Mr. STEVENS:

1. Yes. A special instruction to census commissioners reads: "The minister desires that in appointing enumerators, consideration should be given returned soldiers wherever possible."
2. Yes.
3. Appointments are made by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.
4. The more important and specific instructions issued in this connection to census commissioners are as follows:—

Appointment of enumerators.—After proper enumeration sub-districts have been established and approved by the Bureau of Statistics it will be your duty to select a suitable person in each sub-district to perform the actual work of enumeration. This is a very important duty and you must exercise the greatest possible care to secure competent persons. Your own success as commissioner and the success and value of the census as a whole are absolutely dependent upon the thoroughness, accuracy and promptness with which the enumerators perform their duties. The Book of Instructions clearly sets forth the duties and qualifications of the enumerators, while the specimen schedules of population and agriculture and the examination papers relating thereto should enable you to select only such persons as have the capacity for efficient service. You are particularly enjoined to reject all applicants who are unable to pass the examination test satisfactorily and in such cases you are authorized to immediately fill the vacancy. It will be a mark of your fitness for the position to which you have been appointed to make your selection in the first instance in such a way that the numbers of those who will be unable to pass the test will be as small as possible.

Residence of enumerators.—To ensure the best results each enumerator appointed should, as far as practicable, be an actual resident of the sub-division within which his duties are to be performed. This ensures familiarity with the territory and the general character of the people residing in the district he is to canvass. Only in cases where a competent resident of an enumeration area cannot be found should a selection be made of a person living elsewhere. An enumerator should be thoroughly familiar with the boundaries of the various units which are contained within the area assigned to him.

Qualifications of enumerators.—The enumerators should be active, energetic persons of good address, as outlined in Section 35 of the Book of Instructions.

The following classes of persons are suggested as likely to make good enumerators, and they are specially recommended to your favourable consideration:—(a) In rural districts, crop correspondents of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics; (b) School teachers when available and able to give their time to the work; (c) Officers and leading workers in farmers' organizations, live stock associations, co-operative creameries, etc.; progressive farmers and their sons and daughters; and especially young men or women who have attended agricultural colleges or agricultural experimental stations.

It is further suggested that, in certain sections, women would make excellent appointments as census enumerators owing to the fact that in many instances the information must be obtained from the female head of the house. In the last census several women acted as enumerators and gave excellent results.

Enumerators must give their entire time to census work.—It is absolutely essential that applicants for the position of enumerator should understand that their whole working time will be required during the period of enumeration. It will be impossible for an enumerator to complete his district in the allotted time if he undertakes to carry on at the same time any work or business.

CIVIL SERVICE—ATTENDANCE AT MEETINGS

Mr. SEGUIN:

Is it contrary to article 55 of the civil service law for an employee of the federal government to attend: (a) a non-contradictory meeting of a candidate at a provincial election; (b) a banquet offered to celebrate the nomination of a legislative counsellor by a provincial government?

Mr. BENNETT: We are advised that this is rather a difficult question to which to give a definite answer. It asks for information as to the interpretation of the law, which is a somewhat difficult thing to do. This matter must be determined in each particular case and I think the question is improper in its present form.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The remarks of my right hon. friend might serve as an answer to the question.

Mr. JACOBS: I suppose good taste should prevail in this as in many other cases.

Mr. SPEAKER: This question being improper, it will be dropped.

RAILWAY COMMISSION

AMENDMENT OF JUDGES ACT TO PROVIDE ANNUITIES FOR CHIEF AND ASSISTANT CHIEF COMMISSIONERS

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That the Judges Act be amended to provide for an annuity to any judge of a superior court of Canada who is or has been, since 1st January, 1931, appointed chief commissioner or assistant chief commissioner of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

He said: His Excellency, the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

PEACE RIVER OUTLET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) if he expects in the near future to table the report on the surveys made by the Canadian Pacific Railway in connection with a possible route from the Peace River district.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): For the information of the hon. member and the house I may say that Mr. Beatty, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, did a few days ago give me the report of their investigations into the Peace River outlet, upon which they spent a great deal of money. The report is in typewritten form, and has not yet been printed. We have not yet really had time to go into it, but I think probably a little later the government will decide to get it printed and tabled; but that has still to be considered.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REDUCTION IN WORKING TIME AND WAGES OF EMPLOYEES OF GENERAL OFFICE STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): By the morning's paper I notice that the Canadian Pacific Railway has given its general office employees a lay-off equivalent to a 10 per cent reduction in wages. As this corporation is a semi-public utility I should like to ask what the government policy is with regard to this reduction in wages.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must rule the question out of order.

PRIVILEGE—MR. REID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I rise to a question of privilege. On Friday of last week I was quoted as speaking as a lawyer, and in to-day's papers I am quoted as a Conservative.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. REID: This is a serious matter, Mr. Speaker, and I must draw the line somewhere.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to inquire from the government when we may expect the legislation to be brought down with respect to old age pensions.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The information will be available when His Excellency the Governor General gives his consent to the legislation being introduced.

CANADIAN HIGH COMMISSIONER

REPORT OF SPEECH DELIVERED BY HON. MR. FERGUSON AT LEEDS, ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): I would ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the government to verify the report of a speech made by Canada's High Commissioner, the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, at Leeds, Yorkshire, as reported by the Canadian Press on April 28. It appears in the Ottawa Journal under the heading of "Ferguson points to U.S. Influence." In the body of the report occurs this passage:

> What was happening at present was that out of $4,500,000,000 invested in Canada from outside sources, $3,500,000,000 was American capital and barely $1,000,000,000 from this country.

Then follows the paragraph which I wish particularly to draw to the attention of the Prime Minister:

> Think of the insidious influence in that connection with its introduction of American executives, American methods and contacts.

I should like to ascertain from the Prime Minister if he thinks this is of sufficient importance to verify the accuracy of the report, and if he finds it is accurate, will some attempt be made to cramp the style of Canada's High Commissioner?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman might, Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances have given the government notice of his intention to ask such a serious question as that involved in the latter part of his inquiry. As to the first part, the government will make inquiries as to the accuracy of the report. As to the second, the government will do what it thinks best in the public interest.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED ACQUISITION OF ISLANDS BY UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse): I wish to ask a question of the Prime Minister based upon press reports to the effect that the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon in the gulf of the St. Lawrence might be acquired by the United States. I should like to ask if this is true, and whether the government of Canada is prepared to take steps to acquire these islands for Canada if they are for sale.

Mr. POWER: In the interests of our distillers.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The government of Canada has no knowledge of the matter to which the hon. gentleman has directed attention. Doubtless he is aware that under the treaty by which these islands were relinquished to France there are provisions as to the uses to which they may be put and as to the buildings which may be erected thereon. The intentions of governments cannot be disclosed in this way. I have not heard of any offers of these islands being made, and consequently there has been no consideration of any proposals to purchase them either for this country or for the interests mentioned by the hon. gentleman from Quebec South (Mr. Power).

RAILWAY COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. OLOF HANSON (Skeena): May I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) when the newly appointed chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners will take over his duties?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I do not think he has been appointed yet, but as soon as he is appointed I expect he will take over his duties.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 29, to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Explain.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I thought I might explain it in committee. I did explain it briefly on the resolution.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Was there a resolution preceding this bill?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes. I can give the explanation now just as well. In the year 1928 an agreement was come to between the province of Saskatchewan and the Dominion government under the terms of which police work in the province of Saskatchewan was taken over by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and at the same time certain portions of the provincial police force were incorporated in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. When the agreement was completed and executed on the 22nd of March, 1928—I may say that the agreement appears in full in the report of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for the year 1928—there was one clause outstanding as to which sufficient data had not then been received to make the document complete. That clause related to the pensions of those men of the provincial police force who were being absorbed by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. That clause is as follows:

15. (a) Arrangements will be worked out whereby men taken from the Saskatchewan provincial police under this arrangement and included within the Royal Canadian Mounted Police shall be entitled to the pension benefits now received by members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and such men shall be entitled to credit for all service performed prior to the first of June, 1928, in either the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or the Saskatchewan provincial police, and the government of Saskatchewan shall contribute to the Dominion government such reasonable sum as shall be necessary towards the Dominion government pension fund to enable such men to get the benefit in computing their pension for the number of years served with the Saskatchewan provincial police.

The names of those entitled to pension have now been definitely settled. They comprise four officers and fifty-five non-commissioned officers and men formerly in the provincial force and now in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force. In respect of these men a subsequent agreement has been made and executed by the authorities of the province of Saskatchewan and by the Department of Justice to provide in accordance with the preliminary agreement for the absorption of these provincial police upon the same terms in regard to pension as is provided in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police pension scheme. The province of Saskatchewan bears its pro rata cost of the expense. This act is merely to authorize the taking over of these men for the purpose of pension.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I did not rise to oppose the bill, but I might point out that my hon. friend spoke of having explained this bill when the resolution was before the house. I would remind him that the bill was not preceded by a resolution, but was read on April 17 for the first time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My. hon. friend may be right; I thought it had been preceded by a resolution.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I believe this bill is of such a nature that it should have been preceded by a resolution because, in effect, it involves the expenditure of money out of the public treasury. The purpose of the bill is to extend to certain men provisions for pension which do not apply to them under the present law. In my view it is certainly in the nature of a money bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My recollection was that the matter had been brought to the attention of the house by resolution. However, I may be wrong in that assumption. The main object of the bill is to provide that the Dominion government shall be recouped by the province of Saskatchewan for the amount which the federal government will pay out under the former agreement made in the year 1928.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, but we have to pay out first.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We accepted the obligation in 1928 under the agreement of that date. At that time, however, the figures were not worked out. Now we know definitely that the proposal affects four officers and fifty-five men, and this bill providing for the payment by the province of Saskatchewan to the Dominion of Canada is necessary to provide for the pensions of these men under the pension scheme of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

On looking up the record I find that the bill was not introduced by resolution; I now recollect the occurrence. However, if objection is taken—

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, I just wanted to draw the attention of the minister to that fact; I do not press the objection.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The objection is of a purely technical nature, but if it is not pressed I would prefer to proceed in the present manner.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

On section 1—Arrangements with local governments.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask if this bill has reference merely to the service rendered prior to the transfer of these men from the provincial force to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and whether that is the only portion of their service for which there will be responsibility for gratuity?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): And it will be paid by the provincial government?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Public Works—Quebec, $1,076,900.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): When the committee arose I was asked to provide certain information, and item number 185 was left open for that purpose, following the requests of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) and the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot). I was asked for certain information as to expenditures and appropriations on buildings and I am now prepared to give that information.

Mr. VENIOT: I agree that when the item was up I did request that it be allowed to stand, in case I would have something to ask in connection with it. I am perfectly satisfied now, however, that the item as it appears is correct.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I shall give the information requested by the hon. member.

Mr. DUFF: Has my hon. friend a copy of the information from which he is about to read? It will be impossible for me to follow it, I am afraid, if I have not that information before me.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I will see if I have another copy; at any rate, I shall see that as soon as possible my hon. friend receives a copy.

Mr. DUFF: I would like to have it immediately.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend will have an opportunity to discuss the information I shall give him when we reach some other item.

Mr. DUFF: But I prefer to discuss it now.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Very well, I shall try to supply the hon. gentleman with a copy immediately. I wish to place before the committee the information contained in the following statement:

Expenditure	6,310,957 82

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Chairman, there is one matter arising out of the information which the minister has just given that I should like to bring to the attention of the committee. It appears that there are very large reductions throughout these votes as compared with the expenditures in previous years. This means that the work to be undertaken by the various departments of the government during the ensuing fiscal year will be very much less than in former years, which in turn means that the unemployed problem will be still further aggravated, that is, the men formely employed on government work will not have an opportunity of obtaining work during the coming months. In view of these very substantial reductions I would suggest that the government undertake an extensive program of public works that might in some way help the very acute unemployment situation now existing throughout the Dominion. As instances of these greatly reduced expenditures, I may point out that last year the vote for public buildings in Manitoba was $382,600, while this year it is only $81,700—less than one quarter of last year's vote. And so on all down the line, less is to be spent this year, which means that the unemployment situation is going to be made worse by the action of the government; that is, the greater the economy practised on government expenditures, the more people are going to be thrown out of employment. Can the minister furnish any information as to the expenditures on public works for the ensuing year on capital account which might assist instead of aggravating the unemployment situation?

[Mr. Duff.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. gentleman, I can only say that the program of expenditures, either on capital or income account, is fully disclosed in these estimates. The total capital expenditure proposed for this fiscal year, is $3,387,000, as shown on page 30, the details of which are there given. As to money voted last year not having been expended, it may interest the committee to know that the expenditures on public works last year were the largest in our history. These are the figures:

Total Expenditures

1929-30	25,206,558
1928-29	20,680,902
1927-28	17,309,702
1926-27	13,750,952

Hon. members will observe that the program last year was a very heavy one indeed. In addition to those expenditures, it must be borne in mind that $20,000,000 was expended for unemployment relief. This amount added to the other figures that I have given, shows a grand total for last year of $52,000,000, which is very much in excess of the total expenditure in any previous year.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I think if the minister would give the committee the amount not expended his statement would be better understood.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am giving the actual expenditures, which is the information I thought was asked for.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The minister is giving the actual amount provided for in the estimates last year, $32,000,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sorry that I have not made myself clear to my hon. friend. I should perhaps have given the amount appropriated and then stated the expenditure. The total amount appropriated was $38,074,727.

Sir EUGENE FISET: On capital account?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Both capital and revenue. The amount actually expended, as I have said, was $32,758,065. For the previous year the appropriation was $30,522,389, but only $25,206,558 was actually expended. It will be observed that in every year the amount actually expended is considerably less than the appropriation.

Sir EUGENE FISET: If I understand the minister well—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Just a moment. For 1928-29 the appropriation was $27,038,409, but only $20,680,902 was expended—a larger amount unexpended in that year of expanding revenue than was expended last year when the revenue was shrinking.

Sir EUGENE FISET: What I should like to ascertain from the minister is this: There was provided in the estimates last year a total amount of $38,000,000 or $39,000,000, out of which only $32,000,000 was spent. Is it a fair question to ask the minister if these credits that have not been expended should be treated as a deduction from the $20,000,000 that was voted last session for unemployment?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not find any relation between these two items. I have considered the matter and discussed it from every angle, and I think when I remind the hon. gentleman that in previous years there were similar and larger amounts unexpended when there was no unemployment relief, that ought to be pretty conclusive evidence that there is no relation between the two matters.

Sir EUGENE FISET: There is this relation: If the government had gone on with the expenditure of money voted by parliament there would have been $6,000,000 less expended on unemployment throughout Canada.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): This discussion is out of order, and I am going to call item No. 186. Item 185 has been passed and there is nothing before the chair.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I should like to direct your attention to the fact that the minister himself started the discussion on Item 185.

Mr. GIROUARD: I understand the minister kindly allowed item 185 to stand until to-day.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): This discussion has gone far enough and I am going to rule it out of order. I now call item 186:

Mr. GIROUARD: I understand item 185 was passed on the understanding that we would be able to return to it to-day. I ask the minister now if that was not the understanding.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Item 185 stood for the purpose I have stated.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Item 185 has been reported by the committee and so appears in the votes and proceedings, but there was opportunity left to make an explanation, which the minister has made. The next item is 186, which is now before the chair.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should like to direct attention to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that you are now following an arbitrary rule that always has been ignored in the past, and I should like to suggest also for your consideration that if such rules are to be followed by the chairman you will not make a very great amount of progress.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Allow me to make a statement, Mr. Chairman. Item 185 was left open with the distinct understanding that the hon. member for Gloucester wished to discuss something in connection with the Montreal postal terminal. I have not any objection to giving any information on any of these other matters if any hon. gentleman desires it.

Mr. DUFF: I think the Minister of Public Works is not perhaps quite right in his statement. Item 185 was passed and reported with the distinct understanding, I think, at the request of the hon. member for Quebec South and the hon. member for Gloucester, that when another item was called they could discuss if necessary certain items with regard to Quebec public buildings. Consequently if any member of the house now desires to discuss any question with regard to Quebec it can be done under another item. You are quite right, Mr. Chairman, in calling the next item.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): That is the idea of calling item 186—to regularize the discussion.

Mr. GIROUARD: I thank you for your decision, Mr. Chairman. Will the minister give me some information in connection with the appropriation of $14,500 in connection with the Victoriaville post offiffce?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That item is for the finishing of the new building at Victoriaville.

Mr. GIROUARD: Does this amount of $14,500 only provide for the building itself or does it provide also for the furniture and fixtures?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This amount of $14,500 is required to complete the erection of the building, the construction of which is being performed by the Stewart Construction Company, Limited, under a contract price of $35,600, and to provide for the furniture as well.

Mr. GIROUARD: Were tenders called for the furniture and fixtures?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. GIROUARD: When?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): For the fittings he tenders were as follows:

Gustave Mercure, Drummondville, $1,716.25 or one type of fitting and $1,887.87 for another type; The Canadian Office and School Furniture, Limited, Preston, $1,785 for one type; the Interior Hardwood Company, Limited, Kitchener, $2,175 for one type and $2,175 for another; the Office Specialty Manufacturing Company, Limited, Ottawa, $2,819 for one type and $3,100 for another; Renfrew Wood Products Company, Limited, Montreal, $2,836 for one type and $2,550 for another; H. E. Bourassa, Limited, Montreal, $3,886.90 for one type and $3,691.90 for another.

Mr. GIROUARD: Would the minister tell me if these tenders were advertised, and if so where they were advertised?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): These tenders were advertised in the regular way.

Mr. GIROUARD: Where?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): They were publicly advertised; that would be in the Canada Gazette and in the local papers in the vicinity where the work was being carried on.

Mr. GIROUARD: Is the minister aware that in Victoriaville, where the post office is being erected, no one was aware that tenders were being called, and that as a matter of fact no tenders were received from any persons in that city? All the tenders were from outside parties. Does not the minister believe it would have been more fair and just if tenders had been asked in Victoriaville itself?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should be very much surprised indeed to learn that people in Victoriaville were not made aware of this tender. I am informed that a copy of the advertisement was sent to the hon. gentleman himself, and we have found in our experience that people specially interested in this kind of work generally get the contract. They are able to quote lower prices than local parties are able to quote. The regular procedure has been followed here; every opportunity has been given residents of Victoriaville to tender in this case.

Mr. GIROUARD: I believe the minister is under a wrong impression. I understood him to say that I had been sent a copy of the advertisement, and while I do not want to say that the minister has made an incorrect statement, I do not recall receiving such an advertisement. As a matter of fact, the minister will notice that among the tenders there was none from Victoriaville. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I accept the statement of the hon. gentleman that he did not receive a copy of the advertisement.

Mr. GIROUARD: I do not recall receiving it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): But I am assured that the usual routine of the office was followed, and part of that routine is to send every member a copy of such advertisements. As to the fact that no local tender was received, I do not know the reason for it all.

Mr. GIROUARD: Has a tender been accepted by the department?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, and the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer, which is our rule.

Mr. HEAPS: What was the amount?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The amount was $1,716.25.

Mr. GIROUARD: Was that the tender of Mr. Mercure, of Drummondville?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. GIROUARD: I believe the minister will recognize that this state of affairs is not very satisfactory to the people of Victoriaville. Here is a building situated in a city with a population of almost 7,000 people. Tenders were called for but no advertisement was published in that city; the fact that tenders were being called for was not made known in any way to the people there. I am sure, therefore, that the people are perfectly justified in voicing a grievance. I think that the department should at least have advertised these tenders in Victoriaville. I have no objection to their having been advertised in the Canada Gazette; but as the minister will understand, that publication is not received by many people in Victoriaville. The fact that no one in that locality submitted tenders is a justification, in my opinion, of the position I am now taking. I submit that the minister should reconsider his acceptance of the successful tenders. He has a perfectly good reason for doing so. I urge upon him the re-opening of the matter and advertising in Victoriaville and Arthabaska. The people who should have known that tenders were being called for are the people living in Victoriaville, where the post office is situated, and I think the minister will recognize the soundness of this suggestion. I have no doubt he wishes to be fair to the people there, and he would be within his rights in cancelling the acceptance of an outside tender and having fresh tenders called for, so that the people of that place might have an opportunity of tendering.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The order in council was passed on March 30, awarding the contract to the lowest tender, and it would be impossible to cancel that contract now. It is not at all unusual to find local firms unsuccessful in securing these contracts; other firms seem to be specially equipped for this kind of work. I can assure my hon. friend, if it is any comfort to him, that regularly we find outside firms securing such contracts. I sympathize with him in his desire to have the people in his town get contracts, but it very seldom works out that way with respect to tenders.

Mr. GIROUARD: I am sure the minister wishes to be fair to everyone, and I think he will admit that my position is equally fair. There is a newspaper in Victoriaville, and three miles away, in Arthabaska, there is another newspaper published. Will the minister inform me whether these tenders were advertised in either of these newspapers.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can only say in reply that this is purely a matter of routine in the office, of which I have no personal knowledge. I have not a list of the papers in which the advertisement appeared, but I will get that information and see that it is supplied.

Mr. GIROUARD: Thank you.

Mr. HEAPS: The question I have already raised is far more important than a local matter; it affects practically every part of the Dominion, particularly the urban centres. Personally I feel that during a period of depression more than at any other time public authorities should spend large amounts on public works. It appears on this occasion, however, that this is reversed, and the policy seems to be one of practising economy, which, as I have said before, means that more people will be thrown out of employment. The question of the money spent last summer has really no relation to the estimates which are now before us. I know that in many of our large centres, where there are large numbers of men out of work, there is need for public buildings, and those buildings ought to be put up. Now is the time for the government to undertake the erection of these public buildings. I am thinking now particularly of buildings in the city of Winnipeg. We shall presently come to the estimates for the province of Manitoba, but under this item I think the same question might well be discussed. In Winnipeg public buildings are overdue, and at the present time there are vast numbers of men out of work. The federal government would be setting a good example to other public bodies if at this time they undertook the erection of these buildings in order to provide work for these men who otherwise may not be able to find any employment. In my opinion the policy of cutting down at this time is not right. Last year the former government undertook larger expenditures with a view to meeting the unemployment situation which then prevailed. Later on we had the special session of parliament when we passed further large appropriations to provide work. Now that we are in regular session, I should like to know whether the Minister of Public Works is in a position to inform the house whether the government has in contemplation a program of public works which will in some way take care of those who are unemployed at the present time.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The suggestions of my hon. friend will be carefully considered. It must be borne in mind, however, that it is impossible, in preparing the estimates of the Public Works department, to foresee where unemployment will be acute.

An hon. MEMBER: Not this year.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Oh, I don't know. And for that reason it is better, perhaps, to arrange for provision of funds to relieve unemployment where the funds are more fluid, where they can be expended to meet requirements as they develop. Unfortunately the consideration of public works by the Public Works department is rigidly limited to the particular estimate for a particular place; and, unfortunately also, it does not afford that measure of relief to a large number of unemployed that can be afforded by other works undertaken locally according to the emergency, as the municipality and the province approve, and in the prosecution of which they unite, thus very much increasing in this way the amount of money expended. As my hon. friend knows, the expenditure of the appropriation of twenty million dollars on the basis on which it was made last year resulted in a very much larger expenditure than that amount; whereas if we expend the money it is, as I have said, rigidly limited to the amount of the particular estimate and does not afford the relief which is sometimes so badly needed. However, my hon. friend's suggestion is very well worthy of consideration, and it will be carefully considered.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I desire to register my protest against the state of things revealed by the figures which the minister has given. I cannot understand the policy of the government in not spending the money which has been voted for public works in the province of Quebec. I am sorry that my colleagues in the house who represent the province of Quebec in the government are absent. I would call their attention particularly to this fact. In 1930 there was voted for public buildings in the province of Quebec the sum of $1,509,695, of which $561,525 was spent, leaving unexpended $948,170, or one-third of the money voted.

Mr. POWER: Two-thirds.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, two-thirds. If there is added to the unexpended portion of the money voted for public buildings, the unexpended portion of the money voted for harbours and rivers, it will be found that it almost equals the total amount given to the province for the relief of unemployment. What kind of a policy is that? We were called to a special session of parliament to vote money to provide work for the people, but we find that the money which had been voted and which would have provided employment was left unexpended. I do not desire to draw a comparison but I find that in the case of the province of Ontario, so ably represented by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) the amount voted for public works was $2,679,350. That amount was practically all spent and I do not understand why there should be a difference in the treatment meted out to these two provinces. Why was not the money voted for public buildings in the province of Quebec spent in order to assist in the relief of unemployment?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Chairman, I regret that my hon. friend has suggested that there has been discrimination in the expenditure of public moneys as between the two provinces. I can assure him that there was no intention to do anything of that kind.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Possibly.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can tell my hon. friend of two items voted for the province of Quebec which would account for over $600,000 of the amount unexpended. One instance is the postal terminal for the city of Montreal, and if my hon. friend will go back to the year before I believe he will find that there was an item of $500,000 in the estimates for that building, which was unexpended. My recollection is that there was another item of $100,000 for an ordnance stores building in the city of Quebec which was not expended because the plans had not been completed, negotiations being still pending between the departments of National Defence and Public Works as to the location and type of building. Those two items call for over $600,000 and there are good reasons why the moneys were not spent.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will that last item of $100,000 for an ordnance stores be expended?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should have said that the $500,000 item for the city of Montreal is in this year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What about the other one?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is not in.

Sir EUGENE FISET: It has lapsed.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It lapsed last year and is not being revoted.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Mr. Chairman, I notice that you have been kind enough to allow other hon. members to discuss freely any item concerning the province of Quebec. Will the minister permit me to discuss a matter which I mentioned recently, that of the building for the Public Works engineers at Rimouski?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Certainly.

Sir EUGENE FISET: A few days ago I asked the hon. minister a question with regard to the size of this building, and he answered it was 37 feet by 25 feet. I asked him if the building was of frame construction, finished on the outside with clapboards and on the inside with tongue and grooved boards, painted, and he answered yes. I asked him the rental of the building and he replied it was the same as had been paid before. There is one thing which the minister had forgotten; the offices rented in the past formed part of one of the finest buildings in Rimouski. That building cost to erect, between $45,000 and $60,000 and in it are the offices of the Bank of Montreal and some of the finest offices of the town of Rimouski. The building now being rented is a match box, 37 feet by 25 feet, belonging to Mr. Asselin. For the minister's private information I would like to give him a little history in connection with this building. I wonder if he is aware that the chief engineer, Mr. Amyot, is the father-in-law of the proprietor of the building? I wonder if he is aware that the assistant engineer, Mr. Trudeau, is the son-in-law of Mr. Amyot and the brother-in-law of the proprietor of the building, Mr. Asselin? I wonder if he is aware that the vice president of the local committee on patronage, Mr. Simard, who came to Ottawa with the proprietor and the assistant engineer, is also the son-in-law of the chief engineer, Mr. Amyot, brother-in-law of the assistant engineer, Mr. Trudeau, and also brother-in-law of the proprietor of the building, Mr. Asselin? We have before us a conglomeration of in-laws which is pretty hard to understand, but it explains why the departmental engineers at Rimouski were so anxious to leave the best building in the town in order to occupy the flimsy fire trap they are occupying at the present time.

Before this building was rented by the department it was considered to be one of the poorest buildings in the town. It had been vacant for nearly three years but the moment the government changed the young generation, the young wolves who were extremely hungry, went to the chief engineer and proposed to him that he should advance sufficient money in order to enable the proprietor to convert his building into an office building to be rented by the engineer. Two floors and one fourth of the ground floor are being rented by the engineers, the remainder still being vacant. I would advise the minister to send someone with an unbiased mind to inspect this building in order to determine the true rental. I will guarantee that the proprietor of that building could not get $50 per month rental in the open market for the whole building. I will go further and say that $1,000 per year would be an outrageous rental to pay for that building.

An hon. MEMBER: What rental is being paid?

Sir EUGENE FISET: It is either $1,850 or $1,800, I am not sure.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is $1,800.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Does the hon. minister know that the municipal assessment of the building at the present time is $2,800? Does the hon. minister know that his department is assigning $150 per month to the Banque Canadienne Nationale, which in ten months will cover the balance of the capital expended in remodelling this building. The utmost that would be paid for that building is $6,000. Does the minister therefore think that he is paying a reasonable rental for such a building? Let him bear in mind the family association that came to him here to induce him to take that building. It is nothing less than a scandal in the town of Rimouski, and I may tell the minister that at the present time his department is the laughing stock of our whole population.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I want to thank my hon. friend for the interesting information he has given me as to the relationships of these families in Rimouski.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I was decent enough to notify the minister in advance that I was going to discuss the matter.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I admit that, and I want to thank my hon. friend for the interesting information he has given as to these relationships, but perhaps it is not necessary for me to remind him that I am not responsible for them.

Mr. POULIOT: You are not the ancestor.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am rather inclined to think that these relationships in that vicinity have existed for some time. Perhaps they would be complete if these families could trace relationship to my hon. friend himself.

This lease was made in the regular way. I was not visited, nor importuned, nor asked, as far as I know, by any member of this interesting family to enter into this lease.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Your answer says that your engineer is the head of the family.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He recommended it as the engineer, in the regular way, and he is the one from whom in the ordinary course we would receive a report on the accommodation being provided. The former rental was the same as the present rental. Our reports show that the accommodation that is provided is superior to the accommodation that we enjoyed before.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Even as to the quality of the building.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Both as to space and in every other way it is superior accommodation. Not only is the space provided, but the lessor attends to all repairs during the currency of the lease, pays taxes and water rates, and provides heating, lighting, cleaning and toilet accommodations. All that is worth something and must be taken into consideration in addition to the actual value of the building.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Were not all these provided under the old lease?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, but the point I am trying to make, and which I think my hon. friend will admit is a fair one, is that you must take something else into consideration besides the actual value of the building when all these services are provided.

Sir EUGENE FISET: They were all provided before.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And they are provided in this building. So I say you must take into consideration the value of the services as well as the actual value of the property. I would say to my hon. friend that I propose to inquire into this transaction and to investigate matters around Rimouski, and if I find that there have been any irregularities, that any official has been guilty of neglect of duty or has in any way imposed improperly upon the department, he will not be very long in his position.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I rise simply to thank the minister for his last statement. That is all I was asking. I want to deal fairly with him and his department.

Mr. POULIOT: Now that we are away from Rimouski, may we stop at Trois Pistoles for a moment?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you. The other day I asked the minister this question:

Is the minister aware that that very building has been condemned by the board of health?

The Minister replied:

This is the first intimation that I have received of anything of that nature.

I want to say just a few words about the post office at Trois Pistoles. The building was condemned by the board of health of the province of Quebec.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson): This discussion is out of order, but will be quite in order under vote 191. I suggest that the hon. member defer his remarks until we reach that item; otherwise on this item we may be discussing buildings all over the province of Quebec.

Mr. POULIOT: I am ready to bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but I would stress the fact that I asked for and received the minister's permission to speak. I wish to be very courteous to him because he is a friend of mine.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have no objection to my hon. friend completing his discussion right here and now.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister very much. Let me say at once that I do not wish to put the blame on him but on the people in my constituency who made the recommendations. The report of the board of health was sent to the Deputy Minister of Public Works on May 5, 1930, and the receipt of it acknowledged on the following day, as follows:

Dear Mr. Pouliot,—

I have yours of the 5th instant with enclosed copy of report in regard to existing conditions at the post office at Trois Pistoles, and in reply may say that the representations made have been carefully noted in connection with the request at present under consideration by the department for a public building at this place.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) J. B. Hunter,
Deputy Minister.

I will quote a paragraph from the letter of the director of the board of health. I translate:

I entirely approve of the report, and I strongly recommend that the actual conditions should be remedied with the shortest possible delay.

I shall not take the time of the committee to read the whole report, but I will give the conclusions of the report made by Dr. B. Blaudet, medical officer at Riviere du Loup, and dated April 10, 1930:

Mr. Director,—

According to the attached plans and the figures given in this report, it is easy to see that the present post office in the town of Trois Pistoles is not at all satisfactory, and that the lodging of the postmaster should be more sanitary.

As for the changes to be made, I believe it is a matter that should be decided by the Minister of Public Works at Ottawa.

The rental for the post office was $360, as the minister may easily verify from his own files. The rental stood at that figure for several years until the new building was constructed.

On September 11, 1929, Mr. T. W. Fuller, chief architect, sent a report to Mr. Arthur Pouliot, Esq., clerk of works, at the custom house, Quebec. The report is headed "Re Post Office accommodation, Trois-Pistoles, P.Q.," and goes on to state that a copy of a resolution dated March 4, 1929, had been received from the secretary-treasurer of the municipal council of the town of Trois-Pistoles, stating that the council authorities—are prepared to enlarge the town hall building and requesting that the department enter into a new ten-year lease for space for postal purposes at $800 per annum. (2) Letter of acknowledgment, dated April 3, 1929, requesting a plan showing the proposed enlargement and improvements estimated to cost $4,000 on which the increased rental would be based. (3) Letter, dated September 4, 1929, from the secretary-treasurer of the town of Trois-Pistoles, enclosing plans and specifications of the proposed changes.

I have only this to say that the town of Trois-Pistoles was at that time ready to make those improvement if the rent was increased from $360 to $800. According to information the hon. gentleman has given me I learn that the rent at the present time is a thousand dollars per annum. Am I right?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: First of all, as I have said the council was ready to improve that building for a rental of $800 per year. Now they have received a thousand dollars. I wonder why this year more money is asked than was asked in 1929, which is not so long ago. The town of Trois-Pistoles has been asking for money from the unemployment relief fund to enlarge the city hall so as to provide better postal accommodation. They are allowed to spend $6,000. Three thousand of that is paid by the provincial and federal governments and three thousand by the city. The sum is a little greater than it was in 1929. However, according to some information I received on January 16, 1931, from the Minister of Labour at Quebec, I learn that the $6,000 included some other works besides the enlargement of the city hall for post office purposes. The letter of the hon. gentleman is as follows—translating from French into English.

Mr. Jean-François Pouliot, C.R., M.P.,
Rivière-du-Loup, Témiscouata.

Dear Sir:

I have received your letter of January 15th inst. You will find underneath the information asked for with regard to the grant to the town of Trois-Pistoles from the unemployment relief fund. Six thousand dollars at 50 per cent for the enlargement of the city hall, for central sewer route, and the opening up of a new street.

It is mentioned that the above mentioned works will be executed only for the amount granted. I understand that they will do only part of those works. With best regards.

J. N. Francoeur, Minister.

That grant included other items. In view of the fact that a report has been given by the board of health to the effect that the building was unhealthy, unsanitary and in very bad condition, did the minister stipulate in the deed that the building should be put in proper condition before any increased rental payment would be made to the town? What are the reasons the rent had been so greatly increased? The point is, that those works were first estimated at $4,000. The work which was to be done there was arranged on a very generous scale. The interest at 5 per cent on $4,000 is $200. The increase in the rent is $640. On the amount that is being spent by the town an interest of over 15 per cent would be required. I wonder if the people who have made a request in that direction have convinced the minister that it would be fair to pay such a rate of interest to the town without first asking town officials to reduce the taxes. The people of Trois-Pistoles will receive no advantage whatever. The money will be spent on a very ugly and dirty building; I wonder what stand the government will take in that respect. May I say further to the hon. minister, that there is no saving for the government, because a rental of $1,000 a year means the interest on $20,000 at 5 per cent, exactly the amount which had been voted for the building of a new post office at that place, a post office which would have been a real asset to the country at large.

Before taking my seat, may I ask the hon. gentleman why the rent has been increased from $360 to $1,000 per year, and if the plans which have been submitted by the town to the department have been approved. Further, I would ask if the rent has already been paid or if it will be paid only after those improvements have been made.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think the best way to answer the hon. member is to give a short, concise, and complete history of the whole transaction. The lease was an old one and the rental being paid in this town was very low. The department desired to secure better accommodation, and the municipality came forward with the proposition to give us the desired accommodation in the municipal building. I submit that hon. members of this committee, as reasonable business men, will agree that when an opportunity is presented to the Dominon government to rent from a municipality suitable accommodation for its postal service, and such offer is accepted, the government is thereby rendering a service to the municipality concerned. The fact is that in the last estimates $20,000 was appropriated for a post office at this town. My hon. friend seems to be annoyed and disappointed that this $20,000 was not expended. Let us see what the expenditure would have actually amounted to. The vote was $20,000. From our experience it is reasonable to suppose that the cost of the building would have exceeded the estimates by $5,000 or $10,000. Interest on $30,000 at 5 per cent would be $1,500; caretakers' remuneration $500 or $600, perhaps more; then there would be heating and maintenance to pay for. The annual expenditure for the postal accommodation would have run into between $2,000 and $3,000. We have secured suitable quarters for $1,000 a year. I submit that this commendable economy will inure to the benefit not only of the municipality directly concerned, but of Canada as a whole. Personally, whenever an opportunity is presented of doing any like service to the public, I propose to embrace it. The lease is for five years and covers a portion of the ground floor of an annex to the city hall. We do not have to provide for caretaking or any similar expense. The lessor has to pay taxes, if any, and provide water, heat, light, cleaning, insurance and look after snow removal and large and small repairs. The transaction was carefully considered before being entered into, and I think it is in the interests of all concerned. We have a resolution from the local council approving the course taken by the department. It seems to me that it can be justified from every standpoint.

Mr. POULIOT: Does the lease contain a provision for its cancellation by the government within a certain time?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, it is a straight five-year lease without any provision for cancellation. My hon. friend said the condition of the building was unsanitary. It is difficult to believe that any municipal corporation would maintain a building in an unsanitary condition. In any event the provincial authorities have control over such matters, and I do not think there is anything to fear on this ground. We are certainly going to insist that the accommodation be sufficient and that it be maintained in a proper sanitary condition.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the hon. minister for his statement. It is perfectly true that the provincial authorities have control over sanitation, and therefore the director of health condemned the building as being unsanitary. The town has been very neglectful in regard to the sanitary condition of the building. Will the minister inform me if increased rent was paid to the town authorities before the improvements in the accommodation were made?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The information which I have under my hand does not state when the instalments of rent are payable. I am sorry I cannot tell my hon. friend whether any rent has yet been paid.

Mr. POULIOT: I desire again to direct the minister's attention to this fact, that during last winter the carpenters, labourers and other workingmen in the district had no work. I state this of my own personal knowledge because some of those men came to me for charity. If the building provided for in last year's estimates had been undertaken, those men would have had an opportunity to work and would have been saved the bitter humiliation of having to seek charity to tide them over the winter. Trois Pistoles, I admit, is not a big urban centre, but it is the second town in my constituency, and any hon. members who may motor to Gaspé this summer will have an opportunity of seeing it. The building in which accommodation has been leased by the government is very ugly, and as I have already stated, in an unsanitary condition. Apparently the local Tories frustrated my efforts to provide work for the artisans and labourers of the community, simply because the item of $20,000 was placed in the estimates as the result of a request that I had transmitted to the former Minister of Public Works. I hope in future the hon. minister will be very careful in dealing with any representations he may receive from those hard-hearted Tories.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I hope some day to go down through my hon. friend's county, and I shall be pleased to drop into Trois Pistoles.

Mr. POULIOT: I invite the hon. minister to do so, and I shall be very pleased to receive him at home; indeed, I will give a cocktail party for him.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I accept the invitation at once.

Mr. ST-PERE: We will all be there.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Now, will the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Girouard) allow me to give him some information which I had not at hand when he asked for it. Advertisements for tenders were inserted in the following papers:

Victoriaville; La Voix des Bois Francs; Ste. Marie de Beauce, Le Guide; Sherbrooke, The Record, and The Forum; Ottawa, The Canada Gazette.

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Chairman, before we deal with the individual items under this vote I desire for a few moments to refer to a statement which the minister read when the committee met this afternoon. This statement was given in response to my request a few days ago for certain information with regard to the appropriations and expenditures for 1930-31. In looking over the statement, I notice, as the minister said—and this, of course, includes only the Public Works department—that a total of $38,099,727.70 was voted at the general session of 1930, of which only $32,981,613.74 was expended—or a balance unexpended of $5,118,113.96. In answer to the member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) the hon. minister sought to set up an alibi by stating that other governments had done the same thing, that is, not expended the full amount of the vote. I am surprised that because previous governments, and especially Liberal governments, had not expended the full amount appropriated that the minister should use that as an excuse for not spending money voted before the Conservative government came into power last August. It is quite true that this money was voted three or four weeks before parliament was dissolved, but the present government had an opportunity in August, September, October and November, of spending this $5,000,000 odd,—or perhaps more, because it is quite likely that some of the $38,000,000 was expended during those months. I say it is a pretty small excuse for the Conservative government and for the Minister of Public Works to give, as a reason why this money was not expended, that the previous administration, in former years, did not spend the money which was voted by this parliament. May I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that there was a different condition existing last year than existed in 1929, in 1928 and in previous years. This country was prosperous during those years and perhaps there was not the necessity for spending public money in this country.

However, this government came into power; almost immediately they were compelled to call a special session of parliament to vote money for unemployment purposes, and they did vote $20,000,000. What I want to ask the minister now is why, when he had $5,000,000 in his hands voted by this parliament, he did not spend that money and tell the Prime Minister there was no need to vote $20,000,000 for unemployment, that the only thing necessary at the special session was to vote $20,000,000 less $5,000,000.

The whole trouble was just as the hon. member for Quebec East said. If you look over this list you find that in the province of Alberta, which is represented by the Prime Minister, practically all the money voted last year was expended. The same thing applies to the province represented by the Minister of Public Works; in Ontario nearly all the money voted last year by the Liberal government was spent by him and his colleagues after the Liberal government went out of office and the Conservative party took over the ministerial benches. But in Quebec, in Nova Scotia and in the other provinces, I notice a different condition exists. Let us take Nova Scotia, for instance; $302,000 was voted for public buildings while only $126,000 was expended. Unemployment relief was just as necessary there as in any other province, but $170,000 was left unexpended by the Minister of Public Works. Has he the same inferiority complex with regard to Nova Scotia that is held by some few people in the province of Ontario, and that was expressed by the Ottawa Journal, for instance, in its editorial two days ago, in which it tried to make out that the people of the maritimes were always coming to this government and asking for money? Is that why the money was not spent? Take New Brunswick; $81,125 was voted for public buildings last year and only $51,000 was expended. Again I ask the Minister of Public Works whether he suffers from that inferiority complex, coming from the province of Ontario, and if he does not want to give the maritime provinces a fair show in connection with the expenditure of public money. The same thing applies to Quebec. The sum of $1,509,695 was voted by this parliament last year for public buildings, but the Minister of Public Works, as soon as the Conservative party came into power and he occupied his present important position, cut that expenditure down to $600,000, leaving $900,000 unexpended.

Now let us take harbours and rivers in the different provinces. The Liberal government voted $1,263,728 for harbours and rivers in the province of Nova Scotia, and $229,000 of that money remains unexpended. I could go right down the list. Quebec, for instance has $600,000 unexpended; British Columbia has $100,000 unexpended, and so on. As I said before, the total amount unexpended is something over $5,000,000, but here is the principal point I want to make in regard to this matter. In my remarks a few days ago I showed that whoever was responsible for making up these estimates did not make them up in a business-like or correct manner, and the first hon. gentleman to object to my statement was the Minister of Public Works. I proved, I think to the satisfaction of every business man who listened to me or who read my statement, that instead of a saving of $37,000,000 in the estimates this year, there was in fact, and only on the surface, a saving of only $12,000,000.

To-day I am going further, and this is the reason I asked for the statement which the Minister of Public Works was good enough to hand me this afternoon. This statement shows that although this $38,000,000 appears in the estimates, only $32,000,000 was expended, and in other words there is a difference of over $5,000,000. If you take that $5,000,000 from the $12,000,000 which I showed the other day was the real decrease in the estimates, instead of there being a saving of $37,000,000 as this book shows, there is only a saving of some $7,000,000. Let me go a little further. In 1930, when the Liberal government was in power, under item XVII, "Public Works—income," the Liberal government voted $25,000,000. When my right hon. friend the Prime Minister came into power, surrounded by his able cabinet—

Mr. MANION: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUFF: I include in that my friend the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who did not say anything. When the Prime Minister gathered this great aggregation around him and wanted to show that he was going to economize, the first thing he did—presumably with the consent of the Minister of Public Works—was to turn to the maritime provinces. The estimates were reduced from $25,000,000, which was voted last year by the Liberal government for public works, to $17,000,000 this year, a difference of $8,000,000. So if you add the $8,000,000 to the $5,000,000 which was unexpended, and deduct $12,000,000 from that, you will find that instead of the Tory government saving $37,000,000 they are actually $1,000,000 behind the Liberal government.

I might go further and show that this so-called saving claimed by the Tory government is only a figment of their imagination, because in addition to saving the money which I mentioned a moment ago they were able to reduce expenditure in the Interior department, for example, and certainly the government does not deserve any credit because they dismissed or fired from seven hundred to one thousand employees and thereby saved a great sum of money in the estimates. I will say, however, that they do deserve credit for reducing the estimates of the Minister of National Defence. I am only sorry that poor Roch Lanctot, one of the former members for Quebec, is not here to read the estimates and see that after all the years he fought to get the estimates of the Department of National Defence reduced, this is the first year that has happened.

Mr. GOTT: Believe it or not.

Mr. DUFF: Yes, believe it or not, but the fact remains that when all this talk that has gone out in the newspapers throughout the country, of a reduction of $37,000,000 in the estimates, is boiled down it merely comes to this, that instead of reducing the estimates $37,000,000 this government has not saved one dollar except at the expense of the country and by starving the various services. In other words, this government has been penny wise and pound foolish in reducing certain items.

Take for example the province of Nova Scotia. As I said a moment ago, some $200,000 was unexpended last year, but that is not the worst of the picture. Not only was there $200,000 unexpended last year, but what do we find in the main estimates this year, when the government has ten supporters from that province? Do we find as much money as was voted last year, when there were only three members supporting the government? We do not; we find a reduction of something like $200,000 as compared with last year.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Last year there was an election.

Mr. DUFF: That is quite right, and let me say to my hon. friend from Cape Breton, whom I helped get through this house a vote for the new Waterford post office, that not only in election years but in previous years there have been large expenditures in the maritime provinces. Take my own constituency, for example; during the four years from 1926 to 1930, when I represented Antigonish-Guysborough, I secured $600,000 for those two counties. This year there is only $2,100 in the estimates for Antigonish-Guysborough. This year, when we have ten members from Nova Scotia supporting the government, ten members who could go and no doubt went to the hon. member who represents an Ontario constituency, and who is Minister of Public Works, asking for more money to be spent in that province, there is $200,000 less in the estimates than was the case last year.

And do not forget that most of the estimates appearing in this list to-day are not new moneys at all; they are either re-votes or expenditures in connection with repairs which it is impossible to avoid. I do not say it is because my hon. friends have no influence with the government; I do not know what the reason is. But I hope that when the supplementary estimates come down every hon. member supporting the government on the opposite side from Nova Scotia will see that, instead of this condition of affairs which we have to-day, there will be a decent vote for each of the different counties of Nova Scotia.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If I sent another sheet of figures across to my hon. friend I suppose he would be able to prove that there had been no expenditures anywhere in Canada. He was speaking about Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec in relation to harbours and rivers, and he complained that in the province of Quebec there had been unexpended the sum of $606,600 on harbours and rivers. If he will go to Ontario he will find that the amount unexpended is larger than that—$731,643.20. He did not make that comparison.

Mr. POWER: The amount voted was nearly a million larger.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, but the proportion is about the same.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, approximately the same.

Mr. DUFF: The figures the minister gave me are wrong, then.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, they are not wrong. Now, my hon. friend was speaking about the excuse for not expending the moneys We are not looking for excuses; we are giving the reasons—perfectly good reasons. As my hon. friend knows, these expenditures are made from revenues, and the revenues declined. But let me suggest that in the prior years to which he referred, when the revenues were not declining, when in fact they were abundant, there was no excuse for the failure of the government to expend a larger sum than we failed to expend in the last year. Then he speaks about Nova Scotia and complains that the expenditure there this year is not as large as it should be. Well, he cannot charge this on political grounds, surely. With the number of representatives we have from the province of Nova Scotia, it is apparent that there is no attempt to make expenditures on political grounds. He must agree with that.

Mr. DUFF: I certainly agree that the lack of expenditures is not on political grounds; I certainly agree with that. I am sorry the minister did not understand me. What I said was that there are certain reasons why a few people in Ontario do not appreciate the importance of Nova Scotia, and I am afraid the Minister of Public Works is one of those people. I said I thought that some people in Ontario had an inferiority complex. Now is that plain enough?

An hon. MEMBER: A superiority complex.

Mr. DUFF: No, inferiority. Get that straight. Then my hon. friend says that the reason why he did not spend this money last year was that the revenues decreased. The hon. gentleman evidently does not know enough about business to realize that when the Liberal party went out of power last year they left a surplus of some eighty million dollars in the treasury. The money which went to make up the estimates of last year was voted out of money that was in the treasury at the time, before we went out of power; consequently my hon. friend has no right to make the statement that he did not spend the money because the revenues were not sufficient. It is true that as soon as the Tory party got into power a blight came over the country. Providence has never favoured the Tory party ever since I can remember. As soon as the Tory party has come into power, whether from 1878 to 1896, or from 1911 to 1921, this country has gone to the dogs. The only time the country was prosperous was when the Liberal party was in power. My hon. friend surely could not say that when we left them in 1911 with a surplus of $37,000,000, and in 1930 with a surplus of $80,000,000, that was the reason he did not expend the money. That will not go down with any man who has any business sense at all and who understands the financial condition of this country. There is no reason why the money was not expended except that my hon. friend did not went to spend it. It was voted by a Liberal government, and he said, "I presume it was to be spent in Liberal constituencies, or constituencies represented by Liberals," and so he would see that the money was not expended. He would do that to teach the electorate a lesson. I notice in the estimates that there is only $2,100 for my constituency. I am quite satisfied; it shows the difference between the Tory candidate in the county and myself.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. EULER: I note that the total estimate for Ontario is reduced almost 50 per cent. Unlike my hon. friend from Nova Scotia, I will find no fault with that, even if there is nothing whatever for the constituency I represent; we did not ask for anything. I would ask the minister, however, to give some explanation with regard to some of the larger items. Take the first item, Belleville public building, addition to site, $20,000. Does this mean that a site is purchased contiguous to the public building there, and is it the intention to erect another building or an addition to a public building at present on that site?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The proposition is to acquire some additional land adjacent to the post office in the city of Belleville for needed extensions.

Mr. EULER: Which will be in the estimates in the succeeding year.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. EULER: Does the department consider it a good practice to purchase a site, leave it vacant, expend money and not erect the building at about the same time?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is a good practice to purchase a site when it is in the market at a good price, and the conditions in Belleville in that respect are peculiar at this time. If the property is not secured in the near future, it will probably be lost and will have to be expropriated or acquired at a much greater cost.

Mr. EULER: One hears at times of sites being purchased. I have in mind one in the constituency of Prince Rupert purchased some years ago at a cost of some $100,000. Some $20,000 was spent in digging a basement out of solid rock, and the property has never been made use of since; it is still there. I want to caution the minister against that practice. I wish to ask for some explanation of what appear to be new public buildings in some of the towns and cities in Ontario. Take, for instance, the following: Fort William, $50,000 for a public building —perhaps I should say the city of Fort William in deference to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion). Then Guelph, $50,000; New Liskeard, $61,000; Penetanguishene, $57,000; Stratford, $41,000. Are these new buildings, and what is the purpose of the appropriation?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As regards Fort William, the amount of $50,000 is to provide for the purchase of a site for the erection thereon of a public building for the accommodation of all government services there.

Mr. EULER: Is the reason the same as that given with respect to Belleville—the time is opportune to secure the site?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is there a land boom at Fort William?

Mr. MANION: No, I wish there were.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I hope not, for the purposes of this vote; I hope there is a land depression there temporarily. What was the next item?

Mr. EULER: The next one is Guelph; That is also for a public building, $50,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is to provide for the erection of a public building at Guelph to accommodate all the government services, which are at the present time very much overcrowded. The population is 19,000, the postal revenue $101,567 and the customs revenue $760,549.

Mr. EULER: Is this amount merely for a site, or is it for a new building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is to make a beginning towards a new building. Since 1919 demands have been received for a building.

Mr. EULER: You have to have a site before you can erect a building. Is this for the purchase of a site or does it include a portion of the cost of the building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This vote will be for the purchase of a site. I do not know what the site will cost; if there is anything left, it will go towards the construction of a building.

Mr. EULER: I suppose the same reason would apply—the real estate market is down at the present time and it is advisable to buy now. There is an appropriation of $670,000 for the Toronto customs house; does that complete the building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That was a contract undertaken, as my hon. friend knows, by the previous administration. It is now well under way. This vote is required to complete the existing contract. It will not complete the building, as there will have to be another extension made some time.

Mr. EULER: I am quite interested in this because it was initiated while I was in the Department of National Revenue. How much will be required to complete the whole contract, and has anything been added to the original contract?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Nothing has been added to the contract. The contract was for $2,057,000 and this amount is required to complete it. There will be some small items in addition, but I do not anticipate they will amount to very much.

Mr. EULER: I have no fault to find with that. When may we expect the completion of the building? As I remember, it is very badly needed.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We hope to have it completed in July of this year.

Mr. EULER: Why should not an amount be included in the estimates to complete the building if it is intended to complete it in July?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As my hon. friend knows, it is contemplated to make an extension to the west some time in the future.

Mr. EULER: Does this vote include equipment and furnishing of the building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. EULER: There is another item in connection with the city of Windsor, a combined public building and Canadian National Railways terminal, $100,000.

Sir EUGENE FISET: A Canadian National station.

Mr. EULER: Yes. I have some recollection of being in Windsor and noting that the customs building—I think it is a combined post office and customs building—is situated in a very valuable part of the city. I think the suggestion was made at that time that that land should be sold and the moneys applied to the erection of a public building so that practically no additional appropriation would be required. Will the minister advise the committee if he has that plan under consideration, and exactly what the $100,000 is intended to cover? Perhaps he would give us some little explanation as to what the government expects to do in Windsor.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is a revote of an item which appeared in the estimates of last year. The Canadian National Railways need a station very badly in the city of Windsor, and it was suggested that accommodation might be provided in the building which they would erect, in return for which we would contribute to the cost. Negotiations have been proceeding along that line and this is simply a revote of an item which appeared last year for that purpose. If cooperation is secured this amount will be used; if not, we will have to consider what other steps will be taken.

Mr. EULER: I am not criticizing the vote made last year, but I should like to know what is to be done with the $100,000. The erection of a joint public building to include a terminal station for the Canadian National Railways will require more than $100,000. Perhaps the hon. minister can give the committee a little more definite information as to what the scheme implies and involves.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It would be similar to the arrangement which exists in Toronto, where the easterly end of the terminal buildings is used as a postal station. We paid for that as the building was being erected.

Mr. EULER: Will a capital expenditure be made by the Canadian National Railways and rental paid by the federal government for the use of the premises? I think that is what was done in Toronto; I do not think the federal government contributed to the erection of the building as a capital expenditure.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am told that as the work went along we contributed towards the capital expenditure based on progress estimates, and this is to be a similar arrangement.

Mr. EULER: That is, we have an actual ownership in the Toronto union station building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We have an actual ownership; we own that easterly portion of it.

Mr. EULER: And the government proposes to make a similar arrangement in Windsor?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is the basis of this vote.

Mr. SANDERSON: Can the minister give the committee some information regarding the amounts spent in Ontario out of the unemployment relief fund? I am particularly interested in what are known as public buildings. I understand that certain amounts were expended in Ontario out of that fund through the provincial government and the municipalities, and I would like to know what buildings were erected, and their cost.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think my answer would apply to other questions which have been asked; no expenditures have been made through the Public Works department for the relief of unemployment.

Mr. SANDERSON: Do I understand the minister to say that no amounts were spent in Ontario out of that fund?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): None of the $20,000,000 was expended through the Public Works department; it was all expended in cooperation with the provinces and municipalities, through the Department of Labour, and was administered by that department. We have no information in this department as to those expenditures; as far as I know there were no expenditures on Dominion public buildings made out of that fund.

Mr. SANDERSON: I quite understand that no money was spent for unemployment relief by the Public Works department, but I believe some money was spent on public buildings which will eventually come under the jurisdiction of the federal Public Works department.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not know of any expenditure on a building which will come under the control of this department. The unemployment relief was an undertaking in partnership of cooperation with the municipalities and the provinces, and the expenditures were made on municipal and provincial works. No expenditures were made on Dominion work as such.

Mr. SANDERSON: Would that answer apply to the other provinces as well? Were there no amounts spent out of that fund on public buildings in any of the other provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No amounts expended out of that fund for Dominion public buildings in any province.

Mr. FACTOR: Did I understand the minister to say that the amount of $670,000 for the Toronto customs house will complete the first unit of that undertaking?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is correct. It will complete what my hon. friend knows to be under construction there.

Mr. FACTOR: Does the minister propose to carry out in their entirety the plans for the Toronto customs house as originally drawn?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is no provision in the estimates for any extension of the work this year.

Mr. FACTOR: I quite appreciate that, but what I wish to know is this: The government has not abandoned the plans and does not consider this as completing the entire scheme for the customs house?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Oh, no. There is no abandonment of the plan. As time goes on and circumstances warrant, I have no doubt that the building will be completed.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The minister a few moments ago stated, quite correctly, that no part of the $20,000,000 voted last fall had been spent by the Public Works department on public buildings, but what we want to ascertain is whether any part of that amount was used to construct public buildings which later on may be owned by the Public Works department.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): So far as I know, there has been no expenditure such as my hon. friend refers to.

Mr. SANDERSON: Will the minister endeavour to get that information and give it to the committee?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think that information will be given to the house in another way through the regular channel, namely, by the minister who must report on the expenditures under the appropriation for unemployment relief. I would not like to undertake to go into another department to get that information.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The minister must realize that the Minister of Labour has not a seat in this house.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sure that all the information will come down. When it does I am pretty well assured that it will be complete in every detail, and I hope that it will be pleasing to the house.

Mr. SANDERSON: It was distinctly understood, I think, by hon. members in the emergency session held last fall—if you look up Hansard I think you will find it mentioned many times—that part of the $20,000,000 would be spent for federal public buildings in different parts of the Dominion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am sorry I have not Hansard here, but my hon. friends I think are mistaken when they say, "no, no." Apparently the minister is quite willing to give any and all information that he can, and I do think it is a reasonable request that he should get that information and give it to the committee.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): All I can say is that the Minister of Public Works tried very hard to get a part of that $20,000,000 to spend, and he did not succeed. As I recall the debate and the statement of the Minister of Finance at that time, some mention may have been made of public works, but the Public Works department received no money from that source. I think my hon. friend might very well await the statement of the Minister of Labour as to the expenditure in his department.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am not altogether satisfied with the answer of the minister. He says that he does not know of any such expenditures. Will he be good enough to find out definitely? If there have been no such expenditures, well and good.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am able to state definitely that no expenditure of any part of the $20,000,000 has been made through the Public Works department.

Mr. SANDERSON: Not through the Public Works department—that was not my question. I would not expect it would be spent through the Public Works department, but I would expect it would be spent for public buildings which eventually would come under the control of the Public Works department or which are now under its control.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What type of public building has my hon. friend in mind?

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister is more conversant with public buildings than I am. I mean any kind of federal public building —post office, custom house or any other.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can only assure my hon. friend that not a dollar of the twenty million has gone into post offices or any public buildings constructed under the authorilty of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not mean constructed under the authority of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is the only authority under which public buildings are constructed except such buildings as are constructed by the Department of National Defence and one or two other departments.

Mr. SANDERSON: Was there not a special provision in connection with the twenty million dollar appropriation for the relief of unemployment that some of it would be spent for the erection of public buildings?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. SANDERSON: Or public works?

Mr. MANION: Largely municipal public works such as sewers, and that kind of thing.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not mean sewers and that kind of thing.

Mr. MANION: Those are public works, but municipal public works.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The grant was left open to be appropriated by the governor in council, and appropriations have not been made for public buildings.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think there is a large building going up in Regina for the World's Grain Congress, constructed out of that fund.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Not built by the Public Works department.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, but out of the $20,000,000.

Mr. EULER: In connection with the vote of $61,000 for a public building at New Liskeard, $10,000 of which is a re-vote, $15,000 having been voted last year, am I to assume that that is now under contract?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. EULER: What is the purpose of this vote of $61,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is to construct the building. Plans are being prepared and, when ready, tenders will be called and the building probably constructed.

Mr. EULER: Is the same true with respect to the public building at Penetanguishene, for which there is a vote of $57,000, part of which is a re-vote?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is to acquire the site and construct the building.

Mr. EULER: It includes both?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. HEENAN: In connection with the minister's reply to the question of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Factor) with respect to the customs house there, and the minister's assurance that it would be completed at some time in the future, can he assure the committee that there will be no cessation of work on the building in the meantime?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There will be no cessation of work in respect of existing contracts; that is all.

Mr. HEENAN: According to the estimates there is a reduction of approximately $1,250,000 in the expenditure on public buildings in Ontario this year. In view of the unemployment situation in this province, does the minister consider it a good thing to reduce the expenditure on necessary public buildings and at the same time grant employment relief through other channels?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can only repeat what I have mentioned frequently, that these buildings are constructed out of the revenues, and we are going as far as we think the revenues of Canada warrant in the construction of public buildings at the present time.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not think the minister got my point. Last year we voted $20,000,000 to make grants to the provinces and municipalities for unemployment relief. After all is said and done, the revenues come from the taxpayers of Canada, whether they be collected by the municipalities, the provinces or the federal government. My thought is that we might well have gone on with our building program and spent money in that way through the construction of necessary public buildings. As the minister said, the revenue of the country has to be considered. If however we are going to spend it, would it not be better to spend it on our own public works rather than hand it out to some other body to spend in some other way?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think my hon. friend will agree that the manner of spending the money is a matter of policy. He has laid down, I believe the principle that the relief of unemployment is primarily a provincial and municipal matter, and that the federal government may properly assist when unemployment becomes acute. Undoubtedly he will agree with me that funds providing for the relief of unemployment should be fluid and available for expenditure where unemployment exists in the greatest measure. If an item were placed in the estimates the funds would be available for expenditure only on that particular work at that particular place, so that an item in the estimates would not meet an emergency as effectively as a direct vote for the relief of unemployment when from time to time urgent conditions arise. The principle has been adopted of securing knowledge of local conditions through the cooperation of the provinces and municipalities. On reflection I think my hon. friend will agree that the direct vote is better fitted to give a greater measure of relief than is a fixed amount in the estimates for some particular place where unemployment may not be acute. On the other hand it might so happen that such moneys would not be available where conditions were unfavourable. Expenditure on public buildings does not always afford as effective measure of unemployment relief as the making of funds available for expenditure on other works. For instance, under the statute the department has the power to make contracts for public buildings. We may enter into a contract to complete a building by July 1 of next year. Yet the contractor is his own master; he alone controls the number of men he employs, where he will secure his material, and when he will do the work. For those reasons the department would be unable to give that measure of relief to unemployment which might reasonably be expected.

Mr. HEENAN: I agree that there is good reasoning in the argument of the minister. But may I point out that it was a Conservative government which first laid down the principle—by order in council in 1920 and 1921—that unemployment was primarily the responsibility of the municipalities and the provinces. Foolishly I think, we followed suit—and I believe the only time I ever got into trouble was when I followed the example of my hon. friend. However, we proceeded with the building program, and received the thanks of the unemployment conference held in Winnipeg in 1930. We thought that if federal moneys were spent on federal projects and the provinces and municipalities respectively followed a similar course, we would arrive at the same result as is now suggested by my hon. friend. For instance, in Toronto, which, with the exception of the constituency of Toronto West Centre represented by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Factor) is not a Liberal stronghold, we let a contract for a public building aggregating about $3,000,000. At that time there was a great deal of unemployment in Toronto, and the contract provided a considerable amount of labour. The point I wish to make is—

Mr. GEARY: Is that the reason my hon. friend let that contract?

Mr. HEENAN: I agree that the municipalities could probably better tell us where unemployment exists. The government has taken the credit of appropriating $20,000,000 for the relief of unemployment. If however they save five or ten million dollars through not proceeding with public expenditures, that amount should be deducted from the amount for which they take credit.

Mr. FACTOR: Undoubtedly the minister is aware that the government owns the site at the northwest corner of Oxford street and Spadina avenue in the city of Toronto. That particular point happens to be in my constituency. I learn that the site was purchased for the purpose of erecting a branch post office, The former government did not proceed with the building and now that the Conservative government is in power and the member for the locality has changed, I thought perhaps the minister would proceed with the building of the post office.

An hon. MEMBER: There is no revenue.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That site was purchased some time ago. I do not know whether or not conditions in the city of Toronto, which have been rapidly changing, would warrant at the present time the construction of the building. However, the request of my hon. friend will be considered.

Mr. FACTOR: I wish to thank the minister for his courtesy, and would add that a post office building is very badly needed in that particular location.

Mr. POWER: In connection with the discussion which has taken place between the Minister of Public Works and the hon. member for South Perth, I refer the minister to the debates of the last session concerning the expenditure of moneys under the vote of $20,000,000. The Prime Minister is reported at page 65 of Hansard—

Sir EUGENE FISET: Ex cathedra.

Mr. POWER: Yes, speaking ex cathedra, and with all the infallibility of which he is capable. The extract is as follows:

> It is proposed that this money shall be utilized just as the conference held in Ottawa concluded in their resolutions that they should be used. That body being a non-political one, we propose in the broadest and most proper sense of the term to follow that course in dealing with these moneys.
> First there are national undertakings which this country may embark upon—public undertakings, buildings, wharves, piers that might not be constructed until next summer, but a portion of which work might well be done now instead of then. There might be the extension of existing contracts in connection with public undertakings.

Then he states further:

> There are public undertakings which provinces and municipalities will engage in, but which otherwise they would not engage in until perhaps a year from now.

Giving an instance of the work which might be carried on under the vote of $20,000,000, the Prime Minister is reported at page 67 of Hansard as follows:

> I will give an illustration of what I think my hon. friend will at once see covers the case. Work is being carried on in connection with the breakwater, we will say, at the head of the lakes—I give that as an illustration—the parliamentary appropriation has been exhausted; the work could be usefully carried on and give employment to several hundred men for several weeks longer; it would be proposed, at the same unit cost, to continue that work. With respect to public works and similar undertakings, the government has considered no claims of that character at the moment, because I am bound to say as I think my hon. friend will agree, that the estimates passed last session were very generous in their appropriation of public moneys. and we are endeavouring to see that those moneys are expended with a view to providing employment.

This statement of the Prime Minister would seem to me to be a direct contradiction of the policy laid down by the Minister of Public Works. I am sorry the right hon. gentleman is not in the chamber; if he were I would ask him why he allowed the Minister of Public Works to make that statement.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I did not make a statement.

Mr. POWER: I would ask the Prime Minister why he allowed the Minister of Public Works to give the committee the impression this afternoon that none of these moneys were being expended primarily for the purpose of unemployment. Now we find that his leader has laid down that not only were the moneys which were voted last year for public works to be expended, but we were to get something more out of the $20,000,000. That is the situation which the Prime Minister outlined to us at the special session. He said: If there is not enough money left out of the appropriation made in the main session of 1930, we will give you more out of the $20,000,000. Instead of following that policy the hon. minister now says: I am going to save that money.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, he did not say so.

Mr. POWER: He said: In the province of Quebec I will spend $1,500,000 less; in Nova Scotia, so much less; in New Brunswick, so much less; in Prince Edward Island, so much less, and in Manitoba, so much less. As a matter of fact his leader laid down the principle that the first moneys to be expended out of that $20,000,000 were to be applied to continue the erection of public works which were then being undertaken. It seems to me that there is a decided difference between the policies of the right hon. Prime Minister and his Minister of Public Works. In a way I am glad the Prime Minister is not here, because with his usual politeness—may I say?—he might tell the minister that it would have been better for him not to have made the statement which he has made this afternoon. The Prime Minister might have said it more harshly. In all sincerity I suggest to the minister that he discuss this matter fully with his leader and that he get his leader's assent to any statement he may make in the house. Otherwise when his leader reads Hansard—

Mr. SPENCE: You are going too far, and you know it.

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend gives me credit for more generosity than I possess.

Mr. SPENCE: You are just putting on a show.

Mr. POWER: I had the honour and the pleasure of listening to my hon. friend for many years when I was on the other side of the house, and much as I appreciate the courtesy he has always shown us, I think I may remind him that I never have been lacking in courtesy to members on his side. I may tell him that if I stress this matter with the Minister of Public Works it is because the country wants to know just where we are getting. Time and again in this house policies are announced, or it is said that we are going to have an announcement of policy, or there is a splurge in the newspapers, then Humpty Dumpty marches up the hill—only to march down again. That is the situation we have confronting us, and we are spending less on unemployment to-day than under any other administration.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend has quoted from Hansard, and quoted quite correctly; but the Prime Minister did not intend to, and did not do, more than indicate possible lines of expenditure for this money. If my hon. friend will look at the statute he will find tt is provided that the money shall be disposed of by order in council in such way as may be directed. So there was no absolute or definite commission to expend any part of this $20,000,000 on public works as such.

Mr. POWER: Does my hon. friend mean to insinuate that his leader was not definite on anything?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Of course not. As my hon. friend knows, the Prime Minister is very definite and quite able to take care of himself. But if my hon. friend will follow the statute through, he will find that to be the fact, that that was simply an indication of how the money might be used. Subsequently a policy was evolved, and I believe the orders in council asked for have been laid on the table showing the lines on which these expenditures were made. As is now pretty generally understood, they were made in cooperation with the provinces and the municipalities. In that way a larger sum was secured for the relief of unemployment than could have been provided through the expenditures of the whole $20,000,000 on public works. If any different policy from that suggested was adopted, it was because circumstances fully warranted the change, and because the policy finally adopted was better in the public interest, and, as was calculated, has resulted in giving a very much larger measure of relief to unemployment than could have been possible by the method referred to by my hon. friend.

Mr. VENIOT: May I ask the minister if the amount voted in the winter session of 1930 had been expended, would not that have increased the amount provided for unemployment? Did not the Prime Minister by his statement in September give the house and the country to understand that if the money voted in the winter session of 1930 had not been voted, it would have been necessary to vote even more than $20,000,000 for unemployment relief? That is the point which I wish cleared up. We voted the money in 1930 for certain public works. At the time we were discussing in the house the unemployment situation, and the intention of the government of that day in voting the money was to carry on as rapidly as possible the proposed public works to provide employment. The general election takes place, the government of the day is defeated, a new government comes into power, a special session is called in September, and in order to relieve the unemployment situation the Prime Minister states to this house that in addition to the money already voted by parliament it is necessary to vote $20,000,000. That having been done, why hold back the expenditure of the $20,000,000 and give as a reason, as the minister himself has given with respect to certain cases in my county, that the holding back was in consequence of lack of revenue? It was clearly pointed out to the minister by myself personally, and by various letters that he received, that the situation existing in that county was such that the people were practically on the verge of starvation. The necessary expenditure had been authorized by parliament, tenders had been called for, the minister himself recommending that the lowest tender be accepted at a figure of $6,000 less than the cost of the work as estimated by the engineers of the department. After receiving appeal upon appeal the minister's heart was softened, he went to council to recommend that this work be carried out. Yet in the face of those apeals and of the recommendation of the minister himself—I give him credit for his change of heart—the necessary work was cancelled and the people were left almost on the verge of starvation. All that was expended in that district out of the share of the $20,000,000 allotted to New Brunswick—expended on the recommendation of the provincial government—was the small sum of betwen $250 and $300. Now, I take it that in the winter of 1930 money having been voted for these public works, the present Prime Minister having stood up in this house in September and said that in addition to all that money it was necessary to vote $20,000,000 to relieve unemployment, surely there was no reason why these public works should not have been proceeded with even in the middle of winter.

Mr. BERTRAND: I notice an item for alterations to fittings in the public building at Hawkesbury. What is the nature of the alterations?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is an item of $1,500 to provide for alterations to the screen and fittings in the post office at Hawkesbury, as requested by the deputy postmaster general.

Mr. VENIOT: It is quite necessary.

Mr. BERTRAND: I wonder if the minister is aware that this was an extension to the post office building in Hawkesbury and consequently there will need to be some alteration of the fittings. When these alterations are made it will be necessary to have a regular cleaning up of the post office, including new paint, because it looks very bad at the present time. I quite approve of the alterations which are to be made and I would ask the minister to have this building cleaned up. I was in the cellar of that building recently, and from the top to the cellar it is in a very bad state. It should be cleaned up in the interests of public health and for many other reasons. I hope the minister will give this question his kind consideration.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can only say to my hon. friend that expenditures of this kind are made from the general fund for maintenance of buildings. The condition of this post office will be investigated and needed repairs will be made.

Mr. DONNELLY: In this list of appropriations and expenditures with which the minister has furnished us for 1930-31, referring to vote 186 for Ontario, I see that the difference between the appropriations and the expenditures is $332,962. When I refer to the estimates I find at the bottom of the column the words "appropriations not required," and the amount is $539,450. Will the minister kindly explain the difference in those figures?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): These are cases where votes are made for a certain amount and it is found that the full amount is not required or is not expended, and it lapses.

Mr. DONNELLY: But why the difference in the figures? These two sets of figures refer to the same thing, so why should there be a difference of $200,000?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is a matter covering a great many details and a great many cases.

Mr. DONNELLY: I cannot see the reason for the difference. Here we have a list of the appropriations and expenditures, the difference being that part of the appropriations which was not required, which is given as some $332,000. In the other case the amount of $539,000 is given for the same thing. Why should there be any difference?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If my hon. friend would ask for any particular appropriation I could give him the details and the amount.

Mr. DONNELLY: You give us the whole list here, under vote 186 covering Ontario, and at the bottom you say, "appropriations not required, $539,450." Now I take up this statement which was handed us and I find that under vote 186, for the province of Ontario, $2,616,323.95 was appropriated, of which we are told $2,283,361.92 was expended, leaving a difference of approximately $332,000. I am asking only for the reason for the difference between the two sets of figures.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The difference arises from several causes. In some cases the work is started and not completed, while in others the amount required is less than the amount voted, and the difference lapses.

Mr. DONNELLY: I fully realize that, but I am asking the reason for the difference between these two sets of figures, which are for the same year and are supposed to cover the same thing.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is not the same thing, the difference being that we have an appropriation one year and we complete the work the following year.

Mr. RUTHERFORD: Looking over the estimates for public buildings in Ontario I see the town of Wallaceburg has been overlooked. Last session $20,000 was voted for a public building at this point and tenders were called for last September. There is no doubt that Wallaceburg had its share of unemployment, and I think it would have been of great advantage to the town if work had been proceeded with in connection with that building. I should like to know why nothing has been done and why there is nothing in the estimates this year for this building.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The plans for this building were prepared by an outside architect.

Mr. RUTHERFORD: Pardon me, but the plans were prepared by an architect in Chatham, not an architect outside the county of Kent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I meant an architect outside the department; the plans were prepared by a local architect. There was some more or less serious objection raised to the plans after the matter was submitted for consideration, and further representations were made to the effect that the building was not adequate, so other plans had to be prepared.

Mr. RUTHERFORD: I understand that the people of Wallaceburg were perfectly satisfied with the plans, but that apparently when the tenders were opened they were not satisfied with the man who was supposed to receive the contract. Then certain objections were raised to the plans; they wanted two doors instead of one, which was simply an excuse to delay the construction of the building. I should like to know why that construction was not proceeded with.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The objections to the plan were very much more extensive than my hon. friend suggests. With reference to the contractor I can only say that it is the policy of the Department of Public Works to accept the lowest tender, and that policy is rigidly adhered to.

Mr. RUTHERFORD: Why was not the lowest tender accepted?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have given my hon. friend the reasons; it was because of certain objections to the plans. It was suggested that there should be radical changes made in the construction of the building.

Mr. RUTHERFORD: Then after those radical changes were made why was not an appropriation put in the estimates for this year?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): A great many demands have been made for the inclusion of amounts in the estimates to provide for public buildings. We have not been able to meet all those demands this year.

Mr. RUTHERFORD: If I understand the matter correctly, departmental architects prepared the plans and everything was perfectly satisfactory. I should like to know who objected to the proposed design of the building.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The plans were not prepared by our department. They were prepared by an outside architect, as I have said. I do not know just where he resides. My hon. friend's opponent took very serious objection to these plans.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask my hon. friend why a verandah was not built on the Riviere du Loup post office? Tenders were called for and submitted, and it was only a small expenditure of $200 or $300.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I really do not know the facts about that small item.

Mr. POULIOT: Would my hon. friend be good enough to produce the correspondence dealing with the matter?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sure there is no correspondence, but I will look it up.

Mr. RUTHERFORD: Would the minister have any objection to producing the statement of the gentleman who objected to the plans for the Wallaceburg public building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is no written report.

Mr. RUTHERFORD: I should like to see all the correspondence.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The correspondence is on file and there is no objection to producing it.

Mr. SANDERSON: I see the sum of $4,000 for a site at Thorold. Has that site been purchased?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No; this is an appropriation with a view to acquiring a site.

Mr. SANDERSON: In whose constituency is Thorold situated?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In the constituency of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Pettit).

Mr. RUTHERFORD: Will the minister let me have, after eight o'clock, the correspondence for which I asked?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If I can; if not, I will produce it. If my hon. friend will come to the office I will show him everything I have in connection with the matter.

Mr. SANDERSON: The item of $25,000 for Parry Sound is for a public building. This is an entirely new building. Is there a public building there now, and is this an addition?

Mr. ARTHURS: As the member for Parry Sound, perhaps I may answer the question. A building was proposed for Parry Sound. Plans and specifications were prepared and a sufficient vote provided in 1912-13. The advent of the war stopped the construction of the building. Parry Sound, as my hon. friend knows, is a very important town.

Mr. SANDERSON: I take my hon. friend's word for it; I have never been there.

Mr. ARTHURS: It has a very large postal revenue, amounting to more than that of some cities. It has a very large customs receipt, sometimes approximating a million dollars, the average being well up to the half million mark. It is also headquarters for the Marine department for the great lakes, and it has an Indian agency. The building is to accommodate all these services. The site has been purchased and owned by the government for some years.

Mr. SANDERSON: When was the site purchased?

Mr. ARTHURS: In 1913.

Mr. RUTHERFORD: Why is this new vote put in for Parry Sound?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. White, London): When the committee rose we were considering the resolution with regard to the Ontario public buildings.

Mr. RUTHERFORD: Would the minister be kind enough to give me the correspondence I asked for?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have not the correspondence here this evening, but I assure my hon. friend it will be available.

Oak Lake—public building—under contract, $12,000.
The Pas—public building, $25,000.—Total, $81,700.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Mr. Chairman, before this resolution carries I desire to make a few observations. At the last session of the last parliament an item was placed in the estimates for the construction of a post office at Dominion City, Manitoba, in my constituency. Up to the present time this building has not been constructed. In order to obtain some information in connection therewith, I wrote a letter the other day to the hon. Minister of Public Works as follows:

Dear Sir:

At the last session of the previous parliament an amount of $12,000 was voted for the construction of a post office building at Dominion City, Manitoba. Tenders were called and closed on the 15th August. I understand that three tenders were submitted at figures much below the estimates passed, up to the present and no work has started.

Would you be kind enough to give me the reason which caused your department to ignore the will of parliament.

I received from the minister the following reply, dated April 24:

Dear Mr. Beaubien:

I have your letter of the 22nd instant, with reference to a post office building in Dominion City, Man.

At the time the matter of awarding the contract was under consideration, a careful review of the financial situation disclosed that the revenues were decreasing, and as buildings of this character are erected out of revenue, it was felt that circumstances at the time did not warrant the government in proceeding with the construction of this building.

As you know, revenues have not increased, and under the circumstances, it is not thought that the public interest would be seriously prejudiced by the erection of this building not being proceeded with. The small revenue from the office, namely about $1,300 would not appear to warrant an expenditure on the construction of a public building at Dominion City at the present time.

It may be true that the revenues from this office are not very large, but the postal business is being carried on in a store and every hon. member knows the inconveneince of a post office being conducted in a general store. It seems to me that the all-important question in regard to the expenditure of public money is that the will of parliament be snpreme. At the last session of the last parliament the then Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) introduced an item of $12,000 for the construction of this public building. The item was placed in the estimates because of the representations which had been made to him with regard to the inconvenience resulting from this post office being in a general store. No other building was available in the town for post office purposes. The estimates were brought down, the item was passed in committee of the whole, the present Minister of Public Works, then in opposition, as well as other hon. members in opposition, allowing the item to pass. I see no reason why the will of parliament should not take precedence over every other consideration. The Prime Minister in nearly every speech he has made has advocated that our parliamentary institutions be respected and that the will of parliament be supreme. But how can we respect the parliament of Canada if an item passed unanimously by the house, advertised in the newspapers all over the country, is disregarded, the new Minister of Public Works —I do not accuse the hon. minister of any unfairness; far be it from such—claiming as an excuse that the revenues of the country are decreasing and therefore this work should not be gone on with. During the special session of parliament I urged that this building should be constructed. I was told by the minister that the matter was under consideration. When I returned home after prorogation, in answer to telegrams sent to the department I was told that the matter was still under consideration. The representatives of that municipality came to me and asked me when I expected the contract would be let. May I point out that the tenders were called for and came in by the 15th of August, and that those tenders were below the estimated cost of the department? Three tenders were submitted, one at $6,925, another at $7,133, and another at $8,386. I know nothing about the politics of the tenderers; it makes no difference whether they were Conservative, Liberals, Progressives or anything else. But I do know that the tenders were far below the estimated cost of the department. That being so, and the proposed expenditure being only small, I can see no reason why it should not have been made.

We from the west sitting in this house had to pass in the last days of March or early in April a vote of $2,000,000 for work done on the Welland canal, which had not been authorized by parliament, work which the Prime Minister first said was authorized by order in council, but in respect of which in the evening he said there was no order in council. The Minister of Railways and Canals, on that occasion said that that expenditure was authorized on account of the unemployment situation that existed at that time, as well as the favourable weather conditions, in order to help the unemployed. How did this government treat different parts of Canada in the matter of providing employment? The representative of the municipality I have been speaking of sent a telegram to the Minister of Public Works, dated September 25, 1930, as follows:

Hon. H. A. Stewart,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa.

The council of the municipality of Franklin strongly urge the immediate letting of a contract for post office building in Dominion City. Would greatly relieve the unemployment situation.

John R. Witty,
Secretary-Treasurer,
Municipality of Franklin.

The Minister of Public Works knows, as does every member of the house, that in these small communities there are always from twenty-five to thirty young men, some of them married, who go out and work on the farm during the spring and for whom there is no work in the fall after farming operations have ceased. They cannot go into the city and get relief of any kind because most of the cities have regulations regarding residents with which people from outside cannot comply. I would forgive the minister and the government for their negligence or—shall I say?—for overlooking certain constituencies and certain parts of Canada if the minister would promise me that in the supplementary estimates an amount will be provided for the construction of this post office. I will sit down to allow the minister to give me an answer.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Before the minister makes any such promises as that—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is the hon. member answering for the minister?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, I am not.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Then I am going to go on, and you can talk after I am through.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You sat down.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: You cannot speak in my time. Afterwards you can have all the time you want.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I understood, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member was through. He sat down.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am not through. I said that I would sit down for the minister to give me an answer, and if he will answer me I will sit down now.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It will not take very long to answer the question. I cannot promise the hon. gentleman or any other hon. member of this house that any item will appear in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will the minister take it into consideration?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, certainly.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Serious consideration?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Very serious consideration.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: In order that the minister may give it very serious consideration, I am going to present a few more arguments in favour of this post office. I took very good care at the special session of parliament to ask a question with regard to public moneys which had been voted by the last parliament and earmarked for certain public works. We were discussing the $20,000,000 grant for unemployment relief, and I asked this question, which will be found at page 160 of Hansard of September 12, 1930:

Mr. Beaubien: Under clause 2 of this bill we are giving the governor in council the right to expend $20,000,000 without knowing where or how that money is to be expended. I understand that this sum is for the relief of unemployment. In view of the fact that certain moneys were voted during the last session of parliament, earmarked for certain public works, is it the intention of the government to go on with those works which were designated in the estimates passed unanimously last year, with a view to relieving unemployment that may exist in the smaller communities, where any unemployment that exists is not given so much prominence in the press?

The Prime Minister, after answering certain questions that had been asked by the hon. member for Quebec East, replied to my question as follows:

Apart altogether from the question by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Beaubien) as to public building undertakings, with respect to those, the details, or—shall I say?—particulars of general expenditure were given for the purpose of meeting that situation if it arises.

He goes on:

So far as I am concerned, I hope the expenditures federally will be as little as possible in that regard, but it well may be that with the necessity and opportunity combining—that is, the necessity for something being done and this providing the opportunity to enable it to be done—it is in the public interest that it should be done now rather than ten or twelve months later. This affords an opportunity of calling for tenders, drawing plans and letting the contracts for doing the work. That is all.

Then comes this paragraph, to which I wish to direct particular attention:

So far as those undertakings that are covered by the estimates of the present year are concerned, they are constantly engaging the attention of the government. As the former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) has said, contracts are being let frequently—you saw three or four yesterday—and certainly between July 28 and August 7 many contracts were made by the outgoing government; the date for the expiry of the tenders having arrived between July 28 and August 7, contracts were let by the administration in the ordinary course of business in order that work might go forward and employment be provided.

That is what the Minister of Public Works in the late government did; that is the course which the late government took. The Prime Minister went on to say:

I take it that was the purpose of the late government in doing that. So in respect to these undertakings they will be advertised and carried forward as public works under the provisions of the law.

So the Prime Minister himself there distinctly said, if I put the right construction on his words, that the money that was voted and earmarked for certain public works by the last parliament would be expended just as fast as tenders could be called for and contracts let.

I come back to the telegram which was sent by the secretary treasurer of the municipality. If I am misinformed I hope the Minister of Public Works will correct me, because I notice his deputy is sitting in front of him. May I say at this point that I have every admiration for the officials of the Department of Public Works. They are very courteous and if a man is at all reasonable in his demands they are always ready to do everything in their power to give service. I think I have always been reasonable. I am informed that no reply was received to the telegram sent by this secretary treasurer, who was authorized by his council and who knew the local situation. I do not think it is fair to treat any public body in that manner. If I am wrong in my statement I would ask the minister to correct me. If the minister will say it was answered I do not wish to proceed further.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I cannot answer my hon. friend without having the file before me. However I assure him that we in the department are particularly careful to answer every communication received.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: My information may be wrong, but that is the word I received before the opening of this session from the secretary treasurer of the municipality. It seems to me that we are leaving our institutions open to criticism and to the possibility of their losing the respect they should at all times command. I repeat, and it cannot be repeated too often, that the will of the last parliament was expressed to the effect that this building should be constructed at the point I have mentioned, that was not done. The question of reduced revenues, and of expenditure being made out of revenue, is no answer; it is not even an excuse. When the Minister of Public Works sat on this side of the house he knew that the revenues were decreasing. He could learn that from the reports issued by the audit department; he could see it in the reduction of customs and excise collections in the Department of National Revenue. He knew that railway company revenues were decreasing, and everybody knew that by the end of the year there would be a considerable reduction in receipts. At the same time this amount was voted and was not expended.

During the last election campaign what was the cry of the Conservative candidates in the province of Manitoba? I do not know whether all used the same expressions in regard to the late government of the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, but I know some of them said "What is the use of sending this man back to Ottawa? He has been there for a good many years, yet Manitoba has received very little money for expenditure on public works". What is the difference today? In the last session of the last parliament $382,600 was voted for the province of Manitoba.

An hon. MEMBER: There was an election coming on.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It does not matter whether there was an election or not. It was the will of parliament that that amount of money should be voted, and I wonder why my hon. friends who were then on this side of the house did not oppose the vote. Will the minister tell me why he did not oppose it? I have stated the accusation made against us in the province of Manitoba. In the present estimates $81,700 is allocated to the province of Manitoba to be spent during the coming year. I wonder how my hon. friends from Manitoba sitting on the other side of the house can justify that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Economy

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Economy?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: There was no economy in my county.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Economy was not practised when $2,000,000 was authorized to be spent on the Welland canal.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is an expenditure under a contract.

An hon. MEMBER: Do not argue with him.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Last year $382,600 was authorized and only $81,700 this year. Then what happened? Out of the $380,000 which was voted last year for public buildings, only $243,000 was spent, leaving a balance unspent of $131,000. For harbours and rivers $124,000 was voted, $93,000 was spent and $31,000 not spent. Again the will of parliament was not carried out.

Again, as compared with the province of Ontario the province of Manitoba was discriminated against. I make that statement and take the full responsibility for it. I do not blame the minister, but there seems to be some kind of influence at work which has the effect of discriminating against certain provinces. But according to figures quoted to-day between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 voted last year was not spent. At the same time a special session of parliament is called and hon. members are brought from the western provinces to Ottawa. What for? To vote $20,000,000 for the relief of unemployment. Well, would not the expenditure of $162,000 voted by the last parliament for the province of Manitoba have helped the unemployment situation? Manitoba received about $900,000 from the relief fund, and if it had received that $162,000 and was able to take care of the unemployment situation with the $900,000, it could have done it with $140,000 less than it did. The $20,000,000 voted by parliament to relieve unemployment caused the rural municipalities who could not afford it to borrow money and to continue in their public expenditures. It caused those municipalities to go into debt in order to comply with the regulations and make up their share of the $900,000 expenditures received by the province of Manitoba. At the same time there was money voted by parliament which would not have cost the municipalities one cent. In those localities the expenditure of this money would have relieved the unemployment situation and the municipalities would not have had to make further expenditures.

I have just about completed my remarks. It seems to me that the will of parliament has been thrown to one side. Members of parliament are being made the laughing stock of the country. One ministry goes out, another comes in, and work which was provided for by the preceding ministry is not proceeded with.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend started out with a wrong assumption. He is arguing on the wrong basis, and having so started the rest of his argument is unsound. He says that because parliament votes a particular sum of money for a certain work it is obliged to carry out that work in the year stipulated. If my hon. friend will go through the estimates of past years he will find that that practice has never been followed. All that is meant by a vote of money in parliament is to place at the disposal of the government a certain sum to be used when the government finds it practicable to proceed with the work.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I ask a question at this point?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What is the principle of responsible government? When a minister presents an estimate before parliament it should be reasonable for us to assume that he has examined the situation and that he is convinced of the necessity of the expenditure.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Let me assure the hon. gentleman that a minister submits his estimates in good faith and based always upon information that has been supplied to him. Sometimes that information is imperfect or incomplete, and a minister always has the right to review the situation in the light of subsequent developments. My hon. friend seems to suggest that this is the first time that votes have been inserted in the estimates and not expended.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I did not make that statement. The Prime Minister accused me of knowing nothing else but "last July," but I know something more than that.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I want to make it perfectly clear that with respect to the expenditure of public money no course has been pursued by this government different from that pursued by any government that has preceded it. Let me call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that in the fiscal year 1929-30 there was an appropriation of over $30,000,000 but only $25,000,000 was expended; therefore the minister who preceded me did not use the appropriation to the extent of some $5,000,000. In the fiscal year 1928-29 he asked for and was voted $27,000,000 odd, and he spent only $20,000,000. So my hon. friend will see that the same course has been pursued by other ministers.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am not accusing any previous administration at all.

An hon. MEMBER: Why did you not blame them?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I submit that the course I have taken is perfectly sound and sane. The mere fact that on certain information and at the request of members of parliament or others a certain sum is put in the estimates, does not obligate the government to make the expenditure under all circumstances. Let us get down to this particular case. Dominion City is a small, though no doubt an important place. My hon. friend has in season and out of season vigorously urged the claims of Dominion City, but, as he has said, the postal revenue is only about $1,300, and there are no other public services there that require accommodation. The postmaster's salary absorbs practically all the revenue. If we were to erect a post office building at even the small expenditure of $10,000 that he mentions—and I am sure that that would not suffice to complete the building and furnish it—we would have an annual expenditure for interest on capital outlay, maintenance and caretaker's wages, and with these added expenses there would be a substantial debit balance each year against that particular building.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Have all the public buildings a credit balance to-day?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have not any doubt that there is a debit balance against several of them. But in the smaller places expenditures on public buildings for services that will show a deficit, are, in my opinion not warranted at this time. When revenues are abundant we may be able to overlook these local deficits, but I think my hon. friend will agree that any government with a sense of responsibility must take into consideration the prevailing conditions, the demand for public buildings, and all the other demands that are made upon it, and if it is to command the confidence of the people it must in large measure cut its coat according to the cloth. My hon. friend has again referred to the Welland canal. I submit there is no parallel between the two cases.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: How much by way of dividend is the Welland canal paying to-day?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I hope the Welland canal will pay very substantial dividends to western Canada. There was no part of the Dominion louder in its demand for the construction of the Welland canal than western Canada.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I have no objection to the Welland canal.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): A very substantial part of the motive behind the construction of the Welland canal was to get the western wheat to the seaboard as cheaply as possible. The Welland canal is a great public work upon which a very large expenditure has been made. The continuation of such a great national undertaking is not at all comparable with the erection of a small post office building. The Welland canal had to be completed, and I am sure that on reflection my hon. friend will agree that the government acted wisely and properly in continuing a great work, the completion of which is absolutely necessary from a national standpoint. Let me assure him again that there has been no discrimination, either on provincial or political lines; I do not know the political complexion of the tenderers or anything of that nature. In regard to relieving unemployment, as I said this afternoon, when you let a contract often you are disappointed in the amount of relief that is afforded local unemployment. We have had many complaints that a contractor has not considered local conditions, that he has brought men in from outside and has purchased his materials elsewhere. We have no control over a contractor in that regard. If we insist on his purchasing his materials locally, or employing local labour, he comes back with a claim for extras. I can assure my hon. friend that we will give his claim for a building at Dominion City careful consideration, but I really do not think it is warranted at the present time, and this is the only reason why it has not been proceeded with.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I do not wish to delay the passing of this small vote for the province of Manitoba, but I cannot allow the minister's statement to go unanswered. In the first place, there was no guarantee that the $2,000,000 spent on the Welland canal would relieve unemployment. As he well says, it is very hard to say just how much local unemployment these public expenditures, especially when made under contract, do relieve, because the government has no control over the contractor with respect to whom he shall employ and where he shall purchase his materials. At the same time the Minister of Railways will not deny that he said in view of the unemployment situation the expenditure of the $2,000,000 on the Welland canal was perfectly justified. I think I am quoting the minister correctly; his remarks will be found in Hansard. The Department of Railways and Canals had no control over the contractor in that case with respect to where he secured his labour; he was free to get it in Toronto, Winnipeg or some place else. In a word, he was under contract at so much a unit, and hired his men as he pleased. But there is no doubt that the Minister of Railways by expending that $2,000,000 on the Welland canal did relieve unemployment to a certain extent, and I congratulate him upon it. If there is unemployment in any locality, let us relieve it by public works if we possibly can. At the same time the Minister of Public Works cannot say that he is going to allow an expenditure of $2,000,000 on the Welland canal to relieve unemployment—according to the Minister of Railways—and yet contend that these expenditures on public works under contract do not relieve unemployment.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I said the expenditure did relieve unemployment to some extent, but the results were often disappointing.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I accept the minister's explanation; I am sorry I misunderstood him. But why did he not let this contract for a paltry $7,000 to relieve local unemployment even if it did not wholly relieve it?

Let me inform the minister that my hon. friends opposite can use any statement they like in my riding; I have no objection; if I am licked I will take my licking, but I am going to make a good fight before I am licked. In my riding, however, my opponent said this building never would be constructed; he said "Beaubien got this amount put in the estimates just as a sham," and to me it seems very probable that my opponents in that district used their influence to stop the construction of this building. I will say this to the minister, that if this influence worked at all with him, they certainly are not making very many friends in that district.

Coming back to the revenue, however, I do not care if it was only $500. If the government establishes a postal service in a certain district it is bound to give that service, and the government knows just as the minister knows that many public buildings have been constructed by Conservatives and Liberal governments in places where the revenue did not warrant that construction, but conditions in the locality were such, because of the lack of a suitable building, that the construction was proceeded with. Suppose a storekeeper refuses to put the post office in his store, what would happen? Would the department close the post office? The minister knows he would receive protests from everyone if that happened, and so in many cases buildings have been constructed where the necessity was felt even though the revenue did not warrant it.

It has been said that previous governments have not spent the money which has been voted, and I have no excuse to offer in that regard. I am not here to find excuses for the last government; if they did not do it without very good reasons they were wrong, but that does not mean that the Minister of Public Works, who I know wants to be fair, should follow a similar course. When money is voted by parliament and it is possible to expend it without any trouble to the department, as was the case here, that money should be spent. Specifications were prepared and tenders were called, and the transfer of the property was being carried on. The municipality took the trouble to prepare the title and then, after telling me by telegram, by letter, and in personal conversation that the matter was still under consideration up until September 25, the whole thing is cut out and the project is dropped.

I still appeal to the minister's good heart and to everything about him that is good to take this matter into very, very serious consideration and to ascertain personally the conditions which obtain when a post office is in a store. The minister knows exactly what that means, especially in towns such as these. A farmer may owe a certain amount of money to the storekeeper; he may have a little change with which he wants to buy something at Eaton's or Simpson's. To get his money order he has to go to the storekeeper to whom he owes money, and while I do not say the people are dishonest, I do say it is very inconvenient. I hope the minister will take this into his very serious consideration, and between now and the time the supplementary estimates are brought down, I will try to have another interview with him and give further reasons why this building should be constructed.

Mr. MANION: In regard to the Welland Canal perhaps the hon. gentleman might be enlightened just a little. The Welland canal contracts were let, and the men were at work, under the old government. If the Welland canal work had stopped it would have meant throwing out of work two thousand employees who were carrying on at the time, which is a little different from a new contract. In addition to that, as my hon. friend has expressed it, the contractors were working at unit prices, and they could have carried on if they had chosen to do so. Most of them did so. So long as they were working on a unit contract they could carry on as long as they are willing to wait for their pay. In a sense we had no control over them, because the contractors could have gone on and we would have had to pay them either by a supplementary estimate, as we did, or by a main estimate. Following the discussion of this matter some time ago I found that the late government sometimes followed that practice, and I do not criticize them for it. In connection with the Hudson Bay railway, at one time the contractors over-spent $1,700,000, which was not paid until the following year, exactly as we did in connection with the Welland canal. So it will be seen that this was in a different position from the matter to which my hon. friend has referred. We had the contract, and if the work had not been authorized it would have meant closing down all these activities. The work was on a unit basis, so we had practically no control over it.

May I point out another fact which the Minister of Public Works probably has pointed out, though I have not heard him do so today. The question has come up very often as to whether it would have been wiser for the Department of Public Works to go on and do a certain work or, in another way, use part of the $20,000,000 unemployment fund voted at the last session of parliament. It is worth remembering that if the Department of Public Works carries on a piece of work, we will say a $1,000,000 contract, the $1,000,000 is spent and in some cases it gives a good deal of employment. In other cases, however, it does not give so much employment. In dredging contracts, for example, it does not mean much in the way of employment, but in any event only $1,000,000 is spent. Under the $20,000,000 contract, the spending of $1,000,000 by the Dominion government brought about the expenditure of $3,000,000 in all, because the province added $1,000,000 and the municipality another $1,000,000. There was this added advantage, that the muuicipality which required assistance asked for it, because it had a lot of unemployment, and it undertook some public works such as sewers or sidewalks and contributed part of the cost, the balance being contributed by the province and the Dominion government, so there was a larger amount of work going on and a larger amount of money spent in the sections of the country needing unemployment relief, if they were willing to go forward and do their share, than otherwise might have been the case.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am very glad the minister has given that explanation. When I went back home at Easter the newspapers had advertised the fact that $2,000,000 had been voted by parliament for the Welland canal. Some of the people seemed to be under the impression that this $2,000,000 was voted while other public works, the money for which had been voted previously, had not been carried forward. I think that is a bad impression to have going throughout the country, because the people feel they are being discriminated against and I do not blame them, because they do not know all the details. The only difference between the project about which I am talking, this small building in Dominion City, and the Welland canal, is that the people engaged on the Welland canal were already employed and were about to be thrown out of employment if this money had not been spent, while in the other case the people were already unemployed. That is the only difference.

Mr. MANION: Except that the municipality could have come forward and secured assistance for the construction of public works, in cooperation with the province and the Dominion.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I quite understand that, and this municipality did take a certain percentage of that relief fund, and had to make their own contribution to that work. They said to me, "An amount was voted by parliament and placed in the estimates for the construction of certain buildings here. Why should we have to borrow money to work in conjunction with this relief fund when there is public money already voted by the parliament of Canada?" Parliament at the special session voted $20,000,000 for unemployment. I do not object to that, but at the same time this amount was voted at the regular session and should have been expended. Most of these municipalities went into debt in order to take care of their unemployed under the $20,000,000 fund, in conjunction with the province and the Dominion government, while this money was voted and was not expended. Tenders had been called for; contracts were about ready to be let; plans and specifications were prepared, but nothing was done. There is a wrong impression among the people, and I think perhaps this discussion will clear it up in my riding at all events. However, the situation remains; money was voted by parliament during the regular session and was not expended, to the extent of $164,000 in Manitoba, yet we came back for the special session and voted still more money, which to my mind looks ridiculous.

Mr. HEAPS: These being Manitoba estimates, I wish to say a word or two. The Minister of Public Works has just made the statement that he is opposed to the erection of public buildings where the revenue is too small to pay interest charges on capital expenditure. With that principle I am in accord, and I hope he will continue to carry it out not merely with respect to this building now under construction but as regards all other buildings, irrespective of the part of the country in which they are located. I am, myself, opposed to the erection of public buildings merely for the sake of putting them up, and unless buildings have some utility and can show some return for expenditures involved, then in the long run the country will be better off without them. But there is another aspect of the question to be considered. From statements made this afternoon by the minister I am led to infer that there will be certain other sums of money proposed to the house as a means of relieving in some way the unemployment situation. I am led to believe that from what the minister has said.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I did not make any such statement as that. It may be an inference my hon. friend is drawing—

Mr. HEAPS: I said so.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):—and he can draw any inferences he likes. But that is not warranted by anything I said.

Mr. HEAPS: I so gathered, but I cannot see how the government can get out of it this session, even if they wanted to. However, I wish to distinguish between money voted by parliament for relief undertakings and money voted for government buildings. The voting of money by this house implies almost immediately that the provincial and municipal authorities will contribute approximately an equal amount. In that case, let me point out that there are to-day many municipalities that are not in a position, in view of the money they have spent, to meet a situation of that character. But there is to-day, to my own knowledge, in Manitoba and elsewhere, urgent need for certain public buildings. They are essential, and it would be a good policy, a matter of economy on the part of the federal government, to provide in the estimates for proceeding with the erection of such buildings fortwith. No minister in this house can stand in his place and say that I have ever gone to his department and asked for a cent for my constituency. I have not done so and I do not intend to. I do not go round asking for public buildings just to show my constituency that I have been on the job, hammering away at the departments, in order to get some credit for myself. I believe in putting up buildings where they are essential, and I certainly believe that in Winnipeg, and in the province of Manitoba at large, there is need for such buildings. The government might well proceed in that direction to relieve the unemployment situation. For example, an addition to the post office is long overdue. The quarters are cramped and they are unable to carry out the work in that efficient way which we have a right to expect. A site was purchased ten years ago and year after year we have waited for a vote of money to proceed with the erection of an addition to the post office. Had the government thought fit to proceed with that capital expenditure it would to-day, to a certain extent, relieve the situation in that district. Again, a new customs building is required, and if it is not put up this year it will have to be put next year or the year following. That is a federal undertaking in which the municipality is not expected to participate, and I submit that this is the time to proceed with the erection of that building. That is what I have been trying to impress upon the minister, and I hope that when the supplementary estimates are brought down he will again take into consideration the necessity for these buildings, not merely in Winnipeg but in every other part of Canada where the erection of buildings should be proceeded with, and where the work would help to relieve the unemployment situation. If we are to depend upon the municipalities to pay one third of the cost, some of these works will not be proceeded with. I repeat—because I cannot put it too strongly—that these works are essential; moreover, they would be productive. And it is only a question of putting them up now rather than later on, a few years hence. I trust that between now and the time the supplementary estimates are down the minister will have taken the matter further into consideration.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I did not intend to say anything in this debate, but I was somewhat apprehensive, when the hon. member for Provencher so strongly pressed him, that the minister might in his inexperience make him some promise. I agree with the hon. member for Provencher that when money is voted by parliament it has a right to be spent where it is voted; and having that in mind, I wish to call the attention of the minister to the fact that some years ago the gentlemen in his department advised the late government to build an addition to the post office at St. Catharines. And to the member for Provencher I will say that that vote appeared three times in the estimates.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: How much was the vote?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not think that signifies; it was a matter of twenty or thirty thousand dollars. But it is a question of principle. Now I have never asked them since to put that vote in, notwithstanding that it was needed. This was the report from the department. It was kept out by somebody, and not particularly in the public interest either.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is it in this year?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, it is not in this year; I have never asked the minister to put it in either. I knew the circumstances, I knew the situation, and I would not ask him to put it in.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Why?

Mr. CHAPLIN: For the reason given, that we can wait for such things until conditions are better.

Mr. McINTOSH: It may be a long time.

Mr. CHAPLIN: We may wait a long time, but my friend will wait longer.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): How does the minister explain that there are so many other post office items in the estimates?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend from Provencher has one impression which is not quite correct, and that is, that some communications were sent asking that the building should not be proceeded with. Let me assure him that there were no such communications Every communication received has been along the line of urging the construction of the building. Friends of his and friends of ours and every other interest have all so represented. Then he spoke about a telegram which was not answered. I find that it was answered by a letter on a later date.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The hon. member for Lincoln substantiated the remarks I made to the effect that public money voted should be spent in the place for which it is destined. He is right. I do not care what government was in power; if money was placed in the estimates for a public building in St. Catharines and voted by parliament, that work should have been proceeded with. I have every sympathy with the hon. member; he and I are in agreement on that. The Minister of Public Works has spoken of falling revenues and the necessity for curtailing public expenditures, especially on public buildings, and he has been supported strongly by the hon. member for Lincoln. I see in the estimates for Manitoba the sum of $25,000 for The Pas, for a public building. I have no objection to a public building being constructed there; I think it is needed. But I do not think the minister because of falling revenues can justify the application of economy to one district and not to another. He claims that the drop in revenues has prevented his spending $6,500 in my district. The revenues have fallen much more since September 25, the last date I heard of this; yet we find an item of $25,000 in the estimates for The Pas. I repeat, I have no objection to that item; at the same time, I do not think the minister is consistent. If he is going to stop the construction of public buildings because of falling revenue, he should stop it all over the country and not in one part. There is another item for Oak Lake; that item is all right because the building is under construction, but if the excuse is offered that falling revenues will not permit the construction of buildings in one part of the country, the same should apply to other parts. I know that the revenue at The Pas is more than that of the town I speak of, but I do not think the difference in revenue justifies an expenditure of $25,000 in one place and a refusal to construct a public building in the other.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The revenues at Dominion City would not be sufficient to pay for the cost of this building, in fact would not go beyond the bare maintenance of it. The postal revenue at The Pas is $25,526 and the custom revenue amounts to $301,207, yet they have no public building at that point. Surely my hon. friend will agree that the cases are different.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I admitted that the revenue is greater at The Pas than it is at the place I spoke of. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) claimed he was discriminated against in the case of St. Catharines.

An hon. MEMBER: It is on the map.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might be permitted to give a few words of enlightenment to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien). The post office at The Pas does more business in one month than the post office at Dominion City does in five years. The north country is growing continually and provision must be made for expansion. The mail for 10,000 people is handled through The Pas post office. The figures as to revenue have been given by the minister. The work of the customs department is done in a room 12 feet by 14 feet in the officer's private residence. In addition to that, we have an Indian office which administers about ten Indian reservations. We have mounted police stationed there and the officer is forced to use one of the rooms in his house for a cell. We have been trying to get this public building for the last nine years and not successful simply because we did not have any representation in the house.

Mr. McINTOSH: You had representation.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): We in the north did not have any representation in this house. The hon. member at that time, Mr. Bird, represented Swan River valley, not the northern part of his constituency. He was a very useful member to the government then in power.

An hon. MEMBER: No, he was not; he was more of a Tory.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): He worked with the government then in power, but did not procure anything for his constituency, even though he did vote inadvertently. I am quite satisfied that this item of $25,000 will no more than start this building. I for one will not be satisfied with merely $25,000 for a public building in The Pas.

An hon. MEMBER: How much do you want?

Mr. STITT (Nelson): That is only enough for the basement or probably the first storey. This afternoon the hon. member for Rimouski was complaining that the government was paying too much rent for a building in his constituency. I would like to draw the attention of the committee to the rent that has been paid for years for the present post office in The Pas. It is a building 30 feet by 40 feet which could not be called anything else but a rabbit hutch. The government has been paying $300 per month for that building, which could not be rented to anybody else for $75. I feel sure of my ground when I say that if that building were put under the hammer it would not sell for the amount of one year's rental. The hon. member for Rimouski is not the only one who has been affected by high rentals for buildings. I hope the minister proceeds to construct this building at the earliest possible moment, because there is no town in this Dominion which needs a public building as does The Pas.

An hon. MEMBER: Where is that?

Mr. STITT (Nelson): When expenditures are mentioned for the north, hon. members hold up their hands in horror. That remark applies to hon. members on this side as well as on the other side of the chamber. Eastern and western members have been looking to the south so long that they have developed an inferiority complex; if this country is going to develop they had better do an about-turn and look northward for a while.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I do not want the hon. member for Nelson to leave the impression that I am opposing this item. I have been at The Pas and I have some good friends there. I know it is a growing community; there are wonderful prospects for the northern country, and the eyes of Canada will more than ever turn in that direction. However, the hon. member has proved my point; he is on the right side of politics, therefore he is getting his building right now. He said that his predecessor in office could not get this building; he was not on the right side, but as soon as a member was on the right side, the vote was put in the estimates. I repeat again that if the minister is adopting in respect of certain ridings the principle that because of falling revenues he is prevented from carrying out public works for which the money was voted in a previous parliament, he should adopt the same principle for other ridings. Dominion City needs a public building, even if the revenue is one one-hundredth the revenue of The Pas. The people are entitled to proper accommodation, and there is no reason why they should not get it. I do not want the hon. member to create the impression that I am against the vote for The Pas, because I believe it is the coming city of western Canada.

Mr. BOWMAN: Will the minister give us the particulars of the item for Dominion public buildings, $30,000?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is an item which appears from year to year to cover repairs, rentals and other incidental expenses in connection with all public buildings in Manitoba.

Item agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING—SASKATCHEWAN

Melville—Government's share of cost of local improvements, $1,050.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was just wondering, Mr. Chairman, what this vast sum was for, whether it was for grading around the new post office or for fixing up the sidewalks.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This amount is to provide for the payment of the government's share of the cost of a concrete sidewalk on Fourth avenue, and of a sewer on Main street, fronting the Melville public building.

Mr MOTHERWELL: That is what I thought it was for. I was wondering if the government intends to finish the post office building. Reference to the contract and to the files and plans will indicate that provision was made for a tower clock. The building is finished except for that tower clock, which will involve a separate contract in itself, just as separate contracts are made for fixtures for the building. We are very proud of this building. It is a very creditable building for the purpose for which it was erected, but we do not like to see those three vacant places where the clock should be. If the clock is not put in, provision will have to be made for boarding up the opening to keep the weather out. I understand that the cost of the clock would be approximately $1,000. It may be said that in these hard times we should not spend $1,000 on a clock. Well, in that case, something else will have to be done to keep the weather out, and the new government will be advertised as not finishing a building that was started by the former government. I know that my hon. friend the minister does not want to be put in that position. The people of that thriving town are very desirous of having the work finished. If the minister will consult with his deputy he will find that the original plans called for a clock, and I feel satisfied that he will carry out the original plans.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The construction of this building has just been finished. Provision has been made for a clock, as the hon. gentleman said. This government desires to be up to the minute and on time—

An hon. MEMBER: Daylight saving.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, and every other kind of saving, but notwithstanding that, we shall endeavour to provide a clock for the hon. gentleman's building.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is no provision for it in these estimates that I can see.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It can come out of the general vote if circumstances permit. We will take it into consideration.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Thank you. I will report that to the mayor and residents of the town of Melville.

With reference to the item "Appropriations not required for 1931-32," I notice that the amount being spent in Saskatchewan for public buildings this year is only one-sixth of what was spent last year, and I would like to have some explanation of that very substantial reduction. Considerable relief was required in Saskatchewan out of the $20,000,000 voted at the special session, and if public buildings are looked upon as a means of providing relief why reduce the aggregate expenditure for public buildings in Saskatchewan this year to one-sixth the amount spent last year?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In reply I can only repeat what I said this afternoon, that in the opinion of the government the construction of public buildings such as we have now under consideration is not the most effective or the most desirable way of providing unemployment relief. It cannot be denied that it does in a measure afford relief for unemployment, but a specific appropriation of a specific amount at a particular place may not afford the relief that a fund not so earmarked would afford. For instance, we might be constructing a building where relief was not really necessary at all. The government has adopted the other policy, and I think it has worked well. We are endeavouring to keep within our revenues because our expenditures are made from the revenues. I think my hon. friend will appreciate the importance of a government having some regard to the amount of the revenue at its disposal and endeavouring to balance its budget and keep its expenditure within reasonable limits. That is why we are reducing this expenditure.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think that governments, like people, should keep within their revenues if at all possible. I quite appreciate that and approve of it, but I wish to point out that a similar reduction is not to be found in the expenditure for public buildings in the other provinces. In the main, I think my hon. friend is quite right, that perhaps this is not the best possible way of giving relief, but still it is one way. The vote for Saskatchewan this year is just one-sixth of what it was the year before, and I cannot understand why that should be so with regard to Saskatchewan and not with regard to the other provinces. I am not suggesting that it is being done for political purposes, because after all the parties in Saskatchewan are about equal in strength at the present moment, so it must be for some other reason than that. I do not know what the reason is. There does not seem to be any particular basis for such a substantial reduction in Saskatchewan as compared with other eastern provinces.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I cannot add anything to the explanation which I have made so often during this discussion as to the reasons for these reductions. My hon friend asked as to the appropriations not required. The appropriation for Saskatchewan was $609,500, and the expenditure was $537,323. Certain buildings were not completed, and one or two others were not undertaken. The details are as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS
Saskatchewan

Appropriations—Expenditure—Remarks
Yorkton public building—addition, $3,000; $1.650.40; completed.
Wilkie—public building, $40,000; $37,780.77; completed.
Saskatoon—public building, $445,000; $405,-583.14; completed.
North Battleford — immigration building, $30.000; $26.132.37; completed.
Indian Head—forestry building—addition, $8.000; $7,199.42; completed.
Melville—public building, $31,000; $31,000; completed.
Biggar—public building, $10,000; nil; not undertaken.
Canora—public building, $20,000; $17,765.69; completed.
Arcola—public building, $12,000; $158.29; not undertaken.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All right.

Mr. DONNELLY: I agree with the minister that the erection of public buildings does relieve unemployment. It may not be the best method of relief, but to a certain extent it does help. I agree also with the hon. member for North Winnipeg, that public buildings should be built only where they are needed. In a growing and young country such as Saskatchewan many public buildings are needed. I can state that in every constituency in Saskatchewan public buildings are required. Looking through the estimates one thing impressed me more than anything else. I have sat in this house for the last four or five weeks and have heard people talk about a depression existing in this country. The people who talked most about the depression were the farmers from the western prairies, and more particularly from Saskatchewan. There is more talk about unemployment and depression in western Canada than anywhere else. Bearing that in mind I would ask hon. members to look at the estimates for public buildings. We find that moneys are not to be expended where they should be; public buildings are not to be located where they should be located. In the year 1930, $302,000 was voted for public buildings in Nova Scotia; this year the figure is $261,000, a reduction of 15 per cent. In New Brunswick there was an appropriation of $81,125 last year, and this year it is $175.900, an increase of nearly 100 per cent. Then we come to the province of Quebec, for which last year the appropriation was $1,509,-695, while this year it is $1,076,900, a decrease of 30 per cent. Last year the figure for Ontario was $2,616,323.95; this year it is $1,379,400, a decrease of about 50 per cent. Now we come to the western provinces, where we hear of hard times and depression. Last year $382,600 was voted for public buildings for Manitoba; this year the amount is only $81,700, a decrease of 80 per cent. That decrease occurs where there is unemployment and extreme depression.

Mr. SPENCE: There was too much voted last year.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is a decrease of more than 80 per cent; it is about 300 per cent.

Mr. DONNELLY: Well, I did not figure it out very closely. Then we come to the province of Saskatchewan, and we find that last year $1,010,500 was voted; this year the amount is $176,050.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is about one-sixth.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is a decrease of 80 per cent, or a little more. In that province there is more unemployment than in any other spot in Canada. For Alberta the amount last year was $1,676,000; this year it is $521,000. Again there is a reduction of at least 70 per cent. For British Columbia the amount was $203,300 last year and it is only $81,000 this year. In other words, where unemployment is greatest we find the least money being expended by this government to help unemployment conditions. I think I may state frankly that in my constituency there is more depression than in any other part of western Canada. During the past election campaign my Conservative opponent stated on numerous occasions "If I am elected the Conservative government will build a post office at Assiniboia." Undoubtedly a post office was needed at that point. I ask this government: when are you going to build it? I would like to see it, but I do not see anything in the estimates to provide for such a building. The construction of a post office building will undoubtedly help the unemployment problem in that vicinity. For two years there has been no crop and there is no sign of a crop this year. The people are not sowing their seeds; they cannot sow. The wind is blowing; the land is drying out, and there is no chance of getting their seed back. Those people are looking for relief, and some measure of assistance will have to be given them. Why not erect a public building which is very much needed and give them relief in that way?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I agree with my hon. friend that the need for public buildings throughout the Dominion of Canada is very great indeed. Demands are numerous, pressing and urgent. If my hon. friend but knew the total moneys required he would realize how severe the pressure is. The department is endeavouring gradually to overtake the demands for public buildings and as a result year by year the amounts expended are increasing. In the year 1922 the total amount expended was only $14,000,000; in 1923 it was $16,000,000. I am giving round figures. In 1924-25 the figure was $18,000,000. In 1925-26 it amounted to $17,000,000. In 1926-27 it was $13,000,000. In 1927-28 it was $17,000,000; in 1928-29 it was $20,000 000; in 1929-30 it was $25,000,000 and in 1930-31 it was $32,000,000. Hon. members will observe that the expenditure is progressing all the time, and the department is endeavouring to overtake the requirements.

Let me suggest to my hon. friend that very little is gained by comparing the expenditure of different provinces in any particular years. Very heavy expenditures may be incurred in a given year in a particular province because certain large buildings are under construction. As an example may I point out that last year in the city of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, a building was completed at a cost of $750,000. Another building costing $250,000 was erected in Regina. Expenditures such as those throw comparisons out of balance. Very little can be deduced by comparing one year with another without due consideration to the work under construction. It will be found that from year to year there are discrepancies in expenditures owing to large undertakings in particular localities.

Mr. McINTOSH: Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat impressed by the appeal made by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stitt) with regard to the northern portions of western Canada. I represent in this house a riding in the northern part of Saskatchewan, and while I have no complaint to make of the development of that portion of the province during the last five or ten years and no complaint in connection with the erection of public buildings necessary to promote that development, yet when the items for Saskatchewan are under consideration I hope the minister will listen to the appeals made with regard to the northern portion not only of Saskatchewan but also of Manitoba, Alberta, and British Columbia. So far as the middle west is concerned, I would say that the portion of country running in a northwesterly direction after you leave Saskatoon and cross the North Saskatchewan river is the coming portion of that part of the Dominion. There can be no question that that country has all the possibilities of a great future. There is water power, lumber, timber; there are wheat areas and mixed farming areas. Hon. members know what that means. We know that when there is an impetus given to the building up of this great Dominion, the northland more than ever must come into its own, depression or no depression. Therefore I urge that that part of Canada be given the necessary facilities in the way of post offices and other public buildings, for it is vitally important for the minister in charge of the Department of Public Works to be at all times on the alert in helping forward the development of the great northern areas of the western provinces. Personally I believe the hon. minister will do his best in this respect.

During the discussion on the omission of an appropriation for a post office building in Dominion City, in the riding of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) I understood the minister to say that the demand for the building of the Welland canal came largely from western Canada. May I tell him that I think he is not quite correct. True, the demand came from the west in the sense that it came from the southern parts of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, but the northern and middle portions of the three western provinces were not greatly concerned about the undertaking. I admit that they did not knock the proposition, but this was because they regarded it from a national standpoint—as all great public undertakings should be regarded—and to-day they ask the rest of Canada to be nationally minded with regard to the completion of the Hudson Bay route. We expect the terminal and other facilities at Churchill to be completed so that every chance may be given to demonstrate the feasibility of this great undertaking to provide for our products an outlet to the markets of the world. May I add that western Canada can always be depened upon to regard all national undertakings from a national viewpoint.

The hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) has drawn attention to the small appropriation for Saskatchewan of only $176,000 as compared with the appropriation last year of $1,000,000 odd, or a decrease of 80 per cent. In the case of Manitoba there is approximately a decrease in appropriation of 28 per cent. There is no doubt about the importance of undertaking public buildings in order to relieve unemployment. In this connection it is significant that Germany has decided to spend more money on public undertakings of a national character to do away with unemployment. I think this would be an equally sound course for Canada to take, for I believe if we appropriate funds for the erection of public buildings where they are really required, not only will the expenditure relieve unemployment, but it will help to build up our country as a whole. While the minister holds office—I am not sure how long that will be—

Some hon. MEMBERS: A long time.

Mr. McINTOSH: Well, whether short or long there is no question of the importance of being on the job in looking after the requirements of northern Saskatchewan, northern Alberta and northern Manitoba—

Some hon. MEMBERS: And northern British Columbia.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, and northern British Columbia, with respect to public buildings in order that the various federal services may be carried on efficiently and with proper consideration for the convenience of the public.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I beg to assure my hon. friend that in respect to northern British Columbia, northern Alberta, northern Saskatchewan, northern Manitoba, northern Ontario, northern Quebec, northern New Brunswick, northern Nova Scotia, northern Prince Edward Island—

Mr. McINTOSH: The whole north.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Right up to the north pole.

Mr. McINTOSH: That's the idea.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I agree with my hon. friend that if, standing here to-night, we could foresee just where unemployment is going to be acute next winter, and could appropriate public money to be spent in each particular place, we would be helping to relieve that impending condition. But, as he knows, we have to come to this house with a specific appropriation for a particular point, and that appropriation cannot be diverted to any other point, no matter how badly its expenditure is needed there, or how much more insistent the demand may be for it. The appropriation is earmarked and must be spent at the point specified. We have to be careful of the appropriations we ask for in view of the many demands that we are not able to meet. I think my hon. friend can recall an expenditure of about $25,000 that was made in his constituency last year. This was for an immigration hall, which now is not needed at all.

Mr. HANBURY: Sell it to Dominion City.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The mounted police are now asking permission to use it. So discretion must be exercised in making appropriations, and even using the best judgment mistakes may be made.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I do not notice in these estimates an item of $12,000 that last year was voted for a public building at Arcola, although the minister informed the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) that there were one or two buildings that would not be proceeded with. Why has he discriminated against the town of Arcola? Arcola is a divisional point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, the land titles office is located there, it is a judicial centre, and, in short, an important place. I quite appreciate what the hon. minister has said with regard to the necessity for economy, but this is only a small item of $12,000. And let me refer again to the estimates for Ontario. I notice for Thorold, there is an appropriation of $4,000 for a site for a public building. Why should the department be buying a site for a public building at Thorold when in Arcola the site has already been acquired and an appropriation made for the building in last year's estimates? Specifications were prepared and tenders called for the building. I should like the minister to tell me why the building was not proceeded with. Perhaps the minister will also inform me who objected to the proposed expenditure.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I did mention, in replying to the member for Melville, that the Arcola building was not being proceeded with. I can give my hon. friend a pretty good reason why. In the 1930-31 estimates there was an appropriation of $12,000 for the building. Tenders for construction were called for. The following tenders were received:

1. Bird, Woodall & Simpson, Ltd., Regina, $27,870.
2. Wilson & Wilson Ltd., Regina, $28,500.
3. Smith Bros. & Wilson, Ltd., Regina, $29,743.
4. A. O. Chiclens, Indian Head, $29,800.
5. Lockwood Bros., Regina, $30,173.
6. Poole Construction Company, Ltd., $30,200.
7. Macaw and MacDonald, Winnipeg, $30,617.40.
8. Weyburn Sash and Door Factory, Ltd., Regina, $31,328.80.
9. Hipperson Construction Company, Regina, $31,599.84.
10. W. H. McDiarmid, Regina, $32,887.
11. Broders Ltd., Regina, $33,000.

So there we were with an appropriation of only $12,000, upon which my hon. friend thinks we should have entered into an obligation to spend $27,870. With the revenues as I have stated, we did not feel ourselves warranted in incurring that obligation.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I never anticipated, Mr. Chairman, that $12,000 would complete this building, and I do not think that was the intention of the former administration. We did estimate that it would probably cost between $25,000 and $30,000; that was what I believe was anticipated. Did the specifications that were sent out specify any particular amount which was to be expended? Was there any limit imposed?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No; specifications never give any information as to the amount of the government's estimate or what we expect the building will cost.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): What was the government's estimate?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sorry but I have not that information.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I do not want to repeat what has been said with regard to conditions generally, but the minister did say that if he could anticipate where the greatest relief would be needed next year with regard to the unemployment situation he would know better how to act. I can assure him that he will be perfectly safe in placing this $12,000 back in the estimates this year, because that was what we anticipated would be spent last year, and we thought the additional amount required would be voted this year. So far as the unemployment situation is concerned, I think the minister will be perfectly safe in placing $12,000 in the supplementary estimates to proceed with this building, since the site has been procured. The site was purchased at a very reasonable figure, I am sure; I believe it only cost about $200, if I am not mistaken, which cannot be called extravagant. The people out there are very anxious for the building; there is need of it, and I would ask the minister to consider placing this amount back in the estimates for this year in order that this $12,000 may be expended and the building started this year, which would relieve the unemployment situation in that district.

Mr. McINTOSH: The Minister of Public Works made a statement in connection with the new immigration hall at North Battleford. I am very glad he made that statement. As I watched him when he was making it I felt that he was very anxious to give the house that information, and I am very glad the house and the country have received these details.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that there was a new immigration hall built in North Battleford last year. North Battleford is one of the keys to the north country; Prince Albert is another and Edmonton is still another. There was a new immigration hall built at Edmonton which cost, I believe, about $75,000, while the hall at North Battleford cost between $25,000 and $30,000. The immigration hall at Prince Albert was completed the year before, and cost between $30,000 and $40,000. What do these expenditures mean? These immigration halls were undertaken largely because of the vision Canada had a few years ago with regard to a greater population. The war had built up a vast national debt, and the feeling had spread throughout the Dominion that we should have a greater population to bear that debt. Consequently not only the Conservative party but the Liberal party of the day felt that immigration was necessary. I am sure my hon. friend will remember the vision of immigration into this country given the house and the country a few years ago by the organizer for his own party, Mr. McRae. His proposition was that each year for ten years we should spend $30,000,000 on immigration, giving a total expenditure of $300,000,000. Can anyone wonder that when the party then in opposition, led by such men as the minister and the organizer of his party, went across Canada advocating greater immigration this vision was accepted and anticipated by these public buildings to accommodate those who were to come to this country?

I might say that personally I think the construction of that building in North Battleford was in order and I believe that every official of the Department of Public Works who knows anything about North Battleford and that north country will admit that fact. With regard to the old building I say to the minister that it was a disgrace to Canada to bring any mother or family from any part of the world for the purpose of settling in that north country and leave them overnight or for a week or more in that old building in North Battleford. That being the case certainly I set myself to do all I could to have a new immigration hall erected there, and I succeeded in having that building constructed. I believe the day is coming when, if we do not accept the vast scheme advocated by the Conservative party when in opposition in regard to immigration, at least we will need a greater population, and we are going to select that population from the best people outside of Canada. We have stopped immigration for the time being, but we have no proof that this is to be a permanent policy. It is only a temporary expedient, as the minister well knows. Consequently, when the time comes for immigration to flow into this country again that building, which is worth the money which it cost any day in the year, will be there ready to take care of settlers going in to open up that vast northern hinterland, which will not only build up western Canada and start the flow of settlement northward in the western provinces, but which will also help to build up the entire country.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In answer to my hon. friend I wish to make it perfectly clear that I was not criticizing the construction of that building. I was simply pointing to it as an example of an expenditure of public money which, through a change of circumstances, is temporarily at least rendered unproductive and practically of no value. I do want to point out to my hon. friend, however, that while this building and the others he mentioned were being constructed, speeches were being delivered in this house against increased immigration into the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. I have heard hon. members get up one after another and say, "We do not need any more immigration; it should be restricted and curtailed," and I am sure my hon. friend will recall those speeches also.

Mr. HANBURY: Does the minister suggest that this is the policy of the present Prime Minister?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have no announcement to make with regard to the immigration policy of this government; that will come through the regular channels.

Mr. HANBURY: The minister says speeches were made against immigration at that time. Does he say that was the policy of the present Prime Minister at that time?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have no statement to make in that connection.

Mr. DONNELLY: We all fully realize that there is great necessity for economy in Canada to-day because of our falling revenues, and I fully appreciate the position of the minister when he expresses the need for that economy. I do not wish to criticize the department in any way for the steps which have been taken along these lines. We must all fully realize also the great necessity for relieving unemployment, and the expenditure of $12,000 in connection with this building in Arcola, to which reference has been made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie), would have helped to relieve unemployment in that district. There is no doubt that unemployment is more rampant in the west than anywhere else, and when the minister draws the line and says he cannot spend this money because it would probably mean the expenditure of $15,000 more, I would direct his attention to other places where, apparently forgetting economy, he is spending a good deal more. Take Fort William, for instance: we have an estimate of $50,000 there for a site for a public building. How much unemployment will that relieve? How many people will that put to work? The government is only buying land there, spending $50,000 for the purpose. Turn again to Thorold—$4,000 for a site there. To how many people will that give employment? Then look at Belleville; there we have an expenditure of $20,000, right in Ontario, just for a site or an addition to a site. I do not know how much land is going to be acquired, but it does not seem to be consistent that the government should spend money in these places where buildings are not going to be erected immediately, and neglect other places where construction could be proceeded with at once.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Circumstances differ. There are times when it is good economy to buy land even if you are not going to use it for some time. I think my hon. friend will agree with that. As to Arcola, I can only say that, with falling revenues and a very much larger expenditure than was provided for in the estimates, we did not feel warranted in proceeding.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Regarding the minister's statement that the expenditures are larger than were anticipated, I do not think that is right. I know that last year the Minister of Public Works did not anticipate that $12,000 would complete the building, but it was considered that that was all it would be possible to spend that year, because it was August before the tenders were called for and $12,000 was all it was felt could be expended for the time being. The minister says further that the revenues do not warrant this expenditure. I should like to have a comparison —not that I am going to object to any other expenditures that have been made—between the revenues, on the one hand, in the town of Deloraine, Manitoba, where there has been an expenditure already of $33,000—we do not know whether that will complete the contract —and Watrous, in Saskatchewan, where $50,000 has been spent, and, on the other hand, the revenues derived from Arcola. There is being spent in Watrous twice as much as we think would put up a proper building in Arcola. Does the revenue in Watrous warrant an expenditure of $50,000, which probably by the time the building is completed will increase to $60,000?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sorry I have not to-night the revenues of these different places. As to Watrous, we have not started any expenditures there yet. There has been a revote.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Yes, some $38,000. So that there has been no work done there yet. Has the site been purchased?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Then why does the minister proceed in Watrous when he has no site, and not go ahead in Arcola where there is a site already purchased?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We have not proceeded with Watrous yet.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Apparently by this vote the minister intends to.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): In my opinion the building of the post office at Watrous should be proceeded with. We have a very unusual condition there and one which must be met. Hon. members may know—if they do not, they will know it before many years have passed—that Watrous has come to be known as the Carlsbad of Canada. It is located on the shore of Little Manitou lake, which is the most heavily mineralized body of water on the continent. The result is that a new health resort has rapidly grown up there. Last year thousands of people flocked to Watrous to get the benefits of the lake, and this year the crowds will be greater than ever. These thousands of people, in a town already large, a divisional point on the Canadian National Railways, do require postal service, and in my opinion it is necessary that this building be proceeded with. We must take care of the business that is arising in our country. To-day, the government of Saskatchewan, realizing what is taking place in Watrous, is building a new provincial park and also a beautiful chalet. I am not saying this merely to secure the votes of hon. members, but I want to point out that this chalet is being built for a definite purpose and is being properly furnished in consideration of the value of Watrous to the people. This chalet will be a place which any prominent man, either in Canada or from any other part of the British Empire, might visit—a place fit for the Prince of Wales or any of our own cabinet ministers or members of parliament. There they will be the guests of the provincial government, on the shores of Little Manitou lake. I would invite hon. gentlemen to come out there.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Are federal members invited as well?

[Mr. R. McKenzie.]

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Yes, I invite you all to come.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I had no intention of objecting to the vote for Watrous; I simply wanted the minister to give me a comparison of revenues as between Arcola and the other two places I mentioned. Will the minister furnish that information?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We will endeavour to get the information and give it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McINTOSH: I want to clear up one point made by the minister. I understand his point of view very well. He is under the impression that the public building in North Battleford to which he referred—in fact he made the statement—is at the present time non-productive and of no value. I do not admit that for a moment, but if that is the case, then the policy of his own party made it non-productive and of no value. Consequently the minister and the party of which he is a member must bear that responsibility. Another point in this connection: when the minister makes a statement of that kind he is taking a distinctly short view of the matter. If he would take the long view, the view of a larger Canada, an expanding Dominion, he would not make a statement of that kind. Again, the minister made the statement not long ago that land purchased for a public building in any centre in the west or in any other part of Canada was not a losing proposition: the department could hold it and later build on it. In his view, that was all right. If that is all right in the case of land bought by the department to be held for use later on, it must be all right in the case of land with a public building erected on it. There is no question about that. And the minister's own statement is to the effect that this building is as good as used departmentally at the present time. In that case it cannot be non-productive; it must be productive and of use to the government. It may not be 100 per cent productive, but just the same it is being put to use. I look forward, therefore, to the time when, with a new vision before Canada, with a new party in power, more than likely, there will be some of the best people outside of Canada coming to this country to build it up, and when that takes place, which will not be very long in coming, this building in North Battleford will be used.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I will say to my hon. friend that I have just as much faith in Canada as he has, and I have just as great a vision of its future, but when he says that responsibility must be attributed to this government for present day conditions, then I differ with him. Canada began to slip long before this government came into office.

Mr. McINTOSH: I did not intend that statement to be taken to include conditions totally speaking; I was dealing with the immigration question and nothing else.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My answer is quite as applicable to that phase as it is to the general conditions. My hon. friend has made the statement that it is not wise to purchase land and then hold it. That depends upon the circumstances in each particular case. I have a case in mind where an extension to a public building is absolutely essential. Adjoining that building are structures of a very inferior character, and the land can be acquired at a reasonable price. Those buildings are such that improvements must be made in order to produce revenue, and if the site is not procured at this time and new buildings are erected on it we will have to spend a much larger sum if it should be necessary in the future to expropriate in order to provide room for expansion.

Mr. McINTOSH: I thank the hon. minister for his statement; I believe it is a very candid and fair statement, but I believe his statements hold true not only with regard to land purchased in the way mentioned, but also to public buildings erected thereon.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): With regard to the item, "Saskatoon, old post office building, improvements, under contract, $12,500," the late government entered into a contract to remodel this building in order to create a palatial home for a young friend of theirs. Perhaps that is why some hon. gentlemen cannot get the money for the buildings they are talking about.

Mr. McINTOSH: Is that why there is a revote for that amount?

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): The late government entered into the contract.

Mr. McINTOSH: What is the present government going to do, carry out the contract?

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Don't ask me that question, the hon. member's government did that.

Mr. McINTOSH: The present government is introducing this item.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): My hon friend's government entered into the contract with Smith Brothers & Wilson Limited to remodel the building. As yet it has not been vacated by the post office. They were going to move into a new building just completed, but the hon. member's government entered into that contract so that this young man could do business when other men in similar lines of business were forced to get their own capital.

Mr. POWER: Will the minister bring down that contract? I would like very much to see it.

Mr. RALSTON: Who is the gentleman for whom the palatial home was being provided?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This amount of $12,500 is required for improvements to the old post office building at Saskatoon in order to provide satisfactory accommodation for Messrs. Caswell's Limited who have rented the whole of the main portion of the first floor and part of the basement at an annual rental of $7,800 for a term of ten years. The improvements are being performed under contract by Smith Brothers & Wilson Limited of Saskatoon for the sum of $10,700. The contract was awarded on August 6, 1930, just a day before the late government went out of office.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Were Smith Brothers & Wilson the lowest tenderers?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think so.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Was the late government wrong in placing a contract with the lowest tenderers?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There were three tenderers and the lowest tenderer was Smith Brothers & Wilson. The tenders received were as follows:

Smith Brothers & Wilson Limited, Saskatoon, $10,700.
A. W. Heise Company Limited, Saskatoon, $12,390.
A. W. Cassidy & Company, Saskatoon, $14,294.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Is there anything wrong with that?

Mr, MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The hon. member for Saskatoon was very successful in creating a mystery, but the minister has given the committee a clear explanation.

Mr. McINTOSH: Does the hon. minister consider the rental to be paid for this building when it is completed as sufficient?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sorry but I am without that information. The lease was not entered into since this government came into office and we have had no occasion to review the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I suggest that this item stand until the minister gets the file.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can give my hon. friend all the information he requires at any time.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What about the contract? Is the government satisfied with the amount and the way in which it was obtained?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The contract was obtained in the usual way. We followed the practice which had been followed by my predecessor in office and accepted the lowest tender. Let me assure the committee now and for all time that that is the policy to which we will adhere. We are no respecters of persons; whoever makes the lowest tender is going to get the contract.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): It is a credit to the present administration that they let the contract to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We did not let this contract; it was let by the former administration.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It was to the lowest tenderer?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is as I have said.

Item agreed to.

Alberta — Dominion public buildings — improvements, repairs, etc., $15,000.

Mr. BUCKLEY: Would the minister give us the particulars of this item?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is an item which is carried year after year to cover needed repairs and unforeseen requirements for all the public buildings of the province. It covers such items as the renewal of a roof, repairs to plumbing, painting and general upkeep of the buildings.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Mr. Chairman, while this item is under discussion I should like to discuss another matter in which a rather important principle is involved. Some little time ago I placed a question on the order paper with regard to the redecoration of the interior of the post office at Red Deer. I was informed that two men had tendered for the work, that the lowest tender had been accepted and the work had been completed. I have no exception to take to the man chosen to do the work, because he is a man of probity, a skilled worker, and his charge was a reasonable one. There is no question about that. My reason for placing the question on the order paper was this: In the little city of Red Deer three or four men carried on that kind of work. One of those men, a man of good standing, came to me and made this complaint. He said that when the tenders were called for, he, together with the two whose names are mentioned in the answer given, offered tenders for consideration and he was informed very definitely that instructions had been issued that no tenders could be accepted for consideration—the minister will appreciate the difference between, "accepted for consideration" and "accepted"—save from two whose names are given in the reply which I received. So this man went back with his tender in his pocket. According to him, his tender was refused all consideration because his name was not on the favoured list, and as supporting the right party. The minister will see, in the first place, that I am not making this statement as something of which I have personal knowledge I do not know first-hand that this man was refused consideration. I am simply passing on to the minister the complaint that was made to me in a very serious, not to say energetic, manner by a man whose probity there was no reason to doubt, a business man of good standing. If he was right in his complaint as to the treatment he received, he complained with very good reason. If that did happen, it is a very serious thing. It is not a matter of small political patronage which we know occasionally happens in the best of families and in the best of parties. But it is a serious matter from the public point of view if a tender which may be the lowest, and may be a satisfactory tender in every other respect, is not considered because of the political views of the would-be tenderer. I cannot expect the minister to know anything about it just now; indeed, I doubt if he ever knew anything about it; but I would ask him to look into the matter very closely and ascertain whether the answer given on April 22 to the question I placed on the order paper is the full and complete answer, and to assure himself that neither from anywhere in his department nor from anywhere connected with his department have such instructions or suggestions gone forth; because, as he will readily appreciate, such a matter strikes at the root of the decency and honesty of all public service. In bringing the matter to his attention I am not making any charge. I have watched the minister in the house, and I believe that he is efficient and fair and doing his best to carry on his work. I bring the matter to his attention simply because the complaint was made to me in all seriousness by a business man of good standing, and because I think it should be looked into very carefully. If anything like that was done, steps should be taken to prevent its happening again. I shall be glad to give to the minister the name of the complainant and any other names concerned. He will appreciate, of course, why I am not making the name public at the moment.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I want to thank the hon. member for bringing this matter to my attention. I can assure him that no instructions of that character have been issued by the minister or by any person with his authority, and none will be. I shall certainly investigate the matter.

