ontario, Mr. Howard Ferguson, who invariably declined to look upon it as other than a municipal obligation. We have sufficient evidence of that. Then in 1921 we had the Conservative government passing an order in council which began by stating that the unemployment question was a provincial and a municipal responsibility. When the Conservative party appealed to the electors in 1930 they declared that this was not a provincial or a municipal responsibility at all, but a federal responsibility. But the very first act of the new government, at the special session last September, was to bring in a bill which on the face of it declared that the question was a municipal and a provincial one.

Unemployment is undoubtedly on the increase. We have the government's own statistics to prove that. There is suffering all over the country. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni has told us quite plainly of the suffering entailed in some parts of the country. I have spoken of the suffering in northern Ontario, where delegations have gone down from some of the towns to Toronto to interview the provincial government. I might mention the town of Sturgeon Falls, the town of Espanola. In my own town of Kenora and in Fort Frances, the pulp mills are working about only one month out of the whole twelve. And mind you, that is because of the attitude of the provincial government. The provincial government has agreements with these industrial concerns which obligates them to work ten months in each and every year, yet for some reason or other they have released these concerns from their obligation as contained in those agreements, so I think the provincial government must assume some responsibility to the citizens of that part of the country.

[Mr. Heenan.]

But apart from all that, the federal Conservative party is undoubtedly on record as declaring to the electors of this country that if they were elected in 1930 they would take upon themselves the responsibility of curing unemployment as a national problem. Yet only the other day the minister stated on the floor of this house, in answer to a question from the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, that undoubtedly, as no doubt the house understood, this was a provincial and a municipal responsibility.

I was struck with the argument of my right hon. leader this afternoon when he pointed out that wherever there is a division of authority, with one party passing the buck to someone else, we never get anywhere. Today we find provinces that will not inaugurate old age pensons, believing that it is a federal responsibility. Because the federal government first of all contributed 50 per cent of the old age pensions, some of the provinces now want the federal government to contribute 100 per cent. But the worst feature of all is this, that we find provincial governments, like the government of Ontario, for instance, refusing to go on with provincial undertakings unless the federal government contributes a proportion of the cost. That is a position which they never took before.

The question which has been brought up by my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni is deserving of an answer from the government. So far as I am concerned I consider that the federal government should do what they promised to do—take the responsibility of finding employment for the workpeople of Canada, of dealing with the unemployed, and of bringing in a system of unemployment insurance in order to take care of our workpeople when unemployed.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few words to what has been said by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) concerning the unemployment situation in British Columbia and particularly in regard to the city of Vancouver. Yesterday I received a communication from the relief officer for the city of Vancouver outlining conditions of unemployment in that city. I can assure you that knowing the situation which existed there last year and having before me the figures he has forwarded to me, the situation at the present time is much worse than it was a year ago.

I have before me a letter which was addressed by an official of the city of Vancouver to the Hon. W. A. McKenzie, Minister of Labour in the provincial legislature, part of which I should like to read. The information the letter contains will give an indication of the serious conditions existing in Vancouver. It says:

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that at a meeting held on March 28th, the Vancouver city council considered the question of recommendations regarding the unemployment problem, following interviews between your committee and city representatives on March 24th and 25th.

It was decided to place before the provincial government the following facts regarding the situation in Vancouver:

Employed on relief work under the Unemployment Relief Act, 1930, are 2,200 married men.

On direct unemployment relief are 1,111 families, an increase of 385 since March 1st.

Hon. members will note that this letter indicates an increase while, in ordinary years, we would expect at this time of the year a decrease in the number of unemployed. The letter continues:

Single men on direct unemployment relief number 1,800.

Regarding the immediate future, the completion of projects under the Unemployment Relief Act, and the exhaustion of the funds which the city has been able to raise to match the governmental contribution, will cause a steady increase in the number of married men on direct relief. The relief works will probably be completed about April 30th.

It is understood that the government appropriation for direct relief will be exhausted about April 24th. It is estimated that on that date there will be in the city, eligible for relief, at least 1,600 married men and 1,500 single men, and by May 15th, two weeks before the expiration of the present Unemployment Relief Act, there will probably be at least 2,000 married men and 1,000 single men, or in other words, approximately 11,000 people to be provided with the necessities of life.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

SECOND READING

Bill No. 52, to amend the Board of Management of the Canadian District of the Evangelical Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio and other states, and to change its name to the Board of Management of the Canadian District of the American Lutheran Church—Mr. Gershaw.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

NATURE OF SPEECHES ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS TO DETERMINE UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth for the second reading of Bill No. 19, to amend the criminal code.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) I should like to say a few words in support of this bill.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in bringing forward this amendment, made certain references to what had taken place in certain cities of this dominion in reference to free assembly and free speech, with particular reference to the city of Toronto. It is very difficult to deal with this amendment without knowing really what occurred in that city.

It has been suggested by some who are opposing the amendment that there is a section of the criminal code having to do with unlawful assembly which is quite sufficient as it now stands. I am almost inclined to believe that is quite correct, but the difficulty we find here is that the police commissioners in many cities suspend, as it were, the criminal code as far as unlawful assembly is concerned and make rules and regulations of their own to cover the circumstances of the case. The code, as I see it, lays down that the gathering itself and what is said at the gathering must be the criterion for a conclusion as to whether or not the assembly is unlawful. However, unless a meeting is allowed to take place I cannot see how it possibly can be said to be an unlawful assembly. There is a provision in the code itself for preventing gatherings under certain conditions—section 99—and the procedure is by proclamation of the governor in council. If it is intended, therefore, that any authority should set aside any section of the criminal code, that action should be done in the same manner, by proclamation of the governor in council.

As to what really was intended in the city of Toronto I should like again to draw attention to a quotation made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in this connection. I refer to a letter from Colonel Biggar, formerly chief electoral officer. Before a person can qualify as a candidate during a federal election there are very strict regulations with which he must comply. Having done so he has fulfilled the law and is entitled to stand as a candidate for election to the Dominion parliament, and it is taken for granted, I believe, that he is entitled to express his opinion on the public platform at least in the constituency in which he is standing for election. In Toronto this right was interfered with. The quotation I wish to give from Colonel Biggar's letter is as follows:

> The real question raised by these and Mr. Cohen's present letter is the question whether in Toronto the police are enforcing the law or are persecuting persons who hold opinions of which they disapprove, by the confiscation of printed matter found in their possession, by physical violence, by the misuse of licensing powers, and by threat of the institution of criminal proceedings for which there is no foundation.

I am not quite sure whether the amendment will help clarify the section in reference to unlawful assembly in order to cover a case of this kind, but I rather think this Dominion was fortunate in having a man like Colonel Biggar as chief electoral officer. He drew the attention of the police of the city of Toronto to what they could and could not do in connection with preventing the gathering of people who did not hold the same views as they held.

The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), in opposing this bill said as follows, at page 1277 of Hansard:

> I submit to you, sir, and to the hon. members of this house, that the law as it now stands is perfectly clear and needs no clarifying, and further, that the privileges of any honest citizen in this country are to-day amply safeguarded under the existing provisions of the criminal code.

It seems that according to the police in Toronto, an honest citizen is anyone who holds the same opinions held by the police commissioners, and consequently it follows that all the others are dishonest. I understand that the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) was asked to address the Canadian Club in Toronto. At the same time he was asked to address another association, the Fellowship of Reconciliation. He was allowed to address the Canadian Club, but the other association could not get a hall in which to hold its meeting. I take it that not only were the privileges of this association interfered with, but that the privileges of the hon. member for Bow River were also interfered with.

Mr. GEARY: Will the hon. member tell me who interfered with the privileges of the hon. member for Bow River?

Mr. MacINNIS: The police commission of the city of Toronto.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. GEARY: Does the hon. member know that? Probably he has heard somebody tell somebody else that somebody said so.

Mr. MacINNIS: Well, let us say I heard the hon. member for Bow River say so. Would that not be sufficient knowledge?

Mr. GEARY: The hon. member is here, and he will not say so.

Mr. MacINNIS: Anyone who has knowledge to the contrary may say so, but in the meantime I think my statement stands.

Mr. PECK: What was the nature of the interference?

Mr. MacINNIS: They could not get a hall in which to meet. That is the point I wish to make; the privileges of citizens are being interfered with. Later on, the hon. member for Northumberland, N.B. (Mr. McDade), speaking against the amendment, questioned the right of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for North Winnipeg to speak for what he called that large section of the community known as the labour element. I do not think the member for Winnipeg North Centre put forward the amendment in the interest of any class, but rather in the interest of what we always used to term the British institutions of free assembly and free speech. The hon. member for Northumberland, N.B., referred to two other citizens from his province and said:

> I would far rather take the advice and counsel of such outstanding labour men in the province of New Brunswick as Mr. John S. Martin, former Labour member of the legislative assembly at Fredericton, or of Mr. Stanley S. Fleiger, of the town of Chatham, than that of my hon. friends opposite. The men I have mentioned, I submit, represent true Canadian labour; their judgment is sound and their capacity is unquestioned.

I think those of us who know both the member for Winnipeg North Centre and the member for North Winnipeg will agree that their views are sound, and that at least, with the exception of one other, they are the only representatives that labour definitely has in this house.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, no.

Mr. MacINNIS: However, I am going to read parts of a letter received from Mr. John S. Martin, one of the persons mentioned by the hon. member for Northumberland, to show that he and other Labour men in New Brunswick agree with the position taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The letter is dated May 14, 1931, is addressed to Mr. J. S. Woodsworth and, in part, is as follows:

The reason for this letter arose from the debate in the house on Tuesday, May 6, re your amendment to the Criminal Code. My name as well as the name of a particular friend of mine, Stanley Fleiger, was mentioned by the member for our county, Northumberland. His remarks might lead you to believe that he was authorized to use our names and that he was further authorized to speak for Labour. Such is not the case.

I am a vice-president of the New Brunswick Federation of Labour for the northern section of the province and you have my support in the bill you presented as well as in any other efforts you put forward in behalf of the workers notwithstanding what any party politician may have said in the past or may say in the future.

The fact that my name was brought into the debate only came to my attention to-day. I immediately 'phoned the president of the New Brunswick Federation of Labour, Mr. Eugene Steeves of Moncton, and was informed by him that your amendment to the Criminal Code has his hearty support. So you are now aware that you had a right to speak for Labour in the province of New Brunswick as well as other sections of Canada. . . .

Now, sir, what I have said re your right to speak for Labour in this section is endorsed by Stanley Fleiger, the other name mentioned by Mr. McDade.

You are at liberty to use, if you so desire, anything that I have written in this letter in part or whole, and if at any time you should want information on any matter in this section I will be pleased to assist in any way I can.

I am sure that if at any time you pay a visit to this province I will be very glad to make arrangements so that you can meet the people whom you represent.

John S. Martin.

Now, I do not think that letter should leave any doubt in the minds of anyone as to whom the member for Winnipeg North Centre is representing not only in his own constituency but in various other parts of the Dominion. As I said before, the amendment will help to clarify the section in regard to unlawful assembly. But what, I think, is needed more than anything else is someone in authority who will inform the police commissioners in our various cities that they cannot at their will and pleasure thrust aside the laws of this land and make regulations to suit their own purposes.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr Speaker, it seems to me a strange thing that if you happen to be of some particular church persuasion or of some well-known political affiliation freedom of speech is accorded you almost without any restriction, but if you happen to be the member of a labour party or one of the independent groups that freedom of speech is sometimes criticized and it is suggested that it would be better if you were put under a ban. Fortunately most of us do not live in a city so convinced of its own righteousness as the city of Toronto. In most parts of this country we are, comparatively speaking, free to express our viewpoint upon conditions and upon affairs that are before the public for consideration. But it seems that in the city of Toronto you endanger almost your liberty—yes, you do endanger your liberty if you express any radical views on almost any matter whatever. At the same time you will find men like Mr. Beatty going up there and giving expression to a thought on the cancellation of war debts and getting away with it; but if we even here in the House of Commons suggested the cancellation of war debts—as we did in 1923—we are assailed both by hon. members and by the press as being unpatriotic, as being quite disloyal citizens and unworthy of the positions that we hold. Words to exactly that effect were used about us when we did make that recommendation. I looked with interest to the Mail and Empire, the Orange Sentinel, the Globe and one or two other strange publications from that city in order to find some criticism of Mr. Beatty's radical utterance, but there was only praise for a statesmanlike pronouncement of a policy that should have been expressed long ago!

Some years ago I clipped from the Manitoba Free Press a paragraph which at that time interested me enormously. I found that in Winnipeg at any rate one could express himself with the utmost freedom, one could urge sedition, one could say, for example, that no great social or economic change had ever been accomplished in any nation of the world without revolution, without overthrowing constituted authority,—and all this, if you please, at a meeting of some society for the celebration of St. George's day. Let me give the house an idea of what some people can get away with, but what, economic students or those who are considering the actual conditions that face the common people and trying to propose remedies for them must not speak—at least in Toronto, with its police force under the commissionership of a gentleman who has no more understanding of economics or the effect of them on the people than perhaps have some hon. gentlemen in this house.

Mr. FACTOR: If the hon. member will permit me? Has anybody ever stopped my hon. friend from addressing the Canadian club in Toronto?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No. You see, the Canadian club there is a respectable body, and I must say it is also a very hospitable body and a very attentive body—and apparently a very intelligent body even for Toronto.

Mr. JACOBS: Did the hon. member make any converts there?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I doubt it very much. However, there is always hope, because it is not so many years since the hon. member himself would hardly have said the same things that he is quite willing to say to-day—at least after dinner. Mr. R. B. Graham, K.C., a fairly well known gentleman—

An hon. MEMBER: A magistrate.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, I am informed he is a magistrate now. He was proposing the toast to "England" before the Royal St. George society. The hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Factor) will appreciate that it is all right before audiences of this kind to say quite violent things, but one must not say them at labour meetings; that is altogether improper. Let me read this clipping:

> The occasion was the annual St. George's night dinner of the society over which the president, Jackson Dodds, O.B.E., presided as chairman.

I understand that Mr. Jackson Dodds is also a very respectable man. He is, I think, the president or vice president of the bankers' association, or something like that.

> Music was furnished during and after the dinner—

So you see they stayed while the speeches were being made.

> —by the regimental band of Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry—

And by one or two other gentlemen who contributed solos. The address delivered by this gentleman in the presence of these august and representative Canadian citizens was in the following terms:

> No nation ever became truly great save by successful sedition and revolution. The lamp and the torch and the tumult have overcome tyranny. The signature of King John was placed to the Magna Charta, wrenched from him by the nobles; revolution led King Charles to the block; the corn law riots—these were crimes against the law and seditions, but no one hangs his head in shame because of them. "Liberty, equality, fraternity," were no mere catchwords as in the French revolution, but the expression of the earnest striving for the substance that lies behind the words.

I submit that if any member of the Labour party in this house used words of that kind in Toronto he would be put in gaol. It was riots which brought about these improvements of economic conditions and, as I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said already, it may require riots to bring some indication of appreciation of conditions to hon. members of this house, particularly on the government side. We have an illustration appearing in the newspapers. Fifteen hundred men applied for a job in Winnipeg which had been advertised as requiring one hundred men. Fourteen hundred men were disappointed, and what did they do? There was a riot and they broke up the machines. The only thing which relieves such pressure is the possibility on the part of the people concerned of discussing their problems. Continue the policy of the suppression of free speech and as surely as I am standing here you will drive underground and make stronger the forces antagonistic to society, as has been evidenced here. One of the finest outlets for this pressure is to have some form of safety valve such as is found in freedom of discussion.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Did these men have a trial?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If my hon. friend the Deputy Speaker (Mr. LaVergne), who is so bitter in matters relating to labour problems, free speech, and the socialization of conditions as we have them to-day, would be more tolerant and less like Toronto, his utterances in this country would be restored to their old virility.

Mr. LAVERGNE: The hon. member must be mistaken, because I am in favour of the bill. I was just wanting to know whether these men had had a trial in Toronto.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Whether they were tried in Toronto?

Mr. LAVERGNE: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No.

Mr. LAVERGNE: How could they have been arrested and not have had a trial?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): These men were not arrested at all. I am giving an illustration of how you can get away with it if you are a "respectable" person appearing before a "respectable" audience, but if you happen to be a labour man addressing a labour audience, particularly in Toronto, you would be put behind the bars for using the very words employed in this instance. I am satisfied that if the inward thoughts, and sometimes the privately uttered thoughts, of many of the hon. members of this house on both sides were made public, in Toronto, the hon. members concerned would be in danger of being put in gaol.

The purpose of the hon. member in introducing this amendment is to make it clear to police commissions and to the cities that Canada intends to pursue the old British ideal of free speech and liberty to express one's thoughts so long as they do not urge armed revolution or direct action at the moment. Permission is to be given to people to endeavour to convert others to their philosophy, whether it be the Russian philosophy, to which my hon. friend takes objection, or a philosophy atheistic in character so long as it is not calculated to be a breach of the peace. Free speech should be permitted in this country.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Is there not a statute in Ontario—there is one in Quebec—under which any meeting could be made legal?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not a lawyer and I have not had time to look into all the statutes. I only know the facts. A respectable body of citizens in the city of Toronto—the city has gone to extremes in this respect—composed of such well known and splendid characters as Doctor Salem Bland, Rabbi Eisendrath and others, was prevented from securing a suitable hall in which to hold a meeting. This organization, known as the Fellowship of Reconciliation, was compelled to cancel its meeting.

Mr. LAVERGNE: How could they be prevented?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They were prevented.

Mr. LAVERGNE: No one is obliged to rent a hall.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): From his last statement it would seem the hon. gentleman has not been listening to this debate with the same care evidenced by others. I think the hon. gentleman who preceded me, the introducer of the amendment (Mr. Woodsworth), pointed out that by devious methods the police commission of Toronto revoked the licences of the owners or renters of the halls in which it was intended to have meetings of this or other organizations.

Mr. LAVERGNE: There must be a redress in law somewhere.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It may be found that the police commission of Toronto broke the law in taking this action, but they took it.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, I intend to say only a sentence or two in support of the principle of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). It happens that I am one of the people who were refused permission to speak in a hall in the city of Toronto, although at almost the same time I addressed different clubs in that city. The difficulty occurred when the Fellowship of Reconciliation attempted to rent a hall in which to have a public meeting to be addressed by me. I should like to think I was a dangerous person if that term means one who attempts to undo many of the things now existent in Canada. If that term means one who would assist to decentralize finance, for instance, then I should be glad to think I were a dangerous person. However, it might be considered as being conceited to think so, and I do not consider myself as such yet. I was refused the right to address a public meeting.

However, that is not the thought which persuaded me to make a few remarks in support of this bill. Whatever dangers there may be in free speech, and I suppose there are some, they are small indeed as compared to the dangers of the prohibition of free speech. I have always found, and I think other hon. members have had the same experience, that if people utter thoughts which are foolish, while a few people may believe them, in the long run they do not win out. It is sound common sense which wins in the end. I stand for free speech and the right of free assembly. If things are said at these assemblies which would constitute a breach of the peace, the law can take its course and the offenders can be put where they may change or it is to be hoped they will change their minds.

I do not like to say it, but apparently there are hon. members in this house, and there certainly are people in the city of Toronto who think that communistic gatherings and propaganda can be stopped by prohibiting the right of assembly and free speech. That is utter nonsense. Communistic tendencies can be stopped by a return to prosperity, if anyone knows how to bring that about. People who are comfortable are not interested in communistic doctrines; it is the people who are uncomfortable who listen to such talk. The method adopted by the police commission of Toronto was an exceedingly foolish one. Ever since the person at the head of that commission took over his duties there has been one constant turmoil. He may have brought about one sort of peace, but he has created a great deal of disorder in so doing. Apparently he was a man who was out to command, and he wanted everyone else to obey. I think the interference with free speech and assembly is being carried altogether too far. To my great surprise I found that even the liberal-minded city of Montreal had been following the lead given by Toronto, a thing I would never have suspected it of. Even on the prairies which one thinks of as the home of what radical thought we have in Canada, there has been a tendency to follow the lead given by the police commissioners of Toronto. So it is in protest against this that I say that I am most heartily in support of the bill of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth).

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): After all the things that have been said about the city of Toronto, I feel almost like coming to its defence. I was one of those who, like the previous speaker, had great difficulty in finding a place to hold a meeting. The reason I wish to say a word or two in defence of Toronto is because the day I arrived in that city I found that in one of the leading theatres a play written by none other than George Bernard Shaw, was being produced. When I saw that play, which is purely socialistic in its philosophy, produced by an English company, I was rather surprised that the police commission of Toronto had overlooked the fact. Evidently there is still some idea of allowing something in the way of free speech in that city.

Mr. RINFRET: What was the name of the play?

Mr. HEAPS: The Apple Cart. I was very agreeably surprised when I went into the theatre to see sitting not far from me a gentleman who no doubt has something to do with the suppression of free speech in Toronto. I refer to Sir William Mulock. Moreover, sitting in one of the boxes, enjoying the socialistic philosophy of George Bernard Shaw, was none other than the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.

Mr. POULIOT: Did they seem to be enjoying themselves?

Mr. HEAPS: So far as I could make out they seemed to be enjoying the play. So I want to say that in the city of Toronto both the humble and the rich can enjoy something in the way of free speech.

The question has been asked in the house, particularly by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) as to who prevented the obtaining of a hall in which to speak, or at least the inference was that there was no interference by the police of Toronto in connection with the hiring of halls. I think in this instance the hon. member is not quite as fair as he usually is in regard to matters that come before the house.

Mr. GEARY: Is the hon. member aware of the fact that the Labour Temple, which is controlled by the Labour movement, refused to allow a meeting of this nature to be held there?

Mr. HEAPS: There is a difference between the owners of a hall of their own free will refusing to rent a hall for a meeting, and the chief of police or his representative going down to the owner of a hall and threatening him if a meeting is to be held there.

Mr. GEARY: That was not done.

Mr. VALLANCE: During the time the hon. member was in the theatre, was he the guest of one of the Toronto members?

Mr. HEAPS: I certainly was. May I say in answer to the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) that I will give him an incident with which I was personally connected. I was asked to speak at a certain hall in Toronto and before the hall was allowed to be used, the police went down to the hall and threatened the owners that if it was used for a meeting at which I was to speak, they would suffer as a consequence. In addition to that, when they defied the police and held the meeting in the hall, policemen actually came there to see what was going on, whether it was a peaceable meeting, I suppose, or otherwise. Strange as it may appear, when the police arrived at the hall where the meeting was taking place, the gentleman who happened to be speaking that night was none other than Controller Simpson of Toronto. I do not know who was more surprised, the police when they walked in and saw Controller Simpson, who was speaking, or Controller Simpson who was on the platform and saw the police walk in. I have been informed by people who have tried to obtain public halls for meetings of the Labour group, or the Independent group or those who think along our lines, that it is impossible to hire a hall in Toronto on account of the intimidation of the police force of that city. When I spoke there not long ago in the Labour Temple, I was told that before they held the meeting they attempted to get a bigger hall than the Labour Temple, but they were not able to get it for the very reasons I have mentioned.

Mr. POULIOT: Is the city of Toronto not the holy city of modern times?

Mr. HEAPS: I do not know. I know of only one city where I can see the holy cross lit up in the evening, and that is the good city of Montreal.

We have, however, found the same form of intimidation taking place in other cities. I wish to say a word or two in reference to the bill itself. I do not know whether the bill as drafted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will altogether meet the situation. It is quite possible that in spite of what is stated in the bill, the police commission of any city may still have the power to prevent a meeting from taking place. I contend that no police officer or commission should have the right to prevent the holding of a meeting which is in its intent peaceful, which is called for the purpose of discussing public questions. This is what has happened in Toronto and possibly in other cities. I understand, although I have not the actual wording before me, that there is some difference between the wording of our criminal code and that of Great Britain in reference to unlawful assemblies. In our code there are certain words which give power to the authorities to prevent meetings from being held if those authorities in their own minds believe such meetings will likely lead to breach of the peace.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): British tradition has always held to the right of free speech.

Mr. HEAPS: The British tradition of free speech is well known to every hon. member. I was referring to the law in Great Britain and the law in this country. There is some difference in the wording in our law as compared with that of Great Britain. I think, however, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will be an improvement on what we have at the present time. It may to a certain extent take away from the police some of the powers which they have been using in the way of preventing the free expression of thought in Toronto as well as in other parts of Canada. For that reason I wish to support the bill as introduced by my colleague.

Mr. SAMUEL FACTOR (Toronto West Centre): I really did not intend to speak on this question, but I feel that the reputation of Toronto is at stake and I thought as the Toronto representation on this side is numerically small, hon. members opposite would rise to the occasion and defend the fair name of that city. I understand the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) did carry out that duty fairly well the last time the bill was before the house.

In the first place I should like to make this general observation that so far as the internal administration of the police department is concerned, we have in Toronto a very efficient chief of police. Crime is at its lowest ebb in Toronto, and that city is no haven of refuge for any criminal. A great deal of the credit for this is due to the chief of police, and to the fact that there is a very efficient board of police commissioners. I do think, however, in all seriousness that the chief of police and the police commission made a very serious error on the question of free speech, in the first place in assuming that the communists in Toronto are a considerable force. I recall speaking to one of the communists before the election, and he told me that the communist party, which consists of about seven individuals, more or less, could not have got the same amount of publicity that they got by reason of the actions of the Toronto police if they had paid thousands of dollars for it. I really believe that the chief of police and the police commission of Toronto are not in touch with the feelings of the great mass of the people on this question. May I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I am not a communist myself, although perhaps communism as an economic theory may be a proper subject for debate even in this house. Certainly I am not in favour of the adoption of methods of force to advance any theory. I want to assure the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis), who has cited some correspondence that passed between the chief electoral officer and the communist candidate in Toronto West Centre, who obtained two hundred odd votes in the last election, that I spoke in the same manner as the hon. member himself tried to speak. I attended different meetings and the police never tried to stop me from speaking in the last campaign, nor do I think they tried to stop the gentleman who represented the communist party when he was discussing questions of policy or the economic theories that he held. Only when he attempted to abuse and slander the police force of Toronto was he stopped, and I think rightly stopped, by the police.

The police commission, I think, also made a very serious error in adopting a policy of intimidating the owners of various halls and public buildings. The fact is—I must admit it even if I do come from Toronto—that there is difficulty in renting a hall for any man who wants to express ideas in Toronto that are not shared by the majority of the people of that city—ideas that may be considered advanced or radical. I know that the answer of the police is that the owners of the halls are free to rent their halls if they like, but the difficulty is that the chief of police sends around his emissaries to warn the owners that if they do not refrain from renting the hall to men who the police think will advance such ideas, the licence for the coming year will not be renewed, and I presume it is only human nature for any owner of a hall not to rent it after a diplomatic and tactful hint of that kind from the police.

I think that the city of Toronto has got an unenviable reputation by reason of the actions of the police in this matter during the last year or eighteen months. I do not think that the amendment offered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will cure the situation at all. As a matter of fact the first part of this amendment, that "nothing in this section shall restrict or interfere with the right of all persons peacefully to assemble for the purpose of discussing or hearing any discussion upon any matter of public interest" is the law now. Anyone in Toronto can discuss any matter of public interest if he keeps within the law. Of course the difficulty that is created by the authorities in Toronto is due to their interpretation of what is within the law; in other words, the police authorities assume that because a person is notorious as a radical or holds advanced ideas, anything he might say will not be within the law; and that is where the trouble comes in. But under the law as it stands now, any matter of public interest can be discussed in this country, including the city of Toronto.

The rest of the section, which leaves it to "firm and reasonable persons" to decide what is likely to cause an immediate breach of the peace is a rather curious piece of proposed legislation, in my humble opinion because, in the first place, a "firm and reasonable person," if there be such, is not defined, and before this firm and reasonable person will be able to define what is likely to cause an immediate breach of the peace the breach will be committed, and then there will be no need for any definition. I really believe that the amendment offered will not cure the situation at all. I think that the fault lay entirely with our police commission, and that the time is soon coming when the entire functions of the police commission will perhaps have to be changed. The personnel of the police commission is changing or soon will change, and with that change I think that the police force of the city of Toronto, including the chief of police, will assume a reasonable attitude and frame of mind on this question. I do not think that there is anything wrong with the law as it stands, so far as even the city of Toronto is concerned. I believe that the police force in Toronto misinterpreted the law with the result that a handful of communists received a lot of publicity, and with the further result that a great number of people such as the hon. gentlemen in the group to my left were refused permission to speak in the city. I do not know whether that was harmful to the country or not, considering the number of speeches that I have heard in this house from the group to my left. I do want to say, however, that the gentlemen in the corner to my left certainly have no monopoly on political morality or political integrity or freedom of speech. It is unfortunate that some of these gentlemen came to Toronto and could not get a hall to speak in, but I want to assure them, in conclusion, that so far as the city of Toronto is concerned the majority of our people still believe in freedom of speech and still practise freedom of speech, and the time is soon coming when our police will assume a fair and reasonable attitude on this question.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): It appears from the discussion we have had on this bill that it is altogether misnamed. It is not an act to amend the criminal code regarding unlawful assemblies at large, but merely an act to amend the criminal code regarding unlawful assemblies in Toronto, and therefore I think that if the hon. gentlemen in the corner want to achieve their purpose they should amend the proposed subsection 4 by adding words which will make it read thus:

> Nothing in this section shall restrict or interfere with the right of all persons peacefully to assemble in Toronto for the purpose of discussing or hearing any discussion.

The latter part of the subsection should be amended to read as follows:

> Such persons when so assembled in Toronto shall not become an unlawful assembly unless firm and reasonable persons from outside Toronto decide otherwise.

Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I do not rise to abuse the good city of Toronto, but rather to say a word in its favour, which is very unusual for a Liberal member, especially one coming from the province of Quebec. I may say, and this will be no news to many hon. members, that communist assemblies or meetings have also been prohibited in Montreal because in the past they have become unruly. Meetings were prevented because the speeches delivered had in such a way excited the audience that a veritable riot resulted. The speech had to be stopped or harm might have resulted. The trouble I find in the proposed legislation is that it is not so much a piece of legislation as a literary opinion on the subject of free speech. The bill is very vague in its terms. For instance, who is to decide when persons are peacefully assembled for the purpose of discussing any matter? Many people who appear to be peaceful at eight o'clock are not so peaceful at ten or half past ten. Such communistic speakers as my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) will rise and, in the most polished language to which one could listen, will make a speech which would lead one to believe that they were advocating peace, but if one listened for an hour or so he would find that the remarks had taken a different trend. I submit therefore, that if the hon. member has it in mind to promote the cause of free speech, he does not help it by the proposed section. Its terms are so vague that it seems to me still to leave to the discretion of the police the determination of the question whether or not an assembly is peaceful.

Then the expression is used: "in the opinion of firm and reasonable persons." In my opinion the wording should be more precise. By "firm and reasonable persons" does the hon. member refer to members of the Progressive party? Or does he refer to members of parties representing other sections of our population? In any case I repeat that discretion is left to that person to decide whether a meeting should or should not take place.

Certainly I stand for free speech, and on occasions when I am ruled against by Mr. Speaker, and more often by Mr. Deputy Speaker, I feel that nobody should interfere with my speech. At the same time I know from experience in the city of Montreal that some of the meetings which have been stopped should never have been started. I speak not necessarily from a communistic standpoint but from the standpoint of peace and the avoiding of trouble. I am afraid if this bill passes it will do nothing to alter present conditions. Because of the vagueness of its terms the question whether or not a meeting is peaceful, in the opinion of "firm and reasonable persons", is still left to the discretion of some person in authority. These are matters which cannot be determined by statute, but will always reside within the discretion of those charged with the maintenance of law and order not only in the city of Toronto but in every city of the Dominion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the whole burden of this legislation should have fallen upon my—

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre speaks he will close the debate. I suggest that if other hon. members wish to speak they should do so now.

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I ask your permission to cite the section of the law which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) wishes to include in the criminal code as an amendment to a section which already exists. The addition suggested is as follows:

> Nothing in this section shall restrict or interfere with the right of all persons peacefully to assemble for the purpose of discussing or hearing any discussion upon any matter of public interest, and such persons when so assembled shall not become an unlawful assembly merely by reason of speeches made to them or discussion carried on by them unless the general nature and character of such speeches or discussions would be likely, in the opinion of firm and reasonable persons, to cause an immediate breach of the peace.

I understand my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre is not a lawyer. Although undoubtedly he is actuated by the very best motives, I would suggest to him that the insertion of this section as a part of our law, instead of helping the cause which he so earnestly advocates, would set it back. He would be jumping from the frying pan into the fire. The question who would be a "firm and reasonable person" is a matter which would have to be decided by a jury. Lawyers do not often meet firm and reasonable persons.

Mr. McMILLAN: (Huron): Do firm and reasonable persons meet lawyers?

Mr. JACOBS: Perhaps my good friend from Winnipeg North Centre in his daily vocation meets firm and reasonable persons. I have no doubt he does. It is possible that this phrase has been suggested to him on the principle that "to the pure everything is pure." I would suggest to him that the bill is not properly drawn; it is not drawn according to the rules usually applied in cases of this kind. If I may judge from the earnest argument of my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Geary) there is no interference with those who wish to avail themselves of the right of free speech. According to his statement anybody who has anything to say may go to Toronto and while there express his opinion freely. We are told that the police and police commissioners sit or stand by, as the case may be, to gain general information. The newspapers however do not give the same account as that given by my hon. friend from Toronto. In the newspapers we have read for the last six months that people exercising the right of free speech have been molested in their attempt to disseminate their notions. For instance the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps), as mild mannered a man as ever scuttled a ship or cut a throat—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. JACOBS: —has been interfered with. My fair friend, the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) was not allowed to lift her voice in the city of Toronto. To my mind the fact that she was not allowed to speak constituted a very ungallant act on the part of the police. When she is talking in the House of Commons and I am having my tea in my room I rush down to the chamber, regardless of my tea, and avail myself of the opportunity of listening to her. She always has something of interest to say, and she says it in a breezy manner not characteristic of all hon. members of the house. When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre delivers his daily—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for the discussion of private and public bills having expired, the house will revert to the motion to go into supply.

SUPPLY—UNEMPLOYMENT

STATEMENT OF MR. NEILL ON MOTION OF MR. GUTHRIE FOR THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the statement of Mr. Neill on the motion of Mr. Guthrie (for the Minister of Finance) that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): When the house rose at six o'clock I was quoting from a letter sent by the city of Vancouver to the Minister of Labour for British Columbia. This letter was addressed to the Minister of Labour, Hon. W. A. McKenzie, and shows the very serious situation in regard to unemployment in the city of Vancouver. It says:

> To meet these cases there are no funds provided at present from any source, and as explained to your committee, the city's financial situation will not allow Vancouver to carry this burden. In fact, it will be most difficult for the city to carry on its ordinary relief to the indigent sick and aged. These facts constitute a situation most grave and serious. During the past winter the city has carried some thousands of unemployed who have drifted into Vancouver from other parts of Canada and British Columbia.

Then he goes on to say:

> The council trust that the governments will realize the most serious nature of the situation which now exists, and of the inability of the of the city to adequately cope with it, even on the present basis. The situation will be greatly aggravated upon the exhaustion of the government direct relief fund, about April 24. It is recognized that the problem is national in extent, and also that industry can be stimulated and encouraged by the Dominion and provincial governments only. It is therefore urged that these bodies establish immediate and effective means to deal with the situation as outlined herein.

This communication asks the provincial and federal governments to call a conference to discuss the unemployment situation throughout Canada, and it is dated March 31 of this year. I also have here a report from the relief officer to the relief committee under date of May 9, 1931, in which the following appears:

> I regret to have to place before you the continued serious condition of unemployment in this city. In place of the usual seasonal improvement during March there appears to have been an actual decrease in the number of workers employed in the city during the month. . . .
> These conditions were reflected in the figures and expenditures of the relief department. Since April 1st the married unemployed cases have increased by 269, and now total 1,346, a number larger than any shown during the past winter.

I ask hon. members of the house and of the government to take particular notice of this statement, that on April 1st the number of married unemployed on direct relief was 1,346, a larger number than any shown during the past winter. This was at a time when we were told conditions were improving, and when in the usual course of events we would have expected them to improve. The report continues:

> The aged and handicapped have also had greater difficulty in finding light and occasional work, and in obtaining assistance from their relatives. This fact has increased the number of people on general relief.

That is the general tendency during a long period of unemployment with the reduced wages now in effect in almost every industry and with the part time work, with the employees dividing up their work in order that more people may be kept employed, the workers are becoming increasingly impoverished and it is more difficult to lend assistance to others who may be more unfortunate. I quote further:

The present situation shows that the council's forecast was only too correct. The city's inability to cope with the situation is even more pronounced to-day than on March 28th.

I would therefore recommend that the strongest possible representations be made in order to convince the governments of the need for prompt and effective action.

Last September, immediately after the general election, the government called a special session of parliament to deal with the situation, thus fulfilling a promise given during the election. At that session the 1930 Unemployment Relief Act was passed. There was some criticism of the way the money was expended under that act, but at this time I do not wish to offer any criticism of that kind. I believe the government, considering the short time at their disposal to formulate a policy, did the very best they possibly could under the circumstances, and I think they should receive—as I believe they have received—due credit for what they did. Now, however, we are facing a situation which is even more serious than that we were facing last September, and the government now have had considerable time to formulate a better policy to take care of unemployment. If something is not done in the very near future, then I feel not only that criticism will be in order but that we should be negligent in our duty if we refrained from offering it.

In connection with the 1930 unemployment relief fund, however, and the way it has affected and further complicated the situation, I should like to quote from a telegram I received from the Vancouver civic employees' union. This is a union of the outside workers of Vancouver, who were engaged in the work on which this money was spent. The telegram is addressed to myself, and is as follows:

I am instructed to advise you of the following resolution passed by the largest meeting of civic employees ever held in Vancouver:

Whereas the operation of the Unemployment Relief Act of 1930 has resulted in a large number of permanent civic employees being laid off on account of their work having been done by relief labour under the terms of the aforementioned act, which called upon the municipality to match dollar for dollar; and

Whereas many more will be laid off this summer as a direct result of said act, the money previously provided to keep them employed having been used for relief;

Be it resolved that this union strongly condemn this act and request you to bring the results as they apply to us to the notice of the government and if possible read this wire in the house, and also to request that relief moneys in the future be provided by the government on the basis of the number of unemployed in each locality and not on the basis of their ability to match dollar for dollar.

The position in which the permanent employees of the city of Vancouver find themselves at the present moment is that the funds usually provided to keep men employed during the year have been used in order to meet the funds granted by this government, and therefore these men are no longer employed. So the city not only has the ordinary unemployed to look after, but in addition there are six or seven hundred of their permanent staff for whom provision must be made.

I would urge upon the government, therefore, that they give immediate and serious consideration at least to the calling of a conference, if they have not something better with which to meet the situation, in order that we may have a full understanding of the seriousness of the unemployment conditions throughout this Dominion, and make provision for meeting them.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): I had hoped that some member of the government would rise in his place and explain to the house and the country what action the government have in mind to cope with the very serious unemployment situation which prevails at the present time. There is no doubt whatever that even during these summer months there exists in Canada an unemployment situation the like of which I have never known at this time of year. Consequently there is need for immediate action of some kind on the part of the government, first of all to allow the municipalities to do something, to acquaint the provincial governments with any contemplated action, and also to give at least some hope to the thousands of men and women who find themselves out of work.

Already some hon. members who have spoken have dealt with the unemployment situation in their own localities, and perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I might give a picture of conditions as they existed in Winnipeg just a few weeks ago. It was shown according to the table I have under my hand, published by a committee of citizens, that in the greater Winnipeg area there were 18,893 persons out of work. These with their families represented a total of 56,682 people. In other words, probably more than twenty per cent of the total population of the greater Winnipeg area is out of work, and I believe most of them are also in want. Coming down to what are the prospects, this committee reports as follows:

Other than the jobs which will be undertaken as relief projects, there is no prospect of employment increase in sight. The jobs which will be started as soon as weather permits will employ in suburban municipalities adjacent to Winnipeg, in the neighbourhood of 225 men.

The report proceeds:

The Winnipeg Citizens Committee on Unemployment, under the chairmanship of Mr. H. B. Shaw, addressed a letter to prominent persons at country points, enquiring as to the possibility of absorbing in agricultural pursuits the surplus labour in Winnipeg. Replies received were very pessimistic, and were generally to the effect that farmers would not be hiring men this season because of the general depression in the agricultural field, that farmers were satisfied that they would be unable to pay the wages of any men employed, and consequently that any crops put in would be put in by the farmer and his family.

Further on in the same report I find the following observation:

The committee has written a letter to every lumber firm that ordinarily operates in this vicinity, enquiring as to the employment prospects for the winter 1931-32, and the replies received would indicate that fewer men will be employed during the coming winter than were employed during the past winter. In other words, instead of eight or ten thousand men it may be expected that there will be fewer than eight hundred men taken from Winnipeg's surplus labour market.

The report is signed by H. B. Shaw, chairman, Winnipeg citizens' committee on unemployment; by Ralph Maybank, chairman, joint unemployment committee, city of Winnipeg; and by A. MacNamara, assistant deputy minister, and administrator of unemployment relief in Manitoba.

Only this morning I received a letter from the mayor of the city of Brandon, imploring me to do what I possibly could to assist him to obtain further relief for his city, and pointing out that there is a very serious unemployment situation in Brandon, and that they are in a position where they have great difficulty in coping with the large number of men out of work. He points out that the little work being carried out was being done by machinery and that very few men were actually employed.

It was pointed out in the report published by the Department of Labour that during the past winter, as a result of the special Unemployment Relief Act of 1930, 228,351 persons were given employment. It was also pointed out that almost 200,000 persons were in receipt of direct relief as a result of the operations of the act. My own computations on the figures published by the Labour department would indicate that during the past winter approximately 350,000 people were given assistance either through work or directly in the way of food, clothing and shelter. That will give the house some indication of the seriousness of the unemployment situation which prevails throughout the Dominion.

I do not think the government will for a moment say that they have not got a responsibility in this matter. I was rather surprised when yesterday I heard the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gordon) who represents in this house the Minister of Labour, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr Neill) say that if the municipality and then the province could not deal with the situation the federal government would take action I had thought that by this time the federal government fully realized their responsibility and were prepared to take the initiative in coping with the existing situation. I appreciate the great difficulty that the government may have in attempting to find work for all those who are unemployed at the present time. I think it is well nigh impossible for the federal government and the provincial governments to provide anything like permanent employment for the vast numbers of the unemployed. But at the same time I am very anxious that the government let it be known what they intend to do in regard to the question, so that, as I said before, the unemployed, the municipalities and the provinces will at least know what is going to be done in the very near future.

I do not wish to enter into any long discussion as to why we have this unemployment situation. There is no doubt opportunities will present themselves as the session progresses to discuss it from that particular angle. However, we have been asked by hon. gentlemen opposite on so many occasions: What have we to suggest by way of coping with the existing difficulties? May I say to those hon. gentlemen that first of all the government have to admit one thing, that they have no remedies themselves for the unemployment problem. The moment we have that admission that these so-called remedies of tariff adjustments are no remedies at all, we are prepared to deal with the question and offer our suggestions.

I should like to point out that what we are suffering from to-day is not a lack of production. In fact according to government figures during the period from 1920 to 1928 individual productivity in the Dominion increased by approximately 53 per cent. Therefore if we are to find any remedies we have to go outside the remedies already suggested and find some other means of dealing with the problem. To-day we are living in an age of high production and comparatively low consumption, and in some way we have to relate our purchasing power—in other words our ability to consume—to our productive capacity. Whilst we have learned to produce in superabundance, there has been no opportunity given to the workers to allow them to consume the goods which they themselves have produced.

As I said a few minutes ago, I had hoped that on this occasion the acting Minister of Labour or some other member of the government would have risen in his place and stated to the house and to the country at large what is proposed to cope with the situation. I know it may be said to us that we are a little impatient. If we of the Labour group in this house and others are a little impatient in attempting to find out what the government intend to do to cope with the unemployment situation, our only answer would be to the effect that to-day there are hundreds of thousands of people walking our streets, not knowing where they can obtain work or other relief or where their next meal is coming from. It was pointed out by my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) a few moments ago when discussing another question, that only this morning in Winnipeg 1,500 men went down to try to obtain work where only 100 were wanted. Imagine the natural resentment of those people when they found a piece of modern machinery doing the work that ordinarily takes several hundred people to perform. The disappointment resulted in a little riot. No one wants to see these riots occur, but it is difficult to say what a desperate person will do when in a desperate situation.

In view of these circumstances I do not think we are asking anything unreasonable when we request the acting Minister of Labour or any other hon. member of the government to rise in his place and state to the unemployed people of this country, men who are good citizens and who have wives and children depending upon them, men who do not know what the morrow is going to bring forth, the intentions of the government.

Many of the municipalities are not in a position to provide work out of their own resources. That is another problem which the federal government will have to consider and consider very seriously. Many municipalities are almost on the verge of bankruptcy; they have very limited borrowing powers and very limited sources of revenue, and when we ask them to assume one-third of the cost of relief work in many instances we are putting a burden upon them which it is almost impossible for them to bear. I hope that in any proposal which the government submit to this house they do not ask the municipalities, and particulary those of western Canada, to assume one-third of the cost of relief work, the other two-thirds to be assumed by the provinces and by the federal government. This government should assume from 50 to 66⅔ per cent of the cost, and unless something of that nature is done I have grave doubts as to whether the municipalities will be in a position to undertake any active relief work. I sincerely hope that before this debate is concluded some member of the government will rise in his place and state what is the attitude of the government towards this question, which I believe to be the most important question to be faced by parliament.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Dairying, including grant of $5,000 to National Dairy Council, $295,000.

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, before we enter into a discussion of the details of these estimates I would like to have an opportunity of saying a few words in a general way, particularly as to the point of view from which we are to discuss these estimates. It will be recalled that on a former occasion, speaking to an amendment to the motion that the house go into supply. I quoted from a speech the Prime Minister had made at Woodstock in which he promised to put all the collective power of the government behind agriculture. It is from that point of view that I wish to discuss these estimates, to see just how far they fulfil that promise. In replying to me the Prime Minister referred to these estimates, and if I may be permitted, I will quote his remarks, as follows:

> What struck me as passing strange was that the hon. member for Lisgar should complain that someone in England was no longer to be continued in his position, although the estimates for agriculture contain a much larger sum than had been used heretofore for the very purposes he mentioned. Did he look at the estimates himself? Did he see what the provisions are for agriculture? Did he compare them with last year or the year before? Did he see evidences of the very earnest desire of the minister to put into effect the policy he advocates?

Not only by implication but by direct statement the Prime Minister gave the house to understand that these estimates represented the implementing of the promises he had made to put the collective powers of the government behind agriculture.

I want to remind the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) that it is from that point of view that we intend to-night to discuss the question whether or not these estimates fulfil the promises made by the Prime Minister. That is what we are interested in. We are not interested in the educational qualifications or the former political affiliations of the minister, although we are somewhat interested in his present political affiliations. When the minister accepted the invitation of the Prime Minister to enter his cabinet he thereby accepted responsibility for the fulfilling of the pledges made by the Prime Minister during the election. If he has given any attention to the development of constitutional government in British countries he will know that under our doctrine of cabinet solidarity the ministers are individually and collectively responsible for the policies of the government. It is the consideration of that point of view that I want to urge upon the committee.

I should like to glance briefly at the estimates in general before we discuss them in detail. The Prime Minister pointed out that the increase in these estimates amounted to $414,564.64. There are seventeen items, six of which show increases and five of which show decreases. The largest increases are shown in the following items: experimental farms, an increase of $175,000; assistance to fairs and exhibitions, including the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair, an increase of $650,000; grant to the executive committee of the World's Grain Congress, an increase of $100,000. The increase in these three items totals $925,000, and yet the net increase in all the items amounts to only $414,564.64, showing that in some of the other important items there must be a considerable decrease. It will be a matter of interest to the committee if in the discussion of these estimates in detail the Minister of Agriculture can show us what has been done to implement the promise made by the Prime Minister in his speech at Woodstock that he would put the collective power of the government behind agriculture. That is all I wish to say at the moment. No doubt as the various estimates come before the committee, I shall have further remarks to make.

[Mr. Brown.]

Mr. YOUNG: I notice in this item No. 107 a $5,000 grant to the National Dairy Council. I am opposed to that grant. The National Dairy Council, I understand, was formed some years ago for the purpose of assisting dairy farmers on the road to prosperity. The original conception may have been all right, but the association was unfortunate in the choice of its officers. The direction of its affairs fell into the hands of men who were so barren of original ideas as to how to help the dairy farmer that they could think of nothing other than to persuade him to ask the government for higher duties on his products. So the National Dairy Council became nothing but an organization to propagate Tory doctrines, to lead the farmer to believe that in some way a higher duty on butter or other dairy products would be of benefit to him. They so far succeeded in their propaganda that they persuaded many farmers last summer to support the present government. They have been successful in getting from the present government the higher duties on dairy products; in fact they have got twice as much as they asked for. Now we know the result; now the farmer realizes that he has been led up a blind alley, that he has been deceived by this association which promised him better things if he would but vote for the Tory party and platform.

I am opposed on principle to the use of money out of the public treasury for the carrying on of political propaganda, I care not what party or policy it supports. The men who have been leaders of the National Dairy Council and, through that council, leaders of the farmers' movement, have proved themselves to be blind leaders of the blind. They are no longer worthy of the confidence of the farmers and we have no right to grant public money to them to carry on their propaganda. Therefore I move that the item be reduced by $5,000, being the amount of a grant to the National Dairy Council.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): I think in going over these estimates hon. members will realize that except in respect to two or three particular lines I have made as few changes as possible from the estimates of other years. I felt that those who had been in office for a number of years would be in a better position, except where I had very definite reasons for making a change, to decide how money should be expended, than I would be with only a few months' experience. For years, I understand, this vote of $5,000 has been given to the National Dairy Council in the belief that from the way it is constituted it was representative of the dairy interests and of the distributors. I can assure the hon, member who has just spoken that at the expiration of this financial year, if I do not feel that the National Dairy Council contributes something really worth while to the dairy industry, I shall be the first to see that this vote is left out. At the present time, however, in view of the statement I have made and the reasons I have for leaving it in, I feel that the vote should remain as it is.

Mr. GOTT: I would like to say to the Minister of Agriculture that one recommendation made by the National Dairy Council of Canada has meant thousands upon thousands of dollars to the onion growers of Essex county.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GOTT: Hon. gentlemen opposite laugh. That shows they have not the slightest conception of the onion industry in Canada. Let me tell them that last year we grew 23,000 acres of onions in Essex and Kent counties. Now let me hear them laugh. Whether I know my onions or not, I want to say this about the industry: two years ago United States onions came into Canada at a low rate of duty, and our farmers in the spring of the year were forced to dump several carloads of onions. A year ago, through the recommendation of the National Dairy Council of Canada, the Minister of National Revenue took occasion to protect onions, and last winter—

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I rise to a point of order. The hon. member is not discussing the item under consideration.

Mr. GOTT: I am discussing the item more closely than the hon. member ever discussed an item in his life. Last winter in Essex and Kent counties we sold 320,000 bags of onions, due to the fact that the National Dairy Council of Canada recommended to the government—

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I rise to a point of order.

Mr. GOTT: Just sit down for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN: I would ask the hon. member to resume his seat. A point of order is raised.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): The point of order is that the hon. member is not discussing the item before us.

Mr. GOTT: No other member gets further away from an item under discussion than the hon. member who has just raised the point of order. I am discussing the item of $5,000 appropriated for the National Dairy Council of Canada. Through their recommendation the onion growers of Essex and Kent counties last year moved and sold their onions, a thing which they had been unable to do during the previous year.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Mr. Chairman, there is a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I understand the hon. member for South Essex is connecting his onions with the National Dairy Council. Otherwise he would not be in order.

Mr. GOTT: Since I have been in the house I have never seen the hon. member for South Huron in order. I realize it is my duty as the sitting member for Essex county to say to the Minister of Agriculture that the onion growers of Essex and Kent counties appreciate this $5,000 expenditure.

Mr. DUFF: There seems to be a dispute as to what this item covers. Will the minister tell us what the item of $295,000 was spent for last year? Then we shall find out whether the hon. member for South Essex or the hon. member for South Huron is in order.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Some of this vote will be spent in the administration of the branch, and the greater part of it in the payment of inspectors in different parts of the country, both butter inspectors and cheese inspectors.

Mr. VENIOT: Any onion inspectors?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Some of it will be spent on research work in the dairy industry, and some will be spent on advertising to encourage people in the use of milk and butter and dairy products in various forms.

Mr. CASGRAIN: How much money was spent in the province of Quebec for the cheese and butter inspectors, and where are they located?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In the city of Montreal we have seventeen dairy produce graders, and two in the province of Quebec other than Montreal.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What are the salaries of these inspectors?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In Montreal one receives $3,240, and there are fifteen at $2,760, and one grade 2 inspector at $2,580. The travelling expenses for the Montreal officials amount to $2,000. For the province of Quebec other than Montreal we have one dairy produce grader, grade 2, at $2,760, another at $2,520, and travelling expenses $50.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Have any changes been made in this staff since the month of August last?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Not that I know of.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The same men are still there?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): So far as I know.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister has said that as few changes were made as possible, and he also stated in answer to the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay that the salaries of the dairy produce graders are included in this vote of $295,000. In this connection I should like to invite the attention of the committee to an article that appeared in all the western papers in the form of a despatch from Ottawa dated May 8th last, dealing with the agricultural policy of this government. I think there will be no more propitious time than the present to quote from this article. I shall not read it all, because in the beginning it deals principally with the speech that was made by the Minister of Agriculture some time ago in this house. It says in part:

Ottawa, Ont., May 8.—Mr. Weir is of a nervous temperament and his friends were anxious over his first effort to address parliament. For weeks he had been subjected to sniping and the most cowardly attacks from such members as Donnelly of Willow Bunch, Vallance of North Battleford and Young of Weyburn, culminating in an offensive attack by Hon. W. R. Motherwell.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. VALLANCE: Perhaps hon. gentlemen will say "hear, hear," before I get through. The article continues:

The former Minister of Agriculture never was noted for refinement, but in his references to Mr. Weir he was more coarse than ever before in methods and manners.

The new Minister of Agriculture caught the ear of the house from the start. He showed no mercy for Premier King or Mr. Motherwell or Saskatchewan Liberals. Mr. Weir was not only justified in his attack through the attitude of previous Liberal speakers, but he has a task as great almost as the Prime Minister's.

Perhaps hon. gentlemen will say, "hear, hear," now:

There never has been a department in Ottawa so incompetent, in such a state of inefficiency and disorganization as agriculture when W. R. Motherwell left it. The department was and still is inefficiently manned, permeated with intrigue, jealousies and incompetence. Mr. Motherwell gave no thought to agriculture.

[Mr. R. Weir.]

I read that for the benefit of the farmers of Canada.

He was a political minister. When exports fell off, he said in excuse the people at home were eating more. There was no attempt to grade beef, butter or similar products for export.

Then why this item of $295,000? I should like the minister to explain that. The article continues:

It was under these conditions that Mr. Weir took office. He had scarcely a competent official, and many were disloyal to him. He did not tell the whole story last night, but on his estimates parliament will receive further information on the decrepit department left by Mr. Motherwell.

We want to receive that information to-night. It goes on:

There will also be a further elaboration on Mr. Weir's new departures in agricultural production and marketing.

I have glanced through these estimates and I see no very radical changes from last year. I hope before the Minister of Agriculture gets through, and I do not suppose he will get through to-night, that he will either confirm or refute these statements that have permeated the west regarding the condition of the Department of Agriculture, because those of us who are deeply interested in agriculture do not believe they are true. I know a great many of the officials of the department and have met them on various committees, and I know that they are very competent and very efficient. I think they need more in the way of commendation than condemnation. I do not think it is fair either to the Minister of Agriculture or to his officials that these statements should be allowed to go out all over Canada unrefuted.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In what newspaper did they appear?

Mr. VALLANCE: In all the local papers. I was quoting from The Kerrobert Citizen of May 13.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member for Weyburn has made the same remarks regarding the vote for the National Dairy Council as he did last year, and consequently is quite consistent in his attitude. If I am to be consistent with my attitude of that day I must oppose my hon. friend from Weyburn. I find myself in the first round favouring the attitude of the minister that this is a good vote, and so long as the National Dairy Council performs as good service as it has done in the past on behalf of dairying it will receive my support.

I would ask the minister if the total of $9,515,343.44, which appears in the column for 1930-31, includes the supplementaries voted early in the session.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As a rule the supplementaries that are passed at the beginning of the session are added to the old vote of last year because the expenditure was incurred last year. I think the minister is wrong; perhaps he may not have understood my question.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): If the hon. gentleman means the supplementaries that were put through at the beginning of this session—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I understand that they are not included.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They should be included. In that case there would be a less vote this year than last year.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): A greater vote. The supplementary estimates voted at the beginning of this session, I am informed, are in addition to this.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But they were spent last year.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): They are in addition to what is here.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In addition to this $9,515,343.44?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But that money was spent last year and consequently the vote for this year is just about $100,000 less than that of last year. Perhaps the hon. member has not done justice to himself. Undoubtedly his deputy knows what I am getting at. In the supplementary estimates passed at the beginning of each session to take care of expenditures already incurred, as in the case of the health of animals branch, for which there was an appropriation of $300,000, such sums are invariably added to the vote of the year in which the moneys were spent. However we will let the matter stand at present.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I think the hon. member is right. The supplementary vote at the beginning of this session is not included in the amount set out in the main estimates, so that as stated by the hon. member it will be considered as an expenditure of last year. The vote for last year will therefore be higher than it appears on the information before us.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, that is what I am trying to say. My hon. friend has produced an estimate, then, which is smaller than that of last year, rather than greater, as would appear from the main estimates. I think my hon. friend is wrong and has done himself an injustice. In order that he may settle the matter with his deputy I will not press it further at this time.

There is another matter which I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members. During the late election campaign the butter question was discussed everywhere, and to my mind the time has arrived for a review of the situation concerning that particular commodity. I shall not, however, go into the matter very extensively to-night. Hon. members opposite led the people to believe that because of the action of the Liberal government the dairy industry was on the toboggan. What is the proper yardstick by which to measure a dairy industry? Is it the amount of butter made, or the amount of cheese made? Is it any one of fifteen or twenty other dairy products? No; I suggest we should use the yardstick of the number of pounds of milk produced in a given year. To my mind that is the only proper measurement. It does not matter what the farmer converts the milk into. He may use it to produce any commodity he wishes, or any form which he can derive the greatest amount of money. I wonder if the minister has the data concerning the number of pounds of milk produced. If he has not, I may tell him that I have the figures before me. For the information of hon. members I shall give the committee a general survey of the milk production from 1922 to the present. I shall not attempt to be absolutely accurate, but will merely give the round figures. In 1922 nearly ten billions pounds of milk were produced from the dairy cows of Canada. In 1923, eleven billion pounds were produced; in 1924, twelve billion; in 1925, twelve billion, five hundred million; in 1926, thirteen billion; in 1927, fourteen billion; in 1928, fourteen billion; in 1929, fourteen billion. In the last two years there was a slight falling off in production, amounting to only a few million pounds. These figures show an increase of over four billion pounds or 40 per cent in the production of milk in Canada during the nine years of Liberal administration. That is a different story from the one told by hon. members opposite in the province of British Columbia and throughout the maritimes in the election campaign.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And in Quebec.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The people would not listen to our story; we could not get it across. My hon. friends opposite were in the field twelve months ahead of us and they had been successful in filling the minds of the public with their views in the matter. At this date, after the election everybody seems to be satisfied with the result,—something which to my mind is most extraordinary.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friends on this side of the house are quite satisfied, but I am not sure that my hon. friends opposite are satisfied. It would be quite natural, of course, if they were. The figures I have placed on record represent a 40 per cent increase in the production of milk in Canada. I wonder if the minister's figures agree with mine in this respect, because if they do the talk during the election campaign goes up the flue—there is nothing to it. Even in connection with butter the production became greater.

Mr. TUMMON: Is it a fact that about the year 1929 the figures concerning the production of milk in Canada were changed?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am not under examination, but if my hon. friend wishes to put me in—

Mr. TUMMON: I have asked whether the figures showing the total production of milk in Canada for the years 1927, 1928 and 1929 were changed just before the last election in order to produce the figures now placed on Hansard by the hon. member.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The figures I have quoted are official and are those of the dairy branch based upon elaborate and expensive information supplied by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I think if the deputy minister has his figures before him he will find they tally with those I have given. Of course I expected hon. members to have an alibi, but I had expected a better one than that which has been given by the hon. member for South Hastings.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. McINTOSH: Let us have the correct figures.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Let the minister answer for himself.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. TOTZKE: There is some doubt in the minds of hon. members on the other side concerning the figures given by the hon. member for Melville. I suggest that the Minister of Agriculture give us the figures.

The CHAIRMAN: There is an amendment before the committee, does the committee wish to dispose of it?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We ought to have a statement from the minister so that we may find out whether the figures placed on record by the hon. member for Melville are correct.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We have now before us a statement of the figures showing the production of milk for the years mentioned. I do not think the effect of legislation by the present government to assist the dairy industry will be questioned, so far as butter is concerned, by any hon. member on either side. Had it not been for the tariff we placed on butter what would have been the effect on receipts of the dairy farmers of Canada?

Mr. TOTZKE: What difference would it have made?

Mr. YOUNG: What effect did it have?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): At the time the present government came into power the prices of butter in Canada and the United States, London and Australia, were these: In Canada, 28 to 28.25 cents per pound; in the United States, 35.25 to 35.50 cents per pound.

Mr. DONNELLY: What date is that?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The beginning of August.

Mr. DONNELLY: Is that the wholesale price?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes, obtained from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and the prices are on the same basis for each country.

Mr. DONNELLY: At what points in Canada were those prices quoted?

Mr. YOUNG: Is the minister quoting the Montreal price or the New York price?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The information we have is the average price of butter as recognized by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. YOUNG: The average for all the countries?

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): When the present government came into power the price in Canada was 28 to 28.25 cents per pound. At the same time the price of butter in the United States was 35.25 to 35.50 cents per pound, and in London, 28.64 to 29.08. On March 17, 1931, the price of butter in Canada was higher than the price in the United States and six cents higher than Australian butter.

Mr. YOUNG: What are the figures?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): On March 17, 1931, the price of butter in Canada was 31 cents a pound, and in the United States, 29·75; Australian butter in London, 25·6 to 25·82. It was estimated, from the number of pounds of butter produced in Canada, having regard to the difference between this price and the price that would have been paid on the same basis, that this has put into the pockets of the farmers of Canada $2,000,000.

Mr. DUFF: What is the price in Canada to-day?

Mr: WEIR (Melfort): No one regrets more than I do the rapid drop in the price of butter during a period of ten days, but the price of butter in Canada at the present time, due largely to some butter which is being shipped out—there are over 250,000 pounds on the ocean going to the old country—has risen from the low price on May 12 of 18·5 to 18·75 to a price to-day of 21 to 21·25, and the market is the firmest it has been since before the slide we all regret, which occurred some time ago.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Will the minister tell the committee how long ago it was that the price of butter for export was as low as it is now? Was it before the war, or before the flood, or when was it?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The effect on the price of butter of the action of this government can be fairly arrived at only by a comparison with other countries on a London parity of the price of butter when we came into power and the price at the present time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I agree with the hon. gentleman to some extent—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would like the floor for a moment; the hon. member for Melville cannot monopolize the discussion. I was on my feet first, and I claim the floor. I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if Canada is not to-day on an export basis for the first time in two years. Is it not also a fact that we did not make enough butter to satisfy our own domestic requirements before this government came into power, and that under the late Minister of Agriculture we were eating Australian butter right up here in the parliamentary restaurant?

Mr. VALLANCE: It is because people cannot buy the butter that we are on the export basis.

Mr. DONNELLY: At page 1361 of Hansard for this session I find that the Minister of Agriculture said:

> I am told by the dairy commissioner and by produce merchants that we have no Canadian butter sufficiently uniform as to grade to permit its being labelled and shipped to the old country as Canadian butter.

I wonder, if we are on an export basis, what has been done in order to get us on that basis. In the past has the butter not been properly graded and labelled? Have our inspectors and commissioners been neglecting their duty? What was wrong that Canada was not previously on this basis? Are we not able to make butter of good enough quality for export, or what?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): One of the reasons why the butter is not uniform is the number of very small creameries, where it is almost impossible to get it absolutely uniform because of the size of the creamery. We have an advantage in the west and also in the east in our larger creameries in getting a uniform brand. My statement was this, that the butter as produced in Canada is not sufficiently uniform for a national trade mark of any kind. The butter which is being shipped, I understand, is being selected in Montreal as uniformly as possible, for shipment to the old land.

Mr. DONNELLY: What is the minister doing to see that it is made uniform? That is what I want to know.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Inspectors are carrying on the work and trying to encourage the smaller creameries to have their butter conform to the uniform standard we wish to have prevail.

Mr. BROWN: We are being told now that we are on an export basis, and that is the reason for the low price of butter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. BROWN: What is the idea, then, of mentioning the fact?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If I were a Presbyterian minister I would not talk like that.

Mr. BROWN: My understanding of the statement of the minister was that we were on an export basis, which accounted for the low price of butter. All I can say is that when it was proposed to raise the duty on butter, many of us who objected to that step took the position that while it might temporarily benefit the farmer, it could not ultimately do so and that as soon as we got on an export basis we would have to take the export price. The only event out of the ordinary is that the result has come about a little sooner than we anticipated.

Mr. COOTE: The farmer who is producing the cream is interested in the price of butter, but he is more interested in the price of butter fat. I have a letter here which I received to-day from my home town, in which my correspondent says that special cream sells for 20 cents at the creamery, and No. 1 churning cream at 16 cents. Based on these figures, he paid 30 cents a pound for creamery butter right where the butter is made. He says the creamery has an overrun of one-fifth, and based on the price of special cream—and all this is not special cream—that makes four cents. Then they charge the merchant five cents profit, and in turn he charges another five cents. This gives the farmer twenty cents as compensation for capital invested in land, buildings, feed, cattle, labour, bringing the cream to town and so on, while the creamery gets approximately nine cents and the merchant five cents, or a total of fourteen cents. If this pound of butter which my correspondent bought had been made from No. 1 cream instead of special cream on a basis of 16 cents per pound I think it would figure out in this way: Considering that one and one-sixth pounds of butter can be made from one pound of butter fat, this man would pay 35 cents for the one and one-sixth pounds of butter made from one pound of butter fat. Of course that would have to include the salt and water put in at the creamery. The farmer would get 16 cents for the pound of butter fat that went into the butter; the local merchant would get a profit of 5 cents, and that would leave 14 cents to the creamery. In other words, there would be a total of 19 cents to the creamery and the retailer, while 16 cents would go to the producer for the pound of butter fat.

The reason I am bringing these figures before the committee to-night is that I may ask the minister whether this vote of $295,000 for dairying can be used in some way to help the farmer get a larger share of what the people of Canada are paying for their butter. I think that is the real work before our dairy branch at the present time. It does not do the farmer much good to have the price of butter raised—if that were possible—if that increase is not reflected back to him in the price of cream. I should be very glad to have the minister give us some information in regard to this matter and tell us whether there is anything his department could do to see that the price received for butter fat more nearly approximates the price the people of Canada are paying for creamery butter.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Just in confirmation of what the hon. member has said, I may say that I received a letter from one of the members of the Alberta house, a man with some intelligence and some knowledge of the country, who gave me a list of prices of various commodities. This letter was written on May 21. He says that butter fat had just fallen to a new low of 14 cents a pound for No. 1, which is 2 cents lower than the price mentioned. One of the most essential parts of the work that could be done by this branch of the Department of Agriculture would be to see if it is not possible to diminish the spread that exists between the price of butter fat on the one hand and of butter on the other. As has been said, it is not the price of butter that concerns the farmer, for nearly all the butter consumed to-day is made in the creameries; it is the price he receives from the creameries, and it is obvious that at 14 cents a pound for butter fat, even with the low price of feed, he cannot produce it at a profit.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The manufacture of butter by creameries is, I take it, a provincial matter. I assume that the figures quoted are for the production of butter from cooperative creameries.

Mr. YOUNG: The minister a minute ago gave us the prices quoted for butter on May 12 and to-day. Would he be kind enough to give us the corresponding figures for the United States and the United Kingdom on the same dates?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I have not those figures here.

Mr. COOTE: May I point out to the minister that the figures which I quoted refer to prices paid by the Burns Creamery at Nanton, not by a cooperative creamery. It seems to me that the Department of Agriculture might interest itself in such a question, because after all there is no use increasing the production of butter fat unless the farmer can get a bigger share out of it than he is getting at the present time.

Mr. RINFRET: I noticed a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. minister said nobody was more sorry than himself for the drop in butter prices. But he gave the excuse that the price of butter in Canada compares fairly well with the price in other countries, although in reply to a subsequent question from the member for Weyburn he was not able to quote exact figures. May I point out to the minister that his language is hardly consistent with the language of his friends during the last electoral campaign. The fact that he is sorry for the drop in the price of butter does not prevent the price from dropping, and his friends were very definite in their promise that if they were returned to power the price of butter would go up. I am afraid there are people in this country more sorry than the minister for the drop in the price of butter—those who voted for his friends on the strength of their definite promises that the price would go up. My hon. friend says that the butter prices in Canada compare very favourably with those prevailing in other countries. But the Conservative candidates would not admit that contention in July, 1930; they would not admit the least comparison to be made between Canada and other countries as regards practically every question then before the electorate, but particularly on the question of butter prices. I travelled a great deal during the last campaign and was not stopped by a rainstorm like my hon. friend the Minister of Railways. I was able to fulfil all my engagements, and in the thirty-five or forty counties that I visited I was met by the same question from the Liberal candidates: What are we going to reply to the speeches made by the Conservative candidates, who say most positively that if the Mackenzie King government is defeated and the Hon. Mr. Bennett is put in power butter will sell for 50 or 60 cents a pound in the month of August.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CASGRAIN: They said so everywhere.

Mr. RINFRET: I am not sure that even my good friend the Postmaster General did not speak very strongly on the matter.

Mr. SAUVE: I did not say so.

Mr. RINFRET: I think he promised that butter would go up in price.

Mr. SAUVE: I was unknown by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not want to be discourteous to my hon. friend, but I hope that when the electors voted for him they knew him. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will not think we are pressing him too much to-night on this item. I may remind him that probably the main factor that helped the Conservative party in the province of Quebec was the promise so frequently made that if they got into power the price of butter would rise. You will find that the cities of Montreal, St. Hyacinthe, Three Rivers, Hull, Sherbrooke, and Quebec, voted strongly for the Liberal candidates, but the butter argument was very effective in some of the rural ridings. When my hon. friend to-night says that he deeply regrets the drop in the price of butter, I am afraid that that will not be considered any fulfilment of the promises made by his friends in the province of Quebec. Certainly if this government has a definite mandate from the electors of the province of Quebec, it is to keep up the price of butter. I know that they cannot do it, but why did they promise what they are not now in a position to carry out?

Mr. PICKEL: I should like, Mr. Chairman, to add a few words to this discussion. We have figures of the comparative prices of butter in the United States and in Canada, and those figures are very significant. Until 1925 our butter compared very favourably with American butter in regard to price, but in 1925, after the Australian treaty came into force, our butter was sold for much less than the price the commodity brought in the United States. So much was this the case that in the first fifteen days of September, 1926, the American farmer was receiving 26 cents a pound more for his butter than the Canadian farmer was receiving; he was getting 55 cents a pound and the Canadian farmer was getting 29 cents.

An hon. MEMBER: What was the duty?

Mr. YOUNG: Can you give us the figures for January, 1930?

Mr. PICKEL: The cost of butter in Canada has been comparatively low since the advent of the Australian treaty. The efforts of the ex-Minister of Agriculture to convince members of this house that our milk production had increased is rather far-fetched. The price of butter on account of the importation of the New Zealand commodity—

Mr. YOUNG: Was higher in Canada than in the United States last winter.

Mr. PICKEL: It was lower after the advent of the treaty. During the campaign last July we did not go about this country telling the electors that they were going to get 50 or 60 cents a pound for their butter, at least, not in my section of the country. We told them that we were going to prevent external competition. The dairying industry in Canada was absolutely ruined by the Australian treaty, which was the most iniquitous piece of legislation ever enacted.

Mr. DONNELLY: Is the industry any better off to-day?

Mr. PICKEL: Our prices to-day compare very favourably with the prices obtaining in other countries.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is not the answer.

Mr. PICKEL: The cold storage plants in the city of Montreal still contain large quantities of New Zealand butter.

An hon. MEMBER: How much?

Mr. PICKEL: A couple of million pounds.

An hon. MEMBER: How much was in storage last year?

Mr. PICKEL: Fifty million pounds were brought in last year.

The CHAIRMAN: Hon. members may not interrupt the hon. member who has the floor without first asking his permission.

Mr. PICKEL: It is a crime that 50,000,000 pounds of foreign butter were brought into this dairying country. Butter prices will not improve until we first get rid of that butter in cold storage, at which time there will be a gradual rise in price although I think it will be some time before we will again see a price of fifty cents per pound.

An hon. MEMBER: Is not that what you promised at the last election?

Mr. PICKEL: The price received by the farmer for his butter, compared with the price he pays for grain, is better than it was last year.

Mr. YOUNG: The price of wheat has gone down more than the price of butter.

Mr. PICKEL: With grain at 30 cents and middlings at 40 cents, it costs the farmer 40 cents per pound to produce butter, but when the price of grain is much cheaper his cost of production is lower. I will have to support the appropriation asked for.

[Mr. Pickel.]

Mr. RINFRET: I am very much surprised to hear the speech made by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi because if there is any hon. member in this house who holds his seat because of butter it is he. I think he is very ungrateful to the commodity.

Mr. SHAVER: I was very much surprised at the statement of the hon. member for St. James that the farmers had been promised during last summer that they would receive 50 cents per pound for butter. In the industrial section of Canada which I have the honour to represent it was the members of the Liberal party who told the mill workers in the town of Cornwall that if the Conservatives were returned to power they would have to pay 50 cents per pound for butter. I have no doubt that if the argument was used there, it was used in the industrial centres of Quebec which, according to my hon. friend, returned Liberal members. Anyone who has studied the situation must agree with the evidence produced by the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. One of the reasons for the present low price of butter is the fact that there still remain in the storage warehouses of Canada large quantities of New Zealand butter. The present day comparison with foreign prices is more favourable than it has been for the last five or six years.

Mr. RINFRET: The hon. member for Stormont says that at the last election the price of butter was fixed at 50 cents per pound. I am sorry to report that it has not as yet reached that price.

Mr. DONNELLY: There seem to be different opinions as to the amount of butter in cold storage, but I have the figures as of March 1, 1930, and March 1, 1931, furnished by the dairy commissioner, Mr. Ruddick. On March 1, 1930, we had in storage 13,087,236 pounds, and on March 1, 1931, 11,272,920 pounds. The statement is made that the amount of New Zealand butter coming in this year has brought the price down but it did not seem to bring it down last year.

An hon. MEMBER: The duty kept the price up.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): How much butter has come in from Australia and New Zealand since August last? When addressing the house some time ago the hon. minister told us that he had made a verbal agreement with Mr. Moloney of Australia that there was to be no Australian butter released for sale in Canada under 32 cents per pound. Would he tell the committee what has been done with the butter imported from Australia since October last?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In reply to the first allegation, that it was stated at the time of the elections that the price of butter would be increased, I think a fairer interpretation to put on the statement made in that connection would be that we desired the Canadian dairy farmer to be protected against butter which could be produced in other countries at a lower cost. We promised that we would do all in our power to protect him, and we did so. I am informed by a very reliable authority in the butter-making industry that the farmers of Canada would have received during the last winter months at least 10 cents per pound less for their butter had this government not taken the action it did. Another statement made was to the effect that the tariff on butter had increased production, but I think the majority of those in touch with the farming industry in Canada will realize that during the last twelve or eighteen months the main element which tended toward increased production of butter was the cheap coarse grains and the effort which the farmer had to make, to a greater extent than ever before, to increase his income.

In answer to the question asked by the hon. member for South Huron as to the verbal agreement with Australia, I would state that although it was in our power when the treaty with New Zealand was abrogated to put a duty on New Zealand butter, we could not put a higher duty on Australian butter until the treaty with that country had been abrogated, and to do that would have taken some months. Realizing the conditions then existing in Canada, and wishing to give the farmer every protection, we came to the conclusion that the only way that could be done was by a verbal agreement with the Hon. Parker Moloney that pending ratification of the New Zealand treaty no Australian butter would be sold in the Dominion of Canada at less than 32 cents per pound, without a mutual agreement between himself and myself. They lived up to that agreement in a very commendable way, until the price of butter in Montreal, and also in the west, in Vancouver, was cut by something very much in the nature of a butter warfare between various organizations in the west. We thought butter had reached rock bottom, and it was not fair, after Australia had lived up to the agreement as she did, that we shoul not allow her to release her butter on this market.

An hon. MEMBER: How much butter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In the neighbourhood of 10,000 boxes.

Mr. DUFF: How can the minister or Mr. Moloney control the price of butter? Is the minister or is Mr. Moloney in the butter business?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We are, I hope, and always shall be in the business of looking after the interests of the dairy farmers of Canada. The hon. gentleman is no doubt aware that in Australia they have an export board than can control the export of butter, and it was by making use of that organization that Mr. Moloney was able to control it.

Mr. DUFF: I ask the minister how he can control the price of butter in Canada or prevent the Australian people from selling butter at any price they like in this country.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The price of butter exported from Australia is under the Australian export board. They were the people who controlled it.

Mr. DUFF: But the minister in his statement a moment ago admitted that while he and Mr. Moloney made an agreement, that agreement was broken by somebody and the price of butter was reduced.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. DUFF: Is it not a fact that in Montreal last week, butter sold retail for twenty cents a pound?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Australian butter was not released at less than thirty-two cents a pound until we released the Hon. Parker Moloney and the Australian government from their agreement with us. They controlled the butter.

Mr. DUFF: Why did the minister do that?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Because we felt that they had kept their agreement honourably prior to that time, and butter had reached bottom price.

Mr. VENIOT: But we were exporting Canadian butter.

Mr. DUFF: The minister has not answered my question. What I should like to know is this: If we made an agreement with Mr. Moloney of Australia to keep butter at thirty-two cents, why did he release Mr. Moloney from his agreement, or why did the price decrease?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I am afraid I cannot answer the question any better than I have done.

Mr. DUFF: Of course the minister cannot; that is the trouble.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I shall repeat the answer I gave before. The verbal agreement made with the Hon. Parker Moloney was this: that they would not release Australian butter in Canada at less than thirty-two cents a pound except by mutual agreement, as long as we felt that to do so would injure the butter market in this country. When Canadian organizations commenced cutting the price of butter to a point that we thought was nearly rock bottom, I agreed that the Australians could release their butter at a price less than thirty-two cents a pound.

Mr. DUFF: In other words, the minister admits he has nothing to do with naming the price of butter in Canada.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Absolutely not.

Mr. POULIOT: So long as the production of butter in this country is less than the consumption, is it necessary, in order to supply the trade and the public in general, to import butter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Do I understand the hon. member's question to be this: If the production of butter in Canada is less than the consumption, should we allow the importation of butter?

Mr. POULIOT: No; is it necessary to import butter from outside?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a word to say on this subject. During the last campaign the butter question was very much under discussion in every county in Quebec. I held several joint meetings and at some in particular the perpetual Tory candidate in my constituency said that in Australia and New Zealand they had great opportunities that were denied to Canada. I think he said that in New Zealand in one year they had 100,000 cows and the year after they had 1,200,000. I said: Those are not cows; they are rabbits. At that time that gentleman was blaming the previous administration for having permitted the importation of butter from the other dominions. If my memory serves me aright, the Liberal party was blamed some years ago by the hon. member for East Kootenay, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, for not being agreeable enough to Australia and New Zealand. During the campaign, Conservative speakers made this statement—and this is important because many people voted Conservative on account of it—that if the present Prime Minister came into power, not a pound of butter from New Zealand or Australia would be admitted into Canada. This was stated on the hustings everywhere in my constituency, and I am surprised to see that some butter is being imported by Canada at this time. The question was fair, and it has been answered very fairly not only by the Minister of Agriculture, with whom I sympathize very much at the present time, but also, I think, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who evidently said yes when I asked the question about the importation of butter being necessary because the production is much less than the consumption at this time.

Mr. QUINN: No one takes the hon. member seriously.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member for Halifax is not in the butter business; he is not elected by farmers. He is in the soft drink business. He knows nothing about the matter except that he may put some butter in his soft drinks. I come from a farming constituency. I am interested in the production of butter and I took the trouble to study the matter in order to see what can be done for our people.

Mr. QUINN: It was people like the hon. member who defeated their own party.

Mr. POULIOT: The Liberal party was defeated by a trick. Last year when the Liberal government was in power, butter was much dearer than it is now. What was said to the electors of this country during the last campaign was this: If you elect the Conservatives, the price of butter will be forty cents.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Seventy cents.

Mr. POULIOT: They said: At least forty cents. It was a minimum and it could have gone up to ninety-nine cents, to be less than a dollar. But they told the farmers: if you elect the Conservatives; if you elect the right hon. member, who is now the Prime Minister of this country, the price of butter will rise from thirty-two cents to forty cents, but it has fallen from thirty-two cents to seventeen cents a pound.

An hon. MEMBER: Fourteen cents.

Mr. POULIOT: When it is sold at 17 cents, it means that the farmer here is left with only 14 cents a pound, and that is the marvellous result that was to be brought about as soon as the Conservative party got into power.

This is a thing that will be reported in Hansard to-morrow, and the people will read it. The Conservative party promised in every constituency in this country to bring about this wonderful result. This shows what fakers can say to the people of this country. They go to the limit. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Quinn) is not smiling now. He reminds me of someone with an enamelled face who is afraid to smile for fear it will crack the enamel and the crack will show.

During the last election the farmers of this country were deceived by the Conservative party, and not only that but every Conservative speaker went on the platform and said that the Liberal party was working against the best interests of the farming class. Yet at that time, Mr. Chairman, butter sold at more than 30 cents a pound, and now it is less than 17 cents. Are my hon. friends opposite satisfied with that progress? What are they going to do about it? They pretended that a tariff was going to help the farmer. They said: Let us put a duty on butter that comes in from abroad, and you will see butter prices go up.

I have something here, Mr. Chairman, that I keep for special occasions, and I shall use it now. It is nothing harmful—the question of ammunition was settled yesterday afternoon. It is the opinion of a man whom my hon. friend (Mr. Quinn) supported and banged his desk for with great violence every time he rose to address the house. He does not know yet of whom I am speaking. I am speaking of a gentleman, who, though he might be in the shade to-night, will one day come into the limelight as leader of the opposition after the Conservative party is defeated in the next election. I mean the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen. In view of the disastrous incompetence that has been shown by this government since it came into power, I know very well that my hon. friends of the opposition, who can scream now, say in private that they are very sorry that the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen is not now in this house; I would not say now as the leader of the party, but as the right hand of the leader. On April 8, 1926—more than five years ago—how times have changed since then!—

An hon. MEMBER: You were not here then.

Mr. POULIOT: Oh yes, I was, and I shall be here for a long time. Since that time the Conservative convention took place, and after that convention my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) said that the Conservative party had been too honest in the past. Here I have just a word to show that honesty is the best policy. The Right Hon. Arthur Meighen on April 8, 1926, was asked this question by Mr. Ross, then member for Moose Jaw:

You contend that if the tariff is taken off, prices immediately rise?

Note this, Mr. Chairman. This is what a good friend of yours said, and at the time he was speaking from the bottom of his heart, with absolute honesty. I will repeat the question again for those who are willingly blind and deaf. Mr. Ross asked:

You contend that if the tariff is taken off, prices immediately rise?

And the man who has more brains in his head than anyone on the other side of the house replied:

We contend it, and we know it because we see the facts.

It was a forecast of what is happening to-day. Never was the duty so high on butter and never was the price so low. It seems as if this government was raising the tariff in order to give the manufacturers a chance to deprive the farmers of their legitimate profits.

Mr. GOTT: More solemnity.

Mr. POULIOT: There is no tariff on birds. When my hon. friend the member for South Essex was born he was attended by a nurse, and as soon as he came into this world she said, "He eccles," and that name was given to him.

Here we have a most serious arraignment of this government, Mr. Chairman, coming from the lips of the man who was the leader of the Conservative party for a long time, and who since that time has not been eclipsed by anyone on the opposite side. He said: We contend that if the tariff is taken off, the prices immediately rise, and we know it because we see the facts. A high tariff has been imposed on butter and on potatoes. My hon. friend from Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Smith) and his colleague from New Brunswick know all about potatoes; they could sing a hymn to potatoes. There was an ancient writer who said: "O virtue, what crimes are committed in thy name!" I would say to my hon. friend from New Brunswick: "O potato, what crimes are committed in thy name!"

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: To come back to butter, Mr. Chairman, and speaking at the same time of potatoes, we have on the opposite side of the house some supermen, or semi-gods, who told the electorate: We cure everything; we will make you farmers happy; we will allow you industrialists to profiteer more than you ever did before in your lives; you labouring men will get better wages than you ever got before, and you will get work; the sons of the farmers will get nice positions and everyone will be happy. How was it to be done? I will not say that everyone was to have a soft drink, because that would not be very tempting, but, Mr. Chairman, I do say that the people were badly deceived during the last campaign by that cry of high tariff.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I would ask hon. gentlemen not to make so much noise. They have at least the privilege to go out, which I have not, so I would ask them to keep order.

Mr. POULIOT: The tariff was to be a cure for every disease. It was to make people happy. Everybody was to be as happy as a man who is in heaven as soon as that new tariff was applied. It has been applied, and applied with great vigour; for I will say this for hon. gentlemen opposite, that they have been consistent. They proposed to increase the tariff, and they have done so. What has been the result? The result has been that farm products are to-day selling for nothing. I am sorry for the farmers of this country who are suffering more than ever before because of the unfair prices they are receiving for their products. The small prices received for farm produce represents a great menace for the future, because the farmers may not cultivate their lands with so much care or to such an extent if they do not receive a reasonable profit from their labours.

The situation is worse than ever. I do not wish to criticize the present Minister of Agriculture, who I admit is trying to do his best for the welfare of the farmers of Canada. I wish however to tell him that the policy of high tariff is a fake, it is a mirage, something which will give nothing to the farmer but which will contribute to the enrichment of a few. It will not profit the farmer but it will make wealthy those who control the trusts, the great organizations. It will not make the poor man rich but will make the rich man still richer, and the wealth of the nation will be no better distributed than it is now.

May I ask the Minister of Agriculture seriously to consider the effect of tariff on farm products? I have before me a statement of the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen to the effect that "as soon as the tariff is off the prices rise." On the other hand, the tariff on farm products has been raised and prices have since declined. This statement would show that Right Hon. Arthur Meighen knew more about economics than hon. members now sitting to your right, Mr. Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved by the Hon. Mr. Guthrie, seconded by Hon. Mr. Stevens, that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. YOUNG: How about the amendment?

Mr. VENIOT: It stands.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Guthrie the house adjourned at 10.56 p.m.

Wednesday, May 27, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

PORT McNICOLL VOTERS' LIST

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): I lay on the table of the house part of a return, reference No. 287, on the motion of Mr. Thompson (East Simcoe) relating to correspondence and other documents with reference to the preparation of voters' lists for the municipality of Port McNicoll. With the leave of the house, I may explain that certain documents which were called for by the order are not laid on the table for the reason that the chief electoral officer has directed attention to the Dominion Elections Act which provides, in section 76, in respect of certain documents, that they shall not be inspected or produced except under a rule or order of the superior court or of a judge thereof or other proper authority. I am laying on the table all the documents in the possession of the chief electoral officer except such as come within this section. I leave it to the house, or to the select committee which may be appointed, to call for the production of the others in the proper way. The proper procedure the house will have to determine.

2. When was the said inspector engaged by the government?
3. On whose recommendation was he employed?
4. What is the amount of remuneration for such services?
5. What amounts have been paid for all such services since August 1, 1930, up to the present time?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1 to 5. The Department of Public Works has no such position as inspector of bridges and wharves. All works of that nature come under the direction and supervision of the district engineer and his staff.

SIR GEORGE PERLEY

Mr. POULIOT:

On what date and at what time of the day did the right hon. Sir George Perley act as Acting Minister of Railways and Canals last fall, and particularly in October, 1930?

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The first question sent in was in French and read as follows:

1. De quelle date et quelle heure à quelle date et quelle heure le Très Honorable Sir George Perley a-t-il agi comme Ministre intérimaire des Chemins de Fer l'automne dernier, et en particulier en octobre 1930?

The present question is not as complete as when first sent to the house, as one section has been deleted. There was a second paragraph which appears in votes and proceedings of May 25, reading as follows:

2. What was (a) the date, (b) the number, (c) the purpose of each order in council submitted by him while acting as such, to the privy council, during said period?

I came to an understanding with the Clerk of the House that that second paragraph would be acceptable if amended by substituting the words "subject matter" for the words "the purpose."

Mr. SPEAKER: The Clerk informs me that he endeavoured to amend the question to make it comply with the rules of the house. If the hon. member desires to ask another question he can send it through in the regular way.

Question dropped.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RIVIERE DU LOUP STATION

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of calls for tenders, notices published in the papers, estimates, and forms of tenders, in connection with the construction of a new Canadian National Railways station at Riviere du Loup, Quebec.

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between Mr. W. U. Appelton, general manager, Atlantic region, Canadian National Railways, and Mr. C. E. Dube, since July 29, 1930, to October 7, 1930.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that it is beyond the power of this house to furnish the material asked for in these motions. The correspondence is between the railway company and other people and it is not even alleged that parliament has the remotest interest therein.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I submit that these motions are entirely in order. The one motion refers to tenders submitted to the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) which tenders were approved of. In that sense the government had something to do with this matter and that is why I ask for the production of the papers.

Mr. BENNETT: Nothing is said about that in the motions.

Mr. POULIOT: I will amend them.

Mr. SPEAKER: I rule that these motions are out of order and they will be struck out.

Motions dropped.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RIVIERE DU LOUP STATION

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, personal or other, exchanged between: (a) the right hon. Prime Minister; (b) the hon. Minister of Marine; (c) the hon. Postmaster General; (d) the hon. Solicitor General; (e) the hon. Secretary of State; (f) the private secretary of each one of them, and Mr. C. E. Dube, regarding the construction of a new Canadian National Railways station at Riviere du Loup, from July 29, 1930, to date.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Speaker, I submit that this motion is out of order because it calls for correspondence "personal or other."

Mr. POULIOT: I have no objection to deleting those two or three words if it will please my hon. friend. I ask that the motion be amended by striking out the words "personal or other."

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion as it appears on the order paper is out of order, and it will be struck out.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Speaker, this is not the usual way to deal with a matter of this kind. The minister accepted the motion with the qualification he mentioned and implied that the correspondence would be filed with the exception of that of a personal nature. This is the first time such a motion has been ruled out on this ground.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is only by the unanimous consent of the house that a motion can be so amended. I understood the minister to object to the motion.

Mr. BENNETT: He certainly did.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have given my ruling; if any hon. member wishes to appeal therefrom he may do so.

Motion dropped.

BLACK LAKE, QUE., PUBLIC BUILDING

Mr. ROBERGE:

For a copy of all orders, correspondence, reports, memoranda and letters, in the possession of the government or any member thereof, if acted upon, written by J. E. Beaudoin, Megantic county, or any one else, by any member of parliament, any minister of the crown and by any official of the Department of Public Works, with regard to the construction of a public building at Black Lake, Quebec, for which a sum of $26,000 was voted in the estimates of 1930-31.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the house to the fact that the hon. member who moved this resolution some time ago moved a similar resolution asking for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, reports, petitions, documents and memoranda in the possession of any department of the government in connection with the construction of a post office at Black Lake, Megantic county, Quebec, since August 1, 1930. That was passed as an order for return which was tabled on April 29, 1931. Everything asked for in this motion has been tabled as a return to the former order, so I ask that this motion be struck out.

Mr. ROBERGE: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I submit that my motion is in order. I have in my hand a copy of the order in council which was recommended by the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) on August 5, 1930, and passed by the privy council on August 6, 1930. This order in council covered the building of a post office in Black Lake, Megantic county. In order to save time, and with the unanimous consent of the house, I will hand a copy of this order in council to Hansard. The second reason I advance is that in 1929 when the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) was Postmaster General, a notice of motion similar to mine for the production of papers was passed in this chamber. For these two reasons, I contend that my notice of motion for the production of papers is in order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Probably the motion is in order, but the Minister of Public Works pointed out that the documents called for by it have already been brought down to the house in pursuance of another resolution. Therefore I suggest that the hon. member let this resolution stand until he examines that return.

Mr. ROBERGE: No. It is not the same motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member wishes to go on with it, I shall put the motion.

Mr. BENNETT: It is understood that if there are any papers other than those covered by the previous return, they will be brought down in response to this motion, and that will be considered as compliance with it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That will be quite satisfactory. I am only telling the hon. gentleman that we have brought down everything we have, and in my opinion this will be a barren motion.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RIVIERE DU LOUP STATION

Mr. POULIOT: I rise to a point of order. The house has now dealt with resolution No. 15. No decision has been reached in regard to resolution No. 14. I would like to know if the motion as amended is in order or stricken out.

Mr. SPEAKER: It was ruled out of order and struck off the order paper.

Mr. POULIOT: At whose request were resolutions Nos. 13 and 14 stricken out?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RIVIERE DU LOUP STATION

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, personal or otherwise, exchanged between the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, the hon. Acting Minister of Railways and Canals, their private secretaries, the deputy minister, and any other officer or employee of the Department of the Minister of Railways, and Mr. C. E. Dube and any other person, regarding the construction of a new Canadian National Railways station at Riviere du Loup, from August 7, 1930, to date.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely this motion should not be passed. Such an order has to my knowledge never been made by the house. I would hope that in the terms in which it stands, it would be ruled out of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Might not the same procedure be followed with regard to this resolution as with regard to others? There are three words "personal or otherwise", which I understand the hon. member is prepared to drop—

Mr. POULIOT: Certainly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —and to have the resolution amended accordingly. Cannot the resolution as amended be permitted to pass?

Mr. BENNETT: "Their private secretaries."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Private secretaries are public officials.

Mr. BENNETT: They may or may not be with respect to some of these things. As the right hon. gentleman knows, one has no control over their correspondence. Of course one has control over such of it as is public.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is a point of order, that the resolution as it appears on the order paper is out of order.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I understand the Prime Minister objected to the resolution. It was not a point of order that was raised.

Mr. BENNETT: I raised the point of order whether or not this is a proper resolution for the house to adopt where it asks for personal correspondence if there is any. All one has to do is to look at the order paper and see the number of applications made by the same hon. member covering the same subject and the same papers, but couched in different terms, to realize just why I am raising the objection. I think the hon. member would do well to reconsider the matter. I think my hon. friend would take the same view if he were similarly situated.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I was similarly situated, except that I was next to the then Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not mean the office. I meant with respect to the terms of the resolution itself. Let it stand until the hon. gentleman can consider how he will word it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I remember my right hon. friend as recently as last year took the position that any letter, even if marked "confidential," when a government official or a minister took action on it, must be produced if the house so requests.

Mr. BENNETT: If it is on the file, I believe that is so. If it is not on the file, I believe the house has not control over it. What arose last year, the hon. member will recall, was that in connection with the Post Office Department certain letters were produced although marked "personal." They dealt with public matters, and I took the view, after looking up the authorities, that if they were on the file they must be treated as public documents, but the personal documents which the minister keeps on his personal file, were never brought down because they were not available.

Mr. VENIOT: Last year, at the request of the right hon. gentleman who is now leader of the government, I was asked to produce a personal letter that was not on the public file but on the minister's file. The contention was that, although marked "personal," it was acted on by the minister, and that such a letter should be produced. These are the very words:

> A personal letter written to a minister about a personal matter and placed upon his personal file is privileged, and this house has so ruled. But a letter marked "personal" which deals with the public business of Canada cannot be made personal merely by marking it so. That principle has been laid down by parliament from the first time the production of papers was called for, because parliament claims the right to redress grievances and it claims the right to know what the grievances are before supply is granted.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Who said that?

Mr. VENIOT: The present Prime Minister, as reported at page 1726 of the second volume of Hansard, 1929. Under the ruling I produced a letter from my own personal file. I had acted upon that letter although it was on my own personal file as minister, and according to the ruling of the house and the statement made by the present Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition, I produced that letter. I do not think an exception should be made in this case.

Mr. BENNETT: I wholly agree with the observations of the hon. member for Gloucester that no exception should be made in the application of the rule. The letter to which he refers was a letter, knowledge of the existence of which came into being through a letter which was on the file produced. It thus came to the attention of those who had the file that such a letter had been written about the public business and therefore it was producible; but the principle has not been changed in the least that personal correspondence is not in any sense to be brought down. It never has been and I suppose it never will be in any parliament. The hon. gentleman may say that it was on a minister's own file, but what happened in that case is no evidence of what may have happened in this. In that case in the file brought down there was reference to a letter. We asked where the letter was. The then minister said: It is on my personal file. We said: As the correspondence shows it was acted upon as a public document, obviously it must be produced as such. That is all. I am of the same opinion still. But the question whether or not a man has the right to mark a letter as "personal" is quite clear; it has never been challenged in parliament. It arose very acutely in the 1926 campaign as to whether a letter marked "personal" could be brought down, could be shown. The consensus of opinion was that the writer was the judge of the character of the communication; that he had the right to maintain the personal character of his communication, and that until he gave his consent the recipient could not make public the contents. That is the position, as far as I understand it, and everything I said on that occasion I would repeat now. If by any chance any letter is shown by the file to be a letter that, although marked "personal," is referred to by the minister in the action he takes, I would still hold to the view I then expressed, and say that it should be produced on the public record.

Mr. LAPOINTE: On the point of order, I would say that whether or not those papers should be tabled, is a matter for argument. The house has the right to refuse such a motion and it has done so in the past; but that is not a question of order. Any member has the right to ask for these documents; it is not against the rules to ask for them. The government may take the responsibility of asking that the motion be refused, but not of asking you to rule it out of order, Mr. Speaker, because it is not out of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just before the subject of correspondence is left, if it is a proper moment at which to refer to it, I think that a distinction must be made between what is personal in the sense in which personal communications are generally so understood, and what is personal only in the sense of avoiding publication of the reply. For example, if a communication is addressed to a minister of the crown on a public matter, his reply to that communication should be available for publication equally with the original communication. Otherwise, ministers of the crown may evade answering in a public way questions on public matters. I raise the point more particularly because I believe it is true that with respect to a very considerable amount of the correspondence that has taken place since the present administration came into office, replies made by ministers of the crown to public communications, have been marked "personal". The reply in no sense, strictly speaking, was personal. It was an answer on the part of a member of the government to a public communication, and there should not be afforded to the ministry the possibility of evading the publication of their replies to public communications simply by marking them "personal." If, however, a minister wishes to communicate on a personal matter, certainly he can mark his letter "personal", and a personal communication in that sense would be respected, but on a public matter where an individual writes to the government and expects to receive an official acknowledgment, and receives that acknowledgment on government paper signed by the minister, the word "personal" written on the corner of the letter should not in any sense protect it from publicity. I think that that is the sound view.

Speaking on the same matter with respect to private secretaries, the private secretary's reply is the reply of the minister. The private secretaries are civil servants, and communications signed by private secretaries should not in any way be privileged. They must stand on all fours with communications from the ministers. A letter from a private secretary is in exactly the same position as a letter from a minister and should be regarded as such.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I might mention an instance to illustrate that the statement of the right hon. leader of the opposition as a general statement of policy cannot be accepted. Within the last couple of days a bishop of one of the churches of Canada wrote to me as Minister of Railways on behalf of a man who had been dismissed from the Canadian National Railways, and argued that he should be reinstated. I made inquiries and found that this man, for causes which are very serious, had been dismissed. Now, in that case I had either to refuse to answer my correspondent or to write him a personal letter giving him private information as to why the man was dismissed. It was a case of either refusing to answer or giving a personal reply for the private information of my correspondent, so that he would not feel that this man had been unfairly treated by the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister's statement at the moment refutes his own contention. The minister could reply to the clergyman in question by saying that the man had been dismissed for cause, and he did not think it was in the public interest to disclose the cause. If he felt that it was in the public interest that the reason for the man's dismissal should be made public, let him give the reason, but he certainly should not send a reply which could not be brought down in this parliament to a communication which had been addressed to him by a citizen of this country.

Mr. MANION: I do not agree that you can simply take that attitude. The very fact that the man was dismissed by the Canadian National Railways, not by the department—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is all public business.

Mr. MANION: It is not. The man may have been dismissed for some very serious offence, say pilfering, for instance, being short in his cash. Would the right hon. gentleman suggest that I should write a letter in reply to my correspondent that could be published, branding that man as a thief? He would be having difficulty enough over having lost his job for stealing. It seems to me he would have been sufficiently punished. If I wrote a personal letter explaining the circumstances privately, I do not think that reply should be made public or be brought down in this house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If what my hon. friend says were to be followed by business houses it would be impossible for any person to write to another to get any kind of information about former employees. The minister may couch his reply in any words that he pleases to use, but he has to make a reply in a form that may be given to the public.

Mr. BENNETT: If the right hon. gentleman had followed the decisions in the courts he would realize that the problem is not as simple as he suggests. The action of McIntosh vs. Dunn, which went to the privy council from Australia, is the leading authority upon the subject. I happen to recall it at the moment. There are other cases of the same kind. The question of privilege, when set up by the recipient of a letter, and the publication of it with respect to a claim for damages for libel, raises issues that I shall not take the time of this house to discuss, but I think that this is a fair rule. I think the right hon. gentleman has stated it too broadly. The right of any minister to write a personal letter to a correspondent I think cannot be denied. If the correspondent seeks information of a public character the minister may turn the letter over to one of his staff, to a secretary, and see that he gets a reply. If the correspondent writes a letter seeking some information about a very ordinary, everyday transaction, and the minister in reply says, "For your personal information I can only inform you such and such," certainly it seems to me he should be able to protect himself and make that a personal communication by marking it "personal," not for the purpose of evading anything, but for the purpose of carrying on, if he desires, a friendly correspondence with anyone who addresses him in a personal way, for the purpose of ascertaining certain facts.

Certainly I have seen enough correspondence of former ministers, now sitting on the other side, during their tenure of office to know that the word "personal" was used very frequently on many communications that were received by their correspondents, sometimes by myself, in answer to inquiries that I had made, and in my judgment that word was quite properly put there. As the right hon. gentleman knows, cable communications that pass between different governments are marked "confidential," and, for reasons that are good and sufficient, they cannot be brought down in this house without the consent of the other government. Whether marked "confidential" or not, the consent of the other government should first be obtained before bringing them down. Broadly, the question is one of maintenance of good faith between people who carry on a correspondence. If one has written the letter in good faith on a personal and confidential matter, he has the right to have it so treated if he marks it as such. But on the other hand, if the letter is sent for the purpose of public attention being directed thereto and reference being made to it publicly, it does not come within that rule.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is precisely the position with respect to a letter to which I referred the other day, and to which my right hon. friend took exception. A letter had been written by a man as a public communication to the Prime Minister, and it was intended as a public communication. The Prime Minister replied to him and marked his reply "personal". According to what my right hon. friend now says, as the original communication was not marked "personal," the reply sent to it should be regarded in the same light as the original communication. That is my contention, and I hope that my right hon. friend will continue to agree with me.