Item agreed to.

Drumheller—public building—under contract, $60,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the work on this building progressing satisfactorily, and when will it be completed?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The contract was awarded on February 2, 1931. The date for completion is September 3, 1931. I should think at this season they will be going right ahead with the work, and we shall endeavour to see that it is completed on time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The original contractors are carrying on satisfactorily, I take it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As far as I know.

Item agreed to.

Mr. LUCAS: Before we pass from the Alberta vote, may I say that some time ago the town of Viking sent a petition to the Minister of Public Works requesting a public building at that point. I notice that no such provision has been made in the estimates, and I would ask the minister just what attention that petition has received.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can assure my hon. friend that I have many such petitions, and they have been the subject of much serious and anxious consideration by me. I regret that not more of them appear in the estimates. I will look this particular one up and see how it stands.

British Columbia—Dominion public buildings —improvements, repairs, etc., $45,000.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): The constituency of Skeena, which I have the honour to represent, includes the city of Prince Rupert. Prince Rupert has no such thing as a federal public building. The federal government are just renting a shack which a reputable farmer would not use as a barn. We have had it for a number of years. A delegation from the city of Prince Rupert waited upon the government within the last two weeks, and I understand that they were given the assurance that when the present lease expires their representations will be given serious consideration. We have in Prince Rupert, which has a population of approximately 10,000, a provincial building which cost about $500,000. Prince Rupert, as some hon. members realize and others do not, occupies a strategic position as a British Pacific port at the terminus of the Transcontinental railway. I understand that the government gave the representatives from the city of Prince Rupert and the chamber of commerce a good hearing, and no doubt the claims of the city will be given consideration. But when I see only the small amount of $45,000 in the estimates for improvements and repairs to Dominion public buildings in British Columbia, I think it is up to me as a member representing one of the ridings of that province to remonstrate and to say that that is not doing justice to British Columbia. I trust that the government will look into the matter and see that central and northern British Columbia are given consideration in the supplementary estimates. I repeat that because of Prince Rupert's location at the end of a transcontinental railway and as a British Pacific port it occupies a strategic position. It stands third in customs and post office revenue in British Columbia. Prince Rupert is the second British North America port on the Pacific, and I am sure hon. members on both sides of the house will agree that we cannot develop British North America as it should be developed unless we do justice to the port of Prince Rupert. From the fact that only $45,000 is appropriated to the province of British Columbia for improvements and repairs to public buildings, one might almost think the government had forgotten that such a place as British Columbia exists.

Before I sit down I would like to impress my hon. friends opposite with the fact that Prince Rupert lies in a strategic position also in respect to northern and central British Columbia. At the present time we have only this rented shack, which accommodates customs, post office, telegraphs, fisheries, and public works. For that shack we are paying something like $7,000 a year in rent. I received that information from the Minister of Public Works, who was kind enough to give it to me. I think the government would be saving money if it would consider the erection of an adequate public building in the city of Prince Rupert.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The claims of Prince Rupert have been strongly urged upon the government, and have been supplemented by my hon. friend to-night. Many representations have been made to the department by the people of that city. Let me assure my hon. friend that the claims and requirements of Prince Rupert will not be overlooked, and as soon as revenues warrant it the construction of a building will be considered. I can only ask my hon. friend to be patient. The item of $45,000 is the same amount as that voted last year. It is for general upkeep and repair of public buildings in British Columbia. No new building is included in this item.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Of that amount how much was expended in the last year?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It was all required last year.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I would add that the Dominion government did buy a federal site about ten or twelve years ago in the city of Prince Rupert. I am not criticizing the government because of the way they picked out their sites. I am advocating the establishment of a federal building in Prince Rupert, whether a site owned by the federal government be chosen or otherwise; I am not particular about that so long as Prince Rupert and central British Columbia are recognized. To my mind it is vital to have a federal building in that portion of British North America. I call it British North America instead of British Columbia, because as I say we are the second port on the Pacific coast, Vancouver being the first. Sometimes it has been said that British Columbia is in Vancouver, but I am here to demonstrate that Vancouver is in British Columbia. I would like the house to learn where British Columbia is. I would ask hon. members not to look for Vancouver but to look for British Columbia, and they will find that there is such a place as Prince Rupert. When we receive the report concerning the Peace River outlet which my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals is going to give us, I hope hon. members will study it and realize our geographical position. British Columbia requires not only the port of Vancouver but another port in order to do justice to the development of British North America, and Prince Rupert is the second port.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Hear, hear.

[Mr. O. Hanson.]

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): My hon. friend says "hear, hear". He is a friend of mine. I realize what he has in mind, but I am not prepared to go into that now. Probably we will need three or four ports, because in that part of the country we have room for millions of people. I represent a constituency which is bigger in area than England, Ireland, Scotland and Belgium combined.

An hon. MEMBER: Mr. Brady told us that.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Well, it is all right if you know it. I venture to say that most hon. members do not know, however, that there is room for 30,000,000 people in that part of the country, and we have plenty of resources to back them up. We have agriculture, fishing, mining and all the resources to be found on God's earth. They are all in there.

When the government is considering the erection of public buildings I feel they should give my constituency some consideration. I know, however, that my hon. friend has it in mind and will give it due consideration. We are not trying to force the minister; I have no criticism to offer. However, I just wish to draw his attention to the magnitude of the country I represent, and especially the territory of Prince Rupert. The government is paying something like $7,000 a year by way of rental for a building that is nothing more than a shack. Why not erect a proper building and apply that $7,000 towards interest on the capital invested and thus have something for your money? By doing that we would get somewhere. I hope the present government will consider that proposition. If they do not now see the necessity for this accommodation at Prince Rupert, I have no doubt that some time they will, because I cannot believe they will leave it to their successors.

Mr. REID: Not seeing any appropriation in this item for the constituency I have the honour to represent, I would like to direct a few words to the Minister of Public Works. I was glad the hon. member began at last to talk about British Columbia, because although I have heard the north, south, east, and west mentioned, this is the first time British Columbia has been under consideration. Some of us are too far away. Three thousand miles is a long journey, and it is about time the members from British Columbia raised their voices. I wish to draw the attention of hon. members to some figures I have before me. For the erection of public buildings, out of a vote of over $6,000,000

British Columbia gets only $81,000. Out of that amount $8,000 is a revote. Expenditures authorized by statute amount to $579,712, and British Columbia gets only $112,000. For miscellaneous items the total amount is $929,000, nearly a million dollars, and of that amount British Columbia gets nothing. The total amount for roads and bridges is $173,250; of that amount British Columbia gets nothing. For telegraph and telephone lines the total amount is $205,950; of that amount British Columbia gets $63,600. Then we come to the heading "mail subsidies." There is a great deal of talk about the development of our markets. Of late we have been turning to the east to build up our trade. One would think that in connection with mail subsidies British Columbia would receive a substantial amount. Well, the total figure under this heading is $1,052,220 and of that amount British Columbia receives only $266,400. The total amount for ocean and river service is $3,697,300, and of that British Columbia receives only $20,000. The total amount for the marine department is $4,602,933, but of that British Columbia does not get a cent. I agree with the minister that we have to cut our suit according to the cloth, but I am afraid that on the suit he makes for Canada British Columbia will be represented by the buttonholes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It will not be as bad as that.

Mr. REID: Our appropriation has been cut down very considerably. I agree with the minister that we should exercise economy, but for public buildings we are cut down from $203,000 to $81,000, which is out of proportion to the decreased appropriations for the other provinces. Out of a total vote of something like $22,422,782 British Columbia is going to get only $880,000 odd. Is it any wonder we rise in our places and protest? I have long been of the opinion that British Columbia has been neglected by the federal authorities, but this is the first opportunity I have had of expressing that opinion in this house. As long as this neglect continues I am going to raise my voice in protest. It seems to me that the nearer you are to Ottawa the more you get.

Talking about public buildings, we have a post office at New Westminster that was built I do not know how many years ago. Practically all the mail for the Fraser valley goes through that post office. I venture to say that if the provincial department of health had any jurisdiction over government buildings they would have closed this one up long ago in view of the disgraceful conditions under which the postal staff are working.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): They would do the same thing in Prince Rupert.

Mr. REID: I ask the minister to consider this matter very seriously. The post office is so congested that the men are working back to back. The building should be enlarged, and we have the land for the purpose. I understand that last year the necessary plans were prepared in the department.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Have not these conditions prevailed for some years past?

Mr. REID: I am not responsible for what happened in years past. Although my predecessor raised his voice in protest, apparently he did not raise it loud enough. Not only are we getting too small an appropriation in relation to our population, but we are getting a great deal less than the amount collected in relation to the duties on exports and imports through the ports of British Columbia. At one port alone the amount of duties collected is the second largest in the Dominion. In case it is urged that British Columbia has only a small population and does not amount to anything, I desire to put these figures on record. The duties collected last year at Vancouver amounted to $14,000,000, according to the returns given by the Department of Trade and Commerce. This figure is exceeded only by Montreal. The port of Quebec—where so much money has been spent—collected duties to the amount of only $2,500,000 odd. There the value of the imports for consumption amounted to $17,000,000 odd and of exports upwards of $12,000,000, while at Vancouver the value of the imports for consumption amounted to over $79,000,000 and of exports over $127,000,000. I am not going to plead the case of Vancouver, for she is ably represented in this house, but I should like to see the needs of British Columbia, and particularly the riding of New Westminster, taken into consideration by my hon. friend.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I would remind my hon. friend that the appropriations for public works are not based upon the population of the different provinces; they cannot be. Regard must be had for many factors. If he will go back through the public accounts I think he will find in some years that the expenditures on public buildings in his province have been out of proportion to the population—the basis for which he is now contending. He has already spoken to me about an appropriation for New Westminster. In that locality we have been spending a good deal on the Fraser river, but his request will be carefully considered.

Mr. REID: Even during the last regime the port was not discriminated against because it happened to be represented by a member in opposition to the then government, as a matter of fact the appropriation was increased. I should like to see that policy continued. What is the reason for making such a great reduction in the appropriation?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The appropriation for any locality, I may tell my hon. friend, is not reduced because of the character or political complexion of its representation in this house, and it never will be.

Mr. REID: I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. POWER: Put up that declaration in every post office.

Mr. HANBURY: Does the minister contemplate any increased accommodation at the Vancouver post office? He is probably aware that that post office is used as the centre from which all the mail going north and to many of the interior parts of the province is transferred. The present accommodation is not sufficient. I understand that recommendations have been made to the department for the past two or three years that further accommodation is necessary. Further, I understand that these recommendations have been endorsed by the minister's departmental officers. I repeat, this increased accommodation is urgently required, and I should like to know if the minister contemplates taking the necessary steps to provide it in the very near future.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In reply to the hon. member for Burrard I may say that I am informed that the matter has been receiving consideration for the last eight or ten years. Undoubtedly increased accommodation is necessary. I understand that it would cost approximately $350,000 to acquire a site and about $1,000,000 to erect a building—a heavy expenditure. The matter is receiving consideration, and as soon as circumstances warrant action will be taken.

Mr. HANBURY: I am more or less familiar with the figures mentioned by the minister, but I would point out to him that the rentals now being paid for the accommodation of the various Dominion government services in the city represent interest on a capital investment that would amply take care of all these requirements. I think the minister will find that an increase in the public buildings in Vancouver would be justified as a good investment from the standpoint of the government.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Again I wish to point out that these expenditures are not made from capital as such, but from revenue.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): May I suggest to the minister that it might entail less cost to the Dominion government to transfer some of the many federal offices we hear of in Vancouver up into the interior of the province, where I think you would get the site a good deal cheaper and the buildings would be constructed for a good deal less than the figures mentioned by the minister, for Vancouver. I offer this suggestion for his consideration.

Mr. HANBURY: I am sure my hon. friend's constituents will welcome his suggestion, but I doubt whether it would be welcomed in other parts of British Columbia. People from all over the world, from British Columbia in particular and especially from that portion of the interior of British Columbia represented by my hon. friend, like an excuse to come to Vancouver, even if it is only to see one of the government officials.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): I might also say that we welcome the people of Vancouver in the central part of British Columbia. It will not hurt the health of my hon. friend a bit to come into that part of the province and look at it once in a while.

Mr. HANBURY: When we go into that part of the province its beauties are so great that we do not like to have our minds distracted by business.

Item agreed to.

Vancouver postal station "D"—improvements, $2,000.

Mr. HANBURY: I would like the minister to explain this item.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This station is in my hon. friend's constituency, I believe, and this amount is to provide for the installation of a new screen in postal station D for the purpose of providing improved postal facilities. The estimated cost is $1,800, with $200 for contingencies.

Item agreed to.

Vancouver public building—to meet one year's interest at five per cent on mortgage of $400,000, $20,000.

Mr. HANBURY: Before we leave this resolution I should like the minister to give the details of the appropriations which were not required for the last year.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The appropriation for British Columbia was $128,300, and the expenditure was $112.879. The balance falls in, and I can give the hon. gentleman the particulars if he wishes them. For Vancouver public buildings, improvements and repairs, we voted $17,000 and only spent $14,995. For accommodation for the Royal Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve we voted $11,500 and spent $11,410, and the work is completed. For a public building in Trail $66,000 was appropriated and $56,648.46 was spent, and the building is completed. The balance falls in. For a public building at Rossland $5,000 was appropriated, $4,625.36 was spent and the building is completed. For a public building in Kimberley, $28,800 was appropriated; $25,195.28 was required for the construction of the building, and the balance falls in.

Mr. HANBURY: I should like as full information as I can get from the minister with regard to that appropriation for the R.C.N.V.R. accommodation.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Of last year?

Mr. HANBURY: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sorry I have not the particulars of last year's appropriations with me.

Mr. HANBURY: I understand that appropriation was made for the purpose of acquiring the old buildings of the Royal Vancouver Yacht Club.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is correct.

Mr. HANBURY: That item went through last year. I understand a cheque has been issued so that it will come out of last year's estimates, but as yet the cheque has not been sent out. The point I wish to make is this: The government rented that property from the yacht club and paid a rental of $1,800 a year. They had the opportunity of purchasing the property at $10,000, I think, and they considered that expenditure justified. However, it is now over a year since the appropriation was made and I understand that the yacht club have received neither cheque nor rental in the meantime. I think they are at least entitled to receive rental, and failing that I think they should receive interest for the time the payment has been held up.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I assure my hon. friend that this matter will be brought to the attention of departmental officials. The matter will be checked up, and if there are any errors they will be corrected.

Mr. HANBURY: Just for the information of the minister I might say that I understand the papers in that connection are in the possession of the Department of Justice now and are being held up there because the department is anxious to secure a right of way to this property from the city of Vancouver. However, the sale of the property did not contemplate that the club would be required to give this right of way, which is in the control of the city of Vancouver. That is the cause of the delay, and I do not think there is any justification for withholding that payment.

Mr. SPENCER: Could the minister give us some information with regard to this interest of five per cent on the mortgage of $400,000?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It was the Winch building, which was purchased by the former government subject to a mortgage, and we are paying the interest on the mortgage.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings generally — experimental farms—replacements, repairs, improvements, etc., $50,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Having regard to the fact that the announced policy of this government is that it will take a strong forward movement on behalf of agriculture, this cut from $100,000 to $50,000 is rather an unhappy exemplification of that strong attitude. Especially is that so when I find the Prime Minister reported in the Telegraph-Journal of St. John, under date of July 3, as saying that he would regard it as a great responsibility, if elected, to see that the collective weight and power of the Dominion is placed behind agriculture. I think this is rather an unfortunate illustration of that power, to cut down this item from $100,000 to $50,000. I suppose this will include new buildings as well?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, this is just for ordinary repairs.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is the regular vote, but the amount is irregularly small. It covers some twenty-five farms, including the tobacco farms, and I feel sure that the Minister of Agriculture, who is present, could very well use that other $50,000 to keep those farms in good order during the coming year.

Sometimes it is easier to get through two small bites than one large bite; that often has been found to be the case in the past, and I would suggest that a second bite be taken in the supplementary estimates. I am sure it would be a welcome contribution to the system of experimental farms so well kept up for the last eight or ten years.

Mr. DUFF: What amount was expended last year?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): While the information requested by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough is being looked up, I can only say to the hon. member for Melville that this reduction will not curtail the extension of any agricultural program which may be adopted. This is just to cover minor, casual repairs and improvements that come along from time to time. We think we can get through this year with that amount.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is a bad start.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sorry, but the officer informs me that he has not the information as to the amount spent last year. However, we can get it.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings generally—military buildings —repairs, fittings and additions, $50,000.

Mr. HANBURY: In connection with military buildings, I wish to direct the attention of the minister to the condition in Vancouver. He is probably quite familiar with the situation. I do not propose to criticize the expenditure he is making this year in connection with the rental of the horse show building, which is now used there, but it seems to me that the rental being paid is exorbitant. It cannot be avoided at the present time, but I do think it is very necessary for the government to consider the whole situation in regard to militia units in Vancouver. The government are paying $9,000 at present for the horse show building, and I am informed that the purchase price of that building was approximately $25,000 to $27,000. There is no other building in Vancouver at present suitable. Now, housed in that building are military stores to the value of between $400,000 and $500,000. The place is nothing but a fire trap, and if the government are going to continue militia establishments at all they would most certainly be well advised to consider seriously the building of an armoury, to capitalize the sum that is paid now and to obviate the risk to this military equipment. I would suggest that the minister give that serious consideration. At present we have there other military units that are improperly housed. Under the present system of renting quarters it is practically impossible for them to better their condition, and again I suggest that if we are to continue militia units the government should consider some accommodation that would justify the efforts of these officers and men and the time they are putting in. We should give them quarters much more suitable than those they have at present.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This lease has been current for some years. I thank the hon. gentleman for his information, which will be taken into consideration. I should like to pass this item to-night, if possible.

Mr. NEILL: I wish to refer very briefly to the Shaughnessy hospital, which is in bad condition. It is a fire trap. I took the matter up with the Minister of Pensions and National Health and he indicated that there had been an attempt to reduce the fire risk by placing in another building some of the worst cases in the upper stories, and including in the estimates a substantial sum for rebuilding or repairing the place. Is there any vote for the Shaughnessy hospital concealed in this estimate?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is nothing in this estimate to cover the item to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. NEILL: But this is for military buildings—repairs.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is only repairs.

Mr. NEILL: Well, this building should be repaired; something should be done to it. It is really in a dangerous condition now. As I say, it is a fire trap. My hon. friend (Mr. Hanbury) is quite right when he refers to another building as being a fire trap for military stores. But surely where human life is concerned, the matter is much more serious.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I wish to endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni with reference to the Shaughnessy hospital. I would impress upon the Minister of Pensions and, as well, upon the Minister of Public Works the necessity for a new military hospital in Vancouver. I think my recollection is correct, that the previous administration had prepared plans for a new military hospital there, and I wish to urge upon this government the importance of this undertaking.

Mr. BENNETT: They did not vote the money for it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is correct.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I may tell my hon. friend for Comox-Alberni that we have in the estimates $11,500 for the particular hospital he mentions. That will help out.

Mr. DUFF: I think we had better report progress.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): May I carry vote 191?

Mr. DUFF: There are a number of items in that vote which we wish to discuss.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In that case, I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Friday, May 1, 1931.

The house met at three o'clock.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES AT NEW CARLISLE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): May I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) whether he has received a request from some eighteen officials and employees of the Canadian National Railways at New Carlisle, many of them fathers of families and old employees, who have been dismissed from the service; and whether it is possible for him to do anything for the relief of these people? I understand that they have appealed to the minister, and I know that in the kindness of his heart, if he can do anything for them, he will do so. I would like to know if any steps have been taken in that matter.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I do not remember having received any representations on their behalf, but even if I should, it is a matter, of course, for the management of the railways, over which I have no control at all. I shall be very glad, however, to pass on any representations that come to me.

COLLIN'S BAY PREFERRED PENITENTIARY

On the orders of the day:

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): I would like to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) who has been appointed as warden of the preferred penitentiary at Collin's Bay.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): No permanent appointment has yet been made. The acting warden is Mr. Jackson.

SMITHFIELD BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. FRASER (Northumberland): I should like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) if it is the intention of his department to replace the Smithfield bridge on the Murray canal which collapsed in August, 1930.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I do not remember anything about the matter, but I shall be very glad to look into it and give an answer later.

WHEAT MARKETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Has the government received any invitation to the meetings of the eastern European nations to discuss the marketing of wheat, and if so, will the government be represented at those meetings?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I presume the hon. gentleman refers to the meeting in London? If so, and he will put his question on the order paper in a precise form, I shall be glad to answer it. At the moment I cannot quite get the import of his question.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): A despatch appears in this morning's papers to the effect that meetings are being held by the Little Entente, at Mr. Briand's suggestion, to discuss wheat marketing in Europe. As the markets there affect the welfare of this country, I wondered whether the government was prepared to be represented at those meetings either in an advisory or observational capacity.

Mr. STEVENS: There is no possibility of our being invited, and certainly we should not be represented unless we were invited. Up to the present there has been no invitation. I presume that it is a meeting of certain groups preparatory to the London meeting, but I have no information with respect to the matter.

Mr. POULIOT: But Mr. Ferguson enjoys looking through the keyhole.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Ferguson will look after himself all right.

REMOVAL OF RIPPLE ROCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILFRED HANBURY (Vancouver): I would like to ask if the report prepared by the engineers investigating the removal of Ripple rock has yet been handed in, and when it will be tabled.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): I have not yet received the report.

WINNIPEG VETCRAFT SHOP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Before the orders of the day are called I have a question for the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren). The question is of some concern to the returned men of Canada and to veterans' organizations. I understand that we have seven vetcraft shops in Canada, one for the maritimes, at Halifax; one for Quebec at Montreal; two for Ontario, one at Toronto and one at Hamilton; and two for British Columbia, one at Victoria, and one at Vancouver. The one for the three prairie provinces at Winnipeg was burned last July. The matter was to be investigated, but up to the present time no action has resulted and there has been a great deal of uncertainty, and the returned men of the three western provinces would like to know what is the exact situation. My question is simply this: Will the minister take into consideration an investigation of the vetcraft shop in Winnipeg with a view to reestablishing it on a larger basis, or if that is impossible, will he consider the cases of the men affected, about 150 in number, and make them 100 per cent pensionable?

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): That question involves several questions. I can answer it partially by stating that the matter was investigated, and some time ago an answer was given to the effect that it was not proposed to restore the building that had been destroyed. Certain arrangements were made for the men who had previously been engaged there; something like two month's pay, I think, was given. There is no objection, however, to further consideration of the matter. These matters never really receive final consideration.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): I desire to draw to the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart), so that it might facilitate the business of the house when the estimates for New Brunswick are under consideration, that certain letters have not been brought down in Reference No. 6, which was laid on the table the other day. The missing letters include one from G. M. McDade, the member for Northumberland, also a letter appointing Mr. Albany M. Robichaud, agent for the Department of Justice, to procure certain deeds in connection with the work reported on in this file, together with his reply, also a letter accompanying the deeds. These letters have not been produced. I would ask the minister to look into the matter and to complete the file by producing the missing letters.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): I will take note of what the hon. gentleman says, and have the matter checked up.

SALE OF GASOLINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): I would ask the Prime Minister if any steps have been taken to compel oil refineries to supply oil and gas to cooperative organizations which are willing to pay for it.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): That would rest entirely within the jurisdiction of the provinces.

RAILWAY COMMISSION

AMENDMENT OF JUDGES ACT TO PROVIDE ANNUITIES FOR CHIEF AND ASSISTANT CHIEF COMMISSIONERS

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That the Judges Act be amended to provide for an annuity to any judge of a superior court of Canada who is or has been, since 1st January, 1931, appointed chief commissioner or assistant chief commissioner of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will the minister explain?

Mr. GUTHRIE: This resolution provides for an amendment to section 27 of the Judges Act, adding a clause to protect judges who may be appointed to office other than upon the bench of the superior courts of Canada At times it is desirable to appoint judges to other positions, such as to the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada. I think experience in the past has shown us that eminent judges who have served in the position, for instance, of chief commisisoner of the railway board have rendered very valuable service to the country; I mention Mr. Justice Killam, the late Mr. Justice Mabee, and the recently retired Chief Justice McKeown. Section 27 of the Judges Act provides:

> If any person become entitled to a pension after the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and twenty, under this act, and become entitled to any salary in respect of any public office under His Majesty in respect of his government of Canada, such salary shall be reduced by the amount of such pension.

Should it become desirable to appoint a judge of one of the superior courts of Canada to the position of chief commissioner or assistant commissioner of the railway board, such appointment might endanger the position of that judge in respect to the retiring allowance which he has already earned. The intention of the amendment is to cure this defect by providing that the section which I have just read shall be amended so that the status quo of the judge in respect of the retiring allowance which he has already earned shall be preserved. He will continue in his new appointment, and at the end of his term in that appointment will receive the retiring allowance which he would have received if he had continued as a judge. The bill which has been prepared and will be introduced if this resolution is adopted mentioned the two positions of chief commissioner and assistant chief commissioner of the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada, and it is drawn so as to enable the country to utilize the services of eminent members of the superior courts of Canada without reducing the allowances to which otherwise they would be entitled.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I believe that in the case of Judge McKeown who has just retired the pension was extended to the amount of salary he drew as chairman of the railway board. At his retirement that provision came into effect. Does this mean that while the incumbent in office is in receipt of a pension as a retired judge he will draw the salary of the commissioner plus the pension?

Mr. GUTHRIE: He will draw the salary of a chief commissioner. However, his time spent as chief commissioner will count as if he had still continued to be a judge. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. HEENAN: In other words, he will not lose his right of pension?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, that is right.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In the event of a person not having served the full term up to the age of seventy-five years, or in the event of serving only fifteen years and being appointed to a position of this character, will his term as commissioner count for retirement purposes? I believe the age of seventy-five years is the maximum at which a judge may serve?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, his term served as commissioner will count just the same as if he had served as a judge.

Mr. BENNETT: By statute the railway commission is a court of record.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Guthrie thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 40, to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

> That the Soldier Settlement Act be amended to abolish the soldier settlement board and provide for the transfer of its powers, functions and privileges to an officer to be called the director of soldier settlement, who shall be paid such salary and at such rate per annum as the governor in council shall fix and allow.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): I would like to have an explanation of this resolution. Perhaps we could have it in committee, but if the minister is in a position to give it, I would prefer to have it now. I see that the governor general in council shall fix the rate per annum of salaries. Why is this salary not fixed under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. GORDON: In answer to the hon. member I reply that this department of the government never operated under the Civil Service Act. There may be arguments advanced why it should, but at the present time the government, through my department, is endeavouring to reorganize the soldiers settlement board with a view to cutting down the expense of administration and, I believe, to giving greater service and having greater efficiency in the administration of the board and of its funds.

Mr. VENIOT: I have no objection to the motion going through, but we will have a better chance to discuss it in committee.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Gordon thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 41, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Public Buildings—Generally

Experimental farms — replacements, repairs, improvements, etc., $50,000.
Flags for Dominion public buildings, $5,000.
Military buildings—repairs, fittings and additions, $50,000.
Military hospitals—repairs, improvements and alterations, $99,000.
Public buildings—generally, $40,000.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, yesterday the member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie) asked for certain information in connection with the public buildings at Deloraine, Arcola and Watrous. I have the information now and will place it on Hansard:

Deloraine

Site, $1,500; contract for building, $24,903; fittings and lock boxes, $2,279; grading and sidewalks, $1,000; clock, $1,000; contingencies and superintendence, $2,218.—Total, $32,900.
Population in 1930, 760; postal revenue, 1929-30, $5,369.78; customs revenue, 1929-30, $5,640.18.

Arcola

Estimated cost of site, $200; lowest tender for building, $27,870; fittings, $3,000; grading, $2,000; contingencies and superintendence, $3.000.—Total, $36,070.
Population in 1930, 700; postal revenue, 1929-30, $5,279.51; customs revenue, nil.

Watrous

Estimated cost of site, $8,000; buildings, $24,000; fittings, $3,000; grading and sidewalks, $1,000; contingencies and superintendence, $2,000.—Total, $38.000.
Population in 1930, no figures; population in 1921, 1,101; postal revenue, 1929-30, $7,209.53.

It will be seen that the revenue from Arcola is the smallest of the three and the cost of the building the highest.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Public Works department called for tenders for the construction of a veranda on the post office building at Riviere du Loup. I am informed that two tenders were received, one from Charron and Anctil for $255, and the other from Philippe Blier for $295. Will the minister inform me why no tender was accepted?

[Mr Veniot.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have sent for the information and will give it to my hon. friend a little later, if that will suit him.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister. May I ask if the failure to proceed with the work is due to the action of Mr. Dubé, the defeated candidate for Temiscouata county?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, I would say not.

Mr. POULIOT: Has he the government patronage in Temiscouata county?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No gentleman has the patronage for any of these counties.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: Is the hon. minister insinuating that the Tory candidate in Temiscouata is not a gentleman?

Mr. VENIOT: Is there anything in the item of $50,000 for experimental farms for additional buildings at Fredericton?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is no specific appropriation for any building; it is just a general item to cover needed repairs, wherever those repairs may be found to be required.

Mr. VENIOT: Has the department received any request from those in charge of the experimental farm at Fredericton for additional buildings?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I cannot say definitely; but in all probability if conditions warrant repairs there we have some representations about them and they will be considered.

Mr. DUFF: Last night I asked the minister how much money was spent under this item. Can he give me any information now?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It was all spent.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If I remember correctly, there was a vote in last year's estimates for an elevator at Lethbridge, but I do not see anything in these estimates with respect to it. Is the building completed?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The elevator at Lethbridge was not constructed by the Public Works department. It is under the control of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The Public Works department have nothing to do with it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is my information.

Mr. HANBURY: I should like again to direct the attention of the minister to Ripple rock on the west coast of British Columbia. This rock is a menace to both Canadian and American boats going to Alaska and the northern ports of British Columbia. For many years representations have been made urging that the rock be removed, and I understand the department have had their engineers investigating with a view to ascertaining the cost and recommending the removal of the rock.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but it does occur to me that as we are dealing with public buildings at the present moment, the proper time to discuss Ripple Rock would be when we are considering the items for harbours and rivers, and when probably I would have more information available.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it the general policy of departments to erect public buildings under other departments than that of public works?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There are other departments that to a certain extent construct buildings for themselves. I have in mind the Department of Justice, and the Department of the Interior as far as Indian affairs are concerned.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think we should put them all under the minister and give him some more work.

Item agreed to.

Mr. HANBURY: I would now like to direct the question to the minister which I asked a few moments ago, with regard to Ripple rock. I should like to ask him if he can tell me when the information will be available as to the cost of removing this rock, and when the recommendation of the engineers will be brought down. This is a very serious matter to all the shipping interests of the Pacific coast, whether the shipping has to do with the northern part of British Columbia or Alaska; it is a matter of interest not only to Canadian but to American shippers as well. It has been a menace there for a number of years, and unless it is removed some day we will have a very serious accident and the Canadian government will be responsible for permitting that menace to remain as it is to-day. I would ask the minister to give this matter his very serious consideration; I hope the report will be tabled at any early date and that he will take steps to see that this rock is removed at once.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Of course my hon. friend will notice that no immediate action is contemplated, because no provision is made in the estimates for this work. I am not very familiar with the matter except that I know there is rather an acute difference of opinion as to whether this suggested action should be taken. However, a report is in course of preparation, I believe, and when it is received it will be available to my hon. friend.

Mr. HANBURY: Just in connection with the minister's statement that an acute difference of opinion exists, I would suggest to him that fully ninety-five per cent of the shipping people of British Columbia desire to have this rock removed, and I would say that fully ninety per cent of the population of British Columbia desire its removal. I do not think the different opinion which is held by five per cent or ten per cent of the people interested should interfere with action being taken in the matter.

Mr. PLUNKETT: The hon. gentleman may be speaking for his constituency in this regard, but I wish to enter a protest on behalf of my constituency on Vancouver island in regard to the removal of Ripple rock. There may be a decided opinion in the constituency represented by my hon. friend, but there is an equally decided opinion on Vancouver island in regard to this matter. The commission which was appointed to consider the matter was composed of engineers who were asked originally to consider a bridge. Then they were asked to consider the removal of an obstruction to marine navigation. Navigation has been going on for over sixty years, and although the obstruction has been there no lives have been lost upon Ripple rock. I do not want hon. members, in the consideration of this question, to start something on the Pacific coast which may come into conflict with maritime rights by the division of Vancouver island from the mainland. I will say nothing further on the subject at the present time, but when the report is brought down I purpose to have a great deal to say, and I shall not be in accord with the hon. member who has just made his representations to the house.

Mr. REID: It is hardly necessary for me to tell the minister how important the Fraser river is. I rise now to bring to his attention a matter which is agitating the people there to a considerable extent, and that is the question of a modern lightship at the mouth of Fraser river. The government is spending thousands of dollars to put the river in first class shape for shipping. It has been examined by mariners, and they lay the blame for many accidents on faulty lighting. Has an application been made to the minister's department in connection with a modern lightship for the river?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is a matter which is under the jurisdiction of the Marine department. I shall draw the hon. member's question to the attention of my colleague.

Mr. REID: I shall be pleased if you will have this done. With regard to dredging, has the minister received an application for dredging for airport purposes at Lulu island?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is a civic airport?

Mr. REID: Yes; and that also is a very important project, many thousands of dollars having been spent there. In view of the fact that the Post Office Department is advertising from one end of Canada to the other, to induce people to use air lines, some consideration should be given to the development of that project, and it cannot be accomplished unless there is dredging.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): So far as I know, the Public Works department has not yet embarked on any expenditures on air ports.

Mr. NEILL: Ripple rock, which hon. gentleman have been discussing, happens to be situated in the district I have the honour to represent, and I approve the government's decision to delay action until they get a scientific report from the engineers whom they have appointed to make that investigation. I would ask, however, why that report is not available. The investigation took place months ago and I have seen in the British Columbia papers what purports to be a summary of the report. If it is available on the street corners in Vancouver it ought to be available to the department and to the members of this house. What has become of it?

Mr. DURANLEAU: With reference to Ripple rock, I have already intimated that the report has been received at my department, but it has not yet been studied and I do not know whether it should be laid on the table of the house. We shall study it and in a few days we shall probably be in a position to say whether it is available to the public.

Mr. NEILL: May I ask the minister why it cannot be available? The report was got out by government engineers with reference to a matter of public concern, and there is a doubt in the minister's mind whether he will let us know what is in it. We have already been promised by the Minister of Public Works that it will be available as soon as it is brought down. We now find it is in the possession of the Marine department—I do not know how long they have had it. I would ask now along what lines of thought it could be argued that the report should not be available to the public?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Sometimes public questions may arise which might make that course inadvisable.

Mr. NEILL: Why, in this instance?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not say there is any reason against it, but I say that the report has not been studied yet and I do not know whether it will be advisable to lay it before the house.

Mr. NEILL: Then I would ask a further question: What further period of incubation will be required before it is decided whether it should be laid on the table?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It will not be long.

Mr. HANBURY: I have here a copy of the Vancouver Province of April 24, which carries this headline:

Engineers ask removal of Ripple rock. Work may be postponed a year.

Evidently this information has been given outside the house, or else the papers as usual are making statements for which there is no foundation. But if the newspapers have information the members of this house are at least entitled to the same information.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The undertaking is considerable, and though no information was given by my department, so far as I know, I do not think that this work can be done this year on account of the large expense involved. I am sure that no information was given by my department.

Sir EUGENE FISET: What item are we discussing?

Mr. NEILL: We have a right to finish the present discussion, having taken it up. The minister's remark now is to the effect that he does not think, under present financial conditions, that the government would be justified in proceeding with the expense this year. I agree with him. But are we to take that as an intimation that the report was favourable to the removal of the rock?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The report has not been studied yet and I should not like to make a statement which would not be absolutely accurate. If my hon. friend is anxious to see the report, he may see it.

Mr. NEILL: This afternoon?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot say this afternoon, but if the hon. gentleman will come to my department I am sure my officials will be pleased to let him see the report.

Mr. NEILL: Thanks.

Mr. HANBURY: Is that invitation extended to myself as well?

Mr. NEILL: Oh, no.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I suppose so; I do not see why it should not be.

Mr. MUNN: While this is not in my riding, a great many people there are interested in the shipping. This rock is a real menace to navigation. I know, because I have passed there many times. It is true there have not been accidents, but there might be a serious accident any day, and I think the government would be well advised to consider having the rock removed. If they cannot do it this year, possibly they could include an item in the estimates next year. I might say in this connection that the people in Victoria are hoping that some day they may get a railway across to the mainland. Anyone familiar with the circumstances will tell you that it is an impossibility.

Mr. REID: The minister, in replying to my question regarding the air port, said he was not interested in it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I did not say we were not interested; we are interested in everything. I said we had not yet made any expenditure.

Mr. REID: This is a question of dredging where thousands of dollars have already been spent. The property was acquired to develop an air port for the Pacific coast and the dredging is necessary to complete this undertaking. Dredging comes under the minister's department. There is one item here of $30,000 for harbours and rivers generally. What is contemplated there?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is the same amount as was available last year. It enables the department to do small amounts of dredging where this is found necessary, as well as other smaller work. There is no particular appropriation for it.

Mr. HANBURY: Before this item carries, I would like to have the minister give the committee some explanation of the reduction in the vote for harbours and rivers generally.

Mr .STEWART (Leeds): That reduction will be found to prevail generally throughout the items of the Public Works department; there has been a reduction all along the line. All I can say is that it is in keeping with such a program.

Mr. REID: There is an item covering Vancouver, Stanley park, foreshore protection, $8,000, and I would like to know why, if money can be spent for foreshore protection around Stanley park it cannot be spent on improvement works on the Fraser river. There are many cases where the foreshore erosion has been caused by the operation of the dredges, and I would like to know why the Fraser river is being neglected.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is a continuation of a program undertaken some years ago and is really the completing of an obligation which this government found resting upon it.

Mr. MUNN: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to object to any item in the estimates so far as British Columbia is concerned, but I would remind the hon. minister that I have made several applications covering what is practically upkeep work in connection with wharves and floats. As a business man, I would not recommend the spending of money unless I was satisfied it was necessary, but I have not had even a five cent piece. Whether or not that is a slam at the people who sent me down here in good faith, I do not know, but it has made me feel very badly. I would not like to think that just because I am here in opposition, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) or the government intends to starve these people out. I have received many applications for appropriations to carry on what is practically upkeep work, and every hon. member knows that in the case of any property, whether it is a barn, house, bridge, wharf or float, it is necessary to keep it up. Personally I will not suffer because there is no item in the estimates, but my constituents will and I am sorry for them because, as I said before, they sent me here in good faith.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can assure my hon. friend that irrespective of the side of the house upon which he or any other hon. gentleman may be sitting, their requests will receive careful and serious consideration. I would like to introduce my hon. friend to a few of the hon. gentlemen sitting behind me, who have used much stronger language than he has. Their complaints have been bitter that there is nothing in the estimates for them, but I can assure my hon. friend that although he sits on the other side of the house in that respect he is in very good company. I would ask him not to be too pessimistic over some of these items he has in mind as I believe many of them will properly come within the general vote and it is quite possible we may be able to take care of some of them in that way. The hon. member has sent me particulars of some of these items but I shall be pleased to have a complete list.

Mr. MUNN: With the minister's permission I will give the particulars so they will appear on Hansard and my constituents will know that I have kept them in mind.

I have asked for a wharf at Hoods point and Cowans Point on Bowen Island. Boats arrive at these points every day but no accommodation is made for them. They are forced to unload their cargoes of freight and passengers by means of rowboats. A great many people spend their summer on this island and they are forced to come ashore in rowboats. These wharfs have been promised but nothing has been done as yet.

A wharf is needed at Alert Bay. There is a private wharf at this point but no government wharf and the people are forced to pay wharfage charges.

Repairs are needed to the wharf at Roy. This is a very small matter but it is very urgent.

A float is needed at Donley's landing; this is a small matter but it is particularly urgent because a boat calls there nearly every day. A large amount of fish is shipped to Vancouver and general merchandise from Vancouver to Donley's landing and this construction would cost only about two thousand dollars.

A float is needed also at Refuge cove, and another at Lund. All these items would not total more than $15,000, but if I could have got half that amount or perhaps two or three thousand dollars, then I might have kept quiet. I want to thank the hon. minister for his suggestion that perhaps later on some of these items may be included in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I can certify that the items mentioned by the hon. member for North Vancouver (Mr. Munn) are needed. I have a much larger list in the same category, but I do not intend to put it on Hansard. I will take a chance this year on what the minister has said, that he will not play the game of politics but rather treat these matters in a businesslike way and where the work can be shown to be really necessary it will be done. In my opinion the vote for "harbours and rivers generally" in British Columbia, which this year is $30,000 as compared with $75,000 last year, will prove to be entirely inadequate. The amount voted last year was not sufficient, but it would go a long way because I understand the items covered by this general vote are only those for which an expenditure of about $1,000 would suffice. I do not know why the engineers of the department advised the minister to vote this lesser amount, because I know it will be absolutely inadequate. This is not a matter of new work, as are the items demanded by the ravenous wolves behind the hon. minister.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I did not call them ravenous wolves.

Mr. NEILL: That was the inference.

An hon. MEMBER: They are all over there.

Mr. NEILL: Well, the aforesaid claimants, then. This is not new work, it is repair work and if it is not carried on this year it will cost the government more money at a later date when these works go all to pieces—I will not use a stronger word. Instead of only the cost of repairs, the government will be faced with an expenditure for complete renewal.

Many of the items I have in mind cover floats and in their construction it is not possible, from an engineering viewpoint, to use creosoted logs. In the case of wharves, where creosoted piles can be used, it is found that they last from fifteen to twenty years, but in the case of floats where they do not and cannot use creosoted timber, the teredos attack at once. I have known of a case where a new float was put in in the month of August and by September of the year following it had practically gone to pieces because the teredos had eaten it to such an extent. We will suppose that the average life of a float is about five years; certainly it does not exceed that. You put in a float costing, perhaps, $2,000. Something goes wrong with it. Perhaps the anchor is pulled through a ship knocking up hard against it, or one log may have decayed sooner than the others, and repairs are required costing, say, $250. For the lack of that shoenail, not only is the whole thing imperilled and its decay hastened, but the people have to go without the use of that float while that condition is allowed to continue. I was sent a photograph of a float which showed that in the approach, in that portion that extends between the float and the shore, one of the logs had given way, and the thing was standing up on its edge. The ship always calls at that point during the night, and this photograph that was sent me showed a woman, in a delicate condition of health, crawling along on her hands and knees on the ridge pole of this thing to catch the steamer on her way to hospital. They said that that was the result of temporary repairs, which would have cost about $200, not being made at the right time. What I was going to point out was this: Not only does that result obtain, not only is the life of the float shortened, but the people do not get the use of it while that sort of thing is going on, and instead of having the use of a float for five years, perhaps they get only three years' use of it. I know one float in particular—I am not accusing this government especially because the same thing happened under the previous government—where, due to the engineer's neglect to have small repairs made at the right time, the float has been used for only six months in the last eighteen months. The teredos do not suspend their activities in the meantime. Decay is going on and the life of the float shortened. If you take six months out of the short life of a float due to the neglect to make temporary repairs at the right time, it is a very expensive game indeed. Therefore I say that it is cheaper in the long run to make the repairs at the right time than to let the thing go. The people then have the use of the float and the ship can come in, instead of the people having to go out in open boats for a distance of perhaps ten miles in the almost perpetual rain that falls around some of these western islands in the winter months. This item of $30,000 is largely used for these floats. The vote has been cut down from $75,000 last year to $30,000, and apparently in view of this reduced appropriation there is going to be a great deal of neglect of these small floats, with the ultimate result that it will cost far more to replace them in the end. It can hardly be possible that any government, even on the grounds of the most dire economy, would let these floats and wharves be absolutely abandoned, some of which have been in existence for twenty years. They will have to be maintained eventully, and it will be real economy to vote a sufficient sum to maintain them as we go along. Like the hon. member for Vancouver North, I can say that there is not a single item in this list which applies to my district, and I have not uttered a word of complaint about it, although I could spend a long time in doing so; but I am particularly anxious about this general vote. It will be heavily called on, and not only with regard to my district but other parts of British Columbia, the amount is absolutely inadequate for the purpose for which it is voted.

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. MUNN: One of my colleagues has asked me what a float is. I take it for granted that the Minister of Public Works knows, but perhaps some other members of the house do not. First they take several logs and plank them over, and then this float is anchored. The teredos will destroy those logs within two or three years, necessitating repairs practically every year. Hon. members can therefore see how rapidly decay works. These floats are used for steamboat landings, and it is absolutely necessary that they should be maintained in repair for that purpose.

Mr. HANBURY: With respect to the item of $8,000 for foreshore protection of Stanley park, I understand that this amount is voted annually? What is the total amount that will be required to complete this work?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This amount of $8,000 is required to extend the retaining wall a distance of approximately 570 feet. The wall was commenced in 1922-23, has a base width which is variable, depending upon the height of wall, the average height of which is from seven to eight feet, with the top width two feet, with a granite coping eight by fifteen inches. It is built of granite, rubble boulders, with grout of Portland cement. The proposed work is requested by the Vancouver harbour commissioners and by the district engineer, to prevent erosion of the bank caused by the wash from steamers passing through the Narrows at high tide.

The appropriation in 1930-31 was $8,000, and the expenditure $7,990.81. The work already done is as follows:

During 1922-23, 1,053 feet of wall was built at a cost of $9,991.51.
During 1923-24, 800 feet of wall was built at a cost of $7,964.07.
During 1924-25, 700 feet of wall was built at a cost of $7,999.29.
During 1925-26, 830 feet of wall was built at a cost of $7,999.98.
During 1926-27, 397 feet of wall was built at a cost of $6,016.04.
During 1927-28, 514 feet of wall was built at a cost of $7,994.24.
During 1928-29, 500 feet of wall was built at a cost of $7,790.19.
During 1929-30, 375 feet of wall was built at a cost of $7,974.96.
During 1930-31, 535 feet of wall was built at a cost of $7,990.81.
Total feet built, 5,704.
Total cost, $71,721.09.

Mr. HANBURY: What will be the total cost of the construction of that wall?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is another section remaining to be done, and the probable cost of completing it will be $8,000 or $10,000 in addition to the present vote.

Mr. HANBURY: That is the information I wanted. I would call to the attention of the minister that that work carries a very high percentage of man power; the percentage of material is very small. It is work that a great many people who have no other trade can do, and I would suggest to the minister that as a measure of unemployment relief he might consider placing in the supplementaries a further sum for that work which could be expended during the present year or during the winter, if necessary, because the work could be done in the winter on account of our climatic conditions. The work has been done by day labour. We cooperate with the parks commissioners at Vancouver.

Mr. HANBURY: I am suggesting that with a view to unemployment relief this work might be done this year rather than next year, and an item be provided in the supplementaries for that purpose.

Mr. NEILL: I would like to pay a tribute to the enterprise of the engineering department in making a new departure in connection with these floats. During the last year a couple of small scows were built to take the place of floats with the idea that if the experiment proved successful they would adopt the policy. The scows can be built cheaper than the ordinary float. They are built of plank and although they are not creosoted by pressure they are painted with creosote. The creosote is not put on under pressure but is heavily painted and tarred. Unlike the floats the scows have the additional advantage that once a year they can be drawn out of water, retarred and repainted with creosote. If the experiment is successful the use of these scows will enormously decrease the cost which would have been necessary with the use of floats. Of course there is the expense of once a year pulling the scow out, but that is nothing compared with the cost of making a new float. I would like to give credit to the engineering branch of the Department of Public Works for inaugurating an experiment which I hope will be successful.

Mr. HANBURY: I wonder if the minister would tell me why appropriations totalling $358,260.16 were not spent?

Mr. REID: I notice some items in connection with protection work. Some applications for protection work have come from the constituency of New Westminster. The farmers in that district are as heavily taxed as farmers anywhere in Canada, paying from $6 to $8 per acre. I quite agree with the minister that protection work cannot be done on all rivers, wherever erosion takes place. In many cases however on the Fraser river due to the work of the dredges, erosion has taken place. I wonder if the minister would give me the assurance he gave the hon. member for North Vancouver (Mr. Munn) that when the supplementary estimates are brought down consideration will be given to applications.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Consideration will certainly be given. I do not know that I promised the hon. member for North Vancouver that anything would be included in the supplementary estimates. I made no such promise to any hon. gentleman, but I will consider the requests which have been made. In answer to the question of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury) I would say the information for which he has asked covers three pages. I am afraid that to read it at the present time would be encumbering the records of Hansard.

Mr. HANBURY: I will be quite content if the minister would furnish me with a copy of the information.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Certainly.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—Maritime provinces, $350,000.
Dredging—Ontario and Quebec, $350,000.
Dredging — Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, $50,000.
Dredging — British Columbia, $150,000.—Total, $900,000.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman, under the heading "dredging,—maritime provinces" I see the amount is reduced from $675,000 to $350,000. As I distinctly understand the government is attempting to cut down expenditures from a standpoint of economy, it is not necessary for the minister to explain the reason the expenditure in this instance has been decreased. Referring more particularly to the province of New Brunswick I would say to the minister that with only $350,000 for the maritime provinces generally I do not see how it is possible for the department to get along with that amount of money and at the same time do justice to the industries, especially the fishing industry, in the provinces of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick. At this time I intend to speak particularly of the province of New Brunswick; the representatives of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island may at a later time deal with their provinces. In the county of Gloucester, which I have the honour to represent I know of several wharves which lately have been constructed in the interests of fishermen to afford protection. Unless some dredging is done it will be impossible for those fishermen to avail themselves of the protection and accommodation provided by the wharves. For instance there is the harbour of St. Simon where there are about seventy-five or eighty fishing vessels; I do not refer to boats but to fishing vessels; in addition there are fishing boats. It may be said quite truly that for a long time they have got along without this protection. They have it now however. The intention was that last year some dredging would be done in St Simon harbour. Out of the $650,000 or $675,000 voted for dredging in the maritime provinces generally, in the estimates of dredging work to be done in these harbours made by the engineers the harbour of St. Simon was included. Nothing was done. I understand that the department was short of dredges and perhaps could not have the work done. I am told that dredges could not be procured to do the work last year in St. Simon harbour. Then there is Lower Caraquet harbour where dredging is absolutely necessary. The wharf there is 1,700 feet long. It was built eight or ten years ago and there is a constant gathering of silt coming down the different rivers emptying into Caraquet and St. Simon bays. That silt has the effect of filling up the bay. In the main channel and along the sides of the wharf beginning at a point 150 feet from the head of the wharf and running to the shore, it is impossible for fishing vessels to avail themselves at the present time of the protection the wharf otherwise offers. Then there is Shippigan gully. That point is the main entrance of about 200 fishing vessels coming from the cod fishing banks. At the present time they go through Shippigan gully whereas some years ago they had to go around Miscou point and Miscou island. Some fifteen or twenty years ago the government conceived the idea that by a system of breakwaters constructed at the entrance to Shippigan harbour and some small dredging operations the channel might be utilized and kept in proper condition for fishing vessels. The result was that after dredging had been done the strength of the current practically kept open the entrance to Shippigan harbour so that vessels drawing 14 feet of water came through that harbour instead of going around a distance of about 30 miles. A slight shifting of sands on the outside of Shippigan gully has caused the formation of a bar and has diverted the channel from the outside, leading into the gully channel and into the harbour. Last year representations were made by me and it was intended that a large bucket dredge would be procured. The suction dredges were not fitted to do the work in the exposed section of the bay. That meant that out of the $675,000 a certain portion would be spent to try to widen the channel and take away the bar. That has not been done. In addition to that $10,000 was voted last year for the dredging of what is known as the Lameque basin. That amount was to be spent under contract, not under government dredging work. No tender has been asked for and the vote is in the estimates this year.

May I point out to the minister that this $10,000 was provided to dredge the basin between two wharves to give protection and better accommodation to a fishing fleet of some 65 or 75 vessels and boats. I had before me this morning a report from the Department of Fisheries giving a list of bounties paid to persons engaged on fishing vessels and fishing boats. On just a few of the islands in the vicinity of Tracadie—I am referring particularly to Miscou and Shippigan —about 1,000 men received bounties for fishing in boats and vessels of 15 tons and upwards. With that large fishing fleet in operation there can be no doubt of the necessity of further dredging for their protection, and I think the minister would be well advised to have the matter looked into between now and the time the supplementary estimates are being prepared, to see if something cannot be done to add to this appropriation in order to meet the conditions to which I have referred.

I see an appropriation under harbours and rivers of $75,000 for breastworks and breakwaters at Tracadie harbour. The contract was let last year, and the work is being proceeded with. Suction dredge No. 12—I think that is the number—worked there last year until ice formed. I understand orders have been given to stop further dredging. Owing to the closing down of the lumber industry in that section—an industry on which a great many of our people depended, and did not engage in fishing—those people now have to resort to fishing and agriculture for a livelihood. The harbour is landlocked and it would cost $1,000,000 or more to enlarge the old entrance. Therefore it was decided by the engineers to close the old entrance and dredge a channel from the village to and through the outer beach. This would open up a channel which 30 years ago had 20 feet of water in it, but subsequently was allowed to close up. The Department of Public Works are building breakwaters and breastworks so as to open this new channel into the straits of Northumberland. When the harbour is improved, as it will be under the plans laid down, it will develop to a greater extent than ever before the fishing industry in that section of New Brunswick. As I say, the dredging has ceased. I am told by the minister in a letter which he addressed to me a few days ago that it was not thought necessary that this dredging should be continued any further until such time as the breakwaters were completed. There empty into Tracadie harbour two large rivers, and the silt from those rivers will fill in the channel already dredged, but if the dredging was continued through the outer beach the current would keep the new channel clear of silt in the future. I would ask the minister to look more carefully into this dredging. It was reported on favourably by the engineers of the department, and was started when the construction work was commenced. To my mind it is absolutely necessary that the dredging should be continued, and if operations are resumed now they will get through the beach by the fall. At present the dredge is idle and it will take very heavy spring tides to get her out of that landlocked harbour. It is evident that later on she will have to dredge herself out through this beach. If it was necessary to use the dredge elsewhere I would not urge any objection, but it seems to me futile to leave her idle in Tracadie harbour while this essential work is necessary. I think provision should be made in the supplementaries to add to the appropriation an amount at least sufficient to allow the dredge to carry on for the next four or five months.

Mr. REID: With regard to dredging, Mr. Chairman, I think the time has come when some serious notice should be taken of the matter, particularly with respect to the Fraser river. It is all very well to leave dredging in the hands of an engineer and say he is responsible for it, but I can assure the minister that it does not require an engineer, or even a person designated as an engineer, to know that some of the dredging that has been carried on in the Fraser river has been almost tragic in its futility. I direct the minister's attention to two cases and leave it to his judgment to say if such procedure is good business. Last year dredging took place east of the Fraser bridge and the sand was dumped in the middle of what was once a sand bar. The Fraser river flows at the rate of from 3 to 5 miles an hour, and carries the sand with it. The serious effect of this was seen later when a large ocean-going ship struck bottom. In the other case in connection with construction work that was being carried on by the department, the sand dredged was piled many feet high on to an island known as Ione island in the middle of the river. This sand slipped back into the river. As a result, the farmers had their dykes washed out, and they are paying $8 an acre to which includes maintenance of their dykes. I say it is high time that the spending of large sums of money for dredging should be looked into so far as the Fraser river dredging is concerned. I do not speak of other rivers. Did the recommendation for discontinuing the present dredging come from the resident enginer in New Westminster?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can only say that any curtailment in the program of dredging the Fraser river or any other river is due to the necessity of bringing our expenditure into relation with the moneys that are available. My hon. friend may not think the curtailment is justified in all cases, but we have to do the best we can with the funds available, and we shall continue to do so. As to how and where dredging work should be done, of course we are guided by the advice of our engineers. There is no other way in which we can proceed. My hon. friend's complaints will be referred to the engineer, who will make an investigation, and if he finds mistakes have been made they will be avoided in the future.

Mr. REID: I am glad to hear the minister say that these matters will be looked into.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Perhaps it would be in order for an hon. member on this side of the house to point to one of the mistakes which have been made in regard to the dredging items now under consideration. I have here a voluminous file with regard to a situation in the constituency of Selkirk, which has to do with practically all of lake Winnipeg. At the present time, under the departmental estimate, two dredges out of the three on lake Winnipeg have been laid up. The crews are idle; the men are waiting for work, and the work is waiting to be done. The water is lower in lake Winnipeg than it has been in history, but we are to have nothing done.

I would just like to direct these facts to the attention of the minister, because if I do not do so I will be afraid to go home. At the mouth of the Red river there is a wharf used by Messrs. Brown and Rutherford, a large lumber manufacturing company, but at the present time because of the low water they cannot use that wharf. I believe recommendations and investigations have been made by the engineers with regard to a harbour of refuge up at George's island, about 170 miles north of where the Red river enters lake Winnipeg. This harbour of refuge has been under construction for very many years; a good deal of money has been expended on it, but last year I understand the navigators were not able to enter the harbour at all. I understand further that on one occasion one of the government vessels had to go around the island five times in order to avoid shipwreck. If this work is not proceeded with; if matters are left as they are, and if one of these vessels is wrecked this year with loss of life, I would not like to go back to Selkirk and have it stated that I did not make adequate representations in this house with regard to the situation.

I am receiving communications day after day in regard to this matter. Just this week I learned from the town of Riverton, which is the only naturally protected harbour in the northern part of the lake, being situated at the entrance of the Icelandic river, that the vessels in that port are not able to get into lake Winnipeg at the present time; they are practically isolated, and all navigation and transportation is at a standstill. I have letters and telegrams in my possession from Conservatives, from Liberals, and from non-partisan associations. I have a telegram here, which I received on April 15, from the associated boards of trade of Manitoba, which reads as follows:

> Understand two lake Winnipeg dredges being laid up. All available equipment urgently required to facilitate navigation, and urge you make suitable representations to the department.

That is from the Manitoba associated boards of trade, and is signed by E. G. Gilliat, secretary-treasurer. I have other telegrams, from the Selkirk board of trade, from Mr. James McLenaghen, the local member of the Manitoba legislature, and from others. I also have a letter which I believe was forwarded to the minister, from the secretary-treasurer of the town of Selkirk.

Now let me deal with another feature of the situation. If this vote cannot be amended at the present time and we must wait until the supplementary estimates come down—I hope the minister is listening to me—it will mean that we must wait until almost July, which will mean that two months will be lost, during which time no work can be done. These works are essential; they are absolutely necessary, and the failure to carry them out is not only imperilling navigation but allowing trade to stagnate and adding to unemployment. I simply want to make this statement in conclusion, that if the members of this house and the government want to write my political obituary, they are going at it the right way.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In reply to my hon. friend from Selkirk I can only say that the condition which he has outlined to-day he has very vigorously and in complete detail laid before me previously. The condition which he mentions with respect to lake Winnipeg unfortunately seems to prevail generally. There is low water in the great lakes, and we have demands from many places on lake Erie and lake Ontario for dredging. We are trying to meet the emergency as best we can with the funds available.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): The minister stated that I had laid the question before the committee in detail. I have not done so. There are many other matters to which I could refer.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I said it had been laid before me in detail.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): I do not want to take up more of the time of the committee, but let me emphasize once more that if we wait until the supplementary estimates come down, much time will be lost. If we cannot make some arrangement whereby this work can be carried on immediately, a very serious situation may develop in Selkirk, for which no government and no member of parliament will want to assume responsibility.

Mr. BOWMAN: I can endorse what the hon. member for Selkirk has just said with regard to lake Winnipeg; the same situation prevails in regard to lake Winnipegosis in Manitoba. As the hon. member for Selkirk has just stated, the water in these lakes is very low; in fact it is the lowest on record. Rivers and creeks which never have been known to be dry in the west are absolutely bone dry to-day, and lake Winnipegosis, to which I refer particularly, is from three feet to five feet lower than it ever has been in the past. On lake Winnipegosis there is quite a large fishing business, and it is absolutely necessary that these dredging operations be continued in order to keep the harbours open so that boats can continue to operate and the fish may be marketed. I think the reduction from $130,000 to $50,000 is not a reduction which should be made at this time, no matter what may be the necessity for economy. I could say something along the line of what has been said already in this house, that there is such a thing as carrying economy too far, especially at this time, and I think Manitoba has suffered just a little more than it should. However, I have done my duty in drawing this matter to the attention of the minister, and I sincerely hope that the amount for dredging will be increased so that the dredges on these two lakes in Manitoba may be continued as in the past. If that is not done certainly it will mean a very serious setback to the fishing industry of that province. It must be remembered that the amount for which Manitoba is asking is a very small sum in comparison with the amounts which already have been voted for the other provinces.

Mr. HANBURY: What dredges are owned by the government in British Columbia? I am referring particularly to tidewater.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We have four—Ajax, Mastodon, King Edward and Fruhling.

Mr. HANBURY: Will all this equipment be tied up or will some of it be used?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The appropriation will not be sufficient to keep these dredges in operation unless it is supplemented in some way. The probability is they will all be laid up except the King Edward.

Mr. HANBURY: There is need for dredging in British Columbia and the equipment is available. The government is spending money on these dredges and the equipment; it pays watchmen for the purpose of looking after them. We have men looking for work and I would suggest increasing this amount in order to keep the equipment in operation and provide work, which is badly needed. Depreciation is going on to an extent greater almost than if the dredges were operating, and I cannot agree with a policy which would tie up government equipment under the present circumstances.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I ought to inform the hon. member that the Ajax has not been in operation for several years, and the Mastodon has also been idle for a considerable time. Of the remaining two it is proposed to lay up one.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): What amount of money has been provided for dredging on the Shuswap lake in the interior of British Columbia?

Mr STEWART (Leeds): No specific amount is provided for that work and it is not really proposed to operate there this year.

Mr. MacLEAN: The vote is largely reduced and I take it for granted a number of dredges will be laid up. What is the program for Prince Edward Island dredging in connection with work at Egmont bay, where a new wharf was constructed the year before last for the benefit of fishermen? A dredge was operating there last season and did part of the work but was removed before the work was completed. Is it possible to carry on that work this year or in the near future?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Our program for dredging in Prince Edward Island is under consideration and we are seeking to adjust it to the funds available so as to produce the best results.

Item agreed to.

Ontario — Sarnia — harbour improvements—under contract, $63,000.

Mr. GRAY: In connection with this item of $63,000 for Sarnia, is this for harbour development proper or it is for the public dock at Sarnia?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This amount is required to provide for work now under contract with the Detroit River Construction Company for the construction of a wharf and to provide for paving in and around the existing warehouse, and to construct a warehouse for the general use of the public.

Mr. GRAY: Have any representations been made to have the length of the wharf as originally planned extended.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes. We have had that under consideration, but we do not propose to proceed with the extension just now, even though we think it would be well justified.

Item agreed to.

Quebec, $1,100,500.

Mr. POWER: I see an item of $7,900 in connection with wharf repairs at Grindstone. What does this item represent and what is the report of the engineer?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This item is required to take care of certain construction work at this point for urgent repairs to the outer end of the wharf which was seriously damaged by a storm on October 26, 1930. The money is required for renewal of stringers, and other necessary work. The traffic is heavy, amounting to over $1,000,000 annually, and the population is 3,000.

Mr. POWER: What is the necessity for the expenditure of $4,800 at St. Francois Sud?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The work was requested by the district engineer in a report dated November 30, and is required to repair the damage done to the wharf and freight shed by a fire which occurred on the night of November 6, 1930.

Mr. POWER: In what county?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Montmorency.

Mr. POULIOT: I would like the hon. minister to give me some information with regard to the wharf at Rivière du Loup. The other day the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) said that I should have had more works done by the previous government, but he knows that the late government treated my constituency with all fairness. May I ask what amount was voted last year for the repairs of the wharf at Rivière du Loup?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The appropriation for 1930-31 was $22,100.

Mr. POULIOT: Was it taken for granted by the minister that the work would be carried on by the same men who had worked in previous years?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. POULIOT: Was it decided by the department that this work would be carried on by day labour instead of by contract provided that the same men who had been working for the previous years would continue to work?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): All I know is that this work was started in July last by day labour. Although this item amounted to $22,100, this work was started by day labour by the former government.

Mr. POULIOT: Was it understood that that work was to be done by day labour instead of by contract because the men who had worked previously had performed that work to the satisfaction of the department, and that if it should be necessary to have the work done otherwise it would be done by contract?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I understand that the hon. gentleman with his knowledge of local conditions recommended that this work should be done by day labour; it was started on that basis and has been continued.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, but the minister escapes my question; he skates all around it. My question was a short and clear one; I would like to know if on account of the work done by these men it was decided by the department to have the work continued this year by day labour instead of by contract.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That matter was taken up before I took charge of the department, and I do not know just what was the moving consideration of my predecessor in starting this work by day labour.

Mr. POULIOT: Was there any memorandum in the files to that effect? I am sure a definite decision was made by the former minister, because he told me at that time that if the work was to be done by new men he would have it done by contract instead of by day labour. Do I understand the minister to say that the amount voted last year was $22,100?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: And how much of that was spent?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The information I have is that that amount will total $15,100 when the accounts have all been received up to the end of the fiscal year. I understand there is a revote of $7,000 in this item.

Mr. POULIOT: Upon whose recommendation were these men dismissed and replaced by others?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can assure my hon. friend it was not upon his recommendation.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister is one of the ablest lawyers I have ever argued with, but he does not answer my question; I am asking him for a name and for nothing else.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I really do not remember. It was done in the ordinary course of events; my hon. friend knows just how and why these things happen.

Mr. POULIOT: Does the minister desire me to hold him responsible for the whole thing? I would like to know just who was at the bottom of this. I would like to know just who asked the minister to appoint new men in the place of the old.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can assure my hon. friend I am not seeking to avoid any responsibility whatever in connection with the action taken. This action was perfectly regular, natural, customary and normal in every way, and I am sure it was just such action as my hon. friend would have taken had he been in my position.

Mr. POULIOT: But I would not have hidden anything from the committee; I would have told whether it was Tom, Jack or Charlie. Is the minister insinuating that there was no gentleman looking after the patronage in my constituency? I would like to know who the person is, whether gentleman or otherwise, who asked for the dismissal of these men.

An hon. MEMBER: It might have been a lady.

Mr. POULIOT: If it was not a man, it must have been a woman, but not a lady. I would like to have an answer from the minister.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can assure the hon. member there is no woman in this case.

Mr. POULIOT: I ask the minister again, with all the suavity and politeness I possess: will he please tell me who that man is?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I would say that there is no man in the case at all.

Mr. POULIOT: Is it not a fact that those men who had been doing such good service were dismissed at the request of Mr. C. E. Dube, the mayor of Riviere-du-Loup and the perpetual Tory candidate in Temiscouata county?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have no doubt that these men had rendered excellent service before July 28 but it was found that their services were not as necessary after that date as they had been before.

Mr. POULIOT: I ask again if those men who were working in July were dismissed at the request of Mr. C. E. Dube, the perpetual Tory candidate in Temiscouata county.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can assure my hon. friend they were not.

Mr. POULIOT: Were new men appointed on the recommendation of the same Mr. Dube, whether he can be described as a gentleman, lady or anything else?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The foreman made a selection of the new men, but I do not know upon whose recommendation or upon whose advice he acted.

Mr. POULIOT: I am getting nearer and nearer to an answer. Who recommended the appointment of the foreman?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The district engineer was instructed to look around and obtain a first class foreman.

Mr. POULIOT: Who recommended that man to the district engineer?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I really do not know.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the minister be kind enough to tell me what instructions he gave to the district engineer in that respect, or to the chief engineer in order that he pass those instructions on to the district engineer, or to the deputy minister to be given to the secretary of the department and then passed on to the chief engineer, so that the latter might communicate with the district engineer?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Being rather inexperienced when I came into the department, I gave instructions to the officials that in matters of this kind the usual course should be followed.

Mr. POULIOT: What is the usual course?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I really do not know.

Mr. POULIOT: Am I to assume from the unwillingness of the minister to answer my question that that is all the information I can get? This is a very serious matter and I am trying to find out just what has been done. The employees to whom I refer had been working there for some years and had been doing their work to the entire satisfaction of the department. Although the work was done by day labour it is a rather surprising fact that the expenditure was always kept within the vote for that purpose. Last year there was a change in the personnel of the day labourers employed on that work. According to information that I have received from a reliable source, a certain man was appointed as foreman upon the recommendation of Mr. Dubé, the defeated Tory candidate in Temiscouata. He took the place of the foreman who had previously been employed on that work. What happened was a real scandal. There is no reason to laugh about it, because money was stolen from this country by the last foreman who had to pay it back to the department afterwards. I would ask the minister if he has kept on file in his department the original pay lists which were sent by that foreman to the district engineer—the original pay lists, not the revised ones.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Anything that was ever on file on the department is there still. Instructions have been given to the district engineer to investigate this alleged irregularity to the bottom. When I get his report I purpose handing the matter over to the Department of Justice for whatever action may be necessary.

Mr. POULIOT: That is very satisfactory, but I wish to stress the fact that that man was a very lazy fellow and unable to do his work satisfactorily. He was appointed, as everyone knows, on the recommendation of the defeated Tory candidate in my county. I have been told by reliable people—I cannot state whether or not it is the fact, and that is why I am asking for information—that this foreman paid a few dollars to some men in order to receive from them their pay cheques, when they had not been working on the job. These men were supposed to receive a sum from the foreman in consideration of their handing their cheques over to him. That is one version. Another version is that he put on the pay list the names of men who had never worked there at all. I know that some people who had been working on the wharf were not paid in full and they complained to the district engineer. The district engineer showed them the pay list, and this is the story which they told when they came back to their home town. After seeing the pay list they said, "How is it that those names appear in the list? This and that man never worked with us," and so on. They said that there were ten or fifteen names on the list of men who had not done any work at all on the wharf. That is a scandal, Mr. Chairman. There is something else. That foreman is publicly accused of having stolen from this country quite a substantial sum of money.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Would it not be fair, now that the minister has promised an investigation, not to press the matter further in the house where this man has no chance to answer?

Mr. POULIOT: I will tell my hon. friend, whom I like very much, that I am simply according to the minister the treatment I would like to receive from him. I am giving him information.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): But he has promised a full investigation.

Mr. POULIOT: That is all right, but he was unwilling to tell me who had recommended that foreman. He would not say yes or no, and my people are anxious to know who is at the bottom of this thing, who recommended that man who gave such unsatisfactory service to the government. I do not wish the Department of Justice to do any harm to that man. He has a large family, and has paid all or part of the money, but I do not want to see such things happen again either in my constituency or anywhere else. This is only fair. It may happen that people do things that are wrong, but I have never been hard on them because I believe more in the New Testament than in the Old. I believe in charity, and although a large family is not an excuse for wrongdoing, it sometimes explains certain acts.

There is this further fact; that man was very seldom on his job. Nearly every day I saw him motoring in and around the city of Riviere du Loup. He even motored to Notre Dame du Lac on Sundays with his family at the expense of the government. I have been told that there have been four chauffeurs who were supposed to carry the men to their work and back home in the evening, as had been done in previous years by only one. Those chauffeurs were pretty numerous, and some were taking this foreman and his family on joy rides all around the county at the public expense.

Mr. McGIBBON: How many years has that been going on?

Mr. POULIOT: It happened only after the 1st of August, after this man was put in charge. It was never done before to my knowledge. If it had been, and I had heard about it, I would have written to the then minister and asked him to stop it at once. This is a serious matter, Mr. Chairman. I do not wish to implicate the minister at all. I gave him before all the information I had, and it was necessarily incomplete. That is why I asked him who had recommended this man.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have told my hon. friend that I do not know who recommended to the district engineer the appointment of this foreman. I can only repeat that, although my hon. friend is probably correct in his inference. I want to say that my hon. friend did give me this information, and we had some information of a similar nature before that. An investigation was started promptly. It is not yet finished. I know that a certain part of the money has been refunded. The district engineer has instructions to investigate the matter to the bottom.

I am not concerned with the past, and I do not want to enter into any recriminations, but it might be interesting to tell my hon. friend that in connection with two cases in the department I have information beyond a doubt that under the former administration work was paid for when work was not done. That has been admitted, and a cheque returned to the department, with no valid excuse whatever being given. The matter has been handed over to the Department of Justice. I have information that in another case, while the election was in progress, men were paid for their time while attending political meetings. At the expense of Canada they were taken in trucks from place to place to attend political meetings. But, as I say, I am not concerned particularly with the past. I am, however, anxious and determined that the administration of the Public Works department, so long as I am responsible for it, shall be clean and creditable to this government and creditable to the House of Commons. I think reflections upon the government reflect also upon the House of Commons, and I welcome the information my hon. friend has given me. I want to say to him and to every hon. member of the house that if irregularities come to light, matters of dishonesty anywhere in Canada in connection with the department over which I have the honour to preside, I shall be pleased, if information is furnished me, to make investigations and prosecutions regardless of party connections.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister very much for his very satisfactory explanation. I wish to add that with full knowledge of what has happened, in my constituency to my knowledge such a thing has never happened before. May I state to him, as I stated on a previous occasion when I was making recommendations to the department, that I do not want the minister to deal harshly with anybody. Very often I have helped men who had voted against me and from whom I had nothing to expect. They were only acts of a humane nature, and the only reason I have spoken as I have is that I want things done properly in my county. Whether the minister decides to spend $100,000 or $25,000 in my constituency, I want the expenditures to be made for the actual purpose for which they are intended. Up to last August I do not think the department had any complaint about the work done in my constituency. I have taken the trouble to recommend people who were worthy of recommendation. Hon. ministers previously at the head of the Department of Public Works would be in a position to inform the hon. gentleman in that respect.

Last year a substantial amount of money was voted to put metal sheeting on the wharf at Rivière du Loup, for the purpose of protecting the wharf against the strong currents at the head of the wharf between Rivière du Loup and the St. Lawrence river. That work has not been done. Payment for it was provided for in the $22,100 voted last year. May I say that the work done in my constituency after the present government took office last year was done by very lazy fellows who seemed to require five or ten minutes to drive a single nail. I do not know what happened in other places, but it happened that way in my constituency. They were doing no work; they were prolonging the job only in order to get more money from the department. My constituents understand very well that the party in power can appoint their own men to do work. However, I would ask the minister to give definite instructions to his officers so that good work may be done in the future. Last year the Tory candidate said that the money was not all to be spent last year because certain sums were required this year to build an extension to the wharf. As I am not a civil engineer, I do not know whether that extension is desirable or not, but I believe sincerely that the money voted for that purpose should have been spent along the lines first suggested by the department. Instructions in conformity with the wishes of the department should have been given to the district engineer and through him to the foremen. I hope the money revoted this year will be spent to complete the work begun last year. If that sum is not sufficient I would ask the minister to have more money appropriated in order to have the work completed fully by next fall, as it was primarily intended to be completed last fall.

Again I thank the minister for his courtesy and I would repeat that I do not want him to deal harshly with that man. I mentioned this particular case because of the fact that since a few years ago some very disreputable things have been done in my constituency. I hereby notify the hon. gentleman accordingly.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It seems to me that the constituency of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has during this session been very well advertised. I think if the minister would build a station at Rivière du Loup we might proceed more quickly with the work of the committtee.

I would like to ask the minister how it happened that a work valued at $22,000 was done without a contract. My understanding of these matters is that any piece of work involving a sum of money over $5,000 must be done by contract. Here we have an item of $22,000 done by day labour. It is all very well to say "I recommended that in order to give certain people work", but I would like to know if people would not have got work if there had been a contract.

Mr. POWER: That is the trouble, they got work under contract. That is the kick.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Work can be done cheaper the other way, and the work referred to as being done by day labour could have been done by contract.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I would ask the minister to refer to a vote contained at page 38 of the estimates, "Rimouski—harbour improvements—the Foundation Maritime Limited to contribute one-third of the cost of pier extension—under contract. . ."

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would like the minister to answer the question why this work was not done under contract.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In reply to the hon. member for Lincoln I can say only that he is correct in his interpretation of the Public Works Act. It is provided specifically that for any works exceeding in value $5,000 tenders should be asked and the contracts awarded in pursuance of those tenders. However there are a few exceptions and apparently the hon. member for Temiscouata was able to convince the minister of the day that this work could be done more advantageously by day labour. Representations were made to that effect and as has already been explained the work was begun by day labour under a former administration.

Mr. POULIOT: I would ask the hon. gentleman if that work will be done by contract or by day labour?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The work having been begun by day labour and having been carried on to a stage at which a contract could not be let, it will be continued by day labour.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a word to say to my hon. friend from Lincoln. Although he knows we all like him, I am sorry that the word "grouch" is not parliamentary because I would have used it this time. However I do not understand that he is complaining about my utterances in the house. I have always been very polite to him and if I have had to urge upon the government the necessity of building a new station at Rivière du Loup it is because the station is not yet built. If the station had been built I would have thanked the government on behalf of my people and it would have been unnecessary to make a speech in that connection.

Mr. CHAPLIN: "A" speech.

Mr. POULIOT: May I suggest to the hon. gentleman that at the next Conservative caucus he might tell the government—

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I would remind the hon. member that we are discussing the appropriations for harbours and rivers in Quebec, not railway stations. He must confine his remarks to the item before the committee.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

Mr. POULIOT: What I wish to say can be said in a sentence. Before the hon. gentleman from Lincoln brings the matter before his party caucus it might be well for him to insure his life.

Sir EUGENE FISET: With reference to the vote on page 38 of the estimates to which I called attention a moment ago, are the Foundation Company going to be compelled to pay the one-third that they have agreed to pay for the work? The minister will recall a petition he has received from the chamber of commerce of Rimouski, supported by the seven navigation companies operating between Rimouski and the north shore, asking that the channel be enlarged 400 feet and deepened 22 feet. Of course, I quite understand that with the present necessity for economy the government is not asking for any appropriation for these works. But would it not be possible by using a government dredge to take off the hog's-backs that have developed in the deep channel and so enable the navigation companies to bring their vessels up to the wharves to be loaded? I do not think the cost would be very high, and it could be paid out of the general vote for dredging. No doubt the minister realizes how important it is to have this work done at the earliest possible date in the spring. The boats of these seven companies operating between Rimouski and the north shore provide the lower St. Lawrence with a local market, the importance of which cannot possibly be exaggerated. The whole north shore within the last ten years has developed so rapidly that the former population of 500 has now become about 20,000. This population has to depend upon supplies coming from the south shore, and Rimouski being the main port of the lower St. Lawrence, the minister will understand how important it is not to interrupt the good work which has been carried on in years past. I hope he will be able to instruct his deputy to detail one of his dredges to undertake the dredging that is necessary to give a uniform depth of 17 feet to the channel, which it was when first dredged.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): With regard to the payment by the Foundation Company of their agreed portion of the cost of the work, I am advised that the obstructions which he mentions do not interfere with their ships coming into the wharves.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am sorry to hear the minister's statement. One of the reasons why I am asking for this dredging is that the company's boats draw nearly 16 feet, and at low tide cannot reach the wharf. I think it was part of their contract that they would pay one-third of the cost provided the channel was kept dredged to a uniform depth of 17 feet.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The latest information we have is from the manager. He was in the office recently and said that he is quite satisfied with the conditions there.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Then, so am I.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is no reason why any further dredging should be done before they are paid.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The Clark Shipping Company intends to operate a very large boat called the North Shore, and she will call at Rimouski. This boat can hardly reach the wharf at low tide. The dredging to be done does not amount to much. It is necessary in order to remove the hog's-backs that have formed there. Of course, the minister is aware of the representations from the chamber of commerce at Rimouski, the Clark Shipping Company and Price Bros., asking for a combined vote to dredge the larger channel 400 feet and at the same time the Rimouski river. Of course I understand that for reasons of economy the minister has not been able to give favourable consideration to the request, but I hope it will not be lost sight of.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It will be carefully studied.

Mr. POULIOT: I can promise the minister that I will never criticize him for granting requests for appropriations for repairs and improvements to wharves in my constituency. May I tell him that the people on the island of Notre Dame de l'Ile have to come to the south shore by water? I understand a contract has been awarded for an extension of the local wharf. I hope the work will be done this year. There are other works required at Ile Verte, at Trois Pistoles, Tobin, Cacouna, Rivière du Loup, Notre Dame du Portage along the St. Lawrence, and also at Cabano, Squatteck, St. Juste du Lac and Notre Dame du Lac on lake Temiscouata. The settlers in that district have frequent occasion to travel by water, and everything that the department does to improve the local wharf facilities will have my hearty approval.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can assure my hon. friend that it is the intention to carry out all the works in his constituency in respect to which there are votes.

Mr. HANBURY: In view of the great decrease in the estimates, does the minister contemplate any reduction in his engineering staff?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The answer is no, for the following reasons. The engineering staff is engaged not only in the supervision of works that are actually being carried on but perhaps the greater part of their time is devoted to investigating the many requests for public works that come from members, which they suggest are necessary in the constituencies. The staff has been undermanned rather than overmanned. I think during the present year we will be able to check up most of the requests. I know the staff will be fully employed, and possibly we will be in better shape at the end of this year to deal with the program for next year.

Mr. McGIBBON: After listening to the energetic member for Temiscouata for almost days and nights advertising his constituency, I think it is my duty to remind him and some other hon. gentlemen opposite that many of us sat to the left of the Speaker for nearly ten years when the Liberal government was in power and got practically nothing.

An hon. MEMBER: You are getting nothing this year.

Mr. McGIBBON: We are quite willing to take nothing this year in view of the conditions prevailing throughout the country. But hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think they should have their hands in the till whether they are in power or in opposition. The riding which I have the honour to represent, and which is an important one from the revenue standpoint, has been literally starved for about ten years. We think it is time that members on this side of the house should have some of the requirements of their constituencies considered. We are not pressing for appropriations this year, but we cannot understand the minds of some hon. gentlemen opposite. After having fed so freely from the public estimates for the last ten years they are still hungry, notwithstanding the serious condition of the public treasury. Now, sir, I want to impress upon the minister that there are other parts of the Dominion of Canada whose wants have been brought to the attention of his department not once but for the last ten years. I think when the time comes, when we can loosen the strings of the treasury, his first consideration should be those constituencies which have received nothing for some years past.

Mr. HANBURY: Conservative constituencies?

Mr. McGIBBON: Yes, Conservative constituencies. I am one of those who believe in being frank about these things. I took my medicine when I was sitting on the other side of the house and could not get anything; we all had to take that medicine.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. gentleman should take the medicine he gives to others.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am trying to give the hon. gentleman what I had to take.

Mr. POULIOT: I did not ask the hon. gentleman for a prescription.

Mr. McGIBBON: We take the ground that we are not going to have hon. gentlemen opposite collect the fees while we write the prescriptions. I want to press very strongly upon the minister that this action be taken, and I do not think any member of this house will object to it. We are all human; we all know what we are here for and most of us are pretty good party people. We follow our party sometimes when we differ from it, because of the greater good to the country, but when the time comes, as we hope it will come, when this depression lifts and the treasury contains a little money, we want the needs of the people in those parts of this country which have been neglected looked after before there are any railway stations built in Témiscouata, or new wharves or anything of that kind.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a word to say—

Mr. VENIOT: Before this item carries I would like to have some information. In the first place I wish to tell the minister that I am quite willing to have this resolution pass, but I should like an item to stand until I get the information requested. I am sure the minister is not in a position to give me the information in regard to those letters to-day.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I was just thinking that some of the letters to which my hon. friend referred must have been from the Department of Justice. I will see that they are brought down, however.

Mr. VENIOT: There is one letter in the minister's department.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I will check up what my hon. friend has said and I can assure him the letters will be brought down.

Mr. VENIOT: When those letters are brought down I may have to discuss harbours and rivers in the province of New Brunswick, so I would like to have one item remain open in order to enable me to do so.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am quite content to do that.

Mr. VENIOT: In the meantime could the minister tell me, under the heading of Shippigan breakwater, who is the inspector there?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This amount of $16,500, of which $9,500 is a revote—

Mr. VENIOT: Could the minister just tell me who is the inspector? I know the rest of the details.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The contractor is J. S. Parker; the inspector is A. Savoie, and the rate of pay is $4 per day.

Mr. VENIOT: Is the contractor at work at the present time?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am not able to say definitely; if he is not at work now it is expected he will resume in the near future. Work was discontinued during the winter.

Mr. VENIOT: With the understanding that one item is to remain open, say the Tracadie item, the remainder might pass.

Item stands.

Mr. MacLEAN: I would like to ask the minister for some information with regard to the revote for the wharf at Summerside, Prince Edward Island. Would the minister give the names of the tenderers and the amounts of the tenders?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The amount of the contract was $7,380. The work under contract consists of rebuilding the eastern face of the pierhead for a length of 349 feet, with creosoted piling, and so on. Tenders were called for in July, 1930, and the contract was awarded on September 17, 1930. The work was not proceeded with until late, and it has not been completed. The contractor is H. M. Downing and the amount of the contract is $7,380. The date for completion is February 1, 1931, which has been extended to July 1 1931.

Mr. MacLEAN: Would the minister give the other tenders which were submitted?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The following tenders were received, four in all: J. E. Campbell, Summerside, $7,380; W. R. Maynard, $7,472; Everett McLeod and Duncan McKenzie, French River, $8,280; Henry J. Phillips and P. G. Clarke, Summerside, $8,770.

Mr. MacLEAN: It was intimated, when tenders were called for, that J. H. Campbell's was the lowest, and I think he was notified to that effect. Later on the contract was transferred from Campbell to Maynard, and I should like to know how Mr. Downing came into the picture. It appears that Mr. Campbell was notified that his tender was the lowest; Mr. Maynard then took over the contract and sent in his deposit cheque, and it was understood that he would proceed with the work. He was ready to proceed and was waiting for orders, but those orders never came through. What I fail to understand is this: If it is the declared policy of the department to accept the lowest tender in every case, how was it that Mr. Downing's tender was not accepted in the first place?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am very glad my hon. friend has mentioned this, because he made a statement some days ago when this matter was up in connection with the supplementary estimates. At that time the information was not available, but I have it here now. Under date of August 5, 1930, authority was granted to accept the lowest tender, namely that of J. E. Campbell of Summerside, for the work mentioned. Under date of August 5, the hon. member (Mr MacLean) wired the deputy minister of Public Works as follows:

> Request from Campbell on July 29 to withdraw tender for railway wharf Summerside wire if request has been granted.

To which the following reply was made by the deputy minister under date of August 5:

> Department can allow Campbell to withdraw tender railway wharf Summerside only provided deposit is forfeited or whatever portion thereof necessary to make up amount of next lowest tender which is seventy-four hundred seventy-two dollars fifty cents if second tenderer now willing to take contract at price of his bid.

On August 7, Mr. Campbell wired that he had arranged with the next lowest tenderer, namely, W. R. Maynard, Northam, Prince Edward Island, to take over contract at his figures, and stated he was forwarding his, Mr. Maynard's, deposit cheque. The hon. member for Prince Iso wired on August 7 to the same effect and was advised that the Campbell cheque would be returned as soon as the next lowest tenderer's deposit was received. Mr. Campbell's security cheque of $738 was returned to him on August 22, 1930; there being no interest as it was sent to the Department of Finance on July 31, 1930. Mr. Maynard's cheque for $738 was received and sent to the accountant on August 15, 1930, and to the Finance department on August 21, 1930. As no action was taken upon Mr. Maynard's offer to take over the contract, the returning of his security deposit was overlooked. Mr. Maynard's security deposit was returned to him only on February 24, 1931, by a cheque for $747.22, which covered the amount of the deposit of $738 plus $9.22 for interest. I believe my hon. friend said his deposit cheque had not been returned to him. It was returned with interest.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Did the second tenderer tender at the same price as the first?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It was ultimately arranged that he should take it at the lower price. It had been suggested to the department that Mr. H. M. Downing, contractor, Summerside, would take over Mr. Campbell's contract and an order in council was passed under date of September 15, granting authority to award the contract to Mr. Downing at the price of the tender of Mr. Maynard, namely, $7,380. Instructions were accordingly issued, but to accommodate the early fall shipping of potatoes the commencement of the work was held over until the close of navigation, when weather conditions were unfavourable to the carrying out of the contract. The date set for the completion has been extended from February 1, 1931, to July 1, 1931, as work cannot be satisfactorily carried out in Summerside harbour owing to heavy ice conditions during the winter months. That was the condition of the contract when I came in.

Mr. MacLEAN: There was only a difference of $90 between the tenders of Mr. Campbell and Mr. Maynard, and for reasons which I cannot explain—Mr. Campbell had other interests—they agreed that Mr. Maynard should take it over. The department wrote to Mr. Maynard and told him to forward his deposit cheque, which he did; and, as the minister has stated, that cheque was held at the department from last July, or possibly it was earlier than that.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It was returned with interest.

Mr. MacLEAN: Yes. But during all that time this gentleman thought he had the contract and was waiting every day to proceed with the work.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He may have thought he was going to get it, but he cannot have thought that he had the contract. He had no notice from the department that the contract had been awarded to him.

Mr. MacLEAN: Why did they tell Mr. Maynard to forward his cheque? He must have been notified that the cheque was accepted.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. MacLEAN: I shall have to put a motion on the order paper asking for the correspondence.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I wish the hon. member would do so.

Mr. MacLEAN: The minister has told the committee that Mr. Downing got the contract by order in council. What I should like him to explain is this: If Mr. Downing's tender was the lowest in the first place, why was not the contract given to him, if it is the policy of the government to accept the lowest tender?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Campbell's was the lowest tender—$7,380. And when he withdrew, then—

Mr. MacLEAN: Mr. Maynard took it over.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It was given to Mr. Downing.

Mr. MacLEAN: Why was not Maynard allowed to proceed with the work?

Mr. VENIOT: The department asked Maynard for his deposit cheque and he sent it on, and after that the other man came down to Maynard's price.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When the lowest tenderer withdraws his tender the practice of the department is, I believe, to award it to any person who will take it for the amount of the lowest tender. They feel free to do so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is rather a curious procedure. The tender of the lowest tenderer is accepted; his cheque is in the hands of the department; and then an arrangement is subsequently entered into between two contractors whereby the original contractor transfers the contract to the second party. If the department had refused to take on the second party, one could understand the transaction. But the cheque of the second tenderer was accepted. The contract was to be apparently at the same price as the original tender which was accepted by the government. What has happened since that, when the cheque is retained, and another party enters into the arrangement and receives the contract —that is the information we are after.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Every tender is accompanied by a cheque, and when the contract is disposed of it is returned. In one case apparently the return of the cheque was overlooked.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not inquiring about that. I am asking why the second cheque was accepted by the department and retained by them. It was definitely understood that the original tenderer, a man named Campbell, was not prepared to go on with the work. A second tenderer comes on the scene; Campbell's cheque is returned; the cheque of the second tenderer is retained, and he subsequently finds out that another man has the contract. The work is being performed by a third party. That is what we do not understand.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): At the lowest tenderer's price.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That does not enter into the transaction at all. The cheque of the second tenderer was accepted by the department. It was clearly the intention to give the work to Campbell if he performed it, and evidently an arrangement was made with one Maynard, who was the second tenderer, at the same price for which Campbell had tendered. His cheque was accepted, and now we discover that a third party has entered into the arrangement, who evidently had tendered at a much higher price.

Mr. VENIOT: Did Downing tender previous to—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Originally Mr. Downing did not tender.

Mr. VENIOT: Which makes it all the worse.

Mr. DUFF: Were new tenders called for by advertisement?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It was all arranged between the parties and the price was satisfactory.

Mr. DUFF: How did Downing get the contract; how did he enter into the picture if he had made no tender?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The lowest tenderer asked to be allowed to withdraw his tender.

Mr. MacLEAN: Mr. Chairman, the situation is this: Mr. Campbell was the lowest tenderer and he was advised to that effect. He decided that he would not accept and Maynard being the next lowest tenderer, he and Campbell agreed that Maynard would take the contract at the original lowest tender price. The department signified their willingness to that arrangement and the contract was transferred to Maynard and he was requested to send in a deposit cheque, which he did. The departement may say that no contract was entered into, but I claim that that action was equivalent to entering into a contract. A man had been advised by letter from the department that his tender was the lowest and had been accepted. He was asked to forward his cheque, which he did, but we now find that Mr. Downing has been awarded the contract, a gentleman who never tendered in the first place and who never entered into the picture until February last, when Mr. Maynard was notified that Mr. Downing had the contract. These facts should be brought out because we should know whether or not the department is going to follow the practice of awarding contracts after a tender has been accepted and the deposit cheque received and held for many months. After that procedure has been followed, is the department going to permit another man to submit a tender without advertising for new tenders? I think the committee and the country should have a full explanation of the whole thing.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend has not quite correctly got the facts. The cheque of the second tenderer accompanied his tender; there was no cheque sent in as my hon. friend suggested. The cheque was retained and then returned with interest.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): He was never notified.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT

PREFERENCE TO CANADIAN VETERANS RESIDENT IN CANADA FIVE YEARS

Mr. O. L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse) moved the second reading of Bill No. 18, to amend the Civil Service Act (returned soldiers' preference).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. BOULANGER: The first matter with which this bill deals is to amend section 29 of the Civil Service Act. Paragraph 4 of section 29 reads:

> In all examinations for entrance into the civil service the persons named on such special list who are found to possess the necessary qualifications, shall be named, in the order of merit, on the list of successful candidates above all other candidates; and all other persons who have been on active service overseas on the military forces or who have served on the high seas in a seagoing ship of war in the naval forces of His Majesty, or of any of the allies of His Majesty, during the war, who have left such service with an honourable record, or who have been honourably discharged, or when any persons who have served as aforesaid have died, owing to such service, the widows of such persons, and who, in either case, obtain sufficient marks to pass such examinations shall, irrespective of the marks they have obtained, be named in the order of merit, on the list of successful candidates next after any candidates who are on the special list mentioned in subsection 2 of this section and above all other candidates.

That means that all veterans, not merely of the Canadian army but of all the allied armies who took part in the Great war, have a preference over all other candidates in civil service examinations. I claim that we were a little too generous when we passed that section. It would have been all right to grant a preference to Canadian veterans, but not to the veterans of any of the allied armies. According to the law as it now is, veterans of the Serbian army or of the Roumanian army or of the American army or of the Japanese army or of the Portuguese army or of any other army which took part in the great war on our side can claim a preference in civil service appointments over the civilian Canadian candidates.

Mr. MANION: Does my hon. friend know of any case—I ask for information—where any veteran outside of the Canadian army has been given a preference over civilian candidates?

Mr. BOULANGER: No, not of my own knowledge, but it is possible there might have been such cases.

Mr. VENIOT: I know of such cases, and could name them.

Mr. MANION: What army did they belong to?

Mr. VENIOT: They were veterans of the imperial army.

Mr. BOULANGER: All that is necessary in order that veterans of any of the allied armies may qualify for the preference under section 29 of the Civil Service Act is to show that they have resided in Canada for three years. As I said in reply to the minister, I personally do not know of any, but there must have been such cases.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is it the declared object of this bill to cut off the preference to veterans of the British army?

Mr. BOULANGER: Yes. The intention is to restrict the preference to veterans of the Canadian army. Under the law as it stands, ridiculous cases may arise. Take the case of a Russian who fought on our side during the war in the Russian army. He comes to Canada, resides here three years, and takes the civil service examination; and although we have severed all relations, trade, diplomatic and otherwise, with Russia, this Russian veteran is given a preference over the civilian Canadian.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Why not?

Mr. BOULANGER: The object of the bill is to restrict the preference with respect to veterans to those who served in the Canadian army. That is the first object of the bill. By Canadian veterans is meant Canadian veterans as defined in the Canadian Nationals Act, chapter 21 of the revised statutes, which defines what a Canadian national is. Section 2 of chapter 21 of the revised statutes provides:

The following persons are Canadian nationals, viz.:—

(a) any British subject who is a Canadian citizen within the meaning of the Immigration Act;

(b) the wife of any such citizen;

(c) any person born out of Canada, whose father was a Canadian national at the time of that person's death, or with regard to persons born before the third day of May, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one, any person whose father at the time of such birth, possessed all the qualifications of a Canadian national, as defined in this act.

The Canadian Nationals Act refers to the Immigration Act, and section 2 of the Immigration Act, chapter 93 of the revised statutes, provides:

In this act, and in all orders in council, proclamations and regulations made hereunder, unless the context otherwise requires,

(a) "alien" means a person who is not a British subject;

(b) "Canadian citizen" means

(i) A person born in Canada who has not become an alien;

(ii) A British subject who has Canadian domicile; or

(iii) A person naturalized under the laws of Canada who has not subsequently become an alien or lost Canadian domicile:

Provided that for the purpose of this act a woman who has not been landed in Canada shall not be held to have acquired Canadian citizenship by virtue of her husband being a Canadian citizen; neither shall a child who has not been landed in Canada be held to have acquired Canadian citizenship through its father or mother being a Canadian citizen.

Further on in the same act domicile is defined as follows:

"Domicile" means the place in which a person has his home, or in which he resides, or to which he returns as his place of permanent abode, and does not mean the place where he resides for a mere special or temporary purpose;

Canadian domicile can only be acquired, for the purposes of this act, by a person having his domicile for at least five years in Canada after having been landed therein within the meaning of this act.

The purpose of the amendment, therefore, is to restrict the soldiers' preference in civil service appointments to Canadian veterans, and Canadian veterans are those defined as Canadian nationals: that is, all veterans who enlisted in the Canadian army and who at the time they made application to enter the civil service were Canadian citizens, having resided in Canada for at least five years.

I wish to point out at once that the object of the bill is not to do away with the preference in favour of Canadian veterans. We wish to keep the preference in favour of Canadian veterans. I cannot make that too clear because some misrepresentation or misstatements have appeared in the press as to the object of the bill. The object of the bill, I repeat, is not to cut off the preference to Canadian soldiers as regards appointments to the civil service. The only restriction made by the bill is to apply the preference to Canadians only, excluding the veterans of armies other than that of Canada. That is the chief object of the bill.

The next object of the bill is to amend section 33 of the Civil Service Act. The first paragraph of section 33 of the act as it stands reads as follows:

> No person shall, without the authority of the governor in council, be admitted to any examination unless he is a natural born or naturalized British subject and also has been a resident of Canada for at least three years.

The amendment proposed by the bill is to change the term of three years residence to a term of five years. I believe this change would be in accordance with our whole system of granting Canadian citizenship to aliens. As the law stands at the present time a residence of five years is required before a man is granted Canadian citizenship. Within five years of his entry into Canada a man can be deported. A man cannot be naturalized as a Canadian citizen unless he has resided in Canada for a term of five years, and he is not granted the right to vote unless he is here for a similar period. I respectfully submit that the same requirements should apply when application is made for a position in the Canadian civil service. If it is proper to stipulate a period of five years before a vote is allowed, if it is right that five years' residence must be established before a person may become a citizen of this country, then a similar period should be necessary before a person obtains a position in the public service. That is the purpose of the second amendement.

A further amendment is offered by the bill. A sort of abuse has crept into the administration of the Civil Service Act in regard to the requirement of three years' residence. The act states that a man may not make application for a position in the civil service unless he has resided three years in Canada. Exceptions to the rule can be made by the governor in council. We want to restore the law to its former strength, because in that regard abuses have entered into the administration of the act. At the present time instead of exceptions being made by the governor general in council or the cabinet, they are being made by the Civil Service Commission without any reference to the cabinet, by virtue of a regulation which the Civil Service Commission passed some years ago. Regulation No. 11 reads as follows:

> 11. In cases where, after due publicity, the commission has been unable to secure an adequately qualified applicant with the necessary three years' residence in Canada, persons may be admitted to examination despite the fact that they have not resided in Canada for three years, provided they are otherwise qualified under the law and regulations.

I submit it is illegal by regulation to amend the statute as has been done in this case by the Civil Service Commission. Last year at my request a return was made in this house showing a list of persons who have been admitted into the civil service of Canada without complying with the provision of the Civil Service Act regarding residence. This list is amazing. If I had time I would like to read the return to the house and let hon. members judge the abuses which have arisen out of regulation No. 11 of the Civil Service Commission. Since the regulation has been in force some nineteen or twenty prison guards have been given positions in Canadian penitentiaries without having resided in Canada for three years. All sorts of positions such as that of telegrapher, caretaker, stenographer and so on have been granted to aliens who have not resided in Canada for the requisite period. I am sure the government has no knowledge of those exceptions. They were made by the Civil Service Commission by virtue of the regulation I have just read.

A little insignificant paper published in Montreal has tried to make political capital out of the information I secured last year. They have even stated that I was able to secure the information this year on account of the change in the government. I want to make it very clear to the house that the report was tabled during the regular session of 1930 and is dated April 28 of that year.

What has taken place in connection with penitentiaries has taken place also in the aviation and radio services. Many employees have been given positions who have not resided three years in Canada. It is the wish of hon. members who favour this bill to have these exceptions cease. If an order in council has to be passed every time an exception is demanded, more difficulty will be experienced and the abuse to which I referred a minute ago will not continue. Surely it is possible to find men in Canada who will act as prison guards and chiefs of services. Members of the Civil Service Commission should not have such matters left in their own hands. If exceptions are to be made to the Civil Service Act they should be made in each case by the governor in council and by the cabinet; they should not be made by chiefs of services, heads of branches or civil service commissioners. The Montreal paper I mentioned a minute ago blamed the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and the former minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin) because prison guards had been allowed into the service without complying with the qualification as to residence. I am sure neither of those gentlemen had any knowledge that such a condition of affairs existed and that appointments to positions in the civil service of Canada had been made without regard to the provision of the act respecting residence.

In as few words as possible I have tried to outline the objects of the amendments embodied in this bill. I believe the spirit of the bill is in accordance with the Canada first policy of the present government, and I am sure the government will approve the bill and support it. I trust therefore that the Civil Service Act will be amended as the proposed measure suggests. Not only are we for the Canada first policy but we are also for Canadians first and especially should that policy apply in the matter of the filling of civil service positions. Certainly that is one place where Canadians should be first.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): I want to say only a few words in connection with this bill. My fear about it is that it may be the thin end of the wedge with regard to the returned soldiers' preference. For some time there has been provision on the statute book for a preference to ex-service men. While there have been resolutions on the order paper dealing with the matter, this is perhaps the first bill which has attempted to alter the preference given, and for that reason, along with another one I am going to mention, I feel I must oppose the first section of the bill. The other reason is that practically ever since the Civil Service Act was passed we have given a preference to veterans of the allies. The recognition of imperial veterans has gone so far that under our pension act, we equalize the pensions to imperial veterans in this country who were residents here at the beginning of the war in order that there may be no discrimination, and that in respect of British subjects who may have been on the same field of battle and who live in Canada side by side there shall not be a difference in the compensation paid to them on account of their disability.

Mr. BOULANGER: Does the hon. member know of any country associated with us in the war that gives a preference to Canadian soldiers in its civil service?

Mr. RALSTON: I have never made any inquiry. I can only deal with the situation as we have it and discuss the principle which we have adopted. That principle is that there shall not be any discrimination between Canadian and imperial veterans—if they lived in Canada before the war—in regard to pensions. We have contributed directly from the treasury in order to see to it that these British comrades living in Canada shall receive pensions equal to those received by Canadian returned soldiers. They have enjoyed the same preference under the Civil Service Act, and it seems to me that now to begin to discriminate between them is a mistake. I know my hon. friend has the highest motives in introducing his bill. He feels, as no doubt many others do, that if a Canadian veteran is an applicant for a position, and an ex-service man from Great Britain or one of our sister dominions is also an applicant, the Canadian should be given the preference. But for a long time we have laid down the principle of equality, and have given effect to it. I think it is hardly worth while to begin to change now—and I cannot support the first section of the bill.

With regard to the other section, I have a good deal of sympathy with what the hon. member says in support of it. He has indicated a situation that is not by any means desirable. It does seem to me that if the positions he refers to have to be filled by those with less than the required three years' residence, there must be something seriously wrong in the administration of the Civil Service Act. If he could see fit in some way to separate these sections so that his bill would not involve taking away the preference to certain returned soldiers, but would remedy the other conditions that he speaks of, I should be very glad indeed to support it. But I do not want to go to the length of supporting a bill which would require a residence of five years for a civil servant who may come from Great Britain. Perhaps my hon. friend has noted that there is before the house at the present time a bill, No. 24, defining Canadian nationals, and it may be that his second section will not fit in very well with the provisions of that bill if it is adopted.

Might I suggest to the hon. member that he allow his bill to stand until bill No. 24 has been considered, and see if it is not then possible for him to get our support for the second section of his bill. I wish I could support the measure as a whole for I know his zeal and earnestness in introducing it.

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in agreement with the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ralston) who has just taken his seat. I appreciate that we should not impute motives to the hon. gentleman who has introduced this bill, but I cannot help thinking it is aimed directly at the imperial veterans in this country who saw service overseas. I cannot see any other purpose in bringing forward the bill if that be not the governing motive. In my part of the country a number of these imperial veterans are settled, and I should hate to think that, even though they had lived here for a long period of years, they were not eligible for appointment to the civil service. For that reason and for the reasons stated by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, I am opposed to the bill.

As to the second section, I cannot understand how the Civil Service Commission can have any legal authority to make regulations admitting to examination any person who has not been a resident of Canada for at least three years. Section 5 of the Civil Service Act provides:

> 5. The commission may make such regulations as it deems necessary or convenient for carrying out the provisions of this act, including regulations governing the performance by the commission of its own duties hereunder.
> All such regulations shall be subject to the approval of the governor in council and shall be published in the Canada Gazette.

That means, if it means anything, that the Civil Service Commission has authority only to make regulations which will not be in contravention of the provisions of the act. If I understood the hon. member correctly, he said that the commission have made a regulation which is in contravention of section 33 of the act. I submit that any regulation so issued could have no force or effect. The regulations contemplated by section 5 are only such as may be regarded as administrative, and before they can have any force in law they must be approved by the governor in council and published in the Canada Gazette. While I have not had an opportunity of looking up the regulation to which the hon. member refers, I cannot conceive of any regulation—

Mr. BOULANGER: The hon. gentleman will find it in the explanatory notes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have read that, but I am directing attention to the powers of the Civil Service Commission. I submit that under section 33 and section 5 the commission has no power to make any regulations which will in any way override the act itself. It may be that the commission have attempted to do so, in which event their attempt is a nullity in law, and I am satisfied that the governor in council, if properly advised, would never ratify such a regulation.

Referring again to the first section of the hon. gentleman's bill, I think this is, as so well expressed by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, the thin end of the wedge to cut down the returned soldiers' preference. I submit this country is committed to the principle of that preference. It has been on the statute book since 1918, and this is the first time I have ever heard of any proposal to withdraw or restrict it. I for one am against the proposal to cut down the soldiers' preference, and I hope the house will reject the bill.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): As I understand the bill, and I hope I am correct, it does not attempt to interfere with the preference granted to Canadian soldiers. But we are more than twelve years away from the war, and I think it can be said without fear of contradiction that the Canadian government, quite irrespective of party, has given preferences to British soldiers and soldiers of the empire which are not duplicated in any other dominion or in any other part of the empire. To say now that a British soldier who has come to Canada within the last three years shall have the same preference as a Canadian soldier hardly seems fair. Mark you, I am not desirous of taking away the preference from the Canadian soldier; I am very much in favour of it, but to say that a British soldier who has resided in England since the end of the war and who has come to Canada within the last three years shall enjoy the same preference as the Canadian soldier, both as against civilians in an application for a civil service position, is I think going a considerable distance. I do believe the preference should be retained in its entirety as far as the Canadian soldier is concerned, but I do not think it should go beyond the provision suggested in this bill by my hon. friend, namely that recipients of this preference shall have resided in Canada for five years. That seems to me an eminently fair proposal. Our own Canadian soldiers have had that preference since 1918, as was pointed out by my hon. friend, and I think the time has come when young civilians growing up in the country have a right to some consideration over those who have come to Canada and taken up their residence among us but have not been here for five years.

That is my position in regard to this bill. I do want to see that preference retained as far as the Canadian soldier is concerned; a right which he has enjoyed since 1918, but it seems to me we are over-generous in our treatment of the men who have come among us within the last few years in giving them a preference over our young civilians who have grown up in the country.

Mr. B. M. STITT (Nelson): Mr. Speaker, in regard to this bill I think that to interfere with the present act would be skating on very thin ice. I think the act as it now stands is generally satisfactory; at least I have never heard any complaints in regard to it, and I have been connected with soldier organizations ever since I came back from overseas. I would very much prefer to have the mover of this bill bring forward something in the way of memoranda or resolutions from recognized soldier organizations. To me this smells very much like something originating with the Native Sons of Canada or something like that, although I may be mistaken. I am a Canadian of the third generation; I stand for Canada first of all, but we must also remember that we have an empire citizenship as well as a Canadian citizenship. I think the government would be well advised to leave the act alone.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I regret very much that I am unable to support the bill which the hon. member (Mr. Boulanger) has submitted to the house. I think the first question the house should ask itself is this: What was the motive behind the returned soldier preference when it was first enacted by the Canadian parliament? My interpretation of that gesture is that it was an expression of appreciation of the sufferings that were endured by those who, during the war, had been on the side of the allies and were then, or at a future date might be, domiciled in Canada. I wish to say further that if a mistake exists to-day, that mistake was made when the preference was first given in regard to all the allies of the Canadian forces. It is a well known fact that the numbers of those outside of Canada who served in our allied forces, and who come to Canada, are getting less and less as year follows year. We must also remember that to-day in the Dominion of Canada we have an organization known as the Imperial Veterans, which is a full-fledged portion of the Canadian Legion. On the other hand the Canadian Legion, representing practically all the organized veterans in the Dominion of Canada, is a component part of an empire-wide organization known as the British Empire Service League.

If my hon. friend had endeavoured to restrict this preference to British subjects he would have received a certain amount of support from me. But since Canada has been responsible for this generous expression during all these years; since our present immigration policies practically restrict immigration; since those who were privileged to participate in the war are getting older and older and their ranks are thinning out every year, I do not think it will be any burden or any hardship if we extend for a few years to those old veterans of at least the other portions of the British Empire the generous recognition that Canada was good enough to make on their behalf when this act was first passed by parliament.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): I should like to say just a word or two in opposition to this bill. I am opposed to it and to the underlying principle on which it is based. This seems to me to be an attempt to discriminate between two classes of Canadian citizens, those who were born in Canada and those who were born in other lands. We might carry that principle a little further and say that only those men or women who were born in Canada are eligible to sit in this house. How many men would that eliminate from among us to-day? Some of our most esteemed citizens were born outside this country. I know that a principle of that kind would eliminate a great many of my colleagues, and I say it is a vicious and wrong principle.

I read an article in the newspapers a few days ago containing the text of an address delivered by the hon. member who introduced this bill. He was appealing to the Sons of England and the Sons of Canada and other organizations of that kind to drop their different organizations and all become Canadians. I thought there was something very inconsistent in the hon. member making that appeal while at the same time he is trying to discriminate between these two classes of Canadians. Therefore I say I am opposed to this bill.

Mr. S. C. ROBINSON (West Essex): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say just a few words about this bill. I am in hearty agreement with the previous speakers who have expressed themselves as being opposed to it. As an hon. gentleman has said, we are skating on thin ice if we pass this bill; it will create the impression in the other parts of the British Empire that Canada is discriminating against those men who fought side by side with the Canadians in the war. The members of the Canadian civil service who were born in other parts of the British Empire are just as faithful and as loyal as native born Canadians. As another hon. member has said, the number of veterans who come to Canada from other parts of the empire is getting less year by year, and will not be long before the civilians will be able to have their turn at civil service appointments. I know that in my county, when war was declared the first men to throw down their tools and join the army were those from the old land, and it was the same in the workshops of Detroit. Furthermore, the adoption of this measure would create an ill feeling among those in Canada of English, Scotch and Irish birth, and would draw a line, as it were, between them and the Canadian-born. I hope the hon. member who sponsors the bill will see his way clear to withdraw it.

Mr. J. L. DUGUAY (Lake St. John) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add but one word in support of the measure of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger). I fail to see how this bill can be unfair to Canadians of foreign extraction. Canadians, like other nations, took equally part in the great war, and gave a good account of themselves. If all the Canadian veterans had work, I readily would understand that the bill of the hon. member for Bellechasse would be unnecessary. However, there are too many of them unemployed and needing the assistance of the government. I think that we should all favour this measure; for my part I shall give it my entire support.

Mr. BOULANGER: Are there any other hon. members who desire to speak?

Mr. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Before the hon. gentleman proceeds to answer the remarks which have been made, I should like to call attention to the fact that this, after all, is an extremely important matter. The house is but a thin one this evening and only those hon. members who have had their attention particularly drawn to this matter have had time to give it deep consideration. I suggest, therefore, that it would be well not to proceed further to-night but to give all hon. members an opportunity of reading what has passed this evening pro and con, and I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

NATURE OF SPEECHES ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS TO DETERMINE UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the second reading of Bill No. 19, to amend the Criminal Code (unlawful assemblies).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As indicated in the marginal note, this bill is intended simply to provide a safeguarding clause to ensure that the general nature and character of speeches upon public affairs must be the ground for regarding any meeting as unlawful. Legislation of this kind would seem to be almost unnecessary, and yet during the past few months in a number of our cities there have been occurrences that seem to make it highly desirable that some safeguarding clause of this character should be enacted. For example, within the last few months in the city of Toronto there has been considerable trouble between the police and various organizations that have tried to hold public meetings. Let me quote from a very respectable organ, Toronto Saturday Night, the following, which appeared in its issue of January 31, 1931:

> Police Madness in Toronto. Chief of Police Draper and the Senior Police Magistrate, Judge Emerson Coatsworth, the dominant factors on the Toronto Board of Police Commissioners, have recently declared open war on a host of intellectual and spiritually minded Canadians. They have attempted to suspend the laws protecting free speech and free assemblage in the case of a band of gentle idealists known as the Toronto Branch of the Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Again:

> Toronto's police authorities use the word "Communism" as a bugbear to defend every foolish act they commit, though we doubt if they could give an intelligent definition of what they mean by that word. Seemingly all pacifists come under the broad classification which leads them to tag Rabbi Eisendrath and Dr. Bland, and Dr. Ernest Thomas as "Reds."

A little later on:

> Popular indignation, which extends to tens of thousands of people who never heard of the Fellowship of Reconciliation until the present month, was ably voiced in a protest signed with the approval of Sir Robert Falconer, sixty-eight professors, lecturers and instructors of the University of Toronto, who declared that attempts to nullify or restrict one of the proudest heritages of the British people (i.e., free speech) were "short-sighted, inexpedient and intolerable." In the opinion of Saturday Night they are worse than that, they are criminal. If free speech is to be suppressed, the doom of a free press is in sight.

Discretion forbids that we discuss in detail what would happen if our Lord should suddenly appear at a public meeting in Toronto and recite the Sermon on the Mount.

These are pretty strong words coming from Toronto Saturday Night. May I say that even the communists, who are the parties primarily aimed at, have their rights. I need not repeat what I said in the house the other night, that I am not a persona grata with the communists. But I believe that every group of citizens have certain rights in this country and we are not well advised to take such measures as would in any way impair that freedom of speech which we in British countries regard as a fundamental right. On January 24, 1929, the board of police commissioners of Toronto passed a resolution with regard to a public hall at the corner of Queen and Berkeley streets which decreed:

That as a condition of continuing the licence, all addresses thereafter should be in the English language, being the only language understood by the police officers.

A most extraordinary situation that. Since the police officials understood only one language, every Canadian must conform and speak nothing but English. We in the west have not only the English and French languages, but hundreds of thousands of our people speak Ukrainian, Hungarian, German, Yiddish and so on.

An hon. MEMBER: And Scotch.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes I am sorry to have missed that; and Gaelic too. These people hold their meetings in these languages, and so far we have had complete freedom in this respect. But here we have Toronto setting a precedent, the police commission taking the ground of refusing to have meetings conducted in any language but English—and simply because the Toronto police know only one language. Further than that, the resolution states:

It is the undoubted duty of this board to sustain the actions of the police in preventing disorder and sedition.

Now, the police are there to arrest a man, if necessary, and then charge him. If he has said something seditious, let him by all means be condemned on that ground. But I submit that it is no business of the police to prejudge whether or not a man is talking sedition or is likely to talk sedition. Yet that is the ground taken by the police of Toronto, and this precedent is being followed in other cities.

I might add that this rule set forth in the resolution of January, 1929, was extended to other halls, and similar notices were posted therein. Very curious consequenses ensued. For example a certain workers choir, Freiheit, attempted to engage Hygeia hall. In fact, they had engaged it but the engagement was cancelled. There was a good deal of trouble about the matter, because these workers were not communists and had engaged the hall in good faith. But suddenly they found the licence cancelled. After the trouble that arose in connection with this incident the people in charge of the hall added to the contract a clause to the effect that the contract was subject to permission in writing from the police commission. It is an extraordinary interpretation of our laws when Canadian citizens can enter into contracts only on condition that such contracts are subject to the ruling of a police commission. A choir, a dramatic society or anything of that kind may make an attempt to secure a hall but find that they are unable to do so. There have been a number of cases of this nature. This particular organization—the Fellowship of Reconciliation—attempted to secure a hall in order that it might be addressed by a very eminent gentleman from New York, one of the leading professors in one of the largest theological seminaries in New York, and they were informed that although they had made preliminary arrangements with this gentleman they could not rent a hall. The owners were unwilling to take a risk with the police, the police having said that that organization should not have a hall.

Might I say that this same organization a few months ago had asked the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) to speak, but they were unable to secure a hall. The police were not particularly opposed to the hon. member, but they were opposed to the organization which had invited her to speak. I understand the same thing is true more recently with regard to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). He was in Toronto addressing the Canadian Club and was asked to speak before this same organization. But no hall could be secured. That seems to be a ridiculous situation.

This organization, which has been referred to by the Toronto Saturday Night, appealed some months ago to the police commission.

Doctor Salem G. Bland was one of the speakers on that occasion, and according to the Mail and Empire of January 24, he said:

We charge that the police commission has tried to be court and judge. We do not criticize police actions against those who break the law. What the Fellowship of Reconciliation does protest against is that a policeman, high or low, should take the law unto himself and decide in advance whether a meeting is going to be lawful or not. What right has he to judge beforehand?

Rabbi Eisendrath, a well known and respected citizen of Toronto, made the following statement:

The Fellowship of Reconciliation likewise protests against so preposterous and injurious a statement as emanated from two members of the police commission that in seeking the fulfilling of its program wholly in consonance with the aims and ideals of the internationally known and fully accredited Fellowship of Reconciliation, its well meaning efforts were construed as being motivated by a "thinly disguised communism."

However, may we further point out that it is not merely our personal grievance alone which brings us before you; but likewise we appear on behalf of others who have suffered more keenly than ourselves through what we believe to be an unlawful exercise of police authority. We cannot feel free unless the same freedom is accorded to all. Nor can any rectification of the present attitude toward our own society content us unless the same liberty be guaranteed to the humblest and most helpless, the most friendless of our fellow-citizens, however mistaken and unpopular his views may be.

The communists, against whom this police regulation was primarily directed, had been forbidden by this regulation to use either public halls or the public parks, and when they tried to speak on the public streets they were told to move on, thus being effectively prevented from using the streets. In this way they have been barred from any hall, any park or any street, and I submit that that is altogether a new policy to be adopted by any British country except possibly during the stress of war times.

During the last elections Colonel O. M. Biggar found it necessary to write to the mayor of Toronto with regard to complaints which had come to his notice in connection with the breaking up of meetings which were being held in connection with the elections. It is quite true that the candidates were communistic candidates, but it is no crime to be a communist, even though many of us may not see eye to eye with them. The speakers were regularly recognized candidates in these elections, and that being so they had certain rights under the electoral laws of this country and Colonel Biggar pointed out those rights. His letter reads in part as follows:

I would, I think, be neglecting my duty if in transmitting Mr. Cohen's letter I omitted to point out the extreme gravity of his allegations. If these are true it would appear that there has been established in Toronto what can only be properly described as a police tyranny entirely outside the law, and that they should be true would be incredible apart from the absence of any satisfactory denial or explanation of the allegations made by Mr. Cohen in his previous communications. The real question raised by these and Mr. Cohen's present letter is the question whether in Toronto the police are enforcing the law or are persecuting persons who hold opinions of which they disapprove by the confiscation of printed matter found in their possession, by physical violence, by the misuse of licensing powers, and by threats of the institution of criminal proceedings for which there is no foundation.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private and public bills having expired, the house will revert to committee of supply.

Mr. MacLEAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock I was discussing the contract for the wharf repairs at Summerside. When were the tenders advertised, by what date had they to be in, and when were they opened?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): They were due on July 25, 1930. The lowest tenderer was Mr. Campbell.

Mr. MacLEAN: Before six o'clock the minister stated that Mr. Maynard, to whom the tender was transferred, had not been requested to send in a second deposit cheque. Was the first cheque from Mr. Maynard returned, and did he submit a second deposit cheque?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Maynard's cheque was sent in about August 7. On August 7 Mr. Campbell wired that he had arranged with the next lowest tenderer, Mr. Maynard, to take over the contract at his figure, and he stated that he was forwarding Mr. Maynard's deposit cheque.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Was that the original cheque which Maynard sent in?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What happened to the original cheque sent in by Maynard?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Maynard's cheque for $738 was received and sent to the accountant on August 15, 1930.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What about the cheque that accompanied the tender on July 25?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That would be for a different amount, $747.

Mr. DUFF: Quite right, but what happened to it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That was apparently returned to him.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): When?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Maynard's cheque for $747.20, which was his first cheque, was returned to him in February, 1931.

Mr. MacLEAN: I think there is a little confusion. The situation is this: Mr. Maynard, Mr. Campbell, and the others, tendered at the same time, each one sending in a deposit cheque. Mr. Campbell was told that his tender was the lowest. Naturally the other deposit cheques would be returned. What I wish to know is the date Mr. Maynard's first cheque was returned to him.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have not the exact date, but it would be returned in the ordinary course promptly after the lowest tender was accepted. That made it necessary, I presume, to send in a second cheque.

Mr. MacLEAN: That is the point I am trying to bring out. I am taking Mr. Maynard's position. The contract was transferred to him from Mr. Campbell, and the fact of his sending in a second deposit cheque at the request of the department, was equivalent to the department entering into a contract with Mr. Maynard to proceed with that work. That is proven by the fact that the two cheques are out. Mr. Maynard's first cheque was for $747 odd, his second was for the amount of Mr. Campbell's tender, $738. So that proves conclusively that the transfer was made to Mr. Maynard in good faith, and that he was asked by the department to send in a second deposit cheque. This he did and complied with all the regulations required by the department. That was equivalent, I say, to accepting his tender, and he was under the impression that he was to proceed with the work.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The sending of the cheque was arranged between Mr. Campbell and Mr. Maynard themselves, not at the request of the department, or with its approval. No doubt both Mr. Campbell and Mr. Maynard hoped that the contract would be awarded to Mr. Maynard; but this matter was arranged between themselves. When the cheque came in the matter was given consideration. There were other applicants, and the contract was awarded to another party, to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. VENIOT: But not to a party who had been a tenderer previous to that.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Quite right.

Mr. MacLEAN: We find that this man Downing received the contract without submitting a tender. If that course is to be followed by the department, it will simply destroy the whole tender system. When the department is confident that the lowest tenderer can carry out the work in good faith, I think in all fairness he should be allowed to proceed with the work, but if the department is going to allow outside men to come in and submit a bid on the work after the tenders are made known, and without advertising for new tenders, I say it is absolutely unfair for the department to accept such a bid. The different tenderers were men of standing in the community, any one of whom would have seen that the work was well performed. In my opinion Mr. Maynard should have been allowed to proceed with the contract. I would like to know upon whose recommendation Mr. Maynard's tender was dropped and Mr. Downing's bid accepted. I think it is only fair that that information should be given.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Arnett, my hon. friend's opponent, recommended Mr. Downing, and Mr. Downing put in a tender or offered to do the work for the amount of the lowest tender. The contract was awarded to him by order in council. I want to point out to my hon. friend that this all arose from his request that the lowest tenderer be allowed to withdraw his tender. If he had—

Mr. VENIOT: Oh, no.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If he had kept out of this and had allowed the lowest tenderer to complete his contract, there would have been no trouble whatever.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That was the beginning of all that took place afterwards. I want to remind my hon. friend that in all our advertisements for contracts there is the provision that the lowest or any tender is not necessarily accepted. The right is reserved to the department to award the contract to any person or firm it sees fit.

Mr. VALLANCE: No tender was accepted at all?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, it was.

Mr. MANION: The lowest tender was accepted.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, in the regular course.

Mr. MANION: And he refused to carry it out.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The trouble arose because the lowest tenderer refused to carry out his contract, and my hon. friend asked that he be relieved.

Mr. MANION: Hear, hear.

Mr. VENIOT: You did not relieve him?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, we did.

Mr. VENIOT: No, you didn't.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, we did.

Mr. VENIOT: No, you didn't.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): You did not call for new tenders.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, but we relieved the party who had been the lowest tenderer. Instead of having him forfeit his deposit we relieved him and succeeded in placing the contract with another reliable contractor at the amount of the lowest tender, so that there has been no money lost to the public. There would have been no trouble such as occurred if the lowest tenderer had not asked that his tender be withdrawn. Then he and the second tenderer endeavoured to arrange between themselves that the second tenderer should have the contract. My hon. friend endeavoured to bring that about. This all happened between August 5 and August 10. Then another gentleman came into the picture and offered to do the work for the amount of the lowest tender, and he got the work. That is the whole story.

Mr. VENIOT: How did he know?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend thinks somebody else should have had the contract.

Mr. VENIOT: No, not at all; I objected to the way it was done.

Mr. MacLEAN: I have no apology to make to this house or to the country for sending a telegram asking that Mr. Campbell be relieved of his tender. The telegram speaks for itself. Mr. Campbell found himself in a position where he could not carry out the tender. He was called away to take charge of a cargo in connection with a vessel he owned. He approached Mr. Maynard and asked him if he would take over the tender. Mr. Maynard agreed and the department was quite willing to cooperate and facilitate the putting through of the arrangement. For that reason the department was not losing anything on the transaction. There was only $90 between them in the first place, and the arrangement was worked out between those two gentlemen. As to any attempt to fasten anything upon me personally regarding any telegrams that may have been exchanged, I want to tell the minister that in that regard he cannot succeed. In the second place the minister states that Mr. Campbell was released. I want to tell him that Mr. Campbell was released on only one consideration, namely, that he forfeit his tender or else get some other person to take it over. He had to do one of three things: forfeit his deposit cheque, perform the contract, or get someone to take over his tender. Faced with the necessity of doing one of the three things, Mr. Campbell arranged with Mr. Maynard to perform the work. Notwithstanding anything the minister or his department may say, the fact remains that at a later date another gentleman entered into the picture who had never submitted a tender in any shape or form when the tenders were called for. As the minister stated before six o'clock, Mr. Downing was awarded the contract by order in council. The whole thing boils down to the fact, as the minister has just stated, that action was taken on the recommendation of my opponent in the last contest. My hon. friends were afraid that someone who might be of Liberal persuasion would benefit in some degree; probably it is for that reason they were so anxious to see their own friends get the patronage. Men were refused work on the wharf in that town last fall, when they most needed it. Then my hon. friends called a special session of parliament to vote $20,000,000 for the relief of unemployment, yet for party reasons they would not allow this work to go on and money to be spent. Under cover of secrecy they went to the extent of allowing a tender to be submitted and accepted.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The contract was awarded on September 15; there was no delay, There was no desire to escape responsibility, and as I have explained, the work was not then undertaken as it would interfere with shipping at that wharf. The contract is now in force and the work is proceeding.

Mr. VENIOT: Oh, yes.

Mr. DUFF: Why would the contract be awarded only on September 15 if Mr. Maynard's first cheque and the other cheque went back in July and Mr. Maynard sent in a second cheque on August 15.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is a comparatively short period between August 15 and September 15 to consider a contract, to get it before council and to have it dealt with.

Mr. DUFF: I am afraid my hon. friend does not understand me.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, I do.

Mr. DUFF: I do not think he does; if so, he is trying to draw a red herring across the trail. These tenders were received about July 25.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. DUFF: Between that date and August 15 Mr. Maynard's tender was returned to him by the Department of Public Works. That must have been early in August. The first deposit cheque was sent back to him and the department agreed with him that he was to send in a second deposit cheque, which arrived in Ottawa on August 15. Why was not the contract decided upon until September 15? Was the contract not given to Mr. Campbell early in the month of August, not in September at all? What date in August or July was this contract awarded to Mr. Campbell?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think my hon. friend will see that a month is not a very long time to elapse between the—

Mr. DUFF: That is not the point at all. The minister is getting away from my question.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Considering the fact that a new government had just come into office I do not think a month should be considered a very long time between the tender and the awarding of the contract.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. VENIOT: Apparently they were new to the tricks.

Mr. DUFF: The minister has not answered my question. I do not think he is trying to answer, because I do not think he can. I say that the tenders were received on July 25. Shortly afterwards Mr. Maynard's cheque was sent back to him by the department. That was the first cheque he sent in when he tendered for $7,400. That tender turned out to be the second lowest. Now then, on August 15, Mr. Maynard again sent in a cheque. I want to find out if it is not a fact that the department decided that Mr. Campbell was to receive the contract long before, or at least some time before, August 15.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Campbell took the contract on the 5th or 6th of August, and after that he withdrew. Subsequently it was arranged between himself and Mr. Maynard that the cheque should be sent in.

Mr. DUFF: A few minutes ago the minister told this committee distinctly that the contract was not awarded until September 15.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, I referred to the second contract. There was one contract awarded on August 5.

Mr. DUFF: But the minister said it was not awarded until September 15. Now that I have pinned him down he admits it was awarded on August 5.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not wish my hon. friend to be under any misapprehension.

Mr. DUFF: Sit down—I have the floor. This afternoon when the question first came up and the minister was asked who tendered for the work, he gave the name of Mr. Downing. Mr. Downing never tendered, as the minister had to admit later on; but at first —as Hansard will show, unless it has been changed since six o'clock—he gave the name of Mr. Downing. That is the first blunder he made. Now he says this contract was not awarded until September 15, but when I nail him down he has to admit that the tender was awarded to Mr. Campbell on August 5. If that is true, why does the minister now say the contract was awarded on September 15? To whom was the contract awarded on September 15? Was it awarded to Mr. Downing? No.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Certainly, to Mr. Downing on September 15.

Mr. DUFF: Why, then, did the minister keep Mr. Maynard's cheque from September 15 until the month of February if the contract was awarded to Mr. Downing on September 15? Is that a way to treat a man in business who has to go to the bank to borrow money to put up his deposit with the department and pay $9.41 interest on it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think my hon. friend will agree with me that no minister can personally supervise the return of cheques and attend to all the office details of his department. I had nothing to do with the cheque. That it was not returned was due to some oversight in the office. I ask my hon. friend to accept that explanation. It should have been returned sooner, there is no doubt about that.

Mr. DUFF: I will go a little further. Has the minister on his files any correspondence —he read some telegrams that the hon. member for Prince sent and tried to show that the whole trouble arose because of those telegrams—has he on his file any letters from Mr. Campbell agreeing to transfer the tender for the contract over to Mr. Maynard? Or any correspondence from Mr. Maynard to the department, and any correspondence from the department to Mr. Maynard, either before they received his cheque for the second deposit or afterwards in acknowledgment?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have a note here that on August 7 Mr. Campbell wired. That is the date the new government came into office. There seems to have been a good deal of activity between the 5th and 7th of August.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): And a lot afterwards.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): On August 7 Mr. Campbell wired that he had arranged with the next lowest tenderer, Mr. W. R. Maynard of Prince Edward Island, to take over the contract at his figure. I think my hon. friend will agree that that could not have been done with the approval of this government. He also stated that he was forwarding Mr. Maynard's deposit cheque. Mr. MacLean also wired on August 7 to the same effect, and was advised that Mr. Campbell's cheque would be returned as soon as the next lowest tenderer's deposit cheque was received.

Mr. HANBURY: Why keep him waiting so long?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Campbell's security cheque of $738 was returned to him on August 22nd.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Will the minister kindly repeat that?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. MacLean also wired on August 7 to the same effect, and was advised that Mr. Campbell's cheque would be returned as soon as the next lowest tenderer's deposit cheque was received.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That was from the department?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I presume so.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is conclusive evidence that Mr. Maynard's tender had been accepted by the department.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, that is just what was hoped for by the member who was wiring in, and no doubt also by Mr. Maynard himself; but it never was accepted. There has been no breach of faith, everything has been done regularly. The contract has been awarded to a capable contractor at the price of the lowest tender, simply because it was the lowest.

Mr. VENIOT: He was not a regular tenderer.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He was subsequently.

Mr. VENIOT: He never tendered.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He did not tender in answer to the advertisement, there is no doubt about that.

Mr. GRAY: How did the man who ultimately got the tender know what price to put in unless someone in the department told him?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It was perfectly well known down there what the lowest price was.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What date was the deposit cheque received from Mr. Downing?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Some time before the contract was awarded, before September 15, I think.

Mr. HANBURY: Has the minister the deposit cheque from Mr. Downing?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We never enter into any contract without it.

Mr. DUFF: The minister has been good enough to read a letter or telegram from Mr. Campbell in which it is said they arranged for the contract to be transferred from Mr. Campbell to Mr. Maynard. He also told us about Mr. Maynard sending in his cheque on August 15. What did the department do in regard to correspondence after they received that cheque if they did not agree to the proposition? I should like the minister to read the answer of Mr. Maynard or of Mr. Campbell when he sent in that cheque.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have not the file of correspondence.

Mr. DUFF: You had better send and get it before this item passes.

Mr. McLURE: Did Mr. Campbell give any reason why he did not want his tender to go into effect?

An hon. MEMBER: The government changed.

Mr. McLURE: There must be some reason why Mr. Campbell asked for the return of his deposit.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): All I have is a telegram from Mr. MacLean, the member, requesting that Mr. Campbell be allowed to withdraw his tender. I do not know anything more about it than that.

Mr. MYERS: I think the whole trouble perhaps arose out of the fact that on the 28th July last there was a change of government.

Mr. HANBURY: You bet it does.

Mr. MYERS: It may be interesting to the committee, Mr. Chairman, to know that down in Prince county, and especially in Summerside, the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacLean) and Mr. Campbell and possibly Mr. Maynard and company, had been used to running things pretty much their own way. After the 28th of July, when they saw they could not run things just in their own way any longer, and when Mr. Campbell saw that he had a tender that might squeeze him a little financially, and there might not be the same possibilities that there were before of getting a few little extras tucked in, the hon. member for Prince thought it very wise to have Mr. Campbell withdraw his tender. That is the whole story, and the reason why the contract was not proceeded with in September is well known to any man who lives in Prince Edward Island and especially to any man living in Summerside. The reason was that you could not interrupt the shipping and take the space on the railway wharf at Summerside when the shipments of potatotes for Cuba were being prepared; they wanted the space to load the ships. Mr. Downing is just as good a contractor in Summerside as Mr. Campbell ever was; he is just as good a contractor as Mr. Maynard ever was, and the work will be done honestly and just as well without the supervision of the hon. member for Prince county.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MacLEAN: Hon. gentlemen across the way might just as well make up their minds that this is not carried. This matter will end up in the public accounts committee if hon. gentlemen do not come across with the proper information.

My hon. friend from Queens has come to the rescue of the minister. He has insinuated that there was some crooked work going on when the Liberals were in power in connection with contracts down there. I want to tell this committee that never in all my experience of ten years in dealing with the Department of Public Works have I seen anything approaching what has transpired in connection with this contract. I defy the hon. member for Queens, the minister in charge of the department or any of the district engineers to put their finger on one item in connection with which I have ever interfered with any contract. Hon. gentlemen opposite must not measure other people's corn by their own half bushel. The whole matter did not arise because Mr. Campbell was afraid he would be squeezed by the department; it came about in this way: As I have said, Mr. Campbell was called away and could not attend to the work, and the contract was supposed to start right away. He arranged with Mr. Maynard to take over the contract, which was done in good faith. Mr. Maynard submitted his deposit cheque, which was conclusive proof that the department had agreed to the contract being transferred to him. That contract should have been proceeded with right away; that was the time when the work was positively needed for the fall shipments, but it was purposely delayed, when there was a change of government, in order to give their friends a chance. If the government had wanted to play fair with the people they would have advertised for new tenders. There was lots of time; they said they could not proceed with the work, so why could they not have advertised for new tenders and treated the people fairly? No; that would not have suited the purpose of our hon. friends. My hon. friend from Queens is backing up the minister in this matter; I hope he will not go on and do that sort of thing down in his own county. The whole matter came about in this way: Hon. gentlemen opposite wanted to switch that tender to a supporter of their own, a gentleman who went out on every platform and campaigned the country against me in support of the Conservative candidate. That man steps in and gets a reward, at the last moment, after the whole thing was arranged with Mr. Maynard. His reward was getting the contract, under the secrecy of the department. Now I should like to know from the minister if any correspondence has been exchanged with the district engineer at Charlottetown in connection with this matter.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As far as I know there has not been any correspondence, although I have not the file here.

Mr. DUFF: I think it is very important, in order to clear up this matter, that the minister should have this item stand and go on with something else until he gets the correspondence from the department with Mr. Maynard, or as a matter of fact all the correspondence. He has given us telegrams from the hon. member for Prince, and he has also read other correspondence. In order to complete this matter and show exactly where it stands, I think it only fair that we should have the correspondence, which in my opinion will show conclusively that when the government, the Minister of Public Works or his department received the second deposit cheque from Mr. Maynard, they accepted the offer of Mr. Campbell and Mr. Maynard to transfer the contract to Mr. Maynard.

My hon. friend from Queens said the whole trouble was that we had a change of goverment in July, 1930. He is quite right; I agree with that. Open confession is good for the soul. Why, for instance, did the two members for Queens appear so anxious to sit cheek by jowl with the minister when this little matter of $8,000 came up? Of course we are glad to see them moved further up on the front benches, but why are they there in connection with this matter? They must know something about this transaction. I am not one of those who does not believe that to the victors belong the spoils. I believe in that; I believe that when a Conservative government is in power their friends should get the preference, and I believe that when a Liberal government is in power the Liberals should get the preference. But my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works got up this afternoon and, with a long face, told how he was going to run his department. With crocodile tears running down his cheeks he said, "As long as I have the honour to be Minister of Public Works I will see that the lowest tenderer gets the contract." He said everything done in his department would be fair and aboveboard.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): He did not say that.

Mr. DUFF: Yes, he did say the lowest tenderer would get the contract and that his department would be run on that principle, and I am also reminded that the minister said he would carry on the department honestly. Is this carrying on his department honestly? If the minister would get up and say that the man who received the contract was a good Conservative and that he was advised, either by the member for Queens, the defeated candidate in Prince or some other Conservative to give this man Downing the contract, I would take off my hat to him. But when he acts the hypocrite and says he is going to try to run his department honestly and give contracts to the lowest tenderers, I say we have a perfect right to show him up.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not see the occasion for the hilarity with which some hon. members appear to view this matter. If the Department of Public Works has decided that for the future tenders are to be ignored unless they are put in by Conservatives, then let us know it.