Mr. BENNETT: I think my right hon. friend has put that a little too broadly. I have a right to say, when I direct my reply, whether I shall treat that matter as a public matter and make a short reply of half a dozen lines, or whether, for personal reasons, I shall make it a private matter and amplify my reply, giving him a great deal of information which I otherwise would not do, in order perhaps to induce him to believe that the conclusions at which he had arrived were wrong. That is a very different thing altogether. I conceive that I have a right to mark "personal" my communication to anybody that I direct it to. That was the ground the former ministers took with respect to very important communications, and it was the view of those to whom the question was referred, parliamentary and other authorities, that they were quite within their rights in doing so.

Mr. POULIOT: Before you give your decision, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. It has been the custom of the house to allow the leaders of the parties in the house great latitude in discussing a motion of this kind, but strictly they are not debatable. Do I understand the hon. member for Témiscouata desires to amend this motion by striking out the words, "personal or otherwise."

Mr. POULIOT: All right, sir. I move accordingly.

Motion as amended agreed to.

RIVIERE DU LOUP STATION

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of the order in council referred to by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals on May 12, 1931 (Hansard page 1664, second column, 24th line), and relating to the proposal to build a new station at Riviere du Loup.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Speaker, I have examined the record in Hansard and find I did not refer at the line or page indicated to the order in council mentioned in this motion. Therefore in this connection there are no papers to be supplied.

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend is kind enough—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member should make his request accurately.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways—

Mr. VENIOT: The motion is carried.

Mr. POULIOT: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask what has happened—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: —to order No. 14.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is declared carried.

Mr. POULIOT: Is No. 14 stricken out, or adopted as amended?

THE BUDGET

On the orders of the day.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the right hon. the Prime Minister if he has a statement to make to the house as to when the budget is to be brought down, and also if he is in a position to indicate what the order of business will be for to-morrow, in the event of the budget not then being brought down.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I cannot submit the budget to the house to-morrow; I hope however to be able to do so on the succeeding day. The submission of the budget to the house depends upon my ability to encompass a given amount of work in a given time. If I can I shall; and if I cannot, I cannot.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend will advise the house to-morrow as to whether or not the budget may be expected on Friday?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Owing to the fact that to-day Mr. Speaker leaves the chair at six o'clock without question put, may I ask what the business will be for to-morrow?

Mr. BENNETT: It is our intention to proceed with supply, because I shall not be present to proceed with the tariff bill. Government bills appearing on the order paper for second reading might be considered.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What departments will be taken in supply?

Mr. BENNETT: We will proceed with any department which is open, beginning with Agriculture, followed by Trade and Commerce.

ALBERTA COAL

FREIGHT RATE TO ONTARIO—REPORTED EXTENSION TO COVER ENTIRE YEAR

On the orders of the day.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the Minister of Mines whether the report is correct that was recently published in the newspapers to the effect that the special freight rate of $6.75 on Alberta coal to Ontario has been extended to cover the entire twelve months in each year, and whether the arrangements have been made by amendment to the order in council or by direct action of the Board of Railway Commissioners?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Mines): The question of assistance to the coal industry is under review, and I could answer my hon. friend's question more accurately if it were placed on the order paper.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the minister regard my question as a notice?

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

REDUCTION OF WORKING HOURS ON HUDSON BAY RAILWAY

On the orders of the day.

Mr. B. M. STITT (Nelson): May I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) whether he has found it practicable to reduce working hours on the Hudson Bay railway in order to furnish a greater amount of work for the unemployed? Such action would relieve the unemployment situation.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The other day the hon. member suggested that we should try to double the number of men employed because of the seriousness of the situation respecting unemployment. An arrangement under which the men would work day about was suggested whereby it would be possible to employ 500 or 600 more men. I am glad to say we are doing our best and hope to make satisfactory arrangements along the line suggested. The section of the country through which the railroad passes would be greatly benefited if a satisfactory arrangement could be made.

CANADIAN NATIONALS ACT

PROVISION FOR LOSS OR RENUNCIATION OF CANADIAN NATIONALITY

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of Bill No. 24, to define Canadian nationals and to provide for loss or renunciation of Canadian nationality.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take much of the time of the house in a discussion of this bill. I think we have reached the stage in the evolution of our national life when we should seriously consider the foundations for its future development. For sixty-four years we have had a very satisfactory material development. We have been promoting great national works, carving out new provinces, providing organized government for the great Northwest Territories, and I think we have succeeded far beyond the expectations of the fathers of confederation in the material and commercial development of Canada. In connection with that development, however, if we are to assume the status of a nation within the British commonwealth, we must also assume very serious duties and responsibilities. Among the responsibilities resting upon the parliament of Canada is that of framing a clear definition of "Canadian nationals" for whom the government and parliament are responsible, whether they be resident in the dominion or temporarily resident outside our territorial jurisdiction. So long as they retain the status of Canadian nationals they should in my opinion be treated as such and as holding a status within the dominion equal to that which any others individually enjoy.

When the Treaty of Versailles was signed certain articles related to Canadian nationals. The matter came to my personal attention because of the fact that many hundreds, who were applicants for compensation for damages suffered by illegal enemy warfare, necessarily were compelled to prove before the commissioner appointed to hear evidence that they were Canadian nationals at the time the Treaty of Versailles was ratified. In proving that they were such Canadian nationals they were compelled to resort for a definition to the Immigration Act, which was drawn not for the express purpose of defining the term "Canadian nationals", but rather for the purpose of defining those who are not admissible to this country as immigrants. It seemed to me a matter of regret that in dealing with the status of Canadian nationals we should be compelled to resort to an enactment which was put on the statute book as an act respecting immigration, for the purpose of providing measures for keeping people out of this country.

Then a further serious question was brought frequently to my notice. We have in this country hundreds of thousands of immigrants who have obtained certificates of naturalization, and who are settled here and who by reason of the fact that they have become domiciled British subjects are, within the meaning of the present act, "Canadian nationals." But if any of those immigrants who have obtained naturalization certificates—some of them members of this parliament—happen to be out of this country for a year, for instance, on a voyage around the world, or on a visit to Argentina to attend the British Empire fair, and through illness are not able to return home within the year, those Canadian nationals, simply by reason of that absence, although British subjects, are, under the existing acts prevented from reentering Canada and from resuming their domicile here, except they do so subject to the same objections as if they were coming in anew from Siberia, Kamchatka, Turkestan or some other foreign country, and had never been subjects of the king, domiciled in Canada. It seems to me that these surprising difficulties should be dealt with by an act of parliament clearly defining who are Canadian nationals.

Take another case. During the short time that I have occupied the position of Secretary of State I think there is not a religious organization in Canada engaged in missionary work in foreign countries that has not brought before the Department of State questions as to the national status of its missionaries in Japan, China or India who were formerly domiciled in Canada, but who have remained outside of this country for more than a year, and who have married and had children born to them in those countries. Under the present law some of those missionaries have no right —I make that assertion subject to correction, but it has been so decided I think—have no right to return to this country with their wives and children simply because under the existing law they are not Canadian nationals in the sense that they retain the right to return to Canada and resume the domicile which they left temporarily to represent great Canadian religious institutions in foreign countries.

Since I assumed the office of Secretary of State, representatives by the score, Canadians abroad, commercial agents, men sent abroad for the purpose of performing public duties and public service on behalf of the government of Canada, have raised the question as to whether their wives and their children born abroad are to be deemed Canadian nationals. If they are Canadian nationals as defined by the parliament of Canada, then I take the ground that it is the duty and responsibility of this parliament to enact that those Canadian nationals shall have the right to return to their former domicile and take up their lives in this country as from the time they left Canada on foreign service or to represent our great religious institutions, or other institutions dealing with trade, commerce and industry, which to successfully perform their functions abroad must have trade agents and representatives in foreign countries.

If this bill is to pass in its present form it seems clear that there must be amendments to it or to the Immigration Act. Therefore it may be difficult to proceed with the bill in committee of the whole house. But I should like, and I think the government of the day would like, to have an expression of opinion from hon. members as to whether, for the preservation of our own self-respect, for the maintenance of our dignity as a young nation, and to lay the foundations for our future national life, the time has not come when we are bound to define, as clearly as concise language may permit, who are Canadian nationals, with a view to fulfilling our duties and responsibilities to those Canadians temporarily resident abroad who should have equal status with ourselves in this country.

I should like this bill to receive second reading. As to whether it should go to a select committee or should be dealt with in committee of the whole house, I am at present in doubt. Therefore if the bill is read a second time I should like to have it reserved.

Of course, I have received protests against this bill, especially from the province of British Columbia, on the ground that under its terms one of the Japanese or Chinese race who was born in British Columbia would thereby become a Canadian national. But in that respect I wish to say that this bill makes no change whatever in the existing law. Whether a person be of the Chinese, the Japanese, the Malay or the Indian race, that person, male or female, born in this country thereby becomes a British subject, and if domiciled in this country thereby becomes a Canadian national under the law as it at present exists. I repeat, no change is proposed in that respect.

Therefore I submit the bill for the sympathetic consideration, I hope, of the house, because, speaking for myself, I am as proud as any other man of being a Canadian national born and bred in this country, but I shall be prouder still of my own people when by the laws we place upon the statute book and by our administration of those laws we make it clear that a Canadian national shall continue to be a Canadian national unless, by his own overt act he severs his connection with this country and refuses to continue his status as a Canadian national for the future.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I do not think questions should be asked on the second reading; they should be reserved for the committee stage.

Mr. CAHAN: I will answer any questions.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely the chair is not going to rule out questions when the principle of the bill is under discussion?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I heard the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) ask several questions the other day, on second reading.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yes, but it was out of order.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely I am not to be prevented from asking a question?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I am not preventing my hon. friend from doing so; I am just stating the position of the chair.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to be clear as to the position the chair is taking. If I am to be prohibited from asking questions I will not ask them. I will obey the ruling of the chair. The question I wish to ask my hon. friend is this: Does he argue that by reason of the provisions of the Immigration Act, children born of Canadian parents outside Canada cannot be admitted into Canada as Canadian citizens?

Mr. CAHAN: I think it is clear that the interpretation which was placed upon the Immigration Act by the previous administration—and I confess I am not an expert in the matter—is that children born abroad of Canadian parentage, in seeking admission to this country, must pass the same physical and mental examination as though they were foreign immigrants. But take another situation that exists right here. We have a large number of the most representative members of this House of Commons who are naturalized British subjects. It is absolutely clear that if one of these gentlemen remains out of Canada for more than twelve months, without reporting to some diplomatic officer—and often there is no diplomatic or consular officer to whom to report—that gentleman upon his return is, by our law—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is my hon. friend speaking now of naturalized or Canadian-born citizens?

Mr. CAHAN: I am speaking of those naturalized.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was speaking of Canadian-born.

Mr. CAHAN: No; I do not think my hon. friend was speaking of Canadian-born citizens.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So far as the children are concerned.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. member was speaking, I understood, of children born abroad. And the question has been raised by every religious institution in this country, without exception, I think, and raised by a great number of our commercial agents abroad, as to whether, according to the interpretation which has been given to the Immigration Act, the children of such parents, if born abroad, are not subject to exactly the same examination and the same grounds for refusal of entry as if they were foreigners, of a different race. My hon. friend shakes his head. Well, if it is necessary the correspondence can be brought down. I may say that some of it has been forwarded to me by the Department of External Affairs and from other sources, with legal opinions to the effect I have stated. If, therefore, there is any doubt in the matter it should be cleared up. None of the legal officers with whom I have consulted can give me definite advice in the matter, as to how otherwise the doubt could or should be cleared up. If a doubt exists as to children born abroad of British parents who, except for their absence abroad, would be domiciled in Canada, there is with respect to such persons a section of the Naturalization Act under which the minister, to remove such doubts, may issue certificates of naturalization. And that we have done in a very limited number of cases. But the other fact remains that, even if they receive certificates of naturalization in that way, inasmuch as they are born abroad, in India or Japan or some other foreign country, there arises the question whether, through lack of actual domicile in this country, they are Canadian nationals. Under the act as it stands at present there are Canadian nationals who cannot obtain admission to Canada. That fact also must be considered.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think they would get in.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman thinks they would get in?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: Well, I do not wish to go into it, but I have before me the report of the former Canadian minister at Washington and a memorandum prepared by Mr. Wrong of that legation, pointing out case after case in which there exists a grave doubt.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So long as the children are minors—

Mr. CAHAN: But they sometimes grow up.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Of course.

Mr. CAHAN: Well, suppose they grow up and suppose they make a clear declaration under the act that they wish to remain British subjects: they may go back to England, but they cannot, under our law as it stands at present, come back to Canada except as immigrants. England takes this broad view, that a British subject, so long as he remains a British subject whether domiciled or formerly domiciled in any part of the world, is free to enter the confines of Great Britain, and he continues to be regarded as a British subject. But while there are difficulties in the way of determining who are Canadian nationals, we in this country, under the law as it stands at present upon the statute book —and it has not been amended since my hon. friend was Minister of Immigration—do not admit that Canadian nationals, who have been naturalized here, may return to this country after an absence of more than one year, and, if they are natural-born British subjects, after more than five years. But that is a matter that this house must consider. It is not a party matter. It is a matter that must be dealt with by an almost unanimous decision in this house as to who for the future shall constitute the nationals of this country.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I may point out that Canada is the only country in which there is not such a law as the minister is speaking of, in conformity with international law.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have already intimated to the house that discussion by dialogue at this stage is out of order. The Secretary of State was entitled to speak once; he has spoken twice by leave of the house. Other hon. members are also confined by the rules to one speech. I must emphasize again that discussion by dialogue on the second reading of the bill is out of order, and any hon. members who rise now may not speak again.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): I do not wish to speak at any length on the bill, but I may observe that with the principle of it we on this side of the house, or at least a large proportion of us, agree. This is not a new matter. It was brought before the house in 1921 by the Right Hon. Mr. Doherty, who was then Minister of Justice, and who had a bill passed covering the subject. The whole question was under study by the late administration of my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King), both in the Department of the Secretary of State, over which I had the honour to preside, and in the Department of External Affairs.

Reports have been asked from experts in the matter with respect to the international, legal and other points of view, and there is a vast amount of correspondence, besides other documents, with respect to the whole subject. This information, gathered by the two departments I have mentioned, is the product of years of effort to find a solution for this very interesting but most complex problem.

The principle underlying the bill is the endeavour to define what is a Canadian national as distinguished from a British subject. British subjects are defined in the Naturalization Act; and, as the house is aware, the conditions under which persons become British subjects by statute are decided, not in this Dominion alone but by agreement between the mother country and the various dominions. Certain conditions underlie the granting of certificates of naturalization to British subjects, one of them being the condition just alluded to in the dialogue which took place after my hon. friend's speech on the question of residence. May I say that that residence clause in the Canadian statute is not exclusive to us, but it is one of the conditions upon which all the dominions and the mother country have agreed to in the granting of naturalization papers. The present bill does not deal with naturalization, it is simply a definition of what is to be a Canadian national, distinguishing a citizen of Canada from a citizen of Australia or New Zealand, although all are British subjects under another statute.

I hold in my hand a report on this very problem which was made to the Secretary of State by a learned professor in Toronto. I do not intend to quote very extensively from this report, but a passing allusion to it may clarify the situation. This professor suggested a definition of subjects of His Majesty peculiarly relating to their Canadian citizenship. The explanation given is that two conditions must be recognized: first, the fact that the Dominion of Canada is not an independent state according to the categories contained in international law, and, second, the fact that she possesses legal rights arising from her position under the crown and in international affairs which she can confer on certain persons or classes of persons. The term Canadian national was adopted both by my right hon. friend and by Right Hon. Mr. Doherty in 1921, the contention being that it satisfies both, the idea of Canadian national autonomy and Canada's essential position in relation to the crown and the empire. In a way it is a cumbersome title but, as the expert says, and I fully agree with him, no simple title will meet a complicated situation.

A bill was introduced and adopted by this house in 1921. I confess that I am basing my conclusions on the different reports which came before me since that time. The main difficulty with the bill introduced by the Right Hon. Mr. Doherty in 1921 was that the definition then made of a Canadian national was based on some other statute, namely, the Immigration Act. The bill of 1921 enumerated the classes of Canadian nationals, among them being any British subject who is a Canadian citizen within the meaning of the Immigration Act. There were other sections in that bill, but I allude only to that one.

In defining a Canadian national we should have a basic statute which independent of any other enactment should be complete and inclusive in itself. The Immigration Act deals with a special situation, that of admitting citizens into this country and I know —the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) will bear me out in this—that there has always been a great deal of difficulty in the administration of the Naturalization Act under the Secretary of State and the administration of the Immigration Act under some other department. If we follow the example set by the bill of 1921, and define a Canadian national as being a Canadian citizen as defined by the Immigration Act, we will be faced with further difficulty. I commend the attitude taken by the Secretary of State in endeavouring in his bill to define "Canadian national", not by a reference to any other statute but by making a basic statutory definition which will be complete within the borders of the bill.

The interchange of questions and answers which we heard just a moment ago on some of the complexities of this matter, and the doubt entertained by such a learned person as the Secretary of State, would lend strength to his suggestion that this bill be referred to a special committee of the house. We agree with the principle of the bill, affecting as it does a matter upon which the late administration had been working for some time. I will vote for the second reading. It is not within my province to move that the bill be referred to a special committee for consideration, but as the Secretary of State has invited suggestions on this point, I urge very strongly that the bill be sent to a special committee where the many difficulties and complexities connected therewith can be fully threshed out.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I think this is one of the most important bills which has ever come before this house. I agree with the suggestion of the last speaker (Mr. Rinfret) that this bill should be referred to a special committee of the house for very serious consideration. There is one subsection which should receive special attention, namely, subsection (f) of section 2, which reads:

"Natural-born British subject" means a natural-born British subject as defined in part I of the Naturalization Act.

This clause of the Naturalization Act provides that a person born on a British ship, whether or not in territorial waters, becomes a British citizen, and if that subsection were adopted the same definition would be carried out in the present bill. Our naturalization laws should conserve for our own people the exclusive right to say who may become citizens of this country, but that right is not preserved in the present bill. By the provisions of the Naturalization Act a child born in Canada or upon a British ship becomes a British subject, whether we like it or not, or whether children so born, or their parents, are fit persons to become citizens of Canada. I contend that the provisions of this bill should be changed to such an extent as not to extend this right to any child of alien parentage born within His Majesty's dominions or on board a British ship, unless the parents of such child are fit and proper persons, both physically and morally, to become naturalized citizens of this country.

Many undesirable people are making their way into this country, and I believe I am correct in saying that the state has the power to say who shall become its citizens. On the Pacific coast we are faced with a race problem. These newcomers will not assimilate with our Anglo-Saxon stock, and they are content with a much lower standard of living and of civilization. Their birth rate is much higher, and in this connection I should like to refer to the increase in the school population of orientals as against whites. Even if bars were put up against Asiatics coming into British Columbia, and such immigration ceased, the birth rate would still be alarming and in the course of years the Asiatic probably would overshadow the white population. There are some 54,000 orientals in British Columbia and last year the birth rate for Japanese alone was 38 per cent as against five per cent for whites. Steps should be taken immediately to conserve our heritage for our own people. When I speak of heritage I mean the land that these Asiatics are gradually beginning to control in British Columbia. The figures for last year, compiled by the Minister of Lands for British Columbia, show that some 50,000 acres are owned or controlled by members of the Japanese race.

The oriental problem has two sides, economic and national, but the national side is the most important. The Asiatic problem has been before the house many times, but I think this would be a good time to consider seriously whether or not we are to continue to allow such people who are not assimilable to become Canadians. This question must be settled definitely sooner or later. At present it is probably primarily a British Columbia question, but it is a very serious question so far as our province is concerned.

For the benefit of the house I am going to recite briefly the history in connection with the situation out there. In 1908 the so-called gentleman's agreement with Japan was made by the Hon. Mr. Lemieux, whereby among other conditions it was agreed that Japan should limit immigrants of the domestic and agriculture types to 400 a year. Former residents of Canada and those coming to work under contract were also admitted. In 1910 the Immigration Act was amended to give the minister power to exclude any race deemed undesirable in Canada. In 1919 the act was further amended to give the minister power to reject those considered unsuitable for assimilation. This provision was not used against the Japanese. In 1913 the Anglo-Japanese treaty was adopted by Canada. It contained a clause allowing the nationals of other countries to live and trade in the country of each contracting party. Canada's adoption of the treaty was modified by a clause stating that nothing in the treaty should be held to affect the provisions of the Immigration Act. In 1923 negotiations with Japan modified the Lemieux agreement and cut the limit of domestics and agricultural labourers to be admitted to 150 instead of 400.

There is no specific law dealing with Japanese immigration. Canada acts simply under the agreement with Japan which undertakes to limit the number of pasports to those desiring to enter Canada, while Canada agrees to admit those with passports and to prohibit others from entering. In the years preceding 1927 the Japanese birth rate was over five times that of the white. Last year the Japanese population increased 74 per cent as against an increase of 6 per cent in the white population. Your oriental is no pioneer. He lets the white man open up the country. When it is organized he purchases or leases improved land and reaps the reward. This is where uninformed eastern opinion goes astray. Otherwise why should they look on that problem as largely one of filling up our open spaces. I am not going to deal with the matter at greater length, because many figures have been given in connection with it; but the suggestion of the minister should be taken seriously and before we proceed much further with this bill it should be referred to a committee where this grave aspect of affairs in British Columbia should be taken into consideration.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

SUPPLY

EMBARGO ON RUSSIAN GOODS—GOVERNMENT BY ORDER IN COUNCIL—AMENDMENT, MR. BOURASSA

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice, for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I would ask the forbearance of the house to consider for a moment a matter of importance, especially in view of the comments that have been passed in the province of Quebec with regard to the adoption by the government of the order in council prohibiting the importation of Russian goods. I want, however, to enlarge the question and to discuss for a few moments the whole principle of government by order in council. In order to make my position clear, I shall read immediately the motion which I propose to move:

> The house regards the growing practice of deciding by order in council important matters of public policy as an encroachment upon the duties and privileges of parliament and a violation of the principle of responsible government.

Ever since I have occupied a seat in the house—and that is thirty-five years ago—and even prior to that, I have heard leaders of the various oppositions criticize the then government for deciding by order in council matters which should be referred to parliament. I shall not dwell at length upon what might be called the academic aspect of the question; but nevertheless it seems to me that, especially since the war, the evolution of government in this as well as in other countries calls for serious reflection on the part of those who still hold faith in parliamentary and responsible institutions. I must say that my own faith has been somewhat shaken; but at the same time, so long as we pretend to be a country governed by parliamentary practices, so long as we claim that the government of the day is but the executive committee of the House of Commons, we should be very careful about allowing the cabinet to carry on, by orders in council or even by private dictates of the Prime Minister, matters that ought to be threshed out in the house where the elected representatives of the people sit.

Of course I was bound by the rules of the house to give to this motion perhaps the appearance of a motion of want of confidence, but I want to say at once that it is not so much a motion of blame against the present government, as an expression, might I say, of criticism against a system that has been growing upon us and that has been pursued by practically all governments. In order to make my position clear, I am going to illustrate it by summing up before the house the case of our external relations, taking as a concrete example the relations between Canada and Russia during the last ten years. I have chosen that particular question for two reasons, first, because in those ten years all our relations with Russia have been dealt with by orders in council. Not in a single instance has a decision been taken by the Canadian government, whether by a Liberal or by a Conservative government, under the advice of the house, nor has the government received from the house any mandate to enter into or to break relations with Russia, or to change the basis of our relations with that country. In these days, especially since the war, when we are entering into the field of foreign affairs, whether for the making of trade agreements or of diplomatic arrangements, when we are beginning to have Canadian representatives accredited to foreign governments, it is of the highest importance that there should be an understanding whether our foreign relations, either diplomatic or commercial, are going to be determined by parliament or by the government without consultation of parliament. That is my second reason.

Three years ago I gave a part of the story which I am bound to repeat to-day, in order to complete my argument. As may be remembered by some members of the house, in 1921, a trade agreement was concluded between the British government and the government of the Soviet republic. This trade agreement was not made by a labour-radical cabinet, but by the coalition government presided over by Mr. Lloyd George. It was signed by a staunch, respectable Conservative member of that government, Sir Robert Horne, and on behalf of Russia by Mr. Krassin, who, I think, according to all testimony, was one of the most respectable—I hope there were others—members of the Russian government. This trade agreement was concluded, in the very terms of the white paper which I have in my hand, "pending the conclusion of a formal general peace treaty between Great Britain and Russia."

It contains various clauses defining, for example, the conditions under which the nationals of the two countries should live in their respective territories, concerning the protection of the rights and facilities necessary to enable the people of both countries to carry on trade, and so forth. It contemplated the appointment of official agents of each government to the other. This agreement was concluded on the 16th of March, 1921. I am now going to quote from various papers produced during the session of 1928, under numbers 180 A, B and C of the sessional papers of that year.

On the 22nd of August, 1921, an order in council was passed by the Canadian government upon the recommendation of the then Minister of Trade and Commerce, Sir George Foster, with no bolshevist tendencies, I believe, in these terms:

The minister recommends that His Majesty's government—

The government in England—

—be informed that Canada desires to participate in the arrangement for the resumption of trade with Russia.

That was referring to the agreement concluded in the month of March. The order in council was communicated by Lord Byng to the then Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. Churchill, on the 30th of August. Some previous despatch must have been sent, because on the 25th of August, Mr. Gregory, who was, I think, Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs in England, had already written to Mr. Berzin, chief of the Russian delegation in London, as follows:

I am directed by the Marquess Curzon of Kedleston—

Another one, I believe, not under any suspicion of bolshevism—

—to inform you that the Canadian government has expressed the desire to be associated with His Majesty's government in the trade agreement between Russia and Great Britain.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, there was no question of restraining the relations of Canada and Russia merely to trade matters. What the Canadian government asked for was to be associated with the government of Great Britain in all the terms of what I might call this preface to a formal peace treaty between Great Britain and Russia. Some correspondence ensued and on October 15, 1921, Mr. Churchill wrote to Lord Byng a despatch in which a form of the adhesion of Canada to that treaty was suggested. The form is this:

The government of the Dominion of Canada having expressed their desire that the provisions of the agreement between the government of the United Kingdom and the Russian Soviet government for the resumption of trade and commerce between the two countries which was signed at London on the 16th day of March, 1921, should apply also to Canada and to merchandise, the produce and manufacture of Canada, it is hereby agreed that the provisions of that agreement shall as and from the date of the present agreement—

Meaning the agreement to be made by Canada—

—be held to apply to the Dominion of Canada and to govern the relations between Canada and Russia.

Not only trade relations between Canadian dealers and Russian tradesmen, but relations between Canada as a state and the Soviet republic as another state. Evidently the matter was considered favourably by the Canadian government because on the 26th of December, 1921, upon a report from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who was then the Prime Minister, Mr. Arthur Meighen, an order in council was passed by the Canadian government in the following terms:

The committee of the privy council have had before them a report dated 17th of December, 1921, from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Meighen—

—to whom was referred a despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated 15th of October, 1921, regarding the desire of the Canadian government to participate in the arrangement for the resumption of trade with Russia, proposing a formula to be embodied in notes to be exchanged between the foreign office and the Russian trade delegation with the object of making applicable to Canada the provisions of the trade agreement between the government of the United Kingdom and the Russian Soviet government, and inquiring whether Your Excellency's ministers would concur in the terms of such formula. The minister, with the concurrence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce—

Again, I repeat, Sir George Foster—

—states that the proposed formula is approved by the Canadian government.

The committee on the recommendation of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for External Affairs advise that Your Excellency may be pleased to inform the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies to this effect by telegraph.

All of which is respectfully submitted for Your Excellency's approval.

(Signed) Rodolphe Boudreau,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

To show the house the importance which the then Conservative government attached to getting into close trade and political and friendly relations with the Russian government, which has been styled both in and out of this house as a government of atheists and murderers, this order in council was passed, I would point out, twenty days after the Conservative government had been defeated at the polls and just three days before they resigned. Practically the last action of importance that was taken by that government was to make sure that Canada would not lose her chance of entering into friendly relations with the Soviet government. I am not saying that in any spirit of criticism or sarcasm, but simply to demonstrate on what a fragile basis rest the comments that have been made recently in the province of Quebec with regard to our relations with Russia. The Soviet government with which the Canadian government made that agreement was much more directly concerned, either as a government or through its personnel, with the murder of the czar, the czarina and their children than the present Russian government. Mr. Lenin was still the chief of that government, and the foreign minister was still Mr. Chicherin. The representative of the Soviet in London was Mr. Krassin. Mr. Krassin had no share in the responsibility for events of October, 1917. But the government with which Canada entered into friendly relations was a government certainly as, if not more, communistic than that with which by order in council of a few months ago we broke relations. At the present time I am not expressing my opinion as to the propriety of one action or the other, but am simply pointing out the facts.

Three days after this important document was passed and after the arrangement had been made, a change took place in the government of Canada. The Liberal party was called to power. They concluded the accord, in other words, they affixed their signatures to the document which had been prepared by Mr. Meighen upon the suggestion of Sir George Foster, and it was sent to London. So far as that is concerned I hope both political parties in the province of Quebec will cease their accusations and counter accusations of being friendly to murderers, atheists and communists because as a matter of fact both parties have, by order in council without consideration by the house, committed themselves and Canada to friendly relations with the government of Russia.

So much for the point of departure. Matters went along for some years until we come to the year 1927, and I wish to dwell upon what happened at that time. Various demands had been made in London to bring about a cessation of the relations with Russia. The previous Labour government had refused. Sir Austen Chamberlain had refused. But Sir William Joynson-Hicks,—familiarly known in London by the short name of Jix, and who since has been lordified under what name I do not know—took the course he thought best and organized the Arcos raid. I have read the speech delivered by Sir Austen Chamberlain in the House of Commons to explain the action of his colleague. It is a masterpiece of parliamentary diplomacy. Nevertheless the action of the British government was strongly criticized by Mr. MacDonald, by Mr. Henderson, the present foreign secretary, and by Mr. Lloyd George. Whether or not the British government acted properly in the matter is not my business. I quite agree with a statement previously made by the present Prime Minister, who I regret to say is not in the house, that it is not our business to criticize the action of any other government unless we are directly concerned. Immediately however, Mr. Amery, the very active and able Secretary of State for the Dominions, wired to Canada on May 23, 1927, asking if we would follow suit and break relation with Russia in the same manner and for the same reasons that had induced the British government to act. I shall quote from his communication:

> Especially as the Soviet action which has led to the present situation is directed against institutions of all parts of the British empire, we should like to suggest for consideration that as regards the retention of Soviet representatives this is a matter on which uniformity of action by the various members of the commonwealth concerned would present great advantages.

To this communication the then Governor General, Lord Willingdon, in the name of his ministers, replied in these very significant terms:

> The despatches received from London do not indicate that any documents have been found in the Arcos raid which establish that the official agency in Canada has been a centre of espionage and subversive propaganda. If any evidence to this effect has been discovered, it is desired to be informed as early as possible. It is further desired to learn whether His Majesty's government in Great Britain, in terminating the trade agreement, are acting under paragraph 1 of article 13 of the agreement, providing for six month's notice, or under paragraph 3, providing for immediate termination in the event of an infringement, and in the latter case whether any special steps have been taken towards giving the other party an opportunity of furnishing an explanation.

Here we have the assertion by the Governor General of Canada that no case of espionage had been detected in Canada, and that therefore Canada as a nation had no reason to break the arrangement. To that communication the Secretary of State replied:

Such information as was obtained from Arcos raid directly relating to Canada consisted of addresses found in possession of Anton Miller.

Curiously enough most of the addresses were found to be located in the loyal city of Toronto, and the names mentioned were of good Anglo Saxon origin. No mention was made in the despatch concerning the activities of those persons, nor was any mention made of any subversive propaganda being carried on in Canada. Without waiting for further evidence, on the 26th May, the day following the despatch from Mr. Amery, the Governor General wired the following to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs:

So far as Canada is concerned there has been a steady and substantial growth of trade under the agreement and there has not been any substantial ground of complaint as to espionage or propaganda against the present official agent in Canada.

Of course, the reference here was to the Russian agent.

My ministers have concluded that the evidences of espionage and subversive propaganda set forth by your Prime Minister make it clear that an essential condition of the agreement as entered into by Canada as well as Great Britain, namely, that each party should "refrain from hostile action or undertakings and from conducting outside of its own borders any official propaganda direct or indirect against the institutions of the British Empire," has not been fulfilled. In order to remove any doubt as to whether the agreement lapses automatically and having regard to all the circumstances, they have accordingly decided to terminate the agreement.

So that as the matter then stood, Mr. Speaker, after the Canadian government had admitted and asserted officially and unreservedly that no evidence of communistic propaganda had been found in Canada, before they had received even the text of the speeches delivered in the Imperial House of Commons, they terminated our agreement with Russia—again by order in council. But they left private individuals still free to deal with each other as they thought fit and under the ordinary risks of trade between two countries that have no special treaties or trade agreements, but are not at war with each other. Such was the situation till last year, when, at the fall session, a bill was passed to amend the customs tariff, under section 2 of which it is provided:

The governor in council may, from time to time, prohibit the importation into Canada of any goods exported directly or indirectly from any country not a contracting party to the Treaty of Versailles, executed at Paris, France, on the 28th day of June, 1919; and any order of the governor in council prohibiting the importation into Canada of any goods from any such country shall be published in the next following issue of the Canada Gazette.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I readily take my share of the blame in having given to the government this power to deal with a matter of great importance by order in council, and in that respect I admit that the government has at least acted constitutionally according to the narrow interpretation of parliamentary practices. But was it contemplated by the government or by the house to interrupt trade relations with Russia on moral grounds? That would have opened a very broad aspect of the question. Referring to the debate which took place, I think I can show clearly that it was not the intention of the government, and therefore that, although they received the power under this clause to pass such order in council, they did not receive from this house any mandate to pass it as an expression of opinion of Canada upon any matter of policy, social, religious or otherwise. I quote from the explanation given by the Prime Minister at page 470 of the debate last fall:

The limitation here is wider,—

Referring to some other legislation—

—but it is to meet the possibility of an unusual situation that may arise between now—

That is, September 19, 1930—

—and the next session of parliament. It is the only method that it is thought will meet the situation without incurring the criticism of, in a statute, anticipating, shall I say, discourtesy to any peoples with respect to the export of their commodities. It stands in the mere position of being there as an instrument for national well-being if it is desirable for that purpose to use it. Otherwise, of course, it will not be used.

Later on the member for Prince (Mr. MacLean), made the statement:

I have before me some startling campaign literature stating that Mr. Bennett would stop the importation from Russia of 125,000,000 tons of coal. It states that this coal is mined by the Soviet, an enemy of Christianity.

Mr. Bennett: Who said that?

Mr. MacLean: There is a slight difference in—

Mr. Bennett: Who said that?

Mr. MacLean: It appears in campaign literature which I have on my desk.

Mr. Bennett: The hon. gentleman will not connect that language with me.

Mr. MacLean: No, I am not saying that.

Mr. Bennett: I just wished to make that clear.

So I think it is quite evident that the legislation which was passed last fall was not contemplated, either by the government or by the house, as anything else but power given to the cabinet by order in council to stop the importation of certain goods on due grounds of—shall I say?—industrial or economic policy, and the Prime Minister took great care to dissociate himself from any moral motive that could be attributed to him or to the government in connection with this matter.

I am insisting on this point, Mr. Speaker, because in the province of Quebec, at least, this measure has been presented primarily, exclusively, emphatically, by the legislature of Quebec, the so-called Liberal government, and a Conservative opposition vying with each other as to which group would congratulate the government in warmer terms, as a great move in combating "the perils of communism and atheism." The city council of Montreal, which is at present under the sway of the leader of the opposition in the local legislature, also adopted resolutions of congratulation. One of the city councillors went so far as to say that this was the beginning of a crusade against atheism and communism. It is on this ground particularly that I want to make myself clear and to dissipate some of the equivocations that have been developed especially in the province of Quebec.

As regards the principles and practices, as much as we know them, that have been carried on in Russia since the revolution, not only of October but of March, 1917, I declare myself what I have been all my life long—a Christian and a Canadian citizen imbued with the principles of British government as we have applied them for half a century now. I hate atheism as a Christian, I hate communism as an adherent to the doctrine of social order and economic liberty. But, Mr. Speaker, I would not be a Christian, I would not be a British subject, and I would not be imbued with the principles of social liberty, if I would not assert at the same time that the economic system under which the United States and Canada have grown, progressed or retrograded, for the last twenty-five years, the capitalistic system upon which rests the whole policy of North America, is just as antagonistic to the principles of Christianity, of social justice and of British tradition as is the communistic and atheistic system which now prevails in Russia. And for my part I repeat, as a Christian and as a Canadian, I do not consider that we have received either from Providence or from the conscience of the Canadian nation any mandate to teach lessons to other nations.

But suppose that, contrary to what was stated last fall by the Prime Minister, the main object of this order in council was to protest against communism and atheism, would not the protest have been far more emphatic if it had been made by the parliament of Canada? Communism has prevailed in Russia ever since 1917, and from that time also atheism has been taught in that country. Parliament never protested; neither the Conservative nor the Liberal government raised its voice against these doctrines. They did not protest against the murder of the czar and the czarina and their children. On the contrary, they entered into an agreement with the murderers. They made trade arrangements with the propagandists of communism and atheism, and the succeeding government carried on these things until Sir Henri Deterding, not having been able to close a bargain with the Russian government on matters of business, secured from his friend Sir William Joynson-Hicks the Arcos raid which compelled Great Britain to sever her relations with Russia.

I do not think religion had much to do with that. But, it is suggested that solicitude for the principles of religion and social order is at the basis of this order in council; that is asserted by the legislature of Quebec and the city council of Montreal. Well, I am puzzled. Our religion forbids us to purchase coal from Russia; with our sense of order we stand aghast at the idea of purchasing pulpwood from that country. But our religion invites us to go and kiss on both cheeks the representatives of Russia in order to sell our wheat in conjunction with them. I say, I am puzzled both in my religion and in my policy; and I think many other Canadians will be similarly puzzled.

I remember a good many years ago in the old house a farewell speech delivered by Mr. Blair when resigning as Minister of Railways in protest against the contract entered into between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the building of the Transcontinental. Replying to an eloquent sentence in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech, "But the country demands it; the country cannot wait," Mr. Blair said: "Perhaps the truth is that Senator Cox cannot wait." Perhaps in this instance it is not so much the religion of the people of Canada which is imperilled as that of Senator Webster, who controls the importation of Welsh coal, or the social sense of Sir Herbert Holt, who monopolizes, to a large extent, the pulp and paper trade, his only rival being the International Paper Company.

A gesture of this nature must be, first, true; secondly, it must be effective; and thirdly, it should receive the moral sanction and support of the nation, if it is to have any weight. I remember a good saying of old Metternich. Once he was asked to protest, in the name of Austria, which was then still the predominating power of Europe. I believe the request had been sent by Mr. Guizot, but it does not matter. The reply was, "A self-respecting government does not speak unless it is capable of making its words good." Now if, after the revolution in Russia, the great nations of Europe with which we were united had concluded a sensible peace; if for a moment the French and English had been able to forget their rancours against the Germans; if Italy had been satisfied with a fair portion of the plunders of war; if they had realized that Christendom, or, if you prefer, western Europe needed all its united forces to face the menace that had arisen in Russia, first in March 1917, and later in October of that same year: then, Canada, having played a part in the war which precipitated the revolution in Russia, might have joined the forces of resistance for the salvation of Christendom and the preservation of political liberty, liberty of trade, and established traditions; not to impose our will upon Russia, but at least to help Europe in preserving itself against the penetration of communism and other Russian practices. But the great nations with which we were associated did not do anything of the kind. Even after so many years of experience, especially after two years of experience of the Russian revolution, the European countries were determined to crush Germany and to exact from her terms with which they knew she could not comply. They were determined to weaken the only barrier that remained in Europe against the spread of political, economic and, perhaps to-morrow, military bolshevism. One of the most determined nationalists in France, and one of the best informed Frenchmen on foreign affairs, Mr. Jacques Bainville, expressed the view in the midst of the war, and under censure from old Clemenceau, that the only force capable of putting some order into Russia was Germany. I shall never forget a conversation I had with one of the most enlightened Englishmen of the last twenty-five years. It was during the war, and I asked him what he thought of it all. "An understanding between England, France and Germany to check Russia." Then the pope submitted his peace proposals. But he was not listened to. By the way, where are the French Canadian Catholics who gave moral support to Pope Benedict when he appealed to the conscience of nations to restore some degree of peace in Europe and to stem the tide of revolution? Not till the trade of Senator Webster was in danger did the conscience of Quebec awaken. At any rate, those supporters were very few and not very strong. However, let that pass. The peace was concluded in such a manner as to disarm what remained of Conservative forces in Europe; and since then, all the countries of Europe, with the possible exception of England, have been shaken, at least to some extent, by the struggle between the forces of revolution and the counter forces of autocracy. Now, I do not think that Europe has put itself sufficiently into moral and political order to attempt to settle the affairs of Russia. Are we then going to do it all by ourselves? I do not think so. And, I repeat, —in this regard I am speaking of government at large, without any party spirit—it is not the business of a self-respecting and serious government to teach lessons which it has not itself learned.

Mr. LAVERGNE: In other words, if we cannot prevent evil, let us take part in it?

Mr. BOURASSA: It is not a question of taking part. I will carry the question still further. If we are going to put a stop to trading between Canadian citizens and the citizens of countries that are conducted on non-Christian principles, where are we going to trade? There are more atheists to-day in the United States of America than there are in Russia.

Mr. LAVERGNE: But they do not use the same propaganda.

Mr. BOURASSA: When millions of Russians are standing up for their religion and risking and giving their lives for their convictions, I still have hope for the revival of that great nation. I do not believe in a revival of Christianity in the midst of wealth and materialism. If we are not going to trade with a nation which practises atheism, are we going to stop trading with the United States? It is said that Russia has taken practical and effective means to replace religion with atheism, but I regret to say that no country has so penetrated the minds of its youth with practical atheism as did the French government forty or fifty years ago.

Mr. LAVERGNE: But they did not use the same method.

Mr. BOURASSA: It was less barbarous but far more effective. The barbarous methods were discarded. But what did they do? They not only expurged the name of God from the textbooks; they even falsified the most illustrious classics of France. I have seen the Fables of Lafontaine, one of the first books put into the hands of boys and girls of twelve and fourteen years of age, falsified in order to erase the name of God. Did the Conservatives or Liberals of that day, in Canada, suggest that we should break off relations with France and stop trading with that country because that government was carrying on propaganda against creeds and against religion much more effectively than that carried on during the days of the French revolution, and more effective than that now being carried on by Russia?

Mr. LAVERGNE: Does my hon. friend think that the French clergy approved the second method as compared with the Russian method?

Mr. BOURASSA: I am not speaking for the French clergy, but I know that the most enlightened French clergymen acknowledge that in France religion has been held down much more effectively under that regime than it was under the regime of brutality carried on in the first revolution. I do not approve of either method, I simply say that I cannot see upon what political, moral, economic or other ground, we have a mandate to do what no other nation has done. It may be said that this is to be an example, but if it is to be an example why was not the sense of parliament asked? The following comment was issued on the day the order in council was passed:

> The government is convinced that there is forced labour in the cutting and transport of timber and in the mining of coal, that political prisoners are exploited, that the standard of living is below any level conceived of in Canada, and that broadly speaking, all employment is in control of the communistic government which regulates all conditions of work and seeks to impose its will upon the whole world. This is communism, its creed and its fruits, which we as a country oppose and must refuse to suport by interchange of trade.

If that is the motive for passing this order in council why did the Prime Minister take such pains at the last session to explain that he did not want to pass the order in council upon that ground? He twice interrupted the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacLean) when he suggested that that was the reason. If our sense of honour is so high, if our horror of the Russian nation is such that we cannot purchase coal, furs and pulpwood from them, how is it that the official representative of Canada when in Rome invited the Russian government to commune with us in the solving of the problems of our wheat trade? Mr. Ferguson's invitation did not include Great Britain—the "murderers" were invited, but our allies, the British, were excluded. Mr. Ferguson made it quite clear that he did not want the British; he did not want the consumers, he wanted only the producers. If that invitation had been accepted, the Russian delegates, the representatives of a government of "murderers" and "atheists", would now be the guests of Canada and they now would be embracing certain hon. members of this house.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They would not embrace them.

Mr. BOURASSA: They would be the guests of Canada and receive all the diplomatic courtesies and privileges accorded to the representatives of the other nations. How can the so-called moral lesson be applied under such circumstances?

I will not discuss at length the economic aspect, but I will quote the opinions of a couple of men who have nothing in common with communism and who have no sympathy with atheism, Sir George Paish and Lord Arbuthnott. When Sir George Paish came to Canada a few weeks ago he spoke in both Montreal and Toronto, and I think his words are worth while referring to. Sir George Paish was the only man of authority—I know one without authority—who ten years ago predicted what has now occurred, the present crisis. He showed the fallacy of the false prosperity which has made worse the present crisis. He now states that we must desire the five-year plan to succeed in Russia because that is the only salvation of our economics. If the five-year plan succeeds, then the Russians will not attempt to ship all their goods to foreign countries, but they will ask for a larger part of them to be retained in order to improve their own lives.

I do not think Lord Arbuthnott has any revolutionary tendencies. He was once a great cattle raiser, in Canada, I think. When asked whether or not he expected the plan to succeed he said: I do not know, but I know this much, that if it succeeds, we will have to revise all our conditions of production and interchange of trade.

Some time ago, I was in France—the Prime Minister reproached me with this some time ago, but travel is my only luxury—and during that time three things happened in the sphere of European and international affairs: the Imperial conference, the round table conference relating to India, and the famous trial in Moscow in connection with the so-called sabotage of the five-year plan. I followed the proceedings of these three interesting events with great interest, the last one especially; but what struck me most forcibly was this. In a letter written by a French economist in a most conservative and authoritative organ of the French press, le Temps, he gave this warning to the leaders in France in politics, diplomacy and economics: Do not make any mistake; if the Russian people put up with the exigencies of the situation, the five-year plan is going to succeed.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Heaven help us then.

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes, heaven help us then, I admit, but this brings me to this aspect of the question: Is there danger in Canada of a spreading of bolshevism? Bolshevism is, of course, merely a word. Is there danger of a spreading of the principles or practices or policies pursued in Russia? I am not one of those who take either too optimistic or too pessimistic a view of the situation, but I am sure of one thing: if there are occasional and local eruptions of feeling, if there are symptoms of economic or social or even religious revolution in Canada, this will be not on account of what is done in Russia but on account of what is lacking in Canada. If there is one thing which a study of history teaches, it is this: that revolutions occur in any country and at any period not on account of the actions or the feelings or the policies of far-distant governments, but on account of the conditions in the countries in which those revolutions occur.

Mr. LAVERGNE: May I be permitted—

Mr. BOURASSA: Would my hon. friend kindly respect the rules of the house? I have never interrupted him; I have never interrupted anybody. I am old and somewhat nervous, and I ask his gracious permission to proceed. He will have plenty of opportunity to speak.

Mr. LAVERGNE: My hon. friend should not make statements which are not correct.

Mr. BOURASSA: What brought about the success of the revolution in Russia? If I may sum up what I have gathered after ten years of reading, studying and inquiring from men of all shades of opinion, Frenchmen, Englishmen, Germans, Italians, Catholics, Protestants, unbelievers,—I have lost no occasion to inform myself as to the state of affairs in Russia; in 1922 I spent three months in Rome, and I came into contact with some of the men who organized the various works of help in Russia, men who have known intimately the Russian nation—and the consensus of opinion of all was this: What brought about the extraordinary success of bolshevism was the defects, the vices of the regime which preceded it. I do not mean czardom alone. I think the poor devil of the czar, as in France prior to the revolution the poor king of France, was the scapegoat of many, many sinners. I would put it broadly as lack of responsibility on the part of the leading classes, whether czar, bureaucrats, or noble absentees, spending on the Riviera by millions money gathered from the peasantry of Russia with whom they had no contact. The absenteeism of the landowners was the curse of Ireland for centuries; it was the curse of France in the century and a half which preceded the French revolution. What prevented England during her great upheaval from falling into the same abyss into which France fell 140 or 150 years later, or into which Russia fell a few years ago, was that the English landlords, with all their defects, their narrowness of mind and class spirit, at least lived on their lands. They fulfilled some of the social functions and duties for which they had received their privileges. The English merchants were patriotic; they were sometimes narrow and sometimes grafting in their trade relations, but when the nation came to a crisis they were generous in the disposal of their wealth in order to help out their country. At times they espoused the cause of the people against the king; at times they sustained the authority of the king; but with their faults and mistakes they at least, to the best of their knowledge, fulfilled their social functions. In any country, especially in every large country where you have an immense population that has been groaning for centuries, deprived of the elements of comfort and civilization, and where you have a privileged class enjoying all the privileges and not fulfilling its duties, there is bound to be revolution. Revolution is a punishment permitted by God to reestablish the proper order of things. It is the necessary purgation of the sinning society. I do not like it, but it is the application of the word of Christ, there must be scandal. So much the worse for the scandalist, but there must be scandal.

I repeat: Is there danger of the spread of revolution in Canada? Yes, there is. I do not think it is close upon us, but the germs are here. It is not a question of a supreme king or czar or kaiser; it is not a question of an aristocracy living in laziness and luxury; but with the evolution of economics that has taken place in the United States and Canada in the last fifty years, we have in certain respects something which is worse than any irresponsible monarchy or leisured aristocracy that can at least invoke the past services of its ancestry, and it is a plutocracy without any responsibility. Let the brand of communism or socialism be put upon me, but I stand on the solid ground of traditional Christian social law as it was defined last week in that memorable encyclical which I commend to the attention of every hon. member, whether he be Catholic or Protestant, where the principles of social justice are once more defined and given to the world—as the only salvation possible. Of course the upholders of capitalism without restraint, the classes and the institutions that profit by our present system, will point out in that encyclical those proposals which denounce communism and condemn socialism. But let them read the whole of it and they will find that the system upon which wealth in Canada and in the United States is so unevenly divided to-day that millions and millions of dollars have been accumulated in the hands of a few individuals or corporations, while millions of people are on the verge of starvation, the economic system under which you have a surplus of rural production which the farmers of the west or of the east cannot sell and which the consuming population of the cities cannot purchase because they have no work,—that system, in the very words of the head of the Catholic church, stands condemned just as much as the communistic system in Russia; and I hope those who pose as the champions of religion in Quebec will read the whole of that encyclical and turn their activities towards curing the social and economic iniquities of Canada before they utter empty words in regard to the deeds of a government over which we have no control.

The other day I was reading casually a very sensible reflection by a minister of the United Church in Montreal, Doctor Lloyd Douglas. He is evidently a well-informed man, and while combating socialism and communism just as strongly as the pope does, he comes out with this reflection:

> It will do no good to try to ride communism down with police horses, or ridicule it with funny bewhiskered cartoons, or squelch it by law. Either communism will solve some serious economic difficulties or it won't. If it will, and if it does, there is no sentiment or coercion that will stop it, and if it won't work, no propaganda can keep it alive.

There is a good deal of sense in that. There is something else I would commend especially to the attention and reflection of my Catholic friends since, unfortunately, religion has been introduced into this subject in Quebec, but which I commend also to all members right and left. I refer to a course of lectures delivered last winter by a humble Catholic priest in Detroit, Father Coughlin. Unable to reach the public through the press, because the press in the United States as in Canada belongs to the privileged class of plutocracy, he installed in his church a broadcasting station to communicate abroad his short Sunday sermons. If any man was to utter in the province of Quebec the propositions contained in those sermons, which have been published with the official approval of the bishop of Detroit, he would be branded as communist and socialist.

Mr. HEAPS: And seditionist.

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes. Of course, he condemns socialism and communism, but he turns to the men who have in their hands the powers that be—law, political authority and money—and what else is there of power in America, I ask you? What else remains in the hands of the state? Even at that I must correct myself. Wealth is not a power in the hands of the state. Wealth in North America is a power in the hands of irresponsible and anonymous corporations, which take partners from among all the political parties in Canada and the United States, and take partners from among the common people as well, in order to prevent the exercise by the state of that authority which forty years ago Pope Leo XIII, and which this last week Pope Pius, has defined as being the primary duty of the state, namely, to intervene in order to prevent a few individual companies from owning millions and millions of dollars whilst millions of the common people are starving. Those passages of the encyclical will not be commented upon favourably in such organs as the Montreal Gazette. The Montreal Gazette has given a very fine eulogy on the encyclical commending that part which condemns communism; but if we want to do our duty we must see to it that those evils which produced communism in Europe, and which threaten to produce communism in the United States and also in Canada, are dealt with with a firm hand. May I give a couple of examples from Montreal just at random? We have in Montreal a monopoly of gas, electricity and power.

Mr. McGIBBON: No monopoly of the first.

Mr. BOURASSA: It is the biggest monopoly in Canada to-day. The Montreal Light, Heat and Power Consolidated was originally three independent companies supplying gas, electricity and power. Now these three independent companies are all combined in one, under the authority of the legislature of Quebec, that same legislature which is so strong, both Liberals and Conservatives, in condemning the government in Russia. The Financial Times, or the Financial Post, I am not quite sure which, some three or four years ago, issued a statement commenting on the situation of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company, which has combined all those independent companies into one, explaining that through the distribution of stock for which not one cent of money was paid by any shareholder of the company, the holders of the original shares of the Montreal Gas Company and of the Royal Electric Company then possessed eleven times the amount they originally held, but that the company was so considerate of its consumers that it had never raised the dividend beyond 7 per cent. But, Mr. Speaker, 7 per cent on the capital, multiplied eleven times, amounts, if I am not mistaken, to 77 per cent; and I am told that since then there have been three further distributions of stock for which nothing has been paid by the shareholders, so that at the present time the shareholders of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Consolidated receive practically 98 per cent on the amount of money that was originally subscribed.

I will give another example, that of the greatest insurance company in Canada, the Sun Life. Not long ago I was comparing their two statements of 1929 and 1930. In 1929 they paid a dividend equivalent to 50 per cent on the share capital. This year the surplus of their assets over their liabilities has decreased from $62,000,000 to $33,000,000, a decrease of $29,000,000. Their reserve for doubtful stock has been decreased from $12,500,000 to about $5,000,000. On the other hand, they increased their capital investment in their enormous and monstrous building in Montreal from $11,000,000 to $23,000,000, and they have raised their dividends to their shareholders to 75 per cent of the capital. Now I ask, in the face of such things, are we entitled to teach lessons in Christianity and social order to other countries, when during last winter we had thousands and thousands of fathers of families not capable of purchasing a pound of bread for their children, receiving alms from charitable institutions and from city councils, and when we have hundreds of thousands of children raised in Montreal in dwellings that are not fit for human beings? When we see such a monstrous concentration of capital, when we see especially that unchristian and unsocial creation of fictitious capital, which you and I and every other consumer of food or clothing or any other human need, have to pay for, do you not think, sir, that it is about time that we should look to ourselves and put some degree of Christianity into our own social and economic polity before we launch a crusade against coal and pulpwood, but not including wheat, because there are too many farmers in the west who want to sell wheat? Joseph Chamberlain, in the days that preceded the alliance of Great Britain and Russia, when he was trying to make a bargain with Germany in order to crush France and Russia, speaking of the barbarous Russian, said, "If you want to sup with the devil, you must use a long spoon." We do not want to sup or dine or breakfast with the devil as far as coal is concerned, because it may hurt Senator Webster's trade. We do not want to take Russian pulpwood because it may endanger the speculative stocks of Sir Herbert Holt. In order however to relieve the sufferings of our northwestern friends we are prepared to breakfast, dine, sup and take the last cup with those devils, with very short spoons, and even to drink from the same glass with them, as I think Mr. Ferguson has done this week.

I do not think there is any necessity to dwell further upon this subject. I thought it was my duty to discuss the matter for several reasons, one of which is that I am an old man. I have not much to risk; my political future is rather limited. My principles and ideals are well known both in my province and outside. I have put up many a battle, perhaps wrongly at times, for what I thought to be my duty to my country. Throughout those battles may I say without boasting I always had in mind two guiding thoughts. Whatever my faults and mistakes may have been I have never sacrificed what I thought to be my convictions as a Catholic, my duty to my race or to my country. But more than anything else I have hated the making use of either religion or racial sentiment to achieve political ends or mercantile purposes. I have no respect for such motives. I do not charge the government with having had such motives in view. I have quoted from the remarks made last year by the Prime Minister to the contrary. The previous administration made a mistake in 1927 when by a very feeble act they acted upon the telegraphic order from Mr. Amery. In the present instance I am afraid the government has not resisted the temptation of gathering a little cheap success in the province of Quebec. All parties have done it at turns, and I do not brand such action as a crime. However I thought it my duty to bring the matter before the house. Having been interested in the affairs of the nation for forty years I want to warn my people in the province of Quebec against the delusion that this little measure will have any effect whatever either in Russia, in Europe or even in Canada. It cannot have. The effect it could have had as a moral lesson has been destroyed by the simultaneous action of the government refusing to trade with Russia in certain matters but agreeing to deal with her in other matters. So much for the moral standpoint. The political lesson is lost when we think of the attitude taken by all the nations of Europe with which we are united. If it is stated that we owe a debt to our dignity I repeat that we must think of the consequences. At this point may I give an example to my Catholic friends and at the same time beg the pardon of my hon. friends who are not Catholics but who will realize my interest in raising the point?

In 1922 I was in Rome when the Genoa conference was called, the first conference following the war to which Germans and Russians were invited. Mr. Lloyd George was responsible for the convening of the conference, Mr. Briand agreed; but Mr. Poincare raised such a turmoil in the French chamber that Mr. Briand was defeated. The conference accomplished nothing for the time being but nevertheless the ice was broken. When the delegates from the nations arrived at Genoa, including Mr. Chicherin, one of the primary leaders of the bolshevic government, the venerable Cardinal Archbishop of Genoa received the delegates, including the representative of the government of Russia. The Archbishop shook hands with the delegates and appealed for the blessing of God on their deliberations for peace. Immediately some French Catholics raised their hands in horror. I am afraid some of them were more concerned with their unredeemed loans to Russia than their religious principles, because their protest was upheld by men such as Mr. Poincare and others, who had no connection whatever with Catholicism or Christianity. Those French Catholics criticized the Archbishop of Genoa for having shaken hands with the representatives of the murderous government of Russia. On the other hand however, the pope,—the same pope who condemns communism, who condemns socialism, who protested against the crimes of Russia when all the governments of Europe were simply concerned with trying to make bargains with Russia,—the pope wrote a letter to the Archbishop of Genoa congratulating him for having gone to meet the men who were convening the first time for the purpose of establishing peace. Could not our Catholic friends in Canada have some degree of the breadth of mind and wisdom of judgment of the Roman authorities? I am always surprised by some of the attacks made against the pope in the non-Catholic papers of Canada. They ought to know that the pope is bigger and broader minded than many Catholics in this country.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Hear, hear.

Mr. BOURASSA: The authorities in Rome are strict on matters of principle; the pope will suffer anything rather than sacrifice one principle. He will condemn communism in Russia, Canada or the United States, because he believes the principles of communism are incompatible with those of Christian social philosophy. But when it comes to dealing with men, the pope tries to make use of what is good in the sinner. Pope Pius IX has been the strongest opponent of revolution in Europe during the last century. But one day a French royalist was talking to him of the curses of the great revolution in France. To which the author of the syllabus and of so many condemnations of socialism and even of liberalism replied: "There is no such thing as absolute evil; there is only absolute good and absolute truth, and that is God himself. Even some good arose from the French revolution." The question was asked, "But, holy father, what can you point out that was good?" "Equality of all men before the law" replied Pope Pius IX.

Purely by hazard I was reading last week the very interesting memoirs of a Russian royalist who entered Russia in disguise three years ago to find out what had become of his son who had disappeared with the army of Denekin during one of the attempts to throw down the bolshevik government. The author of the book, who himself is a royalist, entered into communications with the hidden royalists of Russia. He hopes for the downfall of the present regime and predicts the restoration sooner or later of czardom in Russia, but his conclusion is that the first duty of the restored monarchy will be to maintain all it can of what good has been accomplished by the present government in Russia. I am not revising or opposing this judgment, I am simply saying this: ignorant as we are of what is going on in Russia, incapable as we are of doing anything practical to save our traditions or our principles or our notions of social order in Russia, for heaven's sake let us mind our own affairs, and introduce into Canadian policy, Canadian business and Canadian social arrangements some of the principles of Christianity. I think thereby we shall render a much better service both to religion and to society than by simply uttering empty words.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Neill the following amendment:

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following words substituted therefor:

the house regards the growing practice of deciding by order in council important matters of public policy as an encroachment upon the duties and privileges of parliament and a violation of the principle of responsible government.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, May 28, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

Arthur Bernier, former district inspector of customs and excise at Montreal, I note that certain documents are missing in connection with the inquiry held by Mr. Lafontaine. PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 72 to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Requests for these amendments have come from the governments of these provinces and from the ecclesiastical authorities of the Roman Catholic church. They refer to the treatment of prisoners of the Roman Catholic faith under the ages of sixteen and twenty-one years in cases of minor offences, and provide for confinement in certain homes.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 73 to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the Bankruptcy Act proposed by this bill is to meet a situation which has arisen by reason of provincial enactments in certain provinces, notably in the province of Ontario, in respect to motor car insurance. The object of this bill is to secure the rights of an injured party in reference to personal injuries or in reference to damaged goods in the event of an accident; to prevent the insurance policy falling into insolvency rather than being used to pay the claim of an injured person. This bill is to preserve the right of an injured person to collect insurance money.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*DOMESTIC FREIGHT RATES ON WHEAT

Mr. NEILL:

1. Has the question of reducing the domestic freight rates on wheat, etc., shipped from the prairies to British Columbia been appealed to the Privy Council of Canada, or to the government, from the decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners?
2. If so, when was such appeal received?
3. When may a decision be expected?

Mr. BENNETT: This question was answered during the progress of the discussion a few days ago on the motion of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). The position is that the defeat of the former government ended the appeal; a new appeal was entered in September and there has been no opportunity so far to hear it. The other day I said that action would be taken as soon as opportunity was offered. I should think under those circumstances the hon. gentleman would perhaps drop the question.

Question dropped.

Mr. POULIOT: I am ready to wait a few weeks.

couata be made orders for returns, as they involve a lot of work on the part of the Canadian National Railways, and it will take a long time to gather the information asked for.

Mr. POULIOT: I have no objection at all so far as the questions relating to the Canadian National Railways are concerned. We had better go back and take up each question, and perhaps the minister would indicate which should be made orders for returns.

1. How many times did this government make requests to the Board of Railway Commissioners, (a) that were ignored by that board; (b) that were granted by the board?
2. In what instances?
3. At what dates?

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES OF LABOUR

Mr. ST-PERE:

Who have been the representatives of Canada either as delegates or advisers at the various international conferences of labour since the establishment of the International Bureau of Labour, at Geneva?

HALIFAX HARBOUR COMMISSION

Mr. RALSTON:

1. What are the names of all employees on the payroll of the Halifax harbour commission during the months of December, 1929, and January, 1930, and what was the salary paid each one either on a weekly or a monthly or a yearly basis?
2. What are the names of all employees on the payroll of the Halifax harbour commission during the months of December, 1930, and January, 1931, and what was the salary paid each one either on a weekly or a monthly or a yearly basis?
3. What was the amount of revenue earned on goods using the Halifax harbour commission property during December, 1929, and January, 1930?
4. What was the amount of revenue earned on goods using the Halifax harbour commission property during December, 1930, and January, 1931?

Mr. BENNETT: This question will have to stand as an order for return. In any event it will be observed that it is not within our jurisdiction and the only way in which we can deal with it is to transmit the communication to the commission and receive their reply.

CITY OF OTTAWA AGREEMENT

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize the Minister of Public Works, on behalf of His Majesty, to enter into an agreement with the corporation of the city of Ottawa to extend the period of the existing agreement with the corporation for one year from 1st June, 1930.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT TO BE PRESENTED ON MONDAY, JUNE 1

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I should like to intimate to the house that for two reasons I shall not be able to proceed with the budget until Monday next. On Monday afternoon, with the consent of the house, I propose to proceed with it. Perhaps, strictly speaking, consent is not required, for the motion is that the house resolve itself into committee of ways and means, and not into committee of supply. I propose to present the budget on Monday afternoon, and I shall leave to my right hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King) the determination as to when the debate shall be resumed, whether on the succeeding Thursday or on Tuesday; or whatever other day he may select will be satisfactory under the circumstances. I had previously told this house that I thought we should be able to present the budget before the last day of May. The last day of May falls on Sunday, and I shall not be able to present the budget in May for two reasons, one of which I have already mentioned to the house. There has also been delay in receiving a cable affecting certain matters concerning one of the overseas dominions. The other reason is the physical work of completing certain of the matters that have to be dealt with. I trust, therefore, that the house will not regard the presentation of the budget on Monday as being in any sense a breach of my undertaking to endeavour to present it before the last day of May. That day falling on Sunday, I shall present the budget on Monday.

SECOND NARROWS—RIPPLE ROCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILFRED HANBURY (Vancouver-Burrard): I would ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) when the report on the removal of Ripple rock and the report on the second narrows of Burrard inlet at Vancouver will be tabled.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): The report on Ripple rock was tabled a few days ago. I laid five copies of the report on the table, and I think my hon. friend may have one of those for his own use. As to the other report, I think probably it will be tabled on Monday.

ALBERTA COAL

FREIGHT RATE TO ONTARIO—REPORTED EXTENSION TO COVER ENTIRE YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the Minister of Mines yet in a position to give a reply to my question of yesterday regarding the special rate of $6.75?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): The special rate of $6.75 to which the hon. member refers has already been extended until next year. I do not think I can add anything to that.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Was it extended by amendment to the order in council to cover the entire twelve months' period, or was it done by action of the Board of Railway Commissioners?

Mr. GORDON: My recollection of the order in council is that it covers the entire twelve months' period. The order in council is published in the Gazette. If it is not available to the hon. member, I shall have a copy of it sent to him.

INDIAN HEAD AND SUTHERLAND FORESTRY STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): May I ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy) if the reported discontinuance of the forestry farms at Indian Head and Sutherland is correct? Also, whether a request for reconsideration of this matter has been received by the government and decided upon, and if so, what has been the decision?

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): The question asked by the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) deals with the farms at Indian Head and Sutherland which are supplying free nursery stock to the farmers of the west. The first of these stations was established at Indian Head twenty-five years ago, and later one was established at Sutherland. Both are in the province of Saskatchewan, and as I said, the purpose of these stations is to supply free nursery stock to the farmers of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Since their inception they have been administered by the forestry branch of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BROWN: Should not the minister explain that free nursery stock does not mean free fruit trees? He does not mean that.

Mr. MURPHY: Oh no. If my hon. friend will give me a moment I will come to that. The provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta assumed administration of their natural resources on October 1, 1930, and as no provision had been made in the transfer agreement covering the matter, the Department of the Interior, through the forestry branch, has continued to administer those stations. The stations were supplying a service only to the three western provinces, and it might well be argued that if that service did not apply to the other provinces of Canada the stations became a matter of provincial responsibility when the three western provinces assumed control of their natural resources. But as no provision had been made for the continuance of that work by the provinces, arrangements have been made whereby the Department of Agriculture, of the Dominion government will continue to administer these forestry stations at Indian Head and Sutherland until the end of the present fiscal year.

RAILWAY COMMISSION VACANCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MUNN (Vancouver North): I would ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if it is the intention of the government to give representation to British Columbia in the reorganization of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): That question will be given consideration when the appointments are being made.

TOBACCO IMPORTS

REQUEST FOR COMPLETION OF ANSWER TO QUESTION

On the orders of the day.

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): With permission of the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) I would like to have some information from the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) concerning part of a question standing on the order paper in my name. I refer to page 1234 of Hansard wherein it is stated, in reply to a question, that the answers will be furnished by the Department of National Revenue. The information has not yet been tabled.

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (Minister of National Revenue): When further answers are available they will be furnished to the hon. member.

TERMINAL POSTAL STATION AT MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, will the Postmaster General inform us whether the government has arrived at some conclusion in regard to the construction of a terminal postal station at Montreal, and the location of that station?

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Laval-Two Mountains) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the Post Office Department is at present considering this question.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Smoke in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee will resume consideration of the following item:

Dairying, including grant of $5,000 to National Dairy Council, $295,000.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Young.

Mr. TOTZKE: Mr. Chairman, before we continue discussion of the various items in this department, I wish to refer to a matter, which was brought up the other evening, of vital importance to the department and to the officials of the department. The matter to which I refer, which deeply concerns the people of Canada as a whole and particularly of western Canada, has reference to a statement which was read into Hansard by the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance). He read from a report which appeared in a newspaper of western Canada. To recall the article to the minds of hon. members I shall read it again.

> There has never been a department in Ottawa so incompetent, in such a state of inefficiency and disorganization as agriculture when W. R. Motherwell left it. The department was and still is inefficiently manned, permeated with intrigue, jealousies and incompetence. Mr. Motherwell gave no thought to agriculture.

Later on in the article are these words:

> It was under these conditions that Mr. Weir took office. He had scarcely a competent official, and many were disloyal to him. He did not tell the whole story last night, but on his estimates parliament will receive further information on the decrepit department left by Mr. Motherwell.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that article constitutes a reflection on the officials of the Department of Agriculture which should not be allowed to pass without comment. The other night the minister made no comment on the statement. So far as the ex-Minister of Agriculture is concerned we will leave his administration to the judgment of the people of the country, and especially to those of western Canada.

An hon. MEMBER: You did.

Mr. TOTZKE: They have always been of the opinion that the Hon. Mr. Motherwell was one of the best Ministers of Agriculture this country ever had. The farmers of western Canada—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What did they say on July 28?

Mr. TOTZKE: I can wait as long as my hon. friend. The farmers of western Canada realize that Mr. Motherwell, the ex-minister of Agriculture, did more for agriculture in western Canada and in Canada as a whole than any other person in this country. I am concerned with the statement that the Department of Agriculture is incompetent, and that the officials are inefficient. If that is the case I say we should not vote a single item in these estimates for the department until the condition is corrected. I ask the minister to-day if he is in agreement with the statement that the officials in the department are incompetent and inefficient. If so the people of Canada should know; if the statement is not true they should know that the officials are competent and efficient. I think a statement should be made in fairness not only to the people of Canada but to the officials of the department who are resting under this sort of suspicion.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, the other night when the article referred to was read into Hansard I did not make a statement because I did not think it was worth while. I do not know who the editor of the paper is or who prompted the article. When speaking on the public platform and in the house, since taking the portfolio of Agriculture, I have on every occasion spoken in the kindest terms of my predecessor and will always think of him in the kindest possible way. So far as the officials of the department are concerned I do not think the article requires an answer. I believe my action since taking over the department supplies the best answer possible. Although we have in the neighbourhood of 2,500 officials on the staff I doubt if ever on the occasion of a change in the head of a department, fewer dismissals have taken place than since I became Minister of Agriculture. With the exception of two or three I know of no dismissals in the department.

Mr. TOTZKE: The minister has said he has made practically no dismissals. The article to which I have referred has been appearing in newspapers throughout western Canada.

Mr. SHORT: The minister is not responsible for that.

Mr. TOTZKE: I think this is a matter which should be properly cleared up. If there are any incompetent or inefficient officials I would say they should be dismissed. They should not be allowed to carry on the important work of a department of government.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member need not worry about that; he is in the opposition.

Mr. TOTZKE: Of course I am in the opposition, and I would say the same thing if I were on the government side of the house.

Mr. SHORT: The hon. member would not have opened his mouth.

Mr. TOTZKE: Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think that because we happen to be on the opposition side we are not concerned with the government of the country. It is the duty of the opposition carefully to watch the expenditures made and the work done on behalf of the Canadian people. This is a very serious matter. I believe some of the articles which appeared in western newspapers were signed by a reporter who is high in the confidence of the Conservative party. Not only the Department of Agriculture but the whole government is under suspicion if the matter is not properly dealt with. I think the Minister of Agriculture should concern himself a little more about this item than he has done. He has simply been telling us that there were no dismissals. Sometimes incompetent and inefficient officials are allowed to stay in the department, perhaps not discovered, and I think the minister should give a little better explanation of this item.

Mr. MULLINS: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with some interest to the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke), but I think he had better start to criticize the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), who has been parading around the country running down the Minister of Agriculture before that hon. gentleman has hardly taken his seat. I have before me a newspaper clipping of a statement made by the hon. member, which, I think, is very far-fetched and not at all fair to the Minister. This is the clipping:

> Mr. McMillan criticized the agricultural policy of the Conservative federal government as inadequate and unavailing. The government, he said, had gone "protectionist crazy."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MULLINS: Well, I can only say that when you gentlemen opposite picked up the Dunning budget I don't know how crazy you were, but I think you were crazier than we were. Let me complete the quotation:

> He cited facts to show that dairymen and also fruit and vegetable growers in Canada had suffered through the tariff policy of the Conservatives.

The hon. member should know better than that. I always thought he was pretty fair to the cattle industry and to farming in general, but he certainly is not fair in the statements I have quoted, which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of May 18, 1931.

Now, I wonder if some hon. members on the other side can intelligently discuss this important item before the committee? Do you know it is said throughout the constituency that I have the honour to represent that no commercial traveller will get off at railway stations in ridings represented by some members opposite who just talk wheat, and wheat alone.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MULLINS: No, they will not get off at those stations to sell goods unless they see cream cans on the platform. I am proud to tell the committee that at every station platform throughout the constituency of Marquette they do get off and are prepared to sell goods; you can see cream cans on every station platform in my constituency. True, I admit prices have gone down. But why? Would any body of men make such a fool treaty as you made with Australia? Would you do it again if you had the chance and provide us the material that we had to go to the country with at the last election? No, I do not think you would; I think you would know a little more about the cow; and you had better get acquainted with her, you had better get to know more about her. She was the first pioneer that came to Canada. She came here with Champlain, and she has stayed with us right along. You are upholding the late Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). I have nothing to say against him personally. His constituency and mine adjoin each other, and I have known him a great many years. But although I am not going to say anything about him personally, I will say this of his policy: I venture to assert that the present Minister of Agriculture will never involve the country in an expense of about $9,500,000 sending professors chasing through the country to find out whether moths' eggs are fertile or unfertile; nor will he have them chasing around the country, as I have seen them in western Canada, to find out whether rye or barley has whiskers. Certainly the present minister will not do that and ignore the cattle business. Was there anything so ridiculous as that iniquitous transaction of the Petersen commission that the former minister was responsible for? And what was the result of it? It cost the country $35,000. What did it get for us? It got us nothing. Any time our friends opposite touch the cattle business they seem to make a mess of it. They have never had a constructive policy in regard to live stock. What did the hon. member opposite do while he was Minister of Agriculture? He discontinued the policy of distributing pure-bred sires throughout the country. That was the worst course he could have taken at the very time that the Irish government had their representatives here looking over the country to see what we were doing. They at once realized our mistake and on their return to Ireland they adopted our former policy and captured the British market. Look at the position we are in today owing to the lack of attention of our friends opposite to the dairy industry. This item before the committee is a very important one and concerns the dairy industry. Oh, yes, the cow is our friend. As I stated during our campaign, some of you gentlemen opposite don't know where milk comes from; you think it comes from a bottle.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MULLINS: Yes. I wonder if you know what a cow is? I have a clipping here and I will read it for the benefit of some hon. members opposite:

The cow is a female—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MULLINS: I have been asked foolish questions by some of those professional men on the opposite side, and therefore I want to read this article for their benefit. I asked one hon. gentleman opposite a certain question in reference to a cow, and he looked at me with amazement and could not answer—he could not tell me which end of her got up first. So I am going to tell you what a cow is. This is an excellent article written by a student in a Minnesota college. I thought it was only right that some members here should know something about the cow so they would not ask such foolish questions about her. Let me proceed.

The cow is a female quadruped with an alto voice and a countenance in which there is no guile. She collaborates with the pump in the production of a liquid called milk, provides the filler for hash, sausages and similar objects, and at last is skinned by those she has benefited, as mortals commonly are.

The young cow is called a calf, and is used in the manufacture of chicken salad, breaded veal and other uses of which no further knowledge is necessary.

The cow's tail—

I want you to know where it is mounted.

The cow's tail is mounted aft and has a universal joint. It is used to disturb marauding flies and the tassel on the end has unique educational value. Persons who come in contact with the tassel have vocabularies of peculiar and impressive force.

The cow has two stomachs.

One of my hon. friends opposite did not know that she had two stomachs.

The one on the ground floor is used as a warehouse and has no other function. When this one is filled, the cow retires to a quiet spot where her bad manners will occasion no comment. The raw material thus conveyed for the second time to the interior of her face is pulverized and delivered to the auxiliary stomach, where it is converted into cow.

The cow has no upper plate.

Now, get that. I was asked by an hon. gentleman: "How many teeth has she in her upper jaw?" I said to him, "Don't you know? Have you ever looked a cow over on the farm?" He said, "No; I looked over the fence at a cow and that is as near as I ever got to seeing her teeth."

The cow has no upper plate. All of her teeth are parked in the lower part of her face. This arrangement was perfected by an efficiency expert to keep her from gumming things up. As a result she bites up and gums down.

If we paid more attention to the cow, the mother of prosperity, Canada would be in a unique position to-day. I may tell you I have spent fifty years of my life among the cattle of western Canada, and I make no apology when I use these words on the floor of the house. I may tell you, sir, for your information that the cow played an important part in the last election; she went a long way to defeat hon. members opposite. Discontinuing the policy of putting out pure-bred sires was suicide to the cattle industry of western Canada. I wonder why hon. gentlemen opposite did a thing like that? When I was putting that to an audience in Angusville, Manitoba, one good cow within hearing bellowed out and seemed to say, "You are absolutely correct."

The question before the committee is one of vital importance to our western country. We want to get back into the dairy industry, and we want to get back to raising good dual purpose calves. We want the right type of calves, and we want no obstruction to items such as the one before the house at the present time. Why do hon. members obstruct an item of this kind? Whenever it has been a question of live stock hon. gentlemen opposite have been obstructionists; they have put the industry in the position in which it is in to-day. We had no business to lose that trade with England. We have Ireland shipping a million cattle a year, while Canada shipped none during 1926, 1927 and 1928. We lost that trade entirely when we should have been building it up.

Mr. VALLANCE: Will the hon. member tell us exactly why we were not able to ship cattle during that period, and why Ireland did ship cattle?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Ask me another.

Mr. VALLANCE: I will ask you a question in a moment. Will the hon. member for Marquette, who knows a great deal about the cattle industry, tell us why Canada did not ship cattle while Ireland was shipping cattle? At the same time he might answer this question: Can he tell me any great agricultural country that ever followed the policy hon. gentlemen opposite are attempting to put across now?

Mr. MULLINS: I cannot hear my hon. friend very plainly, so I cannot answer.

Mr. SPOTTON: It was not intelligent anyway.

Mr. MULLINS: If the section of the country represented by my hon. friend had taken up the production of breeding live stock it would not be in the position it is to-day. When hon. gentlemen opposite took office we were shipping 220,000,000 pounds of bacon annually to England, while now we are shipping only 20,000,000 pounds and a few straggling cattle. We should be shipping cattle daily by the thousands from Montreal. They would be bringing back real money, and I trust that hon. members will look fairly at these items being brought forward by the minister, and will not throw any barriers in the way of their passing.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We all like to have a little fun with the hon. member for Marquette, but that will scarcely answer the question asked by the hon. member for Humboldt. I want to assure the house I did not know the hon. member was going to raise that question to-day.

Mr. GOTT: He said you were single.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend might be so good as to keep quiet just now. I did not like to bring up the question when the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) raised it the other night; it looked so horrible and terrible that I hesitated to say anything about it. My hon. friend the minister has given a qualified denial. I wonder if he could speak also on behalf of his chief secretary and say there are no reports coming from that source, because I continually hear, not only in Ottawa but in Regina and other places, every time the minister goes west, a bunch of rumours regarding the terrible condition in which he found the Department of Agriculture.

I know pretty well who wrote this particular article; I do not know whether or not he is in the gallery just now. Having regard to the fact that there is a wonderful similarity between that article and the article which the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) denied, in which he was included among those making cowardly attacks upon the minister, I assume this article is by the same author, and lest my silence be interpreted as assent with reference to departmental officials, I think it my duty to say a word with regard to the matter.

I am not going to say anything concerning the references to myself; I do not think I have to do that, but I believe I should defend the officials of the department, no matter who is the slanderer. I do not know where in this country you will find a better lot of men. I had the good fortune to have an excellent staff in Regina, a staff largely of my own selection. I accepted the staff which was here at the time I took office, and as far as I can recall only one new branch was established here in the nine years I had charge of the department. Some of the officials have been here for thirty years, under five or six ministers, and for that reason I feel greater freedom to speak on their behalf than perhaps would be the case if I had been given the opportunity of selecting them myself.

The administrative head of any department of government is the deputy minister. We have the deputy minister of agriculture here to-day, and I often wondered during the years I was at the head of that department what I would do to find a substitute if anything should happen to him. I want to say a substitute could not be found in Canada, in my estimation. I have had a good deal of experience in looking for deputy ministers of agriculture in my own province, and this is one of the most difficult positions to fill. You must have not only a theoretical man but a practical man as well; he must be acceptable to the public, and a good administrator. In the present deputy minister of agriculture we have a further, most invaluable qualification; that of being bilingual, which is something almost indispensable in this country. There is not one branch of agriculture I know of which he is not familiar, and I have never had a word of disagreement with him. There is a hint in this article of some disaffection and all sorts of intrigue; that is absolutely false. I do not care who said it, it is as false as anything possibly could be.

I could go over all the heads of branches and divisions and make almost the same comment regarding them. Let me take the next one who comes to my mind; I refer to Doctor Archibald. Where would you get a better director of experimental farms in all Canada? Two or three years ago the Russian government made a very attractive offer to him to go to that country and put agriculture on its feet, but notwithstanding the size of the offer he was so much taken up with his present work that he remained with us. Then there is George Clark, the seed commissioner. I can scarcely remember when there was a department of agriculture without George Clark, another exceedingly capable man. There was Mr. Arkell, who recently left the department. I have no reason to think he was asked to leave or anything of the kind; I knew he was thinking of going to some commercial co-operative organization where he felt he had a greater opportunity. He was another first class man.

So it is all along the line with these men. There is Doctor Ruddick, who is looked upon as the dean of the dairy industry in Canada. I can scarcely remember when Doctor Ruddick was not dairy commissioner. He had the opportunity of going to New Zealand to put the cheese and butter industry of that country on its feet; he was asked to organize and establish that industry. He has been here as long as I can remember. He is a thoroughly reliable officer, and if my good friend the minister well keep pretty close to these officers and consult with them, he will not go very far wrong. The recommendations, manifestos and policies which have been enunciated by him from time to time have been referred to already. I do not think they would have been issued had my hon. friend consulted with his officers. He has always intimated since he was appointed that he would be willing to receive recommendations from anyone, but apparently I have not been very fortunate in the ones I offered; they were not received very favourably, but we shall not discuss that any further.

I would like to get back to a discussion of the dairying question, but I do not want to shut off discussion on this item. Some of the matters taken up the other night have been left more or less in the air. In reading over Hansard I notice that the hon. member for South Hastings (Mr. Tummon) suggested that the figures with regard to the production of milk had been cooked by the department. I did not catch at the time what he said, as he mumbled something and then hiked into the corridor.

Mr. TUMMON: I made the statement that the figures were changed in the year 1929 just previous to the elections and I am prepared to substantiate that statement.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I prefer to take the official figures issued by Doctor Ruddick based upon the figures of the bureau of statistics.

Mr. TUMMON: I can give figures which are just as accurate as those given by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It may be all right to talk, but we cannot accept the talk of my hon. friend or any other hon. member in preference to the official figures which I recited the other evening. I do not know anything about my hon. friend's veracity, I assume it is all right but he will have some trouble proving what he has said. If it is within my power, I will give him an opportunity to do so.

Mr. TUMMON: Mr. Chairman, since the question of the production of milk in Canada was raised the other night, and is now before the committee, I think it is no more than right that I should state the position which I took. When the hon. gentleman was speaking the other evening he made reference to the milk production of Canada. He gave the following round figures:

Year	Pounds
1925	12,000,000,000
1926	13,000,000,000
1927	14,000,000,000
1928	14,000,000,000
1929	14,000,000,000

He mentioned that during the last two years there had been a slight reduction in the production. The government reports show the following production in round figures:

Year	Pounds
1924	12,000,000,000
1925	12,600,000,000
1926	13,407,000,000
1927	13,060,000,000

In other words, there was a reduction as between 1926 and 1927 amounting to 347,000,000 pounds. These figures are taken from the government reports.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Which ones?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. TUMMON: The monthly bulletin as issued by the bureau of statistics.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would like my hon. friend to find them for us.

Mr. TUMMON: I can produce them if it is necessary. The reduction in the total production of milk, which is after all the basis of the whole dairying industry, from 1926 to 1927 amounted to 347,000,000 pounds. If that amount of milk, had been converted into butter at the regular ratio it would have amounted to over 14,000,000 pounds, and the strange thing is that we imported that year from the antipodes over 14,000,000 pounds of butter. I have not the figures before me for 1928, but in that year there was another decrease in the production of milk. What happened in 1929 just prior to the elections?

Mr. YOUNG: What elections?

Mr. TUMMON: In 1929, a year before the last federal election a new method of reckoning the production of milk was instituted. It was said that in the three prairie provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan the cows were producing 21 per cent more milk than they had a few years ago, and an increase of 10 per cent had taken place in the rest of the Dominion. Thus the figures for the production of milk were adjusted on that basis and showed the production for 1928, as given by the hon. gentleman. Not only that, but they went back and adjusted the figures for the years 1927, 1926, and even 1925 when the Australian treaty and the New Zealand order in council were passed.

In 1928 and 1929 there were 100,000 less milch cows in the Dominion of Canada than there had been in the years 1925 and 1926. In figuring on the new basis, it was decided that the total production of milk was over 14,000,000,000 pounds. In 1926 there were 3,332,479 milch cows in Canada—I do not mean dairy cattle, but just milch cows—an increase from 1925 of 167,000. The year 1926 is conceded to be the best we have had in the dairying industry. Two years after the Australian treaty and the New Zealand order in council came into effect there was a decrease in the number of milch cows in Canada amounting to 75,215, and there was a further decrease in 1928. Under this new method of reckoning, it is said that the production of milk in Canada in 1928 was 14,512,897,961 pounds, but the only correct reports which the department has in regard to this production are the reports received annually from the cheese factories, the butter factories, the combined butter and cheese factories and condensed milk factories. Each year a report is received from these factories giving the number of pounds of milk received by them and from how many cows received. According to these reports, we find that in 1928, the product of 2,197,237 cows was being used in these factories. In other words, the product of two-thirds of the producing cows in Canada was being sent to these factories, the total amount of milk received was less than seven billion pounds, leaving one-third of the total of milch cows in the Dominion to supply seven or eight billion pounds in order to make up the figures given by the hon. gentleman. In other words, the cows of which the department has no record—one-third of the total milch cows in Canada—had to produce two and one-half times as much as the cows of which they had a record. That is the position in regard to the matter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We would like to know my hon. friend's authority for all this.

Mr. TUMMON: My hon. friend will get the authority if he will go and figure it out, it is all taken from the reports.

The other day it was said that the Conservative party promised the farmers that if they came into power, the farmers would get fifty, sixty or seventy cents a pound for butter. I think I was as active in regard to this question as any hon. member on this side of the house, and I never made any such statement in any speech I made in the house or on any platform during the campaign or before it. What the Conservative party did say was that the dairy farmers of the Dominion of Canada were entitled to their own home market, and that if the Conservatives came into power endeavours would be made to give the dairy farmers their own home market.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: They do not have it to-day.

Mr. TUMMON: If they do not have it to-day, it is because of what they found on their door-step, left by the previous government.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not wish to discourage my hon. friend, but I have under my hand an authentic statement from the dairy commissioner. Last night I stated that the reason I took his figures instead of those from the bureau of statistics was because the dairy commissioner's figures were more complete. My hon. friend goes on making assertions without any particular foundation regarding certain matters.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friends are putting up a barrage under which to hide from the facts of the case.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We are not worrying about my hon. friend for a minute.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friends during the election campaign last year made statements which they cannot substantiate. These figures that have been given to me contradict them completely, and yet they have to blather a lot about things that have nothing to do with the case.

Mr. COTNAM: If my hon. friend did not like the New Zealand treaty, why did he not cancel it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We shall have an opportunity of discussing the New Zealand treaty when my hon. friends bring it down.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Dunning gave notice of cancellation of it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I wonder who is doing the blocking now. This is the statement from the dairy commissioner:

> Agreeably to your telephone request this morning I beg to hand you herewith statement of estimated volume of milk produced in Canada in the years 1922 to 1929.

An hon. MEMBER: It is only an estimate.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is like any other statement of the sort; it is an estimate. The estimates which we have before us are estimates. It is as authentic as can be secured in view of all the circumstances.

Year	Pounds
1922	9,000,000,000

In order to make it fairer to my hon. friends the other night I put it at 10,000,000,000 pounds, to cover any possible mistake, but now I am going to take it as being 9,000,000,000 pounds.

Year	Pounds
1923	11,000,000,000
1924	12,000,000,000
1925	12,000,000,000
1926	13,000,000,000
1927	14,000,000,000
1928	14,000,000,000
1929	14,000,000,000

You will understand, of course, that there is a large element of estimation in these figures. We know definitely the quantity of milk which is used in manufactured products such as butter, cheese, condensed milk, milk powder, and the quantity which was exported to the United States but for actual quantity of milk and cream consumed or used in the manufacture of dairy butter, we have no actual data. These figures are based on the calculations made by the bureau of statistics.

With regard to dairy butter we get an estimate from the dairy branch.

Mr. TUMMON: There is no way of finding out.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is the best that can be gathered, either by the bureau of statistics or by the dairy branch.

Mr. TUMMON: These are reports that come in from cheese factories, butter factories and combined butter and cheese factories.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know it is hard for my hon. friends to listen to this. We know they told the people the very opposite and they stand convicted by the figures that I have given. These figures are based on calculations made by the bureau of statistics. I have the bureau of statistics figures in my office, but they are not quite complete. It would be strange if someone had not gone down to the bureau of statistics since the other night in order to find out what figures they have. The figures which I have given are more complete than those of the bureau of statistics.

An hon. MEMBER: Election figures.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friends have not a leg to stand on. Neither the minister nor his deputy will take a different attitude from that which I am taking, because the minister knows the figures I am giving and he gets his from the same source. My hon. friend across the floor concocted something of a fictitious nature in order to try to get out of a difficult situation.

Mr. TUMMON: I object. I said that the figures I read to the house were figures which I could produce from monthly bulletins of the dominion bureau of statistics in regard to agricultural statistics. I am prepared to produce them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All this talk about figures! There has always been a certain discrepancy between the two lines of statistics. The reason is that the figures of the bureau of statistics are based upon the decennial census and those of the Department of Agriculture are based upon the quinquennial census; or it may be the other way about; I have forgotten which. But there was no such condition of affairs as described by my hon. friend, as fixing up any figures to suit the occasion. That is an absolute falsehood, I do not care who says it, and I want that to be understood without any reservation whatever.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Did the taking of the census of Saskatchewan increase the volume of milk that was increased per head of cows?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am not going to be dragged into a discussion along that line; I am discussing other things just now. Let my hon. friends produce the figures from the bureau of statistics. I could not get from the bureau as complete a report as this. I may be able to produce the statement from the bureau later on.

I have another question in regard to the matter. The other night I asked the minister about the prices of butter at the present time and any other date when the price was as low as it is to-day. The minister might also inform me now if he has any better figures regarding the total production of milk during the years I have mentioned. Do my figures correspond or conflict with his?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): To clear up a matter, the other night I misinterpreted a question asked by the hon. member for Melville regarding the estimates for 1930-31. The main estimates amounted to $8,751,795.24. The supplementary estimates for 1931, that is, those presented during the regular session of 1930, amounted to $320,548.20. The further supplementary estimates for 1930-31, presented at the present session, amounted to $443,000, making a total of $9,515,343.44.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is not at all what I asked for.

Mr. EULER: I cannot add anything to the question of the production of milk or butter, but I have some interest in the matter of the importation of butter into this country, and I would ask the minister for some information, if he can give it to me, in regard to importations of butter. We heard a great deal during the election and at the last session before the election about the importation of New Zealand butter, and a great deal of New Zealand butter did come into this country, but no butter came in from Australia. Now the tariff on Australian butter and New Zealand butter was exactly the same, but the reason why no butter came in from Australia was that under the Patterson scheme in Australia the exporters of butter in Australia received a subsidy of 6 cents a pound. They therefore, if Canada would allow the butter to be imported, could export that butter to Canada at a price 6 cents or less below the price they charged for home consumption, with the result that so long as the last administration was in office, so long as I was in the Department of National Revenue, we took such importations as the dumping of Australian butter into Canada, and we applied the dumping clause. The result was that no Australian butter whatsoever was imported into this country. So, after all, the old government, which was not supposed to be protecting the interests of dairy farmers, did at least keep Australian butter out of this country.

From a return that was brought down a few days ago I find that the importation of New Zealand butter has come practically to a standstill, only some seven thousand pounds coming in from New Zealand during the month of April. But I find that nearly half a million pounds came in from Australia, something that never occurred during the last four years prior to the election. I should like to have an explanation of that. The minister explained the other night that an arrangement had been made with the Hon. Mr. Moloney of Australia, that no Australian butter would be released for sale in Canada at less than 32 cents a pound. I would ask the minister whether the price of 32 cents a pound at which Australian butter could be sold in Canada was in any instance a lower price than the price at which Australian butter was being sold in Australia. I would like to know how the price of Australian butter which was sold in Canada compared with the home consumption price, because if Australian butter was sold in Canada at less than the home consumption price in Australia, the dumping duty should have been applied, as we had applied it in the past. I am curious to know whether an order in council was passed by the government or some other note taken of the old 6 cents a pound subsidy which was granted in Australia until recently, and which perhaps is still granted. I can conceive of only one means by which the Australians could send their butter in here at a lower price than sold in the country of origin, in Australia itself, and that is if they sent the butter in on consignment. As members of the committee may know, goods may be sent into this country on consignment at any price at all. They may be practically dumped into this country. They may be sent into this country at a price less than in the country of origin. But if they are sent in on consignment no duty applies unless the governor in council passes an order in council taking note of the fact that this is being done, that the goods are being sent in here on consignment really for the purpose of evading the dumping duty. I would like to know whether the government took any steps whereby note was taken of the 6 cents a pound subsidy which was granted to exporters of butter in Australia, whereby that amount of 6 cents a pound was no longer taken into account in deciding whether or not the dumping duty should apply. My other question is—perhaps the Minister of National Revenue has this information—whether that 32 cents a pound, which was the fixed value below which no Australian butter could come into Canada, was ever less than the price at which butter was sold for home consumption in Australia; and if so, why the dump was not applied.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I think that is more a question for the Minister of National Revenue than it is for myself. Realizing that a change should be made in the Australian treaty, I do not think anyone would feel it advisable to institute against a sister dominion a dumping duty. I think we served the purpose just as well by taking the action we did.

Mr. EULER: I do not wish to criticize my hon. friend but we had the greatest amount of opposition to the importation of butter from new Zealand, which also is a sister dominion.

Mr. NEILL: I would like to add my voice to the protests against the large quantity of Australian butter allowed in. The question before the house is a reduction in the vote for the National Dairy Council. I feel disposed to vote against the proposed reduction because I have a personal friend on the council, and he tells me that they work well, do not play politics, and on several occasions they have appeared to work in the interests of the dairy industry. For example, they urged the late government to put a duty of 4 cents a pound on New Zealand butter, and they urged the present government not to put a duty of 8 cents a pound on that butter because they said it was too much. They foresaw what has happened, that the result would be that we would be selling butter on an export basis and that prices would be slaughtered. That is just what has happened and which I predicted.

Following up the remarks of the last speaker, I had made a note to ask the Minister of Agriculture concerning what he said when this matter was last up in the house on May 26. What he said then seemed so extraordinary that I thought I must have made a mistake, but on looking at Hansard I see that he made the same statement twice. At page 2005 of Hansard, dealing with the Australian treaty, he said that the government had made an arrangement with Australia whereby no Australian butter would be sold in Canada at less than 32 cents a pound. He went on to say:

> They lived up to that agreement in a very commendable way, until the price of butter in Montreal, and also in the west, in Vancouver, was cut by something very much in the nature of a butter warfare between various organizations in the west. We thought butter had reached rock bottom, and it was not fair, after Australia had lived up to the agreement as she did, that we should not allow her to release her butter on this market.

On the next page he practically repeats that statement. He says:

I agreed that the Australians could release their butter at a price less than thirty-two cents a pound.

The situation was that Australian butter was coming in on account apparently, as my hon. friend from North Waterloo says, of the government having ignored the Patterson subsidy of 6 cents a pound and not imposing a dumping duty. That must be the reason why Australian butter was coming in in much greater volume than before, because the dumping duty was not being applied. The government felt that something should be done, and they made a gentleman's agreement with the minister from Australia that Australia was not to send in any more butter at a less price than 32 cents a pound. What was the purpose of that agreement? Was it not to ensure as far as possible that the Canadian dairymen should not have to compete with Australian butter at a less price than 32 cents a pound? That was the object of the agreement. The government claimed credit for it. After the election I held meetings in various parts of my riding and I was frank to give the present government credit for having taken that action, but I shall be more careful of my eulogiums of the action of the present government hereafter. The minister says prices were so low that they were at rock bottom. But what is rock bottom? A good many hon. members thought they had reached rock bottom on the stock market; however they found a new rock bottom, and later on another new one. The situation is however that conditions got worse and worse, the price of butter went down farther and farther, until in the opinion of the minister, which has since been found to be too optimistic, we had reached rock bottom. He selected that moment and apparently took that as his justification to allow a flood of Australia butter to come into this already depreciated market. When the price was at rock bottom, away below cost, such time was selected by the minister as the psychological moment to say to the Australians that they had played the game so far and he would now let their butter in at any price. Certainly they played the game, because they made the agreement on the understanding that we had power to put on the dumping duty. We supposed that when they made an agreement they would keep it. The condition reminds me of the case of the man who in receiving $10,000 stopped counting after he had reached $2,000 with the statement, "It is right so far; I guess the rest will be all right, too." When the price is already depreciated on the home market 7,000,000 pounds is allowed in.

An hon. MEMBER: No, half a million.

Mr. NEILL: Yes, half a million pounds came in recently. Half a million, however, is a large quantity of butter to come in in a few months.

Mr. EULER: No, in one month.

Mr. NEILL: In one month. We all know the situation which exists in Australia. They were in desperate circumstances and had to sell their produce at any price. Owing to the bonus under the Patterson scheme, they could meet any price in Canada. At the moment when our price is terribly low the minister allows the unloading of half a million pounds of butter which is only the first or second instalment of a large flood of butter from that country pouring into our already depreciated market. I am bringing the matter up to learn if there is any explanation. The explanation given to the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) does not suffice and will not satisfy the dairymen of this country. They want to know why Australian butter was allowed in when the market was, we will say, shot to pieces. The market will become a great deal worse by the importation of large quantities of the Australian product.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I think hon. members will find I am recorded in Hansard as stating the agreement was that except by mutual agreement, no Australian butter would be released in Canada at a price less than 32 cents per pound.

Mr. NEILL: Yes, mutual consent.

An hon. MEMBER: On what date was that agreement?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It was at the beginning of January or the end of December when the Hon. Parker Moloney was on his way back from England.

Mr. POULIOT: It was a Christmas gift to Australia.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It was butter we could not keep out. Such butter could come in on consignment, and the dumping duty could not be applied while it was coming in. Did I understand my hon. friend to say half a million pounds came in in April?

Mr. EULER: Yes, nearly half a million pounds.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The butter to which I have reference was here in January and February and it was left in storage from that time until we agreed with Australia to release it, when we felt as I said before that the price of butter had reached rock bottom. When we agreed to release it Australia promised that no more Australian butter would come into Canada at least until the winter or pending the ratification of the Australian treaty.

Mr. DUFF: What was the date of the release of the agreement?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): What date did the government agree to release the butter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I cannot give the exact date; it was about three weeks ago.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Why?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Why release it?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Yes.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Because they had held it there. They agreed to bring no more in, and we thought it was only fair to them as they had kept their agreement.

Mr. NEILL: But their agreement was that they were not going to bring any in at less than 32 cents so there was no need to release it below that figure.

Mr. EULER: The minister knows I have no desire to embarrass him, but to say that the reason Australian butter was allowed to come into Canada was because Australia is a sister colony is to my mind rather inadequate. We had to bear the brunt—

Mr. LAPOINTE: She is a sister dominion.

Mr. EULER: Yes, a sister dominion. The late government for months and months had to bear the brunt of attack because New Zealand butter was coming into Canada. New Zealand, however was just as much a sister dominion as is Australia. That is one point I wish to bring to the attention of the minister. Another point to which I would like to have an answer from the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) is whether the present government gave instructions with regard to the importation of Australian butter to the effect that the six cents bonus which was given in Australia on export butter was to be disregarded, so far as applying the dumping duty was concerned. Then, the minister said that the butter came in on consignment and that it is impossible to apply a dump where goods come in in that way. I made a similar statement a few minutes ago, but I added that where the government has reason to believe that it came on consignment in order to avoid the dump, an order in council can be passed which nullifies the effect of sending butter in by consignment. It is still subject to dump as though in the first place it had been sent in as a sale. I would ask the minister to answer whether the six cent bonus was disregarded in the matter of fixing the dump and whether the goods came in on consignment; and if so why an order in council was not passed to prevent the abuse of the consignment method.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Answer.

Mr. EULER: Did I make myself clear?

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): I have listened for a considerable time—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): I have had a good many—

Mr. POULIOT: Cannot hon. members be polite with the minister and give him a chance to answer.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I rise to a point of order. Two very fair questions have been asked of the Minister of Agriculture. While he is considering his reply another hon. member has attempted to speak on an entirely different matter. I submit that to comply with the rules in committee the minister should be allowed to reply to the questions asked him before an hon. member asks another question.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is nothing whatever in the point of order raised by my hon. friend. The minister may or may not rise from his seat. Another hon. member has a perfect right to rise if he sees fit.

Mr. VALLANCE: On the point of order—

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): My hon. friend—

Mr. VALLANCE: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say—

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): I would like to say when the—

Mr. VALLANCE: I am speaking on the point of order.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister does not rise.

Mr. VALLANCE: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on the point of order. I can recall an occasion in 1928 when a similar condition arose, and I should like to read to the house the speech that was made by the then leader of the opposition when the estimates for the Department of Immigration were before the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. VALLANCE: I shall read it to prove to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) that his point is not well taken, and that he does not agree with his leader. May I say that hon. members on this side of the house anticipated the action of the minister and to show that we were prepared I shall quote from page 3954 of Hansard of the session of 1928:

Mr. Bennett: No one in this house, whether minister or private member, can charge the hon. member for Kingston with sniping.

Undoubtedly the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) will remember the incident. The extract from Hansard continues:

Such a charge is absolutely devoid of truth. The member for Kingston charged the Minister of Immigration with dereliction of duty, and gave particulars. Then the Minister of Finance said the member was sniping. Does he think it is going to advance the business of this house to talk about sniping in connection with a charge that is frankly and openly made and that requires an answer, and to which an answer must be given by the head of the department, not by somebody else on his behalf. This capable minister, whose funeral oration was delivered last evening by the Prime Minister, cannot look to the Minister of Finance to make his own defence, and let him make his own replies with respect to questions that he is asked. He was asked a reasonable question on supply by a member of this house. Every member is entitled to a reasonable answer with respect to supply. That is the sniping that is charged against the member for Kingston. I say it is unworthy of the Minister of Finance to make such a charge in view of what took place. That is not going to carry estimates in this house.

That is what was said by the right hon. gentleman who is now Prime Minister. I am quoting from Hansard of 1928 at page 3954.

Mr. GUTHRIE: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman. What I said before I maintain still. I said nothing about whether the minister would or would not answer. I declared it was the right of any hon. member to address the committee when no one else had the floor. The point of order raised by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) was that my friend from Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan), had no right to speak—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh no, no.

Mr. GUTHRIE: —and that the minister had some preemption or prior right to speak. No member has the right to speak when another member has the floor.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I wish to repeat what I said before, that this butter came from Australia on consignment. Negotiations with Australia with reference to a trade treaty were under discussion and a verbal agreement was made with the Hon. Parker Moloney that butter from Australia would not be released in Canada at less than 32 cents a pound except by mutual agreement. The Australian government lived up to that agreement, and, as I said before, we felt when butter had reached what we considered its rock bottom price, we would allow them to release the butter on hand, on condition that no more butter would be shipped in until the winter or pending the conclusion of the negotiations then in progress. That is as full information as I can give in answer to the question.

Mr. DUPUIS: What was the date of the verbal agreement?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The last part of December or the first part of January.

Mr. DUPUIS: Quite right. According to the records, since the release was given, during the month of April 500,000 pounds of butter came from Australia.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. DUPUIS: It is here in Hansard as information furnished by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) in reply to a question.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I am quite certain there was no 500,000 pounds of butter released.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): The figures are there.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss this question. I have been in the merchandise business for a good many years and have sold hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of butter. I have brought shipments of New Zealand butter right into the centre of the prairies at Saskatoon.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): I may tell my hon. friends opposite, and particularly those from Saskatchewan, that New Zealand butter imports did depress the price of butter very materially in this country; there is no question about that. But I was very much surprised the other day at the former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) advising the people of Quebec to establish creameries all over their province. When the hon. member was Minister of Agriculture in the Saskatchewan government he was very active in the establishment of what are known there as cooperative creameries. Later on they were used as a political football; when elections came on they established little creameries here and there all over the province for the purpose of gathering in votes for their party. What is the result to-day of that policy? The result is that twenty-two of those small creameries have not turned a wheel for some time, and the provincial government is faced with a heavy loss in connection with my hon. friend's activities in the creamery business, a loss that will amount to $2,500,000. So I warn my hon. friends from Quebec that it would be a good thing for them not to have the late Minister of Agriculture holding that portfolio when they start cooperative creameries in their province, because I am afraid that if he has anything to do with the venture they will find themselves in years to come faced with a heavy financial loss.

The late minister talks of the wonderful staff he had under him in the Department of Agriculture. Well, I know one member of his staff whose presence was required at the trial of a man in Saskatchewan charged with certain stock activities—selling shares in his babies, the cooperative creameries. I happen to have some of those shares myself and they are not worth the paper they are written on. The accused was convicted and sent to gaol. The then manager of the cooperative creameries, Mr. Wilson, who I presume was appointed by my hon. friend, was gotten out of the country, was sent to Italy, because they were afraid he would have to give evidence that would be detrimental to the provincial government of that day. The trial judge is reported in the Saskatoon Star of April 18, 1922, as follows:

> His—Wilson's—absence was deliberate.

What did they do with him? They sent him to Rome. A little later they brought him back to England and made him dairy commissioner and he held that position until this government came into office. That was one of his officials.

Now, the late Minister of Agriculture is talking of the production of milk, and what a great friend he has been to western agriculture. Let me quote a few figures from the report of the Saskatchewan royal commission on immigration and settlement. This report was made in 1930, so it is fairly up to date. When the hon. member became Minister of Agriculture in the Dominion government in 1921 there were in Saskatchewan 1,563,000 cattle; in 1922, 1,602,000; in 1923, 1,535,000; in 1924, 1,528,000;—I ask him to observe the decrease in the number of cattle in Saskatchewan each year that he was minister—in 1925, 1,499,000; in 1926, 1,160,000; in 1927, 1,300,000; in 1928, 1,181,000. The figures are not furnished for 1929, but I am sure they would disclose 500,000 fewer cattle in Saskatchewan that year than when the hon. gentleman became federal Minister of Agriculture in 1921. I think that is a fair illustration of what the hon. gentleman did for that branch of agriculture in Saskatchewan when he was minister.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, when hon. gentlemen undertake to discuss a question that they know absolutely nothing about they are always sure to get into trouble. In the first place, the Saskatchewan cooperative creameries that my hon. friend from Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan) refers to were organized in 1906, and were the first of the kind that I know of in Canada. For the next ten or eleven years they were administered by the provincial agricultural department; that is, a vote would be brought down in the estimates to purchase the cream that would be manufactured into butter by these various units called cooperative creameries; then when the butter would be sold by the dairy commissioner the treasury would be recouped. During these ten or eleven years the cooperative creameries never lost one dollar to the government or to anybody else. In 1918 they were operated by the farmers. My hon. friend said they were bandied about as a political football.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Just sit down a moment. Will the hon. gentleman sit down?

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): I do not know to what ten years the hon. gentleman is referring.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The last year of the war was 1918, and that fall there was a pretty large profit for the cooperative creameries. It was handed over at that time to a directorate of farmers, and they were caught with a considerable amount of butter on hand, as a good many other people were caught with wheat and other products during the deflation which came shortly after that. That began their falling behind, but as long as I had charge of it there was no deficit and there was no single dollar due the government or anybody else. I have had to correct that statement on other occasions in this house; some farmers and other people who knew nothing about it have brought up that matter, with the idea that they had something against your humble servant.

My hon. friends like to refer to provincial records. If the minister wants to refer to provincial records, we are quite agreeable, but let us do it all the way around. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. I do not object to that at all; I am willing to do the same thing in connection either with the Department of Agriculture or with any other matter. I am sorry I did not hear all my hon. friend said about cooperative creameries, but I heard some of it. This creamery went on the rocks after the war, just as hundreds of other concerns did, but what could anyone expect? How could it have been prevented? They have been struggling along ever since; they joined with the Calder creameries afterwards. It was never a cooperative creamery after that; it was a straight joint stock company after I left it. It was not bought on a pool or cooperative basis; it was not handled as such and is not handled in that way now. So whatever my hon. friend said, if this reply does not cover it, I will ask him just to peep out a little louder and I will try to meet his misrepresentations.

Mr. VALLANCE: I was rather surprised at the explanation given by the minister as to his permitting the verbal agreement with Australia to lapse. He pointed out that butter had dropped to the lowest ebb, but I think he realizes now—as I believe he began to realize when he broke the agreement—that butter is on an export basis, and it did not matter very much. However, the point I want to make is this: We have a government here to-day which is protecting all industries in this country with the exception of agriculture. They apply the dump to everything, but here is the only instance of which I have knowledge where this government failed to protect an industry.

I should like to ask the minister what he received in lieu of the agreement which he cancelled in order to allow Australian butter to come freely into this country. There are two questions I have to ask. The first is whether any member of the government can recite one other instance in which they broke down the barriers which they themselves set up, in order to allow commodities other than agricultural commodities to come into this country. The second question to the minister is what Canada received in return for cancelling the agreement which he permitted to lapse.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Regarding the report in Hansard as to butter imported in April, I think there are two ways of interpreting the importation of butter. The butter was released from customs when the duty was paid, and entered as an import. I am as sure as I reasonably can be sure of anything that there was not a half million pounds of butter brought into Canada, except butter brought in on consignment and released from storage when the duty was paid.

Mr. DUPUIS: We find in Hansard, at page 984, a question asked by the hon. member for New Westminster and the answer by the Minister of Trade and Commerce as follows:

3. Has any butter from Australia come into Canada, at any time during the past five months?
4. If so, how much?
Mr. Stevens:
3 and 4. Canada's imports of butter from Australia during the past five months were:

Butter—	Pounds
November, 1930	117,600
December, 1930	308,000
January, 1931	432,768
February, 1931	330,568
March, 1931	862,904

Was that all on consignment? Then the minister will find, at page 1933 of Hansard, an answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to a question asked by the hon. member for Beauharnois, as follows:

Canada's imports of butter in pounds, during April, 1931, from (a) New Zealand; (b) Australia; (c) other countries, were: (a) New Zealand, 7,100 pounds; (b) Australia, 489,944 pounds . . . .

That is nearly half a million pounds. If we total all those imports of butter for the last six months, they come to some three million pounds from Australia alone. How can the minister say all this butter has come to Canada on consignment, when we know that during the last campaign hon. gentlemen opposite blamed the Liberal party for having let so much butter come to Canada from New Zealand, providing unfair competition with the Canadian butter, which at that time was selling for about 39 cents a pound, and when at this time of the year, and for the past six months, the farmers of Canada have been practically giving away their butter? In spite of that, the government have allowed butter to come into this country from Australia by the millions of pounds. Butter is being almost given away. I noticed in the newspapers that in the eastern townships some manufacturer of soap found butter so cheap that he bought hundreds of thousands of pounds with which to make soap. I would like to ask the minister how he can justify his action and that of his government, having regard to these conditions.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I still feel there is some error in the report in Hansard. I will take care to tell the house, when we are next discussing these estimates, whether or not I am right in believing that imports are recorded as such only when they are released from consignment and the duty collected.

Regarding the point that we have not protected the butter interests or the agricultural products of Canada, brought up by the hon. member for South Battleford, perhaps the best answer is to see what our protection amounted to. We made a verbal agreement with Australia not to release butter at less than 32 cents per pound. In November the price of butter on the world market in London was 22.76 cents per pound, and the price for April of this year is 23.38 cents per pound. What would have resulted had we not put on protection? New Zealand would have sold butter in this country at the same price as it was being sold in London, which would have meant that butter would have sold at practically the same price starting in October and continuing through the whole winter, as it is now when we are on an export basis. Canada would have received that lower price for the 95,000,000 pounds of butter produced. The average farmer realizes just what his protection meant to him—he got more for that total production of 95,000,000 pounds. Our task was to keep out Australian butter. Would we have kept it out as well had the dumping clause been applied with butter at 22 cents a pound?

Mr. EULER: It would have been kept out entirely. Power was given at the last session to apply any valuation whatsoever.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): While the previous government was in power and before we were able to keep out New Zealand butter, that country had dumped into this country a sufficient amount of butter to make a total of 40,000,000 pounds in storage when we came into office. That has had a very detrimental effect on the price of butter throughout this past winter. That butter had to be worked off as best it could be, and even in the spring of 1931 there still remained in storage some New Zealand butter and Canadian butter which had been manufactured in 1929. That was an additional handicap to the increased output of butter.

Mr. VENIOT: If, in order to help the farmer, it was found necessary to get rid of the 40,000,000 pounds of New Zealand butter in cold storage, why was more Australian butter allowed to come in?

Mr. CASGRAIN: There seems to be some doubt as to the exact amount of Australian butter which came into this country. On May 18, 1931, I asked a question, which appears on page 1684 of Hansard, as follows:

> How many pounds of butter were imported to Canada from Australia, through the harbour of Vancouver, from August 1, 1930, to date?

The following answer was given by the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan):

> Australian butter landed Vancouver, August 1, 1930, to May 16, 1931, 1,416,352 pounds.

That was not butter delivered on consignment or butter released afterwards, but it was butter landed in Vancouver from August 1, 1930, to May 16, 1931. How do those figures compare with the figures given to the hon. members for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) and Beauharnois (Mr. Raymond)? Is it true that this butter came in under the conditions just mentioned by the hon. minister?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The imports of butter for 1929-30 amounted to 41,919,372 pounds. Even assuming that the figures in Hansard are correct, and that we imported in the neighbourhood of three million pounds in five months as against forty-one million pounds in the twelve months of 1929-30, do hon. gentleman opposite allege that the farmers of Canada are not intelligent enough to know that three million pounds allowed in in five months is more protection than forty-one million pounds allowed in in a year?

Mr. DUPUIS: Even if we admit the fact that 42,000,000 pounds of butter came into Canada during the year before the present government came into office, as compared with 3,000,000 pounds since, how can the hon. minister explain the fact that during the administration of the Liberal party butter was selling at from 35 to 48 cents per pound whereas under this so-called protection it is selling now at only 21 cents—

Mr. CASGRAIN: Eighteen cents.

Mr. DUPUIS: —and sometimes 18 cents per pound? As the hon. minister has said, the people of Canada are intelligent, and we should have some intelligent statement from this house.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): When butter was selling at the price mentioned by the hon. member, it was selling at a higher price in the United States and in London. When the estimates were prepared one year ago butter was selling in London at 27.08 cents per pound.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): What month was that?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): March.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): What year?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): 1930.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): That is strange, because a few days ago I obtained figures from the bureau of statistics which show prices of 35.1 and 35.6 cents per pound. While the hon. minister says that in November last butter was selling at 22 cents per pound in London, the figures supplied by the department show that it was selling at from 29.8 to 30.6 cents per pound, seven cents higher than the price given by the hon. minister.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I did not desire to be driven to my feet, but I can see that a number of hon. members do not understand thoroughly this butter question. However, I am pleased to enter the discussion because of the questions asked by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler): In answer to his question as to the sale of butter in Australia and in Canada, I would say that there is no information, but I do not believe that butter was sold during that period at a lower price in Canada than it was sold in Australia. The dumping clause could not be applied in the matter of Australian butter so as to exclude its importation.

An hon. MEMBER: Why?

Mr. RYCKMAN: For this reason: if you apply the dumping duty, it amounts, as hon. members know, to something in the neighbourhood of six cents, because there is a limitation in the treaty as to the application of the dumping duty in relation to Australia. The result, therefore, is that the difference in the rate of exchange would take up about one-half of the dumping duty. So the position was found to be this, and Australia was prepared to meet the position: they had shipped quite large quantities of butter to Canada; they were in a position to ship more, and let me tell the committee that they were in a position then, namely, the latter part of last year and the beginning of this year, to swamp the Canadian market with butter, while we could not stop them with every measure that we had available to apply.

Mr. EULER: The minister said that there was no means of stopping it. Could it not have been stopped under the legislation of the short session of last year under which the government took authority to place any valuation whatsoever for that purpose?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I have not thought to put that situation before the house, for this reason: as is well known, we are in conference with the Australian government to effect, between that country and this, a modus of trade which, I believe, will be of advantage to the people of Canada. That is in process, and as the Minister of Agriculture said, when the situation was before us that Australia, despite anything we could do—except under that special legislation, which it is not a pleasant thing to apply and which does not make friends when you do apply it—could swamp this country with butter, we said with respect to Australia: Do not let that butter come in. The generous treatment that we received and that was referred to by the Minister of Agriculture was this. Australia said: We appreciate that situation, and they did not flood us with butter. The situation is very much better than it could have been if Australia had asserted her rights and shipped into the Dominion of Canada all the butter she could against any dumping duty that we could apply.

Those negotiations are still in progress. It is not, however, violating any secret to say that we hope there will be a favourable conclusion, one in the interest of the people of Canada, the dairy interests, those who manufacture butter in this country and those who consume it. I may say that if we do not reach a favourable conclusion, it is the intention of the government to look after the butter industry in this country, as we feel we can do. If we could purchase, as we did purchase, immunity from immense shipments of butter from Australia to Canada, we felt in the negotiations it was only proper, since our friendly dominion had behaved so handsomely, they should be allowed to release that butter which was and had been in storage for a long period. With respect to the reference to April, 1931, I think it will be found, as stated by the Minister of Agriculture, that that is when the butter was ex-warehouse and not when it landed in Canada.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I should like to make certain of one point. Did the hon. member for South Huron state that he has information from the agricultural branch of the bureau of statistics that the price of butter in London, in November, 1930, was twenty-nine cents and a fraction per pound?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): It was 29·8 to 30·6 cents.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Information received from the dairy and cold storage branch of my department gives the price of butter in London in November, 1930, at 22·76 cents per pound.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I received this two days ago from the bureau of statistics. I may say that I have received the statistics ever since the Australian treaty came into force on the 1st of October, 1925. On that date the prices of butter in London were as follows:

	Cents per pound
Australian	47·74
Canadian	46·87

There was a gradual readjustment until March, 1926, when Canadian butter, that is, No. 1 pasteurized butter, stood 10 cents per pound higher in Montreal than the price in London, England. For the whole year 1926, the average price of No. 1 pasteurized butter stood at an average of 2·46 cents per pound higher in Montreal than its value in London, England. For 1927, the next year, all the prices were given by the department at the hearing held before the tariff advisory board, and in 1927 the average price of butter in Montreal was 4·72½ cents per pound higher than its value in London, England. I mean by that, its value when you take into account the cost of shipment from Montreal to London. In 1928 it was an average of 4·17 cents per pound higher in Montreal than its value in London, England, and in 1929 it was an average of 4·79 cents per pound higher in Montreal than its value in London, England.

Coming to 1930, these are the figures I got the other day:

Month—	Montreal Cents per pound	London, England Cents per pound
January	41·0	38·0 to 38·3
February	39·0	37·5 to 37·9
March	37·3	35·1 to 35·6
April	34·9	30·3 to 30·5
May	31·1	28·6 to 29·1
June	30·1	29·6 to 29·8
July	30·5	31·9 to 32·1

That is the first time since 1925 that the price in London was higher than the price in Montreal.

Month—	Montreal Cents per pound	London, England Cents per pound
August	31·4	32·0 to 32·4
September	33·4	31·9 to 32·7
October	33·2	32·3 to 32·5
November	33·0	29·8 to 30·6
December	33·2	29·5 to 29·8

Those are the figures that I got this morning from the bureau of statistics.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Are those figures the top prices?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I understand that these are the average prices during these months, and I compared them just this morning with figures that I got from the dairy and cold storage branch, Doctor Ruddick's branch. I have all the figures here, and there is a discrepancy between the two, but in every instance they show the Montreal prices higher than the London prices.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There must be something radically wrong, because the figures I have are also figures from the dairy and cold storage branch for the same years. They are the official figures.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Here are the figures for the dairy and cold storage branch for every week right up until April of this year.

Mr. EULER: I do not want to talk about butter until the cows come home, as it were, but I should like to say this in reference to what was said by the Minister of National Revenue. He has advanced what seems to me the only tenable argument regarding the importation of Australian butter, when he says that the government hopes to make an advantageous treaty with Australia and are therefore allowing Australian butter to come into Canada in order to preserve an atmosphere of good will in which to negotiate the treaty.

Mr. RYCKMAN: If I may interrupt, that is not quite the right way to put it. The government admitted this particular lot.

Mr. EULER: I certainly did not intend to put words into the mouth of my hon. friend that he did not use. I thought that I was representing him quite accurately; I have no intention of doing anything else. I think I could approve to some extent of that motive for the action which the government has taken, but I think also that the same might have been held to apply on previous occasions in connection with our business with New Zealand. We had a treaty with New Zealand which was particularly advantageous to the business men and manufacturers of Canada, who were able to sell large quantities of goods to New Zealand, but that business is now pretty well destroyed as a result of the government cutting off New Zealand butter exportations to Canada. After all, this point stands out, that it was possible, and still is possible, absolutely to stop the importations of butter from Australia into Canada, even if it be necessary to apply the new law that was passed at the short session last September under which the government took power to make such valuations as they please for the purposes of customs duties. I am not saying that that should be done, but it is possible to do it. The fact is that whereas under the old government practically no importations of Australian butter were permitted, there have been within the last six, seven or eight months importations of some three million pounds of Australian butter.

Mr. BROWN: During this debate the minister has on a number of occasions asked the question, what would have happened had the duty not been put on? The assumption is that the farmer would have received just that much less for his butter. The situation is not quite so simple as that. That is the trouble with our protectionist friends; they see only one phase of one problem at a time. I have frequently insisted in discussing this dairy question in the house that the dairy industry should be considered as a whole, and not from the standpoint of merely one branch of it. I think the former Minister of Agriculture made a very pertinent remark, which was concurred in by the hon. member for South Hastings, when he said that in considering the standing of the dairy industry we should think of the number of pounds of milk produced. When you are dealing with billions, a few millions here and there is not a matter of such great importance. Millions, of course, are important in themselves, but not so important when dealing with billions. So I am not going to quarrel with the figures submitted by the former Minister of Agriculture and those submitted by the hon. member for Hastings. My point is that we should consider the dairy industry as a whole, and I have tried to insist upon that during the last three or four years when we have been discussing this question.

In reply to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, I am going to present this point of view. Here are some figures that I got this morning from the bureau of statistics in regard to cheese. In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930, we exported 92,000,000 odd pounds of cheese, and for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1931, we exported 79,000,000 pounds—a loss in our exports of cheese in one year of over 12,000,000 pounds. Let hon. members who consider that the importation of agricultural products is a tremendous injury to the country ponder these figures. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930, we imported 304,307 pounds of cheese, and for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1931, we imported 1,685,045 pounds. That is, we multiplied our imports of cheese by five within the last year under this government.

Mr. SENN: Where did that cheese come from?

Mr. BROWN: I am not discussing that question at all.

Mr. SENN: It came from New Zealand.

Mr. BROWN: I know that these figures are very embarrassing to some of my hon. friends opposite. Here is the point I want to emphasize, that we should consider the dairy industry as a whole. I was very much interested in the report of an address to a dairy convention in the county of Prince Edward during the early part of last winter, by a man named Elliott. I do not know who he was, but he presented what seemed to me an argument well worth considering. His contention was that the imposition of a duty against New Zealand butter, and shutting it out of this country, seriously interfered with our market for cheese, because the New Zealand men were turning their attention from the making of butter to the making of cheese and were shipping cheese in increasing quantities to the British market. That is surely a point of view worth considering. So our interest in dairying is not by any means confined to butter, and I think this point is well worth considering just now when, as I pointed out our exports in cheese have fallen during the last year by 12,000,000 pounds. Admitting the contention of Mr. Elliott at the dairy convention, that the shutting out of New Zealand butter has interfered with our export of cheese, we do know this, that cheese is at the lowest point it has reached in the last ten years. I got the figures this morning from 1920, when cheese was quoted in Toronto at 32½ cents and in Montreal at 33 cents, down to May, 1931, when cheese was quoted in Toronto at 12 cents. The figures for May for Montreal were not available, but undoubtedly cheese is the lowest it has been in the last ten years. I suggest, as a possible explanation of the fact that we are now on an export basis for butter, that our creameries have switched from the making of cheese to the making of butter. To what extent that has been done I do not know, but I think it is well worth looking into. At least there ought to be some explanation of the fact that during the last year we reduced our exports of cheese by 12,000,000 pounds.

I want to emphasize again that matters of tariff are not as simple as some hon. members opposite seem to think. Trade barriers cannot be erected without producing a great many unforeseen and unexpected results.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask the Minister of National Revenue if there has been any change in the policy of the Australian government with respect to the bonusing of the export of butter, sometimes known as the Patterson scheme.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I understand it is in effect in Australia.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no change?

Mr. RYCKMAN: By reason of the cheap price of butter in Australia, and the rate of exchange in their favour, they can manufacture butter and ship it here, and without new legislation we cannot keep it out.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Was there any change in Australia in the bonusing system known as the Patterson scheme?

Mr. SPENCE: It is unfortunate that so much time should be lost in blocking an item such as this.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPENCE: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. MEMBER: What about last year?

Mr. SPENCE: This year I have not taken up the time of the house, but it is difficult to sit here and listen to such arguments as are being made in committee to-day.

An hon. MEMBER: Look what we had to put up with.

Mr. SPENCE: Hon. members seem to think only of figures. They are figuring all the time.

Mr. VENIOT: Look at what we had to put up with last year.

Mr. SPENCE: Never mind that.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The shoe is on the other foot.

Mr. SPENCE: Hon. members opposite sit back and ask ridiculous questions in their attempt to block the item. May I say that their action reflects no credit on the House of Commons. We have seen ex-ministers in the front benches of the opposition attempting to demonstrate to the committee the wide extent of their knowledge. If they had shown as much ability when they were in power they might have still been there. The fact that they did not show such ability accounts for their being at present in opposition. The action of my hon. friends opposite has been nothing but a matter of blocking all the way through. They have done nothing but resort to blocking and obstruction throughout the whole session. Items have been held back, back, back, and hon. members who are asking the questions ought to know the answers as well as the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. DUPUIS: What did my hon. friend do last year when he was in opposition?

Mr. SPENCE: I am sorry my hon. friend (Mr. Young) introduced an amendment to reduce the item under discussion to practically nothing at all. Sometimes he uses common sense but in this case he did not. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) has said—

An hon. MEMBER: Did the hon. member say "humbug"?

Mr. SPENCE: The hon. member for Humboldt has said that this item cannot get through and everything has to be blocked until further information is supplied. He knows very well about the information for which he has asked. He must have something in the back of his mind; I am sure he could answer his questions himself. He has utilized the time of the house to tell of the high qualifications of the late Minister of Agriculture. I am not going to say any unkind words about the ex-minister. Many times I helped him when he was on this side of the house, and when I saw he could not get the support of his own party.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, we got along very well.

Mr. SPENCE: I should be willing to do it again. But when he gets up in the committee and reads an article from some newspaper, probably an irresponsible newspaper; when he takes up an hour's time to tell the present Minister of Agriculture what he should do; when he eulogizes the different officials, beginning with the deputy minister and dealing with all officials of the department—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Was there anything wrong in what I said?

Mr. SPENCE: It takes too much of the time of the committee. If they were so efficient they do not need any eulogies. The remarks of the ex-minister leave in my mind the thought that he is seeking to defend something. The matters to which he has referred should be left entirely to the hon. member who is now at the head of the Department of Agriculture. I know if I were head of the department I would have people behind me who were absolutely loyal despite the viewpoint of the ex-minister.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Who is not loyal? Which official is not loyal to the minister?

Mr. SPENCE: I did not say any of them were not loyal.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member left that implication.

Mr. SPENCE: One might think there was some reason for defending the actions of departmental officials, judging from the remarks of the ex-minister. I am not opposed to the dismissal of any official who may prove to be inefficient; all departments of government should be protected in that way. The ministers need loyalty behind them.

Mr. DUPUIS: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

An hon. MEMBER: You have been talking all day.

Mr. SPENCE: I shall be pleased to answer if I can understand what my hon. friend says.

Mr. DUPUIS: Does the hon. member think the Minister of Agriculture is not able to defend himself?

Mr. SPENCE: I do not think the minister needs defending. Like other ministers, he may make mistakes.

Mr. DUPUIS: I have a sufficiently good opinion of the Minister of Agriculture to believe that he knows how to defend himself.

Mr. SPENCE: I am not defending the Minister of Agriculture. I am referring to the time wasted by hon. members opposite in blocking the business of the house.

An hon. MEMBER: You are wasting time.

Mr. SPENCE: Those of us who have to sit here and take it all and say nothing are tired of it.

An hon. MEMBER: Dispense.

[Mr. Spence.]

Mr. SPENCE: If this National Dairy Council is of any consequence at all, it should be sustained, and sustained with money sufficient to keep it in operation.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is it not a political organization?

Mr. SPENCE: If it is not worth while it should be abolished.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is it not a political organization?

Mr. SPENCE: No, we have no political organizations, so far as our—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPENCE: Our policies are for Canada, not for ourselves. We have no political organizations to keep up particular departments, and never had. I repeat that if the National Dairy Council is worth while it should be sustained. I understand it is composed of men of repute, and Canada needs men of that type, men who can guide the Canadian dairy industry. Hon. members know the present condition of our export trade. I wonder if they can imagine a country the size of Canada practically excluded from export business in beef, bacon, cheese and butter. Those who have been governing this country for the last few years should be ashamed of themselves when they realize our business has been ruined to such an extent. But they have no hesitation in rising and asking, "Why have you not implemented your promises?"

An hon. MEMBER: Well, why haven't you?

Mr. SPENCE: My hon. friends were in power for nine years and did nothing; they had no policy. They governed Canada by committees and commissions; that is all they did. They shirked their responsibilities at all times. I feel that to refer to the matter any further would be wasting time. I conclude by stating that it is a shame the country has to put up with such irresponsible people as hon. members on the opposite side of the house.

Mr. POULIOT: And the government is very irresponsible.

Mr. SPENCE: Hon. members opposite have practically no respect for the rules of the house. Blocking is their theme and that is all they know. They have blocked everything this session; God knows they are wasting the money of the country.

Mr. VENIOT: I suggest that the word "blocked" is unparliamentary.

Mr. YOUNG: Would the hon. member answer a question?

Mr. SPENCE: Yes.

Mr. YOUNG: Why is it that to-day in western Canada two pounds of butter are required to buy one pound of axle grease?

Mr. SPENCE: Oh, my hon. friend has been spending most of his time in the west sitting around the school house studying economics. I would ask him to figure it out for himself; he has as much time as I have.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In connection with the imports of cheese to which the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) referred, I may say that the figures from 1925 to 1930 show the following:

Year	Pounds exported
1925	4,544,485
1926	6,678,757
1927	1,340,000
1928	1,669,000
1929	1,936,196

That is, it is up about 100,000 pounds, and we have no record to show whether it is at the beginning or the end of the year. I think it is only fair to say that the misunderstanding with respect to the respective figures for butter quoted by the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) and myself is accounted for in this way: I was quoting figures from the dairy and cold storage branch, giving the average price of Australian butter sold in London; the hon. member for South Huron was quoting the price of Danish butter in the London market, where we know it sells at a premium.

Another point has been brought up that I feel I should deal with briefly; it has reference to the officials of the Department of Agriculture. I think my best defence of them was that I did not think it worth while the other night to get up and say anything. I do feel this, however, that the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell), who has spoken so highly of the officials—and I feel they will very much appreciate his kind words—omitted to mention the strongest point in their favour, that they are highly trained technical men. I think they would appreciate his praise very much more had he used his influence when he was minister to see that these officials—who take second place to none in this or any other country with respect to their technical qualifications and efficiency—were paid at the same rate as the officials of other departments of a similar classification. He failed to do so. I think it would have been more acceptable to them if efforts had been made by my hon. friend to see that their remuneration was commensurate with the work that they carry on, and especially that it should be on such a scale as to bear comparison with the salaries paid officials in other departments without the same training or the same experience.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend does not know, his deputy will tell him that the Beatty commission awarded all the technical men a very substantial increase.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Just in the last two years that has been under consideration, I believe.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. Since my hon. friend is quite in agreement with me as to the quality of the officials, I hope he will start where I left off in trying to get them the increased salaries that they were entitled to long ago. When doing so will he recall the fact that, during all the years I was here, in conjunction with the Minister of Public Works, I never ceased fighting for a home for the Department of Agriculture, and now for the first time since confederation they have a home. All my hon. friend had to do was to walk in and occupy it. I congratulate him now that as head of the department he will be in a position to get a very much higher percentage of efficiency out of the staff than was possible when they were scattered all over the city in twenty buildings, as I found them when I became minister.

Will my hon. friend be good enough to say whether the member for South Hastings (Mr. Tummon) is correct? He has repudiated Doctor Ruddick's figures in regard to the 14 billion pounds, but he has given us only his own statement in justification for his repudiation.

Mr. TUMMON: Yes, he has.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I want to ask the minister for the fourth time—twice last week and twice to-day—is he going to repudiate those figures as the member for Hastings has done, or is he going to confirm them? If he is going to repudiate them, what is he going to substitute for them? Will he please tell us so the committee will know something of what is being done? If I have to ask the question twenty-four times I am going to do so, because that is the whole crux of the thing, that is the only yardstick—total milk production—by which you can measure the decline or improvement in the dairy industry in any country. Now, will not the minister be good enough to meet my wishes in this respect? If he has something wonderful that he is going to spring, why not spring it now and smash us all to pieces? I wish he would do that.

Mr. TUMMON: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The same kind of play,—anything but an answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, why cannot I get an answer to my question?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I did not understand that the hon. member for Hastings was doubting the veracity of the information given by Dr. Ruddick. I understood the difference was due to the different methods by which the respective results were arrived at.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the aggregate what do they amount to? Is there any substantial difference?

Mr. TUMMON: The hon. ex-Minister of Agriculture seems to think that I did not substantiate my figures. I hold in my hand the monthly bulletin of agricultural statistics for the Dominion of Canada as issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and this is the source of my information. Let me say to the hon. gentleman, if he is not aware of it, that the dairy and cold storage branch depend on the bureau of statistics for figures of the total production of milk in Canada. I repeat, the figure based on the records of the total production of milk changed in 1929, and if he will go back over the reports he will find that to be the case. I am not blaming him or the department of which he was the head—not at all.

Now, the hon. member for Lisgar mentioned the production of cheese during the past few years. I may say to him that what has been happening recently happened to a much greater extent under the previous government. I will quote again from this very bulletin. The total number of pounds of cheese produced exclusively in Canada in 1926, for example, was in round figures 172,000,000 pounds; in 1927, 138,000,000—or a reduction of 34,000,000. The production of cheese in Canada has been decreasing practically every year since. It is not, as he said, that the cheese factories are turning to the making of butter—

Mr. BOTHWELL: Will the hon gentleman give the figures for 1928, 1929 and 1930?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. TUMMON: I could if I had the bureau reports, but I am satisfied that what I have said is correct, because I have been in touch with these figures and watching the cheese production each year, it being an important industry in my constituency. The reduction in the production of cheese is not because the cheese factories have turned to the making of butter; it is because the dairy farmers will turn from cheese to butter if they can obtain a better price for their milk.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is it not so that the farmers will turn from butter and cheese production to cereals when the price of cereals is higher, and that that accounts for the reduced production?

Mr. TUMMON: Perhaps in my hon. friend's district, but not in the district I come from.

Mr. BROWN: They will also switch to ice cream and other dairy products.

Mr. TUMMON: You would have a little difficulty in figuring that out. Then my hon. friend from Lisgar mentioned Mr. Elliott. I know Mr. Elliott very well; he is an exceedingly fine gentleman who has taken quite an interest in the cheese industry. But as one who has been connected with the dairy industry all his life, from the milking of cows to the making and marketing of cheese and butter, let me say that the best years we ever had in the cheese industry in Canada were the years when butter was on an export basis. I am speaking now only in regard to cheese. When butter is on an export basis in Canada, invariably the farmer will go to cheese because as a rule there is more money in it.

Mr. MULLINS: I cannot understand the interest shown now by hon. gentlemen opposite in the dairy industry. I hold in my hand a pamphlet entitled From Gloom and Depression to Unparalleled Prosperity; Canada's Progress Under Liberal Administration. There is not one mention in that pamphlet of the dairy industry, although every other industry in this country is referred to. Why do hon. gentlemen opposite show so much interest now?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is my hon. friend thinking of changing his politics?

Mr. MULLINS: I will answer my hon. friend in a moment. If, before July 28, hon. gentlemen opposite had devoted to the dairy industry as much energy as they are displaying this afternoon, they might have made a better impression.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Perhaps in this book there was a leaf cut off, just like the Mafeking cut-off.

Mr. MULLINS: The Mafeking cut-off is not mentioned, either. Reference is made to everything else but the dairy industry, and on the bottom is the name of the right hon. leader of the opposition, then Prime Minister.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct a statement which I made this afternoon in regard to the cheese importations. Sometimes in examining figures of this kind one looks at them a little hastily—I think the Minister of Justice will remember a similar experience. The figures given by me were not correct, while those given by the Minister of Agriculture a little later were.

I desire also to refer to a remark made by the hon. member for South Hastings to the effect that when we are on an export basis for butter it means switching to cheese. I would remind the hon. gentleman that there are a lot of fish up that stream. An attempt to increase artificially the price of butter so as to bring it to an export basis means that we are brought to a position where we are dependent upon the export market and we then have to compete with New Zealand.

Mr. THOMPSON (Lanark): Mr. Chairman, before recess we were discussing an item including a grant of $5,000 to the National Dairy Council. I think we have wandered far away from the item. The National Dairy Council is composed of representatives from the different provincial dairy associations. We have a dairy association in eastern Ontario, one in western Ontario, and there are similar associations in the other provinces. The National Dairy Council has rendered invaluable service to the dairying industry of Canada. For the last twenty-five years I have been the secretary of the dairymen's association of eastern Ontario, and for many years I represented eastern Ontario on the National Dairy Council. This council has appeared on many occasions before the railway board and has secured special rates for dairy products which have saved the farmers and dairymen of this country hundreds of thousands of dollars. They look after what we might call the dominion-wide interests of the dairy business, while the local provincial interests are looked after by the provincial associations. I submit that it is in the interests of the dairymen that this item be permitted to pass.

A remark was made this afternoon by the hon. member for Weyburn, to which I should like to draw attention. He asked why it took two pounds of butter to buy one pound of axle grease. The reason is the treaty with Australia and the agreement with New Zealand made by the government which he supported. They demoralized the dairy industry of this Dominion and put it in the condition in which it now is. I was a member of a deputation which waited on the late Mr. Robb, the then Minister of Finance, to ask that this treaty be not put into effect and I stated on that occasion that if New Zealand were permitted to ship her dairy products to Canada, within ten years the dairy industry of this country would be demoralized. But I was but the voice of one crying in the wilderness. We received no sympathy, and we are suffering to-day from the effects of the treaties which were consummated by the late government. Not only did they demoralize the dairy industry of this country, but they have earned for us the ill will of both New Zealand and Australia. Because of the splendid service rendered to the dairymen of Canada by the National Dairy Council, I submit that this item should pass.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the hon. member for Lanark upon his very interesting speech, but he will pardon me if I do not share his views in that respect. We have heard a lot about the Australian treaty and the New Zealand convention, but those agreements were passed before the "shadow government" came into power. That government was in power for three months, but the agreements were not cancelled. The hon. member is on the right side of the house to make a complaint to the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is always ready to enter into trade relations with Australia and New Zealand. I should like to read an excerpt from the Montreal Gazette of to-day with reference to dairy products. This is the latest report available. It reads as follows:

Dairy Markets Ruled Steady
No Changes In Montreal Prices Of Butter, Cheese Or Eggs
Storing Of Butter Now Starting as Receipts Exceed Requirements—April Imports Less

Wholesale prices of butter, cheese and eggs held steady at Montreal yesterday. Potatoes were a little easier. Poultry was unchanged.

The butter market continued at 21 cents to 21¾ cents per pound for No. 1 pasteurized creamery butter, carlots or broken lots. To the retail trade, for small quantities, solids were 23 cents and prints 24 cents per pound. Receipts were on the heavy side, 5,420 boxes; week ago, 430; year ago 109.

Most of the butter now arriving on the Montreal market is full grass butter, and dealers are starting to store some of it. Arrivals are now greater than immediate requirements. Receipts last week just over 20,000 boxes, whereas the weekly requirements of the city run from 10,000 to 12,000 boxes. Montreal exported a little over 3,000 boxes last week, leaving a few thousand boxes available for storage, for use later in the year when production falls off.

This report confirms the statement made by the hon. member for Lisgar. It continues:

The cheese market was unchanged at 10¾ cents to 11 cents per pound for Ontario cheese, and 10 cents for Quebec cheese. Receipts, 2,395 boxes; week ago, 372; year ago, 843.

I want to put this on record in connection with the present discussion of the results in the dairy industry. Before I conclude, may I ask a question of the minister? He spoke about the rock bottom reached by butter last winter. What was the rock bottom reached by butter when the mutual agreement was released last December?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Does the hon. gentleman mean what I considered the rock bottom last December when the agreement was made?

Mr. POULIOT: I want to know when the minister considered the rock bottom reached, and if it was for that reason that the mutual agreement was released?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The mutual agreement was not released. The butter was released.

Mr. VALLANCE: But the minister allowed the Australian butter to be released at less than 32 cents a pound.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): By mutual agreement we allowed the butter to be released.

Mr. BROWN: I think what the hon. member for Témiscouata wants to know is what the minister considered the rock bottom price when the butter was released.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I shall be glad to get the exact information.

Mr. POULIOT: Has my hon. friend concluded his remarks?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: I should not like to interrupt him. I paid special attention to his remarks this afternoon, and according to the notes which I took at that time, he said that when butter reached rock bottom, there was a release of Australian butter that was held on consignment. I wonder what my hon. friend decided was the rock bottom price of butter when that action was taken, or what was the price of butter at that time?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I shall be glad to get the exact date of the release of the butter and the exact price in Montreal on that date, but I have not the information under my hand.

Mr. POULIOT: To-morrow.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. McPHEE: In connection with the same question, the Minister of Agriculture said that he permitted the Australian people to sell butter under 32 cents a pound because of a butter warfare between certain organizations in western Canada and price cutting. Will he kindly tell us what those organizations were?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My information, which, as I said, I regarded as reliable, was that there was a cutting of butter prices in Vancouver. I was informed confidentially that there was a cutting of prices on the part of different organizations, but I do not think it would be in the public interest to give the names of the organizations as reported to me.

Mr. McPHEE: Did the minister investigate the matter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Mr. VALLANCE: Are we to assume now that the minister is giving as an excuse for releasing the butter the fact that he was told something in confidence? I do not think the minister is going quite far enough. It seems to me that when he has used this confidential information as an excuse for doing a certain thing, the house has a right to expect him to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Yorkton and to divulge the names. If the information was given in confidence, I do not think he should have used it unless he is prepared to tell us the names of the organizations that were carrying on the price war.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The statement that I made was that when butter reached what I considered was rock bottom, I agreed to have the Australian butter released, and that I understood it had reached rock bottom due to a price war. But no matter what it was due to, the point I was making was that the action was taken when the price of butter had reached what I considered rock bottom. I do not see that the other matter which has been referred to has any bearing on the question.

Mr. McPHEE: Last Tuesday night the minister as reported at page 2005 and 2006 of Hansard referred to the matter. He said that the price of butter——was cut by something very much in the nature of a butter warfare between various organizations in the west.

Later on he said:

When Canadian organizations commenced cutting the price of butter to a point that we thought was nearly rock bottom, I agreed that the Australians could release their butter at a price less than thirty-two cents a pound.

Mr. McINTOSH: Was the price cutting the minister mentioned simply in Vancouver, or did it extend beyond Vancouver into the prairie provinces?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My information was that it was in Vancouver.

Mr. HACKETT: In view of the interest that this item seems to have created, I am going to put on record a few facts that may be of assistance when this item is under discussion either here or elsewhere. A number of questions asked have elicited answers which it seems to me are misleading if taken apart from the whole subject matter. The Australian treaty became effective in the autumn of 1925. In the year 1925 and in the following years, according to the bureau of statistics, Canada exported these quantities of butter:

Year	Exports pounds	Value
1925	26,646,535	$9,917,516
1926	9,814,300	3,352,829
1927	2,696,000	1,068,610
1928	1,994,800	805,055
1929	1,400,490	583,061
1930	1,180,400	410,447

During the five years that that treaty was in effect we diminished our export of butter twenty-five times; that is, we were exporting twenty-five times less butter at the end of five years than when the treaty became effective. The imports, according to the bureau of statistics, for the same years are as follows:

Year	Butter imports in pounds	Value
1925	99,748	$ 39,315
1926	9,151,882	3,451,812
1927	11,208,819	3,892,640
1928	16,801,656	5,937,170
1929	35,928,240	12,714,253
1930	38,606,055	12,393,662
Twelve months preceding Sept. 30, 1930.	47,031,642	15,572,854

Mr. VENIOT: Has the hon. member also the figures of the production and consumption in Canada?

Mr. HACKETT: No.

Mr. VENIOT: Then his argument falls to the ground. We produced over forty million pounds less than we were able to consume.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Why?

Mr. HACKETT: I would point out to the committee that there was every reason for our production of butter to increase during that period because in those years, by reason of legislation hostile to the export of milk and cream—this is particularly true of the eastern townships, and truer still of the border counties of the eastern townships from which such large quantities of milk and cream were exported to the large centres of New England—exports were greatly curtailed.

I will now give the quantities of milk and cream which in ever-diminishing volume were exported during the five-year period under review.

Mr. POULIOT: Before my hon. friend comes to that, does he contend that the importation of butter has anything to do with the price of butter in this country? If so, how is it that if we are importing less butter now, the price is much lower than it was before?

Mr. SHORT: What is the price of other commodities now?

Mr. POULIOT: Speak of fish, you. You know nothing about butter.

Mr. HACKETT: If my hon. friend will bear with me for a few moments, I will deal with prices. I am now dealing with quantities. In 1925 we exported from Canada—and I can assure my hon. friend from Témiscouata that most of this export came from the province of Quebec—4,314,193 gallons of milk, of a value of $784,081. The figures are as follows:

Year	Exports of milk in gallons	Value
1925	4,314,193	$784,081
1926	4,801,705	971,016
1927	3,673,242	729,823
1928	3,959,812	866,920
1929	3,291,819	750,257
1930	1,475,618	309,011

Our exports of cream were as follows:

Year	Exports of cream in gallons	Value
1925	4,077,487	$7,000,141
1926	4,457,129	7,601,432
1927	4,044,916	7,120,209
1928	3,043,418	5,593,399
1929	2,385,754	4,911,535
1930	1,269,721	2,468,216

To summarize, during this period our exports of butter were reduced from over 26,500,000 to 1,000,000 pounds, and our imports increased from 99,000 to 47,000,000. Our milk subsided in export from 4,314,000 to 1,475,000 gallons, and our cream subsided in export from 4,077,000 to 1,269,000 gallons. That has to do with the quantity. I submit for the moment that when this treaty became effective and butter was brought in from Australia and New Zealand, we ceased to be an exporting country and we ceased to enjoy our own markets—and this in spite of the fact that we had been denied another market to which we were sending the very commodity from which butter is made.

As pointed out by my hon. friend from Témiscouata, there is another aspect to the question, and that is price. The price of butter has subsided. Butter has gone down in price until it is now about 21½ cents per pound. All along the border for years butter in the United States, and particularly in the New England states, has sold at a retail price of from ten to twelve cents higher than the price in Canada. That fact is known to everybody in the dairy business in the eastern townships.

Mr. REID: Not in the state of Washington.

Mr. HACKETT: When I went to school the state of Washington was remote from the states of Vermont, New Hampshire and Massachusetts.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not quote world's prices?

Mr. HACKETT: Between New England and Montreal there was invariably a difference in price of from ten to twelve cents a pound. To-day butter in these New England centres is selling within the range of one cent of the price at which our own butter is selling in Montreal.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Would the hon. member tell the committee where he got his figures?

Mr. HACKETT: Yes; I can tell the department and the person who supplied the information.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Just the department.

Mr. HACKETT: The bureau of statistics.

Mr. ILSLEY: Was there not a period of four or five months in the early part of 1930 when the price was higher in Canada than it was in the United States, and if so how does that affect the argument of my hon. friend?

[Mr. Hackett.]

Mr. HACKETT: In 1930 the price of butter in the New England states certainly was higher than the price in Canada.

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. HACKETT: Within the past two decades there never was a time, until very recently, when the price of butter was lower in New England than in Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am afraid my hon. friend will have to revise his information, because butter came to Montreal in the early part of 1930.

Mr. ILSLEY: My information is that the price was higher in Montreal.

An hon. MEMBER: That is not a question.

Mr. ILSLEY: Very well, I will ask a question, if my hon. friend will give me a little latitude. My information is that during the first four or five months of 1930 the price of butter was higher in Montreal than in New York. In order to make a fair comparison, would those centres not be representative, and is the statement I have made not true? If my statement is true how does it affect the argument made by my hon. friend?

Mr. HACKETT: It is not true. At least, I shall modify my answer to this extent: in an attempt to be fair I have procured all the figures available from authentic sources and I have not found the situation described by my hon. friend.

Mr. DONNELLY: I have an average price supplied me by the bureau of statistics.

Mr. HACKETT: Would the hon. member permit me to continue my statement. I do not wish to appear arrogant, but after all if I do not continue I shall not finish to-night. I have before me the average prices at the factories in Canada during the last five years. These prices apply to creamery butter; the prices of dairy butter have to be estimated, for reasons apparent to all.

Year	Cents
1925	37·17
1926	34·85
1927	37·13
1928	38·51
1929	38·60
1930	31·00

Having regard to the reduced prices at which butter is selling it seems to me it would be useful to consider the prices at which fodder and mill feed are selling, commodities which are used for the production of butter. I have before me the prices for bran per ton, including bags, ex-track Montreal:

Year	Price per ton
1926	$29 58
1927	32 25
1928	35 20
1929	32 58
1930	27 84

The price of bran reached a low mark in November of 1930 when it sold for $20.37 per ton. My information ends with the price of $21.25 per ton in January and February of this year. I am informed that bran costs from $2 to $4 more a ton in the townships than it does ex-track by carload lots in Montreal. To the prices I have quoted are to be added transportation costs, plus profits to the middle man and the retailer.

In regard to shorts I wish to place on Hansard the following prices:

Year	Price per ton
1926	$31 51
1927	34 52
1928	37 36
1929	34 01
1930	29 18

The low price reached in January and February of this year was $21.25. These prices are quoted per ton including bags ex-track Montreal. It will therefore be seen that although the price of butter has fallen the price of feed used in the production of butter has likewise dropped. In the case of bran there is a drop from $37.36, the high price in 1928, to $20.37 in November, 1930, and shorts from $37.36 in 1928 to $21.25 in January and February of this year. As I have said, $2 to $4 per ton should be added to the Montreal prices of bran and shorts to arrive at their prices in the eastern townships.

Mr. VALLANCE: Does the government take credit for the lower price of bran?

Mr. SHAVER: Your government did that.

Mr. HACKETT: I have thought it well to put these figures on record, because some of them may not meet the views of some hon. members. I do not like to see the price of butter as low as 21½ cents, but it seemed to me to be reasonable, inasmuch as such general interest had been taken in that particular commodity, so far as possible to assemble the relevant information so that it might be available to those who wished at a later date to discuss the topic.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That seems to be a confession of guilt.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I congratulate the hon. member (Mr. Lawson) who is presiding over the proceedings at the moment on attaining the high office which he now occupies. I have not taken much part in this debate; however may I say in passing that I hope you will not rule me out of order too often.

The ex-Minister of Agriculture cited certain figures. I have some figures before me which I hesitate to give because those cited by the ex-minister were contradicted by the hon. member for South Hastings. How do I know that the figures given a moment ago by the hon. member for Stanstead are accurate?

An hon. MEMBER: They are not.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The hon. member for South Hastings claimed he got his figures from the Department of Agriculture. The hon. member for Stanstead stated he got his from the bureau of statistics. The ex-Minister of Agriculture said his figures came from Doctor Ruddick, the dairy commissioner, and my figures—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I said my figures were based on information which Dr. Ruddick received from the bureau of statistics.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: My figures are signed by Doctor Ruddick, the dairy commissioner. It seems to me that the minister should clear the atmosphere and let us know what figures are right and what figures are wrong. I really hesitate to give any figures. I do not know whether the hon. member for Stanstead was correct when he said that in round figures we imported 35,000,000 pounds of butter in 1929. If we did, and we imported subsequently up to the month of April of this year only 3,000,000 pounds odd—

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): One year and five months.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Yes. If that is so, how does the hon. member for Stanstead reconcile the difference in price? We have had four sets of figures quoted respectively by the ex-Minister of Agriculture, the member for South Hastings, the member for Stanstead, and myself, and I think we should be advised which is correct. Let me take the prices for butter from the time the Australian and New Zealand treaties came into effect. The following are the prices for No. 1 pasteurized creamery butter in Montreal on January 2:

1925	35½
1926	45
1927	41
1928	35½
1929	40¾
1930	38¾

If my hon. friend from Stanstead is right in contending that we had a higher price for butter when we imported the greater percentage of it, I am convinced we had better continue our importations. When we imported 35,000,000 pounds of butter the price in Montreal on January 2, which is generally the highest price of the year on account of the climatic conditions, was 10 cents per pound higher than it is to-day; that is, 40¾ cents in 1929 as against 30 cents in 1930. I live in an entirely agricultural district, and it may interest my hon. friend from Brome-Mississquoi to learn that in proportion to population there is as much or perhaps more dairying carried on there than in his riding. I live alongside the Dakota and Minnesota borders, and I will tell the committee the steps I took to offset the unfair campaign of my opponents in regard to the importation of butter. In this connection I want my hon. friend from Marquette to listen. He told us this afternoon that the cow has two stomachs and only one set of teeth. Well, he will be interested to hear how I combated the unfair butter propaganda in my county. Let me tell him and his friends that undoubtedly they did slip into power on a pound of butter, and I am confident they are going to slip out of power on the price of butter. I went over to the States and sent some of my friends over there to see how the price of butter fat compared with our price in Manitoba. Remember, this was during the heat of the campaign when the country had been drowned with all kinds of literature sent from this house for years and years—literature prepared by this very organization to which we are asked to vote a subsidy; literature which, if it is not political in its purpose, bears a very close resemblance to it. May I say to the hon. member for Parkdale right now before I forget it, that any time we ask for information we are handed lectures from his side of the house. If it is not a lecture by the Prime Minister it is one by the member for Parkdale. Instead of giving us lectures it would be better if they would let the minister put members of the committee on the right track as to which is the correct figure; then we would save all this discussion.

Now let me give the committee the difference in the price paid for butter fat in Minnesota and Dakota and in Manitoba. It was only one cent—that was all the difference. Thereupon I had affidavits made by responsible people in Minnesota and Dakota, and the butter propaganda of our Conservative friends had no further effect in my riding. After the eulogy paid his officials by the minister and by his predecessors, may I ask him to tell the committee if the figures presented to us signed by his own officials, who are so efficient—and I know they are efficient, they are the finest group of officials in any department in Ottawa, or at least they are as good as any—will he tell the committee which are the right and which are the wrong figures? I think we are entitled to this explanation.

Mr. PICKEL: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CASGRAIN: Let the minister answer.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Mr. Chairman, I do not think the former Minister of Agriculture feels he has produced an elegy to-day, and I certainly do not feel that I have—

An hon. MEMBER: It is a churchyard business.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Perhaps my hon. friend misunderstood me; I meant praise. Sometimes I do not get the right English word.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I thought the hon. member meant something different altogether.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: No, I meant praise.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I still do not think there is any dispute as to the accuracy of the information given by the officials of the department. I think the dispute is as to the different methods of computation. That is the whole thing.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What is the right method?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): If the committee wish me to take the time to read those figures—

An hon. MEMBER: We will listen to you gladly.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Mr. Chairman, before the minister reads out his figures may I give him mine?

Mr. ROWE: You said they were no good.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am sure the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe could put us right as to the figures, because he certainly went around the country giving figures during the campaign.

Mr. ROWE: I stayed out of your constituency.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Certainly. My constituents will not believe anything so exaggerated as it was by my hon. friend.

Mr. ROWE: It is a wonder you are here, then.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It may be, to my hon. friend. Now, in regard to the denial by the hon. member for South Hastings of the accuracy of these figures as to the production of milk in Canada from 1924 to 1929, it is very important that we should have the question settled. He claimed production of milk was very much less than the figures I gave. Just giving round figures, the total milk production was as follows:

Year	Pounds
1922	9,000,000,000
1923	11,000,000,000
1924	12,000,000,000
1925	12,000,000,000
1926	13,000,000,000
1927	14,000,000,000
1928	14,000,000,000
1929	14,000,000,000

The hon. member for South Hastings claimed that these figures were not right; he claimed we never did produce that amount of milk during those years. Let the minister put us right; let us know where we are. He must have the figures there.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It must be understood that these figures are, in the first place, estimates. The only years for which I have figures here are 1928 and 1929. In 1928 the milk production was 14,512,897,961 pounds, while in 1929 it was 14,349,023,000 pounds.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Now we have it; a responsible minister gives exactly the figures I have here. The hon. member for South Hastings denies these figures and tries to create the impression in the committee and in the country that the ex-Minister of Agriculture is misrepresenting the facts. The hon. member made the accusation that on the eve of an election, or the year before the election, the figures were cooked in order to try to prove to the people that the production of milk was greater than it really was. The Minister of Agriculture now comes along and gives us the facts. The ex-minister was correct, and I claim he was one of the best ministers of agriculture Canada ever had.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would say to the hon. member for Provencher that he should not be too hard on the minister. We have been angling for this information for two days; this is the third sitting during which we have been asking for it. I asked for it four times, and I congratulate the hon. member on getting it at once. There is nothing like staying with the job. If we can get the information for one or two years, why can we not get it for all the years I cited?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I have not the figures here, but I shall be glad to get them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does not the minister think he should have them with him, when they were asked for several times?

Mr. ROWE: We are taking your figures.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am not the minister of agriculture; this is the minister to whom we must look for the figures.

Mr. ROWE: He has your figures.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Perhaps the hon. member himself might get up and explain these things. We have the admitted facts, with regard to two years. The statement of the Tories on our dairy industry was the rankest piece of campaign falsification of which I ever heard. That is why the minister did not want to admit the facts. Probably he engaged in it himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Who is that yelping now? There must be a coyote somewhere. We have them run to ground at least on two years and we are going to keep at them for the other seven years. Is it not a reasonable assumption that if my figures correspond with those given by the minister with regard to two years all my figures will correspond? I obtained them from Doctor Ruddick when I was still minister, and he is not going to cook them in the meantime. Money would not induce Doctor Ruddick to cook these figures. The deputy minister would not do anything of the kind, and that is why I was so sure the minister had them all along, right in his desk. He must have more figures, also. He has come across with one bunch, but he tries to blame us for blocking his estimates. Often I have been blamed for blocking my own estimates, but my hon. friend has beaten me forty ways in the matter of blocking estimates, by refusing to give information.

Now that we have him giving information, by way of priming the pump let me see if I cannot get some more figures. I would ask on behalf of the committee that my hon.

friend get the rest of those figures for the other years. Why should we be wrangling for two or three days about these figures? We knew this was the crux of the situation; hon. gentlemen opposite knew it, and at last they have coughed them up. Let them cough up the rest of them, and get along with this business. I do not want the minister to be cross with me; please do not look crossly at me. I cannot go to Doctor Ruddick now, when this scrap is on, and try to get figures. I could have had them right up to date, but I thought these would be sufficient, so I cannot go to him now; it would only get him in wrong. Here is Doctor Ruddick's letter to me under date of March 20:

I have your letter of the 10th instant inquiring as to prices for butter. I give you the prices for No. 1 pasteurized creamery butter at Montreal on January 2 for the years 1921 to 1931.

Those are the years in which we are interested. During those years the Liberal administration was in power, and we were charged with neglecting the business of the country, especially the dairy business to such an extent, that it was on the toboggan. My hon. friends from Quebec tell me they lost twenty seats in their province because of that campaign carried on by the present government, which was false from top to bottom. It was their only cry. We could have bucked the hard times if we had not had this cry to fight. Then they shot into power.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Will the hon. gentlemen be kind enough to remember that we cannot have half a dozen people speaking at once? Hon. gentlemen opposite shot into power on a bunch of butter and we want to shoot them out of power in the same way, in due time. We do not want them out for a while yet, however; let them wallow in their own mire. Here are the figures as given me by Doctor Ruddick, representing the prices of No. 1 pasteurized creamery butter at Montreal on January 2 of the following years:

	Cents
1921	55

It was quite high in 1921; it had not then receded because of the general deflation. It was high all over Canada; some time previous to that it had gone to $1 a pound in the west. Then the figures continue:

	Cents
1922	37
1923	40
1924	44
1925	35·50

[Mr. Motherwell.]

That is the year the Australian treaty was enacted, but since that treaty was not passed until well on in the year, it could not affect the price for that year. The year 1926 was the first year after the Australian treaty, and the price was 42 cents, or 7 cents higher than the year before. I do not say the price increased because of the treaty, but certainly it did not go down. Who was hurt? How many farmers were hurt because they received 7 cents more for their butter in 1926 than in 1925? Where is the farmer who will say that this hurt him?

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister be good enough to tell me—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not hear my hon. friend, but it is not likely it meant anything anyway. We will pass along; the hon. gentleman just wanted to ruffle the atmosphere for a moment and draw attention to himself. The other figures are:

	Cents
1928	35·50
1929	40·75
1930	38·75
1931	30·80

It will be seen that the price was substantially lower in the last year quoted. On January 2 of that year it was nearly 9 cents per pound lower than on January 2 of 1930. At all events they cannot charge that against us. Their whole cry was a bogus and a false campaign from top to bottom. The times reacted in their favour but now they have to face the music and take the facts home with them. The Tories had a rally in Alexandria, down in Glengarry county, but if the speeches are looked up in the Journal it will be seen that it was the tamest, weakest milk-and-water meeting ever held. The correspondents whipped it up a little bit and tried to add a little enthusiasm, but the speeches make very tame reading. They claimed the Liberals were the cause of the present trouble in the dairying industry, but that is about the end of it. It will be found that it took eight speakers to make a meeting; it would take another eight to make a meeting anywhere near worth while. You would think it was a logging bee they were attending.

I have given the price figures from 1921 to 1931; the hon. minister has given us the production figures for two years but unless the hon. member for Provencher desires to press immediately for the figures for the other seven years, we will give the minister a little breathing spell and wait until to-morrow for them. I cannot understand why his deputy has not that information, because he used to get it for me. When was butter so low in price as it is at the present time?

Mr. SPENCE: When was everything so low? When was feed so low?

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is not what the hon. members promised at the last election.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister might as well make up his mind to give the committee this information, because we are going to get it. Hon. members can holler their heads off but it will not make any difference to me. I can stand it, I have been through this sort of thing for a long time and my hide is tough enough. I have helped to prime the pump, I have given the figures for ten years, will the hon. minister give the committee the price figures back of 1921? Let him take any date in the year, I do not care which, but let him give the committee the figures for the different years. My recollection is that it is at least twenty-five years since the price of butter has been so low. What a war-whoop there would have been if the price had been so low when we were in power. As it was we heard a lot of Comanche war-whoops. Why should I have to give figures and the present minister be allowed to withhold others? He has the same deputy, and—

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): You have been explaining to the committee that during the time when you were Minister of Agriculture—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Chair.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): The hon. member permitted my asking a question.

An hon. MEMBER: Ask it of the chair.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Let me ask him this question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: Address the chair.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Mr. Chairman, the ex-Minister of Agriculture says that during the time he was head of the department excellent prices were obtained for butter. If that is so, how does he account for the fact that during his regime the cattle population of Saskatchewan dropped by one-third, or over 500,000?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member refers to cattle?

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): I said "cattle", and that includes the cows which we heard about this afternoon and about which we are now talking.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are better cows. A system of testing and weeding out was inaugurated by the federal and provincial governments. This afternoon, I understand, a remark was made detrimental to Mr. W. A. Wilson. I do not know what it was, but it was false whatever it was. Mr. Wilson left Canada—

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Will the hon. member please sit down ?

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. When I was speaking this afternoon on this item—

Mr MOTHERWELL: That is not a point of order.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): The hon. member across the way says that I made a statement which was not correct or which was false. All I said was that during the time of the trial—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What trial?

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): The trial in Saskatchewan of a certain gentleman.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The trial of Wiljames Thompson?

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): When the hon. member was Minister of Agriculture he had a man appointed in the province of Saskatchewan who was head of the cooperative creamery.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is not a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): I shall have to ask the hon. member to state his point of order.

Mr. CASGRAIN: There is no point of order.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): My point of order is this: the gentleman to whom he refers was sent by the ex-minister—

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is not a point of order

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): The statement I made is correct and can be proved by the comment of the judge, who stated that Wilson's absence was deliberate.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is an item in the agriculture estimates in connection with Mr. Wilson and if my hon. friend desires to attack his record I shall be quite prepared to defend him. I do not know whether or not he is still in the employ of the government, but the evidence will be available. Someone seems to be always taking the joy out of this thing by wheedling us away from the minister. I want to hang right on to the hon. member, I have given him the butter prices for ten years, and I want him to give us the figures for the other years. We agree that his deputy is a competent man; his salary was raised $4,000 during the Liberal administration and is now as large as the salary of the minister, who would not, I imagine, want it to be any larger. I have given the prices of butter for the years 1921 to 1931 as given by Doctor Ruddick. Would the minister go back from 1921 and find out when the price of butter was lower than it has been this last week, that is, 18½ cents per pound basis No. 1 Montreal?

An hon. MEMBER: What purpose would it serve?

Mr. COTNAM: The price of butter was—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. COTNAM: —fifteen cents per pound.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What does my hon. friend want?

Mr. COTNAM: The hon. member asked when the price of butter was lower than eighteen cents per pound, and I tell him that butter was twelve cents per pound during the election campaign.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I remember when the cheese business was first started in eastern Canada some fifty-five or sixty years ago and at that time the price of milk was four-fifths of a cent per pound. I do not need any statistics to quote those figures, because I got up at half-past four in the morning to milk the cows. I was the first one on the milk route and the price we received was eighty cents for one hundred pounds, and it takes about 11½ pounds of milk to make a pound of cheese. Consequently at that time it cost in milk 9 cents to produce a pound of cheese. If you add one and a half or two cents for the cost of manufacture, that would make the cheese worth about 11 cents at that time, namely, fifty-five years ago. It is lower than that now; it has been as low as 8⅛, 9, and 10 cents a pound. It has gone up a little. Therefore my hon. friend might as well give me the figures because I am old enough to remember them as far back as fifty or sixty years. I should like to have my memory confirmed if he can go back, say, to around 1901. Doctor Ruddick has the figures as far back as 1898 and I think some of the authorities in the city have them nearly as far back as 1890, so we look to my hon. friend to help us out of our difficulty in this respect.

Mr. MULLINS: The hon. member for Melville made the statement that it was an unfair campaign. Our constituencies adjoin each other and there never was a fairer campaign carried on by any candidate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MULLINS: Let me tell the hon. gentleman for his information: at the time I was running that campaign you could buy two pounds of butter in Marquette for a tin of axle grease.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Tell us about the cow.

Mr. MULLINS: My hon. friends are costing this country thousands of dollars by blocking this estimate.

Mr. ST-PERE: The hon. member is blocking it.

Mr. MULLINS: My hon. friends have a purpose. What are they doing it for? They are playing a gallery game for purposes well known to themselves. If the Minister of Agriculture does not make a better showing and put agriculture on a better footing than the hon. member for Melville did when he was in office, I shall move over to that side of the house.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Let him stay where he is. We do not want him.

Mr. MULLINS: My hon. friends do not want me. It might be better for them if they had on that side a man who knows something about live stock, because the former Minister of Agriculture knows nothing about it or he never would have wasted hundreds of thousands of dollars in breeding cattalo. Do hon. members know what they are? A Wainwright mongrel, part buffalo and part cattle, that no other man would have wasted thousands of dollars of Canada's money to raise.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will the hon. gentleman give the reasons for the difference? Which part was buffalo and which part was cow?

Mr. MULLINS: I have been in western Canada many years; I have run many elections, and I do not know of another that was run as honestly. We used no scandal; we took the real issues and we discussed them on the platform, if that is any information to the hon. gentleman. When he says it was false and unfair, he is stating what is untrue. The statement that he makes is absolutely wrong. I ran an honest election; I referred to no man personally; I referred to the hon. gentleman's administration. He wasted the country's money in appointing hog graders. Did hon. members ever hear of such a thing? It was the most iniquitous system that was ever placed in the stockyards of Winnipeg, Toronto and all the other cities, just for the purpose of making political jobs for political friends. The hon. gentleman bought a number of horses on the western ranges, and I would ask him to tell the house what amount of money was lost? Some $20,000. The hon. gentleman was going in for all these foolish experiments. If the present minister does similar foolish things, I shall move over to the other side.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We do not want the hon. member.

Mr. MULLINS: My hon. friends do not want us because we are standing out for honest government.

Mr. DUPUIS: Will the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. MULLINS: My hearing is not very good and it is difficult for me to hear the hon. member. Let me mention another point.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): I would much appreciate it if hon. gentlemen who interrupt would observe the rules of order.

Mr. MULLINS: In the transportation of live stock from western Canada, a subject in which I have been vitally interested, expenses were never piled up as much as they were during the regime of the hon. member for Melville.

Mr. DUPUIS: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Marquette is out of order because he is not dealing with the question before the chair. Live stock is not the question at present before the chair, and I submit that the hon. member should be ruled out of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): The item before the chair is: "Dairying, including grant of $5,000 to National Dairy Council". Considerable latitude has been allowed to hon. members on both sides to discuss under this item the last political campaign. Would the hon. member for Marquette kindly confine his remarks to the dairy industry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Talk about the cow.

Mr. MULLINS: I am talking about the dairy industry, but you, sir, permitted the hon. member for Melville to make the statement that an unfair election was run in Marquette. This was not the case, but the dairy cow played an important part in that constituency. The dairy cow was in evidence on every platform and it was she who defeated him. Moreover, when the four years are up, the dairy cow, with the policies that the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Agriculture will put into effect, will bring us back into power again.

Some hon. MEMBERS: When?

Mr. MULLINS: At the end of four years when we go to the country. We will use the dairy cow again in the next election and instead of having a majority of 2,700 I shall have 5,000. The hon. gentleman did everything he could to ruin the cattle industry in western Canada; he never did a thing that I know of, to promote it. The dairy industry has been set back by the policies of the ex-minister. I have mentioned before the policy with regard to pure bred sires, and how the farmers are now left without any cattle at all on account of that policy.

I should like to mention, Mr. Chairman, that my constituency took first prize for butter at Toronto exhibition and at various other exhibitions. My constituency is largely engaged in the dairy industry as well as in the production of beef cattle, and it was largely through the policies of the former Minister of Agriculture that I received such a large majority in the constituency of Marquette. Let me just state one more fact, and then I shall conclude because I do not want to detain the committee. In the stockyards when beef and dairy cattle would come in, under the policy of the former Minister of Agriculture there was a charge of $2.50 per hundred for barley when it was selling up the country at 25 cents a hundred. When the farmers were exploited in that way, can anyone say it was unfair to bring out those facts on the platform? The former Minister of Agriculture was responsible for that policy, and responsible also for charging the farmers $1.50 a bale for hay. The farmer could have been protected against all that if the former Minister of Agriculture had looked after the interests of agriculture when he had his agricultural bill before the house. I say it is absolutely unfair for hon. gentlemen opposite to block this estimate—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Who is doing it now?

Mr. MULLINS: —and I say they have some motive for it.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In listening to what has been going on I have been wondering what we are really discussing here to-day. As I understand it, we have before us an item dealing with dairying. A little while ago the hon. member for Marquette said something to the effect that the old cow was a stranger to this house. I am beginning to think that the old cow's husband is a rather familiar object here, and while the old cow herself may be without guile, her husband certainly is not.

There is another thought which came to my mind a moment ago, which bears directly on the subject before us. This committee has been little bit more than a bull garden for the last two hours; it has been almost a bear garden at times, and I was wondering as I sat here just what some of our farmers would think if they could have listened to us for the last two hours. I am making no references to any particular individual, but may I suggest this? So far as I can see, the dispute this afternoon is not so much over the accuracy of the figures that have been presented as with regard to the deductions which have been drawn and the arguments which have been adduced therefrom. It does seem to me that in discussing the varying amounts of butter production during past years we have overlooked what is propably the greatest factor, and that is not the political but the economic factor. I imagine, and I have been in the dairy business for about forty years, that we can divide the dairymen of this country into two classes: first, those to whom dairying is their chief business, those who are professional dairymen, you might say, who carry on that business year in and year out as their main farming operation, and secondly, those to whom dairying is but a branch of agriculture to be taken up when it seems to be most profitable, and to be dropped when other branches of farming appeal to them as more profitable and as offering perhaps an easier method of making money.

Speaking a year ago on this subject, I made this statement, which I think is absolutely correct and may bear repetition, that the dairy production of this country—and in that I include milk and all its products—might be likened to an index needle which pointed to the condition of the wheat market. During the years when the raising of wheat can be carried on profitably, the second class of dairymen to whom I have referred, to whom dairying is a side issue, will not milk cows; they will proceed with grain farming. But when prices go down below cost, as they have done of late, they will turn to anything which will bring in a little ready money, and many of them at this time are turning to dairying. It is not a question now of the price of butter or of butter fat. If that were all, they would not be milking cows. But it has come to the point where they are using every possible means in every direction to make a little extra money. At the moment the price of butter fat, I suppose, is lower than it has been since the nineties. A few days ago I received a letter from an outstanding farmer in my district who said that he had always thought I was exaggerating when I told him that in the nineties we sometimes used butter for axle grease, but that now he believed it because they were actually doing it because of the comparatively low price of butter. It does seem to me that we are not gaining very much by discussing hour after hour under whose policies this fluctuating production has taken place, because after all it comes down to the economic feature. Men will milk cows when they cannot make money in any other way, or when it seems to them more profitable than any other branch of agriculture. We see that exemplified to-day. The price of butter is very low, the price of butter fat is still lower, but the price of other things, comparatively, is lower still. That has led to an increased production. Then we had a very open winter last year, one of the most open and most favourable winters for dairy production that we have seen in western Canada for perhaps thirty years. That, coupled with immense quantities of almost valueless feed that was available, has led thousands of men to milk cows during the last few months who had not done so for years. At the present time, therefore, we can look for a continued increase in production. Most certainly we can look to this country being on an export basis for some time to come. That in turn will mean that we must take the export price, which now is most lamentably low. So far as I can see, the only assistance which can be given to the dairy farmer at the present time by any government, apart from the application of policies which may lower the cost of things which we must buy, reduce the interest on the money which the farmer needs to borrow, and lessen the tremendous burdens of indebtedness which the farmer carries, is first, to see that our standards are such that we can compete favourably on the world's market; and second, to see that we suffer no handicap by way of unfair competition from other countries, so far as it is possible for the government to prevent it. Production is increasing on account of the economic conditions with which we are faced, and the only thing that will bring the dairy industry and all industries back to normal are sound financial and economic policies in the country as a whole. In the meantime, may I, as one member who is intensely interested in the people at home and in the business of this house, ask that we be not compelled to listen to the babble that has prevailed for the last two hours, but rather to an intelligent discussion of the question that is before the house?

Mr. HACKETT: Will the hon. gentleman say if, in the view he takes of the situation, he considers a tariff on butter helpful to the producer of butter?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am not a fanatic on the subject. I believe that when we are not on an export basis a tariff may be useful. When we get on an export basis to any large extent, unless one of two things happen, either a government board controls the entire output or the farmers so organize that they themselves can control it, the individual will take the export basis for all he sells at home or abroad. When it gets to that point on a real export basis we will take the export price.

Mr. PICKEL: Mr. Chairman, as I am a new member I ask for your special protection. The dairy farmers of Canada are asking for protection and that they be afforded an opportunity to supply the Canadian market. One would naturally expect that the opposition to an item such as the one under discussion would come from hon. members representing urban constituencies. Strange at it may seem, however, the greatest opposition encountered by the dairy farmers of Canada comes from the western wheat growers, members representing another branch of agriculture. I cannot understand their opposition.

Mr. VALLANCE: Where does my hon. friend get that?

Mr. PICKEL: We are not doing anything to injure the wheat farmers; we know a duty on butter will help us.

Mr. VALLANCE: Let me ask my hon. friend a question. Why was it that the minister—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman has not resumed his seat. It is necessary that he should do so before another hon. member asks a question.

Mr. VALLANCE: Would the hon. member permit a question? He has been talking about protection for the dairy farmer. Why was it that when butter reached its lowest price for the year the Minister of Agriculture removed the 32 cents agreement entered into with Australia? What protection did the farmers receive from that action?

Mr. PICKEL: In answer to that question I can say only that the Minister of Agriculture told the house that a treaty was being negotiated with Australia and that at the present time we have only one cent per pound against Australia. That condition has arisen because of the Australian treaty for which hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the house were responsible. I understand that permission has been given for the release of a certain quantity of butter. Concerning the production of milk in this country there seems to be a great discrepancy in the figures obtained from the bureau of statistics. I do not know who manages the bureau, but in the years 1928, 1929 and 1930 I have delved into the reports issued from that source. I learned that the production of butter on an export basis had declined by 26,000,000 pounds in four years, and we became importers of over 50,000,000 pounds. The production of cheese had decreased nearly one-half. Our exportation of milk and cream to the United States was diminishing. At the same time we had an excess quantity of milk, but 100,000 less cows. Those facts are hard to reconcile. Of course I am not disputing statements issued by the bureau of statistics but certainly I have my doubts as to their accuracy.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Probably there were better cows.

Mr. PICKEL: Canada's dairy business was quite extensive and satisfactory until 1925. I have been dairying all my life, and until 1925 we had no complaints to make. Our prices remained on a par with those in the United States until 1914, the year of the beginning of the war, when we received a price from five to seven cents higher than that received across the line. That situation was borne out by the fact that about three-quarters of the traffic on the north and south roads from the United States leading into Canada carried smuggled American pork and butter. After the close of the war we were going to open our markets to the world, and we began to reduce our tariff. The rest of the world increased theirs and consequently the dairy industry in Canada suffered. I could take hon. gentlemen opposite through my riding and show them farm after farm abandoned. I have in mind one particular road where in a stretch of eleven miles there are 37 houses boarded up. That condition exists all through the eastern townships, where, I think, I am safe in saying that there must be at least 2,500 abandoned farms. After the Australian treaty came into force and had been applied in this country for a few years the Canadian farmers were so hard hit that they shipped their milk and cream across the lines. Under the Hawley-Smoot tariff they have to pay $5.66 to get an eight-gallon can of cream across the line. That eight-gallon can of cream made just 39 pounds of butter. The Canadian government admitted the same amount of New Zealand butter for 39 cents, while we paid $5.66 to find a market in a foreign country to equalize the amount of butter fat required to make an equal amount of butter.

Mr. DUPUIS: Thirty-nine cents per pound?

Mr. PICKEL: Yes. They shipped 39 pounds of butter in here at a cent per pound, while we paid $5.66 to get an eight-gallon can of cream into the United States. I would ask the western farmers for a little more cooperation. We are engaged in the same industry, and I do not see what they have to gain by opposing the dairy industry of Canada. Certainly we are hard hit, and I do not know of anything which will help us out unless we restore our own market. The best market we have is the Canadian market. The American people have preserved their home market for their farmers. So much so is that true that in September, 1926, New Zealand sent a cargo of butter into New York harbour upon which the duty was 12 cents; the following day it was raised to 18 cents. The result is that no more New Zealand butter has been sent to the United States.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is their condition now?

Mr. PICKEL: It has been coming to Canada ever since. I hope and trust that the government will be able to negotiate a treaty with Australia which will be fair both for manufacturers and dairy farmers, to replace the Australian trade treaty of 1925 which was very unfair from the standpoint of the Canadian dairy farmers. The manufacturers derived a great many advantages from that commonwealth but the Canadian dairy farmers paid the price. May I add that there is a $200,000,000 market for bacon in Britain, but we have none to sell? Why? Because we do not make butter. If we do not make butter we do not produce bacon; those two commodities go hand in hand. We have imported 100,000 carcasses of Australian lambs. To my mind, owing to the fact that we have the best sheep growing country on the face of the earth, such an importation is nothing but a crime. I am sure the hon. member for Melfort will agree with me that this is one of the best sheep countries in the world; but we are not protected.

I am not going to detain the committee any longer. I think the passing of these estimates has been held up quite long enough. I would ask hon. gentlemen who are engaged in the farming industry, whether they are raising fruit, wheat, or other products, to cooperate with the dairy farmers and give us protection for our products.

Mr. BROWN: We are all here trying to do our best for the dairy farmers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have become accustomed to getting lectures from the Prime Minister, but now the duty has been undertaken by some of his supporters. If there is any better way of getting the information that we have received in the last ten minutes why was it not followed sooner? All day long and on into the night we have been trying to get certain information, and with one cast of the net the hon. member for Provencher got the information that my hon. friend the minister did not care to give. Isn't that right?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is right. That was the crux of the whole thing. I took the ground that the production of milk was the proper basis on which to arrive at the condition of the dairy industry, and nobody disputed my statement. It is the basis adopted by every country. That has been conceded, but we have only got the information in the last ten minutes. Then my hon. friend from Red Deer wants to know why we make so much noise. Has he any quicker way of extracting information from the minister? If so, I should be glad to hear of it.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I was not lecturing anyone, I was pointing out that the temper on both sides was not conducive to progress.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are talking about dairying. You don't have your best clothes on when you are milking cows. Anyway, we have got the information now. We have gone our own way about it, but if there be any better way I shall be glad to hear of it. I submit that if the hon. minister had furnished the information two days ago—that is when it was asked for, as Hansard will show—we would be just two days ahead. I should also like to get information as to when the price of butter was as low as it is to-day. I think you will have to go back to 1904, but I am speaking only from memory, and my memory may not be right. Why should we not get that information? The price for export butter in Montreal has been as low as 18½ cents recently.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not think that I have the information here, but I shall be glad to get it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister cannot expect his deputy voluntarily to bring evidence before the court that is going to condemn his minister. The minister's deputy has the information, so has his dairy commissioner; but I submit, Mr. Chairman, the deputy cannot bring that information here voluntarily; he must be asked to do so, otherwise he would be condemning his minister and the Tory party all along the line. The evidence would be against the minister just as it is against him now. If he says he has not the figures I will let that stand over. But when was the price of butter as low as it is now? You have to go so far back that you would be surprised. When last January wheat dropped to 50 cents every statistician in the country was hunting up the records to see when it was that low before. That was a perfectly proper enterprise. Some authorities said it was 150 years ago. Now, I want to know whether it is 150 or 1,000 years ago. I do not think it is either, I think it is within this century, 1904, but I am speaking from memory. I do not see why we should not have the information. I think the minister has promised now to bring it down, and also information with regard to the 9 years production asked for.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, I did not mean I was through with the whole item.

Mr. VENIOT: Hon. gentlemen opposite are not going to get the item carried by trying to shut off discussion. Let us have the discussion first and carry the item afterwards. When the hon. member for Stanstead was giving certain statistics with regard to the importation and exportation of butter, I asked him if he could furnish figures of butter production in Canada and of domestic consumption. He could not. I interjected that it was a very poor way to make comparisons when he was leaving entirely aside the amount of butter consumed in Canada, as well as the amount produced here, and confined himself to the amount imported. He also stated that the export of butter had entirely ceased in 1928 and 1929, but he referred only to our exports to the United Kingdom.

Mr. HACKETT: No.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. member stated it had ceased.

Mr. HACKETT: I gave the exact figure. The total export in 1930 was 1,180,400 pounds.

Mr. VENIOT: To what country?

Mr. HACKETT: The total exports to all countries.

Mr. VENIOT: The total exports in 1929 amounted to 1,889,200 pounds to the following countries: Great Britain, nothing; Newfoundland, Bermuda, Bahamas, British West Indies, British Honduras, British Guiana. The exports to British Guiana and the British West Indies were increasing. Now let me take the production of butter in Canada. The New Zealand treaty came into force late in the fall of 1925. In 1927 we imported from New Zealand or other countries 11,208,809 pounds, according to the hon. member for Stanstead. In that year we produced 143,000,000 pounds. In 1928 we imported nearly 17,000,000 pounds. Notwithstanding that increase in our butter imports we produced 168,000,000 pounds in round figures, whereas the production in 1927 was 143,000,000. In 1929, notwithstanding the New Zealand treaty, and notwithstanding according to the hon. member for Stanstead, that we imported 35,000,000 in round figures from New Zealand, Australia, and other countries, we increased our production from 168,000,000 to 172,581,406 pounds, but our consumption was 230,000,000 pounds. In spite of the fact that we were increasing our production year by year we had to import 35,000,000 pounds in 1929 from Australia, we did not have enough butter to meet the demands of the Canadian people. Butter had to come from some place, and as far as the production of butter in the province of Quebec is concerned, it increased in 1928 by a small fraction. Notwithstanding the large quantity of milk and cream they were selling across the border to the states of Vermont and New Hampshire, the butter production increased. Let us go back to 1912, 1913 and 1914 and see what we find. In those three years the production of butter in Canada was so far from meeting the demands of the Canadian people that we imported almost as much butter as we imported in 1928, during which year the importation amounted to nearly 17,000,000 pounds.

If the hon. gentleman had wished to be fair in his argument and in his comparisons he would have told this committee why we had to import this butter. We imported it because the Canadian people were not producing sufficient butter for their own consumption. It may be said, as it was said during the election campaign, that the farmers were not given sufficient protection, and for that reason they were not going into the dairy business. The hon. gentleman, however, in giving the figures having to do with the production of dairy products in this country, forgot to tell the committee of the enormous strides made in the last six or seven years in the dairy industry in addition to the production of butter and cheese. There has been a tremendous increase in the production of solidified cream, if I may use that term, and ice cream. There is a large butter factory in the province of New Brunswick situated within ten miles of one of the best dairying districts in the Dominion of Canada, but the farmers refused to sell their cream to that factory at from 38 to 42 cents. They can make a greater profit by sending their cream to the ice cream manufacturers. I know this to be the fact, because in 1923 when I had the honour of being premier of New Brunswick, the factory at Moncton, which is subsidized to a certain extent by the provincial government, requested the government of that province to guarantee a credit of $50,000 with the Bank of Montreal, to be used as working capital. The reason they asked that guarantee was in order to enable them to hold over the butter they had in storage on August 15, so they might get a better price later in the winter. I looked into the matter, because I wanted to satisfy myself that the business was being run properly before arranging for the guarantee of the province, and I discovered that the dairymen of the Salisbury and Petitcodiac districts were refusing to sell their cream to the factory because they were getting a better price from the manufacturers of ice cream. Under those conditions I refused to allow the guarantee of the province to be given; a credit was arranged for, but only to the extent of $35,000. I found later on, when the people could not buy butter, that there were 110,000 pounds in cold storage. The following year I refused the guarantee of the province to anyone who would keep butter in cold storage for that period of time in order to get an increased price and make the consumer pay too much for it.

These are conditions which have not been heard of, perhaps, or at least which have not been mentioned in this house. These are the conditions which existed in the dairy industry of the province of New Brunswick, and the lessened production is not the fault of this or any other government. If the dairy farmer could get a greater price for his cream by selling it to the manufacturers of ice cream, he did so. He was not to blame for that; he had a right to place his cream where he would get the better price for it.

Never before has butter been selling at the low price which is being paid to-day, and that is why I asked the minister this afternoon why he consented to let Australian butter loose on the markets of Canada, which came into this country under an agreement that it would not sell for less than 32 cents per pound. The answer given by the minister was that they had shown their good faith by keeping the first agreement; that they had a large quantity of butter in Canada, and he felt it nothing but fair that he should let them dispose of it. He did so; he let them dispose of butter which came into this country to be sold for not less than 32 cents per pound, at a time when the farmers and dairymen of Canada could not get more than 21 cents per pound for their butter, which seems to me very poor judgment indeed.

I just wanted to place these statistics before the committee. As far as I am concerned, I think the item of $5,000 now before the committee for the National Dairy Council of Canada should not pass. The council should not have that money to spend, because I am convinced that the council cannot be said to be entirely clear of politics, and its political shade certainly blends with that of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BOYES: The hon. member who has just taken his seat made reference to the National Dairy Council. I wish to make just a few remarks in defence of that council. I was present at the time the National Dairy Council was inaugurated, in the city of Ottawa, some few years ago. The idea of inaugurating this council had nothing to do with politics at all, and I feel sure that they have never taken any action for political reasons. I feel sure that when hon. members look into this matter they will realize that the members of this council were not elected for any political purpose. I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite that these men are acting in the interests of the dairymen of this country. They were not acting in a political manner when they went up against the late government. They felt sure that the government of that time was proceeding in a manner detrimental to the dairy interests, and I feel sure that they would come up against this government if it attempted to do the same thing or anything similar.

Mr. YOUNG: What did they ask for?

Mr. BOYES: I do not think there is any doubt about what they asked for.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They did not ask for as much as they got.

An hon. MEMBER: They did not get what they asked for.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They asked for four cents and they got eight cents.

*Members of Executive.

Mr. BOYES: The National Dairy Council is not a political organization but is acting in the interests of the dairymen of Canada, and I think those in opposition should support this vote.

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Chairman, I am disposed to agree with the last speaker, that we should support the vote. So far as I know the National Dairy Council is not primarily a political organization. Last year I gave some attention to and made some study of the proposal which they made to the tariff advisory board and later to the government, and I thought their request for a four cent duty was a perfectly reasonable one. However, the present government has gone much farther than that and has imposed an eight cent duty. Before I conclude my remarks I intend to ask the Minister of Agriculture to give the committee his frank opinion as to whether he thinks it possible that the imposition of an eight cent duty can do the dairying industry any good for years to come. My opinion is that it is not reasonably possible.

I was much impressed with the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer, and I agree with him when he says that when Canada is on an export basis in regard to butter it is not possible for a protective duty to do the dairying industry any good. It is possible that under a different system of organization some good might be done, if, for instance, the government could control the entire output, as the hon. member for Red Deer says; but so long as there are hundreds of thousands of producers of butter producing and marketing their product on a competitive basis they cannot possibly be benefited by the imposition of a duty because they are bound to take the export price, as is the case at the present time.

I tried ineffectually a few times to get the floor after the hon. member for Stanstead made his somewhat impressive speech. The hon. member presented figures to the committee showing that the Dominion of Canada had between 1925 and 1930 gradually changed from an export to an import basis on butter, and the inference the committee was expected to draw from the figures—the hon. member will correct me if I am wrong—was that the fiscal policy of the preceding administration was the cause of that trend. Our effective competitor during those years was New Zealand and the duty imposed against butter coming from that country was one cent per pound. Although the hon. gentleman did not put it in so many words, he intimated that because of this low duty we had gradually drifted between the years 1925 and 1930 from being on a heavy exporting basis to an importing basis. That is the inference he expected the committee to draw from the figures he placed on Hansard. There never was a more glaring non sequitur. The effective causes which brought this change between 1925 and 1930 were not duties; it was brought about by entirely different factors. The main factor, of course, was the fact that the wheat growers of the west were prospering at wheat growing. As the hon. member for Red Deer pointed out, and as we all know, whatever part of Canada we live in, men prefer to grow wheat to milking cows if they can make as much out of wheat. Certainly they will grow wheat if they are making more at it than they could make by milking cows. So men by the thousands went out of dairying into wheat growing exclusively. That was not attributable to the fiscal policy of any administration, and it was the greatest single factor in preventing a growth in the production of dairy products in Canada.

There were other factors as well. There was the great increase in the tourist traffic into this country from the United States. The United States was enjoying a period of piping prosperity. The tourists came across the border in great numbers and consumed milk products, perhaps largely ice cream, in great quantities. I think I saw somewhere that the tourist consumption of milk and milk products amounted to about 15,000,000 pounds per annum if converted into butter.

An hon. MEMBER: In Quebec it was beer.

Mr. ILSLEY: They may have come for other purposes as well, but the consumption of milk products was incidental to the purposes for which they came. That was another factor in driving us from an export to an import basis. There were other factors as well. At one time during the period beef went to a high level and cattle that were on the border line, that might be used for dairying or for beef purposes, were used for beef. We all know that. There were still other factors, though I cannot call them to mind at the moment.

Mr. DUFF: General prosperity.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. This country was in a very prosperous condition and there was a great increase in consumption. There came a period during the latter part of those five years when we went on an import basis and a protective duty became effective in transferring money from the consumers to the producers of dairy products. That period was relatively brief. The National Dairy Council, the vote for which is under discussion, said it would be advisable, under all the circumstances, for the government to raise the duty against our effective competitor from one cent to four cents a pound, and the government did so. The present government, not content with that, not willing to take the benefit of the long experience of the very able men who were in control of the National Dairy Council, particularly Mr. Robinson, the chairman—as I should say from reading his addresses—doubled the duty and made it eight cents a pound. But never were the benefits of a duty as short-lived; they lasted only two or three months, and now they have all disappeared. Does anybody deny that they have all disappeared? Of course they have. We are back on an export basis, and the very size of the duty helped to drive us back on to an export basis more quickly than otherwise would have been the case. We are back on an export basis now just as the officials of the National Dairy Council feared we would be if too high a duty were imposed, and crash have gone the prices. As hon. gentlemen on both sides of the house must admit, prices are away down, lower than they have been for a quarter of a century.

In conclusion, I should like to ask the minister whether he does not agree with the main facts that I have tried to set out. I want to treat the matter very fairly; I am not fanatical in regard to it. I do not advocate free trade under all conditions and all circumstances, but I say that the government should have been content to stand by the four-cent duty advocated by the National Dairy Council. The eight-cent duty has done more harm than good. I want to put this to the minister: Does he not think we are going to be on an export basis for many years to come? Does he not agree that when we are on an export basis, a duty does not help the producer? Does he think his government's eight-cent duty is going to be any real good to the producers for many years to come?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I felt at the time the duty of eight cents was imposed—and I feel the same way now—it was advisable to impose it. The farmers of this country had so few farm products to sell that would bring in any money and there was such a quantity of butter in storage in Canada, that the higher the protection we could give them, the better, on account of the urgent condition of the farmers at that time.

There is one point in these figures that I would like to have cleared up. I understand the hon. member for Hants-Kings, who has just sat down, stated that during the first four or five months of 1930 the average price of butter in Montreal or in Canada was higher than the average price of butter in New York. I should like to know where the hon. member got that information, as one thing we have to do in our department is to obtain the most accurate information possible.

Mr. ILSLEY: I cannot give that information at the moment. I think what I stated was that I had been so informed. I put my assertion in the form of a question to the hon. member for Stanstead and he thought I was incorrect. I am quite sure I am right, but I shall get the figures between now and to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. THOMPSON (Lanark): The ex-Postmaster General, in concluding his speech, intimated that the National Dairy Council was a partisan organization and therefore he was opposed to voting them this $5,000. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman why the government of which he was a member for years voted the National Dairy Council this $5,000. I was at the organization meeting of the National Dairy Council, and for many years I represented eastern Ontario on it. It has always been at least three-quarters Grit in its composition. The Liberals on it always outweighed the Conservatives by a large number, and to-day the same situation prevails Further, when we had a delegation to interview the late Mr. Robb to remonstrate with him against making this treaty with Australia and allowing New Zealand butter to come in free, the great trouble was to accomplish anything without hurting the administration of that day. I want to say further, as I said this afternoon, that while the National Dairy Council has been composed of more Liberals than Conservatives, they have been men who have had the interests of the dairy industry at heart and have rendered Canada splendid service, and this item should pass.

Mr. DONNELLY: There has been some discussion about the price of butter in New York and Montreal during the early months of 1930. I understood the hon. member for Stanstead to say that the price of buttter in New York was higher in the early months of 1930 than it was in Montreal.

Mr. HACKETT: I made no reference to New York.

Mr. DONNELLY: I have figures here supplied by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, giving the average monthly wholesale prices of butter in New York, Montreal and London for the year 1930. In January, butter was 41 cents in Montreal and 36.1 in New York; February, 39 cents in Montreal and 35.5 in New York; March, 37.3 in Montreal and 37.1 in New York. Each of those months butter was higher in Montreal than it was in New York. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is a fair comparison to take prices in Montreal and New York because New York supplies a large consuming population in the New England states, and the price fluctuates from time to time. The only fair comparison to make is between Montreal and London, which is the world's market, and if we compare our prices with London prices from time to time, we shall get a more accurate picture of what effect the tariff has had on our prices and what it has done to our market for butter.

I take the same months of the same year. In January, 1930, the price in Montreal was 41, and in London 38. In other words, our price was 3 cents higher. In February, the price was 39 in Montreal and 37.5 in London, a difference in our favour of 1.5 cents. In March, the price in Montreal was 37.3 and in London 35.1, a difference in our favour of 2.2 cents.

The minister takes a great deal of credit because this government put a duty on butter when they came into power. At page 2001 of Hansard he says that when the present government came into power the price in Canada was 28 to 28.25 cents, whereas the price in London was 28.64 to 29.08. I have here the July prices from the bureau of statistics, and they show that in the month of July the average price in Canada was 30.5 and in London 31.9, or 1.4 higher in London than in Canada. In August the Montreal price was 31.4, and London 32, or a difference of .6 in favour of London. The minister goes on to say in that same debate that they did away with the New Zealand treaty and the price of butter immediately shot up, thus making $2,000,000 for the farmers of Canada by keeping up the price of butter. Let us look at the prices as they were for the rest of the year. In August the Montreal price was 31.4, and London 32; September, 33.4, Montreal, and 31.9 London, or 1.5 higher in Montreal; October, 33.2 Montreal, and 32.3 London, or .9 higher in Canada; November, 33 Montreal, London 29.8, or 2.2 higher in Canada; December, 33.2 Montreal, and London 29.5. It is the same all down the list, showing a higher price in Canada for all the months varying from 1.5 to 1.9, 2.2, 2.7, 3.2, 4.5, and 5.5. Those are the differences in prices up to the end of April, showing a higher price in favour of Canadian butter in Montreal. The minister takes credit for all this because the government did away with the New Zealand treaty.

But let us take another year when the New Zealand treaty was in full effect. I go back to 1929, when we were bringing in great quantities of New Zealand butter. In January, 1929, the average difference in our price at Montreal as compared with London was 2.8 in our favour; in February we were 5.56 cents higher than the London price, and the New Zealand treaty was then in full force. In April the difference in favour of Montreal was 13 cents part of the time, and in March the difference was 8.51 in favour of Montreal. I say that that is the fair comparison to make, between London and Montreal, and the figures I have given show that there was a difference in favour of the Montreal price in 1929 when the New Zealand treaty was in full force of as much as 13 cents, and there never has been as great a difference since. That might have been the case this year, too, if the New Zealand treaty had not been done away with.

The crux of the situation is this. During the last election the Conservative party went up and down this country saying that they were going to increase the price of butter, and they have not done it. In every constituency in western Canada—I guarantee that it was done in the minister's own constituency, although he may not have made the statement himself, but his supporters campaigning for him did—the farmers were told that the price of butter was going to go up if this government came into power, and the farmers believed that. When you told the farmers that the price of butter would go up if this government was returned to power, they believed it. You cannot fool them by saying that you never said such a thing, because the farmers believed in their hearts that if this government came into power the price of butter was going to go up. But to-day the price of butter is lower than it has been in the last thirty-five years. It has never been so low as it is to-day since the time of the old Tory government in 1896. If the minister goes back to 1896, he will find that butter was then as low as it is to-day under a Tory government, but never under a Liberal government.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): What about 1904?

Mr. DONNELLY: The hon. member must have a better memory than I have. I say that it has not been so low since 1896. If the hon. gentleman has the figures, he can give them and make a speech after I sit down.

So far as the last election is concerned the Conservatives came to my constituency talking in the same way about butter. All I needed to do was to tell the people what happened in the neighbouring state of Montana. We are bordering along the state of Montana, and one of our farmer's wives thought she would take some butter across the line and get that big price. She would have got 20 cents a pound in her own town, and she went across the line into Montana and got the very same price. The only advantage she got was that over there she was able to buy things a little cheaper than she could have in Canada because of our tariff. That argument about what New Zealand butter was doing did not cut any ice there, because they knew better. They were right up against it and they knew just what it meant. In western Canada to-day it is not the creamery butter, but the dairy butter that counts. Many of our farmers are so far away from the market they are not in a position to have their cream shipped to the creamery. As a result they are concerned only with dairy butter. I have a letter before me dated at Hodgeville, Saskatchewan, on May 24 of this year.

An hon. MEMBER: That is Sunday.

Mr. DONNELLY: I quote from the letter:

> I will quote you prices for that produce right here in Hodgeville. Butter per pound 12 cents; eggs per dozen 7 cents. I leave to your imagination Doctor Donnelly how any farmer can pay anything on past debts and live under these conditions. It is awful to see poor farmers bringing in their eggs and butter, all they have between them and starvation, and just about giving them away. I was in a local store here on Saturday evening when the proprietor told the farmers he could not buy any more eggs or butter, as the wholesale houses were overstocked and could not handle them. And I hope never to see such looks on human faces again as those poor people had.

That is the condition which exists out west. Many of those people voted in the belief that if the Conservative party came into power the price of butter would go up as promised.

Mr. HACKETT: I do not wish to traverse the ground over which my hon. friend has gone. I think, however, he would do well to recall the information given to us by the hon. member for Red Deer. It is true that in certain areas men milk cows only when they are forced to. That may be the case in the constituency of Willow Bunch. In the eastern townships, however, dairying is the sole source of ready money for the agricultural population. The farmers in the eastern townships are in the dairying industry and do very little else; their herds constitute their sole preoccupation. The revenue they derive from their herds is their sole source of livelihood. The remarks of the hon. member for Gloucester with regard to butter might be influenced by this information. At one time in the area to which I refer cheese was made by the farmers. Due to changes in the markets the cheese factories which were found at every cross-road disappeared; the farmers went into the manufacture of butter. I will pause at this point for a moment to say that ice cream is considered by the farmers in those counties as a negligible quantity. As a matter of fact ice cream is not entirely made of cream. I am told it is manufactured of a combination of corn starch and skimmed milk.

An hon. MEMBER: Is there any cream in it?

Mr. HACKETT: Cream enters into its manufacture to a very limited extent. While I do not wish to enter the political aspect of this discussion, I may tell the hon. member for Gloucester that his theory that large quantities of cream were diverted from butter to ice cream was propounded with great eloquence by his right hon. leader in the city of Sherbrooke before a vast audience of farmers who foregathered from seven or eight counties to hear his words. When the present leader of the opposition told those farmers that the reason of their difficulty was they had found it more profitable and less laborious to convert their product into ice cream than into butter they were not convinced by his statement. To the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) I will say that if the price of butter has subsided here and has, as he states, been low compared with the price in other markets, one of the reasons is the vast quantities in storage. We have had great quantities stored due in part to our vast imports. We have had greater quantities in store than at any previous time. It was knowledge of these vast quantities which had to find a way out through our markets which drove the prices down.

An hon. MEMBER: Not at all.

Mr. HACKETT: As stated by the hon. member for Red Deer, when other means of revenue failed the farmers not customarily in the dairy business reverted to the irksome task of milking, and butter production in the several provinces increased rapidly. Quite by accident I happen to have before me a circular letter issued by the butter and cheese exporters of Montreal. May I add that this was not addressed to me personally. I notice that in every province of the Dominion the amount of butter produced each month this year is greater than, sometimes almost double, the amount produced in the same period last year. That again has had a tendency to lower the price. Although I am not a farmer I am for the moment closely associated with them, and I would suggest it would be well for them to remember that at least they have now regained their own market.