Mr. MANION: Tenders are not ignored.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As I understand the situation, Mr. Downing never tendered at all. The tenders were put in by Mr Campbell, Mr. Maynard and some others. Some transaction took place between Mr. Campbell and Mr. Maynard, and it is very clear from the evidence as it appears here that Mr. Maynard was to carry out that contract. His cheque was accepted by the department for that purpose. In the meantime, however, the government changed. If the government are willing to admit at once that they do not propose to give employment or to allow tenders to be accepted and carried out because of the political persuasion of the tenderer, then we will know the position we are in, because subsequent events point to the fact that this contract was given by order in council to an ardent supporter of the government, without his putting in any tender, at the same price of course as the tender put in by Mr. Campbell and subsequently turned over to Mr. Maynard. That is the complaint I want to lodge, and I must say that I am surprised to find that the hon. member for Lincoln has not been protesting. He was protesting this afternoon about another matter, but he is very silent to-night. If the policy is to be that these contracts are to be given only to political favourites, what is the use of a Liberal tendering at all? This is an innovation, I am bound to say, in the administration of the Department of Public Works.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Hon. gentlemen may jeer as much as they like, but the principle should be to accept the lowest tender, provided the tenderer is capable of carrying out the work. And I have not heard that Mr. Maynard was not capable of performing his contract. If there was some reason why he could not carry out the contract, some valid reason, something might be said for the transfer of the contract to Downing. But evidently that is not so. Two hon. gentlemen who represent seats in Prince Edward Island now appear to give us the impression, on this side of the house at all events, that no longer is the advice of Liberal representatives to be taken. Theirs is to be taken. I have no objection in the world to that, but I do say that if the department enter into a contract, having accepted a tender, there should be some valid reason for its refusal to observe that contract; because, in all fairness—

Mr. MANION: The lowest tenderer refused it himself.

Mr. HANBURY: That is quibbling.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The lowest tenderer gave it up and the second lowest entered into an agreement which was acceptable.

Mr. MANION: What right had the second and the lowest tenderer to frame up a job of their own?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): None in the world, but that was acceptable to the department. The second tenderer's cheque was accepted, the first tenderer having disappeared. That must be evident, and the first tenderer is no longer in the arrangement. The second man's tender was accepted and there was failure on the part of the department to carry out their agreement with that second tenderer, whose cheque they accepted. Not only that, but they ignored him altogether and by order in council appointed someone else without any tender, someone who had never tendered and had made no offer to carry out the work, except that undoubtedly at the suggestion of someone else he was given the contract and is now about to carry it out. Some serious protest should be registered against this kind of procedure in connection with tenders.

Mr. MANION: Four men tender on a contract; the lowest man gets it and is given it legally and rightly. The lowest tenderer then refuses to carry out the contract, and he tries to make a frame-up with the second and have it given—

Mr. HANBURY: He was permitted by the government to make the arrangement.

Mr. MANION: He makes a frame-up with the second tenderer at the same price, and the government give the contract to a third man—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Who never tendered.

Mr. MANION: Yes, but they give it at the lowest price tenderer in the original tender. They had just as much right to do that, to give it to that man, as they had to give it to the second tenderer. They had as much right and obligation to call for second tenders, complete open tenders, if they gave it to Maynard as if they gave it to Downing.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But they never called for tenders.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friends are arguing that they should have given it to Maynard. Perhaps they should not have given it to either, but they had as much right to give it to Downing as to give it to Maynard without new tenders. If they had given it to Maynard, why should not a third or a fourth tenderer come forward and say, "I would have tendered the second time if you had given me a chance, but you let Maynard have it." If they had given it to Maynard, why not to any third or fourth tenderer?

An hon. MEMBER: Certainly.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend agrees with that. In other words, if you gave it—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But Downing never tendered.

Mr. MANION: But Maynard did not tender the lowest; he tendered second. My hon. friends are taking a very holy attitude to-night. I have sat and listened to it for some time and I am about fed up with it. I will tell my hon. friends something now—

Mr. VENIOT: The fat is in the fire.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friends know something about political tenders. I will tell the late Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) this: that I have been told in my office by Conservative contractors in this city that they went and asked in my department, when the Liberals were in power, to be permitted to tender, and they would not be permitted to tender at any price. That is what I am told and I know it to be true. And what is further—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: That doesn't make it right.

Mr. MANION: No, that would not make it right if it were wrong. But don't take such a holy attitude on your side. I think there is a whole lot of fuss being made about a teacupful of water; there is nothing to it at all. The contract is being carried out at what was the lowest tendered price. The government is losing nothing and the people of Canada are losing nothing. The only thing is that my hon. friend from Prince—I do not blame him for fighting for his friends—is a bit sore that his friend did not get it. That is the whole thing. My hon. friends over there are not shocked. I am just as high-minded as any of them—no higher but just as high—and I am not shocked at it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: And I know that they are not shocked. Why not forget all this hypocrisy and stand by the lowest tender where it is given?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I ask a question?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Was the Minister of Railways here this afternoon when the Minister of Public Works was telling us, with tears in his eyes, how he would administer the department?

Mr. MANION: I did not see him with any tears in his eyes. I happen to know him very well and I know that he carries on his department in an excellent manner. I know that. And what is more, I have heard a good deal stronger protest from some of my friends on my side in cases where he gave the contract to the lowest tenderer. So that he has been conducting the department quite honourably. But why not cut out all this "eyewash," because that is all it amounts to, and get down to business.

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Veniot has the floor.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SPENCE: Are you defending the hon. member for Prince?

Mr. VENIOT: I am astonished that the Minister of Railways should treat this question in the way he has. He says, "Why so much bother about a simple thing like this? Why take up the time of this house? It is all 'eyewash' ". If the hon. gentleman had set an example of that kind in the last two sessions, perhaps we should think he was sincere to-day. But no man in this house took up more time than the present Minister of Railways and the present Minister of Public Works in the twenty-one days during which they had me on the gridiron when my estimates were going through in 1929.

Mr. MANION: I didn't bother you much.

Mr. VENIOT: To-night I enjoy seeing the two hon. gentlemen on the gridiron and I intend to do my part in keeping that iron hot. I wish to say to the Minister of Public Works that he has in this instance departed from the practice of the Department of Public Works ever since confederation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. VENIOT: When I hear asses braying across the way it reminds me of the Foster horses of Nova Scotia. The practice of the department has been that where the lowest tender cannot be accepted, or where the contract is awarded to that tenderer and he signifies his desire not to proceed with the work, the department shall notify him that he stands a chance of having to forfeit his deposit. The department notified the lowest tenderer in this case when he asked that he be allowed not to proceed with the work. But they went further than that, if what the minister said this afternoon is correct, reading from his notes. Reading, not from any correspondence but from notes prepared, the minister said that they wrote to this gentleman, Mr. Campbell, that he could withdraw his tender on the condition either that he should forfeit his deposit or that he should make arrangements to meet the difference between his tender, the lowest, and the next tender to his, which was Maynard's. That is what the minister read this afternoon from his notes. If that is true, then they gave Mr. Campbell distinctly to understand that he had to make this arrangement. Mr. Campbell was not scheming, he was following the orders which came to him from the Department of Public Works. The minister now attempts to get clear of his responsibility by having other hon. members from Prince Edward Island attempt to place the blame upon Mr. Maynard by claiming that he and Mr. Campbell were concocting a scheme. Mr. Campbell acted under the instructions he received from the department, and, as I have said before, if he did not receive such instructions then I have been led astray by the notes read this afternoon by the minister. Having done that, the department was in duty bound to accept Mr. Maynard's offer when it came in because they said to Mr. Campbell: Your cheque will be forfeited unless you make an arrangement to carry out this contract. Mr. Campbell made that arrangement with Mr. Maynard, who sent in the deposit cheque required under the Campbell tender. If the department did not want to accept the Maynard tender it should have gone to the next tenderer. Campbell refused to go on and then, supposing Maynard had refused to go on, the department should have gone to the next lowest tenderer or else called for new tenders. Instead of doing that, they turned down all the tenders, they refused the second offer of Maynard and never gave an opportunity to the other two men to file a tender, or if they did, we have no information of it. On the recommendation of the defeated Conservative candidate, as admitted by the minister, they went to a man who never had any intention of tendering, who perhaps did not know that tenders had been called for but who had learned in an underhand way that this contract was not to be given either to Maynard or Campbell. Through some means or other, this third man submits a tender of exactly the same amount submitted by Campbell which was the lowest of the four made.

Mr. MANION: Does not my hon. friend think that Downing failed to tender because he knew that under the late government he would have no chance of getting the contract?

Mr. VENIOT: He knew that under the present government he could get anything through. It is unheard of—not unheard of, because there are examples in the past where under Conservative rule the very same thing occurred—that, tenders being called for and the lowest tenderer refusing to go on with the contract, the department should go to a man who had not tendered and ask that he put in a bid. Will the minister produce the correspondence between Mr. Arnett—

An hon. MEMBER: All the correspondence.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, all the correspondence, but particularly that between Mr. Arnett, the defeated Conservative candidate in that constituency, and the department, wherein he recommends that Mr. Downing be given the contract. The other day the minister was asked to produce correspondence in connection with a certain item and he replied that the negotiations had been carried on verbally. I wonder if this is another verbal case.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have a letter from Mr. Downing, dated September 8.

Mr. VENIOT: I asked for Mr. Arnett's correspondence.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have no correspondence here from Mr. Arnett.

Mr. VENIOT: Then this matter should be allowed to stand.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am quite willing to allow it to stand; we will see what we have on the file.

Mr. MYERS: The hon. member for Gloucester really deserves the thanks of the committee, as he is the only member who has spoken on this question who has really thrown any light upon it. He has given the real reason for his opposition; he knows that everything is all right and that there has been no wrongdoing.

Mr. VENIOT: He does not.

Mr. MYERS: He knows there is a good contractor in Summerside who is carrying on this work, but his opposition and that of other hon. gentlemen opposite would seem to indicate that they desire to punish the present Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Railways for their pranks during the last session.

Mr. HANBURY: Does the minister propose to award contracts in a similar manner in the future?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I will deal with each individual case on its merits as it comes up. Let me endeavour to place this matter straight before the committee.

An hon. MEMBER: We have got it straight.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It was proposed to construct a wharf at Summerside. Tenders were advertised for in the regular way and four were received. The rule that the lowest tender be accepted was followed, and the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer, but for some reason best known to himself he asked to be relieved of the contract and that was done. He hoped to be able to bring about an arrangement—

Mr. HANBURY: At the request of the government.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He hoped to bring about an arrangement by which his apparent friend, the second contractor, would be awarded the contract. With a view to accomplishing that, he got the second contractor to send in a cheque. That cheque was never accepted by the department on the basis that a contract would be awarded; it remained in the department for some considerable time. The matter was given further consideration, and instead of adopting the course suggested by the first contractor, who had defaulted and asked to be relieved of his contract, the government selected one of three courses which presented themselves, all equally sound. One alternative was to advertise again; another was to award the contract to any other contractor who would accept it at the same figure as that submitted by the lowest tenderer. As I have said before, there appears in every advertisement—

An hon. MEMBER: What was the third?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): —the statement that the department is not bound to accept any tender. If this work could be done at the amount of the lowest tender, the department was justified in awarding the contract to any reliable and competent contractor at that lowest price. That is what was done. The public interest has been protected and not a dollar of public money has been lost. The work is in charge of a competent contractor and will be completed in due course. The minister and the department were advised by the solicitor that we were under no obligation whatever to award the contract to the second tenderer.

Mr. VENIOT: What about the other two?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can only say that if the other two were to be taken into consideration, they would have a perfect right to ask that the work be put up for tender again. That would have meant added expense and further delay. The course that was adopted was one of three alternatives. I submit that it was sound, that it was justifiable under the circumstances, that the public interest and the public treasury have been protected. All that remains is a little disappointment on the part of the lowest tenderer and the second tenderer that they did not secure the contract. With that the public is not concerned. The public's concern is in seeing that the work is well done at the lowest possible cost, and that is the result in this case. There is nothing wrong, nothing irregular, nothing for my hon. friends to get excited about.

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister must admit that the gentleman who finally got the contract never submitted a tender at all.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He did not submit a tender in the first instance, but made an offer to do the work, and he has entered into a contract.

Mr. SANDERSON: But did he tender in the regular way?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He made an offer to do the work and entered into a contract. So that closes the door so far as tendering is concerned.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then he did not submit a tender in the regular way.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There was no answer by him to the advertisement for tenders.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Is it not the practice of the department to hold the deposit cheque when a tenderer does not take the contract?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The cheque is held in some instances, pending other arrangements.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): How did it come about that the department returned the cheque in this case?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): After we had made another contract with a competent contractor, who submitted a deposit to guarantee the completion of the work, we felt justified in returning the cheque to the other man.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Mr. Campbell, the lowest tenderer, who was awarded the contract, was relieved through Mr. Maynard agreeing to take over the contract, and then the department returned Mr. Campbell's cheque. That was the only reason for returning his cheque, was it not?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Then what other reason had you for returning the cheque contrary to the practice of the department?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Because we had a competent contractor prepared to carry on the work.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Mr. Downing had not come into the picture at that time at all. One thing is clear, and that is that in order to give the contract to a certain individual you have to throw down the practice that has always obtained of letting contracts according to tender.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am not throwing down any principle that has prevailed in this department. I am determined that the lowest tenderer shall have the contract. This man was the lowest tenderer, and he got it

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): He did not put in a tender at all.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, but he offered to do the work.

Mr. McINTOSH: Last night when the minister was discussing the question of a public building in North Battleford he made the same statement he has made to-night, that he always accepted the lowest tender. If that is the practice of the department, how could they know in this case that the price for which the contract was let was the lowest possible price that could have been secured if new tenders had been called. If you called for new tenders, others would probably tender for the work who had not tendered before. So I cannot for the life of me see how you could come to the conclusion that this was the lowest tender. It might not be the lowest tender at all.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The amount of the lowest tender was well established. It was within our own estimate, and we saw no reason that would warrant our asking for new tenders.

Mr McINTOSH: Your estimate might lead you to think that that would be the lowest price submitted, but if you reopened the question and called for new tenders, a lower price might have been bid.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We received four tenders, ranging from $7,380 to $8,770. That shows fairly good competition.

Mr. McINTOSH: It shows good competition, but it is not the final word on the point. That is my contention.

Mr. BROWN: To my mind the crux of the question lies in the answer which the department made to Mr. Campbell or to Mr. Maynard, when they received his second cheque. I shall not be satisfied until the correspondence has been produced. There has been a lot of discussion of irrelevant matters, but the vital question is this: Did the department at any time indicate its willingness to ratify the arrangement that was made between Mr. Campbell and Mr. Maynard? The member for Prince has said that there were three alternatives open to Mr. Campbell: He could fulfil his contract, forfeit his cheque, or provide a substitute contractor. If that is correct, the minister is absolutely in wrong.

[Mr. McMillan.]

Mr. RALSTON: Did I understand the minister to say that he had obtained an opinion from the solicitor of the department?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: Has he that opinion?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: Would he please read it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is the opinion of Mr. Crerar, departmental solicitor, dated September 4:

On July 25, 1930, tenders were opened.

On July 26, 1930, report to council was drafted recommending acceptance of the tender of J. E. Campbell and report sent to minister. On July 29 a wire was received from Mr. MacLean notifying the department that Campbell wished to withdraw his tender.

In connection with this I would draw your attention to the clause in the tender reading as follows:

"The security cheque or bonds will be forfeited if the person or persons tendering refuse to enter into a contract when called upon to do so. The department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender."

As contractual relationship is established by offer and acceptance, I submit that in this case, Mr. Campbell was bound by his offer as represented by his tender and that from that time the crown had the option of insisting upon the specific performance of the contract; holding Mr. Campbell's security deposit and arranging for a new contract.

The second alternative was adopted, and Mr. Campbell's security deposit was then that of one liable to indemnify the crown for any loss suffered through his inability to perform the contract. Subsequently all that Mr. Maynard could do, or has done, is to submit his cheque in lieu of Mr. Campbell's and assuming the last named's liability.

No notification whatsoever has been sent Mr. Maynard which might imply that the contract in due course would be awarded to him. Under the circumstances I consider that the department is in no way legally bound to award the contract to Mr. Maynard.

Mr. RALSTON: Will the minister tell me what instigated that opinion? Was there a letter to the solicitor asking for the opinion?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, this offer came in in the meantime, I presume, from the other contractor, and we wished to know our legal position in regard to the matter.

Mr. RALSTON: Is there anything in the record at all as to why the solicitor was asked to give an opinion on a matter which is perfectly plain? Everybody has seen advertisements for tenders, and everybody knows that the lowest or any tender is not necessarily accepted. What was the necessity for all this care? Why was it necessary to get an opinion from a solicitor to tell the minister that?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is what the solicitor is there for. He is employed and paid by the department to give the minister advice on legal matters.

Mr. RALSTON: Does the minister tell me that they ask the solicitor for an opinion every time the lowest tenderer happens to ask to be let out?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Any time anything exceptional of this character turns up.

Mr. RALSTON: Oh, "exceptional."

Mr. VALLANCE: Yes, very exceptional.

Mr. RALSTON: I think the very fact that this opinion was sought shows the real situation. On September 4 Mr. Maynard's offer was in. Apparently the department wanted to see if they had to accept that tender. Why? Mr. Maynard was going to put in a cheque. He was a man who had already contributed something to the country because of the fact that he had made a tender. That is more than Mr. Downing had done. Mr. Maynard had some rights. I do not think the Minister of Public Works would need a solicitor to give him advice on that point. He could ask any deputy minister in any department where contracts are let and he would find that those men who go to the trouble of making out estimates, examining plans and specifications and going to the expense of preparing prices are the men who are considered by the department as worthy of consideration in case some tenderer falls down. The moment that principle is broken we lose one of the most important aids the country has in connection with the keeping down of expenditures. Men will not put in tenders if they find that after their tenders have been put in they are going to be hawked around the country and somebody else, who has not tendered at all, asked to take the work at their price. That is the real danger.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, that is not right. My hon. friend is not stating the case fairly at all.

Mr. RALSTON: I know the facts, and I will state them. Will my hon. friend tell me why, in the light of the opinion he received from his solicitors, he felt it necessary to award the contract to Mr. Campbell?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Campbell?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, the lowest tenderer.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The contract had been awarded to Mr. Campbell by the previous government.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend agree that the lowest tenderer should have it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I agree in every instance the lowest tenderer should have it. I stand for that principle; I have fought for it, and the lowest tenderer has got it.

Mr. RALSTON: No, no, no. On my hon. friend's own statement there is no more reason why Mr. Campbell or the lowest tenderer should have got the contract than that it should go to somebody who did not even tender. They seem to think it is all right if the price is not higher than that of the old tenderer. It has been expressly laid down by two ministers that they do not regard at all this matter of—

Mr. MANION: No, it has not. I resent that statement. I did not lay down any such principle at any time.

Mr. RALSTON: I think if my hon. friend will let me finish it would be much better. I would ask him to let me say what he said.

Mr. MANION: Well, do not put the wrong words in my mouth.

Mr. RALSTON: I am referring to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals. I say I was surprised at the principle he laid down. If my hon. friend will permit me to say so, I do not think he was quite candid with the committee. I do not believe my hon. friend will find in his department that there has been, either before or since he has been there—I hope not, anyway—any case in which a contract has been given to anybody who did not tender at all.

Mr. MANION: No, but I have been told that in my department while my hon. friend and his friends were in power, before I got there, certain Conservatives were not even permitted to tender at all. I have been told that.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend has said that twice. He has made that statement however when neither of the gentlemen who occupied that portfolio is in the house.

Mr. MANION: That is my information.

Mr. RALSTON: Since my hon. friend has made that statement I think he should give the names, because the statement he has made is that these gentlemen were told that they could not tender. I do not believe it; I do not believe this house believes it, and I do not believe this country believes it.

Mr. MANION: I do not care whether my hon. friend believes it or not; it is a fact, and I can prove it.

Mr. RALSTON: I will challenge my hon. friend to give this house and this committee the names of the contractors.

Mr. MANION: I don't choose to give the names at this moment. I will give the names on the proper occasion. If my hon. friend wants an investigation he had better start it, and I will give the names.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is—

An hon. MEMBER: Start an investigation.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend surely must be fair. I think he realizes that it is not quite fair to come here and make statements of that kind when the hon. members who were in charge of the departments are not here and when he refuses to give the names.

An hon. MEMBER: Ask for an investigation, that is the best thing to do.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend has used a phrase which has been heard quite often from benches on the other side of the house. He falls back behind it with the statement that when the proper occasion presents itself he will give names. I say he thought this was the proper occasion to make the statement and therefore this is the proper occasion for him to mention any names. I repeat that I do not believe he will find in his department any case in which a man who was not a tenderer at all was given a contract. I do not believe that is so. I believe when he thinks it over, if he has not already thought of it, he will not do it in his department and I do not believe the Minister of Public Works will do it again in his. It is a bad practice. I do not see why the advice of a solicitor was necessary; it is not a question of law, but a question of practice. It is putting a premium on a practice under which men devote time and money towards examining sites and plans, making investigation and putting in tenders, and the country receives the benefit of their competition. Then after these men have done all the work and spent their money to tender, somebody else is brought in and asked whether he will take the tender at a stated price. This government surely cannot defend such a practice, and I am surprised that my hon. friend should have risen in his place and defended it; I do not think it is good departmental practice. It is not a practice that is common in the department of the Minister of Railways and Canals or in that of the Minister of Public Works. If they inquire from the deputies throughout the service they will find no such practice prevailing. If that practice existed there is no reason why tenders could not be advertised, a dozen answers received, the lowest price selected and then an approach made to other people to ask if they would not take the contract at the lowest price. There is no difference between that procedure and that which has been adopted in this instance.

Mr. MANION: Certainly there is.

Mr. RALSTON: Under the rule my hon. friend has read the contract need not necessarily be awarded to the lowest tenderer any more than to any of the others and if they take the attitude which has been taken tonight they will be disregarding the lowest tenderer and giving the contract to someone else at his price. If the policy is adopted whereby tenderers are left out altogether I say that lowest tenderer might as well be left out as anybody else. It is a bad practice, and there will be nothing but grief in the Department of Public Works if my hon. friend allows the practice to continue.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend has not stated the case thoroughly. I have great respect for him and I am surprised that he has stated the matter as he has.

Mr. RALSTON: I have stated it correctly.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He has left the impression that after these tenders were in the minister hawked them about.

An hon. MEMBER: No, no.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And rejected the lowest tender.

Mr. RALSTON: I know exactly what was done.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Rejected the lowest tender and allowed somebody else to come in.

Mr. RALSTON: I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That was the impression I got.

Mr. RALSTON: Well, my hon. friend had better read Hansard.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I want to assure him the facts disclosed that nothing of that kind was done in this case.

Mr. RALSTON: We know what was done.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Nothing of that kind will be done as long as I have control of the Department of Public Works. The whole trouble arose in this department through a contractor, as I have stated—

Mr. RALSTON: That is old stuff.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The contractor withdrew his tender, presenting the department with a difficulty.

Mr. RALSTON: No, no great difficulty.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And they adopted a course which I think is reasonable and sound.

An hon. MEMBER: And political.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And as I have said, it did not result in the loss of the taxpayers money.

Mr. RALSTON: But it discouraged three tenderers from tendering again.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, not at all.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon friend think that Maynard will tender again?

Mr. MacLEAN: Our good friends have not been altogether consistent. For eight or ten years I sat over where they are now, and while in opposition they were the greatest exponents of the tender system. Now, they come forward with a proposition that really destroys the tender system in this country. How did Mr. Downing get the information that this tender of Mr. Maynard's was $7,380? He must have gotten that information somewhere because he tendered to the very cent.

Mr. QUINN: Everybody in Prince Edward Island knew the figures.

Mr. MacLEAN: Perhaps they did in Halifax too.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The passing of the order in council made the matter public, and Mr. Campbell knew it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Which order in council?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The order in council awarding the contract to Mr. Campbell. His was the lowest tender. It was well known down through there that the contract was awarded to him at that figure. It was in the newspapers, I am told.

Mr. MacLEAN: It clearly demonstrates to the house that there was something very irregular in this whole transaction.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The irregularity was in the withdrawal of the lowest tender.

Mr. MacLEAN: The minister cannot get away with that. The public are too intelligent for him to put that across. It is no use trying to hide behind a smoke screen of that sort. When I first brought this matter to the attention of the house the Prime Minister said I certainly was misinformed, that no transaction of that kind could possibly happen. Now I am perfectly justified in bringing the matter again to the attention of the house. I think we have convinced everyone in this chamber and the people from coast to coast that we were right, and that the system our friends are now adopting is absolutely wrong. What will happen to tenders for rural mail routes—

Mr. SPENCE: Why worry about them?

Mr. MacLEAN: —if information is given out that the lowest tender is a certain amount, and then on the recommendation of a defeated candidate, such as my friend Mr. Arnett, a certain gentleman who never tendered at all is awarded the contract at the same figure as the lowest tender? I would remind hon. members that if it happens in one department it may happen in all departments. I think it is only fair to ask that this item stand, and that the minister bring down all the correspondence that passed between Mr. Arnett and the department, between Mr. Downing and the department, between the district engineer, Mr. Hyndman, and the department, and between any others and the department. When we get that information we will be in a position to pass judgment. What happened last year prevented the work being carried on at the very time the workingmen of the town needed employment. I would ask that the item stand until the further information is furnished.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have endeavoured to give the committee all the information available.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, I have endeavoured to lay everything before the committee fully and to state the case fairly. My hon. friend has not placed the case before the committee in its true light. He has suggested that there has been some manipulation of the tenders, that something was done to take the contract away from the lowest tenderer and allow some other person to have it at the same figure. Nothing of the kind was done. This all happened because of the intervention of my hon. friend opposite.

Mr. BROWN: You are laying too much emphasis on that.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He asked that the lowest tenderer be relieved from his contract. Then the course was adopted of trying to get the work done at the same figure by a competent contractor. The alternative was selected of getting a good competent contractor instead of the second tenderer do the work. That is all I can say.

Mr. MacLEAN: Does the minister mean to say that Mr. Maynard was not a competent contractor?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not reflect on Mr. Maynard at all, but I say that the gentleman who has the contract now is competent.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cowen): Shall the item carry?

Mr. DUFF: No, Mr. Chairman. The minister says he has given us all the information in regard to the matter, but within the last half hour he told me that he did not have any correspondence there might be between Mr. Maynard and the department. Therefore it was understood that the item should stand. Within the last few minutes the minister, in order to furnish some reason for his position in the matter, referred to the fact that in all the advertisements which go out for tenders, whether from his or any other department, there is a clause that the lowest or any tender will not necessarily be accepted. He is quite right. But why is that clause inserted? It is not inserted so that when all the tenders are in the tenderers will be ignored and an outsider, a stranger, be awarded the contract. The purpose of that clause is to enable the department to call for further tenders if they think the lowest tender is not sufficiently low. The Minister of Railways was good enough to come to the help of his colleague. He said there was a "frame-up" between Mr. Campbell and Mr. Maynard. On reflection my hon. friend will surely realize that every day in the year, any corporation—whether it be the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway, or any other—after awarding a tender will allow one contractor to pass his contract over to another. I repeat, that is done every day, and there is no "frame-up" about it. That has been the practice in the Public Works department for the last ten years.

Mr. SPENCE: Does the other man always get it?

Mr. DUFF: Which other man?

Mr. SPENCE: The man that you suggest has the contract transferred to him. That is no argument.

[Mr. Brown.]

Mr. DUFF: After I sit down I shall be delighted to hear my hon. friend, for he always was very interesting when opposing estimates from this side of the house. I say that in all kinds of business—and the Minister of Railways if he does not know it now will find it out next year—contracts are transferred from one tenderer to another.

Mr. BURY: That was not done in this case.

Mr. DUFF: Yes.

Mr. BURY: He asked for the lowest tender.

Mr. DUFF: That is exactly what happened. He did do it, there was no "frame-up." Mr. Campbell did not want to go on with the contract.

Mr. BURY: Why?

Mr. DUFF: I do not know. I am dealing with my hon. friend's suggestion. What I am saying is that Mr. Campbell, after being notified that he was the lowest tenderer, decided that he did not want to go on with the contract. Mr. Campbell was perfectly justified in transferring that tender to Mr. Maynard, provided the department accepted that transfer.

Mr. MANION: That would be true if Mr. Campbell had taken the contract himself and then assigned it to Mr. Maynard but he did not take the contract; he stepped out of it and then tried to pass it on to another man.

Mr. DUFF: He did not step out of it; he could not step out of it. All Mr. Campbell could have done was to forfeit his deposit in the first place.

Mr. ERNST: No, he asked to be relieved.

Mr. DUFF: He would be a fool to ask to be relieved when he knew that by being relieved he would forfeit his money.

Mr. ERNST: But the hon. member sitting behind my hon. friend asked that he be released.

Mr. DUFF: Yes, on certain conditions, but he could not be released unless the department was satisfied.

Mr. ERNST: But he was released.

Mr. DUFF: I do not understand what the hon. gentleman is trying to get across. I do not believe he knows himself. I am talking particularly to the Minister of Railways, who said there was a frame-up. I say that any day in the year a contractor can transfer his tender or his contract to another person so long as the department is satisfied with the transfer. So I say there was no frame-up, because it will be shown by the correspondence when it is brought down that Mr. Campbell, as well as the hon. member for Prince, had a distinct understanding with the Department of Public Works that they were quite satisfied to have Mr. Campbell transfer his contract to Mr. Maynard. They accepted Mr. Maynard's deposit cheque and intended to give him the contract. But when some friends of the party opposite suggested something else, Mr. Maynard did not get the contract. I am not blaming Mr. Downing's friends at all. I made the statement previously that as far as I am personally concerned I would rather see a Grit get a contract than a Tory, when the Liberals are in power. I do not object to that, but why is not the minister honest enough to say that was the fact? Why does he not say, "Some of my Conservative friends from Prince Edward Island came to me and said here was a good Tory supporter, this man Downing, who worked hard for the party, and here was a chance to give a little work." Why does not the minister say so? I would have done it if I had been in his place, but why try to camouflage the thing? That is the whole story. Mr. Maynard was to get that contract the department were satisfied to have Mr. Maynard get it, until some of my Conservative friends from Prince Edward Island came to the minister and said Mr. Downing should get the contract instead. That was why the minister sent for the solicitor that was why he wanted to find some way to crawl out. He succeeded in crawling out by doing it in this way, so it is useless for the Minister of Railways to try to get across to the public that there was a frame-up in the matter. There was no frame-up at all it is the usual way of doing business and it is done every day in the year.

Mr. MANION: I did not use the word "frame-up"—

Some hon. MEMBERS: You did.

Mr. MANION: Let me finish. I used the word, of course, but not in an offensive sense with regard to Mr. Maynard or Mr. Campbell. I know nothing about them. I say that as far as they are concerned it was a frame-up to give the contract to Maynard.

Mr. DUFF: No, an understanding.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is getting very particular about my words, but he was not so particular to-night when an hon. member on this side interrupted.

Mr. DUFF: I am sure the Minister of Railways is not a bit more careful of his language than I am. He is no more courteous to members on this side of the house than I am to members on the other side, and I will not allow him to get away with that.

Mr. MANION: I was just remarking that my hon. friend was so particular as to change the word "frame-up" to "understanding" but that he was not so particular about his own language. I was going to say that as far as Maynard and Campbell are concerned, Campbell got the contract. That was quite right; he was the lowest tenderer and he was awarded the contract, just as he would have received it if my hon. friend and his friends had been in power. But Mr. Campbell refused to carry it out, and asked to be relieved. Then, after he was relieved of the contract, he wanted to have the privilege of giving it to whomever he desired.

Mr. HANBURY: He was asked to do so by the government.

Mr. MANION: He was not asked to do so. After refusing to carry out a contract for which he had tendered, and in regard to which he had sent a cheque to the department, he wanted to name the contractor to whom he would turn over the work.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MANION: Let me finish. Surely the Minister of Public Works had more right to name the contractor than Mr. Campbell, who had reneged on the contract which he had obtained. The Minister of Public Works is the man responsible to the people of this country, and when Mr. Campbell had obtained the contract by a fair tender and then asked for his cheque back, surely he was not the man to name the contractor. The Minister of Public Works was the man to do that He did name the contractor; he gave out the contract at the same figure and there was not a loss of one dollar to the people of Canada. This talk of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, who said that this ruins the tender system in this country, is just the same kind of eyewash as the rest of the protests. This has no effect at all on the tender system; it will not affect that system a particle, because the lowest tender price got the contract.

Mr. VENIOT: He did not.

Mr. MANION: I say the lowest tender price, the lowest tenderer, got it first. He refused to carry out the contract, but it was awarded at the lowest tender price, so that absolutely upholds the tender system. I should like to know what right Mr. Campbell had, after reneging on taking the contract himself, to name the man who should get that contract. What right had the hon. member for Prince to name the man, for that matter?—and I say this with no disrespect to him. I do not object to him or to any other hon. member fighting for his friends, but I do not see why there should be any objection to there being a little friendship shown on this side of the house as well.

Mr. VENIOT: Be honest about it.

Mr. MANION: Yes, I am perfectly honest. I say there has been no injury to the tender system and there has not been the loss of one dollar to the people of this country. Certainly the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible not only to this parliament but to the people of this country as well, was the man to give the contract, rather than the man who originally got it and then reneged on it.

Mr. DUFF: The Minister of Railways has made the statement that Mr. Campbell refused to carry out the contract. That is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. MANION: That is what I am informed.

Mr. DUFF: No, he asked to be relieved of the contract; he did not refuse to carry it out.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: I am afraid my hon. friend is becoming a lawyer.

Mr. DUFF: No, I am only a sea lawyer. I sometimes thank God I am not a lawyer. I am not going to allow the Minister of Railways to get away with this; when he states that Mr. Campbell, the first and the lowest contractor, refused to carry out his contract, he is making an incorrect statement. Campbell did no such thing. He could not refuse to carry out his contract without losing his deposit money, in the first place. If he refused to do the work he would lose the $738 which he sent in, representing ten per cent of the amount of the tender. That is the law with regard to public works. What Mr. Campbell did was to make an arrangement with the Department of Public Works that his tender or his contract would be passed over to Mr. Maynard, and to that arrangement the Department of Public Works agreed.

Mr. MYERS: My hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. DUFF: How do you know I am wrong?

Mr. MYERS: That was the second step he took; the first step was when he asked to be relieved of his contract.

Mr. DUFF: My hon. friend says I am wrong, and then he admits I am right. He says that was the second step; of course it was the second step.

Mr. MYERS: He should have taken the first step first.

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Campbell certainly took the first step when he put in his tender. His was the lowest tender, and it was accepted. That was the first step.

Mr. MYERS: Then he wanted to sidestep.

Mr. DUFF: And now the Minister of Public Works is sidestepping. Since five o'clock this afternoon the minister his given seventeen different explanations in regard to this matter, and none of them is correct. The minister admits that he has not before him the full correspondence in the matter. If he would come out honestly and say, "My friends came to me and said this was a chance to help one of our supporters" then, like the Minister of Railways, I would agree with him. We would all agree; we would be three of a kind. But when the Minister of Public Works tries to hide behind a serious mien, tells us he is going to carry on his department by giving contracts to the lowest tenderers, and then deliberately ignores all the tenderers in this matter in order to call in a friend of the party—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Again my hon. friend is not stating the case fairly. The Minister of Public Works did not deliberately disregard the lowest tenderer.

Mr. DUFF: Oh yes, he did.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, he did not, excuse me. The lowest tenderer himself disregarded his own tender.

Mr. HANBURY: He asked to be let out of his contract.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Not only did he disregard his tender, but he disregarded his contract and asked to be relieved.

Mr. DUFF: Was that disregarding it? He could not disregard his tender unless the department were satisfied; otherwise he would lose his $738.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And we took methods to meet his wishes—

Mr. DUFF: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): —to relieve him of his contract—

Mr. DUFF: Quite so.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): —and to get the work done at the same cost by another competent contractor.

Mr. DUFF: No, by transferring it to Mr. Maynard; that is the second step.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is the whole story.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. VENIOT: Hon. gentlemen will not succeed in having it carried in this way. We have asked for information and are entitled to it. I know the minister is anxious to give it. He has not the information to-night and I was going to suggest, as I have already suggested, that this matter might stand until we have that information. The minister read from notes this afternoon, and that, I think, has caused all this trouble. If the minister had had the correspondence here this afternoon and had read it, the original correspondence, instead of reading from notes made up for him, he might not have left a wrong impression upon the house. Listening to the notes as he read them, I was convinced that the first tenderer, Mr. Campbell, was informed that he could give up his tender either by forfeiting his deposit or by entering into arrangements to make up the difference between his tender and the next one, Mr. Maynard's. The minister left that impression with us this afternoon, and if that is true then the department cannot get away from the fact that Mr. Maynard, and not an outsider, was entitled, under their instructions to Campbell, to receive the contract. In view of the apparent misunderstanding, from the reading of the notes and the fact that the correspondence has not been produced, I would suggest again that the minister let the matter stand for the time being and take it up when he has the correspondence here.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I was reading from the notes prepared in connection with the estimates.

Mr. VENIOT: That is so.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I did not have all the correspondence with me—

Mr. VENIOT: I know that.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): —as, of course, the hon. member knows. But the case has been developed, the facts are all before the committee, and the committee knows as much now as it can know.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have been following the discussion with a good deal of interest and have been debating in my own mind whether the government was seeking to block its own estimates or trying to evade the bringing-down of some correspondence.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Neither.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Unless there is something to conceal, neither reason seems to be sufficient to account for the time spent in discussion since the request for the correspondence was made. I should think that the minister would find it altogether reasonable, where he has referred to a part of the correspondence, to promise to bring down the whole of it, and he might well let the item stand until he does so. My impression earlier in the day was that hon. members on this side of the house rather expected that most of the harbours and rivers estimates of the Department of Public Works would be completed to-day, and I am surprised to find that since five o'clock this afternoon the house has been discussing this one item relating to a wharf in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, and largely, for the last hour at least, because the minister has persistently refused to bring down the correspondence. That is the only reason further progress has not been made. If the correspondence had been brought down or a promise made to bring it down, the item standing meanwhile, many of the other items would have been passed long before this. The minister even yet might get through a little business between now and eleven o'clock if he would allow the item to stand and promise to bring down all the correspondence. As the matter stands now, it certainly looks as though the government were trying to evade placing some of the correspondence before the house.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My right hon. friend was not in the house, and I wish to assure him that I am not endeavouring to conceal anything, nor am I refusing to bring down correspondence. I will accept the suggestion and see that it is brought down, and in the meantime the item can stand.

Item stands.

Harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia, $698,500.

Mr. RALSTON: There are two or three matters to which I wish to refer in connection with this vote, and they have to do particularly with works in my own constituency. In the first place, I should be glad to be given some information regarding the item of $9,000 for the wharf at Barrington passage, and also the wharf at North East Point, Cape Sable island. What are those?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): With regard to Barrington passage, the $9,000 is required to provide improved docking facilities in order to accommodate the new ferry service which the provincial government proposes establishing, to handle traffic to and from Cape Sable island. The provincial government has purchased the existing ferry boat and wharves at Barrington passage and North East Point, Cape Sable island. As the present ferry and docking facilities are not capable of taking care of the traffic between Cape Sable island and the mainland, a new ferry boat is being constructed. This will require further docking facilities and improved accommodation, which will be of great benefit to 3,500 people now almost isolated from communication with the mainland.

Mr. RALSTON: I wish to thank the minister for the assistance which is being given in connection with improved facilities for communication with Cape Sable island. Does this indicate a general policy with regard to assisting highway or transportation projects of the provincial government?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, I do not think there is any established policy in connection with that.

Mr. RALSTON: This is for the construction of docking facilities for a ferry under the provincial government, and I am only asking the minister to go a little further. I want to refer him to a matter that has been up for some time in connection with that locality. Cape Sable island, as the minister probably knows, is the southernmost point in Nova Scotia. It has on it the town of Clarke's Harbour, a very thriving, progressive town where a great deal of business is done. The minister has on the records of the department some figures with regard to the business carried on there, particularly in Clarke's Harbour, but that is contributed to by people throughout Cape Sable island. Let me give him one or two figures. These are from a statement made by the board of trade of Clarke's Harbour in 1927, representations having been made to the Department of Public Works. In that year 10,845,000 pounds of lobster were landed, at a value of $325,000. In the cod-fishing season the production was 3,300,000 pounds at a value of $165,000. There are two machine shops, boat-building establishments, and five factories engaged in the canning of lobsters. The population in 1921 was 3,000. The island is separated from the mainland by Barrington passage, and the people who live on the island have to travel nine miles from the ferry to get to Clarke's Harbour. In the winter time they have repeatedly had the service cut off by ice. Their location on Cape Sable island gives them a stragetic position to carry on business, which is a great contribution to the fishing industry, particularly in the western end of the province. I ask the minister not only to give consideration to but to study this matter with a view to making a favourable decision along the line of what he is doing now, namely, to provide better communication with Cape Sable Island. Three years ago resolutions and petitions came in from the residents of that island, including the town of Clarke's Harbour, and the board of trade, pointing out that on account of the ice conditions in the winter communication was frequently cut off, and asking that ice piers be erected in the channel. Those representations were considered and a vote was included in the estimates. Plans were prepared for the construction of five piers altogether; two have been constructed, one entirely and the other practically completed, although as a matter of fact it does not quite show above high water. I ask the minister to complete that pier and to give earnest and serious study to the completion of the other three piers. This would facilitate winter communication and, as I made clear in a letter to the minister not long ago, it would permit the proper authorities, which would be the provincial government, to place steel upon these piers for the construction of a bridge. That project has been in the minds of the people of Clarke's Harbour and Cape Sable island for some time. The piers were designed so that that might be done. It has been done already in other places. I have in mind Wallace Harbour and Granville Ferry as two places in which the ice piers were used for the purpose of supporting the superstructure of a bridge. I urge that consideration be given to this matter as being necessary from the point of view of the needs of the people for communication and its benefit to the fishing industry in that part of the country. This project should be supported by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) who knows the importance of the fisheries of Cape Sable island and vicinity.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend's representations and suggestions in connection with this matter will be very carefully considered, and I will give instructions to our engineers to make a study of this matter.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Bennett, the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Monday, May 4, 1931.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY MONOPOLY

Mr. LAVERGNE:

1. Is the government aware that the Bell Telephone Company has an exclusive monopoly in eastern Canada?
2. Is the government aware that said company exacts excessive rates?
3. What remedy, if any, does the government propose, in order to relieve the ratepayers?

Mr. BENNETT: In regard to that question may I say that the officers of the department affected find some difficulty in making an answer which would be entirely responsive to the question. The truth however is that the answer to the first question will be no. With respect to the second question, in view of the fact that the determination as to what constitutes reasonable rates is in the hands of a court set up by this parliament, the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, the same answer might reasonably be given. With respect to the third question, concerning the right to take proceedings for the purpose of dealing with the question of rates, I might say the question is in the hands of those affected. The government can say only that this parliament set up the body to which I have referred so that matters of this nature may be taken out of the hands of parliament. Possibly that is all I should say in making an intelligent answer.

Mr. SPEAKER: No. 1, answered.

Mr. POWER: May I ask, for the future information of the house, if that is a proper question?

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is withdrawn, obviating the necessity for a ruling.

*CREDIT ORGANIZATION TO ASSIST AGRICULTURE

2. If so, what amount of money is available for this fund?

3. By whom is the money advanced for this fund?

5. If not, why?

6. What amount is to be given to each applicant?

7. How is the fund to be handled and what constitutes a legitimate applicant?

8. Is the fund in operation at the present time?

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps this question had better be answered verbally. I have the knowledge that other members have as to the establishment of a credit organization; and that a charter has been obtained under the provisions of the Companies Act for the purpose of enabling the company to function. It might also be said that legislation was introduced into the Ontario legislature to enable certain loan companies incorporated under the laws of this province to subscribe to the capital stock of the enterprise, which under their charters they could not have done; and that similar enabling legislation with respect to companies of that character having a federal charter will be introduced in this house so that they also may become shareholders in the enterprise. Further information will be available when the matter has developed to the stage that these companies are in a position to exercise their new powers and become shareholders in the credit organization. If the hon. gentleman, during the progress of the estimates, requires additional information in the light of further knowledge, it will be furnished to him.

Mr. MacLEAN: That is quite satisfactory.

BEAUHARNOIS LIGHT, HEAT AND POWER COMPANY

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Has the government received any notice to the effect that the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company has applied to the government of the province of Quebec for permission and has been granted the right to divert an additional 30,000 cubic feet of water per second through the Beauharnois canal?

2. Do the plans already filed by the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company and approved by the government, enable the company to divert the above mentioned 30,000 cubic feet of water per second through its canal?

3. If it is necessary for the government to approve of the plans of the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company to allow them to divert this additional 30,000 cubic feet of water per second, is it the intention of the government to approve of such plans without giving the house an opportunity of considering the said application?

Mr. BENNETT: The first paragraph of this question involves some consideration of provincial rights. The government has been advised that an application was made to the provincial government of Quebec and that it had been granted; that is as far as it goes. As to the second paragraph, I assume the hon. gentleman means: Do the plans already approved by the government enable the company to divert the water, because the plans filed are open to many interpretations? The plans approved with respect to the matter only contemplate the diversion of the quantity of the water that the company then had the right to divert. The third paragraph, as I understand it, is as to the necessity of securing approval of the government for a further diversion of water.

Mr. GARDINER: In that part of my question I ask the government if, before approval is given, the House of Commons will be afforded an opportunity of discusssing the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: As to the last part of the hon. gentleman's question, with all deference, Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to see how it is a question of fact that can be determined. The law does not impose any duty on the House of Commons with respect to the matter, but it might depend on what transpired in the course of the application. An expression of intention is impossible for the government to give now, and I do not think that in regard to policy it is required to give any response to a question of this character.

BEAUHARNOIS LIGHT, HEAT AND POWER COMPANY—DEPARTMENTAL INVESTIGATION

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Has the right honourable, the Prime Minister, received the departmental report of the investigation regarding Beauharnois which he mentioned at the special session as having been undertaken by him?
2. If such a report has been received, will he table it?
3. Have plans for remedial works of the Beauharnois development been filed and approved by the government?
4. Are the plans under which the Beauharnois development is now being proceeded with the same plans which were approved by order in council, P.C. 422, dated May 8, 1929?
5. If the present plans are not the same as above approved, have they been approved, and if so, how and when?
6. If any change has been made in these plans, what are the changes and why were such changes made?

Mr. BENNETT: As to question No. 11, I say to the chamber that I am in some doubt as to how far a minister should go in answering a question of this kind. A confidential report was asked for from the engineers of the department, and that report was furnished.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is that the second application?

Mr. BENNETT: No, during the progress of the work last summer. Frankly, I do not think it is in the public interest to submit that report to the house at the moment, because it was intended for the guidance of the minister, and would certainly be privileged in a court if it were furnished to the executive of a corporation for the purpose of enabling him to determine his action. I say to my hon. friend that there is no reason why I should not give him in a general way such information as is possible, but confidential information furnished to the head of the department for the purpose of enabling him intelligently to discuss the matter is not, I submit, information that should be laid on the table of the house. That is my view at the moment; and I have been trying to satisfy myself more fully upon it, for I realize that under our system of government very few things are privileged. But I do regard it as not in the public interest to furnish a report that was personally asked for by myself to enable me to have fuller information on a matter with regard to which I would have to make a statement later.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the Prime Minister say the question should stand?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I did not want my hon. friend to think it was being delayed.

CANADIAN COOPERATIVE WHEAT PRODUCERS LIMITED—BANK LOANS

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri):

1. Is the government aware that the Canadian banks have advanced, in loans or guarantees, the sum of $68,000,000 to the Canadian Co-Operative Wheat Producers, Limited?
2. Has the government, to date, guaranteed the banks interested in these loans in favour of wheat pools, for said amount of $68,000,000, totally or partially?
3. If partially, up to what amount?

Mr. BENNETT: I ask that question 9 stand, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend from St. Henri (Mr. Mercier) is not in his seat. As his question is framed, the answer if it were categorical would have to be "no" to part of it and "yes" to part of it. I was going to suggest to him that the form of the question might be modified so the information could be supplied.

CANADIAN OIL REFINERIES—EMPLOYEES

Mr. HEENAN:

1. Has the number of employees of Canadian oil refineries been increased or decreased since last September?
2. If so, at what points?

Mr. BENNETT: This is a question which the government is not in a position to answer without making inquiries. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is not a proper question. A member might put on the order paper a question: What is the distance from here to Mars? As to this, the same sources of information are open to him as to the government. Similarly, it would hardly be expected that the government should inquire as to the number of people employed in any particular business. In one of the departments information furnished in reply to questionnaires is regarded as confidential as it might be taken advantage of by competitors; but an analysis of the information itself has been given to the house and the country. If the hon. gentleman desires us to send out a questionnaire, we will do it for the purpose of answering the question as near as possible.

Mr. HEENAN: Stands.

SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC RESEARCH

MOTION BY MR. SPEAKMAN PROPOSING ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL COUNCIL TO STUDY SUBJECT

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer) moved:

Whereas; the problem of production has been largely solved, assisted greatly by the application of scientific methods and the results of organized technical research; and

Whereas; the federal government has contributed to that end by the establishment of the National Council of Scientific Research, and by the financial assistance given to that body; and

Whereas; the problem of distribution, with the kindred questions of purchasing power and the exchange values of agricultural and other commodities, together with their relation to the growing problem of unemployment, are still unsolved, and demand immediate attention with systematized investigation and scientific study; and

Whereas; this can best be done at the instance of the state and by men of scientific training enabled to devote their entire time and energy to the study of this important subject;

Therefore be it resolved; that, in the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to the establishment and maintenance of some organized body for this purpose which body might be known as the National Council of Social and Economic Research.

He said: The motion which I am presenting to the house this afternoon, and which is largely self-explanatory in its preamble and general wording, is one which I believe to be most timely and important. It is one which follows in logical sequence upon the motion presented by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) some few days ago and discussed at some length on last private members' day. The motion presented by that hon. gentleman dealt with certain suggestions for the palliation of unemployment, while the motion which I am submitting this afternoon suggests a means by which we may arrive at a better understanding of those conditions by which unemployment is brought about.

The subject of the motion itself has been touched upon in previous debates and by many speakers, and it is one which is so widespread in its implications, so far-reaching in its possible consequences, so essential in its ultimate objective, as to demand on the part of every member of this house his most careful thought and his most intelligent consideration. In the preamble itself some very definite and rather sweeping statements are made, as, for example, where the statement appears that:

The problem of production has been largely solved.

That statement, I think, may be substantiated; it is a mere statement of fact. For over one hundred years now, ever since what has been termed the industrial revolution, the minds of our greatest thinkers, the profound research of our illustrious scientists, the invention and genius of our most skilful engineers, have been devoted largely to one end—the service of production. To that end many things have been done, many sacrifices have been made. Hardy adventurers have explored the far places of the globe in order to discover new sources of supply for the raw materials required by our manufacturers. Our miners have tunnelled the bowels of the earth in order to disclose and utilize earth's hidden riches, in the service of production. And to improve its methods the lights in our laboratories have burned day and night. The roaring din of our great factories shakes the earth, and the smoke from our tall chimneys pollutes the air. Governments, corporations and individuals have expended millions in an endeavour to glean from nature her secrets and to harness nature's forces in the service of man. And in the main these efforts of man have been successful. So that man to-day has triumphed in that age-old struggle, the struggle for existence, the struggle to glean from nature her great secrets and to wrest from her those things in and upon the earth, that are necessary for the maintenance of natural life and for the carrying-on of advancing civilization. While this is true in the case of industry, it is true also in the case of agriculture. During that century which has elapsed since the application of steam as a motive power to production, a new era has been inaugurated in the manufacturing world. We have mechanized many, if not most, of the processes hitherto carried on by hand labour. We have placed production on a world basis and, incidentally, we have met with certain difficulties in the way of the adjustment of employment in relation to wages and hours of labour. It is only of later years that the mechanization of agriculture itself has been accomplished. Agricultural production has never been controlled, nor can it be controlled, with the same mathematical certainty as can that of other industries; it must always be subject, I assume, to certain climatic conditions. But, Mr. Speaker, while it is not controllable to the same degree, the uncertainty of control has manifested itself rather in periodic overproduction of certain commodities than it has in any definite shortage of supply. And where a shortage of supply has occurred temporarily, it has been brought about more largely by uncertainty of a profitable market than by any difficulty in production itself. I think, therefore, that it can be said without exaggeration that to-day we may produce everything that is necessary for the material needs of all mankind, and that we can produce it in sufficient quantities to satisfy the requirements of all our people.

When we turn to the fields of transportation and communication, which are intimately connected, we find that the same progress has been made. We have covered the earth and conquered the sea and the air with a network of transportation lines by which we are enabled to carry the products which we have brought into being and place them wherever they may be required. No one who has stood and watched a great transcontinental silk train go thundering by but must have been impressed with the efficiency of that transportation system. The wheat from the prairies is carried without difficulty to every part of the occidental world, wherever a market may be found; the oil from Pennsylvania and Asia Minor, the cotton from the southern states or from Egypt, the rubber from the South American forests, wool from Australia, and thousands of other commodities find their way by means of efficient transportation systems to every part of the civilized world and take their places in what we term as our economic and industrial system. This system is daily increasing the mutual interdependence of all nations and is extending more and more towards the making of all nations into one great economic unit.

In communication we have made even greater strides, quite apart from our modern postal system which follows every line of transportation throughout the world, by earth, by water and by sea. Apart from that, which in itself is a modern miracle, we may to-day converse with ease and comfort with our neighbour one mile or a thousand miles away. This is possible by means of a slender wire, which carries the spoken word and by the use of a similar wire, used in a different manner, we may flash important messages across the continent and under the oceans. By virtue of wireless, a man may speak in one part of the world and be heard simultaneously by millions in other countries. A recent illustration was the Pope speaking in the ancient Vatican and ten million sons and daughters of the church throughout the world bowing their heads as they heard his benediction. We were able to hear the Prince of Wales as he presided over the launching of a great ship in Scotland. His words were carried throughout the empire and the splash of that great ship as it entered the Clyde was re-echoed around the world.

In other ways and in other directions, man has triumphed over the material and has been able to utilize those forces of nature in his service which have hitherto been uncontrolled. In looking upon these facts and knowing them to be true, one would almost imagine that the millennium had arrived and that nowhere in this world, and certainly nowhere in this country, could be found any want or any privation, could be found a single hungry adult or a single undernourished child. One would have thought that want and privation had been banished for all time, but what are the facts? In support of my statement, if support is needed, as to the wealth of the world and as to its accessibility, I might quote one or two sentences from no less a person than Sir George Paish, a man of outstanding merit. Speaking before the Canadian Club in Montreal on April 13, he made use of the following words:

> The natural wealth of the world is so great that it can maintain an unlimited number of people. There is no reason for poverty or distress. We should produce the fruits of the earth for the use of all mankind and take them out of their distress.

And again:

> We should use the wealth of the world for the good of all mankind. When we do this we can look forward not only to the prosperity of this great continent, not only to the prosperity of Europe, but to the prosperity of those great and heavily populated countries of the east.

What are the facts? I am not going to inflict upon the house any description of conditions as they exist. I believe that to be totally unnecessary because almost every hon. member who has addressed this house since the beginning of the session has stressed those conditions, has described them, and has outlined them in detail. While there may be some difference of opinion in this chamber as to the depth of the depression or as to the extent and the degree of the suffering which accompanies it, while some harsh expressions may have been used in respect of those who have held different opinions as to these matters, I assume that we are as one in our appreciation of the fact that things are not as we would wish them to be and in our desire that a remedy should be found and that better conditions should be established. If there is one hon. member of the house or of the government who does not appreciate the fact that things are not as they should be, then it is useless for me to address my remarks to him because it is obvious that no words of mine would serve to convince him or to remove the scales from his eyes. But I shall go upon the assumption, Mr. Speaker, that these facts are admitted, that they are deplored and that we as a body and as individual members of this house are desirous of seeing these conditions improved. The question is: How shall we best go about it?

In asking that question, I ask a question which was indicated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) some little time ago, and which was summarized in an article in the Winnipeg Tribune, as follows:

> Bennett Seeks Actual Cause of Depression
> Is Sure Riddle Can Be Solved and Advises Cheerful Attitude
> "I cannot make up my mind," he said, "why this country between the lakes and the mountains should experience the depression; why people who have lived here for years should find themselves without any accumulation of goods, sometimes without the bare necessities of life."
> Mr. Bennett said he had no fixed idea as to the answer to the questions which came to his mind but was determined to find it.

We are all anxious to find the answer to that question, and I suggest one method among others, which might be used in order to arrive at that understanding. It may be suggested that we have in this country many theorists who are advancing theories which in their opinion would if applied act as a universal cure-all or would remedy these conditions at one stroke, and thus bring about the millennium which we all seek. I have no criticism to offer as to these theorists, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I hold a number of theories myself but I do not intend to inflict them upon the house at this time. I think the position taken by these theorists would remind us of a person spoken of in Grecian legend. This man possessed some very disagreeable habits but was of a hospitable frame of mind, and his desire was that any traveller passing by his abode should stay with him for the night. He had only one bed but it was his proud boast that this bed would fit exactly any traveller, however short or however tall. This he accomplished by the simple process of chopping the head or the feet off the traveller who might happen to be too tall, or by stretching upon the rack the unfortunate who happened to be too short, and in that way all were made to fit his bed. I am afraid that that legend might be applied to some of our theorists. If their theories will not fit the facts, they are prepared to stretch the facts in order that they may fit the theories. In my opinion, and I offer it only for what it is worth, the remedy will not be found nor will a better understanding of conditions be brought about by men or women of that type of mind. I think useful suggestions could be found in many of these theories, but in my opinion this remedy will be found and this problem solved by men and women of the same types of mind as those who have solved our technical problems, men with scientific minds and possessing scientific training and men and women who are prepared to investigate all conditions, to accept all proved facts, to correlate those facts and, of equal importance, to have the courage to accept the logical conclusions of their research. I stress the necessity of courage because we find in too many cases men in public life and men in private life who will follow the truth to a certain point, but when the result of that truth comes into conflict with prejudices, preconceived opinions and ideas, they will stop right there. The truth in their mind is important, but not so important as the maintenance of their own prejudices and preconceived opinions. That frame of mind will never solve our problems.

How shall we secure the services of men of the type required, many of whom must be found throughout the Dominion and some of whom may be found in this parliament? I can only offer a suggestion without being dogmatic, but in the first place I suggest we can do this work by appointing such a council. The method of appointing that council I shall discuss later. In the second place—and this is of more importance at the moment—in the appointment of those men and in furnishing them with the opportunity of going into this matter as it should be gone into, the state should assume some responsibility. Why do I say that? As I have indicated, this parliament and government have given financial support to the problem of scientific and technical research. They have supported and maintained for that purpose a council composed of eminent men who have done excellent service. I am not decrying the work done by those men; it has been splendid. I am not criticizing the expenditure made; it is perhaps the best used money that we have ever voted, and I would be glad to see more voted for the purpose. But quite apart from the relative importance and urgency of those two kinds of research, the research along the lines of technical science and the research along the lines of social and economic reform of which I am now speaking, I think we can logically assume it is far more a function of the state to support and assist the latter form than the former. In voting the money we do for technical research, we are but supplementing the work which is being done and well done by industry itself, by organizations and individuals engaged in industry. The reason for this of course is obvious. While the result of that research is in many cases increased services and benefit to the people as a whole, the primary object, the primary result in most cases, that is as it affects industry, is increased dividends and greater wealth to men already wealthy, and naturally they assume the work as a function of their own. But when we turn to the form of research which I am suggesting, we find that the only possible beneficiary is the state itself. The people, the men and women who may benefit by the result, are those who are to-day suffering from the inequalities of our present system or lack of system. That being the case, those who will benefit, the great masses of the population, are the ones who should maintain and carry on that work. They cannot do this as individuals; it must be done as a function of the state. It is important to remember that while we sometimes speak of parliament as representing the people, and of governments as governing or acting for the people, after all parliament and government are, rightly speaking, the people themselves functioning cooperatively in that way, doing cooperatively what they cannot do as individuals. I suggest, then, that the people themselves, who will be the beneficiaries, should be the people who, functioning as a state, should carry on and finance this work.

Going one step further, and assuming that the work is necessary and that the state should do it, what methods should they adopt and what should be their objective? If I have time I intend to deal a little later on with one or two specific objectives; but at the moment may I say this; so far as I can gather and so far as the facts themselves would show, almost every industry to-day, including transportation, is functioning most efficiently as a unit. Each separate unit, wherever you find it, is functioning efficiently and doing its work well. But what we lack to-day and what we have lacked ever since this system came into force has been some method of coordinating the work of those different units. We have never been able to bring about cooperation, coordination, between the different units which function so effectively within this nation in order that as a whole the nation itself may be best served. That in a word would be the chief objective of such a council as I suggest.

When we come to the form of council, again I do not propose to be dogmatic in the matter, but I have some opinions of my own and those have been supplemented by many suggestions that I have received from this country and others. One of the most encouraging features of the situation and one that gives me greater heart in bringing up this topic to-day is the number of messages of approval and support that I have received, messages bringing with them information and suggested ideas, sometimes from the most unexpected sources, not only in this country and the republic to the south, but in one or two countries over the seas. From these suggestions added to my opinions, I can bring forward one or two ideas in the matter. It has been suggested—and this is my own thought—we might have such a national council composed of individuals nominated from each of the great classes which form our Dominion. We could have a man representing agriculture. I am using the word "man" as including woman in the sense of the expression "man embraces woman". We could have another man representing labour, another representing the manufacturers' association, another, the transportation system, another, the bankers' association, all of those different organizations which together function as modern society. That council could then control and direct the work, point out the direction along which investigation should be carried, suggest the ideas and the general policy. They might employ a small number—a large number would not be necessary—of trained workers to carry on the actual work, and they might utilize to as great a degree as possible that splendid and efficient organization which we now have under the direction of Mr. Coats, the Dominion statistician. We would find there and we shall find too, padlocked, pigeon-holed, segregated all over the country, an enormous mass of information vital to our point, information which has never been used, which has never been correlated, and, because of that, which has never been of any great value to the country. Such a council, functioning as I suggest, might by the use of a few trained workers, by the utilization of existing bureaus such as the Bureau of Statistics, not only amass a great deal of useful information, but correlate it, find out exactly what relation each function bears to another, and come to some definite conclusions.

It has been suggested that such a council itself might do that work, and that might be done. As I say again, I am not dogmatic. Something along that line, although it conflicts in no way with my former suggestion, was brought forward recently by that very useful body in conference, the Canadian Council on Child and Family Welfare, representative of all social organizations in Canada, a conference perhaps as closely in touch with our social problems as any other in this country and as well fitted to make suggestions as any I can find. They urge upon the government to appoint some permanent national committee which would make investigation of all these things, which, to use their own words, would function—> —with the purpose of pooling the best knowledge of governments, industrial, agricultural, and financial interests, social and health agencies, in evolving a more stabilized system of production and distribution and of supply and demand.

I am glad to be supported in my contention by a body of that character. The council could work in that way. It has been suggested too that the functions and powers of the present National Research Council might be enlarged and strengthened to enable that body to deal with the work. While, of course, I would accept any step as being preferable to inertia, at the same time there are some serious objections to the latter suggestion. While not for a moment decrying the good work done by the National Research Council; while appreciating the value of that work and the character of the men composing the council, I suggest that human nature has not greatly changed since biblical times when it was said that no man can serve two masters but will hold to the one and despise the other. I am afraid that such a body, accustomed for years by custom, training and habits to follow along the lines of research, would subordinate the one to the other, and in this case I am afraid the newer interest would be the one subordinated.

Again may I say however, that I am not dogmatic. I hope some step will be taken with a view to amassing information that will lead to some definite conclusion. I have been asked "What could this body do? What line of investigation could it follow?" There again not only do I wish to refrain from dogmatism but I realize that in offering substantial suggestions one is in greater danger of narrowing than of widening the scope of investigation. Too often when specific suggestions are made they alone are followed. I might suggest, however, tentatively, some items from the long list of suggestions I have received. Among the number are the following:

Comparative production costs in respect of industry and agriculture.

Sources and extent of credit. Interest rates cost and extent of floating and bonded indebtedness, and its effect upon agriculture and industry in general.

Purchasing power, sources and distribution.

Displacement of man power by machinery in the various industries, including agriculture.

Extent of spread as between producer and consumer. How brought about. Advertising, including salesmanship, duplication of service. Transportation in its various stages.

Fluctuation in price levels both actual and relative.

Relative importance of, and returns made to capital, management, labour, in industry.

Stabilization and control of production, and relation of these to cyclical periods of depression.

Hours of labour and wages paid, in relation to production and purchasing power.

Concentration of financial control and production, chain store developments, retail credit and instalment buying, and their relation to prices and to cost of distribution.

Further than that there is a necessity for the securing of authentic information regarding such great world experiments as that being carried on in Russia to-day. Perhaps that is the greatest experiment in centralized control we have yet seen, and in some respects it follows in logical sequence the policy of centralization to which effect is being given in all countries. We cannot ignore what is taking place in Russia. To close our eyes to the developments in other lands, whether we like the morals of other peoples or not, is to blind ourselves to facts and to paralyze ourselves in respect to future action.

As my time is rapidly passing I wish for a moment or two to deal with some of the chief objections and difficulties which have suggested themselves to me and have been brought to my attention. First it has been suggested, with a good deal of propriety, that most of our difficulties are a reflex of world conditions and that therefore being international in scope they cannot be dealt with by any one national body. While it is obvious that world conditions have largely affected the state of affairs in Canada, it is also obvious that there is some action which may be taken here. I think it was the Prime Minister who said during the election campaign, or at some other time—I am not particular when—that irrespective of world conditions there was no reason why Canada to-day, with her sparse population and her enormous wealth in natural resources, should be suffering to any great extent. I agree with him. The extent of our possibilities can be ascertained only by some method such as I have suggested. Moreover, if international action is to be taken it must be based finally upon a knowledge of conditions as they exist within each country. I think the true conditions in our country could be ascertained by a body such as I have suggested. In order effectively to carry on the international co-operation which is desirable we must have some machinery for that purpose and some body to represent Canada in an international body. Again I point to the fact that some such suggestion as I have made is necessary for a solution of our economic problem.

The next question is one which I approach with some hesitation, but it has been brought to my attention by so many people that it cannot be ignored. Suggestion has been made that politics would intervene and destroy any action which might be taken. To keep politics of some kind out of action based upon such a suggestion would obviously be difficult. While the result of technical research may be put into effect by industry, by corporations and by individuals motivated only by business considerations and prepared to accept improvements in methods no matter how they may conflict with prejudices or present habits, and anxious to use only those methods which have proved to be effective and from which the greatest profits may be derived, it is obvious that work along the lines of social and economic research may involve state action. To suggest that politics would prove to be an insuperable obstacle and must of necessity nullify, blight and destroy every beneficial objective which is had in view would be a tremendous indictment of our political system. I am prepared to accept that suggestion. I have not had much experience in public life, but at least I have been in it for ten years. While in that ten years I have learned enough about the party system to dislike it even more than I did, at the same time I have come to appreciate the fact that the overwhelming majority of the individual members composing every party are just as honest and sincere in their desire to do the right thing for this country as I myself could possibly be or any other person in any part of Canada. That being so, I cannot for one moment believe that men of that type would permit politics, in the worst sense of the term, to stand in the way of the progress of this country or the solution of its problems. I appreciate of course that if a beneficial policy were outlined by such a body as I have suggested, some political party might try to grab it. Particularly would they do so if the party happened to be in opposition at the time. Of course that possibility might apply to any party because I do not know which one would be in opposition at such a time. The policy I have outlined might be used as a plank in a political platform and as an election issue. To allow our fears of such political action to stand in the way of an attempt to effect progress would be a far more serious indictment of our political system than any language uttered by myself or any of my colleagues could possibly convey. Such action would be the most damning indictment possible, and I refuse to believe that that condition would arise.

I have endeavoured briefly and superficially, realizing the limitation of time at my disposal, to show this house that in material things and in matters of production we have worked miracles. We have accomplished what at one time would have been considered the impossible. By utilizing all nature's forces, by the inventive work of our engineers and by the research of our scientists we have conquered industrial conditions to such an extent that we can produce everything the world requires in sufficiently large quantities to satisfy the needs of every one. We can place these commodities where they are required with speed and efficiency. What is left? I think of the words of Tennyson:

Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers.

I suggest we should adopt some means of acquiring sufficient wisdom to use the knowledge we already have so that we may relieve the existing conditions and thereby make the world better. Wisdom has lingered; we hope it will not linger again.

I have tried to indicate the logical responsibility of the state to undertake the work I have outlined. It should function for and act for the good of all the people. I have indicated some lines upon which that action might be taken and suggested some inquiries which might be made. In doing that I have done all within my power at this time; I can simply leave the matter to the good judgment of the house. I have tried to present the matter as impartially and as thoroughly as possible. I feel sure that hon. members will weigh these matters in the balance of their own judgment, if they come to the conclusion that something may be done along the lines I have suggested to bring about the condition of affairs which should exist in this country and which we are all anxious to see, I shall expect their support. I leave the matter at this time in the hope that out of our united wisdom, and the sincerity by which from the bottom of my heart I believe we are all actuated, we will evolve some means of utilizing the knowledge thus obtained for the good of all mankind and in justification of our existence as a parliament.

[Mr. Speakman.]

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this resolution simply broadens out a suggestion made some months ago to the government by the joint legislative committee of the Railway Transportation Brotherhoods. They were dealing particularly with the question of unemployment, but suggested that this question inevitably involved larger economic issues, and that these could be settled only by the application of scientific knowledge. They proposed that there should be a scientific analysis of the human factor in industry, and pointed out that by the employment of industrial technicians and otherwise efficiency had been increased, as my hon. friend has just pointed out—that in many industrial concerns, waste had been reduced and production greatly augmented. The regularization of employment, however, the human factor in industry, appeared to be a problem transcending the individual industry and rests upon industry as a whole. It seems to me that we are justified in urging the appointment of this commission, especially in view of what has transpired within the last few weeks. The members in this corner suggested that we should have a parliamentary committee to investigate the entire economic situation; the government could not see its way clear to adopt that suggestion; and now we fall back upon an even more important suggestion, one which we decided upon some months ago —that the time had come when a commission, entirely independent of parliament, should be appointed to investigate the entire economic situation as it exists to-day.

It does seem to me, in view of the world crisis with which we find ourselves faced, that we should exercise our brains more than we are doing. A great many people are apprehensive as to what the future may bring forth. Some are afraid that there may come an entire change in our whole economic system; some would welcome that change; some are afraid that a great change might involve economic chaos with great suffering, such as has taken place in other countries. It does seem to me that in face of such a situation as this we ought not simply to be content to go along in our accustomed way, but rather that we should mobilize the very best brain power we have in this country and set our best men free to consider the question. It was only the other day that I submitted this proposal of the member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) to a group of business men in Montreal, and I was rather interested to observe their reactions. Most of them were heartily in favour of something of this kind. They went so far as to urge, as the member for Red Deer has suggested in his speech, that it might be well to have such a commission composed of representatives nominated by the great organizations that exist to-day, such as the Manufacturers' Association, the grain growers and so on; that in this way we would get the very best brains interested, the men who were in close contact with actual conditions; and, further, that by this method a certain measure of responsibility would be placed upon these men to think not in terms merely of their own individual interest, but in terms of the country at large; and still further, that the recommendations of a group so constituted would be of very great value to the government—indeed that no government would very well disregard the recommendations of a commission so constituted.

I find we are not suggesting something that is quite new. Outside the Soviet union, at least seven countries have something of this kind in operation, some organization that is attempting to direct the nation's industry, or its economic activities, on a nationwide scale —France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Spain, Czechoslovakia and Japan. In France there is a national economic council which dates from January, 1925. The French method is that of arranging the nation into three groups —consumers, labour and capital. The delegates to the council are selected from the most representative organizations in each of these three groups, such as the national federation of production, the chamber of commerce, the general confederation of labour and so on. The total number of delegates in the council is forty-seven. The representative organizations are designated by the Minister of Labour, but the nominations for places on the council are made by the organizations themselves. The French economic council meets four times a year and each session lasts ten days. Between these plenary meetings the business of the council is carried on by a standing committee of ten and by its permanent secretariat. The council also has a number of experts who are associated with its work on a permanent basis. The French economic council is essentially an advisory body to the Prime Minister. In its advisory capacity it deals primarily with economic measures which are under consideration by the legislature. Any bill introduced into the Chamber of Deputies which bears on an economic question must be transmitted to the council for examination. The council then submits its opinion to the Prime Minister, who has to make this opinion public. Further, it carries on special duties of a general and technical nature for the purpose of bringing to view the permanent interests of French national economy. Its main work, however, has been the making of a survey of French economic life and the mapping of a plan for the overhauling of the national economic equipment.

Now, let me turn for a moment to Germany and summarize the arrangement that exists there. The German economic council is also based upon the idea of the representation of all economic and social groups. It resembles more an economic parliament than an advisory body. Thus the German economic council is not attached to any branch or department of the government. The committees meet periodically, have permanent staffs for carrying on their work, and call on experts or representatives of different interests when necessary. The council has not considered large general schemes, but has helped in the solution of emergency problems which have followed one another in Germany since 1920.

Without going further into these experiments which have been conducted by other nations. I will call the attention of the house to a very interesting article published in the New Republic of Wednesday, April 29 of this year, entitled A. Federal Economic Council, by Lewis L. Lorwin. Mr. Lorwin pleads that in the United States there should be a federal economic council which would enable the American people to visualize their economic life as one vast enterprise. So much is this idea of centralized planning in the air that I find a conference is being called by the International Industrial Relations Association in Amsterdam in August of this year. I think I might read a paragraph from the announcement of this congress, which urges the need for scientific adjustment of economic resources, production and consumption as essential to satisfactory human relations and conditions in industry. The statement proceeds:

> There is an ever growing realization of the fact that industrial relations are profoundly disturbed because neither labour nor capital can fully function in a world of unadjusted resources, production and consumption. Unemployment to-day is wide-spread through the world. Markets are restricted by lack of purchasing power. Productive capacity has been enhanced at an increasingly rapid rate by mechanization and the advance of technological invention. In a world of enlarged economic resources, groups in industry, whether conceived as employer—employee, labour—capital, producers—consumers, are prevented from functioning normally, that is, human relations in industry are not satisfactory. All groups concerned in economic life are therefore compelled to ask:

Can the methods of science be utilized to achieve balance between resources, production and consumption? Can science be substituted for casualism in the development of economic policy? How can sufficient information be placed at the disposal of those who must form economic policy in individual companies, in industries and in nations, so that they may know all the factors in the problem of adjusting resources, production and consumption?

I do not know that one could better put the problem than it has been put in this announcement. Now I should like to speak for a few minutes with regard to the country to which the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) has already referred, the one country in which central planning has been carried out on a large scale. I refer of course to Russia. There is such a wealth of literature on this subject that I hesitate even to attempt to summarize the experiments which have been carried on. In order to show that I am speaking with some authority, however, I might give a list of some of the leading treatises on Russia which recently have been issued. The New York Times book review of February 1 gives these books: The Economic Life of Soviet Russia, by Calvin B. Hoover; The Russian Experiment, by Arthur Feiler; The Challenge of Russia, by Sherwood Eddy; The Red Trade Menace, by H. R. Knickerbocker; Russia's Productive System, by Emile Burns; The Five-Year Plan of the Soviet Union, by G. T. Grinko; These Russians, by William C. White.

There are other books of outstanding importance; among them are Humanity Uprooted, by Maurice Hindus; Russian Economic Development, by Maurice Dobb; The Economic Policy of Soviet Russia, by Paul Haensel; The Soviet Challenge to America, by George Counts; The Soviet Union Looks Ahead; Soviet Russia, by W. H. Chamberlin; The Soviets in World Affairs, by Louis Fischer; Seeing Red, by N. Farson.

I may say these books are in our parliamentary library and can be obtained readily by any hon. member. Just on the point we are discussing to-day I should like to quote a paragraph which I find in the report of the Institute of Politics issued in connection with its meeting last year at Williamstown, Massachusetts. This report contains an article by Harold Kellock on the Soviet five-year plan, and in the article Mr. Kellock says:

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

The object of state planning in the Soviet union is the achievement of a highly coordinated, highly balanced economy, with the incidental elimination of waste in the form of overproduction, duplication, etc. By this, I mean that the economic specialists of the state planning commission (Gosplan) attempt to assess for the coming year or for several years, economic and social needs, likewise to assess the national resources—actual and potential—to meet these needs—resources in investment capital, in working capital, in machinery, in man-power, in skilled labour and engineers, in transport motive power and national resources, in education and to strike a balance between the needs and the resources, stressing the development in lines where it is most needed.

In the deliberations of the state planning commission leading industrialists, engineers, labour representatives, responsible leaders in finance and banking, educators, trade executives and public executives make their contributions. The general layout of the country, with federal concentration of banking, transport and communications, with trade largely conducted under a federal chain-store system of cooperatives, and with industry coordinated in state trusts under a supreme economic council which acts as a sort of economic general staff, lends itself to this effort in planning.

It is not, it seems to me, a question of whether or not we like what is going on in Russia. The point is this: Russia to-day is conducting what is undoubtedly the greatest experiment that has been carried on in the history of mankind, an experiment in planned production and distribution. We may or may not want to follow Russia, but that is not the point; the point is that to a certain extent at least their experiment is a success. From the material standpoint there is not the slightest doubt that a very large measure of success already has attended their efforts. So if they are successful; if they are managing to do what the rest of the world is failing to do, undoubtedly it would be well for us to study their methods. Further, if they are successful in a competitive world they will force us to study their methods, as to-day we are being almost compelled to recognize the success which has attended them. I take it that after all the embargo which this country has placed upon certain products of Russia is an acknowledgment that Russian methods have been successful up to that point.

I should like to read just a few sentences from Mr. Sherwood Eddy's book. I quote from his book not that it is quite so authoritative on technical matters as some of the other books I have mentioned, but rather because Mr. Eddy is well known in America. For many years he was an international secretary of the Y.M.C.A., and he has been rather a severe critic of the social side of Russian life. His words, therefore, may carry a little more weight than the words of others who might be thought more sympathetic. He says:

Russia is the only country which has the distinction of bringing its whole economy—industry, agriculture, and trade; production, consumption and distribution, under the purview of a single economic general staff. It is called the Gosplan, or state planning commission. This is neither an executive nor an administrative body, but furnishes the general strategy and plan for Russia's whole economic life. It somewhat resembles the allied general staff, or President Wilson's war industries board. There are some five hundred experts on the central staff, headed by a governing board of sixteen.

He goes on to tell something of the achievements of this plan:

Thus far the yearly goal of the plan (Gosplan) has not only been equalled but exceeded in most branches of industry, so that some of the goals set for 1933 had been surpassed by October, 1930. . . . Of some ten thousand engineers, technicians and skilled workers from foreign lands now working in Russia, nearly a thousand are from America, with a larger number from Germany.

Speaking of aviation he says:

Already Russia has twenty air lines covering sixteen thousand miles and annually carrying 11,476 passengers.

Speaking of coal he says:

The pre-war output of coal has already been doubled. Oil, electrification and agricultural engineering have more than fulfilled the requirements of the original plan and of the revised figures.

Again, he says:

A new chemical industry is being created.

Again:

Even this is being increased, so that at the close of the five-year period there will probably have been an expenditure of some $50,000,000,000. This means the staggering undertaking of setting aside half the national income for five years.

Or again:

Unemployment was reduced from 1,714,000 in 1929 and 1,080,000 early in 1930 until there was no registered unemployment at the end of 1930 but a real scarcity of labour in building, industry and agriculture. . . . The average working day will be 6·86 hours, or 3·03 hours shorter than in 1913.

Again:

Real wages are already 16 per cent above those of 1913, with additional benefits and social services amounting to 27·3 per cent of the total payroll, in reduced rents and prices, free vacations, medical service, etc.

Vacations on full pay ranged from twelve days to one month. Other compensation, insurance, social service, rent, heat, light and food at reduced prices amount to 37 per cent added to the workers' wages. Every man works four days out of five and has seventy rest days a year.

Social insurance legislation is more beneficial to the workers in Russia in many respects than in any other country. Already more than nine-tenths of the wage workers are insured . . . . the workers are not asked to contribute anything.

And so on. I have given these figures and these statements simply to call attention to the remarkable achievements that has come largely because of this central planning which is being carried out by the Soviet government

I recognize that there is a vast difference between a central or economic planning commission such as might be established here in Canada, under the existing capitalist system, and that which exists in Russia under an acknowledged socialist system, or what is an approach to such. I know the two are very different. But we are told again and again that we do not want in this country anything of the terrible upset which they have had in Russia—that in this country we ought to bring about our reforms by means of a gradual change. We are told that in this country we ought to adopt evolutionary rather than revolutionary methods. I am quite willing to admit that it is highly desirable that we should avoid the terrible hardships through which Russia has passed. But I urge that unless we begin making changes, then undoubtedly we shall have such a catastrophe. I think we have reached that point. As a rather prominent editor of the west said the other day, when it was being urged that we should have very gradual and evolutionary changes, "you don't bring on an explosion gradually." There is a good deal in that. An explosion comes suddenly, and an explosion comes because there are pent-up forces that can no longer be retained. These great revolutions that have come in the history of the world have come because governments have been too slow in making necessary adjustments.

I am supporting this motion to-day with the thought that we ought to give every possible opportunity to those who would bring about the necessary changes in an orderly fashion. Whether it is possible that the government will accede, I do not know; whether it is possible that the general public will be willing to make the necessary sacrifices, I do not know. But those of us who would like to have a peaceful transition to a new social order are under obligation to do our best to bring about that change by peaceful methods, and this is one method which I venture to advocate.

Although a great many people in this country seem to regard our present economic system as being the norm, and one that is bound to endure, I would point out that it is after all very recent in the history of the world. It is only a hundred and fifty years ago since there occurred what the historians call the industrial revolution; men gave up working with their own hands and their simple tools and flocked into the newly-established factories. That change, I submit, has meant an entire alteration in our whole manner of living; and it is only after a hundred years or more that we are beginning to feel the full effect of the change in our mode of production. For a long time it was considered by a great many of the leading economists, such as Adam Smith, John Stuart Mill, and others of their school, that this system was one which was going to bring about the millenium. The idea was this: just let us have individual competition and by some means or other all will be well. In fact, the teachings underlying that school became the basis of the platforms and policies of the great Liberal party in England. We were told that the best results could be obtained by laissez faire, so far as government was concerned. Let each individual go his own way, and, in the keen competition that would result, the weaker industry would go down, the stronger would prevail, and out of all the chaos there would come the best results for the world at large. Well, there has been in the past an enormous amount of waste through this method; there has been an enormous amount of inefficiency. But most of us have been willing to wait; we have said, "Ultimately good will result." I fancy, however, that we have almost reached the stage where the world cannot afford to wait very much longer. This system of unregulated competition is breaking down before our very eyes. Not only in our own country, but in almost every other country in the world we have vast armies of unemployed men and women almost on the verge of starvation, while at the same time the nations are rolling in wealth. Under these circumstances, does anyone say that the system is not breaking down? When we have one country competing with another in such a fashion that it would seem as if only a great war could be again looked forward to as a means of solving international difficulties, can we say that the system is not breaking down? In almost every country to-day men are wondering what is going to happen. They are beginning to realize that the system can no longer continue, even though it worked for a time. And here I want to give credit to the capitalist system, it did work for a time. There is not the slighest doubt that, because of the concentration of power in the hands of a few, those who controlled factories and finance were placed in a position of tremendous influence. For a time it seemed as if the problems of production were going to be solved. And I think that to a large extent the problems of production have been solved. But there have arisen in more recent years other problems—the problems of distribution—and these are not solved. And it is in order that we may have an opportunity of solving problems of this kind that we would urge the setting up of some sort of economic commission.

The government is a conservative government; it is not committed to the idea of unregulated competition. The government, historically, belongs to that great party which has all along claimed that the state was supreme in matters of this kind. I cannot see why they would not be the first to admit the principle underlying the resolution and recognize that the state should come to the rescue and organize individual industries into a system. The trouble in the past has been, especially on this North American continent, that we have followed the ideal that the government should have very little to do with business, that business should go on in its own way except at such times as it comes asking special favours of the government. I submit that the time has come when we cannot afford to allow that idea to prevail; the government must be supreme not merely in those spheres which we may term political, but in the other spheres which we term economic.

Before resuming my seat, I should like to urge that this great country, Russia, to which I referred is to-day a constant challenge to the capitalistic countries of the world. Why should we be so much afraid of the experiments which are taking place in that country. If they are good, let us watch them closely and adopt that which is good, rejecting those things which we do not want in Canada. That great country of 160,000,000 people is capable of producing goods at a rate hitherto undreamed of in the history of mankind and it would seem to be absolute folly for us to adopt the ostrich-like attitude of simply sticking our heads in the sand and refusing to see what is taking place in the world around us. An economic planning commission such as has been suggested by the mover of this resolution is in line with the development of industry the world over. Individual competition is giving place to competition of groups. We have to-day mergers, combines, trusts and international cartels, and individual competition is no longer practicable. No, we must have still further organization. The trouble to-day is that conflict is taking place between these great mergers, these great combines and these great international industries; we are faced with a warfare between the nations in the economic sphere. It is high time that we arrived at some sort of international understanding. Only thus can we solve our problems. As a preliminary step to this, we cannot do better than to have a sort of stock-taking within our own country, following that with a mobilization of all our resources to supply the needs of our people.

On motion of Mr. Stevens the house adjourned at 4.50 p.m.

Tuesday, May 5, 1931.

The house met at three o'clock.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table copies of all correspondence relating to the contract for rebuilding the railway wharf at Summerside for which several members of the opposition have asked.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES

CHANGES IN PERSONNEL

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as usual there have been some changes of names in the standing committees. Therefore I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Guthrie:

That the name of Mr. Stinson be substituted for that of Mr. Bowman on the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills;

That the name of Mr. Bury be substituted for that of Mr. Anderson (Halton) on the select standing committee on standing orders;

That the name of Mr. McLure be substituted for that of Mr. Stewart (Lethbridge) on the select standing committee on printing;

That the name of Mr. Gagnon be substituted for that of Mr. Senn on the select standing committee on public accounts;

That the name of Mr. Bowman be substituted for that of Mr. Stinson on the select standing committee on mines, forests and waters;

That the name of Mr. Turnbull be substituted for that of Mr. Bury on the select standing committee on industrial and international relations;

That the name of Mr. Esling be substituted for that of Mr. Harris on the select standing committee on debates;

Motion agreed to.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this house has substituted the name of Mr. McLure for that of Mr. Stewart (Lethbridge), to act on the part of the House of Commons as a member of the joint committee of both houses on printing.

And that the Clerk of the House do carry the said message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this house has substituted the name of Mr. Thauvette for that of Mr. Neill, to act on the part of the House of Commons as a member of the joint committee of both houses on the restaurant.

And that the Clerk of the House do carry the said message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER PROCEDURE IN TAKING DIVISIONS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before submitting the motion to the house I should like to have it definitely determined who is going to act on the committee in order that I may make the appropriate motion. I understood that the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the mover of the motion, Mr. Bourassa, and one gentleman to his right, as well as myself, were to form the committee.. I thought it might possibly be more convenient if the right hon. leader of the opposition and myself were not on that committee. I would suggest that my friend to my left, the member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley), who had to do with the rules when they were revised, and a gentleman to act for my right hon. friend, if he so desires, and the member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) who moved the subamendment, and Mr. Bourassa, and one other form the committee.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am personally concerned, I shall be only too happy to have one of the hon. members on this side act in my place on the committee, and I shall be very glad if the member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) would take that place.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I will make the motion to-morrow.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF BUDGET AND FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to embarrass my right hon. friend by pressing him unduly in regard to questions, but I believe it would facilitate the progress of work in the house if the Prime Minister would indicate approximately the time at which he hopes it may be possible to bring down the budget, and also if he would indicate what other legislation, if any, is to be brought down at the present session.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): For reasons that I fancy the right hon. gentleman can well understand, in view of the disturbed character of the session thus far, I cannot answer the last question at the moment. So far as the budget is concerned, I cannot fix a date now, but I might emulate the example of my last predecessors and say, "It will be at a not distant date." I will try in the next few days to get on the order paper probably all the legislation there is to be.

[Mr. Bennett.]

IMPORTED VEGETABLES

VALUE FOR CUSTOMS DUTY FIXED BY ORDER IN COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cahan) whether he is authorized to fix prices on imported vegetables for customs purposes by a general order in council, or whether in the case of each commodity a separate order is passed?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Acting Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think, speaking from memory, that in several cases a number of items were included in one order in council, and that in other cases special orders have been passed with regard to separate items. I can obtain the information in detail, if necessary, but an order of the house is outstanding on the motion of an hon. gentleman opposite, I think the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart), for the bringing down of all orders in council which have been passed to date.

Mr. EULER: May I ask also Mr. Speaker, whether when the order is passed the price is actually inserted in the order or whether the minister is merely given authority to fix the price, and it is left to his discretion as to what the price shall be. Further, I should like to ask whether the minister takes advice from the Department of Agriculture, we will say, with regard to the necessity for such an order, as has been done in the past?

Mr. CAHAN: Answering the last question first, I will say that, as far as my memory goes, the advice of the Minister of Agriculture has been taken in each case. As to the first question, I think the orders in council will speak for themselves when they are brought down.

DUMPING DUTY ON POTATOES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): Continuing along the same line, perhaps the acting Minister of National Revenue will permit me to ask whether the dumping duty has been rescinded as far as potatoes are concerned?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Acting Minister of National Revenue): I understand that potatoes are now imported from the United States under the general tariff.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): The countervailing duty?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): Under the subject of potatoes, may I ask the Acting Minister of National Revenue from whom the protests came as a result of which the order was cancelled? Was that done as a result of protests which were received from red-blooded potato growers in the United States or from whom did the protests come?

ROYAL GRAIN COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): May I ask the Prime Minister when we may expect the report of the Stamp commission to be tabled?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before the report is tabled it will be necessary for the proof to be read by Sir Josiah Stamp, but I am inclined to think that before that date. I may make a statement with respect to the findings which will cover perhaps half a column in Hansard. That would mean probably ten days would elapse before the report could be tabled.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

PROTESTS AGAINST CURTAILMENT OF TRAIN SERVICE BETWEEN HARDISTY AND CAMROSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. T. LUCAS (Camrose): I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Railways based on very strong protests I have received from boards of trade and other bodies along the line of the Canadian Pacific railway from Hardisty to Camrose. The protest is in regard to the action of that company in arbitrarily cutting off the Hardisty local, so-called, which has served that district for over twenty-five years. I should like to ask the minister if there is anything he can do in this matter, either through his position as Minister of Railways or through the board of railway commissioners.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The hon. gentleman himself protested to me in this regard a few days ago, and I have had as well a number of protests such as he has had. I should like to point out that the Canadian Pacific Railway, like the Canadian National Railways, is making a good many restrictions in its service for economic reasons, because of the business depression. Both railways are making these restrictions for that reason, and I am receiving protests from all over the country particularly with regard to the Canadian National Railways, but occasionally with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway, as in this case.

I may as well make this statement now: The only redress the people have is to appeal to the Board of Railway Commissioners. I have no control at all over either the Canadian National Railways or the Canadian Pacific Railway in regard to these restrictions of service. I made special inquiries of the Board of Railway Commissioners in regard to the matter, and they tell me that generally there is a notice posted by the railway company giving ten days notice as to the changes which are to be made. Then if the people wish to protest, as in the present case, if they take it up with the Board of Railway Commissioners the board immediately goes into the question and, if they think it is worth further consideration, they request the railway to hold up the change pending final determination.

They can do that at any time they choose, and if, following that investigation, they find that, in the interests of the public, the change should not be made, they can refuse to permit it.

I am sorry I cannot do anything in the matter. My hon. friend should direct the protests, as I have already directed them, to the Board of Railway Commissioners. The decision is entirely in their hands.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): May I ask whichever member of the cabinet represents the Minister of Fisheries if he would be kind enough to expedite the bringing down of a couple of returns which I asked for and which were ordered some weeks ago? The matters are simple; the information is in the department; they are non-political and non-contentious, and there is no reason why they should not be brought down.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I desire to say that no acting Minister of Fisheries has been appointed, because the minister expected that his health would permit him to be back almost every day, but his physician has told him that he must leave town for a few days for the change, and we will ask someone to act as Minister of Fisheries and deal with these matters. These matters have not been dealt with because the minister expected to be able to return almost any day.

NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): I would like to ask the Minister of Railways when we may expect the appointment of the parliamentary committee having to do with national railways and shipping.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I think that will be done in the very near future. I have been considering it; it is rather a complicated committee to appoint, but I think the appointment will be made shortly.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BEAUBIEN

On orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In the Montreal Daily Star of Saturday, May 2, an article appears attributing words to me which I never uttered. I intend to read it; it is very short:

Liberal Rebukes Others For Making Big Fuss

A. L. Beaubien (Liberal, Provencher): That doesn't make it right, Doctor Manion, but don't take such a holy attitude on your side. I think there is a whole lot of fuss being made about a teacup full of water; there is nothing to it at all. The contract is being done at what was the lowest tendered price. The government is losing nothing and the people of Canada are losing nothing. The only thing is that my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. MacLean)—I do not blame him for fighting for his friends—is a bit sore that his friend did not get it.

I never used that language. The only words I said in this connection, as appears at page 1211 of Hansard, were:

That does not make it right.

I just interjected that remark while the Minister of Railways was speaking. I am afraid the press correspondent for this journal still thinks Doctor Manion is a Liberal.

WORLD WHEAT CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the forthcoming wheat conference to be held in London on the 18th of this month, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether Canada's representatives have been appointed and, if so, whether he can give the information to the house.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Canada's representative is the High Commissioner for Canada, and he has advisers in the person of Mr. Smith, who went to Rome, and Mr. Darby, who represents the non-pool wheat trade.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): In that connection, might I ask my right hon. friend if invitations to other countries to attend this conference are being issued or have been issued by Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: The parties attending the conference at Rome determined that they would have the meeting at London on May 18. One country was not represented at Rome, and to that country an invitation was sent. That country has concluded to send a representative to London. I refer to the United States of America.

Mr. EULER: An invitation from whom?

Mr. BENNETT: The invitation was sent by this Dominion, and an invitation was also extended by the High Commissioner to the American ambassador at London, after the High Commissioner cabled the Minister of External Affairs.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TAXATION OF PROPERTY IN NORTHERN ONTARIO FOR MUNICIPAL PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): I should like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if he will not tell the house the intended policy of his department in regard to the taxation of the Canadian National railway property in northern Ontario which, as he is well aware, is the only section of the system where such taxation does not exist.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The last part of the hon. gentleman's question is not correct; it is not the only part of the system which is not so taxed. There are some parts of the system pretty much all over Canada which are in the same position. However, the matter will have to be dealt with on the estimates, because naturally, in reply to a question raised on the orders of the day, we could not state a policy.

SUPPLY—AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE AND AMENDMENT OF MR. BROWN.

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 28, consideeration of the motion of Mr. Bennett for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Brown.

Mr. L. E. PARENT (Terrebonne) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, in resuming my remarks on the motion of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), with reference to agricultural conditions throughout the country, may I point out that previous speakers have almost all laid stress on the conditions prevailing in western Canada. At the outset of my remarks, the other day, I stated that agricultural industry is an important factor in certain sections of Canada, namely Ontario and Quebec, and that it calls for the consideration of this government which seems, on the contrary, to look upon farming as a trifling matter. My statement is based on the silence of hon. members on your right, Sir, and their refusal to state to the house the policy which the government intend to follow as regards agriculture and which, we on this side of the house, are entitled to expect and know so as to carry on this debate with an adequate knowledge of the facts.

The opposition and the Canadian people, however, have in vain tried to get the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) to make that statement. We have therefore, sir, a perfect right to surmise and form an opinion based on the speeches delivered in public by certain cabinet ministers, since they have assumed office. It further give us the right and the opportunity to criticize the present government's attitude, in the hope that they will break silence and make a clear-cut statement which is anxiously awaited by the Canadian people.

In support of my contentions, I have already pointed out to this house the fact that certain hon. cabinet ministers, representing agricultural ridings, never mentioned in their speeches, a single measure bearing on the welfare of the farming community. I shall add that this aloofness towards the farming class seems to be reflected in a speech delivered by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) who represents the agricultural riding of Laval-Two Mountains. Let me quote extracts from that speech in support of my contention. The newspaper "La Presse" on march 24, 1931, reports that the hon. Postmaster, after having according to custom, highly complimented the ladies, after having commented at length on the part which women play in society, home education of youth and the sound motherly advices which make for happiness and wisdom; after dealing with certain economical questions of ours and explained his opposition to women suffrage when he was leader of the opposition in Quebec, after having narrated historical facts; after having expressed the wish of speaking of the seventeenth century, of Madame de Sévigné and Madame de Maintenon, quoted the works of Rivarol and Voltaire; the speaker broached the political situation of this country. The hon. Postmaster advised economy at home, he stated that the cost of living must be reduced so as to produce cheaper, and he then proved his trust in the Conservative government.

An evidence of trust. Already the economic benefits of the numerous measures enacted have made themselves felt, not only in the return of general confidence and the resuming of work by the unemployed, but also in the growing stability of industries.

This is shown by statistics. Out of 441 companies operating public utilities or industries, 44 only have discontinued or reduced their dividends, and 397 have distributed the same dividends as in 1929, which was a record year. This, I think, is a magnificent attestation of the results attained in less than six months and due, greatly, the the energetic and farsighted policy of the government which has brought back national confidence, strengthened our industries, created work, opened markets and maintained in the path of economic stability the whole of Canada.

The speaker goes on:

To carry on the slow work of economic recovery in Canada, the government has closed the doors to all attempt of flooding the country by dumping competitive goods.

The hon. Postmaster General, sir, alluded to protection, which I look upon as exaggerated, granted to certain industries. However, is it not astonishing that the hon. Postmaster General who, it is stated, mentioned and repeated to his constituents during the elections that, if elected, he would be appointed minister of agriculture, yet, he has chosen to be Postmaster General?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I rise to a point of order. I wish to be indulgent for my neighbour from Terrebonne, but I must declare that I never made the statement which he attributes to me. I have better breeding than that.

Mr. PARENT (Translation): In answer to the hon. Postmaster General, may I say that I pointed out in my speech that this had been reported.

It is amazing how soon the hon. Postmaster General forgot the farmers, and allowed the Canadian market to be flooded with 2,000,000 pounds of Australian butter in the course of the last five months, when he so strongly criticized, during the election, that policy which permitted butter imports from New Zealand.

The quantities of butter imported, sir, within the last five months were out of proportion with the requirements of our population, and the government, to a degree, is responsible if, to-day, the farmers sell their butter at half-price and at about the cost of production. This is a striking proof of the irrational and inconsistent policy of the Conservatives in their campaign of disparagement of the Liberal administration, when butter brought the farmers almost double of what they are receiving to-day.

Any one, sir, who glances over the speech of the hon. Postmaster General, will note that no mention is made of any measure which might give the farmers of Quebec or those of other parts of Canada some hope. No, there is no mention of such a measure in his whole speech.

I wonder what the farmers of Laval-Two Mountains and of Quebec will think of the statement made by a member of the Bennett cabinet, that everything done heretofore by the government to inspire national confidence, has been done for the benefit of companies which pay record dividends to their shareholders, when, on the other hand, the farmers must sell all their products at wretched prices, ever since the last elections, and have no share in those record dividends. I lay stress on the word "record."

Indeed, the work of economic recovery will be very slow in the agricultural sphere as I have just pointed out to the house, and these conditions will exist as long as the government shows indifference and is neglectful of the interests of the farming community. The cost of living is reduced at the expense of the farmers. The speech from which I have just quoted extracts, as well as present conditions go to prove my contentions.

These good Conservatives, now in office, do quite the contrary to what they promised before the elections. Let us see what the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) stated on June 13, at Calgary, as reported in the Calgary Herald:

> In my opinion the basic industry is agriculture. Agriculture has been the basis of this country's prosperity.

At Ormstown, on June 30, as reported by the Morning Citizen of Ottawa, Mr. Bennett, among other things, stated:

> Agriculture stood first in Canadian development. We must supply the same advantages to agriculture as to other activities.
> "We conservatives are pledged to see that agriculture receives the same benefits as in days gone by." Distribution and marketing were essential factors in assisting agriculture.

These statements are clear and very explicit. Yet, had the present government an end in view when they allowed, last March, 800,000 pounds of foreign butter to enter the country, which resulted in upsetting the market?

If the right hon. Prime Minister was in earnest—and I wish to give him the credit for being so—in stating that agriculture is the basic industry of the country, that it has always been the foundation of Canada's prosperity, that it should be fostered and given the same advantages as other industries and that he pledged himself to develop this industry, why then does the government enact a high tariff—an exaggerated protection—by which only the large overcapitalized companies profit, allowing them to pay record dividends to their shareholders, as was stated by his colleague the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé)? Why did not this minister use his influence with his other colleagues in order that the farmers, who are in majority in his county, be given by the government the consideration to which they are entitled, and thereby also draw, indirectly, dividends or profits from the sale of their products?

Another pledge was made to the electorate, previous to the elections, by the right hon. Prime Minister, on June 9, at Winnipeg, as reported by the Montreal Star:

> We pledge ourselves to foster and develop agriculture, and the live stock and dairy industries, now so sadly neglected.

I draw your attention, sir, to the words "so neglected" and I think I have established by facts and authentic statements, what irony is shown by the words "so neglected" in speaking of agriculture under the Liberal regime. It behooves the farmers of Canada to think and judge whether it is not the Conservatives who, to-day, must be charged with negligence towards the farming community. The facts are there as evidence. Moreover, the action of the right hon. Prime Minister, when he refused to wait more than two minutes for the delegates of the farming classes, who came here to submit their grievances and claims before the tariff board, show pretty well his indifference towards the farming community.

There is another statement of the right hon. Prime Minister which also deserves to be pointed out to the Canadian people, and that is the one he made on June 17, at Saskatoon, as reported in the Star Phoenix. I shall give the text itself, and shall close my remarks by reverting to English as the quotations which I have yet to make are couched in that language.

> There is only one way we can get the moneys of England for Canadian wheat rather than Russia and the Argentine, and how is that?

I would direct the attention of the house to the concluding words:

> By providing our wheat cheaper than the others.

One can see in the inertness of the present government a possible reason; by not enacting any measures to help agriculture. Another reason may be seen in the exaggerated policies of high protective tariffs where help is being given only to manufacturers and supercapitalized companies. No appropriation, either directly or indirectly, has been made out of the $20,000,000 voted for unemployment relief to help the western grain growers and the farmers of the country as a whole. The hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Sauvé) has declared that in order to create faith this government has enacted measures to help industries to pay record dividends. However, he made no mention of a declaration of policy which would benefit the farmers. This is borne out by the declaration made by the right hon. Prime Minister at Saskatoon on June 19.

The agriculturists of Canada cannot but believe that the policy of this government is to drive the price of agricultural products to the bottom of the well which action would be prejudicial to the welfare of the country as a whole. The government's policy seems to be to reduce the cost of food products. This casts a burden upon the agriculturists while the manufacturers are being benefited by high protection.

These are the conditions faced by the Canadian people, and the agriculturists as a group are rising to condemn this government. The farmers of this country are still somewhat tickled at the report which appeared in the newspapers some time ago as to how valuable was the time of the Prime Minister. It was claimed that he did not have the necessary assistance with which to carry on his duties and had only two minutes of time to give to the farmer representatives who appeared before the tariff commissioner.

Another declaration or promise was made by the right hon. the Prime Minister at Winnipeg on June 9, as follows;

> Listen, you agriculturists from the west and all the other parts of Canada, you say tariffs are only for the manufacturers. I will make them fight for you as well. I will use them to blast a way into the markets that have been closed to you.

This house and the Canadian people are interested in knowing how a way has been blasted into new markets to permit the sale of farm products. How has this been accomplished since the new administration came into office?

I would like to quote a few figures which appeared in the summary of Canadian trade. The exports of farm products to the United States were as follows:

	1930	1931	Decrease
Farm products	$1,977,000	$ 752,583	55 per cent

The exports of farm products to other markets of the world were as follows:

	1930	1931	Decrease
January	$27,000,000	$18,000,000	35 per cent
February	27,138,000	18,600,000	35 per cent
March	36,100,000	21,800,000	35 per cent

These figures show the difference between the thoughtful and business-like Liberal administration, and that of the Conservative administration with its policy of blasting its way into the world's markets. The Conservatives, when elected, were to put new life into agriculture, but instead of doing so they have let it die. I have no hesitation in saying that the agriculturists of this country have been humbugged with promises and a castle of cards put up in order to secure votes for an election, but that castle of cards has since collapsed

While everyone recognizes the fact that agriculture is the basic industry and while all the provincial governments—and I mention Quebec, for instance—are giving keen attention to agriculture, the present federal government, since it has taken office, has failed to fulfil its promises and has given no attention to agriculture, so that it has lost the faith of the agriculturist group and deserves the condemnation of this group and of the Canadian community as a whole.

Mr. THOMAS McMILLAN (South Huron): In rising to address the house upon the question now before it, I am sorry indeed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is not in his seat. Allow me, however, to read the words of the amendment; which is as follows:

> That all the words after the word "that" to the end of the question be left out and the following words be inserted instead thereof:

1. The house regrets that the administration has failed to implement its definite promises with respect to agriculture and to this moment it has failed to announce any agriculture policy to this house.

2. That the policies of the present administration operate to restrict, rather than to expand Canadian trade.

3. That without the development of international trade Canadian agriculture will become increasingly paralyzed.

And further, in the opinion of the house, any policy with respect to agriculture should include emergency measures to meet the present agricultural crisis and adequate provision for the processing of meats and the marketing of live stock, wheat, dairy and of all other agricultural products.

What are the government's definite promises to Canadian agriculture? These are the Prime Minister's own words:

I shall regard it as my great responsibility, if elected on July 28, 1930, to see that the collective weight and power of the Dominion of Canada is placed behind agriculture. I would be lacking in qualifications entitling me to head a Canadian government if I failed to do so.

That is his pledge to Canadian agriculture. What have the Prime Minister and his government done to implement that pledge? I am not going to repeat the words that I uttered to the house on March 17 last, but I would like the house and the country to read those remarks in unison with what I am about to say. I then showed how, after the Imperial economic conference, the Prime Minister became wildy uproarious and left Britain with a veiled threat of economic separatism because a British minister, Mr. Thomas, mildly designated his whole proceeding as "humbug." In that respect I would like to place on Hansard this extract from the British Morning Express:

Mr. Bennett must be very simply constituted—

I do not think this means that the right hon. gentleman is simple minded.

—says the News Chronicle, if he imagines that any intelligent Englishman would be deluded by the proposal that we should tax our food in return for Canada's generosity in putting another brick on her tariff wall against foreign imports and keeping the wall at the same effective height against British goods. If that proposal is not humbug, what is it? The Dominion premiers like to claim the right to "speak plainly" and like to exercise it. They should be able to keep a stiff upper lip when an English statesman for once in a way speaks plainly too.

What kind of stiff upper lip did my right hon. friend keep? I am sorry he has become so touchy that hearing the simple truth should cause him to make such an exhibition of himself as has become notorious throughout the world. To think, after receiving a degree from a great university, he should humiliate Canada by asserting that the old ties of blood and kinship between the motherland and the Dominion were gone, and that if they were not replaced by "commercial ties" —the mercenary and monetary spirit—which caused Great Britain to lose the greatest possession she has ever lost, our far-flung empire would share the fate of other great empires of the past! Was it not time he was leaving England and the heart of our great empire, after laying down a platform such as that, and giving the quotation from the volume of the old sacred law? We could give him many quotations to show that it is the money and mercenary spirit which has caused the downfall of every great nation of the past. What was said of old Babylon? We know that in the matter of riches, in the matter of sordid wealth and outer splendour, old Babylon had no rivals in ancient times, but her fatal weakness was that she placed no weight on real manhood and true character. As a consequence, her gorgeous palaces and hanging gardens became the abode of selfishness and sensuality with the result that we now read that over that spurious greatness rests the stillness of the desert, the gloom of an eternal night. Let him trace the downfall of every nation of the past, and he will find that that has been the cause of its fall. Is it any wonder, too, that he was not received with any great spirit of acclaim when he landed on the shores of Canada? But he hastened at once to Regina, either to prolong the hopes or to dispel the fears of the farmers of western Canada, I do not know which. To my mind it is most amusing to study the peculiar mentality of the Prime Minister. At Regina, after talking a great deal more trash he said:

Attempts are being made and would be made to fasten upon the present government responsibility for present-day conditions. But no one can deny that the present depression was only the culmination of nine years of total disregard of the fundamental principles of constitutional government, and disregard for the elementary laws of economics.

I deny that statement in toto. It is absolutely beside the fact, and if the Prime Minister knows anything, he knows that expression is some of the most arrogant piffle ever uttered by the tongue of man.

When he went to Calgary, he had rather changed his mind; he had become more hesitant, and he said he was going to find out why the people of western Canada had not even the bare necessities of life. These are his words:

I cannot make up my mind why this country between the lakes and the mountains should endure such depression.

The Prime Minister seems to regard the situation in western Canada as a mere matter of psychology. He said:

Our closeness to other people has much to do with our ideas of depression. We get the idea that the whole world is out of joint, and the psychology of it is reflected in the morose and solemn way in which some men walk down the streets of Calgary.

I tell the right hon. the Prime Minister that there is no class of people in this world who show a finer spirit in the face of adversity than the people of western Canada, but when men cannot sell their labour or the product of their labour, the cause and remedy must be sought in stern realities, and sir, it is stern reality which this government is giving in the villainous legislation which it has already passed, and which is grinding out the very life-blood of the farmers of Canada. To-day all over this country the farmers are praying and pleading for a government which will relieve them of their serious fiscal burdens and increase their purchasing power by enabling them to secure access to wider and better markets in which both to buy and sell. They are praying for a government which will legislate for the general good of the people.

But let us go further. After listening to an outline of the present distressing conditions existing in many sections of western Canada, we have witnessed on two occasions in this house, on April 21 and April 28 last, the most surprising exhibition on the part of the Prime Minister. Time and again while in opposition he told the house and the country that he would prescribe for the ills of Canada once he was called in. After listening to his appeals, what is the remedy he now proposes? Mr. Speaker, it is the most humiliating spectacle I have ever witnessed in this house. He characterized the whole appeal on behalf of western agriculture as nothing more than the cry of stinking fish. Mark you, Mr. Speaker, those are the words of the Prime Minister of Canada; they are not mine. The Prime Minister declares that there is no evidence of acute distress at the moment, and he has thrown the farmers' pool into the waste basket.

He went to England and took John McFarland with him; had him appointed sales manager for the pools; he has broken down the whole line of sales communication which the wheat pool had taken years to establish, has had their sales force in Great Britain and on the continent withdrawn; has thrown the whole business back into the old channels of the grain trade, the life-long enemies and determined competition of the pool; and then after destroying the farmers' whole line of sales communication in that way, the Prime Minister has the audacity to try and convince this house that he is a friend of the pool, and he takes credit for Canada getting rid of more wheat during his regime at ruinously unprofitable prices.

Mr. GOTT: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) took the strongest exception in the last parliament to speakers on the opposite side of the house reading any part of their speeches. I object to the hon. member reading now. No objection was made to his reading the whole of his speech in the debate on the address, but I do take exception now.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is a well known rule of the house that members must not read speeches or essays. The rule has been more honoured in the breach than in the observance, particularly this session. I hope that now the attention of the house has been drawn to it, the rule will be better observed in the future.

Mr. McMILLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am within the judgment of the house when I say there is no member who has read less of his speeches than I have since I have been a member.

After declaring that there was no evidence of acute distress among the farmers of western Canada, the Prime Minister went to the relief of the banks, and absolutely relieved the banks from the liability of losing a single dollar, and he did that while his Minister of Agriculture was protesting against the manner in which the banks were treating the people of western Canada. What has his own Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) to say? He is reported as follows:

Credit is the desperate need of the Canadian farmer at the present time. The necessity of providing some means by which loans can be given to farmers was continuously brought to his attention. As an illustration of the reluctance of financial houses to advance money on farm property, he told of one man who was unable to borrow any money at all on a large and well-kept farm but had little difficulty in borrowing several thousand dollars on his race horses.

Again he said:

The attitude of the banks was providing the opportunity for the radical to argue that whenever capital had the chance, it reared its head to secure its toll.

He also said:

One farmer who gave his bank a statement of barley at eight cents a bushel, oats at ten cents a bushel, and wheat at thirty-three cents a bushel, and was worth $37,000, was refused a bank loan of $1,000 to tide him over until spring.

I know of a rancher worth $100,000, with a $2,000 mortgage against his place, who cannot get $500 to help him over the winter. It seems strange that when you enter the bank you find the motto over the door "When in difficulty consult your banker." I feel you agree that what those people must have is credit. They have the equity and the ready security.

The Prime Minister in convicted from his own lips of showing favoritism to the great interests, the banking institutions of this country, and of being false to the basic industry of Canada, and he thinks he can get away with it by saying that he has put the collective power of the whole Dominion of Canada behind agriculture. He lost the opportunity of a life time when he relieved the banks of their responsibility. Why did he not go far enough to say to the banking institutions that they must drop their interest on farm loans to at least 6 per cent? Surely he could have wrung that consideration out of the banking institutions of Canada. We see now why he will not let his Minister of Agriculture open his mouth on the floor of this house. He is afraid to let him stand up and tell the truth to the country, and I must accuse the Minister of Agriculture of lying down under the lash of his leader and not standing up and asserting the majesty of his manhood, regardless of the possible loss of his position in the cabinet.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, after safeguarding the banks as he has done, he sent his Minister of Agriculture to Winnipeg, where he arranged for more relief in the way of farmers seed grain than had ever been known since confederation. Does that act show no immediate sign of distress among farmers? And how did he provide the security for this farmers' relief? By saddling the burden upon the municipalities and the provinces. What is a rural municipality but a corporate body composed of the farmers of a certain area or district? In other words, through the medium of his Minister of Agriculture, after freeing the banks, he has afforded the farmers relief by saddling upon them a financial burden from which they will never recover—a burden which will hang like a lodestone on the mind of every keen-visioned farmer.

And the irony of the whole situation is that after saving the farmers in this most harassing way, and calling the appeal for the relief of agriculture nothing better than a cry of "stinking fish," he sallies forth in this house and tries to proclaim himself the saviour of his country. I call upon my young friend the Minister of Agriculture, after his leader in taking advantage of his own inexperience has saddled upon him the obloquy of such a humiliating situation, and I say unto him, "Come ye out from that coterie of millionaire manipulators, for they are as dead men's bones from which ye can receive nothing but contamination." You cannot continue to sit where you now are and support the policies of this government, and at the same time implement your solemn pledge to Canadian agriculture.

Judging from discussions in this house, one would almost think that agriculturally, Ontario and Quebec were scarcely factors in our national economic fabric. How often have we noticed the endeavour made to pit the agricultural west of this country against the industrial east! As if Ontario and Quebec represented nothing in the agriculture of Canada. Every citizen of this country ought to know that Ontario is still the leading agricultural province of Canada. Ontario still produces almost one third the agricultural wealth of the whole Dominion, and, climatically, is our most dependable province. In 1929 Ontario's agricultural production was $509,208,000 out of a total of $1,631,124,000 for the whole Dominion or 31 per cent of the whole. In 1930 it was $421,242,000 out of a total of $1,240,470,000, or 33·95 per cent of the whole. Quebec also in the field of agricultural production has been making a wonderful stride. Ontario and Quebec together in 1929 produced 62·71 per cent of the agricultural revenue of the whole Dominion. In 1930 they produced 55 per cent of the total. Therefore, for the welfare of these two provinces, as well as the whole Dominion, everything possible should be done to secure access to the world's best markets in which to both buy and sell, knowing that if we can maintain agriculture and those whose energies it engages in a buoyant and prosperous condition, the other economic problems of Canada will very largely solve themselves.

Take the dairy industry, the greatest and most profitable branch of Canadian agriculture, which, about two and one half years ago, was in a buoyant and prosperous condition. About that time the present Prime Minister and a horde of lieutenants began howling back and forth all over this country, telling the people everywhere that the Mackenzie King government was destroying the dairy industry through the medium of the Australian treaty, and by allowing the importation of New Zealand butter. The present Prime Minister and his followers kept up that howl right to election day last summer. They went into almost every riding and kept howling day and night. In South Huron we had two men who day after day, and week after week, went all over my constituency trying to poison the minds of the farmers and their wives with that kind of thing, and telling them that their only salvation was to elect Mr. R. B. Bennett, that he was such a wizard in agricultural knowledge that he could remedy things in short order. So the electorate took them at their word. But where now are those who were his leading lieutenants then? Where, for instance, is the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) and the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn), the two hon. members who bore the brunt of the work? Where are they? Relegated to the cold shades of the government benches in this house. They were all right to howl, but no use whatever for the Prime Minister's present service. He wanted to secure a real expert in agricultural science, so he journeyed out to the constituency of Melfort and brought forth the modern Moses, who was to show the Canadian dairymen the way to the promised land. I pause, Mr. Speaker, to say I have a warm personal regard for the Minister of Agriculture. When I met him during the recent session he intimated his wish to have a talk. I replied at once that I would gladly aid him in any way. However, since then I have heard nothing more, so I am clear.

But what is the result of the Prime Minister's wonderful prescience thus far in the dairy business? The result is the debacle in the Montreal butter market, where there has been a gradual decline in price almost ever since the election, until in the end butter took a ten cent per pound drop in the space of ten working days. It is now down to its value in the world's market of London, England, where it had never been since the Australian treaty came into force on October 1, 1925. Mark you, Mr. Speaker, I do not blame the Minister of Agriculture for the debacle, because according to press reports he marshalled all the superhuman qualities of which the Prime Minister thinks he is possessed, went down to Montreal, and suggested to the butter dealers that they put their butter in cold storage. But of course the butter experts could not view the situation that way.

I pause to place on Hansard the situation as to butter prices ever since the Australian treaty came into force. I will not worry the house with the details, which may be found in two speeches which I made on June 7, 1928, and March 18, 1930, and which up to this moment no member, not even the Prime Minister himself, has ever ventured to dispute on the floor of this house, or call in question the facts contained therein. As every student of these matters knows, up to October 1, 1925, when the Australian treaty came into force, the London market had always been the world's best butter market, and consequently the greatest distributing and price-regulating market of the world. When the treaty came into force the London prices of butter were: New Zealand, 50·78 cents per pound; Australian, 47·74 cents per pound; Canadian, 46·87 cents per pound. You will notice that the price of the Canadian article in the British market was lower than that of either New Zealand or Australia. From that date there was a gradual readjustment of prices until in March, 1926, when No. 1 pasteurized butter in Montreal stood 10 cents per pound higher than the price of either New Zealand or Australian butter in London, England. During the entire year 1926 Canadian No. 1 pasteurized butter was 2.46 cents per pound higher in Montreal than its value in London, England; in 1927 it was an average of 4.72½ cents per pound higher; in 1928 it was an average of 4.17 cents per pound higher; in 1929 it was an average of 4.79 cents higher; on March 1, 1930, it was 6 to 6½ cents per pound higher, and on March 14, 1930, it was 7.18 to 7.61 cents per pound higher in Montreal than its value in London, England. So we follow along until April 21 of this year, when No. 1 pasteurized butter was 22 cents per pound in Montreal while Australian butter was 23 to 23.43 cents per pound in London. For the week ending May 2, 1931, the price of No. 1 pasteurized butter at Montreal was 22¼ to 22½ cents per pound while the price of Australian butter in London was 22.35 to 22.78 cents per pound. Yesterday No. 1 pasteurized butter was 22 cents per pound in Montreal, while No. 1 western coloured cheese was 9½ cents per pound.

So much for the dairy business. The Australian treaty has been done away with, but if you study its history you will find that from the time the treaty came into operation there was not one occasion when the price of butter in Montreal ever fell to the level of the world market price. It was always above the market price in London.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the hon. gentleman not know that the 1929 New Zealand butter was only released from cold storage about two weeks ago?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): The hon. gentleman can study that out himself.

Mr. COTNAM: Is it not a fact that the hon. gentleman voted to cancel the New Zealand treaty, or the order in council extending the treaty to New Zealand? Why did he do so, if that order in council was so beneficial to the dairy industry?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Yes, I did, and I am glad to answer that question. The late government gave notice of the cancellation of that order in council for the simple reason that when the Imperial conference met during the fall of that year, no Canadian government could have done anything at all unless that notice had been given. That was one of the stipulations contained in the agreement with Australia, and I recall that hon. gentlemen opposite went from one end of this Dominion to the other and never told a single audience that this condition existed. They wanted to keep the truth from the people.

So much for the dairy business. From this time henceforth the London market will regulate, in a general way, the price of Canadian butter and, as we have always informed the dairymen of Canada, the eight-cent tariff imposed on New Zealand butter is of no use. This is another instance of the sham remedy of high tariff; it vindicates every word we have said as to the folly and hypocrisy of high protection.

Now I come to the question of live stock. I hold in my hand an outline of what is purported to be Canada's new agricultural policy, and with the consent of the house I should like to be allowed to place that outline on Hansard.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Very well, it does not amount to very much anyway. In this policy there is nothing new. If we can only show to the live stock producers of Canada a clear outlet by which they will be able to place their products in the hands of the ultimate consumers free from present serious obstructions and with some slight margin of profit to the producer, the problem will largely be solved. That fact is shown conclusively in the present and prospective supply of dairy products. Notwithstanding the howl that went abroad that there was a shortage in the supply of Canadian-made butter which would take years to satisfy, that shortage has disappeared within seven months.

In the Ontario section of the Canadian fat cattle trade, from the point where our animals are dumped into the Toronto union stockyard market to where the finished product reaches the ultimate consumer the funnel is blocked so effectively that the feeder is at the mercy of the processing and distributing interests. So completely is this the case that the production of beef cattle is paralyzed to such a degree that the cattle feeder is disheartened and does not know which way to turn, with the result that our successful feeders of the past are almost entirely out of the game. No one knows what kind of a stone wall the producers are up against but those who have been actively engaged in the trade. There are no secrets in the business of meat production; there should be none in its processing and distribution. The whole business should be an open book with no hold-up which will deprive the hard working producer of the fruits of his continuous, careful exertion. This is true also of the business of hog production, with the one redeeming feature that so far the packing combine does not seem to have all the abattoirs so effectively coralled. However, the unreasonable fluctuation in price is most exasperating to the producing partner in the game. This is a business which demands immediate, searching investigation and continuous control.

It may happen, and not infrequently does happen, that after all the wheat is garnered, transported, graded, milled or exported, it leaves no margin of profit to the grower. When this occurs the consequences are reflected at once in depressed business conditions. The partnership betwen agricultural prosperity and business prosperity now has been clearly established, and the safeguarding in every possible way of the interests of the producing partner ought to be the prime consideration of national policy.

Apart from general world conditions since the war, in the course of which nearly all nations, with the exception of Great Britain and Canada—under the Mackenzie King administration—have become high tariff crazy; apart also from the fact that international war debts should have been cancelled, the present agricultural depression in Canada is largely the result of inequality in the returns from urban and rural labour. Higher wages in urban industry and in transportation service have drawn labour from the farms to such a degree that the farm population in Ontario is incapable of properly cultivating the land. It is well known to every real student of agricultural conditions that the farmer receives less return for his investment, energy and labour than any other department of our whole national economic life, and yet I have never been any place on earth where this problem has received less real sympathy and true consideration than on the floor of this Canadian House of Commons.

Mr. SPENCE: Tell us how to run it, then.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): For once we will take a leaf out of the book of my hon. friend's revered leader; we will tell you when we are called in.

Mr. SPENCE: Tell us now.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): You read my speech carefully and you will find that I am giving you the remedy right along.

In 1922 the Mackenzie King government started on the right lines, with a trade policy of gradually reducing tariff restrictions on all necessities, with reciprocal trade preferences towards all countries willing to meet Canada upon mutually favourable terms. These are the two factors which will tend towards a permanently successful agriculture and the encouragement of industry, shipping and international trade. In that way, and in that way only, can a Canadian government ever secure, broaden and develop the markets which Canadian agriculture must have in order to lift the Canadian farmer out of that slough of despond in which he is now placed. It is true that along the lines of lower tariff the government did advance very slowly, but in their efforts they had to overcome the obstruction of a world of advancing tariffs surrounding almost every nation. Nevertheless, under that policy the government made a wonderful record. Canadian agricultural production increased in value from $1,389,000,000 in 1922 to over $1,806,000,000 in 1928. The value of manufactured goods increased from $2,482,000,000 in 1922 to almost $4,000,000,000 in 1929, with an increase in the number of employees of manufacturing concerns from 474,430 in 1922 to 711,000 in 1929.

Canada's foreign trade also increased from $1,501,731,341 in 1922 to $2,654,574,166 in 1929, although owing to world conditions it fell back to $2,393,212,000 in 1930—a growth in which Canada led the world in her per capita exports of manufactured and semi-manufactured goods, even leading Great Britain, France, Germany and the United States; a growth which no other nation of ten million people in any similar period of the world's history ever attained.

It is true that even such a record did not prevent the present world depression from partly reducing Canadian trade, along with that of other nations, in its train of economic destruction. This shows that we are living in a world where no nation can live unto itself. In this respect I cannot help recalling that in this house some time ago I drew pointed attention to the fact that, while a policy of high tariffs had been discounted for an age, protectionists still chatter its shibboleths; that 1,028 of the leading expert economists from 46 states of the American union met President Hoover, on May 15, 1930, and made one of the strongest appeals in history against the high tariff of the United States. Some two years ago I also recalled how that great British economist, Sir George Paish, had declared that, "unless the United States and many other nations ceased telling their people, you must sell here but you must not sell there," the world was facing an economic cataclysm from which no country could escape.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has been speaking for forty minutes

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, it seems too bad, after engaging ourselves during the last twenty-four hours in such pleasant entertainments, receptions and banquets, that we should now have to fall into line of battle and hear the clash of arms on the various questions that divide the parties in this house. I had a very pleasant experience listening to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). I observed how gallantly and entertainingly he played the part of host at the luncheon we attended at noon. We have seen him in that delightful humour only too seldom during these last nine months, but once in a while these festivities make us realize how human we all are, and how friendly we can be with one another at such times. It was my good fortune to have on my right at that luncheon one of the Conservative members whose name I thought I did not know. Towards the close of the luncheon, however, I thought I would try him out to see where he came from; and lo and behold it was the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson), my own old county in which I was born. At the same time, to my left, I saw my deskmate (Mr. Euler) and the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance), looking askance at me, no doubt wondering that I found such delight in the company of a one hundred per cent Tory from a constituency one hundred per cent Tory since confederation. However, we had, as the saying is, a whale of a time. We differed in politics, but that did not matter there. We like the Tories but we dislike their politics; we like the sinner but we dislike the sin. That is the way we stand. But after all what good would the house be without some Conservatives? Indeed, I would resign to-morrow if there were none. Nevertheless, we cannot allow any sentimental feelings of this nature, or any sort of squeamishness to interfere with our duty to our constituents.

Before leaving for Ottawa I was invoked by my constituents, at two or three little gatherings I had of some of the executives—and when the word got around that these meetings were going to be held, there would be a hundred or more present—I was invoked, I say, to represent things here just as they exist in the west. I asked them what they expected me to do. I had never been in opposition before, and if we wanted to help the country it was obvious that we should have to do it through this outfit—there was no other way. I do not say that at all disparagingly, and perhaps I should not use that expression. But I think my hon. friends know what I mean. Well, at one meeting they told me what they expected of me; they said, "Tell them exactly what conditions are like in the west, because we in the prairies do not believe that they understand the situation down there." That was at one meeting. And, they added, "having performed that duty, and seeing no results, then give them hell." Now I have not carried out that invocation yet, and I do not want to go back home until I have done so, at least to some extent.

A week ago to-day, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister undoubtedly gave us on this side something of a castigation. And he can do it too. Some people call it scolding, but I call it a general tongue-thrashing. I have heard fishwives in the old country who could do it better, but I have never known any man in this country who could do it so thoroughly as the Prime Minister. I have not been brought up, either at school or anywhere else, to submit to that kind of bullying and I do not propose to start now. So that I shall have some things to say before I sit down.

Now, Mr. Speaker, ever since time was, everyone who has tried to better conditions as he has found them has been accused of discrediting his country. You may go back to old testament history; you may turn to the various revolutions that have taken place, in the United States, in France, or in any other part of the world; you may study, more recently, the reciprocity question, and more recently still the Dunning budget, and in every instance you will find that there have been people who have been prepared to stand up and say that those who have advocated improvements were endeavouring to discredit their country. And because hon. gentlemen behind me and on either side of me have been stating what they know to be the facts in western Canada, all sorts of epithets have been applied to them. But what did the Prime Minister himself say, before this parliament met, with respect to conditions in western Canada? He has been quoted on several occasions. He stated at one time, in very contrite terms, that he feared the spring would find us with no seed for the sower and no bread for the hungry. Well, that is sad enough. With the chastening influence of Christmastide upon him, and at Calgary, he did not understand how that vast country from the lakes to the mountains could not enable the farmers to lay by some reserve for an occasion like this, notwithstanding that at that time many of them were unable to secure the bare necessities of life. Could you hear anything more pessimistic than that? I have not heard anything worse. Is it wrong to say such things if they are true? Is it pessimism? Is it "stinking fish," to use the Prime Minister's expression when he spoke the other day? And what did his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), have to say? And here I wish to compliment the hon. gentleman. Sir John Macdonald used to say that the best apple tree would always be found to be the tree with the most sticks and stones under it. If that is so, my hon. friend must be the best apple tree in the orchard opposite. But what about the rest, if he is the best? I am not blaming any of them, Mr. Speaker. They have all been on the leash and under the gag of their leader. Well, that is a matter of discipline among themselves. I know what it is to be a member of the government and I sympathize with my hon. friend, because in my estimation he is not being done full justice by his leader. At Toronto I heard a friend say that the Minister of Agriculture at the Royal Winter Fair had conducted himself really creditably, and I believe he can do so in this house when he gets the opportunity. But what did the hon. gentleman say? It has been referred to by previous speakers, and I have here a quotation of some remarks of his with reference to the banks. It is about the only kudos he obtained among his various manifestos. If the rest of us require disciplining by the Prime Minister because of references we have made to the banks, what about the Prime Minister's colleague? The quotation to which I refer is from the Globe. I do not know what that paper is now politically; it is supposed to be independent. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, speaks about people being "in want." That is a very comprehensive word. The hon. member mentioned the unlikelihood of anything like secession manifesting itself in his constituency. That statement may be correct, although there may be a little corner or two where something might be heard about it. It is too bad if farmers in distress and extremity cannot say something of that nature to act as a safety valve for their vocabulary when they are backed up against the wall.

What about the Prime Minister when he was in Belfast? What did he say? He predicted the decline of the British Empire like all empires of the past unless there were applied some economic nostrums of his own making. Not a word was said against that, but the farmer out on the prairie who makes a statement as to what he thinks should be done to relieve conditions or as to what he is prepared to do if they are not bettered, is immediately castigated not by the Minister of Agriculture but by his leader and other hon. members of this house. I do not approve of that action, and I do not believe the farmer does. He wants a betterment of conditions; he is proud of Canada and he is proud of the west, but he wants to be given a chance. That is the reason he is talking in that way. Look at the example given by the Prime Minister while abroad. No one in western Canada has ever suggested the decline of the British Empire.

Another statement by my hon. friend (Mr. Weir) had to do with the lack of credit, which lack is felt very keenly by the farmers. He said, in effect, that the attitude of the banks was providing an opportunity for the radicals to advance the argument that whenever capitalism secured the opportunity it would rear its head to secure its toll. That sounds something like the remarks of my hon. friends in the haw corner of this side of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, on my left hand.

Mr. STEVENS: Where is the gee corner?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That was a good bid for popularity by my hon. friend (Mr. Weir); it was good advertising; why should he work his head off without letting the world know about it? He continued:

> If they (the banks) are not prepared to extend credit, someone else must and will.

I wonder who that someone is? My hon. friend was assuming the role of prophet. Was he speaking for his sleeping colleagues? Will they not wake up from their stupor and advise us who this benefactor is? Who is this man who is going to supply credit? My hon. friend has a grand opportunity to tell us; he would sweep things before him and would have everything his own way.

If the Prime Minister intends to castigate the hon. members of this side of the house, let him turn to the Minister of Agriculture, who has been on the leash so long. I prefer not to make many comments with regard to my successor. I had a delightful experience with my predecessor and I would have liked to have handed that on. However, there are those I regard more highly even than my successor, and that is my constituents.

I have recited before the various and varied experiences of the Prime Minister during the last nine months, but I will hurriedly go over them again. What did he do to assist inter-empire trade on the very day he took train for Quebec to embark for London—he put up the tariff as an indication of affection and good will towards the motherland. Would not that take the beard right off anyone? Certain wild animals in captivity show their affection for their young by devouring them. Take the mother fox, for instance; if you disturb her she will eat her young or smother them because of her love. That is the way the Prime Minister showed his love for inter-empire trade—by smothering it. How strangely some people display their affection! We see in his London experience an attempt to eat Hon. Mr. Thomas without salt. There was also the Manchester Guardian incident, the cotton spinner and shoemaker incidents, and then again at Belfast where he was being honoured with a degree. He said the most extraordinary things there, such things as one would expect to come from a rattlebrain, but we do not suspect the Prime Minister of being that. I do not think that there is a hole between here and hades into which the Prime Minister has not put his foot to the hilt during these last nine months. I see by the countenances of hon gentlemen opposite that they all agree with me in this, because none knoweth better than they.

We will have a vote on this question and we will be interested in seeing how our western Tories will vote. Of course they will vote right, and for that reason we will have to be as pleasant as possible in putting up with Tory policies for the next three or four years.

We are being asked: what would we do? I do not think that is a fair question, but I intend to accept it as one. In the past no opposition leader or opposition that I know of has ever produced a policy for the government, nor should they be expected to. People call in a new doctor and no matter how much of a fake that doctor may be it is a violation of medical practice and etiquette for the old doctor to nose in unless he is urgently asked to do so. We have been so repeatedly and almost urgently asked to supply a policy, that I think I will do so, with limitations. Many hon. members will recall that in the fall of 1929 the Department of Agriculture through its officers—for a time assisted by myself just before I went to the hospital in December—realized that things were sliding with regard to the live stock industry. Wheat had been such an attractive proposition in the west in previous years that the production of live stock in some lines had been permitted to decrease in relation to consumption. It had not kept up with the consumption in Canada because of the extraordinary developments during the previous five or six years. We had the home market which our Tory friends love so well and we were just able to keep up with the consuming and purchasing capacity of the people during the growing and developing years from 1923 to 1929. However, I did not like to see our exports disappearing off the British market, and my then deputy and my then self took an initial step and got out some 1,200 questionnaires with the view of increasing the production of live stock in Canada. Certain agricultural papers strongly opposed a greater production program, even in this province—some in the city of Toronto—and in order to be fair to the others I might mention the Canadian Countryman. However, these papers had a right to express their thoughts on this matter. Out of the 1,200 questionnaires which were returned, mostly from farmers, we found that two-fifths were either against this suggested increased production or indifferent to it, while three-fifths were fairly strong for it, particularly if the government would provide some additional means of marketing the increased production. It was suggested that a number of experimental abattoirs should be established, along similar lines to the experimental creameries at Finch, which would demonstrate the value of lessening costs by mass production. A live stock conference was held in my then office in March, 1930, but there were too many present to permit the formulation of any definite policy. There were forty in attendance, every one with views and opinions of his own, but we had received sufficient information as to the feelings of the farmers and their live stock organization to realize that some forward step should and could be taken with fair prospects of public sentiment among farmers being behind it. This will be found recorded in Hansard of last year, although not quite so fully as now.

In the meantime I had recovered sufficiently to get on my pins, although not much more. We had to give some effect to that sentiment, assuming of course we were going to come back to power, although on that score I had a few misgivings of my own. Possibly my being ill accounted for them. As a matter of fact, however, if hon. gentlemen care to hunt up the supplementary estimates of last spring they will find that, on my advice to my colleagues, there was placed in the supplementary estimates an item of $25,000 for a thorough investigation into the live stock industry, including live stock products and all things associated with live stock, that is seeding down, drifting soil, and many things that require to be gone into thoroughly before one embarks on a big campaign of increased live stock production, especially in western Canada.

Of course we know what intervened. The electors thought our hon. friends opposite could do better. They have been quite disabused of that idea by now, but my hon. friends opposite are in power and what can we do but make suggestions? If they call for the files, they will find it is on record that the money was there for a live stock inquiry, and the present government did not choose to use it. They apparently thought they could evolve a better plan without anybody outside of themselves telling them what to do, with only one gentleman in the cabinet being a recognized authority, and he with a limited experience as to years—three years' residential experience on the farm. He (Mr. Weir) was the only agricultural authority within the cabinet, and a great responsibility surely rested upon his shoulders. They also seemed to spurn the idea of seeking outside advice, possibly because of the known objection to commissions generally entertained by more or less uninformed individuals. Nevertheless they had a commission, the Stamp commission, composed of eminent gentlemen. I could never find out who asked the government for it. It is not safe to predict before the event, but I will take my chances on predicting that the result will be just about what we all knew before, namely, that you cannot dispense with future marketing, future selling; but that certain limitations will be put upon it. It will be something like what is in practice in Chicago and Kansas City. This shows that it was not hostility to commissions that led the government to take the course they did, but simply that they thought they were all sufficient in themselves to formulate a policy regarding live stock and live stock products.

My good friend is desirous of proving himself fully qualified to fill the very difficult position he now occupies. He has my sympathy, and I am not going to recite all the policies that he has evolved, and that have been increasing in numbers as the months go by. In the beginning he had only four items, and they looked a little small to be called a new national policy. He was going to take care of pollorum in chickens, something that has been rampant in some flocks in Canada for fifteen years. This is not something new. Ask the chickens in the maritimes if it is new. They were so affected. Ask the Dominion poultryman. Why, if there is one branch of agriculture that has been developed in the last five, six or eight years in Canada, it has been poultry, and the diseases are the constant attention of the departmental officials. Yet my modest friend is going to cure pollorum, which is "white scour" in chickens. This is a commendable and very necessary work, but surely it cannot be called new any more than the agriculture of King Tut can be called new. Wheat has been found in those catacombs or bowels of the earth, whatever you call them, and this indicates that there was an agriculture in those days. What is field agriculture? It is the developing and growing of selected domestic plants good to nourish man and beast. Consequently there was nothing new about that.

Some months later in MacLean's, a very enterprising magazine, a Mr. Churchill had an interview with my hon. friend. In a moment of weakness he unfolded himself further with regard to policies. He has evidently a good standing with the press and he has given them a good story. Anyone who gives the press a good story will receive a good hearing from them, but sometimes it is inconvenient to talk as freely as one might and especially when the very self-same policy, which was unfolded in MacLean's magazine, was unfolded in that good old farmers' journal, the Farmers' Advocate, on which I was brought up. Nevertheless to make it more official, we find it in the library of the Department of Agriculture: "Descriptive List of Accessions." This is supposed to cover the books. This is not a book: this is an accession which I am going to read:

> Canada's new agricultural policy; an exclusive and authentic statement of the new farm policy shortly to be announced in parliament by the Hon. Robert Weir, Minister of Agriculture, by R. Churchill (in MacLean's magazine, March 15, 1931, pages 12, 64).

Canada's new agricultural policy consists of——so and so. We have to take that as official. I think my hon. friend will not object to my taking it as official. It may have got in there without his knowledge, because in my experience I have found the most extraordinary things happen without a man's knowledge; but not knowing anything different, until recently we have had to take this as only semi-official, particularly when associated with the Prime Minister's remarks the other day when some of our more pertinent members from Saskatchewan, shall I say, wanted to know more about this matter. He the Prime Minister said that the Minister of Agriculture was a practical farmer—I almost heard the smile that came over their faces at that intimation—and that he had very decided views on certain phases of agriculture, which views would be divulged when his estimates were before the house. Consquently this magazine policy is not the official announcement after all, and so far as I can see we are just wasting our time on it. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) and the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) went over it so effectively that in charity I shall not deal with it any further. As my time is going on, I shall simply proceed with my further remarks.

What do I propose? I have a hunch that none of these manifestoes or policies is the real Kildare. There is another one coming. I say so for the simple reason that none of them was worth a snap of the fingers. As the kindergarten of agriculture, they were all 100 per cent genuine; they were largely elementary, rudimentary and good in their place, but they were not what the farmers on the prairies or down here are thinking about just now. If anyone were to go into a farmers' meeting such as was held in Saskatoon this last winter with that so called new government policy, I would not guarantee his getting out without some bodily injury. That is the case, and the hon. member knows it. But I want to commend the Minister of Agriculture for trying to do his best without the assistance of any in the cabinet with any experience except that they were born on the farm or as they went to school saw, through the cracks in the fence, somebody farming.

That anticipated live stock commission which never materialized expected to look into a number of phases of the question. I had not any cut and dried proposition, but if I had to bring the matter up myself, I had in mind something forward to do with the development of the dairy industry. Our opponents, rivals, competitors, all over the world for the last twenty-five years have been gradually developing and enlarging the manufacturing units of their dairy products and increasing the production of the production unit, the cow, increasing the flow of her milk and increasing the size of the dairy buildings until they are eight or ten times as large as they were fifty or sixty years ago when dairy and cheese factories were started in Ontario. That has been going on for twenty-five years in both the United States and New Zealand. Our present dairy commissioner was the chief resident factor and adviser in starting up the present dairy industry in New Zealand. Doctor Ruddick knows all about these plants, and of what advantage it is to have a large production in each one, which tends not only to quality and cheapness of production but to uniformity of product, which is so acceptable on the markets of any country. In our own country, through the effluxion of time, the old junk factories, which were all right at the beginning, are disappearing, and better ones are taking their place; but if we leave it to the process of evolution I am afraid it will take us about a hundred years before we can compete successfully in dairy products with our competitors throughout the world. We can compete now, yes, but it is a competition that leaves our dairyman skinned right down to the heels; there is nothing left for him at all, with cheese at nine cents and butter at twenty and twenty-two cents a pound. They need government help; and let the government take action now. The thought I have in mind now is what I had in mind when I was minister and when $25,000 was put in the estimates of 1930 for a live stock inquiry; and it looks even better now than it did then, because this government is committed as no previous government ever was to putting the whole weight and power of this Dominion behind agriculture, as was promised at the last election. My good friend the Minister of Agriculture can ask for almost anything from this government for agriculture, and if he secures it I can assure him that he will have a solid phalanx of this side of the house behind him too. It is said that we sometimes play politics, but in view of the present distressing conditions in the west, the member of parliament who plays politics alone will not last very long. They want us to be big enough to stand up and help the government in anything that will be of benefit to agriculture, even though we oppose the general policies of the government. I see the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Loucks) nodding his head. I hope he will nod it in an effective manner when this question comes to a vote. He knows agriculture, and so does my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley). They are both extensive practical farmers in the west.

That is the thought I had in mind; and not only that, but its companion industry, the meat packing business. Whether rightly or wrongly, the producers of live stock in Canada have no confidence in the abattoirs. I do not think that feeling is quite justified, although to some extent it may be. I do not think the abattoirs have been making a nickel in the last few years because of a lack of supply of the raw material; the farmers are not supplying it because they have no confidence in the packers. The thing continues in a vicious circle, neither the farmers nor the packers, as to supply of raw material, having confidence in the other. We have had an increased activity in recent years on the part of the Canadian Live Stock Cooperative Association Limited, and that body hopes for a friendly abattoir in which to process their live animals. What was in our minds at the time we had the conference in my office when I was minister was that we would have an experimental packing plant so that we could ascertain the cost of processing, and find out just what was the reason for the ghastly spread between the cost of the live hog and the finished meat. We thought of one experimental plant in the east and one in the west as a starter. Everybody who has been to Europe, especially Denmark, knows that dairying alone would fall down, and hog raising alone would fall down; but the two together make a go of it, because one is the complement of the other. So I say that it is high time we got a start along the line of properly constructed and standardized combination creameries and butter factories, capable of handling milk and converting it into the most profitable product at the particular time of production. Other nations are doing that already, and we must do it if dairying is going to continue in this country and we are to meet changed conditions abroad. It was with that idea in mind that this prospective commission was thought of, which never was born; nevertheless it may yet come to life. I hope it will, because it is not in the boots of any one man in this Dominion to lay out a proper policy for advanced present-day agriculture by himself. We want the combined knowledge and experience of the very best three or five men that we can find in this Dominion, or, if necessary, we should go beyond the Dominion; but I do not think that is necessary.

Let me ask the Minister of Agriculture not to be shy in following in the footsteps that I endeavoured to trace out for him in this respect. I know how hard it is to do that, but perhaps he will be able to do something along the same line—anything, so long as we get proper and effective action. When the Prime Minister was over in London at the Imperial conference, how often we heard the excuse made on his behalf, "Well, at any rate, we are getting action." That is what the fellow said when he was going over Niagara falls in a barrel; but where was the action taking him to?

I shall not dwell much longer on the dairy industry. It is not my business to evolve government policies, but they helplessly call for it. For the sum of $50,000 a standardized creamery can be established. We have one in Finch, Ontario. It was established in the time of the Hon. Martin Burrell, just to demonstrate this one point I have been making. I do not claim that my proposal is new, but I say it is high time that the idea was given a trial, especially with butter and eggs selling at just a little better than half what they were selling at one year ago. Something must be done, and if anybody has any better idea I will at once dismiss mine and fall in behind that better one, but I want to be shown the better one first. The receipts of the plant at Finch increased from 2,000,000 pounds in 1912 to 11,000,000 pounds in 1925; that poundage includes the various products into which the milk and cream was made. The operations of that plant resulted in an increase from 10 to 31 cents per hundred which the plant was able to pay to its patrons for their milk. There was such a rush of dairymen to get milk sale accommodation in that factory that we were really embarrassed. Having got all the information we wanted from our operation of that Finch plant, we sold it for $25,000, which was the initial cost to the government. So the experiment meant no loss at all to the government, and it was of tremendous benefit to those particular farmers, and of tremendous benefit also to all those who followed the Hon. Martin Burrell in completing the superstructure on the foundation which he had laid. I think the department had something to do with it too. Doctor Ruddick knew the effective competition of New Zealand with larger dual factories, but we have to give the minister in charge the full credit which is coming to him because, after all, he had to dig up the coin for it, and that is no easy matter sometimes.

This dairy policy which I am suggesting, and which has been forced upon us by conditions in competitive countries, has already been started at Finch, and when we find the government so teetotally pledged to the hilt to get behind agriculture in this country, is it not time they were moving? Are we going to be met with the old stereotyped excuse that was given to us the other day in regard to needed public buildings, that it is hard to get the money? It is always hard to get money, and admittedly sometimes it is harder than others, but if this government puts up its tariff wall so high as to exclude imports, what can it expect but diminished revenues? If the government cannot get money anywhere else, what about the claim of the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) against the Department of Trade and Commerce in connection with the handling of the 1917-18 crop? I would like to see a little more about that. Probably the western farmers might lend the interest on that money, which would amount to about $20,000,000, to prime the pump, as it were, and start the thing going. Anything to get action, but not in the direction I was speaking of a minute ago. We have these two factors: The government is pledged to get behind agriculture, and there is this second factor that no industry is so closely associated with the health of the nation and the fertility of the soil as the dairying industry, and therefore I believe that the government would be justified in going to almost any limit in reason towards that desired end. They could start with an item in the estimates of $1,000,000, with the two old provinces of Quebec and Ontario each contributing $500,000. That would make a total of $2,000,000, with which you could construct forty up-to-date standardized combined—cheese, butter, etc.—dairy plants at a cost of $50,000 per plant. In ten years you would have four hundred. That seems to me reasonable. You cannot do it all at once. These parliament buildings were not all put up at once. The central buildings were erected first, then the east block, then the west block, later on the Connaught building, recently the Confederation block, and there will be other buildings later on. Only let us make a start in this matter. I suggest to my hon. friend that he start—but not in the direction of Niagara falls.

There is the example at Finch. It is not a model creamery, because the original building was added to from time to time until it became a combination of rookeries. Still it did better than a small creamery. Attempts in this direction have been made in the province of Quebec, but, oh, the established institutions, dating back fifty or sixty years, are hard to root up, so sacred do such local rural associations become. Private interests have their money invested in those little cheese factories turning out three or four cheeses a day. How can they make them pay on that small production? How can they afford to engage a proper cheesemaker?—and yet they make wonderful fine cheese therein. It may be that those private interests will have to be indemnified. The cost is so great if undertaken alone by the provinces, and the necessity is so urgent that I appeal to my hon. friends to say if this is not a good time to undertake cooperation action with the provinces. It is not new. I am prepared to hand the credit back to the Hon. Martin Burrell, to anybody, as long as we get something done.

Then we have our grain marketing. Unless there is a mighty quick right-about we are riding for a fall again there at the coming London conference. I do not think my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Weir) knows anything about grain marketing. He is a live stock man, a prize-winner, but I do not think he claims to be an authority on the marketing of grain any more than I am. There used to be one man in this house, the Hon. C. A. Dunning, whom I looked upon as the greatest authority in Canadian public life on grain marketing. Well, we will have to try to get along without him at present. But we have had a grain conference at Rome. Mr. Ferguson I notice, has got into trouble there with the Orange order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not mean to create a diversion, but that just slipped out. Live representatives of our farmers and the wheat pool in the west were there, and when it was over and the shaking of the dice completed, the net result was that Mr. Ferguson proudly swiped off a chunk of that original conference and decided to take it to London. London conference—doesn't that suggest something awful? But let us forget it. This is going to be a different one—just the same only different, unless quick-foot action is taken. As soon as the wheat-exporting countries started organizing, the wheat-importing countries also began to organize, and quite naturally. I am afraid my forty minutes is running out. Time does fly. Where was I Mr. Speaker, when I seemed to be interrupted? Oh, yes at Rome. A long distance away, but the world is getting—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Melville has been speaking for forty minutes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that even with the aid of this hearing device I have not quite caught your words. Is my forty minutes up, or have I another forty minutes?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has exhausted his forty minutes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All right. To be continued in my next.

Mr. ELIE BERTRAND (Prescott) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, as the representative of a riding almost entirely agricultural, I take great pleasure in supporting the motion offered by the hon member from Lisgar (Mr. Brown). It is readily seen that the agricultural class has not been receiving all the consideration it was entitled to expect from those elected to power last July. The pledges made during the campaign had led us to believe that agriculture was to be revolutionized. Our farmers were almost sure that their produce was going to bring extraordinarily high prices. But what did happen? If the hon. member for Lisgar brings down a motion of non-confidence, on the agricultural issue, I feel certain that the least surprised of all are the members of the Conservative party; what surprises them most is that this motion was not brought up before. What have we witnessed since these gentlemen came into power? First of all, at the emergency session of last September, when we voted $20,000,000 for the relief of unemployment throughout Canada, rather extraordinary powers were given the minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman), and a large number of items in our customs tariff were revised. Certain short items, here and there, in the newspapers sought to convey the impression that promises made to farmers were being implemented, for instance through the tariff increase on butter, and like products. But today we can clearly see that these changes brought no relief to the farming community as they were led to expect from the pledges made during the last campaign. At this advanced stage of the session it is high time that the hon. minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) should define the government's policy on the matter of agriculture. From both sides of the house it has been stated that the agricultural crisis is the worst in Canada at the present time. Nevertheless when certain activities of the department were under discussion and the minister asked if that were his policy, whether the four sections of his program were quoted or whether the said program were published in MacLean's magazine, I believe his answer always was that these were merely some of the activities of his department, and that they were not his entire program. After all the promises made by the Conservative party I think the Canadian farmer was entitled to expect at the very least a definite program for the protection of agriculture, and that quite some time ago.

On this score I wish to quote from a speech made at Winnipeg by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) during the course of the campaign. Amongst other things he said the following:

> Listen, you agriculturists from the west and all the other parts of Canada, you have been taught to look down upon the customs tariff and to pin your faith to free trade. Tell me, when did free trade ever benefit you? You say tariffs are only for the manufacturers. I will make them fight for you as well. I will use them to blast a way into the markets that have been closed to you.

Mr. Speaker, after statements like that were made repeatedly throughout the country, is it any wonder that our farmers began to believe they were at the dawn of a new day? They were told that the Canadian market had been flooded with New Zealand butter, that the Canadian farmer was not reaping enough profit on his produce, in consideration of the labour their production entailed, their situation was shown in a very bad light. They agreed that there was some truth in this and felt that the Conservative party really did intend to help them through a policy quite different from that actually put into practice.

Let us see what has happened since the Conservative party came into power and since they raised the tariff on butter. No new duty was levied on cheese because it was recognized that the price of this product was necessarily fixed by conditions on the world market. But the very fact that the duties on cheese were not raised—cheese being one of the most important of our dairy products—goes to show, does it not, that a tariff is of no use to the dairy industry since its production can bring only the price set by the markets of the entire world.

To-day the farmer is much worse off than before. An analysis of the present situation —these figures have been quoted on several occasions on the floor of the house, but I intend repeating them because I wish to draw them to the particular attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir)—shows that the price of butter has dropped considerably on the Montreal market within the last few days. After this weakening movement, the hon. Minister of Agriculture had a conference with Mr. T. W. Grieve, Mr. A. McKergow, Mr. K. D. Olive and Mr. John Charest, all butter merchants in Montreal. Since the conference we have heard it said that certain suggestions had been made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture—for instance, that butter be stored until later. I do not know whether I should attribute this advice to the hon. minister because I should have to ask him if he thought the suggestion very wise. I do not wish to be too severe towards the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who is himself a farmer, and has had the fact broadcast from one end of Canada to the other by the Conservative party; still we would like to see him rise to the situation and really do something for agriculture. Under the circumstances I believe I am well within my rights in putting him this question: What was the result of your meeting with the butter importers and merchants in Montreal? We certainly would like to know; and the farmers of the entire country ask you this question which appears to me to be fair, reasonable and timely just now.

The right hon. Prime Minister promised the farmer that all his ills would be remedied by the tariff; and we had the right to expect that the leader of the government would adopt a policy favourable to the farming community. Once more I say to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that the session is already well along and that still no policy has been announced. We trust that before the present debate is ended he will deem it his duty to reveal just what his program is in relation to Canadian agriculture. A visit to our different country markets during the last few weeks proves that the real situation is very far from that all these promises led us to expect.

During the campaign we were given to understand that the increase in customs duties would enhance the prices of agricultural produce and that the farmer would be protected like the other classes of the community.

According to the statistics disclosed on the floor of this house—these figures are known to all our Canadian citizens, because to-day the situation is being studied more than ever before—there is no reduction, or very little, in the price of the necessaries of life, while the prices of agricultural produce are constantly on the down-grade; as a consequence the condition of this industry in our Dominion is very bad, not to say desperate. But to come back to what we noticed: The difference in prices on the markets is so great that housewives are always surprised when they compare this years' prices with those they had to pay last year. But those who are most surprised and who feel it most are the farmers who see the prices of their products striking bottom all along the line. Here are a few facts revealed by an investigation made last February: Eggs which last year brought from 50 to 60 cents a dozen, were selling at 16 or 17 cents in February, 1931; butter which had been selling at from 45 to 50 cents a pound, had fallen to 29 or 30 cents. Since this investigation in February last the price of butter has fallen to 22 cents a pound. In 1930 the farmers sold their milk at from $1.50 to $1.60 per 100 pounds; in February, 1931, the price was from 85 to 90 cents.

May I tell the house that the last survey of the situation, made only a few days ago, shows that at present the farmer is getting a mere 60 or 70 cents for his milk.

Beef which sold at 5 or 6 cents is down to 1 and 1½. Pork has fallen from 12 to 9 cents a pound, and it will go lower. Horsehides which brought from $5 to $7, are selling to-day for $1.25; the same decrease has taken place in the price of cow and calf hides.

This list, which could be lengthened, is furnished by a group of farmers and quotes the prices they receive for their products. This state of affairs is not normal; it is disquieting for the future of agriculture. Those who till the soil have just as much right as our manufacturers and merchants to a legitimate and reasonable profit from the fruits of their labour. At present prices our farmers are actually losing money; they must dispose of nearly everything they sell at prices below cost.

It must be borne in mind that if agricultural produce is being sold at pre-war prices the farmer must pay after-the-war prices for nearly all he has to buy. This uneven condition is one of the main causes of the present agricultural unrest. This unrest, which is fast spreading, brings in its wake the abandonment of our farms.

The farmer who must buy in a high-priced market, is forced to sell dirt-cheap the fruits of his own labour, is overburdened with taxes, cannot find the money necessary to discharge his debts, or even to buy the implements he needs to lower the cost of production and meet foreign competition. Result: despite his efforts to climb the hill, he finds himself constantly slipping back; he loses courage and deserts his farm. That is just what is happening to-day, particularly in the eastern counties of Ontario; if I am to believe what I hear, the same thing is taking place in many other parts of Canada. In the municipality alone where reside the farmers mentioned before, thirty farms were sold between the month of February and the 12th of April last. Isn't that genuinely alarming? Will the hon. Minister of Agriculture see to it that the situation is improved, that the farmer's cost-price is stabilized and the farmer allowed to carry on without loss?

What does the government intend to do for the farmers? The question is being asked by every farmer in Canada to-day. When we ask the hon. minister to reveal his policy we are merely the spokesmen for the entire agricultural community of this country: They want to know, they are most anxious to know, just what the government intends doing to put an end to this agricultural crisis, and how they are going about it.

The millions voted for unemployment relief were of no benefit to our farmers; and the increase in the customs tariff did not prevent prices from falling to a lower level than at any time within the past fifteen years.

The farmer is opposed to a protective policy which increases the cost of living and forces him to pay any number of indirect taxes. He asks the government to reestablish the balance between the price of agricultural produce and that of other necessities of life, to reduce taxation, and to assist him in improving his operating methods and in winning markets for his products.

Pledges without number were given, but few were kept—I feel the Conservative party is willing to agree that this is so—and the deplorable situation of our farmers is going from bad to worse.

The Prime Minister has told us, Mr. Speaker, that the minister's estimates would show a policy favourable to agriculture. I merely record the statement made by the right hon Prime Minister when he spoke, April 28, on the motion I am supporting now. For the sake of accuracy I shall quote his words in his own language:

> By his estimates he has indicated how he purposes to give effect to some of his proposals.

A little further on, replying to another hon. member, he said this:

> Did he compare them with last year or the year before?

I was so astonished that after having studied the estimates, item by item, I began to believe that I had possibly made a mistake somewhere; so I decided to give a good part of my time to the solution of our present agricultural problems.

We note an increase of $175,000 in the vote for experimental farms, item 113. None of us would wish to discredit the work carried on by our experimental farms, and this vote will assuredly benefit the farming community; but is that the best method of helping our farmers over the present crisis? Under item 115: health of animals and administration for the purpose of assisting the farmer in improving his live stock, there has been a reduction of $300,000. Is that an indication that the Conservative government will shortly improve the condition of Canadian agriculture?

Continuing our search for what might be of benefit to the agricultural classes we find that under item No. 114, $650,000 is appropriated for royal agricultural fairs. Please note that there has been an increase in this vote. This would all be very well if the Conservatives had found new markets. But this figure of $650,000 certainly does appear extravagant, when the live stock improvement vote has been cut by $100,000.

I have no wish to criticize the vote of $650,000 for winter fairs. I do not say these exhibitions have not a useful purpose. Still, is that the way the Minister of Agriculture intends to assist the farmer, cutting $100,000 off the vote for the improvement of our cattle and increasing by $650,000 the appropriation for winter fairs?

Further on, under item 123, there is a grant of $100,000 to the executive committee of the World's Grain Congress; another increase. Please note that I have no wish to take exception to it; but while there is an increase here of $100,000, we notice that there is a reduction of $46,291.92 in the vote for cold storage warehouses. After thus combing the estimates of his department I ask the Minister of Agriculture: Where can I find any indication that the Conservative government intends adopting a policy that will improve the agricultural situation not only in my county, but all through the country?

Some time ago when I spoke on the speech from the throne I took the forty minutes allowed me to show just what was the cost-price of several farm products; milk, for instance, whether sold for cheesemaking, or for human consumption—this latter is more profitable. When production increases the farmers must keep their milk, which necessarily enters into the manufacture of cheese. I believe that on that occasion I proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that all the farmer could get for his milk, when used for cheese, if we take his time into account, was on the average between 80 and 90 cents per 100 pound, for either butter or cheese. As I said a while back, and I repeat, this figure has fallen to 60 or 70 cents per 100 pounds. However, for the purpose of the comparison I wish to make I shall abide by the figure of 80 to 90 cents per 100 pounds. I requested the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa to give me a statement of the cost of production for milk; at the same time I asked a number of farmers to demonstrate, with ample proof, what it had cost them to produce milk all during last year—the entire year must be taken into account if you wish to strike an accurate average. Milk cows do not produce all through the year; that is an impossibility. But during the time they are non-productive they must continue to be fed and cared for by the farmer. Hence the upkeep of the herd during the entire year enters into the cost of production of milk. Here is the report received from the experimental farm for the year 1929: The number of cows fed was 44. The production was 379,263 pounds. The following quantities of feed were used: ground grain, 125,480 pounds; roots and other fodder, 399,437 pounds; hay, 114,597 pounds; grazing, 134·5 per month. Total cost of feed, $3,880.73. The average cost of feeding per 100 pounds of milk was 92 cents.

I must add that in this estimate of the production-cost of milk the experimental farm does not include the labour-cost for this production, all of which should enter into an account of what it costs to produce milk. Consequently the farmers who furnished the figures I spoke of a moment ago, make it plain that the production-cost of milk, last year, was $1.35 per 100 pounds, including the cost of labour and other expenses which run through the entire twelve months; which figure is quite in accord with the statistics furnished, although the farmer produces at less cost. In their statistical report the authorities of the Central Experimental Farm have this to say, among other things:

> As regards the cost of the labour entering into the production of 100 pounds of milk, we must point out that conditions obtaining in the handling of the milk herd at the Ottawa Experimental Farm, where experimental work is constantly going on, are such as to make it impossible to arrive at an accurate estimate of the cost of labour as regards milk production; hence we have not quoted any figure. However the results of several investigations—not of the Central Experimental Farm, but of several investigations—lead us to believe that, on the average, feeding represents sixty per cent of the production-cost of milk, and labour, about forty per cent.

which proves that in 1929, at the Central Experimental Farm, at Ottawa, it cost $1.58 to produce 100 pounds of milk. I could not obtain the complete statistics for the year 1930. Frankly I believe that the problem was gone into much more seriously in the province of Quebec, where it was ascertained that the cost of production for milk varied between 65 cents and $1.40, or even more, per 100 pounds. To strike a fair average we may say that the farmer, although very often he is not so well-equipped as he would wish to be, and sometimes has not the money necessary for improvements, spent last $1.05 per 100 pounds of milk. And although there has been a decrease in the price of grain no one can show that the farmer is in a position to care for his herd throughout the year, to pay the wages of his help, and to sell milk at 65 or 70 cents per 100 pounds. It is plain therefore that the farmer is working at a loss. If the dairy industry is the main industry of a majority in the province of Ontario, and of quite a number of farming districts in the province of Quebec, how can the farmers get along if they continue to receive such low prices?

During the last campaign the farmers were given to understand that the tariff would come to their assistance, that new markets would be opened up for their products and that they would sell their produce at reasonable prices. If the conservative candidates at that time found that the farmers were not receiving reasonable prices, I ask them if to-day, after eight months of conservative administration, they consider prices reasonable: butter, 22 cents a pound; cheese, 9 cents; eggs 15 to 17 cents a dozen, and so forth. Prices have fallen outrageously since the conservative party came into power.

Quite everybody agrees to-day that the agricultural class carries the largest share of the burden of taxation, be it the customs tariff, the sales tax, or whatever else; that is to say that the farmers are taxed not only on property they own, but further on values which they do not possess. While I do not wish to make any comparison with other provinces, let me tell you that we, in the province of Ontario, where we are ruled over by a conservative government,—a past-master, believe me, at the art of tax-raising: I am really convinced that no other province in the world derives as much revenue from natural resources of whatever kind—still our government never succeed in meeting expenses, despite all the taxes they impose; they always end up with a deficit.

An hon. MEMBER: Take Quebec.

Mr. BERTRAND: I intend mentioning later some of the taxes that must be paid. Very often the government sidesteps the responsibility of collecting the tax directly and acts through the county council. To-day our county councils are recognized as being collection agencies for the political machine at Toronto. This is so far true that the Ontario farmer must pay to the province, not directly but through the county council, 20 per cent of the cost of construction and upkeep of provincial roads; we must pay 50 per cent of the construction of county roads, and 70 per cent of the cost of all township highways. Furthermore we must bear the entire cost of the administration of justice. This administration is in the hands of the provincial government, but the bill is sent to the county council which collects from the ratepayers and pays the bills. We must pay our share of the cost of administering the Mothers' Allowance Act, an excellent piece of social legislation, which I would be the last man to criticize. However, we bear a part of the cost of this tax, as also of the Old Age Pensions. We pay for the protection of children, for treatment given under the Hospitals Act, for primary and secondary schools, for school grants, and for the general administration of the municipalities and counties. Apart from that we must contribute towards debentures and the extinction of the local debt. The farmers bear the largest share of this burden of taxation.

Consequently it is little wonder that the farmers cannot stay on their land. The older generation try to hang on just as long as they can; but the youngsters are far less attached to the soil. What makes the oldsters try so hard to cling to their farms is that they have given 20 or 25 years of their lives to unceasing efforts in cultivating the land and striving to rid it of encumbrances. If during the last few years this older generation of farmers have succeeded in paying $2,000, $3,000 of $4,000 towards the settlement of their indebtedness; if to-day they find themselves so burdened with taxes that they cannot pay these taxes and their interest, and still earn a living, they at least do all they can to hold on to their equity, so as not to lose what they earned in years gone by.

But the new generation, not having given so much effort to the farm, are infinitely less interested. There you have one of the reasons why our young farmers are drifting into our cities and swelling the ranks of the unemployed. There is nothing surprising in the fact that from the month of September, 1930, to to-day, the number of unemployed rose from 117,000 to 300,000. The Conservatives cannot deny these figures now.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Did not the same conditions exist before?

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): I might say to the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) that if he compares the present prices of agricultural produce with those of last year he will be ashamed of his remark.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, all I have to say is simply this: If the Conservatives really believe that agriculture is the foundation of our entire economic system; if they really believe that Canadian prosperity depends on that class who produce the necessaries of life; if they believe that the prosperity of our country can only come through the prosperity of Canadian agriculture, then it is high time to make an about turn: let the prices of farm produce increase, let there be a reduction in the other necessaries of life. At the present time there is no economic balance; the situation is so utterly unequal that the farmer is getting beyond his depth, while the other classes of the community, who are protected, can still enjoy the fruits of their labour and safeguard the value of their property. Is that a proper balance? Is that prosperity? Before resuming my seat I make a special appeal to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). I say to him that this class must obtain something; it is absolutely necessary. Since the prices of their products are determined by world markets and we cannot increase them, for we must compete against other countries, then the goods farmers need must be brought within their reach and not be protected by fictitious tariffs which only result in creating enormous wealth, for a few captains of industry, from the sweat and toil of the farmer.

Mr. J.-A. VERVILLE (Lotbinière) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I shall avail myself of this opportunity to discuss certain items in connection with agriculture and to reiterate what other speakers have stated before. It seems to be the view held by all that our farmers are to be pitied that they are at present passing through a serious crisis and that their financial situation is critical.

Mr. DORION (Translation): That is not what Taschereau says, in Quebec.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Discuss federal politics. Represent this house and not the legislature of Quebec.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): We had hoped that with the change of government all our farmers would be happy after eight or nine months of a new administration. They are not. People in the country complain. We were told in the course of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, that we spoke too much of butter, hens and eggs. We shall, sir, never speak enough, because our opponents made an abuse of it last summer. Those who accepted everything they were being told as if it were the word of the gospel, are inclined to say to-day: we were deceived, the market has fallen through. I ask the government whether it is possible for them to raise our people's morale and prevent market dips as took place last week, 10 cents per week is too much.

The fact remains that, to whatever class we belong, we depend on the farming classes. Whether we be lawyers, doctors, merchants or anything else, we acknowledge that the farm is the foundation of all our institutions, and when you disturb it—you may threaten it to win elections—you disturb the vital parts of our economic structure.

If you do not fulfil your pledges to them, it will be your condemnation; at present, they are suffering; but beware of the future.

Have conditions improved since last July? I simply put the question and leave it to you to answer. Our people under the spell of fine pledges, splendid speeches delivered in public, changed their allegiance, thinking perhaps, that conditions would improve. Have they improved?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Things were quite bad.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Not so bad, but it is worse to-day. Those who changed their allegiance hoped that in doing so an improvement would take place. They now find that conditions have never been worse.

The question under consideration has been debated at length, I do not wish to scrutinize all the arguments that have been so well discussed in the house. May I, however, submit for the consideration of the house, certain suggestions although not new—they are inspired by excellent motives—they should nevertheless help the government in drawing up legislation which will help the farmers. I am aware that the government's intentions are the very best, I therefore do not wish to be unfair towards them. Their intentions are good, but they move too slowly. I do not mean that they are lazy, but the measures are slow in coming. I admit the government's good intentions, however, may I ask that they expedite matters as our people are in distress and the blame falls on the government, especially when the government contends that the depression was due to the King administration, now that they are in office what are we to expect.

May I, sir, make certain suggestions to the house, which are very simple and will be readily understood, they have been prompted by the needs of the farmers of my riding. My constituents have the same needs as those of other ridings, their needs are those of the farming class.

I know that the government recognize that there is a wound, a sore spot which they seek to heal, they have been seeking a remedy for the last nine months. Let them apply the remedy which will permit us to tell the people: The government which you have elected have found a cure. The government have no further need of seeking a panacea.

I wish to make known certain facts that I have observed in my riding and which, I trust, will serve, together with others that have been brought to the attention of the House, to solve the difficult problems which beset the government.

You are aware that, for ever so long, in fact it has never been otherwise, the farmer lives on the products of his farm, in some districts in Quebec, however, he also seeks outside the limits of his farm additional means to meet the needs of his family. He depends on his farm but to some extent on his sales of pulpwood as a side line. For the last few years, sir, the pulpwood industry has gone down and the reason given, is that our pulp mills have to compete with large foreign concerns, this obliges the merchant to put in the market a No. 1 product. Such is the situation. Our people are willing to do almost the impossible to supply the market with a product of superior quality, however, they must secure returns commensurate with their efforts. If the government are in earnest, if they really intend to help farmers, why not, while enacting measures to better the lot of large concerns for whom I have great respect and whose prosperity I wish to further, consider also the lot of those who are operating on a small scale, in the pulpwood industry. If in earnest, they will act immediately, if not, they will continue as they have done for the last nine months, that is do nothing.

In 1927, sir, the Liberal government enacted the Farm Loan measure and established in each province a board to look after the administration of the act and carry out its provisions. Why was this beneficial act passed? You all know why. Following the after-war depression, the disorganization of business, the facility with which our farmers had recourse to the Bankruptcy Act, there came a time when our farmers could no longer secure credit. The act of 1927, intended to help the farmer, had its good side. It was a new measure, a tentative one, which therefore lends itself to improvement. We gave it a trial. You are aware that following the bankruptcy act—

At six o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

NATURE OF SPEECHES ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS TO DETERMINE UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY

The house resumed from Friday, May 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth for the second reading of Bill No. 19, to amend the criminal code.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes at my disposal the other evening I was attempting to show the conditions which exist in some of our Canadian cities which have led me to introduce this amendment. I had referred to a statement which appeared in Toronto Saturday Night which referred to the Toronto police as follows:

> They have attempted to suspend the laws protecting free speech and free assembly in the case of a band of gentle idealists known as the Toronto branch of the Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Later on Toronto Saturday Night speaks of the sixty-eight professors, lecturers and instructors of the university of Toronto who declared that attempts to nullify or restrict one of the proudest heritages of the British people, that is, free speech, were shortsighted, inexpedient and intolerable; in the opinion of Saturday Night they were worse than that—they were criminal. I referred also to the representations on behalf of the Fellowship of Reconciliation which had been made by Doctor Salem G. Bland. I will quote again one sentence, as follows:

> What the Fellowship of Reconciliation does protest against is that a policeman, high or low, should take the law unto himself and decide in advance whether a meeting is going to be lawful or not. What right has he to judge beforehand?

Rabbi Eisendrath said:

> Nor can any rectification of the present attitude toward our own society content us unless the same liberty be guaranteed to the humblest and most helpless, the most friendless of our fellow-citizens, however mistaken and unpopular his views may be.

I mentioned the interference with certain groups in Toronto during the last elections, which led Colonel O. M. Biggar to write as follows:

If these—

Referring to certain allegations:

—are true it would appear that there has been established in Toronto what can only be properly described as a police tyranny entirely outside the law, and that they should be true would be incredible apart from the absence of any satisfactory denial or explanation of the allegations made by Mr. Cohen in his previous communication. The real question raised by these and Mr. Cohen's present letter is the question whether in Toronto the police are enforcing the law or are persecuting persons who hold opinions of which they disapprove by the confiscation of printed matter found in their possession, by physical violence, by the misuse of licensing powers, and by threat of the institution of criminal proceedings for which there is no foundation.

The response made to this letter of Colonel Biggar's is typical of the attitude of the police. It was stated that the police were apprehensive of a serious breach of the peace and a charge of vagrancy was laid against one man. The police statement is rather curious, being as follows:

When Ewan appeared in the police court the charge was withdrawn upon his stating that he was leaving the country for Europe on the following day. I do not know whether vagrancy was the proper charge in this case, or not. Probably one of the subsections of the vagrancy section would apply, but I am quite sure the charge of obstructing a police officer in the execution of his duty, or a breach of the city by-law would have been appropriate and that in this case Ewan was most generously dealt with by being permitted to go on his assurance that he was going to Europe.

This statement by the police officers themselves would go to show that they wanted to get rid of this man; they thought him undesirable and they considered the meeting which he was addressing to be an unlawful assembly. They were willing to charge him with vagrancy, and if that charge was not good enough, they thought they could substitute for it one of obstructing a police officer.

Several years ago a conviction against Harvey Murphy was appealed. On September 12, 1929, Mr. Justice Raney quashed the conviction and ordered the police to pay the costs. In delivering judgment, Mr. Justice Raney said:

One cannot help from reading the evidence but be impressed with the view that this police court case was the outcome of an attempt to hold a meeting by people who call themselves communists. If there was any offence that was the offence . . . . what disturbance was there except that created by the police? . . . I have been referred to no authority which makes refusing to move when instructed by a police officer an offence under the criminal code.

There are certain ways in which the police may proceed; at times they may insist that people move on, but I submit that attention should be paid to this decision of Mr. Justice Raney, that it is not a crime under the criminal code for a man to refuse to move on when instructed.

The police of Toronto are not the only ones who have adopted a very highhanded attitude in this regard. I should like to read a few extracts from an article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of April 6, as follows:

Police heads in Montreal are seeking within the ranks of their subordinates for three detectives against whom warrants have been issued charging common assault.

The article continues:

The warrants arise out of a suspected communist meeting, and out of "communist literature" which, when dropped by the small boy who was thought to be carrying it, oozed out onto the sidewalk in yokes and whites of eggs.

And again.

For some time a group of young people, interested in current events, social movements and books, have been gathering in private homes under the name of "The Saturday Night Club." There they discussed everything under the sun, agreed and disagreed with one another, and listened to speakers expound their specialties.

And in conclusion:

The nature of the Saturday Night Club, which was suspected of communist activities, is best indicated by a partial list of speakers who have addressed it. Among them were G. H. Corbett, secretary of the Society for the Protection of Women and Children; Rabbi Stern, of the Temple Emmanu'El; Mrs. Kensett of the Children's Bureau; H. S. Ross, K.C., Doctor Silverman, of the Mental Hygiene Clinic; C. P. Rice, and A. Heaps, M.P. for Winnipeg North.

It does seem ridiculous that the police of Montreal and the detectives who are more or less under their direction should not only undertake to supervise public halls but should actually maintain a system of espionage with regard to private homes. In this particular case a boy who was delivering eggs to the home was actually maltreated by the police, and action was taken against them. When private homes are put under surveillance like that, it seems to me it is time some further action is taken.

Not only have we this attitude on the part of the police in eastern cities, but the western police are beginning to copy their methods. I hold in my hand a copy of the Star-Phoenix of Saskatoon in which there is a despatch from North Battleford under date of April 13:

Claiming that there was too much talk of force, revolution and bloodshed in the offing, Chief of Police D. Felker on Saturday placed a ban on meetings of the North Battleford Open Forum in the Savoy cafe here, after a sixth meeting was addressed by Magistrate J. H. Greaves.

The article goes on:

It is understood that the ban on the Open Forum meetings applies only to the Savoy cafe, use of which was granted free by the proprietor, William Burgess. As no fee was paid for use of the building, no responsible officers of the organization needed to be elected. If future gatherings are held in a public hall which is rented, an executive would have to be elected. This is understood to be the object of the chief of police, so that if future meetings contained statements which bordered on sedition there would be persons to hold responsible.

That is a most extraordinary statement. It is a most extraordinary condition of affairs when a chief of police undertakes to interfere with a private meeting held in a private hall and insists that there must be organized a society so that he can hold some society responsible for what is said. Sedition is not that kind of crime. It is the individual who commits sedition, if sedition is committed, and it is the individual who should be charged. If this magistrate were guilty of sedition, the police might have arrested and charged him with sedition, but the idea of banning a meeting in a private hall or cafe because it was not held under the auspices of some society just illustrates the ridiculous length to which some of our police are going. It reminds me of a motto which was hung up in the office of an editor of a paper in the western states at the time of the war: "We are 100 per cent Americans, so keep your mouth shut." In fact I fancy we are simply copying some of the methods of the United States, and we ourselves are becoming somewhat infected by the hysteria that has prevailed so long on the other side of the line. I should like to call to the attention of hon. members and to commend this editorial which appeared yesterday in the Ottawa Journal and which deals with the communists:

Doesn't it all suggest that a lot of this talk about communists in Canada is inspired by fright, with the fright a product of ignorance, and that, taken together, the two things are hardly creditable to the country?

A little bit further on it states:

This country doesn't want to become another United States. Over there they have got to thinking that every man who dares to express an original idea must necessarily be a communist, if not an anarchist, so much so that they have made talk a crime, and have punished people for saying things that men like Jefferson would have thought mild. It will be far better for Canada if, in these matters, we stand by the old British way.

I heartily subscribe to that. This is a clipping of several years ago from a Toronto Star editorial and it is along the same lines:

How did England handle her affairs on May day? London is a wise old town, with a very long history. She has seen centuries and generations go by and from them has learned much. In most countries riots are spoken of and dealt with as revolutions. In England, revolutions, try as they may, can never palm themselves off as anything better than riots.

And so on.

There is much to be learned in this country from the way England deals with some things—guided by an experience gained over a long period.

It would seem as if we on this continent were in a period similar to that through which England passed over one hundred years ago. The other day I was looking up May's Constitutional History and I noticed away back in 1792 the situation then was described as follows:

The government invested the doings of a small knot of democrats—chiefly workingmen—with the dignity of a widespread conspiracy to overturn the constitution. Ruling over a free state, they learned to dread the people, in the spirit of tyrants. Instead of relying upon the sober judgment of the country, they appealed to its fears; and in repressing seditious practices, they were prepared to sacrifice liberty of opinion. Their policy, dictated by the circumstances of a time of strange and untried danger, was approved by the prevailing sentiment of their contemporaries; but has not been justified in an age of greater freedom, by the maturer judgment of posterity.

I should like to come to this amendment. It is very limited in scope. I admit that it will not touch many of the abuses which I have mentioned to-night. It has really nothing to do with sedition. Sedition is dealt with under an altogether different clause in the code. My amendment is intended simply to clarify and safeguard the law with regard to unlawful assembly. The main clause of the law as it now stands in the criminal code, section 87 reads:

An unlawful assembly is an assembly of three or more persons who, with intent to carry out any common purpose, assemble in such a manner or so conduct themselves when assembled as to cause persons in the neighborhood of such assembly to fear, on reasonable grounds, that the persons so assembled will disturb the peace tumultuously or will by such assembly needlessly and without any reasonable occasion provoke other persons to disturb the peace tumultuously.

I would add this amendment which has the effect of safeguarding the general right to assemble:

Nothing in this section shall restrict or interfere with the right of all persons peacefully to assemble for the purpose of discussing or hearing any discussion upon any matter of public interest, and such persons when so assembled shall not become an unlawful assembly merely by reason of speeches made to them or discussion carried on by them unless—

Then I think I add sufficient safeguards:

—unless the general nature and character of such speeches or discussion would be likely, in the opinion of firm and reasonable persons, to cause an immediate breach of the peace.

The police in the instance to which I have referred were not able to prove that there was any likelihood that there would be caused an immediate breach of the peace. They simply did not like the particular group of people and they said that they could not hold a meeting and that if a meeting was held, it would be called an unlawful assembly, An assembly ought not to be called unlawful unless there would be an immediate breach of the peace. That is clearly the intention of the law. Further, whether or not this assembly would be unlawful, is to be judged not by the utterance of a single word, but rather by the nature and character of such speeches. I think that is the rule that is generally applied: that you are not to judge a man by some isolated word he may use; you must base your judgment upon the general nature and character of the speeches. I may say, for the benefit of my lawyer friends who may be interested, that that phrasing is in accord with the words used in the summing up of the judge in the case of Rex vs. Burns, 16 Cox C.C. 355.

Further:

Such speeches or discussion would be likely, in the opinion of firm and reasonable persons—

I do not know whether you can find those firm and reasonable persons in Toronto, although I would make an exception in the case of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary), who is sitting opposite. I am quite willing to trust myself in his hands. But when it comes to some of those who are on the bench or the police force, I am not very sure that I should feel that I could so entrust myself. I might say that this phrase, "firm and reasonable persons" is an almost verbatim reproduction of a phrase used in the judgment in the leading case of Rex vs. Vincent, which is cited in Crankshaws's Criminal Code, fifth edition, pages 108-109.

I do not think it is necessary for me to add anything to the case which I have presented. Let me repeat that this amendment has nothing whatever to do with sedition, and that it is very limited in its scope. It seeks simply to prevent some of the abuses which have grown up in the last few months, owing largely, I think, to ignorance and hysteria on the part of certain individuals in this country. As the side note to the bill states, and I cannot put it in better words, it is intended simply to provide a safeguarding clause to ensure that the general nature and character of speeches upon public affairs must be the ground for regarding any meeting unlawful. I cannot very well see, Mr. Speaker, how the house can refuse to accept an amendment of this character.

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I desire to make a few brief observations on the subject matter of this bill. I impute no improper motives to the hon. gentleman who has fathered this proposed legislation (Mr. Woodsworth). He has stated to us that the amendment is very limited in its scope, and that it is his desire to clarify and to safeguard the law as it now stands. I submit to you, sir, and to the hon. members of this house, that the law as it now stands is perfectly clear and needs no clarifying, and further, that the privileges of any honest citizen in this country are to-day amply safeguarded under the existing provisions of the criminal code.

In my humble opinion the hon. gentleman has come to the wrong jurisdiction to attain the end which he has in view. I listened attentively to him and his plea, his indictment, if I may so call it, is not against the law as it stands on the statute books to-day, but against the manner in which that law is carried out by those who are charged with the responsibility of administering it. May I remind him most respectively that the parliament of Canada is not charged with the responsibility of administering the criminal law. That responsibility rests solely upon the provincial jurisdiction, and it is to those jurisdictions that the hon. gentleman and those associated with him should address themselves on this subject.

I hold no brief for the police force of the city of Toronto, but if I had to make a decision, I would say very frankly that I am on the side of the police, and such I am sure would be the view of all thoughtful men in this assembly to-night. What is the law? The hon. gentleman has read the first part of section 87 of the criminal code relating to this matter, as follows:

An unlawful assembly is an assembly of three or more persons who, with intent to carry out any common purpose—

The intent, I remark, is an integral element of the offence:

—assembles in such a manner or so conduct themselves when assembled as to cause persons in the neighborhood of such assembly to fear, on reasonable grounds, that the persons so assembled will disturb the peace tumultuously, or will by such assembly needlessly and without any reasonable occasion provoke other persons to disturb the peace tumultuously.

I admit frankly that it is often very difficult, sometimes impossible, to prove the intent with which people may assemble together. The intent may develop only after they have assembled and have spoken, and after they have caused the damage which is sought to be prevented. To limit the law in any way, to restrict it—not to use the word "clarify"—to restrict the law even in the very mild manner suggested by the hon. gentleman would be, I feel, to take away from those charged with the duty and responsibility and obligation of preserving the peace in this country some of the powers which they now have and upon which they must lean in the discharge of their duty.

I suggest to the hon. gentleman that his proposed amendment will in no event meet the situation which he apparently desires to meet. But even if he did take away some of their present powers from the police of this country, is it desirable in this time of unrest that the arm of the law be weakened rather than strengthened? I think we should pause before we do anything of a legislative character in this house which would have the effect of saying to those charged with the responsibility of administering the law: This you shall do, and this you shall not do. If the present law is too stringent, the hon. gentleman desires it to be ameliorated on the part of those who desire—what? After all, what do those people in Toronto desire? I have not been present at their meetings and I have not heard directly what they do desire, but if I understand correctly from those who have been present and have reported their proceedings, the hand of these people is against established authority in this country. That is what it is; and would it not be a pretty spectacle in this year 1931 if parliament were to weaken the arm of the law which is to protect your home and mine, your family and mine? Certainly I am against anything that would tend toward the weakening of the authority of those charged with the responsibility of maintaining law and order. The onus in every case of proving a violation of the law is upon those who allege the law to have been violated, upon those who seek to punish someone charged with its violation; and if the chief of police of the city of Toronto or some other large municipality, having a direct sense of the responsibility that rests upon him, has forbidden the holding of certain public meetings, is it not fair for hon. members to assume that he has reasonable grounds for his attitude, reasonable grounds to believe that there will be a breach of the peace? After all, the police must be the judge. I submit that parliament, having heard the few isolated instances that were related to the house by the promoter of the bill, and knowing perhaps none of the circumstances surrounding a single one of these cases—I submit that the hon. member himself cannot have any first-hand information, no information other than what he has gleaned from the newspapers—should not assume the responsibility of weakening the position of those in authority. Not for one minute do I believe that the members of this house will be so forgetful of their responsibility to our citizenship as to do anything of that sort, even in a negative manner; because I submit, and shall presently argue, that the proposed amendment is negative in itself and will have no force and effect.

What the hon. gentleman seeks to accomplish by his proposed amendment is now, I submit, the law of this country. That being so, the bill itself is wholly unnecessary. What is the affirmative part of the bill? He proposes to add the following subsection to section 87 of the criminal code:

Nothing in this section shall restrict or interfere with the right of all persons peacefully to assemble for the purpose of discussing or hearing any discussion upon any matter of public interest—

That is the law to-day, it always has been, and I hope it always will be, and there is no need to put upon the statute books any affirmative assertion such as is contained in what I have read. The proposed clause continues:

—and such persons when so assembled shall not become an unlawful assembly merely by reason of speeches made to them or discussion carried on by them—

Men must do much more than merely listen to speeches before they come within the purview of our criminal law. That is just what the law as it now stands provides for. Section 87 deals with intent, and I submit this is a very important element in the consideration of the question. It reads:

An unlawful assembly is an assembly of three or more persons who, with intent to carry out any common purpose, assemble in such a manner or so conduct themselves when assembled as to cause persons in the neighbourhood of such assembly to fear, on reasonable grounds,—

Who are to be the judges of these grounds, —those making the speeches? Surely not.

Those in authority on the ground are charged with that responsibility and they must act, if, in their judgment on reasonable grounds, the position has become such that there is danger of a breach of the peace. I feel confident that this house will never do anything to impair the authority and power of those charged with that responsibility. The part of the amending clause that I have quoted, is, I submit, the criminal law of Canada to-day, and therefore this is wholly unnecessary. But the hon. gentleman, in language which apparently he has obtained from some legal decision, adds that there shall be no restriction—

—unless the general nature and character of such speeches or discussion would be likely, in the opinion of firm and reasonable persons, to cause an immediate breach of the peace.

"Immediate breach of the peace," that is to say, the hon. gentleman would lock the barn door after the horse is stolen—he would allow the people to meet, say anything they like, and after they have caused an "immediate breach of the peace" an indictable offence would be committed. In my opinion that is far too limited in its scope. We had better leave section 87 as it is, and not wait until there has been a breach of the peace before we bring those who assume that position within the ambit of the criminal law. I do not believe for a minute that on sober, calm reflection hon. members will be willing to vote for anything of that character.

Let me read very briefly what Roscoe in his work on criminal evidence says in regard to proof of unlawful assembly:

Proof of an unlawful assembly. Any meeting whatsoever, of great numbers of people, with such circumstances of terror as cannot but endanger the public peace, and raise fears and jealousies amongst the king's subjects, seems properly to be called an unlawful assembly.

If in the city of Toronto and in other places in the Dominion to which my hon. friend has referred the meetings which have been held there have not been of the character described by Roscoe, then I tell him there has been an excess of zeal on the part of those in authority. But that is no reason why this house should in a proper case take away from the authorities the power which is now theirs of acting properly within their discretion. Rather should my hon. friend, as I said a moment ago, appeal to those in authority over the police in the city of Toronto. I understand that the local police commission is composed of reputable men, first class citizens. Surely if my hon. friend has a good case he will not be denied a hearing in "Toronto the good." Surely they are not going to take away the liberty of the subject. What I fear is happening in Toronto, and is the desire of certain people there, is not liberty of speech but licence. If that be so, then I say, more power to the arm of the law, exercised with proper consideration and with reasonable care for the liberty of the subject.

For the reasons given, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. The law as it stands is quite clear, and in support of this I could cite judicial decisions from now till midnight, but I will not inflict them on the house. I submit there is no necessity to clarify the law, the liberty of the subject being already well safeguarded.

Mr. G. M. McDADE (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I also am unalterably opposed to the amendment. I agree with my hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) that the provisions of the criminal code are quite adequate and do not involve any hardship on those who do not transgress them. The police authorities must enforce section 87 and the other provisions of the code. The right of every man to a fair trial has always been recognized under British institutions. As the section stands an unlawful assembly, or the members of it, would be charged with an indictable offence. That involves the right of trial by jury. As my hon. friend from York-Sunbury has said, in all criminal cases the burden of proof is on the crown. In other words, the accused is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proven, and his guilt must be established beyond a reasonable doubt founded on the evidence. What does my hon. friend propose? That an assembly shall not become an unlawful assembly:

—unless the general nature and character of such speeches or discussion would be likely, in the opinion of firm and reasonable persons, to cause an immediate breach of the peace.

Mark you, Mr. Speaker, an "immediate breach of the peace." If section 87 were so amended, men could assemble and as a matter of fact cause a riot within five minutes. I say that this is a bad piece of legislation, to which I am unalterably opposed. We in New Brunswick do not seek legislation of this kind, and just here I should like to question the right of the hon. members for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) to speak on behalf of that great class of citizens, the labour element of Canada. I would far rather take the advice and counsel of such outstanding labour men in the province of New Brunswick as Mr. John S. Martin, former Labour member of the legislative assembly at Fredericton, or of Mr. Stanley S. Fleiger, of the town of Chatham, than that of my hon. friends opposite. The men I have mentioned, I submit, represent true Canadian labour; their judgment is sound and their capacity is unquestioned.

Just in conclusion let me say as a friend of labour, as one who had the high privilege of representing this great class in the courts of the land at the time of the strike in the lumber industry on the Miramichi river, about ten years ago, and as one who, as I feel, has received the wholehearted support of this great element in my county, that this bill does not commend itself to my labour friends in New Brunswick, and I for one am opposed to it. I invite hon. members on both sides of the house to come to a realization of the serious consequences of the proposed amendment. To me it seems to introduce a very radical and drastic change in our laws, and I submit that the law as it stands at the present time is adequate to preserve to our citizens the right to assemble for all lawful purposes.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much attention to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), and I can assure him that as far as he is concerned he is perfectly safe in my hands in Toronto or elsewhere, although I cannot say the same for his bill. As other hon. members have said, my hon. friend directed his remarks rather to the administration of the criminal law, particularly with reference to its administration in Toronto, than to the substance of the law as we have it on the statute books. The hon. member read from section 87 of the criminal code the definition of an unlawful assembly, but I would call his attention to the next subsection of that same section, which goes on to say:

> 2. Persons lawfully assembled may become an unlawful assembly if they conduct themselves with a common purpose in such a manner as would have made their assembling unlawful if they had assembled in that manner for that purpose.

I think that clearly indicates that there are and there can be, without any restriction of the law, meetings which are lawful, peaceful assemblies. That is to say, people may come together peacefully and lawfully, and may turn that meeting into an unlawful assembly by their conduct during the course of the meeting. Their conduct during the course of the meeting is not confined to physical conduct, gestures or anything like that, but I should say, embraces as well speaking and discussion, the manner of speaking and the manner of discussion. So when my hon. friend is introducing an amendment to provide that people may come peacefully to a meeting, he is providing for something which is already provided for or implied by the statute as being already quite right and proper.

My hon. friend has gone on in his bill to say that this peaceful or lawful meeting shall not become an unlawful assembly merely by reason of speeches made to that assembly or discussion carried on therein. In the explanatory note to the bill my hon. friend states, as he stated during the course of his remarks:

> This bill is intended simply to provide a safeguarding clause to insure that the general nature and character of speeches upon public affairs must be the ground for regarding any meeting as unlawful.

If that is what the bill is designed to bring into effect, certainly it is not done by the measure proposed, which provides that you shall not call a meeting an unlawful assembly, or it shall not become an unlawful assembly, merely by reason of the speeches made. It may be an unlawful assembly for other reasons; as I say, under subsection 2 of section 87 it is provided in what ways a meeting may become unlawful, that is, by unlawful conduct including speeches.

I thoroughly agree with the two speakers who preceded me that there is nothing in this bill, with some exceptions to which I shall come in a moment, which carries the law one step further than it is at the present moment. There are certain points in the bill to which my attention is directed; the first is that the unlawful conduct must cause an immediate breach of the peace. There my hon. friend is making, from his point of view, a much less drastic bill than the code as it stands. Under the present code people at such meetings must conduct themselves so as to disturb the peace tumultuously, before the meeting can be termed an unlawful assembly. It would be more difficult to convict a person of attempting to disturb the peace tumultuously than of doing something which may provoke an immediate breach of the peace. But the introduction of the word "immediate" would indicate that, taking an extreme case, if somebody deliberately instructed people as to the preparation and use of bombs and as to the method to be followed the next day in using those bombs on some public building, certainly there would be a breach of the peace involved, but not occurring until the next day. My hon. friend, however, would say that such a meeting was not unlawful because the breach of the peace which was provoked was not an immediate breach. Again, if we are to confine the unlawful conduct to speeches, no longer could one be convicted for any other method of agitation than that of the spoken word at a meeting.

I fear these words very greatly lessen the effect of the statute as it stands now, while getting my friend no further along the path which he seeks to tread, and for those reasons it seems to me the bill should not pass. In one view, the bill means nothing and so is unnecessary, and secondly there is the other reason that we do not know what the difficulty would be if, in order to convict, it had to be proved that the words were calculated to produce an immediate breach of the peace. In addition, my hon. friend provides in this bill that the nature and character of the speeches must be such as would have a certain effect on a "firm and reasonable person." I do not know such a class of persons in Toronto or anywhere else; they are not known to the law. My hon. friend is very much safer with the words of the section as they stand, which provide that the culpable conduct must be such as to cause persons in the neighbourhood to fear on reasonable grounds. That is the law as it stands now; reasonable grounds must be shown.

My hon. friend has outlined—and perhaps this is what brings me to my feet more than anything else—the history of certain happenings in the city of Toronto. The Board of Police Commissioners is not, of course, constituted under anything contained in the statutes of this parliament. As another hon. member said, it is independent of the city council and, so far as I know, the only restriction the city council is able to impose upon the actions of the board of police commissioners is that the board has to spend only the money the city council votes for that purpose, with this proviso, that the city council has nothing to say as to the number of policemen thought to be necessary for the preservation of law and order. That is a matter within the sole jurisdiction of the Board of Police Commissioners. I am not here to defend every action of the Board of Police Commissioners of Toronto, and I may say that in Toronto there has been a good deal of discussion as to whether that board under certain circumstances was right or not. They did pass two years ago some sort of order with reference to speeches made in other tongues than English, but I fancy it must be a dead letter. It would not appeal to me as a proper regulation to be in force, and if it is in force I can only say that I have sat time and again in meetings in Toronto where the speeches were delivered in some language other than English. I do not know what has become of that regulation. I was not at home at the time of its discussion when it was first promulgated, but I should think it has become a dead letter, at least so far as my knowledge of it goes.

With respect to this band of gentle idealists referred to by Saturday Night and known as the Toronto branch of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, the names of persons I have heard as belonging to it and interested in its affairs are the names of very respectable citizens, and I do know that they had no end of a time with the Board of Police Commissioners. They were admitted to a hearing and were allowed to lay their charge and prove it if they could. About the beginning of the present year the present mayor, who became a member of the Board of Police Commissioners, undertook, with the assent of the other members of the board, to indicate the policy of that commission with regard to what is called free speech. The policy so enunciated by his worship has been generally accepted in the city of Toronto as being perfectly right: that is, that free speech, within the law and with proper respect for British institutions, British traditions and British principles, is the sort of speech that is to be allowed and encouraged in Toronto, as it probably is in every other part of the country. I mention this merely to show that if there was a misunderstanding as to what was thought by the police to be proper in the way of speech, the policy so enunciated by his worship the mayor, representing the Board of Police Commissioners, within the last two or three months, seems to have satisfied everyone as settling any controversy that had arisen.

There is no intimidation, I am advised, by the Board of Police Commissioners, of the owners of halls as to what meetings they shall allow in those halls. The owner is responsible under the code for certain happenings, and he would remain so responsible under the amendment. There is no attempt to say to him whom he shall allow in his hall, what price he shall charge, or whether there shall be a licence for any meeting. I thought it well to clear up in the mind of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) the situation as it exists in Toronto and as I have indicated it.

So far as my city is concerned, my hon. friend need not concern himself very much. The people of Toronto are fully alive to the menace that lies in communism. They recognize that perhaps Toronto is the centre of communistic activity in Canada; at least, I am told that Toronto is its headquarters.

The people of that city realize that and will watch carefully. But they are not an unfair people; they do not propose to have the Board of Police Commissioners act outside the law. Neither do they wish to restrict in the least that freedom of speech so eloquently discussed by my hon. friend. Freedom of speech is not licence; it must be within the law—the law as it is laid down in the statute books or, it may be, the common law. And it is not asking too much, I think, when I ask the house to agree with me that freedom of speech must imply that those using that freedom are to use it with respect for British traditions, principles and institutions. That is what we are striving to enforce in Toronto. We are not troubled to any great extent in our administration, and any difficulty we have we believe we shall work out of satisfactorily.

I do not believe that on one construction this proposed section would add anything to the criminal law. On the other view, if we enact anything about the opinion "of firm and reasonable persons," something as to utterances that would cause an immediate breach of the peace, I do not know on what principles you would direct the jury as to whether or not the onus had been proved or the defence made out. It would be introducing something new, something uncertain, to which I am not prepared to accede. For these reasons I do not believe that this bill should pass, and I shall vote accordingly.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): I am in favour of this measure because of the experience I have had throughout Canada during the last ten years. As I read a few days ago the bill submitted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) I take it that meetings which would be a probable cause of immediate trouble he would not be in favour of. But I rise mainly to reply to the remarks of my hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), who I see is smiling; because just as I was leaving the chamber a little while ago he was making a statement to the effect that the people whom it is the object of this bill to relieve were men whose hands were against society. All I have to say in that regard is this, that these very same men and women who are now pictured as having their hands raised against society were pictured during the last election as reasonable Canadian citizens who had the misfortune to be unemployed, and for whom the government of that day would do nothing. These very people were collected to go around with white labels on the lapels of their coats in order that they might be recognized as good Canadian citizens unemployed, for whom the government of that day would do nothing at all. But now it appears they are undesirables; and the very men who congregated these people together for election purposes now wish to deport them and will not give them permission to hold meetings.

Mr. TURNBULL: Where did that occur?

Mr. HEENAN: It occurred in the home town of my hon. friend, in Regina.

Mr. TURNBULL: The people who wore those labels put them on themselves.

Mr. ERNST: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member is attributing to those on this side something they never did. No one on this side attacked any unemployed.

Mr. HEENAN: Quit quibbling now.

Mr. ERNST: I am not quibbling.

Mr. HEENAN: Hon. gentlemen do not like to hear this, Mr. Speaker; but, as I have said, these men were collected together in Regina and in Winnipeg also.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. It is now nine o'clock, and the house will revert to the motion under consideration at six o'clock.

SUPPLY—AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bennett for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Brown.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): When the house rose at six o'clock I was commenting on the Farm Loan. I stated that in 1927, the Liberal government of the day had a measure enacted so as to help the farmers to develop their farms by means of loans. I admire our banking system. It has been rendering great services to our people. However, it will never answer the wishes or the needs of the farming classes, it was not established for that purpose, and the government realized that fact. Our farmers had to be assisted.

During the after-war depression, and the disorganisation of business which followed, farmers availed themselves, extensively, of the Bankruptcy Act, which was placed at their disposal to enrich certain people who were in that business, and laid hands on whatever assets the farmers might have, whereby the creditors and merchants, were left without anything on which to fall back. Many a time efforts were made and rightly so to amend this act, I shall again refer to the subject shortly.

The Farm Loan Act was a new measure, it was possible to amend and improve it. It did not quite answer the end for which it was enacted. Among the reasons which prevented it being popular as it should have been, I shall point out three which should, at present, strongly appeal to the government. First, the 6½ per cent rate is too high; secondly, the fees in connection with a loan are too high; thirdly, the 5 per cent required from the borrower, as board fund, does not appeal to the farmer.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Who is responsible for this act? Who had it passed?

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): You are responsible.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I respectfully suggest that if the government—who have the interests of the farming classes at heart—wish sincerely to better the lot of farmers, there are other means than having subsidies of millions of dollars voted. There are certain considerations which must be kept in mind, and in this respect, I wish to make some suggestions. I shall willingly answer questions. There is an hon. member on the government benches who has a resolution on the orders of the day, the purport of which is to reduce the rate on interest from 6½ per cent to 5 per cent. I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Laflèche) for his resolution. It meets my wishes and those of the entire country, and for this reason the government will probably accept it. This change has been asked in the past and it is also being requested this year. I personally make the same request. The provisions of the Act are known, they have been taken advantage of, if, however, they were made more easy they would become more popular. This could be done by reducing the rate of interest from 6½ per cent to 4 per cent, not 5 or 5½ per cent but 4 per cent.

It is true that the Quebec government, in its kindness and solicitude for the people, agreed to pay what should have been the federal government's share, nevertheless it still remains a Dominion Act. Have some pride, assume the responsibility of your act and take up your share of payments, in connection with legislation of which you should bear the burden, and shoulder the whole responsibility.

Mr. DORION (Translation): You have. . .

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation). You may put that question in half an hour from now. Moreover, the fees necessary to obtain a loan are too high. I know this through experience because I am in the business.

Mr. LAURIN (Translation): Your fees are too high.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): My services are free. That is why I am a poor man —and I wish to remain so—I give my services free to my fellow-citizens. The fees necessary to obtain a loan are too high I said. There are occasions when the board is most unreasonable in its demands and the farmers are unable to meet them. Let the government acquit these fees and strike out the clause which forces the borrower to pay 5 per cent on the amount loaned to him from the funds of the board. The farmer who borrows is not a lender, but a borrower and if he is required to contribute 5 per cent to the funds of the board, he strikes a bad bargain. Seeing that the government has established the Farm Loan Board to assist farmers, let them not follow the example of banks. It should not be looked upon as a paying business. The banks look after their interest, but the Farm Loan Board is a different institution, it is a government affair, it was enacted to help the farmer. Let us lend him a hand, and let us never demand from the farmer who borrows $5,000 to return 5 per cent of that amount.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Why did you not bring that matter up last year?

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): These three considerations are the reason why the present act, although in force, is not as popular as it should be. Let the government, which made so many pledges which they cannot realize, adopt the amendment that I have suggested, it would be a splendid move.

Moreover, the Bankruptcy Act stands as an appendix to the previous act. The former is indeed a fine piece of legislation. Like many others, I ask—my only aim being to serve the farming community—that the farmers be deprived of the facility which is given them of having recourse to the Bankruptcy Act. In the past, our people called on their neighbours, their relatives or their friends, when they needed $500, $1,000 or $5,000, and they got it. Owing to after-war conditions and the present depression, no farmer is able to borrow $500, $200 not even $100 from a relative or friend; no one will advance him money. What contributed to ruin entirely the farmer's credit? Practically, it was the Bankruptcy Act. I do not wish to despoil it of its merits, for it serves its purpose. However, as far as the farmer is concerned, I ask the government—others have made that request—to withdraw from the farmer that opportunity which is afforded him of going into bankruptcy whenever he sees fit. That is what ruined his credit and forces him, at present, to beg from friends the bread needed at home.

Mr. DORION (Translation). It took you some time to discover that.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): There is another question. Will our opponents—who claim to be the friend of the farming class—after being responsible for the conditions under which we live and of which the farmers bitterly complain, after their deceitful pledges, try to remedy these conditions by giving away millions of dollars. I well recall, just a few years past when we were in power, they strongly criticized our experimental farms. I shall explain: there are throughout the country large experimental farms which are very useful and fulfil the end for which they were established, they have already rendered great service to agriculture. I contend that this is the time to give this kind of farm education the greatest development and publicity. Instead of establishing experimental farms in each district let us utilize those already established for experimental purposes, and let us spread farm education by establishing demonstration farms —not one but many—so that all may benefit by them.

Are you aware that, in certain sections of the country, when our farmers leave to visit these experimental farms, they act very much as if they were going to an Exhibition.

Educate our farming classes and give them the means to acquire useful knowledge. Do not oblige them to travel at much expense to themselves so as to enjoy a good dinner and see fine and healthy cattle; keep them on the farm, in their parishes if necessary, and teach them the knowledge they require, and this, at no expense to them. That was a policy advocated in the past by our opponents which they now forget to put into practice.

Mr. DORION (Translation): You never thought of applying it since 1921?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): If the constituents of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency heard him, they would rejoice to note that he is not dumb.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Pep, sir, is the lot of youth. My friend will become wiser with years, if not his constituents may show some resentment for his interference. If the government is in earnest—which I doubt—they have something better to do than vote millions of dollars. The people have been suffering for the last nine months and they call for markets to sell their products. If, in assuming office Mr. Bennett closes all gates, the people will smash them, however, owing to the respect they have for law, they will bide their time. Give us markets, that is all we ask. You were put in office owing to the extraordinary pledges you gave, you promised to make us happy, do so! You promised our farmers that they would sell their butter at 50 cents per pound, find them such a market. You equally promised them that they would sell their eggs from 35 to 40 cents per dozen, show them where they can get those prices, it is your duty.

At present, potatoes are sold $1.00 per bag; in the past they fetched $2.00; find them such a market. Those are pledges which were not kept, and there is no getting out of it. Stop dreaming and come back to earth. Protection has perhaps its good side, however, we are living in too critical a time to keep on dreaming. Face the facts. Our farmers demand markets for the sale of their products.

I do not wish to delay the house, however, there are questions that must be discussed and the house is the proper place to do so. I was asked on Saturday last by my constituents, why things were at a stand-still. My reply was: We are unable to make any progress, Mr. Bennett is in office, and Mr. Bennett is the government; forward your requests to the Prime Minister. May I, sir, give the same advice to everybody: that in future all requests should be made to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). The people will no doubt request that all pledges be fulfilled. May I also, sir, console my constituents by telling them: Be courageous, live in hope. Perhaps this rule of terror will not last long and in a few years a good Liberal regime may replace the present one and prove satisfactory to you.

The Conservatives, sir, never let up talking of distrust and discouragement during their election campaign. They told the people: The King government is no good, banish it, place us in office, we will look after your interests. We will revive what seems dead. For sometime past however, things have been more than ever at a standstill. We also note that no pledges were kept. It behooves any one who has a policy to submit and represents his fellow citizens, to constantly inspire them with confidence. What happened last summer? Disillusion and distrust were continuously being referred to.

The most cherished thought which a public man can harbour, is that intimate assurance of having bettered the people and of having inspired them with confidence in the administrative order. If I respect the powers that be, —the king, the government which protects me—I have confidence in them. I clearly realize that this government forgets its mission when it preaches otherwise.

In closing my remarks, may I give an advice to the leader of the government, that is: to set aside all selfishness and walk hand in hand with the people instead of dreaming, to efficiently govern the country, by keeping in touch with its needs; to be one of the people, help them and be of some service to them.

I shall end my speech by saying: Let us endeavour to have the people love what they should love. Let us tell them: love your country, love its administration,—though I realize they cannot love those who are now in power,—love those in office when they are worthy of it, but in any case show respect for law and order.

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is not in his seat—

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): He never is.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I am in no way complaining; but I would have been happy to see him here and I hope that tomorrow or in the course of the next few days he will acquaint himself with the speech just delivered by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Verville), which speech levelled pointed, though quite justified, criticism at the preceding administration.

My hon. friend from Lotbinière finds fault with the Farm Loan Act. He cannot reasonably claim that the present government has had time to change the act. When the hon. member complains that the farmer who borrows money must pay exorbitant rates everybody in the house understands that he is criticizing the adminstration of the former prime minister of this country.

When the hon. member for Lotbinière speaks of our experimental farms and gives advice to the government, he is quite plainly criticizing the former regime, since the present government has not had time to make any changes as regards experimental farms. However, I can assure my hon. friend that such changes will be made before long; and thereafter our experimental farms will be of some use to agriculture.

I had no intention of taking part in the present debate; but so many contradictory, incomplete and even inaccurate statements have been made on the floor of this house that I felt it my duty as the representative of a farming constituency, to put matters in their proper light.

The hon. members of the opposition say that the price of butter has fallen very low. Quite so. Nobody denies that fact. But our friends on the other side of the house seek to lay the blame at the door of the present government. For this purpose the house has been treated to certain statements which, I repeat what I said a moment ago, are inaccurate and incomplete; some are even contrary to the true state of affairs. For instance, Mr. Speaker, it was stated that Canada had imported 2,098,379 pounds of butter during the first three months of 1931. That is a fact. But to be fair to the government and make the case more complete our friends of the opposition should have made the comparison between the first three months of 1930 and the first three months of the present year. This comparison shows that Canada, during the first three months of the year 1930, imported 24,159,568 pounds of butter.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): This year or last year?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (Translation): The hon. member for Compton has the floor. Hon. members may not interrupt, without having first obtained his consent.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): We have a right to know if he means this year or last year.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): The comparison I have just made is between the imports of 1931 and 1930. The hon. member doubtless knows that we lived through 1930 before entering 1931.

More than that, the quantity of butter in cold storage on October 1, 1930, was 37,255,263 pounds; at the present time the total is only six million and a few hundred thousand pounds.

I suppose these hon. gentlemen can hardly restrain themselves from interrupting me again with the cry: Just the same prices have gone down. Once more I admit the truth of that statement.

Mr. Speaker, our opposition friends have stated also that from the month of August, 1930, to January 1, 1931, Canada imported from New Zealand and Australia 4,933,303 pounds of butter.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Will my hon. friend allow a question? If there were such a large quantity of butter in cold storage why did you admit another four million pounds and why did you reduce the duty on Australian butter from 1·7 cents to 1 cent?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): If the hon. member will be patient a moment I intend to discuss that matter a little later on.

The opposition seek to make the present government responsible for the importation of 4,933,303 pounds of butter between August 1, 1930, and January 1, 1931. These hon. gentlemen are well acquainted with the New Zealand agreement, which expired only on October 12, 1930. The data for the two months of November and December, 1930, the only two months that they can properly count as coming under Conservative administration, reveal that during this period butter imports reached the total of only 509,664 pounds. So our hon. friends are not fair when they upbraid the Conservative government for having imported 4,933,303 pounds of butter; but under legislation for which the Liberal government is responsible 39,000,000 pounds of butter were brought into this country.

A moment ago I said that I intended answering the question asked me by my hon. friend from St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume). The hon. member says that the Conservative government reduced the duty on Australian butter. To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker—I may be wrong; if so, I hope someone will set me right—but to my knowledge the present administration has made no change whatever in the import duties on Australian butter. If as my hon. friend claims, rightly or wrongly, the tariff was 1·7 cents under the Liberal government, the same tariff is in force at the present time. However, so far as I know, the duty on Australian butter was 1 cent per pound under the Liberal government and is still 1 cent per pound under the Conservatives.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): If the hon. member will turn to page 985 of Hansard, April 27, 1931, he will find that from August 1, 1930, to March 1, 1931, the duty was 1 cent.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): If I mistake not, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Verville) quotes the speech he himself made to the house on April 27, 1931. I say the hon. member is mistaken; and the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) can certainly tell us whether I am right or wrong.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): It is not the hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I did not mention the speech myself; it was referred to by the hon. member from St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume).

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): I referred my hon. friend to information given us by—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (Translation): The hon. member for Compton has the floor. He may not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): The hon. member from St. Johns-Iberville, since he refers, himself, to his own speech—

[Mr. Gobeil.]

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): I beg pardon; not to my own speech. If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Order, order, order.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): I was quoting the speech made by the Hon. Mr. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): My hon. friend says he was not referring to his own speech; and I accept his word for it. In opening my remarks I said that inaccurate statements had been made here and I believe I have proved what I said. I also said that inaccurate statements had been made outside the chamber. For the last few days the hon. members of the opposition have sought to prove that the present government is to blame for the price of butter. I have in my hand here a copy of an agricultural journal, under date of April 29, 1931, which contains a letter from the vice-president of the Montreal Produce Exchange.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What paper?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): "La Terre de Chez Nous," organ of the Catholic Farmers' Union in Quebec province, an association which is naturally representative of the agricultural class. The vice-president of the Montreal Produce Exchange in a letter, very able, very well-written, but which gives figures that I cannot accept, has this to say:

> May we be allowed, in passing, to state frankly, in the light of present events, that no government, whatever its colour, can bring about any improvement in the present situation; and that economic forces are much more powerful than the dictates of cabinets and of governments.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): That is a contrary gospel to the one you preached.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Order, order.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I am allowed only a few minutes. My hon. friend from Hochelaga can make a speech after I am through, if he so wishes. I said that I did not accept the viewpoint of the vice-president of the Montreal Produce Exchange, not perhaps with any special reference to the paragraph quoted; but I maintain that the letter is merely a statement made by the butter trade in Montreal to justify their attitude. I say, with the vice-president, that the government is not to blame for the drop in prices, since the government reduced butter imports—

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): That is not what you said last July.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Opinions change.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): —from 38,000,000 to 6,000,000 pounds; and I claim—

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): We do not doubt it.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): And on April 1, 1930, there were 12,260,322 pounds of butter in cold storage; while on April 1, 1931, there were only 6,579,626 pounds. If the Liberal government had remained in power we would have to-day as we did on October 1, last year, over 37,000,000 pounds of butter in cold storage, while under a Conservative government the total is only 6,000,000 pounds.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Butter was selling for 29 cents.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I hear these hon. gentlemen saying that we had quantities of butter in storage, but that it was worth more than to-day. That is true. Speaking on my own responsibility I say that the Montreal trade is to blame for the drop in price. Figuring on the basis of the quantity of butter in storage at the present time, and on the certainty that no more butter will be admitted under a lesser duty than 8 cents per pound—figuring also on the present quantity of production which, though increased, is very far behind the yield claimed in some quarters —I maintain that to-day our farmers should be receiving between 25 and 26 cents a pound for their butter. Between August 1, 1930, and March 1, 1931, Canada imported 6,375,109 pounds of butter as against 28,176,634 pounds the preceding year. The vice-president of the Montreal Produce Exchange says in closing that six million pounds are sufficient to meet the requirements of the Canadian consumer.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Is this vice-president a Conservative or a Liberal?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I haven't the slightest idea. He is a businessman.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): A pretty poor one since he mixes in politics.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): At any rate, we have 50 per cent less butter in storage; and the trade has been given the guarantee that no foreign butter will be admitted on payment of a lesser duty than 8 cents per pound.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): The present duty on Australian butter is 1 cent per pound.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Thanks to the former Liberal government. I say that the butter trade in Montreal is in the grip of a monopoly.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (Translation): Older members especially should be well enough acquainted with the rules of the house to know that they cannot interrupt an hon. member continuously without his permission. I ask the older members, yes and the whips too, to give a good example.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Is the order meant for everybody?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (Translation): Everybody.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): I must protest, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): The innumerable interruptions are pleasing to me; they show that the medicine I am giving the opposition is just what they needed.

Mr. Speaker, I say that the farmers of Quebec province, and of the entire Dominion expected the price of butter to remain at 32 cents a pound. I say that the farmers of Quebec and elsewhere expected at least 25 or 26 cents a pound for their butter. I say that the present conservative government reduced the quantity of butter in storage and made it possible for the trade in Montreal to pay the farmers of Quebec and of Canada at least 25 or 26 cents a pound.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Why don't they pay it?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Because the trade combined to force down the price: they wanted to buy butter cheap during the producing season. When I made that statement I am not playing politics. I see the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. St-Père) nods his head in approval; he knows that what I am saying is not meant in any partisan way.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): It proves that the tariff cannot maintain the price of butter.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): It merely goes to show that the trade think they can take advantage of the eight-cent duty imposed on foreign butter and enrich themselves at the expense of the farmer-producer. A short while back my hon. friend reproached the hon. member for Compton with the latter's views on protection. The member for Compton is a protectionist because he believes that the protective policy is in the interest of this country. As the duly elected representative of the county of Compton I have this to say to the gentlemen of the butter trade in Montreal: If the increased duty imposed by the present government for the protection of the farmers succeeds only in protecting the trade;

if the trade believe they can do what is predicted in Montreal on William street, that butter will be selling at 35 and 40 cents this coming fall; if the trade, taking unfair advantage of the promise given them that no butter will be allowed into Canada on payment of a lesser duty than eight cents per pound, seek to speculate on the needs of the consuming public, I say that, as member for Compton, I shall request the government to make these gentlemen of Montreal see the light, by reducing the tariff from 8 cents to 4 cents if necessary, and even to demand—

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I readily understand that the opposition—I suppose I would do the same were I in their place—want to make political capital out of the present low price of butter. But the real facts of the situation should be brought out; the farmers should know that on April 1st, 1931, there was 50 per cent less butter in storage throughout Canada than in April of last year; the farmers should know that while during the first three months of last year we imported—

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Nevertheless butter is selling at 20 cents a pound.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): If I make no mistake, even without the figures before me, I believe that during the first three months of 1930 we imported 24,000,000 pounds of butter, and only two million pounds in 1931. I repeat that the farmers of this country should know that the present government has done its duty and that the trade in Montreal could very well pay the producer a reasonable price for his butter.

Mr. Speaker, if we imported still more butter, to the tune of two million pounds, during the first three months of 1931, the responsibility rests with the defeated government, the government of the right hon. Mr. Mackenzie King. I made the definite statement, for if we had not had the Australian treaty—brought into force by the former administration—we would not have imported 2,000,000 pounds of butter, because that butter would not have been allowed to come in under a tariff of one cent per pound.

Mr. Speaker, the figures which I have just quoted—

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Are false.

[Mr. Gobeil.]

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): If they are false, let me tell the hon. member that the records of the Statistics Branch are false because I got my figures from that branch.

I have a few words to add for the benefit of the butter trade in Montreal. These gentlemen try to justify the drop in price by claiming that production has increased at least 75 per cent—some even say 100 per cent. I agree that production has increased by 75 per cent in some western provinces. For instance in Manitoba, during the month of March, 1931, the yield was 59 per cent greater than in March, 1930. There has been an increase of 79 per cent in Saskatchewan.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): In production?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): In production. In Alberta production increased 71 per cent. But these increases in the three western provinces, which average 75 per cent, amount after all to only a million and a half pounds of butter, not nearly enough to explain the present low prices, because the increased production has been compensated 200 and 300 per cent by the decrease in imports shown by a comparison between this year and last. Mr. Speaker, if the increase in the west amounted to only a million and a half pounds, the increase which should be noted, that in Quebec and Ontario, was only 22 or 23 per cent—in Ontario, 23·66 per cent for the sake of accuracy. Hence I maintain that the trade cannot make use of this excuse to explain away the drop in price. This increase in production does not mean that 1931 will show a gain of 75, 50 or 23 per cent; it merely signifies that we have had an early spring. It is most unfair to compare the month of April, 1931, with April, 1930. The reason of the increased production of butter in 1931 is found in our exceptionally early spring. They are trying to make the farmers believe that the gain in our butter yield in 1931 will equal our imports of 37 million pounds last year; while as a matter of fact, in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario alone, just through the slaughter of tuberculous cattle, the herds of milch cows have been reduced by thousands and thousands. I have nothing more to say on the subject. My few remarks were meant not to displease our opposition friends, but to let the butter trade in Montreal know what we think of the present prices.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): So they'll stop gouging the people?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Exactly. And to inform our Quebec farmers that the Montreal trade is well able to pay them a reasonable price for their butter.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on one or two remarks made by certain hon. members to your left, especially on the speech delivered by the hon. member for Prescott (Mr. Bertrand). My hon. friend reproached the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) with having changed certain items in his departmental estimates. The hon. minister's estimates are increased by some hundreds of thousands of dollars; still my hon. friend from Prescott takes the minister to task for having changed the items around and for not having encouraged agriculture as he should.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): That is true.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): It may be true from my hon friend's standpoint; but I beg to differ, whether it pleases him or not.

The hon. member for Prescott finds fault with the minister for having reduced by $300,000 the vote for Health of Animals purposes, by which is meant, I suppose, the amount paid out for animals slaughtered as being positive reactors to the tuberculosis test. Mr. Speaker, my view is absolutely contrary to that of the hon. member for Prescott and, speaking in my own name, I congratulate the hon. minister on having reduced this appropriation. I have said the same thing outside the house; my claim is that we have been going altogether too fast in this matter of the elimination bovine tuberculosis and during the last two years—please note that I am not criticizing the government; I couple 1930 with 1931—the slaughter of such large numbers of cattle weakened the price the farmers got for their beef. I have no advice to offer the government; it is quite evident that the hon. minister thought as I do, since he reduced the vote. I am convinced we should go a little more slowly. There is no great hurry to free all our herds from tuberculosis. I am not in rebellion against science, neither do I say the system is not a good one; but I do believe that we should go about the matter with all due precaution, and that we should see to it that the number of slaughtered animals should not be a drug on the market and prevent the farmer from reaping a decent profit from the sale of his cattle.

The hon. member for Prescott quoted some figures also concerning the production-cost of milk and butter. According to him the average cost of production in 1930 was $1.35; hence the farmer made nothing out of it. I agree with him, Mr. Speaker. But there is nothing new in that. My hon. friend from Prescott stated himself that last year the production-cost of milk was $1.35 while the producer received only 90 cents or $1 per 100 pounds. The hon. member certainly cannot blame the present government for what it cost to produce milk last year.

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): The average for October, November and December, 1930, was 98 cents.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Ninety-eight cents. On some later occasion—I do not ask my hon. friend to give the information right now; I have only a few minutes left and I must use them to good advantage—I trust the hon. member will explain how milk was being sold by the farmers for only 98 cents in November and December, 1930, and the price was higher than that in July. I suppose that butter was selling for 26 to 27 cents a pound in July and for 29 or 30 cents in November and December.

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): I was speaking of cheese which sold for 16 cents in July and 10¼ cents in February.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation). The hon. gentleman tells us now that he was speaking of cheese; but at the time he told us he was discussing the question of milk and butter in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, our friends on the other side take the government severely to task for not having improved the situation since their accession to power.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): They have made it worse.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): And our friends wish to know why. Every reasonable Canadian knows the government have done all in their power, no matter what our friends opposite may pretend. But, Mr. Speaker, if the government have not succeeded in doing all they could have done since the beginning of the present session it is chiefly because our Liberal opponents seem to have forgotten that they are not running this country any longer. These gentlemen think they are still a part of the government. How can they expect the government to make any progress when they go on talking, day after day—

Aon hon. MEMBER (Translation): Just like you.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): —on matters of no import, on questions which can never contribute one iota to the improvement of the present state of affairs. Five weeks were taken up by the debate on the address, while two would have been ample.

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Order, order. Sit down.

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): If the farmers of Compton—

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Mr. Speaker, if the hon members—

Mr. SPEAKER: Unless the hon. member permits a question, he cannot be interrupted. When the hon. member for Prescott (Mr. Bertrand) was speaking this afternoon, he was given a courteous hearing.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I fully appreciate how difficult it must be for hon. members to realize that they are no longer in power. Fifteen or twenty years from now when the Canadian electorate will think the time has come for another change, we will probably feel the same way. The sooner our friends of the opposition realize they are out of office and are not running the country any longer the better it will be for the country. The government will then be able to improve the financial situation of Canada.

I am pleased to admit, Mr. Speaker, that our friends to your left are not lacking in courage. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Verville) must be courageous indeed to treat the subject he spoke on this afternoon. He spoke on the question of pulpwood and asked the government what they intended doing to put this industry back on its feet. The hon. member should know that the federal government has nothing whatever to do with the industry in question and cannot move a finger to improve the situation; he must know also that if this industry is in a bad way it can thank the government to which the hon. member is friendly, the Liberal government in Quebec province. In the space of ten years the pulp industry in Quebec increased by over 600 per cent. The Quebec government, in spite of repeated warnings, in spite of the protests of those who were most familiar with conditions in the pulp and pulpwood industry, the Quebec government, I say, went on selling our forests in an outrageously extravagant way.

Sir EUGENE FISET (Translation): They were leased.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): They were sold.

Sir EUGENE FISET (Translation): The government leased them.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): That is not my belief. May I remind the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugène Fiset) that I put no trust in 99-year leases.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Order, order.

Sir EUGENE FISET (Translation): Will my hon. friend allow me a question?

[Mr. Bertrand.]

Mr. SPEAKER: I must advise the hon. member he has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking part in the discussion this evening, however, I was so amazed at the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) referring to certain statements which he made in his speeches, or that his friends made throughout Canada and which had an important bearing on the results of the last election that I deemed it my duty to take part in the discussion. It is in vain that the hon. member quotes figures, it is useless for him to seek them in our statistics, or in the campaign literature previous to July 28, last, there is one feature which he will be unable to explain away, it is: that in the last election campaign, especially in Quebec, the Conservative candidates insisted that it was the butter imports from New Zealand which ruined the country and that if elected, they would put an end to it, that they would negotiate a new treaty and that the butter industry would flourish again in the farming counties of Quebec. Owing to these speeches, they were elected. Notwithstanding the figures you may quote regarding trade which readjusted itself in the course of September, October and November, as a result of legislation enacted by the Liberal government, you especially pledged yourself to stop all butter imports either from New Zealand or Australia. You did not carry out this pledge. It behooves you to tell your constituents so and I especially ask the hon. member for Compton what reception would his constituents give him if he went back to his riding and told them: I have omitted to put into practice what I advocated previous to your electing me, and again I come to tell you, in May, 1931, that the King government is responsible for the unceasing butter imports to Canada.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for St. Henri (Mr. Mercier) has just stated that we have imported 6,000,000 lbs of butter. That is not correct.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order, order.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): The Conservative government—

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): I welcome questions. I shall not act as you did a few moments ago when you refused to listen to those who wished to question you as to the accuracy of your figures or statements. You may put any question you wish, I shall courteously answer you. I may tell you that the importations of butter amounted to 6,000,000 lbs.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): That is not correct.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): These are the figures given by the hon. Mr. Stevens and reported in Hansard on April 27, last: Total, 6,375,100 lbs. Why did you allow these 6,000,000 lbs. of butter to enter Canada, when you had promised that not a pound of butter would enter the country? I am glad to hear that my hon. friend from Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) will presently take part in the discussion. He is a distinguished member of the Montreal bar, and an upright citizen as well, he will tell you how the Montreal merchants—

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): With pleasure.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Will he tell us which were the butter imports from New Zealand between August 1, and October 12, 1930?

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): I have not the figures with me here. I ask you this question: why did you permit so much butter to enter the country when you had given a pledge not to allow one pound to enter? You condemned the late administration. There is no need for me to seek in statistics to prove that 4, 5, 6 million pounds were allowed to enter the country. Why did you permit one single pound to enter?

Now, as the representative of a Montreal riding, I want to point out that our merchants of butter, cheese, eggs and other dairy products—to you who represent the county of Compton and have stated in this house that the merchants of William Street take advantage of the farmers—our merchants, I say—are honest and do their best to dispose of their butter having in mind the best interest of both the consumer and manufacturer, if they did otherwise they would show very little business acumen, because the proper method is to purchase the butter and sell it at a profit and not to store it, with the perspective that it will have to remain in storage. I wish to state again that in the metropolis of Canada the merchants are honest and work in concert with the consumer and the farmer so as to give the former his money's worth and the latter a fair price for his products, while at the same time making an honest profit. There is, at present, an overproduction in Quebec, and that is what spoils the prices. We do not export more and we still import a little, thus the market is overflooded and the purchasing power is lacking. Unemployment has increased to such an extent that no sales are possible. Last Saturday butter retailed in Montreal at 22 cents and sold wholesale at 19 cents. What was the price paid to farmers? About 17 or 18 cents, allowing a reasonable profit to the farmers. That is, sir, how the matter stands, that is the bogy that was dragged to and fro in Quebec, especially in the eastern townships where the farmers were told that ruin was staring them in the face because they were unable to sell their butter, because their cattle was being slaughtered, and the compensation was inadequate. Were the butter imports stopped? Was the testing and slaughtering of cattle discontinued since the last elections? I state that the evil is still existing. You promised to apply an unfailing remedy, to deftly put a stop to all the ills from which we suffer, and I find that you did not keep your pledges, that butter still continues to be imported and cattle to be slaughtered in the eastern townships as elsewhere.

Mr. J. T. HACKETT (Stanstead) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish in a few words to answer the clear-cut question put by the hon. member for St. Henri (Mr. Mercier). When figures are quoted in such a way as to mislead so charming a gentleman as my hon. friend, I deem it necessary to explain the true meaning of their figures. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the figures appearing on page 985 of Hansard are such as to convey a false impression to anyone who reads them.

Mr. VENIOT: They are the government's own figures.

An hon. MEMBER: Who gave them out?

Mr. VENIOT: The government did.

Mr. HACKETT: The figures were given in answer to questions put with a skill to which the hon. gentleman from Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) is assuredly no stranger.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not ask those questions.

Mr. HACKETT: At any rate, here are the facts: During the year ending March 31st, 1930, we imported 28,000,000 pounds of butter. During the year following our imports were 6,000,000 pounds; but there is this further important detail that, out of the total of 6,000,000 pounds, almost 5,000,000 entered Canada before the legislation passed at the emergency session last September came into force. That is the first point I wanted to clear up, Mr. Speaker.

But the matter does not end there. It must be borne in mind that, although butter is selling at a very low price just now, we ourselves are supplying Canada's requirements; our own Canadian producers are providing the butter needed by the Canadian consumer —something which had not happened, Mr. Speaker, since the notorious Australian treaty was negotiated by our friends to your left.

Neither should it be forgotten that our prices here are higher than in London, that they are still above the world level, and further that no more butter is entering Canada from New Zealand. This latter source, practically inexhaustible, which caused such havoc in the eastern townships, need worry us no longer. We are receiving only a few pounds of butter from Australia.

The hon. member for St. Henri stated on the floor of the house that promises had been made to the effect that no more butter would be imported into Canada from across the sea. I do not know whether he himself heard any such promises made. People are prone to some exaggeration at election time. I may tell him in reply that I made no such promises. I was well aware that a contract existed between Canada and Australia, and that we had to live up to that contract. I understand that next summer representatives of the Australian Commonwealth are coming to Canada and that our ministers will avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded to negotiate a new treaty, a new contract. Meanwhile we are bound by the contract entered into by our friends on the other side of the House.

That is about all I had to say on this much-discussed butter question. I want to emphasize to the house that since the legislation of last September came into force our imports have been limited to some two million pounds of butter, while during the previous year we had received 28 million pounds. It is true some 4 millions came into the country during the three months immediately preceding the enacting of that legislation.

The legislation of the short session helped the farmers in another way. Now the farmers in the neighbourhood of cities can for the first time enjoy the benefits of their own markets and sell their early produce without fear of what almost amounts to unfair foreign competition, either from the United States or from the islands of the Atlantic. They are well pleased with the laws passed last September. I do not believe a single member coming from the neighbourhood of Montreal, and who has truck-gardeners among his constituents, would dare claim that these people who after all, make up a respectable and considerable portion of our farming community, are not delighted with the new laws which have proven so beneficial to them.

Mr. Speaker, I rose to point out the misapprehension which has arisen from the answers appearing on page 985 of Hansard, and which I thought needed a word of explanation, to forestall any interpretation contrary to fact.

[Mr. Hackett.]

Mr. C. B. HOWARD (Sherbrooke) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in reply to the two hon. members who preceded me. I want to point out to the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil), in spite of the insinuations he made against the butter trade and the wholesale houses in the city of Montreal, that when the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) was looking for enlightenment and advice he did not go to the farmers, but to these very merchants in Montreal.

It is easy to say that not much butter is coming into Canada at the present time, and that a lot came in last year; but after all, whether our imports are large or small, what interests our eastern township farmers is not the quantity of butter entering the country, but the price at which butter is selling here to-day. It is an absolute fact that last Monday butter was selling on the Montreal market for 22 cents a pound. It is also a fact that a year ago, when we were receiving such large quantities of butter from New Zealand and Australia, butter sold for 35 cents a pound.

For the benefit of my hon. friend from Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) I note that to-day, for the first time in ten years I believe, the price of butter is a little lower in Montreal than in London.

Another conviction of mine is that the farmer is entitled to a steady market, like other producers strive to attain. When we see the Government in power put a duty on potatoes one day and remove that duty two weeks later, it seems to me that the farmers can have no idea where they are going, nor can the merchants, nor the other citizens of Canada.

I shall add one further word in reply to the hon. gentleman from Stanstead concerning this much talked-of page 985 of Hansard. I have every confidence in my esteemed friend, but I do not believe he answered the question, nor did he point out one single falsehood on page 985. I think the figures in question are accurate. I would probably accept them in preference to a good many figures quoted by hon. members on the government side. Let me draw the attention of the hon. members for Compton and Stanstead to what I find on page 985—it is there for all to see: from August 1st, 1930 to March 1st, 1931 the present government collected a duty of 1 cent per pound on Australian butter. On 1074 we find that under the King government the tariff on this same butter was 1.70 cents per pound. So the present government is actually putting a lighter duty on Australian butter this year than we did.

And that, as my hon. friend from St. Henri (Mr. Mercier) noted a while ago, despite Conservative pledges that if returned to power they would put a stop to the imports of butter from New Zealand and Australia.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Howard) tell the house how much butter was imported into Canada from Australia during the time the rate was 1.7?

Mr. HOWARD: The answer is that the price of butter was a good deal higher then than it is now.

Mr. J. FERNAND FAFARD (L'Islet) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the speeches delivered by Conservatives during the election campaign were entirely different from those we now listen to in the house. During the election our opponents claimed that no reason could justify the low prices paid for farm products. I recall that they told us then, that if Mr. Bennett was elected on July 28, the farm products would sell at a much higher price. I also recall asking my opponent in the riding of l'Islet: How could Mr. Bennett increase the prices and negotiate favourable trade treaties with other countries, with a protective policy like the one he wishes to inaugurate in this country? His answer was: Mr. Bennett will blast open markets. I also, inquired: What means would Mr. Bennett take to increase the price of butter and the production of milk? His answer was: Mr. Bennett will seize the bull by the horns. I had never heard, sir, of such a policy, and I frankly admit that I was anxious to be present at the emergency session, so as to witness on the flour of the house these new dynamiters, these political toreadors who seize the bull by the horns. I confess I was somewhat disappointed. Once here, I perceived that these great statesmen had very little to say.

I listened to the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) during the election. He then proclaimed that he would see to it that the price of butter increased. Furthermore, he promised that the factories of Montmagny would open their doors and give work to about 1,500 people, thus creating a market to help the farmers and should the doors remain closed, he pledged himself to give up his mandate. I notice that he has shifted his aim, he no more endeavours to have the doors of the Montmagny mills opened but is bent on having the name of Dominion of Canada changed to the Kingdom of Canada—this will be of great benefit to the farming class of Montmagny.

I also listened to the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé). He established a record in the last July elections by his eloquence. He carried Two Mountains without assistance, but once in the house no mention of agriculture is made. He does not even refer to the growing of couch-grass which he advocated when leader of the opposition in Quebec.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I am afraid that the hon. member is suffering from a delusion.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): I recall that the hon. Postmaster General at the time stated that it was a plant which would be useful in medicine. Let him take his medicine now that he is in Ottawa. The hon. Postmaster General shows no more desire for farming, he is now a man of letters. He has shifted his aim. He is busy dismissing postmasters who disagree with him.

The hon. member for Quebec-Montmagny (Mr. Dorion) also made pledges. When he referred to hangers-on he had not in mind those of his riding. Now, the hon. member for Montmorency is in with them.

Mr. DORION (Translation): You feel lonesome when you are out of it.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): That may be but the hon. member for Montmorency is not content with being in the manger, he feeds direct from the bag. The hon. gentleman is fond of interrupting, but let him not forget that with his small majority of 47 he cannot afford to play a big game and that we can dispense with his interruptions. He likes to be heard in this house, but those who are acquainted with him know fully well that in the riding of Montmorency there is a great Fall or Soo—

Mr. DORION (Translation): Taschereau will fall into it.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): —the swift current of which accelerates the drop. As I do not wish to be misunderstood, I shall drop the subject.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): It is Taschereau who is the Sot.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): That is a chestnut, however, I think the hon. member for Montmorency is mistaken. He seems to take offence at my remarks. However, the Sault I make reference to—

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): —is the one who is just now making himself heard.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): It is the Sault Montmorency which has been harnessed by civil engineers and which distributes light in the district of Quebec. On the other hand, the sot which the hon. member has in mind sheds no light neither in this house nor outside.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Is the one we are listening to?

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Let us drop the subject. This government has done nothing for the farming class. What hon. members endeavour to prove is that during the Liberal regime 28,000,000 pounds of butter were imported from New Zealand or Australia, while this year only 6,000,000 pounds were imported. What interests the farmers is not so much the quantity imported from Australia, but the price they get for their butter. They were happier when they received, on July 28, 39 cents for their butter than they are to-day.

The $20,000,000 appropriated to relieve unemployment were of no benefit to rural districts because municipalities were too poor to take advantage of it, that is, to pay their quota. This means that the rural districts will be called upon to contribute their quota of this appropriation without having benefited by it through the identity card which means telling the farmers: you will be given no work as a means of earning your share of the $20,000,000, but you will be taxed for it all the same.

The repairs to wharfs in my county and that of Montmagny, for which appropriations had been voted by the house, were not carried out, this would, indeed, have been a great help to the farmers of our ridings. On the other hand, $2,000,000 were spent on the Welland canal without being not voted by the house.

I state, sir, that two-thirds of the money appropriated for public works in Quebec was not spent. In brief, there was no need to call a special session, there was no need of federal help to alleviate unemployment. The government had but one thing to do, that is, apply the money which was voted for public works in our counties. The government made a great stir over that $20,000,000, and proclaimed that, thanks to it, much suffering had been avoided throughout the country; yet, this year when conditions are 50 per cent worse, when unemployment has increased 50 per cent, that same government cuts off $38,000,000 from the estimates.

This is not rational, sir, or else I am greatly mistaken. $20,000,000 more last year to relieve unemployment, and when conditions are worse this year, $38,000,000 less toward relieving unemployment. Two million dollars is given to the city of Quebec to alleviate unemployment while one million is withdrawn also to alleviate unemployment.

The farmers, sir, are already aware of the deceitful policy of this government, this money was of no benefit to them and they realize now that they will be taxed to the tune of $20,000,000. Through its tariff policy, the government has closed foreign markets to Canadian products and has increased the price of manufactured goods which the farmer is bound to purchase. In other words the farmer sells his products for almost nothing while he pays a very high price for what he needs. Take, for instance, the price of butter, it lent itself to much controversy and the hon. member for Compton, although deploring that butter was so cheap, seemed to assure us that the farmer was satisfied.

An hon. MEMBER: Not at all.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): . . . . Its 22 cents was a reasonable price.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): No, no, I beg your pardon.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): I have here souvenirs of the last election. There was a great deal of this fine campaign literature distributed all over the country. Here is a pamphlet from Conservative headquarters in which it is stated that the cost of butter production in Canada, according to experts of Macdonald College, is 39 cents per pound. So that, at present, for each pound of butter produced the farmer loses 17 cents. In the face of such distressing conditions and especially after the speeches to which we listened in the course of the last election, I thought that the government would feel very depressed and that the Prime Minister would be in his seat to hear, at least, the hon. member for Compton. No one seems to care. The hon. Minister of Agriculture, himself, is as silent as a tombstone which lies in a grave yard of broken election pledges. When information is requested, what answers do we get? None. What information was I able to gather in regard to agriculture in my constituency? I was able to lay my hands on a document, "Bull Loaning Policy" that is all I found in it. On the first page, is seen a bull without horns. It is certainly not the government's bull which the Prime Minister was to seize by the horns, according to my opponent.

The farming class received nothing from the federal government and the farmers would be in great distress, in Quebec, had it not been for the provincial government's help. To give you an idea of the outlay made to help the farmers in our rural districts, let me point out that in the counties of l'Islet and Kamouraska, in connection with roads only, the provincial government spent $329,000. For colonization purposes we are granted between $20,000 to $25,000 per year. Apart from this, the provincial government provide funds for the building of schools, up to an amount of $1,200 per year for each school so as to help primary education in rural districts. Those amounts just mentioned were given to help the farmers of l'Islet and Kamouraska; thanks to these grants we were able to face the present crisis. This is not all that the provincial government has done. I know that, this year, in the newly settled districts of Kamouraska, Montmagny and l'Islet, the provincial government had seed grain distributed free. This is how our provincial government administer the affairs of the province. I recall having seen, at the last session, in Quebec, grants given to those who wished to drain and break their land. I know that this is a policy that many approve, and I feel certain that the hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Sauvé), who has always favoured agriculture, certainly approves of the measures advocated this year.

We have done a great deal, in Quebec, to help agriculture. Take, for instance, the riding of my hon. friend from Kamouraska (Mr. Bouchard), you will find there an experimental farm which was established in that county when that riding was represented in this house by the hon. Mr. Lapointe. I think, that this experimental farm is one of the first established, in the Quebec district at any rate. It is under Dominion control, admirably well managed by a man who is deserving of all our congratulations. This institution simply aims at spreading new farming methods and does not look forward to returns, but it is continuously experimenting for the benefit of the farmers. The government, however, found that while this experimenting has its good points, the farmers could hardly obtain the necessary information and keep tab on the experiments tried in these agricultural schools. The system, therefore, of demonstration farms was resorted to in all the rural districts. These demonstration farms duplicate the experiments carried out on experimental farms in the presence of the farmer who is able to benefit by them.

We also have an agricultural college at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière. That is probably why we have as representative of Kamouraska one of the best scientific agriculturists of the province of Quebec. May I mention also that, this year, the agricultural college was not forgotten. Our Quebec farmers are not so much behind the times as some may think. The Quebec government appropriated, this year, $200,000 for the agricultural college of Ste. Anne de la Pocatiere.

Who was the first, in Quebec, to foster the education of numerous agriculturists? It was the hon. Joseph-Edouard Caron, who loved farming, and had many a battle with the hon. member for Two Mountains. However, I think, that both worked to attain the same end because they were always very good friends.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): We did not fight, we discussed seriously.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): The hon. Postmaster never fights. Although his fight was successful on July 28.

They trained a group of agriculturists who are now spread throughout the rural counties of Quebec. These men are destined to render great services to the farming class. Not only do they teach scientific methods to farmers but they are well qualified to follow experiments which take place at experimental farms, they are there to see that the farmers of the various counties receive the grants made by Liberal or Conservative governments, they endeavour to teach the farmer and impress on him that there is always a market, especially for standardized farm products. Moreover, sir, these agricultural experts are found in every county, whether liberal or conservative, organizing farming competitions which are most useful to agriculture, as they stimulate and create a certain friendly intercourse between the leading farmers of various counties; and the young men take an interest in these demonstrations.

I know, sir, that everybody is, indeed, prompted by the same motives and is desirous of helping the farming class. We, from Quebec, have much sympathy with the citizens of the west in these difficult times. They can rest assured that we greatly sympathize with them in their present day trials. We have our own troubles and we hope to overcome them, thanks to the energy which characterizes the farmers of Quebec.

One suggestion I would like to make to the house. It is the fostering of small industries in our rural districts in order to decentralize industrial towns. There is an excellent instance of this decentralization in my county. In my native parish there exists an industry known as the L'Islet Foundry which specializes in stoves, heating system equipment and baths with an up-to-date enamel factory attached thereto. Thanks to this industry, the neighbouring parishes of l'Islet send the surplus of their population to these factories which gives them an opportunity to earn an honest living.

One hears a great deal about the advantages of our banking system. My connection with banks is not sufficiently extensive to consider myself as a banking expert. Generally, when I deal with banks it is to negotiate a loan. I acknowledge that our banking system is a safe one but it also claims all the savings of our rural population, centralizing them in large cities—I noticed that in the United States—I do not like to quote the United States as an example or to copy their institutions, because I believe that our banking system is superior to theirs—I noticed, however, in the United States a banking system established with the aim of assisting the depositors and encouraging local industries. The depositor receives a reasonable interest for his money, however, what is most noticeable, is that banks cannot make loans outside of certain specified districts. That is, in a district like the counties of l'Islet and Montmagny, for instance, the banks would accept the savings of farmers, pay them 5 per cent on their deposits and the money could not be loaned outside the counties of l'Islet and Montmagny. This system would work splendidly here, because our farmers could place their savings—when they have any—with a sound banking institution, and feel assured that such funds will be used in industries known to them. This would prove a boon to our farmers, especially after the poor investments which have been made for some time past. I can state that within the last two years, in l'Islet alone, $200,000 were lost in unprofitable investments. This represents the savings of, at least, two generations. Widows and heads of large families, who had with difficulty realized savings, were, in the space of a few weeks, ruined by swindlers who have the gift of convincing honest people to invest money in their schemes.

Mr. DORION Translation): The Montmagny factories.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Their doors are still closed. They are not so prone to open as the lips of my hon. friend opposite.

I think the time is at hand, sir, when we should inflict more severe penalties on these swindlers. Only last week I read in a newspaper—I do not wish to criticize the judges or the lawyers who defend those so charged—I read that a man who was found guilty of having stolen $125,000, had been condemned to four years in the penitentiary. This means that this criminal, while in the penitentiary, will be earning $30,000 per year. On the other hand, take a poor farmer who might have forgotten his milkpail under the eaves of his house with the result that a little water dripped in; he may, when he reaches the city to sell that milk, be arrested, thrown into gaol and fined $50.

Mr. DORION (Translation): That is Taschereau legislation.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): I am not a lawyer, however, I think, that the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) could amend the criminal code.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): No. It will tire you out. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) may sit down. The hon. member has just discussed New Zealand butter; he now wishes to take up the embargo.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Do you approve of it?

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): The members on this side of the house are outspoken. I shall give you my views on the Russian embargo. Everyone in this house, whether French or English Canadian, Protestant or Catholic, are absolutely opposed to the policy prevailing in Russia. Everybody is opposed to such a policy.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Not the Russian policy, but the embargo.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): The hon. member is well informed; he thinks that bolshevism comes with coal. He intends to tell us that the Russian embargo is a splendid act of the government. He was not a member of this house when we were in office and the right hon. Mr. Mackenzie King moved the embargo on alcohol. This, sir, was a shock to the gentlemen on your right; still it was not to be compared with the Russian embargo. Notwithstanding this, England buys Russian wheat, and will continue to do so, she will purchase hats from Russia and stick the label "Made in England;" the Compton people will buy those hats. Instead of settling Russian affairs, let us settle ours, those of Canada.

You have as Prime Minister of Saskatchewan one of your friends whose policy is worse than that holding sway in Russia. The exodus of our people towards the United States has been referred to. It is therefore not to be wondered at, if French-Canadians instead of settling in Saskatchewan, where they are not allowed to speak their language, or even kneel down,—barely are they allowed to bring up a family,—should take the road which leads to the United States, where at least they are given hospitality. In what country are we living? I was in the United States, at Easter, visiting the beautiful city of Manchester. Who says that Canadians do not amount to much in the United States? The mayor of Manchester, a city half English and half French, was a Mr. Moreau and he is a credit to that city. Travel through Massachusetts and visit the towns of Springfield and Holyoke; both at their city halls and their banks you will find French-Canadians in charge. Three weeks ago, I attended mass at Barry, in Vermont, and to my great surprise the priest, an Irishman whose French was somewhat deficient, was not ashamed to give his instructions and preach in both French and English. In leaving the church I wondered why in our own country, in Saskatchewan, the children were not allowed to learn their own language and practise their religion. Yet, it was the French-Canadian race that sent out the first pioneers and settlers to that western country. When comparing conditions, I thought to myself: We are worse off than they are in Russia.

I see, sir, that my time is almost up. I wish, in closing my remarks, to state that I am acquainted with what is going on in Quebec, I know the feelings of our rural districts, I also have some knowledge of the feelings which exist in cities, and if it is true to say that the Tory government has a majority to rule over us, it is also true to state that it is always liberalism which rules in the people's hearts.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, May 6, 1931.

The house met at three o'clock.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER PROCEDURE IN TAKING DIVISIONS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the special motion which has been on the order paper for some days I should like to move, seconded by Sir George Perley:

That a special committee consisting of Sir George Perley, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury), Mr. Gagnon, Mr. Stinson, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South), Mr. Lapointe, Mr. Euler, Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Gardiner be appointed to consider jointly with Mr. Speaker the amending of the standing orders of the house governing the procedure to be followed in taking a division.

Those are the exact words in which the question was placed before the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: This will have to be by unanimous consent, since there is already a motion before the house.

Mr. BENNETT: I was going to ask that the first motion be dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

Mr. POWER: I do not think we should do this in the absence of the mover of the motion.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) agreed to this proposal. I do not think my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) was in his place the other day when the hon. member for Labelle was here. Then it was only a question of setting up the committee, and I suggested to my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition that perhaps it would be advisable, in view of the duties we both have to perform, that we leave this work to others and do not have our names placed on the committee, so I think there is no question of objection. If my hon. friend thinks this will be objected to we will try to accommodate the hon. gentleman who moved the first resolution in some way. However, if it is thought desirable the motion may stand.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR THURSDAY, MAY 7

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): This being Wednesday, I am afraid there will be no opportunity other than the present to speak about to-morrow's business. My right hon. friend may have in mind some provision for to-morrow which will require a motion. In that event I should like to ask him at once if he is in a position to indicate what business will be taken up to-morrow.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I am greatly indebted to the right hon. gentleman for bringing up the matter, because if we are not able to make an arrangement such as I shall presently suggest I propose to proceed with the estimates of the departments which are now before the committee, taking up also the motion with respect to the General Act of 1928 for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, and a resolution with respect to a bill. However, if it appeals to the judgment of hon. gentlemen opposite I suggest that, with the unanimous consent of the house, we dispose of the debate precipitated by the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown). I know this was done on a previous occasion and in view of the circumstances, having regard to the interruptions in the business of the house, the estimates of only one department are before the committee at the moment. I suggest that this procedure will expedite business and at the same time do no one any injustice. If that does appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite I would move that the standing order dealing with the matter be suspended for to-morrow and that the order of business be the continuation of the debate on the motion that the Speaker do now leave the chair, and the amendment thereto of the hon. member for Lisgar.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I believe that will be satisfactory at all events to the official opposition.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): It will be quite satisfactory to us if we proceed to-morrow along the lines suggested by the Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT moved:

That standing order 28 be suspended for to-morrow, Thursday, the 7th day of May, and that the order of business be the resuming of the adjourned debate on the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair, and the proposed amendment thereto of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown).

Motion agreed to.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

Mr. SPEAKER: Before proceeding with the questions I would remind the house that under a former administration it was agreed that answers to questions should be tabled in triplicate, thus giving the member asking the question a copy of the answer and providing a copy for Hansard, with a third copy for the press. At present the practice seems to be to supply only two copies, thereby depriving the member of a copy of the answer to his question, which is a great inconvenience. I would respectfully ask the ministers to have answers to questions prepared in triplicate.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): In order that there may be no misunderstanding I may say that most of the answers are prepared in triplicate.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

TRENT CANAL STAFF DISMISSALS

Mr. POWER:

1. Have Albert Curtis, John Allen, James Cruikshank and Arthur Pritchard, all ex-service men, been recently dismissed from the Trent canal staff?
2. If so, why were they dismissed?
3. How long have they been members of the Trent canal staff?
4. Upon whose recommendation were such dismissals made?
5. Were these men replaced by men who have seen no war service?

Mr. MANION:

1. Three of the men in question—Curtis, Allen and Cruikshank—have not been reengaged as labourers for the current season of navigation. Pritchard has been reengaged as foreman on two months' probation.
2. For continued unsatisfactory services.
3. Curtis, April, 1926; Allen, June, 1921; Cruikshank, July, 1914.
4. The superintending engineer of the Trent canal.
5. No.

*CANADIAN OIL REFINERIES—EMPLOYEES

Mr. HEENAN:

1. Has the number of employees of Canadian oil refineries been increased or decreased since last September?
2. If so, at what points?

Mr. BENNETT: I explained yesterday what the position was with regard to this question. I think it should be dropped.

Mr. HEENAN: There was a little noise in this corner of the house when the Prime Minister made his statement yesterday, and I could not hear all that he had to say. Since that time I have had an opportunity of looking up his remarks in Hansard, and I do not think the Prime Minister gave a very satisfactory explanation. He went on to say that I might as well have asked the distance to Mars, or something like that, but the question is very simple. When the Prime Minister brought down legislation during the special session with regard to the oil refineries he was able to ascertain all the information he required within twelve or at the most twenty-four hours in connection with these concerns. Since there are only four companies involved, and since there is a branch of the government whose function it is to ascertain the amount of employment and unemployment throughout the country, I think the Prime Minister could very easily answer that question.

Mr. BENNETT: I will answer the question; the government has no information.

COMMERCIAL TREATIES

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre):

1. How many trade or commercial treaties were in existence between Canada and other nations on July 28, 1930?
2. How many such treaties now exist?
3. How many such treaties have been denounced, abandoned or abrogated since August 7, 1930?

Mr. BENNETT:

1. Seventeen.

2. Seventeen.

3. None. The benefits of the Australian Trade Agreement Act, which had been extended to New Zealand as from October 1, 1925, were withdrawn as from October 12, 1930, in accordance with notice given April 12, 1930.

Commercial Treaties and Agreements between Canada and other Nations—

The treaties and agreements referred to above fall in three divisions:

Commercial treaties and agreements negotiated by Canada—

Convention of Commerce between Canada and France, signed December 15, 1922.

Convention of Commerce between Canada and Italy, signed January 4, 1923.

Convention of Commerce between Canada and the Economic Union of Belgium and Luxemburg, signed July 3, 1924.

Convention of Commerce between Canada and the Netherlands, signed July 11, 1924.

Trade Agreements between Canada and British West Indies, Bermuda, British Guiana, and British Honduras, signed July 6, 1925.

Trade Agreement between Canada and Australia (concurrent legislation effective October 1, 1925).

Convention of Commerce between Canada and Czechoslovakia, signed March 15, 1928.

Trade Agreement between Canada and Cuba (modus vivendi regulating tariff arrangements effective November, 1929).

Commercial treaties negotiated by the United Kingdom to which Canada has acceded—Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Japan, signed April 3, 1911. Acceded to by Canada May 1, 1913.

Treaty of Commerce between the United Kingdom and Spain, signed October 31, 1922, as modified by the Commercial Convention, signed April 5, 1927, and agreement regulating the treatment of companies, signed June 27, 1924. Acceded to by Canada August 1, 1928.

Commercial treaties negotiated by the United Kingdom and which are applicable to Canada—

Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation between Great Britain and the United provinces of Rio de la Plata (Argentina), signed February 2, 1925.

Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation, between Great Britain and Colombia, signed February 16, 1866.

Treaty of Peace and Commerce between Great Britain and Denmark, signed February 13, 1660.

Convention of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Norway, signed March 18, 1826.

Treaty of Peace and Commerce between Great Britain and Sweden, signed April 11, 1654.

Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Reciprocal Establishment between Great Britain and Switzerland, signed September 6, 1855.

Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation between Great Britain and Venezuela, signed April 18, 1825.

The Commercial treaties negotiated by the United Kingdom with Finland, Estonia, Hungary, Jugo-Slavia, Latvia, Lithuania, Portugal and Roumania contain provisions under which the dominions and colonies may enjoy most-favoured-nation treatment in respect of tariff rates, on the basis of reciprocity. Canada has exchanged most-favoured-nation treatment in respect of tariff rates with Finland since 1925, and with the other countries mentioned since 1928.

CRIMINAL APPEALS—DUTY STAMPS

Mr. LAVERGNE:

1. Is the Justice department aware that the attorney general of Quebec has imposed duty stamps on all appeals in criminal matter?

2. Is the government aware that those duties are collected by the provincial government and turned over to the exchequer of the province?

3. What action does the Dominion government intend to take in the matter?

Mr. GUTHRIE:

1, 2 and 3. The government has recently learned that taxes and fees of the kind mentioned have been or are to be imposed, but has not received a copy of the measure in question. The matter will receive consideration by the government in due course.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT—RETIREMENTS

Mr. CHEVRIER:

Of the Interior employees who have been retired or notified of retirement, in each branch,—

1. How many are permanent: (a) at Ottawa; (b) outside Ottawa?

2. How many temporary: (a) at Ottawa; (b) outside Ottawa?

Mr. MURPHY:

STE. GENEVIEVE-DE-BATISCAN RELIEF WORKS

Mr. DESROCHERS:

1. Did the government advance certain sums of money to the corporation of Ste. Genevieve-de-Batiscan, in the county of Champlain, Quebec, for certain works to be made by virtue of the Unemployment Relief Act, 1930?

2. If so, is the government aware that this parish compels every labourer or workingman, employed on said works, to pay to the municipal fund of said parish, the sum of one dollar from each pay that he receives, along with a written promise signed by each workingman in this respect?

Mr. GORDON:

1. Under the Unemployment Relief Act the province of Quebec has agreed to pay 25 per cent, the Dominion government 25 per cent and the municipality of St. Genevieve-de-Batiscan 50 per cent of an expenditure of $6,000 for roadwork for the relief of unemployment in the municipality mentioned. 2. If so, what was the length of his sentence, and how long was he detained in said penitentiary?

3. By whose recommendation was he liberated?

Mr. BENNETT: This question was allowed to stand yesterday. It involves a matter of policy. Under the former administration questions of this kind, involving the exercise of a prerogative on the advice of a responsible minister, were not permitted to be asked. If it is the wish of the house that this rule should be changed, that is another matter, but from my reading of the authorities this is not a proper question to ask.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped?

Mr. CASGRAIN: In the absence of the hon. member for St. James, I should like to ask that the question stand.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PASSES

Mr. VENIOT:

1. Have railway passes been issued by the Department of Railways and Canals or the authorities of the Canadian National Railways, to Mr. H. G. Boulay, defeated candidate in the county of Rimouski?
2. If so, for what reason and on what account?
3. Is Mr. H. G. Boulay being employed, either by the Canadian National Railways or the Department of Railways and Canals, or any other department, either as an investigator of the political activities of railway employees and other civil servants, or as a special agent or detective, or in any other capacity?
4. If so, what emolument or salary, including travelling expenses, has he received to date?

Mr. MANION: The answer to the first part of this question is, no, because it would be against the law for either the Department of Railways or the Canadian National Railways to give passes. The question is, therefore, hardly in order. We have not broken the law. As regards the last half of the question, the answer is, again, no.

Mr. VENIOT: The answer is quite satisfactory.

Mr. GARDINER: Before you leave questions, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) whether it would be possible for him to give replies to Nos. 5 and 7, which relate to his department. I see no reason why they should remain on the order paper.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I understand that these questions have been answered in part by the Prime Minister. They do not come exclusively under the Department of Public Works. However, I shall see that the information that properly comes from and appertains to that department is forwarded in due course.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

COMPENSATION FOR SLAUGHTERED ANIMALS

Mr. TETRAULT:

For a copy of all documents, letters and correspondence, in connection with indemnities to be paid by the federal government for slaughtered animals in the province of Quebec, under the system of reserved zones, since the establishment of said system; also a return showing the number and the average indemnity of the slaughtered animals by counties, and the average indemnity per head of cattle ranging from the age of one, two, three and over, for registered animals and cross-breeds.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that this motion be allowed to stand.

Motion stands.

[Mr. Sutherland.]

COMMUNICATIONS FROM SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

For a copy of all petitions, resolutions, letters, telegrams and other communications and documents, received by the Prime Minister, Secretary of State and any other member of the government, from the Saskatchewan government or any member thereof, since January 1, 1931.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. gentleman think that all these documents are properly producible?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The motion refers more particularly to resolutions and petitions—

Mr. BENNETT: There are a great many of these petitions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am referring to the petitions and resolutions passed by the legislature and handed on by the Premier.

Mr. BENNETT: The other day I explained to the hon. gentleman that a number of these were in exactly the same form, and in some instances the government of Saskatchewan was the medium through which they were sent. Anything that is of a public character received by the various departments we will bring down, but we do not want to duplicate what is already down.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If the Prime Minister would let it stand I should be glad of an opportunity to discuss the matter with him.

Motion stands.

PENSION TRIBUNAL

Mr. POWER (for Mr. Duff):

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, or instructions, sent by the registrar of the pension tribunal or the chairman thereof, or under the direction of either of the pension tribunals or any member thereof, and for a copy of all letters, telegrams or other communications sent to the registrar or chairman of the said pension tribunal by any member thereof or by instructions of any member thereof.

Mr. BENNETT: We should have a clear understanding about these matters. To answer a notice of motion covering all the papers in the world is surely not what is intended. If the hon. member would be good enough to look at the terms of the motion—

Mr. POWER: Is the Prime Minister referring to No. 6?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. POWER: At the request of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff), I was going to ask that it stand.

Motion stands.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE—APPROPRIATIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Mr. ROBERGE:

For a return showing the total amounts appropriated during the first session of 1930, either in the main estimates or in any supplementary, to the Department of Trade and Commerce, and also a return showing the total amount of such moneys as were expended, by provinces.

Mr. BENNETT: This is one of a long series of questions. This government cannot undertake to prepare, antecedently to the time prescribed by law, the Auditor General's report. It is certainly its duty, in answer to this order, to prepare a list showing what the expenditures are. But certainly the law does not contemplate, nor do the traditions and customs of this house contemplate, that we should anticipate the Auditor General's report and show the details of these expenditures. I take it that what is meant is, first, a statement showing the amount appropriated for the Department of Trade and Commerce, and secondly, the expenditures made by the provinces out of that amount.

Motion agreed to.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Campbell, postmaster at Judique South, Inverness county, Nova Scotia.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—APPROPRIATIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Mr. VENIOT (for Mr. Duff):

SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC RESEARCH

MOTION BY MR. SPEAKMAN PROPOSING ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL COUNCIL TO STUDY SUBJECT

The house resumed from Monday, May 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Speakman that immediate consideration be given to the establishment and maintenance of a national council of social and economic research.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the house, which was presented so ably the other day by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) and supported by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), is one of those motions which perhaps result in a great deal of good, in that they bring to the attention of the house matters of importance for consideration, but which at the same time present difficulties in the way of giving immediate effect to the suggestions contained therein. I should like to compliment the hon. member who presented the resolution on the moderation of his language and on the thoughtfulness of the major portion of the suggestions presented by him. In one or two respects I find myself not quite able to follow him. I should like to suggest to the seconder of the motion that I think by the speech he delivered he must have aroused in the minds of hon. members a consciousness of sufficient reasons for not accepting the motion, and it will be my duty briefly to discuss the matter from this standpoint.

May I first, however, address a few remarks to the resolution itself. The resolution consists of several statements, in some measure purporting to be statements of fact, and then it invites the house to resolve in a certain way. I desire to point out to the introducer of the resolution that I cannot agree with the statement made in the first paragraph, which reads as follows:

> The problem of production has been largely solved, assisted greatly by the application of scientific methods and the results of organized technical research.

I cannot follow my hon. friend in that because, while great progress has undoubtedly been made in recent years, and particularly in the years during and subsequent to the great war, in the way of scientific research and in the speeding up of production by the introduction of modern methods, mechanical and otherwise, it would be folly, I think, on the part of the house or of any body of industrialists or of any commercial community or of any country, to rest upon its oars and say that the question of production had been solved. The question of production has undoubtedly been greatly advanced. It might be profitable for a moment for me to digress and to draw attention to what this country has been doing in common, I think, with nearly every other civilized country in the world, along the lines of scientific industrial research.

Some years ago the Research Council Act was passed. This was based upon an examination by a committee of the house, in 1917 or 1918, of the question of scientific industrial research, and by this act a research council was set up for the purpose of advising the government on scientific and technological methods affecting the expansion of Canadian industries and the utilization of the natural resources of Canada. Those are the broad general principles upon which the legislation is based. It particularizes by conferring on the council power:

> To promote the utilization of the natural resources of Canada.

Well, I would hesitate to say that that particular part of the research council's effort had been completely, or even measurably achieved. I believe that in this respect great progress has been made and an excellent foundation has been laid, and that we can look for some very excellent results in the future. I recall a number of researches which have been carried out successfully by the research council and with great benefit to the industry of Canada. I have particulars of these researches under my hand, but I do not wish to weary the house with a recital of them at this time; I may do so later when the estimates dealing with that department are before us. But I desire to emphasize this point, that it would be folly on our part to say that in this respect the question had been disposed of or solved. The research council is also to direct its efforts to—> —improving the technical processes and methods used in the industries of Canada, and of discovering processes and methods which may promote the expansion of existing or the development of new industries.

This matter is in its very early stages, I might say its initial stages. A general effort is being made and considerable progress has been achieved in formulatng schemes of co-operation with industry, private corporations, and so forth, and it is hoped that ultimately substantial results will follow. Then there are the questions of utilizing waste products and the determination of standards. I wish to direct attention for a moment to the determination of standards and methods of measurement, including length, volume, weight, mass, capacity, time, heat, light and so on. In this direction we have not gone very far. For instance, with respect to all our electrical standards we depend upon standards fixed in the city of Chicago. It is hoped and expected that as time goes on the bureau to whom has been committed this task will set up standards that are purely Canadian and that, while coordinated with the well-known and established standards of other countries, will at least be Canadian standards established by and for Canadian interests. But there again it is a work that is under way and still far from having reached ultimate achievement. There is also the great question of determination of standards of materials used in construction, such as cement, plaster, reinforcing steel, and all that sort of thing. Here again the work is in its infancy, but it is being carried forward step by step. There is a long list of other powers conferred upon the research council, but I shall not weary the house by detailing them. I desire simply to emphasize this point: we must not for a moment think that by the establishment of this research council we have, as the resolution intimates, largely solved the question of production. What we are doing and what we have done is to establish a foundation upon which we hope to rear a superstructure that will compare favourably with what has been achieved by the most progressive countries of the world in this important field of scientific research. The resolution proceeds:

> The problem of distribution, with the kindred questions of purchasing power and the exchange values of agricultural and other commodities, together with their relation to the growing problem of unemployment, are still unsolved.

Well, I confess—and my hon. friend will take this observation kindly, I know—I confess that sometimes I get a little weary of the mere statement of great economic problems. It is so simple and easy to throw into the arena of parliament or before the public a statement of a problem, but it is a vastly different thing to come forward with definite, clear-cut suggestions for its solution. We have here such problems as this, "the kindred questions of purchasing power." This problem has been before parliament, brought particularly by some of my hon. friends opposite, every session for the last ten years. It does not follow that we should not strive to solve it, but it is one that involves world conditions. It is a problem that involves the inter-activities of nations the world over, and while undoubtedly study must be given to these things, I question whether any advantage will be derived from setting up now, in addition to the powers that already exist, a new body for the study of that question.

Then we come to another clause which states:

> This—

That is, these things that I have intimated.

> —can best be done at the instance of the state and by men of scientific training.

To the latter part I am offering no objection. I think we are all agreed that men of scientific training are undoubtedly best able to cope with any great economic problem; but to say that this should be done at the instance of the state is one of those utterances which, to my mind, merely tend to shelve the question. I think my hon. friend quoted scripture the other day, and while I hesitate to embark upon that field, I recall an utterance by a prophet statesman of old who used these words:

> For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little.

In my estimation the progress of the world, the steps forward in science, industry and art, have all been on a basis of "precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little." There is not the short cut that is so often claimed in the solution of these problems by merely shuffling them off on the state. Not long ago I saw a telegram from a certain interest in which they propounded some very difficult problems, and then they suggested that the federal government should take it upon their shoulders and by some unknown method the whole thing would be solved. Suggestions of that kind are constantly being made. I would say to my hon. friend in all kindness that I do not think it is much of a contribution to the solution of a problem merely to say that this can best be done at the instance of the state. Neither, of course, would I wish to leave the impression that I think the state has no responsibility at all; before I am through I shall demonstrate this point more clearly. I do, however, challenge the practice of merely, stating the problem, and saying it is the duty of the state now to solve it.

The part of the resolution which is active is now reached:

> In the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to the establishment and maintenance of some organized body for this purpose which body might be known as the National Council of Social and Economic Research.

In the first place, as regards the matter of "immediate consideration," we could agree to that at once; we could say we shall consider it, but that is a play upon words. But if what is meant is the immediate appointment, establishment and maintenance of an organized body, what force is there in the suggestion? Let me point this out: in the service of the state to-day, in the department over which I happen to preside, the Department of Trade and Commerce; in the Department of Public Works, in the Department of External Affairs, over which the leader of the opposition presided until a few months ago, and in several other departments, are officers of the state probably as well qualified to study and deal with these questions as any man you could get outside of the employment of the state. So far as the government is concerned, at the present time we feel that we are bringing to bear upon these problems, to quote my hon. friend's words, the trained minds, economists, that are at present in the employ of the state. May I say that I have been pleasantly surprised at the splendid qualifications manifested by many of those men when you place before them the different problems which from day to day confront a government. They are highly trained, highly competent. We are disposed as a government to approach these questions with the assistance of those trained officers of the state.

It may be permissible for me to pause for a moment to say this: I believe in Canada there is growing up within the ambit of the civil service a body of trained officials who will take their place beside the best officials of any other country with which I am acquainted. I am not at the moment claiming credit for this government, the previous government, or other governments, but since I came into parliament twenty years ago, I have seen tremendous progress in the stabilization and standardization, if I may so use that term, of the efficiency of officers of the government. It would, I think, be wise economy on the part of the state to utilize the services of those men, within the ambit of the powers we already have and without the establishment of any special body.

I want now to deal briefly with a few of the arguments that have been advanced. My hon. friend, dealing with the question who should tackle this great problem, said it should be the government, or, through the government, some organized body appointed by them. I have already referred to that, and I shall not labour the point; but I should like to draw attention to the fact that there is a difference between the duties of the government as applied to industrial and scientific research and the sociological problem of equitable distribution. There is quite a difference between the functions that are called into play with respect to these problems.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is the trouble.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, it is the trouble. In the first instance, research has to do with taking this great estate that we call Canada and making out of it the best that we can, using its resources, directing its energies as far as possible along practical and material lines; but the moment you enter the sociological field, you enter the realm of the individual rights of one man as against those of another and, if I might use the term, individuality comes into the problem. It is going to be a very difficult thing for any group of scientists, whether inside the government employ or outside, and body of economists or sociologists, to determine some plan that cannot or will not be completely wrecked, —by what? By the peculiarities and idiosyncrasies of the individual. Therein is where my hon. friends, and particularly the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, are weak in their positions. Therefore I would hesitate to advise the house to organize a group of persons outside of the house to deal with the sociological side of this great question.

My hon. friend made certain suggestions in regard to the question of the type of the council, but I thnk a moment's thought will show the uselessness, shall I say, of a body such as he mentioned. He suggested one representative from each branch of commercial activity. I have had a good deal of experience in seeing groups or individuals representing different classes of thought in commercial and industrial life endeavour to work together, and it has been a pretty serious and difficult matter to get them to pull together to any degree at all. My hon. friend I think will recognize that. I at once question the suitability as well as the effectiveness of a group such as he suggests.

Then he makes the very simple suggestion that they should come to some conclusion. That is the sort of language which I would again point out is so often used, and yet is so abortive—to come to some conclusion, to pitchfork a problem into the hands of representatives of this, that and the other class, and ask them to come to some conclusion. I think we would do very much better if the government of the country, recognizing its responsibility, would direct the trained minds within its own employ, and tackle the problems which are immediately before us, certainly keeping in mind the broad question of world economics, because they are trained to do that, and are better equipped to do it than any other class of men in the country. But again, I say, we cannot see the advantage of turning the matter over to a body of individuals such as is suggested.

My hon. friend also raised the questions of transporation, foreign trade, and a study of the Russian system. I wish to say a few words in regard to that now. I shall leave the remarks of the mover of the resolution (Mr. Speakman), and turn my attention briefly to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) who seconded the resolution. A few moments ago I said something to this effect, that the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would suggest to the minds of the members of the house reasons why it would be unwise to accept the resolution. I say that for this reason: As presented by the mover, the resolution was comparatively moderate; but as elaborated by the seconder it amounted virtually to the suggestion that we should adopt the principles lying behind the Russian Soviet system. The speech of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre was indeed, in my estimation —and I followed him carefully—calculated to leave that impression. I am not saying he is wrong, but I do say this, that I do not think that was in the mind of the mover of the resolution. I do not think that such is in the mind of many who would support the resolution, but it does indicate to us what we are faced with if we accept the resolution. That is the point I wish to make.

Very early in his remarks the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested that this commission be appointed to investigate the entire economic system. Let us pause for a moment and think of what that means —to investigate the entire economic system. I have been reading economic works for thirty-eight years, and I have gone through a large number of them; not perhaps as many as my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and a few others here, have read, but still I have gone through a great many. I have read them and studied them and thought about them a great deal, and to my mind anybody who would undertake an investigation of the entire economic system, limiting it even to Canada, would enter upon a task which could not in a lifetime be pursued to the point where a useful conclusion could be arrived at. Morever, long before such a study could be fully entered upon, the rapidity with which industrial and commercial conditions vary the world over would necessitate such changes that the results of their earlier investigations would have to be abandoned because they would be out of date. To my mind such broad theorizing as this militates against the proposal of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and the very many otherwise intelligent suggestions he has to make.

Then there is the suggestion of the mobilizing of the brains of the country. Nobody objects to the mobilizing of brain power. I know that a great many people are very fond of saying that the brains of the country are not mobilized in parliament; I shall not emphasize that on account of being a member of some years' standing, but we have mobilized the brains of the country, so far as material resources will permit us to do so, within the ranks of the present employees of the government. Let us use these; we can use them, and we intend to use them. Let us use this brain power which is already at our disposal rather than step out in a vague and indefinite way to mobilize the brains of the country. Let my hon. friend bear this in mind—and it is worth bearing in mind at all times when considering matters of this kind—the brains that are now engaged in our large industries are making their contribution toward the solution of the problems of this country. The brains that are now engaged in our universities in studying economic problems are giving their meed of service to the solution of these problems, and they are probably doing it better in the universities than they could do it in the employ of the government. The brains that are given freely to public service all over this country, in municipal councils, legislative assemblies, parliament, and elsewhere, are being applied to the solution of these problems just as the brains of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre are being applied, in his own way, to their solution. The phrase "mobilizing the brains of the country" is more or less meaningless, particularly when it ignores entirely the present mobilization of great mental powers within the government service.

My hon. friend in passing also used the sweeping phrase, "centralized planning." I am going to propound to my hon. friends, particularly in that corner of the house, and perhaps to the right hon. leader of the opposition, this suggestion: If you took steps to-day to draft a centralized plan, what is the first thing you would be confronted with? The Combines Investigation Act. Last week and this week I have been studying a certain phase of our export trade. I have been giving it study for some months, and I am trying to bring it to a focal point. I shall not say what it is at the moment, because that is not necessary. But certain suggestions arose out of the study of this question by the best brains that could be brought to bear upon it. They were not mine, by the way, because I came along only incidentally. The best brains in that branch of industry and among those most competent to advise with regard to it were mobilized, and what did we find? We found that to achieve a certain end we would be confronted with the Combines Investigation Act, because that act prevents the coalescing of various industries into a unit, which it calls a combine in restraint of trade. Without a doubt the trend in world trade to-day is for industries or branches of industries to get together with the intention of making stronger and more concentrated impacts upon the markets to which they wish to direct their trade, yet the moment they do that they are confronted with this act. I suppose my hon. friend would say, "All right, repeal the act." I would point out to him, however, that The Combines Investigation Act is one which has been cherished by the group of people who are now advocating the centralization of industry and trade. When I use the word "group" I do not refer to that particular body of men with which my hon. friend is associated, but to numbers of people throughout the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but I think it is hardly accurate to say that the Combines Investigation Act prevents large combinations. In addition to evidence of the existence of a combine there must be proof that it has operated or is likely to operate against the public interest, that it results in the undue enhancement of prices, prevents or lessens competition or otherwise restrains or injures trade or commerce.

Mr. STEVENS: I quite agree with my right hon. friend. I am trying to make it clear that it is easy to say, as my hon. friend said the other day, that there should be advancement in centralized planning. But when one attempts actually to plan some such action he is confronted with the possibility of coming within the ambit of that act, and in the case I mentioned there is no doubt that such was the result.

My hon. friend quoted from a book. I am going to follow him in one or two of his quotations, because I do not think it is right to let the impression go abroad that this new effort in Russia, or experiment as he calls it, is the utopian scheme it is portrayed to be. I want to make the point clear that I am not condemning the effort being made in Russia. So far as those efforts contribute to the happiness, the comfort and the elevation of humanity I wish them success. I think however this parliament and country before accepting many of the statements advanced ought to ask the question, "At what cost?" My hon. friend particularly emphasized the fact that the editor of the book, The Challenge of Russia, was a former international secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association. He states therefore that his work ought to carry more weight than that of an ordinary person. There is no doubt that the book is an excellent one. There are thousands of such books. I have waded through quite a number, and am profoundly interested in the movement. However, may I read one quotation read by my hon. friend, and add a few words immediately following his quotation which he conveniently left out.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I suggest that I was confining myself to the particular aspect of the five year plan, and in that connection I read a few quotations. I am not accustomed to "conveniently" leaving out anything.

Mr. STEVENS: I should be the last person to give offence to my hon. friend or to any other hon. member of the house.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What is the name of the book?

Mr. STEVENS: The Challenge of Russia, by Sherwood Eddy. I shall leave the words of my hon. friend to the judgment of the house and withdraw the word "conveniently." My hon. friend quoted from page 66 the following words:

> Thus far the yearly goal of the plan has not only been equalled but exceeded in most branches of industry, so that some of the goals set for 1933 had been surpassed by October, 1930.

My hon. friend finished his quotation at that point, and then carried the quotation to another page of the book entirely. There is nothing very significant about the words I am about to read, but I just wish to quote them in order to give the proper weight to the quotation of my hon. friend. The paragraph read by my hon. friend ended with the words:

> . . . . had been surpassed by October, 1930.