Mr. DONNELLY: What is it worth to them?

Mr. HACKETT: The duty which has been imposed keeps out the butter produced in New Zealand. I cannot say the same of Australia because the Australian treaty has not yet been abrogated, although its effect is suspended. The result however is that we have been given back our market, and I doubt if we could have got it back had it not been for the imposition of the duty to which I have referred. I hoped that my hon. friend from Red Deer could have made this answer to my question. Possibly I was expecting too much from him. I think however his opinions coincide with mine, if we may judge from the information he gave the committee. To-day Canada is producing all the butter it requires and gradually is regaining a position in the export market. It is possible to ship to the export market at a lesser price than the price obtaining in the home market. Such a statement may constitute an economic heresy, but I do feel that if our farmers are given the benefit of our own market they will derive an immense benefit from the legislation which was passed last fall.

Mr. MacLEAN: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. HACKET: Yes.

Mr. MacLEAN: Is the township from which the hon. member comes shipping cream and milk to the United States as previously?

Mr. HACKETT: No, not as previously. It is shipping only very small quantities.

Mr. MacLEAN: That is what I thought.

Mr. HACKETT: Some cities close to the Canadian border, in spite of the duty, take our milk rather than pay freight from more remote sections of their own country. Generally speaking however that trade has ceased and I have endeavoured to say frankly that the loss of such trade has had a decided effect upon the industry as a whole. I wish also to say that the prices I quoted were average prices. The hon. members for Provencher and Gloucester and the hon. member for Melville referred to prices on a given day in a given year. It is true those prices related to days early in January when they are supposed to be at their highest point.

[Mr. Hackett.]

Mr. VENIOT: No, I gave no prices.

Mr. HACKETT: I think if the hon. member will read over his remarks he will find he did deal with prices.

Mr. VENIOT: I gave no prices.

Mr. HACKETT: I stand corrected, then. The prices I gave were the average prices for the whole year and were furnished by the bureau of statistics. One further word. We have been debating this item during three sittings of the committee. I know it is difficult to dispose of an item which has given rise to so much political controversy without everybody having something to say about it. But do not the dairy farmers throughout the land feel that this item is one from which they may legitimately hope to receive some help and some benefit? And if that be the case will not hon. members consider the item in that light?

Mr. BERTRAND: Mr. Chairman, during the addresses made by a number of hon. members across the floor I was only too pleased to notice their eulogy of the National Dairy Council. I was also very well satisfied to hear the member for Stanstead state that the tariff had given so much help to the farming community of his county. I suppose this was along the lines of the electoral campaign during last summer. The hon. minister stated that quite a few million dollars were given to the Canadian farmers by the protection accorded them. In a letter written by Mr. F. E. M. Robinson, president of the National Dairy Council of Canada, on August 25 last to the editor of The Financial Post, there is a paragraph which illustrated the point that I desire to bring out. He says:

> In presenting our case before the tariff board last January we asked a modest duty of 4 cents a pound, or roughly 12 cents ad valorem, believing this to be the point at which the tariff should be fixed to do the industry the most good. A tariff less than 4 cents leaves us open to competition which we cannot meet under our climatic conditions. A tariff of more than this amount would cause milk now being devoted to cheesemaking to be diverted to butter. This together with the direct stimulation of primary butter production would shortly lead to the building up of an all-the-year round exportable surplus, whereupon the benefit of the tariff would be lost to the industry and we would in the meantime have still further weakened our hold on the British cheese market.

Exactly what happened here.

> In other words, the dairy industry wants 4 cents per pound protection on butter, and it does not want any more under the present conditions.

It is all very well to speak of the need of the Canadian farmer to-day and to discuss protection of the dairy industry; we may all have our various points of view on the tariff, but it will be observed from this paragraph of Mr. Robinson's letter that although wishing for a tariff of 4 cents a pound, he states that if that protection was exceeded it would stimulate the manufacture of other milk products and consequently hurt our trade in those lines. That butter prices have fallen since is bad enough, but what is going to happen to our cheese production at present prices? In view of this I hope the minister will study the question again. I do not think he is quite positive in asserting that this tariff protection of 8 cents a pound is conferring so much benefit on the Canadian agriculturists, particularly the milk producer, especially when it is borne in mind that Mr. Robinson stated in August last exactly what is happening to-day throughout the Dominion.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I am glad the hon. gentleman has quoted Mr. Robinson as his authority. I also have a letter over his signature in which he claims the 8 cent tariff put into the pockets of the farmers in the neighbourhood of $7,000,000.

Mr. DUFF: Read the letter.

Mr. BERTRAND: I have read my authority. In all fairness I ask the minister to do the same.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This is the letter:

National Dairy Council of Canada
Richmond, P.Q.,
May 18, 1931.

Hon. H. H. Stevens,
Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Stevens:

You asked for a memorandum on the dairy situation with particular reference to the present low price of butter, and the benefit which accrued to the producer from the comparatively high price received for butter before the recent drop.

You will recall that the eight cent tariff against New Zealand made effective October, 1930, had the effect of raising the price level in this country to about 29 cents, because practically all our purchases of butter were from that dominion. Late in the year the special arrangement with Australia was entered into, whereby they were to sell at not less than 32 cents, pending the ratification of a new trade agreement or at least till the close of the winter or butter import season. Some firming of the world price in London brought New Zealand offerings practically in line with, or slightly above, this artificial price which was maintained within narrow limits till April. The produce trade of this country had offers of butter from Australia for delivery January to April at prices around 22 cents per pound, and this would have been the price level in this country had the special agreement with Australia not been effected.

Into the nature and merit of this agreement I will not enter for you naturally know more about it than I do, but I merely remind you that it was highly artificial and inelastic, and those connected with the industry soon concluded that this price fixing agreement would be highly effective till it broke down and that then the breakdown would be complete.

We thus had our wholesale butter market maintained all winter at a level from seven to ten cents over world parity, and most of the time at the latter figure. During the period in question about 75,000,000 pounds of butter was produced in this country. We have no accurate statistics of monthly production, but this is a composite of many estimates, and is not far from the truth. All of this production received the full benefit of the artificial price level which thus resulted in an extra return to the producers of about $7,000,000. This, of course, came from the consumers pocket direct, and the consumer in addition paid the extra ten cents on the relatively small amount of Australian butter which entered the country during the period in question.

This figure of $7,000,000 applies to butter only, and does not take account of the fact that prices of whole milk, sweet cream, ice cream, etc., could not have been maintained at the level actually paid if butter had been selling for 22 cents instead of 32 cents. The actual benefit received by dairy producers last winter in the form of extra income was therefore greater than the above figure. I could not hazard a guess at the real total, but am very sure that it was over $10,000,000.

This extra income was invaluable in helping to tide over a critical period for very many farmers, and great credit should be claimed by your government for the action which made this possible.

Let me now discuss the very abrupt fall in the price of butter which took place a few weeks ago, resulting in a fall of 10 cents per pound in as many days, and a later drop which finally took the price down to an extreme low of 19 cents per pound. A number of factors conspired to increase our own make of winter, or fodder butter. Some of these were:—

(a) The very mild winter in the west.

(b) The very low price of grain acting both by reducing the cost of raw material, and by forcing farmers to exploit every source of income other than grain selling.

(c) The direct encouragement of a relatively high price, and the assurance of protection.

(d) The diversion of milk and cream formerly shipped to the states, and now shut out by the United States tariff, and by over supply, and low prices across the line.

As a usual thing the supplies of domestic butter coming forward are not much in excess of current consumption till May. It must also be remembered that fodder butter cannot be stored as it is not of good keeping quality, and for similar reasons cannot be exported to advantage. At this time also, New Zealand was selling in London at about 23 cents per pound, which would have meant a price of 20 cents, or less, here for our butter if sold for export. During the month of April the storage stocks at Montreal only declined from 37,702 boxes to 25,933, and most of this decline was in the first half of the month. This showed that at the end of April the current make was sufficient to take care of the consumption. We had then the following picture:—

(1) The prospect of a very large summer make.

(2) The fact that buyers realized that the market was far above world parity, and would have to reach that level before export could take place.

(3) The receipts mounted rapidly at the last, and were in excess of current requirements.

(4) No buyer was willing to allow 32 cent butter to accumulate on his hands.

When the break started buyers held off in spite of the, or rather because of the, daily declines till a level was reached at which they had confidence. This was around 19-20 cents at which level export would have been possible, even if not desirable because of the doubtful quality.

The stored stocks which as stated above amounted to nearly 26,000 boxes on May 1st suffered a loss in value of 10 cents per pound, or roughly $150,000.

I have written rather fully in the hope that a clear understanding of all the factors may remove the suspicion which exists in some quarters that the price decline was due to manipulation.

Butter is a perishable commodity, and its market will always be a highly sensitive one. The longer such a market is restrained from moving freely the more violent is the reaction.

The probable increase in production for this year is 15 per cent, or more which would make export possible if not necessary.

If the tariff against Australia (the only one now in doubt) be fixed at a high level there will be great incentive to store butter at present levels, especially if enough be sent out of the country to insure a shortage next winter.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) F. E. M. Robinson,
President,
National Dairy Council of Canada.

Mr. NEILL: Now may we have the letter which produced this timely treatise?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I ask the minister the date of that letter?

Mr. STEVENS: The remark of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni was entirely uncalled for. These facetious interjections by the hon. member are unbecoming.

Mr. NEILL: The opening words of the letter are "You have asked me for a memorandum."

Mr. STEVENS: I have the floor. The gentleman who wrote this letter is a most responsible and respected citizen of this country, and he should be free from such imputations as are contained in the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. In his letter he says, "You have asked me for a memorandum." I certainly did so. Had I no right to ask for it?

[Mr. R. Weir.]

Mr. NEILL: And we have a right to hear it.

Mr. STEVENS: What right has the hon. member to insinuate that something has been going on behind the scenes?

Mr. NEILL: I rise to a point of order. I insinuated nothing.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member makes me tired with these continual interjections.

Mr. DUFF: I suppose the council will get $10,000 now, instead of $5,000.

Mr. STEVENS: At my request Mr. Robinson called upon me to discuss matters having regard to the export trade of this country. It is my duty to keep in touch with such matters. In discussing the question he made certain statements and certain observations regarding the general market conditions affecting butter. I asked him if he would be good enough to put his statements in the form of a memorandum which I might have, and he said, "I shall be very glad to do so over my own signature, and you are at liberty to use it." It has been used by the minister in a perfectly proper manner.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What was the date of that letter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): May 18.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: While Mr. Robinson was perfectly at liberty to make that statement, in his address to the dairy council in Winnipeg last March he said:

At this point I wish to remind you very definitely that we took the view that a tariff of 4 cents per pound against the southern dominions, where the imported butter all came from, was about as high a tariff as the industry could obtain any permanent benefit from.

And again:

Many statements have been made and written, blaming the council for asking for any tariff at all, and others blaming us for not having asked for more than 4 cents. . . .

In July the present government took office, and in September we were asked about the butter duties, as they had been amended by the Liberal government before going out of office. We told the government that 4 cents was enough, for the reason that it was all that could be permanently advantageous.

I will not read it all; it is almost eleven o'clock, but Mr. Robinson qualifies that statement however, by saying that during a certain period, about September when butter was being rushed into Canada even under the Tory government, the 8 cents duty was of benefit. He takes the ground that the 8 cent tariff was a temporary benefit, but he follows that up by saying:

We therefore accepted the situation as it was, but we are on record, both verbally and in writing, with the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that the 8 cent tariff will prove to be dangerous and unworkable in the future.

I could quote more, but I think that is almost enough.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee will resume consideration of the following item:

Dairying, including grant of $5,000 to National Dairy Council, $295,000.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Young.

Mr. POULIOT: Would the minister be kind enough to give me the information referred to yesterday afternoon about the rock bottom price reached by butter when the Australian butter was released?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): The date when it was mutually agreed to release the Australian butter was April 21. The price of butter on that date was 22 cents a pound.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Did the Australian butter sell at the same price, 22 cents a pound, then?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not think I have under my hand any information as to what Australian butter was sold for on that date.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It would be interesting to know at what price the Australian butter was sold when it was released. I understand from the minister that the price cutting warfare took place in Vancouver. I should like to know the price of Australian butter in Vancouver on that date, and also the price of butter in London, England, on the same date.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We have no information as to what Australian butter sold at or as to the price of butter in London, England on that date.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Would the minister endeavour to get that information?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: What quantity of Australian butter was released on April 21?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): All the Australian butter that was in Canada. On April 21 it was mutually agreed that the Australian butter could be released at less than 32 cents a pound. It was not all put on the market in one day; it was put on the market, I believe, over a period of days. I do not know whether it is all sold yet or not.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister does not know the quantity of butter which was released on that date? That is what I should like to know.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Does the hon. member mean how many pounds of Australian butter were in Canada on that date?

Mr. POULIOT: How much was released?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It was all released.

Mr. POULIOT: What quantity was in storage at that time?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Approximately 15,000 boxes.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): How many pounds in a box?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Around fifty pounds.

Mr. POULIOT: Did the release apply also to butter that was coming to Vancouver and that was not in storage at that moment?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not think there was any butter coming from Australia at that time. By the way, a question came up yesterday and I promised to get information with regard to it. That information I received today from the Department of National Revenue. As regards butter imported from Australia during the month of April, the information given to me is that no butter from Australia was imported through any port of Canada during April and May of this year.

Mr. POULIOT: So what was released was only what arrived in Canada prior to that date?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: I did not hear all the speech delivered yesterday by my eloquent and genial friend, the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett), but I read it carefully in Hansard. At page 2069 of Hansard he gave figures as to the export of butter by pounds, and said:

We were exporting twenty-five times less butter at the end of five years than when the treaty became effective.

The figures he gave covered the years from 1925 to 1930, and his statement in that regard might be accurate, but I notice, Mr. Chairman, that he gave other figures as to the imports of butter in pounds for the same years, and in 1929 the amount of butter imported was 35,928,240 pounds, and the price of butter in that year was 38·60, according to the figures which the hon. member himself gave. The amount of butter imported in 1930, according to the hon. member's own figures again, was 38,606,055 pounds, and the price dropped, according to his own figures, to 31 cents a pound. Thus the relationship between the importation in pounds, and the price per pound, was not maintained as compared with the previous year. My hon. friend the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) intervened in the debate at a very appropriate moment with this question:

Mr. Veniot: Has the hon. member also the figures of the production and consumption in Canada?

Mr. Hackett: No.

Mr. Veniot: Then his argument falls to the ground. We produced over forty million pounds less than we were able to consume.

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Hackett: I would point out to the committee that there was every reason for our production of butter to increase during that period because in those years, by reason of legislation hostile to the export of milk and cream—this is particularly true of the eastern townships, and truer still of the border counties of the eastern townships from which such large quantities of milk and cream were exported to the large centres of New England —exports were greatly curtailed.

Here are the figures of the production and consumption of butter in 1929. I have not the figures for 1930, but I would request the minister to supply them to the committee to-night if possible. The production of butter in 1929, according to a leter written by the chief of the agricultural branch of the bureau of statistics, was 174,724,465 pounds of creamery butter and 90,000,000 pounds of homemade butter; so the total production of creamery and homemade butter in 1929 was 264,724,465 pounds, and the consumption was 299,348,271 pounds. Therefore, butter consumption was that year 34,623,806 pounds more than production. That point is most important. On May 26, at page 2166 of Hansard I asked the Minister of Agriculture this question, and I must congratulate him upon his answer being in accordance with the facts:

Mr. Pouliot: So long as the production of butter in this country is less than the consumption, is it necessary, in order to supply the trade and the public in general, to import butter?

Mr. Weir (Melfort): Do I understand the hon. member's question to be this: If the production of butter in Canada is less than the consumption, should we allow the importation of butter?

Mr. Pouliot: No; is it necessary to import butter from outside?

Mr. Weir (Melfort): Yes.

There the minister himself admitted that when the consumption was in excess of production, importations had to be made in order to meet the requirements of the public. It is sad that production for any reason should fall below consumption in this country, but one reason for that has already been given, namely, the considerable increase in the tourist traffic during the last few years.

During the last campaign we were told by the Conservative speakers from almost every platform that with a high tariff on butter the price would rise considerably. I was speaking the other day of a minimum of 40 cents a pound. During the campaign the price of butter was 32 cents a pound, and the Conservative speakers said that it should be at least 40 cents a pound. They said that in order to bring butter up to that point, the leader of the Conservative party, if returned to power, would put a tariff of eight cents a pound on butter, which with the 32 cents, which was then the prevailing price, would bring butter up to 40 cents a pound. But in spite of that duty which has been imposed on butter, the price has fallen to about 20 cents. Practically every Conservative speaker in the rural ridings concluded his speech by saying, "Now, gentlemen," and ladies also, because the ladies were interested in milking the cows, "go home and think of the price you now receive for your butter from the factories." People were reminded in every country place of the prices they were then receiving for butter and were told that when they reached their homes they should by calculation see if the Liberal government had not betrayed their interests. What has happened? The present condition is much worse. What about the betrayal? They were to change the tariff in order to adjust the price of butter but their promise proved to be a myth.

During the present debate the production of butter has received considerable attention. At this time I quote in rough figures the report of the bureau of statistics concerning butter production in Canada from the years 1922 until 1929 inclusive.

Year	Creamery production in pounds	Homemade production in pounds
1922	152,500,000	100,000,000
1923	162,834,000	100,000,000
1924	178,893,000	100,000,000
1925	179,932,000	100,000,000
1926	179,209,000	95,000,000
1927	176,978,000	95,000,000
1928	168,027,000	90,000,000
1929	174,724,000	90,000,000

Those figures also appear in the agricultural statistics for December, 1930. The production of butter remained about the same, but the difficulty arose from the increase in the consumption.

Hon. members have heard a great deal about the Australian treaty. I have in my hand an excerpt from L'Evénement of November 30, 1928. From the first page of this publication I read the following:

The Tories support Mr. Robb, in 1924

The Australian treaty seemed to be doomed when L. J. Ladner rallied a group of Conservatives.

An interesting incident.

The member for Vancouver South reveals the fact at a meeting held in the interest of D. B. Plunkett.

By-election.

(Canadian Press Service)

Vancouver, 30.—A summary of the part played by the Conservative party in the House of Commons in connection with the enactment of the Australian treaty by parliament was revealed to us last night by Mr. Leon J. Ladner, federal member for Vancouver South, at a meeting held in the interest of the Conservative candidate for the dominion by-election which was to take place on December 6.

I make this statement, he said, to counteract the false impressions left by government members and other Liberals in their speeches with reference to the stand taken by the Conservative party, in the House of Commons, in connection with this treaty. The treaty at present, in force had its inception in 1924 when a provisional understanding was concluded between the two countries.

The Conservative party held solidly together on its tariff policy. On the night of June 22, four days previous to the prorogation of parliament, the hon. Mr. J. A. Robb presented his Australian treaty. He was greatly criticized, especially by the progressive party led by Mr. Forke. The duties on raisins were the principal pretext involved in their criticism, however the treaty itself was not made a party affair. Each member was free to express his own opinion, whether he considered this measure from the viewpoint of Canada or from that of a particular province.

Just before nine o'clock, in the evening, on June 24, the news, emanating from the government benches, spread in the house that Mr Robb would withdraw the treaty and no further consideration would be given to it at that session. Four minutes later Mr. Robb moved that the committee rise and report progress, which automatically meant the killing of the treaty. Mr. Robb then left the house.

Realizing the importance of the treaty from the viewpoint of British Columbia, I followed Mr. Robb out of the chamber and met him in the lobby. I asked him the reason for such action. He frankly admitted to me that he feared an adverse vote, especially after the stand taken by the Progressives. I replied that it was not a question of party and that a number of Conservatives would support his measure. I then interviewed a number of members and further assured Mr. Robb that, if he would reintroduce his measure, the members that I had just mentioned to him, including myself, would strongly speak in its favour and support it by their votes.

On my suggestion other influential Conservatives, such as Dr. Manion (now Minister of Railways and Canals), spoke to Mr. Robb and confirmed what I had told him. Mr. Robb then assured me that he would again introduce the measure, which he did the following day. The bill was strongly supported by the Conservative party.

I have before me the Gazette, Montreal, of December 3, 1928, corroborating the article I read in French about the declaration made by Mr. L. J. Ladner, a former member from the province of British Columbia. The article is as follows:

Stevens would aid Australian trade.

I would commend this particular article to the attention of my hon. friend from Stanstead. If he is not in the house undoubtedly he will see my remarks in Hansard. The article continues:

Suggests cancellation of pact with France, if necessary, to help antipodes (by Canadian Press).

Victoria, B.C., December 1.—"The trouble with Canada and Canada's side of the Australian treaty is that the present government has never shown a friendly spirit toward Australia." The Hon. H. H. Stevens, M.P. for Vancouver Centre, declared here last night in addressing a meeting in support of D. B. Plunkett, Conservative candidate in the approaching Victoria by-election.

Hon. Mr. Stevens went so far as to suggest the cancellation of the French treaty in order to aid Australia.

Canada imports large quantities of wine.

Are not French wines much better than Australian wines?

Let Mr. Robb give to Australia at least the same treatment accorded to France, or, better still, denounce the French treaty, which has been altogether unfavourable to us, or else enlarge the Australian treaty by giving a preference to her in wine.

At that time my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) who, I am pleased to say is in his seat to-day was not satisfied with the Australian treaty, not because it gave too much to Australia but because it did not give enough to Australia.

Mr. STEVENS: That is right.

Mr. POULIOT: I have another matter to bring before the committee. I find in La Presse, Montreal, on May 18, 1931, the statement that the price of butter is so low that butter is used to make soap. After reading this statement I can readily understand how easily my hon. friends to your right, Mr. Chairman, washed their hands of the responsibility for the low price of butter, which is rather easy on account of the fact that butter is used in the manufacture of soap.

What quantity of butter was in storage last year when the high duty was imposed? There was quite a large quantity. On August 1, 1930, there were 32,643,390 pounds of creamery butter in storage, and 944,539 pounds of dairy butter. On September the first, after the Prime Minister had been in power for a few weeks and had repeated that he was going to make good his policy of increasing the tariff on farm commodities, the amount of creamery butter in cold storage was 39,572,168 pounds; about 7,000,000 pounds more than the previous month. I am under the impression, Mr. Chairman, that your constituency is partly a rural constituency surrounding the beautiful city of Fredericton, and consequently you must be familiar with the prices of farm products. No doubt you recall that as soon as the tariff was put on butter the price rose 2 cents a pound—it was the same story as in regard to glass—at that time there was over 40,000,000 pounds of butter in cold storage, so that those who had hoarded that butter made an excess profit in the aggregate of $800,000. The huge sum came out of the pockets of the people for the benefit of the owners of cold storage plants. It is a most serious condition of affairs, because the farmers were deprived of that $800,000.

An hon. MEMBER: Who paid that $800,000?

Mr. POULIOT: The consumer.

An hon. MEMBER: Certainly.

Mr. PICKEL: What was the price paid for the butter that was put into cold storage? I may tell my hon. friend that the cold storage man paid more than 32 cents a pound for that butter, so he did not make anything on the transaction; he lost.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): How do you know?

Mr. POULIOT: I do not remember the price of butter at that time, but I do remember very well, and this may be confirmed by looking up the market quotations, that the moment the high tariff of 8 cents a pound became operative the price of cold storage butter went up 2 cents a pound. My hon. friend from Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) will not deny the fact that not a single farmer got the slightest share of that $800,000; it all went into the pockets of the shareholders of those cold storage plants. I have been frequently told that our High Commissioner in London was interested in a dairy syndicate while he was living in this beloved country.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Order.

Mr. POULIOT: Let me go further. On referring to the Parliamentary Guide of this year, I find at page 494 that the Hon. George Stewart Henry, the present premier of Ontario, is president of the Farmers' Dairy Company, Limited, of Toronto. Toronto is not like Fredericton or Riviere du Loup, it is a bigger city, and although there are beautiful parks they have no pastures. It reminds me of something that will please my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Mullins); a great painter frequently expressed the opinion that no landscape could be perfect without cows appearing in it. Unfortunately in the numerous beautiful parks of the city of Toronto there are no cows, there are only policemen—and I don't know how the people could get milk from the batons of those guardians of the peace. But certain gentlemen in Toronto control a very large quantity of the butter that comes from the country. Dairy companies such as the Farmers' Dairy Company, Limited, of Toronto, buy milk from the farmers at a poor price and when through the tariff they get any pecuniary advantage they keep the money in their pockets; the farmers see nothing of it. I think this is a shame, because the tariff was made, not to help the rich people who control the sale of milk, butter, cheese and other dairy products, but to help the farmers themselves. I remember distinctly at the special session last September the Prime Minister said that the tariff amendments he was then putting through were intended to help the producer. Well, the farmer is the producer. The man who lives in a big mansion in Toronto is not a producer; it is the poor man who lives in the country and milks his cows—he furnishes the supply of milk out of which those city magnates get richer and richer and benefit by the tariff and the producer gets no advantage from it.

Mr. ILSLEY: Last night the hon. Minister of Agriculture asked me where I got the figures I then quoted, and I told him that I would let him have the source of my authority this afternoon, that I was speaking from memory at the moment. I have in my hands a statement from the bureau of statistics, internal trade branch, from which it appears that for the first five months of 1930 the average wholesale price of creamery No. 1 butter at Montreal was 37 cents, while the average wholesale price for the same month of creamery extra at New York was 36.3 cents a pound.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): That is the average for the five months?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. I can give it month by month:

Month—	Cents per pound
January, Montreal	41·0
January, New York	36·1
February, Montreal	39·0
February, New York	35·5
March, Montreal	37·3
March, New York	37·1
April, Montreal	34·9
April, New York	38·2
May, Montreal	33·1
May, New York	34·8

That was the basis of the statement I made last night to the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) and to the hon, minister. Its accuracy, was challenged by the former, and, as I understood, doubted at least by the minister. The point perhaps is not of very great importance, but, as I said last night I would produce my authority this afternoon, I have now done so.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I was not doubting the hon. gentleman's statement at all, I was just comparing it with the information we have on the average monthly wholesale jobbing prices of creamery butter for Montreal and New York. The Department of Agriculture, dairy and cold storage branch, Ottawa, gives the prices of Canadian butter for January and February higher than for the New York market, but not for the next three months.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I have just one observation to make. I recall very definitely and distinctly that the right hon. Prime Minister and hon. gentlemen opposite during the recent campaign guaranteed the people of Canada that the imposition of tariffs would protect the consumer as well as the producer. I also recall, sir, that during the special session, when the special legislation was brought down in this parliament, that pledge was repeated by the right hon. Prime Minister and by the members of his administration. Last night we had produced in the committee a most singular document, a very much lauded letter from the president of the National Dairy Council of Canada, the production of which seemed to move my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce to a state of frothy indignation. I desire again to place on Hansard one paragraph from that letter, which appears at page 2089 of Hansard:

> All of this production received the full benefit of the artificial price level which thus resulted in an extra return to the producers of about $7,000,000. This, of course, came from the consumer's pocket direct, and the consumer in addition paid the extra ten cents on the relatively small amount of Australian butter which entered the country during the period in question.

I wish to repeat that I am in favour of every possible assistance that can be rendered to the dairy industry throughout the Dominion of Canada, but I say that when you try to assist the producing dairy industry at the expense of the consuming Canadian public, it is a false assistance and a breach of the pledges made by hon. gentlemen opposite during the special session of parliament.

Mr. MORAND: Could the hon. gentleman tell us how we could help them without raising the price of butter?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That was your problem. My point is that the pledges made by the hon. gentleman, and the policies he supported during the special session, have been falsified by the letter produced last evening by the Minister of Agriculture and lauded by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MORAND: Does the hon. gentleman think the people in this country would swallow any such stuff as that? Surely they must have some sense.

Mr. MYERS: Let me say that as a farmer I have listened with more than the usual amount of amusement to the debate which has been going on for about three days on the one question of whether or not we shall vote the sum of $5,000 to the National Dairy Council of Canada, so that they may carry on during the coming year the wonderful work they have done in years gone by.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think that is the issue; the whole vote is in question.

Mr. MYERS: If the ex-Minister of Agriculture will just keep quiet for a few moments, I should like to continue my remarks. I am very glad he is the ex-Minister of Agriculture. Any man whose policy during the last nine years did for the dairy industry of Canada what his policy has done might well keep quiet. For nine years the hon. member for Melville, the ex-Minister of Agriculture, was like the proverbial ostrich, with his head buried in the sand and his wrong end sticking up. That end was never meant to think with.

Mr. POULIOT: Why do you compare him with an ostrich? He has no plumage.

Mr. MYERS: I am coming to you next, and I may as well check you up right now. When this debate opened the hon. member for—Pouliot, is it, or the hon. member for Témiscouata, which sounds about the same—was the one man who seemed to have more to say about the dairy industry, and with regard to butter, cream and agriculture, than anyone else. At once I came to the conclusion that the hon. member was an honest-to-goodness farmer; he looked like one, anyway. Imagine my surprise, Mr. Chairman, when yesterday I turned up the Parliamentary Guide and found that the hon. member for Témiscouata was nothing more or less than a lawyer. Not only that, but he writes books on law, according to the Parliamentary Guide. I tried my best and racked my brain to find out where I would place him on a farm, especially a dairy farm, and after a good deal of thought and study I found a place for him; I found something on a dairy farm which the hon. gentleman resembles very much in one respect at least. I refer to the horn flies on the cows. Any farmer as well acquainted with cows and agriculture as I am, knows that about six o'clock in the evening, when you bring the cows into the barn to milk them, they are infested with swarms of horn flies. The hon. member for Témiscouata resembles them in this respect, in that the more you try to shoo them off the thicker they seem to get. The more you try to shoo him off from making a speech on something about which he knows nothing, the more speeches he makes. During this debate he has given us figures by the mile and speeches by the acre, but they have led us nowhere.

Now let me say, Mr. Chairman, that some years ago Canada enjoyed a very enviable position indeed as far as dairying was concerned. There was a time in the history of Canada when every year we were supplying the British market with creamery butter, of wonderful quality, in immense quantities. We were going along very nicely indeed, and there was nothing to interrupt our progress except the former Minister of Agriculture, the hon. member for Melville. He interrupted it very violently indeed. The government of which he was a member brought in the Australian treaty, the terms of which were extended to New Zealand, and thereby hangs a tale. That was the beginning of all our trouble. The farmers of Canada saw that a neighbouring country was getting the benefit of the Canadian market, and dairying in Canada declined to such an extent that we lost out on our export trade. We lost the footing we had already gained on the British market, and let me tell the hon. member that it is very much easier to lose trade of this kind than to build it up.

We are endeavouring to build up that export trade again. When this government came into power we saw to it that the farmers of Canada were given a fair deal as far as dairying was concerned. We shut out, to a great extent at least, the products of our competitors, and if nothing unforeseen had occurred to-day we would be getting back on our feet by degrees, building up our export trade together with our production in Canada, but what has happened? Production has come along faster than either consumption or the export trade. That was very well pointed out last evening by the hon. member for Red Deer, and let me say that I always like to hear the hon. member for Red Deer speak, because he has something sane and sensible to tell us when he does speak. Now we have turned our attention to dairying more quickly than we should have done under normal conditions by reason of the fact that wheat prices in western Canada were extremely low. And the farmers of western Canada turned their attention to this industry too quickly. There is another thing which is to a great extent responsible for the increased production of the present time and that is the mild winter we have had throughout Canada and the exceptionally cheap feed which we have had to feed to the dairy cow.

Let me say this—and this is in connection with the dairy council, because it is a part of their work; I might as well point out right here that you cannot build up an export trade in butter, you cannot build up an export trade in any other farm commodity, unless you have the very best that you can possibly produce along these lines. We in eastern Canada have, I believe, done very well in this direction through the action and the encouragement, the knowledge and information which we have had on the part of the National Dairy Council. Through these means we have been attending to the quality and grade of our dairy products. But I find that this has not been the case in western Canada. The hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly), whether we realized it or not, whether the hon. gentleman himself was aware of the fact or not, really gave us more information along this line last night than anyone else whom I, at least, have heard speak. I wish to quote just a word or two from Hansard of yesterday reporting what the hon. member for Willow Bunch said:

> In western Canada to-day it is not the creamery butter, but the dairy butter that counts. Many of our farmers are so far away from the market they are not in a position to have their cream shipped to the creamery. As a result they are concerned only with dairy butter.

Do hon. members stop to think just what that means to the section of country concerned? Let us imagine now a township or a country district. The people have round about them a number of farms,—fifty, seventy-five or a hundred. In the village they have a store or perhaps two. Heretofore these farmers have been wheat growers. They despised the look of a cow, let alone the trouble of milking it. But when their wheat business was shot to pieces, as it has been, unfortunately, during the last year—though I believe it will come back again—they immediately turned their attention to milking cows. They thought they were engaging in dairying, but they were not. For let me tell you that milking cows and making butter at home and then taking it to the village grocer is about as far removed from intelligent dairying as the sun is from the earth; and never in any way can you build up an export trade with such a line of farming as that—nor will anything destroy the domestic market more readily. What would you expect the storekeeper to say when a hundred different people, who heretofore have not been making butter at all, flock in with a hundred different samples of butter of various makes, different in grade, different in flavour and different in every other respect? What would you expect a country grocer to say to those people? What would he do with the butter? He could not eat it nor could he ship it to the towns, because it is not of uniform grade. And so far as export is concerned, it is worse than useless.

Our Minister of Agriculture has been asked for an agricultural policy. Let me say to some agricultural sections of Canada that the first thing they need to get is intelligent agriculture. Then the Minister of Agriculture will give them a policy. But a system of agriculture that puts you into wheat to-day, into butter to-morrow and into hogs the next day is a pretty hard line of agriculture for any Minister of Agriculture to keep pace with. It is pretty hard to evolve any policy that will be of any assistance to people engaged in such work.

I would say, with respect to the Minister of Agriculture, that he occupies possibly the most important portfolio after that of Finance, and at the same time one which it is hardest to administer. I have heard an old farmer down home say that he was durned if he would keep a hired man around the place except to blame things on if things went wrong. That is about the position the Minister of Agriculture occupies in relation to hon. gentlemen opposite. If it does not rain, it is his fault; if it rains too much, he is to blame. If you are short of butter, that is his fault, and if you have too much, he did not regulate things properly. That is the whole story. In eastern Canada, I believe, we are giving the Minister of Agriculture very little trouble indeed, and if he were to tell his experience I believe he would say the same; because for generations we have been following one steady policy, one line of agriculture. We are easy to deal with. When the price of butter is low, we pocket our loss, and when it is high we take our profits and say nothing about it. It is easy to handle such a situation.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. MYERS: You may, and if I can answer it I will; if not, I will tell you so.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will the hon. gentleman explain why, during the last ten years, since I have been in this house, all the members from the maritime provinces have been always complaining about conditions in that part of the country?

Mr. MYERS: Were they?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Yes.

Mr. MYERS: Well, I was not here to hear them.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: You are here as a result of those complaints.

Mr. MYERS: I can assure the hon. gentleman that we hear very few complaints in the maritime provinces.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What about the Duncan commission?

Mr. MYERS: Well, the Duncan commission was all right. But I am not going to be sidetracked by my hon. friend. I may tell him, however, so far as the maritime provinces are concerned, that they cannot register as many complaints to the square inch as I have heard from western members this winter.

An hon. MEMBER: Some of them.

Mr. MYERS: Well, yes; there are some good fellows among them. Now, Mr. Chairman, we are here to-day not to play to the gallery nor to make long speeches. Such speeches are utterly useless to those who are looking for an improved quality of butter and better prices. What we are here for now is to decide whether we will or will not vote the sum of $5,000 for the National Dairy Council to carry on their work. In eastern Canada we regard the National Dairy Council as a very important body, and I should not for one moment have the bravery to go on any platform in that part of the dominion, whether at an agricultural or at a political meeting, or a meeting of any other kind in which farmers were concerned, and advocate doing away with the National Dairy Council.

Mr. YOUNG: Who is advocating it?

Mr. MYERS: I believe the hon. member for Weyburn himself moved a resolution to the effect that the money which will enable the council to carry on their work for the coming year be not voted. If that is not doing away with the National Dairy Council, I should like to know what it means. And let me tell the hon. member for Weyburn here and now that his resolution will make very good reading for Tory politicians when the next federal election comes round. Let us act sensibly. Let us get on with our work. Let us have done with this foolishness and pass the estimate as it has been passed every year for possibly the last twenty years. It is not different this year from what it was before. The items that the Minister of Agriculture has under his hand follow very closely the items that were voted in the house for the ex-Minister of Agriculture during the last nine years.

[Mr. Myers.]

Mr. POULIOT: I shall not say very much, but may I be permitted to read the autobiography of my hon. friend as it appears in the Canadian Parliamentary Guide?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): No; the hon. member would be out of order. The item under discussion is dairying. The hon. member will confine himself to this item. He has already taken up a great deal of time on this item and I would ask him to confine his remarks strictly to the item under discussion.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your guiding decision. I shall give to the house the reasons why I am interested in the butter question, and I believe that, doing so, I shall be quite in order. The main reason why I come to the house to study these questions is that I represent many farmers. When an hon. member makes a statement in the house to a certain effect, it must be true or not; it must be exact or not; it must be accurate or not. When it is accurate, when it is exact, when it is true, the hon. member must be given credit for it, and whenever it is inexact, whenever it is untrue, then the other party must prove that it is so. Unless that is done, the truth remains in the statement that has already been made. I believe I am quite clear.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): So far the hon. gentleman is not in order; he has not been discussing the item before the chair, and I ask him to confine his remarks to the item under discussion or else resume his seat.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Before the item passes, I should like to put on record information that I promised to produce to-day. The apparent difference between the information produced by the former Minister of Agriculture and that produced by the hon. member for South Hastings (Mr. Tummon) was due to the fact that it was obtained from two different sources. There are two different organizations: one known as the agricultural branch of the bureau of statistics, and the other the dairy branch of the Department of Agriculture. Each of these issues estimates as to the production of milk year by year, on a different basis. The discrepancy betwen the estimates became so marked about the year 1928 that the agricultural branch of the bureau of statistics revised their method of making their estimates. This revision was published in the December bulletin of 1929 and it was due to that report that the hon. member for South Hastings made the statement that the agricultural branch of the bureau of statistics had gone back over the preceding years to 1925 and increased the record of the number of pounds of milk produced during those years. I have the information under my hand, as follows:

Year	First estimate pounds	Revised estimate pounds
1924 . . .	12,318,537,907	14,386,103,567
1925 . . .	12,651,388,490	14,591,873,188
1926 . . .	13,407,340,257	14,825,821,086
1927 . . .	13,060,242,293	14,512,897,961

Mr. BOTHWELL: Is the hon. member not making a mistake in the year?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I hesitated about that, but that is the information I have.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I obtained the figures from the bureau of statistics, and the revised figures as they were given to me are as follows:

Year	Revised figures pounds
1925..	14,386,000,000
1926..	14,591,000,000
1927..	14,825,000,000
1928..	14,512,000,000
1929..	14,349,000,000

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I stand corrected. The mistake is due to the manner in which the figures appear with relation to the lines on this paper, but the figures were so evidently opposite 1924 that I gave them as of that year. In the figures I gave, for 1924 it should read 1925; for 1925 it should read 1926 and so on.

The information received by the former Minister of Agriculture from the dairy branch is as follows:

Year	Pounds of milk produced in Canada
1921..	9,863,324,358
1922..	9,847,932,218
1923..	11,765,564,229
1924..	12,045,078,272
1925..	12,539,076,384
1926..	13,434,655,909
1927..	14,112,064,240
1928..	14,512,897,961
1929..	14,349,023,000

There was another piece of information that I was asked to obtain, and that was the year in which butter had reached a price as low as it is at the present time. There are no records in the department as to that, but we were able to get the information from publications that we believe to be reliable. In 1906 the price of butter was 18·25, and in 1904, 14·75.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Are the revised figures which the minister has just given the actual figures?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): They are just an estimate.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But so far as an estimate can go, they are correct?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No one claims that they are accurate. For instance, the dairy branch gives the number of pounds of milk consumed in the country. That is only an estimate. I think perhaps the best answer I can give to the hon. gentleman's question is that the bureau of agricultural statistics have brought their estimates into line with the estimates of the dairymen.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Are there in the minister's possession any estimates more accurate than those placed on Hansard last Tuesday and which the Minister has now confirmed.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are the most accurate obtainable?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I thank my hon. friend very much. I think we shall get along more pleasantly now that we have that understanding.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The revised figures are approximately the same or higher than the figures that I quoted last night, according to what I have been able to gather from the minister and my hon. friend from Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell). Suppose a member asks for certain figures from the dairy commissioner or from any officials of the Department of Agriculture, and some other member gets figures from the bureau of statistics, and the different sets of figures are disputed in the house. What I want to understand is whether the revised figures that have just been given by the minister are close approximations as can possibly be made.

Mr. STEVENS: May I say a word as to the figures compiled by the bureau of statistics with reference to the production of milk? It is obvious I think to all of us that there is no body of statisticians who could possibly compile precise figures as to the production of milk, when you take into consideration the hundreds of thousands of cows in this country owned individually and by families, and so forth. The production of that class can only be estimated. But once in every ten years, when the census is taken, a fairly complete compilation can be made. The practice of statisticians is to get the official figures from business sources, like creameries, dairies and so forth, and then they compile an estimate based, first, upon their own information, and secondly, by reference to the statisticians of the provincial governments. All these figures are brought together and very carefully analyzed and compiled, and then the figures are placed before the public as the bureau's own. But it is only an estimate. When the census is taken a check is made. This autumn, for instance, when the compilation of farm statistics has been completed, the bureau will be able to estimate how nearly they come to the correct figure. I think in all fairness to the officials it ought to be said that there is no human method known whereby these figures could be accurately and completely compiled.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am glad to get that explanation from the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The figures that we get from the departments at Ottawa in regard to the production of milk are as accurate as we can possibly get?

Mr. STEVENS: Absolutely.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: They might not represent the exact amount of production, but they are as close as we can get?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The Minister of Agriculture said that according to the revised figures, after the system was changed, from 1925 to 1930 the annual production of milk was approximately 14,000,000,000 pounds, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce now tells me that those figures are as accurate as can possibly be got. I accept his statement. So far as the figures are concerned, we now know where we are. We know that the figures which were quoted by the hon. member for Melville to this house were as accurate as could possibly be got. We know that the figures I quoted were as accurate as could possibly be got. We know that the figures quoted by the hon. member for South Hastings were not as accurate as our figures. That has been established beyond a question of doubt by the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am glad to have that point made clear.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): So far as I understand the figures given by the hon. member for South Hastings, they were as accurate as he could get because he was quoting from the bureau of agricultural statistics, and he quoted those statistics accurately. He may not have known of this other source of information at all.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The minister will not deny that the hon. member for South Hastings made an accusation in this house against the former Minister of Agriculture and the preceding government, that they cooked the figures in order to make it appear to the public, just before an election, that the production of milk was higher than it actually was.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I did not understand that any charge was made. Will the hon. member read the charge?

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member for South Hastings is not in his seat, and I think in fairness to him it ought to be said that his statement was this: At that time, in 1925, these officers to whom I referred a moment ago made a change in their method of compilation. I think the officers of the Department of Agriculture drew to their attention that this miscellaneous group of producers were really producing more than at the time the original form of estimate was made, and consequently they changed their method of compilation; not that there was anything wrong about it, but just to get a little nearer to an exact estimate. That was really the point which the hon. member for South Hastings desired to make.

Mr. DUFF: Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce be good enough to explain how the statistics are made up in his department? Will he not agree with me that it is rather strange that his officials and the officials of the Agriculture department on an important matter of this kind concerning agriculture should not get together and put before the public the same figures, instead of the Department of Agriculture issuing one set of figures and the Department of Trade and Commerce a different set of figures? I do not think that is right, and it ought to be corrected.

Mr. STEVENS: I quite agree in so far as that is the case.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: To clear up the point I was discussing a moment ago, may I quote to the Minister of Agriculture what the hon.

member for South Hastings said? At page 2050 of Hansard I find this:

Mr. Tummon: I made the statement that the figures were changed in the year 1929 just previous to the elections, and I am prepared to substantiate that statement.

If that is not a direct charge, it certainly implies that the former Minister of Agriculture changed the figures in 1929, just previous to the elections, to derive some party advantage from it.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): He did not state that.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Let me repeat his words:

I made the statement that the figures were changed in the year 1929 just previous to the elections. and I am prepared to substantiate that statement.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): He did not say that the minister changed the system.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Never mind the statement; the inference is just as bad as the statement. Beyond a question of a doubt, there is an insinuation. I ask hon. members why the election was mentioned; why did the hon. member for South Hastings mention the election? He has inferred that, in 1929, a few months before the election, the ex-Minister of Agriculture changed these figures. Why would he mention the election if he had not been trying to get votes by saying to the public that the production of milk was greater than it actually was. No other inference can be drawn from the remarks of the hon. member.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: And it was not the Department of Agriculture which changed the figures; it was another department.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Further on the hon. member for South Hastings makes the following statement:

In 1929, a year before the last federal election a new method of reckoning the production of milk was instituted.

Mr. COTNAM: Well, what is the matter with that statement?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Nothing that I know of; I think the statement is as plain as anybody could make it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Except that it did not refer to the Department of Agriculture; the Department of Agriculture did not make the change. As I understand the situation the Department of Trade and Commerce made it.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: My contention is that the inference from the statement is as bad as the statement itself; I do not like the impression it leaves.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The Minister of Agriculture has admitted that the figures produced by the hon. member for Melville, the former Minister of Agriculture, are correct. He admits also that the figures I quoted are correct. If he admits these two statements he can do nothing else but say that the figures quoted by the hon. member for South Hastings were not according to the facts.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hear, hear.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Absolutely not, he was quoting from the bureau of agricultural statistics, and I believe he quoted accurately.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am not trying to draw a red herring across the trail, but I want to get from the minister—and he has admitted it—

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Admitted what?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Admitted that the figures hon. members on this side of the house quoted are correct.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I will also say that the figures quoted on this side of the house are correct.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: So far as the bureau of statistics can gather them they are correct. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Myers). I made the statement last night and repeat it today—

Mr. RYCKMAN: Why does not the hon. member proceed further with the matter. He has read very emphatically the statement contained at page 2050 of Hansard where the hon. member for South Hastings said:

I made the statement that the figures were changed in the year 1929 just previous to the elections and I am prepared to substantiate that statement.

My hon. friends have forgotten that at page 2066 of Hansard, the hon. member for South Hastings said:

The hon. ex-Minister of Agriculture seems to think that I did not substantiate my figures. I hold in my hand the monthly bulletin of agricultural statistics for the Dominion of Canada as issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and this is the source of my information. Let me say to the hon. gentleman, if he is not aware of it, that the dairy and cold storage branch depend on the bureau of statistics for figures of the total production of milk in Canada. I repeat, the figure based on the records of the total production of milk changed in 1929, and if he will go back over the reports he will find that to be the case.

Now, what does he say? He says, "I am not blaming him or the department of which he was the head. Not at all." Everybody heard that.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: He is not blaming whom?

Mr. RYCKMAN: Yet the inference is thrown out that the statement was made that the former Minister of Agriculture sat down and deliberately falsified figures.

Mr. YOUNG: Why did he mention the election at all?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: If the hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) wishes to read the whole of Hansard I have no objection. The Minister of Agriculture has admitted in this committee to-day, however, that the figures quoted by hon. members on this side of the house are correct. His statement is substantiated by that of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), so that if we are right certainly we are not all wrong.

Mr. COTNAM: Yes you are.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: If we are right the hon. member for South Hastings is wrong. Even if his figures are not wrong he is wrong when he tries to infer or create the impression the former Minister of Agriculture changed the figures in 1929.

Mr. STEVENS: He did not say that; he said exactly the opposite to that.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Yes, after he had been talked to for a long time.

Mr. STEVENS: Oh no.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I could take the time of the committee to quote the whole of Hansard, but I do not wish to do so. I have made my point clear to the Minister of Agriculture and he has cleared the matter to my satisfaction. That is all I am concerned about.

Mr. COTNAM: Drop it then. Why waste more time.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I know my hon. friend from North Renfrew (Mr. Cotnam) does not like to hear anything which does not suit him. May I tell him, however, that when he sat on this side of the house I never bothered him and never asked him to keep quiet. When he was speaking I considered he had a right to speak.

[Mr. Ryckman.]

Mr. COTNAM: I never wasted the time of the committee.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I say to the hon. member for North Renfrew and many more hon. members opposite that as members of the opposition they took more time and tried to create more false impressions throughout the country than has any hon. member on this side of the house.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think that statement should have been made. To accuse an hon. member of making false statements or creating false impressions is not parliamentary.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I said that they created false impressions.

The CHAIRMAN: Well, let us get on with the debate.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is the inevitable conclusion to which hon. members on this side would come.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry you have had to call me to order; your action has made me very sad. May I say to you, sir, that there is no man who is more willing than I to cooperate in preserving the order and dignity of the committee. I made a statement last night and repeat it to-day that when hon. members on this side of the committee try to get information they meet with a scolding or a lecture either by the Prime Minister, the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence) or some other hon. member opposite. Last night we received a scolding from the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) and to-day from the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Myers).

Mr. CHAPLIN: How about Témiscouata?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am not responsible for Témiscouata.

Mr. POULIOT: Témiscouata cannot speak.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Concerning Témiscouata, may I say that if the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) does not soon give him a station I shall take up a collection to build it for him.

Mr. MANION: I wish my hon. friend would hurry up.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Mr. Chairman, we were confirmed in our figures, but when we tried to get further accurate information we received nothing but lessons and scoldings. May I say to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that if he wants—

Mr. TURNBULL: Order.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I beg my hon. friend's pardon?

Mr. TURNBULL: I rise to a point of order. The remarks of my hon. friend have gone far afield.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am preparing my remarks so that I may come to the point at issue.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is the point of order?

Mr. DUFF: Yes, what is the point of order?

Mr. TURNBULL: The point is that we are not speaking to the item; we are off the item altogether.

Mr. DUFF: Under the estimates we have a right to discuss any item or to bring up any matter with reference thereto. I submit the point taken by the hon. member for Regina is not well taken.

An hon. MEMBER: We are on the amendment.

Mr. TURNBULL: We are not on the amendment; we are on both the amendment and the resolution.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I think my hon. friend from Regina should study the rules; if he did he would not raise so many points of order.

Mr. TURNBULL: Is it not a fact that that the accuracy of either of these sets of figures depends upon whether the bases upon which the figures are compiled are or are not correct? Both these bases concern estimates with regard to which no one has any accurate knowledge.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am concerned only with the answer I received from the Minister of Agriculture to the effect that the figures I quoted last night were correct, and also that the figures quoted by the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) were correct. I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture concerning the National Dairy Council, in the following words: Is he aware that during the campaign of last summer when a farmer took his cream to a creamery and complained that his cheque was so small he was handed a paper which to my mind had a great resemblance to the propaganda which was franked out of this house last session and sent to every man throughout the country who produced a pound of milk or butter? If this statement to the effect that the government of that day was responsible for the low price of butter was not handed to him he was told so verbally. Now, does the minister think it is right or proper that we should vote a grant to any organization which, it seems to me, is simply a political organization working on behalf of my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Is the hon. member stating it was the National Dairy Council that circulated the literature?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: All that literature was got out by the National Dairy Council or their agents, the creameries that are members of the council. I do not think that we should vote money to an organization that will use the money in order to carry on propaganda for any political party. They have done that in my district and in all other districts.

Mr. MULLINS: If I may interject, that is not a fact. My hon. friend is at one end of Manitoba and I am at the other. It never occurred in my district. Does the hon. member mean to say that the T. Eaton Company would send out political propaganda? They are not that type of people.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I suggest that one of the friends of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) raise a point of order on the remark that he has just made. I repeat, is it right or proper that we should vote money to a political organization that is using its funds for political purposes, whether it be for one party or for both parties?

Mr. GOBEIL: You will have to prove that it was a political organization.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am saying that the propaganda was political.

Mr. GOBEIL: You have to prove that.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It is very easy to prove it if my hon. friend will open his eyes.

Mr. GOBEIL: Prove it now.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Has the minister made any investigation to find out whether it is a monopoly of the creameries or some other organization which is depressing the price of butter in Canada at the present time? My hon. friend from Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) mentioned the cold storage plants that made money when the increased tariff on butter came into force. When the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) was speaking on his bill to increase the penalty for adulteration he stated that there was a monopoly in Montreal in regard to butter, and that that monopoly was really hurting the farmers.

Mr. GOBEIL: I did not say so in speaking on my bill.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: When speaking in the house anyway. May I ask the minister if he has made any investigation to find out whether there is any organization in Canada depressing the price of butter?

Mr. MYERS: I may have got a wrong impression of the hon. gentleman's remarks, but did he state that at any time during last summer when a farmer got his settlement cheque from the butter or cheese factory it was accompanied by a pamphlet signed by the officials of the National Dairy Council?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: No, no.

Mr. MYERS: Then I am wrong. I took it that that was what he was saying.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: No. I said this propaganda was handed to the farmers, and that I am fairly convinced in my own mind that the National Dairy Council was behind it.

Mr. MYERS: Being convinced in your own mind is a different proposition altogether from being able to prove that the National Dairy Council was behind the propaganda.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am as clear in my mind as is my hon. friend at any time.

Mr. MYERS: Perhaps so, and perhaps not; that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Yesterday when this item was under discussion there seemed to be a difference of opinion as to the production of butter and other milk products in Canada in recent years, and some of the figures then quoted would lead one to believe that our production had considerably fallen off. Owing to this difference of opinion yesterday I have since taken occasion to get certain figures from the bureau of statistics, which I think might be of sufficient interest to put on Hansard. The minister quoted figures of milk production in Canada from 1922, I think, up to 1929. In the report of the annual meeting of the National Dairy Council of Canada there appear on page 10 figures of the increased consumption of certain dairy products in Canada as between 1921 and 1928; for butter the figures are 25.79 pounds in 1921 and 29.31 in 1928. I thought it might be well to get figures from 1925 up to the present time to show the per capita domestic consumption of various dairy products, and these figures will explain to a large extent the difference between the importations of butter and other dairy products in 1925 and in 1930. These are the figures given me by the bureau of statistics:

Butter

Year	Pounds
1925	27·36
1926	28·44
1927	28·72
1928	29·06
1929	29·95

Figures for 1930 are not available.

Cheese

Year	Pounds
1925	3·13
1926	4·04
1927	3·38
1928	3·63
1929	3·55

The domestic consumption of milk, that is, other than milk used for the making of either dairy or creamery butter, home made or factory cheese and other miscellaneous factory products, what I might term the home consumption of milk itself, was in round figures as follows:

Milk

Year	Pounds
1925	5,844,000,000
1926	6,036,000,000
1927	6,620,000,000
1928	6,552,000,000
1929	6,647,000,000

Ice Cream

Year	Gallons
1925	·63
1926	·73
1927	·78

We all realize, as explained by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that the bureau of statistics endeavours to get its figures as nearly correct as possible. But if these figures are approximately correct, it shows that between 1925 and 1929 there has been an increased consumption in Canada of milk and its products to a tremendous extent. If you figure that out, it amounts to quite a number of millions of pounds. That will account largely for the increased importation into this country, and while some may say there is very little cream used in ice cream, I understand from the Department of Agriculture that ice cream manufacturers are compelled to have at least ten per cent of butter fat in their products, so no matter what other components enter into that article, there will be at least ten per cent of butter fat.

Mr. YOUNG: I will not take much of the time of the committee, but I should like to correct a statement made by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Myers) a few moments ago. He said I was aiming to destroy the National Dairy Council. I have no such desire. The National Dairy Council, in my opinion, has as much right to exist as any other legitimate organization. This morning I received a letter from the secretary of that organization stating that they are not and never will be in politics. That may be a matter of opinion. We all know that for some years past the National Dairy Council have been carrying on a national propaganda for the purpose of influencing the fiscal policy of this country. We know that because of that propaganda a great many farmers in this country were induced to change their votes at the last election, and we know that one of the reasons why the government has changed and why the fiscal policy of this country has changed in the last year was the activities of the National Dairy Council.

I say they have a right to do that. The National Dairy Council has as much right to hold political views and to propagate those views as any other organization, providing they do it with their own money. I have no objection to their doing it, but I say any organization that undertakes to influence the fiscal policy of this country to assist one party or another in politics has no right to come to the federal treasury seeking a grant. They have a right to do it at their own expense, and the National Dairy Council has no more right to ask this government to finance it in its campaign than the Canadian Manufacturers' Association or the Consumers' League, or any other organization which seeks to influence the fiscal policy of this country.

Mr. PORTEOUS: The National Dairy Council was not distributing propaganda intended for the good of anyone but the dairy farmers of this country.

Mr. YOUNG: It is propaganda, just the same.

Mr. PORTEOUS: Propaganda was distributed and advertised all over Canada by Liberals and Conservatives alike in the creamery business.

Mr. YOUNG: At their own expense.

Mr. PORTEOUS: One of the staunchest Liberals in Owen Sound, operating a creamery business there, advertised during the campaign that due to the enormous importations of New Zealand butter, cream prices were lower. You cannot blame that on the National Dairy Council.

Mr. VALLANCE: Does the name of that firm appear in the estimates as asking for any assistance to carry on that propaganda?

Mr. PORTEOUS: I am not saying the name appears in the estimates, but I say the National Dairy Council were working for no other interests than those of the dairymen of this country. Throughout Canada the creameries were advertising that due to the enormous importations of New Zealand butter the price of cream was down.

Mr. MacLEAN: Will the hon. gentleman tell us what excuse they give the dairymen now, when the price is so much lower than it ever has been?

Mr. PORTEOUS: We are not talking about that now.

Mr. MacLEAN: The hon. gentleman has no answer. The Conservatives started this propaganda and won the election on it and now, when we tell them they fooled the people, they try to hide behind a smoke screen and will not come out into the open and confess they fooled the people on that occasion.

Last night hon. gentlemen opposite were putting figures on record to show that from the eastern townships of Quebec large quantities of fresh milk and cream had been shipped to the United States. Then they went on to show how these exports decreased in 1928 and 1929, and endeavoured to leave the impression with the committee that because of the importations of New Zealand butter the production of milk and fresh cream was falling off. My good friend the ex-Postmaster General came along and disproved that theory; he put figures on record to show that milk production had increased every year. The fact is that in the province of Quebec, and especially in the eastern townships, the dairymen were shipping their products to the United States. They all admit it. They were stopped from shipping their products to that country, not by the New Zealand treaty and not by any action of the Liberal government, but by an increase in the American tariff. That increase became effective first in 1928, when the falling off of exports started. The tariff put into effect at that time did not altogether prohibit Canadian milk and cream from entering that country, but later on, in 1929, the duty was increased to 60 cents per gallon on fresh cream and milk, which made it absolutely impossible to export milk and cream from Canada to the United States. The result was that the farmers of Stanstead and other constituencies along the border were thrown on their own resources and found themselves in an awkward position.

The hon. member said the policy of the Liberal government had closed the cheese factories in that constituency. That is not the case. These dairymen were shipping their cream to the United States, and as a result they did not need cheese factories, so the factories closed of their own volition. For a number of years they remained closed, and they were practically out of commission when our products were shut out of the United States market. Then what did our good Conservative friends do? They turned around and said, "Your factories are closed; you are shut out of the United States market, and look what the King government has done to the dairy industry through the New Zealand treaty." The farmers of those constituencies believed that story, and voted Conservative. That is the reason why we have some hon. members opposite representing those constituencies to-day. That could not be attributed to the importations of butter from New Zealand; it was due altogether to the United States tariff against our exports of fresh milk and cream.

That disposes of the theory which my hon. friend from Stanstead advanced last night. Then another hon. gentleman said that our cattle population had fallen off, and he stated this was due to the Liberal policy. I want to say that the moment the American tariff went up and American farmers and dairymen saw prospects of our milk and cream being shut out, they came to Canada and began to buy up some of our stock. It was the best thing in the world for the dairymen of this Dominion that they were able to sell their cattle to those American farmers at that time at a good price. Since this government came into power a cow is not worth milking, and if our farmers had not been able to ship these cattle to the United States, at a good price, they would have had them on their hands to-day and would have received no benefit from them. Another point brought up by the ex-Minister of Agriculture was that the tuberculin test took a very heavy toll of the cattle all over this dominion.

Some hon. members have suggested that immediately the farmers saw something looming up which promised a profit, they switched to dairying over night. No reasonable or intelligent person will accept that theory. You cannot switch to dairying over night. If dairying is coming back, and if to-day we are producing more butter than we need in Canada, that improvement must have been in progress for the last three or four years. You cannot produce over night a dairy herd from which you can obtain milk that will give cream and butter of exportable quality. Such a herd must be built up over a number of years. And the reason we are producing milk to-day and exporting butter to the United Kingdom is that during the last few years of Liberal regime, under the capable Minister of Agriculture who was in office in that period, the dairy herds of Canada were steadily built up. The result is that to-day we are producing all the butter we need for our own uses and are also in a position to export a surplus to the United Kingdom.

The serious feature of this policy which our hon. friends opposite have introduced is this: it is a double-edged sword; it cuts both ways. Our friends have stated that they were going to build up the dairy industry of Canada and put our dairy farmers on easy street, and the moment the people took them at their word and accepted that policy, the government and the manufacturers association had the dairy farmers in their hands. They were able to squeeze them like a sponge, because they said to the dairy farmers, "You cannot expect a policy of protection for your dairy products and at the same time refuse protection for manufactured articles".

Now, the moment this 8 cents a pound duty is imposed on New Zealand butter we find that our export trade with that country drops off by almost one-half. This morning I obtained from the bureau of statistics the figures for the last three years, from April 1, 1928, to April 30, 1931. Under our agreement with New Zealand, our trade with that country progressed by leaps and bounds. In April of the fiscal year 1928-29 our exports to New Zealand amounted to $704,871, and at the end of March of that same year they had increased to $2,182,788.

Mr. PORTEOUS: I wish to ask the hon. gentleman a question. Is he or is he not in favour of the New Zealand and Australian trade agreements?

Mr. MacLEAN: It is for the hon. gentleman to draw his own conclusions from my remarks. The treaty built up a wonderful trade between this country and New Zealand, and I am sure that the manufacturers of Canada must have appreciated that fact. The automobile business made rapid strides, as hon. members know. But everyone knew that the imposition of that 8 cent duty would not help Canadian farmers. Perhaps the hon. gentleman who asked me that question will answer one which I will put to him: Of what benefit has that duty of 8 cents been to the dairymen of Canada?

Mr. PORTEOUS: Statements were made during the election campaign—I do not wish to refer to this, but the hon. member brought it up—that when we got into power the price of butter would be higher than the price that then prevailed; and it would be to-day if we were not producing so much butter.

Mr. MacLEAN: I have my hon. friend where I want him. He admits that they did promise the people of the country that they would increase the price of butter.

Mr. PORTEOUS: I did not. I said that what we said was that the price of butter, if we were returned to power, would be higher than the price would be under Liberal administration.

Mr. MacLEAN: The hon. member's party said it would, and now they are in power I would ask the hon. gentleman that question again: Is the price higher now than when they were making those speeches?

Mr. PORTEOUS: That is a different question.

Mr. MacLEAN: Oh, it is a different question; I knew the hon. gentleman would not like to answer that question, because we find that the price of butter is 10 cents lower than it was then. Now let me go on with the figures I was quoting. In the year 1929-30 our exports to New Zealand had increased to the sum of $19,166,488, and that most gratifying state of affairs prevailed until last October. In the month of October of the fiscal year 1930-31 our exports amounted to $1,340,998; that was for the month of October alone. But what happened the moment the duty was put on butter? Immediately upon the imposition of the duty on New Zealand butter our exports to New Zealand fell off, for in the month of November of last year —the very next month after we had shipped over $1,340,000—we find that our exports amounted to just $846,728. In other words, there was a loss of almost $1,000,000 per month to the export trade of this country, while there was absolutely no corresponding benefit to Canadian dairymen. And I will defy any hon. gentleman opposite to stand up in this house at this moment and declare that that 8 cents per pound duty is of any benefit to our dairy farmers to-day. I will give them a chance and will take my seat till they reply. I do not see any hon. gentleman get up to contradict me, and I will proceed. So that you have proof there that our policy was right and that of hon gentlemen opposite wrong. The fact is that our export business to New Zealand has been very nearly wiped out. In April, 1929-30, we exported to that country produce to the value of $1,105,220, while in April of 1931-32 our exports amounted to only $355,756—that is, for that month alone. That represent a loss of almost $1,000,000 a month.

Mr. SHAVER: What government was it that cancelled the agreement with New Zealand?

Mr. MacLEAN: It was not the cancellation of the agreement but the imposition of the duty that had the effect of wiping out that business. It was during the short session that the 8 cents duty was put on, and the moment this was done New Zealand retaliated by discontinuing all trade with us except such as they were bound to carry on.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister overlooked the figures from the statistical branch with respect to the years 1922 and 1923. While he is hunting up those figures I wish to make a few remarks with reference to the speech of the hon. member for Queens. I would not for the world say an angry word to anyone coming from Prince Edward Island, for it is such a delightful part of Canada; but I am bound to say that the hon. gentleman made some foolish and nonsensical remarks in the light of what the minister has stated. The minister has admitted that my figures were correct and that milk production increased 45 per cent during the Liberal administration. The hon. gentleman has therefore no ground whatever for the assertion that the industry was in the deplorable condition which he suggested when we left office. If our hon. friends opposite can show as good a record they will have nothing to be ashamed of.

I want to congratulate the minister on his good temper and endurance. I recall myself the first time I faced the crucifixion of defending estimates. It was in Regina, and on the opposite side we had such critics as Judge Brown, Mr. Justice Haultain, Senator Gillis—who may be in the gallery now, and who therefore can testify to the accuracy of what I am about to say—Dr. Elliott, Joe Wiley, and a number of others. I had then to stand the gaff.

I cannot help having some sympathy for my hon. friend and I will tell him now—of course I do not want to have it all sympathy —that this afternoon we deliberately avoided anything like pressing him. I told our whip that I thought we should not press the Minister of Agriculture until he was given an opportunity of his own accord to supply the figures and information we wanted yesterday. This worked. In the meantime an hon. member on this side sent a hurry-up call asking whether I was going to let this item pass without getting the milk production figures. I said: Just bide-a-wee and dinna wearie; I think we are going to get the information. So I congratulate my hon. friend upon having given it to us. I do not want to say anything about having won out or anything like that. When an hon. member throws up his hands, I am not going to press the advantage. But if our hon. friends across the way are sincerely going to back up the statements we made and they confirmed, they will refrain from this vilification about what the former ministry was said to have done in regard to the alleged emasculation of the dairy industry in Canada during the Liberal regime. If this is raised again throughout the country, we shall be here on the spot to unsheath our swords again to vindicate the record of the Liberal government during the last nine years. This is not a threat or anything like one. Just so long as they are good, we shall be good. Those are the conditions with respect to the closing of this three-day incident. When I was minister in Regina I made many mistakes; I fought rings all around me when my estimates were on. My hon. friend did have more sense than to do that. In 1905 in Regina no member of the legislature had been in the house before except the Speaker. We soon found out that we did not get through our estimates by fighting the opposition or withholding information.

To my hon. friends on this side I have an even more painful duty to perform, because I find several hon. members on this side still think the National Dairy Council is a political organization. The National Dairy Council asked simply that the old duty on butter of 4 cents per pound be restored, and Mr. Dunning restored it. What have they got against the National Dairy Council when they asked simply that the original duty be restored and Mr. Dunning restored it and introduced it in his budget? We fought the election on it. It came too late, though, and was grossly misrepresented by our opponents. But we should not blame the National Dairy Council for that.

I think we should be quite candid with each other and be fair to all parties. I know the National Dairy Council. The first time I ever raised my voice in this house was on the question of oleomargarine, which is quite a proper subject to discuss under this appropriation. I got a really good spanking from my own side that night and I felt it too. But the National Dairy Council got into the fight. Without it we would not have won, and even at that it took us two years to abolish this abomination, this unfair competition with the dairymen of Canada, a product that is now being fought by the dairy industry in the United States. I refer to oleomargarine. Therefore I shall never forget the good work of the National Dairy Council from that date to this, and all their boards of directors, none of which had a more capable head than the present one, Mr. Robinson, an exceptionally efficient gentleman. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien), who was so successful in casting his net for ministerial information the other night and helping to vindicate the accuracy of the figures I gave, is the last man against whom I should wish to differ on the merits or demerits of the National Dairy Council; nevertheless my duty compels me to point this out. May I say first I felt just as the hon. member for Provencher did last summer during the election, when every newspaper advertisement, every radio message was full of all kinds of butter accusations. Oh, we do not forget them! This is one advertisement taken from the Grain Growers' Guide. It is a notice to farmers from the Brandon Creamery and Supply Company, and I interpreted it as coming from some unfriendly source or another. I did not know where it was coming from until I had read it the second or third time. It reads:

This notice to farmers from the Brandon creamery, June 2, 1930, tells its own story of conditions.

This would go out with the cheques.

Dear Sir or Madam: On the first of May, stocks of butter on hand in Canada were three and one-quarter times greater than same date one year ago, and it is estimated that over 30,000,000 pounds of New Zealand butter had been purchased to arrive before the additional duty takes effect on October 12 next. Last year, from the first of June till the end of December, only 15,000,000 pounds of New Zealand butter was brought into Canada, so it is quite apparent that New Zealand has already settled our butter prices for this year and for some months of next . . . .

In view of the above conditions it is necessary to reduce cream prices—

That is a very effective kind of campaigning. There is no doubt about that.

In view of the above conditions it is necessary to reduce cream prices, which are as follows: Table, 27 cents; Special, 25 cents.

Those prices look pretty good to-day, and yet that is what they were yowling about then.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is that signed by the National Dairy Council?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No; this is the Brandon Creamery and Supply Company. There is no connection between the National Dairy Council and this company. When I saw those going out with the cream cheques, I was looking around everywhere for the villain in the play. They were coming to my house and I did not feel very kindly towards anybody so treating a patron, because during that summer we were having one irritation piled on top of another—the hot weather, cut-worms, rust, and other provocations. I do not know any body of men that are doing more faithful and effective service for the dairy industry or any other industry than the National Dairy Council, and I say that without reservation, knowing all the facts from its inception down to the present day. There is no body of directors more capable, more energetic, regardless of what political party is hurt, than that of the National Dairy Council. I know my hon. friends here will not care for this, but like the hon. member for Labelle, I am getting old enough now to have the right to speak a little for myself. I am free now for the first time, I may say, in twenty-seven years. What is the use of being in opposition if you cannot have a little freedom of speech? I am going to take the ground now that if the minister cares in the supplementary estimates to put this grant to the National Dairy Council on a parity with that of the Canadian Horticultural Council, I shall be glad to give it my support. The position taken by a number of hon. gentlemen is that the question that has been before the chair for the last few days is whether we shall vote this sum of $5,000 for the National Dairy Council or not. That is not the question; the question before the chair is the whole appropriation of $295,000. The hon. member for Queens suggested that the way in which we were blocking this vote would make nice campaign reading for the Tories. If so, I shall risk it.

The hon. member for Red Deer was supersensitive yesterday about the bear garden event. Apparently we had to have the bear garden in order that the drawing room which we are now enjoying might follow. You have to have the storm before you can have the calm, the calm which we are now enjoying. But the bear garden was all right in its place, and later on we can stage a couple more if necessary, but I hope it will not be necessary. There was a kind of bear garden yesterday, and while I do not like them, if they are necessary, all right, let them come. I feel sorry that I have to differ from three or four of my colleagues on this side, but it is the privilege of us all to differ with each other in details. After a man has been corked up for twenty-five years it is a delightful sensation to be able to speak freely. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce does not know what it is to be corked up, nobody does except the Prime Minister, and he is uncorked all the time. I think we might shake hands across the aisle, just as the pugilists do before they start another round.

Mr. STEVENS: Might I suggest to my hon. friend, now that he is in such a genial mood, that this amendment might be withdrawn and we might pass the item.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. We are just clearing the decks for action. We could not get down to work until this was out of the way. We could not have this good fellowship until the matter was squared up.

Mr. STEVENS: I thought my hon. friend favoured the vote.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, and I will support it when the proper time comes. I am not in favour of the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS: That is what I suggested, that my hon. friend might possibly have it withdrawn.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I should like to continue if I may, because I have been very quiet all afternoon. Has the Minister of Agriculture the figures for 1922 and 1923 that were asked for?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I think I have given them already but I shall do so again: In 1922, 9,847,932,218; 1923, 11,765,534,229.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I surely shall not be accused of any immodesty when I point out that it was not the agricultural statistics that had to be changed at all. I was aware of the difference between the two sets of figures ever since I came down here, and on many occasions I spoke to my then deputy about it and took the ground, as he did, that some reconciliation should be made between the two sets of figures by the respective departments, Agriculture and Trade and Commerce, instead of having two even slightly conflicting sets going out to the country. There was not very much difference between them, but the difference that did exist just gave the opportunity to such hon. gentlemen as the hon. member for South Hastings to get up and say what he did and possibly keep within the truth, because he did not say it was the Department of Agriculture that did it; he simply said that it was done. I may say quite frankly that I did not know that the matter had been adjusted. It was done in 1929, at which time it looked to me as if I might then kick off altogether, but the good Lord apparently thought I had some service in life yet to perform and so I am permitted to continue for a while longer.

With regard to these milk production figures, they correspond with the ones that I gave three or four days ago, and as the minister has intimated, they are as correct as any figures can possibly be; they are just as correct as any other figures the minister knows of, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce acquiesces in that. I want to congratulate the Department of Trade and Commerce. I do not know of any better statistical branch in the world than the one headed by Doctor Coats. So we will all kind of lick thumbs on that point. There is no use in all this talk if we do not get somewhere by way of suggestions for betterment. Perhaps I cannot do better than repeat what I said on the 5th of May. I took the ground then, and I take it now, that our dairymen are absolutely up against it producing cheese and butter in these small factories throughout Canada at the present ruinous prices. The minister himself has pointed out the advantage of larger manufacturing units. He pointed to the men in Saskatchewan who started larger units there, and perhaps unintentionally he paid a compliment to the first government in that province. They have one of these larger units in Regina, one in Saskatoon, one in my hon. friend's own constituency, possibly two, and the people there all know the advantages of these larger units. I know it too, because for ten years the Saskatchewan government operated a cooperative creamery which came under my personal observation, and although all my life I have been a farmer I have been incidentally an overseer of such a creamery, and in that way I happen to have a knowledge of the business which has been most invaluable to me all through my life. We all know theoretically that volume means a lower cost of production, but when you learn it in actual experience you know it in an altogether different way. Our dairymen are to-day at a great disadvantage in having the small manufacturing units for butter and cheese. Speaking on the 5th of May on the advantage of having a system of standardized creameries and dual purpose factories for butter and cheese, I said:

> Our opponents, rivals, competitors, all over the world for the last twenty-five years have been gradually developing and enlarging the manufacturing units of their dairy products and increasing the production of the production unit, the cow, increasing the flow of her milk and increasing the size of the dairy buildings until they are eight or ten times as large as they were fifty or sixty years ago when dairy and cheese factories were started in Ontario. That has been going on for twenty-five years in the United States, New Zealand, Denmark and Russia. Our present dairy commissioner was the chief resident factor and adviser in starting up the present dairy industry in New Zealand. Doctor Ruddick knows all about these plants, and of what advantage it is to have a large production in each one, which tends not only to quality and cheapness of production but to uniformity of product, which is so acceptable on the markets of any country. In our own country, through the effluxion of time, the old junk factories, which were all right at the beginning, are disappearing, and better ones are taking their place; but if we leave it to the process of evolution I am afraid it will take us about a hundred years before we can compete successfully in dairy products with our competitors throughout the world. We can compete now, yes, but it is a competition that leaves our dairyman skinned right down to the heels; there is nothing left for him at all, with cheese at nine cents and butter at twenty and twenty-two cents a pound. They need government help; and let the government take action now. The thought I have in mind now is what I had in mind when I was minister and when $25,000 was put in the estimates of 1930 for a live stock inquiry; and it looks even better now than it did then, because this government is committed as no previous government ever was to putting the whole weight and power of this dominion behind agriculture, as was promised at the last election.

This is the time to strike. The only thing the minister had to say in reply was that this was not the time to make a move in that direction. May I be excused for differing? I believe that this surely is the very time to make the move. There is an old saying that we should strike when the iron is hot, and I think the iron is pretty hot now all over Canada with respect to the dairy industry, and now would be a splended time to strike. The government I know can only go as far as public opinion will permit, and I believe that the public would be wholly behind the government in taking any move along the line I suggested. I went on to say:

> My good friend the Minister of Agriculture can ask for almost anything from this government for agriculture, and if he secures it I can assure him that he will have a solid phalanx of this side of the house behind him too. It is said that we sometimes play politics, but in view of the present distressing conditions in the west, the member of parliament who plays politics alone will not last very long. They want us to be big enough to stand up and help the government in anything that will be of benefit to agriculture, even though we oppose the general policies of the government.

We do strongly oppose the general policies of this government. Nevertheless, if we are going to do anything for dairying this is the only medium through which we can do it, for the next four years, I was going to say, but if the government keep on the way they are going they will not last four years, and I feel sure you agree with that yourself, Mr. Chairman. To my mind the action of the government in the last two or three days will not add to its term of office. However I am not yet ready for another election; I may say I had a hard enough racket to gain re-election during the last campaign. I want to get on my pins before we have another one. Undoubtedly we are all a little selfish in matters of the time for elections to parliament. On a former occasion I pointed out what the Hon. Martin Burrell had done in connection with operating the large Finch creamery. It was carried on long before my hon. friend the minister and myself were in Ottawa in our present capacities. In 1912 the Hon. Martin Burrell established a large creamery at Finch, Ontario. The operations were so successful in lessening the cost of production that it became inconvenient to continue operations further because the farmers for miles around wanted to be customers. We could not take care of the cream, and milk supplied by all of them. When we got all the information required the creamery was sold at cost price and no deficit resulted so far as the government was concerned. The information concerning the operations of that creamery is available.

Then, further, Doctor Ruddick is well aware of the system in New Zealand; and some of us know something about the system in Denmark. My hon. friend the minister has a competent staff around him who are able best to develop the services under his charge. I shall not at this time go further into the matter of a new enlarged system of creameries because I did so on a former occasion. On that glorious night when he scored such a great victory the minister lived up to my predictions that if he was only let off the leash he would make good, and he did make good. His success was attained at a fearful cost to himself, however, but the fact remains that for the occasion he made good. His action was that of a man who risks everything on one shot and afterwards loses everything.

I have before me the report of the president's address at the annual meeting of the National Dairy Council of Canada. I quoted from this address last night just as the clock was striking eleven. I know my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce thought he would close—

Mr. STEVENS: Oh, no.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend had a pretty good stunt in mind, and I congratulate him. Just at the last minute he pushed up to the front line with his letter from Mr. Robinson—it was well done; I know the game.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is too suspicious.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know the game. I was suspicious enough to keep a good trump card in reserve for just such a stunt as that of my hon. friend. May I say that the report I now have before me is most timely. I like that sort of action. Hon. members know that I do not indulge in gambling or drinking whisky—

Mr. STEVENS: Not much.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But the matching of wits is my delight. I like to match brains with the best or the worst on the other side of the house. If I happen to be the weaker, let the better man and the better cause win.

Mr. STEVENS: That is what happens.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I say that hon. members will have to speak out louder. I miss a great many remarks I certainly should like to hear. For example, I did not hear the question asked by the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. Cotnam). I thought when he spoke he was just following up the remarks of the hon. member for South Hastings (Mr. Tummon). I thought he was just talking through his hat, and I answered in an improper fashion, considering the very decent nature of the question he had asked. I believe I asked him, quite politely of course, if he would kindly close his face. If the hon. member is not in the house I wish some other hon. members would convey to him the fact that I wish I had not made that statement. I have always been friendly with the hon. member for North Renfrew. Possibly the hon. gentleman who asked the question was not the hon. member for North Renfrew because there were so many shouting at that time that hearing was difficult. I would ask whoever asked the question, however, not to heed my answer; I regret having made it. I am sorry also I did not hear the question because I would have been delighted to have replied to it. I learned afterwards I had been asked about the Australian treaty, and had I known that at the time I should have been pleased to answer.

In the address before me I find that Mr. Robinson referred to a national dairy policy. Hon. members must know that at the present time it is quite popular to talk about vague policies, but Mr. Robinson's was apparently a reality, though not yet available. We hear of policies which are floating around in newspapers, published here and there. However, we have not had any agricultural policies delivered by the minister in this parliament, the greatest forum of the nation and the proper place in which to discuss them. I find in the document before me there is reference to a national dairy policy for Canada. This policy appears in an agenda published in Winnipeg in the month of March, 1931, by the National Dairy Council. My hon. friends are in favour of the National Dairy Council, hands and feet, and I am with them in that regard. I do not wish anybody to think I am joining forces with the Tories. I regret having to join with them even on this occasion, but duty prompts me. I told my constituents that the only way to get anything worth while was to get it through the government. No matter what the result may be that is the action I am going to take. Hon. members cannot afford to refuse anything worth while for the relief of agriculture, even if it be suggested and given by the present government. To my mind the best plan of action in the meantime would be to put up with the government and get all we can from it for distressed agriculture. Mr. Robinson is quoted as follows:

The Hon. Robert Weir is aware of all these things.

Having read that statement I believe I should have begun reading further back. However I shall continue from this point.

He believes as I do that we must have planned production of goods to sell from the farms of this country.

That is the statement of Mr. Robinson, whose opinion carries great weight with most hon. members, with the possible exception of two or three hon. members on this side. The address continues:

In dairying he believed it to be of prime necessity that we first fully supply our own home market.

That has been done. In that belief he is right.

Knowing that many unusual difficulties must be faced by the dairy industry, he asked a few of us to prepare an outline of what we thought should be done.

In that sentence Mr. Robinson refers to the Hon. Robert Weir, the present minister. With that statement I am in accord.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

The address continues:

Knowing that many unusual difficulties must be faced by the dairy industry, he asked a few of us to prepare an outline of what we thought should be done. It was my privilege to join with Dean Barton of Macdonald College and Doctor Archibald of the Dominion Experimental Farms, in the preparation of this report to the Minister of Agriculture. It was our hope that the report would at least provide a larger conference with something to shoot at, and it is the minister's wish that the National Dairy Council discuss it fully at this meeting.

May I say that Dean Barton is a capital man. Had I had occasion to hunt for another live stock commissioner I would have approached him. However I never had to do so. He is a very efficient man, and I believe I have already expressed an opinion in regard to Doctor Archibald and Mr. Robinson. They are the trio who have been asked by the minister to make a report on dairying at the present time and to suggest a remedy for present conditions. The report continues:

It was our hope that the report would at least provide a larger conference with something to shoot at, and it is the minister's wish that the National Dairy Council discuss it fully at this meeting, and that modified or enlarged as you may see fit, it then go to him as a recommendation from the council.

I am sorry the dairy commissioner was not included with the other men I have mentioned. My only comment would be that I think Doctor Ruddick would have been a great help. However I concede to my hon. friend the right to pick his own advisers. Probably Doctor Ruddick will be called in at a later time. The report referred to has not yet been presented. Then the address continues:

The report will be presented to you in due course and I hope that you will see in the action of the minister how great an opportunity and responsibility is ours.

In that connection Mr. Robinson refers to the council. I do not expect that the report will be changed because of what I have said, but I shall feel highly flattered if it contains some of my proposals. I do not know whether the minister is ready to present the report, but undoubtedly all hon. members will be greatly interested when it is presented. I do not wish to press the minister because I know the difficulty he will experience when he attempts to get money for its establishment, financial conditions are very hard just now, and I know what the minister's colleagues and his leader will say if there are any more drains on the treasury. But what did they promise? They promised to put the whole weight and power of the Dominion of Canada behind agriculture. Here is a great opportunity for the minister. The other day a bill was introduced to provide $750,000 annually for technical education. Is technical education any more important than the dairy industry? I wonder how many hon. gentlemen ever got up at half past four in the morning to milk cows.

Mr. ROSS: I have.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Then the hon. member ought to be sympathetic. But he did not do so when cheese was at 8 cents a pound; that is lower than the price when he was a boy. Well, there will now be a little bond of friendship between the two of us. Dairying is a very arduous branch of agriculture, as everybody knows, I think. It is weakening right now at the knees, it is being hard-pressed, although it is the only source from which there is any available money just now. Wheat has gone up the flue for a while, and I do not know how long it will stay up there, but every old cow that can be milked at all, her udder has to be stripped so as to secure the very last squirt of milk in order that we may scrape along.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am not joking. We farmer members know that. It is what we are living on to-day. The only trouble is that we have not enough of those life saving cows. I have heard it said that the Prime Minister has no heart; or if he has, he has not been able to diagnose the ills of the west, and therefore cannot prescribe a remedy. My hon. friend is a western man. We are proud to know that the ministers of agriculture are coming from the west, whether from the far west or from the middle west. The present minister knows conditions, he knows what dairying is. Would it be so very difficult for him to put up a scrap for the same grant that technical education got? It would not take that much for the first year. Suppose only $100,000 was put in the supplementaries to have an inquiry. I asked for only $25,000 last year. Quadruple that and see if something cannot be done. The minister has a very good committee here. I think that that is not an unreasonable request, and I say with all sincerity that this is the time to strike. There is not a man in this house who would dare to object to a policy to be enunciated for the purpose of rehabilitating our dairy industry and establishing a standardized system of combined creameries and dairies, especially in the two older provinces of Ontario and Quebec as a start-up. With that will go the two packing plants that were suggested. If ever I spoke a sincere word in my life I am speaking it now. It is not usual for the opposition to advocate a policy so transparently necessary that scarcely any government could resist it, and then give them the opportunity to run away with it. I do not care if you run from here to you-know-where with it, so long as we get a rejuvenated dairy industry. I am willing to give credit for it to the Hon. Martin Burrell who preceded me, or to any of my other predecessors, so long as something is done to revivify agriculture, especially on the prairies.

Some unkind things have been said about the prairies. Yes, we are making quite a noise. You will never get anything in this world without you do make a certain amount of noise; but we have not got much out there yet this session. What we have got you could pretty well put in your eye and not interfere with your vision. But it will come, and it has to come from this government. Could not the minister take advantage of the opportunity, and come out with a flourish as the great emancipator of agriculture in the west—instead of blaming me for weeds that grew thirteen years ago when I was not there. What was done at that time at Waterhen lake was done by the Tory government that preceded us. Oh, the need must have been great for my hon. friend to seek to blame me, and I am sure he regrets it now. How much better would this proposition be than that which he advocated in his recent speech—a speech which reechoed throughout Canada as a victorious vindication of the minister for twenty-three minutes, and then collapsed. Maybe I am saying these things unkindly, but I do not mean them unkindly; it is just my way of expressing myself. I am willing that my hon. friend should have the credit for these proposals when they are worked out through the National Dairy Council. Will not my hon. friend tell us about this National Dairy Council report and how far he has advanced with the committee, consisting of the three gentlemen referred to—Messrs. Robinson, Archibald and Barton?

Mr. DONNELLY: The other day I asked the Minister of Agriculture concerning our butter, and he said at that time that we were nearly on an export basis. He also said that the export of our butter was interfered with to a great extent by lack of uniformity of grade, which was due to the fact that our creameries were not of sufficient size to enable our butter to be uniformly graded. I asked him at that time what was being done in order that butter might be exported more efficiently, and he said our inspectors were trying to get the creameries to turn out a more and more uniform grade. Now, I propose to quote from this report which has been referred to by the ex-minister, the report of the annual meeting of the National Dairy Council of Canada. I find on page 2 that the president said:

I have given notice that at this meeting the chief item on the agenda will be a national dairy policy for Canada.

I ask hon. members to pay attention to those words, "a national dairy policy for Canada." He continued:

Gentlemen, our task to-day is that we must come to a vital and united decision as to whether we intend to export some or all of the various dairy products produced here. If we want to export them they must be produced in steady and dependable supply of high and uniform quality, and above all at prices low enough to enable us to compete with other countries.

In other words, he says that we are assembled here to-day at this convention in order to work out a policy; we are on an export basis for butter, or soon will be; we must have a steady supply of uniform quality, and it is up to us and the government to work out such a policy. Now, what has the government done toward working out a policy along that line? Are they doing anything in order that we may have a steady supply of butter of uniform quality? Are they doing anything in order to reduce the cost of producing butter? These small creameries, we have been told, produce butter at a high cost, and, as has just been pointed out, we should have larger units. What are the government doing to increase the size of these creameries?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. DONNELLY: I should like the minister to give us the answer, if he can.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson): Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. DONNELLY: I want the minister to tell me, if he knows, what their policy is. Have they done anything to decrease the cost of producing butter in our creameries, or are they doing anything to get a uniform supply for export? This is the policy advocated by the National Dairy Council which hon. gentlemen opposite have lauded to the skies; they say this is what should be done, and we are asking the minister what has been done in that direction. I think that is a proper question. We have not been on an export basis for years; the minister says we are coming to an export basis or that we are on that basis, and I want to know what we are doing in order to reduce the cost of production and to get a uniform supply. I think that is a legitimate question and we should have a statement of the policy of the government in that respect. Has the minister nothing whatever to say? Have the government no policy? Have they not decided on anything or do they think everything is perfectly satisfactory as it is?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. SANDERSON: I should like to ask the minister a question, to get back to the National Dairy Council. Would be explain to the committee just how that body functions? What do they do? In what way do they assist, if they do assist, the dairy industry of this country? And when I say "industry" I mean the whole industry. Would the minister also tell the committee if the different creameries throughout the Dominion belong to this National Dairy Council? Is it a cooperative company, or what kind of body is it? I think the committee would like to get this information from the minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. SANDERSON: Hon. members should not be so impatient.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am asking the minister for information.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My memorandum in this connection is as follows:

This organization is composed of thirty-three representative men, elected by dairy organizations in every province in Canada, and from every branch of the dairy industry—from the producer to the exporter.

This immediately reveals the scope of an organization, whose one object is to further the welfare of a business with an investment of over fifty million dollars (exclusive of dairy farms) having an annual revenue in 1929 of approximately $295,000,000.

This council is ever on the alert to assist the dairy business in any advancement or emergency.

Here are some of the matters undertaken by the council and carried through to some degree of completion:

1. Succeeded in getting oleomargarine outlawed;
2. Got dairy products exempt from sales tax;
3. Got the 20 per cent express rate increase on cream disallowed;
4. Secured standardization of ice cream;
5. Cream cheques exempted from stamp tax;

6. Obtained an equalization of freight rates on butter and cheese.
7. Prevented increased rates for carrying milk;
8. Caused a modification of the United States Milk Import Act;
9. Secured an early lifting of the United States embargo—1927;
10. Officers went to Washington on tariff and other matters;
11. Petitioned government to increase tariff on butter to 4 cents a pound;
12. Made case before tariff board for four cent tariff increase on butter;
13. Prepared standard milk regulations;
14. Favoured a temporary increase in tariff and the "pegging" of butter last fall, to tide the dairy industry over a critical period. This brought an increase of about $10,000,000 to the dairy farmers of Canada last winter;
15. Advocates pasteurization of milk for human consumption as a health measure;
16. Continually gives publicity to the food value of milk, butter, cheese and ice cream, through over 5,000 schools, 700 public health nurses (who get our publicity material free), addresses, articles in the press, radio talks, exhibits at fairs, leaflets and posters, etc. By these means we have contact with millions of homes every year;
17. The council's office has become a real "Service Bureau" to the dairy industry, and through its numerous activities has brought many thousands of dollars yearly to the dairy farmers of Canada.

That is what they claim to have done.

Mr. SANDERSON: I thank the minister for the information. Now would he tell the committee, if he has the information, if the different creameries throughout the country are connected in any way with this dairy council. Are they members of it?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): They elect representatives, I understand, as they are members of dairy associations.

Mr. SANDERSON: There is another matter I want to bring to the attention of the minister, in connection with the whole dairy industry. Apparently there is a move to consolidate into a very few hands, and under the control of wealthy interests, the dairy industry of this country. For instance, companies financed by large capitalists in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver are slowly but surely gathering the creameries together under their wings. Is the minister aware of that fact? Is he watching that situation in the interests not only of the consumer but also of the producer of milk? It appears to me that if this organization, which is now stretching out all over this country, gets control of the dairy industry, it will be very disastrous for most of the people of Canada, except those who have stock in the company. If it is not stopped, or if there is not some legislation to prevent it from going on, of which we have heard nothing—and we have heard a good deal about the milking of the cow in the last two or three days—it will mean that all the farmer will do will be to milk the cow, and this company or these companies—because I understand they are more or less affiliated—will milk the farmer first and then milk the consumer.

If there is anything that should be safeguarded by legislation from a monopoly, or from getting under the control of a few, it is the great dairy industry of Canada. To my mind this is a very serious matter. Farmers in this country are having a hard struggle, not only in the dairy branch of their business but in every other branch. This matter of getting control of the dairy business is a vital one and should be discussed in parliament. Some move should be made to head it off. Is the minister aware of the fact that one or two large companies are endeavouring to get control of that business, and to a certain extent have succeeded in doing so?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No, I am not aware of that.

Mr. HAY: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SANDERSON: I am not finished yet; I just sat down so that the minister could answer the question if he desired to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS: He answered.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then it is up to you, Mr. Chairman, to say whether or not I have the floor. I will go on if you say so; if not I will sit down.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The hon. member had sat down, and to be strictly in order, discussion should alternate.

Mr. SANDERSON: If that is your ruling, Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The hon. member for Springfield has the floor.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I rise to a point of order. It is within the knowledge of every hon. member present, as well as of the chairman, that the hon. member for South Perth simply sat down in order to receive a reply from the Minister of Agriculture. He has the floor, and surely the rules of this house will support him.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I rule that the hon. member for Springfield has the floor.

Mr. VALLANCE: Yesterday I was not allowed to speak when I found myself in a situation similar to that of the hon. member for Springfield. I was told that the hon. gentleman opposite had not sat down. In this case the hon. member for South Perth sat down merely to allow the minister to answer a question, and I maintain that he still has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I have given my ruling; the hon. member can appeal if he wishes to do so.

Mr. HAY: It is not my intention to make a speech on the item before the committee; I would rather make a suggestion.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

VANCOUVER—SECOND NARROWS BRIDGE

Mr. DURANLEAU: With the consent of the house I move that we revert to motions in order to allow me to lay a report on the table.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I desire to lay on the table of the house the report of the commission appointed to inquire into the matter of the second narrows bridge, Burrard inlet, British Columbia.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALGOMA CENTRAL AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 48, respecting the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company—Mr. Simpson (Algoma)—Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) in the chair.

On section 1—scheme of arrangement and schedule confirmed.

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): There is rather a long preamble attached to this bill, and possibly a short explanation would facilitate its passing. The purpose of the bill is to confirm a certain "scheme of arrangement" that has been agreed to between the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company, the Algoma Central Terminals Limited, the bondholders of both these companies and the Lake Superior Corporation which guarantees the bonds. It is, in short, a reorganization of the financial structure of these companies. The companies are part of the industrial institutions that were established by Mr. F. H. Clergue some years ago at Sault Ste. Marie. The Lake Superior Corporation is not an operating company; it might be termed a holding company. The Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company, the Algoma Central Terminals Limited and the Algoma Steel Corporation, the subsidiary companies, are the operating companies.

The railway has been built for a distance of some 296 miles north from Sault Ste. Marie, with a branch running from a place called Hawk junction to Michipicoten harbour. It taps the main line of the Canadian Pacific at Franz, the Canadian National, formerly the Canadian Northern, at a place called Oba, and the Grand Trunk Pacific at Hearst, and it really forms the only means whereby the Canadian National can connect with the industries at Sault Ste. Marie.

For the purpose of raising money for the construction of the railway, it was necessary to issue first mortgage bonds. These bonds were guaranteed by the parent company, the Lake Superior Corporation, and the purpose in mind in the construction of the railway was not only to freight pulpwood down to the pulp and paper mill which was at that time a subsidiary of this company known as the Lake Superior Pulp and Paper Company and now owned by the Abitibi people, but to move iron ore from the then Helen mine to the blast furnaces to be constructed at Sault Ste. Marie. Unfortunately the railway was not able to earn sufficient money to pay the interest on the bonds. Much of the pulpwood was of course floated down by water, and the old Helen mine, from which they mined merchantable ore, petered out, with the result that in 1916 the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway passed into the hands of a receiver. At that time an arrangement was arrived at, satisfactory to the Lake Superior Corporation and to the shareholders and bondholders of the railway company, whereby the road was returned to the original owners and an act of this parliament was passed approving the arrangement then made. It was thought that the prospects for the future were better. It was known there were large deposits of low grade iron ore, and it was hoped they would be able to treat this ore and use it in their blast furnaces. This would have provided considerable traffic for the railway. The Algoma Steel Corporation spent some $2,500,000 in erecting a plant at what was known as the Magpie mine for treating or beneficiating this low grade ore. They proved that this ore could be successfully treated and made fit for blast furnace use, but the methods then known for treating this ore were not as advanced as they are to-day.

An hon. MEMBER: Was it magnetite or hematite?

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): It was magnetite ore they were treating at that time. They have hematite, magnetite and siderite. But the cost of the treatment of the ore was such that they were not able to treat it and lay it down at the blast furnaces as cheaply as they could purchase iron ore elsewhere. The result has been that the railway company has not been able so far to earn sufficient money to pay more than the operating expenses and a very small amount on the interest on the bonds. By the way, since 1916 the railway companies have paid out about $15,000,000 in wages. It is realized that the only hope lies in the successful operation of the steel industry at Sault Ste. Marie. Consequently they agreed to enter into an arrangement whereby the Lake Superior Corporation would be relieved of their guarantee of the bonds, which would enable them to go on to the market and more successfully finance the extensions to the steel industry which are absolutely necessary in order to enable that industry more successfully to meet the demands for steel in the Dominion of Canada. This arrangement has been approved by the bondholders, by the shareholders of the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company, the Algoma Central Terminals Limited and the shareholders of the Lake Superior Corporation. It is practically a family affair, to which all the members have given their assent, and all these industries being situated in the province of Ontario approval has been given by a bill passed by the legislature of that province at its recent session. The bill before us, as hon. members will observe has also been considered and passed by the upper chamber of this parliament.

Mr. HEENAN: Has the bill been approved by the private bills committee?

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): It has been before the railway committee of this house and has been passed by that committee without amendment. I might add that during the last thirty years these industries located at Sault Ste. Marie have been the mainstay of Sault Ste. Marie and the immediately surrounding sections, with a population of about 35,000 people. They are particularly interested in seeing this bill go through so that the company will have the opportunity of setting up this new financial structure and be able to extend its operations as they have found it necessary to do in order to meet the demands of to-day.

Mr. NEILL: Did I understand my hon. friend to say that all the various companies concerned have been consulted and have more or less unanimously voted their approval? There is no minority interest objecting?

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): There is no one objecting at all. The shareholders of the parent company, the Lake Superior Corporation, have given their approval by turning in their shares. Perhaps I should have explained in my earlier remarks that the parent company, the Lake Superior Corporation, was originally incorporated under the laws of the state of New Jersey. Under the proposed arrangement a new holding company is to be set up to be known as the Algoma Consolidated Corporation Limited, a Canadian company. The American trustees have been changed to Canadian trustees, and the shareholders of the former company have to the extent of over 90 per cent given their approval by turning in their shares to be exchanged for shares in this new holding company. The question may be asked, what about the remaining ten per cent? Some of this stock was held in the old land and in other parts of Europe, and as no dividends have been paid on the stock since it was first issued over thirty years ago, it is possible that some of these shares have been misplaced or lost. I doubt if there are very many members of this house who, holding stock on which they have received no dividends for a period of fifteen or twenty years, have been very much interested in taking care of the certificates. That is the explanation.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

VOHWINKEL DIVORCE BILL

Mr. A. U. G. BURY (East Edmonton, for Mr. Bell, St. Antoine) moved the second reading of Bill No. 65, for the relief of Carl Vohwinkel.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I understand that in this particular case there was considerable divergence of opinion in the Senate committee, that the evidence was by no means conclusive, and that the opinion of the committee was not unanimous. It seems to me under these circumstances the special attention of the committee on private bills should be called to this particular case, and it should not be passed over in a perfunctory manner. I shall not object to the second reading if it is understood that when the bill reaches the committee it will definitely be considered.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

GUTTMAN DIVORCE BILL

Mr. G. W. McPHEE (Yorkton, for Mr. Factor) moved the second reading of Bill No. 71, for the relief of Lillian Freedman Guttman.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): This bill is in a position similar to Bill No. 65. The evidence is neither as clear nor as conclusive as in other cases. I would ask that it be given special review by the private bills committee before it is passed on to the house for further consideration.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

GRAIN INSURANCE AND GUARANTEE COMPANY

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. W. W. KENNEDY (Winnipeg South Centre) moved the second reading of and concurrence in an amendment made by the senate to Bill No. 13, respecting Grain Insurance and Guarantee Company.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

ANCIENT ORDER OF FORESTERS

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough, for Mr. Chevrier) moved the second reading of and concurrence in an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 27, respecting The Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters in the Dominion of Canada.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

ARMISTICE DAY ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni) moved the second reading of and concurrence in an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 8, to amend the Armistice Day Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendment proposed by the Senate is a comparatively unimportant one. It consists in deleting the word "legal" before the word "holiday," so that the sentence now reads: "shall be a holiday." I find that this is in accordance with the interpretation act to be found in the revised statutes, as the definition of the word "holiday" found there covers Sundays, New Year's day and other holidays. Therefore the amendment is perfectly in order.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT

REPRESENTATION FOR ELECTORS RESIDENT IN THE DISTRICT OF PATRICIA

The house resumed from Friday, May 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Heenan for the second reading of Bill No. 2 to amend the Representation Act and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Stevens.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the amendment moved on behalf of the government by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), I think it well first to read the explanatory note to this bill:

The purpose of this amendment is to provide representation for electors resident in the district of Patricia north of the electoral district of Kenora-Rainy River.

In view of the fact that this bill is for the purpose of enfranchising about six hundred people, it comes as a surprise to me that the government has introduced this amendment to deprive them of their franchise. Therefore I think it would be well for me briefly to review the history of this territory to show whether or not the government of the day are taking this position designedly. At the last redistribution in 1924 the territory was not included in any electoral district. Consequently in 1925 the residents had no opportunity of voting. Then came another election in 1926. This time our friends being in power, and having control of the election machinery, sent enumerators into that territory. We found that they had got in there by aeroplane and other methods, and were promising the people that a poll would be established if they signified their willingness to vote for the Conservative candidate.

Mr. MANION: Is my hon. friend speaking from the dominion or the provincial standpoint?