Then follow these words:

> In two fields the plan fell short at the beginning, and will probably be uneven in its accomplishments. At the close of the first year the decrease in cost of production was only 5 per cent instead of the scheduled 7 per cent; while labour productivity was increased 14·5 per cent instead of the 17·3 per cent called for by the plan.

There is nothing significant in these words, but they do help to place the proper weight on his quotation. The way he left it one might be under the impression that so rapid was the expansion and so successful had been the plan that by October, 1930, it had surpassed the program scheduled for 1933.

Then, another quotation given by my hon. friend was to my mind more misleading than the one I have just cited. From page 77 my hon. friend quoted the following words:

Real wages are already 16 per cent above those of 1913, with additional benefits and social services amounting to 27·3 per cent of the total payroll, in reduced rents and prices, free vacations, medical service, etc.

I well remember the intonations with which my hon. friend read the words "free vacations, medical service, etc." At once the impression was left that it was a utopian idea. In the same line I find the following words:

Professor Paul Douglas estimates that American workers earn about three and a third times those of Russia, and that their standard of living is approximately three and a half times as high.

The point I make is this: when an impassioned appeal is made in this house stating that we should step aside and consider things occurring in Russia, at least let us give to the house and country a thoroughly well balanced statement of the cost.

At page 78 in the same book I find another quotation I would like to read:

Vacations on full pay ranged from twelve days to one month. Other compensation, insurance, social service, rent, heat, light and food at reduced prices amount to 37 per cent added to the workers' wages. Every man works four days out of five and has seventy rest days a year.

That was my hon. friend's quotation, and again we have a utopian condition presented. However, here are the words following:

Allowing for these benefits, the average net compensation per worker was a little over $600 a year. Food and housing conditions for Russian workers are still often primitive, but no workers care less for their condition or will put up with more hardship.

Here the writer is referring to the Russian worker.

The strain and self-sacrifice imposed upon the workers by the five-year plan would not be tolerated by independent, individualistic, Anglo-Saxon workers, ...

I wish to place a few facts before my hon. friend and before those who cite the example of Russia as a reason why we should embark upon centralized plans, organized mobilization of brains, and so on. In the first place, there are in Russia about 150,000,000 people. It is a country composite in geographical formation and with tremendous undeveloped natural resources. There is no place in the world to-day, including Canada, which offers such opportunities for exploitation. I am not confusing the term "exploitation" but use it in its economic sense. No place offers such opportunities as Russia for exploitation of natural resources for the benefit of the people. Further, there is no place in the world where the masses of the people are in such great need of economic advancement as they are in Russia. Having in mind the conditions in China and India, my last statement may be considered a little too strong. Russia is in an entirely different position from Canada. In this country there are from 9,000,000 to 11,000,000 people; pending the coming census we do not know the exact number, but we will say there are 11,000,000. The area of Canada is slightly less than that of Russia. Our resources do not equal but compare favourably with those of Russia, and are of a somewhat similar character. In Canada however there is not the necessity to work for the next fifty years to catch up with the rest of the world. In Russia there is a mass of people who have not enjoyed the benefits which are commonplace to us. We read about the establishment of an electric light system in Russia, and are told that about $100,000,000 is, being spent on electrical development. In a country like Russia such an expenditure is not extraordinary; for Canada however it would be considered large. Why compare conditions in Canada, which has an independent and individualistic people, with those of a country which never had independence or individuality in the practice of its citizenship? The conditions are not comparable at all. Consequently I say to my hon. friend and to those who advance these arguments that it is but a misleading of the public mind, particularly at this time, and a misleading of those who unfortunately are out of work and are suffering—

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I hope my hon. friend is not suggesting that I was arguing in that way. I make this point for the sake of clarity.

Mr. STEVENS: I made that very clear previously, and I will make it doubly clear at this time. I opened my remarks with the statement that I thought the hon. member for Red Deer was very moderate and very fair in his presentation of the resolution.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am quite willing to take the brunt of it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman's time has elapsed.

Mr. STEVENS: I will conclude with a sentence. I also said that I thought the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre really carried with it the answer to the speech of the hon. member for Red Deer. I am sorry to say to my hon. friend, who undoubtedly has given the matter a great deal of thought, that the government feels it would not be wise to carry out his suggestion as to the immediate establishment and maintenance of an organized body for this purpose, but rather suggests to the house that the government will direct the activities of its own trained civil servants, through the proper departments, to a genuine effort looking to the solution of these problems.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I think it is regrettable that the resolution of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) should have been made the basis of a discussion of Russia. I really fail to see the connection between the two. It is true that one may mention Russia in a speech, or use Russia as an illustration, without suggesting that Canada should become Russia or that we should attempt in any way to follow Russia. As the hon. minister has just said, the conditions of the two countries are incomparable. The great struggle in Russia, as far as I can make out, is to get enough to eat and enough to wear, while in Canada our problem is that we have too much to eat and too much to wear.

Surely the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), who has just taken his seat, must have misunderstood the motion to have discussed it as he did, because we all know he is a student of economic problems. We all know he is forward looking, and I think if he had not misapprehended it he would have accepted it. Surely if there had been any kind of planning at all in Canada for the last half century we would be able to distribute sufficient of life's necessities to the people of Canada without having to resort to charity, as is the case to-day. Surely we would have made a little more progress than we have towards dealing with the unemployment situation, if we had concentrated on the matter and tried to find a solution.

I mention these things in passing, but I do not propose to follow the minister in his discourse on Russia, I propose to take up the argument in favour of the creation of a national council of social and economic research which, as far as I can see, has not the remotest connection either with Russia or with what they are doing there. The house was privileged to listen to the hon. member for Red Deer on this question. His speech revealed patient research and care in preparation. It contained much constructive thought; it was logically and eloquently delivered, and was marked in every sentence by the utmost sincerity.

May I attempt to summarize the argument of the hon. member. He assumes that the problem of production has been solved. The Minister of Trade and Commerce challenged that assumption, and I do not dispute his challenge on the grounds on which he takes it. I do think he will agree, however, that at least we have been able to produce more wheat in Canada than we can use; he will agree that we have produced more boots in Canada than the people need to wear, or can get to wear, and so on. As to the production of the future I know nothing. Perhaps a hundred years or a million years from now the people will not require any boots and even will not be eating wheat. I do not know what then will be the problems of production, but at the present moment we have solved the problem of production at least of the essentials of life. I will not go into all the details of production, but in matters of food, clothing and shelter—let us stop at those three—Canada surely can produce in abundance, and I do not think it will be challenged, even by the minister himself, that the problem of production has been solved in respect to those matters up to this point.

Then the hon. member for Red Deer indicated that our trouble in Canada was one of abundance. I am expressing his argument in my own way, of course. He went on to indicate that the well-being of society now depends upon its wisdom in using the products resulting from the knowledge we have gathered in past generations; he pointed out that the road to the solution is by way of scientific knowledge, and that the responsibility for providing means of acquiring that wisdom rests upon the state. He proceeded to propose a national research council as the means of obtaining the necessary knowledge for more intelligent direction in social affairs, and he went so far as to suggest ways of selecting the personnel of that council. In this regard he suggested a council representative of the functional groups engaged in the economic life of the state. I agree with the minister that perhaps this might not be the best way of appointing them, that is, on a class or functional basis. It is true that those people meeting together might each emphasize his own particular part of the problem and forget to make inquiries as to the problem as a whole. I think that is a very likely result, but after all that method need not be adopted; surely there is some way of securing capable students to undertake this work. The hon. member concluded his argument by visualizing for the house a broad field of inquiry which might be undertaken by the proposed body.

I can understand why journalists and perhaps a few members of this house might regard this proposal—as some of them have regarded it—as something too academic and too abstract for parliamentary discussion. I think we may regard those terms "academic" and "abstract" in pretty much the same way as the Minister of Trade and Commerce regards "great economic problems;" those words, as they are often used in connection with the problems put forward by this corner of the house in particular, stand in the same class. It is quite easy to use those expressions in opposing a view with which one disputes, but they do not mean anything; they are just words. Surely there is nothing very abstract about the question of unemployment, say, and there is nothing very academic about an overproduction of wheat in western Canada. There is nothing particularly abstract about a council of ablebodied people, and, let us hope, people who will be able mentally as well. That is not an abstract, but a very concrete proposition. But disposing of the argument on the ground that it is academic or abstract is a practice which, I think, arises from prejudice rather than from knowledge. And I fancy that the prejudice which is behind that form of argument—of course I am not attributing this to the minister, because he did not use these words—is based upon what I am going to call the philosophy of government. Now the philosophy of government in this country, as everyone knows, is the philosophy of laissez faire: let things settle themselves; let time work out our problems. Things will right themselves—that is the belief. Well, could there be a sillier abstraction than that? Time and things will not in themselves correct any error or abuse. Time and things are not creative. Time and things without intelligent direction will end in chaos and disaster. We cannot trust to time and things. The time has come when the social engineer must do for society what the mechanical engineer has done for production. In my opinion, the greatest nation of to-morrow will be the one that excels in social engineering.

May I describe just for a moment, to the minister and to this house, the static condition of political thought in Canada—and that includes this group as well. I am not suggesting that we are the only people who can think, and I know very well that the minister would not agree with me if I did. I am going to emphasize, however, what appears to me to be the static condition of political thought in Canada. While economic conditions have changed profoundly in no longer a space of time than half a century, our political thought still revolves around the little planet which appeared in the sky of history at the time of the corn laws. And although the party now in power does not agree with the free trade policy which came into being at that time, it does agree with the philosophy of that policy, which is to let everything go to the devil if it wants to. The government should not interfere with industry; it should not interfere with the development of natural resources; it should not interfere with anything; just let everything go. That policy is to leave things alone in the belief that they will come out satisfactorily in the end. That was the philosophy of that sparkling planet which appeared with the corn laws and is still the centre of our political thoughts. But in political campaigning we do not leave everything to time and circumstances; we plan things. I know I do, and I should be surprised if the minister did not.

Profound changes, I say, have taken place in fifty years in the economic world. But in sixty years in Canada there has been no change in political thought. Let me give an example. In the days of Sir John Macdonald what was the political issue in Canada? Roughly speaking, it was this: Shall we have a tariff or shall we not have a tariff? And practically every election in Canada has been fought on that issue, with perhaps the single exception of the war election. The last election was fought on the issue of tariff or no tariff, and I will bet my neck that the next election will be fought on that issue again. Now that is static thinking.

What happens? The government is elected to carry out a tariff policy, and then there comes along a period of depression. The people are allowed to believe that the government is to blame and they turn that government out and elect another in its place, a government professing lower tariffs. That government enjoys a period of office, and then there comes another time of depression, and once more the people are led to believe that the responsibility is the government's, and once again the government is turned out. Now, how long will it take to solve the economic problem of the country in that way? I will give you a million years and I venture to say that in the end you will be just where you are now. There is no creative thought there; there is no leadership, there is no attempt to solve the problem. Our politics is one hundred years behind the times so far as the economic necessities of the country are concerned.

This resolution is an attempt to make a beginning to bring our political thinking up to the economic necessities of the time. And surely there is nothing whatsoever abstract n that proposal. There is nothing academic about the problems of overproduction and unemployment. There is nothing abstract about an actual physical council composed of individuals, nothing abstract about searching for knowledge in scientific fields. These, on the contrary, are all matters of practical necessity, and the decision of this house to establish a national council of research in sociological matters would at least reveal that parliament believed it possible to find a solution for our present problems. It would show that we in this house at least are convinced that such a solution can be found, in the same manner as scientists have found solutions for other problems in other departments of scientific research. But if this house actually thinks that society can emerge from its present state, orderly and without upheaval and suffering, by letting things take their course, then I should say unhesitatingly that what we need first is brains. I know all my friends will agree with me on that point. And an act of parliament does not provide that.

Society to-day is where the mariner was before the compass was discovered. Before that time he moved along the headlands with which he was familiar, afraid to venture out of their sight. But when someone discovered the compass, he was able to explore. To-day our governments are pretty much in the position of the earlier mariner. I am not criticizing the present government, for if this were the Irvine government I am afraid it would be doing pretty much the same thing, crawling along the headlands of usage and custom, without an instrument to assist in an effort to get away from the land. That is the situation as I see it. Or, to change the analogy: There was a time when disease was regarded as an act of God, and no encouragement was given to the science of mastering it. But the medical profession, by long and painstaking research, has almost conquered disease. It has got the better of disease to a very considerable extent, and I am sure that the medical men hope ultimately to conquer it completely.

If we still hold to the outworn dogma of laissez faire, then this resolution will not pass; for by that reasoning the less we do the sooner will things right themselves. To do nothing intelligently is the supreme economic virtue of that philosophy. But if, on the other hand, we have come to the view that intelligent direction of social life is as indispensable as the intelligent direction of individual affairs, then the proposed council or some similar body becomes a necessity. I contend that science has in a very large measure produced what we call our modern economic problems, and I say that science alone can solve the problems it has created. It may be urged—indeed, the minister has just urged it in other language—that the government can do all the fact-finding that is required, including in that claim all the officials of the government departments. Now, of course, I agree with the minister that the officials are efficient. I have had no experience with the officials of the departments, but still I am willing to agree that our departmental officials are quite efficient. There is no doubt about that, so far as I know. But what are they studying? How many departmental officials are now engaged studying the unemployment question in all its ramifications? How many of our civil servants or officials of departments are engaged studying the question of finance? And who are they? And, again, how many are engaged studying the problem of too much wheat? There may be some working at that, but I confess I do not know who they are, and if I wanted any information that they had acquired I would not know where to go for it. No doubt they are efficient, but they are working right up by the old headland; they are not losing sight of it, they are sailing in the old trade route, repeating, repeating, repeating; they have no incentive to creative thinking and action. I do not blame them; I am blaming this parliament and the country—ourselves—for not giving them any opportunity to act in a different way.

Of course the government would be the ultimate authority in respect to policy. We could not create a council that could go ahead and act by itself; it would be there only to furnish information to the government as required. The government really has no time to do research work as it should be done. Again, I have no experience of departmental work, but I can imagine that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has all he can do to discharge the great responsibilities with which he has been entrusted by the people, and that he has to labour overtime to do research work on questions of the kind that we are now discussing; and I know he does a good deal of that overtime work. A government will undertake research work of course in specific cases when there is no possibility of further evading it. What we want is an institution that will do research work continuously and have the necessary information on hand when it is required, so that we shall not have to wait several years for legislation which might be passed at once if we had the requisite information on which to act.

Unemployment insurance is an outstanding example of this kind of thing. The Prime Minister's speech on that question the other day was of outstanding ability, one of the finest I have ever heard on the subject. He revealed a thorough grasp of the essential principles of insurance, a familiarity with all the important factors, and exhibited a wise caution against any of the dangers of possible failure. After having reviewed the whole problem in a masterly way, he said:

> Does my hon. friend suggest that this house is now immediately seized of such information as would enable us with the very best ability we have in this Dominion to prepare a measure upon any basis that would commend itself to the judgment of the thinking people of this country?

Later on he said:

> The Department of Finance is advised that under existing conditions, to make a leap in the dark, to jump into the abyss without having knowledge of what is involved, would spell disaster to the very purpose which the hon. gentleman has in mind.

I agree with every word the Prime Minister uttered in this connection. And remember, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister probably has a greater knowledge of that subject than any other hon. member. He has had ample opportunity to study this and kindred questions in a long experience in big business and knows what he is talking about, and when he said that even he with his experience and knowledge of the question has not yet got sufficient information, how are members of the government or private members to acquire it? But the point is this, Mr. Speaker: unemployment insurance must be delayed—for what? For knowledge, for information which we could not expect any government to have right off the bat, or any minister to be in possession of at a moment's notice. Consequently action must be deferred probably for two or three years while the government instructs its various departments to get the information required. Now, if we had an institution such as the hon. member for Red Deer suggests should be established, information, on that and similar questions, would be on hand at the moment it was required.

Next, I wish to argue that the proposed research work is an undertaking for the state. No one else can undertake it. There is no opportunity for the private citizen as an individual to do this. My hon. friend the minister will agree that in biology, or medicine, or mechanical engineering the individual is free within certain limits to pursue his bent, to prove his case by experiment, and even to make his living in so doing. But there is no such freedom or opportunity possible for students of economics or of sociology who may have a bent along these lines, nor is it advisable or possible to allow such freedom to the individual in these matters as is permitted in industry and commerce generally. A new machine, a new medicine, a new industrial enterprise will be accepted readily enough. But let a man have a new idea in economics, and he may starve to death or go to prison for all the world cares. So this is not a job for individuals, it is a job for the state, and the state will lack leadership until it appoints the body necessary to obtain that knowledge and give that kind of leadership.

Lack of attention to these matters by government accounts, I should say, to a great degree for so-called agitators and propagandists, such as myself and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If the information were forthcoming by a properly equipped government institution, if we knew that every avenue had been explored, that all the facts had been brought to light, and that the policy of the government was based upon such facts, I would not be such an agitator as I am; but I am sure that this is not so. I would say further that if some of these ideas of the so-called agitators and propagandists—perhaps most of them are bad ideas, but some of them are good; I know mine are good, and I know those expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre are most excellent, but nobody believes them because we bring them forward; that is the trouble—but if these ideas were brought forward by such a research council as is proposed, backed by the government, they would be accepted much more readily. Those ideas might not be any better of course, but they would come with greater authority from such a quarter, and the public would have greater assurance that every agency was being employed to keep our society in step with the requirements of the times.

Let me, then, emphasize that the individual cannot start out on his own initiative and bring forth any knowledge that will be of very much use to any government. In the first place, as I have said, if his idea happens to be more radical than is thought to be good, it will be discredited; in the second place he will likely follow one little line of thought and not go into the question comprehensively; next, he cannot make his living, and therefore can only work at the problem fitfully and not adequately; and, finally, if he tries to force his idea or experiment on the people he will probably be sent to prison very quickly. So the individual cannot tackle a problem of this kind. Not even our professors in the universities can do so. No doubt they are doing excellent work, but we are not using their work as it should be used, nor are we giving them the opportunities that they should be given. So this job must be done by government agencies.

Let me say next that I think there ought to be a place for the social engineer, for the student of economics and sociology. The nation has provided no means of conserving and using the best thought even of the political economists that we have. I would say that the attitude of the minister would not be calculated to encourage them in any further research work. There are plaudits and emoluments, and rightly so, for explorers and discoverers in every other branch of science, but for the seeker in the field of economics and sociology there is only anathema. There is glory for the person who makes two blades of grass grow where but one grew before. Should not there be a little bit of glory for the man who can distribute two bushels of wheat where now only one is being distributed? The problem is now one of distribution and nobody is really working on that problem. This is one task for such a council as is proposed. We ask them that parliament provide the opportunity for such a work as that. I feel sure if the minister had not been led astray by the Russian red herring, he would have adopted this beautiful mackerel. He went after something that did not belong to the argument, and if it had belonged to the argument I would probably have agreed with him. These things should not be mixed up at all. We ask merely for the consideration of the appointment of a council to do research work in the way of solving some of our economic problems. If we give an opportunity in this way, men will rise to embrace it. In the universities and colleges of this country there are many professors who will strive to qualify for such a position as that. It is true, of course, that social science is much more complex and difficult than other branches of science. Social science is all embracing, but if we fail in that science then all other sciences will fail, for ultimately their value must be estimated in terms of the social and human purposes for which they exist.

My hon. friend has quoted from a book on Russia. I want to conclude by making a reference to another writer on Russia, and when I speak of Russia, let me explain very clearly that that by no means argues that I want to establish Russian conditions in Canada. I do not. I wish to refer to, not quote, a statement in that book of Mr. Maurice Hindus, called Humanity Uprooted. He says there that we are at war with Russia. By "we" he means that all nations under the capitalistic system are at war with the nation that is under communism. He went on to say that this is a war of construction, not of destruction, and his inference was that the country which is the more constructive, that country which has utilized the natural resources and the fruits of the genius of men together to produce the greatest service to humanity, is the nation that will win this great war. Can it be expected that a country that adopts a laissez-faire philosophy, that allows things to drift, that is planless, can compete with a nation that has planned every move that it is going to make? In my opinion, as this war goes on between the Russian system and the capitalistic system, as the years go by, we shall discover that our capitalistic system will then not be what it is now and that the Russian communistic system will not be what it is now, but that each will copy the best of the other and probably both come to pretty much the same conclusion. But I insist that if we are afraid of being overcome by Russia, the only way to meet Russia is by intelligent planning, by securing the information required and by working on that information. We cannot win this great war of reconstruction otherwise. The only way to win this war is to plan; the only way to plan is to obtain knowledge, and the only way to obtain the necessary knowledge is through the means suggested by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman). Therefore it is the duty and privilege of this assembly to vote for such a body.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): When the last speaker rose, I was about to direct to the minister a question which perhaps would have elicited all that at the moment I wish to say on this subject. As I have listened to the remarks of my hon. friend I have become increasingly convinced that all that is asked for in the way of legislation by this resolution is already enacted, and will be found in an act of this parliament which has its place in the revised statutes. I also feel more than ever convinced that my hon. friends to my left should have directed their attention to the act and have asked the ministry to give to it the interpretation and emphasis which they think and which in agreement with their views, I think, is the right one, to be placed upon its provisions. The positive portion of this resolution, as has been pointed out, is that there should be—

> Some organized body for this purpose which body might be known as the National Council on Social and Economic Research.

The abbreviated title of such a council would be the National Research Council, and that is precisely the body which was established by act of parliament some years ago. I have in my hand a copy of the revised statutes in which is to be found the Research Council Act, 1924, section 1 of which reads:

> This act may be cited as the Research Council Act, 1924.

As hon. members have been discussing the question, I have been looking through this act to see whether its clauses are not sufficiently broad to include everything that they have suggested, and I think they are. More than that, I believe, had there been time to look at the original debate, one would have discovered that the intention was that its provisions should be broad enough to cover research into social and economic questions as well as into questions which are purely industrial. The Research Council Act of 1924, revised statutes, provides first of all for a committee of the privy council which is to be known as the Committee of the Privy Council on Scientific and Industrial Research. My recollection is that the government appoints under that designation a sub-committee of the cabinet. Such a committee was, I know, appointed under the late government, and I assume that the government opposite has, since it has come into office, appointed such a committee. If it has not, there is still plenty of time to do so.

Mr. GEARY: May I ask the number of the chapter?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Chapter 64. Then there is an advisory council which is a large body called the Honorary Advisory Council for Scientific and Industrial Research, consisting of fifteen members. These members are appointed by the administration and it is their duty to arrange for the investigation of any subject coming within the scope of the act which is assigned to the council by the committee of the cabinet known as the Committee of the Privy Council on Scientific and Industrial Research. The definition of the duties of the council will be found in section 6 of the act. In a sentence, they are as follows:

> The council shall have charge of all matters affecting scientific and industrial research in Canada which may be assigned to it by the committee.

Social and economic questions are just one class of questions which may be scientifically investigated. Economics is as much a science as any other science that may be named. The cabinet have full powers under this act to refer to this committee any question that would come within the scope of the words: "All matters affecting scientific and industrial research in Canada."

Looking at the resolution specifically, one discovers that what the mover, if I interpret his mind aright, evidently has particularly in mind, is that up to the present this body, this research council, has been engaged so exclusively with one aspect of research, namely, that which has to do with the production of wealth, that another body with similar powers ought to be appointed to deal with another aspect, namely, the distribution of wealth and with the questions of exchange. My point is that production, distribution, and exchange are all branches of the one science of political economy, or as it is more frequently called to-day, economics, and that this council has just as much power to-day to deal with the questions of distribution or the questions of exchange as it has to deal with any phase of production. What it may do depends entirely upon the direction the government of to-day wishes to give to its duties.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has such direction at any time ever been given to the National Research Council?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That I cannot say. But what I am saying is that the act is there. It does not require another act to permit of a like investigation of social and economic problems. What is required in order to have the kind of investigation conducted which my hon. friends are asking should be conducted is that the government of the day should take advantage of the statute to that end.

Assuming the resolution were to carry this afternoon, and that the government were to proceed to draft an act to give effect to it, the government could not do better than to put on the statute book the statute that is already there. It therefore seems to me wholly unnecessary to ask for the enactment of such a measure to achieve the objects which my hon. friends have in view.

In order that I may be quite specific in reference to the applicability of the provisions of the act to the matters mentioned in this resolution, let me quote one paragraph of the resolution which refers to a certain class of questions, questions of agriculture, which are in the minds of my hon. friends and then refer to the act itself:

> Whereas, the problem of distribution, with the kindred questions of purchasing power and the exchange values of agricultural and other commodities, together with their relation to the growing problem of unemployment, are still unsolved, and demand immediate attention with systematized investigation and scientific study.

There my hon. friends are drawing attention to the problems of agriculture as related to unemployment and to certain other subjects.

Now let us look at the act. Section 10 of the Research Council Act reads as follows:

> Without thereby limiting the general powers of the council conferred upon or vested in it by this act, it is hereby declared that the council may exercise the following powers, namely:—

Here follows a series of sections, seven in all, and the seventh section reads:

> Researches, the object of which is to improve conditions in agriculture.

The very thing which my hon. friend's resolution says demands immediate investigation.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: A part of what we want.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but the section reads, "without thereby limiting the general powers." No specific thing need be set out. It says, however specifically, "researches, the object of which is to improve conditions in agriculture." If one reads through the act carefully, one will discover that the act is broad enough to include the investigation of any problem which has to do with production, distribution or with exchange.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

In Palgrave's Dictionary of Political Economy, which is a standard and recognized authority, it is stated quite clearly that, as a branch of science, economics is as much concerned with exchange and distribution as it is with production, also that it is concerned as a science with all those social problems. I read from page 678:

> As to the scope of this science—it would be generally agreed that it is a branch of a larger science, dealing with man in his social relations; that it is to an important extent, but not altogether, capable of being usefully studied in separation from other branches of this science; and that it is mainly concerned with the social aspect—as distinct from the special technical aspect—of such human activities as are directed towards the production, appropriation and application of the material means of satisfying human desires, so far as such means are capable of being exchanged.

As hon. members know, the study of economics, as such, is a more modern development of the old study of political economy, which had come to be looked upon as too exclusively concerned with wealth, as generally understood, and not sufficiently concerned with human needs and the social problems pertaining thereto. I was interested in looking in this same dictionary to see what definition would be given of the words "political economy." I find that while at the beginning of the article the definition is in accord with what I have just said as to the old-fashioned idea of political economy being a hard-hearted science, the modern developments of political economy have made it in the minds of scientists and others into a more human, or more humane, science, if such a thing is conceivable. Indicated in this article, under the heading, "Recent development of political economy," I find these subjects listed:

> Economics as concerned with currency;
> Economics as based on the element of labour;
> The gradual appearance of the ethical element;
> Historical, and the gradual rise of the principle of freedom with new aspects of state control.

There will be found the very words that have formed the kernel of most of the arguments that have been presented by those who are sitting at the other end of this chamber; they are also the words appearing throughout the resolution, which speaks of matters relating to currency, to labour, to state control, and a larger industrial and personal freedom.

If I am correct in saying that all of these subjects come properly within the science of economics, then I think I am wholly right when I say that an act which gives to the government of Canada power to conduct scientific research, and which does not limit that research in any way, but specifically goes on to indicate how it may be broadened out to include agricultural problems, and the like, which will affect employment—that such an act provides everything that is asked for by hon. gentlemen to my left in the way of legislation necessary to enable the state to do the very thing which they wish to have done. That being the case—I was rather surprised that the minister did not draw attention to that fact. On the other hand I can understand that if he is not interested, or if the government is not interested in the investigation of social problems, there may have been a special reason why he made no mention of the act; but I hardly think that is the explanation.

I do believe it is true that up to the present time the work of the Research Council has been very largely concerned with investigations which have been of particular service to the manufacturers of this country, and to those who are concerned in developing certain of the great natural resources of this country. I remember, however, that some years ago—if I am not mistaken it was about 1919—the research council did send out communications to different bodies in this country and to individuals asking for subjects of investigation which they as a council or committee might consider, and they prepared a report in which the various subjects which would properly come under this act were summarized. I am speaking only from memory, because I have not had an opportunity of verifying what I am saying, but I believe that my hon. friends will find in that summary made by the research council itself, the assignment of social questions as one specific branch which in the opinion of its members the committee was perfectly free to undertake. At any rate the council has already taken up the consideration of certain agricultural questions specifically, as such. I thank the minister for the list of committees with which he has just supplied me. Among others there were the following: A conference on animal diseases, an associate committee on cereal rust, an associate committee on coal classification and analysis, an associate committee on field crop diseases, a committee on Trail smelters smoke and an associate committee on tuberculosis.

Mr. STEVENS: And a committee on honey.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, an associate committee on honey. Then there is an associate committee on grain research.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the committee on tuberculosis deal with humans or cattle?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot say.

An hon. MEMBER: Both.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am informed it deals with both. The point I am endeavouring to make is that there is no reason why any subject which is an important social problem of the day should not be investigated by a body of experts operating under state auspices and under the powers given to the government by the Research Council Act, if the government wishes to have that particular phase of social problems investigated.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The right hon. gentleman has read to us a list of productive effort rather than an examination into distributive effort.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That bears out my statement that up to the present time research council work has been confined to that phase of economic science which is concerned with production. To a very limited extent only has it been concerned with those phases of economic research which have to do with exchange and distribution. I agree with my hon. friend that there is no greater problem in Canada to-day than that of unemployment. At the moment I do not wish to make references of a party nature which I might quite properly make at this time as to the vastness and importance of the problem. I think the fact has been established that the causes of unemployment are very wide, and that they are by no means local, or, wholly attributable to any single government or political party There are great economic causes underlying the problem of unemployment just as there are like causes underlying other existing social conditions. Not only do I think the government might but I think under the present circumstances it ought to take advantage of this legislation in the statutes of Canada and have the research council bring together some of our leading economists in the universities or others of the type mentioned during the debate on this resolution and allow those men to give special time and thought to this great social problem, allow them to put in a year's work or more on the question of unemployment and means of coping with it. I would make that as a practical suggestion and one which I hope will appeal to my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he has had time to study the subject generally.

In conclusion I would repeat that it seems to me that my hon. friends instead of asking for more in the way of legislation should point out the powers the government already possess and that they should insist that with the legislation already enacted the government should now direct its energies into a field which thus far has been neglected and hereafter not so exclusively to fields which already have been too exclusively explored.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Following three such eminent speakers and astute politicians I am in rather a difficult position if I am to make any showing whatever. I should like to begin my few remarks in support of this resolution by congratulating the mover of the resolution (Mr. Speakman), on the general terms in which it has been worded. Again I would congratulate him upon the very reasonable way in which he explained the purport of the resolution. On the other hand, I was surprised at the attitude taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). Particularly, the minister stressed the remarks in reference to soviet Russia made by my hon. friend the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I was greatly surprised at the remarks of the minister in view of the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre definitely stated when making reference to Russia that he was drawing attention to that country only to show what could be done by organized planning. I cannot see any particular harm in that. The fact of the matter is that, whether we wish to admit it or not, at the present time the eyes of the world are focused on Russia. A few weeks ago Sir Frederick Williams Taylor on his return from Europe made the following statement to the press: "Keep your eyes on Russia." Following the return of the Minister of Trade and Commerce from Europe after the Imperial economic conference last fall the Vancouver Sun contained an interview. This article is dated Ottawa, December 31, 1930, and is as follows:

> Declaring that Russia's five-year plan was succeeding all along the line and that Canadians were doing their country a distinct disservice by pretending otherwise, Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, arrived here at noon to-day after two months in London attending the Imperial conference.
> Mr. Stevens is persuaded that one of the biggest economic problems for the world and for Canada to consider is that presented by the steady come-back of soviet Russia, which was buying incredibly large quantities of goods in the United Kingdom and in the United States and paying for them.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

I suppose the peculiar part about it is that she was paying for them. Then the interview continues:

> As an exporter, Russia, which is in the same latitude as Canada, can and does sell practically all of the natural products as Canada, and soon will also be selling many of the articles that Canada manufactures and exports, so that Russia will soon be a live competitor of Canada, not only in wheat and coal but in many of the Dominion's other main commodities.

It is not surprising that my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre should have referred to Russia when the Minister of Trade and Commerce made reference in the terms I have quoted. The resolution in my opinion merely emphasizes the philosophy of most hon. members in the particular group to which I belong. In this Dominion there are various schools of thought which advocate the carrying on and organizing of the nation's business along various lines. As everybody knows the Labour group believes in the evolutionary process in human society. Consequently when we see an evolutionary process taking place and reaching the stage where a crisis is imminent we believe some steps should be taken to meet such a situation.

May I endeavour to illustrate my thoughts in this way? All hon. members who have had any experience in raising poultry will know that if fertile eggs are secured, put into an incubator and subjected to a heat approximating 103 degrees, at the end of twenty-one days baby chicks will hatch. The Labour party feels that is the way human society should go. Our friends the communists, who are in favour of a revolution, believe that if you increased the heat a few more degrees you might get the chicks in fifteen days, but the only thing that would really happen would be that you would cook the eggs. My friends the conservatives—and I do not mean the party but those people of a conservative type of mind—as exemplified possibly by my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), believe that you can keep those chicks alive in the eggs after the twenty-one days are over, or if not, that possibly you could catch them and put them back in the shell after they came out. We believe that conditions are progressing towards a crisis in society, and just as you would prepare your brooder houses and other apparatus in order to care for your chicks, we believe it is the primary function of the government to prepare for contingencies, not only those which are already here but those which may arise later.

If there is anything which is outstanding in connection with our present economic crisis it is, if I may use the term, the unanimous confusion of thought in regard to what causes it. I have gathered from various sources the opinions of many people who are supposed to be leaders in our industrial, financial and other activities to-day. I will give a list of those people and then I will give you their suggestions as to what has caused this world wide economic depression, together with their remedies for the situation. First there is Lord D'Abernon, famous British economist; J. M. Keynes, noted economist and chairman of the National Mutual Life Assurance Society of England; J. Beaumont Pease, chairman of Lloyd's Bank; Sir Harry Goschen, chairman, National Provincial Bank of London; Right Hon. Reginald McKenna; Harold Cox, noted British economist and writer; the financial expert of the London Times; J. F. Darling, director of the Midland Bank of England; Sir Herbert Holt, president of the Royal Bank of Canada, and several others. Some of the reasons given by these people for present economic conditions are: Gold hoarding by the United States and France; the unwillingness of the United States and France to make foreign loans; shortage of monetary gold, and inadequacy of world distributing machinery. I am unable to understand what that term really means. If it means the inadequacy of the medium of exchange, as far as the great masses of the people are concerned, I quite understand it, but if the word "machinery" means our transportation systems, then it has no meaning whatever.

Some further reasons given by prominent people are immobility of labour and interference of trade unions, and paternalist government. If there is any trade union at the moment which can interfere with the economic activities of the country, I should like to belong to that union. Other reasons are: disequilibrium of the gold standard; high prices of manufactured merchandise; tariff walls and anti-dumping measures; widening of the gap between wholesale and retail prices and interference with the easy flow of capital between countries. There seem to be just as many different causes as there were individuals giving them, but the point I wish to make is this: If gold hoarding by the United States and France is a cause, how did it come about that gold gravitated to those two countries? What caused the cause? If the inadequacy of world distributing machinery, using the word in the only sense in which it can be used, is a cause, what brought about the inadequacy? This reminds me of a lecture I heard by a medical man, and after hearing my hon. friend from Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) speak on this point I am not sure whether he was just as wise in this connection as he is in most of what he says. However, this medical gentleman, in giving an address on disease, said that rheumatism was caused by diseased tonsils and that heart disease was caused by rheumatism. He stopped there; he did not tell us what caused the diseased tonsils, and it is the same with these people. They tell us that the high prices of manufactured merchandise caused the present depression. Who is responsible for the high prices of manufactured merchandise? Is that not something which might be investigated by this committee?

Let us go on and recite a few more of the reasons given for the present economic depression. There was a gentleman from Great Britain who came over to this country not long ago; I refer to Sir Arthur Balfour, former president of the Federation of British Industries. Speaking at Hamilton, I believe, recently he is quoted as follows:

> Sir Arthur Balfour noted that the world's population had increased by ten per cent in the period from 1923 to 1928. During the same period, however, he said that there had been an increase in agricultural production of sixteen per cent. The production of raw materials had increased thirty-five per cent, while the output of manufactured products had gone up forty per cent. You see,—he is reported as saying,—there are not enough people to consume the products.

I would imagine that such a statement was made by Sir Arthur Balfour after a very nice luncheon with people of his own kind. Certainly he could not meet a gathering of unemployed in any part of this Dominion and say there were not enough people to consume the products which were being manufactured. I believe this is something this research committee could investigate. Why is the condition of the people worse to-day than it was at any time between 1923 and 1928, when there has been an increase in agricultural products of sixteen per cent, in raw materials of thirty-five per cent and in manufactured products of forty per cent, with an increase in population of only ten per cent? It seems to me this is a problem for the research committee, that is, if the very efficient employees in the various government departments have not already investigated and reported on the matter.

Then we had another gentleman who came to this country at the request of the Dominion government to carry on an investigation. I refer to Sir Josiah Stamp. He is quoted as having said:

> For Canada, a short wheat crop might prove an act of God which would start her forward again.

Surely here is a situation which someone or some organization should investigate. There is material enough here to keep this research council working for a great many days, I should think.

Now, I quote from a speech made by the Prime Minister on December 30 in the city of Regina, I believe. He said:

> The marketing of the wheat crop will still leave our agriculturists without a sufficient competence for the winter months, which will find them when the spring comes without the seed for next year's crop. I cannot make up my mind why this country, between the lakes and the mountains, should experience the depression; why people who have lived here for years should now find themselves without any accumulation of goods, sometimes without the bare necessities of life.

With all this confusion, and all this want of understanding with regard to the distress that prevails in this Dominion to-day, is it not really time that some committee of the kind proposed in this resolution should be appointed? Is it not time that we established such a research council to investigate and try if possible to bring about a solution for our problems? That, I think, was in the mind of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) when he spoke last year at the special session of parliament. At page 320 of Hansard of that special session I find the hon. gentleman reported in reference to a suggestion made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) in connection with the return of people to the land as a solution for the problem of unemployment. The Minister of Trade and Commerce at that time said:

> For many years eastern Canada and the Pacific coast poured twenty or thirty thousand men annually into the western provinces during harvest time. Did any men go west for that purpose this year? The answer is that practically none went.
> Mr. Vallance: They rode in free.
> Mr. Stevens: Practically none went, and they are riding out free also. Why?
>
> Mr. Donnelly: Because of the combines.
> Mr. Stevens: Certainly, because of the introduction of modern machinery, combines and new harvesting machinery, which is doing away with the need for extra men. How then, in the face of this economic fact, can that solution mean anything? I would say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), who is not just now in his seat, that I think at some appropriate time the house can very well discuss this problem of the displacement of man power by machinery.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Perhaps this is not the time, but it is an economic problem which is challenging the attention of the world, and I want to say now that it must have the attention of this parliament sooner or later. The fact is that machinery is displacing man power on the farms of the west, and whether the right hon. gentleman likes it or not, whether he puts his tariff on a free trade basis or not, these things are happening and will continue to happen and the men will have to go somewhere to get food.

I regard this, Mr. Speaker, as being in line with what we have suggested in this resolution. Let it be understood in the first place that, as the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) has pointed out, this is only a fact-finding body. It does not offer a program nor evolve a policy for the government to follow. It would find facts in relation to various matters brought before it, and if these facts appeared reasonable I presume that action could be taken in correlating them with different activities in order to improve conditions. If it submitted such facts the government would no doubt be in a position to take action. But it would not be necessary that action should be taken unless the government felt satisfied that the information which was disclosed warranted it.

Within recent years considerable progress has been made along many lines, the effects of which we are now feeling. Speaking the other day, the Prime Minister said he could not understand how it was that everyone seemed to want the government to do this, that and the other thing in the way of social service. The fact is that with the industrial revolution, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) pointed out on Monday last, man was taken away from the land. About the year 1831, it was estimated that 90 per cent of the world's population were about that time living on the land, but when the industrial revolution came man was separated from the tools of production; and later on he was separated from his skill as a workman. Now he is not only separated from the tools of production and from his skill, but he is separated from the job itself by the automatic machine. Here, therefore, is a problem that needs to be met, a situation which would seem to come very well within the purview of such a council as has been suggested in the resolution of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman).

Speaking of the revolution that has occurred in agriculture, an interesting article appeared on October 30, 1930, in The Commerce of the Nation, written by Senator W. A. Buchanan, which article I think is well worthy the attention of all hon. members of this house. The hon. senator begins his article thus:

Western agriculture has undergone a revolution. Unemployment is the result. Canada is in the throes of the dislocation which accompanies all revolutions.

Following that, he discusses the operation of a section of land of 640 acres at Stirling, Alberta. He states:

During the past two years the owner has sown 320 acres to wheat, averaging more than 30 bushels to the acre—10,000 bushels of wheat each year. He has sown the wheat in the spring, has cultivated his summer-fallow for the next year's crop, has harvested the crop and hauled it to the elevator; and he has performed every operation without an hour's help. With his own labour, and with the use of modern machinery, he has been able to operate a section of prairie wheat land, produce more than $10,000 worth of wheat each year, deliver it to the market and do every operation connected with the task himself.

He goes on to examine all the labour-saving machinery on the farm. I do not wish to suggest for a moment that there has not been some employment in the production of that machinery. But the fact is that the mobilization of labour in any particular place by the use of machinery and motor-driven machinery is displacing labour much more quickly than we can at the present moment provide for.

At the special session of parliament last year we made an appropriation of $20,000,000 to take care of unemployment. A part of that $20,000,000 was made available to the two large railway companies to pay the carrying charges on certain purchases which they really did not need to make at the time, but which was made in order to relieve the unemployment situation. But while the treasury was making that contribution what were the railways themselves doing? A few days ago a friend of mine who is in a position to know told me that where until recently 42 men were engaged in the Canadian National Railways Turcotte shop at Montreal in cleaning engines, through the introduction of machinery their number had been reduced to four. While we were thus helping the Canadian National Railways, the management, by the introduction of more modern labour-saving machinery, was displacing men possibly faster than we could take care of them. And the Canadian Pacific Railway has been doing pretty much the same thing. In the Vancouver Sun of October 20, 1930, appears the following news item:

A revolutionary change in operating system is planned by the Canadian Pacific Railway throughout the west in the next few months.

Locomotives on passenger trains will carry their loads as far as 1,200 miles in one run, instead of about 125 miles as under the present divisional system, it is announced by Mr. W. M. Neal, general manager of western lines.

Time saved at divisional terminals, where it no longer will be necessary to change engines, and the saving of locomotive maintenance costs as well as in the reduced number of engines required are reasons for the change, Mr. Neal said.

The new system also will enable the railway company to make wider use of its latest and more powerful engines, now available in only limited numbers.

Decision to extend the long-run system from Fort William to Vancouver follows an experiment made by the Canadian Pacific Railway last spring, when an engine hauled a train 1,252 miles from Fort William to Calgary in scheduled time, and retraced this mileage with another train, also in scheduled time.

Under the new system it will be necessary to have only five motive power divisions against fourteen formerly in use, Mr. Neal pointed out. One engine, for example, will carry through from Fort William to Winnipeg; a second from Winnipeg to Calgary; a third from Calgary to Field; a fourth from Field to Revelstoke, and a fifth from Revelstoke to Vancouver.

Success of the long-run system already has been satisfactorily established on one district, where 30 engines now do the work of 51, Mr. Neal stated.

Surely in view of such conditions bringing about a still greater degree of unemployment, there is every reason for the establishment of a fact-finding organization to enable the government to plan and act intelligently.

Whether the government likes it or not, economic conditions are making it more necessary each year that it take a greater part in the economic life of the nation. This afternoon it was pointed out what the function of government has been in the past and what it is believed to be to-day, but that the government is not keeping pace with the times. We have not to go back vary far in history to find that in the British isles, where we get our pattern for parliamentary institutions, government at first was in the hands of the king and the barons, that the development of constitutional government was very gradual, and that it was not until quite recently that the working people came to take any part at all in governing the country, and consequently it is only since then that their interests have been given any consideration by those in authority. The function of government in England up to within recent years was to find "spheres of influence" and secure export markets for their manufactured commodities. Foreign trade was occasionally forced on reluctant nations by the aid of the army and navy, the militia was kept at home to look after the workers. That, I should say, until comparatively a few years ago was the prime function of government in Great Britain. To-day through the invention of labour-saving machinery more and more people are being out of employment and in every industrial country the government must of necessity take a closer and more active interest in the economic life of its people. The Minister of Trade and Commerce may say that already we are assisting research councils, but, I would remind him, these councils are not working in the interests of the people at large, they are working in the interests of the various industrial corporations, and these are mainly concerned in making a profit for their shareholders; they have not got at heart the interests of this Dominion.

Mr. STEVENS: If the hon. gentleman will pardon me, I know he would not want to do a grave injustice to a very excellent institution which is only semi-governmental. He is entirely wrong in his statement.

Mr. MacINNIS: In the way my hon. friend interprets my statement I may be wrong, but I submit that in fact I am not wrong. When the research bureau makes any discovery it is passed on to our various industrial concerns, and they use the information not for the good of the country, but for the profit of their shareholders.

Mr. STEVENS: That is not correct.

Mr. MacINNIS: If it is not correct I should like to know of one private organization whose shareholders are interested in forwarding the welfare of this country, that is, considering the country as an aggregation of individuals, and the welfare of each being given due consideration.

We all realize that we are going through critical times, As a matter of fact I think we all agree that possibly the government of Canada and the governments of the other countries of the world, have greater responsibilities to-day than ever before. I am quite sure that is true with respect to our federal government, and, speaking for the Labour section in this chamber, I say it is because we wish to help bring about the impending changes referred to with as little dislocation of industry and with as little suffering to the people as possible, that on every occasion possible we urge the government to take action and not wait until we have a crisis upon us that will possibly be altogether beyond our control. I am quite satisfied that that would not meet the wishes of some people, but it does agree with my views in regard to the proper organization of government. We have been twitted time and time again by speakers on the Conservative side of the house with not making suggestions, but it is rather strange that on the two occasions when we made specific suggestions, they were thrown back in our faces without any consideration whatsoever.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I regret that the time at my disposal will hardly permit my analyzing the speeches that have already been made in this debate. Let me, however, say at the outset that I regard the proposal of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) as one of the most important that have been brought before the house in recent years. The proposal is not by any means a new one. It has been intimated time and time again in speeches made by hon. members in this corner of the house that a complete social and economic survey of this country is a vital necessity. It is answered by both the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), that a broad interpretation of the existing act under which the National Research Council is constituted, permits of the very thing that we are asking for in this resolution. Well and good. If that be true, then they indict and condemn themselves for their inactivity in this regard. If the possibility for a full investigation into the economic and social conditions in this country exists, as they admit and, in fact, insist it exists, and if they have not, as they also admit, undertaken that investigation, they stand condemned out of their own mouths.

Has this matter been drawn to their attention recently? No later than last April I had the privilege of speaking in the house on the problem of unemployment and all that it involves. The leader of the opposition referred to that to-day and he submitted that it was the government's present duty—he said it in almost those words—to submit this problem for solution to the National Research Council. Last April I made these few humble remarks myself:

> I say to the Prime Minister—
> He is now the leader of the opposition.
> —that until he and his colleagues appoint a body to make a survey of economic and social conditions, a commission capable of intelligently analyzing this situation, he has not taken any step in the direction of a real solution of this problem.

Some months later the light dawned upon him and he now submits to the government that they have to refer this question to the National Research Council. This interpretation, belated, it is true, may be accurate. It may be correct that the National Research Council has the power to investigate these matters, but we have no evidence from any hon. member who has spoken so far in this debate, that any such question was ever at any time referred for examination, analysis, and solution, to any scientific body in the country. On the contrary, what do we find? We find in this country, one of the richest on earth, vast and illimitable resources to which people so glibly and eloquently refer both in election speeches and otherwise; we find a mechanical and technical equipment second to none in the world in proportion to our size and population; we find electrical energy in enormous quantity and of priceless value; we find a class of workmen who are skilled, energetic, adaptable, as able and intelligent as any class of workmen in any country and in any age. In view of this there is no sound reason why there should be any poverty in Canada. There is no sound reason why there should be any unemployment in this country, and I am almost quoting the words of the leader of the government during the last campaign when I say that. Every man and woman in this country willing to work should be able to lead a life not only of security but of comfort and plenty, and even have time to develop culture.

What is the case? What have we got? We have hunger and poverty around us in the capital city of Canada as well as in every other city. We have men and women discouraged with the struggle of trying to make a living under the adverse system under which we operate. We have people whose morale is being destroyed by the disappointment of every day that comes upon them, people underfed and undernourished, people whose vitality is being lowered, whose whole future outlook on life is being affected. We have to-day a system which not only has not solved the problems that it should have solved but, on the contrary, is pressing a growing mass of the people into further and further destitution. All that the resolution asks this house is that a special scientific body of some kind be appointed to examine into this condition of affairs, find out the basic factors causing this condition, and offer solutions. This parliamentary institution is wholly unfitted for that kind of work. Hon. members have such multifarious, petty little duties to perform that the average member has no time to make an exhaustive examination into economic conditions, much less submit a proposition, and, as the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) has said, often when they are submitted to the house, they are discounted as coming from faddists and cranks. But I am sometimes reminded when you have not a self starter, you have to have a crank.

The view that parliament is not fitted to examine into and give intelligent consideration to the basic causes of conditions as we have them, or to provide solutions, is not confined to hon. members in this corner. Even such a well known world figure as the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, speaking not long ago at a meeting of English industrialists, said that parliamentary bodies are practically useless for dealing with economic questions and in that regard should be superseded. He goes further and says:

> At this stage we ought to have the proper machinery for considering great economic issues.

He goes further and says:

> I do not think party machinery is going to do the job well.

That is only too true. Coming from a man of such well known party inclinations and partisan views, his words bear some weight. Let me quote the views of another internationally known gentleman, Mr. Owen D. Young who, speaking at the Lotos club in New York, expressed similar doubts as to the efficacy of political mechanism in dealing with a world economically out of joint. He said:

> That our politics and our economics are in conflict everywhere in the world to-day, he said, is due to the fact that economics are necessarily international, while politics are predominately national, and increasingly so in every country.

That point has been emphasized by other speakers. Apart altogether from the present depression through which we are passing, this so-called cyclical depression that has visited its evil on all the world, a type of depression that has visited this world four times, there having been two major and two minor ones during this short period, there has occurred on the North American continent a depression thirteen or fourteen times since constitutional government was established here. Apart altogether from that, you have the technological causes of unemployment and depression. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) has dealt with that and I need not elaborate it except to point out to the leader of the government or whoever is taking his place, and the leader of the opposition, that in the last few years nearly three million people have been displaced by labour saving devices in the industries of the North American continent. Yet the inventive genius of man is not equal to the task of absorbing that enormous and steadily increasing number of unemployed. Apparently we have nobody definitely committed to the task of studying that problem and finding out what the causes are and what the remedy may be.

If you want to find other things to examine into, I might submit the single problem that the problem of Canada is not the problem of India, the problem of India is not the problem of England, the problem of England is not the problem of Germany; but they are all inter-related in some way or other. The problem in India to-day is the problem of a deliberate policy of demonetizing silver—at appalling piece of fraudulent banking policy which has brought disaster on all oriental countries, and even on countries in the southern parts of this continent, a policy which has had its effect on the export business of every country in the world that ever did business with the orient. I remember the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, speaking not long ago before the Canadian Press convention in Toronto, where he pointed out very eloquently and clearly to the press men, and to the whole country, that the wealth of a thousand million people—think of it, Mr. Speaker—has been cut in two by a deliberate cold-blooded callous banking policy on the part of the British authorities in their endeavour to force India on to a gold basis. May I say to my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) that his former leader is strangely in discord with the views which he expressed earlier in this debate this afternoon. The minister of Trade and Commerce took issue with the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) upon the statement in the resolution to the effect that the problem of production had been largely solved, and he endeavoured to read into the resolution itself and into the utterances of the hon. member for Red Deer, an intention or an expression that was never at any time clear to anyone else in this house. The minister asked: Would the hon. member have industrial activity limit itself in its further progress? Surely no such intention has been expressed by any hon. member on this side of the house. Indeed, our whole hope is that we may be able to devise a distributive system that will absorb not only all that we produce, but all that we as human beings demand under modern standards of living. That is all we seek. The Right Hon. Arthur Meighen said in that speech to which I have just referred:

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

With a condition which approaches a superabundance of all things which should create happiness, thrift would merely intensify the situation by lowering the consumption of commodities.

I submit that also to the leader of the government, who is an authority on thrift, for everybody else. Mr. Meighen said further:

Do not let us bow in eternal adulation of the leadership of those who have led us so far.

I wonder if he would like to come back some time. I wish he would.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I hope so.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do, too. He was one of the finest debaters that ever stood in this house, and a man whose broadening views become apparent in utterances of the type to which I have just referred. He says further:

How can we cure a condition of superabundance by refusing to absorb of that abundance? We just do not seem to be able to make available the surpluses of the world's goods which strike the eye at every turn.

I congratulate Mr. Meighen on his utterance, and I submit that the Minister of Trade and Commerce might continue to follow in the footsteps of one whom he admired so intensely and so justly at one time.

Mr. STEVENS: I entirely concur in those views.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am glad to hear that; I did not gather it from the hon. gentleman's speech. Dr. Jacks is a well-known economist, and I shall quote him because he presents, I submit, the condition in which this country and others now find themselves. My own words could not as adequately describe those conditions. Dr. Jacks says:

Whither mankind?—why are we asking this question to-day? I think we are doing so, not out of mere curiosity, but because we are getting anxious. We are not quite sure either where we are going or even where we are. We feel ourselves drifting—but whither? We are like people on a great ship, full of treasure and of human life, which has lost its bearings in the night. The navigating officers are bewildered, the crew are getting mutinous, and the passengers, both first class and third, have got wind that something is wrong. Breakers ahead have been reported, and when we look over the side we see that we are drifting. We are getting apprehensive about the future.

We have reason to be. Only the other day I heard one of the most eminent of living sociologists, Professor William McDougall, say these words in public: "Western civilization is in imminent danger of collapse. Nothing but wise human effort guided by human science can prevent it collapsing." To which I would add my own belief that wise human effort, if it is sufficiently prompt, can prevent the catastrophe. Given that effort, I look with hope to the future: failing that effort, I feel sure we shall be on the rocks. We are drifting and there is a lee shore not far off.

No finer words could be used to describe the general economic and social conditions in which this and other countries find themselves, and no better advice could be given to the government at the present time than to undertake now some definite planning for the future. But they cannot plan, as the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) so eloquently said, until they know what they are going to plan for; in fact, until they know why the present conditions are.

What is the outlook, apart altogether from what Dr. Jacks has said? I take up a reputable paper, one to which even my hon. friends opposite can take no objection. Business Week, of New York, in a recent editorial said:

> Business continues to crawl along the astonishingly flat trough that has lasted more than four months. Week to week, and even month to month, the movements are slight, sporadic, still insignificent . . . . Moves for major international conference action to meet the emergency and check deflation are apparently at last developing around Governor Norman's visit, but further drift and delay are likely until a third winter of unemployment looms, so long as our official and financial economics emulates the ostrich, the original optimist.

The original optimist is particularly good. That is about all we have in this country, a lot of original optimists. They hope for the best without being willing even to look into conditions, much less to plan for a solution of them.

Mr. STEVENS: Would it not be necessary before any such examination of economic conditions could be carried out, to make a very careful survey of the situation?

That survey is now being made through the census staff, as rapidly as it can be made.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I submit that in so far as the census staff this year has been committed for the first time to an examination as to the extent of unemployment and the causes for it, in so far as the individual is able to tell the census official—you go to the average man who is unemployed and he will tell you that he is unemployed but he cannot tell you the cause of his unemployment; who can?—

Mr. STEVENS: There is not merely that, but the industrial investigations that accompany it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): All the information that can possibly be secured by these additional inquiries by the census takers this year is in large part already known to the government. The government has already made estimates of the number of unemployed in this country, and has made an estimate of the condition of industry in this country with a view to tariff action. I do not think we can afford to wait till after the census is taken before appointing a body such as is proposed in this resolution. My answer to the minister's question is that most of that information the government already has.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We might wait until after a tariff census before we undertake any increase in the tariff.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is good. I wonder how that would suit hon. gentlemen opposite? I do not hear any loud approval, any strident applause or "hear, hear's" from those ranks at the present time.

In conclusion, I would ask the following question: If any one of the business men in this house, either to my right or opposite, were asked to go to a far distant country or far distant planet, if he could be sent there for the purpose of abolishing the insecurity of work, and if when he got there he found bursting granaries, fruits and vegetables rotting in the fields, farmers on the verge of bankruptcy, clothing factories, shoe factories and all kinds of factories either closed or working part time because those who needed the goods did not have the means to buy them, and those who were willing to produce the goods and ready to go to work could not be put to work; if he found outside the factories which were running on part time long lines of men poorly clad and under fed, workers simply begging for a chance to go back to work at pay requisite to keep themselves and their families from starvation; if finding that in the major part of the industrial centres he then visited the outskirts of the towns and discovered that in the most beautiful part of the country there were great, handsome, luxurious homes with attractive and spacious grounds and occupied by only a few people, a very small group in comparison with the total population—the owners of the factories, the owners of the shops, the owners of the banks—living in mansions beyond the dreams of previous generations intent only upon enjoying life and devoted to the art of spending money, the art of wasting; if he found a small group, corresponding to the 603 people in Canada who pay income tax on $50,000 a year or over, who were able to dispose of only a part of their incomes, and that the balance had to be put back into more industrial plants for the production of more goods which could not be bought by those who did the work of producing them,—if he found all that I wonder what hon. gentlemen would say about such an unsound condition of affairs. Yet a moment's reflection would show that that is exactly the position with which we are confronted to-day. In a sentence, we have six hungry men here and six loaves of bread there but we cannot introduce the loaves of bread to the hungry men.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Was that not said on the mountain about two thousand years ago?

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, May 7, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—MR. GOBEIL

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege. I hold in my hand a newspaper of Quebec, dated yesterday which claims to have correctly reported the comments I made in the house on Tuesday evening. I find, according to this newspaper, that I opened my speech with the following remark: "I regret that the right hon. Prime Minister is not in his seat." Now, the words that I did use were the following: "I notice that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is not in his seat" and they thus appear in Hansard.

Mr. OSCAR L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse) (Translation): What newspaper do you refer to?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): The Evénement.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

EPHREM RENAUD—THE PAROLE SYSTEM

*Mr. RINFRET:

1. Was one Ephrem Renaud, of St. Eustache, Quebec, recently liberated on parole from the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary?
2. If so, what was the length of his sentence, and how long was he detained in said penitentiary?
3. By whose recommendation was he liberated?

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. RINFRET: With reference to this question, Mr. Speaker, I notice that when it was called yesterday the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) took the attitude that it was not a proper question to ask, stating that it had not been the practice in the past for governments to reply to such questions. I would point out briefly, however, that this question of mine is quite different from questions or demands of a similar nature made in the past. The last occasion on which a question of this kind was asked in this house was on March 12, 1930, when the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) submitted a motion for a copy of all papers, letters, telegrams and other documents concerning a certain case of liberation. May I point out further that I am not asking for any confidential reports or documents; I merely wish to make certain of a group of facts where a certain person has been liberated—what was the length of his sentence, how long he had been detained, and so forth. These are facts; there is nothing in the nature of a demand for confidential reports. There is another point I would also make. When the Hon. Lucien Cannon, the predecessor of my good friend the present Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré), refused to produce such documents, he made it very clear that he had examined the case, and he took the responsibility for refusing the production of those documents. In other words, someone must be responsible for cases of this kind. If the government does not desire to give to parliament information concerning cases of liberation, at least we should have a pronouncement from one of the ministers—and I think it should come from the Solicitor General—that he has looked into the matter and is quite satisfied that the case has been properly handled, and that for such reasons he does not desire to give the information. But the mere refusal to answer the question, without any acceptance of responsibility, is not, in my opinion, in conformity with responsible government. Someone must be responsible for any liberation on parole granted on the recommendation of the Solicitor General—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RINFRET: —and if the government cannot supply the information—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RINFRET: —they should take the responsibility.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has explained in sufficient detail the nature of his question.

Mr. RINFRET: I am sorry you did not call me to order sooner, Mr. Speaker. I am through.

Mr. BENNETT: Yesterday I made certain observations with respect to this question. This is a matter that touches, not the Solicitor General nor the Department of Justice, but the conduct of government. The question as to whether or not information of this character should be given is a question that has engaged the attention of successive administrations, and the rule has been not to furnish such information. And until the matter is properly debated and another conclusion has been arrived at, which would involve making known to the public every case that is dealt with—for one means all—the government does not propose to depart from that rule. May I point out that the responsibility is that of the government, because it is His Excellency the Governor General who acts upon the advice of his ministers. They accept the responsibility; it is provided by statute; and as one case means all, then until this house, by proper notice of motion and subsequent discussion and debate, has arrived at a conclusion other than that which I have indicated, the government, I repeat, does not propose to depart from the rule.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I ask my right hon. friend if that applies to Nos. 1 and 2 of the question?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But they are merely questions of fact.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They merely inquire whether a certain man has been liberated. I quite understand the objection that might be raised to No. 3—by whose recommendation he was liberated. This involves confidential reports, and in the interest of justice these confidential documents ought not to be given to the public. But as to the question whether a certain man has been in gaol and has been liberated, I think the public has a right to know.

Mr. BENNETT: If I may speak again with the consent of the house, may I observe that that has not been the rule. Indeed, this house on a previous occasion went so far as to sustain the judgment of those responsible, that even names should not be brought before the chamber; because the theory of the law is the exact opposite of that. If it is thought desirable that information of this kind should be given, and a notice is put on the order paper, I am content that the matter should be debated, and that the fullest opportunity be given the house to determine what action shall be taken. But this would certainly involve a principle which I would oppose—the production of names. If the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) will consider the matter, he will realize that even the mere giving of a name involves the question of adequacy of sentence, the sufficiency of reasons, and the bona fides of the action taken. I have heard them impugned in the days of my hon. friend and I have never lent assistance to such criticism because I have felt that it was one of those matters with respect to which, once you have introduced discussion in this house as to whether or not political or other considerations have had an influence in the action taken, you destroy the whole foundation upon which the provisions of the statute were built. However, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that if this house desires that the matter be discussed I shall endeavour to afford every possible opportunity to those who may put the necessary notice on the order paper to have it debated.

Mr. RINFRET: But in the meanwhile—

Mr. BENNETT: In the meanwhile the practice that has heretofore prevailed will continue to be observed, and no information wil be given.

Mr. RINFRET: In the meanwhile I would ask either the Solicitor General or the Prime Minister whether such information is available privately at the department.

Mr. BENNETT: I will treat that as a question on the order paper and we will investigate and see what the practice has been. I know what the practice is in the Home Office, because there was a little volume issued last year in respect of the conduct of business there.

Mr. POWER: You are Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad my hon. friend realizes it. He does so rather late in the day, but that is immaterial. However, the practice which has prevailed heretofore in this matter will, I repeat, be observed in this case.

Mr. RINFRET: May I say further, with the consent of the house—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The government declines to answer the question as it stands on the order paper.

Question stands.

Mr. MacLAREN:

1. Yes.
2. 16th August, 1911. From 16th August, 1911, to 13th July, 1912. From 1st November, 1916, to 15th May, 1931.
3. Political partisanship.
4. Dr. McLeod was dismissed by authority of an order in council which was adopted on the recommendation of the Minister of Pensions and National Health.
5. No, the established practice was followed of accepting the statement in writing of the member representing the constituency of Inverness that to his personal knowledge Dr. McLeod was guilty of political partisanship.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—BONAVENTURE EMPLOYEES

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Is it true that 18 employees of the Canadian National Railway shops at New Carlisle, Bonaventure county, Quebec, have been notified that their services will be no longer required after the first of May?
2. Has a request been made to the Canadian National Railway Company to suspend this order and give the men work for three days per week?
3. If these dismissals are persisted in, will the said shops be kept in operation?
4. If not, where will the work, done by these men, be done in the future?

Mr. MANION:

In reply to the inquiry, Sir Henry Thornton writes the minister as follows:—

"We did lay off eighteen employees in the locomotive department and one in the car department at New Carlisle on April 30th. This was on account of the reduction in traffic and general repairs to engines being made at Moncton. Regular train service on the Gaspe lines is daily passenger and tri-weekly wayfreight service between Gaspe and Matapedia. We originally had thirty employees in the locomotive department, and three in the car department, and the fourteen that we have retained on the force are all that are required under the present conditions.

"I might say for your information that whatever facilities there are at New Carlisle for the repair of locomotives and cars are obsolete and inefficient, and arrangements were therefore made to transfer general repair work to Moncton where an efficient and up-to-date plant exists. We cannot transfer the surplus employees from New Carlisle to displace other men in the employ as they do not hold seniority, and the additional work which will have to be taken care of in Moncton will be done without increased staff.

"Following the taking over of the Gaspe lines, some of these men were engaged in dismantling old equipment and other temporary work, but the time has arrived when there is no work for them to do, and therefore it has been necessary to reduce the staff as indicated above."

POSTAL LETTER CARRIER SERVICE

Mr. MARCIL:

When will the postal letter carrier service be introduced in Ottawa west, Westboro, Woodroffe, Laurentian View and other parts of Nepean township?

Mr. SAUVE:

Not until economic conditions improve to such an extent as to warrant the department making extensions of this expensive service, and then only when and to that portion where local conditions under which such a service is given are satisfactory to the department.

AUSTRALIAN TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) be good enough to indicate to the house when he expects to be in a position to make an announcement with regard to the new Australian treaty.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this treaty is under negotiation at the present time; as soon as it has been completed and it is proper to do so, prompt announcement will be made.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION

SALARIES OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau). The newspapers publish an interview given by the Chairman of the Quebec Harbour Commission, Mr. O'Meara, to the effect that the question of salaries paid to employees of the Harbour Commission is under the control of the Minister of Marine, and that he has no knowledge of the Minister's intentions. I wish to inquire whether that is the case and whether there is any truth in the rumour that salaries are to be reduced.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the report of the interview to which the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), refers. Although I intend to exercise a reasonable control over the harbour commissions, as regards salaries, I have not so far received from the Quebec Harbour Commission any request to determine or help to determine the salaries of the employees of that commission.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Any action taken should originate with the commission itself?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Unless we discover that the salaries paid to employees of these boards are exorbitant, the Minister of Marine has no intention to intervene. However, we are of the opinion that the employees of the harbour boards should receive about the same salaries as are paid to civil servants.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Would the minister interevene if the salaries were too low? I remarked that he stated he would interfere only if the salaries were exorbitant.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think that in such a case the Minister of Labour (Senator Robertson) would step in.

BORROWING POWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): Would the Minister of Marine be so obliging as to inform the house whether he has the intention of introducing, this session, a bill to empower the Quebec Harbour Commission to borrow money from the Dominion government?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I am not in a position to answer this question at present; the commission must first make a request to borrow money.

Mr. POWER: Was such a request made?

Mr. DURANLEAU: When such a request is made, it will be given due consideration.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. T. LUCAS (Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) in his capacity as Minister of Finance, based on a number of protests I have received from borrowers under the Farm Loan Act, that undue pressure is being used at this time in making collections. We realize that the matter of repayment must be kept before the attention of borrowers at all times but these letters would indicate that the notices sent out are of a very peremptory and harassing nature and it would not seem that any consideration is being given to the unusual financial conditions which prevail at the present time. Is it the wish of the right hon. the Prime Minister that such a course should be pursued at this particular time?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a misapprehension as to the relation of the farm loan board to the government. In view of that misapprehension I shall make a statement to-morrow bearing on the question asked by the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Lucas).

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I believe the remarks of my hon. friend on my left (Mr. Lucas) were directed more to the soldier settlement board.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): No, he said the farm loan board.

Mr. NEILL: Then I will repeat the question in regard to the soldier settlement board, which is directly under the control of the government.

Mr. BENNETT: The answer in that regard will be furnished to-morrow by the minister. It is obvious that we cannot give an answer without looking up the records.

RADIUM DISCOVERIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Gordon) if the government has knowledge of the reported discovery of radium in the Northwest Territories, at Great Bear lake, if it is proceeding to investigate the value of those deposits and if it intends to take steps to secure the control of them for Canada.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, the question of the control of radioactive ores in Canada has not been considered very seriously by any government. As hon. members likely know, the main source of radium to-day is in the Belgian Congo. An attempt was made some years ago to extract radium from ores in the southwestern United States, but that was discontinued. A number of discoveries of radioactive ores have been made in Canada, some having been made recently in Ontario and others in the Northwest Territories at Echo bay. The department of Mines has lent some assistance by way of investigation and laboratory tests to those who are engaged in this work in order to determine the value of the deposits. It is not the duty of the department to certify as to the extent or possible value of these deposits, but the department is interested in assisting in the identification of these ores. As to the government taking over the properties which have been located and staked by prospectors, that matter has not been seriously considered by any government although it is one to which some attention might be given.

RANFURLY POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have received a petition signed by fifty-five petitioners in the village of Ranfurly, protesting against a ruling by the Post Office Department ordering that the post office lobby be closed on Sundays. I would like to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) whether that ruling is in accordance with some recent regulation of the Post Office Department to be applied generally in Canada, or whether it is to apply only in the case of Ranfurly post office.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): Will the hon. member be good enough to put that question on the order paper and I will then give an answer.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE

FRENCH VERSION OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr MAXIME RAYMOND (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau). About a month and a half ago, on March 23, to be exact, the hon. Minister of Marine laid on the table the 63rd annual report of the Department of Marine, for the fiscal year 1929-1930. On many occasions since that date, and to-day also, I inquired at the Distribution office for the French version of that report and the answer has always been that they only had the English version. May I inquire from the minister how long must we wait for this French version to which we are entitled?

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Raymond) chooses to direct a question to a minister or to the government, he has a right to do so, but he should not make a speech at this period.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): I think, sir, if what I have just said had been well understood, it would have been noticed that I made no speech but that I had simply asked a question. To justify my question, I first had to state the facts to the house.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the question asked equally concerns the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan), as regards the printing of the report. As to the translation, I shall see that it is completed without further delay, if it has not already been done; for we want all reports in both languages, to be at the disposal of the house in the shortest delay possible.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, would the hon the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) advise the house if, in adding to or supplementing the directorate of the Canadian National Railways, consisting of fifteen members, in order to include the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, he intends, in the representation to be effected, to give representation to agriculture in those two provinces?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The matter is under consideration.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, a Canadian Press despatch of the 6th instant reports that Mr. Ralph Webb, mayor of the city of Winnipeg, has strongly urged the present government to construct the trans-Canada highway as a federal undertaking rather than a provincial one. Mr. Webb states that such an undertaking would relieve the present unemployment situation as it would give employment to 25,000 or 30,000 workmen for three years. Would the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) inform the house as to the attitude of the government in this regard?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I am glad one hon. member realizes that. The question will be answered in due course.

DOMINION CONVERSION LOAN

On the orders of the day.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): A few days ago the Prime Minister made mention of a national bond issue which the government has under consideration and I think he intimated he would have a further statement to make. As the press is giving a good deal of attention to the matter, perhaps he would inform the house.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before the orders of the day were proceeded with I intended to inform the house that I proposed to make a statement to-morrow before the orders of the day are called.

SURVEY OF NATIONAL PORTS

On the orders of the day.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I understand that a commission under Sir Alexander Gibb is coming here to make an investigation into the harbour boards of Canada. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will consider the harbour board of New Westminster as coming within the scope of that inquiry?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I have no difficulty in answering this question. I will consider the harbour board of New Westminster. I had occasion to do so recently when their half-yearly interest fell due.

OCEAN RATES ON CATTLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. MULLINS (Marquette): In view of the Manchester Lines carrying another deck of cattle, I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether the rate remains at $15 per head. I am told there was an attempt to raise the rate to $17.50 a head.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): There was an attempt to raise the freight rate to $17.50 a head, but I understand the rate is still to remain at $15 a head.

SUPPLY—AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE AND AMENDMENT OF MR. BROWN

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bennett for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Brown.

Mr. HARRY BUTCHER (Last Mountain): I wish to speak in support of the amendment that was moved by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) and I am led to do so because I cannot but believe that the Prime Minister, his colleagues and supporters are not yet fully seized of the facts in connection with the unfortunate condition in which the agriculturists of this Dominion find themselves at this time. I am led to the conclusion that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) in particular is unaware of the actual facts, and I am led to that conclusion because of statements that the right hon. gentleman has himself made and because of conclusions that he has drawn from the facts to which he referred in those statements. I am also led to the conclusion that that is the case because the government has not shown the same alacrity in dealing with the requests of the farmers as it has in dealing with the requests of other classes. Let me illustrate this by pointing out that when the manufacturers of barbed wire—and I presume they are not numerous—approached the government, the government was very quick to respond to their request and to fix a price for duty purposes on barbed wire, on the ground that barbed wire was being imported into Canada against the interests of the producers of barbed wire in this country. Precisely the same thing happened when the refiners of gasoline approached the government and again when the manufacturers of cars did so.

I have already, once in the house during this session, sought to enumerate the ills of the farmers in western Canada and I do not apologize for endeavouring to-day to repeat some of the statements that I then made. I do not hesitate, because of certain statements made recently by the Prime Minister himself. I remember that on one occasion the Prime Minister said in this house that hon. gentlemen opposite, referring to us on this side, had made statements that could not be substantiated. At the same time he said that we had made exaggerated statements as to conditions that prevailed in western Canada. He went further than that and said we had broadcast throughout the country statements that could not be substantiated in any manner or form. The right hon. gentleman did not enumerate the statements, but I imagine that he was referring to statements that have been made on this side to the effect that many farmers in western Canada are insolvent. I believe I was one of the first offenders in that respect. I remember saying in my first address in this house, my maiden address on a major debate, that I fully believed in my own constituency at least sixty per cent of the farmers were insolvent, and I repeat that statement to-day as being my honest conviction.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I ask hon. members to refrain from indulging in loud conversation while an hon. member is addressing the chair. In this building there are many offices provided for the transaction of business and also spacious lobbies.

Mr. BUTCHER: I should like to explain my understanding of the word "insolvent." I was using that word in the ordinary every day acceptance of the term. Who is the insolvent man? He is the man who is possessed of money, goods and land to a certain amount, and at any given date that amount is less than the total amount of his liabilities. That being the case, I affirm again that a large majority, in my opinion sixty per cent of the farmers in my constituency are to-day insolvent.

The Prime Minister, in refuting statements that we had made and in proof of his contention that they were exaggerated, made three major statements. In the first place he said that tens of thousands of farmers in the west had money in the bank. Then he said that new wealth to the extent of $1,900,000 had been produced in the west during the last three years. Finally he said there were a large number of cars in the western provinces and he suggested that the possession of those cars indicated that the statements we had made were exaggerated. I admit without any qualification whatsoever the truth of those three statements made by the Prime Minister; they are irrefutable. But I go further and say that they neither prove his contention nor disprove ours.

In the first place he said that tens of thousands of farmers had money in the bank. There is not the slightest doubt that that is true. But it is a very vague statement at best. There may be men who have a few dollars in the bank. There may be men who may have lots of money in the bank. There may be men who this spring obtained an advance from the bank, and then deposited the proceeds to their credit in the bank, and who may now have a small amount which will be gradually diminishing during the summer. But if every one of the tens of thousands of farmers that the right hon. gentleman speaks of have a large amount of money in the bank, our statements may yet be true.

May I draw attention to the fact that according to the census returns of 1926 there are in the three provinces that the right hon. gentleman mentioned 247,162 farmers. Taking my own statement that 60 per cent of these men are insolvent, what do we find? Sixty per cent of 247,162 is 148,000. That still leaves approximately 100,000 farmers who may have money in the bank. So I say again that the right hon. gentleman's statement to the effect that there are tens of thousands of farmers in the west who have money in the bank neither proves his contention nor disproves ours.

Then he said that since 1928, $1,900,000,000 of new wealth had been created in the west, and in addition there was $100,000,000 of new wealth created in the great mining areas in the three western provinces. That sounds like affluence, I admit. It sounds as though we were wealthy in the west. But I think it is advisable to analyze the statement and see what it produces.

The population of the three prairie provinces, according to the 1926 census returns, was 2,175,900. Very good. We find that the wealth produced per capita for the three years was $873.21 and the wealth produced per individual per annum, $291.07. The figure quoted by the right hon. gentleman was the gross agricultural wealth. It allowed absolutely nothing for the cost of producing that wealth. In the year 1928 it is very probable that the cost of production bore a reasonable ratio to the amount of wealth produced. In the year 1929 it was not so good, and in the year 1930 the cost of producing was greater than the value of the new wealth produced. I could produce all kinds of evidence to this house to show that such is the case, but I want to read a quotation from a letter that I received two or three days ago. It is a letter from a very reliable farmer who has been farming in our district for approximately thirty years, a man who takes no active part in politics, has no axe to grind, a hard-working man and a good farmer, with three sons to assist him in the operation of about nine hundred acres of land. This is what he says:

> Well, I took my usual inventory and made up my books for the year on April 1st. My profit and loss account showed that the operations on the farm for 1930 were a loss of nearly $2,500.

He says further:

> Still, we will try again. There are lots who say they won't. It is the first time in thirty years that I have farmed that I have seen the western farmers' morale so low.

I say to this house without fear of successful denial that the production of new wealth for another year or two more on that basis will certainly bankrupt the west. Close to the farm occupied by the writer of this letter, there is another farm of about nine hundred acres, farmed by four brothers, splendid men in every way, hard-working, intelligent, excellent farmers, with only one failing that I know of, and that is that they would never support me as a candidate for election. These men have assured me through a mutual friend that they made a loss on their operations last year. What is true of those two farmers is true of hundreds of thousands of farmers in western Canada. We do not want to go on producing wealth on the same conditions as those under which these men produced new wealth last year.

The right hon. the Prime Minister in his remarks said that we on this side of the house had stated that the western provinces were going into bankruptcy. He said it unintentionally, I think, but he did make that statement, as you will see if you look up Hansard. No speaker on this side of the house said that either of the provinces or all of them were likely to go into bankruptcy. We did not say that the whole of the farmers were going into bankruptcy. What we did say was that a reasonable proportion of them were.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the hon. gentleman point to where I made the statement about the provinces going into bankruptcy?

Mr. BUTCHER: I shall be very pleased to do that. May I quote from his remarks?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I want to hear how it is put.

Mr. BUTCHER: At page 779 of Hansard the right hon. gentleman is reported as follows:

> Hon. gentlemen opposite who come from these provinces—

He had been referring to the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta:

> —have been talking about their insolvency and bankruptcy.

Mr. BENNETT: That was with reference to the farmers.

Mr. BUTCHER: That is probably what the right hon. gentleman meant, and I accept his explanation that he was referring to the farmers. But the grammatical construction of the sentence might suggest otherwise. At any rate, the words I have quoted are the words that he used. We were referring in our statements on this side of the house to only approximately sixty per cent of the farmers. In this connection I would like to make a suggestion. The Bankruptcy Act of this Dominion provides a means whereby business men who are hopelessly entangled and harassed beyond all possibility of getting out of their financial difficulties may go into bankruptcy. I would like to see a simplification of the procedure under the Bankruptcy Act, to have certain amendments made which, with proper safeguards against fraud, would make it possible for a farmer who is hopelessly involved to avail himself of the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. That is a suggestion which I think might be considered by the government.

The next statement which the right hon. the Prime Minister made is also irrefutable, namely, that there is a large number of cars in western Canada—261,778 in the three prairie provinces, to be exact. I know that the right hon. gentleman merely stated a fact. I do not believe that he intended any implication, but I gathered from the response that his statement met with from his followers, that there was a certain implication in the minds of many of them. It is rather remarkable that since I have been here in the east I have had on several occasions the suggestion made to me that the farmers of the west have been very extravagant. It has been suggested that they have bought too many cars and other things, like radios. There is one thought that comes to my mind in that connection. Who is more entitled to own a car than the farmer? Who can use a car more profitably than the farmer? The car has not only been a very profitable thing for the farmer to have, but I will tell you what it has done for the farmers' wives of the western prairies. It has made life far brighter for the women of the prairies and for the children. Before the advent of the car it was a rare experience for the hard-working wife of the hard-working farmer to have an outing. Many a farmer, having worked the whole day, and working six days a week, puts his horses away at night. Perhaps on Sunday he would hitch up his team and take his wife and children to church. That was about the limit of the outings the wife and children had. In these days things are different and the car is used to give a little pleasure to farmers' wives and children. I fear there is a misconception in the minds of a great many people regarding the statement made concerning cars owned by farmers. When I was going home for the Easter recess I travelled for a short distance with a very delightful old lady. She told me she had heard there were a great many members of parliament on board the train and after a while she asked me if I was one. I did not like to deny it, although in a great many cases I find the fact is not appreciated. She told me she had a good friend in the House of Commons but did not say on which side of the house her friend sat. I hope however the hon. gentleman is on the other side of the house. My reason for saying that is that presently she said to me, "Is it not a fact that your farmers in western Canada have built large houses, own cars and radios?" I said, "Madam, undoubtedly it is true that a few of our farmers have large houses, but more of them dwell in shacks or very poor houses. It is a fact that many of them have radios, and I think they are entitled to them." To me it is passing strange that the men who derive their wealth from the producers of wheat own cars without comment. On the other hand the man who produces the wheat must not own a car.

Mr. BENNETT: May I point out to the hon. gentleman that certainly he is misrepresenting my statement. In answer to a question by an hon. member I pointed out that I had no sentiments but those of commendation for farmers owning automobiles, but the fact of ownership bespoke their material resources. The misrepresentation by my hon. friend cannot be wholly accidental.

Mr. BUTCHER: I am talking about the—

Mr. DUPUIS: He is speaking about the old lady.

Mr. BUTCHER: If the right hon. gentleman will look to-morrow morning at Hansard he will find that at the very beginning of my remarks I said I knew this was not the true feeling of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT: I heard the remarks of the hon. gentleman, but any hon. member would know he did not place his remarks on Hansard by accident. He wanted those people who read them to draw the inference that I was endeavouring to reflect upon the farmers owning automobiles. I am accustomed to that practice; we all are. And may I say the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) need not tell the hon. member what to say. He is quite capable of talking for himself.

Mr. VENIOT: The ex-Postmaster General never opened his mouth.

Mr. BENNETT: The effort of the hon. member to make capital of his suggestion was quite evident to all of us.

Mr. BUTCHER: In case of a possible misunderstanding I will repeat what I said. I did not for one minute accuse the Prime Minister of endeavouring to reflect upon the farmers. I said that there was an idea prevailing, or something to that effect, that the farmers were not entitled to own cars. I repeat that statement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And the roar of laughter from hon. members opposite proves it.

Mr. BUTCHER: The right hon. gentleman told of the number of cars in western Canada. In the previous paragraph of his speech he will find he was referring to farmers. I would point out that in the three prairie provinces 34 per cent of the people are urban dwellers and 66 per cent are dwellers in rural districts. The automobiles to which my right hon. friend referred have not all been purchased by the farmers of western Canada. In case the right hon. gentleman states that I am positively accusing him of making that statement, I will say at this time that he did not make it. He said that the people of western Canada purchased these cars, and I am pointing out to him that 34 per cent of those people live in villages, towns and cities and 66 per cent in the rural districts. I venture to suggest that if a survey were made as to the ownership of those cars it would reveal a reversal of the figures I have stated. I suggest that 66 per cent of the car value in the western provinces would be credited to city, town and village dwellers. The average man in the city, town or village owns a good car, and nobody would blame him for doing so. The farmer usually buys a cheap car, and very often a second hand one discarded by the city dweller.

My right hon. friend made three suggestions as to why it was time hon. members on this side of the house ceased criticism. I wish to make my statement carefully, because I might be misunderstood. First he wanted to know how we could expect the banks to continue to lend money if we continued to talk in the way we have been talking. Mr. Speaker, I venture to opine that no bank will grant fewer loans because of statements made by hon. members in this corner of the house, and no bank will grant more loans because of what has been said by hon. members opposite. In the past when I have wanted loans, as now and again, I do, I have found that the banker took me into his inner sanctum and put me through a drilling. He wanted to know what I owned, how much was free from encumbrance and asked a great many other questions to learn whether or not I would be a proper risk. That is the practice of banks everywhere. I will go further and state that the 60 per cent of the people in my constituency to whom I have referred could not get bank credit anyway. Therefore they are not prejudiced by the fact that I have made a statement in connection with the matter. In the second place the right hon. gentleman stated a gentleman had said to him, "We must uphold the credit of Canada." I believe that. He said a certain gentleman had written to him and said that somebody should be prevented from speaking because agreements of sale were being offered and could not be sold. May I say in reply that hon. members in this corner of the house were not sent here to assist in the disposal of agreements of sale. We were sent here for a specific purpose. Having acquainted ourselves with the conditions in our respective constituencies we were sent here to make those conditions known to the house. Having made discoveries as to what was needed for the good of Canada it is our duty to make our desires known. Mr. Speaker, I consider that to be our duty. Again I will explain that the Prime Minister did not intend to imply that we should moderate our speech. Certainly not; he does not do it himself.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman would permit me again to interrupt, may I say to him that since I have had to do with these conversion loans I have been informed by representatives of bond houses that the very speeches made in this house have seriously impaired the credit of the western provinces and made it more difficult for them to obtain loans for which they are now in the market at reasonable rates. I make that statement only for what it is worth.

Mr. BUTCHER: From which side of the house did those people complain the speeches came?

Mr. BENNETT: On your side.

Mr. BUTCHER: Mr. Speaker, I shall bring my remarks to a conclusion by saying that I believe I have fulfilled the duty imposed upon me when I was sent here to represent to the best of my ability the constituency of Last Mountain. I have made statements which can be substantiated, and I have not made one statement which cannot be substantiated.

Before I close however I would like to state frankly that I do not believe the government is responsible for existing conditions; I believe they are not wholly responsible. I believe I made that statement before. Probably they did something to aggravate the situation during the last session of parliament but on the other hand I think there are things they may do which will relieve the present situation. I do not believe however that it is within the power of the government to cure the present economic situation. However we ask them only to do the best they can. With regard to the last paragraph of the amendment moved by the hon member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) I think there are suggestions therein contained which the government might well reconsider.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I agree very largely with what has been said by the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher) with respect to agricultural conditions in western Canada. I believe practically every hon. member from western Canada, regardless of his seat in the house, will agree with him. However, I do not purpose at any great length to take up the time of the house in a discussion of the subject matter of the amendment because I feel such action would be merely a repetition of the five weeks' debate on the address. However I would like to place on record some of the activities of the group in this section of the house with respect to the issues involved. Knowing the serious plight of western agriculture I must admit I have some sympathy with the amendment.

However, I do feel constrained to comment upon the fact that for many years we in this corner of the house have been bringing forward measures for the relief of agriculture. Generally we have found our Liberal friends opposing and voting them down. But now that they have been transferred to the opposition benches they have suddenly become reformers. Of course, I am not objecting to that, I am not criticizing them for it; on the contrary I welcome even this belated action on their part. As an illustration of what I mean, may I deal with the demand made on the government on Tuesday last by the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan). He demanded that the government set a maximum rate of interest of 6 per cent on farmers' liabilities. I quite agree with him that something like that must be done. But I would remind him that in 1923 when the Bank Act was up for revision this group moved an amendment that would have had the effect of setting a maximum rate of 7 per cent for bank interest. Of course, that limitation is already in the Bank Act, but the bankers have been able to override it by technicalities. The amendment that we introduced would have made it impossible for them to do so. What was the result? Every member on the government side of the house —the Liberal party at that time—voted against it, along with the Conservatives who then sat on this side of the house; and I have no doubt that my hon. friend from South Huron, being a good party man, would have done the same had he been here. Of course, he was not in the house at that time, and we cannot tell what he would have done, but I can hardly conceive of him breaking with his party. I do not like to cross swords with my hon. friend because, as I appreciate, he is a "bonny fighter" in the interests of agriculturists.

Mr. McMILLAN (South Huron): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has no right to make such an implication.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Take it back.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There is nothing to take back. I think my hon. friend would be the first to admit that he is a good party man, and that is all I said about him. I have never heard him deny that. I am not questioning his integrity or his ability as a member of parliament.

Now, sir, I come to the amendment itself, and I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) on the very able case he made out and his effective presentation of it. The moving of an amendment to a motion to go into supply is a very dramatic and spectacular way of placing a case before the country. Generally, I do not condemn the practice; under certain circumstances I would do it myself. We in this corner of the house have done it, but we have never done it except on issues that we had been fighting for previously and with respect to which we found we could not get action any other way. But there are circumstances in which this course is positively damaging to the very cause supposed to be served. It must not be assumed that because our Liberal friends moved this amendment they are the only members concerned in the issues involved. From the very moment of the opening of this session we in this section of the house have been dealing with all the issues mentioned in the amendment and in the speech of the hon. member who moved it. The only difference is that our work was not done in a spectacular way. We were not looking for publicity, we were looking for results.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not wish to suggest that our hon. friends merely want publicity. I assume they are perfectly honest and perfectly sincere in their action. I am criticizing their methods not their motives.

Now, let me take the question of freight rates dealt with by the mover of the amendment. I may say that since we came to Ottawa we have had frequent conferences with the ministry and we have been in constant communication with the United Farmer bodies back in the country. To show what is being done in this regard, may I read, in part, a letter addressed to us by Mr. Frank Eliason, secretary of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section? This is only one of many letters that we have received from that body since the opening of the session. The letter is from Saskatoon under date of April 20, 1931, and, in part, reads:

As a result of our negotiations and representations in connection with freight rates on canned goods, we have gained a certain amount of experience and we have come to the conclusion that what is needed in western Canada, at this time, is a freight association,—an association which will be composed of representatives from the United Farmers of the three western provinces, of the boards of trade for the three provinces and of the wholesale and retail distributors of the three provinces.

George H. Smith, our provincial government traffic expert, returned last night from Alberta where he has received unanimous support for the proposal. We have also been in touch with the United Farmers of Manitoba and have their support. Mr. Smith is going to Manitoba this week in an endeavour to line up the wholesalers and the distributors. The first meeting, which is called for the purpose of forming the organization, will be held in the parliament buildings, Regina, on May 1st. We have decided to discuss four points. First; the advisability of forming a western Canada freight association, which association shall deal with freight rates only. Second; present freight rates on canned goods from the east. Third; present freight rates on canned goods from the west. Fourth; rate construction of the Canadian National Railways capital.

At future meetings Hudson's Bay rates, mountain rates will be discussed, also the adjustment of local freight rates as compared with through rates.

Now, with particular reference to the question of the disparity between domestic and export freight rates on grain, I may say that the group in this section of the house have had the matter under consideration for a long time. On April 23 we addressed a letter to the three prairie premiers. It is signed by myself and was written on the instructions of this group. It reads as follows:

I have been instructed by the independent groups here to suggest that the three prairie governments make an application to the railway commission for an equitable adjustment between domestic and export freight rates on grain.

We would appreciate it very much if you would discuss this matter with the other prairie premiers—

Mr. REID: Is British Columbia included?

Mr. CAMPBELL: We have no representative from British Columbia in our group. We are particularly interested in the prairies.

Mr. REID: Don't leave us out of the freight rates.

Mr. CAMPBELL: We are not. It will rest with the prairie premiers, and if possible they will take that into consideration when they are dealing with it. However, if we secure a reduction it will work for the benefit of British Columbia the same as for the prairie provinces. I will proceed with my letter:

We would appreciate it very much if you would discuss this matter with the other prairie premiers and we trust that action will be taken without delay. We have thoroughly canvassed the situation here and find that there is nothing directly that we can do and this would appear to be the only proper procedure in order to get results. I do not need to discuss the point at issue as the matter has been before the public for a long time.

This letter was addressed to the Hon. J. E. Brownlee, premier of Alberta; the Hon. J. T. M. Anderson, premier of Saskatchewan; and the Hon. John Bracken, premier of Manitoba. Under date of April 28 Mr. Bracken wrote us from Winnipeg as follows:

I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 23rd instant, in which you suggest that the three prairie governments make an application to the railway commission for an equitable adjustment between domestic and export freight rates on grain. I will be very glad to have the matter considered at the next conference, which I expect will take place within the next two weeks.

Mr. Anderson wrote us from Regina under date of April 29, as follows:

I am in receipt of your letter of April 23rd, and in reply may say that consideration will be given to this matter.

We are not yet in receipt of a reply from the premier of Alberta. We might have saved ourselves a lot of effort and trouble if we had moved an amendment such as is now before the house, but I think every member knows that such a course would have been barren of results.

With regard to the fiscal policy of the government, the proper time to consider and discuss it is when the budget comes down. Then we will have that policy in detail and will be able to discuss it in detail. Then, too, we can, and undoubtedly will, move an appropriate amendment expressing our counter policy. That, it seems to me, is the time to discuss it, instead of taking up the time of the house now, when it is merely an academic question, and when we do not know exactly what the government will do.

An hon. MEMBER: Why waste time now?

Mr. CAMPBELL: My hon. friends have been wasting time; I am pointing out the uselessness of this discussion. Now, sir, with regard to the general agricultural conditions, may I say that committees representing this group have waited on the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture since the beginning of the session and have made representations to them, discussing the situation with them; and we have in return received some assurance. We have not got all that we asked for, but we know that something is being done in the prairies. We know that the three prairie governments are administering the necessary relief in the way of seed grain and so forth and that they have the financial backing of the federal government.

Take again the question of the processing of meats and marketing of live stock, referred to in the amendment. My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) came to Ottawa this year with some well thought out and clear cut suggestions regarding these matters. Committees representing this group have waited on the Minister of Agriculture at least four or five times and have thoroughly discussed the whole situation with him. The minister received us sympathetically, and we know that he is going into the matter. So far as we are aware, nothing definite has been done yet, but we do hope that as a result of our negotiations some action will be taken.

Take again the duty on farm implements repairs. Last year the government raised the duty on repairs from 6 per cent to 25 per cent. There are millions of dollars' worth of American-made machinery on the farms of western Canada and no doubt a great deal of it on the farms of eastern Canada as well.

Mr. DONNELLY: What government was that?

Mr. CAMPBELL: This government; and I may say that the imposition of this duty would have imposed serious hardship upon those farmers. Representations were made to the Prime Minister on the floor of the house from this section last year and in response he delayed the imposition of these duties for one year. The duties come into effect on the 1st of July or August of this year. But we are not sleeping at the switch; we have our eye on that. We know that no branch factories have been built in Canada by such concerns as the J. I. Case company and the John Deere Plow Company, and the farmers will be penalized if the extra duty is put on. We have already made representations to the Prime Minister. We did not wait to move an amendment; and while, as I say, we have no assurance, we hope that something will be done at the appropriate time. If nothing is done with respect to this and other matters, then we will take the proper course. But I believe that in the meantime we have taken the right course. While our Liberal friends were deliberating the moving of this amendment, we were steadily working on and considering these problems. I believe that what we have done is the proper thing to have done, and I do not think that any good and useful purpose will be served by moving an amendment. In fact, I believe that is the best way of hindering governmental action while matters at issue are still under consideration. I do believe, however, that before this debate concludes we are entitled to some statement from the government, and I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) that he avail himself of this opportunity to make his maiden speech and to tell the house what he has told our committee when we have discussed the subject with him privately. He may not have carried it out to fruition yet, but I am sure the house would welcome a statement from him as to what he has under consideration with respect to the matters we have discussed with him.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I will not take up more than a few minutes of the time of the house. I had been, and still am, in some doubt as to how to vote on the amendment. Provided I was assured it was what is known as a straight vote of want of confidence in the government, I would vote against it, because, elected as an independent, I would consider it my duty to give the government a run for their money, so to speak, allowing them an opportunity to develop their policies before voting against them. On the occasions when I voted against the late government on a motion of want of confidence, or what was technically such, it was always on questions involving such a distinct and definite line of policy concerning matters which were of such importance, either to British Columbia or to the industries I represent, as to compel me to view it in the light of immediate necessities rather than from the point of view of the consequences to the government.

As regards the amendment now before us, I find fault with it as being somewhat vague in its terms. It condemns the government for failing to announce any agricultural policy to the house. That is somewhat indefinite. And later on it suggests emergency measures to meet the present crisis—that also is indefinite—and to make adequate provision for the processing of meats, the marketing of live stock and so on. I am always ready, if I find fault with something the government are doing, to suggest an alternative policy and one which I am prepared to support, because I do not believe in condemning the government simply for the reason that they have not done something which neither I nor anybody else can do. Perhaps I should be best advised to follow the attitude of my hon. friends to my left a few weeks ago and refrain from voting, in spite of the obloquy which apparently attaches to such an action, which however was quite within the rights of those hon. gentlemen, although we do not know how long they will enjoy the privilege.

What I rise for particularly at this time is to put on record, as typical of many others, some representations I have recently received from the district I represent. One of them has reference to a matter I discussed in the debate on the address, and the other arises out of the remarks of the Prime Minister some weeks ago with regard to the wealth of the people of western Canada as indicated by the number of motor cars, etcetera, owned by the farmers. I will not enter into any argument with the Prime Minister along the lines taken by my hon. friend from Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher), but I would say this. As regards what appears to be the enormous sum of money invested in cars, that is a very old method of making out an ex parte case; it is simply putting large issues against small ones. For instance, suppose the government introduced legislation to collect in taxation from the people of Canada the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, and suppose I went to a man in the street to whom one hundred dollars was a large sum—a man who perhaps never possessed a thousand dollars in his life. Suppose I said to this man, "Listen to this, Bill: they are going to take one hundred thousand dollars away from you people." That would make a considerable impression upon him. He would compare it by his standard of one hundred dollars a month in wages and he would say to himself, "One hundred thousand dollars! Why, that is an awful sum they are going to take away from the people." He does not know, nor can he be expected to know, that it represents, on the basis of our present population, something like one cent per capita. But that is the way specious arguments are advanced. Now, it would be more appropriate, in discussing the question of motor cars, if the question were asked: How many of these cars were bought in the last six months or year, and how many have been paid for? To go back a number of years is not to make a fair comparison.

Here is a letter which I wish to put on record, a letter I received to-day from a man in the west. It is addressed to myself and reads:

> Having read press notices of the efforts of certain western members to draw attention to the serious conditions prevalent in their constituencies, to which the Prime Minister and his cohorts persist in turning a deaf ear, I presume upon our slight acquaintance to address you in this connection.
> While the Hon. R. B. Bennett and his confrere, Mr. Manion, may deem it fitting to minimize the growing seriousness of conditions, let me assure you that we here are in a position to know that the western members have been guilty of no exaggeration. The Conservative press, of course, make a feature of Mr. Bennett's loud-mouthed condemnation of "blue ruin" speakers, but such an attitude as his is simply a refusal to look facts in the face. The country now realizes how empty were the promises to "end unemployment," to "blast our way into the markets of the world," etc., etc. Unemployment is now a great deal worse than when this government took office, and the bottom is not yet reached.
> The hon. Mr. Bennett speaks of the farmers on the prairies, but apparently forgets there are 600,000 people west of the Rocky mountains. Mr. Bennett was to expand our export marke.., but since the election half of the coast lumber business has closed down, and most of the balance is running on part time. One firm, normally employing about 800 men, is shut up tight, with no prospect of reopening and very few of the men laid off have found work or have any prospect of doing so. This condition has been repeated over and over. I have word of one very large mill, running six hours per day, five days per week, with a base wage for labour of 18 cents per hour. Ask Mr. Bennett to multiply that up, subtract living expenses, and see how many automobiles he can buy. Most of the loggers now out in camp are making barely enough for board, with not enough margin to buy clothes and pay their fare to camp and back. As you know, this work is very seasonable and when the men get back to town there will be nothing for them but begging on the street.

It is within my own personal knowledge that that statement is absolutely correct. I know that the firm to which he alludes, ordinarily employing nearly a thousand men, has been shut down. It is a common salutation for the men in the woods to say to each other, "Have you earned your board to-day?"

Many have been put on a piecework basis and sometimes they are unable to earn even their board. The letter continues:

Less than half the canneries will be running this year, and none will pack late fish—

That is, those running in the fall—

—so the fishermen will have no money next winter. The copper mines and pulp mills are all running with reduced crews or not at all.

The Coast Copper Company Limited, operating in my district, a subsidiary of the Consolidated Mining & Smelting Company of Canada Limited, which has been running for about fifteen years and employing a comparatively large crew, has shut down with no probability of soon reopening. The letter continues:

Nothwithstanding Mr. Bennett's promise to help the dairymen, the farmers are getting still lower prices for their produce, and are paying almost as much for feed as when wheat was selling for $1.50 per bushel. Probably the grain dealers and holders of Canadian Pacific Railway stock are buying automobiles, but the dairymen are not. Consider the poultrymen with eggs bringing them eleven cents per dozen. The one consoling thought is that very few of us will be paying Doctor Tolmie's one per cent tax.

The writer becomes sarcastic at this point. That is a tax commonly referred to as "Tolmie's tag day," which is put on all incomes above $25 per week for married men or $15 per week for single men. It is collected weekly so that a stenographer earning $60 per month for one or two months and then being idle the rest of the year would still have the privilege of paying an income tax. One week's work, one income tax. The letter continues:

Let me repeat the warning of Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, that conditions are certainly such as to induce rioting and serious disorders before another year. To-day I was talking to a man who has been prominent in the business life of Vancouver for many years, and he admitted that the present outlook was much less promising than it was six months ago.

To-night I cut two clippings from to-day's issue of the Daily Province. I enclose these to you, as illustrating the difference between fancy and fact, the cartoon showing what the Conservative press would have people believe and the advertisement showing conditions as they are. And this is the first day of May, in this west of seasonable occupation when, if ever, employment should be available!

This cartoon, familiar to all, appeared in the daily press. It depicts the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) with two clubs in his hands, one marked "sound logic" and the other marked "proven facts." He is shown chastising two so-called calamity howlers and putting them to rout. The headline reads: "Would anyone else like to tell me that Canada is ruined?" That is the cartoon referred to. The advertisement to which he refers appeared in the Daily Province under the heading "Help Wanted Male"—rather a travesty on the heading. It reads as follows:

Revelstoke

No men need come to Revelstoke looking for work.

500 men have been waiting here six weeks for jobs on Canadian Pacific railway.

There are also some 300 local men unemployed.

Hundreds of men are arriving daily who cannot be fed nor employed.

City Clerk,
Revelstoke, B.C.

That is not an advertisement published by some union during strike time, but was got up and paid for by the city of Revelstoke in an endeavour to keep unemployed men away from that place so that the city would not be faced with the burden of keeping them. As the writer of the letter which I have just read, mentioned, these conditions existed at the beginning of May, which should be almost the most favourable employment period in British Columbia. A few days ago I saw another advertisement along the same lines published by the city of Trail, warning unemployed men to keep away from that vicinity.

The other communication is in the form of a post card evidently circulated among a large number of dairymen and farmers to be signed and forwarded to their parliamentary representatives. No doubt other hon. members from British Columbia will be receiving these post cards. It reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

Due to the great deflation in the prices of all agricultural commodities it is absolutely essential to the existence of the industry in the Fraser valley and Vancouver island that costs of production be greatly reduced. The greatest factor in production costs is the price of feed grains and a very large proportion of feed grain prices is freight. The Canadian farmers in this area are paying as much for freight per ton on Canadian grown feed as do farmers in Japan for the same article delivered to them.

May I say in parenthesis that it is not the same article; that sent to Japan is of much higher value being No. 1 or No. 2 wheat, and that delivered to British Columbia, at $4.20 per ton extra freight, is No. 5 or No. 6 wheat. The post card continues:

This situation is serious and calls for action by the government pursuant to our repeated demands.

As a farmer, resident in your constituency I request you to insist upon definite action being taken immediately by the government in accordance with our petition made to it, to remedy this obvious injustice by ordering the immediate cancellation of freight differentials on feed grains coming to this district.

The post card obviously should have read "coming to this province." This refers to a matter I brought up while speaking on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and on previous occasions, the discrimination between the export rate on wheat going foreign from Vancouver and the same or lower grades of wheat coming to British Columbia for domestic use. I brought this matter up the other day and I explained the situation to the house. This matter has been through the regular procedure of being brought up before the Board of Railway Commissioners and once, if not twice, it has been referred to the privy council of Canada, which is the government. The matter rests there now and has been resting for something like fifteen months. I urged then, and I urge now that this is the best time to take action in this matter. It is something tangible, it is something which would really help; it has not the vagueness of a general condemnation of the government. I am not condemning the government, I asked it to take prompt action on a grievance which has been repeatedly brought before this house and the government. I am always faced with the reply: "Oh, this is not the occasion on which to announce a policy." A statement upon going into supply on agricultural estimates should offer a very appropriate occasion to announce such a policy because if it is left until we are in committee we would be restricted to particular items. As it is not likely there will be an item referring to this matter, it will be difficult to debate the subject. Unless the government is prepared to take immediate action by means of an order in council, which would be preferable, it should announce its policy now.

To go back to my remarks in connection with labour conditions, I omitted to urge the necessity of this government having a conference with the provinces before the close of this present session. Should that not be done, how can money be voted for relief for this coming winter? Just as surely as the sun will rise to-morrow morning, much relief will be needed this coming winter. I urge that a conference be held at an early date to enable the government to take appropriate action at this session. I may add it will be of no use to enact legislation similar to that passed during the session of last September because most of the municipalities are broke and will not be able to finance a fifty-fifty proposition. They strained their resources last year in the hope that only temporary relief was needed, and they will not be able to continue payments this year.

In closing I would again impress upon the government the necessity of an announcement as to its policy with regard to railway rates, and the need of an immediate conference with the provinces with regard to unemployment relief.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): In associating myself with the want of confidence motion which was moved by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), I take it that this motion and the debate on it deal entirely or almost so with the Department of Agriculture and the minister who is at the head of that department. It is important that everything pertaining to the question of agriculture be brought forward during the present session and as early as possible. I believe it is unnecessary to state that the condition of this primary industry in western Canada is not good; it is absolutely unsatisfactory. Therefore it behooves all members from western Canada and also from many other parts of the Dominion, especially those who represent agricultural ridings, to see that the existing condition of affairs is brought before the house and the country.

I do not want to say anything derogatory in connection with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). There is a feeling that perhaps he has been unduly criticized. I do not think that is the case and I do not believe that is the feeling on this side of the house. We do not want to criticize unduly any member of the government. What we want to do, though, is to draw the attention of parliament and the Canadian people to what I said were serious conditions in the agricultural industry from coast to coast. I do not really see why the Minister of Agriculture should be overly criticized. Perhaps there is one reason why, and I shall touch on it later.

So far as I understand, he is a native-born Canadian; he was born in one of the best parts of Canada, in western Ontario, and I do not see any reason why he should apologize for that. The other day the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) mentioned the fact that the minister was a product of Huron county. There is no better county in Canada. There are many splendid counties and districts in central Canada, eastern Canada and western Canada, any one of which no person need be ashamed to say was his birthplace. So the criticism cannot be on account of the portion of Canada in which the Minister first saw the light of day, or on account of his ancestry, or on account of his educational training; because he went through the primary and secondary schools as well as one of the leading universities of Canada. He has educational training and I am proud that a minister of agriculture with that training was selected for Canada. Training of that kind means developed ability, and I hope that ability in a practical way will be shown later by the minister not only on behalf of the agricultural industry but also as applied to the questions of government that will come before him.

Moreover, the minister moved west and was one of those who took part in the opening up of that vast empire of western Canada. He has done his duty there, not only educationally but in an agricultural way. He represents a splendid riding in this house, and he also fills an important position. It is on account of none of these things that any criticism has been levelled at him to-day. Therefore it must be for some other reason. May I ask what that reason is, Mr. Speaker? The other reason I would say is the political company he is keeping, the party with which he is lined up, the policies with which he is identified, not only in this chamber, not only in western Canada, but all across this land. So I would say that westerners are counting on the minister to take definite action although he is part and parcel of an inactive cabinet and government—action, again I say, although he is identified with policies which I think are absolutely too restrictive and are not going to bring prosperity to Canada—yes action, because I think the only tariff policy that will mean anything to this country, that will build up all portions of it, is a compromise tariff policy, a fair, moderate fiscal policy. When you resort to extremes, I care not what party be in power, you cannot make the machinery work; you are only going to turn back the hands of time so far as Canada is concerned, and instead of prosperity bring the opposite condition of affairs which we certainly now have.

Might I say a word about the question of secession? I think it was the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) who brought up in the House of Commons the question of secession. I notice he got some big black headlines in the daily press of Canada, and I was surprised to find that we have in this country a section of the daily press floundering around and trying to make some propaganda out of a question that does not in reality exist. There is no systematic secession sentiment in Western Canada any more than there is in Ontario or Quebec or the maritimes. The hon. member said that references made to that question in times gone by had been regarded lightly, but we should not regard lightly the references that are now being made to secession; we should be very much concerned about them. He said also at the United Farmers of Alberta convention in Calgary he rose and voiced his sentiments against secession. Further on he drew attention to the distressed and discouraged people who might try anything—that is, they might resort to secession in order to bring redress. He wound up with this expression of thought: that if this session of parliament will not do something towards relieving agriculture of the extra tariff burden imposed on it, we shall have to face the disintegration of our Dominion.

Those are serious words, serious sentiments; they are echoes of a fiscal problem that come well within the sphere of debating. This afternoon I want to give the house and the country the sentiments in my own riding with regard to secession. There is absolutely none. Before I left for Ottawa I went through my riding and held eleven or twelve important meetings. At the end of each meeting those who were in attendance—and often there were three or four hundred present—were given an opportunity of their own free will and accord to bring up any resolution, and this afternoon before I resume my seat I shall read some of the resolutions that were proposed. You will not find among those resolutions one on secession. There was not in any of the meetings that I addressed in my riding one iota of secession sentiment.

Mr. IRVINE: There were in the hon. member's own province.

Mr. McINTOSH: I shall deal with that in a moment.

Mr. IRVINE: The hon. member had better hurry up.

Mr. McINTOSH: There is no need for hurry. If what I have said be true in the riding of North Battleford, it is practically true in Saskatchewan. It is true that here and there we have an odd sentiment with regard to secession, but as I said, there is no connected movement with regard to secession. Wherever you get in any part of Saskatchewan or western Canada any sentiment in regard to secession, what does it signify? It signifies merely a reaction to the administration which now holds office, and which my hon. friend supports by advocating a conservative self-supporting economic dependent Canada, a reaction to their fiscal policies, and to what they have done to Canada since the election took place on July 28. That is all In other words, the men and women of western Canada are protesting resolutely and continuously and will continue to protest with regarded to the fiscal policies with which this government has saddled Canada and which are causing the people of the west to see not a ray of hope in the future.

Beyond this any suggestion that has been made has emanated from a source unconnected with any recognized organization or movement. There is therefore no secession sentiment in western Canada—none in Saskatchewan, none whatsoever in the riding of North Battleford. That we have a government in power that is not satisfactory to western Canada; that its policies are out of joint as compared with the policies we ought to have in this country, faced as we are at the present time with very serious problems, is no reason why we should have word go all over Canada through the daily press to the effect that there was a concerted movement towards secession in western Canada. This talk about secession sentiment is all nonsense; it is not worth paying very much attention to. I thought I would draw the attention of the house to it because I am from western Canada, and I know western Canada as well as I know the east, and I know the east as well as I know the west, and I am not afraid to stand up here and tell what I know to be the facts about that question.

Let me now come to the promises that were made during the election by hon. gentlemen now members of the government, with regard to agriculture, because it is the question of agriculture that is now before the house. They said that they would protect agriculture, would foster and develop agriculture. They said they would bring about the stabilization of economic conditions and the continuity of trade, freedom from the manipulation of tariffs at home and abroad. They said that they would find a foreign market for our products. Have they done so? Have they protected agriculture? Have they fostered and developed it? Have they brought about the stabilization of economic conditions? Have they brought about continuity of trade? Have we been free from the manipulation of tariffs at home and abroad? Have we? Have they found a foreign market for our products? To all these questions I would answer, no.

In the special session last September what did they do with regard to agriculture? Well, they increased the tariff on 170 articles which the farmer and labouring men of this country must buy. We put up tariff barriers on all these products, and when we did that, we did something which helped to put the farmers in the condition in which they find themselves to-day. I have a letter here bearing on what is taking place in that regard, but before reading it let me say that last September we raised the tariff on the following articles:

Cultivators, harrows, seed-drills, horse-rakes, horse-hoes, scufflers, manure spreaders, garden seeders, weeders, and complete parts of all the foregoing.

Ploughs; farm, field, lawn or garden rollers; soil packers; complete parts of all the foregoing.

Mowing machines, harvesters, either self-binding or without binders, binding attachments, reapers, harvesters in combination with threshing machine separators including the motive power incorporated therein, and complete parts of all the foregoing.

Hay loaders, hay tedders, potato planters, potato diggers, fodder or feed cutters, ensilage cutters, grain crushers and grain or hay grinders for farm purposes only, post hole diggers, snaths, stumping machine and all other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery, n.o.p., and complete parts of all the foregoing.

Scythes, sickles or reaping hooks, hay or straw knives, edging knives, hoes, pronged forks, rakes, n.o.p.

We raised the tariff on all those agricultural implements. Under the Liberal tariff before the special session, the tariffs on all these implements of production were 7½, 7½, 6 and 20 per cent. These rates were all raised under the general tariff to 25 per cent. Sometimes it is said that the tariff increases that were made in the special session have not meant any increased price for those who were buying these implements. Let me quote from a letter I have received which bears on that very point. It says:

While there is no advance in prices, there are very few declines. What we are looking for is cheaper goods, and while some of the papers are protesting that the retail trade are not lowering their prices, the fault as I see it is with certain manufacturers. Steel is very much cheaper than a year ago; still steel goods do not come down to us.

Mr. EDWARDS: What about labour?

Mr. McINTOSH: Labour is cheaper too.

Mr. EDWARDS: No.

Mr. McINTOSH: Out in western Canada it is cheaper because there is limited industrial labour to perform. The letter continues:

Copper was quoted a few weeks ago as being the cheapest for thirty-five years; still copper goods are very little less. You will admit that Mr. Bennett promised that goods would not go higher but he never said anything about going lower, and it is on that that the manufacturers are working.

That is the interpretation put upon the increases in the tariff by the people in all portions of western Canada, and I would say that the tariff increases have helped to accentuate the serious conditions which are to-day obtaining in the agricultural industry. It was no wonder, then, that when parliament assembled at the present session we moved an amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Mr. COTNAM: When the friends of my hon. friend were in power, did they reduce the cost of agricultural implements to the farmers in western Canada through their tariff reductions?

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, they reduced them, and more than that, they brought about in this country conditions of prosperity so great that the farmer never thought that he was paying too much for anything.

Mr. COTNAM: The hon. gentleman has not answered the question.

Mr. McINTOSH: It is an old question which has been answered time and again.

I was referring, when I was interrupted, to the amendment that we brought down to the address. We were told when parliament assembled that the government would consider measures to ameliorate present conditions. Those conditions are not ameliorated, and they show no sign of amelioration. The people of Canada are becoming disgusted with present conditions, and there is no sign whatever of improvement. So I say that that promise in the speech from the throne is not worth the ink it is written with. The speech from the throne also promised to bring about prosperity hitherto unattained. Well, the government have not made any move to bring such about. Canada is not prosperous to-day. The government said they would make it prosperous, but they have not done so. Further, the government promised to furnish safeguards against the recurrence of like depressions in days to come. More than that; the government were going to explore the origins of the agricultural depression. They were going to set out on an exploration policy. I am wondering whether they have yet completed that exploration policy. What have they explored, and what have they discovered? They were going to explore the conditions from which we are now suffering in a domestic sense.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: "Exploration" must have been a misprint for "exploitation."

Mr. McINTOSH: My hon. friend suggests that the trouble with Canada is in the sphere of exploitation, and the inference is that the present government has helped to put Canada in her present exploited condition. Those were some of the promises that were made by the government. There has been nothing explored and nothing discovered. No safeguards have been provided against a recurrence of the depression. The depression, in fact, is worse to-day than it was before. Prosperity has not come, and there is no amelioration of conditions. These are facts.

The government also promised to provide for an orderly marketing of the wheat crop, and further intervention, if necessary, because of changing conditions in world markets. There was to be a reduction in the costs of production and marketing of the wheat crop; more stable markets were to be provided, and satisfactory returns received by the grain growers. Well, we are selling a certain amount of wheat, but look at the price we are getting for it. The price bears no comparison to what we are paying for all the industrial products that we need on the farms and in the homes of western Canada, and which we must have just the same as any other part of Canada. The big spread between the price that the farmer and the labouring man receives for his product and the price he has to pay for the things he has to buy is the discouraging feature of present conditions, and until the western farmers and labourers see that gap closed they are not going to be satisfied that this government is doing anything for either agriculture or labour.

More than that. Mr. Speaker, we have an amendment moved by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), in which we are told that the agricultural policy of the government has not been brought down, that markets have not been found for our goods, and that consequently something must be done if Canada is to be brought back to prosperity. If, Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Department of Agriculture has not been brought down—at least the government say that is the fact—the sooner it is brought down the better, because in this want of confidence amendment I believe there is dynamite enough to move any government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER: You have not got the match.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, we have. In the amendment it is stated that in order to fulfil the many definite promises in regard to agriculture the government has made no constructive announcement. That is true.

An hon. MEMBER: What is your policy?

Mr. McINTOSH: We have had nothing but hearsay. The onus of propounding a policy is on hon. gentlemen opposite, not on the opposition.

Mr. COTNAM: It was on my hon. friend for eight years.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, eight years of prosperity. And until my hon. friends do bring down their policy we will bombard them and force them to bring it before the house and the country.

Mr. COTNAM: What did my hon. friend do for the past nine years?

Mr. McINTOSH: And that is not all. Some further points come into this want of confidence picture. I must say it appears to be "some" picture, when one looks at it for a while. We say the policies of the government tend to restriction rather than to expansion; that is true. Canada's trade is decreasing by millions and millions of dollars, month after month and year after year; we will soon have no foreign trade at all—or no trade outside of Canada.

An hon. MEMBER: Blue ruin.

Mr. McINTOSH: And all because the policy of the present government "blue-ruin" like, is to have Canadians live unto themselves, to make our people believe they are prosperous when they are not, and to attempt to build the country up fiscally and commercially by pulling at our boot straps.

Another question faces the government in this amendment, and it is this: If our international trade goes to pieces, agriculture will become more and more paralyzed. It is becoming more and more paralyzed every day and every week.

An hon. MEMBER: More blue ruin.

Mr. McINTOSH: And that is why we are calling upon the government to take cognizance of its blue ruin consequences in this country, and asking it to do something.

Mr. COTNAM: What about the past government?

An hon. MEMBER: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McINTOSH: No, not just now. In the closing paragraph of the amendment we find the expression, "emergency measures to meet the present agricultural prices." These emergency measures are requested because wheat marketing has not been successful, and other agricultural products are not bringing satisfactory prices in the markets of the world. To all these representations on the part of the opposition up to the present time the government has suggested nothing in the way of an agricultural policy. I do not wish to make any statements of a disparaging character concerning the Minister of Agriculture. I do not know him intimately, but I have a very high regard for him. I would say, however, that the minister has made one mistake: he has over-sold himself to this country, in an agricultural way. That is more reason than ever, Mr. Speaker, why the minister or some other hon. member of the government should come forward and announce the government's agricultural policy all along the line, thereby letting us know exactly what they have in mind to cure conditions. Up to the present time they have done nothing. That is a serious statement to make, but it is made in connection with a serious condition of affairs.

I have before me a statement contained in the press of western Canada concerning a speech of the Prime Minister.

An hon. MEMBER: The Star-Phoenix?

Mr. McINTOSH: It was in my own paper, The News, and it at least tells the truth. This is a press despatch sent from Ottawa to western Canada with regard to the seven points mentioned by the Prime Minister when he spoke in this house regarding western conditions:

1. No government of which Mr. Bennett is the head will consent to any policy of pegging the price of wheat.

That is correct, is it?

An hon. MEMBER: Sure.

Mr. McINTOSH: All right. Western farmers say: The only reason we want to peg the price of wheat as an emergency measure is that the government pegged the price of 170 industrial articles, and it should therefore peg the price of wheat.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, that is the reason. Therefore Mr. Speaker it is needless for hon. gentlemen opposite to make a row. The government started the practice of price-fixing, and they are afraid to go through with it. That is all. I think the farmers are dealing absolutely fairly with the government; all they want is for this government to come through and do for the farmers what they did for the industrialists.

An hon. MEMBER: They will come through; don't worry.

Mr. McINTOSH: Then, we come to statement No. 2:

The three prairie provinces are not experiencing undue hard times.

Is that true? That is what he said. Then we come to No. 3:

Nothing approaching an acute depression or an economic crisis exists.

The Prime Minister said that. Then No. 4 is as follows:

Cases of hardship and actual want are confined to a few isolated individuals.

That is No. 4. Now, will hon. members listen to No. 5—

An hon MEMBER: Five loaves and two small fishes.

Mr. McINTOSH: It is as follows—no five or two about it.

Tens of thousands of prairie farmers have substantial bank accounts.

By the time I am through perhaps hon. members will know they have not. Then No. 6 is as follows:

Three hundred millions of dollars invested in automobiles and tractors in the prairie provinces bespeaks their solvency and economic well-being.

That is a ringer. Then No. 7:

Prevailing impressions that western Canada has been hard hit are due, entirely, to exaggerated statement of Liberal, Progressive, Labour and Independent politicians, who have been guilty of decrying their country for purposes of party politics.

I want to refute that statement, and all the other statements I have read. I have before me the result of an investigation carried out by Doctor William Allen of the university of Saskatchewan with regard to two well-defined agricultural areas in western Canada. One area which Doctor Allen, as an expert, investigated in an agricultural way was the provincial riding of Kindersley. The other area investigated was the provincial riding of Turtleford. That provincial riding is part of the federal constituency I represent in the House of Commons. The provincial riding of Kindersley is part of the federal riding represented in this house by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael). Doctor Allen confined his investigations to two of the main areas in western Canada. I might say however that the conditions he found in those two portions would be representative of other parts of the west, because one area is in the north and the other is towards the south. Doctor Allen found the following:

. . . . that the average farmer debt in Kindersley county is $4,084, and in the Turtleford district, $2,262, both sums taking into account debt-free farms.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Let us do a little calculating with these figures. Provincially speaking, if we add the $4,084 for the Kindersley electoral district to the $2,262 for the Turtleford electoral district we get a total of $6,346. Dividing that figure by the figure 2 we get an average of $3,173. that is the average debt of all the farmers in those two important areas in Saskatchewan. If we take that average and multiply it by 250,000, the number of farms in western Canada, we have a total indebtedness of western farmers amounting to $793,250,000. That says nothing about the share the farmer has in municipal debts, provincial debts, railway debts, urban debts and federal debts. It says nothing about the millions of wealth brought into western Canada by settlers from different parts of the world; it says nothing about the $5,000,000,000 of wheat values that were produced in western Canada and shipped eastward to build up the Dominion as a whole. When we think of that prodigious debt, and when we realize that these are facts disclosed by investigation in regard to only two areas in western Canada, we must conclude that agriculture is not in a very satisfactory or sound condition. I would not go so far as to say that western Canada is bankrupt; I do not think it is. But I do say the farmers must be given a real opportunity to go forward, that their debts must be cut down as far as possible, that they must be encouraged to make the best of their surroundings. In order to do that there must be a government in power to encourage the farmer by a fiscal policy adapted to his needs, to encourage him by strong governmental leadership, the leadership of men of vision, statesmanship and power. Such a government will appeal to the people of western Canada. I do not believe the present government has done as much in that direction as it might. I do hope that in the months to come there will be a change of heart on the part of the government in regard to its support of agriculture and the encouragement of that industry, and that by bringing down a constructive and forward-looking policy it will improve the condition of the western farmer. If this is done I have no objection to this government getting credit for it. It is not a question of party politics, it is a question of the well-being of western Canada and the whole Dominion.

With regard to these distressing conditions, may I enumerate to the house a number of resolutions that I have received passed by the farmers of the North Battleford federal district at the meetings to which I have referred. These resolutions were passed voluntarily, the farmers were not asked to pass them. I think these resolutions indicate truly the conditions of agriculture in the area I represent in this house and also that they are fairly applicable to the entire west. All these resolutions ask for action on the part of the Prime Minister, action on the part of the Minister of Agriculture, action on the part of the Conservative rank and file all across the Dominion. Resolution No. 1 asks:

For government supervision of the grain exchange.

Number 2:

That the government guarantee a minimum fixed price of 70 cents per bushel, basis No. 1 northern, Fort William or Port Arthur, for the 1930 wheat crop.

The farmers are not asking for these things without knowing full well why they are asking for them. Number 3:

That the government take over the supervision of the banks with regard to interest charges, and bring about their reduction to a maximum of 7 per cent.

Number 4:

That the government declare a moratorium until such time as conditions affecting agriculture shall sufficiently improve to warrant its removal.

Number 5:

That the government set a price on all wheat used for consumption in Canada of $1.25 per bushel, and the price of flour per 98 pound sack be set at a reasonable price not exceeding present prices.

Number 6:

That all freight rates be lowered 20 per cent.

Number 7.

That all interest and indemnities on taxes be cancelled until a fair measure of prosperity is restored.

Number 8:

That all debts owing banks, machine companies, and wealthy corporations by farmers be cancelled till a fair degree of prosperity is restored.

Number 9:

That all banks, natural resources, timber, mines, oil wells, water-powers, be nationalized.

Number 10:

That extension of credit should be through the banks alone, controlled by the government, with a suitable provision made for those in distress.

Number 11:

That in view of the privileged position of industries other than agriculture, government assure cost of wheat production at $1 per bushel.

Number 12:

That the government be asked to set up a board of standards to maintain a proper relationship between the price the farmer has to pay for commodities that he has to buy and the price he receives for commodities which he has to sell.

Number 13:

That the legal rate of interest of 7 per cent as set out in the Bank Act be enforced.

The source of all these resolutions, Mr. Speaker, is to be found in the fiscal policy sponsored by hon. gentlemen opposite. For instance, on February 18, 1931, at a meeting held at St. Walburg the following resolution was passed unanimously:

That this meeting go on record as being in favour of freer trade in lieu of protection as practiced by the Bennett administration.

There, as I say, Mr. Speaker, you have the source of all these resolutions, they are all concerned with the fiscal policy of the present administration. All these resolutions have grown out of the high tariff policy of this government, out of the increased tariff rates passed at the special session, out of the increased tariff rates the government are expected to put into operation at the present session; in a word, these resolutions arise out of the artificial fiscal policy of the government of the day, and until that policy is very much modified I am satisfied the people of western Canada will not feel happy and contented. It is not a question of secession. It is a question of the people of western Canada recognizing that the policy of the present government is not the policy for western Canada. They are strongly of the opinion that there must be a change, and that the next government that takes office must recognize in its policy the interests not only of one section, but of all sections of the country; it must introduce a fiscal policy that will bring about the development of Canada as a whole. In no other way will Canada prosper and reach her full development. Until something in that direction is attempted, I believe conditions in western Canada will not improve very much.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to put on Hansard a few of the resolutions passed by the local lodges of the United Farmers of western Canada, and also by wheat pool committees. I believe the people behind these resolutions are entitled to recognition. They are fighting the battle for fiscal freedom in western Canada, and they are doing their best to call the attention of the whole Dominion to the conditions which now prevail in the prairie provinces. Here is a resolution passed by the Cavalier local lodge of the United Farmers of Canada on December 10, 1930:

That we advocate government supervision of the grain exchange.

That we ask the federal government to guarantee a minimum fixed price of 70 cents for the 1930 wheat crop.

The rural municipality of Mervin passed unanimously the following resolution on December 6, 1930:

Resolved that the Dominion government be requested to set a minimum price for wheat, of 70 cents per bushel basis No. 1 northern, Fort William or Port Arthur.

The next resolution that I am reading was passed by the wheat pool "Speers local" on December 6, 1930.

In view of the very serious situation that has developed as a result of the collapse of the wheat market:

We the members of the wheat pool, "Speers local" urgently request that the Dominion government guarantee a minimum price of 70 cents a bushel at Fort William for No. 1 northern wheat grown during the season of 1930.

That was moved by R. Miner and seconded by S. Cunningham.

The council of the rural municipality of Round Hill passed the following resolution on December 20, 1930:

Resolved: That this council demand that Dominion government take steps to stabilize wheat market so that minimum price of at least 70 cents be maintained.

I have a resolution passed by the Edam local of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, covering practically the same ground. Then there is a resolution from Spiritwood covering a little more ground. But since I have not the time to read these and the other resolutions under my hand, I should certainly like to have them on Hansard for the information of the house and of the country. Not only should I like to put all these resolutions on Hansard, but I should also like to give their source and the names of their movers and seconders.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I hope the present government will bring down its agricultural policies and its budget as soon as possible in order that members on this side of the house may see whether the government as a whole is looking up or down; whether it intends to go forward or backward; whether it intends to make progressive history for Canada or the opposite; whether it intends to recognize the ills of agriculture in western Canada or to turn a deaf ear to those ills, as it has done since it assumed office. May I say—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member's time has expired.

[Mr. McIntosh[

Mr. McINTOSH: I have just a word to say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker. Let me say to the government that I hope it will not follow the downward course; that is—

Not down, down, down to the uttermost down,
For the pathway is long and deep;
And as you go down to the uttermost down,
Your're prone to get fearful and weak.

But up, up, up to the uppermost up—
Oh, the pathway is steep and long—
And as you go up to that uppermost up,
Cheer all the way with a song.

Mr. T. F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): I have listened with a great deal of interest to the present debate, and I should be neglecting my duty as a representative of my constituency if I did not speak to the amendment which has been proposed. I believe the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) was induced to move this amendment by the speech delivered in this house by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. During that debate I heard Liberal members on this side of the house, one after another, representing to the government the conditions as they had found them in western Canada, and I believe that every one of them was telling of the conditions exactly as he had found them in his own constituency. And when they were through the Prime Minister got up and began to read them a curtain lecture. He told us that we on this side were only playing politics, making such speeches only for political purposes. I resent a statement of that kind. If, having entered politics, I am not to be allowed to get up and tell the truth regarding conditions, then the sooner I get out of politics the better. But let me tell the government, Mr. Speaker, that I do not intend to be bullied either by the Prime Minister or by anyone else. The Prime Minister may be able to bully his own cabinet and to keep their mouths shut, but he will not keep our mouths shut on this side of the house. He will not prevent us from portraying conditions as we find them, no matter how much he may curtain-lecture the house and attempt to bully us. We will not be bullied. It is contrary to my nature anyway.

No man in the history of Canada, Mr. Speaker, has done more to discredit public men in the eyes of the common people of this country than the Prime Minister. He went from coast to coast during the last election, preaching prosperity, promising to usher in better times, and representing the conditions in the country as something for which the then Liberal government was responsible. He said to the people, "Put me in power and I will give you heaven and earth—everything; I will give you whatever you want. You shall have prosperity; there will be good times." Well, the people took him at his word and returned him to power. And what do we find now? We find harder times than we have ever known. The result is that the common people have the impression that no public man can be relied upon. They say, "There is the Prime Minister. He made promises which he knew quite well he could not carry out." He was a high pressure salesman all right; he sold himself to the country. He went from coast to coast with his propaganda and sold himself. Let me say that if any stock salesman had gone from coast to coast as he did and had sold stocks, making representations such as he made, that stock salesman would be in jail to-day. They would have had him arrested. The right hon. gentleman had no regard for what he promised. He went up the high mountain, showed the Canadian people the glories of the world, and said, "You can have it all if you only vote for me." And they voted for him. But they have learned their lesson; make no mistake about that. The people in western Canada have learned their lesson and now they know they were handed a gold brick. The conditions as hon. members on this side have indicated them are the conditions as they exist in the west, and it is because those conditions are as they have been represented that I now get up to speak on this amendment.

When the Prime Minister was speaking in Calgary on June 19 last year, he said, "We will look over the top of the hill and beyond the horizon to make provision for the Canadian agriculturist." I do not know whether he has ever got up on that hill. That was the hill of prosperity which he was going to have the Canadian people climb. Well, we have not even got to the foothills yet.

An hon. MEMBER: You never will.

Mr. DONNELLY: We never shall with this government; you are absolutely right. Let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite that they are going in the wrong direction. They are not reading the signposts along the road. They are going into the valley of despair. The Prime Minister, after he was elected, said, "Wait until the special session; I will pass resolutions, I will vote $20,000,000, there will be prosperity." When the special session came he said, "I was wrong; wait until we have the regular session." And now that the regular session is in progress, what does he say? He says, "If I am given health and strength I will bring you prosperity." Why, Mr. Speaker, we are filled with such promises. We want action. We have had too many promises; we want some of the action which the right hon. gentleman was going to give us. But we are getting none of it. We are, as I say, going deeper and deeper into the valley of despair, because hon. gentlemen opposite are not observing the signs along the road. They are going the wrong way. I advise those hon. gentlemen to turn around and go in the other direction if they want to get anywhere. Their whole policy is wrong, and this country will get nowhere under such a policy.

I wish for a moment or two to refer to two or three things the Prime Minister said in regard to conditions in the west. Speaking in this house, he said:

> Wherever men have had regard for economic laws and have kept free from speculation and wild dreams of sudden wealth, they are happy and contented and have provided a good livelihood for themselves and their families.

And he went on:

> What is the cause of the great depression in western Canada? Hon. gentlemen opposite know that the most important cause is speculation.

What does the Prime Minister mean by speculation? That is an important thing. If he means speculating in grain or speculating on the stock exchange, I want to tell him that I know thousands and thousands of people in the west who never invested a dollar in either of these forms of speculation, and yet they are in despair and in financial difficulties at the present time. I know thousands of them. I know that some of the best men are suffering, although they have never invested a dollar in speculation in their lives. But if the right hon. gentleman means by speculation the investment in land and farm machinery, in horses and equipment of various kinds, then I will admit at once that a good many farmers have speculated. There is no doubt about that. But let me tell the Prime Minister that farming conditions in the west have changed considerably within the last thirty years. I have been farming there for that length of time, and when I went there I found a piece of land of 160 acres a good-sized farm. But farms have expanded. The farmers, like the manufacturers, have gone into mass production, and we know that to-day 640 acres constitutes an ordinary-sized farm. A man can farm 640 acres to-day as easily as he could 160 acres thirty years ago. There has been a considerable increase in the use of farm machinery and equipment generally, and great strides have been made in the mode of farming. Consequently, farmers can take up more land. If that is speculation, all right, but does the Prime Minister intend to condemn a man because he has confidence in the country, because he believes in it, because he has investigated it and is satisfied with the result? Surely not. Surely the right hon. gentleman is not going to condemn a man because he says: This country is all right and I am going to buy more land, I am going to buy better equipment, I am going to build a better home and a better barn. Surely the farmer has the same right to do that as has the manufacturer to erect a bigger plant, to put in better machinery and to go into mass production. That is all the farmer has done, but the Prime Minister gets up and dares to condemn him for his action. It ill becomes the Prime Minister or anyone else to condemn the farmer for doing these things; he is to be commended rather than condemned.

The Prime Minister then went on to say that during the last twelve months the banks had increased their agricultural credits by 16 per cent. I will agree with that statement, but I am surprised that the increase was not greater. In the spring we borrow a little money with which to seed our land; in the fall we borrow a little more to harvest our crops, and after the harvest is over we pay our loans and start off with a clear sheet, or, if necessary, borrow a little more. But what were the conditions last year? After we harvested our crops we could not pay any loans, and I guarantee that ninety-five per cent of the present outstanding loans are simply renewals of old notes. With the exception of a new credit here or there, this increase is made up of renewals, and I am surprised that the figure is not much greater than that given by the Prime Minister.

Conditions are serious in western Canada. I have lived there for some thirty years and I have never known them to be worse than they are at the present time. I have seen the farmer wiped out with frost, with drought, with hail, but always he would say: Next year things will be all right. We do not find that spirit to-day; the note of optimism has gone. We are sowing our crops but we do not know what we will reap. Should we obtain a good crop, we figure that prices probably will be bad and we will be worse off than ever. One thing which this government should do is to restore that spirit of optimism which has always prevailed in western Canada.

I would like to read one or two letters which I have received from my constituents. One received from Hodgeville reads as follows:

> Times here are terrible. The farmers are in a state of panic not knowing what to do. They cannot start seeding as we have had no rain and the soil is drifting and blowing so that some days one can scarcely see ten feet away. On top of this adding another mortgage for seed and feed, and many for food supplies.
> I have never seen such despondency and discouragement among the masses, even the hitherto well-to-do. God only knows how it will all end.

[Mr. Donnelly.]

The next is a letter received from a clergyman, reading in part as follows:

> This has been the most discouraging spring I have seen in the west and I have been here for twenty-one years now.

He is a clergyman giving his independent view. Another letter reads as follows:

> If the people of eastern Canada wanted to aggravate the people of the west to the verge of war and bloodshed they couldn't have found another man in all the world with a disposition more suitable to carry out such a program.

The writer refers to the present Prime Minister. The letter continues:

> Talk about a bull in a china shop causing trouble—if he could do more damage than this bird at Ottawa he would need to be a superbull.
> I don't suppose there is another man in the Dominion of Canada or any other country that could have caused so much trouble and suffering and discontent in such a short time in office

The writer of this letter is a good Tory who has always voted against me. The letter continues:

> And his last speech at Ottawa ought to convince the farmers of the west what they can expect from the federal government in the way of relief from their present difficulties.
> Another thing our Conservative supporters ought to know by now, and that is out of eight members they sent from Saskatchewan to Ottawa, two proved to be feebleminded—

I wonder who they can be?

> —and the other six were deaf and dumb. So I must say to the people of Saskatchewan, why spend $32,000 to keep these birds at Ottawa when they could be kept so much cheaper in Saskatchewan?

Mr. MANION: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member cannot put on Hansard the words of someone outside this house which may be offensive to an hon. member. He is reading a statement made by someone outside the house to the effect that two of the hon. members from Saskatchewan are feebleminded. I submit that to make a statement like that is unparliamentary and out of order, even when made in the form of a letter written by someone else.

Mr. DONNELLY: If the hon. minister will name the two hon. members to whom I have been offensive, I will withdraw my remark.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member is simply making it worse; he is making it offensive to all the hon. members.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the point of order is well taken. Unparliamentary language cannot be quoted any more than it can be uttered in the house, and I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his remarks. He would not himself say that hon. members from Saskatchewan were feebleminded, and he cannot quote people outside of the house as making that statement.

Mr. DONNELLY: I will withdraw the statement, but I might say that it was made in a published letter.

Mr. SPEAKER: Even so, it is not parliamentary.

Mr. DONNELLY: This letter was published in the press of Saskatchewan. I will withdraw that particular statement, but will continue with the letter. It is as follows:

> But on the other hand if the farmers of the west have such substantial bank accounts as our beloved friend, Mr. Bennett, says they have, why should they worry about a few thousand dollars more or less, or whether they keep their feebleminded at Ottawa or Weyburn.
>
> Now, in regard to our provincial government, Premier Anderson needn't try to bolster up the Bennett government for it can't be done. Mr. Bennett's last speech at Ottawa swept away the last thread of confidence that the people of western Canada had put in this so-called super-man and left bare his true character—that of a rank imposter.
>
> Premier Anderson said there never was a government in power before that gave as much money to the west as the Bennett government, but he didn't say that there never was a government in power before that took so much money from the west. This Bennett tariff wall has cost the people of the west around $50,000,000. Then he tries to make a big man of himself by giving the west a few million for their unemployed and the rest goes to the eastern manufacturers. This is the kind of a square deal the west is getting from the Bennett government.
> If the people of western Canada are going to submit to this particular brand of British fair play then I must say they haven't got any more backbone than a jellyfish.

That letter was written by Mr. Tom Clark of Willows, Saskatchewan, and is dated April 27, 1931. This man is credited with having voted against me in the last election, and has always voted Tory. His letter gives his opinion of the present government.

Mr. JACOBS: Can the hon. member read any letters from any of his constituents who voted Liberal?

Mr. DONNELLY: I would gladly do so, but I am afraid they would be unparliamentary. I ask here and now: what does the present government intend to do? What is their policy with regard to agriculture? We have sat here and listened and every one of us has asked: what is the government's policy with regard to agriculture? Farmers are writing to me from day to day and week to week to this effect: "Keep after the government and try to make them tell us what they intend to do for us. We have been endeavouring to do that, but we get no answer." The government seems to be deaf and dumb, just as this man said.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), however, did bring out a policy to which some hon. members on this side have referred. This announcement of policy, which appeared in MacLean's magazine, is called Canada's new agricultural policy, and it is divided into twelve heads:

1. A national marketing board.

That is all right.

2. Lower costs of production obtained by increased yield per acre.

That is a nice thing.

3. Sowing of land to crops best suited to it.

That is all right so far as it goes.

4. Research work to discover fertilizer required for different soils.

That is all right too.

5. Immediate survey of seed grain, seed vegetables and fodder crops.

Those are all right. Then we come to number 6, and I want the house to pay particular attention to this:

6. Creation of "bull clubs."

Then the seventh:

7. Immediate improvement of quality of swine.
8. Eradication of disease among poultry.
9. Research work on feeds.
10. Increased effort to eliminate parasites.
11. Transformation of experimental farms into local educationl centres.
12. Cooperation with provincial governments in carrying out policies.

Those are all right so far as they go, but practically every one of them has been in operation for years and they are not going to help our conditions one bit. I can answer all of them just the same as many questions are answered in the house. I can say that numbers 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 are all answered by number 6. Then number 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 are all answered by number 6 too, and that is the "bull clubs." That is all there is to it; there is nothing in it to help the farmer at all. It is all window dressing, all show, all froth, eyewash. We want something substantial. We want something that is going to do some of us some good. This is of no use at all. The people of western Canada are in a desperate state, and desperate conditions require desperate measures. We are asking the government for desperate measures, something that is going to bring us out of the woods, but we are getting nothing. The government are deaf and dumb.

Of course we know the Prime Minister came out to western Canada and at Regina said that the thing to do was to go into mixed farming. He said: We are going to get a revolving fund of $5,000,000 and bring you out on the Minnesota plan. This fund of $5,000,000 is alright; we will take the money quickly enough, but what the western farmer is looking for to-day is not a chance to get further into debt but a chance to get out of debt. It is all very well to bring in the Minnesota plan when prices of live stock are rising, but it is a different proposition when they are declining as they are at the present time. I would say to anyone who is thinking of investing money in a scheme of this kind: take a long last look at your money, because it is going to be many a day before you see it again; kiss it good-bye when you put it into the fund, because I doubt if you will ever see it again. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) seems to favour mixed farming. There appears, however, to be a wrong impression about mixed farming. A year ago the price of butter was away up, but now domestic butter is worth about ten or twelve cents a pound and eggs are worth eight or ten cents a dozen. We do not hear so much about the price of beef, but I have before me the report of the Dominion Live Stock branch, markets intelligence service, giving the top prices at Edmonton for the week ending April 2, this year and last year, as follows:

Butcher steers.. .. .	$5 25	$10 50
Select bacon hogs.. .. .	6 85	12 10

So that present prices are just about one-half of last year's prices. If the farmers can make money at the present starvation prices, then last year they must have made a fortune, and I doubt very much whether the farmers to-day can make money with prices of farm produce as they are.

But there seems to be a wrong impression altogether as to mixed farming conditions in western Canada, and I wish to say just a word or two about this question. In my opinion western Canada can be divided into three great areas. There is one area which, on account of climatic and soil conditions, is fit only for ranching. There are some districts in the southern and eastern parts of Alberta and the southern and western parts of Saskatchewan, and other districts here and there, which on account of the soil—sandy, stony, gravelly, or rough—or on account of climatic conditions—extent of rainfall—are fit only for ranching. Then there is the broad open prairie, which, on account of climatic conditions, is fit only for grain; we can grow grain; we cannot raise live stock. We are not sure of rainfall from day to day and week to week so as to get pasturage for the stock. We are not sure of water for watering the stock. If we had plenty of water, the proposition would be different, but I have known of farmers hauling drinking water twelve miles, and one cannot raise live stock if one has to haul water that distance. Many of these farmers do not keep horses for farming; they use tractors entirely. We can grow small grains and wheat, but we cannot grow oats or flax. It does not take as much rainfall to grow wheat or flax or some of the coarser grains. It does not pay us to go into mixed farming. Here and there, throughout that district, wherever it pays us to go into mixed farming, we do so; we have some stock. Then there is the great northern part which has its rainfall, its water, its shelter for the stock. It is fitted for mixed farming, but the people there are already engaged in mixed farming. It may be possible that some of them should go into it a little further, but any farmer who goes into mixed farming must do so gradually. Let him buy one or two head of stock, go into the thing gradually, and find out how to handle stock. Do not let him rush into it wildly and think he is going to make a fortune, because it cannot be done. Let him handle just what stock he can handle properly and no more. One thing is sure; he cannot make a fortune out of it at present prices.

What our farmers are demanding now from the Prime Minister is that he make good his election promises. He promised to find a market for our wheat and other farm produce at better prices. The Conservatives went through my constituency and promised that if returned to power wheat would be selling at $1.80 and $1.90 a bushel. Put the Conservative government in, they said, and wheat will go up from eight to ten cents a bushel right away. Some of them even guaranteed that if the Conservative government came into power wheat would go up within two weeks by ten cents a bushel. As a matter of fact, wheat went down ten cents a bushel during the first five days this government was in power. It has been going down ever since, and the bottom is not in sight.

The Prime Minister says that we are now selling wheat. No, Mr. Speaker, we are not selling our wheat; we are giving it away. To sell a commodity at 50 or 60 cents a bushel is quite different from selling it at $1.50 or $1.60 a bushel. At the time the Liberal government was in power the price of wheat was around $1.50 a bushel, but since this government took office the price has been from 50 cents up to less than $1 per bushel. Why does the government not do something with regard to the price of wheat? They are doing nothing; not a man on the government benches has a word to say about it; they are deaf and dumb still. What the farmers of Saskatchewan are demanding is that the government do something, that they sell our wheat, that they look after our farm products, because our western farmers cannot continue very long to raise crops under the present conditions.

The present policy of the Conservative government is absolutely wrong. It is absurd to put a wall around the country, shutting out all foreign goods; it simply means that we cannot buy from anybody and therefore we cannot sell our goods. There is not enough gold in the world to use as a purchasing medium; the only way we can sell our goods is to take other goods in exchange, and unless we take other goods in exchange for our wheat we cannot sell it at a profit. Therefore I say that to put a wall around this country, preventing us from exchanging our wheat for the goods of other countries, is the wrong policy. Where we should be to-day is not at the London conference, but at the Briand conference, among the wheat buyers of Europe. I do not think anything worse could have happened for the wheat growers of western Canada than what happened at Rome. Our High Commissioner in London went there, and what did he do? There were the buyers and there were the sellers, and he split them into two different camps. Who does the seller want to make friends with? With other sellers or with the buyers? Any man who is selling commodities knows that the seller wants to make friends with the buyers. But our High Commissioner split this conference of European buyers and European sellers into two, and he said: The sellers will all meet in London for a conference, and you buyers can meet in France three days before that conference. Nothing worse could have happened for the wheat growers of western Canada than to divide the conference into two camps in that way. We as sellers do not care what the other sellers think. The ones we are interested in are the buyers. They are the people we want to make friends with; they are the people we should be doing something for in order that we may be able to sell our products to them.

The policy of the Liberal government, Mr. Speaker, has been altogether different from the policy of this government. The policy of the Liberal government was for wider markets, more open markets, freer trade. It was to take the goods of other countries in exchange for our goods, to make treaties with other countries, to get preferences in their markets and to give preferences in ours. We believe that if the Liberal government were in power in this country to-day and the Dunning budget were in force, we would have no trouble in selling our wheat at a good profit. That is the policy that we have always advocated and it is the policy we advocate to-day. The policy of this government, on the contrary, is to build a wall around the country, and for the country to live within itself. The countries of the world that have followed that policy in the past now realize that they were wrong and are beginning to tear down their walls, while Canada is beginning to go in the opposite direction. It is building up a wall just as other countries are beginning to tear theirs down. All over the world to-day the tendency is towards freer trade and more open markets.

I want to make this suggestion to the government: What we should have at the present time is a wheat board to market our grain.

Mr. SHORT: Why didn't you have it when you were in power?

Mr. DONNELLY: The price of wheat was so high then that we did not need it. But to-day, since this government has closed all the markets of the world to our products, we do need it. If we are going to market our grain, it is absolutely necessary that we should have our grain under some single control, even if it be under the farmers' control, such as the 100 per cent wheat pool. Either that, or it must be under government control—one or the other. You cannot enter into arrangements to market grain when you have none to market. How can the government go over to England and talk about marketing grain when it has no grain to market? You can no more do that than you can market overalls or lobsters when you haven't got any.

An hon. MEMBER: The government has lots of lobsters.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, and some are boiled and some are raw. There must be a single control, and the best way to bring that about, I suggest, is through a wheat board. Establish a wheat board and give it control, with power to investigate conditions and make arrangements for disposing of our wheat. Give it power to enter into quota arrangements, for a premium, if necessary.

I wish to refer to the proposal that I made in the house the other night with regard to fixing a price of wheat for home consumption, and to answer a few objections to that proposal. There was an idea that it would be a terrible thing for the consumers in Canada. If you look at the price in Canada to-day, you will see that one cent's worth of wheat goes into a pound loaf of bread, with wheat at 60 cents a bushel. With wheat at $1.50 a bushel, you would be putting only 2 cents' worth more of wheat into a loaf of bread; it would be increasing the price of a loaf of bread to the consumer in Canada by about 2 cents, and that would not mean much to the consumer. What does the report into the alleged combine in the bread-baking industry in Canada say in this connection? It points out that the price of wheat has very little to do with the price of bread. It says, at page 12:

> The difference in flour prices, which are the medium through which the influence of wheat makes itself felt, does not account, then, for the difference in the two levels of bread prices, the one in 1913 and the other in the years 1925-1930. . . . In other words, even if the baker had got his flour for nothing in 1930 he would still have charged 5·1 cents a pound for his bread; in 1913 he would have charged only 2·3 cents.

No, Mr. Speaker, the price of wheat has very little to do with the price of bread. It is the prices of the other ingredients and the costs of distribution that are the big factors in the price of bread. Fixing a price for home consumption would not interfere in any way with the millers. Our millers who are milling for export would still receive their wheat to mill into flour for export at export prices. So if we set a price for home consumption it would not interfere with the millers.

Another objection was this, that if we fix the price for home consumption in Canada, the western farmers would go into the growing of wheat wholesale. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that at 70 cents a bushel it does not pay the farmer to grow wheat; it would pay him only part of his expense, and he would still be losing money. So that if the farmer received a price, say from 70 to 73 cents, which would partly pay his expenses, he would not be induced to go into the raising of wheat on a wholesale basis.

[Mr. Donnelly.]

I want to hurry on because my time has about expired. It is necessary that the spirit of optimism in western Canada be restored. Nothing would do more towards its restoration than to have the price of bread and flour fixed for home consumption. The farmers of western Canada would then feel that the people in the east are behind them, and trying to help them, and the support of this part of the country would help to buoy them up under the present difficult conditions. It would not mean very much to eastern Canada, but would do much towards the restoration of the spirit of optimism among the western farmers. I say the government could not consider anything better than to take some action of that kind. I repeat my suggestion that the government appoint a wheat board, and I ask them to investigate the proposal of fixing the price of wheat for home consumption in order that the wheat growers of western Canada may receive the benefit.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish first to take this opportunity of thanking hon. gentlemen opposite—perhaps they did not intend it any too kindly—for the great pains they have taken to bring before this house and before the people and the press the fact that I am inexperienced. They have said that I am "green." That is true. There is not in this house a member greener in politics than I am—and God grant that I may remain so. They have also referred to my limitations in various respects, agricultural and otherwise; in this also they are correct. In confirmation of their statements, I wish to say that on those points we agree in every particular. May I add that up to last June I had never attempted a political speech. Nothing was further from my mind than politics. I had attended only one political meeting since the war until my own convention was held. But there was a growing feeling among the farmers in my part of the country that they should be represented by a person who had been a farmer but had not been tied down to any political party, whether Liberal, Conservative or Progressive. I regretted very much that the lot fell to me to represent them, for I felt that there were many farmers who were very much better qualified than I was to assume this great responsibility.

But they felt that I had one qualification that was necessary for the accomplishment of the task which they imposed upon me—I was a university graduate, little realizing, although I made it as clear to them as I could, that mathematics did not, any more than farming, give a person ability to speak. Therefore with this clear understanding and agreement that I have no political experience, I ask the indulgence of the house to-night. It is difficult enough to speak, it is still more difficult to think and translate one's thinking into parliamentary language.

I realize that my time is limited, very limited, to speak on a subject so comprehensive and important, and yet I feel that decent people throughout the Dominion,—and thank God the majority of the people of Canada are decent—would think that I was very remiss in my duty to-night if I let this opportunity pass to answer in as emphatic a manner as with my limited capacity I am capable of, the many cowardly attacks that have been made, more especially the most cowardly of all this afternoon. From the beginning of this session until now I think the attack this afternoon has been the most cowardly of all.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Hon. gentlemen on the other side at the very outset pointed to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) as "the autocrat", "the great I am." Do they think they can fool intelligent people that way? Nothing could be clearer than the facts as they stand revealed. The right hon. Prime Minister has been returned election after election by the freest thinking people in the Dominion—the people of the cow town, city of Calgary, where they are accustomed to think straight, to talk straight, and, in days gone by to shoot straight. Do my friends opposite think that a city of free thinking people would idolize an autocrat? Does the right hon. the Prime Minister's return election after election show he has lost the common touch, that his heart does not vibrate in unison with the common people, that his mind does not think along the lines of the free-thinking men of the west? There are no politics in Calgary.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There are a few transient Liberals who still vote Liberal, as also do a few civil servants, especially those who to get an appointment vote that way. At least it is very peculiar that there was only a very short interval between the time some of them took out their naturalization papers and the time they got their appointments, although they had lived here years before, and practically the only real qualification that seemed to be necessary for their appointment was that they were bosom friends of some of the chief Liberal organizers in the city. I say there are no politics in Calgary.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There are a few transient Liberals, I repeat, a few civil servants; but the others are not Conservative; they do not vote Conservative, they vote for Bennett. There is another city in the west, that dearly beloved city of Prince Albert. It is a city peculiarly situated and it has had a unique history. It is situated between the old settled district and the new or pioneering district. There is nowhere in Canada where the pioneering spirit has been kept so much alive as in the city of Prince Albert. What that pioneering spirit means only you who have lived in the west know. That spirit is this, that even though your house be a shack, or your barn merely a small place to shelter your cattle and your horses, it is a religion of the pioneers of the west that they will never turn anyone from their doors, whether black or white. Is it any wonder then when there appeared in Prince Albert a political outcast from eastern Canada, that nothing could be more natural than for those people to take him in? But let him beware. There is a difference between a night's lodging and thrusting yourself upon a hospitable and generous people as a permanent boarder. At the first election they accepted him out of generosity. But how was their hospitality responded to? At the meeting during the past election that was supposed to be a public meeting all the available policemen were on hand to keep order! That was the Liberal answer to the hospitality of the people of Prince Albert. But the city of Prince Albert gave its answer as a city on election day. The point I wish to make is this. I hate to say things that seem to hurt, but it has been so incessantly repeated in this house that the right hon. Prime Minister is an autocrat that I think it is only fair I should give the facts as the people of Canada see them. On the one hand we have the so-called "autocrat", who has been returned election after election with increasing majorities; on the other hand we have the right hon. gentleman whose heart bleeds for the common people, who weeps with them in their sufferings, and whose sympathies are with them always. Yet he moves from one part of Canada to the other to get a seat.

It has been said that there is no man in Canada big enough to formulate a policy in agriculture. No one realizes that better than I do. After I received my portfolio my first utterance was that no one realized better than I did my many limitations, and that I should seek every occasion for consultation with experts. I have been ready to receive constructive suggestions from persons in any walk of life. I have asked hon. members to give me any constructive ideas that would be of benefit to the agriculture of Canada. I did not want people to think that in some subtle way I was trying to steal their ideas. Therefore I made it clear that I would take every opportunity to give credit where credit was due. As long as the idea was such as if put into practice would redound to the advantage of agriculture in Canada, I was willing to give credit to the originator. That was the only reward I wished. I told you I had no political experience. It may be of interest to some hon. gentlemen to know that I did not even run my election as a Conservative, but as an independent Conservative. I made the statement at the convention that I wished to be free to vote as I saw fit in the interests of the farmers of Canada. I made that pledge on the 6th day of June and it was on that pledge that I took this trust from them. And I will keep that trust. I speak to-night, then, only as a farmer and in the simple language of the farm.

No one was more surprised than I was when the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) called me to ask me to take the portfolio of agriculture. I made it clear to him that I had no political experience and that I felt that was absolutely essential to make a success of such a gigantic undertaking. His answer was characteristic. He said, "I called you not to be a minister of politics but Minister of Agriculture." His attitude has been the same from that day to this, and I have no hesitation in saying that there was never a minister of agriculture in Canada who enjoyed in fuller measure the wholehearted support of the Prime Minister, his chieftain, and that of his colleagues than I have done. If there is any falling-down in the Department of Agriculture the responsibility is mine and mine alone.

And now for a few minutes with reference to agriculture, because I realize my time is brief. It was emphasized the other day—I do not know why special attention should have been called to the fact, but I am glad it was,—that I had resided only three years on a farm. It was said, with reference to certain gentlemen here, that all they knew about farming was looking through the fence on to the farm. I couple that statement with a suggestion which the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell), the former Minister of Agriculture, made—the only supposed constructive suggestion, I believe, which has come from the hon. gentleman since the house has been in session. It was this. He advised me in connection with cut worms to send people to a certain district to get caterpillars or larvae and to incubate those caterpillars to see whether the eggs laid by moths were fertile. I shall never forget the picture I saw opposite as I sat beside the Prime Minister. When the former Minister of Agriculture made that statement there was a nod of approval and of confidence on the part of the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), who was looking in my direction, as much as to say, "You see what twenty-two years' experience as Minister of Agriculture can do." Other farmers from the west on the other side also nodded their approval. That is what practice does. Well, certainly even the chief entomologist of our department will acknowledge that there is no man in his department with such deep, intensive scientific knowledge or insight as to be able to tell by incubating caterpillars whether the eggs laid by moths are fertile or not.

Maybe I have resided only three years on a farm, maybe there are other gentlemen on this side who know nothing about farming beyond what they have seen by looking through the fence. But could they know less by standing outside and looking through the fence, than if they were as completely asleep as old King Tut himself, to whom the hon. gentleman referred?

I must be fair. I said hon. gentleman opposite. I did not have time to watch the faces of all as closely as I might have done. But I did observe this. The thoughtful member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) showed by his smile that he appreciated the humour of the situation. The member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), with his Scotch humour, also smiled and looked around to see whether some of the hon. members on the other side did not, with him, relish the humour that was taken so seriously. And the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) almost bubbled over before the statement was well out of the mouth of the former Minister of Agriculture. But enough of that. No one, Mr. Speaker, is freer to admit his limitations than I am. I have missed no opportunity of asking for advice, and here let me say that some of the best advice I have received towards the formation of agricultural policy has come from hon. gentlemen opposite in the far corner of the chamber.

And now for agriculture. I hesitated as to what plan I should take to-night, whether to outline policies or to start at the beginning and follow them in chronological order as problems came before us. I have decided upon the latter. One of the first propositions I ran into was a method of obtaining a market for cattle that were in Canada, seeing that it was impossible for us to get a market in the United States by reason of the high tariff wall there. I made inquiries, even before the by-election, as to what ships were available and what boats might be fitted out. And here is the situation as I found it. Although I have referred to this on many occasions, I attach no blame to anyone. But the first obstacle came in the answer of the steamship companies, that on a previous occasion a former minister of the crown had advised them to fit their boats to carry cattle, promising so many head for so many shipments. The steamship companies went to the expense of fitting their boats, and the promise was not carried out. I do not blame anyone for not doing things that were impossible, but I do think that if some precaution had been observed, and this promise had not been given, it would be much easier now to persuade the steamship companies to carry out the refitting of their boats in order to transport Canadian cattle. However, realizing the situation, I immediately got in touch with professional experts—I do not mean so-called educated professional experts, but men who knew their business. I got in touch with five or six of the leading ranchers of the west; because I considered that the men with whom I could best discuss the cattle situation were men engaged in the cattle business. I wired them to meet me in Regina, and we consulted as to the best course to take. We decided to make two trial shipments, in which would be included cattle of different types. I got one of the best cattle men in the west to go along with the shipment so as to be able to put these cattle before the old country market in the most convincing way. In this shipment were groups of different types, and the man selected to put the cattle on the English market was Mr. Shea Gilchrist. He made the necessary arrangements and did everything within his power to create interest in the old land in this and any other shipments that might be made. I saw the cattle before they left Montreal, and I felt that the best advertisement which we could have in the old country for Canadian cattle was this representative shipment. I thought that we could have no better advertisement than to make sure that some of the most suitable cattle would go into the hands of feeders. To encourage this, and to make certain that these cattle would not be slaughtered, it was agreed that we should subsidize them to pay freight up to five dollars a head. Although I made that proposal on Saturday—it was not a binding promise but merely a suggestion—the news immediately got to the old country. It appeared in the newspapers there that the Canadian government was subsidizing cattle and I had to withdraw the tentative promise made. However, I asked Mr. Gilchrist to take every precaution to see that this special shipment was not sold but put into the hands of some feeder, especially a leading farmer, in order that English farmers might see in the old country the type of cattle we had. He was very successful. He got them into the hands of one of the most outstanding north of England feeders. He went to see them twice before he left, and he assures me that nothing could be a better advertisement for our western cattle than this shipment. Later shipments went to Glasgow, and we arranged that some of these cattle should also go to feeders. The results were not as encouraging as we might have expected. But I went west in January to make arrangements for a shipment this spring and was surprised to find how pleased the ranchers were with the results of the four shipments we had made. Some of the cattle, the heavier type, brought three dollars a head more than they would have done in the local market, and although some of the lighter cattle were sold for less than they would have brought locally, it was the unanimous opinion of the ranchers there that the price of cattle in the west had been held up from half to three-quarters of a cent per pound. That is not my opinion; it is the opinion of men in the business.

A simple mathematical calculation will show what that half cent a pound with that volume meant to the cattlemen of western Canada. When I made my trip to Calgary in January I was following a policy which I hope always to follow while I continue in the position I now occupy, and that is, that no politics will in any way be allowed to interfere with agriculture. The only man whom I notified when I made my second visit to Calgary was Senator Riley, and I do not think any person can accuse him of being a rabid Conservative. He met me in the hotel and introduced me to the cattlemen. We stayed there and made plans for the handling of cattle this spring, but I do not think that is sufficient; we need plans to extend into the future so that we shall not continue in any haphazard way to formulate plans, only when faced with an emergency. We endeavoured to obtain all the information we could as to cattle on feed in the west, the types of cattle, where they were situated, and so on; and in addition we made arrangements with the transportation systems to give us a 50 per cent freight rate from the ranges to the coarse grain feed lands in northern Saskatchewan. That would save an extra toll—that is the only word I can use, because it seems to me that from the time produce leaves the farm until it gets into the mouths of the consumers it is one toll after another. As practical farmers we endeavoured to find ways of saving a dollar here or a dollar there, whether by freight, commission or otherwise, because it is often those few dollars which mean the difference between profit and loss. We made arrangements not only for the shipment of these cattle to the northern feed lands at 50 per cent of the regular freight rate, but also for reductions in the expense of the farmer going down to hunt those cattle. We arranged that he would be able to obtain accurate information and it is hoped by next fall or possibly late summer that the farmers in the north will be able to obtain cattle according to their requirements at a minimum expense.

In addition to that we felt that many farmers in Saskatchewan had had very little experience in feeding cattle and that it was only fair that this machinery should be put into their hands for immediate use. Simple experiments were carried on with the home-grown feeds. I asked the experimental farm at Rosthern to perform experiments on some eighteen or twenty head of steers and heifers, sired by the one bull so that the strain would be uniform and there would be the least variation possible in the results. I asked them to feed cut sheaves and crushed barley to one group, and cut sheaves and crushed wheat to another group, in both cases with salt and water only. Many people thought that we would not have any success with feed such as that, but realized that many farmers in western Canada have had no experience in feeding and they would want things to be as simple as possible. After allowing for the freight on the cattle and the purchase price, they were sold eighty-four days afterward on a basis which returned $1.19 per bushel for wheat and 83 cents per bushel for barley.

One of the most difficult problems we had to face was the impossibility of shipping these cattle to the United States. Regulations and restrictions had been put on the shipment of cattle by the British government—we knew of this last November but no announcement was made. Announcement was made some two months later that there was an embargo against Canadian cattle. It was announced also that there were 100,000 cattle in western Canada for export, and the result of such an announcement was evident; the people thought that they would be unable to get rid of their cattle; they threw them on the market and the price went down. We were able to counteract this to some extent. It will be of interest to the cattlemen in the house that we have every available foot of space to be secured in British ships this summer to carry our cattle to the old land.

The next problem had to do with butter. It has been said that the raising of the duty on butter encouraged a lot of people to go into the dairy industry with the result that the prices on butter were broken. That is not my interpretation of the cause. I believe that the price of wheat and the price of coarse grain was such as to encourage people to enter this industry; they were ready to go into anything which would make them five or ten cents with which to carry them through the winter. In order to save this industry we put on an eight-cent duty against New Zealand butter. However, the Australian treaty, made by the previous government, was still in force and that permitted a one-cent duty only against Australian butter. We were faced with a flood of Australian butter, and my colleagues and I realized that the only way to meet this emergency was to make a verbal agreement with the Hon. Parker Moloney of Australia to the effect that Australia would not release in Canada any butter under 32 cents per pound except with our consent. This at least helped the dairy industry of this country through the winter months. There was a possibility at one time that the price would be driven down by New Zealand because they were shipping in some butter to sell at less than 32 cents. I immediately got in touch with the commissioner for New Zealand and was able to arrange with him that their butter would not be released at a price less than 32 cents per pound to the detriment of our dairying industry. This state of affairs lasted until some two weeks ago, when the increased production of butter in Canada drove the price still lower. In my opinion, one of the reasons for this drop is the lack of a uniform board of control in Canada to supervise this industry. For the benefit of those who have expressed adverse opinions, I will say that when we came into power Canadian butter was selling at a lower price than that prevailing in the United States, and Australian butter in England, and I believe New Zealand butter as well. Immediately after coming into power we put on a duty of eight cents per pound; from then and for some six or eight months our butter was selling at a higher price than was butter in London and the United States. That continued, as I said before, until some ten days or two weeks ago.

The butter industry is almost to the export level; we expect it to be at that level within a short time. I am told by the dairy commissioner and by produce merchants that our Canadian butter as a whole is not sufficiently uniform as to grade to permit its being labelled and shipped to the old country as Canadian butter. The former Minister of Agriculture, recommended the other day that some of the creameries in Quebec should be merged into larger creameries in an endeavour to develop a more uniform grade of butter. Surely this is not the time to do that. While listening to the hon. gentleman's remarks, I could not help but think that if he had done one-tenth as much during the nine years he was in office as he said he had hoped to do or intended to do if he were returned to office, we would not be having insistent demands from hon. gentlemen on the other side for a statement of agricultural policy.

When this government came into power, realizing the then low price of coarse grains and rough feed, we felt that we would soon be in the export market with our bacon. Upon making investigation, one point was evident to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the house —or at least it was evident to the government,—namely the great scarcity of select bacon, the only type that has any opportunity to compete in the old country with the Danish product. In Saskatchewan alone I found that the number of select bacon hogs was only 5·6 per cent; that is, only 5·6 per cent of the pigs slaughtered in Saskatchewan would have any opportunity to go on the world market. That is the condition in which I found the bacon industry for purposes of export. I knew there had to be an emergency measure, and it was an emergency measure when I tried to work out a way that would make it easier for the farmers to get into the production of a select bacon type of pigs. That is why I formulated the "brood sow" policy that some hon. gentlemen opposite have been making a good deal of fun of. In that way we made it easier for the farmers to get into the production of the select bacon type of pigs. Further, this idea was that litters of the select bacon type of brood sows would be sired by boars of the select bacon type, and the information brought to me is that one could not realize how much effect this would be likely to have on the type of pigs obtained from these litters for breeding purposes.

The next point with which I wish to deal is breeding cattle. I think, as perhaps one of the soundest principles of agriculture, whether in live stock or feeding, we should at all times aim to get into our live stock that type of blood that will make the best use of the feed that we give them, whether dairy cattle or beef cattle. It was for that reason I tried to catch up with the policies that had been neglected so much, by introducing the policy that was scoffed at this afternoon, the policy known as the "bull loaning" policy, by which we hope to help the farmers of Canada, especially at this time by loaning them bulls under supervision. This was only doing fairly and honestly as the people of Canada would really wish, because I believe ninety-nine per cent of our people are really intensely interested in this question of the success of agriculture and desire from the bottom of their hearts that agriculture should prosper.

In connection with statements of hon. gentlemen opposite concerning agriculture, people both on this side and on the other have told me not to take these debates too seriously; that hon. gentlemen on the other side who moved and supported this motion were not so much concerned with policies of agriculture; that it was all a political game. I can scarcely believe that. I have sat here day after day watching the faces of hon. gentlemen opposite, farmers from the west, and I cannot help feeling they are very sincere as regards their interest in helping agriculture. I am willing at this point to put it to hon. members; I will ask the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment if he cannot show to the house that he is interested in agriculture and describe the two brood sow policies of the late government when they went out of office. I realize that he will hesitate to interrupt me in my speech. No doubt the hon. gentleman knows those policies, but if he does not, then I would be left to believe that the suggestion that the talk was political rather than agricultural is true. We have other so-called policies and I realize that each of them is not of very great importance in itself for immediate relief. The hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) said this afternoon that these things were all right in their way, and I appreciate the kindly reference to them. However, I ask, would they not have been much more right if they had been put into force five years ago, so that now we would be in the position in which we should be?

It has been said that this government has done nothing for agriculture. Laughing reference has been made to the speeches that I delivered in Toronto and Montreal in connection with the banks not lending money, and especially to the last part of my speech. I did not make those speeches in western Canada to the farmers. I thought the place to make them, the place where the farmers of western Canada would wish me to make them, would be in Toronto and Montreal, and that is where I made them. At the end of my speech in Montreal I said that if credit were not given to the farmers through the banks, some steps would have to be taken to give them credit. The reference has been made that we have heard no more of that. The truth is that in less than ten days from that time, realizing that credit would not be given, I made arrangements to meet the western ministers of agriculture at Winnipeg just for the purpose of doing what I said would have to be done. I met with them and we discussed the problems of the west, seed grain relief, relief to help the farmers to put in grain, and other relief. These ministers agreed it would be better in the interests of carrying out this plan if our part in the contract were not made public, but I can say this, that never before was there a government which realized more clearly than we did the exigencies of the situation of the western farmer due to circumstances over which he had no control, and our offer was commensurate with our appreciation of the situation. Moreover, when it is known, I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite will blush for having discussed this question in the way they have done, although perhaps this is through no fault of their own as they did not know the offer.

In conclusion, because I see I have only five minutes more, no one in the house realizes better than I do that these policies which I have enunciated, are policies that will not result in benefits until some time in the future. No one realizes better than I do that there is carried by the western farmer a load that requires some form of immediate relief, a load that these policies will not immediately alleviate. But that load of mortgages and debts was not created since last August. That is the load that worries me, when I look forward to the future to see these agricultural communities in the west happy and prosperous again, as I would see them.

There is another handicap for which we take no responsibility. In the early days when western Canada was first settled, people came from many countries, including many from the United States, with whole carloads of equipment and were directed to areas that people knew or should have known did not give those farmers a ghost of a chance of making a living there. Why was that done? They were warned about it. Among many others, that veteran rancher Joe Wylie, from Maple Creek, told them they were breaking up over night a sod that took a thousand years to make. That is one of the loads we are carrying in western Canada to-day.

Another load is that of weeds. In this connection I hesitate to make this statement, but I think when we are discussing in this house things on their merits, we are not supposed to mince words and therefore I shall speak plainly. However, before I discuss weeds, it has been advocated that a pork packing plant be established in the west. Few hon. members in the house or in the Dominion have given more thought to that question than I have since last October. I have been in consultation with people who, I thought, might operate it. I have done something to bring representatives of wholesale cooperative houses from the old country to look into the proposition, because I felt nothing like that could be a success unless we had some one here from the old land who knew the taste of the English people in regard to bacon, to manage the plant, etc. We could use their sales machinery. I believed that in this way thousands of dollars would be saved. I have made a study of private plants, of public plants; the whole thing has been gone into very thoroughly. I doubt whether the quantity of bacon this year will be anything like what people some time ago expected it would be, but if hon. gentlemen opposite were anxious for a packing plant, they had plenty of opportunity to build one. Take the Moose Jaw registered seed grain plant at Moose Jaw. There was enough money spent on that to build four seed cleaning plants and then have enough left over to build a packing plant. According to the speech delivered by the provincial treasurer in Saskatchewan the other day, the co-operative creameries that were built there lost the province one million dollars. That was enough to build at least four packing plants in Saskatchewan. If the estimate for the railway hotel in Saskatoon had been cut in two, enough would have been saved to build a packing plant in every province in the Dominion.

One word more and I shall have finished. I think the biggest load that agriculture in Canada, especially in Saskatchewan has to carry, is known to the majority of farmers in this Dominion. When the former Minister of Agriculture was made Minister of Agriculture in the government of Saskatchewan in 1905, he had before him a clean, fertile, virgin field in that province, and he had coming into that field people who took second place to none. And what has been the result? It is an old saying that there is a record written that he who runs may read; but written along trails leading out of Regina there is a record which those who drive in automobiles travelling sixty miles an hour can read, a record written during the term of office of the former Minister of Agriculture in sow thistle, stinkweed and other weeds of various kinds.

But that is not all. He left the provincial field in 1918 and came into federal politics as Minister of Agriculture in 1921. His work was not yet completed. There was a patch in Saskatchewan that was still not weedy enough, that fertile valley which takes second place to none, that valley which is in the constituency I have the great honour to represent, the Carrot river valley in northern Saskatchewan. It was comparatively clear and clean of weeds of any kind. What happened? The former Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart)—I take it that he acted in conjunction with the former Minister of Agriculture—decided that there was a great slough there which should be drained, and they drained it at a cost in the neighbourhood of $186,000—which would have helped considerably in building a packing plant.

An hon. MEMBER: It was the Tories who did that.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It was in 1921-1922. The result of it all was this, that some three or four years ago, after they had had people out there making experiments to find out the best thing to grow on that drained land, they rented it out to people who did not utilize the knowledge of the experts, and the result is that to-day we find just across the fence five hundred acres of sow thistle polluting all that fertile valley. The hon. member said the other day that if I had been in Saskatoon when the United Farmers met there, my life would not have been safe. The hon. gentleman's life would not be very safe towards August and September in our part of the country, when I myself for one—and other farmers—have had to hire four men for about two weeks to pick out the sow thistle that came from that area.

In conclusion, may I say that there it stands and will stand as a menace to the north, to spread sow thistle and noxious weeds of various kinds. It stands as a memorial to the lack of agricultural intelligence of two former ministers of the crown. It stands as a record indisputable and undeniable because written by their own hands.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): I am reminded to-night, Mr. Speaker, of a great occasion in the city of Regina on the 30th of December last. I think that the impression that was left by the hon. leader of the government (Mr. Bennett) on his audience on the 30th of December last was the impression left in the minds of hon. members to-night after listening to the wails of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). The Minister of Agriculture has stated that he was no politician. After listening to his speech I want to pay him this compliment, that he is a much better politician than a minister of agriculture. It took him fifteen minutes to tell the house that he was neither a great politician nor an agriculturist, and that fifteen minutes was wasted because he amply demonstrated beyond a doubt that he had no knowledge of either politics or agriculture. If I were to ask the people of Canada, what is the most outstanding question before the agricultural people of this country to-day, with one voice they would answer: Markets for wheat. Yet the Minister of Agriculture never mentioned that subject. Perhaps his forty minutes was not long enough, but he took seven minutes to deal with matters that were of absolutely no consequence to this country. He tried to castigate a man whose shoes, I say quite frankly, he is not fit to buckle.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. VALLANCE: We gave the Minister of Agriculture every possible opportunity to speak, and I crave similar indulgence from hon. gentlemen opposite. In the parliamentary library the Minister of Agriculture will find a book entitled Deep Furrows, written by Hopkins Moorhouse. I commend it to the minister. Does he say that he has it? I hope that he has read it. In that book he will find it stated irrefutably that no man in the last forty years has made a greater contribution to western agriculture than the Hon. W. R. Motherwell.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. VALLANCE: I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will note these interruptions and allow me time for them. I am trying to show the Minister of Agriculture some of the things that he should have said. This book that I have mentioned shows the Hon. Mr. Motherwell, not only as a great agriculturist, but as one of the first who made any effort to organize western agriculturists.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. VALLANCE: Oh, oh, yes. He was the father of the old Grain Growers' Association, from which organization sprang every cooperative body that has been developed in western Canada—cooperative creameries, cooperative elevators, even the wheat pool. All these cooperative organizations were possible only because of those first steps in organization that were taken by the Hon. Mr. Motherwell, and it ill becomes the Minister of Agriculture even to attempt to say what he has said to-night of the former Minister of Agriculture. He demonstrated a lack of knowledge in that respect equal only to his lack of knowledge of agriculture generally and even of politics.

I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, after listening to the debates in this house, and after reading the trade returns, that one of Canada's greatest assets is her wheat crop, and one of her greatest problems the finding of a market for our wheat. I should like to quote a few paragraphs from the speech of the Prime Minister, speaking in reply to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown). He said:

> In order that there may be ample opportunity for attack, I think it is desirable that the government should make a statement at once. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) has moved an amendment. That amendment deals with everything with which agriculture has to do, from grain to chickens, and with every phase of these agricultural products from growth to consumption.

He goes on to state that it was about time he made a statement, and there we were absolutely in agreement with him. What was the statement he made? The Minister of Agriculture says that if we knew just what the government had done for agriculture we would blush.

An hon. MEMBER: Blush?

Mr. VALLANCE: Yes, blush, after the attacks we had made upon them. Ever since the house opened, we have been trying to get a statement of agricultural policy from this government. I have before me a long list of requests from about 30,000 farmers of Saskatchewan presented to the Prime Minister when he was in the west. Not one iota of consideration has been given to any of the requests made by those farmers. The Minister of Agriculture says that we would blush if we were told what the government has done. I make the statement that if the Minister of Agriculture or the government had come forward openly and told the people of Canada what they were doing or attempting to do there would have been no need of all the speeches made on this amendment. What is the position in which we find ourselves?

Quoting from the remarks of the Prime Minister as contained at page 1076 of Hansard I find the following:

> I am not going to deal further with agriculture, but one thing more I desire to say. In Woodstock, New Brunswick, I said: "The collective weight of the resources of this country would be put behind agriculture." I ask hon. members to name any government which has saved a situation by deliberate effort as this one has in view of the condition of the wheat market. What would the price of wheat have been in this country had it not been for the action of the government?

I have tried to indicate—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely impossible for any hon. member to hear. When a debate is in progress hon. members ought to have the opportunity of hearing it. For the last five minutes it has been impossible at this end of the chamber to hear anything. I would ask either that steps be taken to ensure the observance of decorum in the house so that hon. members may be able to hear, or that the debate be adjourned until such time as we may have order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I sympathize with the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), but so far as I can observe, decorum is being observed in the chamber.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think I have the right to suggest that such steps be taken as will make it possible for hon. members in this chamber to hear. The other day it was stated that we had certain obligations to fulfil. On the other hand we have certain rights, and among them is that we be able to hear what is going on in the chamber.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is true that the acoustic properties of the chamber are not all that might be desired.

Mr. VALLANCE: I was just commencing to read from the remarks of the Prime Minister following those of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown). The remarks of the Prime Minister continue as follows:

> Mr. Bennett: I tried to indicate the other day that I think it is very much better that these things should speak for themselves. We put the collective credit of this country behind the wheat market.
> Mr. Vallance: It was security only to the banks which you gave, not to the wheat pool at all, or to the farmer. The help was given to the banks.

An hon. Member: It was the banks you saved.

Mr. Bennett: I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the Canadian people, to judge whether anything could better illustrate the line of thought indulged in by some hon. members than the two observations to which we have just listened.

One of those remarks was made by me and another by an hon. member whose name does not appear in Hansard. Then the Prime Minister continues:

Mr. Bennett: Could anything be better calculated to bring—shall I say?—despair on the part of those farmers who are struggling with adversity than this counsel of desperation to which we have been listening?

The Prime Minister used the words "struggling with adversity". Hon. members heard what the Minister of Agriculture said to-night.

The banks have money belonging to their depositors, and they owe it to them. The banks have no right to lend that money upon security which will hazard the deposit. The banks have lent the money to the farmers, to the pool —which was a voluntary organization created by the farmers themselves and not by the country. The banks were called upon to do one of two things; support that market by continuing to advance money; or stop doing so and let wheat drop 40 cents.

Then a question is asked by the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young):

Would wheat have dropped 40 cents if you had not taken the action you did?

The reply of the Prime Minister is as follows:

I cannot say. I can only say that that is the judgment of those well able to express an opinion on the subject.

Mr. Young: That is 40 cents more than it actually did drop.

The Prime Minister was trying to convey the idea that through the assistance extended by this government to the wheat pool in the marketing of the crop the government had saved the price of wheat from dropping as low as 40 cents. I would ask the Prime Minister if the action taken by the government to prevent the price of wheat from dropping, also prevented a similar drop in the Argentine, Russia, the United States and Australia? I ask that question because at no time was the wheat of those countries any lower in price than that of Canada. It would appear that by his action he saved not only the Canadian market but the entire wheat market of the world. If we are to accept his statement we must come to that conclusion.

Now that the Prime Minister has stated his action in connection with the control of wheat prices I am going to ask him and the Minister of Agriculture to use every effort possible to give to the western wheat growers 100 per cent control of their wheat. If the Prime Minister argues that by advancing or guaranteeing moneys to the banks he controlled the price of wheat I am now asking him to consider in a similar way the present demands of the western farmer. In the province of Saskatchewan we were attempting to have 100 per cent control by legislation. I noticed the other day in the press an article stating that in the courts our action had been declared ultra vires. I do not know what the next step will be; I do not know whether there will be an appeal to this government for an enactment which will enable them to have such legislation, or whether they will ask this government once more to create the old wheat board. After listening to and reading the statements of the Prime Minister I cannot see for the life of me why or how the government can refuse to take such action.

At one time we in western Canada had a cooperative organization known as the pool. I was rather grieved this afternoon to read the following from the Globe of May 7:

The pool permits members to suspend contracts and use open markets.

What does that mean? It means that we are back to where we were five or six years ago. Only one thing can save us, and this government and this parliament have the power to put it through. I plead with them to take that action. I go further and say that this government is partly responsible for the defeat of the pool, and I shall proceed to prove it. Because of the position the pool got into and because of the assistance which was tendered by the banks the pool was being dictated to as to its policy by some powers other than those who were the contract signers. When the Prime Minister went to the Imperial conference he took with him some chief advisers. Who were they? He took two professors of economics, one from the university of Saskatchewan, Doctor Swanson, and Doctor MacGibbon, who is a professor of economics and also fills one of the chairs of the Board of Grain Commissioners. He took John I. McFarland. Then there was Mr. Gage, who is now deceased, and Alex. McPhail, who was president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool. As I said, we found that we owed the banks. Probably it was our fault because we believed that in the interests of the producer we should deviate from the old organized grain trade method of marketing whereby for every purchase made to-day they hedged to-morrow to secure the bank for the money advanced on the purchases made to-day. We cooperatives believing that that was not in the interests of the producer, decided that we were not going to sell futures wheat, hedge our wheat, and that we would give the banks security of 15 cents a bushel. When that margin almost disappeared the government did step in. It looks rather peculiar to me that not long after the Prime Minister and his associates had gone to the Imperial conference, I think about two weeks, we find Mr. McFarland returning to Canada, and shortly afterwards he becomes manager of the central selling agency of the Canadian pools. He took that position on two conditions; first, that he was to receive no salary—being a Scotchman, I suppose he did not want any money; second, that he be given an absolutely free hand regarding the sales policy of the pools. It was quite evident to us who had taken an active part in building up the organization that this was the first body blow to the pools. I would not have been so suspicious had it not happened that the day after the announcement was made that Mr. McFarland had accepted the managership of the selling agency, my genial friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) came out with the statement that he was pleased to see that the pools of their own free will had decided to give Mr. McFarland a free hand. I question the so-called "free will" because I know the pools. The first thing Mr. McFarland did was to close the overseas agency. What was the result? Let me read a despatch from France, the country that the Prime Minister has been telling us is going to buy large quantities of our wheat. This despatch is dated Paris, March 18, and is written by William H. Ingram, correspondent of the Times-Journal:

> Since the Canadian wheat pool closed its offices in Paris, Canadian wheat is sold only through the grain trade. Millers know perfectly well that the traders are not doing business without a profit. They also know that in many cases the wheat which is offered to them has passed through middlemen who have increased the price a few cents, and this does not tend to please the buyer any more than it has added to the profit of the Canadian farmer.
> The French people find it difficult to understand why the Paris office of the Canadian pool has been closed when millers willing to buy Canadian wheat without middlemen were buying it under conditions which suited them. Prices were the same for every kind of buyer --miller, merchant or broker. It was good business without a preferential tariff, buyers knowing that the prices were those quoted daily by Winnipeg.
> During the seven years in which the Paris office functioned, there was not a single complaint against quality. Every miller ordering wheat from it was absolutely sure that he received the quality ordered. This was due to the fact that a bill of lading and a dominion certificate were issued with every order from the smallest to the largest. And this was an encouragement to the buyer.
>
> Under existing conditions it may happen that only one bill of lading and one dominion certificate may be issued for, say, 1,000 tons which will be divided into ten lots of 100 tons each, but for which each miller will be unable to get the dominion certificate as proof that it is Canadian wheat which he is receiving. Any omission of that dominion certificate may result in the millers not getting Canadian wheat at all. And that is quite likely what is going to happen.
> If information is correct, the same applied to Portugal and Spain.
>
> Portugal has authorized recently the importation of foreign wheat for its own consumption. Representatives from the Soviet, the Danubian countries and the Argentine have been on the spot to bid closely for the quantity allowed. This has resulted in an order for 45,000 tons being given to the Argentine. If Canada had had her representatives there at the time, the chances are that she would have obtained the order or at least a part of it.
> As to Italy, it is known that through reciprocal arrangement she is buying this year Soviet wheat in exchange for manufactured goods. It is unfortunate that Canada is losing by this arrangement one of her most important European customers. But as Soviet delivery is far from being satisfactory, it is expected that she may resume her former business relations with the dominion.

In the face of this, and the position that the cooperative organizations find themselves in to-day, and the statement of the Prime Minister the other day when he took credit that because of the fact he had guaranteed the banks against certain losses he was able to stabilize the price of wheat, I demand for the farmers of western Canada that he immediately, by enabling legislation, make it possible to put over 100 per cent control as the farmers first sought, or establish the old Canada wheat board. I think the Minister of Agriculture will agree that that at least is a constructive suggestion to the government. I was rather disappointed that he did not say something about it.

I notice that the Minister of Agriculture referred also to a speech that he himself made in Toronto. The Prime Minister said in this house on April 28th:

> Who is it that says the farmers are unfit for credit and that the country is bankrupt and insolvent? Day after day and week after week hon. gentlemen opposite—

Meaning us.

> —have been saying it; they complain that the farmers cannot get credit.

Now let me quote something that was said, not by any member of the opposition but by the Minister of Agriculture himself. This was long before the session opened; this was on February 4 at Toronto, and I think the hon. minister must bear some of the responsibility of bringing to the attention of the country the fact that the farmers of the west to-day cannot get credit. If the Prime Minister was right in saying that those conditions did not exist, surely his Minister of Agriculture would not have said what I now present to the house. Let me read this Canadian Press despatch:

"Persons with glib tongues, with hopes of personal publicity," have been responsible for agitation among western farmers, Hon. Robert Weir, Canadian Minister of Agriculture, told a gathering of Canadian agriculturists at a Canadian National exhibition annual dinner to live stock breeders.

These persons, the minister said, had gone around to the farmers exhorting them to prevail upon the government to have wheat "pegged" at $1 a bushel, demand new freight rates and eliminate mortgage interests. Mr. Weir made it clear he in no way referred to the United Farmers.

I think if the Minister of Agriculture had gone to the trouble to read the memorandum that the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, presented to the Prime Minister on December 30 last, he would not have had occasion to say that he was not referring to the United Farmers, because everything that was asked for by the "agitators", as he called them, was embodied in that memorandum. He continues:

In spite of this agitation, he declared he found at a recent meeting of his own constituency no trace of dissatisfaction and no complaints. He had warned them they might have to accept extremely low prices for their products, and still there had been no complaints, he said.

Now, this was the point:

Conditions, he admitted, were severe in some cases, particularly concerning credit. It was credit the farmer needed and he was unable to get it. While not criticizing the banks, Mr. Weir said he was unable to understand why these institutions refused to allow money to these people. He would not advocate the loan of money to people without justifiable security, but people who had ample assets in their farms and properties were not able to secure relief in this form and they needed money to carry on.

The Prime Minister conveyed the impression to the house and to the country that the whole controversy regarding the economic position of the western farmer was started by the opposition at the opening of the session. I have just read a Canadian press despatch of a statement made by the Minister of Agriculture on February 4. Probably had he not made that statement many of us would not have really realized just how bad a condition the western farmer was in; but when even the Minister of Agriculture—who was back here in Ottawa, not living through the conditions that we in the west were familiar with every day—had noticed those conditions, surely the Prime Minister will not condemn us for having brought them to the attention of the country and to his attention. We are still looking for relief. It will be remembered how the Prime Minister when out in the west during the elections, used to say to the farmers:

Listen, you agriculturists from the west and all the other parts of Canada, you have been taught to mock at tariffs and applaud free trade. Tell me, when did free trade fight for you? Tell me, when did free trade fight for you? You say tariffs are only for the manufacturers. I will make them fight for you as well. I will use them to blast a way into the markets that have been closed to you.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, I ask this house, has he demonstrated to the smallest extent that he has obtained for the farmer any greater market than he had before? The one thing the farmer needs above all others is a market; and as was pointed out this afternoon by the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly), the action of this government has made it more difficult to obtain that market. In making it more difficult for goods to come into Canada, the Prime Minister has made it that much more difficult for the agriculturist of Canada to sell his surplus produce; because, whether hon. gentlemen opposite believe it or not, we must take payment for our exports by imports. That is the only thing we can do, and every time you restrict the possibility of our shipping out one bushel of wheat by raising the tariff on any commodity which we import, you make it all the more difficult for the farmer of the west to operate. I think the Minister of Agriculture will admit this as a westerner. He will admit it as a westerner and not as a politician or as Minister of Agriculture. As a plain farmer he will agree that that statement is absolutely true.

Mr. MANION: May I ask a question?

Mr. VALLANCE: I will allow the hon. member to ask a question.

Mr. MANION: I thank my hon. friend. I ask this as a fair question. How is it that, in spite of the statement which the hon. member makes, the exports of wheat during the last eight months have been from sixty to seventy million bushels more than they were in the corresponding eight months of the previous year?

Mr. VALLANCE: I will tell my hon. friend the reason. The farmer is selling it; or rather, as the hon. member for Willow Bunch pointed out, he is not selling it but giving it away. After twenty-five years of farming in the west and marketing many thousands of bushels of wheat; after harvesting last year one of the best crops ever grown in that section of western Canada, the section in which I live; after seeing oats last year running as high as 80, 90 and 100 bushels to the acre, and wheat going from 20 to 45 bushels per acre, and finding the farmers insolvent to-day—after all this experience, I would not dare to tell you, Mr. Speaker, of some of the conditions that prevail among large farmers. And the larger the farmer the harder he was hit. With this statement, again, I think the Minister of Agriculture will agree; because you cannot produce wheat any more economically—perhaps slightly more—by increased production than if you produced only a 20 bushel crop. I say this for the reason that your initial cost is the same—your seed and cultivation, and your operations right up to the moment you start harvesting the crop, although from that point on you decrease your cost because of volume. But so long as you cannot get cost of production, I care not whether it be a cent or ten cents below cost, the more you produce the more you lose. That is the position of the western farmer to-day.

I would urge most seriously upon the government the absolute necessity of taking some definite action. This is not a time for palaver. As I listened to the Minister of Agriculture—I hate to refer to this again but I must—I really did expect that he would deal with these most urgent problems, the most important of which is finding a profitable market for Canadian wheat. The Prime Minister stated that he had, by his efforts, saved wheat from going to 40 cents, and if he is able to save it from going to 40 cents, then I should think that a man of his calibre ought to be able to raise it another 20 cents, even if he has to resort to pegging, as suggested by the organized farmers themselves.

I do not wish to cover old territory, Mr. Speaker. I could point out, as others have done, that we have pegged the price of everything else. But I would repeat that every time you raise the duty on any article coming into Canada you make it so much more difficult for the farmer to find a place for his wheat in the world's market. I do not believe the tariff is sound economically, and the greatest economists to-day are telling us that our most difficult problem lies in the high tariff walls that are dividing the people of the earth. If, therefore, we could remove those walls and have a free exchange of commodities as between country and country, I am sure that the problems with which we are faced at the present time would be largely solved.

It is all very well for the Minister of Agriculture to institute bull, sow and other policies. But they are as old as the hills. The best live stock ever raised on God's earth never resulted from such policies as the minister is advocating. I know, Mr. Speaker, coming from the country across the sea in which I was born, that Canada is not adapted in some sections to some of the enterprises which the minister would force upon the country. Look at the country in which I was brought up, Scotland: they have never had any bull and sow policies or anything of that kind. The country is naturally adapted to the production of live stock. And as the hon. member for Willow Bunch pointed out this afternoon, it is ridiculous to expect the farmers of the west to go into mixed farming. The farmer of western Canada does not wish to go further into debt; what he wants is an opportunity to get out of his present financial difficulties. This five million dollars is just so much piffle; I would not even consider it.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. VALLANCE: I see the hon. member for Saskatoon laughing. I listened with others the other night to what he said, and I read his remarks, and I can assure him that when the people have an opportunity to register their views regarding the actions of this government in this matter they will do so in no uncertain manner.

I would impress upon the Minister of Agriculture that the supreme problem facing agriculture to-day is the finding of a market for our wheat. The hon. gentleman admits, Mr. Speaker, that his is the voice that speaks for agriculture within the cabinet councils of the nation, and there is therefore a great responsibility upon him. And I believe he feels that responsibility. All you need to do is merely to look at the hon. gentleman and you will realize that he is conscious of his responsibility in this matter, and I hope that he is man enough, big enough to rise to the occasion against all the plutocrats sitting around him in the cabinet and stand up for the rights of the farmers of Canada.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): I know the house is just about ready for the question, but seeing that it is the will of parliament that hon. members should vote upon every issue, I do not propose to vote until I have published my reasons for doing so.

I am sorry I cannot enter into the debate with that warmth which was characteristic of the speech made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), or with the heat which evidently was engendered thereby in the breast of the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Vallance). I do not see much difference between the debate which is now going on and the one at the conclusion of which we voted a short time ago. Nor do I see much difference between this debate and many others which it has been my pleasure to follow in this House of Commons.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the use of talking then?

Mr. IRVINE: I will tell the hon. gentleman in a few moments what the use of talking is, because I am not going to talk for the sake of a party or in any hope that some day this little group will be on the right of Mr. Speaker. I am going to speak on the issue as I see it, without any frills on either side of it.

Before addressing myself specifically to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), I wish to make a reference to the speech of the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh). This afternoon the hon. gentleman went a long piece out of his way to make an attack on me because of a speech I made in this house some time ago. He did not attack the speech itself but merely an aside in that speech, which made a reference to secession talk in the west. As some other hon. members have done, he attributed to me the blame for, or the honour, as the case may be, of first introducing that question in the House of Commons this session. I just wish to call the attention of the house and of the Ottawa Journal to the fact that I was not the first to mention that question in the house; the first one to mention it in the house was the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull). He quoted the ex-premier of Saskatchewan in his reference to the matter. The next hon. member to mention it was the member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance), who even went so far as to hold aloft that famous "Charter of Liberty" drawn up in the province of Saskatchewan. The next hon. member to refer to the matter was the deputy speaker of the house (Mr. LaVergne). These hon. gentlemen scoffed at the idea but in my reference to it I said only that I thought perhaps the hon. gentlemen did not understand as well as they might the conditions prevailing in the west and that there might be more in the secession talk than was imagined. That remark acted as a match to the powder barrel of the Ottawa Journal and hurt the feelings of my hon. friend to my right who made a reference to it this afternoon. I trust that this will be sufficient to prove to my hon. friend that I was not the first to mention the matter in this house.

I shall now address myself to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown). In doing so I would say in all kindness that the Liberal party is always great in opposition but I am afraid that if they are not careful they will prove themselves to be so great that the country will want to keep them always in that position. The hon. member for Lisgar is one of the most respected members in this house. He is possessed of a matured and balanced judgment, is well informed on all matters pertaining to agriculture and has advanced in this chamber on many occasions very interesting views on agricultural economics. I listened to his speech on his amendment, I have since read it very carefully and I must confess that I agree with a great deal of what he said. I do not think he overstated the case in referring to the conditions prevailing in the west and I stand with him in his earnestness and sincerity to endeavour to find some means of alleviation and in looking forward to some policy to safeguard a return of normal conditions. Nevertheless, when I come to examine his amendment I do not feel so much in keeping with his thoughts. I intend to oppose that amendment, and will give my reasons for so doing.

The amendment does not make a definite, constructive proposal. It was moved as a protest against the speech of the Prime Minister. What I am about to say may not be popular in the west, or in my own riding, because of the fact that the Prime Minister's speech referred to did meet with some resentment. I agree with my hon. friend that that speech will be regarded by the western farmer as indicative of a lack of sympathy, but I believe that when the western farmer understands the relief actually given by this government he will then realize that when the Prime Minister made that speech he knew that conditions in the west were bad indeed.

The suggestion as to markets made in the last paragraph of the amendment is too vague and nebulous to warrant one's voting nonconfidence in a government which has not been in office one year, furthermore, the amendment is unfair to the Minister of Agriculture who has just taken over the responsibilities of office.

The amendment regrets that the administration has failed to implement its promises with respect to agriculture and that it has not announced any policy. I thought that the last election was singularly empty of promises so far as agriculture was concerned. That was one of the objections we had in my riding to the Conservative party; that it made no promises to agriculture but had made a great many to the other classes. It may be that in the province from which my hon. friend come such promises were made, but so far as the keeping of promises is concerned, we feel that we can deal with the government on that score at the proper time. I do not think it is fair inside of one year to expect the government to have made a very definite impression upon the economic conditions prevailing in Canada.

Speaking of agriculture specifically, I think the hon. Minister of Agriculture put his finger on the point when he referred to the fact that the conditions from which agriculture is suffering were not developed during the last nine months but had been developing during the last nine years. I do not blame the previous government for having developed these conditions because there are many reasons apart from anything the past government could have done to account for the present state of western agriculture, and in all fairness we must admit that present day conditions have not been brought about by the advent of the present administration. As to a policy not having been announced, I think the Prime Minister stated in one of his speeches that the Minister of Agriculture would announce his policy when he brought down his estimates. I am quite prepared to give the Minister of Agriculture and the government at least one year in which to deal with agriculture and other matters of importance in Canada. I do not know what they intend to do; I do not know that we will be any better off next year than we are this year, but I owe it to my own sense of fairness to give the government that opportunity. If my hon. friend is still of the same opinion next year—he probably will be even though the government may have done something by that time—I will then stand with him in criticism of the government if it has failed to take advantage of its opportunity to do something.

The amendment next refers to the policies of the administration restricting rather than expanding trade. I am at a loss to understand just what the hon. gentleman means by this, because in the first clause he denounces the government for not having a policy and in the next clause complains that the policy of the government is a restriction of trade. It may be that he had the belief that the general policy of the government restricted trade and no policy has been announced for agriculture. If that were the hon. gentleman's belief then the clauses would have some meaning, but if he referred in both cases to a general policy, then there would be a direct contradiction.

The amendment then goes on to state that without the development of international trade Canadian agriculture will become increasingly paralyzed. In this regard I refer to the statement made by the previous speaker (Mr. Vallance) in answer to a question asked by the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion). The hon. minister asked the question: How is it that more wheat is being sold this year than last, to which the hon. member for South Battleford replied that it was being given away this year. I agree with him in his answer, but it was given away last year as well and in that respect he was unfair. Wheat is being sold this year at the world price just as it was sold last year on that basis, therefore both this government and the last government are in exactly the same position in relation to the price of wheat.

The amendment states that any policy brought forward with respect to agriculture should include emergency measures to meet the present crisis. According to the statement just made by the Minister of Agriculture, an emergency policy has been in force for some time. I understand that he went to Winnipeg in January last; that he met there representatives of the western provinces; that an agreement or arrangement was made which was satisfactory to the premiers of the western provinces in respect to certain relief, and that for some good reason on the part of the western provinces, the actual conditions of the agreement, so far as they had to do with the federal government, were not made public; so that would appear to settle the emergency part of the resolution with which we are dealing.

Finally, the suggestion is that adequate provision should be made for the processing of meats and the marketing of live stock, wheat, dairy, and all other agriculture products. That, of course, should be done, but I have not heard any hon. member, nor have I heard any one outside of the house, put forward a single proposal that would be calculated to bring a cent more for wheat than we are now getting. If the hon. member who moved this amendment will put forward a concrete proposal that will give even a promise of a penny more a bushel, I shall vote for it, but so far in all the speeches that have been delivered in the house this session, I have not heard a proposal that would raise the price of wheat or pork or eggs or butter or any other commodity. Indeed, this parliament would have great difficulty in altering materially the price of any one of these commodities. I think hon. gentlemen who expect, that or talk as if they expected it, know better. They know that our present system and the conditions under which we are living and operating are such that laws not passed by parliament, but laws of economic significance, determine the price of all these commodities, and that no proposal which could be made by parliament, so far as I am aware, apart from actually bonusing wheat or pegging the price, would produce the result that we desire. The government has stated very emphatically that it will not peg the price of wheat, and I am not sure that I want it to do so. I question very much the economic sense of such a proposition and I have done so ever since it was first made. I have expressed my opinion in that regard in other places than in this chamber.

But with regard to relief for farmers, the government can take action, and as regards the debt which is on the back of the farmers, which did not come last year, but which has been accumulating and accumulating for a generation due to a bad policy of finance which has been adopted by all governments and due to unrestricted interest rates and other things from which agriculture has been suffering, that burden of debt might be relieved by some arrangement which the government might make. It might be possible to fix the interest at a lower rate or to get the mortgage companies to think reasonable in regard to the situation and to cancel the interest for last year and the year before so as to give the farmers an opportunity to come back when conditions improve. The government maybe could not do that by law, but they might be able to do it by consultation and advice. Apart from that I do not believe any suggestion has been made that would guarantee to the farmers even a hope of getting a higher price for wheat.

While that is so, we have here a motion of no confidence moved against a government that is really sitting now in its first session, because it has not raised the price of wheat or found a better market for wheat or other things. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I am very anxious to find a better market for the western farmers; I am very anxious to see them get more for their wheat, and I say again if any hon. gentleman on this or the other side of the house will put forward an idea that will give a hope of doing that, I shall readily vote for it, no matter what party he belongs to. But in the first session of a government that has not been in power one year, to move a vote of no confidence in them for not getting a better market and to do this without making a suggestion of how such an objective could be attained, does not appeal to my reason. I may be wrong in that, and I may be censured for the speech which I am now making. Very well, let the censure come. I am not going to curb my intelligence for fear of censure from anybody, and I say that is not my understanding of playing even the party game. It is censuring the government for not doing that which was an impossibility in the time allotted to it.

I turn to the speech of the hon. member for Lisgar to make sure that in the summary I have given of the amendment I have not misinterpreted his ideas. He says in one part of his speech that there are one or two things to which he intends to refer, that might be considered as being of a more constructive nature. I want to mention these things of a more constructive nature in order that I may be perfectly fair to my hon. friend and also fair to myself, because if we were to read these constructive things into his motion, I would have to judge as to whether or not I would be warranted in voting for his amendment considered in the light of his remarks made in the discussion of it.

With regard to these constructive suggestions, the first is a protest that a certain Mr. Wilson was to be withdrawn from Great Britain as our agricultural representative. That does not impress me as being a constructive economic policy. I cannot conceive that the price of wheat or the market for wheat would be very materially altered by keeping either Mr. Wilson or any other gentleman where he is, although I have no doubt the gentleman referred to is doing good service. But, as it happens, my hon. friend was immediately assured by the Prime Minister that the vote in this respect was larger than last year and that the office referred to would be continued, so that that constructive idea may be set aside.

The next constructive idea is the reduction of internal freight rates. This, of course, is not a new question. There is a real problem to be solved by some government in regard to internal freight rates, but I cannot help saying that that has not developed since this government was elected. That question is not one year old; it has been a Canadian problem for a long time, and I am amazed that my hon. friend did not move this during the last session of the last parliament; that he did not use his influence when the party to which he belongs was in power; that he did not during the last five, six, or seven years make a plea that this be corrected. But why we should move it now as a vote of no confidence in a government that has been in power nine months, when other governments might have fixed it a generation ago, I am not clear, neither do I regard this suggestion as being particularly constructive. I am informed by some hon. gentlemen who pretend to know law, that the question is scarcely one for parliament at all; that at least it is doubtful whether it is, and that there exists machinery which has been set up for the purpose of regulating these freight rates and which should be set in motion to correct the grievance referred to by my hon. friend.

The last constructive suggestion is the consideration of the meat problem, a suggestion which was made first in the house so far as I know, by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), that the government should take action in certain experimental ways in regard to packing and the live stock business generally. I understand the government, as the Minister of Agriculture has just said, have been working towards this end and that they intend to take action on that very point; but again my hon. friend, as the Prime Minister pointed out, should have considered this for the last eight years. We have it from his own lips that just a few years ago he was knocking his own pigs on the head, or should have done so, because they were a dead loss. They would be, of course, if he knocked them on the head. But even then my hon. friend said nothing about the packing plants. He moved no vote of censure of the government then in power for not taking action, and that government was in power for many years, during which they could have been censured. I know that to reiterate this is the old political game. I do not want to play it, but I am trying to be fair to this administration. I will frankly say that I would rather enjoy voting the government out of office, if we could do it, upon an issue that mattered; but I do not think that the issue before us is a fair one.

I come to the last reason mentioned by me for refusing to vote for the amendment, and that is that I think it is unfair to the Minister of Agriculture. Personally, so far as I am concerned, I want to give him a chance. That is what he was elected for. The people of Canada decided that about nine months ago, and I do not know that they have changed their minds in the meantime. Though I have no doubt that they will some time, I have no authority to say that they have done so as yet. So I say that in all fairness the amendment should not have been moved at this time.

As I have already said, if next year the Minister of Agriculture shall have proved himself a failure, if there is evidence that the action or inaction of the government in regard to agriculture has been detrimental to the economic life of the country or that any policy which the government has advanced has been injurious to Canadian trade or detrimental in any other way, then I shall speak against the government perhaps with a great deal more enthusiasm than I am now speaking for it. I am not asking any favours of the government or of anybody else. I am simply trying to face this issue as squarely as I can. I frankly state, Mr. Speaker, that if I could have sat in my seat while this vote was going on without creating an uproar I would have done so, because while I am not going to vote for the amendment, I am not particularly enthusiastic about supporting the government; but since I have been compelled, practically, by the sentiment of this assembly, to register my vote either yes or no, I feel bound to say why I go over the line a little bit to say no with respect to this particular amendment.

In conclusion, in view of the universal depression to which every member who has spoken has made reference and recognizing that this depression has its roots in causes that extend far back, and which have produced results over a period of years; in view also of the nature of the policies to be evolved to meet the situation, which necessarily require time, I think it is not fair to censure the Minister of Agriculture before he has been given a chance to act. I frankly say that I have great confidence in him personally. I believe that he has only one object, and until I find it otherwise I shall continue to believe that. I believe that his one object is to devote himself to the Department of Agriculture, to relieve the present situation, so far as it is within the power of the government to do so and to evolve policies which, taking the long view, it is thought will be to the advantage of agriculture in the future.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, by consent of the house I purpose to take an item in the Department of Trade and Commerce anl also an item in the Department of External Affairs. The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) intimated his desire to speak to-morrow when the Geneva item is called upon the question of the rights of minorities in Poland. As the council of the league meets at an early date the hon. member should be afforded that facility if at all possible. If the house consents we will take a single item in the Department of Trade and Commerce, and then an item in the Department of External Affairs. From that point we will proceed with items in the Department of Public Works.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I can see no objection to expediting matters by taking an item in any single department, but to take two departments is perhaps going a little farther than is usual.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman is quite correct. I remember that last year the estimates for the Department of External Affairs were put through very expeditiously, and my reason for suggesting consideration of the items in that department was to afford the hon. member for Vegreville an opportunity to speak, as the meeting of the council will be held at an early date.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I understand the Prime Minister correctly, he does not intend to take up different items in the department, but rather to consider at this time only one item?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. We shall go on with the Department of Trade and Commerce, taking an item at this time so that it may come before the house to-morrow, thereby affording the hon. member an opportunity to speak.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Trade and Commerce—salaries, $633,765; contingencies, $40,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will the minister explain the increase in this estimate?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): There is a very slight increase in this item. If it is so desired I will give to the committee the details. The vote provides for the dropping of four employees and the appointment of twelve others. Of the twelve, several are promotions or alterations in the staff. The secretary to the executive is a promotion. Then there is a clerk, grade 3, in the office of the minister. That simply means that due to pressure of work there will be an additional stenographer. There is provision for a typist, grade 2. This is a temporary position made permanent in the publicity branch. For several years there has been a typist in that branch and this provides for a continuance at the same salary of a permanent employee, instead of carrying such employee temporarily. There is the appointment of a qualified stationary engineer in connection with the motion picture bureau. This appointment is made necessary in order to comply with the laws of the province of Ontario. There is provision for two stenographers in the commercial intelligence branch. Again it is simply a question of pressure of work, and a need for additional assistance. In the Bureau of Statistics the chief item is the appointment of two senior statisticians in the educational division and in the industrial census division. I may say that in the census we are rather elaborating industrial and unemployment questions and so forth, making necessary the appointment of these two additional senior officers. There is also a head clerk in the agricultural division of the Bureau of Statistics, a principal clerk in the forestry division, and one stenographer in grade 2. That completes the list of new appointments. There are, of course, some statutory increases to the staff.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In connection with these additional appointments, was an effort made to secure some of the staff who are being retired from the Department of the Interior or other departments, for example, stenographers? The minister also referred to the appointment of a clerk in the forestry branch.

Mr. STEVENS: The instructions are that that practice be followed as far as possible. I think in three instances that would not be possible, the stationary engineer and the two senior statisticians. I am not sure whether they could be provided from the sources mentioned, but I will make inquiry.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my hon. friend will find that he could get them from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. STEVENS: It is quite possible. We shall be guided very largely by Mr. Coats, the head of the bureau, whose work my right hon. friend knows very well, and whose advice necessarily must be fairly closely followed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The appointments have not yet been made?

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Item agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Civil government—External Affairs—salaries, $105,940; contingencies, $66,000.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There is no change in this item either as to staff or amount involved, except the statutory increases.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: It is understood that the next item of External Affairs to be called, if the committee please, will be the League of Nations, Geneva, on which the hon. member for Vegreville wishes to make some observations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my right hon. friend intend to go on with External Affairs to-morrow?

Mr. BENNETT: Whatever my right hon. friend wishes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should prefer it were left over until next week.

Mr. BENNETT: Then that will be the only item in External Affairs to be taken up to-morrow, the item dealing with the League of Nations.

PUBLIC WORKS

Public works—harbours and rivers—New Brunswick, $450,000.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman, when the New Brunswick items were before the committee last, it was understood that while they were adopted in general I would have the privilege when they were brought up again to deal with certain matters in respect to which I had asked the production of correspondence. I drew the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart), after this correspondence had been tabled, to the fact that some of it was lacking. The next day he was kind enough to produce what was supposed to be all the correspondence and documents in connection with the undertaking. Now, I am not going to try to prevent the adoption of these items because of the fact that, notwithstanding a second attempt has been made to produce the correspondence and documents, the file is still incomplete. There is nothing on the file produced to show the details of the account rendered for the services of the legal representative of the Department of Justice. The Minister of Public Works can well say that that correspondence is in the Department of Justice, but when a member asks for all the correspondence it is the duty of each department having to do with the matter to produce that correspondence. I refer to this more for the purpose of reminding the committee that a great deal of dissatisfaction was expressed by my hon. friends opposite during the last session of parliament in 1930, because of some of the files then produced by myself as Postmaster General not being complete, it being insinuated that those files had been rendered incomplete for a certain purpose. Although I attempted to justify myself on that occasion by showing that the incomplete part of the file was the part which was handled by the Civil Service Commission, still hon. members opposite insisted that the items in my department should not pass until the entire file was produced. While I am anxious, Mr. Chairman, to see the account as rendered by the representative of the Department of Justice, I do not intend at this moment to insist any further upon its production, but to ask the Minister of Public Works if he will be kind enough to see that the Justice department produce to him a detailed statement of that account and allow me to have a copy.

I wish to direct the attention of the committee to the proposed construction of a wharf at Little Shippigan, Gloucester county. I do not wish to delay the passage of these items, but I ask for the production of that account because I understand from the correspondence which is here that a cheque for fifty dollars was issued for the service of the gentleman in question. I understand that, on the production of deeds, two cheques were issued for land appropriated by the department for the construction of this wharf. These cheques were issued to two gentlemen, a Mr. Brown and a Mr. Brune; one for twenty dollars to Mr. Brune and the other, for fifty dollars, to Mr. Brown. I understand that these cheques were issued jointly, the first to Mr. Brown and Mr. A. M. Robichaud, the solicitor, and the second to Mr. Brune and Mr. Robichaud, the solicitor. I want to know why these cheques were issued jointly to the solicitor of the Department of Justice and the owner of the land. It may be the practice; I do not know. If it is the practice, I have no fault to find. But I wish to see the detailed statement of this account. And I wish, further, to protest against an expenditure of fifty dollars for obtaining land worth seventy.

While I am on the question of the proposed construction of a wharf at Little Shippigan, I see by the correspondence that on August 21, 1930, the Minister of Public Works recommended to council that the tender of C. L. Comeau be accepted; and he further recommended that an amount of $16,000 additional be placed in the estimates this year for the termination of that work and to complete the contract. The tender, I believe, was in the vicinity of $26,000. Last year we voted $10,000 knowing that it would cost betwen $26,000 and $30,000, and that $10,000 was voted for the purpose of calling for tenders to have the work proceeded with. The minister recommended on August 21 that the tender of Mr. Comeau should be accepted and afterwards the recommendation was withdrawn; at least, it was not accepted by council. I should like the minister to explain this. He does attempt to give an explanation at page 16 of the correspondence submitted. In a letter to the reverend father in charge of the parish of Little Shippigan he states, at page 16 of the correspondence:

> In view of the falling revenues of the government and the increased expenditures, including a special vote of $20,000,000 passed at the recent session of parliament for the relief of unemployment, it has been deemed inadvisable in the public interest to proceed with this work at the present time.

With reference to that $20,000,000, we had a statement from the Prime Minister in September as to why this money could be used for such purposes; and to my mind this letter of November 13, 1930, in which the statement is made that in view of the falling revenues and the voting of this $20,000,000, it was considered inexpedient to go on with the work, is not a sufficient excuse. The minister at that time was in possession of information which he had a perfect right to accept as well founded, coming as it did from the parish priest of that district, and in view of a conversation with myself in regard to the unemployment situation at that particular point. And if the $20,000 000 voted by parliament could not have been expended in that way, then I claim that the work could have been proceeded with under that vote for the relief of unemployment in the district.

That district is perhaps one of the hardest hit of any section in Canada so far as unemployment is concerned. The people living on Miscou island are not an agricultural class; the island is not fitted for agriculture. They raise some very small crops, it is true, potatoes and hay. But they are fishermen; they earn their living by fishing. Last fall, however, fishing failed and these people were practically on the verge of starvation. That was represented to the minister and he had every reason to believe that the representations were correct. Yet in the face of that, refusal was given to relieve the situation as it existed at that time.

Leaving aside altogether for the moment the question of unemployment relief in that section, and coming down to the real merits of the case, I wish to say to the minister that there is no section of the maritime provinces where the construction of a work of that kind is so necessary. These are hardy fishermen who risk their lives every day, and they have been asking for some time past for this construction. They have asked for it under previous Conservative governments; they have asked for it under previous Liberal governments; and it was only last year that I was enabled in their behalf to have this amount placed in the estimates to give them the needed protection. And there is no doubt about it that it is absolutely needed. Under the circumstances I would appeal once more to the Minister of Public Works and, as well, to the Prime Minister in his capacity as Minister of Finance; because I realize, from my experience in council, that after all the Minister of Finance has a great deal to say in matters of this kind. I appeal to both of these hon. gentlemen to see that something is placed in the supplementary estimates in order that this work may be carried on.

A tender has been received, if I mistake not, five or six thousand dollars under the estimate placed upon the work by the engineers; and, even under present circumstances, if the contract were offered to-day to the person who tendered at that time at the figure he gave, I believe, although I have no authority to speak in his behalf, that he would accept the contract at that figure.

If the vote is placed in the supplementary estimates this year it will serve two purposes. There is still unemployment in that district, and these people will not succeed in their fishing very much better this year than last year. The money would therefore relieve the situation in that section of the country. The people there are isolated; they are living on an island far from the mainland. They have no communication except by water, and with the freezing up of the bay they are unable, for four or five weeks in the fall and three or four weeks in the spring, to communicate with the mainland at all except by telephone. This work would relieve unemployment in this district because the contractor could begin work towards the fall of the year at the very time when it is necessary to provide relief. I do not desire to take up too much time of the committee, but let me appeal once more to the Minister of Public Works and to the Minister of Finance and direct their attention to the absolute necessity of the carrying on of this work.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, in reply to the member for Gloucester let me deal very briefly with the points he raised. First, with regard to the production of correspondence. My hon. friend will notice that the correspondence brought down included everything except a private letter. When I looked at that letter I saw there was no reason why it should not be brought down and I asked the writer for his permission to produce it. So that in my desire to meet my hon. friend's request I brought down even a private letter which I might have been justified in refusing to lay on the table.

Mr. VENIOT: Not if the minister acted upon the letter. The rule is that if action is taken on a letter marked "private" it cannot be considered as a private communication.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I did not act upon it except to make a reply, and surely that is not sufficient action to force a minister to bring down his private correspondence. However, I had nothing to conceal, and in order to convince my hon. friend of that fact I brought the letter down. I was unaware of the existence of the other documents from the Department of Justice, but again, in my desire to meet the wishes of my hon. friend, I asked that department for the correspondence and brought it down.

Mr. VENIOT: Not all of it. There is some of it still missing.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As far as I know it has all been brought down.

Mr. VENIOT: It has not all been brought down.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The correspondence is all there, but my friend wants an account. I do not know whether any such account exists, because once a matter is turned over to the Department of Justice that department deals with the matter of compensation to their agent. However, I will make inquiry, and I assure my hon. friend that if there is any such account I will secure a copy of it for his information.

Mr. VENIOT: Thank you, that is all I want.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): With regard to his suggestion that the cheques issued for two small parcels of land should not have been made payable to the agent of the Department of Justice and to the owner of the land, I may say that that is the regular procedure.

Mr. VENIOT: I said it was the practice.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The reason is quite evident; until the agent is satisfied that everything has been furnished he has control of the cheques. I know nothing regarding the charges, because they are settled and taxed by the Department of Justice. Let me suggest in all sincerity to my hon. friend that this agent dealt with the title to the two parcels of land. It is true that the consideration for the transfer of these two parcels is small, and although he has correctly stated the amount, I think on reflection he will agree with me that very often there is just as much work involved in searching the title of a small parcel of land as there is in searching the title of even a hundred or a thousand acres as long as the title comes down through the one chain. In this case there were two parcels the titles of which had to be searched. As I have said, the Department of Justice deals with these matters, and I will obtain the information from that source. As to why this work was not proceeded with, I think the correspondence discloses the reasons. I cannot go any further than that.

I know my hon. friend is very much interested in the work at Little Shippigan. During the short session he spoke to me about this matter and impressed upon me the importance and desirability of proceeding with the work. We were faced with the fact that an appropriation of $10,000 had been made, with a considerably larger expenditure being involved. The conclusion arrived at was that we were not in a position to do this work this year in view of the larger amount involved. I would point out to my hon. friend that a very large work is being proceeded with in his constituency at Tracadie. The department was of the opinion that this construction would afford the greatest measure of relief for unemployment, and therefore selected that work as the one which we would prosecute. The expenditure involved will amount to about $160,000 more, but notwithstanding that it was thought that as the work could be carried on continuously it would afford the greatest measure of relief.

With reference to my hon. friend's last request, that consideration be given to this matter in the supplementary estimates, all I can say is that I shall certainly give it consideration and I hope we will both live long enough to see this work completed at Little Shippigan.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman, I have very little more to say in regard to this matter, but I do not like to hear the minister give as a reason for delaying the work—I hope it is only delayed—the fact that considerable work was being carried on at Tracadie harbour. This work was commenced in 1929 when some three or four thousands dollars was expended in protecting the beach to which the channel is to be dredged. The dredge boat went in during the fall of 1929 and worked all last summer. This work has been under contemplation for some four or five years and while I am pleased to see an item to complete it I cannot accept that as sufficient reason for not going on with the work at Little Shippigan. Other works in Gloucester county which were absolutely necessary were thrown out. There was the Little Shippigan work; there was the extension on the Young wharf for which tenders were called for and held up for quite a long time before it was decided not to continue with the work; there was the dredging at St. Simon which was included in the program of $650,000 voted last year for dredging generally in the maritime provinces; there was the dredging at Lower Caraquet which was absolutely necessary and which was included in the general program; there was the dredging of the upper channel leading to Shippigan gully through which 250 or 350 fishing vessels pass twice a week, and there was the dredging in the inner channel of the gully in Shippigan harbour, which was to be straightened out, as well as the removal of the sandbanks outside and inside of the gully. These items which have been thrown aside, if gone on with, would have considerably relieved unemployment in that section of the county, and I feel that an injustice has been done to the county which I have the honour to represent. I may be wrong; I do not desire to impute any motive to the minister or to the government, but I think they perhaps sought the information in wrong places and decided upon information which, to my mind, was not correct. The minister, however, has stated that he will consider the request I made.

There is one item in regard to which I should like to have a little explanation. I think there is an item of $491.84 in the expenditure on that wharf. Would the minister please tell me what that includes? The work has not been carried on, and I should like to know what brought about this expenditure of $491.84.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am informed by the chief engineer that honest and sincere efforts were made last year to have several of these items of dredging which he has mentioned done, but they were unable to secure anybody willing to undertake the work.

Mr. VENIOT: No tenders were called for the $10,000 work at Lameque basin.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes there were.

Mr. VENIOT: Public tenders?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am informed there were.

Mr. VENIOT: Where were they advertised?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): They were advertised and no tenders were received.

Mr. VENIOT: I would like to know where they were advertised.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I shall be glad to furnish that information. The chief engineer informs me that all reasonable efforts were made to have that dredging done. That is all I can say with regard to that. As regards the expenditure, we have not particulars of that here, as no item covering the same work to which my hon. friend refers is involved in our estimates this year. I can, however, get that information for him.

Mr. VENIOT: That is satisfactory.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EFFECT OF SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 28 FOR THURSDAY, MAY 7

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my right hon. friend whether he understands the government will be free to go into Trade and Commerce estimates to-morrow if they wish to do so?

Mr. BENNETT: My understanding is that we cannot take up the estimates of any new department to-morrow beyond those of Trade and Commerce. External Affairs, and Public Works, and that only one External Affairs item will be taken up namely that respecting the League of Nations, after which we shall take up Trade and Commerce. If we do not decide to continue until we finish that, then we shall take up an item on Public Works, the estimates of which are nearly all through.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think my right hon. friend is entitled to proceed with Trade and Commerce estimates to-morrow. I shall read the resolution under which we proceeded to-day. It is to be found in the Votes and Proceedings of May 6, as follows:

That the debate on the motion of the Minister of Finance that "Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself again into committee of supply" and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Brown, be resumed on Thursday, May 7th, instant, and that standing order 28 be suspended on that day in relation thereto.

After debate thereon, the question being put on the said motion, it was agreed to.

The suspension therefore of standing order 28 is applicable only to to-day, May 7; it does not apply to to-morrow. Standing order 28 reads:

On Thursdays and Fridays when the order of the day is called for the house to go into committee of supply, or of ways and means, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair without putting any question, provided that, except by the unanimous consent of the house, the estimates of each department shall be first taken up on a day other than Thursday or Friday.

The house has given unanimous consent to take up what we have done to-day with respect to to-day, but it has not given unanimous consent to take up the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce on a Friday or on any subsequent Thursday without having them taken up in the regular way in the first instance.

Mr. BENNETT: We cannot reprobate and approbate at the same time, I think Lord Eldon once said. What has happened is that we have made to-day a Tuesday for the purpose of going into supply, and Trade and Commerce is the item which we have considered, which we could not have considered otherwise than by consent of the house. It having been so considered and the house having further consented that External Affairs be taken up to enable the hon. member for Vegreville to speak about a particular matter, my submission is that the house has now before it three supply items: Public Works, Trade and Commerce, and External Affairs, and that having agreed to take up but one item in External Affairs to-morrow; we may go on with Trade and Commerce, because that item is now properly before the committee by the consent of the house. It could not be otherwise.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The consent of the house was given to the taking of the item for to-day, but standing order 28 is still applicable, and while we are only too anxious to oblige the government in the matter of the expedition of its business, we must not, by giving our consent here and there, be prejudiced as respects our position in other particulars. I am quite prepared to leave the matter to Mr. Speaker to decide, but I submit that the resolution under which we proceeded to-day to consider estimates is applicable only to the day of May 7; that apart from that, standing order 28 is applicable for the rest of the session, indeed is applicable to the session as a whole, and that by giving consent to take up a particular estimate to-day, we have not waived the right we have under standing order 28 to refuse to give consent to taking up the estimates of any department that has not been gone into on a Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course we treated Thursday as Tuesday. Otherwise, without the consent of the house, we could not have gone on at all. Owing to the fact that on going into supply on Tuesday, a debate was precipitated which, except for private member's day, lasted practically without interruption until to-night, I certainly believe that since the item is by consent before the committee, it stands for consideration. Otherwise, there was no point at all in the consent. We might as well have gone on next Tuesday, because Monday is another private members' day.

Mr. RINFRET: The items have been passed; they are no longer before the committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We are willing to do the best we can to facilitate my right hon. friend in carrying on the business of the house, but if every time we oblige him he is going to take advantage of our courtesy to go beyond anything we intend, we shall have hereafter to decline to give him consent on other things.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not inclined to ask for it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I submit that my right hon. friend has not the right to proceed to-morrow with either External Affairs or Trade and Commerce estimates without the unanimous consent of the house. I have said that so far as the opposition is concerned we are prepared to give unanimous consent to External Affairs being proceeded with on the condition that one item, and one item only, shall be called, so as to allow the hon. member for Vegreville immediately to make a speech which he is anxious to make. We are prepared to do so in order to oblige him as well as to oblige the leader of the government, but beyond that our obligation does not extend.

Mr. GARDINER: I have not looked up the rule in regard to this particular question, but when the understanding was arrived at yesterday, I certainly understood that if we finished the debate on the amendment to the motion for supply to-day, we would go into supply on another item. I did not understand that we would take up two items, but one item only.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right, but the second item was merely to enable the debate on the item of the League of Nations to take place before the council of the league meets in May.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps His Honour the Speaker would give his ruling on the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: The resolution that was passed on the 6th of May was:

That standing order 28 be suspended for to-morrow, Thursday, the 7th day of May—

That is to-day. Standing order 28 provides:

On Thursdays and Fridays when the order of the day is called for the house to go into committee of supply, or of ways and means, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair without putting any question, provided that, except by the unanimous consent of the house, the estimates of each department shall be first taken up on a day other than Thursday or Friday.

This is Thursday, and the estimates have been taken up to-day. I take it that the intent of the motion which I have just quoted was to treat to-day as a day other than Thursday, although I may say that the right hon. leader of the opposition has applied a strict interpretation of the rule. I think that to go into supply to-morrow on any other item than items concerning Public Works, the house should give its unanimous consent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall appeal from that ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: And the leader of the opposition has signified his willingness to give unanimous consent.

Mr. BENNETT: It is needless to say that I do not agree with that ruling, but the house can appeal from it. As it is eleven o'clock I have nothing further to say at the moment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And I may say that the opposition will support the ruling of His Honour the Speaker.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, May 8, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

RAILWAY COMMITTEE

First report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. Harris.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

PROPOSAL TO PENALIZE PRACTICE OF ISSUING CHEQUES WITHOUT FUNDS

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 43 to amend the criminal code.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make it easier, or perhaps I should say to make it less impossible, to secure a conviction against that ever growing band of crooks who make it their business to prey on the public by going from town to town and from district to district leaving behind them a trail of cheques drawn on banks where they have no funds or where in many cases they even never had an account. At the present time these men can be proceeded against only under the section of the criminal code which deals with false pretences and it has been found almost impossible to secure a conviction under that section. It is necessary to show an evil intent when the cheque was passed, that is, an intent to defraud the payee and it is practically impossible to prove what is in a man's mind on a given occasion. Very often the plea is made: Yes, I knew I had no money in the bank but I expected President Hoover or someone else to make a deposit before it came due. It is very necessary to check this growing evil which imposes a heavy burden on hotels and business men, which burden is ultimately passed on to the consuming public. This will be rather a difficult piece of legislation because it is essential while proceeding against this type of man to protect two classes of individuals. The first is the man who by mere inadvertence allows his account to become overdrawn. I have done that myself, and that man must be protected. Then there is the other man, almost equally innocent, who is running a small business. Times are hard and he is being pressed, we will say, by his wholesaler. He knows it will take four or five days for a cheque to reach the wholesaler and then be returned to his bank; he knows he is getting money in all the time from his customers and he takes a chance and draws a cheque which may not be good at the moment but which he honestly expects will, in all probability, be good by the time it comes back to his bank. That man should be protected, and this bill fully protects these two classes of individual.

If the house will allow me to introduce this bill and have it read the first time, I will not press the second reading so that perhaps the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) may consider it, and boards of trade, chambers of commerce and business men throughout the country will be given an opportunity to express their views.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVILEGE—MR. CAYLEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. M. CAYLEY (South Oxford): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I desire to rise to a question of privilege. The Woodstock Sentinel Review of Monday, May 4, contains the following item:

> Oxford members at Ottawa voted opposite ways on the Armistice day holiday bill. Presumably the south riding will refuse to take the day off.

Every hon. member knows that this bill passed the house unanimously; there was no opposition. There was a division on the motion of the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs) to adjourn the debate on the second reading, which I opposed, but the bill itself was passed unanimously as will be shown at page 133 of Votes and Proceedings of April 28.

The south riding of Oxford will consider it a solemn duty and honour to keep this Remembrance day in honour of those splendid men who died during the great war.

DOMINION CONVERSION LOAN

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER OF EXCHANGE PRIVILEGES OFFERED TO HOLDERS OF GOVERNMENT BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I promised the house yesterday that I would make a general statement with respect to the proposed conversion loan. During the years of the war the Canadian people loaned the government of Canada $53,000,000, payable in October, 1931, with interest at 5 per cent per annum; $73,000,000, payable November 1, 1932, with interest at 5½ per cent per annum; $446,000,000, payable on November 1, 1933, with interest at 5½ per cent per annum, and $511,000,000, payable on November 1, 1934, with interest at 5½ per cent per annum. The total amount of these four loans is $1,083,000,000, and it will be observed that nearly one billion dollars of this amount falls due in November, 1933, and November, 1934. These loans will either have to be paid or renewed and it is obviously impossible that they can be paid except by the flotation of new securities, the proceeds to be used to liquidate the old loans.

At the moment this large obligation is a serious menace to our financial operations because it is felt that as long as these liabilities have to be met in successive years there will be increasing difficulties in connection with the handling of such transactions. The government, with the best advice available, has concluded that it is desirable to anticipate the maturity of these obligations and has created what will be known as the Dominion of Canada conversion loan, 1931. No new money will be sought but the old securities will be exchanged for new bonds bearing a rate of interest of 4½ per cent per annum. All interest provided by the former securities and any benefits and privileges created thereby will remain intact until maturity.

On Monday next every newspaper in Canada will contain a full statement on the proposed conversion loan and I do not think it is necessary to do more at the moment than to merely indicate the general reasons which have actuated the government in taking this action.

Before taking any final steps in this matter, the government was fortunate in being able to set up with the aid of the banks and bond houses of Canada a central committee, the chairman of which is Sir Charles Gordon, president of the Bank of Montreal and the vice-chairman, Mr. Victor Drury of Montreal. The Canadian Bank of Commerce is represented by Mr. S. H. Logan, its general manager; the Bank of Nova Scotia by Mr. J. A. McLeod, its general manager; the Banque Canadienne Nationale by Mr. Beaudry Leman, its general manager and the Royal Bank of Canada by Mr. M. W. Wilson, its general manager. The bond houses in Toronto are represented by Mr. Arthur F. White, of the Dominion Securities Corporation, Mr. H. R. Tudhope of A. E. Ames & Company, and Mr. J. H. Gundy, of Wood Gundy & Company. The bond houses in Montreal are represented by Mr. Drury and Mr. E. G. Hanson of Hanson Brothers. In addition to that, Mr. G. W. Spinney, one of the executive officers of the Bank of Montreal, has given unremitting toil to this transaction and, while not a member of the committee, has undertaken large responsibilities in connection therewith.

The plan involves the participation by and cooperation of 4,500 agencies throughout Canada, including the branches of all the chartered banks of Canada and of the recognized bond dealers and brokers. I need hardly say that in a country as large as Canada it is important that the same opportunity be afforded on the same day to every person interested and it therefore becomes necessary to prepare very large quantities of material to be made available on Monday next in every part of Canada. It will perhaps supprise the house to know that during the last seven days orders for over 8,000,000 forms have been placed with the Printing Bureau and that the major portion of this large order has been delivered to the Department of Finance. Prior to noon to-day, actually 4,850,000 forms had been shipped by the Department of Finance to various depositories established throughout Canada. Five hundred thousand interim certificates in various denominations from $100 to $100,000 are being printed and distributed to the offices of the receiver general throughout Canada. We expect that on Monday next the interim certificates for those who wish to exchange the old bonds for the new, will be available for the full amount of the loan, and therefore the conversion may be made promptly.

The Post Office Department has done a great deal of work in expediting the transmission of mail, because in large cities like Montreal and Toronto, this has imposed upon that department a great additional effort. The campaign is for the moment limited to the conversion of $250,000,000 of the old securities. The books will open on Monday next and it is proposed that the Minister of Finance shall have a discretion as to the closing of them, otherwise they will close on the 23rd of May. Whatever additional information any hon. member may desire to receive will, of course, be available on Monday morning through the press, but I do not think any useful purpose will be served by stating more than I have indicated as to the purpose and intention of the government in making this conversion at this time.

It is the belief of the government and those best qualified to speak with authority in Canada, that a conversion or exchange of this kind at this time will be of a two-fold advantage to this country. In the first place it will do something to remove from the horizon a dark cloud of impending borrowing that every Minister of Finance must face as long as there is $1,000,000,000 to be liquidated in some way between now and 1934. In the second place, inasmuch as the securities are largely held by Canadians, it is believed that by accepting, after the date of maturity of the present obligations, a rate of interest one per cent less than that which they have been receiving, they will indicate a faith and belief in the future of their country that will be a striking testimony to the value of its assets and its credit amongst the peoples of the world. I do not think it is necessary to take up further time than to indicate in this general way what the purpose of the government has been in this regard.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question in reference to one feature that has been referred to in the press, namely, a possibility of the exemption from taxation of any of the new bonds. Would my right hon. friend indicate whether anything of the kind is contemplated?

Mr. BENNETT: I am very glad the right hon. gentleman mentioned that because really I did not suppose it was necessary in this day and generation to say that the bonds and the interest therefrom are all taxable. The non-taxable feature which is, of course, a part of the contract of the old bonds, cannot be abrogated, but none of the new bonds is free from taxation as to principal or interest. They are all taxable.

Mr. EULER: What is the length of term of the new securities?

Mr. BENNETT: The reason I did not go into the details of that was that some of them are somewhat complicated, and it would be better just to make the general statement: twenty-five years from the date of the maturity of the present obligations, callable at the end of fifteen years. That is, during the last ten years of the life of the new bonds the government has the opportunity of calling them in.

Mr. EULER: That is a long period.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but it is desirable in an operation of this kind that we should have that right. The bonds are for fifteen years certain. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is there a time limit on the applications?

Mr. BENNETT: They open on Monday and they close on the 23rd. They may close earlier at the discretion of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. THOMAS McMILLAN (South Huron): The Prime Minister says that $250,000,000 will be dealt with at first. Is it the intention to deal with any of these issues prior to 1934?

Mr. BENNETT: It is specified that those who hold bonds of 1931, 1932, 1933, or 1934 may, on signing the proper application form, convert them into the new security and $250,000,000 is the amount fixed at the moment. If there should be a very general desire on the part of the Canadian people to increase that amount, we would not hesitate to yield to their wishes in that regard.

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Would the Prime Minister have any objection to stating to the house the rate of commission that will be paid to the banks and bond firms for handling this issue?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think there is any reason why this information should not be given, although I think the hon. gentleman would have been well advised, in the interest of the loan, not to ask this question at this particular time; but as he has asked it, I think it must be answered. I do not think, in asking it, he is doing any good service to his country.

Mr. SANDERSON: I shall be quite willing to drop the question.

Mr. BENNETT: It has been asked now, so it does not make any difference. The sum payable for commission to all is one half of one per cent, including all the expenses which they may incur, and little and big will be paid the same rate. There are no over-riding commissions. In the interest of the loan, I am very sorry the hon. member asked the question.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have no apology to make.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I did not expect the hon. gentleman would have.

UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

REPORTED EMPLOYMENT AT CHURCHILL OF IMMIGRANTS FROM GERMANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface): I should like to direct a question to the acting Minister of Immigration. At a recent meeting of the Winnipeg city council, the matter of civic servants who were not naturalized citizens of Canada, was taken up. In the course of the discussion, the following statement was made:

Alderman Flye claimed that the foreigners seemed to get the preference of jobs in this country. For example, he said, a whole shipload of Germans had been brought direct to Montreal and sent to Churchill, where they had been given employment immediately, while hundreds and thousands of British citizens went idle.

The communication in which this clipping was enclosed is from the president of the St. Boniface Young Men's Board of Trade, who says:

[Mr. Bennett.]

We have been informed through the enclosed clipping that a shipload of Germans has been brought direct to Montreal and sent to Churchill where they have been given employment immediately.

I do not want to rouse a strong objection until I am positively sure of this being the case, so will you please ask the Hon. W. A. Gordon, Minister of Immigration, if he knows anything about this.

Has the minister any knowledge of this? Is this information correct, and if so, is it going to be the policy of the government, in face of the fact that we have hundreds and thousands of British citizens who are idle in this country?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigation): Could the hon. gentleman inform me when this shipload arrived? Does he know anything about the date of arrival?

Mr. HOWDEN: I have just a clipping giving an account of the meeting of the Winnipeg city council. It was on May 2, 1931, that this meeting was held.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): In regard to the port of Churchill, I might tell my hon. friend that no Germans or other nationals have come from any country in the world and been shipped to Churchill.

Mr. HOWDEN: I am glad to hear the answer of the minister. The duty devolved upon me to put the question to the house.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I promised yesterday to make a statement with regard to the operations of the Canadian farm loan board. This morning I had prepared a short memorandum, part of which I shall now submit to the house:

The Canadian farm loan board is constituted and operates as a body corporate and politic under the provisions of a special act of parliament which defines its powers and duties, namely, chapter 66, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927.

The members of the board are appointed for a term of years by order in council of the Dominion government. The administration of the board's activities, however, in each province is carried out through the agency of a provincial board of three members all of whom are the nominees of the provincial government. Provision is made also for the appointment of a fourth member to each provincial board who shall be the nominee of the borrowers in that province.

The Dominion government provided the initial financial assistance for the board in the form of advances of capital up to five million dollars which are free of interest for three years from date of advance.

That is to say, the government of Canada advances the money to the board which for the first three years is free from any interest charge in favour of the country; the country for the first three years gets nothing for its money. The memorandum continues:

The amount of the said advances, however, with interest, after the initial three-year period, at the rate of five per cent per annum, is repayable out of the earnings of the board. Subsequent loaning funds are obtained through the sale by the board of farm loan bonds issued on the security of mortgages held by the board on account of loans already made. These bonds do not carry the guarantee of the government and the payment of interest on the said bonds and the repayment of capital must be provided for by the board itself.

As a body corporate, the board under the act is empowered to issue capital stock. The subscribers to the said stock are limited to three classes:—

The Dominion government purchases stock of the board to the extent of five per cent of moneys loaned by the board;

Each provincial government subscribes to stock of the board to the extent of five per cent of moneys loaned in the province;

Each borrower subscribes to stock of the board to the extent of five per cent of the loan obtained.

All earnings derived by the board in the course of its operations, after providing the necessary reserves, are distributed to the shareholders in the form of dividends. Dividends on stock held by the governments, however, are limited to five per cent per annum, the borrower shareholders alone participating in dividends declared in excess of this amount.

In the interests of all shareholders, the Dominion government appoints a firm of chartered accountants to make an annual audit of the board's affairs and this report—

As perhaps the house will recollect:

—is tabled in parliament.

As protection to the interests of the provincial governments, provision is made under the act for the convening by the Minister of Finance from time to time of an advisory council consisting of the provincial treasurers and the chief executive officer of each provincial board to confer on matters relating to the administration of the board.

As an assurance to shareholders that the board shall not in its regulations exceed the powers given to it under the provisions of the act, the regulations of the board are subject to approval by the governor in council.

As is apparent from the foregoing, the whole scheme of administration and the financial structure of the board is entirely different from the structure of the provincial boards which are or have been operating in the various provinces of Canada.

In the case of the various provincial boards, loaning funds of the board have been provided either directly by vote of the provincial legislature or through the sale of government guaranteed securities and all the earnings of these boards in turn have been directly accounted for by the provincial board as received to the provincial government.

Assuming the loans had been made, and many have been, the next question is as to the policy of the board with respect to the collection of the interest and the principal. That question being asked yesterday, I asked the chairman of the board, Dr. J. D. MacLean, as to what that policy was, and he has submitted the following memorandum:

The policy of the board with respect to arrears, which recently went forward to the various provincial offices, is outlined in the form of a memorandum, as follows:

"The general policy of the board in dealing with cases of arrears must be framed along the following lines:

(a) In cases where there is actual inability of the borrower to pay, carry the borrower over for a reasonable length of time, provided,—

1. He is making an honest effort to pay and is giving the board equal consideration with other creditors.

2. There are reasonable prospects of ability to pay within a reasonable length of time.

3. The security is not deteriorating in value, and the amount of the board's loan plus arrears and unpaid taxes has not grown to an amount which jeopardizes the board's prospects of realizing by sales proceedings the amount of the board's investment.

Naturally, where the borrower's intentions are the best but where there is no reasonable prospect of the applicant improving his position either because of other liabilities or because of lack of farming ability, and where the postponement of action means no ultimate relief to the borrower there is no object in withholding the institution of sale proceedings.

(b) Where there is ability to pay but failure to do so, the failure of the applicant to furnish either satisfactory collateral security to secure payment within a reasonable length of time or to give other satisfactory assurance of payment should be followed by either a distress on chattels or the commencement of foreclosure proceedings whichever is, under the circumstances, most appropriate.

In view of the importance attached by head office to the necessity of following up collections in the early stages of the board's loaning operations we request that starting May 1st every superintendent forward a brief monthly report on each case of arrears."

That is the memorandum sent to the provincial offices. Dr. MacLean continues:

The provincial boards have placed on each borrower who has professed inability to pay the onus of giving to the board satisfactory reasons for an extension of time for payment. Each such borrower has been required to submit a statement of crop returns and a statement of receipts and expenditures covering the last year's operations and an up-to-date statement of assets and liabilities, with a view to determining whether or not a good case has been made out for an extension of time for payment.

All borrowers who have given what appeared to be reliable undertakings for future payment, or who, as the result of the year's operations, are actually financially unable to make a payment until proceeds of present year's crops are received, are granted the necessary extension of time. In cases, however, where the borrower has not displayed any inclination to cooperate with the board nor to give satisfactory information or replies to letters from the board, solicitor's collection letters have gone forward. In other cases, where there appears to be ability to pay but the failure to do so, distress warrants have been issued, to enforce collections.

I may say that in the province of Alberta, where we have the largest percentage of arrears at the present time, no foreclosure or sale proceedings have been instituted in any case up to the present time. Distress warrants have been issued in not more than ten cases, and in each case where such distress warrant has been issued the borrower has made a satisfactory payment very shortly after seizure was effected.

Solicitors' letters have gone forward in all provinces, however, to a percentage of borrowers who had failed either to carry out the promises previously made, or who had failed to make a satisfactory response to communications from the board.

The responsibility of collection rests with the provincial board of each province. Distress proceedings may be instituted by the provincial superintendent on the authority of the provincial board. Sale or foreclosure proceedings, however, are instituted only on instructions from head office upon the recommendation of the provincial board.

Reinspection reports on the securities held by the board in as many cases of arrears as possible will be obtained during the course of the present season.

I trust that two points are abundantly clear, two points about which there has, apparently, been some doubt: First, that the government of Canada is not responsible for the initiation of proceedings in connection with collections; secondly, that there can be no foreclosure proceedings taken or sale under foreclosure proceedings made unless the head office does give its authority. I think it is also patent to everyone that the board itself is an organization over which the government as such has no control; in other words, it is not an instrument of government; it is an organization created by a statute, and is discharging its statutory obligations with the assistance given by the governments of the country, federal and provincial, and by borrowers from the funds which it may have at its disposal.

In the Finance department this morning I received from Mr. Sellar the last report of the federal farm loan board of the United States for the year ending December 31, 1930, and I venture to read two or three lines from the opening pages of that report because I conceive them to be of some importance in this country where our experience has been limited as compared with the very large experience which the farm loan board of the United States has had in the conduct of business of this character.

The chairman indicates the effort made to —shall I say?—place the business of the board in politics by introducing measures in the House of Representatives that on the one hand would force action on the part of the board or on the other restrict its activities.

[Mr. Bennett.]

At page 5 of the report I find the following:

In this connection a number of bills and resolutions have been introduced in both houses of congress providing for the suspension of foreclosures by the federal land banks in certain sections of the country for varying periods of time or the extension of the time of payment of instalments on loans due the banks and authorizing loans by the government to the federal land banks to enable them to defer foreclosures. These measures in effect would result in the establishment of a moratorium on payments. The secretary of the treasury, in response to requests from the committees on banking and currency of the Senate and house for his recommendations, has reported adversely with respect to these proposals. In the opinion of the board measures of this character would impair the morale of borrowers generally, encourage delinquencies on a widespread scale, imperil the market for federal land bank bonds and do incalculable harm to the system. Incidentally it should not be overlooked that, as only about 12 per cent of the farm mortgage indebtedness of the country is held by the federal land banks, such measures, even if enacted into law, would not affect a large number of the farmers in the sections concerned.

The board is advised that many borrowers in a position to pay have not paid promptly because they understood that they would be granted extensions by law and that the banks would be prohibited from taking action for self protection. This presented an unfortunate condition, and it was a serious problem for the banks to correct these impressions and misunderstandings. For example, one borrower from a federal land bank pinned a newspaper clipping, announcing the introduction of a bill proposing an extension of the time of payment, to the notice which the bank had sent him regarding the instalment on his loan which was due and returned it to the bank without payment. In another case one of the banks received from a delinquent borrower a copy of a letter which had been written to him, pointing out that legislation had been proposed extending the time for making payments on loans and stating that some form of relief as to extensions likely would be made. A field man of one of the banks reported that he found "numerous cases of the least deserving just suspending their efforts to make the payment and feeling confident that they will be relieved." These instances are cited merely as illustrations of the effect that even the introduction and consideration of the proposals had in increasing the collection problems of the banks, which, of course, as stated above, must make all the collections possible in any event.

There is also in the report an extract from the recommendations of the secretary of the treasury, but I will not trespass upon the time of this house to read them. It will be observed the problem to which attention has been directed is not one peculiar to Canada, but one which has to be dealt with in every country where this form of organization exists. Fortunately or unfortunately in this case, so far as the government is concerned, we have no power to deal with the matter in the sense in which the question was asked yesterday.

Power must be exercised through the provincial boards, and I have every reason to believe that every possible consideration has been extended to borrowers who are also shareholders in the board for the purpose of enabling those who have hope and confidence in the future to carry on and succeed in deriving from their efforts such sums as will enable them to liquidate their obligations.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EFFECT OF SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 28 FOR THURSDAY, MAY 7

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Before the orders of the day are called I think it is desirable that there should be an understanding between the government and other hon. members of the house as to the business of the day. Last night at the conclusion of the sitting the question was raised as to the significance of standing order 28. That standing order is as follows:

28. On Thursday and Fridays when the order of the day is called for the house to go into committee of supply, or of ways and means, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair without putting any question, providing that, except by the unanimous consent of the house, the estimates of each department shall be first taken up on a day other than Thursday or Friday.

I assume therefore if order No. 5 is called, "House again in committee of supply," Your Honour will leave the chair without question being put. For that reason, as the matter is one which affects the privileges of the house, I wish to raise the point I do before Your Honour leaves the chair. Under standing order No. 28 I assume that with the exception of estimates which have been taken up on Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday, the government will not have the right to proceed, except by consent of the house, with estimates of any department other than those which have been discussed on those days. The only estimates which have been discussed on Mondays, Tuesdays or Wednesdays have been the estimates of the Department of Public Works, and the government would be perfectly in order to-day to proceed with the estimates of that department. If, however, the government were to proceed with the estimates of the Department of External Affairs they would have to have the consent of the house so to proceed. Last night I intimated that in order to meet a certain purpose to which the Prime Minister referred, so far as the official opposition was concerned we would consent to proceeding with the estimates of the Department of External Affairs, by the calling of a certain item to-day. I was surprised when I found that the Prime Minister felt he had a right to proceed to-day with the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. He apparently assumed such to be the case simply because yesterday we consented to allow him, for yesterday only, to take up an item in that particular department. Not only did we consent to take up the item but we consented to the passing of it. I am not raising this question for any factious reason or to embarrass the government. It is important that the privileges secured by rules to members of this house should be observed, and that advantage should not be taken by the ministry of any arrangement arrived at through courtesy in order to secure a right or gain a position which the rules of the house never intended the government of the day to have. If it will help to simplify matters for the government and at the same time to secure due the observance of the rules without embarrassment to anybody, I am content to say to my right hon. friend that if we proceed with supply and the Department of Public Works is concluded, I have no objection immediately to have taken up the items of the department of External Affairs. If the government wishes to take up external affairs estimates immediately for the purpose indicated we are quite prepared to give our consent that that should be done to-day. If when these two matters are disposed of, should there be no further business before the house, then if my right hon. friend asks for the consent of the house to proceed with another department we will seek to oblige him. However it is important I think that the rules as they are should be maintained. It should be understood that giving consent to-day for proceeding with the estimates of any other department would not be held to establish a precedent or a reason for the estimates of any such department being taken up on a subsequent Thursday or Friday unless in the first place, they had been considered, as the rules demand on a Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday. I see the embarrassment of the situation—

Mr. BENNETT: No embarrassment at all, not the slightest.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All right.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I felt quite certain there must be at least some misapprehension on the part of my right hon. friend or he would not have made the observations he did last night. To suggest that anyone on this side of the house desired that the rules should be abrogated or that other than the utmost good faith should be observed is I think most unfair and unjust. I resent the language used just now by the right hon. leader of the opposition when he implied that anything but the utmost good faith had been observed in connection with this matter. I now propose to prove to you, Mr. Speaker, and to this house that not only did I place the same interpretation upon our rules as the right hon. gentleman has now indicated but I took steps twice at least during the evening to make my position abundantly clear. If the house will be good enough to refer to page 1374 of Hansard it will be observed that immediately at the conclusion of the debate and the indication of the pairs, supply was called. The deputy speaker then took the chair. Whereupon, Mr. Bennett realizing he had no right to proceed except by consent, and having first of all crossed to the right hon. gentleman opposite and spoken to him, rose in his place and made the following statement:

Mr. Chairman, by consent of the house, I purpose to take an item in the Department of Trade and Commerce and also an item in the Department of External Affairs.

I would ask the house please to be good enough to observe those words, "by consent of the house". And I am not unfamiliar with rule 28, which says that, when the Speaker leaves the chair on Thursdays and Fridays, without any question being put, except by the unanimous consent of the house, the estimates of a department shall not be taken up unless that department has already had part of its estimates considered in committee on some other day. It therefore followed that having received unanimous consent of the house, I was in a position to proceed and I then used these words:

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) intimated his desire to speak to-morrow when the Geneva item is called upon the question of the rights of minorities in Poland. As the council of the league meets at an early date the hon. member should be afforded that facility if at all possible. If the house consents we will take a single item in the Department of Trade and Commerce, and then an item in the Department of External Affairs. From that point we will proceed with items in the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I can see no objection to expediting matters by taking an item in any single department, but to take two departments is perhaps going a little farther than is usual.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly, I have already said that. I replied:

[Mr. Bennett.]

The right hon. gentleman is quite correct. I remember that last year the estimates for the Department of External Affairs were put through very expeditiously, and my reason for suggesting consideration of the items in that department was to afford the hon. member for Vegreville an opportunity to speak, as the meeting of the council will be held at an early date.

Mr. Mackenzie King: If I understand the Prime Minister correctly, he does not intend to take up different items in the department, but rather to consider at this time only one item?

Mr. Bennett: Yes. We shall go on with the Department of Trade and Commerce, taking an item at this time so that it may come before the house to-morrow, thereby affording the hon. member an opportunity to speak.

Then the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce were taken up and an item was passed. At page 1376 an item of External Affairs was taken up, and hon. members will note the following discussion:

Right Hon. R. B. Bennett (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There is no change in this item either as to staff or amount involved, except the statutory increases.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Bennett: It is understood that the next item of External Affairs to be called, if the committee please, will be the League of Nations, Geneva, on which the hon. member for Vegreville wishes to make some observations.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Does my right hon. friend intend to go on with External Affairs to-morrow?

Mr. Bennett: Whatever my right hon. friend wishes.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I would prefer to leave it until next week.

Mr. Bennett: Then that will be the only item in External Affairs to be taken up to-morrow, the item dealing with the League of Nations.

Then we went on with Public Works, and when the business of the house for to-day was being considered the right hon. gentleman raised the question as to what estimates should be dealt with. At page 1379 will be found the following discussion.

Mr. Mackenzie King: May I ask my right hon. friend whether he understands the government will be free to go into Trade and Commerce estimates to-morrow if they wish to do so?

Mr. Bennett: My understanding is that we cannot take up the estimates of any new department to-morrow beyond those of Trade and Commerce, External Affairs, and Public Works, and that only one External Affairs item will be taken up namely that respecting the League of Nations, after which we shall take up Trade and Commerce. If we do not decide to continue until we finish that, then we shall take up an item on Public Works, the estimates of which are nearly all through.

Then my right hon. friend proceeded to quote the rule that he has just read.

What has happened is that we have made to-day a Tuesday for the purpose of going into supply, and Trade and Commerce is the item which we have considered, which we could not have considered otherwise than by consent of the house.

So all this difficulty might have been obviated by just looking at this single line:

—which we could not have considered otherwise than by consent of the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That applied only to yesterday.

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that. I said we could not have considered the item otherwise than by consent of the house. I continued:

It having been so considered and the house having further consented that External Affairs be taken up to enable the hon. member for Vegreville to speak about a particular matter, my submission is that the house has now before it three supply items; Public Works, Trade and Commerce, and External Affairs, and that having agreed to take up but one item in External Affairs to-morrow; we may go on with Trade and Commerce, because that item is now properly before the committee by consent of the house. It could not be otherwise.

I repeat that in my desire to sustain the rule I said again, now for the third time, that the item could not have been considered otherwise than by consent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Surely.

Mr. BENNETT: Except by consent. I sat in the position which my right hon. friend now occupies during a period of some three years and learned something in connection with the transaction of parliamentary business, and I recall very distinctly that a similar situation then arose. The difficulty at that time was to determine whether or not the result of the adjournment of a debate, either by reason of the eleven o'clock rule on an ordinary day or the six o'clock rule on Wednesday, was to carry the debate arising out of an amendment on going into supply to the next Thursday, skipping the Wednesday intervening, or to the next Tuesday. Last year we departed from a practice that had theretofore existed, and it was determined then that we should go forward into the next Tuesday unless by consent it was determined otherwise. So, first, there is no difference between the right hon. gentleman and myself with respect to the necessity of preserving the rule; secondly, the rule can only be abrogated by unanimous consent in the terms of the rule itself; thirdly, that consent was given yesterday. As a result of that consent the committee of supply is seized of the items relating to the Department of Trade and Commerce, and once it is seized of them, and the Speaker is out of the chair, supply then with respect to these items is before the committee. In other words, you cannot be out and in at the same time. That is all. The only difference—about which I think the right hon. gentleman has used somewhat stronger language than the facts would warrant—is with regard to what was covered by the consent. Not once, but three times, and almost a fourth time, I said except by consent we could not go on. With that consent we went into committee of supply, and my hon. friend from Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) followed my right hon. friend a moment later and said he thought we should deal with only one department. I said at once that we desired to deal with more than one branch at least, and that was because of my desire to accommodate the hon. member for Vegreville, for reasons which I made apparent.

Now once more if the house will be good enough to look at the rule it will be found that the difficulty suggested is more imaginary than real. This is the rule that:

On Thursdays and Fridays when the order of the day is called for the house to go into committee of supply, or of ways and means, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair without putting any question,—

That is to-day, Friday, he leaves the chair without question put.

—provided that, except by the unanimous consent of the house, the estimates of each department shall be first taken up on a day other than Thursday or Friday.

Yesterday, exactly within the terms of that rule, by the unanimous consent of the house, the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and the Department of External Affairs were taken up and an item passed in each, so that we come distinctly and positively within those very words "unanimous consent of the house." All that my submission was or ever has been is that that having been done, and to-day being Friday, on the Speaker leaving the chair, we have before us three departments, and three only, Public Works, Trade and Commerce, and External Affairs; and that it is competent to call items in any one of those departments because they are there, two of them by unanimous consent of this house, and that once being there they cannot be taken out except in the manner and form provided by the rules themselves, namely, after consideration when the committee of supply is determined and its report made. That is the position, otherwise no purpose would be served at all.

But I think the difficulty can be resolved very simply. Last evening we entered into a discussion before the Speaker. He had no jurisdiction because the matter cannot arise before him; it must arise in committee after the Speaker leaves the chair. Of course, it may ultimately be dealt with by him. I did not then treat the matter as other than a suggestion by the right hon. gentleman opposite as being one that involved the exercise by the Speaker of his official functions, because he could not at that time deal with it. I say to the right hon. gentleman that I am greatly obliged for the suggestion he made in the latter part of his speech. I would not have thought of taking up the time of the house in dealing with the matter had he not made his statement in the terms he did.

I assure him he will never have any cause to complain that the utmost good faith has not been observed by me or by anyone associated with me on this side in the transaction of business, and I am sorry he saw fit, in the light of the consent so graciously given yesterday on three occasions, which enable us to expedite the country's business, to have spoken as he has done. I did find it a little difficult to understand just why he should have taken the view he did. I find it more difficult now to imagine why he should animadvert on our motives in dealing with the matter in the way we did; but if we take up the item to which reference was made yesterday, that with respect to Geneva, and then proceed with public works, we will probably get through with that department. I do not see, however, how the Trade and Commerce estimates can ever be brought more before the committee than they now are, because unanimous consent was given to treat yesterday, Thursday, as though it was Tuesday and put the items before the committee of supply. That is the position.

I think that some confusion has arisen with respect to two things. Perhaps I was responsible for part of it in this sense, that I said the effect of the action was to make Thursday Tuesday. It was qua debate, because we could not debate the matter at all except by unanimous consent, and we regarded yesterday as Tuesday. Once the debate was ended I realized I could not go into supply on Trade and Commerce, and I went over and consulted with my right hon. friend, with the result that the matter was dealt with as indicated. On three separate occasions, and partially on a fourth, I said I could proceed only by unanimous consent, and it was on that basis, the unanimous consent of this house, that every step has been taken in dealing with this department. I am sure that on further consideration the right hon. gentleman will realize that not only was there neither intention, nor desire nor effort to take advantage of the consent thus given, but that, on the contrary, an endeavour was made to avail ourselves of that consent for the purpose of carrying forward what I believe was contemplated, namely, the transaction of the business of the country as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to prolong the discussion but there might as well be an understanding between the Prime Minister and myself as to further occasions of suspending the rules, which may have to be the result of arrangement between us. Last night my right hon. friend crossed the floor and spoke to me about taking up an item of External Affairs to-day in order to oblige an hon. member of this house.

Mr. BENNETT: And I said Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my right hon. friend said Trade and Commerce I did not hear or so understand him.

Mr. BENNETT: Last night.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Indeed, I was rather surprised that he mentioned it when he began speaking opposite. I would not have made the remark I did if my right hon. friend had spoken about Trade and Commerce.

Mr. BENNETT: No objection was taken to it in the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I read what my right hon. friend has said. I wish to repeat that the understanding between the Prime Minister and myself had relation to the taking up of an item of External Affairs. That was the understanding, at least when the right hon. gentleman spoke to me over here. When he crossed the floor again he made an announcement to the house in the words I am about to quote. He said:

> Mr. Chairman, by consent of the house I purpose to take an item in the Department of Trade and Commerce and also an item in the Department of External Affairs.

and so on. I replied:

> I can see no objection to expediting matters by taking an item in any single department, but to take two departments is perhaps going a little further than is usual.

I would not have made that observation had I had an understanding with my right hon. friend that two departments should be proceeded with. My right hon. friend replied:

> The right hon. gentleman is quite correct. I remember that last year the estimates for the Department of External Affairs were put through very expeditiously—and so on. Then:

> Mr. Mackenzie King: If I understand the Prime Minister correctly, he does not intend to take up different items in the department, but rather to consider at this time only one item.

Mr. Bennett: Yes. We shall go on with the Department of Trade and Commerce, taking an item at this time so that it may come before the house to-morrow, thereby affording the hon. member an opportunity to speak.

The house went into supply immediately, and before I had a chance to say a further word, I took advantage of the first favourable moment thereafter to point out to the Prime Minister wherein I considered he had misstated the arrangement between us. And I asked, before the adjournment of the house—

Mr. BENNETT: But we passed an item in Trade and Commerce without any objection from the right hon. gentleman. That is the real point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If that is the real point, let me answer it in this way. That item was dealt with by consent of the house to take it up yesterday and not to-day. Consent was given to take up Trade and Commerce yesterday, and to take up, as well, one item of External Affairs. But that consent applied only to Thursday, May 7, and not to Friday, May 8. That is the difference between my right hon. friend and myself. If the Prime Minister wished to have the consent of the house to go into supply on Friday, the 8th, on items other than those of the Department of Public Works he should have got specific consent for that purpose. But he must not assume that consent as having been given in virtue of a rule having been suspended to oblige an hon. member.

Mr. MANION: But what would be the use of passing one item of Trade and Commerce except to put the estimates into supply?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister might have wished to get through certain supply in Trade and Commerce, and as a matter of fact the house did vote an item for salaries covering the entire civil government in connection with that department. The point is this, however. The business so transacted yesterday was done in virtue of the suspension of a rule by unanimous consent, which gave the government an opportunity to disregard the ordinary procedure for that day but that day alone. The motion passed on May 6 was:

That the debate on the motion of the Minister of Finance that "Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself again into committee of supply" and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Brown, be resumed on Thursday, May 7th instant, and that standing order 28 be suspended on that day in relation thereto.

The Prime Minister has not read that motion to-day and it is the one in virtue of which we proceeded as we did yesterday.

Mr. BENNETT: That had to do only with the debate, and when the debate was through I immediately obtained consent to take up an item of Trade and Commerce in order that it might be open to-day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not going to argue the matter further. I should assume the Prime Minister is as anxious as anyone else to maintain the privileges of the house in these matters. I still contend that the understanding with respect to yesterday's proceedings had relation only to that day, and that so far as to-day's proceedings are concerned we are governed by standing order 28. We intend to proceed on that assumption.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I would remind the Prime Minister that yesterday I asked him whether he would be good enough to give instructions to the officials of the soldier settlement board to go easy on evicting soldiers under the present financial depression. He was kind enough to promise a reply to-day.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I intended to have mentioned that I was unable to get in touch with the minister this morning; he was engaged in some other work. But he will prepare a statement for Monday. I do not think there is any such thing as eviction being carried on.

Mr. NEILL: Perhaps that is not the right word. I believe it is referred to as the rescission of contracts, which has very much the same effect.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I may tell my hon. friend that the soldier settlement board is not adopting any attitude such as is suggested. I am sure that the board and the officials employed by them realize very well that this is no time to take any severe or drastic action with respect to any soldier or settler who is making an honest effort to remain on his farm.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE

FRENCH VERSION OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I wish to complete the answer given to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Raymond) as regards the French version of the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the year 1929-1930.

The hon. member for Beauharnois complained that he was unable to obtain the French version of the report in question. I must state that yesterday in leaving the house, I sent for the French version of this report and it was brought to me. The French version, therefore, is out and I even have a copy here at the disposal of the hon. member for Beauharnois.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Would it not be better to bring down both versions at the same time?

Mr. DURANLEAU: That may be. I do not know the custom followed in this respect, however I believe that the practice of past years has been followed this year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No; departmental reports have always been brought down in both languages.

Mr. RINFRET: Would the hon. Minister of Marine allow me to draw his attention to the fact that his approval appears on the first page of this report. I am therefore astonished that yesterday, although this report was approved by him, he did not know of its existence.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Geneva—Canada's contribution to the expenses of the League of Nations for 1931, including Secretariat, International Labour Organization and Permanent Court of International Justice, $205,083.94.

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): Mr. Chairman, now that a partial solution has been arrived at as to the question of minority rights in this house, may I be allowed to discuss a similar question in connection with the old country. On behalf of those people who asked me to sponsor the presentation of this minority question in this chamber, I wish to express my appreciation to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) for the opportunity afforded. I wish likewise to extend to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) my sincere thanks for his cooperation in this regard, and to the house an equal measure of gratitude for its unanimous consent in permitting this item to be brought down at this early date.

This is a matter of great importance not only to the 300,000 citizens of Ukrainian extraction who inhabit the various provinces of Canada but is one which is beginning to be generally recognized as a serious menace to international peace. I refer to the barbarous and inhuman treatment by Poland of her minority people. When one realizes that those not of Polish birth comprise one third of the population of Poland and out of a total population of 30,000,000, 7,000,000 are Ukrainians, that just across the border in southern Russia there are 30,000,000 Ukrainians who are sympathetic toward their compatriots residing in Poland, it is not hard to visualize the conclusions arrived at by a correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune, Mr. John Elliott, that the brutality of the Polish troops might readily become the "Thrust of a match under a powder magazine", which could easily give rise to a conflict such as was experienced in 1914. The nature of Polish activities in the western Ukraine has been widely broadcast in the world's leading dailies and newspapers, but nowhere has it been more truthfully portrayed than in a report by Miss Mary Sheepshanks, former secretary of the Women's International League. Her account of the Polish terror appeared in the Manchester Guardian of January 2, 1931, and this has been corroborated by thousands of letters which poured into Canada from old country Ukrainian relatives as well as by despatches of foreign correspondents whom the Polish ambassador at Washington had so rashly and unwittingly invited to go to Poland to see conditions for themselves. The following is the account of one who did go to see for herself:

Polish Terror in Galicia

We publish below extracts from the report of Miss Mary Sheepshanks on the atrocities perpetrated in eastern Galicia of which she made a special investigation on the spot. Miss Sheepshanks, who is a daughter of the late Bishop Sheepshanks, was at one time head of Morley college, then secretary to the "Fight the Famine" organization, and has for several years been secretary of the Women's International League at its headquarters at Geneva. Some of the details of her story make painful reading, but we have thought it necesary to publish it in full since it shows that our reports, whose accuracy has been officially denied by the Polish press bureau, in no way exaggerated the truth.

The Manchester Guardian, Jan. 2, 1931.

Personal Experiences

(Miss Mary Sheepshanks)

The events which led up to the severe repressive measures ordered by the Polish government were rickburnings carried out, it is stated, by schoolboys going through the country on bicycles. Instead of punishing the culprits it was decided to terrorize the whole population. The Ukrainian themselves believe that the repressive measures were ordered, not in consequence of the firing of crops, but in order to terrorize the population into voting for the government list in the elections.

The investigation of all these events is very difficult owing to the folowing ordinances:

Paragraph 1: Article 1.—Whoever intentionally gives such information or documents, or puts other objects at the disposal of strangers, which in the interest of the Polish state should be kept secret from the government of foreign states, is liable to a punishment of five years' imprisonment.

Paragraph 1: Article 5.—Whoever intentionally, or without authorization, collects information and documents or other material which are mentioned in article 1, or whoever attempts to obtain possession or to get information of such things, is liable to a punishment of three years' imprisonment.

Many persons are now in prison for mere possession of information with regard to damage done to persons and property. Houses are frequently searched by police, and the population is so thoroughly terrorized and in such actual danger of further reprisals that few will venture to make a statement that may lead to further floggings and imprisonment. Nevertheless it was found possible to interview a number of peasants and workmen from different villages. who were still suffering from the frightful beatings inflicted on them two months ago. In each case the general plan followed was similar, and showed clearly that it was ordered from headquarters. In some cases the attack on the village was made by cavalry, in others by police squads; the time chosen was generally night; the village was surrounded, machine guns set up. Some soldiers were detailed to levy contributions in live stock, grain, and sometimes cash from each household. Others forced the villagers to wreck their reading room, library and co-operative store, and for these operations they were not allowed tools but had to use their hands, which were often torn and bleeding, in fact used to the bone. They were then made to sign a declaration that they had carried out the demolition of their own free will. A third detachment rounded up the leading men of the village, especially the keeper of the co-operative store, the custodian of the reading room, and others, including the schoolmaster and the priest. These men were then driven into a barn, stripped, held down, and beaten with the thick sticks used for threshing. The beating was continued till the men lost consciousness; they then had cold water poured over them and the beating was resumed. Very often 200 or 300 blows were inflicted, so that the flesh was horribly torn, and in the case of the man we saw the wounds were still unhealed and raw after two months. In many cases bones were broken, in some cases death ensued. A woman from one of the villages told us how she had seen the beatings carried out, and how one young man who was being pressed to acknowledge that he had arms hidden at last, in frantic pain, said, in order to stop the flogging, that he had a gun hidden in his roof. The soldiers then went to look for it, and not finding it (it had never existed), they beat him to death.

This woman also told us how she saw a man dragged, after beating, along the roads, tied to the motor car of the officers. Women of the village were forced by soldiers to dress in their festal clothes, to provide wine and wait on the troops, and then to accompany them to the next village. Meanwhile the beaten men, bleeding and fainting, were thrown into a cellar, where they were left for 24 hours without attention to their wounds, and even without a drink of water.

In some cases women, children and very old men were flogged. We saw a boy of 13, whose leg was broken by the soldiers, and the bone was so injured and inflamed that it will not heal. We saw also a man of 63 who has now been ill for ten weeks as a result of his beating.

One terrible feature of the whole procedure was the refusal of medical treatment to the victims. Doctors were forbidden to go out of the towns to the villages, and peasants attempting to come into the towns for treatment were turned back by the police. In many cases the wounds have gangrened, and either death or lifelong injury has resulted. As is inevitable when a helpless peasantry is handed over to the armed soldiers and police to do as they like, numerous excesses of all kinds have occurred. A priest, Mandziy, after receiving 200 blows on the back and having water thrown over him, was then turned over and the police stamped on his chest and beat him on the belly and legs; in his agony he begged to be shot. The police were at the time cooking their meal near by; they took the boiling food and threw it over his wounds. Shortly after this his death was announced by the Polish press, but, unfortunately for himself, he still lingers on in torture. His sister, who lived with him, was then beaten and his house broken up.

In another village there was a Jewish doctor who wished to dress the wounds, but was forbidden to do so. The Polish hospitals have refused to take in the victims, and in many cases the local doctor has fled for fear of arrest, as several doctors found dressing wounds of the victims were imprisoned.

Evidence in support of this statement was given to us by doctors, and a list is in our possession of cases of wounds with names, age, and village of the victims. These include cases of necrosis, hemorrhage, broken ear-drums caused by blows on the head, and gangrene.

In order to prevent medical reports being drawn up the houses of Ukrainian doctors in the towns were searched by the police; even the jam-pots and children's toy-cupboards being searched for documents or photographs. Lawyers, too, were forbidden to take any action in defence of their clients. A number of persons injured, and whose property had been pillaged and looted by soldiers and police addressed themselves to lawyers in Tranopol. For merely taking down statements of their clients' cases they were seized by the police, who searched their houses. Five lawyers were imprisoned. In one case the wife, who acted as her husband's secretary, had helped in drawing up a statement. She was taken to the police station, stripped in front of the police, and imprisoned in various prisons for two months, then in despair and misery she refused all food and was finally released.

In another case the wife of a priest who was severely ill was told by the police to get up, and on being unable to do so was dragged from her bed and beaten until insensible. Her two daughters, aged thirteen and seventeen, were similarly beaten.

Besides damage to persons, immense damage has been done to property. The priest's house in many cases has been wrecked, the furniture and books destroyed. The village reading-rooms, libraries, and cooperative stores have been systematically destroyed. The priests were special objects of enmity.

Naturally, as in all such cases, there were attacks on women. We possess the names of persons and of villages who were mistreated in various ways, and we possess signed statements as to the damage done.

Evidence was also confirmed by other eye-witnesses of the events, women belonging to various women's organizations, by lawyers, deputies, doctors and clergy, in particular by bishops, who have so far been immune from personal violence, and who are in close touch with their clergy and with the inhabitants.

I have read Miss Sheepshanks' report, because I believe it is a true report. If I were to give instances of Polish terrorism, it is possible hon. members would not believe me, but this statement coming from one who has descended from a race that has always stood for humanity, truth and Justice, I do not believe can be in any way refuted.

In Miss Sheepshank's report there are several points to which I wish to draw the special attention of hon. members. In summing up the situation she says that five points must be emphasized. The first point which she mentions deals with the punitive expeditions sent into 800 villages to pacify the inhabitants thereof. Miss Sheepshanks writes:

> This so-called pacification has been carried out with a ferocity which can only be compared to the previous atrocities carried out in the early nineteenth century by the Bashi-Bazouks in the old Turkish territories.

The second point is:

> 2. These atrocities were not punishments inflicted for crime, but were inflicted without trial and wholesale on an entire population.
> 3. They were done by command of the government and carried out strictly according to plan, and were not merely the excesses of subordinates.

These points are borne out by the correspondents that were sent to western Ukraine on the invitation of the Polish government.

> 4. The victims were denied all medical assistance.
> 5. Every effort has been made to prevent the drawing up of any reports or statistics showing the extent of the repression.

These latter allegations have been corroborated by a former neurologist in the Canadian army. The following is his account as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press under date of December 24, 1930:

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

A story of appalling conditions existing to-day in East Galicia, where the Ukrainians, he said, are suffering persecution at the hands of the Poles, was told to-day by Dr. W. Frederick Dey, of Carslbad, Czechoslovakia, who is a guest at the Fort Garry hotel.

Dr. Dey, who was a resident of Winnipeg following the great war, practising here, has been in Carlsbad, the famous European spa, for the past four years, and is spending his Christmas and New Year's holiday in the city renewing old acquaintances.

In October Dr. Dey was a prominent character in the leading newspapers of central Europe. He told his story of the prominence he acquired in this instance to newspaper men to-day, remarking that the incident behind the news headlines brought him the greatest thrill of his life.

"While on a motor trip through eastern Galicia, I found conditions in this country very apalling." Dr. Dey related. "Ukrainians in many towns and villages were lined up and beaten severely by Poles for no apparent cause whatever.

"I went on a medical expedition. In one village I found 15 Ukrainian people who had been beaten. The Polish doctors refused to attend them and Ukrainian doctors who offered their aid were turned away. While I, with four other medical men, was attending these people, we were arrested and thrown into prison and accused of espionage. We could not communicate with each other, nor with counsel.

"An attempt was made to accuse us as revolutionists, German spies, Russian spies, revolutionary agents, or fake representatives of the League of Nations. However, after an incarceration of 24 hours, we were released through the aid of the British embassy and other officials.

"In the meantime, our living quarters at our homes had been searched, but to no avail, of course. It had been hoped, or expected that papers revealing our identity as revolutionary agents would be found. The incident brought us much publicity in central European newspapers, but we considered ourselves fortunate at not having met the fate of others who had been killed for similar alleged offences."

Dr. Dey is a well known figure in the city. Following the war, he acted as neurologist for the Canadian army and for the pension board.

The imprisonments referred to by Dr. Dey have been carried out in Poland on a great scale. When the prisons were full, the barracks and other buildings were requisitioned. "If," said Miss Sheepshanks, "as is stated by the Polish apologists, this whole affair has been much exaggerated, it is a matter for surprise that they resisted the attempts to ascertain the true facts."

The whole affair has not been exaggerated. Indeed, if my time were not so limited, I could relate to this house instances of Polish terrorism so atrocious, so barbarous and so brutal as to make one wonder why the wrath of God has not yet descended upon the vile perpetrators thereof in just punishment of their crimes. I fail to see, Mr. Chairman, what Poland has to gain thereby, for in the light of European history it has been repeatedly shown that only the most disastrous results come from a policy of forceful suppression such as is now being so horribly exhibited in eastern Galicia. But Marshall Pilsudski and his government of military "pacificators," refusing to profit by the mistakes of the past and shutting their eyes to the handwriting on the wall, have apparently decided to resort to the old imperialistic weapon of military invasion to "pacify" the inhabitants of his country and force conditions upon them which they cannot reasonably, manfully, humanly, righteously and honourably accept. It is exceedingly strange, Mr. Chairman, that the man who proclaimed so vociferously against similar conditions when Poland was dominated by Russia would apply a harsher discipline to subject races now under Poland. While it is true that he has on different occasions made a hypocritical show of political kindness, and that even now Polish apologists at the League of Nations and all over the world are quite clamorous about their desire for fair play towards their minorities, nevertheless it is the growing conviction of an ever-accumulating public opinion that the fair play which Poland offers is the fair play of the boa constrictor, which, having seized its prey and gorged itself, wishes to be left alone in order that it may digest it undisturbed. Such governments, Mr. Chairman, will go to any lengths in concocting excuses for the horrible conditions which exist in their respective countries, and they will stoop to any method in order to squelch the least sign of discontent among the national minorities, the range of their methods beginning with a political persecution undreamed of in Canada, and ending with physical tortures of their suspects of a nature such as one might expect, according to Miss Sheepshanks, from the Bashi-Bazouks of the 19th century. I anticipate, Mr. Chairman, that it will be very hard for hon. members present to believe in the existence of such methods, but nevertheless the allegations are quite true, and these things take place in a country whose representatives never miss the opportunity to assure the world at large of their high ideals and their humane feelings towards those who unfortunately come under their sway.