Mr. HEENAN: The dominion. In 1926 this district was not incorporated in any electoral riding. We sent detectives in there and they found that enumerators—

Mr. MANION: Before my hon. friend leaves that point, I should like him to give some evidence in support of his bald statement. We know nothing of the kind, and as a matter of fact I do not believe it happened.

Mr. HEENAN: I know the Minister of Railways does not, but I will give him the evidence and then he may believe it. In 1926 we found enumerators appointed by the Conservative government were in that district promising the people that a poll would be established on condition that they promised to vote "right." The evidence is that a poll was establshed, and when the chief electoral officer found what was going on he cancelled the poll. I wonder if that is evidence enough for my hon. friend.

Mr. STEVENS: That is not evidence at all. That is just gossip on the hon. gentleman's part.

Mr. HEENAN: It is not gossip at all.

Mr. STEVENS: There is not a particle of evidence in support of what my hon. friend says.

Mr. HEENAN: There is evidence on the files that the chief electoral officer cancelled the poll.

Mr. MANION: The chief electoral officer establishes the polls, not the government. If a mistake was made, it was made by the chief electoral officer.

Mr. HEENAN: Then again in 1929 the provincial government of Ontario, realizing that it was only fair to give those people an opportunity to vote, amended their election act and extended the territory to take in the Patricia district. But evidently the people there did not vote right, because in the election of that year the Labour candidate secured a majority of forty or fifty, I cannot remember the exact figures. It was a surprise to the Conservatives because their candidate made it quite clear that the manager and the superintendent of a certain mine had advised him that he would secure practically all the votes there. In 1930 the government of the day introduced a measure to give those 600 people, composed of surveyors, miners and others engaged in the mining industry, an opportunity to vote in the election of that year. Then it was that those people realized that they were to be punished because of the manner in which they had cast their votes in the 1929 election.

Mr. STEVENS: What nonsense!

Mr. HEENAN: What nonsense?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. Who was in office, and who had control at that time? The hon. member standing in his place.

Mr. HEENAN: I am telling you that the government of the day introduced a measure to enfranchise those people, and I am going to give the house the words of the present Prime Minister in criticism of the proposal.

Mr. STEVENS: He was not the government.

Mr. HEENAN: After it had been agreed by the government of the day and the official opposition that any measures of a controversial nature should be withdrawn so that parliament could be prorogued, Mr. Bennett, in opposing the measure, said:

Mr. Speaker, a more barefaced, iniquitous piece of political legislation has never been placed before this House of Commons in the dying hours of a session; never.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Therefore you withdrew it.

Mr. STEVENS: In shame you withdrew it.

Mr. HEENAN: Let me continue the quotation:

> No part of the province of Ontario exists which is not within an electoral district at this moment. The object of this legislation is to take from one electoral district a small area and give it to another for the benefit of the Minister of Labour, because there were a few votes given in favour of a candidate whom he supported at the last provincial election.

Showing quite conclusively that the then leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister, had been advised by the defeated candidate and a few of his friends to oppose the measure because of the way the electors had voted in the 1929 election. Well, in 1930 we had another election, and it was not until election day that we really saw—I give them credit for it—the manoeuvre that was to be made, because my hon. friends—and I am not speaking about the government particularly—

Mr. STEVENS: What page of Hansard was my hon. friend reading from?

Mr. HEENAN: You will read it to-morrow in Hansard.

Mr. STEVENS: But my hon. friend quoted Hansard. Surely he will do me the courtesy of giving me the page he quoted from?

Mr. HEENAN: But this is taking up my time.

Mr. STEVENS: It will only take a minute.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I remember the speech distinctly.

Mr. HEENAN: It will be found at page 2818 of Hansard of 1930. I will hand it over to my hon. friend.

Mr. STEVENS: Will you kindly send it over?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes—it is good reading. But on election day we found the real reason for the whole thing. I say I am not blaming the government of the day; I am blaming the political manoeuverers in that part of the country, for what did they do? They learned a lesson in 1917, they learned how to distribute votes and how to win that war time election, so all these people were not allowed to vote. There were Ontario government aeroplanes to bring out those who they knew would vote right, and they voted by perjury and fraud in the rural polls. Over one hundred voters were brought out I am advised by the campaign managers and they voted in the rural polls, under section 232 of the Dominion Elections Act, under which a person has only to vouch that the person is a resident of the district. They are permitted to vote, notwithstanding the fact that they are not on the voters' list. That was the real reason, and now the government introduces an amendment, after I introduced this bill to enfranchise these people, and if that amendment is adopted it will practically keep those people disfranchised.

I am sorry the Minister of Justice was not leading the house on that occasion, because I believe his fairness would have made this further debate unnecessary. I am satisfied that the real Conservatives did not wish these six hundred miners, pioneers of this country, and especially in Ontario, disfranchised, and I am satisfied that the Minister of Justice would not be a party to such political manoeuvering. He would not have agreed to the sending in of aeroplanes in order to bring out these people to vote at rural polls by fraud and perjury. Through this amendment, however, that is what the government is subscribing to at the present time.

I do not wish to labour this question. Had the Minister of Justice been in his seat I am satisfied he would have spoken a little differently than the way the Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke. I think probably he would have said this was a proper bill to be introduced, but that inasmuch as a redistribution may take place before the next election, the government would give the assurance that before any election took place they would see to it that these people were given the franchise. I am certain of that, but instead the Minister of Trade and Commerce rises in his seat and calls the measure everything but its right name. He has indicated by his language that it is silly, that a person could not be sincere in introducing it at this time. He has talked about rumours and all that sort of thing, which have nothing to do with the bill. He has moved an amendment which, if carried, will have the effect of keeping the franchise from these people until some other step may be taken.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to dwell upon the question further. I am satisfied that the house will not accept the amendment of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I certainly hope that will not be the case because we will be simply giving an impetus and an encouragement to a few—I will say not more than six—political manipulators, who never did anything for the district or for the Conservative party. They will be able to work in conjunction with a few politicians in the city of Toronto in order to keep these six hundred people as a reserve upon which they may draw in the event of being hard pressed during an election.

Talking about political manoeuvering, these people were actually encouraged by some of the ministers of the provincial government to do these things. By the way, I see questions on the order paper indicating that people were dismissed because of partisanship in provincial and federal elections. We had the spectacle in our constituency of the defeated candidate working in conjunction with the officers of the Ontario government, road foremen and engineers, on election day, bring in the voters on government trucks, off the highways. They stood one on each side of the sidewalk with the pay list, calling these people by numbers. The candidate would say, "number so-and-so, you are working for us out at camp so-and-so, and it is your duty to vote, step in this way." These people were used for the purpose of winning one seat, but notwithstanding all that, the Conservative did not make the grade. In fact, if it had not been for the Ontario government and their methods of bribery, corruption, intimidation and persecution of the settlers, they would not have reached first base during the last election. All that I am asking to do by this bill is to enfranchise these six hundred people and let them vote as they will at the next election.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as my name has been brought into this discussion, and since, a direct appeal has been made to me, I think I should say a word or two. No one on this side of the house objects to the enfranchisement of these six hundred voters who, it is said, are disfranchised owing to some act or some omission on the part of some government. I think we all agree that those men should be entitled to vote; the theory of our election act is that every man who is qualified is entitled to vote in some constituency.

I have listened for the first time to the statement of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) in regard to this proposal. I was not in the house when the proposal came up for discussion last year, so this is the first occasion on which the facts have been brought to my notice. If I were to criticize the speech to which I have just listened, and the attempt which has been just made to apportion the blame in this matter and place it upon the shoulders of this government, I would characterize that speech as a tissue of nonsense. A more nonsensical statement or a more groundless appeal I never heard made in this house. The hon. member says this party was in power in 1926.

Mr. HEENAN: I did not say anything of the sort.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understood that my hon. friend said the Conservative party was in power for a few months in 1926, and certainly it was.

Mr. HEENAN: And had charge of the election machinery.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We had not charge of the election machinery. The election machinery was entrusted, under an act of this parliament, to the man who was selected by the leader of my hon. friend and myself in 1921, namely, Colonel Oliver Mowat Biggar. He was the chief electoral officer in 1926 and had been since 1921.

Mr. HEENAN: If there is any nonsense in the house, that is the most nonsensical thing I have heard.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Colonel Biggar was in charge of the election in this country in 1926. He appointed the enumerators—

Mr. HEENAN: Upon whose recommendation?

Mr. GUTHRIE:—and took charge of the election in the district of which my hon. friend has been speaking.

Mr. HEENAN: Upon whose recommendation?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I assume on the recommendation of Colonel Biggar. He had charge of the whole election.

Mr. HEENAN: On the recommendation of the Conservative candidate.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does my hon. friend desire to cast any reflection on Colonel Biggar?

Mr. HEENAN: Certainly not.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Colonel Biggar, as chief electoral officer, was the only man who could settle such a difficulty, if a difficulty did exist. The only man in Canada who could do anything in such a case was Colonel Biggar, who used his own judgment in carrying out the election law of Canada.

This is the first charge made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River against this government. A greater sham was never laid before the House of Commons. Now he says that last year the government of which he was a member brought in a bill—and they were in power by a very substantial majority in this house. They brought in a bill to remedy this wrong, this injustice, to these six hundred voters. Why did his government not carry it through? They were in power, the hon. gentleman himself was a member of the government and intimately concerned with this particular affair. But he sat supinely in his place and allowed the house to prorogue without remedying the wrong, passing the bill without providing that these six hundred persons should have the right to vote. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River sat placidly in his seat and did not press his bill. Yet he comes forward this session and complains of the wrongs done to the people in his own riding, when the whole blame in the matter rests on his own shoulders and on the shoulders of the government of which he was a member which failed to pass the bill. He says that the government was not in power during the election in 1926. I agree. But it was in power in 1927, and he was a member of it. It was in power in 1928 and he was a member of it. It was in power in 1929 and again in 1930, and he was a member of that government. For four long years this crying outrage which he has pictured to-night continued in his own territory and he did not raise a hand to redress it. In 1930 he did take some steps in the matter, but some influence was brought to bear upon him, because he allowed the government of which he was a member, to abandon his bill. He allowed the house to adjourn without passing the measure. He apparently thinks that the minority of the House of Commons should have put the bill through. He was in the government until election day, 1930, and failed to afford the right to vote to these good people.

Such is the ridiculous position in which the hon. member finds himself to-night. And this is the sort of proposal he submits to the House of Commons. What is the answer? It is a simple one. This is the first session of a new parliament. Under the constitution of the country, the census must be taken this year. As soon as the census is taken the constitution prescribes that a redistribution of the ridings shall take place. Surely this matter can wait one year. This government will be in power another year; we can guarantee the hon. gentleman that. When the redistribution bill comes down the matter will be righted. But why interject a measure of this kind at this session? There is nothing to be gained thereby. The hon. gentleman did not do it when he had power, but now he projects this bill as a grievance to parade in the north country to induce the people to believe that he has been working to get them votes now that he is out of power, forgetting to tell them that during the four years he was in power he did not raise his hand to help them.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Under whose instructions was the then returning officer of South Huron dismissed from his position and his successor appointed just prior to the federal election of the fall of 1926?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have no knowledge of the subject. The hon. gentleman will have to speak to Colonel Oliver Mowat Biggar if he wishes to get that information. Colonel Biggar was in charge at that time.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I thought the minister might be able to tell me.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is the only information I can give.

Mr. J. EARL LAWSON (West York): It had not been my intention to participate in the debate on this bill, but when the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) rises in his place and makes the allegations which he does as allegations of fact as to what occurred in the district of Patricia in 1926, I wish, in the strongest terms of which I am capable, to deny these allegations; because in 1926 I was the magistrate of the district of Patricia. As that district was at that time, and still is, an unorganized territory, I had charge of the administration of justice, including the direction of the provincial police officers in the district of Patricia. When the proclamation was issued for the election of 1926, there was not a parliament in session and consequently the question as to whether or not the people then resident in that district should have a vote was a matter dependent upon the statutes. Some of the permanent residents, few in number as they still are, desired to have a poll established in that district and application was made therefor to the returning officer for the adjoining district of Kenora-Rainy River. Apparently for a short period of time the local returning officer for that district was under the impression thet he would be able to grant a poll in the district of Patricia. But the chief electoral officer for Canada, or his legal adviser, I am not sure which, overruled the decision of the local returning officer. Hence a poll was not established in the district.

Before hon. members vote on this measure I should like to place before them another little picture so that it will not appear that vast numbers of the permanent residents of this country are being disfranchised. The district of Patricia is a vast, unsettled, unorganized area. In order to proceed from Hudson on the national railway to the first settlement—that is, apart from Indians—at the Hudson bay post at lac Seul, you have to journey 127 miles by canoe at most times of the year and, sometimes when the Manitou rapids are high, you can go in a launch. It takes two mighty good paddlers three days to make the trip. At Gold Pines, which is a local centre, there were in 1926 fourteen permanent residents, and in the summer of 1930 there were not more than forty-two. That, I believe, was my count when I journeyed there at that time. To the next settlement in that country, which is the Howie mine, where a number of men are working—that is, at Red lake—it is seventy miles by water, with six portages. That was the number originally, but at the present time, I believe, by the flooding of the upper and lower Ear falls by the provincial hydro development two of the short portages have been eliminated. You cannot travel by launch because you cannot take a launch over the portages; so that, again, it takes two very good paddlers, as I know very well, to paddle a canoe and make the partages from Howie mines at Red lake, a matter of three days, to get to the townsite of Gold Pines. The very best you can do it in is two days. There is a small settlement consisting of about four permanent residents at Jackson-Manion mines, and to get there you have to go ninety miles by canoe, with eleven portages, two of them a mile and a quarter long. There are few facilities for transportation in that country, so that you are not disfranchising any enormous number of people when you fail to pass this bill at this session.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private bills having expired, the house will revert to committee of supply. I will ask the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) to take the chair in the absence of the Deputy Speaker.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Stirling in the chair.

Mr. SANDERSON: A few minutes before six o'clock I had asked the Minister of Agriculture a question with regard to the National Dairy Council, when the hon. member who at that moment was acting as chairman ruled me out of order. I want to revert to that question. I asked the minister also if he had any knowledge of the movement on foot to merge all the small creameries of this country into a gigantic monopoly whereby the farmer would lose a large amount of his revenue and the consumer would be forced to pay an exorbitant price for butter, cheese, cream, milk and all other produce allied to the dairy industry. The minister replied that he had no knowledge of such a merger. I want to ask him a further question and I think the committee and the country are entitled to the information before this item passes, because in my judgment this is a vital matter. Will he take steps to investigate and find out whether there is anything in the rumour that this merger is under way? While he is doing that, I should like him to find out, because I think it is his duty to do so, whether or not any of the officials of the National Dairy Council are interested in the merger of these creameries, whether they are soliciting stock subscriptions from the farmers and the people generally for this merger in order that they may wipe out the individual and cooperative creameries and get the whole dairy industry under their own control. Will the minister give his assurance to the committee that he will investigate and find out whether there is anything to this rumour, and also whether some of the officers of the National Dairy Council are interested in the merger? I shall ask the minister for his reply and I want to tell the chairman that if the minister answers my question now, I intend to continue my remarks.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): I shall answer the hon. member's question before I conclude the remarks which I am about to make. The hon. member for Willow Bunch, before the six o'clock recess of the committee, asked me to make a statement in connection with the dairy policy that I am endeavouring to formulate for the benefit of the dairy industry. I think that was a very fair question and quite in order at this particular time. As regards the reference he made, requesting that I make a statement in reference to the national dairy policy as discussed by the National Dairy Council at their conference in Winnipeg, I may say that the details of that entire policy are not yet worked out. There was a misunderstanding regarding the request that I made of the president of the National Dairy Council before he proceeded to the Winnipeg conference. I asked him to bring up unofficially before this conference, certain points in connection with an advocated dairy policy, but not to bring the matter up as part of a dairy policy. What I wanted was to get the opinion or the reaction, with as little prejudice as possible, of those people who were there, representative as they were of various phases of the dairy industry. The president of the National Dairy Council evidently misunderstood me. He understood me to ask him to bring up this dairy policy of which we had the skeleton and which we had not had time to submit to a number of people to whom I had hoped to submit it before that time. I think it is only fair to him to say that due to the pressure of work to which I have had to give attention, the misunderstanding is more likely to have been on my part than on his. It was not intended by me that that should be presented to the conference as the skeleton of a national dairy policy, although I do not claim that anything he said was not correct. What he did say was quite correct.

As I said at the outset, the policy is not worked out in detail. I think it is only fair that, as has been requested, I should outline to the committee as much of the dairy policy as we have in view and some of which we have already put into practice. I think we can agree that in any dairy policy which we formulate the ideal that any dairyman would have in mind is something of this nature: to produce dairy products,—let us take for illustration butter—to produce dairy butter of such a quality that it will compete favourably with butter put on the world market from any other dairy farmer in the world; not only that, but to produce it at the lowest possible cost and to have it marketed in such a way that there will be returned to the dairyman the highest possible portion of what the consumer pays for it.

Mr. DONNELLY: Does the minister mean creamery butter or dairy butter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Creamery butter on the world market. The work of the government and of this department in particular, I take it, in connection with the dairy policy, is to assist the farmer in every way we can to produce at the lowest cost and to market the product so that it will return to him the greatest percentage of the price that the consumer pays. In the commencement, then, we placed a duty against New Zealand butter, the idea in my mind being to set up a protection for the dairy farmer in Canada so that behind that protection we could assist him in readjusting the dairy industry, especially in places where it had not been carried on to the extent it might have, for reasons for which no one is to blame, because the farmers felt they could make more money, as they doubtless could, in other commodities. I do not think many people believed we would be on the export market so soon, so that the length of time we had to assist the farmer to adjust himself behind this protection is not what we had estimated.

What is my policy to assist the farmer to produce at as low a cost of production as possible? First, we believe that as one of the necessary, basic principles of agriculture, we must get into the farmer's herd the best blood possible, which will, through inheritance, make the best possible use of the feed that the farmer puts into his herd and also the labour that he bestows upon it. In that connection we have instituted a policy and have already sent out to many of the farmers throughout the dominion, many of whom would find it almost impossible otherwise to get them, sires that I know will fulfil the statement that I have made with respect to improving the blood of the herd; and secondly, by making it easier for farmers to get the sires and female foundation stock that they want, we hope to encourage the farmers in western Canada in particular, who I feel sure wish it, to go into more diversified, mixed or balanced farming in certain localities that are adapted to it.

In addition to taking very definite steps to improve the blood in the herds of the farmers throughout the country for the reasons I have indicated, we have conducted experiments with feeds in local districts, to show the farmer the best balanced ration, making use of his own locally produced feeds, for dairy stock. One of the cheapest feeds we all realize for the dairy industry is that of pasture. The question of pasture in both eastern and western Canada has been very much neglected. An acre of native pasturage cannot begin to carry now the number of head that it carried some years ago. In this connection, in order to assist the farmer in producing cheaper feed as pasturage, thus reducing the production cost of his butter, we are endeavouring to get the services of one or two of the best qualified men in the Dominion to work especially on this problem of pasturage. I think that those of you who have not looked carefully into this one phase of the production costs of dairy products do not realize that it is perhaps one of the most important factors in reducing the cost of production.

We also hope in the winter months to establish short courses in dairying, in conjunction with the provinces, in connection with our experimental farms. There will also be lectures to groups of farmers, as well as to these students taking the short courses, in the different phases of marketing, and we hope to be able to obtain the services of people with expert experience in marketing, because I feel that we are all at least in accord on this, that marketing is perhaps the most important problem that faces us at the present time. When speaking of marketing I do not mean the problem of finding new markets, but the problem of marketing the goods to the markets we already have with a minimum of wastage in the return to the farmer. In this connection I moved yesterday a resolution giving authority to the agriculture committee to make a thorough investigation and review of the problem of marketing agricultural products, including, of course, dairy products. I know of no better place to investigate the question of a merger in the dairy industry or an attempt by any one concern to get control of the butter industry than the agriculture committee, and I am sure that the members of that committee will welcome any information that the hon. gentleman who has just asked me the question regarding a monopoly has to offer.

I am also asking the committee to make a report on cooperative marketing versus the marketing by private interests; both of them, but especially the private interests, under some sort of control which I shall suggest to the committee.

When the price of butter dropped, as it did drop this spring, much faster than I think the dairymen themselves or the distributors thought possible a week or two before, personally I felt that it was not warranted, so I asked the distributors from Montreal to meet me in Ottawa in order to get their viewpoint as to whether or not they were warranted in dropping the price in butter. They gave me information which left no doubt in my mind that the drop was warranted, due in particular to the greatly increased production of fodder butter, which we all know is of a quality and character that will not keep properly and is of very little use for export shipment. I have instructed the officials of my department in this connection to do two things: first, go gather accurate data on the price paid for butter fat to the farmer, and the price paid for butter by the consumer, so that then we will be in a position to carry on an investigation and see wherein it might be possible to reduce that spread. We all realize that the man who handles this butter is entitled to a fair profit, but I think we also realize that he is not entitled to a greater share of the profit, in proportion, than the man who does the actual laborious work on the farm in producing this commodity. I have also asked them to gather the most accurate information available on the amount of butter stored month by month, the average price of butter during that period, and also the price charged by the distributors for that butter when it is released in the winter months. Any problem in connection with the marketing of dairy products I feel will receive every consideration by the agriculture committee. I know of no body, especially with the authority which has been given to it by this house, which is in a better position to give us full information in this connection.

Before resuming my seat, I would say this. I have not—at least if I have done so, I have not wittingly done so—refused in any way to provide this committee with any information that it has asked for. Wittingly I have not even delayed in producing the information. I refer in particular to the information regarding the number of pounds of milk produced month by month. I thought from the beginning of this whole discussion that it was not so much a matter of one man doubting the word of another, but rather that the majority of us understood that the information had been obtained from two completely different sources.

Mr. SANDERSON: I want to thank the minister for at least giving my question a partial answer. I understood him to say that the committee on agriculture would endeavour to investigate and find out if there was any truth in the rumour that a merger was being formed to control the dairy interests of this country. May I point out to the minister that surely there is a better way than that to go about it. Parliament will not be sitting here all summer.

An hon. MEMBER: If we keep on it will.

Mr. SANDERSON: Let me tell my hon. friend I have not taken up as much time of the house this session as he has.

Mr. MANION: Oh, yes.

Mr. TURNBULL: We do not mind listening to the hon. member for a while.

Mr. SANDERSON: For a new member the hon. member for Regina has had a good deal to say in his first session.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): He has had a good deal of experience, just the same.

Mr. SANDERSON: If my hon. friends opposite wish to continue interrupting I promise them that I shall keep them here a long time. I believe the minister suggested that as his officials went around the country he would instruct them to make some investigations regarding the merger. Am I wrong?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. SANDERSON: May I humbly suggest to the minister that if he took that stand he would gather far more information than through the committee on agriculture. He has officials going up and down the country in every province who are in a position to get first-hand information. The minister should instruct them to gather information for his future use. If there is nothing in the rumour, well and good; if there is any truth in the rumour he as Minister of Agriculture should take steps as soon as possible to stop the merger.

Mr. STEVENS: It is not his business at all.

Mr. SANDERSON: For the last two or three days I have listened to the discussion about butter. During the election campaign in July of last year, butter was a live issue. It was featured by the Conservative party not only during the election campaign but during the special session of parliament. Speaking only of the province of Ontario I should like to say that there are perhaps eight, nine or ten hon. members sitting on the government benches opposite who owe their election to butter. I want to say that their campaigns were unfair. Camouflage and distortion of figures were practised to an extent which does not reflect credit on the government of the day. I know at least some of my hon. friends opposite do not like a prolongation of the discussion on butter; they would rather forget about it. They know that to a certain extent they are holding their seats under false pretences so far as their promises in regard to butter are concerned.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPOTTON: Order.

Mr. SANDERSON: My hon. friend from North Huron says "order." If he thinks I am out of order he should rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPOTTON: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I am not particularly well versed in parliamentary rules, but surely it is distinctly out of order for a member to state that other hon. members of the committee are occupying seats under false pretences.

An hon. MEMBER: It hurts, doesn't it?

[Mr. Sanderson.]

Mr. SPOTTON: I thought the election was over. I came through a by-election in 1927 with which my hon. friend had a great deal to do, if there could be any more false pretences than he—

Some hon. MEMBERS: What?

Mr. SPOTTON: If there could be any more promises made since Adam was a boy—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPOTTON:—I should like to hear them.

Mr. SANDERSON: I did not wish to get into any controversy with my hon. friend from North Huron, but he started the present discussion. When my hon. friend from North Huron is not in the House of Commons or is in his own riding during a campaign he poses as a low tariff man. According to his statements on such occasions he is opposed to protection.

Mr. SPOTTON: No.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have heard that during the last election campaign he made statements on the public platform and during his canvassing that if the Conservative party were returned to power—

Some hon. MEMBER: Order.

Mr. SANDERSON: —and Mr. Bennett became Prime Minister—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: We are discussing the dairy industry.

Mr. SANDERSON: I shall come to butter in a minute.

Mr. SPOTTON: My hon. friend is a poor loser.

Mr. SANDERSON: The hon. member for North Huron said he would be one of the first to rise in his seat and vote against any increase in tariff. However I never heard him protest last September. Never once on the floor of the house have I heard him raise his voice against an increase in tariff. I noticed in the press the other day a report of a meeting—

Mr. ARTHURS: This discussion is wholly out of order.

Mr. SANDERSON: There was a Liberal meeting in which the opponent of the hon. member for North Huron—

Mr. ARTHURS: The hon. member is not speaking to the subject before the chair.

Mr. DUFF: He is quite in order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): I would ask the hon. member to refer to the matter before the house.

Mr. SANDERSON: I would like to do so and I shall do so in a minute.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, now.

Mr. SANDERSON: The press report of this meeting contained the statement that the hon. member's opponent—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SANDERSON:—the hon. member's opponent—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SANDERSON:—stated he wished that there could be an election held in the next week or two—

Mr. ARTHURS: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SANDERSON:—and that at such time friends of my hon. friend from North Huron would see whether or not he was a low or high tariff man.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): I must ask the hon. member to speak to the matter before the committee.

Mr. SANDERSON: I shall be very glad to do that. I stated that a good many of the hon. members on the other side of the house from the province of Ontario were elected on their policy in regard to the importation of butter. The promises, propaganda and statements made by Conservative candidates and their friends in regard to New Zealand butter were surprising. This afternoon we were told that some of the creameries sent out notices with the pay cheques of their patrons stating that if there had been no New Zealand butter imported into this country their cheques would have been greater than the amounts they were actually receiving. In the constituency I have the honour to represent the propaganda was somewhat different. By some means or other access was obtained to the books of at least some of the creameries in South Perth and information was obtained as to the amounts the farmers were receiving from month to month over the period of a year. With this information in hand statements were made out which I shall describe. For example, if a farmer received $40 for one month there was a notation in the next column stating that as soon as the Bennett government came into power he would receive $60 or perhaps $70. What was the result? The whole propaganda of the Conservative party in regard to this butter question was that if that party came into power—and it did come into power—immediately the price of butter would go up.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. SANDERSON: During the election campaign the price of butter went down lower than it had been for some months previously. The promise made by the Conservative party to the farmers was, "If you vote for the Conservative candidate and if the Conservative candidate wins the election and the party gains power, immediately the imports of butter into this country will be stopped." When asked about the New Zealand agreement, they said, "Why, Mr. Bennett does not care for the New Zealand agreement; he will wipe that out immediately he comes into office." When asked about the Australian treaty they said, "Mr. Bennett will just ignore the Australian treaty and there will be no more butter coming in." What has been the result? In the last few months butter has reached the lowest point in thirty-five years, and instead of the patrons of our creameries receiving cheques for larger amounts as promised by my friends opposite, they are receiving the smallest amounts that they have ever received in the history of the industry.

Now I come to another matter, Mr. Chairman, and I do not know that I would have referred to it if some of my hon. friends opposite did not seem to think that when I get up to speak they must interrupt me. During June and July last year large quantities of New Zealand butter were imported. Who was buying that butter? It was evidently coming in for storage and was very much in excess of the amount that has come in for the same months in any previous year. Rumour had it that the Conservative party, financed as it was by millionaires and multi-millionaires, went into the butter market.

Mr. MANION: Nonsense!

Mr. SANDERSON: The Minister of Railways says "nonsense." I do not know that is is nonsense; I think there is a good deal of truth in the assertion. What would be their object in doing that? To bear the market, to reduce the price of butter so they could point out to the farmers of Ontario and the other provinces that the King government was responsible for the low price of butter. There was very little our Conservative friends overlooked in the last election, and I give them credit for it. They capitalized the unemployment situation, and I have my own idea whether or not they capitalized the butter situation. I believe that part of that propaganda was the importation of butter to bear the market. I have under my hand some of the campaign literature used by the Conservative party during the last election, I propose to quote from the Speakers' Guide, issued for the Liberal-Conservative party by the Confederation Publishing Company, Limited, Ottawa, Canada. At the bottom of the front cover is the slogan:

One country—one policy!

In this guide five pages are devoted to the dairy industry. Unless my friends opposite interrupt me too much I will not take up the time of the committee by reading it at length, but I should like to quote at least a part of it. This may be familiar to some of my Conservative friends:

The Throttling of the Dairy Industry in Canada

The tragedy of the dairy industry in Canada is a matter of most serious concern to the great majority of farmers of the dominion and to that vast body of Canadians whose welfare depends upon the prosperity of the farmer.

The facts of the situation are as simple as they are disastrous and form perhaps the most costly chapter in nine years of government during which change has ever been mistaken for progress by Mr. King and his ministry.

The next heading is:

The Germ That Brought Decay

Then quotations are given from speeches by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn) and by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe)—

Mr. DUFF: Read it all.

Mr. SANDERSON: —in regard to the dairy industry. Those two hon. gentlemen were the leaders in the propaganda with respect to New Zealand butter. They were, as my friend says, the bell-wethers. They went all through Ontario and they also campaigned in Quebec and in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. They pointed out to the farmers why the King government had ruined the dairy industry, and advised them to put out the Liberal administration and put in the Conservative, when they would be hundreds and hundreds of dollars ahead every year in the dairy industry. I know that my friends opposite will say, "We have been in power only a few months; give us time." But the result since they have come into power has been disastrous, not only to the dairy industry but to every other industry in this country. I know, too, that they propose a higher tariff as the panacea for all these troubles. Well, they increased the tariff on butter to 8 cents a pound, thinking of course that butter locally would go up in price; but the reverse has happened, the price has gone down. Speaking of the province of Ontario, I tell my hon. friends opposite that if it were possible for the farmers to register their votes within the immediate future there would be a different result from what we had last July —largely due to this butter question. The whole question has been permeated with humbug if I may say so, simply for the purpose of catching votes. The responsibility for remedying the present depressed condition of the dairy industry is on the government, and particularly on the Minister of Agriculture. I do not want to embarrass him, I understand he has many difficulties, but I warn him that as he goes on he will find that not the least of these difficulties is the condition of the dairy industry, for on him will rest largely the responsibility of at least endeavouring to do something to redeem the promises so lavishly made by the Conservative party last July that the price of butter would go up. So I say that this is a very vital question, more vital than my hon. friends across the way regard it. They are treating it largely as a joke, but they will find that their constituents are not treating it as a joke. The milk producers, the patrons of the creameries, are not treating the butter situation as a joke.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You treated it as a joke when you made the Australian treaty in the first place, and you were so told.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have heard my hon. friend from Lincoln make a joke out of himself pretty often in this house, and I do not want to get into any controversy with him to-night.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Don't do it.

Mr. SANDERSON: But I am endeavouring to point out to the committee that this is an item that should be held up until the fullest possible information has been given by the minister and by the government. My hon. friends opposite say that the opposition are wasting the time of the house, that this item should be passed without further discussion. I have a distinct recollection two years ago, when most of my hon. friends across the way were sitting here, of their holding up the estimates of one minister for nineteen days. A dose of their own medicine is due to them now.

Mr. DUFF: They are getting it, too.

Mr. SANDERSON: The more they endeavour to obstruct the more we will keep this thing going.

An hon. MEMBER: Go ahead.

Mr. SANDERSON: A reference to Hansard will show that about as many hon. members from the government benches as from this side have taken part in the discussion.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): And said nothing.

Mr. SANDERSON: My hon. friend says they said nothing. They endeavoured to come to the assistance of the Minister of Agriculture, but in the judgment of those of us who sit here, and I think in the judgment of the people, instead of helping the minister they retarded progress. I see that my hon. friend from North Huron is getting sleepy. I should not like to interfere with any rest he may need. If he wants to go to sleep, well and good, but in conclusion I would like to say that hon. gentlemen opposite, and members of the government, may think that after this item passes—and doubtless it will pass some time—the butter question will be over and forgotten. I do not think it will make any difference whether an election comes in one year, two years, three or four years; the butter question will not be forgotten by the people of Canada, along with all the other broken promises made by hon. members who now occupy the government benches.

Mr. VALLANCE: Mr. Chairman, I was pleased when the Minister of Agriculture rose in his place as soon as he possibly could after the dinner hour and announced what was to be the policy of this government in connection with dairying. I am not holding the minister responsible for all that happened during the election; I do not wish to hash over all that was said by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, but one thing is quite apparent to this house and to the country. It is this: One of the outstanding issues during the election was the dairy industry, and I was pleased—and I may say quite frankly I am somewhat sympathetic to the Minister of Agriculture in the policy he has announced—to hear the statement by the minister. However, I think we should investigate this matter and see just how far it will be possible for the minister to carry out the policy he has enunciated.

First of all, the minister says we must make it possible for the farmer to produce his dairy products as cheaply as possible. Let us see, Mr. Chairman, what happened at the special session of parliament last year. The budget was brought down on September 17, and I should like to refer to some of the tariff provisions of that budget, from which hon. members will be able to judge whether it is possible for the dairy industry to operate more cheaply to-day than it could before that budget was brought down. There are several things which enter into the manufacture of butter. First of all, you must have the implements of cultivation in order to grow your feed, and the more cheaply you can buy these implements the more cheaply you will be able to produce butter. So I should like to draw the attention of the committee to some changes made in the tariff during that special session. In order to grow feed you must cultivate your soil; those of us who have any knowledge of farming will agree with that statement, so that more cheaply we can buy these implements of cultivation, the more cheaply we will be able to produce butter.

I refer first to item 409b, which covers such implements as cultivators, harrows, seed drills, horse rakes and so on. Under the old tariff the British preference was free, the intermediate tariff was 10 per cent, and the general tariff 10 per cent. What happened when this budget was brought down on the 17th of September of last year? True, the British preference is still free, but the intermediate tariff is 15 per cent, an increase of 100 per cent, and the general tariff, which under the old schedule was 10 per cent, went up to 25 per cent. So the farmers and dairymen now must pay more for those implements I have mentioned. Then we come to ploughs.

Mr. MULLINS: Will the hon. member mention—

Mr. VALLANCE: I will mention all I want to mention, and after that my hon. friend can mention what he wishes.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): You do not know.

Mr. VALLANCE: I do not know what? If the hon. member has anything to ask me about this subject I shall be glad to answer him.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): What about the duties previously?

Mr. VALLANCE: We will go on to item 409c, which has to do with ploughs, and so on. The British preference was free, the intermediate tariff 10 per cent and the general tariff 10 per cent. What do we find to-day? We find that the British Preference is still free but that the intermediate tariff has gone up to 15 per cent, an increase of 50 per cent, while the general tariff has been raised to 25 per cent. This must mean an increased cost of production; there is no getting away from it. It must be so, and I wish I had on my desk now a comparison showing the retail prices to the farmer from the catalogues of 1930, and the prices of 1931. I believe they would show, in spite of the statement made by the Prime Minister that there would be no increase in prices, that those increased prices prevail to-day.

Now let us take the next item, which includes other articles of farm machinery such as harvesters, combinations, threshing machines and so on, including the motive power incorporated therein. The British preference was free, the intermediate tariff 6 per cent and the general tariff 6 per cent. Now we find that while the British preference is still free the intermediate tariff has jumped to 15 per cent, and the general tariff to 25 per cent. I would say to the Minister of Agriculture that before the budget comes down on Monday, if he wants to make it possible for the farmer or the dairyman to produce his butter more cheaply, he had better see the Minister of Finance and make sure that some of these items are changed.

Then the minister goes on to say that he is going to send this question to the agriculture committee, in order that the committee may investigate and recommend to the house—and to the government, I suppose—just how they propose to deal with this matter. This question was an issue during the last election. Every candidate of whom I knew anything at all, and all the pamphlets I read emanating from the Conservative party, said they would solve this problem over night. As I said before, I am not blaming the Minister of Agriculture, because I suppose when the election started he had no more notion of becoming Minister of Agriculture than any other candidate, but to-day his party are sitting on the treasury benches just because of these promises. Now they propose to throw the responsibility on the agriculture committee, and I do not think the responsibility belongs there. It should rest with the government.

I said at the beginning that I was in sympathy with the policy outlined by the minister, and I believe he is trying to do the best he can.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. VALLANCE: Yes, I think he is trying to do the best he can, but still the responsibility does not belong to the agriculture committee; it belongs to the government. The minister also says we should deal with marketing. I do not think marketing is much of a problem to-day; it is markets we need, and we do not require to go into the methods of marketing. I say again that the responsibility should not rest on the agriculture committee, but on the government.

Mr. PORTEOUS: Mr. Chairman, hon. members sitting to your left have made reflections on the intelligence of the rural electorate in regard to the last election, inasmuch as they have stated that the rural people were stampeded or herded into voting for the Conservative candidate. I very much resent those reflections, and I am sure hon. members opposite do not wish to have those statements go back to the people in their constituencies. The people in the rural districts are intelligent; they vote as intelligently as any other class of people. They weighed the issues at stake during the last election, and they decided very strongly in favour of the Conservative policy.

For two days we have been listening to figures quoted in this house in connection with this item. We know that many newspapers contained figures, during the last election campaign, carried in display advertisements, in an endeavour to make the farmers believe the dairy industry was on a profitable basis, but the farmers did not believe it. The policy of the last administration was responsible for some 50,000,000 pounds of butter coming into the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Forty-one.

Mr. PORTEOUS: Well, we will say 41,000,000. But it was the last administration that brought about the Australian trade treaty, and it was that administration that passed the order in council with reference to New Zealand. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the farmers of this country did not know what the policy of the Liberal party was in this respect, and to-day the people know just as little about that policy. The Liberal members of this house are afraid to say that they are in favour of the Australian trade treaty and the New Zealand order in council, and they are equally afraid to express any disapproval of those trade agreements.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Has either my hon. friend or the present government any definite policy in regard to Australian trade?

Mr. PORTEOUS: We certainly have.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is it?

Mr. PORTEOUS: We are not in favour of any undue competition in agriculture.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is the government's policy?

Mr. PORTEOUS: Wait until I get through, if you wish to speak.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Criticize it when it comes down.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): In five years' time?

Mr. PORTEOUS: It was not so much that hon. gentlemen opposite had a bad policy as that they had no policy at all. And they have none to-day. We have heard a good deal about election promises, and I will agree with hon. members opposite, that election promises had much to do with the defeat of the last administration. But it was election promises that were made to the farmers of this country prior to the election of 1926, and which were never fulfilled.

Mr. DONNELLY: What were they?

Mr. PORTEOUS: I could name them.

Mr. DONNELLY: Do.

Mr. PORTEOUS: Some are in connection with the tariff.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What, for instance?

Mr. PORTEOUS: They promised to reduce the tariff on farm implements and they never did it. The price of farm implements went up.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): When?

Mr. PORTEOUS: The hon. member for South Battleford, I believe, has made the statement that the tariff which was put on in the emergency session has increased the cost of production. How did it increase that cost? It never increased the cost of farm implements; how, therefore, could it increase the cost of production?

Mr. VALLANCE: Wait until the budget comes down and we will produce evidence from catalogues.

Mr. ROSS: Wait and see.

Mr. BROWN: We are ready for the budget.

Mr. PORTEOUS: Notwithstanding what the ex-Minister of Agriculture has said, I have had as much to do with the dairy industry and have milked as many cows for my age as any man in this house, and I have also been engaged to some extent in the retailing of milk. I think, therefore, that I know as much about the subject as any hon. member opposite. Now, I should like to test the sincerity of the hon. member for Weyburn, who moved the amendment. I do not believe he is sincere, nor do I think hon. gentlemen to the left of the Chairman are sincere enough to support that amendment. This matter has been under discussion two days. Surely it is time the committee decided it. If the hon. member for Weyburn is sincere, let him persuade his party to permit the amendment to be voted upon; if not, let him withdraw it.

Mr. GRAY: On Tuesday last, as reported at page 1997 of Hansard, the self-styled onion king of this house, the hon. member for South Essex, who, I regret to say, is not in his place, said:

> Mr. Gott: I would like to say to the Minister of Agriculture that one recommendation made by the National Dairy Council of Canada has meant thousands upon thousands of dollars to the onion growers of Essex county.

A little further on he said:

> A year ago, through the recommendation of the National Dairy Council of Canada, the Minister of National Revenue took occasion to protect onions.

In the county I have the honour to represent, as well as in the county of Essex, there are a large number of onion growers. Now I would ask, seeing that we are discussing an item of $5,000 for the National Dairy Council: What possible connection is there between the National Dairy Council and the onion industry of southwestern Ontario? At the same time I should be glad if the minister would inform the committee whether the National Dairy Council did make such a recommendation as indicated by the hon. member for South Essex.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No recommendation was made that I am aware of.

Mr. McPHEE: I think I should put myself on record in connection with this matter. I am glad that the minister has intimated that no one and no government was to blame for the condition of the butter business when he took office. This is somewhat different from what we heard during the last political campaign. I speak with a certain amount of interest with reference to this item of $5,000 for the National Dairy Council, inasmuch as my opponent in the last election was a representative from Saskatchewan of the National Dairy Council, and he is to-day one of the beneficiaries of this vote. He was the candidate opposing me in the last election and he was heralded by the Conservative party and the Conservative press in the district as the representative of the National Dairy Council of Canada, a man who had considerable knowledge of the dairy business. During the election he spread the propaganda that the only salvation of the dairy business in Canada was the return to power of the present government. He talked about New Zealand butter and he spread it half a foot thick over the whole district, over every platform in the district, so that it was almost impossible for one even to stand, to say nothing of sitting on the platform. He made the statement that if the present government got into office, immediately—it was not a question of days or weeks but immediately—the price of butter would go up in this country without any reference of the matter to a committee on agriculture to devise ways and means of obtaining a market. Not only that, but he told the farmers of the district, on the platform and through the press and in canvassing, that if the present government were returned to power the farmers would immediately get more for their butter fat. And he was manager of a creamery company which is one of the beneficiaries of this vote. In the cream cans returned to the farmers of the district would be the Conservative propaganda and the National Dairy Council propaganda in connection with this matter of butter.

What has been the result of all this election talk about New Zealand butter? Fortunately for me the farmers of my constituency were possibly somewhat more alert than those in other districts, because my vote was increased instead of being decreased. But what are the facts? Never before in the history of western Canada have the farmers received less for their butter fat than they are doing to-day. The price is from 10 to 12 cents a pound less than it was previous to July 28th last. In my district I saw butter sold at two pounds for 25 cents not more than a month ago.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Dairy butter?

Mr. McPHEE: Yes, dairy butter; I did not say creamery butter. But the facts are that in the last election in western Canada the only platform of the Conservative party was the slippery one of New Zealand butter, and to-day they must suffer the consequences. Never before in the history of the western provinces has butter sold for less, and never before have the farmers of western Canada received less for their butter fat than they are doing to-day.

Mr. GORDON: What is the reason for that?

Mr. McPHEE: That is for the government to find out. The fact is that my hon. friends obtained power because they spread the propaganda that if the Conservative party were returned to office they would immediately increase the price of butter and the price paid to the farmer for butter fat.

Mr. GORDON: Oh, no.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I had not intended to take part in this discussion, had it not been for one or two statements made by the Minister of Agriculture with reference to the prices of butter. Let me refer to page 2001 of Hansard of May 26, where the minister is reported as saying:

> When the present government came into power the price in Canada was 28 to 28·5 cents per pound. At the same time the price of butter in the United States was 35·25 to 35·50 cents per pound—

And so on. Then he went on to say:

> On March 17, 1931, the price of butter in Canada was 31 cents a pound, and in the United States, 29·75.

He was evidently endeavouring to show that the tariff increase imposed was responsible for the price of butter. I do not know where he got his figures with regard to butter being 28 to 28.5 cents per pound, or a spread of 7 cents per pound between Canada and the United States, when the present government came into power. During the election campaign the butter question was a live one in my constituency, as apparently it was in every part of Canada. I had occasion to be right at the border about the latter part of June or the first part of July of last year, and I took occasion to ascertain the price of butter on each side of the line, at North Portal, Saskatchewan, and at Portal, North Dakota. I was amazed to find that the price in Canada was about one cent higher than it was in Portal, North Dakota. There was a tariff of 12 cents per pound on butter coming from New Zealand or any other country into the United States. Therefore in June and July of last year the price in western Canada was as high as if not a little higher than it was across the line in the United States. Possibly in the eastern part of Canada conditions were somewhat different; there was probably more of a spread between the prices on both sides of the line. But that was the condition of things that existed in the west just at that particular time.

In connection with the statement that was made with regard to the prices of butter on March 17, 1931, when the spread, as stated by the minister, became narrower, being only two cents, the minister later admitted that it was butter selected by the inspectors in Montreal and shipped to the old country market that obtained that price. If that be true—and that is what the minister said yesterday—it is of little or no consequence to our farmers in western Canada and, I presume, in other parts of Canada as well. As the hon. member for Willow Bunch said yesterday, our people who are a long distance from the railway stations, from creameries, are making dairy butter, and last winter—and from letters I have received, the same condition applies to-day—they were very fortunate if they got rid of their dairy butter at all. If they did get rid of it, it was only at a price of about 12 cents a pound. They have been told on more than one occasion by the merchants in the town they cannot handle the dairy butter and to take it home.

Another rather remarkable statement made by the minister was to the effect that the increase in the tariff imposed by the present government put $2,000,000 into the pockets of the Canadian butter producers. Would the minister care to go out into the constituency which he represents—because I think conditions there are very much the same as they are in mine—and inform the farmers who have been told to take their butter home because of there being no market for it, that the policy of the government has put $2,000,000 into the pockets of the dairymen of this country? I wonder if the minister would go to his constituency and tell the people out there that such is the case. He said it yesterday, and I should like to know whether he really meant it.

I should like to ask the minister one or two other questions. What are the qualifications of the officers he has appointed for the inspection of dairy products? He said that two or three officials of the department had been discharged since he took office. I should like to know who those officials are and why they were discharged.

Another question that has aroused a good deal of comment among the people generally is the release of Australian butter last April. I am rather curious to know what representations were made to the government in that connection by any person, firm or corporation. Were representations made by firms which were exporting their manufactured products to Australia, asking the government to release this butter coming from that country in order to help trade between this country and that?

The hon. member for Saskatoon spoke about Mr. W. A. Wilson, the dairy commissioner in England, and said that the government had discharged him. Will the minister tell us whether Mr. Wilson has been discharged or not?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I am not certain that I can remember all the questions my hon. friend has put, but I shall answer the ones I can recall and ask him to repeat any which I have overlooked. I am informed that no official has been discharged from the dairy branch. I do not know the exact qualifications for an inspector of this branch, but there are printed application forms setting them out, I believe, which I shall be glad to submit to the hon. member. As far as Mr. Wilson is concerned, he is still in the employ of the government.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Were representations made to the government regarding the release of Australian butter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No representations were made.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Not of any kind?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Not that I am aware of.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): This afternoon I asked the minister a question. He stated yesterday in the house that the Australian butter was released as a result of a price-cutting war in the city of Vancouver. He said this afternoon that it was released in April. He had stated two days previously that there was an understanding that Australia would not release butter on the Canadian market under 32 cents a pound. I asked the minister this afternoon if he could inform the committee as to what price the Australian butter was sold on the Canadian market. I should also like to know if that butter was disposed of in the city of Vancouver alone, or was retailed through other industrial centres in the dominion.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In reply to the first question, I do not think I made the statement that the butter was released as a result of a price-cutting war.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I understood so.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I have not the information as to where the butter was sold or at what price it sold, but I shall be very glad to get that information if I can.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Thank you.

Mr. BOULANGER: I am not going to talk about butter, although a great deal was said about it in my county during the last election. My opponent, being a druggist from the city of Quebec, was, of course, well qualified to speak on butter, farm implements and agriculture generally, and he took full advantage of his opportunity. I want to speak with respect to a matter which was brought up, I think, by my hon. friend from Assiniboia, and I want to refer to the answer given to his question by the minister. The minister said, if I understood him aright, that nobody connected with the dairy inspection branch of his department was dismissed for political partisanship. I am sure that the minister answered in good faith, and that he must have overlooked the case of a dismissal in my constituency. I think the minister will recall that case because I made as strong representations as I could to him in order to induce him to keep that man in the service. I refer to Mr. Caius Lacroix, of St. Michel, Bellechasse county, whose official position was that of supervisor of dairy products for the federal Department of Agriculture. He was dismissed on a complaint of political partisanship, laid by my defeated opponent, and after an inquiry had been made.

Mr. Lacroix is one of our best farmers, and was one of the most advanced and progressive agriculturists in our section of the country. I do not think it is fair for the minister to select that type of man, a well-qualified educated farmer, as the victim of a charge of political partisanship. To penalize farmers who have taken special pains to fit themselves for positions in which they can help their colleagues is not the way to encourage the farmers on the development of agriculture. Mr. Lacroix has been prominent in farming organizations in our section of the country for years. He is a pioneer in the raising of pure bred stock, having established fine herds of Ayrshire cows, Oxford Down sheep, Yorkshire pigs and Percheron horses. In 1924 he organized the Dairy Syndicate of St. Michel, of which he was secretary for four years. In 1922 he helped to reorganize the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of Bellechasse county, of which he is still secretary. In 1930 he organized the Cooperative Syndicate of Bellechasse for the production and sale of the best grade of potatoes, and he is the manager of that syndicate. He is also the manager of the Mutual Fire Insurance Society of St. Michel. For years he has been the correspondent, without remuneration, of the Department of Trade and Commerce and of the Department of Agriculture, furnishing free of charge statistics concerning agriculture and the trade in farm produce. This is the man who is selected as a victim in my county of the present government. This is how the government show their appreciation of the farmers and how they help the farmers in my section of the country.

This man was dismissed principally because he was poll clerk in one of the polls of St. Michel during the last election. That was the main accusation against him. Of course, the commissioner who held the inquiry heard a lot of witnesses who came and gave, not as a matter of evidence on specific facts, but as a matter of opinion, certain evidence. They gave their opinion that Mr. Lacroix was said to be the chief Liberal organizer in Bellechasse, and that he passed for such—all matters of opinion, nothing specific about it, no evidence. These people simply came before the commissioner and stated as their opinion that this man was a Liberal and therefore should be dismissed. But the only specific accusation against him, and the only evidence, was that he acted as poll clerk.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is not that enough?

Mr. BOULANGER: No, sir. The man who acts as poll clerk in a poll renders services to both parties. He is an election official. Some time ago I heard the Minister of Justice state in this house, in connection with a bill of the former Minister of Labour, that election officers were all appointed by the chief electoral officer, and that there was no politics at all in their appointment, and no political recommendation. If this is true there was no politics at all in the appointment of Mr. Lacroix as poll clerk in the parish of St. Michel in the last election. This man kept the books of the poll, and filled in the forms, and did nothing else. He did not influence anybody at the time of the election. I would ask the Minister of Justice or some other member of the cabinet to state whether it is a political offence, by which a man lays himself open to a charge of political partisanship, to be an election officer and try to conduct an election regularly. I should like to have the minister's opinion, and I should like also the protest against the dismissal of this progressive and educated farmer, who has rendered good service to the farmers of my county and of that section of the country, on such flimsy charges as were made against him.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In answer to the last part of my hon. friend's remarks I believe it has been ruled by officials of the Department of Justice that it is not an act of political partisanship for a civil servant to act as a returning officer, but that it is an act of political partisanship to act as scrutineer or agent for either of the candidates.

Mr. BOULANGER: He was poll clerk.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not know whether or not the poll clerk question has been decided.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is the same as a returning officer.

Mr. DUFF: A poll clerk is sworn to his duty. Would not the poll clerk be in the same position as the returning officer? Will the Minister of Justice give his opinion with regard to the poll clerk?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, later on.

Mr. DUFF: No, now.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not know that I am called upon at this particular instant to make a statement, unless I wish to.

Mr. DUFF: Oh, the minister does not have to. I suggest, however, that he started this discussion in the answer he gave to the hon. member for Bellechasse. The minister went out of his way to say that as far as the returning officer was concerned there was no political appointment. Certainly as Minister of Justice he should be in a position to say what position the poll clerk occupies. Of course, he does not have to do it. Like a number of other ministers of the government his mouth has been closed all session. In fact I think the Minister of Justice is in agreement with the hon. member who has just spoken.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I have not agreed.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Did the hon. member say that the person who was dismissed was in the dairy branch?

Mr. BOULANGER: Yes, he was supervisor of dairy products.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My information is that he was in the live stock branch, not in the dairy branch.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): According to the hon. member for Marquette there is no difference.

Mr. VENIOT: Last night I spoke about the butter question. I would not rise now to address the committee were it not for a statement made by the Minister of Agriculture about the policy of his department concerning the dairy industry in Canada. The minister has said that the policy of the government will be to endeavour to make production of the dairy industry as cheap as possible so that the producer may receive all possible benefit. I know I am not strictly in order when I touch upon the subject to which I am about to refer, but as the budget will be brought down on Monday next I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the tariff placed in September last on fertilizers. Under the present tariff, fertilizer ingredients brought into this country to be mixed for use as fertilizer are duty free, but if they are imported to be used separately in the dairy industry a duty of 2 or 2½ cents per pound is imposed. The dairy associations of the maritime provinces have petitioned the government to look further into this matter and to place those ingredients on the basis they occupied before the introduction of the tariff item in September, 1930. I have before me a letter from the president of the Nova Scotia Dairymen's Association. That association passed a resolution last January protesting against the increased duty, and arising out of that resolution I received this letter, the latter part of which I shall read:

> The tendency of the tariff will be to kill cooperation in buying by giving the commercial company the advantage of us. You cannot call them a manufacturing company, because they do not manufacture, they only blend. By cooperation for ten years we were able last year to purchase two tons of fertilizer for less money than one ton cost us ten years ago.

The letter goes on to say that if this duty obtains, certain companies will be established in Canada whose only object will be to import the ingredients separately and blend them in Canada. In the province of New Brunswick the farmers' cooperative associations, especially in the counties along the river St. John, have been in the habit of importing these ingredients and blending them to suit themselves. To-day, because of the increased tariff, there is a company established in St. John in the blending business. The establishment of this company will interfere with the cooperative activities of the dairy farmers in New Brunswick as well as with the operations of the potato growers. The dairymen import acid phosphate separate from all other ingredients. Acid phosphate is used as a top dressing after the seed has been sown and the plant has grown about five or six inches. When acid phosphate is imported separately a duty of 2 or 2½ cents per pound is imposed. Because of that duty the cost of production is increased to the dairy industry, and I now ask the minister to look into the matter. Fertilizer comes under the control of his department and if there is some way of amending the tariff item so that the farmers who import acid phosphate separate from other ingredients will not have to pay the duty of 2 or 2½ cents per pound their difficulties will be greatly relieved.

Before taking my seat I should like to put a couple of questions to the minister. I do not expect answers to-night, but I would ask him to prepare the information to be supplied after the budget is brought down on Monday. How many fertilizer ingredients are manufactured in Canada, and what quantities of ingredients for mixing purposes as fertilizers are imported? My second question is: How many mixing plants are there in Canada?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Could the hon. member let me have those questions?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, I shall.

Mr. DONNELLY: I wish to thank the Minister of Agriculture for having answered the questions I asked him before six o'clock. I wish further to thank him for having enunciated his policy in regard to the dairy producer, and especially for his remarks regarding the reduction of the costs of production. I wonder, however, how he intends to reduce the cost of production when he knows that in many parts of western Canada where mixed farming is practised the farms require fencing. I understand the government of which he is a member has placed a dumping duty on barbed wire so that we are paying a higher price for it than we did before. In western Canada the fencing problem is vital because in many parts of the west there is no lumber and the farmers find it necessary to buy barbed wire. When the price of barbed wire is raised the costs of dairy farming are raised. Since the government wishes to reduce the cost of production to western farmers I think they should not have been instrumental in raising the price of fencing.

Speaking this afternoon the former Minister of Agriculture referred to a report of the National Dairy Council. He referred especially to this part where Mr. Robinson said:

It was my privilege to join with Dean Barton of Macdonald college and Doctor Archibald of the Dominion experimental farms in the preparation of this report to the Minister of Agriculture.

Will the minister kindly tell the committee what this committee is doing. Is it still functioning?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I asked the committee to prepare a skeleton report that I might present it to a larger committee for a free discussion in connection with the whole matter.

Mr. DONNELLY: It has not reported yet?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Mr. BOTHWELL: We have had considerable discussion over the National Dairy Council grant which is included in this vote of $295,000. Last session a similar vote was passed without any information as to what other items were included in it. It is said that last year's vote included new buildings. What new buildings were built last year, and what does the vote cover this year?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No buildings were erected last year.

Mr. BOTHWELL: What is included in the vote of $295,000 in addition to the $5,000 we have heard so much about?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This is an estimate only. It is impossible to give details of the expenditure until the end of the year. Some of the expenses are as follows:

1. Headquarters—$17,800.

This includes printing and stationery and supplies for offices outside Ottawa. Contingencies of various kinds and the $5,000 grant to the dairy council.

2. Grading of Dairy Produce—$162,300.

This includes salaries and travelling expenses of dairy produce graders at Charlottetown, Halifax, Quebec, Montreal, Belleville, Toronto, Stratford, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Regina, Edmonton, Calgary, Vancouver.

In addition to these technical men there are a number of labourers employed and a clerical staff as well as some expenses in connection with the laboratory work needed to be done to help in the grading.

3. Cargo Inspection—$28,842.

This sum includes salaries and travelling expenses of 6 cargo inspectors, Montreal, and 5 in the United Kingdom, also cost and upkeep of thermographs and some incidental expenses. The work of these cargo inspectors is to see to it that proper care is taken in shipping our dairy produce under good conditions on steamers and to check up on the steamship companies both at shipping points and landing points.

4. Investigator—Weighing.
Butter and cheese—$2,800.
Salary and expenses.

5. Supervision of Condenseries—$3,860.

6. Dairy Market Reports—$4,785.
One inspector and expenses.

7. Refrigerator.
Car service.
Deficit on cars—$20,000.

Refrigerator car services for butter and cheese are operated by Canadian National Railways and Caandian Pacific Railway companies in Ontario and eastern provinces on condition that the department make up any deficits due to lack of sufficient business.

These deficits for this year are estimated at:
Butter—$11,500.
Cheese—$8,500.

8. Creamery Cold Storage Bonus—$4,500.

On condition that cold storage facilities acceptable to the department are provided in connection with creameries a grant of $100 is given to any creamery.

9. Plans—$200.

10. Dairy Research—$4,500.
This includes, laboratory supplies, raw material (butter, cheese, milk) and contingencies in connection with this work. Two technical men are employed.
11. Administration of Dairy Laws—$39,000.
This includes salaries of 10 inspectors and their travelling expenses as well as analysts' fees and counsel fees when prosecutions are necessary.
12. Milk Utilization Service—$6,200.
This amount includes costs of exhibits, express and freight charges to exhibitions, and costs in connection with special exhibits loaned to public health, nurses' and women's institutes.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Is the $100 granted to creameries to establish refrigeration facilities a continuation of an old policy or is it an innovation?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The policy has been in effect about twenty-five years.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): How soon can the minister supply me with the information I desire with regard to the price at which Australian butter was released on the markets of Canada after the 21st of April? Can he furnish that information next week, because I want to know the price at which Australian butter was dumped on the Canadian market when the agreement was released or relaxed.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I will get the information as quickly as I can.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): When was the grant of $5,000 first made to the National Dairy Council?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In 1923. It was $3,000 first and was later increased to $5,000.

Mr. McINTOSH: What is the approximate amount for printing included in the $5,000, and what is it for?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): That was under the heading "headquarters—$17,800." It includes printing, stationery and supplies for offices outside Ottawa, contingencies of various kinds, and the $5,000 grant to the dairy council.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): When the Australian butter was released on the Canadian markets, did the department take steps to ensure that any special marks or brands were attached to the butter to differentiate it from Canadian butter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We did not take any action different from that taken with respect to any other Australian butter brought into the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The consumer did not know what grade of butter he was buying?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Not as far as I know.

Mr. McINTOSH: In connection with the grant of $5,000 to the dairy council, it was stated from this side of the house this afternoon more than once that some of the money was being used for propaganda purposes.

I think those statements are very important, and will command a great deal of interest throughout the country. It would seem to me that before we vote this $5,000 to the dairy council for the furtherance of its work during the ensuing year, it should be definitely understood that none of this money is to be used in any part of Canada in the distribution of political propaganda. There seems to be an impression abroad throughout Canada—I know this to be the case in Saskatchewan and western Canada—that the dairy council carried on a political campaign in 1930. I am not saying whether or not that was so, but my point is that now it is up to the dairy council, if it is to work for the good of the dairy industry; if it is to get the cooperation it should get; if it is to carry on the organization work it should carry on and help build up this very important industry, definitely to clear its skirts with regard to the statements made from this side of the house this afternoon. Either the dairy council has used some of this money for political purposes or it has not. If it has not done so it will be good news to the farmers and the dairy interests of Canada, generally speaking, and that question should be cleared up.

I should like to impress upon the minister the importance of taking up this question personally with the dairy council. I am under the impression that this council has an executive, on which are representatives of all the provinces of Canada. Am I correct?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There are thirty-three members, from whom the executive is selected.

Mr. McINTOSH: Then it is a typical national organization, and I should like to see the minister take up personally with the executive this question which has been raised, placing before the executive the debate which has taken place in parliament. I think the minister should impress upon the executive the significance of these remarks, and ask them to make the necessary explanation, not only to parliament but to the country as a whole, as to their position in this regard. I am sure if that question is cleared up, in future this vote will not have to undergo the gruelling fire it has been subjected to during the last two or three days. While the charge is hanging over the National Dairy Council that they have been implicated in political work and linked up with one political party as opposed to the other political party in Canada, I believe the first duty of the minister is forthwith to place before that council this whole debate and ask them to make the necessary explanation to parliament and to the country.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Mr. Chairman, this is a very important question, but before dealing with it I should like to say a word in regard to a question of very serious moment to the dairy industry of the province of Ontario and of the dominion as a whole. I refer to the question raised by the hon. member for South Perth as to the mergers being formed in connection with this industry. Let me read an associated press report, as follows:

Huge Milk Merger Involving Millions Finally Completed

Tillsonburg, January 23, 1930.

The amalgamation of several of the world's largest milk products firms was officially announced here to-night by A. H. Terk, General Superintendent of the Canadian Milk Products Company, Limited. Included in the combine are the Borden Milk Company of Canada, and the United States; the Merrill-Soule Company of England, and the United States and the subsidiary companies of both firms in the United States and Canada.

Although full details in connection with the merger, the largest of its kind to be consummated, were not available to-night, the amalgamation is understood to involve millions of dollars.

The Canadian Milk Products Company, of which Mr. Terk is head, is one of the subsidiary units of the Merrill-Soule Company. In an interview the official said that the Canadian company will continue as a separate unit, and will be, as in the past, a subsidiary of the major company.

Confirmed in Toronto

Benjamin J. Gould of Toronto, President of the Canadian Milk Products Co., Vice-President of the Merrill-Soule Company, confirmed the report when questioned by The Globe last night.

He intimated that while the final official completion of the merger had not been brought about that the amalgamation of the various milk products companies was really settled some days ago.

Mr. Gould was unwilling to go into the details of the merger or divulge the amount of money involved. "It simply means," said he of the despatch, "that we have sold our business."

I should like to quote another extract from the Toronto Globe of March 29, 1930:

The Borden Company has completed negotiations for acquiring seven additional companies, according to the application for listing 44,955 additional shares of its common stock on the New York stock exchange, approved.

The companies include Walkerside Dairy, Limited; Windsor City Dairy Limited; Ballantyne Dairies, Limited, and the assets of W. T. Westgate, all of Canada; the Hildebrecht Ice Cream Company of Trenton, N.J.; the Dairy Products Company of Dayton, Ohio, and Curran and Fox of Oak Park, Ill.

Walkerside Dairy, Limited, operates thirty-two milk routes in Windsor, Ont., and the Borden Company is paying 14,000 shares for its entire issued stock. The business of the other companies and the shares to be paid for them are: Windsor City Dairy, Limited, milk, butter and eggs, Windsor, Ont., 7,250 shares; Ballantyne Dairies, Limited, 20 routes for distributing milk, butter and eggs, in East Windsor, Ontario, 2,745 shares; W. T. Westgate, wholesale ice cream manufacturer and distributor in Windsor and East Windsor, 3,250 shares; Hildebrecht Ice Cream Company, wholesale ice cream manufacturer and distributor, 7,000 shares; the Dairy Products Company, general dairy business in and around Dayton, 8,000 shares, and Curran and Fox, retail milk business in Oak Park, Ill., 2,350 shares.

The remaining 360 shares in the listing application are for brokerage commissions in connection with certain acquisitions.

From information I have received from one source and another during the last eighteen months I feel this to be a question of extreme importance to the dairy interests of this country. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Agriculture said this afternoon that since we are on an export basis, many of these units may not be producing that quality of product which is necessary if we are to ship our goods to the British market, and he suggested that possibly it would be an advantage to the dairy industry if our units were larger than they are at the present time. However, with respect to these mergers I think the government, and particularly the Department of Agriculture, should gather all the information available before anything is done along the lines suggested by the ex-Minister of Agriculture.

With respect to the grant to the National Dairy Council, I would not think of saying anything at all against the officials of that organization. I have known the secretary of the council for at least thirty-five years. I believe it is at least that long since he and I went around the province of Ontario together attending meetings of farmers' institutes, and I have always found him to be a gentleman of honour and ability. I have discussed this matter with him time after time, and always I have taken the stand which I have taken also in my discussions with the ex-Minister of Agriculture. When he said this afternoon that he would not be bottled up any longer, I thought the time had come for someone to remove the cork from his opinions. A year ago there was considerable divergence of opinion on the part of hon. members opposite when they occupied this side of the house during the debate on the grant. I had discussed the matter with the then Minister of Agriculture in his own office, and I even came forward and sat beside him and asked him for God's sake to withdraw the vote when he had an opportunity to do so. But he is like some of the rest of us: when he gets an opinion into his head it is pretty hard to move him.

With respect to this grant, it is my opinion that no money should be given from the treasury of this country to any institution of this kind. Besides the National Dairy Council of Canada, I believe there is only one other organization in this country which has shown its hand before the tariff board, and we might with the same degree of freedom suggest that similar grants be made from the treasury of Canada to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association or the consumers league. In my view, no institution which is receiving government money should be given the opportunity to spend it in that way. I discussed the matter with the officials and they told me that they would be unable to carry on their work if it were not for the grant. At that time, according to my information, they were working in the manner outlined by the ex-Minister of Agriculture, in an effort to abolish the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. And they were not getting a grant from the government.

The statement has been made that no hon. member on this side of the house will dare to rise in his place and express himself as favourable to the late Australian agreement. That agreement, I may say, was in force when I came to this house as the member for South Huron, and I came here with a feeling of prejudice against the agreement in its effect upon the dairy industry of Canada. It was only after my coming here, and when the discussion became heated, that I decided to study the whole question for myself; and when it was known that I was engaged in that study no one was more interested than the Minister of Finance of that day, the late Hon. J. A. Robb. At the first opportunity he had of meeting me after that he asked my opinion about the treaty. It happened to be the day I had completed my study of the situation. Of course, his first question was, "What is your opinion?" I had been able to get all the information that was available from any source and I told him that up to that time the Australian agreement, in my opinion, had not been injurious to the dairy industry of Canada. And I stand here to-night and say the same thing. Repeatedly I have placed on Hansard the figures for each year, showing the effects of that agreement. Those figures I believe to be authentic. After my study of the matter had been completed I received a letter from the dairy commissioner, congratulating me upon the result of my investigation. He said that no one needed to go behind the facts which were disclosed in the speech I made as reported in Hansard on the 7th of June, 1928. And up to the opening of this house on March 12, neither the information contained in that address nor the information contained in the speech I delivered, as reported in Hansard of March 18, 1930, has ever been questioned on the floor of the house. No one can study the markets of Great Britain and question the facts as I have outlined them. Great Britain is the world market; it has always been the great world market; and before the introduction of the Australian agreement it was the great price-regulating market of the world. Watch the British market from that day to this; watch it during the year 1931; consult the reports contained in the commercial intelligence pamphlets; take all these facts into consideration and you will find that during the year 1930 the dairy industry in Great Britain was in anything but a satisfactory condition. And the only reason why Australian and New Zealand butter has been coming into this country is that those dominions realized that it was the best market they could find. They could take their butter cheaper to Great Britain than they could bring it here, and it would certainly go there if the price were better than in Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When the committee resumed at eight o'clock we were in hopes that we should be able to get this vote through and possibly the next one. But the minister has made a statement this evening which makes it impossible for the item to go through. He said that he did not wittingly withhold any information from the committee. The whole difficulty consisted in the different parties securing their figures from different sources. Well, for four days we have been endeavouring to get certain information, and the hon. gentleman is not conscious of having wittingly withheld it. Has he been in a trance all these four days, that he did not know what he wanted?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is nearly eleven o'clock. I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Very good; that will suit me.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, June 1, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

BARDER DIVORCE BILL

The clerk of the house laid on the table the report of the clerk of petitions stating that he has examined the following petition presented on the 29th day of May, and finds that the time for receiving petitions for private bills under standing order 92 having expired, it should not be received:

Of Annie Bick Barder, of Montreal, Quebec, now residing in London, England; praying for the passing of an act to declare her marriage with Kenneth C. Barder, of Montreal, to be dissolved and that she be divorced from him.—Mr. Heaps.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): moved:

That the petition of Annie Bick Barder, of Montreal, Quebec, now residing in London, England, praying for a bill of divorce from Kenneth C. Barder, of Montreal, together with the report of the clerk of petitions thereon, be referred to the select standing committee on standing orders for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing order 92 in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

J. ARTHUR BERNIER

SUPPLEMENTARY RETURN TO ORDER OF THE HOUSE

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (Minister of National Revenue): Referring to the inquiry on Thursday last of the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis), concerning return No. 277, the return as brought down includes a copy of all the documents on the official departmental record relative to the retirement of Mr. J. A. Bernier, inspector of customs and excise at Montreal. On making inquiry, however, it has been ascertained that the chief inspector was advised verbally and confidentially that Inspector Bernier's expense accounts were inaccurate, and in order to ascertain the facts the chief inspector instructed Inspector C. E. Lafontaine by letter to make a confidential investigation. A copy of the chief inspector's letter and of Inspector Lafontaine's confidential reply are now produced.

The officials who prepared the return had no knowledge of the correspondence on the chief inspector's file.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF RIGHT HON. R. B. BENNETT, MINISTER OF FINANCE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving that you do now leave the chair for the purpose of enabling the house to resolve itself into a committee of ways and means to make good the supply to be granted to His Majesty for the twelve months ending March 31, 1932, I will follow the traditional practice of making a general survey of the financial and business operations of the Dominion during the last fiscal year. I will also indicate the ways and means which the government proprose to utilize in providing the necessary revenues to meet the appropriations made by Parliament. I shall discuss these matters under five heads:

1. The financial operations of the Dominion for the fiscal year, April 1, 1930, to March 31, 1931.

2. The balance sheet of the Dominion on March 31 last showing assets active and nonactive and liablities direct and indirect.

3. Trade and commerce.

4. The estimated revenue and expenditures for the twelve months ending March 31, 1932.

5. The ways and means which will be adopted for the purpose of providing the necessary revenues to meet the proposed expenditures.

[Mr. Cahan.]

FINANCIAL OPERATIONS DURING FISCAL YEAR 1930-31

The period of national financing under review is the twelve months from April 1, 1930, to March 31, 1931. This was a period of sluggish commercial activity, with commodity prices steadily declining throughout the world. The consequences are shown in the Dominion's balance sheet, for eighty-three per cent of the consolidated fund receipts in 1930-31 was derived from taxation, the major portion being obtained by ad valorem assessments on the monetary value of business transacted. Therefore, the revenue collections from every tax, with one exception, were substantially less than in the preceding year. The exception was the income tax, where the assessment was on earnings and profits made in the calendar year 1929. To find a parallel to the revenues in the past fiscal year, it is necessary to turn back ten years to the fiscal year 1921-22, and in that year the revenues were $26,000,000 greater than the collections in the past fiscal year.

On the expenditure side, comparatively little advantage could be taken of declining commodity prices. This is due to the fact that fixed and uncontrollable charges constitute so large a proportion of the expenditures. The interest on the national debt was over 121 millions; war pensions amounted to 46 millions, and other uncontrollable expenditures absorbed an additional $36,895,000. To these may be added the cost of civil government and other services where a somewhat lengthy time lag exists before declining commodity prices are reflected in reduced costs. These services involved an expenditure of 78 millions. In other words, 282 millions were expended during the year without the government gaining any offsetting advantages from the causes which brought about such substantial decreases in revenues.

Taxation Revenues

The major source of Canadian revenue is the customs tariff which last year produced 131 millions of dollars. This was 48 millions less than in the preceding year. A study of the imports of Canada during the period indicates that there was a substantial decline in the importations of nearly all commodities. One of the chief sources of customs revenue is the duty collected on alcoholic beverages, and in the year under review the revenue thus derived was 20 millions, as compared with 25 millions in the preceding year.

Recently our customs receipts have shown less fluctuation and the daily decreases are not so substantial as in the last fiscal year, when the monthly decreases, as compared with the previous year were:

Month	Decrease
April, 1930	$3,591,000
May	5,300,000
June	2,884,000
July	4,356,000
August	4,919,000
September	3,115,000
		$24,165,000
October	6,408,000
November	4,117,000
December	3,424,000
January, 1931	2,687,000
February	3,766,000
March period	3,653,000
		24,055,000
		$48,220,000

The decrease during the first six months of the fiscal year was $24,165,000; during the last six months of the fiscal year it was $24,055,000.

It will be recalled that the tariff changes made at the special session came into effect during September although in certain cases, where uncompleted contracts were outstanding, the new rates were not levied until several weeks later. A comparison of the customs revenue for the two six-months' periods has this significance, that the changes did not make any material reduction in the receipts during the two six-months' periods of the year.

Excise Duties.

The excise duties are largely assessments on alcoholic beverages and tobaccos manufactured in Canada. The total collected during the year was $57,700,000. During the year excise collections on tobacco remained practically stationary at about 42 millions. Of the amount, duties on cigarettes produced $30,500,000. There was a decline of over $7,000,000 in excise duty collections on alcoholic beverages produced in Canada. On and after the 1st of July, 1930, clearances were denied to vessels having on board any intoxicating liquors destined for delivery in any country into which the importation of such liquor was prohibited. The enforcement of this law to a great extent explains the decline in the excise revenues.

Income Tax

The income tax ranks first in productivity amongst the war taxes and produced 71 millions in the year. As a matter of fact, this sum has been exceeded only once since its imposition and that was in the fiscal year 1921-22. It is a case of history repeating itself. The fiscal year 1922 was also a dark one in respect to total revenues, but income tax assessments were on the earnings and profits of 1920, the peak year of the post-war boom. In the past year total revenues were again reduced, but income tax assessments were levied on the earnings and profits of a peak year, that of the stock market boom. Of the $71,048,000 of income tax collected, $26,600,000 was paid by individuals and $44,400,000 by corporations. In the fiscal year 1921-22, when $78,600,000 was received, individuals paid $39,820,000 and corporations $38,863,000.

Sales Tax

No tax more quickly reflected the declining commodity prices than did the sales tax. The shrinkage in the volume of business transacted, coupled with the decrease in values, made it apparent at the beginning of the calendar year 1930 that with business shrinking and sales contracting, the sales tax could not be depended upon to produce revenue to the same degree as in the previous year. This loss, instead of being compensated by an increase in the rate when the budget was brought down on May 1st, 1930, was aggravated by the rate being reduced from 2 per cent to 1 per cent. The result was a decline of over 24 millions in sales tax revenues during the year under review, the collections being somewhat over 20 millions, as compared with 44 millions in the previous year. It is perhaps desirable to point out that a change has been made in the accounting methods this year in respect of sales tax. Commencing in the fiscal year 1924-25 the payments made in April by licensees on sales made in the old year were credited to the fiscal year then last ended. This practice was not in harmony with that followed in respect of other public revenues and has been discontinued. Had it been followed, the revenues from sales tax credited to 1930-31 would be approximately $1,700,000 greater.

Tax Summary

The other taxes represent small amounts, being, not infrequently, paid by the use of excise stamps, and are difficult to allocate. A statement of the revenue received from taxation for the last five years follows:

	1926-27	1927-28	1928-29 (000 omitted)	1929-30	1930-31

Public Service Revenues

The sum of $53,000,000 was collected by way of revenues from public services maintained by the government. The main contributor was the Post Office Department. The gross collections for postal services were $37,500,000 and the net revenues $30,200,000. Compared with the previous year, there was a decrease of $3,100,000 in the net revenues. On the expenditure side the postal service costs were $36,300,000, an increase of $1,300,000. Therefore, the fiscal year ended with the Post Office Department showing a deficiency of $6,100,000. To achieve an absolute calculation of the department's operations, a substantial sum, representing the expenditures of the Public Works Department for equipment, buildings, maintenance, etc., necessary for the handling of mails throughout Canada, would have to be added. On the other hand, the department is entitled to a substantial credit for the handling of government mail.

Interest on investments realized $10,400,000. Of this, $2,000,000 was on sinking funds and $1,299,000 on loans to Roumania and Greece, which were made during the war period. The harbour commissions, other than Quebec, paid $3,492,000 in interest on the $88,600,000 loaned by the dominion to them. The major reduction in revenues under this group heading was in the interest paid by the chartered banks for advances under the Finance Act, although the amount collected was $15,000 in excess of the collections in 1928. In 1929-30 the banks paid $2,234,000, while in 1930-31 the payments were $539,000.

The transfer of the natural resources to the western provinces materially reduced revenue from dominion land, there being a decrease from $4,139,000 to $1,655,000 in the year under review.

A division of the 43 millions of revenues from the public services, by sources, is:—

[Mr. Bennett.]

The consolidated fund receipts may now be summarized. In the fiscal year just ended these amounted to $349,593,000, as compared with $441,411,000 in 1929-30. In other words, there was a decrease of $91,818,000.

Special Receipts

During the year certain special receipts came into the treasury which must be added before the total revenues for the year are given. The most important of these were the payments received on reparations, amounting to $6,500,000. This was a larger sum than had been received in the preceding year, due to the success of the German international 5½ per cent loan 1930 making it possible for the creditor countries to receive a cash payment on future reparations account. Canada's share thus acquired was $2,173,000. The acceptance of the plan involved the establishment by Canada of a small credit, amounting to $272,000, in the Bank of International Settlements. This has been done. The amount received on ordinary reparation account was $4,395,000.

Adding these special receipts to the consolidated fund, revenues for the year make a grand total of $356,215,000, as compared with $446,182,000 in the preceding year, a decrease of $90,000,000. A comparison of revenues for the past five fiscal years is:

EXPENDITURES

The past fiscal year was marked by substantial increases in the expenditures for the public service. Some of these increases were to provide for new services or undertakings, others were a consequence of statutory enactments causing greater demands to be made upon the treasury. Apart from certain expenditures in connection with unemployment relief, those incurred on authority of governor general's warrants and some items approved by parliament on the closing days of the fiscal year, all expenditures were incurred on the authority of the previous administration.

Ordinary Expenditures

Ordinary expenditures for the year were $394,000,000, as compared with $357,780,000 in the fiscal year 1929-30. This was an increase of $36,220,000, the more important items which show increases being:

Subsidies to provinces	$4,900,000
Department of Indian Affairs	700,000
Old age pension	4,100,000
Lighthouse and coastal services	500,000
Air services	1,225,000
War pensions	5,550,000
Treatment and after-care of veterans	1,280,000
Post Office	1,265,000
Public Works	5,640,000
Maritime Freight Rates Act	2,925,000
Department of Trade and Commerce	1,690,000
Unemployment relief	4,432,000

There was an increase in the subsidy paid to Manitoba of $4,970,027.62, as provided by legislation in connection with the transfer of natural resources to the province. The transfer of the natural resources made no change in the annual subsidy payments to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, although the dates of payments have been changed from March 1 and September 1 to January 1 and July 1.

The increase of expenditures, amounting to $700,000, in connection with the Department of Indian Affairs, falls under two heads. During the year $2,750,000 was spent in the construction of schools, which is $424,000 more than in the preceding year. For the relief of destitute Indians, the providing of hospitals and medical services, an additional $220,000 was expended.

The major increase in expenditures on account of old age pensions was due to larger payments being made in the province of Ontario. The act, during the fiscal year, applied to five provinces, and, in addition, small expenditures were made in the North West Territories. A statement of the expenditures, by provinces, is:

	1929-30	1930-31
Ontario	$ 355,829	$3,516,806
Manitoba	427,143	652,804
Saskatchewan	333,287	585,941
Alberta	62,555	320,225
British Columbia	357,801	580,804
North West Territories	558	1,562
	$1,537,173	$5,658,142

The increase of slightly over $500,000 in the lighthouse and coast services was mainly due to the purchase of a lighthouse boat to be used in connection with the St. Lawrence river channel. The expenditures on that account, together with the purchase and erection of new lights, amounted to $480,000.

The increase of over $1,200,000 in air services falls under three headings. In connection with air services generally there was an increase of $394,000: for civil air services $387,000, and for air mail routes $494,000. The sum of $180,000 was expended in connection with the airport at Trenton, Ontario, and the establishment of new air mail routes made it necessary to establish and maintain new landing fields at various points throughout Canada. Other expenditures, due to increased use being made of the services of the air division, involved greater expenditures for supplies and equipment and also made it necessary to increase the personnel.

There is a unanimous sentiment that Canada shall provide adequately for those who served and suffered during the war, and annually the amount expended on account of pensions and after-care of veterans increases. In the year under review pension payments increased $5,558,000, and after-care accounts by $1,280,000, thus making a total expenditure on these two accounts of over 55 millions in the year under review. Since the outbreak of hostilities the dominion has paid $460,000,000 on account of European war pensions, and 182 millions for treatment and after-care of returned soldiers. In addition, sundry expenditures on account of soldier land settlement adminstration, battlefield memorials, the Imperial War Graves Commission, etc., amount to $29,000,000. These items of expenditure reached a grand total of $671,000,000 to the close of the fiscal year.

The increase of expenditures amounting to $1,265,000 on post office account may be divided into three groups. Approximately $322,000 was expended in settling overdue accounts with the printing bureau. These overdue accounts had accumulated over a series of years, and at the close of the fiscal year a supplementary estimate was authorized by parliament to bring the accounts into balance. An increase of $570,000 in expenditures was due to the extension of air mail services, and $375,000 was spent in salary increases, mainly to those in the outside service.

The expenditures on ordinary account by the Public Works department were $5,600,000 in excess of the expenditures in the previous year. Of this, the additional expenditures in connection with the erection and improvement of public buildings amounted to $3,425,000. On harbour and river works expenditures showed an increase of $2,100,000 as compared with the previous year.

[Mr. Bennett.]

The expenditures in respect to the Maritime Freight Rates Act in 1929-30 were $7,400,000, and in the year under review they were $10,327,000. The increase divides itself under two heads: $627,000 was an account carried forward from the previous fiscal year, having been received too late to be included in the accounts for that year, and the balance, $2,300,000, represented the additional amount payable as provided by the act for reductions in tolls and deficits on eastern lines.

The expenditures in respect to penitentiaries increased by $676,000. During the year the penitentiary population increased 527, thereby requiring larger staffs and supplies. Of the increase, $125,000 represents expenditures in connection with the erection of a new institution which was established during the year.

The Department of Trade and Commerce administers the Canada Grain Act, and during the year there was an increase of $1,085,000 in its expenditures over those of the previous year in connection with the providing of elevators at Lethbridge, Moose Jaw and Saskatoon. An additional $100,000 was spent on national research and $126,000 in connection with the Canadian display at the exhibition at Buenos Aires.

The special session of September last provided for the expenditure of $20,000,000 to relieve unemployment. As a result, at the close of the fiscal year, the contracts initiated in consequence of this legislation amounted to $69,690,948, and at the end of March, 248,000 persons were employed. However, at the close of the fiscal year only a small portion of the total expenditures authorized had been presented for payment. In all, $4,431,000 was actually paid, the money being disbursed as follows:

Alberta	$ 186,600 17

May I add the records show that at the end of April employment had been given to 25,000 additional persons as compared with those employed on March 31.

A statement of the expenditures, by services, on ordinary account for the last five fiscal years now follows:

Expenditures on Capital Account

Parliament, for the fiscal year 1930-31, appropriated the sum of $33,484,000 for capital expenditures. In the year $28,222,000 was actually expended on that account. These expenditures, for the purpose of convenience, may be classified under the following heads: (1) Railways, (2) Canals, (3) Public Works, and (4) Marine.

Taking first the railways: On this account over $6,000,000 was disbursed, and of this amount $2,500,000 was spent on the Prince Edward Island ferry and terminals, and $4,137,000 on the Hudson Bay railway and terminals. The investment in the Hudson Bay railway and terminals at the end of the fiscal year amounted to $43,880,000.

The expenditures on canals amounted to $9,800,000, of which expenditures on the Welland ship canal represented $9,600,000.

The expenditures in connection with Public Works capital account were largely those in connection with shipping, although at Ottawa $2,500,000 was spent on the new Confederation building and the National Research Council laboratories. The expenditure in connection with the Burlington channel, lake Ontario, amounted to $1,151,000, while over $3,000,000 was disbursed in connection with the lower lake terminals at Prescott. Expenditures of approximately $400,000 in each case were also made in connection with harbour improvements at the head of the great lakes and at Sorel.

In connection with the capital expenditures of the Marine department, it may be said that practically all were in connection with the St. Lawrence ship channel, for $3,464,000 was spent on dredging the channel, etc., and $400,000 in the construction of regulating and retaining dams in the St. Lawrence river below Montreal.

A summary of the capital expenditures for the past five fiscal years is:

	1926-27	1927-28	1928-29	1929-30	1930-31
			(000 omitted)
Canals	$13,846	$13,763	$13,164	$ 9,324	$ 9,846

Public Works	2,921	3,281	3,343	6,574	12,009
Total	$19,559	$20,636	$22,809	$22,561	$28,222

Special Expenditures

The special expenditures amounted to $12,358,000. The most important item was $8,599,000 which represents 30 per cent reduction in soldiers' indebtedness to the Soldier Settlement Board as authorized by chapter 42, Acts 1930: $2,067,000 represents the government's contribution to the civil service superannuation fund: $639,000 was spent on account of railway grade crossings, and $105,000 was the amortized discount on the loan flotation made in New York in October last. The other important item was the payment of $500,000 for civilian war claims—in the previous fiscal year $6,700,000 was disbursed on this account.

A summary of these expenditures compared with previous years is:

	1926-27	1927-28	1928-29	1929-30	1930-31
			(000 omitted)
Adjustment of war claims	$ 242	$1,861	$ 120	$ 95	$ 111
Cost of loan flotations	3,278	13	11	17	193
Miscellaneous charges	4,537	1,692	2,056	3,027	11,554
Reparations, claims for compensation	....	....	....	6,700	500
Total	$8,057	$3,566	$2,187	$9,839	$12,358

Loans and Advances Non-active

The final group of expenditures are those which are treated as loans and advances, but, being non-interest producing, are treated as non-active, charged as expenditures of the year, and not treated as assets in establishing the net debt of the dominion. In the year under review the amount advanced was $5,500,000. Of this $3,491,000 consisted of loans to the Quebec harbour commissioners, and $1,826,000 to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine and the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, this being the amount required to meet their deficits.

[Mr. Bennett.]

A comparison of the loans and advances non-active for the past five years is:

Summary

Grouping the 1930-31 expenditures together, it will be observed that total expenditures amounted to $440,060,657, as compared with $398,442,247 in the previous year. With respect to these expenditures, it may be said that for none of them is the present government responsible, with the exception of $4,431,000 for unemployment relief, $681,000 under governor general's warrants (mainly for ex-soldiers' relief), $2,000,000 for the Welland ship canal, $288,000 for Port Arthur and Fort William, harbour improvements, and a number of smaller items included in the supplementary estimates brought down at the end of March, these amounting to less than $100,000.

It will be noted that ordinary revenues were $44,398,879 less than ordinary expenditures, and that total revenues were $83,844,358 less than total expenditures. It should perhaps be noted that $8,599,385 of this deficit is brought about by the writing down of soldier land settlement loans advanced in previous years, so the balance, namely $75,244,973, is really the amount of the deficiency for the fiscal year period. Minor adjustments have yet to be made before the accounts are officially closed, but the foregoing is anticipated to be within a few thousands of the final balances for the fiscal year 1930-31.

CAPITAL BORROWINGS

The fiscal year under review was marked by a change in circumstances in respect of the national debt. For several years there had been a surplus of revenues over expenditures which could be applied to maturing obligations. Such was not the case in the past year.

In January, 1929, the Canadian National Railways were in need of money for capital requirements and, as will be recalled, interest charges were then at abnormal heights. The government, therefore, between that date and May, 1930, advanced to the railways $33,000,000, taking demand notes as security. In June, 1930, the Canadian National Railways carried out a borrowing operation and repaid the dominion $11,839,458, leaving a balance of $21,160,542 payable to the dominion. On July 1st, with $5,000,000 thus received, the government repurchased $5,000,000 at par of the 4 per cent treasury notes which were to mature on December 1st, 1930. This transaction represented a net saving of $83,000 in interest.

Last autumn, the New York money market for railway securities was unreceptive, but, with the company reporting deficits each month and with large capital undertakings of the railway proceeding, provision had to be made for the company's financial requirements. The dominion decided it was in the public interest to continue the providing of funds for the Canadian National and in October sold to a syndicate, headed by the Chase Securities Corporation and the Banc-america-Blair Corporation of New York, an issue of $100,000,000, 4 per cent, thirty year bonds, but callable at the end of twenty years. The amount realized was $93,646,000, or a cost of approximately 4·38 per cent. This rate is the best which has been secured by the dominion for any long-term financing since the outbreak of the war.

The sum of $10,000,000 was immediately advanced to the railways and before the end of December a further $15,500,000 was loaned to the company.

Due to the fact that the requirements of the railways had made it necessary for the government to make a large public offering earlier than had been planned, the dominion did not require to refinance immediately all of the $45,000,000 of three-year treasury notes which matured on the 1st of December. It was found practicable to retire, permanently, the $5,000,000 which had been purchased on the previous first of July, and a new loan was arranged with a group of Canadian banks. An issue of four per cent two-year treasury notes for $40,000,000 was authorized; $13,300,000 was sold on December 1st, $10,000,000 on January 1st, and the balance, $16,700,000, on February 15th.

The transfer of the natural resources to the three prairie provinces during the past fiscal year vested the responsibility for the administration of the school land funds in the three provincial governments. The Dominion Lands Act provides that sections eleven and twenty-nine in every surveyed township in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, shall be set aside as an endowment for purposes of education in those provinces. The act also provides that all moneys, from time to time, realized from the sale of such school lands shall be invested in securities of Canada and the interest arising therefrom, after deducting costs of management, shall be paid to the provinces towards the support of schools organized and carried on in accordance with the laws of such province.

The agreements with the provinces, as ratified at the last general session of parliament, provided that the transfer of these moneys might be either by cash of securities. The amount involved was over $33,000,000.

Until 1917, the fund moneys were carried in the cash working accounts of the dominion and 3 per cent interest was paid. The war had greatly altered money values, and the provinces submitted a request for a higher rate of interest. This was granted by the government of the day, on the authority of an order in council dated June 7th directing that the moneys, then in the fund, be invested in 5 per cent debenture issue which had been created in 1916 and which would mature on the 1st of October, 1919.

In 1919 the government, by order in council dated March 12, directed that the moneys which had accumulated in the interval be invested in the 1916-1919 debenture issue. On December 1, 1919, an executive direction was given that the moneys of the fund be invested in debenture stock to mature on October 1, 1922. The rate was again 5 per cent.

On September 25, 1922, an order in council was passed which, after reciting the December 1, 1919, order in council, continued:

> In view of the approaching maturity of the said debenture stock, the minister recommends that authority be given to continue the payment of interest at the rate of five per cent per annum on school land funds held from time to time by the Minister of Finance in trust for the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

No further action was taken and the records do not disclose the reason. Whatever may have been the cause, the fact is that when the present administration took office the fund was in the same state as in 1922. The amount was entered annually in the public accounts as a liability of the dominion; five per cent interest was being paid and there was no dispute as to the amount which was to be paid, but there were no certificates which could be transferred to the provinces.

The provinces were consulted to ascertain whether they desired settlement in cash, or the transfer of the fund by securities of Canada. It was agreed that, until an arrangement could be made, the dominion would continue to pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent. Early in April last, representatives of the provinces met with the dominion and it was arranged that a new debenture issue would be created for the amount of the capital account of the fund on the dates of the transfer of the resources to each of the provinces. This has been done, and the provinces receive certificates for the following amounts:

Manitoba	$ 5,919,862 65
Saskatchewan	17,809,039 00
Alberta	9,564,569 20
	$33,293,470 85

The maturity date is July 1, 1934, and the interest is at the rate of 5 per cent, payable half-yearly on the first of July and January.

$25,000,000 MATURITY

While the actual settling of the $25,000,000 loan which had been obtained in New York in 1916 took place on the first day of the present fiscal year, might it be pointed out that the financial operation of last fall provided the money for that purpose. The loan was a five per cent issue, while the cost of the re-financing was at the rate of 4·38 per cent. This means a saving in the annual interest charges of $155,000.

1931 CONVERSION LOAN

The only funded debt to be refinanced in the present fiscal year is the $52,929,600 falling due on October 1, and the success of the conversion loan recently completed leaves less than 15 millions to be refinanced. At the present moment it would appear that this can most profitably be done by the use of treasury bills.

The debt conversion operation, which commenced on May 11 last, does not properly belong to a review of the financial operations of the last fiscal year, but it is a matter of general interest at the present time. The basis was: in exchange for bonds maturing in 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934, new securities were given, bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, and maturing twenty-five years after the due date of the bonds surrendered for conversion, the dominion having the right to redeem after fifteen years. The holder was, naturally, guaranteed all the benefits, including difference in interest rate, associated with his old bond to the date of its maturity. The first offer to the public was for $250,000,000. The success of the operation was assured at the close of business on the first day, and it became necessary to increase the amount the government was prepared to accept for conversion. The subscription books remained open until the advertised closing date, Saturday, May 23. It was a remarkable success, it being estimated approximately 640 millions were converted. Until all adjustments are made and the overseas subscriptions actually delivered to the department, a final statement cannot be presented, but at the moment the report is:

Year of Maturity	Total Amount of Loan	Amount Surrendered for Conversion
1931..	$ 52,929,600	$ 38,762,500
1932..	73,323,150	37,011,400
1933..	446,659,950	272,989,100
1934..	511,910,650	278,703,500
	$1,084,823,350	$627,466,500
Not yet distributed as to maturity.		12,350,000
		$639,816,500

The dominion sponsored the conversion operation and paid a commission of one-half of one per cent, except on conversions of bonds maturing on October 1st, 1931. No commission was paid to any one for the $38,000,000 of bonds of this issue which were surrendered for conversion.

RAILWAYS, STEAMSHIPS, AND HARBOUR COMMISSIONS

The financial provision which it was necessary to make in the fiscal year for the Canadian National Railways and Steamships, and the various harbour commissions, reached important dimensions. So far as capital expenditures are concerned, they represent the carrying out of the extensive programs of construction approved by parliament in previous sessions, and where payments have been required for operating deficits, the amounts naturally reflect the unfavourable situation.

Canadian National Railways

The accounts of the Canadian National Railways for 1930 have been presented to the house. The company failed to earn its fixed charges to the public by $29,219,738. This figure is exclusive of the operations of the eastern lines of the accruing interest on the cash advances of $604,000,000 which the government has made to the company in previous years.

The deficit on the system, exclusive of eastern lines, was financed by the company and is not reflected in the government accounts for this year.

The general budget of the railways for 1930, which included provision for deficit, general additions and betterments and miscellaneous debt retirements, amounted to $63,010,400.85, of which $51,600,000 was authorized at the 1930 session and the balance, $11,410,400.85 was passed at the present session as a supplementary provision to cover over-expenditure due to the unanticipated falling-off in receipts. In respect of these requirements, guaranteed bonds to the amount of $51,600,000 were issued and the sum of $11,410,000.85 has been financed temporarily by a bank loan.

The expenditures just referred to do not include those incurred on branch lines and terminals authorized by special statutes. For these purposes the actual expenditures in 1930 amounted to $21,112,073, financed from the proceeds of guaranteed bonds. The total amount of bonds issued in the past fiscal year for these purposes was $32,577,779, a substantial amount having been provided for expenditures on these accounts in 1931.

For the purposes mentioned above and to refund certain maturing and temporary loans, the company issued $120,000,000 of securities in the period of our fiscal year to which the guarantee of the government, in accordance with the authorization of parliament, was given. An issue of $50,000,000 4¾ per cent 25-year bonds was sold in June, 1930, and an issue of $70,000,000 4½ per cent 25-year bonds was sold in February, 1931.

The following statement summarizes the purposes for which these issues were made and the total amount of securities issued in each case:

		$120,000,000 00

As in former years the company financed the purchase of new equipment to the extent of seventy-five per cent of the cost thereof, by the sale of equipment trust certificates not guaranteed by the Dominion government. An issue, authorized in June, 1930, of $15,750,000 4½ per cent certificates was made for this purpose.

Canadian National Steamships.

The operating loss on the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Ltd., 1930, involved a cash payment by the government of $834,210.89. We were also called upon to advance $992,730.62 to the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Ltd., this amount being the cash deficit resulting from the 1930 operations of the company after absorbing the contributions made by the colonies under the West Indies trade agreement towards the cost of the service. The sum advanced does not, however, represent the whole cost of this service which, including depreciation, amounted to $1,362,655 in 1930. The operation of these two organizations in 1930 resulted in a charge of $1,826,941.51 on the government accounts for the year.

Harbour Commissions.

Advances to harbour commissions on capital account for the development of port and terminal facilities, totalled $15,606,600. The following statement shows the amount advanced in 1930-31 to each of the commissions:

	Advances, 1930-31
Chicoutimi	$ 846,000 00
Halifax	3,539,000 00
Montreal	2,291,000 00
Quebec	3,491,000 00
St. John	1,094,000 00
Three Rivers	1,543,000 00
Vancouver	2,802,000 00
	$15,606,600 00

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD

During the year, the government advanced $2,600,000 to the Canadian Farm Loan Board, being the balance of the $5,000,000 initial capital which the act provided that the government should supply for the operations of the board. Subscriptions to capital stock of the board under the terms of the scheme, involved a further payment of $199,839. Apart from the initial capital subscribed by the dominion government and capital stock subscriptions made by the dominion and provincial governments and the borrowers, respectively, the board is to be financed by the issue of farm loan bonds to be sold either to the public or to the Minister of Finance. In view of the difficulties at the moment of securing a favourable market reception for farm loan securities, the government has undertaken to purchase on a 5 per cent basis farm loan bonds to finance the 1931 operations of the board. The amount of bonds purchased prior to the end of the fiscal year was $300,000, bringing the total capital furnished by the government to the board in the year, to $3,099,839.

The transactions involved in the year's operations are now summarized in the condensed cash statement which follows:

BALANCE SHEET

The assets and liabilities of the Dominion are set out in the balance sheet published in the public accounts: active assets comprising cash balances and specie accounts; loans and advances that are realizable or income-producing, and other miscellaneous accounts. These assets are taken as an offset against the gross liabilities of the dominion in arriving at the net debt. The balance sheet also sets out non-active assets that are not considered as an offset against the gross liabilities, as they represent loans and advances that are neither realizable nor income-producing and the large capital expenditures made on government-owned properties. Taking first the active assets, the statement is, and I think the house will be somewhat interested in this statement of our assets that are regarded as having value:

Active Assets on March 31, 1931
Cash balances in banks		$44,597,909 41
Specie Reserve	$ 81,457,889 05
Advances to Banks under Finance Act	6,500,000 00

		$30,483,638 81
		$349,180,600 72

I shall now make, as I think it is desirable, a short statement with respect to each of these items in the statement of active assets that I have just placed on Hansard.

Cash balance in banks.

Cash balance in banks, $44,500,000 is the amount of cash at the credit of the Receiver General in the several banks at the close of the fiscal year. Of the amount $25,000,000 was paid out on April 1, 1931, to retire the 5 per cent Public Service Loan which matured in New York on that date.

Specie Reserve.

Specie Reserve is the gold held by the Department of Finance as security for Dominion Notes in circulation and Post Office Savings Bank deposits. At the end of the year there was $81,000,000, an increase of $15,000,000 for the year.

Advances to banks under the Finance Act.

Advances to banks under the Finance Act, amounting to $6,500,000, are made by issue of Dominion Notes against approved securities deposited by the banks with the department as collateral.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Loans to Provinces for erection of houses.

Under authority of appropriations granted in 1919 and 1920 advances were made to the provincial governments to encourage the erection of dwelling houses throughout Canada. The loans were repayable within twenty years and carried interest at the rate of five per cent per annum. Advances to the amount of $23,500,000 were made. Repayments received have reduced this to $10,600,000 on March 31, 1931, made up as follows:

British Columbia	$ 1,701,500
Manitoba	1,475,000
New Brunswick	1,057,000
Nova Scotia	1,017,000
Ontario	.....
Prince Edward Island	36,500
Quebec	5,384,688
	$10,671,688

Loans to Foreign Governments.

Following the termination of the Great war, the Dominion government made available to certain foreign governments credits for the purchase of Canadian products. A number of the countries that took advantage of these credits have already repaid the amounts advanced. There is still $6,600,000 owing by the government of Greece, and $23,900,000 by the government of Roumania. Arrangements were made with the government of Greece in 1924 which provided for semi-annual payments on account of principal so that the debt will be retired by 1948. Interest at 5 per cent and redemption payments have been made when due.

The Roumanian debt was funded in 1922 on a 4 per cent basis, and since then interest has been paid regularly. These bonds mature on April 1, 1968, and a provision is made for a sinking fund to redeem them on or before the due date.

Loans to Harbour Commissioners.

Prior to 1921 the policy had been to provide for necessary harbour improvements by direct government expenditures, except at the ports of Montreal and Quebec to which the funds required were loaned by the government. In 1921 the harbour commission of Vancouver was added to those receiving aid by way of loans. Harbour commissions at Chicoutimi, Halifax, St. John and Three Rivers have since been added to the list. The amount which had been so loaned is carried as an active asset, and reached the figure of $88,600,000 on March 31, 1931. This is exclusive of advance to the Quebec Harbour Commission which is carried as a non-active asset.