I have in my possession a letter concerning one, Mr. Filipowicz. In reply to an article on the Polish pogram, in the New York Herald-Tribune, the Polish ambassador in the United States, Titus Filipowicz, stated:

> Poland has a reputation in the world for liberalism and tolerance toward national minorities.

Here is the article to which I referred a moment ago:

Mr. Filipowicz

The following letter was sent on March 9, 1931, to Titus Filipowicz, ambassador of Poland, by the International Committee for Political Prisoners, New York City.

"Sir,—Last fall when we wrote you in protest against the persecution of Ukrainian peasants by Polish troops, your chargé d'affaires replied that these accusations were either "wholly untrue" or "grossly exaggerated." At that time it was further stated that our letter had been forwarded to Poland and that the specific charges which were made would be answered when a reply had been received. This was four months ago. We have not since had the courtesy of a reply.

"We are now moved to write you again because of the incredible statements reported in the press attributed to General Felician Skladkowski, Minister of the Interior, speaking before the Polish parliament on January 27, 1931. He is reported as having justified the methods of "pacification" of the Ukrainian peasants. His statements seem to us ample justification for the charges we made to you and which your chargé d'affaires denied.

"We therefore restate our former charge, together with others which have recently been substantiated, as a standing indictment of the present Polish regime.

1. Over 10,000 persons, including most of the Ukrainian representatives in parliament were arrested and imprisoned. Few, if any, were guilty of any crime. No attempt was made to discover the persons guilty of the alleged incendiary acts.

2. Brutalities unequalled in many years were inflicted on the entire Ukrainian population. Cavalry raids on over 500 villages wrecked homes, libraries, and cooperatives, etc. Many inhabitants were beaten into unconsciousness. In one known case a man who had received a severe beating, was dragged half-conscious for a long distance behind an officer's automobile.

3. Medical aid was refused to the victims, even in serious cases. Polish hospitals refused to care for the wounded.

4. All efforts to obtain data on the extent of these brutalities were opposed. Negley Farson, an American newspaper correspondent for the Chicago Daily News, was arrested for going to East Galicia in spite of the government's invitation to foreign correspondents "to go there and see for themselves." In an article which appeared in the Nation on January 7, 1931, he describes what he saw as follows:

". . . . In a makeshift hospital. . . . I saw eleven peasants in such a state that I could hardly bear to look at them. Their buttocks had been beaten to a pulp. Some of them had been lying there for five weeks, attended by the kindly nuns. Bandages were removed showing raw red septic sores some six inches in diameter that it seemed nothing less than extensive grafting could ever make whole again. They were merely a few from the hundreds of villages that had been "visited" by the soldiery. One man of sixty-two told me how the cavalry had ridden into his village driving the peasants before them like cattle. The peasants had been herded into a shed where twenty of the males were laid across planks and flogged with heavy sticks. Some of them got two hundred strokes. When a man fainted he was revived by dashing water on him and flogged again. Fifty other peasants were coming to this hospital to have wounds treated. Hundreds of other lay in far villages, unable to receive medical attention as the Ukrainian doctors who tried to get them out were arrested. This is a matter of fact.

"It is also a fact that not one of these people had a single charge against him. They had merely been 'pacified' by the Poles."

"We again lodge with you our solemn protest against such barbarous methods. Poland is bound to stand condemned in the eyes of the civilized world not only for such wholesale brutality and violence against a defenceless people but the further shame of the public justification of such procedure by a responsible minister of the government."

We are, Sir, on behalf of the committee,

Very truly yours,

Roger Baldwin,
Chairman.

One of the countries to come under the sway of Poland was the western Ukraine, comprising the provinces of Cholm, Pidlasie, Polissie, Volhynia, and eastern Galicia, all inhabited predominantly by Ukrainians. The storm centre of the present dispute, however, between Poland and the Ukrainians, is eastern Galicia, a part of that Galicia (Austrian Poland) which, in the words of M. A. Hallgren, in The Nation, of November 5, 1930:

—harboured Pilsudski after two insurrections that he led against Russian despotism in 1905 had failed. It was from Galicia that he continued to direct active resistance against the Czar and it was from the workers and peasants of Galicia that he drew his chief support when, with the elimination of the St. Petersburg autocracy and the defeat of the German and Austrian-Hungarian empires, his golden opportunity arrived and he was able to proclaim himself on November 12, 1918, head of the new Polish state. He made a mistake, however, in believing that he had all of Galicia behind him. The way to a unified Polish state was blocked not only by the bitter opposition of the landed nobility, the very landed gentry whose property his troops are now pretending to defend in Eastern Galicia, but also by fervent desire of the Ukrainian peasants and workers for national independence.

Taking the allied promises and the Wilsonian principle of self-determination at their face value, the Ukrainians on October 18, 1918, had established the west Ukrainian Republic with Lemberg as its capital. When the republic of Poland was proclaimed at Warsaw twenty days later the Ukrainians refused to yield their newly won independence to satisfy the ambitious Pilsudski, whereupon he sought to punish them by occupying Lemberg on November 22. The Ukrainian government fled to Vienna and eastern Galicia was brought into the new Polish state.

This military conquest of a people who had sought only to determine for themselves what sort of government they should have was ratified by the allies, although a vague promise of ultimate independence was still held out to the Ukrainians. The Peace conference assigned eastern Galicia to Poland for twenty-five years, with a provision for local autonomy. At the end of this period the League of Nations was to decide its future.

I might inform the house that Poland was thoroughly dissatisfied with the above arrangement because it did not coincide with her ancient imperialistic yearning for a united Poland from sea to sea. It was therefore the annexation of eastern Galicia, hook line and sinker, lock, stock and barrel, which they sought without any strings attached to it, or no annexation at all. So thoroughly has Poland been imbued with her centuries-old dream of empire that not even the stipulations affecting racial, religious or linguistic minorities contained in the treaty signed between Poland and the allied and associated powers on June 28, 1919, were ever intended to be carried out by her. Indeed, her main plea in the meantime had been, as it always was, the bogey of a bolshevist invasion. Whether this was or was not a motivating reason, we find the allies four years later rectifying and confirming the northern, southern and southeastern boundaries of Poland. Mr. Hallgren continues:

The Ambassadors' conference, sitting in Paris on March 14, 1923, took the opportunity to confirm in perpetuity the sovereignty of Poland over eastern Galicia, and in doing so to repeal the promise of independence, the twenty-five year mandate, and the provision for local autonomy.

The stolen province has proved somewhat indigestible. The history of its people in the past decade has paralleled the history of most European minorities, but with one notable departure. Other minorities have had mother countries to plead their cause at Geneva; the Ukrainians of eastern Galicia have had no one to speak for them before the League of Nations. According to American correspondents, their petitions and complaints invariably find their way to the scrap basket, as there is no one at the league secretariat who cares anything about these peoples.

While it is true that the League of Nations does not provide adequate facilities for the proper hearing of such cases it does not follow that these facilities should not be provided, and that these cases should not be heard. The universal plea for world peace demands a solution forthwith of the minorities question.

I have in my possession an extract from the Manchester Guardian in this respect:

The Polish terror in the Ukraine is now worse than anything else in Europe. The Ukraine has become a land of despair and desolation which is all the more poignant because the rights of the Ukraine have been guaranteed by international treaty, because the league has been altogether deaf to appeals and arguments, and because the outside world does not know or does not care.

I am quite aware, sir, that the avenues leading to a proper solution of this vital problem are full of impediments and obstructions, but they are by no means absolutely insurmountable. Our Canadian representatives to the League of Nations at least can do what lies within their power to secure an imperial commission to investigate and report on the alleged Polish atrocities. Canada was one of the signatories of the 1919 treaty between Poland and the allied and associated powers guaranteeing certain rights to minorities, and should therefore ask that these rights be observed. This matter has already been considered by the parliament of Great Britain, as is shown by the following editorial culled from the Manchester Guardian of December 17, 1930:

Ukrainians in Poland

M.P's Petition to League

Mr. Henderson Asked To Take Action

Nearly sixty Labour and two Liberal M.P's have signed a petition which they ask Sir Eric Drummond, the secretary general, to lay before the League of Nations on behalf of the Ukrainian minority in Poland, alleging infractions, and the threat of further infractions, of the treaty signed between Poland and the associated allied powers on June 29, 1919, and placed under the guarantee of the League of Nations. They ask that the league council call a committee to consider the petition and for an impartial inquiry into the facts.

With the petition the signatories sign a statement on the Polish elections and the Ukrainian minorities in Poland, to be presented to the foreign secretary, Mr. Arthur Henderson. This registers a protest against the undemocratic methods employed by the Polish government in the recent elections, both for the Polish sejm and for the Silesian diet. Whilst admitting that the elections are on internal matter, we are asking you to use your influence through diplomatic and other channels in the direction of democratic government and an immediate release of political prisoners.

The statement asks Mr. Henderson to raise the question of the treatment of the Ukrainian minorities before and during the elections with the League of Nations, and "with regard to the terrorism which is reported to have been taken place on the German-Polish frontier" requests him to ask both parties to refer their differences to a conciliation commission allowed by the Locarno treaties.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Was any action taken by the British House of Commons?

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: They have appointed a committee of three which is looking into these provisions. I do not know what the result of their meetings has been, but I understand the council will sit sometime in May and that the whole matter will be discussed at that time.

Mr. BENNETT: On May 11.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: The above petition deals with the alleged infractions of the treaty signed on June 28, 1919, between Poland and the associated and allied powers. It also calls for a committee to consider an impartial inquiry into the facts. From information that I have gathered from the Ukrainian Veterans' Association, the Ukrainian Self Reliance League, the personal experiences of Miss Sheepshanks and Doctor Dey, the accounts of foreign correspondents in Poland, as well as from other reliable sources, I have no doubt that there are very serious infractions of the provisions of that treaty. As proof thereof witness the diabolical methods of racial extermination revealed by Miss Sheepshanks. The manner in which the punitive expeditions referred to in her report were carried out against the Ukrainian minority in Poland, the fiendish application of collective responsibility for individual acts of unsubstantiated sabotage, the wholesale punishment of innocent men, women and children—all constitute an absolute infringement of the following provision of article 2 of the above treaty:

Poland undertakes to assure full and complete protection of life and liberty to all inhabitants of Poland without distinction of birth, nationality, language or religion.

Miss Sheepshanks says that the repressive measures were ordered not because of individual acts of incendiarism but in order to terrorize the population into voting for the government list in the elections. Imagine what would happen in Canada if any party tried to gain power that way. Otherwise why should these expeditions have been sent into villages where no acts of sabotage or incendiarism had ever occurred? Why were 20 Ukrainian members of the Polish Senate arrested and subjected to frightful treatment in a Polish prison? Why was election literature in favour of Ukrainian candidates prohibited, ballot boxes plugged, voters terrorized and struck from lists, and election candidates imprisoned without charge or trial, if it was not to facilitate the election of Pilsudski and his bloodthirsty henchmen? Is it not, sir, a plain violation of article 7 of the above treaty which provides that:

All Polish nationals shall be equal before the law and shall enjoy the same civil and political rights without distinction as to race, language or religion.

The methodical terrorization of the Ukrainians included the indiscriminate extermination of athletic and reading clubs, cultural and economic associations, and schools, both public and private.

Notwithstanding the stipulation under article 9, ensuring the use of the Ukrainian language as a medium of instruction in the primary schools, I might add that out of over 3,000 Ukrainian schools that existed when Poland took over Eastern Galicia, only about 400 survived her tender care; and out of 17 Ukrainian high schools, the few that are left are being gradually forced to succumb to the influence of a harsh and methodical Polonization.

The Ukrainian colleges—

Says a correspondent.

—affiliated with the Lemberg university were closed and the Ukrainians applying for admittance were put on quota and were asked to sign very humiliating declarations.

These shameful conditions caused the scattering of the Ukrainian students seeking higher education all over Europe, while many of them, not being able to finance themselves in other countries of Europe, were forced to form a secret Ukrainian university, which was incessantly persecuted by the Polish police. It was quite a usual occurrence for whole classes of students to be arrested en masse and paraded through the city to jails to the accompaniment of the jeers of the Polish populace.

On taking over the Ukrainian territories, the Polish government signed a special pledge to create a separate Ukrainian university by the end of October, 1924. So far the government has not even voted enough money to buy a load of bricks for that university. Just imagine! Seven million Ukrainians carrying one-third of the burdens of the state,—without a university."

Churches, libraries, reading rooms, and economic institutions present the same deplorable picture. If hon. members could for a moment visualize the Royal Canadian Mounted Police demolishing our places of worship, the public libraries, the homes of our families, the central wheat pool office in Winnipeg and all other cooperative buildings in the west, they would get some idea of the terrible and wanton destruction of property that is being carried on in eastern Galicia. What makes the situation more tragic is the fact that the very proprietors of these dearly acquired possessions were forced by the Polish Uhlans to pull down their own buildings and perform all this destruction on their own property. A dispassionate observer of these uncalled for depredations is reported to have said:

If the Poles were as capable of building as they are of destroying there would be no need for such excesses in Poland.

I regret that I cannot complete my remarks for lack of time.

The CHAIRMAN: By unanimous consent the hon. member may proceed.

Mr. BENNETT: By the brief intervention of a single member it would be possible for the hon. gentleman to go on again.

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: May I quote the Polish Ameryka Echo, published at Toledo, Ohio. In its issue of November 30, 1930, it has the following:

All those punitive military expeditions into peaceful Ukrainian villages, in particular, into villages where no acts of sabotage were committed, have, by their savage conduct, beatings and tortures of innocent people, achieved this —that Poland has alienated the whole civilized world, while the Ukrainians have been made her irreconcilable enemies.

With respect to this charge of incendiarism, allow me to read an article that appeared in the Daily Illustrated Courier of October 4, 1930. I may say that this is one of the most widely circulated and the most extreme chauvinistic newspaper in Poland. It says:

For some months we have been calling the attention of the public to the fact that the recently observed insurance policy, based upon the increased valuation of movable goods and carried on for the purpose of securing higher premiums, gives a direct incentive to incendiarism. The facts of daily experiences now confirm our prediction of consequences, which can to-day be observed in every part of Poland. . . . . Conflagrations have recently assumed great dimensions. In a whole series of municipalities the farms of large estates or the corn-stacks standing on such estates have been victimized. It is significant to note that in the majority of cases the persons found guilty of originating the fires have been none other than the owners of the damaged objects. The fires were crimes of arson perpetrated for gain.

This quotation, as I say, comes from the most chauvinistic newspaper published in Poland. It will be observed that it says that these burnings were not limited to any particular district where the Ukrainians were predominant, but happened throughout the length and breadth of Poland.

My time, sir, is too limited to go into any detail with respect to this greatest of modern persecutions. Suffice it to say that humanity, truth and justice demand that this bestial policy of national extermination shall cease forthwith. Hon. members will no doubt be told that the reasons for these military visitations was merely to "pacify" the inhabitants of western Ukraine; but how the Nero of modern time, Marshal Pilsudski, can justify the excesses of his debauched and degenerate soldiery is beyond all comprehension. For in the light of all that is human and ethical, in the light of our standards of what is right and just, this attempt by Poland to liquidate the Ukrainian question by means of physical torture and complete destruction of cultural and economic possessions, this attempt to divest by forceful means a minority of seven million Ukrainians of a natural and elemental attachment to their religion, language, and culture, will go down in history as one of the most hideous, despicable, heinous and diabolical crimes ever perpetrated on a defenceless, peaceful and self-respecting people.

How can this house justify the murder of defenceless women and children? How can this house justify the wanton demolition of public and private property? In a word, how can this house justify the cunningly planned extermination of a whole race merely to gratify the insatiable and historical appetite for lust and rapacity of a ruling class that has always been stigmatized as the most reckless, dissipated, cruel and incompetent in Europe?

The world cannot expect the Ukrainians to sanction their own crucifixion; on the contrary it would be surprising if they did not use every effort to take the bleeding body of western Ukraine off the cross while life still exists and place it in the hands of a competent world physician for restoration to health and well being; for every race has the right to live according to its rights and traditions, and certainly no reasonable person will condemn the Ukrainians on this score for their unwillingness to commit national suicide.

The League of Nations has the necessary restorative powers if it only cares to exercise them. According to a treaty signed between Poland and the allied and associated powers, she was bound by guarantees to grant the Ukrainians equal political rights, local self-government, and full freedom with regard to church matters, cultural, educational and economic development. These pledges and obligations were assented to and signed by the representatives of the Polish Government with a great flourish and with many promises to live up to them. But as soon as the Poles found themselves firmly entrenched in their domination of the whole country these same pledges and obligations were relegated to complete oblivion. In view therefore of the gravity of the situation and of the existence of a treaty binding Poland to certain minority guarantees, to which Canada was a signatory, I respectfully urge on behalf of three hundred thousand Ukranians resident in Canada that this matter be submitted to the council of the League of Nations in order that that body might institute an impartial inquiry by appointing a commission to investigate the whole situation in eastern Galicia, and take whatever steps it deems necessary to safeguard the rights of minorities in Poland.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): No doubt the house expects the government to make a statement at once with respect to a matter of this character. That my hon. friend (Mr. Luchkovich) should bring the matter to the attention of this house, having regard to the fact that Canada is a member of the League of Nations and that, as he has told us, he himself has a personal interest in those concerned, is of course not surprising. But the extent to which this house may interfere or deal with such a question is an altogether different matter.

Years ago the parliament at Westminster considered alleged atrocities in Bulgaria and other parts of Europe. It has not been unusual at Westminster for members to discuss the treatment accorded by a country to certain classes of its citizens. In this country it is perhaps within the memory of all who have read the debates of the past that so eminent an authority as the Hon. Edward Blake, to say nothing of the Hon. John Costigan and others, thought that this house had full right and authority to pass resolutions with respect to Ireland. But in this instance Canada occupies a different relation to Poland and to other parts of the world from that which it did prior to the great war. Canada is a member of the League of Nations, and that being a tribunal in one sense, and having power to set up tribunals in another sense, which it has done, it would appear to me that all that can be done is to bring to the attention of that body, of which we are a member, the fact that certain representations have been made. It must be in the mind of every hon. member of this house that there are conflicting views as to what has transpired in Poland. On the one hand, the allegations to which my hon. friend has referred have been given wide publicity through the press and otherwise. On the other hand, Poland has been equally strong in her denials. Poland has declared that what was done was to stamp out incendiarism and various other offences in the communities affected. It is not for me, or, in my opinion, for this house to pass judgment upon the sufficiency of the evidence to establish either the charge, on the one hand, or the defence, on the other. But it might be important to direct attention to the fact that, in the very nature of things, it was to be expected that in the treaty of peace, when full regard was not had to self-determination in the sense in which that term was thought to be used by those in authority, some provision would be made safeguarding the rights of minorities. Accordingly, Article 8 of the treaty of Versailles, signed on July 28, 1919, provides that:

> Polish nationals who belong to racial, religious or linguistic minorities shall enjoy the same treatment and security in law and in fact, as the other Polish nationals. And particularly they shall have equal right to establish, manage and control, at their own expense, charitable, religious and social institutions, schools and other educational establishments, with a right to use their own language and to use their religion freely therein.

That right, conceded to the minorities in what is now Poland, or the larger Poland that resulted from the military operations in eastern Galicia, is the basis of the claim now made to the League of Nations.

There arises, then, the question as to how those rights may be protected by the League of Nations. And that question is one of very considerable difficulty. The truth is that no general system of jurisprudence has been established applicable where there are racial or linguistic or religious rights that are in any sense assailed or attacked. All that the league aims to do is to facilitate the solution of the problems that arise out of the existence of minorities in certain countries that enjoy the benefit of the provisions of treaties of peace and other treaties to which I might refer.

Now, the executive organ of the league is its council; and the council of the league from time to time, when cases are presented for its consideration, remits inquiries to committees or bodies of experts to make the necessary investigations. Petitions, of course, have been sent to the league from Canada, and large numbers of persons in this country have signed them. The hon. gentleman states that three hundred thousand Ukrainians in Canada are affected. These Canadians finding their kinsmen and relatives complaining of breach of the treaty, have of course appealed to the League of Nations to safeguard the rights, as they conceive them, of their kinspeople in Poland. The council has laid down certain rules with respect to petitions and their receivability. These petitions:

(a) Must have in view the protection of minorities in accordance with the treaties;

(b) In particular, must not be submitted in the form of a request for the severance of political relations between the minority in question and the state of which it forms a part;

(c) Must not emanate from an anonymous or unauthenticated source;

(d) Must abstain from violent language;

(e) Must contain information or refer to facts which have not recently been the subject of a petition submitted to the ordinary procedure.

These are the requirements with respect to petitions. Now, from 1923 to 1930, it is idle to deny that there has been a great conflict in Poland between what you might call the Ukrainian nationalists and the Polish authorities; and in 1930 the agitation reached a point which it had not previously touched. The results, as indicated by the Polish authorities and the Ukrainians, have certainly been very contradictory. On the one hand, the Polish authorities say they have restored law and order and have stamped out incendiarism and offences of that kind. On the other hand the Ukrainians have represented, as the hon. gentleman has just observed, that what has happened is part of a campaign for the destruction of their nationality. On that state of facts it became necessary for the council to take some action, and so in the end a committee of inquiry was set up, which committee is now functioning, consisting of representatives of the United Kingdom, of Norway and of Italy. It has met twice during recent weeks and I understand will meet again before submitting its report to the sixty-third session of the council, which is to meet in Geneva on May 18. This committee is making the necessary inquiries to enable the council of the league to be seized of the facts and to determine what, if any, action should be taken.

Under these circumstances I am sure the hon. gentleman will be the first to see that we in this parliament, of all places in the world—Canada being a member of the league—cannot take any action at this moment for by so doing we deny the authority of the very organization to which we belong, as we ourselves were parties to the setting up of the committee for the purpose of taking the action suggested. We cannot say that the committee will be ineffective or insufficient; we cannot, it seems to me, do more than support the council in any action it takes—it being a body of which we are a member—for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of the allegations made. I need hardly repeat that the Polish authorities have denied in very unequivocal language the accuracy and truthfulness of the charges made against them.

There is one other fact to which I think attention should be directed, and it is this: recently large numbers of petitions have been sent from this country to the league at Geneva. Recently one of the petitions was denied on the ground that the matters therein alleged had already been presented to the league and were now under consideration by the committee to which I referred. Within the last ten days the government has been advised that the petition forwarded by the Ukrainian Self Reliance League of Canada has been declared irreceivable because it contains no information not already included in seven petitions which are at present receiving the consideration of the committee appointed at the last council in January to examine Ukrainian charges of treaty violations.

I think the hon. gentleman has discharged to the full his obligation and responsibility to those in Canada who are affected, and however strong may be his views, he must, and I think he will, like all of us, realize that this is not the tribunal which can hear the defence of those who are charged with these offences. That tribunal is one which we in common with other members of the league have set up to make a report upon the facts. When that report is made the council will take such action as may be necessary to enforce the claims of the minorities to the extent that their rights have been violated.

May I say in conclusion that the House of Commons of Canada has to be doubly careful to-day, more so than was necessary in days gone by. In the past we could readily make declarations touching upon and affecting the rights of peoples in other countries, but at the moment, having submitted to the jurisdiction of the League of Nations and having exercised with pride a very considerable influence in that body, we must in the very nature of things be careful that what we do does not reflect upon the action taken by a body of which we are a member, and especially in connection with a charge that one of our fellow members has failed to recognize its responsibilities. Our responsibility is to strive to see that such action is taken in the council as will protect the rights of minorities under a treaty which ensured their rights and, at the same time, to do so in such a way as not to cast discredit or suspicion upon the body known as the League of Nations, in which, as I have said, we are members and which is charged with responsibility under the treaties. It is for that reason I think we must speak with, shall I say moderation, and that all we can usefully do is to press upon the council the necessity of taking such prompt action as will ensure the vindication of the rights of those who claim they have been deprived of the privileges to which they are entitled under the terms of the treaty. In doing that I am sure we will have the assistance and support of our fellow members in the league; for experience has shown, and the record of the proceedings of the league has indicated, that in every instance where a matter of this kind has been brought to the attention of the council and a committee has been appointed and a report made, it has not been slow or hesitant to take such action as the necessities of the case warrant.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, some of my Ukrainian friends asked me to support the proposal of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich). To this request I very gladly acceded because it seems to me that we have here a matter which is of such importance to a large number of our fellow Canadians that we cannot afford lightly to pass it by. I know there are some who will say: Why should a matter of this kind be discussed in the House of Commons? I think we have the best answer in the fact that we have in Canada some 300,000 Ukrainian-Canadians. Let me remind the committee that that number is almost four times the population of Prince Edward Island. Few people in eastern Canada recognize how important that population is to Canada and how necessary it is for us to see that they have no grievance.

There is a possibility that this discussion may tend to intensify the racial feeling which exists already between the Ukrainian and Polish communities in Canada. I recognize that danger, and anyone who has lived among the Ukrainians and Poles will recognize it also. Some have felt that we ought not to open this question, but in discussing this matter with my Polish friends—I have a number of Polish friends in Canada—as well as with my Ukrainian friends, I have tried to put it to them that after all the Polish people resident in Canada are not distinctly responsible for the acts of the Polish government and that, therefore, they should not take the matter in any personal way. I have taken the position that true patriotism does not consist in justifying the government of my country, "right or wrong." Last year I mentioned some of the atrocities which according to my information were being perpetrated in India, and some people rather resented the fact that I should mention those things in the house. Some of the newspapers were kind enough to suggest that I was anti-British and raised these questions because of some anti-British feeling. That is not so, because these matters are being freely discussed in the British papers. In England it is a matter of the policy of the British government and I take it I am a true Britisher when I try to remedy those things which I find to be evil. I do not take the ground that we in Canada have any special responsibility with regard to the conditions in India; but being members of the league, we are interested in a general way and we should assume our share of the responsibility In my judgment, we are truly patriotic when we seek to remedy any evils which may exist in our country or for which our governments may be responsible. I think my Polish friends in Canada will come to look at this matter in that way; for many of them are as deeply shocked as anyone else at what they read as to what is going on in the old country. In this connection I could not but think of what was said many years ago. Franklin asserted at one time: "Where liberty is, there is my home;" to which Thomas Paine replied: "Where liberty is not, there is my home." It seems to me that in our interrelated world every one of us is responsible to a certain degree for whatever goes on in any part of the world. That is the situation which we are coming to realize more and more clearly. We cannot disregard our responsibilities toward humanity.

Let me urge, too, that in the house we should show an interest in our fellow Canadians of other races. We of Anglo-Saxon stock or we of Latin stock have our own particular problems. I think every Canadian must recognize that we of the English-speaking group ought to try more than we do to understand our fellow French-Canadians. I regret exceedingly it is difficult for some of us who are unable to speak French, especially those of us who are middle aged, to enter into the cultural life of our French-Canadian fellow citizens.

But this is what I should like to impress upon the house, that long before we have developed a thorough-going understanding between the French and English portions of our community, we have had thrust upon us those other and exceedingly complicated problems which have arisen on account of the very large immigration to this country of peoples from various countries of Europe. If we are to succeed in incorporating these different peoples into our Canadian nationality, we shall have to try to the utmost to have a better understanding of them than most of us have at the present time. I wonder if I might refer to a book that has recently been published. I do this for the benefit of some Canadians who may not know of it. It is entitled The Ukrainian Canadians, by Charles H. Young. Doctor Helen R. Y. Reid, of Montreal, in writing a foreword to this book, says:

> Finally the committee believes that a positive change of mind and attitude on the part of old Canadians towards the new Canadians is both due and necessary, not only for the unity of the country and for the development of a healthy Canadian spirit, but also for the promotion of international friendships and world peace. A racial study such as this which we now offer would provide for a better understanding of the values, cultural and economic, contributed by each race to our Canadian civilization, and should, therefore, make for the establishment of better relations between the old and the new peoples of Canada.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

I think we have a really significant incident to-day when the hon. member for Vegreville, the first Ukrainian to sit in this Canadian house, comes to us and asks us to take up a matter which is of vital concern to that group from which he comes. This is an indication of a new condition into which we are emerging. It is an earnest of what may be possible in the future, that instead of these grievances being hidden away and talked about in secret, a prominent and well educated Canadian of Ukrainian stock can come into the House of Commons and from his seat present what he believes to be a matter of vital concern to the national group from which he comes.

Some of our Canadians I find take this attitude; let these people who come to us leave the old world behind. I confess sometimes I have a little bit of sympathy with the feeling that we should leave Europe behind and build up a new civilization on this North American continent. But I would point out that Britishers have not done that, and when the great war arose in Europe, tens of thousands of British born went back to their homes in order that they could, as they thought, defend the motherland. I would suggest that the man who forgets his fatherland and who is indifferent to the welfare of his own brothers and sisters will not make a very good Canadian citizen. We ought to bear that in mind. I have heard those who say: Let these people remember they are Canadians; let them forget the old country. Surely in this country we value men who do not forget the old, but rather bring with them the very best of the old. You cannot divest yourself of the old associations and traditions and be worth anything. The Englishman remembers the country from which he came; the Scotchman remembers the country whence he came. We value them because of that. The same thing is true with regard to Ukrainians or peoples of other nationalities who have thrown in their lot with us.

Let me say this with regard to these Ukrainians who have come to Canada: more than 10,000 of them voluntarily enlisted from western Canada at the time of the great war. If you talk of loyalty, that surely is an indication of loyalty to British institutions and as they conceived it and as most people did at that time; they were willing to answer the call which went forth. Just in passing, let me say I think it was one of the most disgraceful things that we on our part did not understand the situation, and while those 10,000 young men were enlisting, we deliberately disfranchised many of their fathers and brothers. This just indicates the lack of knowledge and lack of sympathy that we have in regard to these newer Canadians. One of my Ukrainian friends said at the time; "You call us enemies of Breat Britain, we who are from Austria. Austria was an enemy of ours long before she was an enemy of Great Britain." I felt I could but hang my head in shame as I saw the way in which we misunderstood and mistreated these people. Not that we did it deliberately, but we did it ignorantly. Now the time has come when we shall have to take these racial and social questions more seriously.

Let me point out that if these matters in Europe are not settled on principles of justice, we are bound to have difficulties arising in this country because these old world difficulties will be reflected here. Out in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, there often occur community quarrels. Why? Simply because the Ukrainians are reading Ukrainian papers, the Poles are reading Polish papers, the Germans are reading German papers, and so on, and they are following in detail all these things that are happening in the old country. If peace and justice are not established in Europe, we shall have the same old battles fought out in this country. When we so readily accepted hundreds of thousands of immigrants from Europe, we did not know all the responsibilities which we were going to have to shoulder because of their coming here. The Europeans are here and we shall have to deal with the different problems which their coming presents.

Looking at the matter from a broader standpoint, I take it that we Canadians must come more and more to think internationally. The forefathers of most of us Canadians of the older stocks lived here before us for several generations in comparatively isolated communities. We were removed from the main world currents. But particularly since the war we have been drawn into those currents and when after the war Canada became a member of the League of Nations, we definitely took upon ourselves international responsibilities. I am not quite sure that the Prime Minister was correct in his statement with regard to what it was possible for us as a nation to do in this matter. Let me point out that according to the treaty, article 11:

It is also declared to be the friendly right of each member of the league to bring to the attention of the assembly or the council any circumstance whatever affecting international relations which threatens to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the hon. member realizes that I am aware of that provision, but action has already been taken. The petitions having been presented and the committee set up, I said that we should not prejudge a matter that was sub judice.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Prime Minister may be technically correct, but, after all, these petitions were presented by private individuals.

Mr. BENNETT: By organizations, as well.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The petitions were presented by private organizations. I am not suggesting that we in this house can decide whether the charges made can be substantiated or not; but it does seem to me that we as a nation might make our representations to the League of Nations, either to the assembly or to the council. I think that that is a possibility under the clause which I have read.

Mr. BENNETT: They were made—in January last—and the committee was set up in accordance with the representations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But if I am rightly informed, they have been made by private organizations, and not directly by the government.

Mr. BENNETT: But Canada's representatives were a party to the representations. The petitions were submitted; some were received, some declined; and the committee was set up in consequence of the complaints made.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It may be that we have done all that we could. My submission would be that under clause 11 it is still competent for this house to take action and make representations with regard to this matter. Let me read one other clause of the Treaty of Peace. This will be familiar to the Prime Minister, but perhaps not so familiar to all the members of the house. Article 23 reads:

Subject to and in accordance with the provisions of international conventions existing or hereafter to be agreed upon, the members of the league:

(a) will endeavour to secure and maintain fair and humane conditions of labour for men, women, and children, both in their own countries and in all countries to which their commercial and industrial relations extend, and for that purpose will establish and maintain the necessary international organizations.

So I take it that we are quite within our rights in taking any opportunity that we can of representing to any other nation any conditions which are liable to cause a breach of international peace, or of bringing to their attention any conditions which may bring hardship to any section of the community.

I am not going to follow the hon. member for Vegreville in any detail. I think he has shown that there is very good ground for believing that the rights of the minorities in Poland have been violated and that the treaty has been broken. Let me point out that, after all, Poland itself is more or less an arbitrary creation. The Poland that we have to-day is not the Poland that once existed, and I think that this new state is one of the big blunders of the peace treaty. We have set up a country with centralized powers, and we have relegated the minorities in that country to a very inferior position indeed. But aside from this, it seems to me that there is abundant evidence to show that the treaty has not been strictly observed. I think there is a sort of presumptive evidence to that effect in the fact that there has been a great deal of difficulty experienced by other minorities in Poland. The members of the house may remember that the German minority have had trouble with the Polish government. Some months ago a committee was set up to deal with the charges brought by the German minority in Poland, and this was the report of the committee. I read from the "Monthly Summary of the League of Nations" for January, 1931, dealing with the sixty-second session of the council:

The Japanese representative, M. Yoshizawa, submitted a report on the position of the German minority in the Voivodies of Silesia, Poznan and Pomorze. The report, which was adopted by the council on January 24, 1931, reads as follows:

I shall make only two or three excerpts:

I should now like to consider the second element in the question, namely, that relating to the attacks alleged to have been made on the persons and property of members of the minority. The "Volksbund" petition gives a detailed account of 255 cases of this kind. I do not think I should now enter upon a detailed consideration of these cases. No one has denied that attacks of this kind took place, and that such attacks were sufficiently serious and widespread to justify the conclusion that there was in numerous cases an infringement of Article 75 and 83 of the Geneva Convention.

Then further:

As to direct responsibility—the Polish government has informed us that all the cases mentioned in the "Volksbund" petition have been the subject of thorough inquiry. We are told that as a result of those inquiries 125 cases were brought before the courts, that in 28 cases the public prosecutor of the republic instituted proceedings, and that in 10 of these the competent courts have already pronounced judgment. It is stated that disciplinary action has been taken against 17 officials.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Again:

Further, the council will desire to receive from the Polish government, before its next session, a complete and detailed statement of the results of the inquiries ordered in these different cases, and also of any penalties imposed and measures for compensation that may have been taken in consequence of these inquiries.

Again:

It is, in any case, essential that the German minority in the Voivodie of Silesia should regain that feeling of confidence which, unfortunately, seems to have been profoundly shaken, but without which it would be impossible to establish between the minority and the state that cooperation which, in the treaties and the resolutions of the assembly and the council of the League of Nations, constitutes a duty equally imperious for the state and for the minority concerned. The council will certainly desire to be informed in due time before its next session of any decisions which the Polish government may have felt right to take in this matter.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Vegreville, the trouble is that the Ukrainian people have no national home, they have no great national state to back up their petitions, and so it is doubly incumbent on the other members of the league that they should take an active part in pushing forward this investigation.

It is not my desire to endeavour to substantiate in any way the charges which have already been made. Any hon. members who have read the Manchester Guardian must have noted the letters and articles which have been appearing in it for months. We are not so near the scene, of course, and we are not in so good a position to judge, but I note that a very large number of the members of the British House of Commons have taken an active interest in this matter. Among others I note the names of A. Fenner Brockway, Rhys Davies, Commander J. M. Kenworthy, Cecil Malone, M. Phillips Prince, Wilfred Wellock, and many other well-known members of the British house. With these statements before us, and with the information which has been brought to us to-day by the hon. member for Vegreville, we would be justified in taking whatever steps are possible. It may be that the Prime Minister is quite correct, and that all has been done under the machinery of the league that is now possible, but I would urge that the government itself should insist that there be no delay in making the fullest investigation possible.

Anyone who has been closely in touch with the Ukrainian community in Canada must realize that our Ukrainian citizens feel that this is a very, very important matter. It concerns the welfare of their brothers and sisters who are still living in Europe.

Mr. BENNETT: I trust that the hon. member heard my statement that the report of the committee was expected to be made to the council on the 18th day of May.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: If I may interrupt, did I understand the Prime Minister to say that the committee of three was to investigate whether the petitions were correct according to the regulations set up by the league, or whether the committee was to make an investigation into the actual brutalities?

Mr. BENNETT: The question of the receivability of petitions is already provided for by regulations which I read, and the committee is making a report upon its investigations of the facts.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I desire to say one or two words in connection with the protection of minorities. First may I say that the hon. member who has brought this matter to the attention of the house has made a most vigorous and able presentation, and the facts, if they are as he has described them, do not speak very highly for the present state of civilization. Of course, as the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has stated, there is another party to the difficulty, and that other party does not represent the facts in exactly the same light. However my hon. friend has said enough to justify the government's bringing the matter before the council of the League of Nations, pressing it and seeing that a proper investigation is made.

The matter of trouble in eastern Galicia first came to my attention in a rather strange manner, and I cannot resist the temptation to relate the incident. In 1922 I had the honour of being a member of the Canadian delegation to the League of Nations, accompanying the late Hon. Mr. Fielding. On the first day of the meetings of the assembly I received at the hotel a card on which were written the names of three men who represented themselves to be delegates from eastern Galicia. They were shown to my room, and before Mr. Fielding and myself they pleaded their case very eloquently. Two of them spoke neither French or English, but one spoke very good French and fairly good English. After we had discussed the matter with them for some time and had undertaken to discuss it with other British delegates, the one who had been speaking addressed me as follows: "Does not Your Excellency remember me?" Hon. members should take note of the fact that in Europe all ministers are called "your excellency." In a most humble way I replied, "Have I ever seen you before?" He said, "When Your Excellency was in his last year at the classical college of Rimouski I was in my first year." "Well," I said, "you are from Rimouski?" He said, "My name is Jean, and I was born in St. Simon de Rimouski." I said, "If your name is Jean and you were born in St. Simon de Rimouski, drop the 'Excellency' at once." He happened to be a young priest who was completing his education in Europe when the war broke out. He was in Galicia at the time and, having to remain there, had become one of the leaders of the nation. I believe that incident tends to show that Canadians can be successful everywhere.

Mr. BENNETT: What was his nationality?

Mr. LAPOINTE: French-Canadian. He is now in the Abitibi district in the province of Quebec, and he has brought with him a great many of those Galician people who indeed are industrious settlers within our province.

The question of the treatment of minorities is a troublesome one and presents one of the greatest difficulties with which the League of Nations has to deal.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And it could not be otherwise. Following the war many new countries were formed; they were carved out of the territories formerly included in other countries and inevitably there came together people of various races differing in language and religion. Necessarily difficulties were bound to arise. Those who attended the peace conference and those who were responsible for the various peace treaties knew that such difficulties would arise ,and they took good care to ensure a protection for linguistic, racial and religious minorities in those various countries. The same clause may be seen in all the treaties concerning Austria, Hungary, Roumania, Poland, Bulgaria, Greece and other countries.

Mr. LAVERGNE: And the British North America Act.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, I may say a word about that at a later time. It was considered that the fundamental principle of protection for minorities was of international concern, and the guarantee was entrusted to the League of Nations. I am not sure that I properly understood my right hon. friend but I thought he said the league had not, except in a very mild manner, the authority to intervene.

Mr. BENNETT: I said the council was the instrument set up by the league. The league itself has very limited powers to enforce the conclusion at which they might arrive after inquiries had been made. That is what I endeavoured to say.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The league is authorized to take any steps it may deem proper.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I agree, however, with my right hon. friend that steps might be taken which might not always be opportune.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The work of the league in that matter must be a work of conciliation, otherwise it could not achieve results; its work would be nullified by the obstructive tactics of the government affected. A state or a government cannot be coerced in a matter of that kind. Of course, conciliation, education, and negotiation can always be resorted to, and, I believe, especially in these modern times those are the only practical ways of achieving results in respect to such matters.

Mr. BENNETT: And the weight of public opinion.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, the weight of public opinion; I agree with my right hon. friend in that suggestion. I wish to describe particularly the rights of minorities under the treaty. For instance the treaties laid down:

—that nationals belonging to minorities shall have an equal right to establish, manage and control at their own expense charitable, religious and social institutions, schools and other educational establishments, with the right to use their own language, and to exercise their religion freely therein.

And, further:

The obligation to grant adequate facilities in towns and districts where there is a considerable proportion of nationals speaking a language other than the official language of the state, to ensure that in the primary schools (1) the instruction shall be given to the children of such nationals through the medium of their own language.

Then there is another clause which might be of special interest in a certain part of this country. It is said:

The treaties also lay down that in towns and districts where there is a considerable proportion of nationals of the country belonging to racial, religious or linguistic minorities, these minorities shall be assured an equitable share in the enjoyment and application of the sums which may be provided out of public funds under the state, municipal or other budget, for educational, religious or charitable purposes.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. LaVERGNE: Even when that minority is a majority in the district.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Exactly. The league has established, as occasion arose, minority committees, such as the one the right hon. gentleman has referred to, but apparently—and this may be the trouble of my hon. friend and his friends—their proceedings are kept secret. I remember having heard Sir Austen Chamberlain say that it was in the interests of the negotiations and of a settlement that the proceedings of the committee should be kept secret. On the other hand, the public at large cannot see what is the proportion of successes and reverses in the negotiations of those committees. I read somewhere that there have been three hundred applications from minorities and about one hundred and fifty investigations. I think at the last assembly, or the last but one, the suggestion was made—and there is a strong current of opinion behind it—that there should be a permanent commission dealing with those problems instead of roving committees, which are not stable in their character because it happens very often that the members do not attend and are represented by substitutes.

Now, there is another matter that I wish to mention. There are minorities elsewhere than in those countries which have come into existence by the treaties of peace, and on September 21, 1922, the League of Nations passed a resolution which I wish to call to the attention of the house. I remember Roumania, for instance, saying to the assembly: "Why should we be treated because we have treaties of this kind in a different manner from the other countries of the world who are forcing us to observe the treaty clauses?" This is the resolution:

The assembly expresses the hope that the states which are not bound by any legal obligations to the league with respect to minorities will nevertheless observe in the treatment of their own racial, religious, or linguistic minorities at least as high a standard of justice and toleration as is required by any of the treaties and by the regular action of the council.

I think that was a very proper resolution to adopt. Even since that time there have been proposals to the effect that all the members of the Society of the League of Nations should have a treaty under which they would accept the clauses protecting the minorities in their respective territories. Those proposals are still before the league, which has not yet taken action, but some objectors represented that it might be very well to apply those clauses to minorities which have passed under another flag as a result of war or of diplomatic negotiations, but not to groups which might settle in a country of their own free will, and which necessarily must adopt the customs and the usages of that country.

Mr. BENNETT: One is choice and the other is compulsion.

Mr LAPOINTE: Yes. In this country, on various occasions we have had difficulties with regard to minorities concerning school and language. I wish to emphasize this remark which I have already made, that the French minority in Canada is of course composed of citizens who are loyal to the crown, who are proud and happy to be as they are to-day, but who have come under the British flag not of their own free will but as the result of wars of long duration, negotiations and treaties. Therefore I do not see why they should be treated differently from those various peoples in central Europe that have come into other nations by the peace treaties following the late war. The French in Canada have always represented that they have the right to their language, that they were the first settlers in the country, that they are at home everywhere in Canada; and certainly they resent any attempt, for instance to deprive their children of receiving education in their mother tongue. But even there, as is the case with regard to the treatment of minorities in the League of Nations, I know that coercive methods cannot serve any useful purpose. It is through conciliation, negotiation, weight of public opinion that this right—not privilege—can be successfully recognized and granted everywhere. Consequently when a member of this government finds it his duty to refer to a serious educational and language trouble in one province, certainly there is good ground for thinking it is a case where some arrangement could be made.

I repeat, I am in favour of the motion of my hon. friend—if it can be called a motion—that the weight of Canada's prestige and Canada's authority should be behind the move advocated by my hon. friend and that a full investigation should be made by the League of Nations. But after all we must set our own house in order everywhere in this country. We in Canada are members of the League of Nations, as we are in Eurpoe, and I think every one of the various parts of Canada should set an example to those nations to whom we preach moderation and justice.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny): Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak at any length. I rise to congratulate the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) on his remarks. I am glad to find that, companions at university, we are still very close together in our older age. I think the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) was quite right in bringing this question before the house. Brought up to regard Poland as having been for so many centuries the soldier of Christianity, I must confess that it is a sort of heart-break to me to learn of the things that are going on there; and I agree with the hon. member for Quebec East that the prestige of Canada should be behind the claim of the Ukrainian people in this country for justice in the matter. But, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has said, inasmuch as the machinery already exists nothing can be done except for this parliament to pass a resolution asking for justice, as was done in days gone by when Ireland was in sorrow. There again, however, I agree with the hon. member for Quebec East. If we wish to instruct other nations in their duty in the way of justice to minorities, we should first put our own house in order; and we need not cross the seas, to Poland or Roumania, to find minorities that are suffering. We need not step out of our own country. To tell the truth, outside the province of Quebec, every minority in every province of Canada has suffered. Our position would be a rather sad one if we undertook to teach other peoples before settling our own troubles. As the hon. member for Quebec East has said, it is only by agitating and calling for justice, not by coercion, that we can settle this question.

Before concluding, I might say this. The dual civilization of Canada is the greatest gift Providence has ever bestowed upon any country in the world, and we must maintain it. And if I were an English-speaking Canadian I should be the first one to insist upon the maintenance of that dual civilization, because therein we find a guarantee for the preservation of our country. Therein lies the differentiation of Canada from the United States—our greatest safeguard for the maintenance in Canada of British institutions and the preservation of this Dominion from what, to my mind, is its greatest menace, namely, absorption in the melting pot of America.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

MINISTERS OF THE CROWN

BILL TO OBVIATE NECESSITY OF REELECTION UPON ACCEPTANCE OF OFFICE

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River, for Mr Jacobs) moved the second reading of Bill No.

35, to remove the necessity of the reelection of members of the House of Commons of Canada on acceptance of office.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) to move the second reading of this bill in his absence. I would ask the house to permit the bill to go into committee, when the necessary explanations can be given.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, the mover of this bill should be present; I should like to hear from him on the second reading.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In that case, may I submit that the alteration asked for by the hon. gentleman in his bill is that we should do away with an almost prehistoric piece of legislation dating back to the days of good Queen Anne. At that time there was a tremendous conflict between the commons and the crown, and it was the desire to prevent the continued usurpation by the crown of the powers of the commons that induced the enactment of the legislation which in its present form compels any individual member of the House of Commons selected for a portfolio to return to the electorate in his constituency or in some other constituency for reelection. No one knows better than the present leader of the government (Mr. Bennett) the difficulties entailed in this procedure. I have distinct recollection of instances during my short life in parliament where the best man available within the party was not elected for office because a majority in his constituency could not be ensured, and such has been the experience in all British parliaments. It is exceedingly unfair to a minister himself, very often a man of humble means, to be compelled to meet the expenses of an election even though at the time he be a member of the House of Commons. The point I would make in this connection is that no man whose ability commends him to the office should be passed over simply because his seat does not appear to be a safe one. If his abilities are such or promise to be such as to justify the appointment, that and that alone should be the sole consideration. It is unfair to the electors in the constituency to subject them to the disturbance of a by-election, especially if it comes shortly after the general elections. The only ones that could be interested in those performances would be the opposition.

Another reason which makes the present system unfair is that the person selected is diverted from his duties for the three or four weeks necessary to carry on an election at the very time he should be acquainting himself with those duties and familiarizing himself, in the case of many of the portfolios, with the tremendous work entailed in carrying them out. Moreover, in by-elections of this character it frequently happens that the person nominated to the portfolio is subjected to all sorts of pressure and induced to make many statements he would not otherwise make were he in office for some time studying its responsibilities and securing the well-developed advice of his colleagues.

Speaking on this very question in the British house, I think in 1926, Sir John Simon contended that perhaps one of the most serious aspects of the legislation in this respect was that very often a newly appointed minister during the period of such by-election forgot for the time being that he was no longer a private individual and frequently gave voice to expressions regarding government policies that afterwards required denial on the part of the ministry involved. That would be a most embarrassing situation for all parties.

A measure of this character would be of much greater value to a ministry with a small majority than to a ministry such as we have now facing us. For example, had this proposed legislation been on the statute book in 1926—I have no doubt the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) will raise this point—the ministry of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, had it so desired, might have retained office, constitutionally at least, for the continuation of the term of that parliament, whereas on account of the unconstitutional and illegal position in which they found themselves they were rejected by the house and compelled to go prematurely to the country. So far as we in this corner of the house were concerned, the result was that we lost at least one year in having brought into force certain legislation which at that time was exceedingly desirable. I refer specifically to the question of the revaluation of soldier settlers' land, and also to other measures such as the Long Term Farm Loans Act.

The present method, as is stated by Sir William Anson in his Law and Custom of the Constitution, causes needless and vexatious delay in the conduct of public business. It distracts the mind of the member selected for a cabinet position from the duties of his office and very frequently embroils the entire ministry in the particular by-election. I think hon. members will concede that all elections are annoying. If I were asked for my own choice in the matter, I would say that the most satisfactory condition of affairs would be one where the present personnel sat forever and simply swapped positions at the will of the House of Commons. However, it is not likely that such a condition will come in my time, so I am compelled to accept the situation as it is and do the best I can to carry on.

I am willing to concede another objection which may be taken to this measure. There is no doubt in my mind—and I say this with all respect—that the present ministry even after the short time it has been in office could hardly expect to go back to the country today and be returned in anything like its present strength. We have not in the house at the present time a minister of labour, and sooner or later the present administration will in all probability be compelled to select such a minister. Should this bill be enacted at the present session and become operative immediately thereafter, it is quite possible that the new minister of labour would not have to submit himself to the electorate, and therefore the public would be denied an opportunity of expressing an opinion upon the present administration. To offset that argument, which is a valid one, I submit that it is very rarely that by means of a by-election of the kind which would likely follow such an appointment any fair estimate of the general opinion of the public can be secured, because the person selected would no doubt contest a seat which from the experience of history it was felt would give a majority to the Conservative member seeking reelection on acceptance of the portfolio.

The one great objection which could be offered to this bill is one which has been raised in other times, namely that its effect would be to deny to the electorate the power to give expression to its resentment against the type of administration which was then in office. But I submit that as our parliamentary term is only four years, sometimes not more than three, no great hardship will result; as a matter of fact in each constituency it frequently happens that local issues predominate and overshadow the issues concerning the general welfare of the nation. If it is contended, then, that the electorate would by such legislation as this be denied the power of expressing its dislike for an administration, I submit the only remedy would be to offer an election to the entire country and ask all of Canada to decide upon the minister's appointment. That, of course, would be absurd, and an utterly unnecessary expense. I think that disposes of one criticism that I can foresee against this legislation.

The present situation with regard to the Prime Minister himself is interesting. If the present Prime Minister of Canada desires to assume, as possibly he might, some further portfolios, under the present law as I read it he would have to go to the country on the assumption of each of them. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) assures me that this is not the case. It was the case in Britain prior to 1926. In 1919 the first attempt was made in the British house to amend this legislation. At that time I think it was the Right Hon. Bonar Law who introduced the proposed amendment, which was in much the same form as the bill now before the house, the purpose being to amend the then existing legislation so as to provide that no member of the House of Commons, on being appointed to the ministry, need appeal again to the electorate. In the committee stage an amendment was introduced to the bill, providing that this should not apply after the administration had held office for nine months. I submit in this connection that nine months have elapsed since the election of the present administration to office, and there would be little advantage in introducing the legislation unless it were to apply solely to subsequent parliaments, or to whatever by-elections might take place in the next few years. Mr. Bonar Law, however, in accepting the amendment, used that expression which has since become a famous quotation:

> Perhaps it is preferable to take two bites at a cherry. We will take the first bite now, and the second later.

The second and complete bite was taken in 1926 when the necessary change was again introduced into the British house, and I understand it passed at that time by a very large majority. The situation then was that the Conservative party in the British house had an enormous majority. The situation in Canada is that the Conservative party in this house has an enormous majority. But at that time Sir John Simon, I think it was, used this expression:

> The position here is not as it is at the moment in Canada, where a ministry is poised on so narrow a ledge that considerations which are not necessarily consideration of the first order may have to determine exactly how to choose this colleague or how to refuse that.

Now the situation is reversed; in this country we have a Conservative government in power with a very large majority, whereas in the British house there is in power a Labour party tottering on the brink of compromise on every occasion.

Some extremists in the house may point out that legislation of this kind would simply give to the executive powers or privileges that in the past we took from the crown. I am inclined at times to agree with those who criticize the present form of parliamentary government in this and other countries because of the tremendous and growing power of the executive council. I cannot, however, see that the enactment of the legislation now proposed would necessarily in any way add to their powers in this house. What it would do in effect would be to remove from this country an anomalous and almost prehistoric condition that so unnecessarily hampers business and increases the cost of administration. Another hon. gentleman pointed out at one time that it would remove the only effective check over the executive by the electorate. I have dealt with that already. I do not think by-elections have ever been sufficiently intelligently conducted under existing conditions to bring into the light, as they would be brought in a general election, all the major issues facing the whole country; but they are decided for the most part on local issues.

I commend the legislation to the consideration of the house. I ask the house to give the bill its second reading, in the hope that it may be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. I hope the hon. member for Cartier will not condemn me too much if I do what I think he would do as a reasonable member of the house under the same conditions. I am not going to insist on the measure passing in its present actual form, but like Bonar Law I would be willing to take two bites of a cherry. If the time limitation were brought in the legislation could be introduced at once, in which case whoever becomes Minister of Labour in this house would have to submit himself to the electorate; thereupon the administration might receive a severe shock; on the other hand, it might not. I do not think any definite conclusion could be drawn from an election under those conditions.

The clauses of the bill are simple. All they do is modify the existing legislation in the direction I have indicated. The matter has received consideration in many parliaments other than ours. It is already, as I have indicated, enacted in the British house. It was enacted in New South Wales parliament in 1906. It has been in force in South Australia and New Zealand since the inception. It is also in force in Tasmania and in Queensland. The Union of South Africa like the Commonwealth of Australia, and the Irish Free State, have had it since the new constitution came into force. I ask the house to let the bill pass its second reading and then go, I hope, to the committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I did not like to interrupt my hon. friend in his very able presentation of this bill. For reasons that I need not go into now, I do not agree with him, but I think he is out of order. I cannot at the moment put my finger on the particular rule, but, you, Mr. Speaker, will no doubt be cognizant of the rule which states that the second reading of a bill must be moved by the hon. member who has charge of it. There is an exception to it in the rules which I have read quite recently, which says that in the case of an unopposed motion for the production of papers, it was arranged a few years ago by general consent that such a motion might be made by proxy, but this does not refer to the instance now before us.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the hon. member for Comox-Alberni to object to proceeding with the bill now?

Mr. NEILL: Yes. The hon. member is out of order, and any hon. member except the one in whose name the bill stands, is out of order in making a motion of this kind.

Mr. SPEAKER: The practice has been, when the member in whose name a bill stands on the order paper is not present, and another hon. member rises in his place in the house and says that he is authorized to act for him, to accept that.

Mr. NEILL: But there is a rule to the direct contrary. That custom applies only in connection with an unopposed motion for the production of papers.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is a public bill and it will go to the committee of the whole, not to any standing committee.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I have had some conversation with the sponsor of this bill and my recollection is that in the conversations I have had with him he intimated that his intention was that the measure should contain a limit of time within which its provisions would operate. In his absence it would, I think, be unfair to proceed with the bill, at least beyond the second reading.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I say to my right hon. friend that to-day about one o'clock the hon. member who sponsors this bill asked me to raise the question in the house. He discussed it with me at some length and he made no mention whatever of a time limitation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I quite accept my hon. friend's word. I hope that he will be equally prepared to accept mine when I say that when on more than one occasion the same hon. member introduced this measure when I was sitting on the other side of the house and when the party which I have the honour to lead was in office, discussing the measure together we repeatedly argued the point as to whether it would be in the public interest in a democratic country to take away from the electorate the right it now has of voicing its opinion in the manner which is afforded by a by-election, where a minister of the crown is being appointed to office for the first time. The argument, as I remember it, of my hon. friend was always to the effect that it was an absurdity for a by-election to be necessitated immediately after a government had been returned to office or during a certain period of time thereafter, but that there might be reasons why by-elections should continue to take place when ministers of the crown were appointed at some period of time considerably beyond that at which a ministry itself had taken office. However, whether that is his view or not, I should like as one member, on the second reading of the bill to say that it is the view that in the interests of the electorate of this country I myself entertain. I favour the idea of allowing a ministry, after it has been returned to office at a general election, to have its ministers returned by acclamation if they have been elected as members of the house. When hon. gentlemen opposite were elected there was no opposition put to the return of any of their members as ministers of the crown. Indeed, so far as the official opposition was concerned, we did not limit our withholding of opposition to members of the administration who had been returned to the House of Commons, but when the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) sought a seat elsewhere, so far as the opposition had a voice in the matter at all, it was used in persuading those in the constituency in which he ran not to oppose him but to allow him to be returned by acclamation, which he was. I think that a practice of this kind, where a new ministry is formed immediately after a general election out of members elected to parliament, is a good one to follow, but I think that there should be a limit of time within which the practice should apply. That limit originally in the case of Great Britain was nine months. I should think we might do well to follow the British practice, proceeding by stages. If we are to change our practice in Canada, let us do it step by step as was done in Great Britain, and amend this measure so as to make the new provision applicable to members of a ministry which has just been returned and to ministers who may seek reelection within a period of nine months thereafter. I do submit that there are very strong reasons from the point of view of the ministry itself as well as from the point of view of the general public, why by-elections should take place where ministers who have not theretofore held office are brought into a government, especially where a government has been in power from one to two or three or four years.

The limit of opportunity of appealing to an electorate is fixed by statute at a period of five years. It might well be that within that period of time the public itself would wish to voice its opinion in regard to policies which have developed in the course of time during which the ministry has held office. Every by-election affords that opportunity to a degree and there is a special reason why that opportunity should be given where a ministry undertakes to change its complexion without having consulted the electorate in the first instance.

Then with respect to a minister himself, a minister of the crown has a responsibility very much greater than that of a private member of parliament. A member has a very special responsibility the moment he becomes a minister of the crown. An electorate may be prepared to support an hon. member of the house as a member of the commons, where the same electorate might not be prepared to entrust him with the additional responsibility that attaches to a minister of the crown holding a particular portfolio. I am saying that not in the way of reflection upon anyone who may be taken into a ministry at any time, but I say that it is one of those many safeguards which in the interests of the public generally it seems to me wise to throw around the office of a responsible minister of the crown and which I believe it is also wise to throw around whoever may be called upon to fill such a position. I am prepared to agree to the general principle of the bill, though limiting its main provision to a period of time; I shall not oppose the second reading. I hope the house will feel that in the absence of the sponsor of the bill, it might remain at that stage and that it will not be necessary to proceed in committee on its provisions this evening.

Mr. NEILL: I rise to another point of order, Mr. Speaker, and in this case I have the data before me. I refer you, sir, to standing order 70, which reads as follows:

No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

Beauchesne paragraph 744, comments on that standing order as follows:

If the Speaker finds that the bill is in blank or in an imperfect shape, he will decline to put the question and will return the bill to the member, who must take another opportunity of bringing it up in conformity with the rules.

I now turn to page 348 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms where, under the heading, Rules of the House of Commons, I find this:

> The rules of the House of Commons as to the preparation and printing of bills, adopted 14th June, 1923, must be followed by all departments. They are as follows:

Then follow five clauses, the first of which reads:

> 1. In the preparation of bills amending existing enactments the amendments shall not ordinarily be made by clauses which add or leave out words or substitute words for others, but by clauses which reenact the section, subsection or other minor division, as it is amended.

This particular bill conforms with that requirement inasmuch as it strikes out two sections and replaces them with the proposed section. The second clause of the rules reads:

> 2. In the text of the bill, on the left hand page, new matter shall be indicated by such typographical means as may best suit the varying circumstances of each case, such as brackets, italics, underlining, asterisks, etc. Opposite each clause, on the right hand page, the enactment amended thereby, or so much thereof as is essential, shall be printed with the proposed changes to be made therein similarly indicated.

That clause has not been adhered to. The amending bill reads:

> His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—
> 1. Sections thirteen and fourteen of the Senate and House of Commons Act, chapter one hundred and forty-seven of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, are repealed, and the following are substituted therefor:—

As sections 13 and 14 of the old act are proposed to be repealed by this measure, it follows by the rule which I have just quoted, that the clauses to be struck out must appear on the right hand page, but all that appears on the right hand page is an explanatory note; very useful, but that does not conform with the rule. The explanatory note reads:

> The British parliament has passed an act for the same purpose as this proposed legislation, in the Imperial statutes, 16-17 George V, chapter 19, assented to 15th July, 1926. In New South Wales in 1906, the rule of non-reelection was adopted, and it has always been in force in South Australia and New Zealand. It is now in force in Tasmania and in Queensland. In the Cape, the Transvaal, the Orange River Colony and Natal it was never introduced, and in the Union of South Africa, like the Commonwealth of Australia follows the same model.

That is very interesting information, and is highly useful in an explanatory capacity.

[Mr. Neill.]

However, the rules say that the sections supposed to be struck out must appear on the right hand side of the page and in this instance they do not appear. No section whatever appears in that position. According to Beauchesne's rule No. 2 on page 348 of Parliamentary Rules and Forms, the bill is in an imperfect state, cannot be read, and should be returned by Mr. Speaker to the hon. member—who did not introduce it, by the way.

Mr. SPEAKER: Referring to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) I am bound to rule that Bill No. 35 as it appears and is now in the hands of hon. members complies sufficiently with the rules the hon. member has quoted.

Mr. NEILL: May I speak to the point of order?

Mr. SPEAKER: I have ruled that the bill complies with the rules quoted.

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. NEILL: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that you have ignored the rule and that you have decided absolutely against the rules of the house. What must we do if we do not have the rules upheld?

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): Before the bill proceeds to a further stage I would like to make a few remarks, because I introduced a resolution a few years ago along the lines followed by this proposed legislation. This bill is really an innovation, and if passed would change a practice which has been in effect in Canada since confederation. When a similar bill was before the British House of Commons it was argued by some hon. members that the fact the British constitution could be amended showed its value.

There are many arguments which could be used for and against the proposal embodied in the bill. Mr. Dunnico, speaking in the British House of Commons, used the following argument against a similar bill introduced into that house:

> Suppose a minister resigns because he feels he is not getting enough money to carry on his department, would it be right for the Prime Minister to put a man in his place without consulting the people?

That is one argument which was used against the change then proposed in Great Britain. Mr. Dunnico said that the bill involved an infringement on the rights of the electorate and a departure from the principles of democracy. He claimed that with all its faults and shortcomings, democracy would triumph, and that in the perfecting of democratic institutions lay the progress of the masses. He said:

> We are the custodians of great traditions which we have inherited and we should pass them on not only unimpaired but strengthened in every way possible.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask a question? Does the hon. member wish to leave the inference that the British House of Commons is to-day undemocratic?

Mr. MacLEAN: I am referring to the time that the bill was before the British House of Commons and quoting from the discussion which then took place. As I have said, there were arguments for and against the bill, and undoubtedly good arguments could be used on either side. Sir John Simon, Great Britain's greatest constitutional lawyer, said:

> The change should be made, but it should not come into effect until after a general election.

He thought it was hardly fair to allow a member of a government which had held office for a period of nine months to be returned without going to the country.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I remind the hon. member that this is the first regular session since a general election, and according to his last contention this would be the proper time to introduce such a measure.

Mr. MacLEAN: That may be all right, but there is an argument advanced against it. Supposing there is a vacancy in the cabinet; within a few months after a general election there is not much time for a change in the feelings of the people and the necessity of holding a by-election to return a member would not be so apparent at it would be three or four years after a general election. That was the argument used at that time. Another argument was raised in Great Britain with which we do not have to contend here. There the cabinet ministers are pensioned off; in this country we have not developed to that stage. In the old country this argument was used: If an unscrupulous Prime Minister saw clouds gathering and wished to have his cabinet secure, he might have all his cabinet ministers resign, let them all draw a pension and call in another cabinet.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: If the hon. member will permit an interruption, I would like to say that his information is not quite correct. As I understand the situation, cabinet ministers in the old country are not pensioned off, as a matter of fact they are not pensioned at all. The great bulk of them never receive a pension, but there is a law under which an ex-minister of the crown may receive a pension if he requires it. Such pension, however, is in the gift of the Prime Minister. If the ex-minister of the crown has not enough to live upon and requires a pension he may receive it by appealing to the Prime Minister. It is not, however, given as a matter of course.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Except in the case of the Lord Chancellor.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Yes, the Lord Chancellor might be the exception. However I would not say he receives a pension; he acts as the head of the privy council and receives an annual allowance. The ordinary member of the government of Great Britain is not entitled to a pension.

Mr. MacLEAN: My hon. friend should be well acquainted with the situation in England; no doubt he is an authority and well qualified to speak on this question. However, Mr. Williamson, who spoke in the debate to which I have referred, said:

> In the old country a minister four years in the cabinet is entitled to a pension if he can show he is entitled to it.

I suppose that is the condition referred to by my hon. friend. It would seem from this statement that the minister would receive a pension if he needed it. Cabinet ministers are human, and it seems to me that they would not experience much difficulty in proving that they needed it.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The hon. member is not correct. I think if he will search for the facts he will find that the great bulk of cabinet ministers in England do not receive a pension. It is only in the exceptional case that an ex-minister applies for a pension, and he must put his case before the Prime Minister before he can obtain it.

Mr. MacLEAN: At that time Mr. Williamson advanced the pension as an argument why the bill should be opposed. As the leader of the opposition said to-night, it seems very unreasonable that cabinet ministers who are selected immediately following a general election should have to go to the country for reelection, but after nine months have elapsed I think they should have an appeal to the electorate. If the bill goes to the committee I purpose saying something more on the subject.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I am sorry I have not been here during the whole of the discussion on this bill. I have heard only the last few minutes of the debate. I understand however that the right hon. the leader of the opposition has stated that if there was a limitation, he would not be opposed to the principle of the bill. That is exactly where I stand in the matter. I rather think that after a general election it is a tedious and a useless process to go through by-elections to reelect the members who are selected to form the cabinet; but after a period of one, two or three years has elapsed, when public opinion may have changed, I do not think it would be democratic and in accordance with the best parliamentary practice and representative institutions that the Prime Minister should be able to select any member to enter his cabinet without having his selection endorsed by the electors of that member. For instance, I do not want to be personal in any way, but suppose my right hon. friend next year, or a couple of years hence, should select my hon. friend from Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) as Minister of Labour, or for another department of his government, there is a moral certainty that the electors of that gentleman would not support his entrance into the cabinet. I do not think that this freedom of choice should be left to the Prime Minister without the people having a chance to pronounce upon it. Public opinion is what controls governments and parliaments, and we should not try to get away from that control, and thus deprive it of any opportunity to show where it stands after a certain period following a general election. I would favour the principle of the bill as far as it applies to the period immediately following a general election, that is, that there be a limitation.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It may be very useful even after a general election.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Moved by Mr. Garland (Bow River) for Mr. Jacobs, seconded by —who seconds the motion to go into committee of the whole?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Nobody.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Speaker, did not the leader of the opposition ask for an undertaking, and receive it, that if the second reading was passed the bill would remain at that stage? I certainly heard him make that observation.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Speaker, I will second the motion for committee of the whole.

Mr. SPEAKER: Moved by Mr. Garland (Bow River) for Mr. Jacobs, seconded by Mr. Campbell, that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on said bill. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No. Next sitting of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: All those in favour of the motion will kindly say "aye." Those opposed will kindly say "no."

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the "noes" have it.

Motion negatived.

REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT

REPRESENTATION FOR ELECTORS RESIDENT IN THE DISTRICT OF PATRICIA

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Heenan for the second reading of Bill No. 2, to amend the Representation Act.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): This bill, Mr. Speaker, is really a most unusual proposal, particularly at this time. Here we are in the first session following a general election with the census being taken this year, with no likelihood—I was going to say no possibility—of an election for three years.

An hon. MEMBER: There might be.

Mr. STEVENS: I quite agree that the expression "no possibility" is rather too strong to apply to anything pertaining to human affairs—and we are still human; I admit that. But there is not much probability of an election for three or four years, and before that time there must be a general redistribution act brought in adjusting the boundaries of some of the constituencies, particularly those in which there has been a considerable increase of population during the intervening period. For us to pick out one riding and reconstitute its boundaries when there is positively no need for it at the present time would be futile. In the interim no one can be affected prejudicially, no interests are jeopardized, no one is suffering. This is just a delightful whim on the part of the very handsome and genial member now representing the district.

Mr. HEENAN: If the hon. minister will pardon me, this is not a whim; this bill was introduced last session.

Mr. STEVENS: That makes it all the worse. The hon. gentleman was a member of the government last session and—

Mr. HEENAN: The opposition then opposed the measure.

Mr. STEVENS: —he had around him then all the support necessary to carry his bill through, and he did not or could not carry it through; in any case it was not passed; there intervened a general election and now he asks us to adopt the bill. Really I feel that we can appeal to the hon. member's sense of fair play and decency in dealing with a thing of this kind not to push his proposal any further. I do not like to go so far as to say it is almost trifling with the affairs of the country—

Mr. HEENAN: I know the hon. minister is sincere, but does he think it is really a whim or a trifle to enfranchise 600 men?

Mr. STEVENS: No, the hon. gentleman is not enfranchising a single soul, as there is not likely to be any election prior to redistribution. There is not an individual in the country—and the hon. member knows it—who will be in the slightest degree affected by the rejection of this bill. I regarded it as a joke, but if the hon. gentleman is serious, let us consider it. Not an individual in this country can be affected by the bill.

Mr. HEENAN: How does the hon. minister know?

Mr. STEVENS: I know a census is being taken and I know this house—

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. minister does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. STEVENS: If the hon. gentleman will permit me. A census is being taken, and until the resultant information is in hand neither my hon. friend nor anyone else in the house can do justice to the redistribution of the electoral districts. The census is under way, later we will have the necessary information, a general redistribution bill will be brought down, and then in the usual way a committee composed of members from all sides of the house will take the question up. It is not a trifling matter to change the boundaries of an electoral district; it is a serious matter. It may be that my hon. friend has some reasons to advance for seeking to change the boundaries of his riding, as I might advance reasons for changing the boundaries of other ridings, but if we proceeded on such a basis nothing but chaos would result.

Mr. HEENAN: I think my hon. friend—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. HEENAN: I am trying to inform the house. If somebody on the other side knows all about my riding, there is no use in my saying anything.

Mr. STEVENS: If the hon. member wishes to ask a question?

Mr. HEENAN: I wish to point out that the purpose of my bill is not to change the boundaries of my riding, it is to incorporate a part of the country that is not to-day in any electoral district.

Mr. STEVENS: I apprehend what the hon. member is trying to do, but it is certainly changing the boundaries of his riding. I am not objecting to his desire to incorporate in his riding certain districts which on account of the change in the boundary, if I remember rightly—

Mr. HEENAN: New found territory in Ontario.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. But the point I am making is that there is no need of doing it now. Let the matter rest until a redistribution bill comes down, which will be probably next year or, at the latest, the session following, when the whole question of redistribution will be under consideration by a committee of this house.

Mr. HEENAN: And suppose there is a by-election in the meantime.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member says, suppose there is a by-election in the meantime. Does he expect to be invited to become a minister of labour in this government? I recall that shortly after the last election there was a rumour about that Barkis was willing. But I would not—

Mr. HEENAN: No sir; and if there was a rumour it was on that side.

Mr. STEVENS: Not at all; it was like a halo round the hon. gentleman's head.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: If you cannot find a minister of labour on that side we will lend you one.

Mr. STEVENS: If we want a minister of labour we know where to get one. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is both unreasonable and unwise for us to consider this matter further. I will therefore move that the word "now" in the motion be struck out and that the words "this day six months" be substituted therefor.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Up to the moment that my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) proposed his amendment I was inclined to feel a certain sympathy with him in the suggestions that this measure be not pressed unduly just at present. The amendment however does give to the action of the government a significance which I doubt very much the government has fully appreciated. The situation at the moment is this. There are in the district of Patricia six hundred people who have not the right to vote at a general election in Canada or in a by-election in the constituency of Kenora-Rainy River; they are disfranchised. A member of the government now introduces an amendment to this motion which may make it impossible, no matter what circumstances may arise, to consider the inclusion of these six hundred persons as electors for that particular constituency should there be occasion within a certain period of time for any reason to consult the people in that riding.

I remember quite well the circumstances that occasioned the postponement of this bill at the time it was originally introduced by the present sponsor, the then Minister of Labour. We were just on the eve of a general election and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), speaking then as leader of the opposition, maintained very strongly that there was no part of Ontario where the people had not the right to vote. He said that there was no group of electors in Ontario who were not included in some federal constituency. That was the position he took, and he so advised the house. In that statement he was entirely in the wrong, for there were in the district of Patricia six hundred persons who had been included in the constituency under the Ontario Electoral Act and who had the right to vote in a provincial election, but who were not included in any federal constituency. The boundaries of the constituency as fixed for provincial purposes were narrower than those fixed for Dominion elections. There was not at the time opportunity to go carefully into the matter. The hon. member took the matter up at once at the next session and is now bringing it up again. The purpose of this bill as introduced by the former Minister of Labour, is like its predecessors, to make the boundaries of the federal district as terminous with the boundaries of the provincial district: in other words, to give all the people duly qualified in that Patricia area the right to vote in federal as well as in provincial elections. It was because of the immediate pressure of prorogation that the bill was not proceeded with before the general election of 1930 and as I have said it was not proceeded with largely because of representations which were made at that time by the then leader of the opposition.

I have in my hand a statement from the chief electoral officer submitted to the Hon. Lucien Cannon, at that time Solicitor General. It reads:

Ottawa, May 29, 1930.

In the Representation Act of 1924 the district of Patricia has not been included in any electoral district of the province of Ontario or of any other province. Therefore persons residing in the district of Patricia, which is situated north of the English river, are not entitled to vote at a Dominion election.

Jules Castonguay,
Chief Electoral Officer.

That means that there are at the present time at least six hundred persons who are disfranchised, and the amendment now proposes to make doubly sure that they shall so remain That surely is not in accordance with representative institutions; and whatever may be done with the bill, for reasons which may have to do with the census which is to be taken, I do submit that this house should not in the interval, seek deliberately, by a motion of the government to disfranchise six hundred electors in the district in question.

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): It is almost nine o'clock, and the time allotted to this discussion is therefore practically at an end; but I wish to say a word or two in the few minutes that remain.

I must say I was astounded at the attitude of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) towards a matter with which evidently he is not conversant. I heard the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) say last year that as the result of an operation her mood had been somewhat improved. I am afraid that this is not the case with the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

As the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) has pointed out, there are at the present time in the district in Ontario now in question six hundred people who at the last election could not vote, and I can tell the Minister of Trade and Commerce that if he resided in northern Ontario he would hear some of the criticisms which are current there. The hon. gentleman's strongest argument against the bill now proposed is the fact that federal ridings are well defined. In the last election, I might say, as a result of changes which were made in West Algoma and in my own riding, two divisions were eliminated from North Timiskaming.

There is every reason for the adoption of this measure. We know that in most cases development in Canada to-day is moving towards the north. Every riding in the south fringes on the American border, that the lines are well defined. But the same principle does not apply to the northern ridings.

Mr. SPEAKER: It being nine o'clock, the hour for consideration of private and public bills has expired, and the house will resume in committee of supply.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Geneva—Canada's contribution to the expenses of the League of Nations for 1931, including Secretariat, International Labour Organization and Permanent Court of International Justice, $205,083.94.

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): I congratulate the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) on the splendid presentation of his case to-day. We who form a part of any minority in Canada can easily extend our sympathies to minorities in other parts of the world, and certainly I can say this for myself, having lived in a section of Canada where the minority rights of French-Canadians have been taken away one at a time. Knowing how the French-Canadians have been deprived of these rights, and realizing that this has retarded the progress of those parts of Canada where such rights have been denied the people, we can readily sympathize with any minority, wherever it may be.

Some controversy has taken place with regard to the atrocities alleged to have been committed in Poland. I have received a copy of a book entitled Ukraine—The Sorest Spot Of Europe, issued by the Ukraine Information Bureau. If the facts as related in this book are true, I feel certain that the best element in Poland, knowing them as I do in this country, would be the first to ask for redress. I received another book entitled Polish Library Of Facts—The Situation In Southeastern Poland ("Eastern Galicia"), published by the American-Polish Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Incorporated, in New York city, in which are refuted the statements made in the other publication. The facts could be very easily ascertained, Canada, being a member of the League of Nations and a signatory to the treaty of Versailles, and having guaranteed protection to the minorities in certain component parts of Europe, should make every effort to discover the truth, and if such atrocities as have been described are being committed, do everything in her power to have them stopped.

The Ukrainian is a fine law-abiding citizen who has made a great contribution to this country, especially to western Canada. He is a good living citizen, the equal of any who come from other countries in central Europe. This matter should be investigated and I am glad the hon. member has brought it to the attention of the committee. I am sure the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) Secretary of State for External Affairs will do everything in his power to see that the League of Nations takes note of this debate.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) has covered the subject matter of this debate so well that there is very little left to be added thereto. However, I intend to review briefly the history of this people from early times. From the dawn of history there has been a Ukrainian race, with its own language, its own culture and its own literature, antedating the Norman conquest of England. For ages the Ukraine was the battle ground of the east and west, between oriental and occidental, between Mohammedanism and Christianity, and it bore the brunt of saving Europe, of saving Christianity from Mohammedanism and from the Turks and Tartars. It was the King of Poland, John Sobieski, who drove the Turk and Tartar out of Vienna and saved Europe from Mohammedanism, and his army was composed largely of Ukrainian cossacks.

The province of East Galicia, which is under discussion at this time, is only a part of the Ukraine, the larger portion, as we know, being incorporated in Soviet Russia. In 1654 this particular part of the Ukraine was ceded to Poland by Russia. On the dismemberment of Poland in 1772 this province fell to Austria and it was, as we know it now, the province of East Galicia in Austria. On the breaking up of Austria after the great war this state declared itself independent under the name of West Ukraine, but it had to fight Soviet Russia on the one hand and Poland on the other, and the state never had an opportunity to exist; it never enjoyed peace long enough to build up a government or to do anything for itself. Austria surrendered all rights and interests in East Galicia to the allied powers under the treaty of St. Germain which was signed on September 10, 1919. The allied powers, including Great Britain, by the acceptance of that treaty became legally and morally responsible for the well-being of the people in that territory. On December 8, 1919, the supreme council of the peace conference laid out the boundary between West Ukraine and Poland, known as the Curzon line, which formed the boundary line between the states of West Ukraine and Poland. The very fact that that boundary was drawn up by the supreme council of the peace conference showed that the purpose was to give to that state self-determination; at any rate it was shown clearly that it was not the purpose to leave it under Polish domination. United States Secretary of State Colby issued a statement to the press on October 10, 1920, in which he stated that Poland must be an ethnographic state and nothing more, and that she must accept the Curzon line as her eastern boundary. This clearly proves that the allied nations had some responsibility in guaranteeing these people their self determination. However, in spite of the legal position in 1919 Poland forcibly took possession of the country and has held it ever since. May I quote briefly from an editorial which appeared in the Manchester Guardian of March 15, last, which reads in part:

> When the Austro-Hungarian empire foundered the Ukrainians, like the Poles, the Czechs, and the Croats, proclaimed their independence in accordance with the principle of self-determination championed by President Wilson and by the allies, and, like the others, they fought to defend their newly asserted independence. But in June, 1919, the supreme council allowed the Poles to continue to occupy the western Ukraine, though expressly reserving the ultimate status of that region for future settlement.

I do not think I need refer to the treaty of minorities, as the Prime Minister referred to that matter this afternoon and the hon. member for Vegreville has covered it very well. This treaty was signed on June 28, 1919, between Poland on the one hand and the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan on the other and guaranteed full rights of nationality, language, race, religion and so on to all non-Polish races in the new Polish state. From that I would like to quote part of article 12, which reads:

> Poland agrees that any member of the council of the League of Nations shall have the right to bring to the attention of the council any infraction, or any danger of infraction, of any of these obligations, and that the council may thereupon take such action and give such direction as it may deem proper and effective in the circumstances.

[Mr. Campbell.]

This has a very direct application to Canada, because Canada is a member of the League of Nations and the action that it is proposed to take to-day is taken, I presume, under that clause.

It is not necessary for me to deal with the question of the alleged atrocities, because that has been very well covered by the hon. member for Vegreville. The question is of vital interest to at least one third of a million of Canadian citizens of Ukrainian stock. That fact in itself is entitled to some consideration outside altogether of the humanitarian angle of the question and Canada's responsibility as a member of the League of Nations. The request that Canada as a member of the league should support an independent investigation into this question and let the world know the actual conditions, seems to me a very modest one.

This afternoon the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) mentioned that a committee was already dealing with this matter. I am not entirely clear about that. If I am wrong, perhaps the Prime Minister can set me right. My understanding is that that committee is dealing simply with the petitions; that is, that committee is not appointed to go into Poland and to make a thorough examination and investigation. If it is, of course the matter has gone as far as we can go now, but my understanding is as I have indicated.

Mr. BENNETT: My information is that the committee dealing with the receivability of the petitions is one of the standing committees of the league. The committee consisting of representatives from Great Britain, Norway and Italy is dealing with the subject matter that we are discussing here to-day, and this country could not as a member of the League of Nations do other than insult the league by taking action when action has already been taken. I tried to make that clear this afternoon.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I quite appreciate that. I was not clear on that point. My understanding was that the committee was circumscribed in its powers, and was dealing only with the subject matter of the petitions. What the Prime Minister has stated, however, would seem to clear the matter up to some extent, and we hope this investigation will have some good results.

Mr. G. D. STANLEY (East Calgary): It is not my intention to prolong the discussion; I desire simply to say a few words of approval of the presentation of the case by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich). The Ukrainian people in Canada have made good citizens. Three hundred thousand of them have come out to this country, most of them to western Canada, and the younger generation have certainly taken on their Canadian citizenship in a very commendable manner. I know many of them intimately and consequently I cannot help feeling a good deal of sympathy towards them in their case.

The League of Nations, as I understand the matter, have set down certain very definite principles dealing with questions of the rights of minorities. There is no doubt that the Ukrainian minority in Poland has certain definite rights. Those, I understand, according to the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) this afternoon, are now under the definite consideration of the League of Nations and will be investigated. Canada has already selected her delegates who will go there with a knowledge of the situation so far as the Canadian people and parliament are concerned. The rights of the Ukrainian minority will be respected and looked after.

Canada is in a peculiar position in regard to the question of the rights of minorities. The soul of Canadian history and progress rests, I believe, to a large extent upon the manner in which the Canadian people have treated their minorities. Those rights have been respected from the earliest days of Canadian history extending down to more recent days, and particularly as applied to the very people of whom we are speaking, when they came out to Canada as a minority and became Canadian citizens.

It is not my intention to deal with this matter at any greater length. I simply wish to express in these few words my approval of the presentation of the matter by the hon. member for Vegreville, and also of the action taken by the Canadian government in respect to its representation at the League of Nations.

Mr. A. U. G. BURY (East Edmonton): I have no intention of trespassing upon the time of the committee for more than a very few minutes. I am glad that the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) brought this subject to the attention of the committee for discussion and debate. I am glad, for two reasons, that he did so; first, because it afforded an occasion for the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) to make to the house and to the country the statement he made this afternoon as to the present position of this question; in the next place it has given an opportunity to hon. members in all parts of the chamber, representing all sections of political thought, to show that we are of one mind in our attitude on this matter. After all, as the Prime Minister stated this afternoon, the only sanction which international law possesses is the sanction of public opinion, and the more clear, emphatic and insistent public opinion is upon any question of international interest, the greater will be the effective power of those principles of international law which are involved. In no way can the public opinion of this nation better express itself than through the opinion of this house, especially when it is shared so largely by all political sections represented here.

I have no intention of going into the history of the Ukrainian people or the question of the rights of minorities. I shall do no more than deal for a few minutes with the specific matter that has been brought before the committee.

I am not concerned with the wisdom or the unwisdom of the action of the Paris peace conference in dividing up amongst four nations the Ukrainian people and the land which they inhabit. I shall not discuss the question whether the charges which are made and which we have heard to-day are true or untrue. We cannot in that matter arrogate to ourselves the place or the powers or the functions of a judge. For the most part, if not entirely so, the evidence that is brought before us, at least so far as the great majority of hon. members of the house are concerned, is hearsay. It is true that the volume of the evidence, the nature of the authority, the seriousness of the charges, and the sources from which they come, are such as to make it imperative that some action be taken, and I am perfectly certain that the house and the country will accept the statement made by the Prime Minister that action has been taken. As I understand the suggestions of the hon. member for Vegreville, all he had in mind was to call attention to the conditions and to insist that they required some action, some investigation, without saying whether we believe the charges to be true or false. We are not in a position to say whether they are true or whether they are false. But we have a right, I think, to ask for such action, for the sake not merely of the Ukrainian people themselves but also of the Polish nation and the Polish government, whose reputation and good name have been called in question. If the charges are true, they should be proved to be true; if they are false they should be silenced. That is all we ask.

Action should be taken also for the sake of the League of Nations itself. A great many people in Canada and throughout the world regarded the institution of the League of Nations as a more or less utopian idea. They never conceived that it would be possible for the League of Nations to bring about any real results in the way of pacification or the settlement of great international questions and problems that might be the cause of war. But history has shown that the League of Nations is a practical force, not a mere utopian dream. For the sake of its own reputation and its own effectiveness, for the sake of the hopes that were based upon it when it was brought into being and the hopes that are still harboured in the breasts of people who have faith in its efficiency, it is essential that the League of Nations take action, and I have no doubt that it will do so. No aspersion is cast upon the Polish people by the house, by the people of Canada, or by any of those who support the address of the hon. member for Vegreville. The Polish people themselves say that the charges are not true, and they ask that an investigation shall be made. We are simply taking them at their word. We are only saying that even for their own sake everything should be made absolutely clear; that if the charges are false they should be proved false; that if they are true, then, for the sake of the good name of Poland itself, action should be taken to put an end to that which has occasioned them. That is the position I believe which most members of the house take. That is the position which I myself take.

I have in my hand a letter from the bishop of the Ukrainian Catholic Church in Canada, a gentleman whom I know very well, and he gives me the assurance that the matter is one that does require very serious and very immediate investigation. This in itself would be sufficient to convince me that the matter called for investigation. I rose, Mr. Chairman, simply to say that I am in hearty sympathy with the feelings of my friend the hon. member for Vegreville, and I thank him for having brought the matter to the attention of the committee and thus given us an opportunity of expressing our views with regard to it.

Mr. HARRY BUTCHER (Last Mountain): I also should like to join with hon. members on all sides of the house in congratulating the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) on the very able presentation he has made to the house this afternoon of the case of the Ukrainian minority in Poland. I am quite sure that every member of the house will realize that the Ukrainian people of Canada and their compatriots in Poland have had a very able advocate to present their case here to-day. I have in my constituency probably three or four hundred families of Ukrainians, and I have learned to admire them during my twenty years of close acquaintance with them.

I have found them hard-working, law-abiding, and very loyal. I was much relieved to hear from the lips of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) that their troubles are receiving, or will shortly receive, the consideration of the council of the League of Nations, and I am sure we all hope that there will soon be a very happy ending to all their sufferings.

Mr. J. H. STITT (Selkirk): I do not know that I can add anything useful to this debate except to say this: I believe that every member of the house, every Canadian who is a believer in minority rights—and every true Canadian is a true believer in minority rights—is concerned for the peace of the world and the happiness of mankind. In rising to congratulate the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) for bringing this question to the attention of the house, perhaps I can best do so by saying that he made such a splendid advocacy of his case to-day that he proves himself to be the best example of the virtue and the capacity of the many Ukrainians who are citizens of Canada.

There are many of these people in my constituency, almost seven thousand. Just before I left the west to come to attend to my duties here I was called upon by a number of influential Ukrainian residents in my constituency, who pointed out to me the extremity of their compatriots in Poland. May I say this, without any intention whatsoever of taking any side on the question, or of giving the slightest offence to any citizen, that when considering this important matter we do well to remember that it was a single shot fired in the capital of Serbia many years ago which precipitated the nations of the world into the Great war. Possibly there is a situation existing in Poland at the present time which, if it were not taken in hand by the League of Nations, might again precipitate the world into a wholesale war.

I am very glad indeed to learn from the lips of the right hon. the Prime Minister that he believes that the best thing which this country can do in the matter is to press it upon the attention of the League of Nations. The League of Nations is the proper tribunal, in fact the only tribunal we have, to work out this great problem of world peace. I am sure that the Prime Minister's announcement will be heard also with satisfaction by the hon. member for Vegreville, who asked in a very reasonable way simply that there might be an impartial tribunal before which this very serious question might be adjudicated upon and determined.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Before this question is finally dealt with I would like to add a few words to what hon. members on both sides of the house have contributed to the debate.

I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) bring up this question concerning the condition of Ukrainians in Poland. The condition in that country at the present time is described as the sorest on the continent of Europe. Before I left for Ottawa from western Canada, while visiting some of the portions of my riding where Ukrainians have contributed a splendid part to the opening up of that part of Canada, I learned that it was the intention of the Ukrainian organization of western Canada to have the hon. member for Vegreville bring this question before parliament. At that time I said that no better man could bring such a subject to the attention of hon. members of this house. After his address this afternoon that is still my opinion. He made a splendid contribution to the debate, and I am sure his words will be read with interest from ocean to ocean.

While the hon. member was speaking, I thought his words brought two viewpoints before hon. members of this house. The hon. member himself belongs to an organization of his own people which links his people in western Canada to the homeland. The family connection between one's adopted land and one's motherland is always important. Any minority which will allow that bond to weaken will soon be submerged, and such a weakening might not be for the good of the nation of which they form a part. I believe that a nationality to be useful or to do a great work in any land must remember its motherland and also must be true to its adopted home. I believe the Ukrainians in western Canada are trying to follow that sound course. Then I thought of another connection between Canada and Poland, where we are told there is great trouble. I refer to the parliamentary connection, the discussions taking place in parliament, the activity of the League of Nations and the work of the committee which has been appointed by that league to make an investigation. When this discussion is over and the resolution is accepted, I hope the action of parliament will serve to strengthen the hands of those whom we shall send from Canada to attend the meeting of the League of Nations.

Mr. BENNETT: To what resolution is the hon. member referring?

Mr. McINTOSH: The motion of the hon. member for—

Mr. BENNETT: There is no motion.

Mr. McINTOSH: Well, then his suggestion. That does not affect the meaning of the words I am using. I was stating that I hope the discussion in parliament will be as emphatic as possible and that the action taken by parliament will be of a definite nature so that our representation in the League of Nations will be in a position diplomatically and emphatically to present to that organization the viewpoints of the Canadian people. If that is done I believe the investigation will be as full and complete as possible. In the event of the future continuation of the investigation which is now being carried on the record of the action of this parliament to-day will be of importance.

At this time I wish to say a few words about the Ukrainian citizens who compose a part of the population of the North Battleford constituency. These people constitute quite a colony in that federal area. They came into the district about twenty-five years ago and I consider it my privilege to-night to tell the house of the worthy contribution these people have made to the progress of that part of Saskatchewan. The district into which they came was considered anything but favourable. It was very undulating, quite rough, and was not supposed to be first class wheat land. However they came in to that section of northwestern Saskatchewan without money but with determination, fine vision and the high qualities of pioneers. They have done well. They have opened up that area and to-day it is a very productive wheat growing district, with splendid mixed farming possibilities. It can boast of many beautiful homes.

They have a fine patriotism; they have a great love for Canada; they are loyal citizens to king, country and to empire; they are industrious; they are law abiding and they are anxious to get along in life. They are people of integrity and honour; they are not materialistic but have high ideals and do not seem to have any great difficulty in adjusting themselves to their Canadian environment. They are men and women of vision, and that vision has arisen out of their adjustment to new conditions in this Dominion. They are not foreigners, as some people have called them, but they are as good Canadians as we have in Canada.

In that particular area of Saskatchewan the inception of the movement for better organization of those settlers took place many years ago and the effect of that organization, educationally and socially, has been wonderful. To-day most of the schools in these districts are manned by Ukrainian teachers who are doing good work among the rising generation, a generation which will be worthy of its new Canadian home. One ambition on the part of every father and mother is to send one or two of the family to the higher institutions of learning, to the universities and colleges. To-day the children of Ukrainian families are competing favourably with the children of any other class of people in western Canada. At the present time they are doing great work and we look forward to greater work being done in the future. Last night the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) made the statement that around the Maple Creek district there are areas of land which never should have been settled. And land broken up in a night would be breaking through a soil texture which could not be rebuilt perhaps in many years. I want to tell the minister that wherever Ukrainians have gone, whether the land has been rough or otherwise, they have broken through all difficulties. Whether it be to put fibre in the land, to build homes, to build educational institutions, to be thrifty and save money, to get ahead in life, to take part socially, educationally or otherwise in the building up of their country, the Ukrainians are on the job all the time and they can be thoroughly depended upon to do their work successfully.

I do not intend to go into the history of the Ukraine. The hon. member for Vegreville told us this afternoon that the Ukrainian people had a glorious past, that in days gone by they had a great and mighty kingdom, but that kingdom was overthrown, and from that time until the conclusion of the war in 1918 the Ukrainian people had never ceased their efforts to regain their lost sovereignty. But their hope that the treaty of Versailles would recognize their claims to self-determination were disappointed, and their country was included in the new Polish state, with the disastrous consequences to the Ukrainians that we have heard detailed this afternoon.

I believe it is the desire of all our Polish settlers in western Canada that the charges be investigated fully and that the good name of Poland be vindicated. On the other hand, our Ukrainian settlers feel that to a large extent their indictment can be substantiated, and they too want a thorough investigation, so that if they prove their case the League of Nations will take action and see that justice is done. But, Mr. Chairman, even if the present situation is adjusted in a manner satisfactory to the Ukrainians, I do not think it will satisfy their aspirations, for they look forward to the day when their claim to self-determination will be recognized and they will become an autonomous nation.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I hope the hon. gentleman will pardon me, but he is now advocating something that the League of Nations distinctly says should not be done. I speak simply as the representative for the moment of the League of Nations. To suggest the erection of an autonomous community within another is forbidden by the league, and I appeal to the hon. gentleman not to place this parliament in the position of being censured by the League of Nations by taking a position that is wholly at variance with the principles of the league and its statutes with respect to this question to which we have acceded. It is not a matter of order, it is a matter of debate.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was not attempting to link up parliament or the League of Nations with that viewpoint at all. I plainly stated that that was the viewpoint of the best educated Ukrainians in western Canada, but I am quite willing to deal with the question in a limited way, if, as the Prime Minister has intimated, if it will help forward a satisfactory settlement between the two peoples.

The minorities treaty is quite definite on what treatment ought to be accorded to the Ukrainian people. Article 2 definitely states that there must be protection of life and liberty; article 7 provides that all shall be equal before the law; it is also provided that the enjoyment of civil or political rights, as, for instance, the admission to public employments, functions and honours, or the exercise of professions and industries, must be guaranteed; and article 8 provides that the Polish nationals who belong to racial, religious or linguistic minorities shall enjoy the same treatment in law as the other Polish nationals, and particularly that they shall have an equal right to establish, manage and control at their own expense, charitable, religious and social institutions, schools, and other educational establishments, with liberty to use their own language and to exercise their own religion freely therein.

May I conclude, Mr. Chairman, by expressing the hope that, when this question is brought before the League of Nations by the delegates from Canada, the report soon to be tabled by the committee of investigation appointed by the league will prove of such a nature that the aspirations of the Ukrainians will be realized, that harmony will grow out of discord, and that not only will the Ukrainian people feel satisfied, but that the adjustments between themselves and their Polish fellow citizens will be of such a nature as still further to promote the peace of the world.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If we are through with the discussion, before the item itself carries may I ask my right hon. friend just what the increase of $20,000 is for. The item is:

Canada's contribution to the expenses of the League of Nations for 1931, including secretariat, international labour organization and permanent court of international justice.

There is an increase of $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT: The $20,000 increase, if the right hon. gentleman will recall the circumstances, arises out of the construction of the new building and a slight increase in the contribution, which is arbitrarily fixed. The whole question of the cost has been gone into from time to time, as he knows. The entire annual cost of the league started at $4,000,000 and it has risen since 1921 to approximately $6,000,000. That has not been regarded as a large increase having regard to the expansion of the work which has been undertaken. The new building has been perhaps a little more expensive than was originally contemplated, as buildings usually are, and the slight increase in our contribution represents that, as I have said. Generally the staff has not been changed. As my right hon. friend knows Mr. Riddell has represented us there almost since the inception of our representation permanently at Geneva. Lieut.-Colonel Vanier remained there until he was seconded to London a few days ago. His place has not yet been filled; the matter is under consideration. The provision that is made in the estimates contemplates there being someone there to do the work that Lieut.-Colonel Vanier attended to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Has Lieut.-Colonel Vanier permanently left Geneva?

Mr. BENNETT: He has been seconded to London.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is he permanently associated with the London office?

Mr. BENNETT: I would not say permanently. He has been seconded to London and appointed to the position formerly occupied by Mr. Pacaud who has resigned.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a fact that Mr. Pacaud has resigned?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Mr. Chairman, in view of the many questions asked me by hon. gentlemen in the recess since six o'clock, I think it would be a good plan on my part to give some information to them, but before I do so I wish again to express my appreciation of all the speeches that have been delivered to-day on this question. Possibly in my presentation of the case I have been somewhat harsh, but that must be excused on the ground of the occasion and circumstance. When I came to Canada I was a boy of fifteen and I came alone. I hardly knew a single person in this country. And before I was fifteen I hardly knew that there were such people as Ukrainians in the world. I could not speak a word of Ukrainian.

I was asked to present the case on behalf of the Ukrainians in Canada, and the reason for that, I suppose, is that I am of the same descent. Many hon. members have discussed the subject to-day in a cultured and admirable manner and I should not like the opportunity to pass without congratulating them on the way they have presented it from their point of view. The hon. member for East Edmonton contributed a fine speech to the debate. I realize, Mr. Chairman, that the members of this house could not treat this question in any other than a spirit of fair play, for it would be folly for any hon. gentleman to make any appeal to race prejudice such as would aggravate or strain the relations between Poles and Ukrainians in Canada.

There is one matter to which I wish to refer, suggested by the remarks of the hon. member for East Edmonton. The hon. gentleman mentioned a letter received from the bishop of the Ukrainian Greek Catholic church.

Mr. BURY: Not the Greek Catholic church, the Roman Catholic.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: At any rate the letter came from a bishop recommending a discussion of this matter in the House of Commons. May I state here that the former bishop of the Ukrainian Greek Catholic church, Bishop Budka, is now in eastern Galicia, and in a report which appeared in the Chicago Tribune of April 24 I find the following:

Bishop Nicetas Budka, fifteen years head of the Ukrainian Greek Catholic church of Canada, who was transferred back to Galicia, told me how, hearing of the "pacification measures," he immediately went to the village where his invalid mother had been bedridden for two years. He found her sleeping on the floor in the remnants of her bed clothing. She had been tossed from bed by the soldiers, who ripped it to pieces searching for arms.

From this, hon. members will gather that even the former bishop of the Ukrainian Greek Catholic church in Canada has not been immune. If hon. members wish further information with respect to the technicalities and machinery provided by the League of Nations in regard to minorities, I suggest that they ask that very learned Canadian, Dr. Skelton; I am sure he would furnish it.

I would refer now for a moment or two to the manner in which petitions are presented and heard in the House of Commons. I was very much pleased to hear two great Canadian lawyers speak to-day on this subject, the right hon. the leader of the government and the former Minister of Justice. I do not know whether the right hon. the leader of the opposition is a lawyer, but I am under the impression that I have heard him on one or two occasions deprecate the fact that he was.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am very sorry I am not.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I was glad to hear the matter presented so ably from the legal standpoint to-day. Now I wish to read from a report of the 36th convention of the International Law Association, and I am going to read this because there is a good deal of suspicion on the part of minorities about the way the League of Nations treat minority questions. These minorities believe that the success of the league in dealing with such questions is rather on a par with the performances of the surgeon who carries out a successful operation, althought it is reported that the patient died. I shall read this report as I have it:

Thirty-Sixth Convention Of International Law Association

Held at the house of the Association of the Bar at 42 West 44th street, New York City, September 2 to September 10, 1930.

Session of September 8, 1930, subject "Minorities" (as reported in New York Times September 9, 1930.)

Jurists Ask Leave To Help Minorities
World Law Session Proposes Permanent Commission to Protect Racial Groups
Finds War Peril In Unrest
Geneva's Handling of Dominated Peoples' Protests is Criticized

With a warning before them that the plight of minorities in central Europe was dangerous to world peace, the jurists of the International Law Association, representing a score of countries, called upon the League of Nations yesterday to create a permanent minorities' commission to protect subordinate racial groups and investigate discriminations against them.

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

Coupled with the association's request was a criticism of present procedure before the league in relation to the disposition of protests from minorities. Provision was not yet adequate for proper publicity on the findings in each case, the jurists held, and protestants had no opportunity to reply to an official defence presented by the government in question.

The warning of impending peril in the make-up of the European map was enunciated by Dr. Paul de Auer, leader of the Hungarian Peace Society and counsel to the Bank of France. Despite the American slogan, "self-determination of nations," in the world war, the peace treaties had left a larger number of peoples living under foreign domination than before the war, he declared.

Sees World Peace in Danger

"Self-determination has not been respected," he continued. "Millions and millions of population have been simply transferred into other countries, incorporated in other states, without having been asked, without having been given the opportunity of self-determination by plebiscite.

"The atmosphere will not be clear in central and eastern Europe until minority questions are satisfactorily settled. The present discontent of great masses leads to permanent uneasiness and is dangerous not only to the minorities but chiefly to the States to which they belong and to the peace of Europe and the world."

The request directed to the League of Nations was embodied in a report of a committee headed by R. E. L. Vaughan Williams of England which was adopted unanimously. A permanent minorities' commission of the league, the report says, could insist upon the preservation to minorities of such fundamental rights of justice and equality before the law as are set forth in the minorities' protection treaties.

The report also suggests that the commission should have power to investigate as to whether there are infringements of the guaranteed protections.

"It has been alleged," says the report, "that certain laws indirectly and in a disguised form affect minorities unfairly; that by certain laws a discretion is given to the administrative authorities who act in an arbitrary manner unfair to minorities; that there are no proper provisions for appealing by due process of law against administrative decisions; that minorities are not given their fair share of land under agrarian reform; that educational facilities are denied to minorities in respect to their language; that the free exercise of their religion has been denied to certain communities in breach of the treaty rights.

"Your committee, while of course expressing no opinion, as to the facts alleged, feel strongly that it is for the good of the states concerned, no less than for that of the minorities, and in the best interests of peace, that such charges should be investigated in the manner above suggested."

To buttress what has been said in this report I will quote an article which is very pertinent to the question, as it appeared in the Manchester Guardian some time ago:

Amongst the Ukrainian petitions submitted to the league there was one drafted and signed by Mme. Milena Rudnicka, who is well known in the international women's movement as a person of high intelligence, integrity and heroism. Amongst very many petitions sent in to the league since the "pacification" (as the Polish excesses committed in the Ukraine last October are officially termed) here is one of the few that have been carefully and intelligently drafted. It also included the most comprehensive record that has yet been made of the "pacification." I have referred to this report in a previous message—it is a document of about eighty pages of typescript, and is of fundamental importance (it was included in the interpellation made by the Ukrainian members of the Polish parliament). Indeed, to disregard this document would be a grave if not a fatal omission in any inquiry into the subject.

I now learn that the league secretariat has formally declined to regard Mme. Rudnicka's petition as "receivable." So far six Ukrainian petitions have been declared "receivable." One of these six is a flimsy document by a Ukrainian resident in Paris. There is good reason to believe that some, at least, of the others are also badly drafted, and feebly provided with documentary evidence.

It is possible that the report embodied in Mme. Rudnicka's petition is embodied in one or more of the other petitions also, in which case it is too early to say that this report will not be dealt with by the league. But the fate of Mme. Rudnicka's petition is bound to raise grave doubts as to the way petitions are treated by the secretariat. The number of Ukrainian petitions sent in within the last few months grows into hundreds; to pick out a few of inferior quality that can easily be pulled to pieces by those astute people who are anxious that nothing may come of any Ukrainian petition would not be particularly high-minded. To say that this has actually happened would be premature.

Why Mme. Rudnicka's petition has been rejected is not stated. It certainly conforms to at least four out of the five conditions that were laid down by a resolution of the league council in September, 1923—(1) that its purpose is the protection of the minorities in conformity with the treaties; (2) that it is not put in the form of a demand for a rupture of political ties between the minority in question and the state of which that minority is a part; (3) that it does not emanate from an anonymous or doubtful source; (4) that it contains matter which has not been the subject of previous petitions; (5) that it is drawn up without violence of language.

None of these five points has been left unfulfilled in Mme. Rudnicka's petition with the possible exception of the fourth. If a previous petition that had been declared "receivable" includes the eighty-page report then little harm will have been done. But if not, then Mme. Rudnicka's petition will have conformed to the fourth point also, for the report is new material. In that case the rejection of Mme. Rudnicka's petition would be a great wrong.

Additional facilities for the hearing of petitions by the League of Nations should be provided. There are four matters to which I would direct the attention of hon. members as pertinent and relevant to the case. They are as follows:

Woodrow Wilson's fourteen points.
Treaty of Versailles.
Decision of the Council of Ambassadors.
The Minority treaty.

Under the first heading I would refer to the following:

Number 10. The peoples of Austria-Hungary, whose place among the nations we wish to see safeguarded and assured, should be accorded the freest opportunity of autonomous development.

Number 13. An independent Polish state should be erected which should include the territories inhabited by indisputably Polish populations, which should be assured a free and secure access to the sea, and whose political and economic independence and territorial integrity should be guaranteed by international covenant.

(Promulgated in address to congress, January 8, 1918).

Under the second heading, Treaty of Versailles, I quote the following:

Article 93.

Poland accepts and agrees to embody in a treaty with the principal allied and associated powers such provisions as may be deemed necessary by the said powers to protect the interests of inhabitants of Poland who differ from the majority of population in race, language, or religion.

(Signed, June 28, 1919).

This treaty is often confused with the minorities' treaty, but they were separate treaties although signed on the same day. The third document to which I desire to make reference, the Decision of the Council of Ambassadors, reads in part as follows:

The British Empire, France, Italy and Japan, signatories, together with the United States, as principal allied and associated powers, to the treaty of Versailles:

Whereas, according to the terms of article 37, paragraph 3, of the above treaty they shall establish the frontiers of Poland, not specified in that treaty.

I am reading only those parts which refer to the subject matter under discussion. The document continues:

Whereas, Poland has recognized that as Eastern Galicia, the ethnographical conditions make a regime of autonomy necessary;

Autonomy has been promised to the Ukrainians in the western Ukraine and in eastern Galicia. The document continues:

Whereas, the treaty between the principal allied and associated powers and Poland, signed June 28, 1919, provides in all territories placed under Polish sovereignty special guarantees in favour of racial, linguistic, or religious minorities.

I will not read the remaining paragraphs as they do not relate to this matter. That document was signed by the Polish plenipotentiary, Maurice Zamoyski at Paris on March 15, 1923. I will not quote from the minorities, treaty because it has been referred to already, not only by myself but by other hon. members. I would also like to quote an article by Mr. H. Wickham Steed. This appeared in the Review of Reviews of December 15, 1930, and presents such a good case for the Ukrainians that I feel I must read it. It is as follows:

The Case of Poland. In no country is the precise and impartial ascertainment of facts more necessary than it is in Poland, and no country has a greater interest in presenting to the world an irrefutable case. Polish methods of repressing incendiarism and other acts of sabotage, of which sundry Ukrainian groups were guilty last Autumn in east Galicia, have been brutal to a degree which reasonable Poles are the first to deplore and condemn. While it may be true that these acts were instigated or encouraged from Berlin, the fact that they were committed justifies neither the neglect of the Polish government to remove legitimate Ukrainian grievances, nor its folly in playing into the hands of its enemies by dragooning whole Ukrainian districts. The folly was the greater because it strengthened the hands of Poland's detractors who lose no opportunity of declaiming against the Polish corridor and the Upper Silesian settlement. The case of the Polish corridor is far stronger than the public in western Europe and in the United States understands. Poland has nothing to lose by an impartial ascertainment of the facts concerning it and, especially in regard to the position of east Prussia. But Poland or rather the "Cabinet of Colonels" by which Marshal Pilsudski has thought fit to surround himself, chills many sympathies by the adoption of methods similar to those employed by the old bolshevist regime in Russia or by the fascist dictatorship in Italy.

This is all I have to say on this subject at the present time. May I conclude by again extending my thanks to all hon. members who have participated in this debate. The people who asked me to sponsor this presentation appreciate the opportunity afforded, and I extend their thanks to the right hon. the Prime Minister and the right hon. the leader of the opposition for helping to facilitate the discussion on the minorities question.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, it is perhaps desirable that I should make two or three additional observations, not to trespass upon the time of the committee but rather to clarify a situation which I think has been somewhat obscured by reason of the fact that there is an earnest desire on the part of a large number of hon. members in this house to indicate their sympathy with a people so largely represented in their constituencies.

We might as well realize that this country is a member of the League of Nations and that accredited to this country at the moment are several Polish consuls. As regards the Ukrainians, as the hon. member for Vegreville pointed out, they are at present, so far as we are concerned, citizens of Poland. That is one of the difficulties which the house has not frankly realized.

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

When you begin to discuss the internal government of a friendly power, you are on very dangerous ground. It is not the duty of this Dominion to undertake to advise people how they should govern themselves. That is their business. On the other hand, there is an obligation upon us as a member of the League of Nations, and it is a rather serious obligation, not to reflect upon the other members of that league, and hon. gentlemen have been fair enough to realize that. The league having now undertaken a responsibility—and a very serious one it is—must carry it through, and we may find ourselves at the appropriate moment voting to determine what action the league shall take. Therefore it is of the utmost importance that an open mind should be kept with regard to these problems.

I certainly sympathize with the hon. member for Vegreville. As he said, he might be pardoned for taking a strong view with respect to this matter. Would one not expect him to do so? Would one not expect any young man who came to this country at the age of fifteen of the same stock as the people of whom he speaks, to have a strong view with respect to the matter? We know that under similar circumstances we would, and we expect it in his. There is a great difference between Canada and other countries on this continent in this regard. Under our constitution, if the rights of minorities are affected, recourse may be had to the courts. Barrett vs. the City of Winnipeg is the outstanding case on the subject. In that case the privy council decided there had been a prejudicial interference with minority rights with respect to education in the province of Manitoba. Later the privy council decided that the minority was entitled, under the provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, to remedial legislation. There you have a tribunal which determined that rights had been taken from the minority and, secondly, that the minority had a right of redress under the constitution itself. That is where the position is not analogous to that of the Ukrainians in Poland, for it is not the constitution of Poland that is concerned, but a treaty made by the country to which they owe allegiance with other countries of the world. Thus far no international court has been set up that can by adequate and appropriate sanctions take effective action in cases of violations of treaties. In other words, the science of international law has not reached the stage in its development where a court of international justice, by its judgment, is able to decree and carry into effect a decree with respect to the violation of treaty rights by the government, over a portion of the population it governs.

There is the clear distinction. It is unnecessary to remind the house that during the last few years great progress has been made. There has been a persistent and continuous endeavour on the part of representatives of all democracies to ensure that some tribunal be set up that might not only have the jurisdiction to determine matters of this kind but also have power by appropriate sanctions to see that its decrees were enforced. That time has not yet arrived in our developement in international affairs. Perhaps later, during the discussion of the General Act, I may have occasion to make a few observations, but at the moment may I again assure the hon. gentleman that the delegation which represents Canada at the next meeting of the league will do everything that can be done to ensure that justice—and who would not like to see justice attained and who does not know how difficult it is of attainment?—is done alike to the Ukrainians and the country of which they are citizens.

I could not, of course, in the position which I occupy for a single moment, permit without at least some protest, anything to be said that would indicate that the parliament of Canada was seeking by any intervention on its part to secure the setting up of a new government by a portion of the population of Poland. To do that would be ruinous to the position of this Dominion as a member of the League of Nations. If I might say so, I know from what the hon. member for Vegreville has said to me, he thoroughly appreciates that position, thoroughly understands the implications of it, and he has very well refrained from making that suggestion, except as it might be inferentially understood from what was said by another and not by himself in one of the quotations read into the record. That being the case, I am sure a very useful purpose has been served by this discussion. I trust not the least useful part of it has been that part which has brought home to us a sense of our own responsibilities and also, so far as it may be possible, by a country new in international affairs, a realization of what age-old conflicts, conflicts that are not a century but sometimes several centuries old, mean. Those who followed the history of the great war, and remember the battle between the Serbs and the Turks, will recall that in the opening sentence of the history of that time, we are reminded that the success by the Serbs meant victory in the conflict that had been waged for centuries. So it is that we have here age-old animosities, age-old difficulties that will not be solved in a single minute, and least of all by a new democracy 4,000 miles away from the spot where the differences arise. If the discussion has brought to our minds that sense of responsibility, it has certainly been useful.

It has also been useful inasmuch as it has brought to our attention the fact that there are two sides to every question. When the hon. member referred to the pamphlet that had been issued on behalf of the Ukrainians and in the next breath referred to the pamphlet issued on behalf of the Poles and their counter-allegations, he made the case complete, and we are not judges in Israel or elsewhere. Least of all are we judges of the conditions in Poland, because if we accept one story, we must arrive at one conclusion, and if we accept the other, we must arrive at a different conclusion.

As I said a moment ago, humanly speaking there is nothing so difficult to attain as justice, for it is not easy for any of us to think in terms of absolute righteousness and justice. In this instance we are not abrogating to ourselves the right to determine where justice lies between two contending parties. We can only say that men, women and children numbering 300,000 or thereabouts in this Dominion are interested in the welfare of their kinspeople in the land whence they came, believe they are not receiving their rights under the treaty that Poland made with the nations of the world, and ask at our hands that every possible facility be provided to make known the extent to which that treaty has been violated, if at all, and what would be the appropriate steps to take if it is established that there has been a violation of its provisions. That, I think, has been the result of this discussion. So far as the government is concerned, it will endeavour to the best of its ability to see that those who represent Canada make known the claims that have been presented so admirably, if at times with some feeling, as the hon. gentleman said, a feeling which we can rightly and properly understand, to those who have the enormous, the tremendous responsibility of determining the rights of contending parties in order that justice, the end aimed at, may be done to all.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Just a parting word. When I broached this subject first to both the leader of the government and the leader of the opposition, I told them that it was with no intention of putting something over parliament. I have presented the facts as I got them from certain parties. Whether they are true or not, it is not for me to say. I hope that the committee of three will find out whether the allegations are right or wrong.

If they are wrong, I shall be glad to know it; if they are right, I shall be glad to know it. I hope they are right, but if they are wrong, I shall be one of the first to admit that they are wrong. With respect to my relations to Canada and my relations to the country whence my parents sprang, I should like to tell this house that my first loyalty is to Canada and I say quite sincerely to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the members of this house, that if those relations should conflict the Ukraine would have to be forgotten because I am first of all a citizen of Canada and to her I owe my absolute loyalty.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the Prime Minister inform the committee on what basis the expenses of the League of Nations are allocated among the different members of the league?

Mr. BENNETT: The expenses were first determined on the basis of our contributions to the postal union. That was found to be very unsatisfactory, and now an arbitrary sum is fixed by a committee of the league itself. If the hon. gentleman so desires, I shall give during the discussion of some other item the exact contributions that have been assessed against this country since the day we first became a member of the league. I have not that information beside me at the moment.

Item agreed to.

Repairs to international bridge over St. John river at St. Leonard's, N.B., $3,000.—Total, $173,250.

Mr. BERTRAND: With respect to the interprovincial bridge at Hawkesbury, would the minister give the date of the opening of the tenders and state when the contract was awarded?

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): The amount of $122,000 is required to provide for the government's share of the cost of completing the interprovincial bridge now being constructed over the Ottawa river at Hawkesbury. An order in council was passed on August 5 accepting the lowest regular tender of Farley and Grant.

Mr. BERTRAND: Up to what date were the tenders received?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have not that information.

Mr. BERTRAND: What wages were supposed to be paid to the labourers on that work?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The schedules are from time to time procured from the Labour department, and are attached to and made a part of the contract.

Mr. BERTRAND: There was a schedule attached to this contract when it was awarded. I hold in my hand one of those schedules, and according to the schedule the wages to be paid to the labourers on that work were 45 cents an hour. Later, the contractor who was awarded the contract paid the labourers only 35 cents an hour. Complaints were made by the labourers from Hawkesbury, and after considerable correspondence had been exchanged between the Department of Labour, the Department of Public Works, and the interested labourers, an additional five cents was remitted to these men; which proves that a reasonable wage was not being paid to the labourers. Now they have applied to the Minister of Labour for the 45 cents an hour which they were originally supposed to get. I am under the impression that this schedule which I have here, showing a rate of 45 cents an hour, was even placarded on the works. I shall not take time to read all this correspondence which I have here. I will simply say that the Minister of Labour wrote that he was fixing a rate of 40 cents an hour. This trouble over the wage rate has created a lot of uneasiness in the district. The contractors knew very well when they submitted their tender that they were expected to pay 45 cents an hour for labourers. Later on, as I said, the Minister of Labour decided that 40 cents an hour was a reasonable wage on this work. As the Minister of Labour has not a seat in this house I appeal to the Minister of Public Works. The contractor most certainly based his price, when submitting his tender, upon a labour cost of 45 cents an hour. The labourers received only 35 cents an hour, and later five cents an hour more was added.

There is an additional five cents an hour not accounted for. The labourer has not got it, and the labourers are asking themselves if the government is taking the part of the contractor rather than supporting the interests of the labourers. If that is not the case, where did this other five cents go to?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My understanding is that the rates are determined by the prevailing rate of wages in the locality where the work is done. This is an interprovincial bridge, and possibly there is some difference between the rate in the Province of Ontario and the rate in the province of Quebec. Such differences are adjusted through the Department of Labour. I can assure my hon. friend that the Public Works department sees to it, wherever complaints are made, that the provisions of the contract in respect to the payment of labour are carried out. The Minister of Labour is really the referee in the matter. He is the one to whom we refer and with whom we consult when conditions of this kind arise. I shall draw this matter to his attention and have it further investigated.

Mr. BERTRAND: Before the tenders were called for, the Department of Labour sent a representative to Hawkesbury, and I believe he made an investigation and a report to the Department of Public Works. The report states the different salaries to be paid to the different trades or classes of labour employed. In the report attached to the tenders it is stated very plainly that labourers are to be paid 45 cents per hour.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not know whether they have been or not. If there is a complaint I suggest it be made to the Department of Labour; that department will take up the matter with the Department of Public Works and if possible have it adjusted.

Mr. BERTRAND: I would not like to retard the progress of the item, but would the minister allow me to produce correspondence to show that they were not paid 45 cents?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should be glad if my hon. friend would furnish me with evidence that the contractor had not fulfilled his contract with respect to the payment of labour. We are in a position to investigate the matter, ascertain through the Department of Labour what has been done, and adjust grievances where it is possible to do so.

Mr. BERTRAND: I think the minister ought to be satisfied that the price stated in the schedule to be paid to this class of labour was 45 cents per hour. May I read a letter written by the contractor on February 20, 1931 to one of the interested parties:

> Re: Hawkesbury-Grenville Bridge
> The matter of wage rates for labourers on the above work has been determined by the Department of Labour to be forty cents (0.40c.) per hour.

It was fixed at 45 cents, and as I said a minute ago it was revised by the Department of Labour some time in February and placed at 40 cents.

> You worked in 1930 a total of 510½ hours for which you were paid at the rate of 0.35 cents per hour. There is therefore coming to you an amount of 510½ hours at 0.05 cents per hour or a total of $25.52 for which you will find our cheque No. 5227 dated April 15, 1931.

Then there is a section of the letter which I shall not read. It is more or less of a personal character. Then, to continue:

> Enclosed you will find duplicate receipt forms which we would ask you to sign and return to this office immediately upon receipt of enclosed cheque dated April 15, 1931.

The situation is that when the 5 cents was refunded each and every man was compelled to sign a receipt in duplicate so that he would not have any come-back on the contractors for the original rate. Before the signing of the receipt this contractor was sure that the Department of Labour would refix the salary at 40 cents per hour, instead of adhering to the first schedule on which they had based their price when they bid at the rate of 45 cents per hour. If these contractors bid having in mind the fact that they were to pay the labourers 45 cents per hour and if the labourers did not get the last 5 cents, where did that 5 cents go? I would ask the Department of Public Works if in that instance they are not especially protecting the contractors.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The rates for labour are not based upon the estimates of what contractors propose to pay. They are based upon what the Department of Labour considers a fair and reasonable wage, and if the contractor makes his estimates too low, he is the loser.

Mr. BERTRAND: I am not quite satisfied with the answer made by the minister. Supposing the schedule had been fixed at $1 per hour for labourers, would the minister suggest that the contractor would have fixed the same unit price to do that work?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Again I would say to my hon. friend that we are not controlled by the action of the contractors. We are controlled by what is considered a reasonable, fair and decent wage in the locality, and that figure we secure for labourers regardless of what the estimate of the contractors may be. I am sure if the contractor estimated his wages so much above the current rate he would not be the lowest tenderer. We have no way of learning what the contractor's estimate was, and we decline to be bound by it.

Mr. BERTRAND: Does the minister say that in spite of the schedule providing for 45 cents per hour these labourers will have to be satisfied with 40 cents per hour because they were paid 35 cents in the first place and the Department of Labour requested a payment of 5 cents more? When the cheques were handed over for the payment of the last 5 cents these men were compelled to sign a duplicate receipt in order to show that they would have no further claim.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can only repeat that the Department of Labour is organized for the protection of labour.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is not protecting in this case.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In this case whatever rate the Department of Labour has determined is reasonable and proper under the circumstances must be the schedule prevailing. On that basis payment must be made.

Mr. BERTRAND: I want to repeat that the schedule in the original contract provided for 45 cents.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No. The schedule of the contractor was apparently at the rate of 45 cents. They were paid at 35 cents, and then as I understand it the Department of Labour raised the rate to 40 cents and they were paid on that basis.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Was there not a schedule prepared and inserted as part of the plans and specifications when tenders were called for? If so, what was the rate therein set out?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There would be a schedule prepared at that time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What would the rate be according to the schedule?

Mr. BERTRAND: I hold the schedule in my hand; it was 45 cents per hour.

Mr. DUFF: Read it; put it on the record.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is that the schedule which was attached to the contract and made part of it, or is it some other schedule?

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. BERTRAND: Of course it is the schedule attached to the contract.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not know what was attached to the contract.

Mr. DUFF: Read it.

Mr. BERTRAND: This document is headed Labour Conditions, and is as follows:

(1) No workmen employed upon the said work shall at any time be paid less than the minimum rates of wages, nor shall work more than the number of hours set forth in the following schedule:—

Schedule of Wages and Working Day Hours

Trade or Class of Labour	Rates of wages not less than
Operating engineers	.85 per hour
Carpenters	.70 per hour
Stone masons	1.25 per hour
Divers	1.00 per hour
Firemen	.55 per hour
Blacksmiths	.65 per hour
Blacksmiths' helpers	.50 per hour
Cement finishers	.60 per hour
Cement workers	.50 per hour
Cement mixers	.50 per hour
Cement floaters	.50 per hour
Cement mixer operator	.60 per hour
Drill runners	.55 per hour
Powdermen	.50 per hour
Labourers	.45 per hour
Driver with horse and cart	5.00 per day
Driver with team and wagon	6.50 per day
Truck driver	.50 per hour
Boatmen	.50 per hour
Machinists (repair men)	.65 per hour

The minister will notice that labourers were rated at 45 cents per hour under the contract.

An hon. MEMBER: Is that signed?

Mr. BERTRAND: This particular document is not signed, but I am positive that it is an exact copy.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As I have said already to my hon. friend, I will take the matter up with the Labour department and see if the contractors have fulfilled their contract and paid the stipulated rate of wages.

Mr. BERTRAND: I thank the minister and I hope he will take the matter into consideration, because there is a letter from his department stating that this case was discussed with the Department of Labour and that that department had made an arrangement regarding it. We claim that the later arrangement is not quite fair, because they have cancelled the first schedule of 45 cents and are allowing the men only 40 cents. The contractors first asked the labourers to accept 35 cents and on the Labour department insisting that the rate be 40 cents, the contractors required the men to sign a duplicate receipt for the extra 5 cents in full discharge of all claims, so that later they would not be able to claim the original rate.

Mr. VENIOT: Is it not a fact that when a proposed work is to be undertaken the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works invites the resident district or provincial engineer, as the case may be, to state the local scale of wages? Then if the scale is higher than that on which the cost is estimated, the estimates are revised before tenders are called for, so that anybody wishing to tender can ascertain from the district engineer what the wages will be and tender accordingly. If in this case they tendered on a wage scale of 45 cents, and are now allowed by the Department of Labour to pay 40 cents, they are making that much more profit out of the labouring men than they intended to do. I hold in my hand a specimen of the form sent out to the district engineer, and it contains this paragraph:

With reference to proposed wharf at so-and-so, please note the following scale of wages as set forth by the Department of Labour:—

Then the scale is set forth for carpenters, blacksmiths, driver with horse and cart, driver with team and wagon, and so on, and there is a request to be advised if these rates will affect the estimates cost. So the man who tenders has every opportunity of finding out from the district engineer what wages he will have to pay under his contract.

Mr. BERTRAND: If the minister is satisfied to let the item stand so that he may investigate the matter, I will not deal with other objections for the moment.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I cannot do more than again assure my hon. friend that that matter will be taken up by the Labour department in the light of the terms of the contract, and justice will be done these men. My hon. friend suggests that we may be taking the part of the contractors. I assure him that nothing of that kind is being done; we feel that our first duty is to protect labour.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BERTRAND: The more my hon. friends opposite say "carried" probably the further I will go. I think I have been fair to the minister. I have not given a single name, I have not tried to put anybody in the hole. All I have asked is that these labourers at Hawkesbury be treated fairly. If hon. gentlemen opposite are not satisfied with this method, I can do it otherwise.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go to it.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. BERTRAND: The minister says he is going to take the matter up with the Department of Labour. My reason for asking that this item stand for the moment in order that further information may be supplied the committee is based on this letter:

Mr. Roméo Bazinet, Secretary,
"The Bridge Workers,"
P.O. Box 73,
Hawkesbury, Ont.
Dear Sir,—

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 23, as regards the scale of wages in connection with the contract for the Hawkesbury-Grenville bridge, I noted carefully the various points to which my attention was drawn. In answer, I wish to inform you that the stand taken by this department in the matter is clearly set out in my letter of February 13, and, in my opinion, the rate mentioned in that letter should be acceptable to the workers concerned.

This letter is written in French and signed by Mr. Ward, Deputy Minister of Labour. He states very plainly that a decision was given, that he reconsidered it again, and refers to a previous letter of February 13th.

Mr. DUFF: Read the letter.

Mr. BERTRAND: It is as follows:

Ottawa, February 13, 1931

Mr. Roméo Bazinet,
"The Bridge Workers,"
P.O. Box 73,
Hawkesbury, Ont.
Dear Sir,—

I am directed by the Minister of Labour to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated on the 9th instant, enclosing copy of the proceedings of the meeting held by workers employed on the construction of the Hawkesbury-Grenville bridge, as well as a list of the employees present at that meeting, and recommending to the department the wage rates which have been referred to.

It would perhaps be of interest to you and the workers whom you represent, to know that not one single claim was received from the workers employed on the contract of the Hawkesbury-Grenville bridge, while the work was being carried out, and that, in fact, no complaint reached us before many weeks had passed after the work had been discontinued, for the season at least. Long before claims were received the department on its own initiative . . . .

I wish to draw your attention to this passage for although it was stated that there had been no complaints, there had really been complaints made, as this part of the letter will show:

Long before claims were received, the department on its own initiative carried out inquiries, among others, one in connection with the contract aforesaid, following which it prepared a statement including the name of each worker employed, the total working hours, the rate per hour and total payments received.

The lower rates mentioned paid, as it appears from the information gathered by us, refer evidently to unskilled labour.

In this connection, I should mention that as a whole the remuneration of unskilled labour in the province of Quebec is inferior to that paid Ontario. In the present case the contract refers to the construction of the substructure of the bridge linking the two provinces, the labour engaged in this work having been distributed as evenly as possible between the two provinces.

Moreover, we believe that there existed no drawn line as to work to be done by each of these two groups of workmen, and the work was equally interchangeable.

Under these circumstances and others, it is believed that 40 cents per hour is considered a fair and reasonable rate for unskilled labour and is higher, we think, than that paid at present either at Hawkesbury or across the river. We shall therefore see that each worker receives, in due time, a cheque covering the increase of the additional amount of 5 cents per hour for the period of work done by each one, that is the difference between the old rate of 35 cents and the fixed rate of 40 cents per hour.

With reference to information required as to the responsibilities of sub-contractors and rates for overtime, when the regular day's work is over, I must inform you that the rates fixed by contract apply exclusively to the work on the substructure.

A clause in the contract with reference to work fixes a maximum of 8 hours per day, however, no penalties are provided as to overtime work. May I, in this connection, point out that never during the execution of the work was the department apprised that the 8 hour day was not observed, otherwise we would have immediately taken steps to have the provisions of the contract, as regards working hours, strictly carried out.

Yours truly,

H. H. Ward,
Deputy Minister of Labour.

The deputy minister in this letter has fixed the wages at 40 cents an hour whereas previously it was 45 cents; so that there is a difference of five cents. But as the hon. member for Gloucester stated a few minutes ago, when these tenders were put in the price was fixed in accordance with the wages which they were supposed to pay to the labourers. This schedule was attached to their contract. In the county of Prescott the contractors paid only 35 cents an hour, and of course the men complained. Now we find that the Department of Labour on February 13 fixed their wages at 40 cents. The reason the people are so greatly dissatisfied is that the contractors are able to make a profit of 5 cents an hour on all the hours of labour put in by the men. That 5 cents the labourers lose, and besides they are asked to sign receipts to say that they have no further claim.

These labourers have not been treated fairly and they are complaining. I tell the minister quite frankly that they are very uneasy about it. They claim that the government is helping the big interests as against the interest of the labourers. I did not wish to mention this, and if the minister had allowed the item to stand, on the understanding that further information would be provided, I would not have done so. I have not a copy of the receipt which they were asked to sign, but the receipts were made out in duplicate and were returned to the contractors at the time the cheques were issued. Some hon. member has asked whether I have a copy of the receipt which the men had to sign. I have not, but in the letter from the contractors to the labourers this statement appears:

Enclosed you will find duplicate receipt forms which we would ask you to sign and return to this office immediately.

Once again I urge upon the minister the importance of looking into this matter with a view to finding, if possible, some means of doing justice to the men employed on the construction of that bridge. I am speaking for the men from the province of Ontario; I am not speaking for the Quebec side. It is now practically eleven o'clock and I should be glad if the minister would undertake to furnish the information I have asked for.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I assure my hon. friend, as I have assured every hon. member, that I am prepared to give all the information available, and I cannot understand the suggestion that I am seeking to withhold anything. This is the first I have heard of this complaint and I have promised the hon. gentleman to take the matter up with the Department of Labour and try to get the facts and give them to him. I have no objection to the item standing, and have never endeavoured to press it through. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, May 11, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRECEDENCE FOR GOVERNMENT BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAYS—DATE OF BUDGET

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That on Wednesday, the 13th May next, and every Wednesday thereafter to the end of the session, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence over all business except questions by members and notices of motions for the production of papers.

He said: This motion would have been made before, but the interruption of the business of the house on Wednesday last made me think it undesirable at that time. The intention is to give this Wednesday clear for private business, and I trust this will be satisfactory.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I do not wish to oppose the motion, but if its purpose is to shorten the session by enabling the government to get on with the business of the session I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not the report in the press is correct to the effect that the budget will not be brought down until June. My right hon. friend a few days ago said he would probably be in a position early to advise the house when the budget would be brought down, and this might be an appropriate moment to express a view.

Mr. BENNETT: If this motion were disposed of as worded, it would take this Wednesday also from private members. That was not intended; it was intended that private members should have this coming Wednesday, so that the motion will have to be changed a little to read:

That after Wednesday, the 13th May next . . .

I should like to take the house into my confidence as to the cause of the delay in making an announcement. The illness of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) has greatly retarded the work in which I am engaged, and by reason of the seriousness of his illness, I am unable to make a definite statement. We had certain very definite matters arranged for a certain definite date, and that day he was taken ill. He has not been able to come to Ottawa since, but in no event shall we postpone the budget until June, I can assure my right hon. friend, although I shall have to go on without the assistance of the hon. gentleman who has given a great deal of attention to the matter during the last two months, and who has taken extraordinary care with respect to a large number of items. Without his assistance I feel very much lost, but that is the position and I think it is right to say so to the house.

Motion as amended agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

"A DECADE OF DEVELOPMENT"—ARTICLE BY MR. FAIRWEATHER

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I wish to table a copy of an article intituled: A Decade of Development, which was given to the press some little time ago by S. W. Fairweather, Director of Bureau of Economics, Canadian National Railways, and which was requested by the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) and I think some other hon. members.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 44, to amend the Immigration Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As the Immigration Act now stands, it is possible for a variety of causes to deport people, no matter how long they have resided in Canada. Last year there were several cases that aroused a good deal of public interest, one case in which a woman was deported after some eighteen years' residence in Canada. Her connections in the old country had been broken up; she had during all those years established connections in this country and suddenly, because of some physical ailment of a rather serious character, she was deported. There have been a large number of cases of a similar character. Therefore I propose in this amendment that there should be no deportation after ten years' continuous residence. Just as in certain insurance policies there is a definite period after which the policy becomes non-contestable, after ten years' continuous residence in this country no one could be deported.

The second clause relates to those who have been resident for ten years in Canada and who may have been forced to go, we will say, to the United States for a short period to seek work. They very often find themselves unable to return to this country although they have lived here for a large number of years, and there have been certain cases where they have been threatened with deportation to the countries from which they originally came. The second clause would permit them, if everything else was all right, to enter Canada on account of their having resided in this country for ten years. I might put it a little more correctly in this way: after ten years' residence in Canada, they would not be precluded from reentering this country simply for the reason that they had gone elsewhere on this continent for a short period.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 45, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. MacINNIS: The present Canada Shipping Act is a rather old piece of legislation, and very much out of harmony with modern industrial conditions. The purpose of these amendments is to put the conditions under which seamen have to live and work more in line with modern industrial standards.

The first amendment provides for the physical examination of seamen. There is no provision for that in the present act. It has been brought to my attention that on occasions seamen suffering from contagious or infectious diseases have been taken aboard ship, or they have been taken ill after coming on board, thus creating a menace to the health of the other members of the crew.

The next amendment provides for more efficient inspection of water and provisions supplied for the crew than now prevails. At the present time the act provides only that the seamen may complain and if their complaint is not upheld by the person making the inspection, they are penalized for making the complaint. It also provides for a scale of provisions for the crew, somewhat more extensive than that for which the regulations now provides. There is also a provision for regulation of the hours of work and for compensation to seamen injured in the course of their employment. There is another provision that only ships registered in Canada shall engage in the coastal trade of Canada.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I think it well to say to the hon. gentleman that certain of his observations as heard by me are in conflict with legislation over which at the moment we have very limited control. The statute of Westminster will clear up the situation. I mention this at the moment because I may not have caught the exact purport of his remarks but as the matter now stands, many of his suggestions could not be acted upon by this parliament.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Might I point out that the whole act is obsolete and has been for the last twenty-five years. It is not these amendments alone that are out of date, the whole act is in need of revision.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Is it not a fact that in view of the deliberations of the 1929 and 1930 Imperial conferences, the revision of the Canada Shipping Act will have to be considered?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is quite correct. If the proposals of Westminster are adopted by both houses of parliament and the statute of Westminster passed, this will entail the entire revision of the Canada Shipping Act as well as the revision of many other acts that are upon the statute books at the present moment.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is better to wait another year.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is the reason I made the suggestion.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would call the attention of the hon. member introducing the bill to the method in which the bill has been prepared and also to the rules relating to the preparation of bills. Perhaps he will give it his attention before the second reading.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I should like to direct a question to the right hon. the Prime Minister. In view of the deliberations of the International Chamber of Commerce, which were concluded, I understand, yesterday, and in view of one of the recommendations of that congress for the holding of an international conference to study the question of the remonetization and standardization of silver, and in view of the further fact that the government of China has indicated its willingness to take the initiative in regard to the proposed conference and that the government of the United States has also indicated its willingness to facilitate such a conference, will the government of Canada be prepared to facilitate in every possible way the holding of such a conference?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The facility with which the hon. gentleman asks questions is equalled only by his willingness to rely on everything he reads in the newspapers. The fact is that since this government came into power it has been steadily studying the silver question. There is in the city to-day perhaps the leading British authority on the subject. We have had more than one conference with him, and expect to have others. As to what may result in the way of an international monetary conference from the representations that have been made by various countries, including the United States of America, and notably the resolutions introduced by Senator Pittman it is too soon to indicate. But if the opportunity is afforded, this country will endeavour to discharge to the best of its ability the obligations that rest upon it as a great silver-producing country.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): On the 22nd of April an order of the house was passed with reference to the bringing down of correspondence relating to Riding Mountain park. As the correspondence cannot be very voluminous, I would ask that the return be expedited.

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): I understand that the information which the hon. member has asked for has been transmitted to the Secretary of State.

VACANCIES IN REPRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): There are two constituencies which have not been represented during this session in the House of Commons. One is the constituency of East Hamilton, where a vacancy occurred on October 13, 1930, through the death of the member, and the other is the constituency of Three Rivers-St. Maurice, where a vacancy occurred on January 4 of this year, through the death of the member. May I ask the government if it is the intention to bring on by-elections in those constituencies so that they may be represented in this parliament before this session is over?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I am sure that the by-elections will be brought on in accordance with the provisions of the law in that regard, if due attention is paid to the practice heretofore followed by those who were then in power.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Imitation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The practice heretofore followed has been to bring on the by-elections so that the constituencies could be represented. It was for that reason that I put the question to the Prime Minister in the form I did. I would ask him again if he expects to bring on the by-elections in time to enable these constituencies to be represented in this house at this session of parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): A delicate question.

Mr. BENNETT: Not a delicate question, but a question that it is not quite possible to answer because it involves the determination of two questions of fact with respect to neither of which is the government in complete control of the factors which would enable those questions to be answered.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What are the factors?

Mr. BENNETT: One of them is the opposition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The opposition is not a factor in these cases.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, yes, as to when parliament prorogues. It is quite evident, Mr. Speaker, that the date of the prorogation of parliament will determine whether or not the constituencies are represented, having regard to the provisions of the statute; and as to when parliament will prorogue, no government can say.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I can promise my right hon. friend that if he has the writs issued immediately and brings down a satisfactory budget, we will try to accommodate him.

Mr. BENNETT: The questions have been answered. The two "ifs" which the hon. gentleman used entirely explain the situation.

AUSTRALIAN TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) if it is true that a bill based upon the proposed new Australian treaty has already received its first reading in the Australian parliament?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): All matters pertaining to the Australian treaty must rest in abeyance until, by the consent of both governments the matter can be properly placed before both parliaments.

ESSEX TERMINAL RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 23, respecting the Essex Terminal Railway Company—Mr. Robinson—Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Section one agreed to.