Canadian Farm Loan Board.

The financial requirements of the Canadian Farm Loan Board have been met from the federal treasury and the board has, so far, received $5,600,000. This is made up of $5,050,000 of initial capital and advances; $250,000 in subscriptions to capital stock, and $300,000 in purchase of farm loan bonds.

Soldier and general land Settlement.

The Soldier Land Settlement Act of 1919 provided for the granting of financial assistance by way of loans to returned soldiers who were desirous of settling on the land. Up to the 31st of March, 1931, loans to the amount of $116,500,000 were granted, against which $32,800,000 has been realized. As the major portion of the advances was made at a period of inflated values it became necessary to afford measures of relief. Accordingly in 1925, 1927 and 1930 the Soldier Land Settlement Act was amended to provide for reduction in the amounts of loans outstanding to settlers. As a result of these amendments $18,900,000 has been written off to Consolidated Fund.

Substantial losses have been experienced in resale of farms, stock and equipment that reverted to the board. To provide for these losses $16,600,000 has been transferred to non-active assets. There is left $48,200,000 as an active asset out of a net capital investment of $83,700,000.

Seed Grain and Relief Advances.

Advances for seed grain and relief have been made from time to time to needy settlers in western Canada. These advances are repayable with interest, and, on March 31, 1931, $2,400,000 was carried in the account as realizable.

Advances for Working Capital and Miscellaneous.

The remaining assets carried as active total $30,400,000 under the general heading of advances for working capital and miscellaneous. The chief items under this category are amounts advanced to the Ottawa Mint for purchase of precious metals, the stores and open accounts of the Canadian Government Railways (now entrusted to the Canadian National Railways for operation) and the unamortized discount on the 4 per cent 1930-60 loan sold at a substantial discount, which will be absorbed over the life of the loan by annual charges to income.

It may be well to make a brief explanation of these items. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that part of this labour is taken because this is a new parliament and there are a large number of young members who seem to take considerable interest in the financial structure of the country. Therefore I thought it desirable that they might have this record of the position as it existed on the 31st March, 1931. Although this has involved a very considerable amount of labour, I think they will regard the information thus afforded as being of value to them when they are considering the public questions of the country.

Dominion Notes Outstanding

At the close of the fiscal year, dominion notes in circulation amounted to $141,000,000. This is a reduction of $33,000,000 in the amount of notes outstanding at the commencement of the year. The decrease is more than accounted for by the reduced demands of the banks for notes under the Finance Act, which dropped from $50,200,000 at the commencement of the year to $6,500,000 on March 31, 1931. During the same period, the gold held as security for the redemption of the notes increased from $63,000,000 to $80,000,000, so that, while on March 31, 1930, gold reserves represented 36·30 per cent of the total notes in circulation, this percentage was increased to 56·90 per cent on March 31, 1931.

Trust and Special Funds

Each year the Dominion government derives a substantial amount of receipts from trust and special funds. These funds are not earmarked in any way, but are deposited in the general cash fund and are used to meet the current financial requirements of the government. These deposits create a liability which the government will be required to meet by future disbursements. During the past year the treasury received a net amount of $10,000,000 from these sources. The amounts standing at the credit of these accounts on March 31, 1931, were:

Bank Circulation Redemption Fund	$ 6,788,000
Government Annuities, Insurance and Superannuation Funds	80,257,000
Trust Funds	20,619,000
Contingent and Special funds	1,285,000
Post Office, Money Orders, Postal Notes, etc., outstanding	4,135,000
	$113,084,000

Province Accounts

In the dominion books, a liability of $9,623,000 is carried representing the capital debt assumed by the dominion when the provinces entered confederation in respect of the assets taken over. The obligation is discharged by annual interest payments forming part of the subsidies.

Post Office Savings Bank Deposits

Deposits in the post office savings banks have continued to decrease. The reduction for the year amounted to $1,300,000, leaving deposits of $24,750,000 on March 31, 1931.

Matured Funded Debt and Interest Unpaid

As at March 31st, our accounts carried as a liability $555,000 for unpresented matured bonds and $2,400,000 for matured coupons outstanding.

Unmatured Funded Debt

The unmatured funded debt on March 31, 1931, was $2,319,000,000. This shows an increase of $92,000,000 compared with the debt on March 31, 1930, but in the issue that was floated in New York last October, provision was made for the retirement of the $25,000,000, 5 per cent public service loan which matured on April 1, 1931, after the end of the fiscal year. When allowance is made for this retirement, the increase is reduced to $67,000,000.

Sinking Fund

Provision is made for a sinking fund contribution of one-half of 1 per cent per annum on $254,000,000 of sterling debt payable in London.

The annual contribution of $1,272,263.57, together with the interest derived from the bonds and stocks held, are invested each year by the Bank of Montreal, London, acting as fiscal agent for the government. There is no sinking fund provision for the remaining $57,215,000 of sterling debt outstanding. The total investments on account of sinking funds on March 31, 1931, was $59,700,000, of which $3,670,000 was purchased during last year.

After the three 5 per cent domestic war loans were issued in the years 1915 to 1917, a sinking fund of one-half of 1 per cent per annum was authorized by the governor in council. Certain investments were made on account of this sinking fund but purchases were discontinued when the bonds sold above par. No sinking fund provision has been made for the remaining domestic issues nor for the issues made in New York.

NON-ACTIVE ASSETS

The gross liabilities of the Dominion on March 31, 1931, were $2,610,700,000 as against which there were active assets of $349,180,000, to which reference has been made. The difference $2,261,600,000, commonly referred to as the net debt, but which is really the net debit balance in the accounts, is briefly accounted for under three heads.

First, there are loans and advances made for various enterprises which are not presently realizable, yield no direct return to the treasury, and in the presentation of the accounts are treated as losses. These total $673,000,000, the chief of which are $614,000,000 to the Canadian National Railways, $15,500,000 to the Canadian National Steamships, $24,400,000 to the Quebec harbour commission and $16,600,000 soldier land settlement loans.

The second division is comprised of the aggregate of capital expenditures made on canals, railways, public buildings and harbour and river improvements, which total $927,300,000. Another item of $88,000,000 is shown as "Railway Accounts (Old)", which refers to railway capital expenditures made in the early history of the country, the fruits of which were by legislation transferred to certain railway companies, hon. members will recall the transaction with respect to them during the Grand Trunk arbitration.

Then there is the balance of $572,500,000 at debit of consolidated fund on March 31, 1931. This is the accumulated deficits since the commencement of the accounts, or since confederation. All expenditures arising out of the world war have been absorbed in this balance. A tabulation of the non-active assets follows:

INDIRECT OBLIGATIONS OF THE DOMINION

Hon. members will recall I spoke of obligations direct and indirect. Having dealt with the balance-sheet position of the dominion, its direct liabilities and the liquid and income-producing assets offsetting these in part, there remain for consideration the contingent or indirect liabilities. As at March 31, 1931, these indirect liabilities, as represented by securities guaranteed by the dominion outstanding in the hands of the public, amounted to $954,892,779. If to this figure there be added that part of the funded debt of the Canadian National Railways which does not bear a dominion government guarantee, a total of $1,268,748,433 is reached, accounted for as follows:—

Securities Guaranteed by the Dominion Government:
Harbour Commissions
Montreal Harbour Bridge	$19,000,000
New Westminster Elevator	700,000
St. John Harbour Improvements	2,135,118
		$ 21,835,118

Canadian National Railways		923,657,661
Total Securities guaranteed by Dominion		$ 954,892,779
Canadian National Railway Debt not guaranteed by Dominion:— but for which of course we are liable—otherwise the property would cease to function—
Guaranteed by provinces		72,184,488
Unguaranteed debt—
Perpetual debenture stock		63,240,571
Mortgage bonds and debenture stock		88,608,374
Other miscellaneous indebtedness		7,480,621
Equipment trust notes & certificates		82,341,600
Total of which $1,237,513,315 is Canadian National Debt to the public		$1,268,748,433

The operation of the Canadian National Railways as an amalgamated unit dates from 1923. In January of that year, the former administration, by order in council, declared the preference and common stock of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada to be the property of the Minister of Finance in trust for His Majesty and thereupon the amalgamation of the Grand Trunk with the Canadian National took place. It may be well for us to examine briefly the results of these eight years of operation, having regard particularly to their association with and reflex upon the dominion's financial position.

The period has been one in which a large sum of money has been made available to the system for capital investment, and there has been a corresponding increase in the debt of the company. In eight years some 400 millions of dollars have been added to the Canadian National Railways investment account for the construction and acquisition of lines, for terminals, hotels, new equipment, etc. This increase in debt has resulted in an addition to the annual interest charges on the system of almost 20 millions of dollars or about 55 per cent, so that when we consider the result of operations over the period, we must have in mind, on the one hand, the advantages expected to accrue from the assumption of a heavy additional obligation and, as an offsetting factor, the annual carrying charges resulting therefrom.

The balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways, through the profit and loss account indicates a loss in the eight-year period of 346 millions of dollars. The first and largest item making up this loss consists of 253 millions of dollars charged in the railway accounts—but not paid—as interest on the sum of 604 millions of dollars of direct assistance by way of cash loans which the government has given to the company. As between the government and the system, this is only a bookkeeping item. The actual burden of this liability was taken over by the dominion and has been carried by the tax-payers of the country.

The balance of the loss, totalling $93,000,000, is made up of $86,000,000, being the actual deficiency of earnings in the eight-year period after charging interest due the public, but leaving aside the interest due the government, and $7,000,000 representing the net debit of adjustments through profit and loss account. These figures leave out of consideration the operations of the eastern lines since the passing of the Maritime Freight Rates Act in July, 1927, from which date the government has contributed directly to operating losses on these lines, apart from the 20 per cent reduction in tolls, the sum of $17,500,000.

The situation, therefore, is that since 1923 an additional capital liability of 400 millions of dollars has been assumed in respect of the railways, involving an increase in the annual interest charge of 20 millions of dollars. The system has failed to earn its interest charges during the period by a round sum of 86 millions, and the government has itself borne the carrying charges in respect of 604 millions of dollars contributed direct to the system, as well as, since 1927, operating losses of $17,500,000 on eastern lines.

It is well known and fully realized that the difficulties of transportation systems are not unique to Canada or to the Canadian-owned system. To realize that in 1930 the gross revenues of the system were less than in the year 1923, notwithstanding the addition of 400 millions of dollars to the investment in the property, serves only to impress the seriousness of the problem.

The following is a statement of these indirect obligations:

Now, Mr. Speaker, at this point I should like to point out that there is a tendency on the part of the press supporting hon. gentlemen opposite to allege that the government is opposed to the Canadian National Railways. May I venture to declare that no man is a good Canadian who does not take time to study and realize the extent of the obligations which are being laid upon this country by this parliament. The Canadian National Railways' management cannot be charged with responsibility for this. The Canadian National Railways Act provides that the governor in council takes the position of shareholders under the Railway Act, and when I point out the sums that have been expended and the obligations that have been created during the last eight years, I do so because it has been done at the initiation of the government which is now the official opposition. Bear that in mind. I do think there is a failure on the part of the Canadian people to understand and appreciate the extent and character of the obligations which have thus been placed upon them. There you have $86,000,000 of a deficit in interest earning power in the last eight years, in addition to which the people of this country paid interest on $604,000,000 advance for the running of the enterprise.

Now, I submit, sir, I would be derelict in my duty, and I believe any hon. member would be derelict in his duty, if he did not analyze and ponder these matters. And the blame must rest with the government of the day for the management of railway companies are always prone to submit requests for larger sums than they expect to get. Yet so far as I have been able to ascertain, not one single capital request made by the management of the Canadian National Railways during the last eight years was refused by the late government—not one. Is that so in any privately owned road? Go through the requisitions made on the Canadian Pacific Railway or on the Union Pacific, the Southern Pacific or the Santa Fé, and you will not find that state of affairs existing. Yet the late government, for reasons best known to themselves, have put the country in the position that I have just pointed out. And I do suggest that there is no business of the nation which should so concern hon. members—who represent the shareholders in a larger way than does the governor in council—as that resulting in figures to which I have just directed their attention. I certainly think, and this government certainly thinks, it is most unfair and unjust, and, what is more, inimical to the well-being of the enterprise itself, to say that because you direct attention to those figures and the effect of them that therefore you are an enemy of the enterprise. The best friend any business enterprise has is that shareholder who carefully scrutinizes the expenditures made by the directors during the year.

TRADE

Canada at the close of the year 1930 again ranked fifth among the nations in the volume of international trade. There were substantial decreases in the dollar value of trade, as compared with the year before, but were a graph made by use of quantities it would present a jagged picture. The fiscal year 1929-30 closed with an unfavourable balance of visible trade amounting to 103 millions. In the year under review the unfavourable balance was 89 millions.

The United States was the principal customer of Canada during the year, taking 44½% of our exports and in turn Canada purchased over 64% of its imports from the United States. In dollars, imports from the United States amounted to 584 millions, and the exports 364 millions. This left an unfavourable balance in the trade with the United States of 220 millions. In the preceding year imports had amounted to 847 millions and exports to 536 millions.

Trade with British Empire

Trade with the British Empire was unevenly affected during the year. On the import side, while there was a decrease from 252 millions to 204 millions, this decrease was largely in the imports from two countries—the United Kingdom and New Zealand. There was a 40 million dollar decrease in imports from the United Kingdom, $3,000,000 being in iron products, 8 millions in alcoholic beverages and 19 millions in textiles. The balance was spread throughout a wide list of articles. From New Zealand the decline was in imports of butter which decreased $9,700,000.

The exports to the British Empire amounted to 295 millions, a decrease of 86 millions from the year before. The countries to which exports fell off the most were: United Kingdom (62 millions), Australia (9.6 millions), New Zealand (6.4 millions), West Indies (3 millions), and Newfoundland (1.5 millions). Naturally, the greatest falling off in exports to the United Kingdom consisted of food stuffs. The decrease in exports of grains amounted to 41 millions, in meats to $3,900,000, in milk products to $4,400,000, in paper to $2,300,000, and in iron and its products to $2,800,000. The principal decreases in exports to other parts of the British Empire were in food commodities such as flour, paper and wood products, automobiles, farm implements, etc.

The trade of Canada in the fiscal year, when calculated by means of percentage, was divided as follows:

With—	Imports %	Exports %
British Empire	22.6	36.1
United States	64.4	44.5
Treaty countries	9.2	14.1
Other countries	3.8	5.3
	100.	100.

Imports of Commodities

Ten product groups make up in value the major part of the imports into Canada, and a comparison over the last five year period emphasizes the material reductions which took place.

Exports of Commodities

A study of the exports shows every activity to have been touched by the decline in values—the products of the farm, the mine, the forest, the fishery and the factory. Again summarizing under ten groups, the record of the past five years shows:

Imports of Certain Goods

In the month of September, changes were made in the rates of over one hundred tariff items. A comparative statement is difficult because some divisions were previously incorporated into general items. With this reservation, the imports under the 129 items amounted to $112,271,000 in the period from October 1st, 1929, to March 31st, 1930, and in the same period commencing October 1st, 1930, and ending March 31st, 1931, the imports were $61,920,000.

New Industries Established in Canada

Since August, 1930, there has been a marked influx of new concerns from outside countries into the dominion. It will be some time before full details in regard to capital invested, number employed, etc., can be secured since some are still in process of organization, but eighty-seven such concerns have already been listed by the dominion bureau of statistics and the number continues to grow. Of the eighty-seven, seventy-four are United States manufacturing concerns, eleven are British—seven manufacturing and four non-manufacturing—and two are French.

These firms represent considerable diversification in industry. United States firms include eight in the vegetable products groups—such as foods and rubber—two animal products, eight textile, eight wood and paper products, twenty iron and steel, twelve non-ferrous metals, three non-metallic minerals, nine chemicals and allied products, two mining and two miscellaneous. British firms include three textile, six iron and steel, one chemical and one miscellaneous. The two French firms are textile manufacturers.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They are practically all in Ontario and Quebec, are they not?

Mr. BENNETT: With the exception of two, I think. Now, may I just meet a few words of criticism in advance, although perhaps it is unnecessary. The extent of investment in Canadian industry by United States, other foreign countries and Great Britain is a subject of far-reaching importance. All young or undeveloped nations have been dependent on large capital investments by outside countries for the development of their natural resources and for assistance in the establishment of the diversified industry necessary to all-round national development. Without such assistance industrial progress would be slow and desperately difficult. The hardships being endured by the Russian people to-day exemplify the sacrifice which an undeveloped nation would be called upon to make, not for five but many times five years, if that nation were to strive to become industrialized through its own savings of capital. Canada has for many years received large investments from other countries. Fear has sometimes been expressed that these outside nations by starting industries in this country or investing their capital in various Canadian enterprises, commercial, governmental, financial or other, are obtaining a menacing position in our economic life. The facts of the case reveal these fears to be entirely unfounded. A recent bulletin of the bureau of statistics shows that in January, 1930, there were located in Canada 1,199 British, United States and other foreign branch, subsidiary and affiliated firms concerned with manufacturing or production. Of these, 1,023 were from United States, 162 from Great Britain and 14 from other countries. The capital employed in these concerns amounted to $1,818,000,000, ownership of which in individual firms ranged from less than 50 per cent to 100 per cent. In all, 68 per cent or $1,239,000,000 was owned in the United States, 17 per cent or $317,000,000 was owned in Canada, 14 per cent or $257,000,000 in Great Britain and $6,000,000 or less than 1 per cent in other countries.

Even in such branch or subsidiary firms Canadians held nearly 20 per cent interest, and it is a well known fact that the Canadian proportion tends to increase. There have been many instances of firms established in Canada by outsiders eventually passing into Canadian hands.

To see such facts in their proper perspective, however, it is necessary to compare the figures with those of the geographical distribution of ownership of all capital employed in Canada. It is estimated that the amount is $17,500,000,000. This sum includes the bonded indebtedness of Dominion, provincial and municipal governments, investments in railways, manufacturing concerns, mines and metal industries, public utilities, trading establishments, finance, insurance, etc. It includes private capital in domestic enterprises such as farms and homes. Of this sum it is estimated that 65 per cent or $11,500,000,000 is owned in Canada, 20 per cent or $3,500,000,000 in the United States, 13 per cent or $2,200,000,000 in Great Britain and 2 per cent or $300,000,000 in other countries. It is obvious that the control of our enterprises is very predominantly in our own hands. If the basis of comparison be our total national wealth, foreign and British investments are still less significant. Our national wealth is now probably in the neighbourhood of $30,000,000,000; British and foreign investments of capital in Canada are $6,000,000,000 or just 20 per cent. Even of this 20 per cent many millions of dollars are represented by bonds which do not ordinarily carry with them direction or control of industry.

I believe, sir, that any member of this house reading these figures must be impressed with the resource and courage and enterprise of the Canadian people in industrial, agricultural and manufacturing fields of endeavour. Of sums so vast, I do not believe there is any record on the part of any other population equally small and scattered over an area so great.

May I point out now that Canada carries on its business at home and abroad by the application of principles that vary with the administrations of the day. So far as this party is concerned, it directs, and will continue to direct its operations from three angles: first, we believe that we have been entrusted with great resources which it is our duty to develop to the greatest possible extent; secondly, that Canadians are entitled to carry on that development, enjoying an equal opportunity with the other peoples of the world engaged in the development of their respective countries; and, thirdly, that Canadians are entitled to fair competition in carrying forward that development. We meet the last requirement by dumping legislation; we meet the second requirement by tariff legislation; and we meet the first requirement by the courage and enterprise of our people.

Now it has been customary, in the course of very many centuries, for trading peoples to negotiate agreements or treaties with others who are engaged in commerce; and in this regard the Canadian people have not been unlike others. But may I point out this: that Canada, by reason of being a part of the British Empire, has treaties applying to our trading enterprises somewhat different from those that exist in other parts of the world. For instance, Canada has treaties which were made direct by this dominion. That is fact No. 1. We have a treaty with France made on December 15, 1922; one with Italy made on January 4, 1923; one with Belgium made on July 3, 1924; one with the Netherlands made on July 11, 1924; one with Czechoslavakia made on March 15, 1928; and one, modus vivendi, made with Cuba, November 1929.

Then Canada has a second kind of treaty —a treaty made by Great Britain on behalf of the British Empire but which provides that this part of the empire is bound by it only when we accede thereto. Of this kind of treaty we had two, one with Japan, made on April 3, 1911, to which we acceded on May 1, 1913, and one with Spain, made on April 5, 1927, to which we acceded on August 1, 1928.

Again, we have another, a third form of treaty, namely, that which contains a clause providing that the most-favoured-nation terms shall be accorded to Canada if similar treatment is given by this dominion to the country with which the treaty is made. Such treaties we have with Finland, Esthonia, Hungary, Jugoslavia, Latvia, Lithuania, Portugal and Roumania.

Lastly, we have that class of treaty which was made by Great Britain before we became a confederation, or before we negotiated treaties on our own behalf—treaties that bound every part of the British Empire when they were made by Great Britain, long years before we became a dominion. The list is interesting. Of such treaties, there is one with Argentina, made on the 2nd day of February 1825; one with Colombia, made on the 16th day of February 1866; one with Denmark, made on February 13, 1660; one with Norway, made on March 18, 1826; one with Sweden —the oldest of all—made on April 11, 1654; one with Switzerland, made on September 6, 1855; and one with Venezuela, made on April 18, 1825.

These trade treaties exist for the purpose of extending trade and commerce on mutually advantageous terms. For instance, the late government made a treaty with Australia which was extended to New Zealand by order in council on October 1, 1925. It was withdrawn by order in council on October 12, 1930, after it had been in force a little over five years.

Now, the difference between my hon. friends opposite and ourselves is this: we believe in trade treaties that are mutually advantageous to the parties to the treaty. And we believe that the only method by which you can understand and appreciate just what the effect of treaties will be is to have a clear conception of their possible implications; for nothing could be more ruinous than what has transpired during the last few months in connection with the treaties with Australia and New Zealand. We negotiated a treaty with Australia. I may say for the information of the house that that treaty was never signed. That probably was merely an accident or an oversight. The treaty consisted of so many pieces of paper—some twenty-five in all, I believe. Difficulties were experienced; differences arose, parliament was in session, and it became necessary to complete the matter before the rising of the house. And so we passed the statute that ratified that Australian treaty, and made provision therein whereby, by order in council, it might be extended to other countries. On October 1, 1925, it was extended to New Zealand. The right hon. member opposite who leads the opposition to-day (Mr. Mackenzie King), shortly before that, in Woodstock, Ontario, declared that he could not conceive it possible—and he honestly so believed—that the extension of the treaty to New Zealand could be inimical to the trading interests of Canada. But let us see what happened. At that time New Zealand had no channel of trade with Canada for butter. Now, a channel of trade is like any other channel that may be created: it is something which once created cannot as a rule be changed without injury. That channel not having been established in 1925, they began just as an individual would do, to widen and deepen such a channel by sending forward their butter under that treaty at 1 cent per pound. By that means they began to create a channel of trade. That channel grew in size until the imports into this country year by year expanded, reaching at last so colossal a figure as to amount to several millions of dollars for butter alone.

There you have a well-defined, well-established channel of trade between the sister dominion of New Zealand and Canada, with the result that this trade was injurious to the Canadian producer. And the government of the right hon. gentleman opposite—not this government—gave notice terminating that treaty. They gave notice in April of last year while this house was in session, because the right hon. gentleman was himself convinced that the treaty should be denounced, and he gave six months' notice under the terms of the treaty, terminating that arrangement with New Zealand. With what result? With this result—that when we came into office New Zealand bitterly complained of the situation; they said that they could not entertain the idea that their butter should not continue to come into this country as it had done before. We endeavoured to explain to them that Canada believed that this dominion should also be on an export basis for buter. We pointed out that we were a dairy country and that they must not think that they could displace Canadian produce for their own, excellent though it is. Having pointed that out to them, we continued in our efforts to make some arrangement, some modus vivendi, by which we could carry on reciprocal trade. But for some reason, best known to its government, New Zealand believed that Canada must—I use the word advisedly—buy butter from New Zealand. Either to-day or tomorrow the parliament of New Zealand will refuse the British preference to Canada and they will do so because we are not in a position to let their butter come into this country practically free to supplant our own product. Who is to blame for that? Who is to blame for the unfortunate difficulties which exist between the two great dominions? The government that did not foresee the implications of the treaty it made, and the government that terminated that treaty thereby creating the condition to which I have referred. Let there be no shaking of heads—did or did not the former government terminate that treaty? If it did, then it must accept responsibility. The result is that New Zealand says—very properly so, I suppose, from their standpoint, thinking of themselves alone—that they are not going to permit Canada to have a British preference in their markets unless we allow their butter to come in here.

I cite that for the simple and obvious reason that it becomes necessary to realize that when treaties are made there should be a clear understanding and appreciation of their implications. That is one of the reasons why we endeavoured while in England and since, to arrive at some arrangement with our great sister dominion, Australia, which would not make it necessary to destroy channels of trade and bring about the hard feelings which no doubt would prevail and have prevailed in connection with New Zealand. During the last few months, while he has been in health, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) has been engaged constantly in endeavouring to insure that a reasonable treaty may be made between Australia and Canada. I trust that in furtherance of the unanimous view expressed by the overseas dominions at the Imperial economic conference last year we may be able to negotiate an agreement which will be mutually advantageous to both countries. It is my earnest hope and my confident belief that before this house rises we will submit such a treaty or agreement for the consideration of this house. I cannot permit this opportunity to pass without stating that we are really under an obligation to the government of Australia for the manner in which they have treated us during the last year in connection with butter and its products. They have made it possible for the channels of trade not to be destroyed in such a way as to bring about that condition of mind on the part of their country which now prevails in New Zealand. We are under a great obligation to them for what they have done in that regard.

I mention also another treaty which stands in a somewhat similar position, namely, the treaty negotiated with France. The French treaty provides that a fixed and definite rate must prevail and that we cannot grant to any other country a different rate without violating the provisions of that treaty. In the budget presented to this house in May last there was an interference with the provisions of that treaty, to which the great republic very properly directed our attention. A treaty containing provisions such as that cannot, I submit, ever be a sound treaty because it disregards the fundamental rule which must always obtain in connection with trade treaties and which we propose to continue so far as we are concerned. That rule is this: Treaties must be mutually advantageous; if they are not they fail, and unless there is a clear appreciation of that fact there cannot be other than failure. This rule was stated very clearly the other day by the president of the United States Steel Corporation. Speaking to the National Foreign Trade Convention on May 28, he said: It is a sound economic principle to sell in markets where the product is needed for consumption and where there is no surplus of the same commodity

May I point out to the house that all the domestic trade of this country which represents imports is foreign trade to some other country. If hon. gentlemen opposite will only get in their minds that fundamental thought they will realize that this government on the one hand, desires to maintain the economic principle to which Mr. Farrell referred and on the second hand, to realize to the full that every import brought into this country from abroad represents foreign trade to some other country. Our business is to see that we do not expand the foreign trade of any other country when we ourselves are producing or can produce the goods so imported.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: How does my right hon. friend propose to expand the foreign trade of Canada under rules of that kind?

Mr. BENNETT: It is very simple. Does the right hon. gentleman for a moment mean to say that there are not countries which do not produce the commodities which Canada produces and which they require? That is what he is trying to say, and I can tell him that the whole theory upon which trade within the British Empire will ultimately be built up is upon the proper appreciation and realization that the requirements of each part can be filled by requisitioning the production of such commodities from other parts of the empire. The foreign trade of Canada can be built up, just as Mr. Farrell said, by making our arrangements with countries which have to have what we produce and which do not come in competition with the surplus they themselves produce in their own countries.

Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to find some difficulty in working that out. Of course they will find difficulty, for the simple and obvious reason that for nine years the colossal failures they made themselves indicate their inability to do so, and that is why we are here to-day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The colossal trade was not a colossal failure.

Mr. BENNETT: The loss of trade was exactly the same--

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I said colossal trade.

Mr. BENNETT: —in Canada as in other countries of the world, and we are still the fifth trading country of the world. In other words, the ten millions of people inhabiting this vast territory are the fifth trading people in the world. I will admit that the right hon. gentleman and his friends opposite would like that not to be. They would rejoice if it were not so because it would be of some political advantage to them. Their constant fear seems to be that by the application of business principles to these matters we will insure success, and they have made every effort they could to bring about failure with respect to the Imperial economic conference. Their every effort has been directed in an endeavour to bring about if possible a failure in order that they may derive some political credit. What is more, that is well understood in the various parts of this empire.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Could my right hon. friend have asked for more in the way of a free hand than what he had at the last Imperial conference?

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman has failed to appreciate what I say—the former Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) never could understand it—hon. gentlemen opposite must realize that I am referring to their efforts to belittle and if possible destroy the adjourned conference at Ottawa. That fact is fairly well understood.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is there to be a conference this fall?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman knows that I cannot be diverted by that from this budget. Let me proceed.

Mr. POWER: The hon. gentleman is giving us considerable diversion.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman's wit is greater than his understanding.

May I now, having reverted to the question of trade, point out the position which this country occupies amongst the nations of the world and the result of the efforts which were made in September last to ensure that there should be less of other people's products come into competition, on terms that are injurious and destructive to our own industrial well-being, with the products we ourselves produce.

Having done that, I shall now speak of two matters further and then I shall have done in that regard. A few months ago I pointed out that the republic of France, realizing the weakness to which attention was directed with respect to the treaty, had undertaken to increase their purchases of wheat from this country during the current wheat season, and prior to the end of April they had bought six times as much wheat from Canada as during the preceding year. Moreover, notwithstanding the statements that have been made as to the difficulties under which we labour, the statement made by the former Minister of Trade and Commerce that this country could do nothing to sell wheat—selling wheat is something he could not do—all I can say is this: The net result of the situation to-day is that we have sold at least one-third more wheat than we did for the same period the year before. That is the lowest estimate, and it is increasing very rapidly.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the price?

Mr. BENNETT: The price is just as low this year as it was last with respect to the other countries of the world, but we have endeavoured as best we could, although opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite, to secure the markets, and as a matter of fact, as is shown by the increased exports of wheat, we have to some extent secured them.

WAYS AND MEANS FISCAL YEAR 1931-32

I now come to what probably to some is the most interesting part of our discussion, namely, to what ways and means we shall resort for the purpose of providing the money to carry on the public business. I shall come first of all to a statement of anticipated revenues and expenditures. I will admit that this is the first time for many years that this country has had a budget.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Will any hon. member on the other side of the house say that last year there was any estimate given of expected revenues? Was there any estimate given of expected expenditures? Was there any word given of a $75,000,000 deficit? What did they do? What the then government did was merely to bring down estimates for moneys to be raised by taxation without any estimate of what was to be realized. I said frequently in this house in those days, and I now repeat, that not in any municipal council in this country would the people tolerate their mayor and councillors conducting business without giving an estimate of expected expenditures and revenues for the current year. It is the basis of responsible government, it is the basis upon which representative institutions have been established, and that responsibilty can only attach when there is some estimate as to what is being received by the country from the taxation imposed and as to what expenditures are to be made. So I propose under the heading which I have given to draw attention to these matters. I shall ask hon. gentlemen to go through the record of my predecessors in that regard during the last seven or eight years and see if they can find any such record there. I could have easily escaped doing so. All I would have had to do would have been to follow the example of my predecessors during the past eight years, and I would have escaped all responsibility for giving any figures of what the proposed income and expenditure will be during the present year.

On the basis of existing taxation rates, the anticipated revenues in the present fiscal year will be $325,120,000. A division of the amount by sources is:—

Customs	$117,000,000
Excise duties	59,500,000
Income tax	54,000,000
Excise taxes	38,000,000
Post Office	30,500,000
Interest on investments	8,800,000
Miscellaneous revenues	13,276,000
	321,076,000
German reparation payments and miscellaneous receipts	4,044,000
	$325,120,000

The expenditures for the year, including all statutory charges, are estimated at $430,457,828. A division of these, and a comparison with the actual expenditures last year, are:

	Actual 1930-31	Estimated 1931-32
Ordinary expenditures	$389,560,722	$391,552,085
Unemployment relief	4,431,655	13,000,000
Capital expenditures	28,222,342	18,484,243
Special expenditures	12,357,674	4,378,000
Loans and advances non-active	5,488,264	3,043,500
	$440,060,657	$430,457,828

It will, therefore, be noted that with estimated revenues of $325,120,000 and with estimated expenditures of $430,457,828, parliament must take under consideration ways and means to secure added revenues if the accounts are to be balanced. The sum of $105,337,828 will be required if all expenditures are treated as charges against the year's revenues. On the other hand, if the $18,484,243 on capital account, plus the $1,700,000 estimated to be required by the Quebec harbour commission, which in the foregoing table is included in Loans and Advances non-active are treated as permanent improvements, and paid from borrowings, the additional amount required is $85,153,585. The new imposts to be authorized by the resolutions about to be tabled will, it is hoped, produce an additional estimated amount of $78,175,000 and for the purpose of showing the increases by sources, a summarized list is now given:

Customs duties	$ 5,000,000
Excise taxes
Sales tax	52,500,000
Tax on imports	7,500,000
Stamps	1,000,000
Income tax	9,500,000
Post Office	2,175,000
Other taxes	500,000
	$78,175,000

On the basis of the present volume of business, it is estimated that these additional taxes will yield $94,000,000 in a twelve months' period.

To give a comparison of the estimated total revenues for the present year, with the actual revenues of last year, the following is submitted:

	Actual 1930-31	Estimated 1931-32
Customs duties	$131,209,000	$122,000,000
Excise duties	57,747,000	59,500,000
Excise taxes	34,735,000	99,000,000
Income tax	71,048,000	63,500,000
Post Office	30,212,000	32,675,000
Interest on Investments	10,421,000	8,800,000
Miscellaneous Revenue	14,221,000	13,776,000
	$349,593,000	$399,251,000
German reparation payment and Miscellaneous receipts	6,622,000	4,044,000
	$356,215,000	$403,295,000

With estimated expenditures of $410,273,000 exclusive of expenditures on capital account and advances to Quebec harbour commission, but including the balance of $13,000,000 of the unemployment relief appropriation of 1930 and estimated revenues of $403,295,000, the deficiency in revenues under expenditures, based upon the estimates made, will be some $7,000,000.

The $13,000,000 for unemployment relief is a commitment actually made in 1930-31, and would more properly be considered in the accounts of last year, but under the government's system of book-keeping, the actual disbursements not being made until this year due to the time necessary for the usual accounting formalities, they serve to add to the expenditures of the present year. Taking this into consideration, the figures presented indicate a balancing of the budget by a substantial margin in respect of expenditures properly applicable to 1931-32, after excluding capital.

While on the subject of our commitments for the year, let me say that contractual obligations entered into by the harbour commissions of Halifax and St. John under the former administration involving millions of dollars of expenditure for which no parliamentary sanction was in existence will add materially to our financial requirements. It will be necessary for the government to ask parliament to make provision for the implementing of these contracts. The whole matter is under investigation and report but it is possible to say that the amounts involved in these contracts and in ancillary expenditures which are recommended to render the main projects of commercial value will be over $6,000,000 divided about equally between these ports. Also, in respect of the elevator built in 1927 at New Westminster but not yet in operation, some $300,000, in addition to $700,000 already provided by way of guarantee of securities, is asked of this administration to meet commitments made but not provided for.

Included in the expenditures to which I have referred, contemplated for this year, are those provided by the main estimates, and the additional sums which we have provided for supplementaries, besides a sum for old age pensions, increasing our contributions to the provinces from 50 to 75 per cent for this year only in respect of the total sums that are paid. We propose to implement the promise made by the Conservative party at the convention which was held at Winnipeg and at which during the succeeding election I became the mouthpiece of that party and its policies by providing a further sum of $1,800,000 for coal subsidies.

ALBERTA AND EASTERN BRITISH COLUMBIA MOVEMENT

On coal movements from Alberta and the eastern area of British Columbia to the Manitoba market some 100,000 tons have been moved since June of last year.

We now propose to grant a higher rate of assistance on Canadian coal shipped to this market and at the same time extend the area as far east as Fort Frances and Sioux Lookout. The increased assistance now provided should do much to extend the market for Canadian coals. The assistance provided in this case is by the payment of $\frac{1}{7}$ of one cent per ton per ton per mile on coal to Manitoba and $\frac{1}{3}$ of one cent per ton per mile on movements eastward as far as Fort Frances and Sioux Lookout.

Maximum $2 per ton into Ontario.

Maximum $1.50 per ton into Manitoba.

Saskatchewan

Shipments of lignite from the Saskatchewan field will be assisted by a payment of ½ of one cent per ton per mile on movements to Manitoba and that part of Ontario just mentioned. The previous assistance granted amounted to a straight bonus of 50c. per ton applying only to the Manitoba market. This is now extended as far east as Fort Frances and Sioux Lookout.

Maximum $1 per ton.

British Columbia

It appears that with reasonable assistance the coal industry of British Columbia can be improved and with this end in view the government has decided to assist by granting the sum of 25c. per ton on sales of coal sold for fuel, for ships' stores or for export to foreign countries. This assistance will not apply on exports to the United States of America.

There again one is confronted with a situation of great seriousness. The people of the Pacific slope, when they substituted oil for coal, probably did not realize the extent of the injurious effect upon the coal industry. Therefore, along the coast of British Columbia oil burners have been substituted for coal grates, and changes cannot be made without causing tremendous losses in a period of great depression. The same thing applies to other matters, so much so that when the new hotel was built at Vancouver, the pressure to burn oil succeeded over the pressure to have coal used until my hon. friend the Minister of Railways reversed the decision and provided that coal should be burned. There are great merits to the use of oil as a fuel, but it is imported into this country and when the gasoline is taken from it the crude oil becomes available for fuel purposes. Industries have been established using that fuel, and to change back to coal would involve tremendous losses at this time.

New Brunswick

The assistance previously granted to the eastern coal industry did not extend the markets for New Brunswick coal. The assistance now authorized is by a payment of ⅛ of one cent per ton per mile on movements to points in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

Maximum $1.50 per ton.

Nova Scotia

Coal movements from the province of Nova Scotia to points in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario are further encouraged by a payment of ⅛ of one cent per ton per mile to Quebec and ⅛ of one cent per ton per mile to Ontario from St. Lawrence ports. An all rail winter movement is also provided by the payment of ½ of one cent per ton per mile.

Maximum 75 cents on the ⅛ rate; maximum $2 on the ½ rate; maximum $1.50 on the ⅛ rate.

Summary

If, under this assistance, the total potential coal markets are secured it should provide a movement of nearly 1,800,000 tons of Canadian coal at a cost of approximately $2,000,000.

That extends until the year 1933, as will be indicated further as we progress.

Shipment of Alberta coal to Ontario at $6.75 freight rate

Order in council P.C. 439, approved 16th March, 1928, authorizing $6.75 rate for seasonal movements of coal from Alberta to Ontario for not less than three months in each year during a period of three years.

Provisions were extended for another year by P.C. 1268 of 5th June, 1930.

Seasonal Movements	Tonnage Shipped	Cost to Government
1928; April 15 to July 15	32,101	$47,509 50
1929; Jan. 15 to July 31	37,115	82,396 55
1929-30; Dec. 1 to July 31	26,156	No payments as yet
1930-1931; Oct. 25 to July 31	12,167	No payments as yet

Provisions have been made for a continuous movement from August 1, 1931, to March 15, 1932.

Findings of Cost by Railway Board

In respect of the 1928 movement the Board of Railway Commissioners reported that payments were to be made by the Government on the cost basis of $8.23 per ton, making $1.48 per ton as the amount to be paid by the government to the railways.

With respect to the 1929 movement the railway board's finding was on the cost basis of $8.97 per ton, making $2.22 per ton as the amount to be paid by the government.

No decision has been handed down for the 1930 movement.

The third matter to which attention might be directed is that touching the movement of wheat. There has been a succession of bad harvests in some parts of western Canada, and during the last few weeks lack of moisture—I speak subject to correction, I hope—has caused a loss of this year's prospective crop in a great deal of that area. My advices by telephone were that very few days would determine the fate of a considerable portion of the crop. In some parts of the country this is the third crop failure and the reserves of the people are entirely exhausted. Two things must happen: First, provision should be made to assist those who have a crop, because they have considerable obligations, taxes, etc., which must be discharged. Other methods will be taken to deal with the situation of the provinces which are not in a position to assist those who with their reserves exhausted and their crops a failure for the third time are practically ruined. We therefore propose to provide that the freight rates shall be adjusted by this country absorbing five cents per bushel on all wheat that is exported of the crop of this year. That provision is effective this year. That amount is taken into consideration in the estimates I have given of the expenditures for the year.

We propose therefore to indicate now to the house the methods to be adopted for the purpose of raising necessary revenue to meet expenditures. We believe that if the revenues show any appreciable expansion the budget will be balanced at the end of the year. At the most however the expenditures which will be called upon to be met by short date treasury bill transactions will amount to less than $10,000,000. I thus come to the ways and means by which we propose to make good the supply.

Two principles have to be borne in mind; the first is that however tempting the field may be, in a period of great depression departure from known practised methods of taxation should be as slight as possible. In other words there should be as little dislocation of business as possible and the taxes imposed should be those with which the people are familiar. The second is that taxes should be as light as possible having regard to the conditions which prevail. One of the paradoxes of a situation such as the present one is that when money is required, most, the people are least capable of paying it in the form of taxation. That is the condition found in periods of universal depression.

Applying these rules first of all we take up customs duties, or the tariff. By this government the tariff is used for the purposes I have indicated. I should have liked to have a complete revision of the tariff, as I indicated at the short session would take place. However circumstances and conditions over which we had no control made such a revision impossible at the present moment. With that in mind we have undertaken revision of only such items as it was necessary to deal with to ensure the maximum of employment by reason of the operation of the new rates. A similar result was obtained by our action during the last session. I pause at this time to ask hon. members opposite what the condition of this country would have been had there been no short session. I just put that question to my hon. friends. The number of items with which we have dealt and which deal with rate-making included in the resolutions number about two hundred. A feature of the amendments is a provision for the collection of duty by which we follow the modern practice adopted in other countries whereby for duty purposes containers are treated as contents. That provision applies to cheese, powdered milk, macaroni, dried fruits, soap and the like. In almost every case, with only two or three exceptions, changes of rates are confined to the intermediate and general tariffs; in other words, the British preference has been left untouched. In connection with agricultural and other food products there are increases under the intermediate or general tariff, or both, in respect to numerous commodities. The more noticeable items in this class are live hogs, fresh meats, bacons, hams and shoulders; shell eggs, cheese, hops, powdered milk; peas, Indian corn, hay; field, root and garden seeds; canned fruit and vegetables, raisins, oranges.

Another item which has involved much discussion is that concerning the automobile industry. Hon. members will recall that a few weeks ago certain changes were made in the automobile schedule under an order in council which provided that the discount to dealers should not exceed 20 per cent for duty purposes. As is known, automobiles subject to duty at the present time are divided into two classes, those valued up to $1,200 and those ranging from that figure upward. We propose for duty purposes to divide automobiles into three classes: first those valued up to $1,200, second, from $1,201 to $2,100, and third, above $2,100. In connection with the first named class there are no changes in duties. In connection with the second group the general tariff is increased from 27½ per cent to 30 per cent. On the third group the intermediate and general rates are increased to 30 and 40 per cent respectively. The automobiles in this latter group are what my hon. friend's refer to as luxury cars.

Now I come to the question of drawbacks. It will be recalled that on more than one occasion the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) pointed out that the drawback of 25 per cent on all the imported commodities which went into the production of an automobile operated, if at all, unfairly on Canadian industry. What we propose to do is this: first, the drawback shall not in any event exceed 60 per cent, and second, the drawback shall not apply to commodities which I shall hereafter enumerate. As indicating the extent to which this country has made progress in the way of developing its industries I should like the house to consider the items upon which drawbacks will not be granted. The articles to which I have referred are as follows:

Rubber tires; wheel rims; wheels, including hubs and drums; tire carriers; tire covers; wheel carriers; brakes, service and emergency; brake linings; brake pedals and operating levers; chassis springs, between frame and axles; shock absorbers, chassis frames; front axles, forged type only; clutch and clutch pedals; universal joints; propeller shafts; transmissions; gear shift levers; rear valves, except banjo housings; radiator cores; exhaust pipes; mufflers; gasoline tanks; running boards and covers; front and rear fenders; bumpers and bumperettes; steering gears; head and tail lights, not including lenses; dome lamps; electric light globes; electric wiring and cable; spark plugs; batteries, starting motors; electric generators; drag links; motor fans; motor fan belts; thrust bearings, ball or plain; motor hoods, sheet metal; motor hood clamps; anti-squeak braids and strips; moulded rubber parts; lubrication fittings; wheel hub caps; sand castings; drop rolled or pressed forgings; bolts, nuts, screws, tacks and studs; head pins and clevis; cotter pins; plain washers; coil springs and seat springs; wood frames for bodies; rubber and pyroxilin covered or doubled top fabrics and curtains; windshields complete; upholstering fabrics and materials other than printed fabrics; rubber tubing and windlaces; floor boards; carpets; window shades; paints and varnishes and solder; stampings of all kinds other than radiator shells, and cowls and body stampings; tool kit equipment, including jacks; robe rails and foot rests; curtain and carpet fasteners; rear view mirrors; gear shift lever knobs; felt parts; clocks, stem winding; window finishing strips.

The list I have given comprises items made in Canada and which it is proposed shall hereafter be used in manufacturing automobiles if duty agreements are not to be made. Canadian manufactured cars using those parts will not receive any drawback, with respect to the other items which have to be used to produce cars in this country the drawback will be 60 per cent instead of 25 per cent.

Closely associated with the automobile question is that of used automobiles. Endeavours to dump such cars into this country have been very noticeable during the last few months. We propose to place used automobiles on the prohibited list, hereafter no used automobiles will be imported into Canada except as settlers' effects or travellers' vehicles.

We come now to another item which will greatly interest the house, I am sure—that is coal. It is proposed to impose a duty of 40 cents per ton on anthracite coal and $1 on coke under the general tariff—free under British preferential tariff. It is proposed that the rate on bituminous coal and coal screenings shall be raised to 75 cents per ton, and that the general tariff rate on charcoal be $7.50 per ton.

The leather schedule secures increased rates under all tariffs, the alterations affecting kid, upper leathers, sole leathers, East India kips, belting leather and belting, glove leathers and leather garments.

We come now to another matter which has been given much attention by legislators during the last twenty-five years, namely, the importation of magazines and periodicals. I was told the other day that at one newsstand there were 350 different magazines and newspapers on sale. As to a very large number of them, certainly some people would be better off if they did not read them.

An hon. MEMBER: All people.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, all people. We therefore propose that magazines and periodicals shall be made subject to a specific duty of 15 cents per pound, under the general tariff, except in the case of such as may be placed on an exempted list by order in council. At the present time the censor undertakes to exercise some control over these matters—a control that at times has been more or less difficult. That provision of the tariff as to prohibition of the importation of such publications will remain as at present. Under the direction of the governor in council magazines for educational and scientific and religious purposes will be allowed to enter free.

Tariff changes affecting iron and steel include increases on steel plate, wire netting, machinery, safes and miscellaneous manufactures of iron and steel, with decreases on green saw steel, hot rolled strip steel for cold rolling, various kinds of steel wires and bessemer steel billets.

One of the items that I mentioned in September last about which there has been much discussion in this country is furniture. Last summer I had an opportunity to see many of the furniture factories of this country I found that they were working a very limited time per day but making quite as good furniture as is made in any part of the world, if not better—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: —but they were subject to dumping competition that certainly was interfering with their trade. We propose to make some slight change in that regard, particularly with respect to furniture, including metal furniture, veneers, ply wood, clothespins, golf clubs, tennis rackets, and so on.

The textile schedules are limited, and the changes very few, the significant one being increases on linen fabrics and articles, excepting damasks, all of which are made in Canada. Damasks,—a tariff on which might affect the trade of northern Ireland—have not been touched. We propose to see that there shall be no increase in price, but that the Canadian industries shall have an opportunity to compete fairly with their competitors. The changes also involve increased tariffs on fabrics of pure silk, with decreases on mohair yarns. With respect to pure silk, we desire to protect our manufacturers from competition with dumped silk from abroad which is sent in here at almost any price. Our silks are the equal of any made in the world; in fact a branch factory in this country is a subsidiary of a company that employs some 50,000 people in the United States.

Prepared roofings, wallboards, insulating materials, and so on, are increased in rates, as are wallpapers and containers.

Building stone of all kinds, both rough and finished, as well as building brick, magnesite and ground feldspar, will bear higher rates than formerly.

No changes are made in respect of farm implements, although the item covering repair parts is extended in point of time. That is, when we increased the duty last year on agricultural implements, we found there were certain repair parts made by companies that had no factory in Canada. I am happy to say they are likely to open one at no distant date. In the meantime parts to repair their machines will continue to come in under the old tariff for another year.

The tariff on clocks and watches is revised, the rate being increased, and provision is made for increases on window glass and laminated glass. I should think there would now be a noise on the other side of the house.

The tea schedule is radically revised, the former free entry of bulk teas under the British preferential tariff being cancelled and replaced by rates of 4 cents, 8 cents, and 8 cents per pound on teas imported direct from place of growth or imported from the United Kingdom, and rates of 10 cents, 10 cents, and 10 cents per pound on teas otherwise imported. It will probably be remembered that at the last general session one item only in the tea schedule was touched, and that tea unless it came in in packages of a certain weight was still subject to a high tariff; it was made free in respect to other packages. It is now proposed to revise that schedule by placing a duty of 4 cents and leaving the rates for other tea items just as they stood, except as to making the tariff applicable to all packages regardless of their weight.

The rates on the so-called "basket" item, that is, the rates covering everything not specified, has been increased to 25 per cent. That is only in keeping with the conditions now obtaining throughout the world.

I have given the principles which govern the application of the tariff to protect Canadians. I put this question to every member of this house: Can Canada in a protected world be other than a protected country?

Mr. YOUNG: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Then if that be so it merely means that we are inviting all the protected countries of the world to destroy our own. There is no gainsaying that. It is an unfortunate thing perhaps, but it is true that all the countries of the world are now protected countries, and Canadian products may find access to their markets only by paying very high tolls. Can this country afford to be an unprotected country against the competition of the protected countries of the world?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BENNETT: We have answered that question in the way I have indicated, and by that answer we stand or fall. By the application of this tariff we are of the opinion that we shall receive substantially increased revenues as I have indicated in the table I have just given to the house.

I next pass to the income tax. We propose to raise additional revenue by increasing the rate on corporations from 8 to 10 per cent—an increase of 2 per cent. The United States rate at the present time is 12 per cent. That additional 2 per cent we will make payable between now and December, free of interest, on the present tax returns. That, we believe, will yield us an additional $8,000,000.

We also propose that there shall be a modification of the present income tax by providing that a 2 per cent rate shall be levied on the returns of all investments made by non-residents in this country. All other countries of which I am aware have such a tax, usually higher than 2 per cent; but in order to attract, if it be necessary, additional capital to this country for safe investment, we are asking that the rate be only 2 per cent. In other words, those from abroad who have formed companies here or put their moneys in trust companies for investment will contribute to our revenue 2 per cent of such income derived from their Canadian investments. We believe that is not an unreasonable rate to charge under existing conditions, being, as I have said, somewhat less than that obtaining in other countries. I am reminded by my friend the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) that those who pay on their Canadian income 2 per cent will receive credit in their own country, wherever it may be, so far as we are able to ascertain, certainly in Great Britain, France and the United States—for the tax thus paid in this country upon production of satisfactory evidence that it has been paid. That is the principle adopted by other countries; on investments made in Great Britain by Canadians the tax paid is credited against their tax bill in this country when they come to pay their income tax.

I may add that it is proposed also during the present session entirely to amend the Income Tax Act. Family corporations will be abolished; it is about time. In addition to that we propose to present a new schedule of rates based upon the experience of the commissioner of taxation. Mr. Walters was asked to prepare, with the aid of his officials, what he conceived to be a proper tax rate for this country, having regard to known conditions. He has done so, and the government proposes to adopt his recommendations. The exemptions will be somewhat increased, but it is thought desirable that the rate should start at one per cent, with another one per cent added with each additional $1,000 of income until the maximum is reached, which will be 25 per cent. In other words, on the larger incomes 25 cents out of each dollar will be paid to the state.

It may amaze the house to learn—and perhaps it will be interesting to hon. members, as it was to me—that the amount of income tax collected in this country since the tax first was put on the statute books, including the business profits war tax, has reached the huge sum of $902,000,000 collected at a cost of $24,000,000. The rate I have mentioned is a little, but not much, greater than the rate prevailing in the United States. There the exemption is $1,500 for unmarried persons and $3,500 for married persons. On the first $4,000 of income the rate is 1½ per cent; on the next $4,000 the rate is 3 per cent, and on the balance the rate is 5 per cent, with a surtax to a maximum of 20 per cent on incomes in excess of $10,000.

In addition it is proposed that dividends from Canadian corporations, up to $10,000, shall be exempt from taxation, to the extent of one-half the income of the taxpayer. In other words, if a man has an income of $20,000 per annum, of which $10,000 is derived as dividends from Canadian corporations, he will not pay a second tax on his dividends, because it has already been paid through the tax paid by the company. That was the law at one time and still is the law in most countries. The limit, however, is $10,000, and the exemption granted shall not in any case exceed one-half of the total income of the taxpayer. If a taxpayer has an income of $30,000 he will be able to obtain credit only for $10,000 of Canadian dividends.

Mr. POWER: May I ask when these changes will come into effect?

Mr. BENNETT: On the 1st day of July; I was just coming to that. The first item I mentioned, that is, the two per cent additional which corporations must pay, will be between now and December 31, with interest, and the other items will become effective on the 1st day of July. The new act will be introduced for the purpose of dealing with next year's taxes. There will be no change in the present individual rates; they will remain for the current year.

I pointed out a moment ago that the Post Office Department has a very substantial deficit. We propose to meet that deficit first of all by adding one cent to the postage rate. That is, the tax is one cent, as it was and is on drop letters, the full rate being two cents, one cent for postage and one cent for tax. We propose to make that of universal application and put back the one cent tax where it was before it was taken off a few years ago. It will be recalled that the government of Great Britain declined to reduce the postal rate in that country from three cents because the revenue was required. The Prime Minister of Australia told me this rate was required also in Australia in order to balance their postal budget. So we propose to obtain the additional revenue by adding the one cent tax, which is now applicable only to drop letters in the city, making the rate three cents in the one case and two cents in the other.

We also propose that the Post Office Department, which every year has lost millions of dollars in the transportation of newspapers and magazines, now shall be reimbursed as far as it is possible to do so, by the payment first of all of a cent and a half per pound instead of one cent per pound on all newspapers and periodicals having a net circulation in excess of ten thousand. The first ten thousand will carry the present rate of one cent, and the weekly newspapers will continue to be carried at the rate in force at this time. The new rate will be one and a half cents, subject to the exception of religious, agricultural, scientific and educational papers and magazines. By these methods we believe we will make nearly a balanced budget of the Post Office Department.

We have then added an additional one per cent special excise tax on all imports that pass through the customs of the country, free or otherwise. That is a special excise tax of one per cent on the invoice price passed by the customs. We have also provided for increase of an additional three per cent in the sales tax. This will put it back where it was some years ago, as hon. members will recall. Last year it was reduced one per cent, and one per cent reductions have been made in other years. We are putting it back to four per cent, adding three per cent to the present rate.

We believe that, with one more addition, these changes will provide a very substantial increase in our revenue. I refer to the stamp tax on cheques. You will recall that the law now provides that cheques for an amount of less than $10 pay no tax, while cheques for over $10 pay two cents. Many people who receive their embossed cheque books have been in the habit of not differentiating between cheques for less than $10 and cheques for more than that amount. It is now proposed that all cheques shall pay two cents, as it is in England. Probably the embossed cheque will enable everyone supplied with cheque books by the banks to carry on their banking operations without inconvenience, and this will add greatly to the revenue of the country. Referring back to the sales tax for a moment, of course that tax is subject to exemptions, which are somewhat circumscribed as compared to those now provided.

Sir, I think it will be agreed that the record of the performance of the Canadian people during the last fifty or sixty years is such as to command the pride of every Canadian and the admiration of most people throughout the world. We now face a period of world wide depression, and it becomes important for us to face what lies before us with courage, with determination and with faith. I am sure there is no Canadian who has not sufficient faith in his country to believe that we cannot fail in building up a great nation; I am sure there is no Canadian who does not realize that to do so we must have not only faith but courage, persistence and determination. Above all we must have that unity of thought and purpose which is so essential at a time like this. Differences of political opinion we can readily understand, but there is a side to the lives of all of us which is not purely political. We are citizens of a great Dominion, and I think we can with fairness—and I trust with a great deal of assurance—appeal to all Canadians regardless of their political views, to unite in the common purpose of insuring that this country, in the greatest trial it has ever had in peace time, does not fail. It must not fail; and if I read a few words which I have extracted from the Chronicles of the Pilgrim Fathers, written over three hundred years ago, I think the house will agree with me that they truly indicate the attitude of mind which we Canadians should all take to the problems that confront us. With these words I will conclude what I have to say:

> It wonderfully encourageth men in their duties, when they see the burthen equally borne; but when some withdraw themselves, and retire to their own particular case, pleasure, or profit, what heart can men have to go on in their business? When men are come together to lift some weighty piece of timber, or vessel, if one stand still and do not lift, shall not the rest be weakened and disheartened? Will not a few idle drones spoil the whole stock of laborious bees? So one idle belly, one murmurer, one complainer, one self-lover, will weaken and dishearten a whole colony. Great matters have been brought to pass, where men have cheerfully, as with one heart, hand and shoulder, gone about it, both in wars, buildings and plantations; but where every man seeks himself, all cometh to nothing.

These words were written some three hundred and ten years ago at a time of great strain and stress in the new colony that had been founded by the efforts and labours of those who, coming out from the old country, landed at or near Plymouth. They are applicable to-day; and if many of the observations I have made are highly disputatious, as they may be, I feel quite certain that in this great crisis that now faces us, men will not for a single moment be governed and guided entirely by political considerations but rather that they will have an enduring faith in their country, a courage and determination that it shall not fail in the great task in which we are engaged, and that all Canadians, men and women of good will, will unite for the common purpose of advancing the common interest of all our citizens.

I beg to give notice that when the house resolves itself into committee, I shall move the following resolutions:

The Minister of Finance, in Committee of Ways and Means:

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Income War Tax Act and to provide:—

1. That the rate of income tax applicable to the income of corporations and joint stock companies for the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty and thereafter, be increased from eight per centum to ten per centum.

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend and consolidate the Income War Tax Act and to provide:—

1. That the Consolidated Act be known as the Income Tax Act (1931) Consolidated;

2. That the exemption for persons presently entitled to three thousand dollars be raised to an exemption of three thousand five hundred dollars;

3. That the provisions relating to family corporations and personal corporations be repealed;

4. That in respect of fiscal periods not coincident with the calendar year the return of income and payment of the tax may be made within four months from the close of the fiscal period and if not so made and paid interest on the tax payable therefrom shall be paid to the thirtieth day of April in the next succeeding calendar year at the rate of six per centum per annum; or to the time of the filing of the return and payment of tax, should such filing and payment be made before the said thirtieth April but in any case the return must be made on or before the thirtieth day of April in the next succeeding calendar year;

5. That income by way of dividends, rentals, interest, royalties or other like income not disclosed by the taxpayer in his return of income shall be added to the other income of the taxpayer in double the amount and the whole taxed under the provisions of the act;

6. That net dividends from Canadian companies liable to corporation tax to the extent of one-half of the taxable income of a taxpayer, shall be exempt from tax up to ten thousand dollars thereof, provided that the exemption shall be allocated, in calculating the tax payable, five hundred dollars to each successive tax rate as in the first schedule to the act provided, commencing with the lowest rate and bracket of income of one per centum until like successive allocations of the dividend income, or fraction thereof, shall have exhausted the dividend exemption provided for;

7. That a tax of two per centum be collected at the source on dividends payable to non-resident shareholders, such deduction to be effected by the companies paying the dividend or trustees receiving the dividend for and on behalf of non-resident persons. The tax shall be deducted at the time of the paying of the dividend by the company or on receipt of the dividend by the trustee and within thirty days thereafter paid to the Receiver General of Canada. Failure to remit the tax deducted shall render the company or trustee personally liable to interest thereon from the date when it should have been paid to the date of payment at the rate of six per centum per annum. Failure to deduct the tax shall render the company or receiving trustee personally liable for the tax which should have been deducted, together with interest thereon at six per centum per annum until paid.

8. That when the assets or shares of a company, having on hand undistributed income at the end of one thousand nine hundred and twenty-nine, are sold directly or through an intermediary to a company, which company issues shares, bonds, notes or other like documents as fully paid up by capitalizing the said undistributed income, then on the redemption of such documents the company redeeming shall pay a tax of four per centum on the amount of such documents redeemed.

9. That in respect of the income for the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-one and each year thereafter the rates of tax at present imposed on individuals be repealed and the following substituted in lieu thereof:—

"On the first $1,000 or any portion thereof, 1 per centum;

Goods of a class subject to duty under the Excise Act.

Provided, notwithstanding, that on importations from Australia under the Australian Trade Agreement Act, 1925, the said special duty shall not exceed fifteen per cent ad valorem in any case.

Notwithstanding anything in this Act contained the levying and collection heretofore of special or dumping duty in cases where the fair market value of goods was determined by the minister, acting or purporting to act under the provisions of section forty-seven A of the Customs Act, as enacted by section three of chapter eighteen of the Statutes of 1922 (section forty-three of the Customs Act, R.S., 1927), is hereby ratified and confirmed.

2. Excise duties or excise taxes shall be disregarded in estimating the market value of goods for the purposes of special duty when the goods are entitled to entry under the British preferential tariff, intermediate tariff, or any tariff more favourable than the general tariff.

3. Customs duties of the United Kingdom shall be disregarded in estimating the market value of wines for the purposes of special duty when the same are entitled to entry under the intermediate tariff or any tariff more favourable than the general tariff and are bottled in bond in the United Kingdom and imported direct therefrom.

4. "Export price" or "selling price" in this section shall be held to mean and include the exporter's price for the goods, exclusive of all charges thereon after their shipment from the place whence exported directly to Canada.

[Mr. Bennett.]

5. If at any time it appears to the satisfaction of the minister that the payment of the special duty by this section provided for is being evaded by the shipment of goods on consignment without sale prior to such shipment, the minister may in any case or class of cases authorize such action as is deemed necessary to collect on such goods or any of them the same special duty as if the goods had been sold to an importer in Canada prior to their shipment to Canada.

6. If at any time it appears to the satisfaction of the minister that any person owning or controlling or interested in a business in Canada and also in any other country, or any person carrying on a business in any other country and owning or controlling or interested in a business operating in Canada, and by reason thereof is enabled to import goods for further manufacture or assembling or for resale, and while complying with the legal requirements on importation disposes of such imported goods, whether in the form as imported or as further processed, assembled or manufactured, at prices below the duty paid value thereof as entered at customs plus or including all charges upon the goods after shipment from the place whence exported directly to Canada, including sales, distribution and advertising costs, and plus, if any, the cost of processing, assembling or further manufacturing in Canada, the minister may declare that goods of such class or kind were and are on importation subject to an additional special or dumping duty not exceeding fifty per cent and authorize such action as is deemed necessary for the collection thereof.

7. If the full amount of any special duty of customs as herein provided has not been paid on goods imported, the customs entry thereof shall be amended and the deficiency paid upon the demand of the collector.

8. The minister may make such regulations as are deemed necessary for carrying out the provisions of this section and for its enforcement.

"7. Goods imported into Canada the product or manufacture of any foreign country which treats imports from Canada less favourably than those from other countries, may be made subject by order of the governor in council in the case of goods already dutiable to a surtax over and above the duties specified in Schedule A to this Act, and in the case of goods not dutiable to a rate of duty, not exceeding, in either case, thirty-three and one-third per centum ad valorem.

2. Goods the product or manufacture of any foreign country imported into Canada in vessels admitted to registration under the laws of such foreign country may, if such foreign country imposes higher duties of customs upon goods imported into such country in vessels registered in Canada than upon the like goods when imported in vessels of such country, be made subject by order of the governor in council in the case of goods already dutiable to a surtax over and above the duties specified in Schedule A to this Act, and in the case of goods not dutiable to a rate of duty, not exceeding, in either case, thirty-three and one-third per centum ad valorem.

3. Within the limitations in this section hereinbefore prescribed any such goods may by such order in council be made subject to a surtax or rate, as the case may be, differing from the surtax or rate to which another class of goods may be thereby, or by any other such order, made subject.

4. The governor in council may make regulations for carrying out the purposes of this section and may by order in council suspend the surtax or rate in whole or in part from application to the goods of such foreign country or any class of such goods.

5. The decision of the governor in council shall be final on any question which may arise regarding the application of the surtax or rate imposed pursuant to this section.

"8. Notwithstanding anything in this Act, fish and other products of the fisheries of Newfoundland may be imported into Canada free of customs duty until otherwise determined by the governor in council, by order published in the Canada Gazette.

"9. Fish caught by fishermen in vessels registered in Canada or owned by any person domiciled in Canada, and the products thereof carried from the fisheries in such vessels, shall be admitted into Canada free of duty. The Minister may make such regulations, if any, as are deemed necessary for carrying out the provisions of this section.

"10. Notwithstanding anything in this Act, goods other than tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, spirituous or alcoholic liquors and articles specified in Schedule A of the West Indies Trade Agreement Act, the produce or manufacture of British Honduras, Bermuda, the Bahamas, Jamaica, Turks and Caicos Islands, the Leeward Islands (Antigua, St. Christopher-Nevis, Dominica, Montserrat and the Virgin Islands), the Windward Islands (Greneda, St. Vincent and St. Lucia), Barbados, Trinidad and Tobago, and British Guiana, when imported direct therefrom shall not be subject at any time to more than fifty per centum of the duties imposed on similar goods as set forth in the general tariff under regulations by the minister.

"11. The governor in council may by order in council make such reductions of duties on goods imported into Canada from any other country or countries as may be deemed reasonable by way of compensation for reductions on Canadian products granted by any such country or countries.

"12. On the materials set forth in Schedule B to this Act, when used for consumption in Canada for the purpose specified in that Schedule, there may be paid, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, the several rates of drawback of Customs duties set opposite to each item respectively in that Schedule, under regulations by the governor in council.

2. If pig iron imported into Canada mixed with pig iron made in Canada has entered into the manufacture of mowing machines, reapers, harvesters, binders and attachments for binders, the drawback payable in pursuance of this section, under regulations by the governor in council, may be computed on the total quantity of pig iron, including pig iron made as aforesaid entering into such goods; provided, however, that the total drawback payable shall not exceed ninety-nine per cent of the duty paid on all the pig iron imported and used by the manufacturer of such goods in manufacturing such goods and other goods.

"13. The importation into Canada of any goods enumerated, described or referred to in Schedule C to this Act is prohibited; and any such goods imported shall thereby become forfeited to the crown and shall be destroyed or otherwise dealt with as the minister directs; and any person importing any such prohibited goods, or causing or permitting them to be imported, shall for each offence incur a penalty not exceeding two hundred dollars.

"14. The governor in council may, from time to time, prohibit the importation into Canada of any goods originating in and exported directly or indirectly from any country not a contracting party to the Treaty of Versailles, executed at Paris, France, on the 28th day of June, 1919, and any order of the governor in council prohibiting the importation into Canada of any goods from any such country shall be published in the next following issue of the Canada Gazette. Any goods imported in violation of the terms of this section shall be forfeited to the crown and shall be dealt with as the minister directs.

"15. Whenever the governor in council deems it to be in the public interest to inquire into any conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement alleged to exist among manufacturers or dealers in any article of commerce to unduly promote the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers in such article at the expense of the consumers, the governor in council may commission or empower any judge of the Supreme Court, or of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any superior court or county court in Canada, to hold an inquiry in a summary way and report to the governor in council whether such conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement exists.

2. The judge may compel the attendance of witnesses and examine them under oath and require the production of books and papers, and shall have such other necessary powers as are conferred upon him by the governor in council for the purpose of such inquiry.

3. If the judge reports that such conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement exists in respect of such article, the governor in council may admit the article free of duty, or so reduce the duty thereon as to give to the public the benefit of reasonable competition in the article, if it appears to the governor in council that such disadvantage to the consumer is facilitated by the duties of customs imposed on a like article.

"16. The governor in council may from time to time, as he deems it expedient, order that goods of any description or class specified in such order, imported into Canada, shall be marked, stamped, branded or labelled in legible English or French words, in a conspicuous place that shall not be covered or obscured by any subsequent attachments or arrangements, so as to indicate the country of origin; and said marking, stamping, branding or labelling shall be as nearly indelible and permanent as the nature of the goods will permit.

2. All orders made by the governor in council under this section shall have effect from and after the day on which the same are published in the Canada Gazette, or from and after such later day as is appointed for the purpose of such orders, and during such time as is therein expressed, or if no time is expressed for that purpose, then until the same are revoked or altered.

3. All such goods imported into Canada after the date of the coming into force of any such order of the governor in council which do not comply with the requirements of such order, shall be subject to an additional duty of ten per centum ad valorem to be levied on the value for duty purposes, and in addition such goods shall not be released from customs possession until they have been so marked, stamped, branded or labelled under customs supervision at the expense of the importer.

4. If any person shall violate any of the provisions so established relating to the marking, stamping, branding or labelling of any such imported goods, or shall deface, destroy, remove, alter or obliterate any such marks, stamps, brands or labels, with intent to conceal the information given by or contained in such marks, stamps, brands or labels, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding one thousand dollars, or to imprisonment not exceeding one year, or to both fine and imprisonment.

5. The Minister may make such regulations as are deemed necessary for carrying out the provisions of this section and for the enforcement thereof.

"17. In the event of producers of goods taking advantage of any duty imposed under this Act to increase the price of such goods to the consumer, or using any such duty to maintain prices at levels deemed by the governor in council to be higher than should prevail, having regard to general economic conditions in the country, the governor in council may reduce or remove such duty.

2. In the event of any one such producer violating the provisions of this section, the governor in council may impose upon all the products of such producer, or any of them, an excise duty equivalent to the amount of customs duty which would be paid by such goods if the same were imported into Canada under the provisions of the general tariff, and the same shall be collectible, as a tax, and the provisions of the Income War Tax Act as to the collection of taxes shall be applicable hereto.

Provided, that neither subsection of this section shall apply to agricultural products.

E. Dube, regarding the construction of a new Canadian National Railways station at Riviere du Loup, from July 29, 1930, to date.

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of calls for tenders, notices published in the papers, estimates, and forms of tenders, in connection with the construction of a new Canadian National Railways station at Riviere du Loup, Quebec, which the Department of Railways and Canals has refused to sanction.

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of the letter or telegram sent by the honourable Minister of Marine to Mr. C. E. Dube, of Riviere du Loup, in reply to his letter on October 2, 1930, with reference to the Riviere du Loup station.

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of the correspondence exchanged between the honourable Minister of Railways and Canals and Mr. C. E. Dube, of Riviere du Loup, said correspondence having been mentioned in a letter of the said Mr. Dube to the honourable Minister of Marine, under date of October 2, 1930, with reference to tenders for the construction of a new station at Riviere du Loup.

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of the letter written by the honourable Minister of Railways and Canals to Mr. C. E. Dube, after October 18, 1930, in reply to his letter of October 14, 1930, regarding the station of Riviere du Loup.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—ESTIMATES

Mr. POULIOT:

For a return showing a complete list of the Canadian National Railways estimates, totalling between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000, which were voted by the House of Commons last year and which were switched to other purposes, as referred to by the honourable Minister of Railways and Canals on May 22, 1931, Hansard, page 2061, second column.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): In regard to this motion and some of the others of the hon. member for Témiscouata, the national railways have represented to me that it would take weeks of the time of many of their clerks to secure the information asked for. Under the circumstances they protest against being asked to use their employees for purposes of this kind.

Mr. POULIOT: It would relieve unemployment to answer these questions.

Mr. MANION: The employees that would have to do this work are employed at present.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think we agreed the other evening that the practice of what is called "switching votes" was not a wise one. It would probably set the directors of the national railways to thinking about this if they were asked to give an accounting.

Mr. BENNETT: The practice has been going on for several years.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But the sooner it is stopped the better.

Motion agreed to.

MONTMORENCY, CHARLEVOIX AND SAGUENAY FARM LOANS

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For a copy of all correspondence and other documents in the possession of the authorities charged with the administration of farm loans, with regard to applications for loans made by virtue of the Farm Loan Act, in the counties of Montmorency, Charlevoix and Saguenay.

Mr. BENNETT: This motion as submitted cannot properly be carried. It strikes at the very foundation of the business of the Canadian Farm Loan Board. It has not been customary for private organizations to make public the names of people who apply for loans and who may or may not have been successful. The essence of the maintenance of this organization is that business is conducted in a businesslike way. The hon. member is not in his place, but I cannot see that that can make any difference. This is a farm loan board; it is a separate organization in which we are merely shareholders, and it is not in the public interest that the information should be given.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion may be allowed to stand in the absence of the hon. member.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot see that that will make any difference.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When the hon. member reads what my right hon. friend has said, he may drop the motion.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Motion stands.

LES EBOULEMENTS, CHARLEVOIX COUNTY, MAIL SERVICE

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For a copy of all correspondence, calls for tenders and other documents in the possession of the Post Office Department at Ottawa and Quebec, with regard to tenders called for the transportation of mail from the station of Les Eboulements to the village of Les Eboulements, in the county of Charlevoix.

Mr. CAHAN: Perhaps it is lack of understanding on my part, but this motion seems to be already covered by No. 10 which has been passed, in reference to the same matter. They seem to be exact duplicates.

Mr. POWER: They are not the same.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RIVIERE-DU-GOUFFRE IMPROVEMENT WORKS

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For a copy of all correspondence and other documents, report or reports made by the chief regional engineer of the Canadian National Railways, regarding certain improvement works to be done on the shores of Riviere-du-Gouffre, at Baie St. Paul, in the county of Charlevoix, for the protection of bridge piers, the property of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. BENNETT: This motion should not be passed. Reports made by engineers, in the course of their employment, to their chiefs have been held in the courts to be privileged under certain circumstances and it does not seem to be conducive to the proper conduct of the business of the Canadian National if an engineer's reports to his superior in connection with contemplated undertakings are to be brought down to the house. It is not quite fair to the railway company, and I trust the hon. member who is asking for the information will realize this. Any representation, of course, for the expenditure of money has to be laid before the house. We have no knowledge of the records and the Canadian National very properly complain that if engineers' reports for the guidance of the executive of the company are brought down to the house, this is putting them in a different position from that of their competitor with regard to their business.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps this request might be brought to the attention of the national railways.

Mr. BENNETT: I know that that is their view with respect to many requests made this session, and they want to know where it is going to end. That is why I mention the matter. I think the hon. gentleman will see the force of the objection to the production of an engineer's report to his superior. Of course, if action is taken, the executive of the railway must be responsible for it, and in some instances the capital has to be found by us; in others it may come within the sphere of maintenance operation. I think the hon. member who made the motion is not present, and therefore it may stand, but I think it should not pass.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the hon. member in whose name the resolution appears, it will stand. Possibly he may withdraw it in view of what has been said.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RIVIERE-DU-LOUP STATION

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of letters written by Mr. C. E. Dube, of Riviere du Loup, to Mr. W. U. Appleton, general manager of the Canadian National Railways at Moncton, New Brunswick, on August 23 and 30, 1930, regarding tenders called for the construction of a new station at Riviere du Loup.

Mr. BENNETT: This is a question about which the house should at least think before it adopts a motion of this character. A private citizen writes a letter to the general manager of the railways. It is now asked that that letter be brought down to the house. We should consider where such a procedure leads and I leave it entirely in the judgment of the house whether they think the railway business should be conducted in that fashion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Dropped.

Mr. POULIOT: I cannot drop the question because those letters have been partly published in a newspaper, so that it was the intention of the writer of the letters to make them public. As they have been made partly public, they must be published as a whole. That is why I ask for copies of those letters. Moreover, my right hon. friend told me this morning that the Canadian National will come to parliament again asking for money. Therefore we wish to know what is going on and that is why we are asking for information that has been made partly public by the writer of the letters.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps the Prime Minister will agree there is a difference in this case, in that the letters referred to in the motion have already in part been made public by the writer.

Mr. BENNETT: There is nothing to that effect in the motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I suggest it might be inserted in the motion. If part of the communication has been made public, the whole of it should be brought down.

Mr. MANION: The Canadian National Railway is being treated as if it were a private enterprise such as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. What right has an hon. member to demand the production of a letter from a private citizen to one of the officials of the Canadian National Railways? If I were an officer of the railway company I should say that I would not produce any such communication, and that would be the end of it.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The Minister of Railways should remember that he is dealing with the eastern division of the Canadian National Railways. I think it has been the practice to deal with that division differently from the others. It has always been the practice to furnish more information with regard to the eastern division.

Mr. POWER: There is—

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is not debatable. The Minister of Railways has raised a point of order to the effect that the resolution is not in order. I sustain the objection and order the motion to be stricken out.

Motion dropped.

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of the letter of Mr. C. E. Dube, of Riviere du Loup, to Mr. W. U. Appleton, General Manager of the Canadian National Railways at Moncton, dated September 12, 1930, regarding the station at Riviere du Loup, and also a copy of Mr. Appleton's reply to said letter.

Mr. BENNETT: The motion is similar to No. 24.

Mr. MANION: Yes, it is the same as No. 24.

Mr. SPEAKER: The same objection is raised as was offered to the previous motion.

Mr. POULIOT: I wish to say a word or two before any disposition is made of the motion. A letter from Mr. Dube to Mr. Appleton has been published in the press, but the reply has not been published. That is why I ask for the information.

Mr. MANION: I object to the passing of this resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER: I sustain the objection and order the motion to be stricken off the order paper.

Motion dropped.

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of the letter written by the Right Honourable Prime Minister or by any other person acting under his instructions, to the Honourable Minister of Labour transmitting to him the letters of Mr. C. E. Dube, dated August 25 and September 11, 1930.

Mr. BENNETT: The words "or by any other person acting under his instructions" might be somewhat out of order. At this date it may be difficult to secure the information desired, but if there are any letters we shall be glad to produce them.

Mr. POULIOT: My right hon. friend knows I will do any thing in the world to please him, provided it is not against my convictions.

Motion agreed to.

WORLD WHEAT CONFERENCE—LONDON MEETING

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For a copy of all documents, telegrams and other communications exchanged between the Prime Minister of Canada and Canada's representative in England, the Honourable G. Howard Ferguson, regarding the wheat conference held recently at London.

[Sir Eugène Fiset.]

Mr. BENNETT: I think it is a matter of common knowledge that the information here sought cannot be supplied. Communications between representatives of this country in England and the government here are privileged. Of course any action that is taken is a proper subject of comment, but if communications of this kind were made public, government could not be carried on. I inquired this morning and was told that the communications could not be supplied, and that it had never been the practice in the past to request that such be done.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the hon member in whose name the resolution stands—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I agree with the remarks of the Prime Minister with regard to communications between this government and the high commissioner in London. Such communications, unless quite evidently intended otherwise, have always been regarded as privileged.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I am so informed.

Mr. SPEAKER: The resolution will be stricken out.

Motion dropped.

ST. MARY'S ROAD, P.E.I.—POSTMISTRESS

Mr. MacLEAN:

For a copy of all orders, correspondence, reports, memoranda and letters; also a copy of all evidence, in the possession of the Postmaster General or any member of the government, regarding the dismissal of Mrs. Rosana McGuigan, postmistress at St. Mary's Road, King's county, Prince Edward Island; also a tabulated statement giving the expenses of each person attending the trial and the amount paid to each, including the commissioner who carried on the investigation.

Mr. BENNETT: Unless information is desired over a long period of time, the date should be put in.

Mr. MacLEAN: Since last August.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion will be amended by the addition of the words "since August, 1930".

Motion as amended agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AUTHORITY TO ISSUE CERTIFICATES FOR $68,500,000 TO MEET EXPENDITURES AND INDEBTEDNESS IN 1931

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee of the whole at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That the governor in council may authorize the guarantee of securities of the Canadian National Railway Company to an aggregate principal amount at any one time outstanding of $68,500,000, to meet expenditures made and indebtedness incurred during the calendar year 1931 (where amounts available from net operating income or investments may be insufficient), by or on behalf of the Canadian National Railways or any company controlled by or any company comprised in the Canadian National Railways, or in respect of Canadian Government railways entrusted to the Canadian National Railway Company.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Mr. POULIOT: Before the motion is adopted I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: This is only a notice.

Mr. POULIOT: Very well; my remarks also will be only a notice.

Motion agreed to.

TARIFF SCHEDULES

PRINTING OF PRESENT AND PROPOSED RATES FOR PURPOSES OF COMPARISON ON THE ORDERS OF THE DAY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if it will be possible, in connection with the schedules involving tariff changes which he laid on the table this afternoon, to have printed as a part of the table containing such schedules the present rates so that it will be easier to compare them with the rates as proposed in the budget?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The resolutions would not be changed from the terms in which they are submitted. However, before they are taken up an effort will be made to comply with the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman. I spoke to the officials of the department along those lines on Saturday last.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I suppose the same course will be followed as was followed at the special session; comparative tables will be printed in the votes and proceedings?

Mr. BENNETT: They could not be printed in the votes and proceedings for to-morrow.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But at the earliest date?

Mr. BENNETT: At the earliest possible date, yes; that will be done. In fact had it not been for the exceptional circumstances we should have been able to do it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Probably it could be done by Thursday? I do not think it would take the department very long.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not like to promise my right hon. friend, but an effort will be made to do it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ADJOURNMENT IN HONOUR OF THE KING'S BIRTHDAY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Owing to the fact that Wednesday will be the last of the short sitting days and that on that day a garden party will be given by Their Excellencies which hon. members will wish to attend, we should be able to sit only about an hour. I propose therefore to give notice that to-morrow at the adjournment we will move to adjourn until Thursday at three o'clock. I have spoken to my right hon. friend opposite concerning the matter, and we have thought that rather than sit for only one hour it would be advisable to adjourn from Tuesday evening until Thursday.

AIR MAIL SERVICE

REPORTED CANCELLATION OF EXISTING CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): May I ask the Prime Minister a question in regard to the air mail service? I hope his answer will be in the negative. There is a report in the press stating that air mail services are all to be cancelled.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I am glad the hon. member has brought the matter up, because the report in the press was not correct. The truth is that instructions have been given that on June 15 a notice of cancellation be given with respect to all air mail contracts because the contractors have intimated that they might be able to carry on the work on a different basis from that which now obtains. Before any action was taken it was thought desirable that the government should be free to continue or discontinue the services, as it might deem wise. For those reasons not cancellation but merely notice of it within the terms of the contracts has been given with respect to all air mail services.

Mr. VENIOT: For one month?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I think one contract extends for sixty days, but one month is the usual term. It does not follow that all air mail contracts are to be cancelled, but means that the government is in a position to deal properly with the matter.

Mr. VENIOT: The newspaper report has left an improper impression.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): Can the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) tell us when the special committee on railways and shipping will begin their sittings?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The committee will be called together very shortly, probably this week, and at least they will be able to deal with last year's expenditures.

SUPPLY

EMBARGO ON RUSSIAN GOODS—GOVERNMENT BY ORDER IN COUNCIL—AMENDMENT, MR. BOURASSA

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Guthrie (for the Minister of Finance) for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bourassa.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny): Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of hon. members in discussing the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), especially as I have to answer one of the oldest and most eloquent members of this house, and to follow the impressive speech which has been delivered this afternoon by the right hon. leader of the government (Mr. Bennett).

I am not one of the upholders of the church of which the hon. member for Labelle spoke last Wednesday; I wish I were. I am merely a poor sinner in that respect and would not like to take away from the crown of those who deserve them the laurels that they have self-imposed upon themselves. In fact I would not have spoken at all if the hon. member had deemed the question which I put to him the other day fit for an answer. I must confess that I remember the days when he would have been quite ready to furnish an answer, but I suppose times have changed. After an assertion by him I asked for some information, but he refused it, and this forces me to impose upon the house my few and short remarks to-night.

The hon. member for Labelle asserted, if I remember correctly—and he will correct me if I am wrong—that revolutions were always organized in the country involved and were brought about in an effort to redress intolerable grievances. I was just rising to ask him was this assertion quite correct, when he silenced me by referring me to the rules of the houses. These do not prohibit one member from putting a question to another, but undoubtedly he was within his rights in declining to answer. If I remember well, the French revolution, quoted by him had not its origin in France but, as has been abundantly proven, was organized in Germany, in England and in Austria. The Russian revolution—I would not say it was dear to the heart of the hon. member, but he quoted it frequently in his speech—was not organized in Russia; it was organized by Lloyd George in England, by certain persons in Germany—

An hon. MEMBER: And by Premier King in Canada.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It may be that birds of a feather flock together; my hon. friend knows better than I do. Certainly it was organized by Germany, because to-day everyone knows that Rasputin was a paid agent of the German government. It follows that my very modest question could have been answered in a word and the house would have been spared the trouble of hearing me to-night.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Labelle is very general in its terms and expresses the view that government by order in council should not be prolonged and that such government is contrary to our institutions. I cannot say whether this is intended as a reflection on the past government, which it is not my province to defend, or a slur on the present government; but I can say this, that the order in council barring Russian goods was approved by the Quebec government, the Catholic hierarchy, and authorized by this house at the special session last September by the legislation that was then enacted.

But I am just wondering whether there was not an ulterior motive to the hon. gentleman's motion. There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker—and no one knows it better than hon. members to your left—that the preamble of the order in council passed by the present government barring Russian goods staggered our hon. friends of the Liberal party in Quebec and put them in a very awkward position. Was the amendment moved by the hon. member for Labelle for the purpose of restoring to them a little of their lost courage and putting them again on their feet? I would not say so, but in my opinion it looks somewhat as if that were its purpose. I may say to my hon. friends to your left, Mr. Speaker, and especially to my hon. friend from Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), whom I see in front of me, that their allies, the Taschereau government, took the lead in this question. The hon. member for Labelle, who speaks for the church, forgot to endorse the action taken by the Archbishop of Montreal, Monseigneur Gauthier, who also condemned Russia. In attacking the government I wonder whether with his courage of old he goes to the very bottom of the question, because I claim not only the privilege but the honour to have been the first person in the Dominion to present my congratulations to the government of Canada upon the action they took in barring Russian goods and saying in effect: We will have no truck or trade with the bolshevists. I would have been happy for more than one reason if, instead of denouncing the Pharisees, of which I am one I suppose; if instead of denouncing the hypocrites, of which I am one also I suppose, the hon. member had told us whether he was in favour of trade with Russia—he forgot to tell us—and whether he was in favour of Canada, a Christian country, encouraging what is going on in Russia at the present time. That was what we expected from him in the province of Quebec, and that is what we have not heard. That is where we were highly disappointed, I must say. It is easy to throw sarcasm at the government, based on the variations of the past government, which accepted trade with Russia, refused it and accepted it again. That does not settle the question. The question is higher than that; it is the fight between two civilizations. There is the civilization of Russia, if it may be so called, and the materialistic ideals, if such exist, on the one side, and the great civilizations which we defend, on the other. The hon. member for Labelle may have said, with laughter in his voice and irony in his mind, that this government were crusaders. I may be very reactionary; I may be only a humble habitant of the province of Quebec, representing humble habitants, but I am glad and proud to have been the first to say and to repeat that when the government of Canada stopped trade with Russia, the government acted as crusaders. It is all very well to say that a government which cannot sustain its acting by deeds has no power; I think the hon. member was quoting the late Mr. Guizot, who said:

A self-governing nation does not speak unless it is capable of making its word good.

I claim first of all that we have made our words good. I also claim that we gave an example to the world, and I have not learned at the school of the hon. member for Labelle —though I have been there for the last twenty years—that one should stop doing a good deed because it seems impossible or not feasible. The thing is to do right; to thine own self be true. Try to do what you think is right. If it is not feasible or if it is not possible it does not matter; you will have tried and done your best. Men may pass republics may pass, even monarchies may pass, but the eternal words of truth and justice remain, and the day will come when they will be accepted.

We have been told by several hon. members that we are ignorant of what has gone on in Russia. I have in my hand a book by Mr. Sokoloff, having to do with the official investigation of the assassination of the czar of Russia, his son, his wife and three danghters. I do not know whether or not hon. members have read it; I am sure some have. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if there is one modern monstrosity of horror and disgusting crime, such as that revealed in this book. None denies it; no, no one denies it, but there are many people on the other side who get up and defend it. No one denies it; no one defends it, but there are many members willing to rise in their places and say, "Let us put the clean hand of Canada into the bloody hand of a murderer."

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is it not a fact that the representative of Russia slept with Mr. Ferguson during the wheat conference?

Mr. LAVERGNE: My hon. friend probably knows more about people sleeping together than I do. I will come to that presently.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: They dined together—

Mr. LAVERGNE: They may have dined together.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: —and wined together.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Yes, and wined together, which is probably more shocking. By the way, may I say to my hon. friend from St. Denis that it is very easy to defend the French people and the French language in this house when no one attacks them. The hon. member should have got up in the good old days of the Liberal party, and spoken in the province of Quebec and in other places as I did. Then he would not be so noisy in the House of Commons. It is easy to be elected by a majority of 17,000, by prejudice and appeals to passion.

Mr. BOUCHARD: If my hon. friend speaks like that he has no title to call himself a habitant from Quebec.

Mr. LAVERGNE: No title to it? I think I have a title just as good as that of my hon. friend. My family have been here for three hundred years. They were all habitants except myself, and they were not paid habitants, as some others are. That title is as good as any on the other side of the house; my hon. friend knows to whom I refer.

I shall not deal further with the assassination of the emperor of Russia, together with his family, in a cellar in Russia, by friends of my hon. friends opposite. Now I take up a book written by a bolshevist; it is called "Naked Russia", by Panait Istrati. My hon. friend from Kamouraska, who is a very well educated man, knows what this author says, I am sure. This man is a bolshevist who has gone back on Russia.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): In what year was this book published?

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): In 1929.

Mr. RINFRET: My hon. friend could not read a bad book.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Quite right; can he read at all? This book is written in French; if it were in Russian probably my hon. friend could understand it better. Speaking of the five-year plan so much eulogized in this house, I see the following at page 315, where Mr. Istrati quotes Lenin a member of the Soviet government, as saying:

Au contraire, à la base du plan il faut admettre que notre pays aura à défendre le socialisme les armes à la main.

The translation is, "At the basis of the five-year plan we must admit that our country will have to defend socialism with the force of arms." Are we going to help them with force? They know very well that their five year plan is doomed to failure. They know very well that it is based on communism and slavery. They know it is dependent upon forced labour.

Mr. YOUNG: Why are you afraid of it then?

An hon. MEMBER: Do you wish it?

Mr. LAVERGNE: Let me answer the hon. gentleman. I am opposed to it for three reasons. In the first place—and I know my hon. friend will not like this—I am a Conservative from the province of Quebec. Perhaps that is not a good reason. Well, secondly, I am opposed to it because I am a Christian.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. LAVERGNE: My hon. friends laugh; I see nothing amusing in that statement. And in the third place, I am not a socialist. But I will mention another reason. I was not going to speak about this but my hon. friend forces me to do so. I did not intend to quote the pope, and I do not suppose he is an authority whom the hon. gentleman would accept. But the pope was quoted the other day by my hon. friend from Labelle; and the pope, who is an authority so far as I am concerned, has condemned three things in his encyclical.

Mr. POULIOT: If you quote the pope, Long Lake will not support you.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I have heard that sort of argument in the province of Quebec for the last twenty years. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I have more sympathy with and respect for members of this house who are of Anglo-Saxon and Protestant origin, more respect for the Ku Klux Klan, than I have for Canadians of my race who during the last twenty years have not had the courage to defend that race. Does my hon. friend wish to have me go into details?

Mr. DENIS (Translation): No, I do not require them.

Mr. LAVERGNE: No, he does not; he is too wise to ask for them. In the interruption from my esteemed friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), you have, Mr. Speaker, some idea of what the Conservatives of Quebec have had to fight against in the last twenty years. This has been the attitude: "You English-speaking people are too fanatical to give us our rights, because you are not educated enough;" and at the same time hon. members were willing to accept anything coming from that quarter so long as it was sugar-coated enough for them to swallow. My hon. friend from Beauce (Mr. Lacroix), who is one of the wealthy members of the Liberal party, knows that in 1905 I was a Liberal. Does he know why I abandoned that party? Let him ask my hon. friend from Labelle.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): It was a good riddance.

Mr. LAVERGNE: No doubt it was a good riddance—so good that a year or two afterwards that party lost power. But this, Mr. Speaker, is beside the question. I am quite willing to answer questions, but I hate to see my hon. friends like so many hens on a hot griddle. Now I will come back to the question I was discussing a moment ago, the pope's encyclical. If I can get my hon. friend from Weyburn to accept this authority I shall have at least one conversion to my credit. First of all, the pope condemned communism, and in the second place he declared that no man could be a Catholic and a socialist at the same time. And thirdly—I am sure my hon. friend read the letter, and on this third point I am sorry for my hon. friends from Quebec—he condemned liberalism.

Mr. ST-PERE: Not the way you understand it. The pope condemned liberalism in his interpretation of the word.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I know one thing. I may understand it one way and my hon. friend another, but I think we can agree that the pope condemned it.

Mr. ST-PERE: You have been speaking for the last fifteen minutes against your Quebec compatriots. You are not the only one on the side of orthodoxy.

Mr. LAVERGNE: There is a great deal of difference between the holy father and the St.-Pere.

Mr. ST.-PERE: There is no difference so far as doctrine is concerned. Let me repeat that my hon. friend is not the only one who is on the side of orthodoxy.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I do not pretend to be at all.

Mr. ST.-PERE: That is what the hon. gentleman has been pretending for the last twenty minutes—that he is the Simon Pure of Quebec.

Mr. LAVERGNE: The other day we were condemned as hypocrites because we repudiated bolshevism and would not trade with Russia. It has been suggested that I am a pharisee. May I point out that it is not I who brought up this question; it was first brought up by the hon. member for Labelle and then by the hon. member for Weyburn who asked me a question. I do not see why my hon. friends would get cross. It was not I who condemned liberalism; it was the holy father of our own church.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member for Long Lake (Mr. Cowan).

Mr. LAVERGNE: I do not know whether the hon. member for Long Lake did.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does my hon. friend mean to say that a man cannot be a Catholic and a Liberal at the same time?

Mr. LAVERGNE: So far as the letter indicates, a man cannot be a good Catholic and a socialist at the same time. So far as I am concerned, a man cannot be a good citizen and a Liberal.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I ask the hon. member another question. During the time he was—

Mr. SPEAKER: Without the permission of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) the hon. member may not interrupt him. The hon. member for Montmagny has, I think, allowed great latitude.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The hon. member has sat down, and I take it he allows the question. He said a man could not be a Liberal and a good citizen or a good Catholic. May I ask him this: While he was a Liberal, was he or was he not a good citizen and a good Catholic?

An hon. MEMBER: Liberalism was different then.

Mr. LAVERGNE: The hon. gentleman has asked a question. My hon. friends will not allow me to answer. I wonder if they have ever heard of a man named Paul of Tarsus.

An hon. MEMBER: Does the hon. member mean Saul?

Mr. LAVERGNE: He changed his name and his convictions, so did I.

Mr. POWER: He only did it once.

Mr. LAVERGNE: He only did it once, but he maintained the same attitude. I wish the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) would do the same.

Mr. POWER: I am not comparing myself to Saul; I do not know the man.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It is worth what it is worth, although it may not be worth very much.

An hon. MEMBER: We agree with that statement.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am accustomed to all these arguments, I have heard them long, and I am surprised that the hon. members did not bring sticks and stones with them as in days gone by in Quebec.

An hon. MEMBER: Come back to the embargo.

Mr. LAVERGNE: If I have left the embargo it is not because of any fault of my own. I dare any hon. member to condemn this order in council in the province of Quebec. I dare them to stand up whenever they want to, or wherever they want to; I dare them to take this attitude in Quebec. I give that dare beginning with the noisy senseless one and ending with the noiseless noisy ones. This fight is not a new thing in the province of Quebec, it is as old as the eternal battle between good and evil. If hon. members desire to be sarcastic and call this a mere gesture, I reply that it is only our duty to set an example to the world. As Christians, as Canadians, as a civilized people we should have nothing to do with a nation of murderers and atheists. If this government had done nothing else it would deserve the approval and gratitude, not only of Canada but of the whole civilized world. Hon. members say that we had no mandate to take this action, but let them get up and condemn this so-called gesture. The Catholic hierarchy has approved of it and our mandate as christians is imperative. They will not get up and condemn this openly, but by coming in the back door they try to minimize it by sarcasm or ridicule. Let them come straight to the question.

I am a member of a race which has been in this country for three hundred years. We have been taught to respect authority, to respect the king, to respect the law and to believe that wealth is necessary and should not be looked upon with hatred, jealousy and envy. Do hon. members believe they are going to settle this social question by teaching hatred and envy? Every man is equal, but when? Not until death. Everyone has not the wonderful health of the hon. member for Beauce. Everyone has not an equal amount of wealth.

Mr. LACROIX: The hon. member should not be jealous.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am not jealous why, my capital has not got to go begging the banks on the eve of fortune, but I do not contend that we should look upon wealth with envy. My only capital is my honour and I would not exchange that for all the wealth of any hon. member.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): You remind me of a person who, having lost his political standing in 1911, is endeavouring to recover it.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am sorry the hon. member does not understand what I am saying.

Mr. DENIS: I will repeat my remarks in the English language.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I think I understand the French language as well as does the hon. member. I rose in my place to restate and to reaffirm my confidence in the government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) in having passed this order in council. Jacques Cartier, a Frenchman, came to this country four hundred years ago and planted a cross on the shores of Gaspe. That cross is still there and as long as I have breath in my body and blood in my veins it shall remain.

[Mr. LaVergne.]

Amendment (Mr. Bourassa) negatived.

Motion (Mr. Bennett) agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Civil government—Fisheries, salaries and contingencies, $212,860.

Mr. DUFF: I notice an increase of $1,000 in the salary of the deputy minister. Will the minister explain that?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Fisheries): Unless one were to say that the work of the Department of Fisheries were less important than that of other departments and the consideration less important, I can see no good reason why the salary of the Deputy Minister of Fisheries should not be placed in line with those of deputy ministers of other departments. Having in mind the importance of the fisheries, the importance the government attaches to it, I felt that this office ought not in the matter of salary to be placed in a position inferior to that of similar offices in other departments of government.

Mr. DUFF: If the minister's argument is good, the amount should be $10,000 instead of $8,000. The salary should be the same as that, for instance, of the Deputy Minister of Finance, or of the Deputy Minister of External Affairs. The only objection I have is that this year, when we are talking about economy, when conditions are not as they should be, when, as the Minister of Finance said this afternoon, we are going to have a deficit of something like $75,000,000, is not the right time to increase the salary of the Deputy Minister of Fisheries. It must be remembered that only two years ago this gentleman was receiving a salary of $6,000. Last year the government increased it to $8,000, and now there is another increase of $1,000. Under the circumstances $8,000 should be sufficient for this position.

Mr. RHODES: If the question is one of economy, I may say to my hon. friend that we have saved this amount several times over in the department itself, because, for example, there is included in this item the salary of a secretary to the minister amounting to $3,960. As a matter of fact I have no private secretary, and I hope to be able to carry on without one, that is to say, without a private secretary brought into the department. I am using a clerk whom I already found in the department, and he is carrying on the work at an additional salary of $600 a year, so that I am saving $3,360 on that one item. A number of deputy ministers receive $9,000, and my explanation to my hon. friend was the exact explanation I gave to my colleagues, namely that it would be inconsistent with the value of the fisheries to the country if with respect to salary we deliberately placed the deputy minister in a position inferior to that of deputy ministers of other departments of government.

Mr. DUFF: But he was in that position last year and the year before. He had less than the others.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What are all these extra sundries?

Mr. RHODES: The Department of Fisheries has not hitherto had a minister, and this is only for the purpose of placing the department in position comparable to that of other departments which have ministers. There was a minister, but for only a short time, and this department has never been placed in line with other departments with respect to that item.

Item agreed to.

To assist in the conservation and development of the deep sea fisheries and the demand for fish, $190,000.

Mr. VENIOT: On this item I should like to discuss the question of salmon fisheries. The committee will remember that in the last three or four weeks I drew the attention of the Minister of Fisheries to the new set of regulations which have been adopted by the department in connection with the salmon fisheries, particularly in the province of New Brunswick. I made the suggestion that the matter should be further looked into, as the regulations were not acceptable to the salmon fishermen generally. I was not at that time referring principally to the drift net fishermen but to the fishermen who fish along the coast and open bays and in the rivers by net. The minister told me at that time that it was his intention to send Mr. Found or some other representative of the department to look further into the matter and see if the hardships complained of could be met. Mr. Found went down, and he did meet quite a number of complaints. I understand he held meetings as Charlo, Chatham and St. John. On his return he recommended doing away with the new licence, as well as with the regulations which had been rather strict concerning the placing of nets out of fishing gear. In doing that however he substituted another regulation. I hold in my hand a memorial, a copy of which was sent I believe to the Department of Fisheries, objecting to the new regulation which calls for the placing of nets out of fishing gear. In the past the nets were supposed to be out of fishing gear from sundown on Saturday night until sunrise on Monday morning. Even then the regulation was very difficult to observe. Many times it was impossible to raise the nets along the shores and bays on Saturday nights owing to frequent storms in the Baie des Chaleurs. The same did not apply where nets were being used for salmon fishing in the river. The fishermen in certain portions of the Miramachi would not be affected as much as those in the estuary or the bay of the Miramachi, along the Baie des Chaleurs, in the Restigouche bay or up as far as Heron island. As I say the regulation was difficult to observe. The fishery wardens were very generous however in their treatment of the fishermen when they say it was imposible owing to storms to comply with the law. Where it was obviously impossible to comply with the law, violations were not recognized. Under the newly amended regulations which have come into effect since the visit of Mr. Found to the province of New Brunswick the fishermen are required to raise their nets out of fishing gear on Saturday morning at eight o'clock and leave them in that condition until eight o'clock on Monday. In order to have them properly out of fishing gear however the regulations designate that ten feet of the nets shall be separated or open. Fishermen are complaining, especially along the bay shores that that regulation is unreasonable. In order to comply with the regulation and be within the law they would have to readjust their nets at considerable cost. The lacing of a portion of their nets to the lead would have to be done, and such lacing would have to be taken off each Friday night or Saturday morning at eight o'clock. If a storm came on the regulation could not be complied with. Should a storm arise on Sunday or Monday and continue as it often does in Baie des Chaleurs for two or three days at a stretch, the fishermen have their nets out of fishing gear for three or four days instead of only two days. Salmon is caught within one or two miles of my home, and I have had occasion frequently to visit salmon stands, especially those stands which are held by poles and not weights, as we have in some sections of the bay. Besides, the fishermen are often required to have their nets out of order for two or three days during the week, because the regulations provide that if nets cannot be put out of fishing gear on Saturday night and be left out for two days, then on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday the fishermen shall put them out of fishing gear to make up for the two days lost between Saturday and Monday. According to the fishermen in my locality such a regulation is impracticable and cannot be complied with, and to insist upon it would simply drive them out of business. It is for that reason I appeal to-night to the minister to go carefully into the matter. I understand that this is regarded as one method of allowing the salmon to have free access to the spawning grounds. Nobody wishes more than myself to see the salmon given sufficient access to their spawning grounds, but the protection afforded to the salmon for that purpose in connection with the fishing nets along the shore is not carried out in relation to the spawning grounds themselves. It may be said that drift net fishermen have caused a great deal of destruction of the salmon on the way to the spawning ground, and to some extent that is said also of the net fishermen along the shores of the bays and in the rivers. I am told that this argument is based on scientific research. I hold in my hand a book on scientific research, "A Survey of Salmon Fisheries in Eastern Canada," by W. L. Calderwood. I have also another book written by two professors, "A Report on Salmon Fisheries of the Baie des Chaleurs and Adjacent Waters," by Earle B. Phelps, of Columbia university, and L. Belding of Boston. The minister was kind enough to pass me these two books and told me if I made a study of them he was sure I would be convinced that stringent regulations were necessary. I have gone through them and studied them carefully. In one of them I find the following report:

> On the other hand our scientific knowledge of the conditions upon which the productivity of the salmon in Canadian waters depends is far too meagre to permit of any definite statement concerning the quantitative effect of any given catch by the drifters or others upon the river stocks.

The report continues:

> The present governmental restrictions limiting the fishing to certain areas to five nights of the week during the season, May 15 to August 1, and to nets of specified dimensions, is admitted by dominion officials to represent their best judgment in the absence of scientific data. In particular, information has therefore been entirely lacking as to the actual course of migration of fish on their way to the various rivers. In fact, some doubt has been expressed by certain students of this problem as to whether the fish taken in the drift nets are actually migrating to the rivers for the purpose of reproduction or whether they are really in their open-sea environment.

That being the case, how can the department issue regulations based upon that knowledge and that research for the purpose of putting out of gear the nets along the shore and in our rivers? I think the department ought to hesitate until they have further knowledge on which to base such strict regulations. The minister must not forget that there are hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in this industry by our own people, and such regulations as these, especially the regulation which forces them to place their nets out of gear in the manner I have described, will drive our people out of business. If in order to protect the salmon spawning grounds strict regulations must be enforced, then I would advise the departmental officials to see that strangers coming into the country strictly observe the laws in connection with the spawning grounds, because these men make their camps within a gunshot of those grounds. It may be argued that the salmon rivers leased for sporting purposes are well guarded. That is true. I do not believe that there are better fish wardens and guardians in any part of the dominion than on the upper stretches of the Miramichi, and Restigouche, and the Nipisguit and Tetagouche or Middle rivers. But there is the place where the greatest care should be exercised, and a limit imposed on the number of salmon caught by those anglers. If in order to make sport more "sporty"—if I may use the word—for these men during their week or ten days fishing, we must enact regulations to put our own people out of business, then it is time a very searching inquiry should be made.

I know another argument will be used, that the drift salmon fishermen are increasing almost without limit, as are their boats and the size of their nets. But I understand the net fishermen under those regulations are allowed to operate only within a certain number of miles of the mouth of the bay. It will be pointed out that owing to this fishing by drifters, as well as by the shore-net men, the salmon have been depleted in the rivers. I have here a table extracted from one of the books loaned me by the minister, giving the number of boats using drift nets for the years 1922 to 1930. This is the table:

Year	No. of boats
1922	49
1923	50
1924	50
1925	52
1926	52
1927	80
1928	108
1929	136

I am told that calculated on the observations of 50 boats, 142,000 salmon were caught by drift nets in 1930. But I claim that that estimate is not correct, and cannot be used to prove that the salmon were fewer in number in the rivers where they go to spawn, because in that year took place the largest catch in the history of anglers on the Restigouche river. In 1928, with 108 boats engaged, there were only 27,600 salmon caught; that is the smallest catch on record with the exception of that of 1926, 23,400. In 1928 not an angler on any of the rivers, the Miramichi, the Nipisguit and the Restigouche, ever complained of the number of the salmon decreasing, while the number of salmon caught by the drift netters increased. This record shows at the same time there never was a season in which the salmon were so plentiful in the Restigouche as in 1930.

That being the case, if these reports are at all correct, and if the department is relying upon them as the foundation for initiating these stringent regulations, then I say it is not because either of the drifters or of the shore net fishermen that salmon are scarce in the rivers that I have mentioned. Local conditions are the cause, and very often the present cause. For instance, especially on the Nipisguit river, and to a large extent on the Restigouche, and the Miramichi years ago but not to-day, a large quantity of lumber comes down. On the Nipisguit the salmon go up as far as Nipisguit falls; they cannot get beyond that point. Their spawning grounds are to be found at the foot of the falls and in the Papineau branch of the Nipisguit. The immense quantity of lumber coming down the Nipisguit river is all stored or boomed between Papineau falls, five miles above the present mill, and the mill site, and there up to last year the quantity of lumber was so great that the water being low the salmon had no passage and could get up to the spawning grounds only in very small numbers. The same is applicable in some years to the Restigouche river. In addition, there are seasons when we have low water in the rivers, when the spring freshets run off swiftly and we have no rains in June and July. The water becomes so low that in some of these rivers the salmon cannot get back to the spawning grounds.

What has happened in the county of Gloucester? Entering into the bay of Chaleur we have four rivers, the Tetagouche, Middle river, Little Nipisiguit and Big Nipisiguit. Up to four years ago we never caught any salmon and saw only an occasional salmon in the Tetagouche river. To-day the Tetagouche is not only a salmon fishing river but a spawning ground as well, which was not the case five or six years ago. Until a few years ago a salmon never had been caught in Middle river, but to-day it is a salmon river. The Little Nipisiguit, where salmon have been caught at odd times during the past few years, to-day is filled with salmon every season. There is almost as good salmon fishing on the Little Nipisiguit, when the water is reasonably high, as there is on the Big Nipisiguit river.

I am pointing out these facts to show the reason why salmon do not always go up such rivers as the Restigouche to the spawning grounds in large quantities. This is due to local conditions, and the report referred to is sufficient proof that the department has no scientific grounds for adopting regulations to protect the salmon on their way to the spawning grounds, which will throw the fishermen of our coast out of business and cause them to lose the capital they have invested.

I could go on giving reasons why these regulations should not continue, but let me show the scope of the inquiry by these professors into conditions on the Miramichi and the Restigouche in northern New Brunswick. They did not include the Nipisiguit, Tetagouche or Middle rivers, all good spawning grounds. Why was it these scientific men left out some of the best spawning grounds in the province of New Brunswick when they were investigating the conditions under which salmon went up those rivers? They did not make that investigation; the report does not show it. On page 9 there is a paragraph referring to the catch in the Restigouche by anglers. They say that in 1922 there was a good catch on the Restigouche river and a poor general catch; that is, a poor catch by the nets along the bay of Chaleur. That is another proof that local conditions govern entirely. Then they go on:

> In particular we note that the low years, 1919 and 1928, on the Restigouche cannot be attributed to local conditions.

Why do they say that? They give the reason:

The year 1930 established a new high record for thirty years.

Is that a good argument? Is that any proof that the conditions existing in 1922 were not due to local reasons? The very fact that in 1930 a record was set for the past thirty years seems to me directly contrary to the conclusions they have drawn. I do not want to take up too much of the time of the committee, but certainly I do wish to implore—I will go that far, and use that word—the minister to go more fully into this question. I have every confidence in his deputy in a matter of this kind, but I fear the deputy does not sufficiently grasp the local conditions along the bay of Chaleur and the rivers I have mentioned. It is an easy matter for the fishermen in a river which is land-locked, like the Miramichi—and if any fishing were allowed by nets in the Nipisiguit the same would apply—to put their nets out of commission between Saturday and Monday. There are no great storms on those land-locked rivers which would interfere with the placing of those nets out of gear, but when you take the whole shore of the bay of Chaleur on the New Brunswick side, beginning away down and following right up through Gloucester county, through Shippigan, Grande Anse, Stonehaven, Salmon Beach, Lower Beresford, Green Point, Belledune and up as far as Heron island in the county of Restigouche, the whole shore is exposed to all kinds of storms and it becomes impossible for the fishermen to observe these regulations.

I hold in my hand the last memorial sent to the minister, or at least, I think he has received it. It comes from Mr. George Chalmers of Charlo station, New Brunswick, and here is what they say:

Whereas the present salmon net fishing regulations are in some ways either impractical or absolutely impossible to perform, thus placing the fishermen in such a position that they cannot fish in a legal way without great hardship, and in some cases making it absolutely impossible to fish without infringing the regulations of the Fisheries Act, the Restigouche Net Salmon Fishing Association—

Which also extends to the county of Gloucester, which I have the honour to represent.

—unanimously resolve as follows:

1. Section 17, subsection 8(a) of the Fisheries Act at present provides for a tie-up from 8 a.m. Saturday to 8 a.m. Monday. We would like to respectfully point out that it is impractical to set a definite time for a tie-up, as it is difficult and in many cases impossible for anchored nets to be tied up at high water or when there is a strong tide running, or for the stake nets to be tied up at low water. We suggest that to enable the fishermen to comply with the law, this section should provide for a tie-up at nearest low water following 8 a.m. Saturday in the case of anchored nets and the nearest high water following 8 a.m. Saturday in the case of stake nets.

2. Section 17, subsection 8(d) providing for the method in which anchored nets shall be tied up, is impractical to follow out exactly in many cases, as for instance the case where the net is particularly deep, or when there is a strong tide running. As to having a ten-foot section removable, this is absolutely impractical, due to the amount of labour involved as this removable section would have to be laced to the rest of the net each time, otherwise the nets would not fish. We suggest that this section should read that the fishermen are to tie up as near as is possible in this manner and not that they are to tie up strictly in this manner as the act reads at present.

3. Section 17, subsection 8 (e) provides for a two day close period during the week if it is impractical to tie up on Saturday on account of weather conditions. We do not feel that this is just. Weather conditions will prevent lowering nets on Monday morning just as many times as it will prevent tie-ups on Saturday. In this way when it is impossible to lower the nets on Monday morning the tie-up will extend to three or four days and in the end these longer tie-up periods will make up for those times when it is impossible to tie-up on Saturday, thus making the average tie-up two days anyway besides, if the weather is rough enough so as to make it impossible to tie-up on Saturday, the nets are not in fishing condition. The average tie-up is going to be two days anyway, as pointed out above, without forcing the fishermen to tie-up in the middle of the week. These suggested mid-week tie-ups would work a further hardship on the fishermen in that a great many of them hire labour which would have to be paid anyway during this two day mid-week tie-up.

Section 17 subsection 8 (f) provides that all fishermen who do not adhere to the present tie-up regulations shall not be eligible for renewal of licence.

Let us take a supposititious case. I do not know of anything of the kind having happened, but an officious fishwarden might have something against a fisherman and all he would have to do would be to report a violation of a law which it was impossible to observe, with the result that the following year that fisherman would lose his licence.

As for the reasons pointed out above it is impractical and in many cases absolutely impossible to carry out certain present regulations of the Fisheries Act according to the letter of the law, it is felt that the fishermen's licence should not be placed in jeopardy due to circumstances over which they have no control, and that it would be very unjust, and we would firmly oppose retaining this section in the Fisheries Act, unless the act is modified as suggested above to enable the fishermen to comply strictly with the law.

I do not intend to trespass further on the time of the committee. I will leave the matter in the hands of the minister and his officers, and I am sure that when they have had an opportunity to look carefully into it they will realize that there are hardships which should be met in some way. I have not seen the report submitted by Mr. Found on his return from New Brunswick, but it may be said that the fishermen were met, that matters were discussed, and that they were agreeable to certain regulations. I am sure, however, that if the effect of these regulations had been pointed out to them they would there and then have raised the objections they are now bringing forward in this memorial to which I have referred. As I say, I leave the matter in the hands of the minister, but before sitting down I wish to thank him for the attention he has already given it. I am thankful on behalf of the fishermen of my county at least for the changes that have been made in the regulations which were inaugurated last January, I believe, and I trust that now the case has been laid before him the minister will go more fully into the matter with a view to removing these hardships.

Mr. RHODES: I am grateful to the hon. member for the very fair manner in which he has presented his case. I would not for a moment attempt to pit my knowledge of fishing conditions in Gloucester against his, although I have had considerable experience in contact with the fisheries regulations. I think we start from common ground when I say to the hon. member that there never was and never will be a set of satisfactory fisheries regulations. I think we had better begin on that assumption. Our objective ought to be to secure a set of fisheries regulations designed reasonably to serve the fisheries so as to make them perpetual in character, and regulations which will impose the least hardship on those engaged in the fishing industry.

I knew full well, when it was reported to me that there should be changes in the regulations in New Brunswick, what a difficult task I was approaching, and as evidence of that I would point out that we called, after due notice, a conference in Ottawa two months ago, at which there were present the Deputy Minister of Fisheries of New Brunswick; Mr. Gibault, representing the Department of Fisheries of Quebec; our chief fisheries supervisors, and representatives of riparian associations in both Quebec and New Brunswick; and in addition we paid the expenses of nine representative fishermen who were in a position to speak for the fishermen themselves. We sat in conference all day long and the matter was threshed out with the officers of the department. While I will not say that there was cordial unanimity, there was at the conclusion of the conference an actual unanimity with respect to the regulations then proposed. And to test public opinion they were promulgated. It was then that we found where the main sources of objection lay. It was following that conference, as my hon. friend will recall, that the deputy minister made the trip to New Brunswick which resulted in these revised regulations. I think my hon. friend will grant that I was keenly interested personally, apart altogether from the interest I took in the matter as Minister of Fisheries, in the conservation of this wonderful fishery. I think he will agree that I am just as interested as he is. Now, our objective is to conserve the fisheries.

Mr. VENIOT: We agree on that.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, I think we are agreed on that. And we shall have gone a long way when we have reached the point where the fishermen themselves realize that there should be no conflict between net fishing on the one hand and the angler on the other.

Mr. VENIOT: You will have to keep the angler out of the picture.

Mr. RHODES: I think it will one day be realized that the interests of the angler and of the commercial fishermen are identical.

Mr. VENIOT: They are getting nearer that point.

Mr. RHODES: One cannot exist without the other, for each has a contribution to make to the welfare of the fisheries. It was from the point of view of the welfare of the fisheries themselves that these regulations were attempted. In the first part of his remarks my hon. friend raised a very serious objection to the method of tying up nets for a space of ten feet. I may observe that this point was threshed out carefully at the conference of which I have spoken. I was an attentive listener, and the officials of the department were able to convince beyond peradventure any of those who made objection that this was a perfectly feasible method. Moreover, I was at pains to find out that in Scotland, under exactly similar conditions, for a period of over half a century they have done not only this but very much more. There they make them take up the whole leader and carry it ashore on Saturdays, bringing it back on Monday mornings, a much more onerous task.

Mr. NEILL: That is due to religious scruples.

Mr. RHODES: Whatever may be the motive behind the method, the fact remains that physically it can be done and is there done without objection. It is the accepted method of performing this work in Scotland. My fishery advisers tell me it is a perfectly feasible method and will not work a hardship on the fishermen, and I may say to my hon. friend that, with the exception of the district which he represents, there has been very little complaint. I am just as anxious as my hon. friend is to see that no injustice shall be done to the actual commercial fisherman. Not only do I propose to inquire carefully into this matter in conjunction with the officials of my department, but it is my intention to investigate on the ground this summer if I am spared. It is my purpose to visit every one of these districts and make myself acquainted with the exact situation and the difficulties existing. When that is done I can assure my hon. friend that if I am of the opinion that these regulations are working a hardship, I will not hesitate to revise them. We must keep in mind, however, the welfare of the fisheries, and we must have regulations designed to conserve them in perpetuity.

My hon. friend spoke of the reports of Messrs. Calderwood, Belding and Phelps. He did not make it clear to the committee, and perhaps I should do it, that these reports were not departmental reports. Mr. Calderwood, as perhaps most of the members of the committee know, was for many years in charge of the salmon fisheries in Scotland and is regarded as the best informed man in Scotland as to the Atlantic salmon fisheries. These men were engaged by the riparian association, at their own cost.

Mr. VENIOT: That makes my argument all the stronger.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend must bear in mind the fact that they did not come here to attempt to tell the department what ought to be done; I am happy to say they cooperated most cordially and sympathetically with the officials of the department and of the Biological Board. The result was that they were able to pool their knowledge, and while it by no means follows that as the result of one year's experience they acquired sufficient knowledge to be able to say the last word, as it were, with respect to the salmon fisheries in New Brunswick, they made a very good start and they propose to carry on their work during the coming year in conjunction with the officials of the Fisheries department and of the Biological Board. My hon. friend referred to the fact that they conducted their investigation only in the Restigouche river and on the Miramichi.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. VENIOT: And out in the bay.

Mr. RHODES: One must walk, however, before he runs, and it does not follow that because the work was started that is going to be the end of it. It is the purpose of the department to carry on this work in all the rivers of New Brunswick, and what was done was only a start. It is with some diffidence that I point out to my hon. friend, who is on the ground and has been in contact with this industry for many years, that the regulations which prevailed for a number of years with respect to the tying up of nets—they will be found on page 8 of the fishing regulations of the province of New Brunswick—are pretty stringent, and if carried out would have been far more onerous than the regulations as laid down for this year.

Mr. VENIOT: Oh, no.

Mr. RHODES: We must hope to agree to disagree in that respect.

Mr. VENIOT: I have had personal experience.

Mr. RHODES: In the report of Mr. Calderwood there are photographs showing the difference in the lifting of nets in one area as compared with another. I will not name these different areas, for reasons which will be obvious; but the fact is that the regulations have not been respected in certain places and it was our desire to get a form of regulation which would be general in application and respected all around.

Mr. VENIOT: I admitted that in my remarks.

Mr. RHODES: I do not propose to enter into a discussion with my hon. friend as to whether or not certain fisheries are being depleted, but as a matter of fact the records show that the catch in that very area has been diminishing very materially. If my hon. friend will look at the fishing statistics for 1929 he will find the following figures showing the catches made in New Brunswick:

	Hundredweight
1925	30,073
1926	25,131
1927	22,464
1928	12,557
1929	18,308

There was a slight jump upwards for the last year.

Mr. VENIOT: That is the number of fish?

Mr. RHODES: I am speaking of hundredweights of salmon caught in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. VENIOT: That does not agree with the information upon which these scientific men have based their report.

Mr. RHODES: I will come back to that scientific report in a moment. I have quoted the figures for 1925 to 1929 inclusive, but the report which my hon. friend has before him is for the year 1930.

Mr. VENIOT: The other years are shown as well.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend mentioned the diminution in the fisheries. The records show that there has been a very marked diminution in the Restigouche area. I was amazed to find that the fisheries in the Restigouche area had diminished by almost 70 per cent up to the year 1925, and I felt that this called for very careful investigation. I have fished this river myself on different occasions, and I hope to be spared to fish it again in the future.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): What part of this item is to be spent in British Columbia?

Mr. RHODES: Does the hon. member mean the item in question?

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Yes.

Mr. RHODES: Part of the item would apply to British Columbia, but not the regulation under discussion.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): What portion of the item is to be expended in British Columbia?

Mr. RHODES: Would my hon. friend defer his question until I have concluded my reply to the hon. member for Gloucester?

Mr. VENIOT: Will the hon. minister please give me those figures again?

Mr. RHODES: They will be found on page 31 of the fisheries statistics. My hon. friend can obtain that publication from the distribution office.

Mr. VENIOT: Was it the number of salmon caught each year?

Mr. RHODES: No, the figures are given in hundredweights; they have no reference to the number of fish.

With regard to the regulations regarding drifters, these were not imposed as a result of the Calderwood or the Belding and Phelps investigation; they were designed solely with a view to providing proper methods of conservation. Anyone who has the welfare of the salmon industry at heart must pause and think when he considers the rapid increase in the number of drifters in that area during the last few years. In 1925 we had only 52 drifters in that area, but the number increased year by year until 1930, when it reached 170, an increase of over 200 per cent. I have not questioned the estimate contained in the report of Messrs. Belding and Phelps that 142,000 salmon were caught in that area last year; as a matter of fact that estimate was referred to in the conference. Among those who were present at the conference was Mr. Loggie, a son of a gentleman who for a number of years occupied a seat in this house. He is a commercial fisherman and he never questioned the figures. The total may not mean much to our hon. friends from British Columbia who are accustomed to number salmon in the millions, but when one realizes that 142,000 sport fish were caught it causes one to ponder, having regard to the fact that the total catch in the Restigouche river in the best year amounted to something less than 2,000, and in some years has dropped to below 1,000. I am speaking from memory, but I believe I am correct when I say this: The scientific investigation of several hundreds of these fish showed that they were in precisely the same condition as were the fish taken in the river. They were all spawning fish and were heading far up the rivers to spawn.

Mr. VENIOT: The figures that the minister has given cannot include the amount of salmon caught by the net fishermen and the drift net fishermen, because they certainly do not agree with the report.

Mr. RHODES: I shall be glad to examine that report afterwards in the light of these figures. I do not know that that is so material especially in view of what I am saying in respect to the alarming increase in the salmon drift netting. I say this on my own responsibility as head of the Department of Fisheries, that instructions were issued that no more drift net licences were to be granted in that area until we were able to demonstrate that the fisheries there could stand the toll that is being taken at the present time. It is true that has been varied only in one respect. It was pointed out subsequently that some seventeen men, not knowing this regulation was put into force, in good faith and anticipating that as a matter of ordinary routine they could secure drifters' licences, had proceeded in the course of the winter to build boats, to equip them, to purchase nets and to go to considerable expense. In the light of those facts, as a matter of grace, it was decided to enlarge the number of drift netters by adding 17 to the 170, but with the understanding that as and when those drift licences fell in, they would be reduced to the point where, after careful inquiry and scientific investigation, it was demonstrated to us that we could not safely go beyond a given point in taking toll of the fish by that method. The hon. member for Gloucester tried to view those regulations in the light of an officious fish warden. We all know there are men of that description.

Mr. VENIOT: They are generally pretty good.

Mr. RHODES: Yes; but, as my hon. friend knows, there is the exception. You find a man who has not good judgment; his breakfast has perhaps not agreed with him; he starts the day wrong, and he gets into trouble with some of the fishermen. But I think it is not fair to view regulations in the light of their application by a man of that type. We must assume that regulations are being enforced by reasonable men animated in the main by proper motives.

I think I have covered fairly completely the several objections raised by the hon. member for Gloucester, and I shall conclude so far as he is concerned by saying this: He may rest assured I shall be at pains personally to inquire into this matter to the full, the idea in mind being solely to conserve this great industry so that it may be of enhanced benefit to the very people for whom he is speaking to-night.

Mr. VENIOT: I like the kind way in which the minister has taken the remarks I have made. They were made not by way of captious criticism but rather in order to bring to the attention of the minister a matter of great importance to the people of New Brunswick. He has promised that he will visit these areas. I am pleased to hear that. When he comes to Gloucester county, if I am at home I shall be glad to do anything I can to bring him into touch with the fishermen, and also to provide him with a good day's salmon fishing on the Nipisguit river.

Mr. RHODES: If I may interrupt, the invitation is accepted here and now.

Mr. VENIOT: But when he does come to northern New Brunswick I would suggest that he do not be convinced by the arguments of the lawyers representing the anglers of Gloucester county. In northern New Brunswick and in the province of Quebec there are certain gentlemen who receive fees for looking after the interests of the anglers, and those gentlemen, as lawyers earning their fees, have to do the best they can. There are other lawyers who represent the shore fishermen, and from the knowledge some of them have of the hardships that the shore fishermen have to endure, they are in many cases acting for the shore fishermen without fee, while the others that I mentioned receive big fees from large organizations. The delegation that came to Ottawa in January or February included lawyers representing fish pool holders or riparian owners who have fishing rights on some of our rivers. There were also some representatives of the net fishermen. When I went home later on at Easter I met some of the representatives of the net fishermen. This was after the regulations had been promulgated, and they told me that if they had had any idea that the interview which they had at Ottawa would have resulted in these regulations, they would never have come to this city; that they certainly misunderstood what was going on. This is why they are now objecting so strenuously.

May I point this out in order that the minister may have the fact in mind; he has reported as to the number of hundredweight of salmon caught in New Brunswick in certain years. I think he gave the figures down to 1927 or 1928.

Mr. RHODES: 1929.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not catch the quantity for 1929.

Mr. RHODES: 18,308 hundredweight.

Mr. VENIOT: The salmon caught by the drifters in 1929 is given in the report as 5,790 hundredweight. The amount caught in 1930 is given as 17,012 hundredweight. I am now quoting from the report of Mr. Theeps, on which he based his recommendations, not to the department, as I now find out, but to those who had engaged him to come and look into the matter in their interests, namely, the anglers. They engaged these gentlemen and got them to visit New Brunswick, go over the Baie des Chaleurs salmon fisheries and make this report. Notwithstanding the fact that they were engaged by the anglers, there is only one paragraph in the report in which they say that salmon caught and opened were salmon in the same condition of productivity as salmon caught and opened on the rivers. They attempted tagging, but that did not succeed in convincing them. After all, this report is based on estimates so far as quantity is concerned; it is not based on facts, bearing upon the habits of the salmon. Those gentlemen cannot teach the fishermen of northern New Brunswick anything about the habits of salmon. The fishermen have been brought up in that locality and they know the habits of the salmon better than those gentlemen do. When those gentlemen are sent by an organization such as the anglers to make a report on the conditions they find; when the report is not definite and does not bear out the contention of the anglers then I say there is all the more reason for the department to hesitate to put such strict and impracticable regulations into force. I am glad the minister stated that he will personally look into the matter and visit the districts affected.

Mr. RHODES: In citing the figures contained in the report of Messrs. Belding and Phelps, my hon. friend unwittingly compared things which are not equal at all. For example the figures I cited were hundredweights.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, that is what I said.

Mr. RHODES: No, the figures I cited referred to hundredweights of salmon caught in the whole province of New Brunswick, whereas the figures cited by my hon. friend from the report of Messrs. Belding and Phelps referred to pounds.

Mr. VENIOT: I changed the pounds into hundredweights.

Mr. RHODES: There is no comparison at all, Mr. Chairman. The figures cited by my hon. friend from the report of Messrs. Belding and Phelps concerns the salmon fisheries of the whole province of New Brunswick.

Mr. VENIOT: I converted pounds into hundredweights and my argument went to show that either that report of hundredweights is not correct or the statistical report of the department is not correct. I am prepared to accept the statistical report of the department.

Mr. RHODES: This is not a statistical report of the department; it is a report as furnished to the bureau of statistics. Either I will have to have a new system of arithmetic or my hon. friend has a system I do not understand, because my statement still holds good with respect to these comparative figures.

I did not take exception to the remarks of my hon. friend regarding the lawyers who came here. While I have no great sympathy for lawyers, yet I was one once myself and perhaps I should be inclined to treat them more generously than would my hon. friend. I will say however that out of a deputation of thirty only two were lawyers, and only one of them spoke. He did not speak from the viewpoint of clients, or any particular person. On the contrary I thought he made a very broad and conciliatory speech. I think my hon. friend will accept the statement that there is really no point of conflict between the welfare of the angler and that of the commercial fishermen.

Mr. DUFF: The commercial fishermen should come first.

Mr. RHODES: I will say to my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough that the respective positions of anglers and commercial fishermen remind me of the old problem of which comes first, the hen or the egg.

Mr. DUFF: No; the commercial fishermen are earning their living by fishing, whereas the anglers are having a good time.

Mr. RHODES: On the other hand, the anglers are making a real contribution so far as conservation is concerned. The number of fish they take is negligible compared to the number taken by the commercial fishermen. I do not complain, of course, because the fishermen have a right to engage in their business. I say however that the interests of anglers and fishermen are identical inasmuch as they both want to build up and conserve a permanent industry. I assure my hon. friend that there is nothing in his suspicion that the voice of the high paid lawyer was heard to the exclusion of the voices of the fishermen themselves. By no means do I wish to contend that the regulations are ideal or thoroughly satisfactory, but I can assure my hon. friend that they were designed just as much in the interests of the commercial fishermen as any other body of men or group of individuals.

Mr. McLURE: Under this item I wish to direct the attention of the committee and the Minister of Fisheries to an item which probably does not deal directly with salmon. The matter to which I shall refer is one which has been brought to the attention of two and probably three ministers of fisheries in the last few years. While in some cases the ministers have given their decided opinions in the matter, yet the parties who have been injured have not had their claims satisfied. I refer to the subsidized fishing steamer, Amla. The owners of this particular fishing steamer had a contract made in the year 1929, and under their contract they interviewed the fishermen of Prince Edward Island. We find that the contract was not carried out in detail and that the people who were injured were the crew of the subsidized steamer Amla. I shall read the memorandum of agreement:

Memorandum of Agreement in duplicate made and entered into on the fourteenth day of May in the year nineteen hundred and twenty-nine between His Majesty, King George V, represented herein by the Honourable P. J. Arthur Cardin, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, of the Dominion of Canada, hereinafter referred to as the minister or the party of the first part, and the International Fresh Fish Corporation Limited, Georgetown, Prince Edward Island, owner of the boat "Amla", hereinafter referred to as the party of the second part;

Witnesseth that for and in consideration of the covenants, agreements and stipulations herein contained on the part of His Majesty, the party of the second part, themselves, their successors and assigns do hereby covenant and agree to and with His Majesty, his heirs and successors in the manner and to the effect following, viz:

To provide and operate at their own cost the steamer "Amla" for collecting and transporting fish.

The "Amla" shall operate as above indicated along that portion of the north coast of Prince Edward Island from Alberton to Souris or Georgetown, making at least three trips per week, and calling at the different fishing points in order to collect and purchase the catch from the fishermen and bring the same to Souris or Georgetown, where the fish can be shipped by rail in special refrigeration cars.

The "Amla" shall be equipped with refrigerating compartments and have on board a special fish instructor and inspector to instruct and guide the fishermen.

The party of the second part guarantees to the fishermen a price of at least one cent per pound for fish as it comes from the water and 2½c. per pound for lightly salted fish.

Payment for fish purchased from the fishermen shall be made by the party of the second part on a basis of at least once in every two weeks.

The party of the second part agrees to submit to the minister or the party of the first part a certified cheque on a chartered bank in the Dominion of Canada or other security satisfactory to the minister for the amount of five thousand dollars to be held as a guarantee for the faithful performance of this contract and that the fishermen shall receive payment as indicated above for the fish purchased from them and also to protect the fishermen against loss should the party of the second part fail to fulfil its obligations, which certified cheque or other security shall be forfeited, as well as any moneys due under this agreement should the party of the second part fail to carry out any of the terms of this contract.

The party of the second part agrees to transport fish and other products for other producers and to facilitate the collection and shipments of potatoes and similar farm produce during the fall to the nearest railroad station, it being distinctly understood that the transportation and collection of fish must at all times be given preference.

The party of the second part shall maintain a sufficient crew on the "Amla" to properly operate the boat and handle the fish with proper expedition.

[Mr. McLure.]

The "Amla" is to be properly insured against loss, and it is a condition of this agreement that the party of the first part assumes no liability for damage to the "Amla" by act of God, fire, reasonable wear and tear and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers and navigation of whatever nature and kind soever, provided that if the said boat be totally lost or damaged to such an extent as to justify abandonment thereof as for a constructive loss, this agreement shall thereupon be deemed to have expired and the party of the first part shall be subject to no further liability thereunder.

This agreement shall be effective from the first day of June, nineteen hundred and twenty-nine, to the thirty-first day of December, nineteen hundred and twenty-nine, or for such length of time as may be determined by the minister or the Party of the first part, in consideration whereof His Majesty represented herein by the minister as aforesaid agrees to pay to the party of the second part a subsidy at the rate of one thousand eight hundred dollars per month of lawful money of the Dominion of Canada, it being understood and agreed that, in the event of any trip or trips, or a portion of any trip or trips being missed owing to it being impossible to perform the same on account of weather or ice conditions, upon satisfactory evidence to that effect being furnished to the minister, he may direct that no deduction shall be made from the subsidy otherwise payable for the trip or trips so missed. But in the event of a trip or trips being missed through accident to machinery or the vessel, a deduction shall then be made from the subsidy provided in this agreement, said deduction to be made on a pro rata basis, the number of days so missed to be taken as fractions of the month.

Where the context allows, the expression "minister" shall include the Deputy Minister of Fisheries and the successors in office for the time being of the minister or such deputy.

In witness whereof the party of the first part, the minister as representing His Majesty as aforesaid, and the party of the second part have hereunto signed their names and set their seals.

Done this fourteenth day of May in the year of Our Lord, nineteen hundred and twenty-nine.

Signed and sealed by the minister in the presence of:

F. J. Petry.

Wm. A. Found,
Deputy Minister of Fisheries.

Signed and sealed by the said party of the second part in the presence of

I. A. Ryan.

O. W. Nordin,
President.
International Fresh Fish Corporation Ltd., Owner.

I read this memorandum of agreement to show that the boat Amla was subsidized to develop the fishing on Prince Edward Island, to take care of the catch and to help in the marketing of it.

Afterwards O. W. Nordin came to Prince Edward Island and interviewed several fishermen, farmers and others, told them of the agreement and then produced it. On the strength of the agreement he succeeded in shipping his crew, and it is on behalf of those men that I am placing this matter before the hon. Minister of Fisheries. Nordin hired the crew on the 23rd of April. The following are particulars of the crew, their length of service, and the wages owing to them:

W. P. Burke, captain
Charlottetown—
5 months wages at $150.. .. .. ..$750
4 months board at $25.. 100
(April 23rd to Sept. 23rd) ——$850

L. Winchester, engineer
Charlottetown—
5 months wages at $150.. .. .. ..$750
4 months board at $25.. 100
(April 23rd to Sept. 23rd) ——$850

John Skerry, cook
Alberton—
5 months wages at $80.. .. .. ..$400
4 months board at $25.. 100
——$500

Peter Parrington, mate
Lower Montague—
4 months wages at $65.. .. .. ..$260
3 months board at $25.. 75
——$335

Daniel Jarvis, seaman
North Rustico—
4 months wages at $60.. .. .. ..$240
3 months board at $25.. 75
——$315

Lorne Flood, seaman
Southport—
2 months wages at $60.. .. .. ..$120
1 month board at $25.. 25
——$145

James McCabe, fireman
Charlottetown—
2 months wages at $80.. .. .. ..$160
1 month board at $25.. 25
——$185

Edward Smith, fireman
Charlottetown—
2 months wages at $80.. .. .. ..$160
1 month board at $25.. 25
——$185

These are the claims totalling $3,365, by the men against the ship and against the owner personally or under his firm name of the International Fresh Fish Corporation, Limited. After the crew had worked for a month naturally they asked for their wages. Mr. Nordin told them that the government had not yet sent his subsidy, but in a few days he would receive it and they would be paid their wages. Time went on without the men receiving anything and they became anxious, and finally, through their solicitor, they appealed to the courts and had the ship seized. She was sold in September, but the price realized was only sufficient to pay the legal expenses and some minor repairs. Thus after five months' service the crew were left without any recompense. As soon as this was known several people became interested in their plight. Delegations were sent to different quarters, and I am advised that a delegation interviewed the government here. However, there was a letter sent by the members of the crew to the Minister of Fisheries, stating what they were up against and the loss they had sustained. I want to read this memorandum to the minister, which is dated Charlottetown, December 6, 1929, and addressed to Hon. P. J. Cardin, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and also to members representing Prince Edward Island. It reads:

Honourable and dear sirs:

Mr. O. W. Nordin, president of the International Fish Corporation, came here and stated that he had a contract with the Department of Fisheries and was being allowed $1,800 a month as a subsidy. On the 23rd of April we went to work on the steamer Amla (Ex. C. G. S. Brant) to get her ready to fulfil the contract. On the latter part of May we tried to get some wages, but although Mr. Nordin promised several times to pay us, we got nothing.

We are informed by several persons, and on good authority, that the company was not solvent and that we had better look out for our wages. On June 8th we applied to the admiralty court for a settlement, and after waiting until September 10th, the steamer was offered by sheriff's sale but did not sell. On or about the 23rd of September she was sold by private sale, but up to the present time we have not received our wages.

It is now nearly eight months since we started work and we have practically lost a season's employment through the International Fresh Fish Corporation's failure to carry out their contract.

We are enclosing a statement of wages—

That is the statement I have already read.

—which will show that some of the crew were compelled to leave without any remuneration whatever before the steamer was sold.

As the International Fresh Fish Corporation had submitted bonds for the faithful performance of the contract, which they failed to fulfil, we respectfully request that these bonds be estreated to such an amount as will satisfy our claim for wages.

Trusting to have your favourable consideration as soon as possible, we remain your most humble and obedient servants,

(Signed) W. P. Burke, master
Lemuel Winchester, engineer
John Skerry, cook
Peter Parrington, mate
Daniel Jarvis, seaman
Lorne Flood, seaman
James McCabe, fireman
Edward Smith, fireman.

To supplement this letter a large petition was circulated throughout Prince Edward Island, and I should like to read part of it to show how it supports the letter written by the crew. It is addressed to Hon. P. J. Cardin, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, at Ottawa, and also to members representing Prince Edward Island, and reads as follows:

We, the public and supporters of the Liberal party in the province of Prince Edward Island, are conversant with the facts as contained in the enclosed letter from the crew of the S. S. Amla, ex C. G. S. Brant, and we consider their request only fair and just before our members, to be paid their wages from these bonds.

We understand that Mr. Nordin was president of the International Fresh Fish Corporation, and further that this company had a contract with the Department of Fisheries and was granted a subsidy of $1,800 (eighteen hundred dollars) per month, which induced the crew to hire with the above company, and also induced the merchants of Charlottetown, to supply her with fittings, to prepare the ship for her work. We are also informed that the company gave bonds, for the faithful performance of the contract, which among other things were to protect the fishermen.

The company never functioned, and we ask you in the name of our king and country, that these bonds should be used, or as much of them as possible, toward paying those poor men.

We would respectfully request you to give this petition your most favourable consideration, so that the crew, who have completely lost their summer, through the failure of O. W. Nordin. Some of these men have served their King and country for over three years.

A labourer is worthy of his hire and their wages should be paid.

I have a copy of this petition but I will not read the signatures, since it is signed by over three hundred people throughout Prince Edward Island. In addition, there were numerous other letters and telegrams sent to members of parliament; the crew of the Amla were led to believe that they would be paid, but so far that has not been done. An election was approaching; the letters became very numerous and very promising, and I want to read some of the letters received by members of the crew. By doing so I will show that some assurance must have been given by the Minister of Fisheries that the crew would be paid. A short time ago I noticed that the hon. member for Prince was very anxious that agreements with the government should be lived up to. Here we have an agreement with the members of the crew of the Amla, but as yet they have not been paid. On May 9, 1930, the hon. member for Prince wrote Captain Burke as follows:

Dear Captain Burke:

I received the information to-day from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he will endeavour to arrange to have your claims adjusted, and I suppose he will have to put this in the supplementary estimates, and until those are through it would not be safe to give out any information.

However, I thought it well to let you know that the minister's intentions are good and that he will do his best on your behalf.

Yours truly,

A. E. MacLean.

You will note that according to this letter no information was to be divulged at that time.

[Mr. McLure.]

Mr. AHEARN: Pardon me, but was the letter marked personal?

Mr. McLURE: No, it was not. As election day drew near, another letter was written, under the date of May 12, 1930, this time to the engineer of the boat. This letter reads:

Ottawa, May 12th, 1930.

Mr. Lemuel Winchester,
Charlottetown, P.E.I.

Dear Mr. Winchester:

I received your letter and may say in reply, that the minister has given me the assurance that it will be attended to and that provision will be made for same in the estimates.

I trust that things will work out satisfactorily and that all the men employed on the boat will be paid.

Yours truly,

A. E. MacLean.

I wish to place on record another letter to show that these men on the Amla were being assured from time to time by the members from Prince Edward Island that they were going to be paid the wages due them. Here is a letter of July 5, 1930.

Summerside, P.E.I., July 5th, 1930.

Mr. F. Skerry,
c/o Howard Clark,
Alberton, P.E.I.

Dear Mr. Skerry:

Regarding pay for the work Amla, may say that I have received a letter stating the minister had issued instructions to have cheques issued.

If you do not receive yours in the course of a day or so, kindly let me know, and I will again take the matter up.

Yours truly,

A. E. MacLean.

That was just prior to the election and would therefore be a nice letter for the crew to receive.

Mr. MacLEAN: Why pick out A. E. MacLean's? Read the others.

Mr. McLURE: If the hon. member will wait I will read some more of his.

An hon. MEMBER: Read them all.

Mr. McLURE: It would take a couple of days to read them all.

Mr. MacLEAN: We support every one of them.

Mr. McLURE: If the hon. member for Prince does not wish to take credit for all the letters, I will give him a rest and read others which may back up his own statement that the crew should be paid, that they were promised to be paid, and that, as the writer says, he had the assurance of the minister that the cheques were issued and was told that if the men did not get their cheques the crew should notify the hon. member and he would see the matter was attended to.

Mr. MacLEAN: I did not say they were issued.

Mr. McLURE: Here is another letter of May 24, 1930:

Ottawa, May 24th, 1930.

Mr. Lemuel Winchester,
Charlottetown,
Prince Edward Island.

Dear Mr. Winchester:

I acknowledge your letter of May 22nd and can only repeat what I said before, that this claim would be paid.

The Justice department has now given a decision that the bond which Nordin furnished can be collected on and they are now going after the guarantee company, but apart from all that, even if it is not collectible, the amount will be paid. Our friends must understand, however, that a vote must be put through the house, otherwise the Auditor General will not certify it with the accounts.

Yours sincerely,
R. H. Jenkins.

That letter was from another member of parliament at that time. Here is another letter dated May 30, 1930:

Ottawa, May 30, 1930.

Captain W. P. Burke,
148 Elm Avenue,
Charlottetown,
Prince Edward Island.

Dear Captain Burke:

I beg to acknowledge your letter of May 27th and there is no doubt whatever your claim will be paid. It is fully expected that the government will be able to collect on the bond, but whether they do or not it will be treated in a compassionate way and the minister informed me that it will be paid.

Yours sincerely,
R. H. Jenkins.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Mr. Cahan moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I did not understand that there was to be a motion today for concurrence in the report of the committee charged with investigation into the Copyright Act. There are some provisions which hon. members ought to have the opportunity to study.

Mr. CAHAN: Concurrence in the report simply provides for printing so that it may be distributed to hon. members. There will be ample opportunity for discussion.

ADJOURNMENT IN HONOUR OF THE KING'S BIRTHDAY

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I understand arrangement has been made among the different parties of the house that owing to the fact that to-morrow is the anniversary of the King's birthday, there should be no sitting of this house. I therefore move, with the consent of the house:

That when this house adjourns this day it stand adjourned until Thursday next at three p.m.

Motion agreed to.

BIOLOGICAL BOARD ACT

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 78, to repeal the Biological Board Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Speaker, it is proposed to reorganize the work of the board by placing directly under the control of the department and the minister, the executive and administrative work which hitherto has been conducted by the board, thereby leaving to the technical officers more complete freedom and time to attend to the purely technical questions the consideration of which constitutes the main function of the board. The introduction of this bill is the first step towards the work of reorganization.

Mr. DUFF: I understand that the present bill provides for the repeal of the old act; will a new act be introduced?

Mr. RHODES: Yes; as discussion on the bill proceeds our intentions will be disclosed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AUTHORITY TO ISSUE SECURITIES FOR $68,500,000 TO MEET EXPENDITURES AND INDEBTEDNESS IN 1931

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 79, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to authorize the provision of moneys to meet expenditures made and indebtedness incurred during the calendar year 1931.

He said: This bill, Mr. Speaker, is to authorize the Canadian National Railways to issue securities to cover $68,500,000 being the amount of the estimate of the railways' deficiency in their needs above their earnings for 1931; really the estimates of the Canadian National Railways.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING—SENATE BILL

Bill No. 68 for the relief of Ruth Rosenberg—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

TARIFF SCHEDULES

PRINTING OF PAST, PRESENT AND PROPOSED RATES FOR PURPOSES OF COMPARISON

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it was understood that at this session opportunity would be given to discuss changes in the tariff that were made at the last special session. Hon. members will recall that at the time there was not opportunity to discuss the changes. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if it would be possible to have the tariff changes proposed yesterday printed in a manner which would enable us to make comparisons with the original tariff. I should like to enlarge that request, if I might, and ask if we could have, in a form which would permit of comparison, the tariff as it was before the special session of 1930, with the changes of the special session indicated in a parallel column, and the proposed changes of this session in another parallel column. That would place before us in their entirety the changes which the present administration are making in the tariff. I believe it would expedite discussion in committee to have particulars in this form and it seems to me to be a reasonable request. I would suggest that the information be brought down in the form of a blue book specially prepared, which would be available to all hon. members and to others desiring like information.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the suggestion of my right hon. friend when he returns to-morrow. I think myself the request is quite reasonable, but I will mention it to the Prime Minister.

SOCKEYE SALMON FISHERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) with respect to the sockeye salmon fisheries treaty which was signed last year by the government of this country. Has the treaty been signed yet by the United States government? If not, is there any likelihood that it will be?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the treaty in question has not been ratified by the Senate of the United States, nor have we had any intimation from the United States government as to whether this will be done or not. Inasmuch as we have received no notification to the contrary, we must assume that it is their purpose ultimately to ratify it. I do not know that at the moment I can give any better answer to my hon. friend.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved the third reading of Bill No. 41 to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CITY OF OTTAWA AGREEMENT

PROPOSED EXTENSION FOR ONE YEAR FROM JUNE 1, 1930

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution.

That it is expedient to authorize the Minister of Public Works, on behalf of His Majesty, to enter into an agreement with the corporation of the city of Ottawa to extend the period of the existing agreement with the corporation for one year from 1st June, 1930.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): This seems to me an appropriate moment to direct the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works to the discussion which has been taking place with respect to the rebuilding of the Ottawa city hall. If the government is taking up with the city the renewal of the agreement between the government and the city, I hope my hon. friend will keep in mind the plan of park development which in a general way has been approved by this parliament, and which is in accordance with the views of the federal district commission, as to the improvement of the city, and not permit within a certain area which has been set apart for further park development any rebuilding or extension of existing buildings. The agreement between the city and the government with respect to what is now known as Confederation park contemplated that no rebuilding would take place within the area outlined in the correspondence. Inasmuch as there appears to be a difference of view on the part of some of those concerned with civic affairs with respect to the obligation of the city in the matter, it ought to be made clear by the minister that at least the federal government expects continued co-operation between the city and itself along the lines on which the improvements already made have been undertaken.

To make clearer my meaning, I might say that the previous administration would never have consented to ask parliament for a sum of money sufficient to permit of the expropriation of the old Russell house and Russell theatre and the other buildings in that vicinity and also for the money necessary for the expropriation of the block between Wellington street, Sparks street, Elgin street and the post office, if the object had been simply that of providing a new site for a city hall within a park area. The intention was to create in the heart of the capital of Canada a large central park which would serve the city as well as the capital, because the two are indistinguishable, but which also would have its relation to the whole improvement of the capital. The government was careful in its interviews with the civic authorities at the time to point out that a scheme of the kind could only be carried out provided there was cordial cooperation between the city and the government. The city undertook to widen Elgin street, to expropriate certain buildings on that street and also to remove certain buildings in the vicinity of the city hall. Part of that undertaking has already been carried out, there are parts which have not as yet been attended to. There is in the correspondence a reference on the part of the city to a conditional approval by the citizens. This had reference to expropriations as they might be made from time to time. I understand that with respect to the widening of Elgin street a by-law was submitted which the citizens approved. I understand also that the citizens approved of the tearing down of Knox church and of the expropriation of that property by the city, so that the citizens already have given implied approval of the general scheme of which these particular expropriations form a necessary part.

Since these expropriations were made, as hon. members know, the city hall took fire and was partially destroyed, and at the moment the city fathers are considering whether they should rebuild and make extensions on the existing site or whether they should secure another location and erect elsewhere a new city hall. I hope the government will be firm in having the civic authorities understand that parliament, when it appropriated moneys for the expropriation of the properties mentioned, and the citizens when they approved of the by-laws for the widening of Elgin street and the expropriation of Knox church, had in mind the general scheme and the undertaking by the city that they would not rebuild in that area, or extend any of the buildings at the time located there, but that as these buildings came down, their sites would become available for the further development of the general park scheme already approved by this parliament and the civic authorities in office at the time the first expropriations were made.

I am sure that any agreement made by the government with the city, which will appropriately and adequately recognize the obligations of the federal government to the city, will meet with the general approval of parliament. I do not anticipate any difficulty over the agreement that may be ultimately reached. I believe, however, that it would be in accordance with the will and the wish of the people of Canada generally that the scheme which has been carefully planned and already considered by the city and by the federal district commission should be carried out, and this would seem an appropriate moment for the minister to emphasize that point of view in any discussion with the city fathers.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: May I ask a question? Two or three times the right hon. gentleman referred to some understanding between the previous government and the city, with regard to Confederation park and any further building in that area by the city. Would he be good enough to say whether there was any agreement or understanding between his government and the city authorities in regard to the city hall, or any other buildings which might be owned by the city in Confederation park, and if so, what was the agreement?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: An exchange of letters took place between the government and the city authorities and the federal district commission. These communications will make quite clear what the understanding was. I have not the communications with me at the moment, but I will be glad to have them placed on the table of the house, and I know the government have copies of them. The whole purpose and understanding is made perfectly clear in those communications. There can be no doubt that the government of the day would not have asked parliament to vote sums of money for the expropriation of that particular area, the old Russell house, the Russell theatre, and the other buildings, spending two or three million dollars on those improvements, if it had not been distinctly agreed by the city that they would cooperate in the large scheme of making a central park.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Distinctly agreed in writing?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, the communications were in writing. They set forth what was agreed to in the several interviews between the government, the federal district commission and the city. There is one phrase in the correspondence which, I understand, has given rise at the moment to some comment. It is to the effect that the city will cooperate to the extent to which the taxpayers approve, or something of the kind. Naturally they must have the approval of the taxpayers in whatever they may do. The intention or meaning of that phrase, however, was not that the scheme as a whole should be presented to the taxpayers of Ottawa to be approved by them; it was that as particular by-laws were necessitated under the city's method of procedure, those by-laws would be submitted. Of course, if the by-laws were defeated, the city would find it impossible to proceed, but as I have said, they did submit a by-law having regard to the widening of Elgin street, and a further by-law, I think it was, it may have been one and the same, with regard to the expropriation of the Knox church property. The citizens approved of those by-laws, and at that time the citizens had the whole park scheme before them. So I think, impliedly, the citizens already have given full consent to the general scheme. The one point that was made clear at the time was that no new buildings should be permitted to go up within that area. The city itself, I believe, has to give a licence or some permission to enable any buildings to be erected.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): A building permit.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, and it was understood that no building permit would be given by the city within that area, and that as buildings fell into disuse their sites would become available as part of the park area. But for that undertaking the government and the city alike, would have been simply improving the properties of the very few individuals who have a bit of property in that area, giving to each of them a very special building site.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): With regard to this resolution, I notice that an error has been made in the date. It should be for one year from July 1, 1930, instead of from June 1, 1930.

The object of this resolution is to authorize the introduction of a bill which contains special provisions with respect to matters in which both the city of Ottawa and the Dominion of Canada are represented. The agreement was entered into in the year 1920, and was approved by an act of parliament which is chapter 15 of the statutes of that year. Most of the terms of that agreement are of comparatively little interest now, but provision is made for an annual payment to the city of Ottawa as compensation for water supply for fire protection and for street sprinkling and sprinkling in parks and driveways. The amount provided in the agreement of 1920 was $75,000, which was later increased to $100,000. That agreement of 1920 was extended in 1924 for one year, and in 1925 for a period of five years, expiring on July 1, 1930. The passing of this resolution, and of the act to be based upon it, will authorize the payment to the city of Ottawa of $100,000 for the year expiring on July 1, 1931, for these services. That is the effect of the resolution and of the bill which will be based upon it.

With respect to the suggestions made by my right hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King) as to the agreement between the city of Ottawa and the Dominion of Canada with regard to the park area, I wish to thank him for the information he has conveyed to me. I may say that I have studied the correspondence pretty carefully and have obtained information from every other available source that would throw light upon those negotiations. There is no formal agreement, but I think the objects and purposes are fairly and completely disclosed by the correspondence. As I interpret it, the construction or rebuilding of a city hall in that area would be a violation of the spirit, and I think of the letter, of the correspondence. I may say that this act and this agreement have no reference whatever to that question, but I shall be pleased to study it from every standpoint and to give careful consideration to the suggestions made by my right hon. friend.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Does the minister desire to amend the resolution?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, the date should be changed from June 1, 1930, to July 1, 1930. It is July 1 in the bill.

Mr. MANION: I beg to move the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Did I understand the minister to say that certain terms of the old agreement were not required in the new agreement which is being entered into? As I understand the resolution, it simply authorizes the renewal for one year of the previous agreement, and I take it that is all the bill will provide for.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend is perfectly correct in that assumption. As I pointed out, it is a question of the payment for this year of $100,000.

Resolution as amended reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Stewart (Leeds) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 80, to authorize an agreement between His Majesty the King and the corporation of the city of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 72, to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

On section 1—Roman Catholic females may be sentenced to reformatory instead of prison or gaol in Nova Scotia.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Under the present law, so far as it relates to Nova Scotia, a transfer from a prison to one of these Roman Catholic homes shall take place only under the direction of the provincial secretary of Nova Scotia. The new section provides that it shall in future be left to a judge of the supreme court, or a judge of the county court within his jurisdiction, to make such transfer. That is the only change in regard to Nova Scotia.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Roman Catholic females.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This section merely provides that any woman convicted in the province of New Brunswick may be sent to one of the homes of the Good Shepherd. In the former act it was only within the city and district of St. John, and they wish to have that restriction removed to make the section apply to the whole province of New Brunswick.

Mr. JACOBS: Does that mean that crime is extended from St. John to other parts of New Brunswick?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Imprisonment in the Good Shepherd reformatory.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This section is drawn to make it conform with a similar provision in the act respecting Nova Scotia. There were discrepancies between the two sections. With the enactment of this, the same provision will apply in both provinces.

Section agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 73, to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Before this bill is read the second time, and inasmuch as it deals in certain respects with conflicting jurisdictions under provincial and dominion statutes, I would take this opportunity of referring the minister to an anomaly in section 121 of the Dominion Bankruptcy Act, dealing with the rights of wage-earners under that statute. Section 121 reads:

> Subject to the provisions of section one hundred and twenty-six as to rent, in the distribution of the property of the bankrupt or authorized assignor, there shall be paid, in the following order of priority:—
> First, the costs and expenses of the custodian and the fees and expenses of the trustee;
>
> Secondly, the costs of the garnisheeing, attaching, execution or judgment creditor (including sheriff's fees and disbursements) coming within the provisions of subsection one of section twenty-five and subsection three of section twenty-nine;
> Thirdly—

This is the point I want to emphasize:

> Thirdly, all wages, salaries, commissions or compensation of any clerk, servant, travelling salesman, labourer or workman in respect of services rendered to the bankrupt or assignor during three months before the date of the receiving order or assignment and all indebtedness of the bankrupt or authorized assignor under any Workmen's Compensation Act;

I would refer the minister to section 125 of the act and suggest that he read it in conjunction with the foregoing. This section reads:

> Nothing in the four last preceding sections shall interfere with the collection of any taxes, rates or assessments payable by or levied or imposed upon the debtor or upon any property of the debtor under any law of the dominion, or of the province wherein such property is situate, or in which the debtor resides, nor prejudice or affect any lien or charge in respect of such property created by any such laws.

And now I should like to direct the minister's attention to one of the provisions of the British Columbia Workmen's Compensation Act, which is similar to other compensation acts in the different provinces. Section 46 of the Workmen's Compensation Act of British Columbia, which is similar to practically all of the acts of the different provinces, makes the claim for rates, dues, assessments, and so on, a claim the payment of which is in priority to everything excepting a workman's lien for wages.

Section 143 of the British Columbia Companies Act provides that for three months prior to a seizure wages shall come before a bondholder's claim. There are innumerable instances throughout the statutes where this principle of three months' priority is established, and in this connection I would refer particularly to section 72 of the Dominion Winding Up Act. As the Dominion Bankruptcy Act is now established, there is conflict and uncertainty with regard to wage earners. Judgments of the courts have maintained that the claims allowed by workmen's compensation boards should be paid pari passu with the claims of the wage earners, but my hon. friend will appreciate that a workman's lien is not always filed in time. The Bankruptcy Act provides that there shall be a stay of proceedings by all creditors once an assignment in bankruptcy has been made or an order declaring bankruptcy has been isued, in which event the workman must go to the court for leave to proceed and often the delay occasioned puts him out of time because the lien must be filed within thirty days of the date of the last work being done.

I suggest to the hon. minister that this is a good time to consider the advisability of amending the present sections of the Bankruptcy Act. My first suggestion is that section 121 should be amended to read as follows:

> Subject to the provisions of section 126 as to rent, in the distribution of the property of the bankrupt or the authorized assignor, there shall be paid in priority to any claim for principal or interest in respect of any mortgage, bond or debenture issue or any other claim whatsoever, all wages, salaries, commissions or compensation of any clerk, servant, travelling salesman, labourer or workman in respect of the services rendered to the bankrupt or assignor during three months immediately preceding the date of the receiving order or assignment, notwithstanding anything in this act to the contrary otherwise provided, and following the payment of the said claims for wages there shall be paid in the following order of priority:
> First, the costs and expenses of the custodian and the fees and expenses of the trustee;
>
> Secondly, the costs of the garnisheeing, attaching, execution or judgment creditor (including sheriff's fees and disbursements) coming within the provisions of subsection one of section twenty-five and subsection three of section twenty-nine;
>
> Thirdly, all indebtedness of the bankrupt or authorized assignor under any workmen's compensation act;
> Fourthly, claims resulting from injuries to employees of the insolvent debtor to which the provisions of any workmen's compensation act do not apply, but only upon moneys paid or payable to the insolvent estate by persons or companies guaranteeing the insolvent debtor against damages resulting from such injuries.

Section 125 would have to be amended accordingly, to read as follows:

> Nothing in the four last preceding sections, except the provision for the payment of three months' wages, salary, commissions or compensation, as provided in section 121, shall interfere with the collection of any taxes, rates or assessments payable by or levied or imposed upon the debtor or upon any property of the debtor under any law of the dominion, or of the province wherein such property is situate, or in which the debtor resides, nor prejudice or affect any lien or charge in respect of such property created by any such laws.

I refer the minister to a decision in British Columbia in the matter of the Campbell River Mills Limited, in bankruptcy, which has placed the payment of the wage earners' claims behind the workmen's compensation board and behind the holders of debentures. My only motive in making these suggestions is to protect absolutely the three months' priority of wage earners, and I would appreciate if the minister would consider the adoption of the proposed amendments.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is it the intention of the hon. member to put the three months' wages priority ahead of everything including vested mortgage debts or bonds secured by trust deeds already vested before the wages accrued?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is the intention.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It would make it that much more difficult for business people to hire money on mortgages. To-day the salaried employees are in a preferred position, which is as it should be, but if they are put still farther ahead I think it would be going just a little bit too far. This matter should have the earnest consideration of the house before we make any such move; it should be considered with all its obligations, implications and ramifications.

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, the Bankruptcy Act became law, I think, in 1919, and was put through by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) when he was Solicitor General. Since that time there have been many amendments and modifications made to the act. There is scarcely an hon. member who practices law who has not at one time or another brought in some little pet amendment of his own and managed to get it through. At present we have three or four amendments of that kind before the house, and this might be an opportune time to have a general revision of the act.

There are nine provinces, each one having its own particular insolvency law. There was a very drastic revision made for the province of Quebec when Sir Lomer Gouin was Minister of Justice, the object being to bring the Bankruptcy Act in line with the Civil Code and Code of Procedure of that province. We have in the province of Quebec a bankruptcy act which differs from that of the other provinces and with which we are pretty well satisfied. We have gone along now for the last ten or eleven years and there have been many bankruptcies, in fact some of the boards of trade and other finacial institutions think there have been too many. Unfortunately I was the party who first introduced the bankruptcy bill into the house. At that time I think I had more influence with the government than I have to-day because I succeeded in placing it on the doorstep of my friend the Minister of Justice, who adopted it as his own child. Notwithstanding that, whenever a political meeting is held in the province of Quebec many of my opponents still give me credit for that act. Sometimes I am successful and at other times unsuccessful in making them believe that it was the present Minister of Justice, who happens to have the same political views as they themselves, who was responsible for the bill.

It seems to me that the minister should frown upon these amendments which come in from session to session. They are not properly studied, having in mind the general idea of the Bankruptcy Act. The British North America Act permits the federal authorities to legislate upon bankruptcy. The amendments suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) are amendments which he desires to have put through particularly for his own province, but where the act is a federal act the lawyers practising in different parts of the country ought to know what the law is from the federal point of view. If we have to adopt the particular views and rules governing provincial legislation on bankruptcy, we are back to where we were before 1919. I recognize the fact that in the province of Quebec we have, so to speak, taken the bit in our teeth and incorporated in the federal law our own particular law. But, after all, the laws of the province of Quebec are radically different from those of the other provinces, and it seems to me that the English law governing bankruptcy, upon which this act is based, ought to be satisfactory to all the English-speaking provinces regardless of whether they are in the east or in the west.

I wish to suggest to the Minister of Justice that there should be a general revision of the Bankruptcy Act when everyone interested could appear before a select committee which would deal with the question, and then we would have some scientific treatment of the whole of the Act. We ought, if I may suggest this to the Minister of Justice, to allow all these bills to amend the Bankruptcy Act at this session to remain in abeyance, appoint a committee to study the whole matter and then introduce a complete and revised bankruptcy bill which would meet with the views of at least a majority of the people in this country.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): I heartily endorse the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). Wages should take priority over all other claims in a case of bankruptcy. When a firm goes into bankruptcy, probably the last people who know anything about the matter are the workmen in that concern. Others have their legal representatives, and they are fully apprised of what is about to take place before it actually happens. But the poor workingmen who are in the employ of that firm have no legal representative; they are working in good faith and their wages should have priority over all other claims. Will the Minister of Justice take this point into consideration?

Mr. GUTHRIE: This discussion is hardly appropriate under the proposal that is introduced by this bill. I realize, however, perhaps as well as anyone in the house, the difficulties, the diversities and I might also say some of the anomalies that are met with in the bankruptcy law in this country and its administration in the various provinces. During the short time that I have occupied the position of Minister of Justice, I have received a great many communications from judges, trustees in bankruptcy, receivers in bankruptcy, legal bodies and associations, chambers of commerce, boards of trade, credit men's associations and the like, all suggesting various changes in the Bankruptcy Act. There is a good deal of force in the suggestion made by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) that the time is fast approaching, if it is not already here, when there should be something in the nature of a general revision of the act. Upon the whole, I think the public feel that the act has worked well, but there are some difficulties that will have to be smoothed out. It is rather a serious problem to undertake a law for nine provinces where there are provincial jurisdictions which, in many respects, appear to be somewhat conflicting. I have not attempted such a revision during the present session. I have tabulated all the suggestions and all the proposed amendments, and the only amendment which the government has in mind at this session is the present one as incorporated in this measure, to protect injured parties in respect of insurance in regard to motor accidents, accidents either to the person or to the property of others. I am, however, keeping before me the question of a general revision of the act, and perhaps by next session I may be in a position to introduce such a bill.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Has the minister had any general request to abolish the law?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I have not.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

On section 1.—Proceeds of liability insurance policy on motor vehicles applied to claims against debtor.

Mr. JACOBS: Was there any request by any province for the passing of this section?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, directly by the attorney general of Ontario and the judges of the supreme court. One of the judges of the court of appeals, who was appointed a commissioner to inquire into the matter of automobile insurance, largely drew the section. Then from the province of Manitoba from certain associations there, a similar request has come. I assume there must be in Manitoba some provincial law similar to that passed at the last session by the province of Ontario. I cannot at the moment recall similar requests from any other provinces, but a committee of legal men throughout Canada have been writing on the subject, and they have expressed approval of the terminology of this section.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply, I wish to discuss a matter of national importance, namely, the urgency and necessity of the construction of a trans-Canada highway. Before I proceed with my remarks, I want to make clear that although this problem is contentious in some of its angles, at least it should be kept out of the political arena for the very good reason that during the last election the question was brought up by the party now in power and the present opposition as one of their projects, a project that has been accepted by the people of Canada as a whole. I had expected that some reference would be made to it in the budget, or that certain amounts of money would be placed in the estimates for carrying out such an undertaking, and on account of the unemployment situation, particularly in Ontario, I was very much disappointed that there was no provision for it in the estimates and no mention of it in the budget, although in the speech from the throne an allusion was made to the project and the intimation given that aid would be granted to highways.

When, in the early part of this session, I was speaking in the debate in reply to the speech from the throne I was interrupted by the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Simpson) and asked why last year I voted against certain resolutions dealing with the construction of the trans-Canada highway. I wish to say to the house that in northern Ontario particularly a peculiar situation exists. There is no highway commission functioning in that section of the province and any money voted by this parliament, unless specially ear-marked for special purposes, would not be used for highway construction. I am not going to criticize the provincial authorities because I believe the department which has control of the roads in northern Ontario has been doing a practical work in that section of the province. I repeat that any money voted by parliament under what is known as the Kellner resolution would never have found its way into northern Ontario for highway purposes. I make allusion to the fact that although this parliament voted millions of dollars during the 1919 session to relieve unemployment not a single dollar of the money found its way to northern Ontario. Orders were sent to the effect that not one dollar would be spent north of the Severn river. I make that statement to the house so that hon. members will fully realize the situation as it exists in the section of the country I have the honour to represent.

To make my point clearer to hon. members, may I state that in northern Ontario for the last fifteen years we have been discussing the question of the trans-Canada highway. On several occasions I acted on municipal boards, and in that capacity attended many good roads conventions. On one occasion I was sent to the city of Toronto to discuss that all-important question. The question of a trans-Canada highway was again brought forward very forcibly during the confederation anniversary year, and I believe it was a citizen from the province of Nova Scotia who wanted to call the road the Confederation highway.

Again referring to the Kellner resolution, I want to say to the house that it did not deal directly or indirectly with any moneys to be voted for the construction of the trans-Canada highway. At this time I shall refer to the words of the mover of the resolution, the then member for Athabaska (Mr. Kellner). On page 424 of Hansard, 1930, I find the following resolution moved by that gentleman:

> Whereas the need for establishment of highways is greater than in 1919;
> And whereas in that year the dominion government recognized its responsibility in this matter by a substantial grant, which grant is now exhausted;
> Therefore be it resolved, that, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability that a further substantial grant be made to cover the next five years' development of highway construction.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, there is not a single allusion, not one word concerning the allocation of moneys towards the construction of a trans-Canada highway. No matter what meaning we may wish to read into that resolution there is no expression to the effect that moneys shall be paid for the construction of such a highway. At this time I shall quote some of the statements by the mover of the resolution. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, when this resolution was introduced last year, considerable criticism was offered to the wording of it, and an amendment was introduced providing that the federal government should proceed to construct a transcontinental highway. After due consideration I have decided to leave the wording of the resolution in the same form as it was last year. It is my opinion that under that resolution federal aid could be given to the provincial governments for building roads, or a transcontinental highway could be built, whichever the house decided was more advisable.

I repeat my previous statement that there is not a single allusion to a trans-Canada highway in the Kellner resolution. The mover of the resolution proceeded to say:

> Probably the first question in connection with the resolution is whether it is good business to engage or to assist in the construction of highways in Canada.

At this time I wish to read from Hansard of March 10, 1930, page 449, a question by the then hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie) and the reply thereto by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner):

> Mr. McKenzie: Then the hon. gentleman agrees that this does mean a trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Gardiner: Certainly not; I am merely replying to what has been said. As I was saying, my hon. friend stated that he would be more favourable to a grant of money for building roads within the various provinces.

I shall now refer to the remarks of the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black) as reported at page 454 of Hansard, March 10, 1930:

In looking at this resolution I find that it is somewhat general, but following the discussion to-day it would seem that a very great deal of attention had been paid to a national highway across Canada. I think the discussion has centered largely upon that point. Probably the intention of the resolution was not so much that alone as that a grant should be given to each of the provinces.

I now wish to read to the house the remarks of the present Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) as reported at page 435 of Hansard of the same year:

Not long ago I was with a deputation that waited on the provincial government of Ontario regarding unemployment, and the Minister of Lands and Forests stated in writing—it was published but I could not find it among my papers to-day—that the provincial government was quite willing to cooperate with this government in the building of that section of the highway extending across the gap of which we are speaking at the present moment.

I have made these quotations to support my contention that in the years 1929 and 1930 there really was no resolution dealing directly with the construction of a trans-Canada highway. I will admit that there was a resolution by the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Kellner) dealing with grants to provincial governments for highway construction. At the time of the Kellner resolution I made the statement to the house that if the government would implement the construction of the trans-Canada highway I would vote for the resolution. I have made the statement, however, that no matter what money is voted by this parliament, unless it is particularly ear-marked for the construction of a highway through northern Ontario, that section of the country will receive no benefit from such an expenditure.

There are three angles from which the matter of the construction of a trans-Canada highway may be discussed. First there is the federal viewpoint, then the provincial and lastly the regional. Before I proceed further with my remarks I shall recall to the attention of hon. members of the house who were present during the last parliament the attitude of the Liberal party at that time, and its attitude towards expenditures from the federal treasury for matters of national importance. During the last general election campaign the then Prime Minister, the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) was asked by me personally before prorogation about the attitude of the Liberal party concerning the construction of a trans-Canada highway. He replied that realizing there were provincial complications, and that the matter of the construction of the trans-Canada highway was primarily provincial in character, on account of the intended interprovincial conference that was to be held in Ottawa during the coming fall, discussion of the problem would be left until that time. He stated that the agenda for the conference would include the discussion of the subject of highways. He meant that he was in favour of giving grants to the provinces to subsidize a work of this nature. At the present time the onus and full responsibility for the construction of the trans-Canada highway falls upon the government now in power. May I at this time quote from statements made last year by some of the sponsors of the trans-Canada highway. At this time I direct the attention of hon. members to the remarks of the present Prime Minister as they appear in Hansard at page 459:

I am wholly in accord, Mr. Speaker, with the terms of the resolution, and I believe the principles which governed in 1912 and 1919 are principles that are as applicable to-day as they were then. The conditions under which highways are being constructed bring that construction, not without but wholly within the British North America Act, so far as the dominion is concerned. My friend the minister has challenged not so much the competency of this parliament to grant moneys in any way that we may desire—

And then there was an interruption by Mr. Dunning. So hon. members will see that there was no obstacle thrown in the way by the present Prime Minister of Canada. Statements were also made to the government then in power about the financial situation and the necessity of reducing taxation and national debt. In this connection I desire to quote to the house from a speech made by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) on March 10, 1930, which will be found in Hansard of that year at page 468:

I would suggest also to the Prime Minister that if we cannot pay our war debts and at the same time look after the natural expansion of Canada and attend to the interests of the people, then let the war debts go. I would rather let the war debts go unpaid than let the interests of the people go unattended to. If the Prime Minister will look at the number of people who pay income tax as compared with those who do not pay, he will get an idea of who is receiving the money that we have to provide for war debts. He will find that the many are paying the few. If we are going to devote the entire revenue of Canada to the payment of war debts, and neglect the building of roads and the other undertakings that he has mentioned, then I say it is in the interests of Canada to disregard war debts and look after the business of the people. I cannot charge the Prime Minister with creating those war debts, of course, but I believe they were unnecessary. Therefore I suggest to the Prime Minister that he use the credit of Canada in the coming years instead of permitting other people to use it, that he use directly by the power he has, and not charge interest to the people of Canada for the use of their own credit; if he will do that he can easily get enough money to build this national highway in a very short time out of what he would save in interest.

This statement was made by one of the sponsors of what we call the Kellner resolution who fully realized the financial position of the country, and the house voted unanimously for the resolution. The hon. member went as far as to say that realizing the financial situation, the house should adopt the Kellner resolution and cancel the war debt.

During the last election, as I said before, in northern Ontario as well as in most other parts of Canada, the Conservative party went before the electorate and promised that if they were returned to power they would construct the connecting link so that we might have a trans-Canada highway from coast to coast. There was no mention made of any financial or provincial objection to the proposed undertaking; none whatever. That is why I repeat my contention that the responsibility rests not only on the government but on both sides of the house, by reason of the present unemployment and the urgency of building the connecting link of a trans-Canada highway between east and west, that we should go ahead with the project, not regarding it from any provincial viewpoint, but as a great national undertaking. I want to put before the house one or two advertisements published by the Conservative party during the last election campaign. The Conservative Association of the city of Ottawa published the following advertisement:

> What Canada needs is a policy to provide jobs. A policy that will build a national highway across Canada instead of forcing motorists to use American roads to get past the great lakes, with the result that they now leave in the United States the money which they spend by the way instead of spending it for supplies in Canada, as they would do if Canada had a through road, and thus solve the unemployment situation.

I call the particular attention of hon. members to that paragraph, that the purpose of the undertaking was to relieve the unemployment situation, because I intend to show in a few moments that the unemployment situation in northern Ontario to-day is as acute, if not more acute than it was a year ago, and on that score alone I submit the house should realize its responsibility towards the people who to-day cannot find employment. By their verdict last July the people of Canada in a very distinct manner told this house that they were absolutely in favour of the construction of the trans-Canada highway. Every newspaper in my section of the country, and I believe in other sections of Canada, so interpreted the result of the election. Undoubtedly it was understood that the promise then given would be implemented. The election campaign was conducted in my section on the desirability of such a highway being constructed, and I think every candidate in northern Ontario, whether Liberal or Conservative, was in favour of the project. For instance the Northern Tribune, an independent paper, contained the following despatch:

> The national highway was definitely promised by Mr. Bennett during his campaign, and early consideration of it will undoubtedly be given, in view of its close relation to the problem of unemployment which loomed so large in the campaign.

There was also a press despatch sent from Ottawa on September 11 by Arthur E. Moysey and Company, private wire, which I quote from the Porcupine Advance published in the town of Timmins. I do not know where the sender of the wire received his information, but it is very definite. This is the despatch:

> Work within three weeks for between 25,000 and 30,000 unemployed and sustenance for twice that many dependents will be provided, Premier R. B. Bennett believes, by the $20,000,000 relief resolution which he introduced to-day in the House of Commons. Declaring that the government proposed "work, not charity" for the unemployed, the premier informed the house what the $20,000,000 would do. It would be used, he said, to complete the trans-Canada highway, to cover the excess costs in the construction of federal, provincial and municipal public works and possibly of railway branch line construction and for any necessary assistance to the marketing of the products of lands, forest, sea and mine.

This was a clear cut statement and similar in its terms to other statements contained in the newspapers of this country at the time. The Kapuskasing Tribune, making allusion to the undertaking under discussion, says:

> There is general agreement that measures will be passed to provide work for unemployed, and foremost among these is the Canadian highway, which would absorb labour in eight of the nine provinces and be a definite investment that would pay for itself. The paralleling of the Canadian National Railways transcontinental line from Quebec city to Winnipeg by the highway would also have the effect of stimulating the revenues of the government-owned railway. Canada is now called upon to pay large annual deficits incurred by the Canadian National Railways so that any improvement that can be effected in that situation will be a lightening of the taxpayers' burden.

I believe hon. members realize that the people knew the verdict they were giving by their vote last summer, and that having put the Conservative party in power, that party would take full responsibility for the situation regardless of any obstacle which might be presented. I have said before, and I repeat it, there was no mention last summer of any financial or provincial complications, and I believe the credit of the country to-day is good enough to justify going ahead with this construction. Naturally, with an undertaking of this magnitude there is bound to be conflict between the provincial and federal governments, but apparently every difficulty of this nature has been surmounted according to an interview then given by the premier of Ontario, our present High Commissioner in London, in the course of which he stated the provincial authorities were ready to work in harmony with the federal government in constructing the trans-Canada highway—but that now the responsibility rested with the federal government. Everyone is aware that the Hon. Mr. Ferguson was the right hand man of the present Prime Minister during the campaign last July, and he must have been familiar not only with the policy of the Conservative party, but also with the intentions of the present Prime Minister. These are the words of the Hon. Mr. Ferguson as reported in the Mail and Empire:

> Province to Aid Highway
> "As soon as the federal government makes a start on construction of the trans-Canada highway, money for which is included in the $20,000,000 asked for by Premier R. B. Bennett for unemployment relief, the Ontario government will offer every assistance towards constructing the Ontario section of the highway." This was the statement made by Premier Ferguson last night when asked what steps should be taken by the province in the matter of route, cost and other phases. "It is a federal matter and no doubt the question of route will be decided," said Premier Ferguson. "Ontario will offer every assistance to the dominion authorities."

The other day I listened with a good deal of interest to a statement made by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) when a question was put to him if there was any objection or any requests or demonstrations from the provincial authorities with regard to proceeding with the highway, and his answer was that none had been received from the Ontario government. That answer simply put the onus on the federal authorities, and it is clear that the responsibility rests wholly on the federal authorities so far as the construction of this highway is concerned. Now I am going to quote from the Kapuskasing Tribune of February 27, 1931:

> The decision, as ex-premier Ferguson has said, rests with Premier Bennett and the dominion parliament. The federal Prime Minister must be getting impatient, waiting for a lead from Queen's Park, because the longer the trans-Canada highway is delayed the more prestige he will lose thereby.

I know it will be said in this house that the financial condition of the country will not permit of this expenditure but recently we had a conversion loan in connection with which Canada went over the top in magnificent style, and it should be possible for the country to raise sufficient funds to carry on that work, which is absolutely necessary for the relief of unemployment in the section of the country I have the honour to represent. This matter has been referred to by a number of members of the federal government. Quoting again from the Kapuskasing Tribune, I find the Minister of Railways quoted as having said, at Fort William, that during the winter money was spent for the construction of the trans-Canada highway, and the money had been taken from the $20,000,000 voted at the last special session. So it shows that to some extent at least the federal government have implemented the promise made during the last election, and that actually some money has been spent for this purpose in northern Ontario. I should like to impress the house with the statement made by the present Prime Minister at Winnipeg, during the highway convention:

> Premier predicts all of trans-Canada highway will be paved in decade. Two announcements of outstanding importance to Canada from the standpoint of national development, prosperity and integration, both of special interest to the motorists of this country, were made at the recent annual meeting in Winnipeg of the Canadian Association of Tourist and Convention Bureaux.
> Premier R. B. Bennett, His Worship Mayor Ralph H. Webb stated in the course of his address, had declared during his conference with the western mayors, that within a decade the trans-Canada highway would be paved from its Atlantic to its Pacific terminus and that federal aid would be provided for the completion and improvement of the nation's main street on a fifty-fifty basis with the provinces.

This statement was made by the Prime Minister of this country, after he had been in office three or four months. Without mentioning any aid from provinces or anything else, he stated that what we call the trans-

Canada highway would be a hard surfaced road from the Atlantic to the Pacific within a decade and because of the activities of some of the members of the present administration during the last campaign, now the responsibility rests entirely upon this government.

The statement was made that the construction of this highway would relieve unemployment. I do not like to dwell at great length upon the troubles of the section of the country which I represent, but every hon. member of the house realizes that the unemployment situation is just as acute now as it was last year, if not more so, and this applies particularly to northern Ontario. Our settlers are suffering at the present time. It is true that we have a number of newsprint industries in northern Ontario, but the settlers who are quite a distance away from those mills could not sell their pulpwood last winter, having practically no export market for their surplus of wood or lumber; and if they had not received relief from the provincial and federal authorities they would have been close to starvation. The same condition exists in the larger centres of population. I have under my hand a press report emanating from Sault Ste. Marie, to the effect that thousands of people are jobless at the present time because one of the big newsprint mills closed down. The same applies to North Bay, to Sudbury and to Cochrane. In the town of Cochrane, which is my home town, we have some big developments going on. The railway is being constructed towards Moose Factory; there is the big hydro development at Coral rapids and so on, but the fact is that there are many people in Cochrane who cannot find employment. This is one reason why this government, during this coming summer, next fall and next winter, should spend large sums of money in implementing their promise.

Now I desire to quote an article from the Cochrane Northland Post, dealing with the unemployment situation there, and I believe this to be typical of a number of towns in that section:

> May 14, 1931: There seems to be no limit to the number of unemployed that the town of Cochrane can harbour, from the appearances of the streets these days. Last Monday evening when the National pulled out of town, Railway street and Sixth avenue looked as though they were out to put Yonge street in the shade. It seems a pity that the citizens of the town are forced to either step off the sidewalk or else be jostled till their teeth rattle in order to get to and from work.
> Several storekeepers have complained that the entrance to their places of business have become the stamping ground of the hundreds of unemployed that we have in town. Many of these unfortunate men seem to monopolize the sidewalk with a bovine-like indifference, making it almost impossible for women with baby carriages, to say nothing of the decidedly coarse type of talk that is all too frequently heard. It is hoped that work will be resumed up north soon, before a series of robberies break out, which is inevitable with the large number of men we have here with no means of support. Already two or three have been reported. The ease with which liquor can be obtained does not help the situation any.

I am making that statement in order to help the people of this country to realize the situation which exists in that northern country. I do not want to mix federal and provincial politics, but because of the fact that this year the grant by the Ontario government to the northern development branch has been cut from $10,000,000 to $5,000,000 the situation there will be much worse. Now the responsibility rests upon this government to implement the promise made by all parties during the last election with regard to the construction of a trans-Canada highway. They can be positive that such implementation would be supported by every member of this house.

It may be a surprise to many hon. members of the house to learn that in Ontario, the richest and most thickly populated province in Canada, there are hundreds, if not thousands, of miles of new highway to be constructed in order to link up the east and west. As the Minister of Railways said last week in connection with another matter, the trans-Canada highway was never meant by his party, or in fact any other party, to be a new road running parallel to the present highway system in Canada. I believe that in Ontario we have the best highway system on the North American continent. This applies particularly to southern Ontario, because of its larger population and smaller area. In northern Ontario the same situation does not exist. I am not blaming anyone, because in the past it would have been absolutely impossible to construct highways in unpopulated areas—no more than it would have been possible for the government of Manitoba to build highways to the Flin Flon and other mining areas, or to Fort Churchill. Therefore, I am not seeking to blame any person because these highways have not been built in the north. The fact remains, however, that much of the highway construction necessary in connection with the trans-Canada highway must be in northern Ontario.

What is the situation in that connection? I will beg the indulgence of the house if I refer to what some people might regard as a local matter, which is in issue between the southern and northern sections of northern Ontario. I maintain that it is more than a purely local issue, however; I say it is a national issue, because every citizen of this country is directly or indirectly interested in the construction and the routing of this highway. For the sake of discussion I will divide the highway system of Canada into three sections: first the eastern system, comprising Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and parts of Quebec and Ontario; second, the central system, which is the link to be constructed in northern Ontario, and third the western section which will comprise the three prairie provinces and British Columbia. It has been said in the past that the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were not particularly interested in the construction of a trans-Canada highway for the very good reason that the highways of the three provinces are linked up together, but in Quebec we have a different situation. It will be necessary to construct hundreds of miles of new highway from Quebec city towards Cochrane and Winnipeg, and in Ontario we have the same situation. As I stated a few moments ago, in southern Ontario we have the best system of highways not only on the continent but, I was going to say, in the world. In northern Ontario, however, by reason of the size of that section of the province, the sparseness of the population and the lateness of settlement, there exists a situation which demands the attention not only of the different localities directly interested but of every citizen in the country.

I shall deal briefly with the local situation, but before proceeding to do so I desire to discuss for a moment or two the three highways going westward. I believe the province of Manitoba will have access to the borders of Ontario this year. The province of Saskatchewan has its own highway system east and west, and in Alberta the situation is different from what it is in either Saskatchewan or Manitoba. On the western slope of the Rocky mountains in that province a connecting link of the highway has to be constructed. And the same applies to the province of British Columbia.

Coming back now to the local issue, I trust that the facts I shall place before the house will provoke some discussion. I would make an appeal to all the chambers of commerce in this country because, as I have said, every section of Canada is directly interested in the routing of the highway, particularly so far as northern Ontario is concerned. It is surprising to me that there have not been more pronounced activities on the part of the chambers of commerce of Toronto, Montreal, Halifax, Winnipeg and the other large centres of population. I believe that a solution of the problem will be more quickly arrived at if these larger centres will consider the situation from the point of view of northern Ontario and the whole of Canada.

In northern Ontario the people along the north shore of lake Superior maintain that the trans-Canada highway should go through their section. We contend—and we have logic, distance, and economic considerations on our side—that the highway should parallel the Canadian National railway from La Reine on the Quebec border straight to Winnipeg. But until such time as the people of Canada as a whole undertake to deal with the situation, it will be difficult to find a solution.

At present there are in northern Ontario three schools of thought with regard to the routing of the highway. First of all there are those who favour the north shore routing, which would represent a distance of approximately 585 miles of new road to be constructed. This will run from Sault Ste. Marie to Nipigon, following closely the north shore of lake Superior. Needless to say, the north shore route is backed up by the people all along that section. A distance of 60 miles of road has already been constructed; it extends from the Sault to Batchawana bay. It may be contended by some that, inasmuch as the majority of the population is in the southern section of northern Ontario, the highway should be routed through that section. But we must not overlook the fact that, with development, there will be undoubtedly a much larger population in the northern section in the near future than there is at the present time in the southern section.

There is another school of thought in regard to the routing of the highway. There are those people who believe that the proper route should have the Mississagi valley as its objective. This is a distance of 650 miles of new road to be constructed. I believe that route was first recognized by the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson), and it is sponsored by Chapleau and other towns along the Canadian Pacific railway. It starts some 30 miles east of the Sault and runs north of the Sault and on to Oba. The route connects with the road system and follows the western sections. There is no doubt as to the advantages of this route. It would avoid the rocky country and provide a highway system for all the population from North Bay to the Sault. Its construction would be cheaper and it would traverse a section of country rich in wonderful scenery and excellent fishing and one capable of great agricultural development. The important feature of this route is that it provides a basis for compromise between the north and the south. In a resolution I have on the order paper I make allusion to the fact, which is recognized, that eventually alternate routes will have to be constructed; and needless to say, whatever section of northern Ontario has the advantage of the initial route will be at least twenty years ahead of the other. It will take that length of time for the second section to catch up with it.

Then there is the Cochrane or northern route, a distance, from Hearst to Winnipeg, of 519 miles. This will run directly west, and it is a route that will have to be considered. I had some interviews with the premier of Quebec and others living on the western slope of the province. They want to have a direct highway connection with the trans-Canada highway, and the only direct connection that can be afforded will be by way of the Maniwaki road west of the city of Hull and by the Mont Laurier road which will give direct connection with Montreal, going by lake Victoria, and on towards northern Quebec. Such a route will shorten the distance from Montreal to Winnipeg 150 to 225 miles, and therefore this aspect of the situation must be considered in any discussion of the routing of the trans-Canada highway.

I will now discuss as briefly as I can the merits of the different routes which have been mentioned. I do not wish to be partial, but I need hardly say that, seeing that I belong to the northern section of Ontario, I am naturally in favour of the northern route. I think, however, that I can prove that our section of northern Ontario affords the most favourable facilities for road-making of any section of the country. When I say this I am not casting any reflection on the efforts made in the past by those who have favoured the north shore route. In my opinion, in view of the high cost which would devolve upon the government, and considering the present financial condition of the country, that route must be regarded as impossible. Let me repeat, however, that we in the northern section of the province are willing at all times to come to an honest compromise with other sections of Ontario. We have in that northern part of the province 85 per cent of the entire area of Ontario. We consider, therefore, that we are favourably situated in relation to the route which the highway should take.

Let me discuss the merits of the different routes under five heads: First, distance; second, cost; third, possibilities for settlement; fourth, tourist attraction, and fifth, political expediency.

So far as distance is concerned, the northern route is 250 miles shorter, going in the direction of Quebec city, passing Cochrane on the way to Winnipeg. As to cost, I have reliable information from official sources to prove that the cost which the route I advocate would entail, would be less than the others. The northern section of northern Ontario is partly a flat and rolling country, with well forested land and on which there can be found gravel and sand suitable for highway construction; and in from two to four years, at a flat rate of $20,000 per mile, the road could be constructed. This would include cuts, fills, bridges and so forth. It would not make as considerable a demand on the federal treasury as the other routes proposed.

As to the possibilities for settlement, anyone familiar with the situation on the north shore knows that settlement is absolutely impossible in that section of the country, while in the northern section of the province 80 per cent of the land, we know, is capable of settlement—and the settlements in the clay belt are a proof of that statement. As regards attractiveness to tourists, I believe the three routes I have discussed are on a par. The northern section is a paradise for tourists and even at the present time, without means of communication in some sections, we have thousands of visitors from the United States —I had almost said from every part of the world—who go into that part of the country and spend months in the summer and winter time hunting and fishing.

There is one more point to be considered. The statement was made by the chairman of the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario commission that steel will be laid to Moose Factory. Every schoolboy and schoolgirl in Canada and the United States, when looking at the map of the North American continent, sees this great inland waterway called the Hudson Bay, sometimes referred to as the Mediterranean of the North American continent. There is no doubt that every citizen, whether of the United States or Canada, has a desire to visit at least once in his life that wonderful inland sea. The Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway will soon have the steel extended as far as Moose Factory, on James bay, the most southerly point on the Hudson bay. The Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway is contemplating the building of a large hotel at Moose Factory in order to provide accommodation for the expected tourists, who in my opinion will be coming in by hundreds and thousands. The Hon. W. F. Finlayson, Minister of Lands and Forests of the Ontario government, has stated that within a very short period there will be constructed a highway from Cochrane to tidewater on James bay, and many people are going to make use of this highway to visit this north country in order to fish or hunt, and to enjoy its wonderful and invigorating climate during the summer and winter months.

To some people it may seem to be wrong to ask for a large expenditure of money for this purpose, but the same argument was used only a few years ago when it was suggested that the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario railway should be extended. The results obtained by that extension have been a revelation, not only to the province of Ontario but to the dominion as a whole. The northern section of the province has proved to be a treasure house for the whole of Canada. This is the opinion of Mr. Wharton Shaw, as expressed in an article which appeared in MacLean's Magazine of March 1, 1930.

I realize the position in which any government is put in trying to choose a route. If the southern route is adopted, the northern sections of the province of Ontario will be left without communication westward for at least twenty years to come. The northern is the shortest route, running west from Hearst along the Canadian National railway to Richam and I believe that the solution of that important and complicated problem will be found in my proposed resolution, which reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this house, all moneys voted for that purpose will be spent on a fifty-fifty basis, on the La Reine, Cochrane, Hearst, Nakina and Sioux Lookout section on the one hand and the Sault Ste. Marie, Fort William, Port Arthur and Kenora, on the other.

Because of the physical obstacles to be surmounted, it is almost impossible to consider the construction of the north shore route, but I believe two alternate routes should be constructed at the same time. The people of Canada are entitled to a solution of this problem in a manner which will satisfy every section of northern Ontario. The construction of this highway should be considered in the same manner as are similar projects in the United States. Their highways are built on a direct line and take into consideration the needs not only of the tourist but of the truck traffic.

We in the northern section of northern Ontario are ready to come to a sincere and reasonable compromise on this question. I believe the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) stated a few months ago that the Mississagi route would be a good compromise between the northern and southern sections of the province, that route to meet the Ferguson highway at Oba on the Canadian National railway, about 55 miles from the town of Hearst, and then continue in a southwesterly direction to Port Arthur and Fort William. I do not believe that that would be a fair compromise as the proposed route would not go far enough west to take in Nakina and that section of the country. The population there is not large at the present time but it will increase. We should join with the other section west of Long Lac so as to include Nakina.

Every hon. member should be interested in this problem because every section of the country is interested. This is not a regional question, it is one which affects the country as a whole because every person, and particularly the motorist will be interested in travel over this route. I believe it was stated in this house two or three years ago that the geographical division of Canada was a monstrous anomaly, but the people of Canada do not realize the wonderful heritage they have in northern Ontario. We used to think that that section of Canada was practically a barren country, but I repeat that it is really the treasure house of Canada in land, in mines, in water powers, in forests and all kinds of undeveloped resources. A statement was made by Hon. Charles McCrea, provincial Minister of Mines, speaking in Hamilton during the last election, that for every dollar invested in northern Ontario a return of $10 was received, and I agree absolutely with that statement.

I believe the construction of this highway would be a great step in the direction of bringing about solidarity within Canada. It may surprise some hon. members to know that to us in northern Ontario, Winnipeg, as far as news is concerned, seems as far away as is Russia. We are in touch with municipal activities in the cities of Toronto and Hamilton and other centres of population to the south of us, but we hear nothing of Winnipeg unless it is in connection with a strike or something of that kind. I do not desire to prophesy, but I cannot help predicting that within a very short time millions of prosperous contented people will be found in this section of the country. There are enormous undeveloped natural resources and the construction of this highway would provide one means of development. I do not make this appeal from a partisan point of view. This parliament stands before the tribunal of public opinion to see to it that we be given what was promised last July.

Another angle to this problem is the unemployment situation. Mayor Ralph Webb of the city of Winnipeg has stated that he has been bringing pressure to bear upon this parliament to bring about the construction of this trans-Canada highway in order to give employment to twenty-five to thirty thousand men for at least three or four years to come. Before this session is completed a sufficient sum of money should be voted to provide for the construction of this link between the east and the west. Such a course would bring about unity and a better understanding among all sections of this country, and greatly help in the solution of the unemployment situation which is getting more and more serious and certainly deserves the immediate attention of this house.

Mr. J. R. HURTUBISE (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, may I add a few words to those already said by the hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette). He has presented the case in a very able manner, not from a political but from a national point of view, and it is from that point of view I desire to discuss this question. During the last campaign this matter was one of the subjects of discussion, and I desire to refer to a statement made by a member of the Ontario government. Hon. W. F. Finlayson, the provincial Minister of Lands and Forests, is quoted in the Sudbury Star of July 12, 1930, as follows:

> The trans-Canada highway is a national, not a provincial undertaking, the minister declared, and should be carried out by the federal government.

That is what the Minister of Lands and Forests said. On Wednesday, July 16, 1930, the Sudbury Star reports a speech of the present Prime Minister, at Quebec, as follows:

> Hon. R. B. Bennett, speaking in Quebec, reiterates his adherence to the plan for building a national motor highway across Canada.
>
> The Conservative leader is bound to make many friends with this program. There are plenty of desirable national undertakings for Canada to carry out, but few of them are more important than the building of a modern, adequate, wide motor road from Halifax to Vancouver. In Ontario and Quebec, much of the existing highway could be used for this purpose. The big pull would be through northern Ontario and the west.
> The northland is greatly interested in the question of a through highway. This part of the province is developing fast, and to give it further impetus, it should be connected up with east and west, giving easy access to travellers, both Canadian and foreign. A trans-Canada road constructed through Sudbury and the region to the west would open up large possibilities, and the expenditure involved would in time be returned a hundred-fold.
> This highway must come, and it must come as a federal undertaking, perhaps with a certain amount of provincial and municipal assistance. The manner of its financing, however, is not nearly as important as the building of the road. It should have been started a year or more ago. Every moment that it is delayed Canada loses the undoubted benefits that would come from such a project.

After the Conservative papers saying at that time that the trans-Canada highway was such a necessity and had been so much delayed by the Liberals, it is surprising that they talk so little about it to-day, and apparently find it not so very useful. I am always quoting the Sudbury Star which is a Conservative paper in my home town. The Sudbury Star of August 6, 1930, said:

> The board of trade is preparing a fight to have the trans-Canada highway through Sudbury.

These are the words I want to emphasize.

> With the election of the Bennett government, pledged to call a special session of parliament to deal with unemployment, the probability of the trans-Canada road being started this year is considered likely.

I want to show that although agriculture and the butter question were discussed during the last election, the subject of a trans-Canada highway was the main issue in my constituency. I might quote the Sudbury Star of August 9, 1930, in a despatch from Cochrane, as follows:

> Mr. Wright (President of the Northern Ontario Associated Boards of Trade) writes from Englehart that "certain developments have taken place recently which must of necessity bring the matter again prominently to our attention, and he urges the local boards to prepare for the discussions which he expects on this question and which may lead to a direct presentation of the case for this part of Ontario to the federal authorities.
> Hon. W. A. Gordon, member for South Timiskaming, Minister of Immigration and Mines, has spoken frequently on the subject of the trans-Canada highway, which he claimed was an important issue from the point of view of the people of his riding.

I hope the Minister of Immigration has not changed his mind since then. Let me cite the opinion of the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson). The Sudbury Star of September 3, 1930, reports a letter written by the hon. member for East Algoma to Mr. Wright. I am not going to read the whole article, but this is the point which the hon. member for East Algoma brought out:

> Points to be considered. I advocate this route—

He was talking of the Mississagi route.

> —as against the route around the north shore of lake Superior, for the following reasons: In the construction of a trans-Canada highway four things should be kept definitely in mind:

1. The desirability of linking up the whole country in one unit from a transportation standpoint.
2. The most effective means of developing the country.
3. To provide a route that will make it possible and convenient for the tourist and trans-Canada traveller to visit the largest and most attractive area in the most convenient way.
4. The most economical way by which all of this can be accomplished. Almost any route that might be decided upon from east to west meets the first point raised.

Let me quote the Sudbury Star of September 17, 1930:

The benefits accruing to a municipality through having an aggressive board of trade have been aptly demonstrated in the vital question of the construction of the proposed trans-Canada highway, which has been agitating the northern Ontario centres during the last few weeks, and which is one of the most important problems affecting the vast stretch of country north of the Canadian Pacific Railway that has been in the public mind for a long time.

Without a board of trade, it is doubtful if any active steps would be officially taken in a matter of this kind. The project does not come within the province of a municipal council, although, if the latter were not over-occupied in purely civic problems, they might, in a measure, divert their attention to through roads.

He proceeds to explain the necessity of a trans-Canada highway. I rise on this occasion just to add a few words to what has already been said by the hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette). I want especially to emphasize that if we ask, regardless of partisan views, for the immediate construction of this trans-Canada highway, it is to relieve the unemployment situation which is so bad at the present time. In my constituency unemployment is becoming worse every week. I want to mention in particular the town of Sturgeon Falls, with a population of 4,000 which for twenty-five years has depended for its livelihood on the operations of the Spanish River pulp industry which is now the Abitibi Pulp and Paper Company. This company, however, closed its doors seven or eight months ago. Charitable contributions have reached their limit; the municipality can do no more; the provincial contributions have also reached their limit, and now it is the federal government's turn to step in and do something. Therefore I ask for the construction of this trans-Canada highway, mostly for the relief of the unemployment situation. I might congratulate the municipalities and the provincial government for having tried last fall to do something to relieve the unemployment situation. But what has been done for the relief of unemployment in the district of Sudbury, particularly around Mattawa and Sturgeon Falls has been altogether impractical, and the methods which have been adopted were far from being profitable for the country. Large pieces of road have been built in the middle of winter whereas in the spring the same work could have been done in one-tenth of the time with one-quarter of the money. It is my opinion that such work should have been begun early last spring, because at such time it could have been done much more advantageously.

I have a further reason for suggesting the immediate construction of the trans-Canada highway, because the expense involved would be well justified. To my mind such construction would constitute a good piece of business. Referring to the tourist trade in Canada the Ottawa Journal of May 22, 1931, contains the following report:

In 1930 almost five and a half million United States automobiles crossed into Canada, and both Ottawa and Washington estimate that in the neighbourhood of $400,000,000 was put into circulation in the dominion as a result.

Northern Ontario being a more undeveloped country, needs such a road for its further development, and at the same time that section of the country would receive its fair share of the tourist trade. Up to the present time many of the Canadian people have been under the impression that American tourists have come to Canada simply to quench their thirst. I think that is an erroneous view; the vast majority of tourists enter Canada to enjoy the beauties of our country. Undoubtedly a great many of them would be drawn to northern Ontario if the road now under discussion was built. Northern Ontario would share to a considerable extent in the $400,000,000 referred to in the Ottawa Journal.

I shall not add anything further about the necessity for the construction of the trans-Canada highway, but would strongly urge the government to consider the matter and to take action immediately. The construction of such a highway is a vast undertaking and before it could be undertaken engineers would have to survey the whole route, which undoubtedly would involve a work lasting some weeks and probably months. If the route is not now decided upon, construction work may not be initiated this year. I hope the government will take immediate steps to decide upon a route, have it surveyed and give work to thousands of men as was promised during the election campaign.

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): My hon. friend is undoubtedly aware that two or three routes have been suggested. Which of these routes would he favour?

Mr. HURTUBISE: The different routes have been outlined by the hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette). Naturally every one would like to see the road pass through his own home town. The hon. member for North Timiskaming urged that the road should pass through his district, and similarly I wish to have it pass through mine; but I have no hesitation in saying that hon. members on this side of the house are above politics in the matter and will leave the routing to the decision of the provincial and federal governments. We would accept their decision gladly and would like to see the work proceed immediately.

Mr. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): I would like to add to the remarks of the hon. members for North Timiskaming and Nipissing concerning the construction of a trans-Canada highway. Owing to the fact that the government has definitely promised to build a national highway I am disappointed that we have not heard some pronouncement concerning its construction. Undoubtedly during the last election campaign the present administration made definite promises with respect to the building of a highway through northern Ontario. The hon. member for Nippissing has referred to a statement made by the Minister of Lands and Forests for Ontario at a smoker held in the town of Sudbury during the last election campaign wherein he stated that the highway now under discussion was a federal obligation. The St. John Telegraph-Journal of July 1, 1930, contained the following statement made by the present Prime Minister at St. John, New Brunswick:

> We say that the federal government under our administration will build a great national highway in Canada.

No statement could be more definite than that.

The London Free Press of June 25, 1930, contains the following statement made by the Prime Minister at Cobourg on the preceding day:

> "A national highway for Canadians. A highway in Canada, not through some other country. A highway in which you can leave Cape Breton and arrive in Vancouver without going into any foreign land." Mr. Bennett declared that the undertaking must be accomplished by the hands of the federal government.

To my mind that statement regarding the building of a national highway is quite definite.

The Ottawa Morning Citizen, in an issue the date of which I have not been able to ascertain, published the following extract from a speech delivered by the present Prime Minister at Ormstown:

> A national highway was required for agriculture, to connect the east with the west; to this national highway his party was pledged.

I could refer to many other quotations of a similar character, but I do not think I should burden hon. members. Undoubtedly they are fully seized of the fact that the Conservative party, the Prime Minister in particular, placed themselves definitely on record during the last election campaign to the effect that a national highway would be built at the instance of the federal government. I think a definite pronouncement should be made to ease the anxiety of the people of northern Ontario as to whether or not the federal government is going to build or assist the provinces in building a national highway. An announcement to that effect has not been made by the present administration.

I spoke on this matter at some length in the course of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and I do not propose at this time to repeat what I then said. But I think it is well that we should ask the government to make some definite announcement which would at least put an end to the anxiety of the people and also stop the political manoeuvering of a few persons in northern Ontario who have delayed the building of the highway for so many years. I think probably a brief history of the highway might be useful in order to enlighten some members of the house who may be interested in it.

My official connection with it commenced in the town of Dryden in 1919 when I became a member of the Ontario legislature. At that time delegates from every town and hamlet between Winnipeg to away east of the head of the lakes met and formed an organization known as the Central Canada Colonization and Highway Association. The president of the association was, and is to-day, a leading Conservative in northern Ontario. In fact he was the defeated candidate in the provincial election of 1919. If I took the time of the house to read the names of the officers of the association, hon. members would realize that most of them are leading Conservatives in that section of the country. So this was not a political organization in any sense. The executive met, formulated a memorial and presented it to the Ontario government in March, 1920. A couple of paragraphs will indicate what the association had in mind at that particular time. After declaring that Ontario should construct the highway piece by piece the memorial proceeds:

> The Manitoba government is prepared to complete its portion of the road just as soon as the Ontario government defines the meeting place, and the Manitoba engineers are waiting to do the work in conjunction with your engineers. The necessity of this point being defined is important, and if this has not already been done, we trust that you will immediately take steps to have it completed.

It will be observed that members of the association had already met the Manitoba government and had received an assurance from them that they were prepared to do their part of the work. The memorial proceeds by resolution:

> That this executive is of the opinion that the Ontario government should map out its road building program so that the Winnipeg to head of the lakes highway be completed within five years, and that, during 1920 the road from Kenora to the Manitoba boundary should be completed, also 42 miles of road from the head of the lakes be provided by the building of 3½ miles of new road and the gravelling of 16 miles.

The memorial further says:

> We, therefore, ask that during the year 1920 the provincial government in Ontario complete the work as outlined in resolution No. 1 hereinbefore.

That was the attitude of the people in the portion of the territory in which I reside. Mr. Pitt of Dryden, as president, presented that memorial to the Ontario government in March 1920. Work was started and got fairly under way, and, as requested, there was a survey made from Kenora to the Manitoba boundary, the right of way was cut and grubbed and some grading done. In 1923, as we well know, there was a change of government in Ontario, and thereupon the work, for some reason or other was practically shut down. We urged on the new government of Ontario the desirability of carrying on the work that had been started in 1921, and we find the Hon. James Lyons, stating at the head of the lakes, as reported in the Fort William Times-Journal of May 30, 1924:

> Completed in three years. The policy of the government is to open up northern Ontario roads as speedily as possible. The highway through to the Manitoba boundary will be a direct line from Fort William north of Rainy River and Fort Frances and will be completed within three years. The road eastward towards the Soo will be undertaken at once, and will be completed within the next seven years, it is hoped. Not only will engineers be on the route, but work will be commenced within a few days.

I have read sufficient to show that a very definite pledge was made to proceed with the construction. Notwithstanding that pledge nothing was done, and as a matter of fact the road is still uncompleted. At that time we had other highways under consideration, and surveyors were blazing a trail across from the Canadian Pacific Railway to the town of Sioux Lookout, but that work, too, was suspended. In answer to a letter of mine the Hon. James W. Lyons, then, Minister of Lands and Forests, wrote me under date of March 4, 1924:

> Your letter of March 3rd, with petition regarding the Canadian Pacific Railway Sioux Lookout road received, and have to advise that this matter will be given consideration along with the other real needs of the north, but it will probably be the first to the middle of April before any decision is made in the matter.

That is a road that connects up with the main highway we are now discussing. Every conceivable excuse was made by the Ontario government for not proceeding with the highway. At one time they stated that the Manitoba government had not put itself on record as willing to meet the Ontario government at any particular point; but I myself accompanied a delegation to Winnipeg along with the president of the association that I have referred to and, Colonel Schnarr, president of the board of trade of Kenora, and others and in conjunction with members of the Manitoba legislature we secured a definite promise from their government to meet the Ontario government at mile post 24. In addition, before the Bracken government came into power we had Mr. McPherson put his government on record in the matter in a letter to the mayor of Keewatin, and no doubt this will be of interest to some hon. members. This letter is from the office of the Minister of Public Works, Winnipeg, under date of August 10, 1921, addressed to N. J. Hansen, mayor of Keewatin, Ontario.

> Re: Ontario-Manitoba Highway
> Dear Sir:
>
> I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication dated August 8th inquiring as to the location of the connecting proposed route of the Manitoba-Ontario highway at the Ontario border.
> I have had this matter under consideration for some time, and after due consideration and consultation with our reclamation branch it is agreed that the vicinity of mile post 24, or in other words at or about mile post 24, will be satisfactory from the standpoint of this province.

I trust that this will meet the requirements of the situation at the present time, and as I understand the Ontario Minister of Lands, Hon. Mr. Bowman, is to visit your district very shortly, this will be in the nature of an assurance as to the location of the proposed road.

I am in receipt of correspondence from Mr. Wydeman, of the Kenora Examiner and Mr. Cornish of the Canada Colonization and Highway Association, and copies of this letter are being forwarded to each of these gentlemen.

Yours faithfully,

C. D. McPherson,
Minister of Public Works.

So there was no doubt in our minds that there was a definite arrangement between the two governments to meet at mile post 24. Indeed, in 1926, one of the Conservative candidates for the provincial house, Mr. J. P. Earngey, issued a statement to the electors in which he said:

If elected, I propose to join forces with the members for Rainy River, Fort William and Port Arthur for the rapid completion of the portion of the trans-Canada highway from Fort William west; and for the construction at once of the highway to Fort Frances to tap at that point the great tourist traffic from the United States which is waiting to flow this way.

So the government candidate had no thought whatever that this highway would be built only on condition that the federal government contributed anything to it. As a matter of fact, until the approach of the last federal election there never was a suggestion from any point that the federal government should contribute one red cent to the cost of the construction of that highway through that portion of the country. Mayor Webb of Winnipeg, a very pronounced Conservative, took issue with a Liberal during the campaign of 1926, and in a letter to the Fort Frances Times under date of August 26, 1926, he said:

We must all work together and the man or women or any political party or any organization that in any way, shape or form, tries to create or breed friction, deserve to be shown by the people at large that they will have nothing to do with them whatsoever.

Neither of the parties at Ottawa have anything to do with the local problem of a highway between Winnipeg and Kenora, or in the great development of this wonderful area.

So here we have a very pronounced Conservative taking a Liberal to task because he suggested a federal contribution. Of course it is true that Mayor Webb changed his views during the last election and joined with a good many others in misrepresenting the position of the Liberals, and particularly my own position, in connection with the trans-Canada highway.

A few moments ago I quoted Mr. Lyons, who was Minister of Lands and Forests in 1924. As hon. members will recall, Mr. Lyons resigned and was succeeded by Mr. Finlayson. In the Kenora Examiner of September 16, 1927, we have this statement by Mr. Finlayson:

The government propose, after the completion of the Ferguson highway, this year, to devote more money and attention to the roads in the northwestern part of the province. The development from Port Arthur and Fort William to the Manitoba boundary requires attention, and during the next year or two the roads in this section of the province call for very considerable improvement.

Then we have ex-Mayor Toole, of Kenora, another very pronounced Conservative—and in passing I might say one of the most decent Conservatives in northern Ontario—speaking at a banquet in honour of Mr. Finlayson at Kenora. Mr. Toole was selected to present to Mr. Finlayson the views of the people in that part of the country with respect to many matters. In connection with the highway, I find the following comment, in the Kenora Examiner of August 26, 1927:

Why can we not have a road to Dryden? Why should we not be connected up with that part of our own district? Only about forty-five miles of construction are needed to link us up to that thriving agricultural section who need the road as much as we. Dryden and Kenora, two good towns, and many smaller communities cut off from each other. Hon. James Lyons, on a visit some years ago, promised it; yet the road is not built.

You have said that a road from the south would bring in foreign wealth, not only tourists but some ready to invest as well. Much of the country around Toronto itself was built up by visitors who were quick to see an opportunity. Money expended on highways here will bring enough tourists to give returns that not only pay for maintenance but construction as well.

The automobile has revolutionized everything in the last few years. We hear of roads being built all around us, but so far only twenty-two miles has been built for Kenora. We in this district are loyal to Ontario, but to-day unfortunately there is much dissatisfaction against the government for the lack of progress in this section.

Those are the words of one of the leading Conservatives of that section of the country. Anyone who knows Mr. Toole will agree that he is one of the most far-seeing gentlemen in northern Ontario, and a man who is always boosting his district. Then we had the president of the Central Canada Highways Association, Mr. Alfred Pitt, who was invited to address the Kenora Rotary Club. He is reported in the Kenora Examiner of November 30, 1928, as follows:

Well, we spent a good deal of time and money, and finally Mr. Lyons started what now is the road to within twelve miles of the Manitoba boundary.

Of course, he is wrong in that statement; that road was started before Mr. Lyons was Minister of Lands and Forests.

And so soon are things forgotten, I have heard it claimed that Ontario and Manitoba had not agreed upon a meeting place. This is not so. The surveyors of the two provinces did not meet with the precision of the Simplon tunnel, but came within measurable distance of each other. There need be no difficulty here. The point is settled, although some newspapers, not going editorially deep enough into the facts, seem to forget that.

So that we have Mr. Pitt almost despairing of the possibility of getting this highway, and taking some of the editorial writers in that part of the country to task. I am sure I do not need to mention who they are. One particular gentleman who was a candidate—in fact, he was the legislative representative in Ontario—never writes an editorial on the highway, lately at least, without misrepresenting the whole situation. And that, I may say, is one of the reasons why to-day he is not a member of the Ontario legislature for that riding.

I shall read presently an extract from the Dryden Observer of July 17, 1930. Apparently the whole aspect of this matter has changed. Every speaker in the Conservative ranks taking part in the election campaign in northern Ontario—this was particularly the case in my own riding—endeavoured to misrepresent my position. I have the records of their statements. The whole aspect of the situation, I say, has changed. In the campaign it was no longer a provincial undertaking. Even some of the gentlemen whom I have quoted, who had stated that it was a provincial undertaking with which the federal government had nothing to do, whether that government was Liberal or Conservative, took a different attitude in 1930, declaring then that it was a dominion undertaking. These gentlemen changed their opinion, saying that it was a federal obligation and that the highway would never be constructed until there was a change of government at Ottawa. Let me quote from a writer in the Dryden Observer of July 17, 1930:

Premier Howard G. Ferguson, in his effort to make political capital in the present compaign, tells us he is ready to go fifty-fifty with the federal government in the cost of construction of the highway in this riding, and he and his henchmen, among them Hon. Wm. Finlayson, who was here recently, attack the King administration for not accepting this offer and permitting the work to proceed, thereby affording employment. Manitoba, the prairie provinces and British Columbia each went ahead with their sections and completed them without delay. But Premier Ferguson holds out for fifty-fifty split.

[Mr. Heenan.]

I placed on the order paper a motion which was carried by the house, asking for the correspondence between the government of Ontario and any member of the federal government; and while there were returns from every department of the federal government, there was not one syllable, not one line of communication as between the two governments indicating any request for assistance or for a fifty-fifty split.

The election was fought in our part of the country chiefly on the highways. The Conservatives gained two seats in that part of the country mainly on the promise of that highway, and I am glad now to be in a position to supplement what was said by the hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette), and the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Hurtubise). With those hon. gentlemen, I would ask the government to implement their promise and to do so immediately. It is a shame to think that in a beautiful country such as we have in northern Ontario we should be denied a highway to enable the people to communicate with the rest of the world. Moreover, there are people outside looking for scenic beauty, a lovely country such as we have there, with delightful lakes, forests, fishing and game of all kinds. These people are anxious to spend some of their money there and they cannot because of the political manoeuvering of about six gentlemen or so up in my part of the country. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, in view of the definite pledge made by the Conservatives in my riding during the campaign, and the different promises, as I have outlined them, made by the present Prime Minister, that the government should make some pronouncement as to whether or not they intend to carry out these promises. They should let us know whether they are going to proceed with the construction of that highway as they pledged themselves to do or whether they have changed their minds and intend to make a contribution to the provinces by way of assistance. Whatever course they follow, whether by contribution to the provinces or by undertaking the whole thing themselves, they will have my support.

As regards the route from the head of the lakes to the Manitoba boundary, the question is settled as to the route. The people themselves have agreed upon the route and have so represented to the Ontario government. Whether they sent copies to this government, I do not know. But the present federal government ought not now to seek further excuses on the ground that there are representations from different parts of the country with regard to the question of route. No matter what representations are made, the government is responsible to the people for the route they should take, and I would suggest that they shoulder that responsibility and establish the route. I am satisfied that if they did so the people in northern Ontario would get behind them and accept whatever route they selected.

While speaking of routes, there is no doubt in my mind that before many years there will be demands for more highways than one in northern Ontario. I am satisfied that if the route should go north the people in the other section of the country will feel that there should be another route; similarly, if the highway is built in the south there will be required before long a northern route. We have two or three routes from the city of Toronto to Hamilton. All through old Ontario you can choose various routes wherever you want to go, and these highways have been built in large part out of the revenues provided by new Ontario. The revenues from mining, fishing, game, forests and water-powers have all contributed to the building of these highways through old Ontario, and I was very much surprised during the last provincial by-election to read that Mr. McCrea, a gentleman who I am sure knows what he is talking about, made the statement that, at this very moment, for every dollar the Ontario government places in northern Ontario it get back ten dollars. If that is true —I do not happen to have his speech here, but I can get it—that is all the more reason why more consideration should be given to the north than it is receiving at the present time. And even if it is not true, the province of Ontario and this government, now that it is under obligation to carry out its promise in this regard, should give greater assistance to that sparsely settled country in accordance with their pledges.

Mr. D. J. COWAN (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay): I wish to intervene in this debate for a few moments inasmuch as the route of the trans-Canada highway would of necessity pass through the district I have the honour to represent. The members of the government, particulary those from northern Ontario, in the past have been in favour of the construction of a trans-Canada highway and at all times have endeavoured to promote the possibility of having that route constructed as early as possible. I do not think there is any argument as to the advisability of the construction and the early commencement of it. Confederation became possible because of the construction of a trans-Canada railway, and in the world of transportation the motor has become a very important item. It would seem to me that the unity of Canada would be promoted if a motor road were constructed across this country, and particularly is that true of northern Ontario.

I do not propose to discuss this issue at great length, except to say that in the communities of northern Ontario we have not a municipal organization. There are no township or county organizations which would contribute towards the cost of this highway, it must be borne either by the provincial or by the federal governments, or by both. It is a matter which can be discussed properly in this parliament; it is a national matter, and for that reason I say that the government now in power should give it its earnest consideration.

Knowing the attitude which this government and the members of the cabinet have taken in the past, I have no hesitation in saying that this is one policy which should be carried out very shortly.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 62, for the relief of Gordon Aaron. —Mr. Heaps.

Bill No. 63, for the relief of Rita Margaret Mary Longmore.—Mr. Heaps.

Bill No. 75, for the relief of Barbara Wallace Barlow.—Mr. Factor.

Bill No. 76 for the relief of Ray Finkelstein.—Mr. Factor.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg) (for Mr. Woodsworth) moved the second reading of Bill No. 44, to amend the Immigration Act.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the hon. member explain? The sponsor of the bill is not present.

Mr. HEAPS: In the absence of the sponsor of the bill, I might say a word or two in explanation. The purpose of the bill is to prevent the government from deporting people who have resided in this country for more than ten years. As regards the purpose of the measure, I think it will have the general support and sympathy of members in all parts of the house. Although I am moving the second reading of the bill, there are one or two aspects of it to which I wish to refer. There is no doubt that the motive behind it is of the very highest, but if the bill passes in its present form, there will be one or two anomalies.

A person having come to this country say from a certain part of Europe, and resided here for a period of five years becomes a naturalized citizen, and is then entitled to the full rights of citizenship and cannot be deported even though the government may desire to deport him. Under this bill a person born in Great Britain and coming to Canada, and who on account of his British citizenship would not have to become a naturalized citizen of the dominion, could be deported, whereas one who comes from the continent of Europe and resides here for five years cannot be deported. Consequently, if the bill passes as it is worded, certain anomalies might be created which would not be in the best interests of Canada.

My own view, however, on this question is that the whole matter is one almost entirely of administration. Persons who have resided in this country for a given number of years ought not to be deported, as has happened quite frequently during the past few months. I think the reason which motivated the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in introducing this measure, is the fact that during the past few months certain persons, most of whom had been born in Great Britain and had resided here for quite a number of years—in some cases as long as eighteen or twenty, if my memory serves me aright—and to whom quite a large number of children were born in this country, have been deported. In one case the mother of a family was torn away from her children and deported to the old country. That class of deportation does not do Canada any good. We have in this country sufficient of the milk of human kindness to allow people to remain here when they become sick and infirm after they have probably given of their best to Canada. I do not think any government, federal or provincial, can offer as an excuse for deportation the fact that having resided within the dominion for a number of years and and raised families, the persons concerned have unfortunately become sick. I have seen persons who have come to Canada, who have had the misfortune to contract certain diseases and who at very short notice have been deported. We ought at least in some cases to be very careful before we order deportations. I know it is extremely difficult for the government to refuse to act when they have been requested to do so by the provincial authority, but on the other hand the federal government has certain responsibilities and I think a statement ought to be made by the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) that in the case of proposed deportations, nothing should be done where people have resided in this country for a period longer than five years. A ten-year residence is too long a period because, as I pointed out before, a person who comes here from the continent of Europe can become a naturalized citizen after five years, and then that person is not deportable. I believe those who come here from Great Britain ought not to be in a less favoured position than those who come from other parts of the continent of Europe. Consequently, while I am in favour of the principle underlying the bill as introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I think if we had a declaration of policy on the part of the government, it might carry out this purpose for which this bill has been introduced.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): While I am in sympathy with the general purpose of the bill, there are certainly some drawbacks to its passing in its present form. From time to time we see in the paper a report indicating that the "brutal government" or the "brutal Immigration department," as it is described, have deported a number of people. We always see, in big letters, so to speak, the deportee's side of the case. He has been deported; he is not particularly pleased with the country that is throwing him out, and he is not especially scrupulous in regard to the statements he makes. On the other hand, the government, for reason, does not rush into print and publish the department's side of the case. It is only from a spirit of humanity that they do not wish to inflict this greater publicity upon people who certainly are always deported for some cause. The consequence is that public sentiment is aroused in many cases in favour of the deportee, whereas if the truth were known, there would be no sympathy whatever. I had a number of these cases explained to me a few weeks ago, and the reasons given were certainly such as fully to justify deportation in every case. In nearly every instance the original trouble with these men or women who are deported is that they obtained entrance into this country by deliberate misrepresentations accompanied on many occasions by false affidavits. I heard of a case where an epileptic child three years old was brought into the country. No reasonable doctor who would make a hurried examination when the child was taken off the ship could detect that the child was subject to epileptic fits. As a matter of fact when the examination was made it may have been asleep. The child was said to be only eleven months old, as was borne out by its general appearance, and gained entry into the country under false pretences. After the child had been allowed in the discovery was made that it was subject to epileptic fits which as time went on became of a more serious character. Some years later the child was deported. In such a case is there any reason why this country should be saddled with the maintenance for life of such an individual who deliberately broke into this country or got in by fraudulent representations made on its behalf?

Then there are cases where a man does not accidentally come under the provisions of deportation, but deliberately, fraudulently and with full knowledge of the law lies himself into the country. I have nothing to say against the second clause of the bill, which provides that no immigrant with a previous residence here of ten years shall be refused reentry into Canada by reason of his absence from the country. There are a large number of criminals in Europe, sometimes conditions get too hot for them; they have to come over here and they secure entry by false pretences. Although they may have broken the law they may manage to keep clear of it for a period of ten years, and if they escape that long we cannot do anything with them. Obviously we do not want to encourage that class of people to come to Canada.

The first section of the bill applies not to aliens only, but to "an immigrant." If such immigrant becomes naturalized he cannot be deported. Therefore it should apply only to aliens, although the wording is "immigrant" and that might be held to apply to someone other than an alien. As an illustration I would point out the practice of the insurance companies. An insurance company insures a man's life for a long period of years. On the application for insurance the insured makes certain statements. The policy does not state that if he is not caught making a false statement in one, two, five or ten years he will be cleared of responsibility. The man dies when he is ninety years old and if it is found that he made a deliberate, material and wilful misstatement in his application his insurance policy is liable to become void. If insurance companies are as particular as that we might do well to follow a similar practice in relation to immigrants.

Then there is the question of orientals coming into Canada. Some years ago we passed an act prohibiting the immigration of Chinese labourers. A registration system was put in force whereby within a certain time every Chinaman in the country had to be registered. It was discovered that many of them had come in illegally. When an attempt was made to check up and to register their names, where they had come from and on what boat they had come to Canada, it was discovered that a number had come in illegally by faking passports and by other false means. The ages appearing on some of the passports were obviously incorrect. While the situation was remedied at the time in regard to Chinese, it was not improved regarding Japanese. When Japanese go back to their own country on a visit they have to obtain a passport or certificate from this country before leaving. When they apply for a certificate their record of entry is investigated, the time they came and how they came, and if it is found they obtained entrance illegally, even although they are British subjects, they can go away if they like but cannot return. Surely that is a desirable arrangement, because undoubtedly there has been a good deal of abuse of what was known as the gentleman's agreement in connection with Japanese.

To my mind the general spirit of the proposed bill sponsored by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is one with which all members must be in sympathy, but before the bill is passed in its entirety it ought to be sent to a committee for further investigation.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): This bill constitutes a very radical departure from the immigration laws which have been on the statute books of this country for a great many years. As the language indicates, the bill contemplates that mere residence in Canada renders the person incapable of deportation. I have sympathy with the views expressed by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) in the matter. I sympathize with those who happen to be in trouble or suffering affliction, and it is unfortunate that under the provisions of our law we find it necessary on occasions to cause the deportation of offenders to their countries of origin. I have a great deal more sympathy however for those who were born in Canada or came here legally and have a legal right to remain, and it is for their protection that the law stands in its present form. It may be said that at times the administration of the act is unduly harsh. From time to time cases have been discussed in the public press in connection with which it is alleged mistakes have been made. I am not by any means prepared to admit that mistakes have occurred,—if the records were searched the facts might be found to indicate the contrary—but if mistakes have occurred in connection with the deportation of people who have no right by law to remain in Canada the number of such cases is negligible having regard to the total number of cases so dealt with by the administrative officers of the department. The present bill if passed would render almost ineffective the provisions of section 3 of the Immigration Act. In order that the meaning of the section may be impressed upon the minds of hon. members I shall take the liberty of reading it. Dealing with prohibited classes the section reads:

No immigrant, passenger or other person, unless he is a Canadian citizen, or has Canadian domicile, shall be permitted—

At this point may I interject that my hon. friend from North Winnipeg made a mistake, no doubt unintentionally. He is wrong when he says that a British subject legally entered into Canada can be deported after residence in this country of five years. That is not correct. He is just as free from deportation as is anybody else.

Mr. HEAPS: No, I said a person entering this country who became naturalized after five years.

Mr. GORDON: They cannot be deported unless they have contravened some provision of the Narcotic Drug Act.

Mr. HEAPS: After a citizen of Europe has been here for five years and become naturalized, is he still subject to deportation?

Mr. GORDON: Only if he contravenes the provisions of the Narcotic Drug Act, as far as my recollection serves me at the moment.

Mr. HEAPS: But in no other event can he be deported?

Mr. GORDON: I do not think so.

Mr. HEAPS: Then there is discrimination between such naturalized aliens and the British born.

Mr. GORDON: Not at all. If a British born person legally enters Canada and resides here for five years and acquires Canadian domicile, he is just as free from deportation as the Canadian-born. This section continues:

—or has Canadian domicile, shall be permitted to enter or land in Canada, or in case of having landed in or entered Canada shall be permitted to remain therein, who belongs to any of the following classes, hereinafter called "prohibited classes"—

[Mr. Gordon.]

Now, this bill if passed in its present or in any other form having the same effect would destroy the purpose of the section that I am now quoting after the immigrant has resided in Canada for a continuous period of ten years. These are the prohibited classes:

(a) Idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane at any time previously;

That is, previously to their entry.

(b) Persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with any loathsome disease, or with a disease which is contagious or infectious, or which may become dangerous to the public health, whether such persons intend to settle in Canada or only to pass through Canada in transit to some other country: Provided that if such disease is one which is curable within a reasonably short time, such persons may, subject to the regulations in that behalf, if any, be permitted to remain on board ship if hospital facilities do not exist on shore, or to leave ship for medical treatment;

(c) Immigrants who are dumb, blind, or otherwise physically defective, unless in the opinion of a board of inquiry or officer acting as such they have sufficient money, or have such profession, occupation, trade, employment or other legitimate mode of earning a living that they are not liable to become a public charge or unless they belong to a family accompanying them or already in Canada and which gives security satisfactory to the minister against such immigrants becoming a public charge;

(d) Persons who have been convicted of, or admit having committed, any crime involving moral turpitude;

(e) Prostitutes and women and girls coming to Canada for any immoral purpose and pimps or persons living on the avails of prostitution.

(f) Persons who procure or attempt to bring into Canada prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or other immoral purpose;

(g) Professional beggars or vagrants;

(h) Immigrants to whom money has been given or loaned by any charitable organization for the purpose of enabling them to qualify for landing in Canada under this act, or whose passage to Canada has been paid wholly or in part by any charitable organization, or out of public moneys, unless it is shown that the authority in writing of the deputy minister, or in case of persons coming from Europe, the authority in writing of the assistant Superintendent of Immigration for Canada, in London, has been obtained for the landing in Canada of such persons, and that such authority has been acted upon within a period of sixty days thereafter;

Then the section specifies other persons who are prohibited immigrants, and whose entry into Canada cannot be permitted by the exercise of any discretionary power by the minister or by council because of the statutory prohibition. Now, the effect of this bill from one angle is simply that people of these prohibited classes who enter Canada and whose condition, physically or mentally, or whose past record is unknown to the immigration authorities, and continue to live here for ten years, cannot be deported to their country of origin. I do trust, and I feel, that this house will deal with all matters of immigration from a dispassionate, non-political standpoint; for I am afraid that probably in the past—and I am not charging any one political party or any one government—I am afraid that in the past there has been a tendency at times to forget the supreme importance of seeing that the population of this country is kept clean. That is the business of government. I may be charged with being too harsh in the enforcement of the law, but if we divest ourselves of the right to deport those who introduce themselves into Canada against our immigration law, then we have taken a step which, I am sure, we shall deeply regret.

Now, the first paragraph of the proposed amendment provides that immigrants who have completed ten years continuous residence in Canada shall not thereafter be liable to deportation. If this becomes law it would be impossible to deport the most undesirable aliens who succeeded in entering Canada illegally, provided they did not come under the notice of this department until after ten years continuous residence. For instance, a criminal who entered illegally and after five years residence was convicted of a serious crime involving a sentence of over five years, could not be deported if the proposed amendment becomes law, because part of his residence in Canada would be spent in a penitentiary. It may be that the sponsor of the bill did not foresee what might follow the adoption of this subsection, but it is obvious that that would be its effect. Under the act as it now stands such a person cannot acquire domicile irrespective of the period of residence in Canada, and therefore would be subject to deportation.

I believe that a further effect of this proposed amendment would be that aliens convicted of infractions of the Narcotic Drug Act could not be deported. Anyone who has had experience in dealing with cases under that act know very well with what facility addicts can hide their real condition, and they will succeed in doing so for years until the drug has made such inroads on them mentally and physically that their failing becomes apparent. From that angle again I submit that this bill should not pass in its present form, or in any other form which would take away from those charged with the administration of the law the right to deport people of that character. A large number of people who have been resident in Canada over ten years are deported from time to time to their country of origin by reason of their contravention of the provisions of the Narcotic Drug Act. The adoption of this bill would divest us of the right to take such action. In a word, the proposed amendment wipes out one of the most important protective features of the act. Any addict who procured entry into Canada, and remained here for the time contemplated by the bill, could continue here and we would have no recourse.

I do not want to labour this point just now, I hope to take it up later in the session, but it is important that we should retain this right of deportation. No one likes the work of deporting people because they are mentally defective or for some other reason less than I do. It is not a pleasant task, as I am sure those who have preceded me in the administration of this department will readily admit.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Hear, hear.

Mr. GORDON: My hon. friend says, "hear, hear"; at least I can expect a good deal of sympathy from him. When we in this parliament exercise the right, which is vested in us under the British North America Act, of encouraging new people to come to Canada, we undertake a considerable responsibility. Let me make myself abundantly clear; we have attracted to this country splendid people of all races, people who will be an honour to Canada, and who to-day are an honour to this country. At the same time, however, I am afraid we have within our bondaries many people who, under a system of careful selection and a proper immigration policy, never would have been permitted to enter Canada.

When migrants become mental cases in Canada, who has to take care of them? The federal government does not take care of them; their care falls upon the municipalities and the provinces. The provinces have expended millions upon millions of dollars for the care of these people. The province of Ontario, with which I am most familiar, has invested some $38,000,000 of capital and expenditure in institutions to take care of the sick and afflicted. A great burden is cast upon the people of that province by reason of the mental cases that have been induced to come to Canada by the federal government. Therefore I say when we come to consider an amendment which will have the effect of divesting us of our right to return to the country of origin those prohibited cases who come to Canada, we must consider adopting a course that may easily result in casting a further burden upon the provinces and municipalities which have nothing to do with attracting those very people to Canada.

I do not think this parliament should take any such step. During the course of the administration of the act, and particularly at such times of depression as these, which tend to bring out in bold relief matters that in more normal times would be dealt with and passed by as commonplace, it is very necessary to have no maudlin complex. Our great neighbour to the south has many thousands of cases with which the Department of Immigration is dealing every day, who, if we let down the bars, would be sent to Canada where they have no right to come. At times there are occasional cases which get into the press. I should like to say to those who represent the press here that while at times they have been just a little bit caustic with respect to the course I have had to adopt in certain cases, yet in the main I compliment them upon the way they have treated the department with respect to the administration of this most difficult statute.

My hon. friend from North Winnipeg has referred to some cases in which a hardship would appear to have been occasioned. I cannot call to mind at the moment any such case which has not been reviewed, not hastily by an officer at the border, but by a board of inquiry, where evidence has been taken under oath, and frequently an appeal has been referred to myself. I have under my hand cases which have been reported in the press, and I must say that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is quite right when he suggests that for reasons of humanity the department has been reluctant to publish the names of the relatives of the persons concerned, or the details of these matters. It would only add to the misery of those who have suffered enough by reason of having to lose one of their family. There are very few cases where the relatives are not entirely satisfied that the deportee be returned to the country of origin, and that happens daily. It does not happen in Canada in the same percentage by any means as it happens in the United States of America.

It is not my purpose to discuss immigration matters at length at this moment, though I could continue for some time. However, I would ask the sponsor of this bill to review very carefully the effect the adoption of the bill would have, and to study and weigh very carefully the extent to which it takes away from the administrative officers of the Department of Immigration the power to deal with cases which may arise from time to time. The question is whether we should divest those who are administering the laws of this country of the power to get rid of dangerous undesirables, no matter how long they have lived in Canada.

Mr. NEILL: Will the minister allow a question before he finishes? Would he mind saying a few words with regard to subsection 2, which seems to have some merit, and which seems more free from the objections he has taken to the principle of the bill?

Mr. GORDON: I thought I had conveyed the idea I had in mind without dealing separately with the two subsections. Subsection 2 provides that no immigrant who has resided in Canada for a continuous period of ten years, and who leaves voluntarily to reside elsewhere on the continent of North America, shall be refused reentry by reason of such absence. In my view this suggested amendment has little effect, if any, on the Immigration Act as it now stands. Absence from Canada does not create any disability on the part of a person desiring to return. It merely places the person back in the position he occupied when he applied for admission originally.

Mr. NEILL: But possibly the law may have been changed since he left.

Mr. GORDON: That may be so, and with all respect, I think that is as it should be. If we were to adopt a law which would make our country, with all its advantages, available at all times to all persons during good times; which would let them drift into another country when perhaps we would do well to have everyone of courage remain here, and encourage them to drift back when things have returned to normal, I think that would not be a desirable provision in any law of this country.

I do not know that I can add more to what I have said. Any general discussion of immigration I should prefer to postpone until some time later in the session.

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): With a good deal of what my hon. friend the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) has said, I am in agreement. I think it would be a dangerous thing on the part of parliament to agree to the passing of this bill in its present form. The minister enumerated the prohibited classes who would get relief were this bill to become law. I do not think there is any member of this house who wants that class of person in this country. We do not want people who are in the habit of taking narcotics; we do not want people who live on the proceeds of prostitution, and so forth. We want to keep this country clean. If there is anything of that kind going on, we have, I suppose, to maintain laws for the purpose of seeing that it shall be restricted to our own naturalised or native-born Canadians. We should not in this respect have free trade with the rest of the world.

There are, however, a number of cases in which, in my opinion, the Immigration department should not enforce such harsh rules as they are doing at the present time. I have customs cases in mind. For instance, a man will be arrested for having contravened the Customs Act; he is sent to gaol and immediately upon his release he is ordered deported. Well, under our system of civilization as at present constituted, we do not look upon customs offenders as criminals of the most hardened type. Nelson's rule applies today as well as at the time of the battle of Trafalgar: "England expects every man to do the duty". And when you get people who are not accustomed to our laws, people who are not brought up to them in the way we have been, a little lapse from "duty" sometimes ought to be overlooked by the department in its Christian charity. I have in mind a case of that kind where a man, after serving a short time in prison, was released. In fact, he was considered to be an offender in whose favour there was something to be said, and he was released before the time fixed by the court. Upon his release he was forthwith sent back to Czechoslovakia or Austria, the country of his birth. I do not think that man did any worse than many Canadian citizens have done. I do not say we ought to indulge in the habit of "doing" the customs, but there are numbers of people, respectable members of society, who do; and yet they are not looked upon as criminals.

With regard to insane cases, I am against any law which would permit our already overcrowded asylums to receive more people. We have a sufficient number of insane, of imbeciles and idiots and others of that kind in this country for the necessities of our population, and if we have not, we can grow them here. But to hold out the hand of fellowship to an insane person is going a little too far, and I am strongly against letting down the bars in cases of that sort. I know that in many cases insane people have been permitted to come here—cases in which it would be a great hardship to deport them afterwards, the entire family may be already resident in this country when one of them develops insanity. It would be a very harsh thing to deport that person, probably a child of tender years, necessitating the return of the mother with it. It would break up the family. In cases of that kind where representations are made to the department and a bond is given that the person concerned will not become a public charge and that the cost of maintenance of that insane person will be met by the family, they are allowed to place the patient in an asylum and nothing more is heard of the matter. In that connection I may say that the Jewish Immigration Aid Society, the Federation of Jewish Charities of Montreal, Toronto and other cities, invariably, when cases of that kind occur, give the necessary bond to the department, and when that is done the department is prepared to see that the family shall not be broken up in the way I have indicated. I know of dozens of cases of that kind, and I can proudly say on behalf of my people that there is not a single case in the whole dominion which we have brought to the attention of the department where they did not concur in our request and allow the party to remain in Canada on our giving the necessary bond. Where the family could not provide the bond, the charitable societies I have mentioned have seen that it was done. So that we have no complaint against the department on that score; we have always received fair treatment from them. In many cases however they have not permitted persons whom I have considered proper immigrants to come into the country, because they did not wish to overload the quota with our people.

I should like to see some relief granted to those persons mentioned in paragraph 2 of the amendment. It does seem to me that the mere fact that a person who has lived in Canada ten years, goes to some other country and finds it not what its press agent said it was, should not prevent his coming back to Canada. In the first place that person has had the experience of ten years in this country, associating with the salt of the earth such as we are. That ought to be counted unto him for righteousness. He has been here ten years, knows something of the country, and has gone farther and fared worse. He would make the best sort of citizen and I think he should be allowed to come back. Yet the very fact that he has gone away, that he has committed the unpardonable sin of leaving Canada to see whether he could better his position elsewhere, puts him in the class that precludes his coming back. We have spent tens of thousands of dollars for the repatriating of large numbers of people resident in the New England states. Those people have come back and all kinds of celebrations have taken place to welcome the return of the prodigal; everyone was delighted to take part. Now when a case of the sort mentioned in the bill occurs the opposite takes place, and the party not only is not welcomed but is met at the border by an immigration officer in brass buttons and told that he cannot come into this country at all. It does seem to me that the fact that he has lived ten years in Canada ought to be sufficient proof that he is fit to be in this country, and I do suggest that some attention be given by the Immigration department to the question. We are getting no immigrants at all at the present time. I am not prepared to say whether that is a good or bad policy on the part of the government. This is not the time to discuss that question; we shall probably have an opportunity to take it up later. But, as I said before, I agree with this part of the bill: that is, to keep out the prostitutes, the pimps and the drug addicts and to allow in those people who had lived here for ten years but who went away in an honourable effort to improve their position. A distinction ought to be made, and I am sorry the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has not made that distinction. The sheep ought to be separated from the goats; I am for the sheep every time, but as for the goats I am not going to take up the cudgels on their behalf.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Immigration--

Mr. SPEAKER: In accordance with the rules of the house, if the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have not spoken as yet.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order may I point out that technically the hon. member has spoken inasmuch as he moved the second reading of the bill through the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps).

Mr. JACOBS: By the unanimous consent of the house I think we ought to hear the hon. member.

Mr. STEVENS: Nobody is objecting to hearing him.

Mr. SPEAKER: The sponsor of the bill was represented and my first impression was that he had been spoken for, but I think in view of the fact that the hon. member for North Winnipeg has been substituted as the sponsor of the bill, it would be only fair to allow the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to speak in the ordinary course and not to close the debate.

[Mr. Jacobs.]

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that no one is objecting to the hon. member speaking, and it would be entirely wrong to leave an impression on the records of the house that such objection had been taken.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, may I point out that I had some cases to present to the house and have not had the opportunity as yet of presenting them. My colleague was under the impression that if he did not take up this bill it would go to the foot of the list, and he therefore took the action he did; but I have not had the opportunity of saying one word upon my bill.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order: I rose merely for the purpose of seeing that there was a proper observance of the rules of the house. If my hon. friend were permitted to speak at this stage it would have the effect of altering the rules and permitting an hon. member to make three speeches on the second reading of a bill; he could make the first speech by proxy, then he could speak in his regular turn, and then again in reply.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Speaker, would you please give the rule under which it is suggested that we can make speeches for each other by proxy?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will Your Honour rule as to when a man may speak in this house by proxy?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Speaker, had the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre been in his place he would have moved the second reading of this bill; as he was not in his place, the bill should have stood, but by courtesy another hon. member was allowed to move the second reading on his behalf. We all want to hear the sponsor of this bill address the house, but we must recognize that we have rules and if they are to be broken I do not know where we will land.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) be a little more explicit as to his idea of how the rules are being broken?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The bill would not have been read the second time in the absence of its sponsor, but by courtesy we allowed another hon. member to act for him. That member then takes the place of the mover, otherwise the bill would not have been before the house on this occasion.

Mr. SPEAKER: My intention is to allow the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to speak now not as the sponsor of the bill but as a member of the house speaking on the bill. As sponsor of the bill he has been superseded by the hon. member for North Winnipeg, who will have the right to reply at the close of the debate.

Mr. FACTOR: The debate will soon be closed anyway.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to hear in this corner of the house, but do I understand correctly that I am to speak now?

Mr. SPEAKER: No one objects to the hon. member speaking now.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the two minutes left at my disposal I desire to say that I introduced this bill in order to meet, if possible, some very outstanding cases in which I think the general body of citizens of this country recognize that substantial injustice has been done. If the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) is correct that these particular amendments would make it very difficult for the department to carry on its work of protecting this country, then I should have expected that the minister would himself suggest amendments to meet the present needs. The best thing to do would be to refer this matter to a committee, but that has not been done.

In a number of cases coming before the public there has been obviously a considerable measure of injustice. There was the case which occurred on October 16, 1930, at Hamilton, where an Englishwoman who had been a resident of Canada for eighteen years, an epileptic and the mother of three children aged seventeen, fourteen and twelve years respectively, was deported. Another case occurred in London, Ontario, where an epileptic who had been seventeen years in Canada was ordered to be deported but was allowed to remain after investigation had been made. Another case occurred where a married woman, an epileptic, the mother of four children was deported after being in Canada for sixteen years.

It is quite true that these cases come within the prohibited classes and I presume that under the present legislation referred to by the Minister of Immigration these people were not able to establish domicile even although they had been in this country from fifteen to twenty years. After these people have been in this country for so long a period the home in the old country has been broken up; new ties have been formed in this country and there should be some fixed term to govern such cases. That is the purpose of the first section of my bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private and public bills having expired, the house will revert to the discussion of the motion to go into supply.

SARNIA PORT HURON VEHICULAR TUNNEL COMPANY

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair and if I am in order—

Mr. MANION: The discussion on the motion of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) had not been concluded.

Mr. SANDERSON: If I am not in order, His Honour will so advise the house, but I have consulted the Clerk of the House and—

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the hon. member desires to make a motion in connection with a private bill. This is merely a formal matter, and he has the right to do so with the consent of the house.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Speaker, I desire to move, seconded by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. Blair):

That the petition of John Doherty, and others, of the cities of Sarnia and Windsor, Ontario, praying for the passing of an act to incorporate the Sarnia Port Huron Vehicular Tunnel Company, together with the report of the clerk of petitions thereon, be referred to the select standing committee on standing orders for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing order 92 in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Guthrie (for the Minister of Finance) for committee of supply.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): When the house rose at six o'clock we were discussing the motion to go into committee of supply, and the hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette) had introduced the question of the trans-Canada highway. The discussion had proceeded at some length during the afternoon and he and a number of others had taken part. I do not intend at this late hour and late period in the session to delay supply, but I believe there are a few points which should be brought out and which I shall attempt to do in a very few minutes. The hon. member for North Timiskaming spoke in a very moderate tone, and I shall copy him in that regard. He pointed out that there was a great deal of unemployment in northern Ontario, a fact of which I am well aware. But it must be remembered that the unemployment in northern Ontario is largely the result of the over-expansion of the pulp and paper industry which, to put the situation mildly, is not in a very good condition in the Dominion of Canada. My own city of Fort William and the neighbouring city of Port Arthur are to-day suffering grievously from unemployment just as are other sections of northern Ontario, of which my hon. friend spoke. Therefore I am entirely familiar with the conditions that exist in that section even though it is early summer.

The hon. gentleman suggested that in order to relieve this unemployment the government should go into the question of aiding or co-operating in some manner with the province of Ontario in building a trans-Canada highway. In a trans-Canada highway, I, like most people who live in northern Ontario, have been interested throughout. Long before we occupied these seats I put myself on record on a number of occasions, both in the house and elsewhere, as being favourable to the building of a trans-Canada highway. I realize, as the government does, the importance of highways for the encouragement of the great tourist industry, because it is really one of our industries to-day from which we profit a great deal, particularly during the summer months. Unfortunately, however, on the eastern end of northern Ontario, the section whence my hon. friend comes, there is a good deal of difference of opinion as to the route which should be followed by that trans-Canada highway. Into that controversy I do not intend to enter as I come from the western end and we have enough troubles of our own there without my dealing with any of the differences of opinion of the people on the eastern end. Therefore I shall not offer any suggestions as to what the decision should be. At the same time, as my hon. friend and others pointed out, the fact remains that there is a very strong difference of opinion as to the northern or the southern or the central route which might be followed by the trans-Canada highway across that portion of northeastern Ontario.

In the discussion this afternoon both the hon. member for North Timiskaming and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) used the argument that it has been stated by the Hon. Charles McCrea that the revenues from northern Ontario were about ten times the expenditures in northern Ontario, and they quoted a speech which he made. I do not question the quotation in the least, but I should like to point out that I have no doubt what Mr. McCrea meant was not that the government of Ontario was receiving in revenue ten times as much as it was spending in northern Ontario, because many times I have seen the contrary proven, not only by ministers of the government that is in power at the present time, but by the Hon. Harry Mills who was a minister from my city in the government of Mr. Drury and who, I remember well, gave me figures some years ago when the question came up, to prove satisfactorily to me that much more was being spent in northern Ontario than was being derived in taxes from that section. Although I have not seen the speech referred to, no doubt what Mr. McCrea meant in that regard was that there was taken from northern Ontario in timber wealth, mineral wealth, in the wealth of fisheries and so on, much more than was spent there by the province of Ontario in the development of that section. Therefore it is not quite logical to argue that because the wealth is taken from there, the province of Ontario gets it, and consequently should spend it on a road through that section. I mention this simply to clear up what Mr. McCrea meant, because I do not believe he would take the attitude that they have received ten times as much in revenue from that section as they have expended in it.

What I wish to point out particularly—and I do this in the kindliest spirit and in justice to this side of the house—is that the hon. member for North Timiskaming who introduced this question this afternoon is highly inconsistent in the attitude he takes now as compared with that which he took when he was on this side of the house supporting the government of my right hon. friend the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), because not only in 1930 but in 1929 resolutions were introduced into the house by the then member for Athabaska, Mr. Kellner, distinctly advocating the spending of money by the dominion government in assisting the provinces to build roads. I have not under my hand the resolution that was moved in 1929, but that moved in 1930 is, I believe, practically the same with some slight modifications. The principle behind both was the same. To avoid misunderstanding I shall read the resolution as moved last year. As reported at page 424 of Hansard of March 10, 1930, Mr. Kellner moved:

> Whereas the need for establishment of highways is greater than in 1919;
> And whereas in that year the dominion government recognized its responsibility in this matter by a substantial grant, which grant is now exhausted;
> Therefore be it resolved, that, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability that a further substantial grant be made to cover the next five years' development of highway construction.

That resolution was discussed very fully last year; a similar resolution was discussed very fully in 1929, and while in it he did not distinctly say that he advocated the construction of a trans-Canada highway, that was the basis of every speech that was delivered, including that of the hon. member who moved the resolution. I spoke upon the resolution last year, and I also spoke upon the one of the previous year. Every member who spoke upon it—although I have not read the speeches recently, I remember the discussion quite clearly—took the attitude that the purpose of the resolution was to a large extent the building of a trans-Canada highway. This was not contradicted by anybody at that time. Rather strangely, both last year and the year before, that resolution moved by Mr. Kellner, which in principle advocated the building of a trans-Canada highway by assistance given to the provinces by the dominion government, was voted down by a solid Liberal vote. If one cares to look up the vote in 1930—I have not looked up the 1929 vote—he will find that both the hon. member for North Timiskaming and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River were among those who voted against that resolution. I am not saying this in any spirit of recrimination, or with any special desire to embarrass them, but I believe these facts should be made known to the house.

Mr. BRADETTE: The hon. member is not a lawyer, but he is a good doctor. Can he find in that resolution any mention of a trans-Canada highway? I should like the hon. member to read some of the observations of the mover of the resolution.

Mr. MANION: I have not time to do so. The hon. gentleman spoke for the better part of an hour or longer and he had plenty of time to read them himself.

Mr. BRADETTE: The hon. member should be fair. He should read the remarks of the mover.

Mr. MANION: I make the statement that the then hon. member for Athabaska and practically everybody else who spoke on the subject, took the attitude that the resolution referred to the building of a trans-Canada highway. I shall not attempt to read sentences from the speech of the then hon. member for Athabaska on that subject, but I intend to read some of the statements made by certain leading members of my hon. friend's party which was then in power. It is true that neither my hon. friend from North Timiskaming nor my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River spoke on the question, although they voted against the resolution. I wish now to quote from the remarks of the Hon. Mr. Dunning, the then Minister of Finance:

> I think, Mr. Speaker, it is the obligation of hon. members of this house when they bring forward resolutions of this kind, imposing as they would, if implemented, a load upon the dominion treasury, to tell the house the amount of financial obligation involved in carrying into effect the terms of the resolution proposed.

A little later on I find the following:

> I cannot vote for this resolution, first, because of what I have previously stated; second, because the movers of it and those speaking in support of it do not indicate what the financial load shall be upon the dominion, nor do they indicate in the resolution any principle upon which division should be made between the provinces which are to be served by it; and, finally, because I believe this dominion has at the present time, in connection with water transportation and air transportation with its tremendous responsibility with respect to railway transportation, with the need that exists for progressively reducing her public debt and reducing taxation, plenty to take care of without going, by grace, into the field of provincial responsibility and handing out money to another authority for a purpose which is really their own.

I have read the statement of Hon. Mr. Dunning, the then Minister of Finance. I shall now direct the attention of hon. members to the remarks of the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), because he was one of the few private members of the house who spoke on the question. This leader of the Liberal party spoke as follows:

> It is rather dangerous to deal with such a delicate matter as this. I believe there is in the constitution nothing that empowers the federal parliament to approve such a resolution. Moreover, if parliament votes in favour of such a resolution, many provinces may complain that the federal government is infringing on provincial rights.

There is the old story of the British North America Act. Let me now quote one or two sentences from the speech of my right hon. friend the then leader of the government, at present leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). He said:

If, after federal needs are supplied, if after we have reduced some of the public debt and have reduced some of the taxation of the people of this country, we have money left that we do not know what to do with, with respect to any of our federal obligations, there will be time then to go into one or other of these numerous projects which hon. gentlemen opposite wish us to indulge in.

He closed his remarks by saying:

We will do well, I believe, in the interest of provinces and federal government alike, each to have regard to our respective jurisdictions, and not to venture too frequently beyond them in making contributions from one treasury to another in a manner never contemplated by the constitution of our land.

The right hon. gentleman gave various reasons, but I believe the quotation I have given contains the gist of his argument. The other day in the house, on another matter, he took a similar attitude, to the effect that it was not the duty of the Dominion of Canada to contribute in a general way to the various provincial projects that might come up at various times. In fact on one occasion he said that giving money to the provinces for certain reasons was a vicious principle, because, as he pointed out, the federal authorities did not have control of the expenditure of that money. I think I am quoting my right hon. friend correctly in that regard.

The hon. member who spoke first this afternoon was more emphatic during the election in the north country. I have before me a paper called The Northern Tribune, published in Kapuskasing, Ontario, and according to this paper—which I am informed is Liberal—he is stated to have called this whole resolution "clap-trap." I shall read one sentence from the editorial page of this paper of July 18, 1930.

In his public speech at Kapuskasing yesterday afternoon Mr. Joseph Bradette, retiring member for North Timiskaming and Liberal candidate for reelection, issued a sweeping challenge to anyone to prove that he had voted against the trans-Canada highway in parliament; and he twice referred to the House of Commons resolution involving that highway as a "clap-trap political resolution."

Mr. BRADETTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member may have his own way. I have read the resolution, however, just as it was printed in Hansard, and it must be obvious to all hon. members that the intention of the resolution was to assist in the building of a trans-Canada highway.

Mr. BRADETTE: It had nothing to do with it at all.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to enter into a political argument of any serious nature with my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River. However my hon. friend was in the same unfortunate position so far as this resolution was concerned, because he voted with the hon. member for North Timiskaming against Mr. Kellner's resolution in 1930. I have not looked into the records to see whether he voted that way in 1929. but I imagine if he was in the house he would have voted the same way. However the hon. member was a member of the then government for at least four years, and apparently he did not find it desirable nor did he see the absolute need for the building of a trans-Canada highway. For that reason I suggest he is not in a position at the present time to twit us so early in our regime with breaking pledges. I suggest that the hon. member for—

Mr. HEENAN: I did not accuse my hon. friends of breaking pledges; I asked him to fulfil them.

Mr. MANION: Probably my hon. friend did not accuse us to-day, but on former occasions he has accused the present government of breaking pledges. Whether he did it to-day or yesterday matters not; he has done so on a number of occasions. I must say to my hon. friend that it would appear he is much more enthusiastic now about the building of a highway than he was when he was a member of the government which had the power to put such legislation into effect. I would add further that my hon. friend was a representative of northern Ontario at that time. At the present time not only is he more active in promoting the trans-Canada highway than he was when in power, but he is more active in connection with the eight hour day than he was when in power. He is much more active concerning unemployment insurance than he was when in power. I might add that the bill he has introduced this session concerning the vote of the people in the district of Patricia was introduced last year. He withdrew the bill at that time however when he could have pushed it through had the other members of the then government been standing behind him. So that it would appear that the hon. member is much more enthusiastic now about many of these questions than he was when he was in a position to put his enthusiasm into effect. I make these statements in no unkind way, because I suppose as members of an opposition we are a little less responsible than when in power. Perhaps we are much more—

Mr. HEENAN: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but I think he ought to be fair.

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. HEENAN: I would remind him that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River when Minister of Labour did put the eight hour day into effect on all government works.

Mr. STEVENS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HEENAN: He did get his—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is out of order in interrupting.

Mr. HEENAN: I wish to say—

Mr. MANION: The hon. member did put part of the government employees on the eight hour day, but the fact remains that a great many are not working under those conditions and were not on the eight hour day during the whole time my hon. friend was Minister of Labour. It would appear that he is more anxious now to have the eight hour day enforced than he was when he was Minister of Labour. I do not dispute the fact that he brought in legislation by which contractors doing government work were instructed to put their men on the eight hour day.

Mr. HEENAN: The day that the eight hour day legislation—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MANION: Go ahead.

Mr. HEENAN: The day that the eight hour day bill became effective every employee of the dominion government working for contractors went on the eight hour day.

Mr. STEVENS: Bosh.

Mr. HEENAN: The day we introduced that bill we also passed an order in council which put every employee of the dominion government service on an eight hour day.

Mr. MANION: No, my hon. friend did not do any such thing. There was an order in council that government employees might be put on the eight hour day. As a matter of fact to-day there are many government employees who are still working much longer than eight hours each day and they were working much longer than eight hours each day during the whole term of office of my hon. friend. I pointed out the other evening that the present government was gradually placing employees under the eight hour day, but my hon. friend had four years in which to do so and moved only in the dying days of the last parliament after he had been minister for four years. Undoubtedly his action was a preelection move.

I do not think it is fair that this government should be accused of being inconsistent and of breaking pledges when as a matter of fact it has been in power only about ten months, and the government with which my hon. friend was connected was in power nine years and made no move to build the trans-Canada highway. So hon. members behind the right hon. gentleman should hesitate to find very much fault with us for moving a little slowly with respect to what is a very big undertaking. I point out on behalf of the government that the question has not been overlooked, it is under consideration, and that we hope to arrive at a satisfactory solution in due time. But I do not believe that any government that has been in power ten months should be expected to have implemented all its pledges within that time. And I submit that no government has implemented so many of its pledges within such a short time of attaining office as has the government of my right hon. leader.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the attitude of the Liberal party while in office towards these various grants in aid to the provinces, I think the record of the party, as shown by the votes of this house, and in other ways will disclose a perfect consistency, although I am quite prepared to admit that that consistency may have been maintained at a certain political loss. Evidently at this session of parliament we shall be called upon to consider conditions not dissimilar to those prevailing at the time the Liberal party came into office nearly ten years ago, and should it involve more in the way of political loss, I for one will continue to be consistent in regard to the attitude taken at that time, because I believe it to be the only attitude which in the end is going to serve adequately to meet the needs and to serve the highest ends of our dominion and of the provinces in the administration of the various matters assigned to them respectively by the constitution.

To make clear the position of the Liberal party in these matters, may I say that when we came into office we were faced with a deficit of $80,000,000 or $90,000,000. The year before there had been an even greater deficit. It was apparent to the administration that something would have to be done in the way of effecting economies if there was to be any reduction in the public debt and in taxation, and, I might say further, if there was to be any revival in business through the improvement of the credit of the country. The new administration surveyed the field very carefully, and decided that in one particular economies not only might be made, but should be made, namely, with respect to many of these matters in which the federal government was voting sums of money in aid to the provinces in addition to the subsidies guaranteed to them by statute in accordance with the provisions of the constitution.

Now, let me make this point perfectly clear, because my own position and that of the party has been very much misrepresented. It has been said that I have been opposed to subsidies being voted by the federal parliament—subsidies to the provinces and subsidies generally. Far from being opposed to subsidies being voted by this parliament to the provinces, I believe it is the method laid down by the fathers of confederation as the one whereby the financial arrangements in the nature of adjustments as between the provinces and the dominion should be carried out. At the time of confederation the fields of administration and of revenue were divided as between the dominion and the provinces; each was given its own particular services to perform, each the sources from which they were to derive the revenues to carry out their respective duties. As I mentioned the other day in speaking on the same subject, for purposes of adjustment, in order to effect equality as between the different provinces, it was decided that a certain sum on a per capita basis should be paid by way of subsidy each year from the federal treasury to the provinces, and the provinces were to be free to use their respective subsidies with regard to any matters that came within their jurisdiction in any way they liked.

I submit when the fathers of confederation adopted that particular method of financing as between the dominion and the provinces they meant it to be followed and to be the exclusive method. They did not contemplate that in addition to subsidies agreed upon as a result of conference and settlement of differences there should be made from time to time further special grants from the federal treasury to the provinces for provincial purposes. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) the other day, I think, said that under the line I had taken in speaking on some other question I would be opposed to subsidies being voted, for example, to the railways. This parliament has voted subsidies to the railways and for steamship services and the like. I am not opposed to that. Transportation in general and in connection with trade and commerce comes within the jurisdiction of the federal government, and if parliament wishes to aid transportation by subsidies it has a perfect right so to do, and no exception can be taken to such action. What I take exception to is voting grants in aid to provinces for particular services assigned to the provinces in addition to the subsidies which are determined by statute. The subsidies are arrived at as the result of an agreement between the provinces and the dominion; and when that agreement has been reached it is implemented by a statute of this parliament, with the result that moneys paid are known in their entirety and definite in amount.

What is the effect of that? One effect is this, that it precludes political parties from seeking to gain political advantage through an appeal to the electorate of the provinces for their support, on the understanding that if returned to office grants in aid in addition to the regular subsidies will be given from the federal treasury to the provinces. I need not remind the house of the extent to which that practice was followed in the last campaign—the practice of promising the provinces that if they would support hon. gentlemen opposite they would receive grants in aid for all kinds of purposes from the federal treasury. I refrained from making a single promise of the kind, and I maintained that position in order to be consistent with the attitude I had taken all the time I was in power. I did so, because I believed it to be the the only right attitude to take in regard to the finances of the country. Where aid is confined to subsidies fixed by statute the only appeal that can be made politically on such a score would be that if returned to power the particular party making the appeal would increase all the subsidies of the provinces. Would anyone think of making an appeal of that kind to the electorate of any province? There is not an hon. member who would dare do it. But what is the difference between making an appeal to the electorate of provinces for their support through promising that if returned the party will increase the subsidies of all the provinces, and promising grants in aid in addition to the subsidies provinces are already receiving? I think that is perfectly clear. I feel very strongly that to make appeals to the electorate on the basis of grants in aid in addition to subsidies, is a very dangerous political method for any country to begin to follow. Where is it going to end? It was started on an unexampled scale during the last campaign; it will be repeated in the next; and if it is going to be followed by hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to aids to highways, and other services that may appeal to them I would remind them that there are other groups in the house prepared to make grants in aid apply to many things that hon. gentlemen opposite would not be prepared to support, and who will be prepared to make their voices heard to that end.

Mr. MANION: It is started to-day by my right hon. friend's supporters.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I will tell my hon. friend where it started. The question I am now asking is: Where is this method going to end if it once becomes the accepted practice? My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) said that it commenced with "hon. gentlemen opposite."

Mr. MANION: I said to-day it did.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I thought he referred to the practice of making grants in aid to provinces in addition to subsidies fixed by statute.

Mr. MANION: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The practice of making grants in aid in addition to the subsidies to the provinces began in 1913 under the administration of that day, when a grant was made for the advance of agricultural instruction. The first payment under the act was in 1914, the last in 1923, and there was a special vote in 1924. Between 1914 and 1924 a total of $10,900,000 was voted by way of grants in aid of agricultural instruction.

Under our constitution the provinces have the duty of advancing agriculture, and in particular agricultural instruction. We in this parliament have a similar duty with respect to agriculture. I submit that when the fathers of confederation gave jurisdiction both to the provinces and to the dominion with respect to agriculture, they expected the provinces and the dominion respectively to meet whatever they needed in the way of expenditure on those services from revenues which they raised themselves. It was never contemplated that, this federal government having the duty of furthering agriculture, and the provinces having a like duty with respect to agriculture, the federal treasury would meet any part of its obligation or any part of the obligation of the provinces by giving additional sums to the provinces in the nature of grants in aid in addition to the subsidies which the provinces would receive and would be free to use as they deemed best. I imagine that if agriculture had not been mentioned as a subject in which both the provinces and the dominion had jurisdiction, the government in office in 1913 would have hesitated to adopt a different principle from that previously followed. I have not had time to look up the debates, but I feel pretty sure that they will disclose something to the effect that agriculture, came within the respective jurisdictions of this parliament and of the provincial legislatures, and that therefore it would be quite proper, in respect of agriculture, for this dominion to assist the provinces, in addition to what was given them by subsidies, by a special grant in aid of agriculture.

Mr. MALONEY: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt my right hon. friend, but perhaps he would allow me a question. Being so opposed to federal subsidies of all kinds, I should like to ask him why, as Prime Minister, with his party following him, he was so anxious to claim credit for the old age pension law, under which the dominion made a contribution to the provinces of 50 per cent of the cost in connection with the payment of old age pensions?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend will just allow me time I will answer the question. I am taking up this matter, not I hope in any too partisan a spirit, but rather with a view of helping to make clear in the minds of hon. gentlemen on all sides of the house what really is fundamental in this question, regardless altogether of what may have taken place in the past. I am quite prepared, when the time comes, to take my responsibility for part of what was done, but now we are at the beginning of a new parliament and we are faced, as a parliament, with a pretty serious financial situation which has to be met. I think the time has come when hon. gentlemen should seek to meet the situation in exactly the way the Liberal administration sought to meet their problem when they came into office, a problem very similar to the one existing to-day, and one which I am happy to say was met thereby with a considerable degree of success.

As I have said, the Agricultural Instruction Act was the first passed in 1913. It made provision for a grant of $10,000,000 for a period of ten years. There was an additional supplementary vote of $900,000, so that altogether the provinces were given $10,900,000 on that score. The next grant in aid made to the provinces was under what was known as the Employment Offices Coordination Act, passed in the year 1918. This was to aid and encourage the organization and coordination of employment offices. Under that act $150,000 was to be given annually to the several provinces in addition to their subsidies, and up to the present time under that act the amount of $2,183,016 has been paid to the provinces in addition to what they were receiving under their regular subsidies.

Here again I think one of the factors entering into the situation was the fact that we had a federal Department of Labour and also provincial departments of labour, and it was felt that a coordination of one phase of the work along such lines would serve a useful purpose. But there was another reason which I feel sure was even stronger and which hon. members will recognize at once as being perhaps a sufficient excuse at that time. This was the period just at the close of the war, in 1918, when large numbers of men were returning from overseas to be reinstated in civil life. Part of the duty of reinstating these men was an obligation which this federal government had assumed, and I have no doubt that the members of parliament of that day felt that by taking this course, by voting additional amounts, grants in aid, to the provinces, they would be helping fulfil their own obligation as well as helping to meet the additional burden which in this connection would suddenly be placed upon the provinces.

In the next year, 1919, the third act in the nature of a grant in aid to the provinces was passed by parliament. It was the Canada Highways Act, 1919, to encourage the construction and improvement of highways. The first payment under its provisions was made in 1921, and the last payment in 1928. Altogether, the sum of $20,000,000 was provided by that act, and the $20,000,000 paid under that act to the provinces, was again in addition to the amount they were receiving in subsidies. I am sorry the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) is not present; I think he was in the house and a member of the government when that act was introduced, and if I am not mistaken he mentioned at the time that one reason, among others, why this parliament was embarking upon grants in aid to the provinces for highways was the large number of unemployed there would be in Canada for a number of years succeeding the war, and it was felt that work would be afforded returned soldiers by the construction of the highways. That was one of the reasons given, and it was one of the reasons why parliament at that time passed that act.

Then in the same year, 1919, the Technical Education Act was passed, providing for the expenditure of $10,000,000, over a period of ten years, for the promotion of technical education in Canada. The first payment was made in 1920, and up to March 31, 1931, an amount of $8,769,284 had been paid to the provinces under that legislation. I will say something more about that when we come to the technical education measure at present before the House, but at the moment I simply want to place on record the sum which has been paid to the provinces in grants in aid under this heading. In addition to the grant I have mentioned, there have also been special grants passed since 1920 to assist the provinces in combating venereal diseases. These appropriations have totalled the sum of $1,622,849.

In 1920 there appeared for the first time, under grants in aid from the federal treasury, a sum to provide for the relief of unemployment. Under that heading, to March 31, 1931, the total paid was $1,845,600. In addition there is the $20,000,000 which was appropriated at the last session of parliament.

Now we come to the question of old age pensions. A measure was introduced in 1927 which provided for the payment on old age pensions account of half the amount paid by the provinces. The first payment was made in 1928, and up to March 31, 1931, there had been paid from the federal treasury towards the old age pensions paid by the provinces, the sum of $8,159,455. In answer to my honourable friend who asked me why the Liberal administration took credit for that measure, I would say that credit was taken for the reason that the Liberal administration introduced the measure. The Liberal administration fought for many years for an old age pension act, and care I think was taken to make it clear that an amendment to the British North America Act would be required before this federal government would have power to administer an old age pension scheme. It was recognized that an amendment to the British North America Act would take some time, and for that reason the government of the day adopted the method of agreeing to give these grants in aid to the provinces on condition that they would carry out a scheme framed by the federal government which would be similar in all the provinces.

An hon. MEMBER: A vicious principle.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The principle, from a financial point of view, was unsound. I am quite prepared to concede that. But I will go a step further and say that, in my opinion, this parliament ought to remedy the unsoundness of the principle, not by discontinuing to vote money for old age pensions, but by assuming the entire obligation, one hundred per cent. This government should take over the whole scheme and itself pay out the money. That is the position that should be taken; that is the proper way to remedy what there is of unsoundness in the principle.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is an extension of the vicious principle.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; on the contrary, it is getting rid of what is vicious. I wish my hon. friend to follow me in this. The principle of old age pensions is a thoroughly sound one. The hon. gentleman may never have to receive a pension, but no doubt he knows of a good many people who, after a life of severe toil, are in dire need and most deserving of such assistance on the part of the state. Obviously the principle is thoroughly sound. I have always taken that position and have fought strenuously for it; and to get that principle recognized by parliament I was prepared to go so far as to support a grant in aid, which I am perfectly frank to admit was, from the point of view of financing, an unsound method. Now I say, let us recognize that the principle of old age pensions itself is perfectly sound and involves an obligation which the federal parliament should assume. Let us undertake to administer the Old Age Pensions Act from Ottawa and have all the moneys which are necessary for the payment of those pensions voted by this parliament. But let this parliament control every dollar of expenditure in connection with the administration. The principle that is unsound—and it appears in the budget speech delivered in this house yesterday by the Prime Minister—is that this parliament should vote seventy-five per cent of the moneys necessary to pay these pensions without having any control over this vast expenditure beyond that of simply handing the cheques for total amounts to the provinces to deal with as they see fit. That is not a sound principle of financing; and no one, I believe, has uttered words in that respect more eloquent, more emphatic, or more logical, than the present Secretary of State did in a speech which he made in this house not very long ago with regard to old age pensions. I agree entirely with what he said in that respect. The body providing the money should be the one to control its expenditure.

The list cited comprises practically all the more important grants in aid from this dominion to the provinces. The figures I have quoted—and they do not give all the expenditures to date—amount to a total of $57,911,259. That is what has been spent practically within a period of ten years in grants in aid to the provinces towards the few services I have mentioned, all of which services it was agreed at the time came within the purview of the provinces themselves. How much has the dominion paid to the provinces in the way of subsidies over a like period, say the last ten years? I regret I have not the figures here—I thought I had them; but it will be found that the subsidies under the statutes amount to a little more than double that sum—something like $150,000,000. That, roughly speaking, is what has been paid to the provinces in subsidies in a period of about ten years.

I ask hon. gentlemen opposite to consider this question: Do they for a moment believe that the fathers of confederation would ever have made provision for the payment in ten years, from the federal treasury to the provinces, of the sum of $150,000,000 or whatever the amount may be, with the knowledge that half that amount in addition would be voted by parliament in the way of grants in aid to be paid at the same time from the federal treasury to the provinces? One has only to consider these figures in such a relationship to realize how farreaching and how far from the original mark the whole practice is becoming. Here, with the permission of the house, I should like to insert, in the form of a table, the statistical data I have just given:

But while these grants in aid to the provinces have been increasing in this way, the provinces themselves have been taking advantage of new sources of revenue, sources of which they never dreamed at the time of confederation, sources which this dominion has left exclusively to them. Take, for example, the question of liquor control, the sale of liquors. The provinces derive very large revenues from this source. Then there is the inheritance tax, another source of revenue not thought of at the time of confederation, and one from which the provinces obtain considerable sums. Again, there are motor licences from which very appreciable revenues are secured. And there are other sources of revenue which I am sure will suggest themselves to hon. gentlemen. I might mention, as another, the revenues derived from hydro-electric power. All these are sources of revenue which the provinces to-day enjoy to the exclusion of the federal treasury; and in addition thereto, with revenues derived from many other sources, they have the subsidies which this dominion votes year after year under statute.

The Prime Minister yesterday in his budget speech drew attention to the fact that the federal government had lost considerable revenue through the recent transfer of natural resources to the provinces. In other words, we have yielded to them, in addition, revenues which formerly we ourselves enjoyed. One has only to reason the matter out to see where this dominion is going to find itself in the matter of debt and taxation, while the provinces are being thus relieved and assisted. We are going deeper and deeper into debt to help relieve their situation. As their situation improves our own is becoming deplorably worse. While the provinces have these additional sources of revenue to draw upon, our sources are relatively fewer, notwithstanding that our obligations are increasing in a way never dreamed of at the time of confederation. Read the Prime Minister's speech of yesterday with respect to the outlays of this present government for expenditures which it cannot control. The first one amounts annually to around $125,000,000, interest on public debt. Most of that amount is due to the vast expenditures in the period of the war. Come next to the pensions bill. I cannot recall the figures at the moment, but they run into many millions—$55,000,000 annually, an hon. member says. That money this parliament has to provide. I might mention others, but these perhaps are sufficient to give some indication of the obligations that have arisen from the war.

Now, can any hon. gentleman name a single service of this dominion government to which the provinces have contributed one dollar? The provinces contribute nothing to our necessities. They are making no grants in aid from their treasuries towards the vast obligations which have suddenly fallen to this parliament to provide for in addition to all the other expenditures which the federal treasury must bear. So far as the federal government is concerned, there are many services which can be carried out only from a federal point of view and which are being denied the people to-day on the score that we have not enough money to provide those services. Hon. gentlemen will recall what was said yesterday in regard to the air mail and the carrying of mails—an obligation on the federal treasury. Yet we are told that this development, which is one that can be undertaken only by the federal government, must be proceeded with slowly and with caution, if indeed it is not to be abandoned in part, because we have not the money with which to carry it on. On the other hand, we find the postage rate on letters increased from 2 to 3 cents, a part of which increase goes to make up payment of these very grants in aid paid to the provinces in addition to the regular federal subsidies. When one stops to reason it out one soon perceives the wisdom of the course which the Liberal party pursued while in office and which it is continuing to follow to-day. Let me give a figure or two to show what the dominion in addition has been doing in the relief of unemployment among returned soldiers.

To this should be added Loans on Housing.	To encourage the erection of dwelling houses.	1920	1924	25,000,000	23,500,000 10,600,000 still owing

An act was passed to provide for the relief of unemployment, which act is being administered by the hon. Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren), and under special annual votes there has been paid under its provisions the sum of $7,452,763. If this dominion had not desired voluntarily to admit that obligation and had wished to review the matter, the federal government might have made out a pretty good case in favour of the provinces looking after all unemployed. However, the government did not attempt to do so, and very rightly and wisely so, but they said: We will make the returned men our special responsibilities and the sum I have mentioned has been paid out in that connection.

The Pension Act was passed, I believe, in 1916, and the federal government has paid out in pensions the sum of $452,225,122. Every pensioner is a resident of some province as well as being a resident of the dominion and that money flows into the provinces from the federal treasury. I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) why this government at the present time should be considering grants in aid for the provinces for any purpose when they have bills of this kind which they are unable to meet out of the very heavy taxes which are being raised at the present time?

Mr. MANION: That action was taken because some of my right hon. friend's supporters brought it up this afternoon.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am speaking of the pledges which hon. members opposite made and which they are beginning to endeavour to redeem. Another experiment was made in the way of loaning money to the provinces for housing in order to encourage the erection of dwellings. An act was passed in 1920 for that purpose and under that act the sum of $23,500,000 has been loaned to the provinces. Of that amount $10,600,000 is still owing to the federal treasury. Before we grant further aid to the provinces in addition to subsidies we had better secure back the money which we have loaned for provincial purposes. Surely that is a sound principle in financing, and any opposite course cannot but be unsound.

When the Liberal administration came into office we found that we were faced with a heavy debt, that we were unable to balance the budget, that taxes would have to be increased, that economies would have to be practised and we therefore adopted the policy that we would not continue grants in aid to the provinces in addition to subsidies. We decided to continue grants in aid in matters which came under the federal jurisdiction, but not grants in aid to the provinces in addition to the regular subsidies to which they were entitled. We saw quite clearly that once a grant in aid was voted for any length of time to a province it would be very hard to discontinue it. What is done over a period of years becomes in the eyes of the province in the course of time a right for all time thereafter. That being the case we served notice on the provinces a considerable time in advance saying that when the period fixed by the statute expired the grant would not be renewed.

With respect to technical education the total amount of the money provided by the act had not been used at the end of the ten-year period, and we introduced an act to allow any province which had not taken full advantage of the amount to which it was entitled, still to have that advantage provided it came in under the provisions of the act within, I think it was, the next five years. Care was taken to give the provinces plenty of time to readjust their finances. We remained firm in the position we had taken, in order to save the federal treasury too great a burden.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) yesterday made what I consider an unfair reference in his speech on the budget when he sought to leave the impression that the large obligation which the country is being faced with at the present time was in part at least a legacy from the previous administration. The previous administration sought to economize on these very matters of which I am speaking, and did economize. In the one thing we are now discussing we put an end to grants in aid to the provinces in addition to subsidies, and by taking that course we have been able to save hon. gentlemen opposite many obligations which they otherwise would have now to meet. It was a difficult stand to take. I think hon. gentlemen in the ministry opposite know enough already of what political pressure can be brought to bear, and what it means to resist demands to spend money out of the public treasury for one particular purpose or another. During the time the Liberal government was in office we steadily resisted that pressure in regard to these matters. The votes which we gave in parliament were not votes against technical education or votes against highways, they were votes in accordance with the principle which I have endeavoured to explain, namely that grants in aid to the provinces in addition to subsidies were not in accordance with the spirit or the intention of the constitution, that they were not a sound way of financing, that they were not justified in the financial crisis with which this country was faced but were only putting an additional load upon the federal government at a time when its load was so heavy that it was impossible to reduce taxation. We stood for this principle throughout our term of office and may I say that when it came to a general election there was every cause, had the first consideration been political rather than national and patriotic, why we might have yielded and said: We will be prepared to renew these grants. We stood firm and I have not the slightest doubt that we are in opposition to-day very largely because of the stand we took. The price to be paid for power is too great, if it means so far as government is concerned, that power has to be purchased by the adoption of principles which are unsound in matters of finance. I would much rather be on this side of the house to-day because of having taken the consistent attitude which we did while in office and throughout the general campaign, an attitude which we intend to continue to take throughout this parliament in the interests of the people of this country, an attitude which will help in the reduction of the public debt and in the reduction of taxation, than be on the other side and faced with having to meet a lot of promises which it is impossible to fulfil.

May I repeat to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals that there is no inconsistency between the attitude taken by the hon. members whose names he has mentioned with respect to the votes which they gave while the late government was in office, and their assertions to-day. In the course of the recent elections the Prime Minister and his supporters—I believe my hon. friend was one of the most vigorous of his associates—pledged to the people of this country that if they were returned to power they would construct a national transcontinental highway. That was a matter of policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite; it appeared in the Conservative platform and was mentioned in innumerable speeches made by those who are to-day in the ministry. We understood at the time that pledge was made, and I think the country also understood, that what was contemplated was a federal highway which would be administered by the federal administration and not another grant in aid to the provinces; it was to be a federal highway which would be constructed and maintained by the federal administration. If the federal government is to go into the highway business, I submit that that is the only basis upon which it should act. A national highway should be looked upon in the same light as a national railway, a link between the different provinces of the country, another form of transportation in addition to railways, air service and the like, a national service carried out by the federal government in a national way, so that the moneys that are spent on that national highway will have to be raised by the government that is administering the highway and receiving credit for so doing. Any other method is simply to increase further these grants in aid in addition to the subsidies that are being given to the provinces. What hon. gentlemen inquired about this afternoon, what the country still wishes to know and what it has not yet been told by my hon. friend or any other hon. gentleman opposite, is whether the government of Canada intends to implement that pledge with respect to a national highway or not. There was no reference to it in the budget speech of yesterday, and no speech has been made on the other side which would appear to countenance that project as a federal undertaking. The question which the electors are asking themselves to-day is this: Is the pledge of a trans-Canada highway which was made so vigorously throughout the campaign and which played such an important part in its result, to be carried out?

I confess I would be much more ready to forgive honourable gentlemen opposite for not carrying out a few of their pledges than I would be to commend them for endeavouring to do so under present conditions. The budget brought down yesterday must surely give occasion to pause on the part of those who to-day are administering the affairs of the country. The Prime Minister says that he is hopeful that he may raise revenues sufficient to balance the budget. I doubt very much whether he is even hopeful; I think his words were more than guarded in that connection. Indeed, I think in what he said he left it pretty plain that there was a grave doubt whether the revenues of this year would by a long way equal the expenditures of this year. In these circumstances I would say to the government that I believe the people of Canada will thank them if for a time they will now remember that they are no longer in the thick of a general election but that they are in their first year of office and may be continuing there for some little time, and if they will devote their time and attention to seeing how they can save money for the federal treasury rather than to devising means whereby they can expend it, especially where the expenditure is on something which lies altogether outside the jurisdiction of the federal parliament. That is the position of the opposition in regard to these matters, and it is the position which we intend to continue steadily to take during the time we are here. We take it because we believe, in so doing, we are taking the stand which the people of Canada wish to have taken at this time.

We are not opposed to technical education; we want to see technical education promoted, but we believe that vocational education is primarily the business of the provinces. There are, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) said the other day, other forms of technical education in the nature of scientific investigation and the like, which we believe fall under federal jurisdiction, and when I come to speak on the measure I think I shall be able to point out to my honourable friend where this parliament appropriated $3,000,000 for scientific research buildings and equipment in this very year and last year combined, and is appropriating $500,000 annually on scientific investigation conducted solely by the national research council, to say nothing of what the government is doing departmentally in other ways. It will be found that we are doing our part at the present time with respect to technical education. So I repeat that we are not opposed to technical education, but we believe that the provinces should do their part and raise for vocational education the money that is necessary for it, and that we should do our part and raise the money necessary therefor.

We are not opposed to highways, or at the proper time to a national highway scheme. We are opposed to giving grants in aid in addition to their regular subsidies to the various provinces for highway purposes. If the government opposite undertakes as a part of their policy a national highway project, federally administered they will find our attitude different from what I have expressed it to be in regard to grants in aid to the provinces. But they must assume it as a federal obligation from first to last. Similarly with regard to old age pensions, we are not opposed to old age pensions; we believe old age pensions should be a part of the social insurance scheme of this country. But we think it should be a national scheme; it should be administered nationally, 100 per cent of the money raised and the entire scheme administered by the federal government. We say that the present government ought immediately to take steps to have the British North America Act amended so as to make possible federal administration so that when the time comes to pay the old age pensions 100 per cent, we shall not be met with any constitutional obstacle to the administration of the scheme in its entirety by the federal government. Similarly with regard to other matters, agricultural instruction and the like, it must not be said that we are opposed to those things. All we are opposed to is to departing in any particular from the spirit of the constitution and embarking on a course which may lead us any lengths in the direction of extravagance, of debt, of increased taxation, but which will certainly not lead to an improvement of conditions in this country at a time when improvement is so greatly required.

Mr. PETTIT: May I ask the right hon. gentleman a question? I do not ask many questions in the house. In regard to old age pensions, did he not say—and it is my clear recollection he did so, and Hansard records it —that it was unconstitutional for parliament to grant old age pensions to the extent of 100 per cent; that the provinces must of necessity, by reason of that fact, contribute to old age pensions? Did he not say that in opposition to speeches of members on this side who were then on the other side of the house?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad my hon. friend has raised the question because it indicates that apparently even yet I have not made clear, to him at all events, exactly my position as it is now and as it always has been on that question. As my hon. friend has just said, I did make the statement that it was not constitutional for the dominion government, under the British North America Act as it now stands, to administer an old age pension scheme 100 per cent.

Mr. PETTIT: The right hon. member now says they should.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Exactly, I say they should; I say the British North America Act should be amended so as to make it possible for the federal government to undertake the administration of that scheme. When the scheme was being launched and it was uncertain how many provinces were likely to take advantage of an old age pension scheme, there was some justification, not on grounds of sound financing, but on grounds of moving forward a stage or two a much needed measure of social reform, for the federal government making a contribution to the provinces to enable them to begin doing something which they alone individually could do but which we believed to be in the national interest to have done in a general way. But now that most of the provinces of Canada have made it apparent that they believe in old age pensions; now that the amount that is being contributed by the dominion to the provinces is to be no longer 50 per cent, but 75 per cent of the total outlay, we say that the time has come when the federal parliament should seek to have the British North America Act amended so as to make it quite clear that it will be within the jurisdiction of this parliament to administer an old age pension act, and that hon. gentlemen should proceed to fulfil their promise, if they intend to fulfil it, with the obligation upon themselves of not only raising what is necessary in the way of revenue for the purpose, but also doing what is necessary by way of administration and control of the expenditure of moneys which they themselves have raised.

Mr. PETTIT: May I ask just one more question? The right hon. gentleman stated that the provinces did not contribute one cent to the national exchequer. Does he not admit that the provinces throughout the dominion contribute very materially to the national exchequer in proportion to their population in connection with the importations of goods and the duty paid on them?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When I speak about the provinces contributing, I am speaking of the treasuries of the provinces making contributions to the federal treasury as against the federal treasury making contributions to the treasuries of the provinces. My hon. friend has spoken about goods imported and what is paid in customs duties. Prior to this year quite a large sum of money has been raised in that way, but I am afraid after this new budget goes into effect there will not be very much money raised out of customs revenues, and therefore anything that comes from the provinces, even in regard to what my hon. friend has in mind, will be very small. The very thing which he has in mind, however, was the reason why the fathers of confederation undertook to give from the federal treasury a subsidy to the provinces. When confederation was formed, there were those who wished to allow the provinces to continue to raise revenues by tariffs. It was agreed a dominion could never be formed on that basis. The provinces were unwilling to raise all their taxation by direct taxes, and a compromise was reached whereby whatever revenues they were to raise were to be raised by direct taxation, but that they would receive by way of adjustment a certain subsidy upon a per capita basis which would tend to equalize arrangements as between the different provinces. They were to get this particular sum by giving up their right to raise taxes by indirect taxation, and the very subsidies that we are paying the provinces to-day are being given to them for that very reason.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): I rise briefly to state my position in connection with the matter of grants to provinces. I am opposed for reasons other than those given to-night. I believe that federal grants to the provinces constitute a direct interference with the prerogatives of the provinces and frequently lead to expenditures which they otherwise would not contemplate. I speak in the light of experience. I can remember that some years ago grants were made in aid of highways to create employment for returned men, constituting a direct obligation upon the federal government. I am not offering a complaint except to say that considering the state in which the province of Alberta was at that time, and the fact that the federal treasury supplied 40 per cent, 60 per cent having to be supplied by the provincial government, the province was forced to build a road that was not warranted at our stage of development. I for one did not accept that grant, but after I came to Ottawa the money was spent by the provincial government at a later stage in the development of the province. I say that the principle is wrong. Education is a matter within the control of the provinces and I do not think the federal government should interfere with matters of education within the provinces. Highways are directly under control of the provincial governments, and to my mind the federal government should not step into these fields and, as I have pointed out, frequently involve the provinces in expenditures that they are not in a position to meet. We ought to hold to the fields of responsibility which were designed for us. I am thoroughly in accord with the view of my leader that if we are to take over some of the responsibilities of the provinces we should take them over in their entirety, administer them, use the revenue and pay everything. Any such proposal, however, should be very carefully considered before definite action is taken.

Another vicious principle has been adopted by various parties requiring public support. They try to outdo each other in order to gain public support by offering baits to the provinces to secure the necessary votes to place them in office. That is my chief complaint in respect to this matter. If the taking over of the old age pensions is a responsibility of the federal government, all well and good. I believe that the present government have stated that they intend to pay practically 100 per cent of old age pensions. Undoubtedly this government cannot continuously pass to the provinces this money for expenditure when they intend to meet practically to the extent of 100 per cent the cost of old age pensions. In connection with the building of a national highway I think the words of Hon. Mr. Dunning were eminently fair last session when he stated that, in view of the responsibilities which have been saddled upon a federal government with respect to transportation in the operation of canals, railways, air mail services and new services developed throughout Canada, we should wait for a time before embarking upon a national highway system, particularly in view of the fact that the provinces are in receipt of revenues from gasoline taxes which they are applying to highway construction.

I think we would do well, Mr. Speaker, to keep to our own field, and to control every dollar of taxation we raise. If in their wisdom the federal government decide to construct a national highway, then it should take over the project and make some arrangement with the provinces to pay for wear and tear which will develop. I wish to reiterate that the holding out of the prospect of such grants as this, often results in serious embarrassment to the provinces, which may be forced to move faster than they otherwise would. For that reason I think that the principle of making grants without serious consideration is one which should not be continued.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I ask permission of the house to place on Hansard in the form of a table the various figures to which I have referred. I think it would be convenient for hon. members to have the table before them. Also may I give the correct figures concerning subsidies to provinces, which I now have:

Subsidies to Provinces

Subsidies 1920-1921 1930-1931
(1931 estimated)	$140,472,652
Special subsidies to maritime provinces (including 1931)	6,440,000
Total	$146,912,652

Motion (Mr. Guthrie) agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MINES

For investigation of mineral resources and deposits; of the mining and metallurgical industries, and of mineral technology; wages, expenses of testing and research laboratories, investigations by Dominion Fuel Board, including salaries and all other expenses, $300,000.

For publications, English and French, purchase of books, laboratory supplies, instruments, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $50,000.

To compensate J. H. Fortune for quarters, fuel, light and water supplied him as resident caretaker of the Mines branch building, Sussex street, vacated because of the necessity of utilizing the caretaker's quarters for storage and laboratory space, $100.—Total, $350,100.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to know where the work involved in this item is carried on.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Mines): This is to provide for work carried on by the Mines branch in the city of Ottawa. They carry on very wide investigations into mining in all its branches. In fact from my experience I very much doubt if there are any better equipped laboratories of their size on the continent for the investigation of mineral resources, ore dressing and metallurgical research work. The services of the mines branch are available in an advisory capacity for mining in all its various branches. For instance, if a mining company becomes involved in some metallurgical trouble that they cannot solve, they frequently ask the assistance of the mines branch. The branch provides as well a very extensive service for prospectors in analyses and identification of ores. Their work is quite broad in its scope and very useful to the mining industry.

Mr. COOTE: Do the officials of the mines branch go to different parts of Canada to investigate mineral resources, or is the work all done here in Ottawa?

Mr. GORDON: From time to time officers from the mines branch go into the field in order to keep themselves posted upon various matters of mining technology; of course, they must be very careful not to lend themselves to sealing with approval any mining proposition; but they do spend a certain portion of the year going from place to place in Canada, and sometimes out of Canada, in order to keep their research work up to date.

Mr. COOTE: Could the minister give the committee a rough idea of the amount which is spent on that kind of investigational work? Is it done to any considerable extent?

Mr. GORDON: The expense of the work in the field has never been separately set out in the books of the department, but I am told that in travelling expenses of the various technical men about $10,000 may be spent in a year. These are the divisions of the mines branch: mineral resources; ore dressing and metallurgy; fuel and fuel testing; ceramics and road materials; the mechanical section; and the Dominion Fuel Board. Of course as occasion requires the work does take the staff into various parts of the country I am sorry I cannot give the hon. member a definite statement as to what money is actually spent in the field.

Mr. COOTE: I think the department was doing some experimental work in connection with the deposits of bituminous tar sand in the north country. Would that come under this particular vote? If so, could the minister give us some information about it?

Mr. GORDON: The department has opened up a bituminous sand deposit at MacMurray, and the Alberta government has carried on the separation. The deposit is still under review by the department as to its possible value. It has certain attractive features which I do not think have yet been definitely determined. I am told several reports have been published by the department on the work already done.

Mr. COOTE: Is that work still being carried on by the dominion? I think the department did have an officer spend a good deal of his time in that area.

Mr. GORDON: We are still carrying on the field work. We have a party there this summer to determine the extent of the deposit and its possible value.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand some very valuable experimental work is being carried on in England in connection with the low temperature carbonization or liquefaction of coal. Has the mines branch done anything along this line?

Mr. GORDON: That work has been under investigation for the past four or five years by the fuel testing division. It is being continued and the results from time to time are available for those interested in the industry. I am told that a number of reports have been made, and that one was recently placed at the disposal of hon. members.

Mr. SPENCER: What success has resulted?

Mr. GORDON: I have not read the recent reports on the work done in connection with fuels and fuel testing, so I regret that I cannot give details of what progress has been made.

Mr. GERSHAW: When the officers of the department do research work or give advice to private individuals or companies, do they make a charge for it?

Mr. GORDON: Where the advice of the department is sought on matters of that character it has not been the custom to charge the industry anything. Charges are made for analyses of various ores submitted. One of the reasons for making such charges is that the department might easily come into competition with private assayers, and it would be unfair to them to do the work gratuitously. But generally speaking where a mining problem such as a refractory ore has to be dealt with, and the mining company finds itself in difficulty as to the method of treatment and seeks advice, the department gives its services without charge.

Mr. COOTE: May I ask whether any work is still being carried on in Ontario in connection with the peat industry, and if so, how much will be spent on it this year? Is it intended to carry on that work any longer?

Mr. GORDON: The investigation in connection with the peat industry covered quite a number of years. If my recollection serves me aright it was started about 1908 or 1909, and the main effort has been at Alfred in the county of Prescott. The work first was carried on under the auspices of the department; then a fuel committee was formed, and the work grew to some pretensions, at least as far as the expense was concerned.

Mr. COOTE: Does the minister know about how much has been spent on it?

Mr. GORDON: Yes; to date there is $352,445.71 charged against it, with certain small credits which may be taken into consideration, amounting to about $25,000 or $30,000, leaving a net expenditure of about $323,000. As the hon. member for Macleod well knows, at the time the peat was being investigated the fuel problem of this country was not a problem of the producer. It was rather a problem of the consumer, and I think in the main that invesetigation into the possibility of peat as a fuel could be justified. Errors may have been made during the course of the years, but at any rate, with the abundance of fuel available in this country at the present time and the difficulty of keeping coal mines working, I seriously question if we will continue the investigation of peat as a fuel for a long time to come. Certainly the government will not pursue the investigation further in Ontario.

Mr. COOTE: It is not the intention to pursue the investigation further this year?

Mr. GORDON: No.

Mr. BRADETTE: I should like to ask the minister if the government of Ontario has asked for any help, or if any help has been given, in the development of the lignite field north of the town of Cochrane, at Blacksmith rapids?

Mr. GORDON: If my hon. friend means cash advances, this government has made none. However, when those lignite fields were discovered and the development started, the department, following the policy which has prevailed for years, made an investigation from the departmental standpoint in order to add to their knowledge of that field. Also, at the request of the Ontario government, they have carried on certain tests of those lignite fields in order to determine the fuel value. I believe the results of those tests were made public, although I am not sure about that.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to ask the minister if he can give us some description or summary of the work carried on last spring at the request of the government of British Columbia. There was an agreement made with the government of British Columbia to test some ten or twelve carloads of the different varieties of coal, and through the kindness of the government of British Columbia I have seen a highly technical report in connection with those tests. However, that report contained nothing of what might be called practical benefit to the ordinary man in the street. The idea was to test this coal to see what kind was best suited to be pulverized, for instance, and what treatment was best calculated to produce the best results with coal from the different mines. This is a matter of great importance to British Columbia, because I believe in this way we will find uses for the abundant coal supply which we cannot sell.

Mr. GORDON: About ten tests were made of different coals at the request of the British Columbia government, under different boiler ratings, and reports of those various tests were sent to the provincial government. I must confess that I struggled with the reports myself, and found them too technical to understand. The tests are being carried on with respect to the coals most suitable for coking purposes, and these tests already have opened up the possibility of finding customers for western coal, particularly in Manitoba.

Mr. NEILL: I do not think there is much need for information with regard to the coking qualities of the coal, because in years gone by we have had practical demonstrations. If I remember correctly there were quite a few coking ovens at Union Bay on Vancouver island, using Vancouver island coal, and there was a coking plant at Fernie in connection with the Crowsnest pass coal mines. If we have the information both with regard to Vancouver island and Fernie, I would suggest that we do not need to conduct further experiments along that line.

I believe we should attempt to demonstrate the possibility of using British Columbia coal in pulverized form. The other day I visited the plant which heats this and a number of other buildings. Last year the Department of Public Works installed a system for using pulverized coal, and I am told that it has been highly successful, that it is very economical and leaves practically no dust. A report in that connection would be welcomed, with some explanation as to the particular variety of coal best suited to be used in that way and so on. That would encourage its use in British Columbia and other places.

Mr. GORDON: The tests along the lines indicated by the hon. member were made by the Department of Mines at the request of the British Columbia government, but as I said a moment ago the reports are entirely too technical for me. However, the reports are in the hands of the government of British Columbia for transmission to the companies concerned, and in quite a number of instances the reports were very satisfactory, though in some other cases they were not.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Has any further progress been made in connection with the commercial abstraction of petroleum from the oil shales in northern Alberta, where there are tremendous deposits? This matter has been under examination and experimentation for several years.

Mr. GORDON: I am told an investigation was made into the bituminous sands along the line suggested by my hon. friend, and perhaps he may be confusing the two matters.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am not speaking of the tar sands but of the oil shales—the petroleum exposure in the oil shales.

Mr. GORDON: I am told that no investigation has been made.

Mr. HEENAN: In connection with the reported find of radium in the northwest territories, I would impress upon the minister once more the importance of ensuring that the control of these deposits shall remain in Canada. I do not suggest that there has been any indifference or neglect on the part of the government, but it would be indeed a serious situation if, because they were not in a position to carry on the development of this discovery through lack of funds or of assistance from the government, those who are engaged in this work were obliged to seek outside investment, thereby allowing aliens to obtain control of such important deposits. I understand that the Belgian government, when radium was discovered in that country, at once undertook to assist in the development of it as well as financially. This is such a precious metal, and it is so important from the point of view of the sick, that it seems to me we should make every effort to retain in Canada the control of the find which has been made. This is highly important in the interests of our hospitals and of Canadian citizens generally.

Mr. GORDON: Radioactive ores have been found in Canada in a number of places and certain developments have been carried out, in Ontario particularly, and in the northwest territories. The discovery of pitchblends, to which undoubtedly the hon. member refers, was made by prospectors in the northwest territories at Echo bay, after a great many years of unfruitful prospecting. I do not think the hon. gentleman suggests that the fruits of the labour of these prospectors should be taken from them. They are the ones who have discovered the radioactive ores and they are now carrying on their development. The mines branch have analyzed these ores and are watching the development out there with a great deal of interest, and I can assure the cimmittee that if radioactive ores in commercial tonnages are found, of sufficient richness to justify their development, the necessary and proper steps will be taken to safeguard the interests of the Canadian people, at the same time, of course, not dealing unfairly or unjustly with those who have carried on the work of prospecting for so many years.

Mr. COWAN (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay): While we are discussing the vote for the investigation of mineral resources, I would point out to the minister the desirability, from the Canadian standpoint, of developing the iron ore resources of northern Ontario. To my knowledge, some fifteen years ago we had in Canada fifteen or twenty blast furnaces using, to a large extent, Canadian ores. To-day we have, I believe, only three, and during the last year not an ounce of Canadian ore was used in any one of these furnaces. To-day these furnaces import from the United States all the ore which they are using. Last year the importations amounted to 1,000,000 tons of American ore. That cost the Canadian furnaces and the Canadian people the sum of $90,000,000, for that was the value of the ore delivered to the furnaces in Canada. That creates in the first place a very unfavourable balance of trade, because these ores have to be paid for with Canadian money. So much for that side of the picture. The other side of the picture is the fact that in northern Ontario and in other districts in Canada we have unlimited deposits of iron ore. It is true they are not of the same consistency as those found in the American states, but by a method of beneficiation it is felt that they could be put on the market and used in Canadian furnaces. It is to that phase of the subject that I wish to direct the attention of the minister. A commission was appointed seven years ago, in the year 1923, by the Drury government of Ontario. That commission, headed by Mr. Lloyd Harris, made a report to the effect that we had sufficient ores here and that by proper treatment they could be used; and they suggested that the Ontario government should pay a bounty on the production of those ores of so much a ton on all ores smelted in Canadian furnaces. They suggested, moreover, that, as this work would be of national advantage, the dominion government should contribute one half of the bounty. That legislation remained on the statute books for five years but no action was taken by the dominion government. I believe it was in 1929 that the Ferguson government decided to double the rate so far as the province was concerned, and suggested that the federal parliament should contribute a considerable sum by way of assistance. That offer on the part of Ontario remains open and I suggest to the minister that the mines branch is equipped with a proper personnel for the consideration of methods to be followed for getting this Canadian ore on the market. I wish at this time to bring this question to his attention so that the staff maintained by this government may be put to work. The matter is one of vital concern not only to northern Ontario but to the railways, for they would get the haul; and it is of importnce to labour and generally to the development of our own resources.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister will observe that this item, which is for about one-third of a million dollars is for scientific and technical research. That, as I understand it, forms a part of what formerly would come under the head of technical education. It is a branch of the work referred to by the Minister of Justice the other day as coming within what would be regarded as work of university grade. I am pointing this out to emphasize what I said a moment ago, that this federal government is doing its part with respect to one aspect at least of scientific and industrial research which is in the nature of technical education; and I trust that if I give the minister my support for this one-third of a million he will, when the time comes, back me up in what I have said in respect to that particular matter.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend from Port Arthur-Thunder Bay will find, when investigation is made, that considerable work has been done in connection with the beneficiation of our northern ores. I doubt whether it can be said that the real solution has been found, but I do say to the hon. members that no opportunity has been missed. I shall not have time to go into the matter to-night, but I may say to my hon. friends from Alberta that, in order to avoid overlapping in various activities of government research, the work in connection with the extraction of oil from tar sands and shale has been carried on in that province by arrangement with the national research council. The Deputy Minister of Mines is a member of the board of the national research council and sits in on all discussions relating to questions of research.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is my understanding based on the discussion of last year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend has seen the plant set up in the yards of the Alberta and Great Waterways railway where this work was carried on by Professor Clark. The ramifications of the mines branch are many, and when one considers the national research council as well it is pretty difficult to know just what is being done. I appreciate what the hon. minister has said to-night, that he has found a very efficient staff in charge and that the work carried on has been of immense benefit to the mining industry of Canada. On one occasion we voted $10,000 for the purpose of bringing samples from British Columbia, but very little advantage was taken of that vote. That offer was made in order to permit samples being brought here for testing purposes. The mines branch of the federal government has been of great value to the mining industry of Canada, and I agree with the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Cowan) that if a solution can be found for the treatment of Canadian iron ore it would be of immense benefit to Canada. In order to assure him, I will state that I know the hon. gentleman who succeeded me will not miss any chance to assist in this matter of research work.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Did I understand the minister to say a short time ago that no further experimental work is being carried on in connection with peat?

Mr. GORDON: No further experimental work is going on at the present time in connection with peat fuel.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the hon. minister explain the item on page 92 of the estimates, peat specialist, $2,820?

Mr. GORDON: That gentleman is a field officer who is carrying on work in the field in connection with the investigation of peat bogs, but he has nothing to do with the technical work. Probably I should have made that distinction when I said that no peat experimentation was being carried on. No technical work in the laboratories or anything of that kind is being done.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What are the duties of this peat specialist?

Mr. GORDON: He investigates peat bogs in order to keep the department advised thereof. While at the present time these sources of fuel may not be called upon or needed, yet I do not think it is desirable that the department should lose sight of the possibilities of the peat bogs; they should be treated as an insurance for the future.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): As I understand the minister, this vote of $2,820 is to provide for a peat specialist to keep in touch with the peat bogs. The peat bogs which are commercially feasible are fully known to the department and have been for years, and I cannot for the life of me see the sense of maintaining a specialist just to be sure the bogs do not run away. If no experimental or laboratory work is being carried on in connection with the peat bogs, why keep a man on at $2,820 per year just to keep in touch with the existing bogs? Is he undertaking research work?

Mr. CHAPLIN: What other expenses are there in connection with this officer?

Mr. GORDON: There is a small amount which is absorbed in the geological surveys branch for expenses. Outside of the use of peat for fuel there is a possibility of its being used for other purposes. The litter and humus from the Alfred bog has a fairly ready market. I believe the retention of this officer is justified.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish the minister would justify it to me. Perhaps he can give the committee the net income derived as a result of the disposition of litter and humus? If we are spending $2,820 per year we should receive some value for it.

Mr. GORDON: I am told that the total income from the sale of these products would probably pay the salary of the peat specialist and leave a little over.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the net income?

Mr. GORDON: I have not the figures before me.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is the trouble; I doubt very much whether the net income from the sale of litter and other products would pay this man's salary. If he is rendering any useful service I am only too anxious that his salary be continued. I should not like to see him dropped from the service; possibly he could be engaged in some other research capacity, but when no experimental work is being carried on we should not retain a man simply to keep in touch with the existing peat bogs.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, as it is eleven o'clock I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. gentleman who is leading the house (Mr. Guthrie) advise whether it is the intention of the government to follow the practice of former years, that of having the debate on the budget take precedence over all other business except questions, notices of motion for the production of papers, and the introduction of bills? The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) did not make any mention of this procedure, but I assume that was an oversight on his part and that the practice of former years will be followed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I assume that the former practice will be followed, but I should not like to make a definite statement in that regard. The Prime Minister will be here at the opening of the house on Thursday and probably will announce that such will be the case.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.