On section 2—limitation of time for commencement and completion.

Mr. SPENCER: As this company already has had twelve extensions I would ask why construction has not already been started?

Mr. ROBINSON: My reply would be that construction will take place as soon as the Ojibway plant goes ahead. At the present time they have a wire loom and tin plate mill, I believe the tin plate mill is the first of its kind in Canada. When these two plants are running to capacity they employ about 500 men. For the past nine years there have been seven blast furnaces erected, and when conditions warrant work will be commenced. I may add that the construction of this road would prevent traffic through the Windsor and Sandwich section. If Ojibway does not go ahead there will be no cause to build the road.

Mr. SPENCER: The hon. member has not answered my question. I want to know why the railway was not previously built, considering the fact that the first extension was asked for in 1902, and since that date there have been eleven granted.

Mr. ROBINSON: My hon. friend will know that the steel industry in Canada has not been what we had hoped for, and owing to the war this construction has been delayed. As I say the road will not be constructed unless the program continues in Ojibway.

Mr. POULIOT: They had plenty of time to prepare for the manufacture—

Mr. ROBINSON: What is the use of building a road if there is nothing for it to do.

Mr. POULIOT: They had enough time for the manufacture of armour plate. Is this an independent company or is it a subsidiary of the Canadian National Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. ROBINSON: It is neither. The Essex Terminal Railway is an independent road, but the Canadian Steel Corporation are stockholders in the company.

Mr. POULIOT: It is an independent company?

Mr. ROBINSON: Yes.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*DUTY ON POTATOES

Mr. MacLEAN:

1. In view of the fact that Cuba has intimated her intention of increasing the duty against Canada on potatoes and other products, has the government taken any action to arrange some trade agreement to prevent this increase?

2. If so, have they been successful, and what is the nature of the agreement?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings):

1. Yes, the government sent a representative to Havana for the purpose of conferring with the Cuban government regarding better trade arrangements between the two countries.

2. No agreement has yet been arrived at. Under present economic conditions there, especially in view of the depressed condition of the market for their principal product, sugar, lately selling at $1.30 per cwt. while the production cost is about $2, the policy of the Cuban government is to encourage more diversified agricultural production by means of tariff protection on potatoes and other items. They are, however, willing to further discuss these matters, and this government is now giving consideration to proposals in that regard.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS, GASPE DIVISION

Mr. MARCIL:

1. How much has been expended on the Gaspe railways in improvements since the lines were linked up with the Canadian National Railways?

2. What work is contemplated to be done in the present year, if any?

3. Are men from Bonaventure county employed in the work in that county, or is the work being done by outsiders?

Mr. MANION:

1. $410,910.

2. Certain timber bridge replacements, application of about 25,000 yards of gravel ballast and replacement of five miles of rail.

3. The men employed on these lines are recruited on the line itself and there are none taken from outside territory, with the exception of supervisory officers and skilled labour when such is required to perform any special work.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS, APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. NICHOLSON:

1. In the capital structure of the Canadian National Railways as set out in the balance sheet at page 15 of the annual report for 1930, there appears the sum of $403,443,939.56 "on account of appropriations for Canadian Government Railways."

Does this sum cover the construction and equipment cost of: (a) the Transcontinental railway constructed by the government of Canada, east from Winnipeg to Moncton; (b) the lines known as the Intercolonial Railway of Canada, including the Prince Edward Island Railway, together with all branch lines and terminals thereof; (c) what is the amount applicable to each; (d) at what period was the capitalization on these lines fixed at the above figures?

2. Does the mileage statement by the Canadian National Railways as set out on pages 37, 38 and 39 of the annual report of the Canadian National Railways for 1930 include all lines covered by the capital assets of $2,111,519,813.46 as shown on page 14 of the report, and if not, what lines and mileages are excluded, and why?

Mr. MANION:

1. (a) Yes; (b) yes; (c) statement attached; (d) original cost plus betterments as of December 31, 1930.

2. The mileage statement of Canadian National Railways, as set out on pages 37, 38 and 39 of the annual report for 1930, plus the mileage statement for eastern lines, shown on page 54 of the report, includes all lines covered by the capital assets of $2,111,519,813.46, as shown on page 14 of the report.

fixed for the completion of such works, together with all instructions, rulings and regulations issued by the federal government or its representatives in connection with the aforesaid matter.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

COMPENSATION FOR SLAUGHTERED ANIMALS

Mr. TETRAULT:

For a copy of all documents, letters and correspondence, in connection with indemnities to be paid by the federal government for slaughtered animals in the province of Quebec, under the system of reserved zones, since the establishment of said system; also a return showing the number and the average indemnity of the slaughtered animals by counties, and the average indemnity per head of cattle ranging from the age of one, two, three and over, for registered animals and cross-breeds.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): I do not know whether the hon. member (Mr. Tetrault) is present or not, but it seems to me he hardly wants to get all the information contained in this notice of motion. This would mean going away back to the beginning of the system, many years ago, and it would involve a very voluminous return. I can see no objection to the information being provided if he really requires it over such a long period, but I suggest he might limit its scope.

Motion stands.

PENSION TRIBUNALS

Mr. DUFF:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, or instructions, sent by the registrar of the pension tribunal or the chairman thereof, or under the direction of either of the pension tribunals or any member thereof, and for a copy of all letters, telegrams or other communications sent to the registrar or chairman of the said pension tribunal by any member thereof or by instructions of any member thereof.

Mr. DUFF: I was unavoidably absent, Mr. Speaker, when this motion was called the other day. I notice by Hansard that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) thought that this motion might be dropped. I can assure him and the house that I am quite willing to restrict its scope as much as possible, and consequently, I would amend the motion to read as follows:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, or instructions sent between the 1st of November, 1930, and the 1st of April, 1931, by the registrar of the pension tribunal or the chairman thereof, or under the direction of either the chairman or registrar of the pension tribunals holding sittings throughout Canada, and for a copy of all letters, telegrams or other communications sent to the registrar or chairman of the said pension tribunal by any member thereof or by instructions of any member thereof between the above dates.

[Mr. Fafard.]

That restricts the information to a certain period.

Mr. MacLAREN: Mr. Speaker, I do not gather from what the hon. member has said that his restriction would limit the correspondence very materially, for it covers practically the active period of the tribunals' work. I believe the furnishing of the required information would involve several hundred pages of returns. As was pointed out, I believe by the Prime Minister, the tribunals and appeal court are like judicial bodies and are largely independent of the department which I happen to have under my charge. I would suggest to the mover of this motion that there is no difficulty in obtaining the information such as he desires from any of these bodies, and if he would write to the tribunals or to any of the officials thereof, I feel satisfied that they would be ready to afford him such information.

Mr. DUFF: I do not quite understand what the minister means. He first stated that this motion would involve very voluminous returns covering several hundred pages; then he asks me to write a letter to the tribunals to get the information. I think my request is a very fair one. If it takes a little time to secure the information I am willing to wait for it, but certainly I think I am entitled to what I have asked for.

Mr. MacLAREN: True, I stated that the information would involve a voluminous return of several hundred pages, but I still think that my suggestion to him is not inconsistent with the first part of my statement. Again I suggest that he communicate with the tribunal, and so get all the information he wishes without having it burdened with a lot of purely routine matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the hon. Minister of Pensions (Mr. MacLaren) in his reference to these tribunals as being purely judicial bodies and thereby impliedly comparing them with our civil courts.

Mr. MacLAREN: Excuse me, I did not say "purely" judicial; I said judicial.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): So long as we have in this house a minister responsible for the administration of the War Pensions Act, I think all questions should be answered by him, and I think all returns—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Speaker, these are not debatable motions.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The hon. minister has spoken, and I thought I might have the same indulgence.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No one can reply to the minister.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Cannot anyone reply to ministers now?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I was going to suggest that the minister should furnish the return asked for.

Mr. SPEAKER: This discussion is entirely out of order.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING—BLACK LAKE, QUEBEC

Mr. ROBERGE:

For a copy of all orders, and correspondence, in the possession of the government or any member thereof, reports, memoranda, including letters, confidential or otherwise, written by any member of parliament or minister of the crown or any other person, relating to the decision taken by the Minister of Public Works not to proceed with the construction of the public building at Black Lake, Quebec, for which construction the sum of $26,000 was voted in the estimates for the year 1930-1931.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I should like to direct attention to the words "confidential or otherwise" in the third line of this resolution. It is a well known principle that confidential letters are not included in these returns.

Mr. VENIOT: They are included if they are acted upon. That decision was made against me in 1929; any confidential message or letter, if acted upon, must be included in the return.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I have never seen any confidential letters in these returns, I think these words should be left out.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion must be considered as it is printed. If the house does not wish to pass it, it may be denied. Those in favour will kindly say aye.

And the yeas and nays having been called for:

Mr. SPEAKER: I declare the motion lost.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: May I suggest that since the hon. member is not here perhaps the motion might stand until he comes. He may be willing to have these words dropped.

Some hon. MEMBERS: He is here.

Mr. ROBERGE (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the interest of my constituents requires that this correspondence be brought down, and I think that we are entitled to have it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I inquire if the motion now is refused by the house?

Mr. SPEAKER: I called for the yeas; I called for the nays, and I declared the motion lost.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I point out that it is a rather peculiar procedure to refuse information of this character?

Motion negatived.

PEGGING OF WHEAT PRICES

Mr. McINTOSH:

For a copy of all petitions, resolutions, recommendations, letters, telegrams, documents, reports, as well as an epitome of all verbal representations addressed or communicated to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture, or any other minister, recommending the pegging of wheat or grain prices from any farmers' organization, pool selling agency or unit thereof, municipality, board of trade, service club, community association and individual or collection of individuals, from the North Battleford federal constituency since July the 28th last, and the respective replies thereto.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In regard to this motion, I am instructed to say that the documents are so many that it will take months to prepare them. There are literally thousands of them.

Mr. McINTOSH: This is only one riding.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: As a matter of fact, if the hon. gentleman wishes to put it through in this way I see no objection. But the great bulk of these letters, telegrams and petitions are more or less in the same language and of the same purport. The ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) amended a motion of his the other day so as not to require all these to be copied. Most of the answers were drawn up in the same terms, one after the other, and I thought possibly the hon. member might consider altering the motion somewhat with a view to receiving typical telegrams and letters and the total number of them, or something of that kind. I have no objection to his receiving the information.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

DEPORTATIONS TO GERMANY

Mr. HEPBURN:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports, other documents, on file in the Department of Immigration dealing with the deportation by United States authorities of one August Gabert, formerly of Toronto and Welland, to Germany, and with the pending deportation of his wife, Bertha, to the same country by the Canadian authorities.

Mr. GORDON: If it is a fact, as seems to be indicated in the resolution, that the deportation of this woman is pending before the department, I have no personal knowledge of it, yet its pendency is likely on some appeal to the minister. I suggest to the mover of the resolution, who is not in his seat, that he allow the matter to stand until I have had an opportunity to look into it; because I doubt the wisdom of having an order of this character pass when an order for deportation may be pending in appeal before the person entitled to hear and determine such appeal.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the mover, the resolution will stand.

Motion stands.

POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

Mr. VALLANCE:

For a return showing the names of the persons charged with political partisanship whose conduct was investigated by Fanning Gosselin, advocate of Quebec, together with an indication of the result of each such investigation, and of the expenses incurred in each case; also a return showing whether or not the person accused of political partisanship was present or was represented by counsel or otherwise, and the name of such counsel where he was so represented.

Mr. LAVERGNE: In every case the accused was represented by counsel.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE

CHAIRS AND SCHOLARSHIPS IN CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES TO PROMOTE INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING AND GOOD WILL

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, for every one hundred dollars spent on war one dollar should be spent to promote peace by instituting international professorships and scholarships in leading Canadian universities.

She said: I spoke on a similar matter last year, there was then quite a long debate on it, and I hope therefore that we shall not now find it necessary to consume much of the time of the house. The resolution last year was referred to the committee on industrial and international relations and that committee called four witnessess as follows:

Dr. O. D. Skelton, Under Secretary of State, Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Graham Spry, national secretary of the associated Canadian Clubs.

Dr. Norman A. Mackenzie, L.L.M., head of the Department of International Law, of Toronto university.

Professor P. E. Corbett, dean of the Faculty of Law, McGill university.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Dr. H. M. Tory, president of the League of Nations Society of Canada submitted a written memorandum. Letters from Dr. Murray, president of the university of Saskatchewan, Professor R. A. MacKay, of Dalhousie university, and Dr. Robert C. Wallace, of the university of Alberta, were also submitted to the chairman and were embodied in the report.

The committee reported back to the house and since the report is very brief, I want to give it to the house. They said:

1. That the facilities that now exist in the Department of External Affairs should be extended and increased, especially in regard to the spreading of information on the international relations of Canada with other countries in the commonwealth of British nations, and also with other nations of the world. Your committee are of the opinion that this department is doing excellent work along these lines and recommend for your consideration the establishment of a central research library on inter-imperial and international matters in connection with the department.

2. That the whole subject be given further consideration by a committee of the house at the next session of parliament.

It is because of the last paragraph in the report of the committee that I am again addressing the house on the subject. While the witnesses before the committee did not all agree with each other, nor did the members of the committee all think we ought to have chairs on international relations in the universities, nor did they all think we should have scholarships on international affairs in the universities, still there was a feeling in the committee and I think it was unanimous that Canada does lack in those facilities which will fit our young men and women, graduating from the universities, to become servants of Canada in our legations abroad or to serve Canada well in the field of research or journalism or the many other things requiring extensive knowledge of international affairs. As a matter of fact, I think we can go so far as to say that some understanding of international affairs and of the relation of Canada to the world as a whole, is required by everyone twenty-one years of age and over. Everyone who votes today ought to have at least some understanding—and the greater the understanding the better—of international affairs.

Because I know what a lot of evidence and reports come to the desks of members. I am aware how difficult it is to find time to read them, so I want to review as briefly as I can some of the points made by the witnesses. Mr. Norman Mackenzie, who, as I said a moment ago, is head of the department of International Law in the university of Toronto, stressed the fact that we have not the library facilities that we should have. He said:

I know myself that our libraries are not adequate and any method of assistance that the government can suggest would be desirable, and I am sure would be accepted.

At another place he says:

You might establish in Ottawa a library on international law and international relations in connection with the Department of External Affairs, in connection with the library of parliament, or in connection with the Archives. That is one way. Students would come here in their spare time, vacations and so on, to study.

Then he gave another suggestion which seemed to me to have merit. He said:

I suggest that the Department of External Affairs, in addition to the publications that it does issue from time to time, should compile each year a volume of those documents that are not secret, those documents that are public documents, relating to international or inter-imperial affairs in Canada, and include with them the debates in Hansard on international affairs and imperial affairs. I think that kind of publication would be of great value to students of international law and international relations, not only in Canada but all over the world.

Dean Corbett also made it clear that he did not believe that we had the facilities in our universities that we ought to have. Dr. Murphy asked Dean Corbett this question:

Do you feel our Canadian universities have not been keeping apace, in growth and knowledge, on international subjects?

Dean Corbett replied:

I am afraid that that is true. I think that the universities have lagged behind, that they have not recognized the charms and the importance of international affairs as a medium of liberal education, for one thing. I think that may be explained by the lack of money, but not entirely. There has been a tendency among the universities to regard university training as to being exclusively aimed at the preparation of men for a business or professional life in this country, and too little attention to fitting them for life as members of the human community.

Professor R. A. MacKay of Dalhousie university told something of his work. He said that he taught the subjects of international law and international relations at Princeton and Cornell universities, and also at Dalhousie, and returned to Canada three years ago. He said:

Since my return to Canada three years ago, I have been more and more impressed with our deficiencies in teaching international relations in Canada. In the first place, there is relatively little attention given to the field in our universities. Secondly, the facilities for teaching the subject in Canada are utterly inadequate. Not a single library is adequately equipped for research work, except in isolated subjects. In this respect eastern Canada is, perhaps, the worst section of Canada. For example, so far as I am aware, there is no collection of the British Accounts and Papers, or British, Foreign and State Papers, or British Hansard, in the maritime provinces. Nor is there any complete collection of the League of Nations papers, nor American government documents.

The same professor also said:

We need to train experts for public service, for teaching, for research, for journalism and other activities. At present there are really no adequate facilities for this in this country.

Dr. Skelton gave a most excellent speech. I shall not go into it because he did not give those short quotations that suit my purpose at the moment; but his speech is well worth reading by every member who has not already done so. Dr. Skelton, while he was very careful, admitted that much more could be done than was being done to fit students to function well in the realm of international affairs.

I am going to suppose that members of the house will say: While this may be very good, it cannot be done because education is a matter over which the provinces have jurisdiction, and we cannot interfere. I want to quote what was said on that point by Dr. Skelton, Professor Mackenzie and Dean Corbett. May I quote from Dr. Skelton first. Speaking of scholarships he said:

They (the Dominion government) could establish scolarships without incurring the discrimination involved in selecting this institution or that institution for the grant of funds for a chair of international relations.

He goes on:

There is, further, a certain precedent in the aid given by the Dominion government to the National Research Council, which uses a large part of its federal grant, in establishing bursaries and scholarships to students in the natural sciences, though these are practically all used for graduate work in Canada itself.

I want the members to recall that Professor Mackenzie teaches international law, and in speaking of this difficulty of the provinces having jurisdiction over education, he says:

Now, among other things, I teach constitutional law, and realize that there are certain difficulties in the way of the Dominion government, or the federal parliament, interfering with the rights of the provinces.

Further on he said:

But I do feel that there are steps that the Dominion government can and should take to bring the matter of education in international relations to the attention of the authorities in the provinces. One of the methods that I would suggest to the people that are interested in such things is the method that has been adopted by the Department of National Defence.

He goes into that method a little more fully. Dean Corbett, who is also a professor of law, in dealing with this point said that once the principle was agreed to, he felt that anything that stood in the way of its being carried out could be overcome. Last year the then Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), speaking to my resolution, on March the 6th, said, at page 354 of Hansard:

> By a request from the provinces or by negotiations of some kind a way might be found to effect the purpose of the resolution.

So we have all these authorities saying that if the government really wanted to give a grant to the universities of the provinces, a way to do it could be found. I agree with that, because I have noticed in this house that when the government really wants to make a grant, there are ways found to get around any difficulty. The cadet grant which goes to the provinces is certainly one instance, and another is the grants for technical education. Then, too, the federal government has charge of peace and war. It is their business to prepare the country so that if we go into a war we shall win. Those who believe that we can win security best by armaments rely upon the federal government for the armaments. So I think it is perfectly fair to say that if the Dominion government are looked to by the people of Canada to win security through armaments, they should also be looked to to secure security through other methods, one of them being education. We are spending a very great sum of money yet for armaments and military preparation. Possibly over 40 per cent of our total budget goes on war account, past and in preparation. So, while I am not stressing the one dollar for every hundred, because to me that would only be the thin edge of the wedge, I do not feel that it is too much to ask the Dominion government to give some leadership in this matter, and leadership in a financial way, to the universities to help them prepare graduate students to function well in the realm of international affairs.

I want to quote again, because it is really the evidence that I am most concerned with, what these men said might be done. Professor Mackenzie gave the sort of evidence that can easily be quoted from. He said:

> I am not particular how it is done, but I do think that it is of great value to have as many young men and young women as we can from our country going to other countries for their post-graduate work. They go to France; they go to Germany; they go to Italy; they go to Great Britain; to the United States. They come back with a different attitude toward international relations and toward the opinions and ideas and cultures of other peoples.
> [Miss Macphail.]

And President Wallace, in the letter which he sent to the chairman of the committee, also stressed this point. He said:

> My feeling is that scholarships sufficient in attractiveness to give our best men an opportunity to spend some time at Geneva and elsewhere in Europe would on the whole be the best service that could be provided to stimulate interest and knowledge in international affairs. As a rule it is not possible for universities with their relatively limited finances to provide such scholarships and we have to rely on public-minded citizens who are interested in this work or the Dominion of Canada to help out in financing such schemes.

Professor Murray of the university of Saskatchewan referred to the benefit they had received from the fact that certain of their professors had gone abroad. He said:

> It seems to me the greatest assistance could be derived from travelling scholarships enabling students and teachers of the university to see conditions at Geneva and Europe at first hand. This opinion is given because of our experience here.
> Two students and one professor, Mr. Simpson, Professor of History, were enabled to visit Geneva and study conditions in Europe and they returned ardent advocates of the League of Nations and firmly convinced of the necessity of promoting a better understanding among peoples of the world.

He stated further that it would be worth while for other people to go. As members of the committee will recall, Professor Skelton made a suggestion. His suggestion was that in examinations for the position of first, second and third secretaries of the Department of External Affairs those who stood first in the examinations would be appointed in the usual way to their positions in the department. Those who came next in the list would be given an opportunity at the expense of the Dominion government to go to Europe themselves, to attach to one of the legations for part of the year, and then to spend the rest of the year in a foreign university. The reference is rather long and I am not quoting the exact words. This winter I read with great interest a book entitled "Learning and Leadership" by Alfred Zimmern. I found in it a sentence which fits my resolution very well. In this book Mr. Zimmern discusses the great need of education because of our changed position in this world wherein the interdependence of nations plays so great a part. At page 54 I find the following:

> The opening of the mind to international understanding is indeed not a special luxury for the few. It is an indispensable concomitant of democracy. It goes with the vote. "We must educate our masters," said an English statesman at a moment when the suffrage had been widely extended but no system of general popular education yet brought into being.

And then he adds:

> We are in a similar perilous interlude to-day. We have established an international political organization without providing the people with the means for understanding or controlling it.

That statement I feel is true, and it is because I feel it is true that again I urge the house to do something to help the universities prepare our people for the new responsibilities upon them. Dr. Skelton in his rather lengthy but most excellent speech before the committee stressed the shrinking character of the world to-day. He pointed out that humanity is one, and that we must know much more about each other than we have in the past. That for which I am asking in this resolution is not new. The national government of France has done a great deal to provide scholarships and to encourage students to come from other countries to their country, and to enable French students to study abroad. There are departments of international relations in several universities. There is one in the national college of Wales, and another at the London School of Economics. I might mention that Professor Zimmern was the first professor of international relations in the college of Wales. Many American universities have such a department and while Cambridge and Oxford do not so designate the departments, they have eight or more professors lecturing on international law and international relations. I feel that any hon. member who read from beginning to end the evidence I have in my hand would feel that in this country we lack facilities. We lack library facilities; we need more scholarships to send students abroad and bring others to us, and I think it is not too much to ask that at some point in Canada we should have a department in a university which could be called "the department of international relations." At the present time we have no such university department. I know as well as other hon. members in this house that we must have economic justice before we can have permanent peace. I realize that education alone will not bring the state I desire. Surely however if we have departments, professors and students who are devoting their time especially to the study of international relations as they exist to-day, we will be doing something to bring about economic justice. It is because this seems to me to be true that I again present the resolution before the house for its favourable consideration. All I ask hon. members to do is to have the resolution again sent to the committee on industrial and international relations.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest this afternoon to the address which has just been concluded by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). I remember quite well that about a year ago the same hon. member addressed this house upon a motion similar to that to which she has just spoken. The hon. member is to be congratulated on the very deep interest she has always taken in this matter. The subject she has presented to the house is one which must be of general concern to all right thinking people in the various countries of the world; I refer to the great cause of international peace. I realize that it is to that subject she has directed her remarks. If I say sir, that in my humble judgment her proposal is more academic than practical, I trust she will take no offence at my remarks. I think perhaps the motion she has placed before the house may be viewed in the light of an invitation to engage in a general discussion of the question of the furtherance of peace in the world; that, I take it, is the central idea of her motion. I believe she has in mind more the promotion of peace than a definite proposal for the expenditure of public money in a certain specific manner. One has but to look at the motion and note the exact language of it to form a proper conclusion. The motion is:

> That, in the opinion of this house, for every one hundred dollars spent on war one dollar should be spent to promote peace by instituting international professorships and scholarships in leading Canadian universities.

Last year when the matter was under discussion the then Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), now the hon. member for Quebec East, raised an objection which to my mind is very formidable, namely, that the motion as proposed is contrary to the express provisions of the constitutional act of this country. And I agree with the opinion in that respect expressed last session by the then Minister of Justice. We all realize that in this country we carry on within the confines of a written constitution, and I think we all know that section 93 of that written constitution very definitely prescribes that in and for each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in regard to education. I know of no section of the British North America Act which is so well known, and so well understood for that matter, as section 93 which I have just quoted, and in my opinion this motion as now drawn and presented to the house contravenes both the letter and the spirit of that enactment. Holding that opinion, I for one could not agree that the house accept the motion in its present form.

I do not say for one minute that the constitutional difficulty is insurmountable. I recall many instances during the past fifteen or twenty years in this parliament when we have been able to overcome apparent constitutional difficulties by the manner in which parliament concluded to take action. This motion proposes a straight financial grant of one per cent of the amount which we now spend for armaments for a special kind of education to be carried on through the agency of certain leading universities in the Dominion. That, in my judgment, Mr. Speaker, is, as I have said, a plain contravention of both the letter and the spirit of the British North America Act. I recall that on many occasions we have been able to circumvent some of the constitutional provisions by which this parliament is surrounded. I recall that this parliament did, on a former occasion, pass legislation to make grants for the construction of highways, and I realize that the question of roads, highways and bridges is purely and simply a question of municipal and of provincial legislation; but we did it, viewing the question of highways as being very closely concerned with the great transportation problems of the Dominion. But we did not do it in the manner suggested in this motion. We did it by a direct grant to the provinces in fair and equitable proportions, and we appointed the provinces the agency for the expenditure and control of that money within certain limitations and conditions which we attached to our grant. One need not argue before this house that parliament has no power to engage in ordinary highway construction; but we have power to make grants in aid of it, provided we make our grants through proper agencies and merely in aid of provincial work. So we did, only last August or September, in respect to unemployment—unemployment being a matter primarily municipal, then provincial, and lastly, and only lastly, a matter which pertains to the parliament of Canada; but we made our grants in that case direct to the provinces, and so we were able to overcome any constitutional objections. So we did in regard to technical education. Twenty-five years ago in this house it was urged in some quarters that parliament had no right to spend money upon technical education. I remember very well the discussions which then took place, because I think I had the honour of introducing the first resolution on the question of technical education. At first we thought the most we could do perhaps was to hold an inquiry, and a commission was appointed by the right hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and who was then Minister of Labour, to inquire into the whole question of technical education with the idea of ascertaining just what this parliament could do in regard to the matter. After the report was received parliament did take action, and in spite of section 93 of the British North America Act we made grants to the provinces. Having regard to the population of each province, our grants were upon a fair and equitable basis. We attached certain conditions and limitations to our grants, but we made the provincial authorities the spending authorities and allowed them control of the fund to carry on the great work of technical education within the various provinces.

Now, if such a course were adopted in this motion, I believe the constitutional difficulty would be overcome, but a considerable amendment of the motion as it is at present drafted would be required. If this parliament should consider it wise to make grants to further the objects so ably discussed by my hon. friend from Southeast Grey provision might be made for grants of money to the provinces, to be expended by them as they saw fit: but not, I submit, grants to the leading universities. No matter how worthy the object, no matter how good the intent, a grant by this parliament to any of the leading universities for the purposes mentioned in this motion would, I submit, be wholly unconstitutional and beyond the proper legislative sphere of the parliament of Canada. My view in regard to this proposal as it now stands before the house is that upon constitutional grounds it cannot be accepted.

However, there is another side to the question, and very briefly I propose to give the house my own views and opinions thereon.

Mr. CAYLEY: How about the grants for cadet training in the public schools, especially the high schools?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That money, I understand, goes to the provinces to be apportioned and spent by them, and is looked upon as part of, indeed it is included in, the expenditure of the Department of National Defence. Militia and defence is specifically mentioned in the British North America Act as one of the subjects over which this parliament shall have exclusive jurisdiction. But I submit that this motion should not be favourably entertained by this house for other reasons. Last year, as I listened to the discussion which took place on this motion, having particular regard to the able speech delivered by my hon. friend from Southeast Grey and to a number of other speeches which were then delivered, the only inference that I could draw from all I heard was that my hon. friend from Southeast Grey and those who saw fit to support the motion were under the impression that in some respects Canada was rather lagging behind in regard to this great question of world peace, that for some reason or other Canada was negligent or careless in regard to this question. I recall that my hon. friend from Southeast Grey mentioned that in Canada we have practically no peace societies, no magazines devoted to peace and no organized peace propaganda. These were some of the points which she urged last year as reasons why this house should adopt this motion.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am sure the Minister of Justice does not wish to misrepresent what I said. After having made the statement I did in that connection, I went on to enumerate the agencies we did have. I did say that as compared with other countries we were greatly lacking in such agencies, although I did not make the statement which the minister has just attributed to me.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then let me say that my hon. friend stated that we had not sufficient peace magazines, peace societies and peace propaganda, and that as compared with other countries we were lacking in that respect. My view, Mr. Speaker—and I have given some considerable thought to the matter—is that of all the countries in the world to-day Canada has been in the forefront in her efforts in support of every movement for the establishment of world peace. That has been the consistent record of this country since the signing of the peace treaty at Versailles in 1919. Other countries may be open to criticism in respect of their efforts in regard to world peace, but of all the countries in the world Canada should be safe from any such criticism.

What is our position in that respect? We are but a small nation numerically; we are not rich. Canada consists of ten million people, at the most, in moderate circumstances, having a tremendous country to care for, yet we were among the first of the nations to subscribe to the peace treaty of Versailles, which was the starting point of all practical peace movements so far as the civilized world is concerned. Likewise we were among the first to subscribe to the covenant of the League of Nations, the first great practical measure that ever has been undertaken by the civilized nations to secure the peace of the world. Later on we were among the first of the nations to subscribe to the theory of the world court, a permanent court of international justice to deal with disputes between nations and to settle those disputes by peaceable means. We subscribed to that at the very first opportunity, and we have adhered to that permanent court throughout all its vicissitudes from that time down to the present. We have become a party to treaties having to do with the limitation of armament; we have become a party to the treaty for the renunciation of war, and what is more, we were among the first of the nations to accept what is known as the optional clause in regard to submission of all questions of international disputes to the permanent court at The Hague.

It is a strange thing, but within the last ten days no less than three members of this house have asked me just what is that optional clause, and I thought for general information and for convenience it might be well to put it on record. In the treaty under which the permanent court at The Hague is established, there is a clause which nations may accept or reject. They may sign or they may refuse to sign, but having signed that clause they are compelled to submit practically all international questions to the arbitrament and decision of the permanent court. It is a matter of compulsion the moment they have signed the optional clause. That clause is as follows:

> The undersigned, being duly authorized thereto, further declares on behalf of their government, that, from this date they accept as compulsory ipso facto and without special convention, the jurisdiction of the court in conformity with article 36, paragraph 2, of the statute of the court under the following conditions:

These are the conditions:

> The members of the League of Nations and the states mentioned in the annex to the covenant may, either when signing or ratifying the protocol to which the present statute is adjoined or at a later moment, declare that they recognize as compulsory, ipso facto, and without special agreement, in relation to any other member or state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the court in all or any of the classes of legal disputes concerning:
>
> (a) The interpretation of a treaty;
>
> (b) Any question of international law;
>
> (c) The existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;
>
> (d) The nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.
> The declaration referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on behalf of several or certain members or states, or for a certain time. In the event of a dispute as to whether the court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the court.

Let the house bear in mind that the court was constituted in 1920; its constitution then was settled. That constitution was revised in 1926, and Canada adopted that revised constitution. It was again revised and brought up to date in 1929, and again Canada adopted the revision. Canada has given her consistent support to the establishment of that permanent court for the settlement of international disputes for the last eleven years.

What has been the record of the court? There has been no outbreak of war since its establishment. It has settled case after case of very far-reaching effect and of very great consequence which, under former conditions, might have resulted in actual hostilities. The record of the court up to date is clear; it is the highest record possible, because we have had no war and we have had no armed outbreaks. The more the nations throughout the world realize the situation and realize what that world court has attained and will attain in the future, I believe the more ready they will be, perhaps all of them, to become parties to the court and to sign the optional clause, as Canada has signed it, as Great Britain has signed it, and as all the British dominions now have signed it.

I grant that the outstanding defect of the permanent court to-day lies in the fact that our great and powerful neighbour to the south has not yet given its complete adherence to that international tribunal. We all hope the day may come, in the not too distant future, when the difficulties will be arranged which at the moment prevent the United States from joining the permanent court and adopting the optional clause. The parties are very close together at this moment, as a matter of fact; the senate of the United States has made five definite reservations, and if these reservations are accepted by the council and by the League of Nations the United States will become a party to the court. Four of these reservations are acceptable already to the League of Nations and to the court; one is still a bone of contention. I believe most people think that perhaps within the next few months, or within the next year or two, these difficulties will be removed and the United States then will become a full-fledged member of the court and a full signatory to the optional clause, but the United States has lent powerful support to the work of that court and, indeed, to the establishment of the court in its inception. Many of the ablest jurists in the United States have done marvelous work to assist that court. Some of their ablest jurists have been members of the court, and Mr. Kellogg, the former Secretary of State of the United States, is a member of it to-day, although the United States has not actually accepted the treaty.

The chief aim of that court is, perhaps, the highest aim which the human mind can contemplate: it is peace—international peace, world peace, the avoidance of war, the renunciation of war, the abolition of war, with all its dire consequences. Do not think me presumptuous, Mr. Speaker, when I say that the most important policy of this country and of every other country in the world to-day, the most important policy, whether foreign or domestic, is the maintenance of world peace. All other policies fade into insignificance at the merest suggestion of another world conflict. I grant you that it is somewhat discouraging to reflect that during the past year of grace the military and naval armaments throughout the world have increased rather than diminished. They were greater last year than they were prior to the outbreak of the war in 1914. The world's expenditures on naval and military armaments have been, I say, largely increased, notwithstanding leagues and covenants and courts and treaties of limitation, arbitration and renunciation. It only goes to show, Mr. Speaker, that men are not yet willing in this world to beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks. Something more, perhaps, is required. But that world court is doing all it is humanly possible to do at the moment. It is a practical agency; it is a powerful agency. I doubt whether we could add to its prestige or to its authority or to its power by passing this motion and establishing university scholarships as an aid in the peace movement. Let us devote our energies and our financial aid to those tremendous agencies for peace which are now at work in the world—the League of Nations, with all its ramifications, the permanent court, and the treaties of disarmament, if you will. And that is just another instance in which Canada has shown the world a wonderful example. No one can speak of this country as a militaristic country in any sense of the term. True it is that when the occasion arose Canada did herself proud and on short notice raised half a million men to take part in the great conflict. But, I repeat, we are not a militaristic people in any sense of the word. To-day we are the least taxed of any people in the world in regard to military or naval expenditures. I caught a word from the speech of my hon. friend from Southeast Grey a moment ago which gave me the impression that she had said we spent about 40 per cent of our budget on armaments.

Miss MACPHAIL: For war expenditures past and present.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I suppose that includes interest on debt, pensions and the like. But it is a proud thing to know that to-day, according to the figures proposed in the estimates laid on the table this session, less than 4 per cent of our budget is for armaments. And if you take our expenditure on the basis of population you will find that this year it will be only $1.65 per head for all the people in Canada—far and away the lowest of any country in the world. In the United States it is $5.85; in Great Britain, $13.70; in France, $7.60; in Australia, $3.85, and in New Zealand, $3.70, while in Canada, as I say, our expenditure is $1.65 per head for every man, woman and child in the country. Surely Canada is giving the world a real example in the way of disarmament.

I do not say that we should go further in the matter of disarmament. I maintain that we have a trust in this parliament which must be carried out. We are trustees for the people of this country, for the safety of our land, and we must support some armament. Whatever is necessary to safeguard the shores of this country from invasion; whatever is necessary for the security of the life and property of our citizens; whatever is necessary to enforce respect for the rights of the people in regard to both life and property; whatever is necessary to maintain peace, order and good government, it is our bounden duty to supply a military force of sufficient strength to see to it that our shores shall remain inviolate, that our population shall be fully protected, and that peace, order and good government shall prevail in this country. I do not believe we can go much lower; indeed, the question that comes up in my mind is whether we have gone down too far already and have cut our estimate too greatly. True it is we have had to have regard to the conditions which prevail financially in Canada during the present year, and the extra cut has become necessary on that account. But I think we all realize that, with the vastness of our possession here, we must provide at least adequate military and possibly naval protection. And that, I am satisfied, this parliament will always grant. At the same time, however, I am glad to be able to state that among all the nations of the world that give returns and statistics Canada, if judged by the actual figures, is the least open to censure, the least open to criticism. But I do not think that we should be called upon to spend any more money than we are already spending, especially in academic pursuits such as that proposed in the motion which is now before the house.

Personally I have no objection to this motion going back to the committee which dealt with it last year. Much valuable information in regard to the nation seems to have been obtained from the deliberations of that committee. I do not think any practical result can come from the adoption of the motion, and while, as I say, I have no personal objection to its going before that committee, for my part I think it would be better on all hands if we simply allowed the matter to drop.

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): I rise to place myself on record as being wholly in accord with the principle of the resolution moved by the hon. lady member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). I rise, firstly, because I am heartily in accord with the purpose of the resolution proposed by the hon. member, and secondly, because I have never before risen to support any lady—that is, on the floor of the House of Commons. In view of the fact that the subject under discussion is the question of peace, I believe it would be in place for me to set an example accordingly by transposing my reasons for participating in this debate. Thus my chief reason would be to support a lady, especially when she is in such apparent but not real distress owing to the masterly speech delivered by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie). And my second reason is my belief in what she says relative to peace.

Realizing as I do that many people in Canada and possibly some hon. members in this house—at least the Minister of Justice has said a few things with respect to what I am going to discuss—might frown upon the proposals made by the hon. lady member, on the ground that they are too purely idealistic, that is to say, righteous in theory but hopeless in practice, as suggested by the Minister of Justice, I should like to offer the observation that in view of the tremendous necessity of our maintaining civilization, the best minds of the world, including no less a personage than a former prime minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, are recorded as doing something with respect to peace. Instead of ignoring the peace movement and regarding it as a sort of romantic dream, they are beginning to realize more and more that the peace movement is rooted in common sense and in the fundamental needs of genuine progress. The peace movement is not a mere pipe dream; it is rather the only practical and genuine cure for all the ills that mankind has fallen heir to because of the false and fallacious ideas held by our ancestors with respect to war as a solution for our national and international difficulties.

What great problem has the last war solved? Has it made this world a better, happier and safer place to live in? Who won the war? These are questions I defy any hon. member to answer effectively and affirmatively. Believing as I do there is no single redeeming or permanently beneficial factor in war I cannot see why in the name of heaven we should tolerate or advocate war. The last war proved beyond doubt that there is no such thing as a victor in war; that on the contrary both the vanquished and the supposedly victorious are losers in such a futile conflict. In the words of the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, civilization has to end war or war will end civilization. In an address to the World Alliance for International Peace, Mr. Meighen made the following very pertinent remarks:

> This race of human beings has to adjust itself to new facts. That is, facts which never existed before. It has to adjust itself to new tremendous facts or pass out. The chief is this; science has given us so great a command over the elements of nature that millions can be snuffed out in this day in a mere matter of moments. Where hundreds fell before in manly contests, arm to arm, great cities, the whole countryside, can now be eaten up by the insatiate man of chemistry.
> War has lost its efficacy; it can never bring victory again; it can only bring defeat and despair for both conquerors and conquered; it can leave nothing behind but victors in reaction, and vanquished in revolution, and all alike impoverished. This then is the situation which we face—a long concourse of nations wanting peace, knowing as they must know that a real war now would crush them one and all, drive them back through centuries to primitive poverty and emaciation, until our civilization passes out as did civilization of old, knowing all these things, but nevertheless fearful and arming, ever arming, in response to the instinct for security. We know, everybody knows that security by armaments for one country means insecurity for another, and that competitive armaments will end where they have always ended, in competitive war.
>
> What is the conclusion? It is the plainest conclusion ever drawn from the plainest facts. There has to be found a substitute for armaments, something else that will bring security not only to one, but to all. The sovereign right of a single people to fight must yield to the sovereign right of all to live. The practically minded man sees that it means the allocation of forces now controlled by governments, those physical forces which make for international destruction, that it means their allocation to abide the judgment of an international congress and their steady reduction to the dimensions of an international police. Let us pray that it does.
>
> I plead again the law of necessity—of imperious overwhelming necessity, for a movement toward this goal is the only substitute for the armament system of this day, a system which left alone, may in no distant time send civilization crashing to its doom.

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

I doubt whether there is anything in the English language more powerful in its condemnation of war than this excerpt from the speech of the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen. The remarks which I have just read, coming as they do from a former leader of the party now in power, are perhaps all the more interesting to the house and lend greater force to the resolution which the hon. member for Southeast Grey has this afternoon so eloquently sponsored.

The resolution is a worthy one, deserving the full support of every hon. member. The only criticism I would make of it is not that it goes too far, but rather that it does not go far enough. The resolution as it stands on the order paper would limit the expenditure on the promotion of peace merely to instituting international professorships and scholarships in leading Canadian universities. As I understand the matter, therefore, the young men and women of Canada would not receive the benefit of these peace lectures, or peace propaganda, or whatever you wish to call it, but would have to wait until they matriculated out of high school and entered the university. While I agree that it is better to hear these peace talks even at the advanced age of university entrance than to hear none at all, nevertheless it occurs to me that the best, most effective and proper time to inculcate peace propaganda is when our young men and women are still in the public schools. I believe in the propaganda of peace, but I believe the seeds thereof should be sown in the springtime of youth when the mind is most elastic and receptive. I believe in starting from the bottom up rather than from the top down. That is why I contend that the lessons of peace should commence when children are just beginning to go to school, rather than wait until they are out of public school and high school, and ready to attend the university.

There was a time when it was thought that the only way to get peace was to fight for it, when nations figured that the only way they could be left alone was to make themselves so strong that no one would ever dare to attack them. There were times even in the not too distant past when this opinion was considered sound common sense, but as an axiom of international life to-day it has serious drawbacks; for it expresses, as pointed out by Mr. Meighen, in the eyes of the present day intense and extreme nationalism, the main justification for militarism. Therefore, to those of this generation who know but too well to what a pass militarism has brought the world, some alternative to a policy of preparedness, of armed peace, some plan inspired and practical, must present itself instead of the present out of date and barborous method of arming for war. I believe the only true alternative is the substitution of the propaganda of peace for the propaganda of war. It includes the consolidation of peace, which consists, on the one hand, in removing as far as possible the causes of war and the preparation of definite means of dealing with situations likely to develop into war, and on the other hand, in the systematic strengthening of international bonds.

I understand that that is the twofold task of the League of Nations, which not only provides the machinery for dealing with the danger of war but, better still, has created a group of institutions the object of which is the strengthening of international friendship and the mutual interdependence of the nations of the world. But there is one force, Mr. Speaker, which it cannot control at will, and on which it must count for the full success of its aims, namely, public opinion, or rather the collective will of each nation to peace, friendship and cooperation with other nations. This end can to some extent be attained by means of the various organs which normally influence public opinion. But the most radical and thorough means of attaining it, the only means that promise deep and lasting results, lie in the education of the younger generation, in the thoughts of peace and the realization of our world citizenship. It is with the latter thought in mind that I refer to the public school as the proper place to start a propaganda of peace. In view of the present curriculum and the various textbooks prescribed I know that it would be a very difficult task for any teacher to do any direct and express teaching on the subject of international peace. But in lieu of a general overhauling and reorientation of our whole educational system, I see no reason why the subject of international peace could not in the meantime be taught in an indirect and incidental manner. There are at least three subjects in conjunction with which it could be taught effectively and efficiently.

Take the subject of history, for instance. In conformity with our modern idea of peace propaganda, a wider horizon than the history of any particular nation would need to be opened up. Broad notions of world history would need to be given so that the history of one's own particular nation could be seen in its true perspective. I do not mean to say that the standpoint should not be national, for our first concern, after all, is with the land of our birth; but it ought not to be narrowly and exclusively national, for nations may come and nations may go, but the international cosmos goes on forever. History shows us that the Greeks came and the Romans came, and faded away; and that may happen with any civilization, and if the races which war with each other in the older countries would only take cognizance of that fact they would realize wherein lie the seeds of future warfare on the other side of the ocean. I have always thought that there has been too much stress laid on war in our history textbooks, rather than on the progress realized in times of peace. Men like Hannibal and Napoleon are glorified in dozens of pages of our histories while men like Fulton, Stephenson, Faraday and Edison are barely mentioned. Not that history should be falsified in the interests of pacifism by eliminating all mention of wars. Wars certainly are facts of history, and all too significant facts, at that; but war when mentioned must be presented in its true colours, in its cruel and sordid details and its ruinous consequences, somewhat after the fashion of that great book which most hon. members have no doubt read, Journey's End, and that other wellknown book, All Quiet on the Western Front. I can still remember the way I was taught history when I was a young lad. We had to remember the date of every battle and the number of men killed in that battle, and if the fatalities were greater on the enemy side, we thought it quite proper and patriotic to enthuse and gloat over that fact. How we did thrill over the rout and destruction of the enemy! In our youthful experience we were too foolish to understand that the destruction of our enemies meant also the destruction of ourselves. In those days it was considered unpatriotic to think otherwise, so imbued were we with the pernicious war propaganda which even now is so insidiously destroying what is not but should be a paradise on earth. That is one of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, why I support the resolution of the hon. member for Southeast Grey. It is a practical resolution. It is no mere pipe dream, as has already been suggested in this house. On the contrary, it is rooted in common sense and in the fundamental needs of our present-day civilization.

Take the subject of geography. The teacher is afforded here an almost equally good opportunity for instruction in sane internationalism. Full advantage should be taken of the new and better methods of teaching the subject, of laying stress on international links at all times, on international communications of all kinds, international commerce and industry, and migration. The growing internationalism of science and sport might also be referred to incidentally. Look at the way the world has been brought closer together by means of railways, steamships, aeroplanes, radio and moving pictures. But facts of this kind will not produce the desired effect unless their significance is brought out. Think of the thrill of the first aeroplane flight across the Atlantic from Europe that was made together by a Britisher and a German. How vastly different and more humane was it than the murderous struggle between the British and German nations that took place in the great world war of 1914. It should also be shown that the different countries of the world are becoming to an ever-increasing extent dependent upon one another, and that all this international life is dislocated by war, in which ordinary men and women suffer in countless numbers.

Finally there is the religious aspect of peace. That is too delicate a subject for a layman like myself to discuss, and I therefore leave it to the more competent care and inspired guidance of the great spiritual leaders of the world.

I know that the hon. member for Southeast Grey will pardon me for digressing from the resolution as it is worded on the order paper, because I feel confident that she will agree with everything I have so far said on this subject. Her resolution calls for a specific expenditure out of the Dominion treasury for a specific purpose, namely, that, "for every one hundred dollars spent on war one dollar should be spent to promote peace by instituting international professorships and scholarships in leading Canadian universities". While that does not include the whole gamut of human relationships from public school to the universities, nevertheless it would ultimately tend to reach our young boys and girls. Be that as it may, I am sure that the main purpose of the mover is to eliminate the propaganda of war and to substitute for it the propaganda of peace. For that reason I am going to support the spirit of the resolution, the discussion of which I hope will be facilitated if it is referred to a committee. I now move an amendment to that end:

That the motion be amended by inserting after the word "house" the following: "the government take into consideration that"; and inserting after the word "peace" the words: "and that such an amount be granted to the provinces for the purpose of"; and by deleting the word "by" in line three; and adding to the motion the words: "and that this motion be referred to the committee on industrial and international relations for consideration and to report to this house."

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Mr. Speaker, will you read the motion as amended, please?

Mr. SPEAKER: I am afraid I cannot very well read the motion as amended. I believe however it would read as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house the government take into consideration that for every one hundred dollars spent on war one dollar should be spent to promote peace by, and that such an amount be granted to the provinces for the purpose of instituting international professorships and scholarships in leading Canadian universities, and that this motion be referred to the committee on industrial and international relations for consideration and report to this house.

Without some redrafting I think the resolution is too involved to be intelligible; I cannot accept it.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, in the first place I wish most heartily to congratulate the mover (Miss Macphail). Often it has been said that our lady colleague represents the women of this country, and this resolution proves the truth of that statement. There is no woman in Canada who would not be favourable to it. It says:

That, in the opinion of this house, for every one hundred dollars spent on war, one dollar should be spent to promote peace by instituting international professorships and scholarships in leading Canadian universities.

At present some money is spent by this country to help make possible the promotion of peace by the League of Nations. Some people may think that the league will provide a utopia. True, its results are not always apparent, but it gives an opportunity to the people of every race, creed and nation to meet together at Geneva to discuss international problems of wide importance. As these people meet together at different intervals, it is possible for them to discuss together matters of common interest.

Some years ago in the New York Times an article was published by Marshal Foch to the effect that the next war would be the most terrible and the most disastrous in the history of the world. Warfare has gone from bad to worse, and science is all the time studying new means of destroying human beings and property. With the innovation of powerful aeroplanes, mighty dirigibles which cross oceans and continents, and bombs more destructive than any hitherto devised, a city the size of New York, London or Paris might be destroyed within a few hours. Hon. members will recall having read in the papers not so long ago that in Hamburg, Germany, several years after the war, people were killed on the street by gas compounded by scientists to be used in warfare. The world is not settling down. Twelve years after the signature of the Peace Treaty of Versailles there is general unrest. Every day we learn that countries abroad are unsettled, and there are riots everywhere. Monarchs have lost their thrones. In to-night's issue of the Evening Citizen appears the following statement concerning a riot in Spain:

Mob applies torch to Catholic buildings in anti-church outbreak.

This is only one instance of what has happened in Europe, despite the excellent work of the League of Nations and the good will of the leaders of every state.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Leaders of democracy.

Mr. POULIOT: I am a firm believer in democracy; it has done a great deal of good in promoting the welfare of humanity.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Where?

Mr. POULIOT: One cannot always prevent crazy or greedy people from waging riots and wars; therefore everything should be done to promote peaceful relationships among nations.

If the house agrees to the resolution, I suggest that a part of the money be applied to the teaching of Canadian history in Canadian schools. How can we be proud of our country if we have not learned the history of our forefathers? In fact the history of Canada is one of the most interesting histories of any country in the world. The work of the pioneers and its continuance by their successors until Canada has reached its present stage of development should be taught to our children in the primary schools. Sometimes this teaching is not as complete as it should be. My hon. friend from Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) suggested that part of the grant should be given to the provinces. That might well be done to encourage the provinces to promote the teaching of the history of Canada in the primary schools.

Mr. NEILL: Have the provinces asked for it?

Mr. POULIOT: If they have not, why not bring the matter up at the next interprovincial conference? It is a matter of the utmost importance.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It is not a very peaceful history.

Mr. POULIOT: But it is a history that records very few riots,—except lately the Quebec riots, which were rather justified. The times were not peaceful when the French settlers had to fight the Indians who were massacring the first missionaries—the first propagandists of civilization in this country. Nor were the times peaceful when they had to fight to preserve Canada to the British crown. But, as my friend knows, French-Canadians stood for the British connection in 1775 and 1812, in spite of the fact that they were invited by Montgomery to join the Americans in their war against Great Britain.

Mr. LAVERGNE: If my memory is good, they had a few fights with the British crown before that.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes; but not afterwards. With the exception of 1837. Certainly Canadians had to fight for their rights. For instance, Lafontaine fought in the legislative chamber for the French language, but he used constitutional means in fighting for and preserving our rights. To-day Canada has become a nation. We are proud of it. This position could not be attained at once on account of the old racial prejudices that existed, but little by little those prejudices have been overcome, Canada has asserted her rights, and to-day she is one of the most-admired nations of the world. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, while it is impossible to prevent war, any steps that will delay such a catastrophe must be favoured and supported by every right thinking citizen in this country.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny): Mr. Speaker, if I could see any good reason to become a feminist it would be in the debating ability of the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). She has certainly shown equality in debate of woman with man, although I do not know whether I am paying her a very high compliment in saying that.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am not so sure.

Mr. LAVERGNE: But, as I indicated to my hon. friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), I am not such a rabid believer in democracy. There is an old proverb, almost as old as civilization itself, which tells us, "Si vis pacem, para bellum,"—if you want peace, prepare for war. I should like to support the motion if I understood exactly what it meant.

—for every one hundred dollars spent on war one dollar should be spent to promote peace—

Everyone agrees with that. But how can we do it? And how can we come to a balancing of accounts? In my opinion the motion goes back about 170 years for its inspiration; it goes back to Jean Jacques Rousseau, who believed in the inborn goodness of man, that man was born good but that civlization or society had made him bad; which I think is contrary to the doctrine of original sin; for I have been taught that man is born evil and that it is only by redemption that he can become good. As a result of the theories of Jean Jacques Rousseau and Voltaire we had the French revolution. About a year before the king of France was beheaded all the members of the French national assembly were kissing one another in the belief that the revolution had ushered in the era of eternal peace and eternal goodness. Then the poor king, who through weakness or lack of knowledge of human nature, had accepted those theories, was beheaded. For the next fifteen or twenty years Europe was in a state of almost continual war. Then we had that great-great-grandfather of the League of Nations, La Sainte alliance—the Holy Alliance—which was to preserve eternal peace in Europe, and this practically meant world peace. We know what happened. France had to defend herself against three invasions culminating in the siege of Paris by the Prussians in 1870, which was followed by the worst condition of all, the destruction of France by Frenchmen fighting against one another.

My opinion, if it is worth anything, is that the best way to prepare for peace is to build up a strong nation, to get citizens in their youth to believe in their duty to their country—not to humanity as a whole. Serve your country and you will be serving humanity. Give everything you have, your thoughts, your will, your talents, your future, your whole soul to your country, and you will be doing more for the peace of the world than by believing in international doctrines, doctrines which have produced what we see in Russia to-day—starvation, the negation of civilization, of the belief in God, of the belief in everything that humanity has always held sacred. Of course, I may appear to some of my hon. friends as very backward, but two thousand years ago we were told in the Sermon on the Mount: "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them." But even if you do believe in this doctrine yourself, it is impossible to get the other party to believe in it too. Suppose the whole of Canada were disarmed and we said: We believe in absolute peace; the peace of all humanity. We believe humanity is good; we are going to throw away all armaments; we are going to do away with all military education. We will do away with police, because we believe the people will stop robbing and stop murdering. As a great Frenchman said, with regard to the abolition of capital punishment, "Que messieurs les assassins commencent," or, "Let the murderers begin." Suppose Canada believed in this principle; could we be sure the other nations of the world would believe in it? What was the result in Belgium in 1914, a country whose neutrality was guaranteed by the great powers of Europe? The neutrality of Belgium was violated by Germany, a country which had signed the treaty of neutrality. Two years later the same people who had denounced the violation of the neutrality of Belgium were violating the neutrality of Greece; I refer to France and England. These are very lofty, idealistic sentiments, but they never will become anything more while human nature remains what it is.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Might I ask the hon. gentleman what he would do with the League of Nations, which is perhaps one of the most idealistic institutions in the world to-day?

Mr. LAVERGNE: That is a hard question to ask me—what I would do with the League of Nations, which is only a repetition of the Holy Alliance of 1815. I believe the League of Nations is doing its very best, but I sincerely believe the League of Nations cannot stop war. I believe that the day Russia is prepared, as she is preparing now, she will jump on the nations of Europe and America in an attempt to force upon them her theories of utopia and her new civilization, if it may be so called, by means of war.

It is quite impossible to believe that war will ever disappear, after all the years of human history. That is my conviction. I may be wrong; I hope that some day we will have a world—although I am afraid we shall not see it—where humanity will believe in peace and charity, but that cannot be and will not be until the teachings of the Master, who came to this world two thousand years ago, are accepted. Two thousand years have passed; those teachings are not accepted as yet, and I am afraid it will be a very long time before they are accepted.

In conclusion, my theory is this: If you want to build up peace for our country and for the world, build up citizens who believe in their country and in their duty to their country, who believe that their first duty is to give their life to their country. In my opinion there is no greater movement in this direction and no surer way of accomplishing it than by building up our cadet movement all through Canada. In that way our children will be taught not only high ideals but also discipline. They will be taught to believe in authority; they will be taught that their lives do not belong to them only but to their country. This brings me back to the history of Canada, to which my hon. friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) referred. I despise and hate the word French-Canadian.

An hon. MEMBER: What is wrong with it?

Mr. LAVERGNE: We are not French-Canadians; we are Canadians and nothing else. We are Canadians who speak French, but we were Canadians under the French regime and we shall not be hyphenated by anybody in this country. The history of us Canadians of French descent and of French language is not peaceful. Our ancestors were warriors. They believed that they owed to their country, to their forefathers and to their children the only grant which God has given man, which is life. You can preach on any doctrine; can you do away with sorrow in this world? You cannot. As you live you will see your dear ones disappear and you cannot do away with the sorrow which you feel by any social law or legislation. Can you do away with sickness by passing an act of parliament? If you can I will be the first to support the bill. Can you do away with death? You cannot. We should not forget that this life is only a passage, a transition. All sorrows, all misfortunes, mean nothing in the great scheme of things. The Russians teach that religion is only opium for the people, but it is a mighty good opium in that final operation of death. Unless we believe we must fight for our traditions, any social legislation is absolutely useless.

In closing let me say this: I believe that if we want to prepare for peace we should prepare for war. Let us build up a strong nation; let us build up our cadet movement and put in the minds of our young people the thought that we are trying to build up citizens who will believe in discipline, in authority and in something higher than the selfishness of mankind. I remember when I was quite a young man, as a young officer following a course, hearing a lecture by an Australian officer.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask my hon. friend a question? Is he not a lieutenant-colonel in the army now?

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am, and I am proud of it.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not blame my hon. friend for it; I was simply asking the question.

Mr. LAVERGNE: And while I did not go to the front I did all I could do during the war; I enlisted and it was not my fault that I did not go to the front.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. gentleman knows I am one of his friends and that I would dislike to offend him.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Yes, I know. But I was about to say that this Australian told us that until they had compulsory service in Australia their young men had no manners. They would be rude; they would do anything. After the introduction of compulsory service the change in the youth of Australia was remarkable. I believe there is no better education for the young man than a military education. He is taught the idea of discipline; he is taught respect and those higher things a citizen owes to his country. He is taught that not only his money but everything he owns, and above all his life and his soul, belong to his country.

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): It will take me only a moment or so to say what I wish to say. I was very much disappointed in the speech of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) this afternoon. Does the minister suppose I did not know, and that other members of the house did not know, the different things which have been done by the government of Canada and by other nations to bring about peace in the world? I may tell him that I am as familiar with them as he is. It is because the government does these things with which the people of Canada are not familiar, that I feel the need of further educational facilities, that the young people may get a thorough training in the international relations into which Canada has entered. If, as the Minister of Justice has said, we have taken first place in the world—which I very much doubt—it would be a very good thing to keep that place. And that is all the more reason why we should have some education. The government of last year had a different way of getting out of the difficulty, although, of course, both governments successfully got out. But I must say, in fairness to the late Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), that his methods are nicer. I do not think that the present Minister of Justice is informing the house correctly when he says that the Department of National Defence give their money to the province and the province distributes it here and there for cadet training. That is not exactly true. I have here an extract from the minutes of the Board of Education, Toronto, of March 5, 1931, in which this statement appears:

That the sum of $200, received from the Department of National Defence as a result of two former pupils of Danforth branch technical school having enlisted in the permanent air force after taking a two years' course at Camp Borden, be appropriated to the credit of the school for orchestra requirements.

I have nothing more to say. There is no reason why I should excite mysef regarding the education of Canadian youth in Canadian universities any more than one other hon. member. I believe, as the four witnesses last year and the three professors who wrote us, made perfectly clear, that there is need of greater facilities.

The Minister of Justice suggested that Canada was looking to new ways of ensuring security and peace. If that is true, then the Dominion government has jurisdiction so far as the method of bringing about that condition is concerned, just as it had jurisdiction in the sphere of armaments. I must say I was not impressed with the hon. gentleman's speech. I did not think he made clear any real objection to the motion except on the ground of its wording, which I admit is poor. But I kept it in its present form because it bears a relation to the wording of the resolution of last year.

I see no reason why the house should not send the resolution to the committee, though I admit, in view of the statement of the leader of the government that they do not approve of it, its reference to the committee will not help very much. We know that government members are in the majority on committees and we know also, in spite of all the talk about democracy, that the government governs. All that the rest of us can do is talk, which I do not propose to do at greater length at the moment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is no objection on this side to the matter coming before the committee.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): With the consent of the house, I would move:

That the following words be added to the motion:

"and that the matter be referred to the committee on industrial and international relations to consider and report upon the same."

If that is satisfactory.

Mr. SPEAKER: With the unanimous consent of the house, the resolution as amended will read:

That, in the opinion of this house, for every one hundred dollars spent on war one dollar should be spent to promote peace by instituting international professorships and scholarships in leading Canadian universities and that the matter be referred to the committee on industrial and international relations to consider and report upon the same.

Motion as amended agreed to.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

PROPOSAL TO ENABLE CANADA TO AMEND HER OWN CONSTITUTION

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, it is desirable that Canada should have the right to amend her own constitution, but that in proceeding to make any amendment, scrupulous care should be taken to safeguard the rights of minorities.

He said: At the recent conference between the Dominions and the provinces re the proposed statute of Westminster we find that the subject matter of this resolution was under discussion. I might say that that conference in itself was without precedent and perhaps created a rather dangerous precedent, although I frankly admit that the results were very satisfactory. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has promised another conference to consider amendments to the British North America Act, so that it would seem opportune that the house should discuss the whole question.

When I introduced a resolution along this line some seven years ago, I was attacked on two sides. The imperialists, on the one hand, accused me of wanting to cut the painter by which we were bound to the motherland. Their objection has been largely silenced by the Imperial conference itself of 1926, in which we heard such statements as "autonomous communities" and "equal in status and in no way subordinate one to another". On the other hand, at that time the guardians of provincial rights were up in arms. They considered that our British connections were safeguarding minority rights, and that objection is still to the fore although it comes from Ontario rather than from Quebec. Of this, more a little later.

I frankly recognize that any difficulty that confronts us is not at Westminster but here in Canada. The British parliament will undoubtedly meet Canada's views in this regard. We in Canada must come to an agreement. On the other hand, there is not much doubt that the existing situation is an excuse for inaction. So long as we think we have to go overseas to settle the matter, it is very easy for either the Dominion or the provinces to blame their lack of action upon the British North America Act.

It is practical considerations that lead me to introduce this amendment. Social legislation of almost every kind is blocked by the British North America Act. Further than that, we cannot carry out our obligations under the Versailles treaty until we have some clearer understanding of the relative jurisdiction of the Dominion and the provinces. There are a number of questions to be cleared up. First of all, there is the question: what amendments are needed? Then as to procedure—and this is one of the most knotty problems—there is the question: how can these amendments be secured? Again there is the whole question of what the United States people call constitutional limitations, that to which I have referred in the resolution itself when I urge that in proceeding to make any amendment we should see that scrupulous care is taken to safeguard the rights of minorities, a suggestion in which—whatever amendments are made—I believe every hon. member will fully concur.

I propose for a few minutes to give a brief survey of the situation as it exists to-day, also some of the anomalies with which we wrestle. Since confederation there have been before the courts not less than five hundred constitutional cases. Supposing we place the average cost at $5,000 a case, which I take it would be a very moderate estimate, the house can see that millions of dollars are involved in litigation of this kind. Only the lawyers benefit, and I would suggest to my lawyer friends to-night that some of them at least should be sufficiently patriotic to support this resolution and thus place the interests of the country at large ahead of their own pecuniary advantage.

There are questions relative to geographical boundaries. In the old, simple agricultural communities, it was comparatively easy to set up line fences, and when the fathers of confederation were drawing up the British North America Act, that is what was done. They simply said: here are certain things that come within the boundaries of the provinces. But the problem is not quite so easy in the more complicated life of to-day. For example, who owns the air? The old scripture says "The wind bloweth where it listeth," but Premier Taschereau says that Quebec owns the air over Quebec. The question arises: What about flying in the air? The supreme court states that the Dominion does not possess exclusive authority with regard to control of aviation, but that the provinces have some rights. There we begin to get into difficulties. So with radio regulations. That question is now before the Supreme Court of Canada. Then there comes the whole question of water powers. It is easy to stake the land; it is not so easy to stake, as it were, the water. Take the question of the St. Lawrence river, which is certainly a knotty problem. The St. Lawrence river is part of a great system of waterways, extending from the great lakes to the Atlantic; it has not only interprovincial connections, but also international relations. Therefore it is not so easy to say just who should control a great stream like that, or the hydro powers that may be generated on it. Let me remind the house that some years ago, there was some difficulty with regard to the head waters of the rivers that supplied power for Manitoba. To meet the situation certain water powers in Ontario were placed under Dominion control. This was done under that clause in the British North America Act which refers to such works as are declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada.

Take another question, the fisheries in British Columbia. It used to be that fisheries clearly came under Dominion control, but now in the processing of fish we find that the canneries have to be erected on the land, and hence it was discovered that the Dominion had not exclusive control and was not in a position to grant certain licenses. Life to-day is much more complicated than it was sixty years ago.

Take other matters that relate to what might be called the boundaries with regard to certain political relations. The supreme court, for example, a few years ago decided that a woman was not a person within the meaning of the British North America Act. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has evidently amended our constitution by what someone has termed judicial legislation. The British North America Act is regarded by their lordships as "a living tree capable of growth and expansion within its natural limits." Let me say with regard to that position that in the Canadian Bar review Mr. George F. Henderson, K.C. of Ottawa, has given us a very interesting and incisive comment. He says:

> If, having regard to considerations of political expediency and the welfare of the state, the statute can be construed in accordance with legal principles, so much the better, but, if not, those principles must yield to "the larger view" which political exigency dictates, the semblance of an observance of legal canons being given to the opinion delivered in order not too greatly to shock those who pin their faith to His Majesty the king in council as the final court of appeal for all countries of the British commonwealth except England, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

There are other matters which have not been quite so satisfactorily settled, and about which we still have a good deal of trouble. I shall briefly enumerate some of them.

Take the question of the troops that were sent down to Nova Scotia in 1925. Who was to pay the bill? That question was before the courts, and I do not know that it has been decided yet.

Then there was the question of soldiers operating cars in New Brunswick without licence—again a question involving Dominion and provincial control.

There is the question of taxation. The provinces, we all know, are restricted to direct taxation, and yet the gasoline tax, which a good many of our provinces have put into operation, comes dangerously near being an indirect tax.

Again, can liquor legally purchased in Quebec be brought into Ontario? Liquor to be purchased legally in Ontario, under the Liquor Control Act, must be bought from the government vendor. Liquor may be legally sold in Quebec, but that same liquor cannot be legally bought in Ontario.

Again, the right of the Dominion to control the manufacture of liquor is still an open question.

Take the question that we had up no later than this afternoon, when my hon. friend from Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) was urging that a grant should be made to promote peace. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) takes the ground that it is quite within the competence of the Dominion government to make war and to foster the cadet movement, even although that means going into our schools; but it is quite outside our powers to do anything that will foster peace. You can see, Mr. Speaker, the difficulties into which this British North America Act is driving us.

Take another realm altogether, that of trade and commerce. In the old days, sixty years ago, trade was very largely local in character, and it was very easy to control it. But now under the British North America Act we have no definite line of demarcation with regard to the incorporation and licensing of companies. Let me give a few illustrations, which will be familiar to legal gentlemen at all events. The John Deere Plow case of 1913 established that a federal charter entitled the company to do business in the province and to resist many forms of provincial control. That was a blow at provincial control. On the other hand, the Bonanza Creek case, in 1915, established that a provincial charter under the British North America Act entitled a company to enter other provinces—a blow at federal control. Later, we had the legality of the British Columbia Produce Marketing Act challenged, and the act partly destroyed. We have had a dispute with regard to the Canada Grain Act. We have had our Old Age Pension Act of 1926 disputed by Quebec, although the question has never been carried to the courts. The British Columbia Minimum Wage Act was challenged. The Combines Investigation Act was challenged, and has recently been sustained. The Live stock and Live Stock Products Act, as far as it relates to grading, is really ultra vires of the Dominion parliament, and there has to be enabling legislation on the part of the provinces. The licensing and control of insurance companies is being protested by the province of Ontario. Some hon. gentlemen who were on the Banking and Commerce Committee a few years ago can remember the representations that were made in that regard. The Manitoba Sale of Shares Act has ben declared invalid. Concerning this Toronto Saturday Night of October 26, 1928, said very bitterly:

> The privy council has decided that the provinces have no control over a rotten company so long as it is for the general advantage of Canada.

Now I come to the questions in which I am more particularly concerned; that is, matters relating to social legislation. Take the Canada Temperance Act; it is not at all clear as to where the jurisdiction lies. The Lord's Day Act has been challenged, and as a matter of fact it is put into operation in some of the provinces in a rather peculiar fashion.

Mr. LAVERGNE: That is settled by the act itself.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I know, but they were treading on such thin ice that they had to make some very special arrangements, and some of my lawyer friends tell me that it is not very good law when it is done in that fashion.

There is the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. The privy council in 1925 when it upset the validity of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, in discussing the question of Russell vs. the Queen, had this to say:

> It appears to their lordships that it is not now open to them to treat Russell vs. the Queen as having established the general principle that the mere fact that Dominion legislation is for the general advantage of Canada or is such that it will meet a mere want which is felt throughout the Dominion renders it competent if it cannot be brought within the heads enumerated specifically in section 91.

I am not very familiar with these various decisions, but it strikes me that their lordships found it very hard to get over the Canada Temperance Act, which had been held to be within the power of the Dominion parliament. The judges took the view, and to me this is positively funny, that intemperance at that time was so great as to be, in their words a—national calamity. . . . An epidemic of pestilence might conceivably be regarded as analogous. It is plain from the decision of the board of commerce case that the evil of profiteering could not have been so invoked; for provincial powers, if exercised, were adequate to it.

Now I come to the even more important question, and that is of our responsibility under the Versailles treaty and the draft conventions subsequent thereto. Take the question of the minimum wage. We had that question before our select standing committee on industrial and international relations, and in the report of 1926 I read this:

It was stated by the Deputy Minister of Justice that according to the British North America Act legislative jurisdiction in regard to minimum wages is vested primarily in the provincial legislatures.

He also quoted section 132 of the British North America Act as follows:

The parliament of Canada shall have all powers necessary or proper for performing the obligations of Canada or any provinces thereof as part of the British Empire, towards foreign countries, arising out of any treaty between the empire and such foreign countries.

Commenting on this he said:

There can be no doubt that where Canada has entered into an obligation by treaty—and in that connection I mean an association within the empire, of course—within the meaning of section 132 which I have just read—I do not think there is any doubt but that parliament has power to legislate for the purpose of carrying into effect the provision of the treaty.

The report concludes with these very significant words:

This opinion goes to show that the British North America Act by no means contemplates industrial problems of the kind and scope to which Canadians to-day must adjust themselves.

That seems to be a very fair statement of the situation in which we find ourselves. Sixty years ago life was comparatively simple. At that time there was no labour movement and very little industrial development. No one had foreseen the great European war; no one knew that there would be an international labour office established and that we would seek the world over to standardize labour. No one realized any of these things. And so although the British North America Act may have admirably fitted conditions as they were at the time it was enacted, it falls far short of meeting the needs with which we are faced to-day. I would like once more to read that section of the report:

This opinion goes to show that the British North America Act by no means contemplates industrial problems of the kind and scope to which Canadians to-day must adjust themselves.

I go on to note that although apparently it is impossible for us to pass a Minimum Wage Act in the Dominion, the Minimum Wage Act of British Columbia, a piece of provincial legislation, was declared ultra vires.

I wish now to go to the question of unemployment insurance, which during the last two or three sessions has been so much before the house. As you will remember, Mr. Speaker, a committee of this house was appointed to deal with that matter. The industrial and international relations committee report of 1928 referred to a report from the Minister of Justice, 1921, P.C. 2722:

In this view unemployment insurance has a pronounced federal aspect and on the whole the minister thinks the establishment of a system of unemployment insurance is competent to the Dominion in the exercise of its residuary legislative power with relation to the peace, order and good government of Canada.

Yet that committee reported that it was impossible for the Dominion to do anything about unemployment insurance. The other day the Prime Minister from his seat promised this house and the country that his government would enact a measure of unemployment insurance. At least that was the meaning which a good many hon. members took from his words; that was the meaning which the press spread abroad throughout the country. I understand that in some quarters there may be question about that matter, but it does seem to me that the Prime Minister ought not to allow so important a statement to be ambiguous. Hon. members should know very clearly what he meant. I would point out, however, that if we are to accept the report of the committee of this house appointed a year or two ago it is impossible for the Prime Minister to carry out his promise. What does the report say? I quote:

That the evidence of the Justice department makes it clear that the responsibility for such legislation rests on the provincial authorities, it being within their jurisdiction under the provisions of the British North America Act, but that it would be within the power of parliament to contribute by grant to such provinces as adopted such legislation following the precedent set in the matter of technical education, highway construction, and, more recently, the Old Age Pensions Act.

Then, there is the question of the eight hour day. According to a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada:

> The subject matter is generally within the competence of the legislatures of the provinces, but the authority vested in these legislatures does not enable them to give force of law to provisions such as those contained in the draft convention in relation to servants of the Dominion government or to legislate for those parts of Canada which are not within the boundaries of a province.

I think in view of the very hurried survey I have given of the actual situation which confronts Canada to-day that the ordinary man at least can realize the need for a change and for some qualifying amendments.

Two years ago I was invited to present this subject before the Canadian Club of Montreal. I accepted the invitation with some trepidation, because I thought I might have difficulty in persuading the people of Montreal in the province of Quebec to accept my proposal for changes in the British North America Act. To my delight, however, I found that a large number of them were tremendously interested in the question, and from the practical standpoint they were convinced of the need of bringing about these changes. They did not seem to see all the difficulties which some legal gentlemen in this house seem constantly to find.

Conditions are not static. Hon. members will recall that Alice in Wonderland—or was it the Queen—said:

> You must run very fast if you would keep where you are.

I believe that to be absolutely true. Conditions are sweeping along very rapidly and we must keep advancing if we are to keep relatively in the same place, to say nothing of making advances. Acts must be changed in the letter if we would keep the spirit.

Further than that may I suggest if our forefathers had brains enough to devise a constitution to meet the needs of their day we should have brains enough to revise it to meet the needs of our day. Some of us revere the British North America Act as the laws of the Medes and Persians that cannot change. Let me urge: If we are not impotent, let us be the fathers of something. The fathers of confederation differed from the men about them in that they were willing to take a chance on a change. A precedent is merely the method by which someone makes an escape from an impossible situation. It is time we set a few precedents in this house.

I have not time to discuss the legislation of other dominions, but I would simply remark they have the right to amend their constitutions; why has not Canada a similar right? Either we are a nation or we are not a nation. If we are a nation we should have the right to change our constitution. We hear a great deal about provincial rights. I suggest to the house that the fear of the minorities is not healthy. Their belief in the help that can come from Great Britain is entirely illusory, and I think the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) who unfortunately is not here tonight has come to accept that fact. I read from the proceedings of the Imperial conference the following statement:

> Every self governing member of the empire is now master of its own destiny.

We should accept the position to which we have now attained. We are told that the provinces should be consulted. Should they all agree before action is taken? That of course is another question. At the Imperial conference it was decided in regard to the Westminster Act that the ratification of the proposed act would be in the hands of the British government by August 1, 1931. The report of the conference of 1930 declared:

> To this end it seemed desirable to place on record the view that the sections of the statute relating to the Colonial Laws Validity Act should be so drafted as not to extend to Canada unless the statute was enacted in response to such requests as are appropriate to an amendment of the British North America Act.

The conference did not explain what it meant by the phrase, "as are appropriate to an amendment." The Prime Minister was reported to have declared that the approval of the nine Canadian provinces would be necessary to ratification. The Montreal Gazette observed that consulting the provinces did not necessarily imply that their consent was essential. Up to this time the Prime Minister has been entirely and perhaps discreetly silent on this point. Apparently he yielded to the influence of Mr. Ferguson, who stated explicitly in the concluding paragraph of his memorandum issued just before the conference:

> It is therefore earnestly represented that no restatement of the procedure for amending the constitution of Canada can be accepted by the province of Ontario that does not fully and frankly acknowledge the right of all the provinces to be consulted and to become parties to the decisions arrived at.

I would ask hon. members to note the words, "right of all the provinces". Here we come to the treaty or compact theory of confederation, and I suggest that since this is purely a legal matter it must be met more or less by legal argument. Let me ask, what provinces gave consent? There were at that time only three provinces, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Canada, because we were still operating under the Act of Union of 1840. It is very doubtful if Quebec or Ontario could be said to have given consent, for they were then part of the province of Canada.

Further than that, what do we mean by the provinces? Do we mean the electorates? In New Brunswick the electorate were in favour of the principle of confederation, but they never pronounced on the London resolutions or the British North America Act. In Nova Scotia there was no chance for them to pronounce on anything before the British North America Act was passed; then they were opposed to it.

Do you mean the legislatures? Canada approved the Quebec resolutions but prorogued before the appointment of delegates to the London conference, and therefore could not approve the British North America Act before it was passed. New Brunswick authorized the appointment of delegates to the London conference but prorogued before the conference, and met again only after the British North America Act was passed. Nova Scotia authorized the appointment of delegates to the London conference and was the only one approving the reference after the British North America Act was passed. Prince Edward Island and British Columbia assented to the terms of union. There were no legislatures, of course, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta until they were created by the Dominion parliament.

Did the governments consent? These did consent, except, of course, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Then we come to the other question that is more important: What is the pact to which reference is made? Was it the Quebec resolutions? These were approved by the legislature of Canada only, and by no electorate. Was it the London resolutions? These were not approved by any of the legislatures until after the British North America Act was passed. In seven important matters the British North America Act differed from the Quebec resolutions. The British North America Act was not thus approved. The situation is well summarized by Mr. John S. Ewart:

> A statute arranged not in Canada but in England by delegates from Canada who, although bound by the Quebec resolutions, departed widely from them; by delegates from Nova Scotia who were known not to represent Nova Scotia's wishes; and the proceedings purposely kept secret from the people who might by "reverberation" of it be "stirred to its depths" in opposition, can hardly be regarded as a contract.

And what procedure has actually been followed in obtaining these changes in the pact? I might say in passing that the reports of the debates are very illuminating. There is no support whatever for the contentions of the advocates of provincial rights, and the fathers of confederation who participated in these debates supported the changes by dominion action. Take the changes brought about by the Imperial parliament. In 1871 power was given to the Dominion parliament to create provinces. The act was passed on an address of both houses of the Dominion parliament; the provinces were not consulted. In 1875 an act regarding the privileges of parliament was passed on the request of the Dominion cabinet only. In 1886 plenary power was granted to the Dominion parliament to provide for the representation of territories in both houses. This was passed on an address of the two houses. In 1895 power was granted to the Dominion parliament to provide for a deputy speaker for the Senate. This was passed on an address by the Dominion parliament. In 1907 the change in regard to provincial subsidies was passed on an address of the two houses. Let me point out that the provinces were consulted for the first time on this occasion. British Columbia protested and secured only a slight verbal modification. In 1915 a change was made with regard to additional senators from the west. This act also was passed on an address of the two houses, but the provinces were not consulted. In 1916 an imperial act dealing with the prolongation of the life of parliament was passed on a joint address of the two houses only. Last year the legislation for the return of the natural resources to the western provinces, as every hon. member will recall, was passed on the joint address of both houses, and only the western provinces were consulted. We must come to this conclusion, that in these eight acts the provinces were consulted only once, in 1907, and then did not give unanimous consent.

Now take the changes made by the Canadian parliament itself. At least nine acts changing the financial basis of confederation were passed, and on these the provinces were never consulted.

I should like to point out that the basis of confederation has changed a great deal since 1867. Judicial decisions have fundamentally changed the balance of legislative power, and for this I suppose, the late Lord Haldane was very largely responsible. There have been other developments which I can only enumerate; development of Canada's diplomatic service; appointment of the Governor General on the sole advice of the Dominion cabinet; separate negotiation and signature of treaties; membership in the League of Nations and on its council. The provinces were not consulted in any of these changes—changes which were much more important than many of the little things about which we make so much fuss.

Let me point out the effects of the theory that unanimous consent is necessary. Take the situation of the three western provinces. Is their consent needed? Then that is giving an altogether fictitious character to these provinces, and it is as if a child were supposed to ratify a contract which had been made long before he was born. Is the consent of these western provinces not needed? Then I, as representing one of these provinces, would be the first to protest, because we in the west have as much right, at the present day, as any of the eastern provinces to be consulted.

If the unanimous consent of all the provinces is required there would be an inevitable tendency towards constitutional rigidity. This point I have not time to develop, nor have I the time to speak of the danger of the minority being given power to override the majority. We are here approaching the fundamental question of sovereignty. Mr. R. K. Finlayson, writing in the Free Press of December 8, 1928, gave this warning:

> It required the Civil war to prove to the individual states of America that it is not the part of individual states to challenge the authority of the union by a sovereignty written into a piece of paper.

The trouble is that we think altogether too much in legal terms. The British North America Act is not altogether a contract. May I suggest that it more nearly resembles what marriage is according to the Roman Catholic idea as I understand it; it is much nearer to being something of a sacrament. The union has gone on for years, children are involved, and the parties must learn to rub along somehow.

The former Minister of Justice, at the Dominion-provincial conference of 1927, spoke of one procedure that might be followed in amending the British North America Act. He proposed that there should be different classes of questions dealt with in different ways. He said:

> In order that adequate safeguards should be provided it was proposed that in the event of ordinary amendments being contemplated the provincial legislatures should be consulted, and a majority consent of the provinces obtained, while in the event of vital and fundamental amendments being sought involving such questions as provincial rights, the rights of minorities, or rights generally affecting race, language and creed, unanimous consent of the provinces should be obtained.
> . . . . In view of the present usage of automatic acceptance of proposals made and of the practice in all the other dominions, the minister contended that it would be better if in the future amendments to the British North America Act should be made by legislation of the Dominion parliament, subject to the conditions set forth. The questions on which unanimity of the provinces should be required might be specified under sections 93 and 133 and section 92, subsections 12, 13 and 14 of the British North America Act.

These sections refer to education, language, property and civil rights and administration of justice. I should like to suggest an alternative procedure. The Commonwealth of Australia has its constitutional act containing eight general clauses. Then follows the constitution, and so the rights of minorities might be recognized in our contemplated constitutional act. That is, there would be what the Americans call certain constitutional limitations. These would be clearly set forth in the preamble, and then we would be in a position to modify as long as we did not infringe upon these fundamental rights, which would be those now recognized under the British North America Act.

I take it that what we need before long is a constitutional conference. The Prime Minister has already promised that, but as I said, I am not at all sure that we can concede that all the provinces should be satisfied. As a practical measure I suppose it would be a good thing to call all the provinces into consultation, but certainly whatever the provinces may have to put forward, it does seem to me that the federal parliament should know what amendments it wants from its standpoint, and that means careful study and discussion.

I should like to close by urging again, as I did in the beginning, the pressing need for clarifying amendments. I urge that we should have the right to amend, recognizing that after all any trouble which exists is here in Canada, but that as long as we have to go overseas to seek amendments it means that it is going to be very easy to carry on as we have been carrying on and football important problems backward and forward between the Dominion and the provinces.

In the preparation of this matter I should acknowledge my debt to John S. Ewart, John W. Dafoe, Norman McL. Rogers, F. R. Scott, R. K. Finlayson, A. Grant Dexter, Brooke

Claxton, Eugene Forsey, and others, and to urge that now, with the Canadian League, Canadian clubs and many other similar organizations, and different newspapers taking up and discussing this question, the time is ripe for a full consideration of our constitutional problem by this parliament.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I should like to say just a few words in regard to the very important matter which has been placed before the house by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). He has opened the discussion of a very broad and very involved problem, and I congratulate him upon the deep study he has given to the matter and the clear and pointed method in which he has elaborated his case before the house.

I think the house will agree with me, however, that the problem is one which is fraught with many very serious and very grave difficulties. This question of the constitution in Canada is now sixty-three years of age. We have progressed for sixty-three years under our present constitution, and on the whole I think the house will agree that our constitution has worked well. It is true that during the course of those sixty-three years some thirty-one amendments to our constitutional act have been sought from the imperial parliament, and I believe I am correct in saying that upon only one occasion was the advice of the provinces sought in regard to any of the proposed amendments. That occasion was with regard to the question of increased subsidies for the various provinces, but when the provinces were actually consulted on the question their opinions seem to have been disregarded. An amendment was made to our act not in accordance with the views expressed by the provinces at that time.

However, I agree that the time has come when we should seriously consider this whole question of amendments to the Canadian constitution. Last April a Dominion-provincial conference was held in the city of Ottawa, at which all the provinces were represented. The conference was called for the purpose of considering a single proposal set out in the invitation to the various provinces, namely the draft statute of Westminster. The invitation was confined to a discussion of that single question, but notwithstanding the precise language of the invitation, several representatives of the various provinces did have the idea that the general subject of amendments to the Canadian constitution was to be discussed and considered on that occasion. There is no doubt that in many of the provinces there is a fairly active movement for some better understanding as between the federal and provincial authorities, and I believe the time is near at hand when the whole question will be fully considered by representatives of this parliament and of the various legislatures, in the hope that some common ground may be found.

I think one cannot criticize the constitution of Canada, as it is often criticized, without having regard to the manner and method in which it was originally adopted. There is a little history in regard to the matter which is always worth remembering. As far back as the year 1864, or perhaps 1865, the question of the confederation of the British provinces in North America became acute, and the best brains of the Canada of those days and of the other provinces which now constitute Canada, as they existed then, were enlisted in solving the problem which then arose. In no British dominion was there in existence at that time a confederation similar to what was subsequently adopted for Canada, but there is no doubt that there was a model which was very largely made use of by the fathers of confederation in this country. That model was to be found in the federal system which then existed on the southern side of the international boundary line. Federal system as it obtained at that time in the United States, however, was said to be the cause of great difficulty; it was said to be the active cause of the civil war, which had been waged in that country between 1861 and 1865. Our forefathers had that example before them and they determined to avoid, as far as possible, the difficulties which beset the United States system. Their idea was to adopt a federal system with a strong federal government, whereas the theory of the United States system was strong state government with less federal authority. The framers of the Canadian constitution reversed the situation as it existed in the United States, and, in the apportionment of powers and jurisdiction as between federal and provincial authority, you will note that separate and distinct powers are granted to the provinces. Under sections 92 and 93 these powers are enumerated and the provinces are plainly told: these are your legislative powers. And in respect of these powers the legislatures of this country are supreme. Their powers are plenary. They are just as supreme within their own legislative jurisdiction as we in this parliament are in regard to our powers. But the remainder of legislative power of every kind was placed under the jurisdiction of the federal parliament. It is true that certain specific powers are placed in section 91 as appertaining to the Dominion of Canada. But the general residuum rests with this parliament. In the United States the system was the reverse: all the residuum there rested with the state authorities.

Now, in considering our constitution it is well to keep that distinction always in mind. The object, the conclusion, the determination of the fathers of confederation was to form a strong central government and to give certain designated rights to the various provinces of this Dominion. And on that theory the constitution was built up. Whether or not a treaty or an agreement was reached by the representatives of the various sections of Canada which were represented at the pre-confederation conference, whether an agreement or treaty was actually reached, I know not. But something in the nature of an agreement was reached, and as a result thereof the British North America Act was drafted.

I am not inclined to view the pre-confederation arrangement as a strict or binding agreement. I am rather inclined to think that the fathers of confederation determined to form a new political entity, that all parties were willing to cast in their lot with that new political entity, in which each province or section of this country should have representation, and to agree that only such powers as were specifically given to the province should remain there. And therefore I have always contended that for the purpose of Dominion legislation all the provinces of Canada are represented in this parliament to-day. That, at all events, is my view of the system under which this country is governed.

When the conclusion was reached and the matter submitted to the imperial parliament, it was submitted as a form of agreement which had been accepted by all parties to constitute a new political entity. And when the act was passed that new political entity had legal force. We were proclaimed a Dominion on the 1st of July 1867, How came the power of amendment to the constitution to be omitted from the British North America Act in respect of federal powers? I submit, Mr. Speaker, it was not by accident that that omission occurred; it was clearly by design: because care was taken in the first subsection of section 92 of the act to provide that each province should have the right to amend its own constitution as it might see fit. But in regard to the question of amendments with respect to federal rights, the act is absolutely silent. I contend, therefore, that the omission was by design. It was considered that there were certain rights, certain privileges provided for in that act which should be guaranteed to the Dominion of Canada; and the guarantor in that respect was the imperial parliament which passed the British North America Act.

The question now is: Has the time come for formulating some plan whereby our act may be amended by this parliament? Certain it is that there are many provisions in the British North America Act which appertain solely and exclusively to this parliament, and I, for one, can see no reason why this parliament should not of its own action make provision for amendments to these various sections as it should see fit. For instance, there are certain sections appertaining to the election of a Speaker of this House of Commons; there are certain sections appertaining to the constitution of a quorum in this house; surely, Mr. Speaker, there is power in this house to make amendments in respect of such matters without consulting the provinces.

My contention has always been that in all matters appertaining to the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada the parliament of Canada has the right, and should have the right expressed, to make such amendments to the constitution as it shall see fit. But, on the other hand, the rights of the provinces of the country are just as plenary, just as high as the rights of this parliament. Can this parliament, therefore, by amendment or alteration of any kind, interfere with the rights which are specially set apart as matters of provincial jurisdiction and provincial concern, without the consent of the various provinces of Canada? Many of the questions which have been brought to the attention of the house to-night by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre are questions upon which the provinces of Canada maintain that they have exclusive jurisdiction. Can we then, without their consent, amend or alter the constitutional act of this country in respect of such questions? I submit that we cannot. In respect of any matters arising under section 92 or section 93 of the British North America Act, this parliament cannot, without the consent of the various provincial legislatures, amend the British North America Act in any respect. And how are we going to obtain that consent—because it is in regard to these very questions that the difficulty from day to day arises as between provincial and Dominion jurisdiction. If this parliament, for instance, were to seek an amendment to our constitutional act in regard to municipal institutions—I am putting some pointed cases—to take from the provinces legislative jurisdiction in respect of such institutions, would anyone say for a moment that we had the right to make such amendment without the positive assent of the provinces? Suppose, again, we were to propose, by an amendment in this parliament, to take the administration of our criminal law from the various provinces of Canada—because the administration of law is specifically given to the provinces by section 92 of the act—do you think that this parliament would be justified in making an amendment of that kind without the consent of the provinces? Or suppose we were to seek to interfere in any way with the question of property and civil rights, which concerns many of the questions which my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre had in his mind: could it be fairly said that there is power in this parliament to change the legislative jurisdiction in respect of property and civil rights without the positive assent of the provinces? And I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, it is in regard to these very matters that we shall never get the consent of the provinces, because the provinces value very highly the jurisdiction to legislate in respect of these matters, which jurisdiction has been conferred upon them by the British North America Act.

I mention these matters merely to point out the serious difficulties, the practical difficulties that are ahead of us when we discuss the question of amendments to the British North America Act.

Let me put another case. We understand what the representation in this house consists of; we know what each province is entitled to have in this House of Commons and also in the upper chamber. We know that anomalies exist in that respect and that one small province would appear to be entirely over-represented, having regard to the representation of some of the larger provinces. But could anyone say for a moment that parliament, of its own free will, would be entitled to change the representation of the various sections of Canada either in this house or in the Senate? I submit we would not. That goes to the very root of the whole question. A question of that kind is fundamental. It was upon those figures that we agreed and for sixty years we have carried on. I submit no power would be given to us to change the representation of the various provinces as they exist in Canada to-day, without the consent of the provinces interested.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it not true that that very thing was done and the entire balance of representation upset at the time British Columbia entered confederation?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is not my view of the matter. I know there have been alterations but they have always been tacitly agreed to. I am discussing the question where some province does not agree. What kind of consent must one require to make an amendment such as I have suggested? Is it only of the single province concerned? Is it of a majority of the nine provinces which make up confederation? Or is it the complete, unanimous assent of the whole nine provinces that is required before any alteration can be made? We know the provincial legislatures esteem very highly the legislative rights which they exercise. We know they consider that their powers are just as plenary as are the powers of this parliament, and I am inclined to think they will resent any suggestion on the part of this parliament in any way to limit or diminish their powers. During the recent conference which took place in April I had an informal discussion and I know many of the provinces want to change the sections of the act dealing with the question of taxation. I know some of the provinces want to change those sections of the act dealing with the incorporation of companies, and so on. But they do not desire to give way or limit in any way their own powers. What they desire to do is rather to encroach upon the powers which we claim belong to the federal government.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They had them first.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They had certain rights, and we likewise had certain rights. There is a cleavage in respect to these matters.

Another serious question that is bound to arise and in regard to which we may in the future have to ask for some change in our constitution, is that of appeals to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. As to that question opinion seems to be divided. Experience in Canada shows that many of the appeals that go to the privy council do not go directly from the Supreme Court of Canada, but rather from the courts of the various provinces. We in this country had a rather rude awakening in 1926 when the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council handed down a judgment in a case that is rather well known in Canada, that of Nadan and the King, which decided that section 1025 of the Criminal Code of Canada was ultra vires. By section 1025 it had been provided in this country that there should be no appeals in certain cases to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, but in the Nadan case, the appeal went directly from the courts of Alberta to the privy council. They did not ask our leave to appeal; they went there as of right. The privy council in its judgment held that they had a right to appeal to that August body for justice, and at the same time held that our section 1025 of the criminal code, which forbade them that right, was beyond the powers of the parliament of Canada. There possibly will be some conflict in regard to the views of the various provinces in respect to those appeals. Should we ask that this parliament have the right to amend the constitution to provide that there shall be no appeals to the privy council from the Dominion of Canada, or on the other hand should we ask that parliament have an amendment enacted to provide that in all cases there shall be appeals to the privy council?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does my hon. friend not think that when the Colonial Laws Validity Act is repealed and our parliament will have the right of extraterritoriality for its legislation, then our section 1025 of the criminal code will become valid?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It may be revived in that way, and I think I am safe in saying that by the first of December next the Colonial Laws Validity Act will probably be repealed so far as the Dominion of Canada is concerned. It is under that Colonial Laws Validity Act that the difficulty in regard to these appeals has largely arisen. In all these questions there is in regard to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council a bit of history that it is perhaps worth while remembering. There was a time some seventy or eighty years ago when there was no Colonial Laws Validity Act in existence, but the common law of England was in existence and the common law of England provided that if any colony made a law that was repugnant to the law of England, the law of that colony should be void in so far as it was repugnant to the law of England. In Australia, or in one of the states of Australia, one of the judges gave such a broad interpretation of the common law doctrine, that the people were almost in arms. Practically all the important laws of Australia or of that colony in Australia were being set aside by this judge on the ground that their laws were repugnant to the laws of England. The Colonial Laws Validity Act was passed in the first instance not as a restrictive measure at all, but as an enabling measure. It was passed for the purpose of letting the people in South Australia and, I think, in South Africa know they had rights, and so long as they confined their laws within certain limits, they should not be declared illegal. But subsequently in its actual operation it was found that it hampered many of the dominions, including the Dominion of Canada, and as a result of the conferences which were held in 1921, 1926, 1927, and the recent one, we have at last reached the point where there will be submitted to this parliament a proposal which, if ratified, will be sent forward to the imperial parliament and in December next a statute known as the statute of Westminster will be passed, which will obviate the difficulty in the future by repealing the Colonial Laws Validity Act so far as the Dominion of Canada is concerned.

But this is only one matter in regard to which our difficulties arise. I see practical difficulties—they crop up almost every day in this country—as between provincial and federal jurisdiction. They are difficulties which are not insurmountable. We have had many of them in the past. We have overcome them in some way. It may be there have been five hundred constitutional cases decided by the courts in the last sixty years, but we have managed to muddle through and we all think our sixty-three years' experience has, on the whole, been a most satisfactory one. But the time is coming, perhaps the time is at hand, when some very critical questions are arising, and perhaps the most critical is in regard to the question of provincial and federal taxation. I agree with the suggestion that in the near future a conference should be summoned for the express purpose of considering some modus operandi upon which we can proceed to secure the right to amend the constitution of the Dominion of Canada. I do not think the language of the motion is sufficient at all. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has included a clause to the effect that he would preserve the rights of minorities by some kind of security or guarantee. Supposing he did; supposing the rights of all minorities were just as fully secured, assured and guaranteed as they are to-day under the British North America Act. That is not the difficulty that I see. He has still to elucidate some plan whereby he can from a basis of agreement in regard to matters which are provincial to-day, and which I think should be federal, and perhaps in regard to some matters which are federal to-day, and which perhaps might be better attended to by the provinces. In this proposal there should be a guarantee of provincial autonomy, because I for one would not consent to lay hands upon any of those subjects in regard to which the provinces are expressly charged with legislative authority. I would not be one to lay hands upon any provincial rights in respect of those questions which arise under sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act without the express consent of the provinces concerned. Those are the difficulties, and only some of the difficulties, which must be overcome, but I think that all these difficulties may in the end be satisfactorily arranged. I am by no means hopeless of the situation. I am entirely hopeful, and I think it would be well for this parliament if not at this session, at some subsequent session, to appoint a committee specially charged with the consideration of this question. We must prepare our case here before we call a conference, and it is a case that will require a great deal of preparation.

I do not accept in full the views of some of the provinces, such as the province of Ontario, as expressed last autumn before the Imperial conference which met at London. With some of those views I am in harmony, but with respect to many of them I think the province is carrying its case rather too far. But we cannot hold a conference without preparation. We must know in the first instance what we are prepared to agree on ourselves. Having reached that point I shall heartily favour the summoning of a conference of the provinces with the Dominion authorities to see what plan can be worked out so that in the future this parliament may be able to make the necessary amendments to our constitution.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): This is a very important matter, Mr. Speaker, and it is of special interest at the present time owing to developments that have taken place recently, and in view of the proposed conference to be held at some future date between the provinces and the Dominion to deliberate on this question. It is imperative, therefore, that all the students of our constitutional system, indeed, that all the citizens of Canada, should give consideration to this very important problem, and I am rather grateful to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) for bringing forward this resolution were it only that it direct the attention of the people of Canada to the matter.

First I must say that I agree entirely with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) that the provinces are also interested in this matter, and that a change in the mode of amending our constitution is a fundamental one as to which the provinces have a right to be consulted, and on which they have a right to express their opinion. The British North America Act—my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has related the historical events that preceded it—was a compromise. It was an arrangement which was effected by Upper and Lower Canada more particularly, but in which New Brunswick and Nova Scotia also joined. It was to put an end to a situation which had brought the country to the verge of civil strife. The provinces which existed at that time were British colonies, self-governing colonies, and they agreed to relinquish some of their powers and to entrust them to a central authority. They did that subject to certain conditions, some more or less important, others essential; and without those conditions being agreed to confederation could not have taken place. The provinces kept for themselves jurisdiction and power in certain local matters, in civil matters, home rule in matters which more intimately concerned themselves, and they gave to the central government jurisdiction in all matters which affected the people generally in all the provinces.

The British North America Act, as I have already had occasion to note, is not only the charter of the Dominion of Canada; it is also the charter of the provinces. Their powers and their jurisdiction are fixed and determined by that act. The powers and the jurisdiction of the Dominion of Canada are also fixed and determined by that act. It is in many cases a complicated and delicate matter to determine where the jurisdiction of the Dominion ends and where that of the provinces begins. The problem has given rise to many difficulties and to much litigation. I must say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in that connection that when the power to amend our constitution is given to Canada, with the consent and the cooperation of the provinces, I believe he is wrong in believing that litigation over the constitution will automatically come to an end. The constitutional act, whether it is the work of the parliament of Canada in conjunction with the provinces, or whether it is an imperial act, will always give rise to difficulties, and the courts will have to pronounce upon them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think the coming conference ought to exclude all lawyers.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think my hon. friend need express too much sympathy for the lawyers in connection with the change he is advocating.

Under the conditions as they are to-day, we have the right to amend our constitution. As a matter of fact, it has been amended in many instances. I think my hon. friend said that it had been amended thirty-four times since confederation. But those amendments have to be made through the statute enacted by the imperial parliament. In that matter the imperial parliament is not really a dominating power; it acts as a trustee and as a guarantor, and merely gives effect to the will of the Canadian people. The present system is due to conditions of our social life in Canada as they existed at the time of confederation. Times have changed, however, and to-day the Dominion of Canada is not the colony it was in 1867. I am in accord with the principle that Canada and the Canadian people should have the right when they see fit to amend their own constitution, and when the provinces, which also are parties to the agreement, agree that a change should be made. At the present time the system of amending the constitution is rather vague, and not altogether consistent in every respect. The only suggestion is, as the Minister of Justice has mentioned: Have the provinces been consulted? The constitution has been changed many times without the consent of the provinces being sought. It was changed in 1907 in the matter of provincial subsidies, and at that time the province of British Columbia did not agree to the change. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that Sir Richard McBride proceeded to London and was heard before a committee of the imperial parliament. There he succeeded in having a certain word, or two words, added to the act, to the effect that the mode of payment that had been agreed upon would not be final, as had been provided in the act passed by this parliament.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think the hon. member means that words were taken out rather than put in.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, I agree with my hon. friend. The word "final", which had been put in by this parliament, was taken out, so that Sir Richard could have his case reopened in this country when he saw fit.

Mr. CAHAN: That alternative was open to him in any case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The alternative was open to him in any case, because parliament has always the right to change its own act.

I think that the amendments to the constitution could be divided into two classes: first those which would affect the provinces, which would add powers to the federal parliament and in that way affect provincial rights. In such cases surely the British parliament, even under the situation as it exists to-day, would not agree to pass a law to effect the change. Then the other class would be amendments which would give broader effect to the federal power within its own jurisdiction. I agree that the provinces under the constitution as it is need not be consulted, and that was the position taken by various prime ministers on other occasions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have said that the system to amend the constitution is vague. We really do not know what are the amendments in respect to which the assent of the provinces should be first received and those in respect to which such consent is not necessary. However, although the imperial parliament acts only as a trustee, it nevertheless, as I said, constitutes legal subordination on our part to have to ask the imperial parliament to ratify any change we like to make. As my hon. friend from Winnipeg has said, Canada is the only dominion at the present time which has not the right to amend its own constitution. All the other dominions have that right. I will go further and say that Canada is the only country in the world having a federal system of government the constitution of which does not provide for an amendment and for a change by the country of that constitution should occasion arise. The United States have a federal system. There, as hon. members know, the constitution may be changed by a vote of two-thirds of both houses of congress, and such change has to be ratified by three-quarters of the states. Australia also has that right. Germany, which has had a new constitution since 1921, has the same right. The Reichstag can amend its own constitution provided a majority of two-thirds of the members agree to the change. Switzerland also has that right; there again a majority of two-thirds of the members is necessary and the proposed change has to be approved by the people. In Australia the same condition exists. A majority of two-thirds is necessary, and then the action has to be ratified by the states and even by popular vote. A similar or almost similar condition exists in New Zealand. In the Argentine republic a similar condition exists, the constitution may be changed by a majority of two-thirds of the Chamber. Canada, I repeat, is the only country in the world which does not possess that power. I believe an arrangement could be arrived at between the various parties to our constitutional pact by virtue of which we in Canada should have that power, with all the proper safeguards regarding provincial rights and the rights of minorities.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Suppose we have the right to amend our constitution, does the hon. member think we could amend the constitution of any of the provinces?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, no. I say that this should be done by cooperation. The provinces at the present time have the right to amend their own constitution, except with regard to the office of the lieutenant-governor; but on the question of the respective jurisdiction of the Dominion and the provinces, there is no doubt that this could not be changed by either without agreement with the other. That is what I submit, and that is I think the solution of our problem, which is certainly fraught with many difficulties. Because there again how will that consent be obtained, and in what manner shall it express itself? Shall we require the unanimous consent of the provinces to every change that might be sought? I know that this will be the opinion of some, but with that I could not agree. This would make our constitution, I think, too rigid an instrument, and it would be contrary to the principles of the British constitution, which after all is an instrument of progress. We must have a constitutional instrument which can possibly be altered to suit new facts, new ideas, and so keep progress with the progress of the country.

I was reading some time ago a work published by Dr. William Bennett Munro, a professor at Harvard, and who, I am told, is a Canadian, on The Governments of Europe, and I agree with the views he expresses as regards amending a constitution. He says:

> The amending process may fairly be called the most important feature of any constitution. The purpose of a constitution is to preserve order but it cannot preserve order unless it promotes progress—and it cannot promote progress unless it is capable of being amended either formally or by judicial interpretation to meet the new needs that arise. A constitution should not be too easy to amend, for in that case it will fail to secure order, stability, and continuity in the nation's political life. Nor, on the other hand, should it be too difficult to amend, for it will then clog the wheels of political progress and serve as an incentive to coups d'état or revolutions. The ideal amending process is one that assures stability without impeding the normal development of political and economic activities among the people. On this general principle all makers of constitutions have been substantially agreed, but they have been far from agreement as to the methods whereby the ideal can be attained.

I think those views are correct. A constitution should not be too easy to amend; on the other hand, it should not be too difficult to amend as the necessity arises. Again I say that to insist on having the consent of all the provinces to every change would be asking almost an impossibility; to ask that either British Columbia in the west or Prince Edward Island in the east should be able to block a change with which it is essential for the federal power to go ahead within the limits of its jurisdiction on certain matters, I do not think would be right; but on essential matters, such matters, for instance, as the protection of minorities, of language, of schools, as they are inserted in the British North America Act, I believe it should not be possible to make a change without the consent of all.

Mr. LAVERGNE: That is not much of a protection.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think that is more a protection than the present system. What is the present system protecting? My hon. friend will admit with me that there are not many cases where protection has been extended.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think that protection is more of a legend and a myth than a reality. I believe that the best safeguard of minorities in this country is in themselves, to assert their own rights to arrange with their fellow countrymen, and that a constitution agreed upon by all the provinces, which is a Canadian instrument, and which becomes the charter of the country, would, I think, be more a protection than the present one.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am glad my hon. friend agrees with me on this. I do not think that seeking outside of our own country a protection of our rights or prerogatives is consistent with the present stage of our evolution as a nation.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am pleased indeed that a conference is going to take place where the whole subject will be discussed by the representatives of this Dominion and the representatives of the provinces. I am glad of the suggestion offered by the Minister of Justice that a committee of this parliament should be formed next session for the purpose of preparing the Dominion case, of trying to agree on the proposal which will be submitted to that conference. That may be the only opportunity of us who sit on this side of the house to express our views as regards that subject, because the government naturally would supply the representatives at the conference, but we will certainly be pleased to cooperate with my hon. friend and his colleagues in trying to come to an understanding as to what ought to be the position to be taken by the Dominion at the conference. I also believe that all the constitutional authorities in this country, lawyers, professors and students, and common people as well—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I mean the public at large, although I do not think I need qualify it. I said "students," and every Canadian is a student at the present time. I think they should consider this matter very carefully, offer their suggestions, discuss it in the press and in the universities, so that the best possible solution or decision may be reached when the time comes.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it is with some timidity and a good deal of natural diffidence that I venture upon this debate after the extraordinary brilliant speeches that have preceded the poor one that I am about to make. The only reason that I venture to enter into the discussion is that I hope before I sit down to offer a suggestion that has not yet been made in connection with this whole matter. I am further encouraged to enter the debate as the result of the closing remarks of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lapointe). Not being a lawyer; being only to a minor degree a student of this subject; being merely one of the common people, I feel that now that we have been included in the discussion of this problem I may, as a humble representative of one section of the common people, take a share in the discussion.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The invitation was directed towards my hon. friend.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I rather felt that this was the case. I would point out, however, that even in the debate that has taken place there is distinct evidence of the tremendous confusion that is possible even in the consideration of the amendment of the constitution. Why, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat suggested at one stage of his speech that we now have the right to amend the constitution, and then within five minutes he said, "But I agree with the motion that we should have the right to amend the constitution." That is just one illustration in passing of the trouble we get into in the use of words in a question of this kind. I have no doubt in the world that I shall probably get into the same kind of bog myself before I get through. The Minister of Justice also suggested that we had progressed very satisfactorily for sixty years under the constitution, and having satisfied himself that we had progressed very satisfactorily he then proceeded to say a little later on that we had just blundered along somehow or other.

The latter statement is about right; we have blundered along, but in the meantime we have been blundering favourably in another direction. May I quote the words of Mr. Brooke Claxton, in the opening part of his article in the supplement to the McGill News on the amendment of the British North America Act. He says:

> The principle of self-development is as compelling in political organizations as in individuals, and the British Empire offers no finer aspect than that of a long procession of innumerable peoples—colonies, dominions, states —moving slowly but surely towards that end.

Towards what end? Towards the end of self-development.

Mr. McGIBBON: Might I ask a question? With all these amendments to the constitution and these imperial conferences; with the power to amend our own constitution, which Australia has, is it not a fact that to-day the British Empire has practically dissolved by its own consent, and exists only through sentiment?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not want to enter into a discussion of that question, but I think if the hon. gentleman will read Professor Zimmern's book, The Third British Empire, he will find that is exactly the position in which the British Empire found itself in 1926 or about that time. Professor Zimmern is a far greater authority on that subject than I am; all I could do would be to express my private opinion, in which I am sure the hon. gentleman is not interested.

During the past twelve years in particular this country, in common with the other dominions, has made most extraordinary progress in regard to this very thing which is mentioned by Mr. Brooke Claxton, self-development, so that to-day we have laid down this principle, that equality of status is, in so far as the United Kingdom and the dominions are concerned, the root principle governing our inter-relation. The old colonial position is past, or is rapidly passing. The Governor General has ceased to be the representative of the government of the United Kingdom; now he is the direct representative of His Majesty to this country. Even the position of the king has changed, for now he is clearly and definitely the king of Canada and appoints his viceroy on advice of Canadian ministers only, and the treaties that we enact by our own right contain words to that affect. "The King, in respect of the Dominion of Canada" is the phraseology actually used. We are, as it is set forth in the report of the recent conference, in no way subordinate in respect of any of our relations, internal or external, to any other government in the commonwealth of British nations or any other government at all. We appoint our own ambassadors; we make our own treaties; shortly we are to pass the statute of Westminster which will remove almost the last remaining vestiges of our colonial inferiority.

So, steadily and persistently, the growth of our autonomous state has proceeded. The status of sovereign freedom, with one great exception at least, is now almost complete. That one exception is in respect of this very matter which we are now discussing. We recognize the same king that is recognized by the other dominions. A king union is now in existence. The king acts, in so far as Canada is concerned, on the advice of his constitutionally appointed ministers in Canada and does not act, in respect of Canada, on the advice of anybody else. That is a remarkable advance. But have we reached equality? I submit to the house that we have not reached the equality in one respect at least. The constitutional position is such as certainly would not justify us in terming ourselves wholly autonomous. The constitution under which we function is not our constitution; we have not the power to amend it.

Mr. McGIBBON: We might have the power if we wanted it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, but we have not got it. All we possess to-day, with all due respect to the speakers who have preceded me, is the right to pass a humble address through both houses, and humbly petition the parliament of another country to pass an act to amend what we call our constitution. It is an absurd and anomalous position in view of our assertions of equality of status.

Mr. McGIBBON: Was not that the cause—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would ask my hon. friend to let me go on. All that we possess is the power to ask another parliament to do for us what we cannot do ourselves, but I am very glad to-night to hear the unanimous opinion of this house as expressed so far that we should have the power, the right to amend the constitution. I submit that legally the parliament of the United Kingdom can destroy, remove, amend or modify what we call the constitution of Canada without even consulting this country. The British North America Act is not a treaty; it is not a compact, it is not a contract, by the widest stretch of the imagination. The British North America Act is only a statute of the United Kingdom, nothing more and nothing less. The only body that can effect that statute, naturally, is the body which created it, and that is the parliament of the United Kingdom. That is the proud position in which we find ourselves.

Hon. members have referred to this act as a contract; they have submitted that it is so much of a contract that the provinces must be consulted before amendments are submitted to the parliament of the United Kingdom. With all due respect I think my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Justice had some views of his own to express in that regard not long ago. I submit that there is no evidence, at any time, by either enactment or resolution, of any effect whatever upon which this claim can be based or entailing the consulting of the provinces. As a matter of fact the contrary is the case. On almost every occasion on which this parliament and the senate were called upon to consider amending the constitution, or rather a petition for the amendment thereof, the opposition raised this question of the right of the provinces to consultation and assent. All the way down the history of constitutional amendments you will find the point raised that this is a contract and that this parliament has no power to change the contract without consulting the provinces. On every occasion this parliament rejected the opinion so expressed and proceeded to request the amendment without consulting the provinces.

Take next the classic case which has been mentioned in this debate, the case of 1907, with respect to the adjustment of subsidies. Consultation with the provinces had taken place prior to the meeting of parliament, but that consultation was not for the purpose of securing the consent of the provinces to the amendment but merely of getting their agreement to the terms of the change in subsidy. That was all. Moreover, it is to be noted that there is one definite illustration beyond any other—and this confirms me in my belief—to show that hitherto there has been no obligation upon this parliament to secure the consent of the provinces in regard to amendments to the constitution. I refer to the fact that British Columbia and Prince Edward Island disagreed with the proposed amendment. Both of these provinces passed resolutions through their legislative chambers protesting against the terms and one, British Columbia, vigorously resisted them. One of the members representing Prince Edward Island in the house at that time spoke, he said, on behalf of the government and the people of that province, and placed himself in direct opposition to the proposed amendment. But it made no difference; the petition for the amendment was agreed to by this parliament and went forward. When it went to London, Mr. McBride, the premier of British Columbia, accompanied the delegation and presented himself to protest against the passing of the legislation. It just happened by good fortune that there had been inserted in that bill three words—really two—which were utterly unnecessary and absolutely inapplicable in any statute, especially one such as this. Those words were, "final and unalterable." Those words, I say, were altogether inapplicable, and obviously so; because no amendment to any constitution, not even indeed to a statute of parliament, can be declared by one parliament to be final and unalterable for the simple reason that the succeeding parliament can do what it will with that enactment. And so, to save Mr. McBride's face, Mr. Chamberlain decided to have those words struck out, so that when Mr. McBride came home he was in a position to say that the honour of the province had been vindicated and a constiutional crisis obviated.

Let us go back to 1869, when it was proposed to increase the subsidy to Nova Scotia. The Hon. Mr. Blake rose in the house and protested. He is reported as having said:

> It was impossible to suppose that the representatives of the lower provinces had consented to the British North America Act with the understanding and knowledge that it could at any time be changed by a majority in the Canadian parliament.

Very striking words, these. A little later the Hon. Mr. Wood moved an amendment in which he held that the financial arrangements then in the act were a matter of treaty and that even parliament had not the power to change the terms.

Now, if ever there was an illustration of the right claimed by some that the provinces be consulted, it was then furnished. Here was the very essence of the claim of provincial rights—that the consent of the provinces was necessary. The Hon. Mr. Holton spoke. He held that the union was a pact or a treaty between the provinces, and he argued therefrom that they should be consulted. But what happened? The simple result was that the government's proposal was ratified in both houses. As to the contention that consent was necessary by the provinces, it did not succeed but was clearly rejected by parliament.

In connection with the Manitoba Act of 1870, confirmed by the imperial parliament in 1871, it is interesting to note what a well-known constitutional student and authority, John W. Dafoe, said in his article with reference to revising the constitution. That article appeared in Queens' Quarterly, the winter issue of 1930, and in it this authority states:

> Considerable light is thrown upon the ideas current at that time with respect to the procedure to be followed in securing constitutional legislation by the discussion in the Canadian parliament, which preceded the passage of the British North America Act, confirming the Manitoba Act of 1870 by the imperial parliament in 1871.

The following are the words to which I wish to direct attention particularly:

> If it was the understanding at the time of confederation that the provinces were to be parties, at least to the point of giving their consent, to constitutional legislation, it is a little remarkable that no province took exception to the admission to the family of Manitoba under special conditions as to representation, nor to the extensive powers conferred upon the Dominion by the British North America Act of 1871 for the establishment of new provinces.

There, if ever, was an opportunity offered, such as one cannot imagine unless it be the one in 1869; and yet there was no protest, no insistence even in the house, on the part of the advocates of provincial rights, upon the right of the provinces to be consulted.

In 1914 the House of Commons unanimously approved an address to the imperial parliament to change the representation in the Senate. Any student of constitutional history in this country will realize that that did directly affect the original terms of the so-called pact, especially in regard to the province of Quebec. The Senate was regarded as embodying a certain balance for the protection of such rights, and any modification thereof, any adjustment of representation in connection therewith, should certainly have been a matter for consultation with the provinces, if there is validity in the contention that the provinces should be consulted. But what is the fact? This house proceeded unanimously to pass the resolution. The bill went to the Senate and there Senator Dandurand held that approval of the older provinces, or at least consultation with them, should have been effected. But he did not even insist upon their approval; he held that at least there should have been consultation. And observe that in that case it had been the intention of the government to seek to bring about this material change by order in council. It was on that occasion that a motion was introduced—I forget who it was that introduced it—determining that in future amendments should be sought on petition of parliament and not of the government. The matter dropped, because the Liberals in the Senate insisted upon attaching to the resolution a rider to the effect that it should not take effect until the end of that parliament. The leader of the House of Commons at the time refused to accept the Liberal suggestion and the proposed resolution was dropped.

In 1915 Sir Robert Borden again brought the address to the attention of parliament. There was very little debate in the Commons. No question was raised as to the consent of the provinces being required. As soon as the proposal reached the Senate, Senator Bostock, without any reference to the question of the consent of the provinces, once more added the proviso for delay and it was accepted by the leader of the house and by the house. It passed both houses and became, in effect, an application for amendment. And again there was no consultation with the provinces. I may observe, by the way, in connection with the debate that took place in this house following the insistence of the Liberal majority in the Senate at that time upon adding to the resolution their delaying amendment, that some caustic remarks were made; and one of the most caustic and bitter was a lecture to the Senate, read in this house by the then Honourable Richard Bedford Bennett, the same gentleman I believe who is now the leader of the government. In the course of that debate he used this language—and I ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether we should be called to order if we used such language to-day. He said that Senate was "an irresponsible body which has thwarted the will of democracy as expressed by this House of Commons."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I say "hear, hear," too. I think it was very appropriate language under the circumstances. May I submit, in connection with the question of the complete consent of the provinces, it would be a tremendously serious thing if at any time this country were to acquiesce in the contention that the unanimous approval of the provinces should be secured before any amendment to the constitution is requested? It is exceedingly fortunate that so far this form of procedure has not been established, nor has at any time the requirement of consent of the provinces been established in law or in fact.

In view of the growth and of the importance of the Dominion to-day, in view also of the root principle of equality, in view of the expensive and irritating litigation entailed in an effort to cover matters that were never dreamed of by the fathers of confederation and to stretch the hitherto useful but now almost outworn constitution to cover those points—in view of all this, it is certainly time to consider calmly and with the most meticulous care what attitude we should take in connection with this proposal. The constitution as we call it, is no sacred tablet. It should not be permitted to shackle our progress or in any way to hamper the evolution, social, economic or political, of this country, and certainly we are entitled now to seek that amendments to the act may be applied by us in our own right and that we shall not be under the obligation of appealing for them to another parliament. That is the smallest step that I would take. Is it not amazing that to-day in spite of all our boasted development of status we do not possess what every Canadian club or board of trade or horse racing organization possesses? These have constitutions of their own and power to amend them. Even our provinces have the right to amend their constitutions.

Speakers who have preceded me have referred to the position in respect to this matter in other of the dominions. In the South African Act of 1909, in the Australian Act of 1900, and in the Irish Free State Act of 1922, provision is made in every case for the amendment of the constitution.

Mr. CAHAN: With certain restrictions.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes. The British North America Act, as I have said, like any statute of the United Kingdom, can be amended only by the United Kingdom. What is the condition in Australia? The ex-Minister of Justice has already intimated in part what it is. In Australia the constitution may be amended by a vote of an absolute majority of both federal houses, approved by a majority of votes passed in Australia itself, and by a majority vote in a majority of the states.

In South Africa the constitution may be amended by an act passed in the usual way, except that amendments that affect either language or qualification of voters require a two-thirds vote of all members of both houses. In the Irish Free State there is in operation, commencing this year, a provision that amendments may be secured by an act adopted in the usual way and approved by the vote of the majority of persons qualified to vote or by a two-thirds vote of the electorate.

Mr. CAHAN: That is provided the amendment is in conformity with the treaty.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Of course. We find that in comparison with these other countries, we are relatively in a strait-jacket sixty years old. The problem facing us resolves itself into two heads: first the formulation of an amendment. How should this house or this parliament do this? How can Canada best express what she wants? It has become clear to me in recent years in particular, because of the insistence of the provinces on increasing their rights, that we can no longer escape the necessity, no longer escape what I think we are bound to regard as an obligation in the interest of peace, order, and good government, to consult the provinces. I am forced to that conclusion. Picking up again that excellent article by Brooke Claxton, I find he uses this language in regard to it. He deplores the increase of provincial power to the exclusion or diminution of federal power. To some degree I agree with him as did, I think, almost all speakers who preceded me. In this article he calls attention to this. He says:

> The weight of decision has swung backwards and forwards between provincial and federal rights, now favouring the one and now the other. Since the case of Russell versus the Queen (1882) the general trend has been in favour of provincial rights and away from the express intention of the fathers of confederation to strengthen the central government. It was only in 1922, however, that the general power to legislate for the "peace, order and good government" of Canada became stripped of all effect, except in time of war or general national peril. The federal government, which used to be amply clothed with plenary power, is left without a stitch beyond a sword-belt. The result of all this has been to weaken the federal government's hands and to strengthen the provinces, to weaken national feeling and to strengthen sectional and provincial feeling, to cool the spirit of self-sacrifice and cooperation that during the war joined the country from end to end. "Provincial patriotism flourished vigorously under the fostering care of judicial decisions."

I am sure I hear those sentiments echoed in many mouths to-night.

Mr. LAVERGNE: That is not corroborated by facts or jurisprudence.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just a minute. He continues:

> This is the reverse of the process in the United States, where, since Marshall became chief justice, the general trend has been to strengthen the federal government and the power of the supreme court. Lord Bryce wrote. "Had the supreme court of the United States of America been in those days possessed of the same spirit of strictness and literality which the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has applied to the construction of the British North America Act, 1867, the United States' constitution would never have grown to what it now is.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

I submit it now becomes necessary that amendments to the constitution shall receive the support of the voice of all the people in all the legislatures in this country, not unanimously by any means, but by a method to be worked out by such a conference as has been suggested to-night. But the one thing with which I take issue in this amendment, taking it in conjunction with the speech of the mover, is this, that in the discussion of the motion—

> That, in the opinion of this house, it is desirable that Canada should have the right to amend her own constitution.

—he dwelt almost entirely upon social and economic legislation, all of which may be adjusted by amendment to-day. So that the right of amendment by the Dominion is not involved in the major part of the hon. gentleman's address, and that was really the one thing that bothered me a little bit about it. I do not want to strip the provinces of a single vestige of power which they should properly possess, but neither do I want to see the Dominion bereft of its powers and bedevilled by an infernal succession of appeals to litigation on matters so potent to common sense that one cannot for the world understand why they should ever become matters of litigation. Let me just mention the two latest problems—the problem of aviation and the problem of radio. What interest under heaven can any single province have in the development of either of these great new enterprises which must inevitably be national in character? And yet you have the insistent and growing greed for power of the provinces, ever reaching out to grasp every new development that may take place. That problem has to be met.

The second thing which we have to consider is the enactment of the amendment, and in this connection let me submit to the house that it is not so much an amendment to the constitution that we need, as the creation of our own constitution, a constitution in which all the necessary constitutional limitations shall be embodied. The occasion of the coming Dominion-provincial conference on this matter might well be the moment for the selection of a royal commission to redraft our constitution or draft a new one, clarrifying it, making clear the relative powers of the Dominion and of the provinces, especially where serious doubts still exist, ironing out many of the difficulties that can be ironed out by the application to the problem of reason and common sense.

But that would not suffice. After the royal commission had drafted such a constitution, it should be submitted to the people in a referendum, just as was done in the case of Australia. Let me recall to the members of the house—I think most of them are familiar with it—that the constitution which was drafted by a commission in Australia was submitted to the people of Australia in a referendum, and by a very large majority the first draft was rejected. The commission reconsidered the objections to the first draft, amended the constitution again, and once more submitted it to the people, whereupon it was accepted by a very large majority.

Mr. LAVERGNE: What if the amended constitution were rejected by one province?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I will deal with that in a moment. In Australia they now have a constitution that comes from the people, and that is what I say Canada should have. The initial draft could be prepared by a commission at the direction of the Dominion-provincial conference. The draft could be submitted by a referendum to the people. If it was not satisfactory to the people, the constitution could be redrafted and submitted again until finally we evolved our own constitution, one arising from and out of the people of this country. After that has been done, I submit that before it should become the formal, official constitution, the draft might secure the consent by resolution of the two major and older provinces, Quebec and Ontario. I make this suggestion in order that we shall ensure definitely that such a constitution would not in any way violate any understood obligations of this country towards the so-called minority. It is a detail which may well await the maturer considerations of the proposed commission.

Mr. CAHAN: You do not believe in equality of status among the provinces?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This is not so much a matter of equality of status as a matter of carrying out an obligation—an obligation which we have towards these people, and which I personally, with all others, am willing to accept.

The world has advanced at a great pace since 1867. Science has brought up many new problems, some of which I have mentioned, and which demand solution, problems which certainly were undreamt of by the fathers of confederation and by the parliament of the United Kingdom which enacted the British North America Act. Surely the time has come for this country, which we boast has progressed more than, or at least as much as, any other country on earth, to reconsider in the light of the developments which have taken place in the last sixty years, its whole constitutional fabric and attempt to bring it up to date, instead of doing, as the Minister of Justice said we had done—just muddling through with something that inferentially compels us to muddle through; and he is right. All we are doing to-day is muddling through in a hideous mass of litigation from one year-end to another on questions that could be cleared up measurably by the application of rational, constructive, creative ability. As I said, we have now to provide for problems that did not exist sixty years ago. Shall we continue to try to stretch this act to cover what it could never have been intended to cover—for that is what we are trying to do to-day—or shall we now at last prepare our own constitution to meet more fully, more fairly, and more justly the problems of to-day, and make it a constitution more in keeping with the nationhood that we have acquired? Or shall we continue to spend fortunes in futile litigation in an attempt to reconcile the irreconcilable? I stand for a new constitution for Canada—our own.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): I intend to take up only a few minutes. I remember the first confederation day in July 1867 as distinctly as if it took place only a year or two years ago. Since that time, at least since I was a boy of fifteen, I have had intimate relations with nearly every prominent man on either side of politics in Canada, and I have heard the constitutional questions as they arose discussed by the men who made the issues. I think that my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Garland) perhaps lacks an intimate knowledge of the atmosphere in which and the conditions under which our constitution has developed. He has referred to a number of instances in which the parliament of Canada decided as to the exact terms of the amendments to be proposed to the imperial parliament, and in respect of which the provinces were not in particular cases consulted. Admitting that the parliament of Canada has control of the treasury of Canada, admitting that the parliament of Canada may distribute, by act of the parliament of Canada, its funds for such purposes as it deems appropriate, then, until last year, I do not remember any amendment to the British North America Act in which the provinces as provinces were intimately concerned. But I do say this, that from the very earliest times the leading public men in both political parties, because there were then only two parties in the main, have proceeded on the basis that in respect of those matters in which the provinces as provinces were concerned they should be consulted before radical amendments were made to the British North America Act. When I say radical amendments I mean amendments such as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) has described—reapportioning the division of legislative jurisdiction between the legislatures of the provinces and the federal parliament.

I quite agree that the time is coming when Canada, by the concerted action of the federal as well as the provincial authorities, may well exercise the right and legislative power of amending the constitution of Canada. However, in providing ways and means for such amendment we must necessarily make such discrimination as the Minister of Justice made to-night and in which I understood the hon. member for Quebec East, the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), to concur. The constitution of Canada as expressed in the British North America Act, as pointed out by hon. members who have preceded me, deals with certain matters which should be within the competence of this parliament alone to decide. With respect to those matters the provinces are not interested and should not be consulted.

I will go so far as to say that even in certain minor matters a new apportionment of legislative jurisdiction might be made by the consent of the majority of the provinces. But amendments to the main structure of confederation, which forms the basis of the union of our people of different religions and different races, cannot be placed within the jurisdiction of this federal parliament alone if the peace and good order, happiness and contentment of our people is to continue in the future as it has in the past. Before the recent Dominion-provincial conference, simply trying my hand for the amusement of myself and the information of some of my friends, I drafted a clause which might be inserted in the new statute of Westminster with regard to future amendments to the British North America Act. But being present I felt the atmosphere of the recent provincial conference, and it was then quite clear to me that my personal ideas were altogether too radical to secure the approval of the conference. It seemed to me however—and this is merely a personal suggestion—that we might come to an understanding with the provinces to the effect that mere amendments to our own constitution such as parliamentary procedure, the constitution of our own parliament in so far as it does not affect the rights of provinces and their proportional representation therein, should be within the competence of this parliament, exclusively. With regard to those other matters which concern the legislative jurisdiction of the provinces, in contradistinction to the legislative jurisdiction of the Dominion, I think we might possibly find some line of division in respect to which a majority of the provinces concurring might authorize the Dominion parliament to proceed with amendments.

I heard the expression informally upon at least half a dozen occasions from half a dozen representatives of provinces of Canada during the recent provincial conference that it should not be within the competence of one provincial legislature, through indirect action for local and selfish motives, to prevent reforms being carried out which were approved by all the other provinces. I would not speak in terms of disrespect concerning the province of Prince Edward Island; I love that island, because it is the neighbour of my native province of Nova Scotia. I hold that province in great respect, and yet I heard it suggested on several occasions that the province of Prince Edward Island alone or the province of Nova Scotia alone should not be placed in the position of being permitted to thwart every measure of public reform desired by the other provinces of the Dominion. That issue must be met. With regard to these other matters, however, which deal with education and the like, which deal with race and language and frame the issues upon which the compromise was reached by the fathers of confederation, those matters certainly should not be changed except with the consent of those provinces which, by reason of their populations being largely of one race or the other, are therefore intimately concerned therein. My proposition was of no great value, but I suggested that the British North America Act might be amended by an act of the parliament of Canada which should pass both houses of parliament either by a clear majority of all the members or by a three-quarters majority in each house.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Or a two-thirds majority.

Mr. CAHAN: I am giving perhaps a more conservative safeguard. Before such a measure should receive the assent of the governor general in the name of the king it should within eighteen months thereafter receive the approval of either the governments of the several provinces or the legislatures of the several provinces. I myself favoured the approval of the separate and distinct legislatures. There was a further provision that changes which affected interests of race, religion and education should be concurred in by all the legislatures of all the provinces. It is along that line that I think the minds of men are working.

I do not believe in putting the whole Canadian constitution into the waste heap. I lived my youth with those men who framed our confederation. Perhaps it was because of my youth and their political stature that I have now so high an appreciation of their great intelligence and ability. I do not think that in this present day, even in this parliament, that we have the same political intelligence—well, perhaps I should not say that. However, there is such a thing as political intelligence. My hon. friend who preceded me spoke of other kinds of intelligence, but in regard to political intelligence I do not think we are in any way superior to the men who sat in the first parliament of Canada. I do not think we are more sincere or more patriotic, and I doubt if we understand the problems of our day more clearly than they understood the problems of their day. It is all nonsense to suggest, as my hon. friend has, that a few businessmen can express a political constitution in such terms of clarity as to preclude litigation with respect to it in the future.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not at all; I did not say that.

Mr. CAHAN: I understood that to be the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, I never referred to businessmen. I referred to a royal commission appointed by an interprovincial conference. I am sure my hon. friend would not take issue with a royal commission.

Mr. CAHAN: I am not taking issue with a royal commission at all.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is not fair to say that I spoke of a few businessmen framing a constitution.

Mr. CAHAN: But the hon. gentleman seemed to cast some reflection on the present constitution by reason of the fact that it had given rise to litigation, and to suggest that such litigation was to be obviated by the new constitution which is to be developed by some means such as he suggested. So long as mortal man finds it difficult to express his thoughts in concise, precise language, so long will there be litigation. I do not think that this Canada to-day has men in its midst who are more capable of expressing their views in concise, precise terms that will avoid litigation in the future than were those men who framed our original constitution. It is a matter of sincere congratulation to this country that we have developed as we have with that consistent cordial cooperation which has distinguished men on both sides and of all parties who have represented Canada in this House of Commons. I sat in this press gallery in 1887 and 1888 as a reporter, with Sir John Macdonald leading the house, with Blake and Cartwright and Mills on the other side, and when Sir Wilfrid Laurier, then Mr. Wilfrid Laurier, had hardly emerged into the political prominence to which he afterwards attained. The members of this house are not more intelligent than those men, though as intelligent no doubt in dealing with the problems which we have to deal with as were our predecessors in dealing with the problems of their day. And we will go on and deal with them. We want no revolutionary changes. Let us develop in the future as we have developed for the past sixty years, during which period we have avoided those grave perils and difficulties which had been foreseen from time to time by those who preceded us. To do that we must proceed by cordial cooperation and by consent. I would give to the provinces by consent the largest liberty that it is possible to give them; but I agree with those hon. gentleman who say it is their duty as members of this federal parliament to preserve intact to the fullest extent possible the legislative jurisdiction which we now enjoy, because the exercise of that jurisdiction by a parliament representative of all the provinces, of all the electoral districts of Canada, is absolutely necessary if we are to develop in the future as in the past as a nation under the British crown.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny): Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to think we are wandering far from the resolution. If I understand it well, the resolution is to this effect: whether Canada is to be mistress of her own destiny, to be able to amend her constitution, or whether she is still to be under the imperial act which can be changed only at the will of Great Britain. I think that every Canadian proud of being a Canadian will agree with the resolution that Canada should be mistress of her own destiny, of her own constitution.

The resolution provides for the safeguard of the rights of minorities. I shall come back to that later on. But objections have been raised to the consent of the provinces being necessary to a change in our constitution. In my opinion the provinces, as sovereign colonies, have retained to themselves certain of their original rights, and have delegated the balance to the central power. Whether we like it or not, I cannot see why this parliament should be able to amend the constitution so far as it affects such rights of the provinces as were guaranteed by article 92 of the British North America Act. That is, their rights cannot be touched by this parliament, and the act in these respects can be amended only by their consent. Every right reserved to the provinces by section 92 belongs to the provinces, and this parliament could not, even by unanimous vote, take those rights away from them. I have heard to-night that this has been done in the past. But I would point out that the resolutions that have been passed from time to time to amend the constitution have not touched the rights of the provinces, except so far as they may have been included in section 91 of the act, in which cases the consent of the provinces was given by the vote in this house of the members representing those provinces.

Now, the question is this: Should Canada be mistress of her own destiny? I think we all agree on that, and if we do not, I am sure the dissenting minority would be very small. But at the same time we must understand that the pact of 1867 was the delegation by sovereign colonies to the central parliament of certain of their rights, reserving others, and the rights so reserved this parliament cannot touch. For instance, we cannot amend the civil code of the province of Quebec; we cannot amend the rights of the provinces with respect to their municipal law. Those rights belong to the provinces, and if we passed any resolution or any statute to curtail or take away those rights we would be disrupting confederation. Of course, there has been litigation. Wherever there is law there must be litigation, and since the code of Justinian, or even before that, since the law of the twelve tables, there has been litigation, and as long as laws are passed, even by the parliament of Canada—although the House of Commons as it is constituted to-day represents the best brains of the country—I am sure there is bound to be litigation regarding their interpretation. But I know this—and here I take issue with my friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland)—that far from the provinces encroaching on the central power, experience, jurisprudence and facts have demonstrated that every time that a province and the central power have passed concurrent legislation, the federal legislation was certain to supersede and to nullify the provincial legislation. Therefore, far from encroaching on the central power, I think all the provinces have seen their powers curtailed through the very letter of section 92.

My hon. friend very lightly, and I was going to say very broadly but that is not the word I want, stated that the rights of the minorities should be preserved. Well, we had the British North America Act, by which the rights of the minorities were to be preserved. More than that, we had the declaration by Lord Carnarvon when moving the adoption of the British North America Act in the House of Lords in 1865 or 1866. He stated that not only the minorities in esse but the minorities in posse should have the same rights the moment they entered union, and that Lower Canada was as just proud of her institutions as was Upper Canada. Lord Carnarvon said that any minority, be it French or English, Catholic or Protestant, the moment it entered the union with a system of separate schools or with certain rights of language, would have those rights preserved.

I ask this House of Commons how this pact has been kept. We have had the British North America Act amended without the consent of this House of Commons. It has been amended in Manitoba, where the rights of the minority have been curtailed by the legislature. I must say that this parliament tried to pass a remedial bill. I do not want to open old sores, but the remedial bill was not passed, and every hon. member remembers why. Let me quote one point. In 1897, when Sir Charles Tupper was leader of the opposition, he offered the then Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the full support of the opposition if another remedial bill should be introduced. The Conservative government had just fallen over the cause of the minority in Manitoba, and I think there is no page in Canadian history of which a nation should be more proud and of which the Conservative party should be more proud than that which has to do with this action of the old leader of the Conservative party, who had been defeated in 1896 because he stood for the rights of minorities and for justice and liberty in this country.

This will show that in spite of our blunders we still manage to get through. I have heard from some people who call themselves very strong provincial rights—and not to bring any names before this house I shall not name the premiers of Quebec—that Canada should not be mistress of her own destiny, that our safeguard was in Westminster and the throne. I believe I am one of the last monarchists in the world just now—certainly I am not of the most convinced monarchists—and no one more than myself believes in the right of petition to the throne. However, I must go further. I do not agree with the premier of Quebec; I think these are Canadian matters which should be settled between Canadians. I have enough confidence in my English-speaking compatriots to trust the destinies of the minority of this province in their hands.

Probably, and I think undoubtedly, there will be some who will not immediately accept the rights of the minority in this province. There are those who, rightly or wrongly—wrongly, in my opinion—think it is too bad that we should have two languages and two religions in this country. With regard to the two religions, even if the Roman Catholic religion disappeared I think my hon. friends who are not of my faith might find a little difficulty in agreeing among themselves. But let me go further: I know there is a school of thought who say, as they said sixty years ago, that this country must be English, even at the expense of ceasing to be British. I claim the greatest asset of this country is our dual language and our dual civilization, and I have enough confidence in the spirit of fair play and the Canadian spirit of my English-speaking compatriots to trust in their hands, rather than in the hands of Westminster or even the privy council, the destinies of the minorities of this country. That is why I heartily support the motion.

I think these are questions which should be discussed among ourselves. We may have bitter discussions at times, until we come to the conclusion that whether we be of French or English origin, of Catholic or Protestant faith, we have one common ground, and that is our common mother Canada, the land of our forefathers, the only land we care for and the only land to which we owe a duty. For these reasons I humbly support the resolution of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will close the debate if he speaks now. Does any other hon. member wish to speak?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, with the tone of the debate which has taken place this evening, that there would be no great purpose served by putting this motion to a vote. There have been some rather minor objections to the motion; some criticism has been made as to the wording, and some hon. members might not care to support the motion just as it stands. So I feel that as on the whole the motion has received such very general support from all sections of the house, there would be no particular object gained in calling for a vote.

It appears to me that we have indeed made a very great deal of progress in the last few years. I cannot but recall with some amusement that when I first introduced this question seven years ago one of the newspapers printed a fine cartoon in which the Canadian constitution was represented as a magnificent pillar, while the mover of the resolution was pictured as a tiny mosquito attempting to undermine or break down that pillar. We have gone beyond that stage, and it is a great gain when we can seriously and dispassionately discuss a matter of this kind.

I welcome the suggestion of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) that next year, or in the near future, a special committee of this house will be appointed to prepare our case. In that way we can see what amendments may be necessary, so that when a constitutional conference is called we shall be in a position to handle the matter with some intelligence. That statement from the minister is, I think, all that could be expected as a result of our discussion this evening. I quite agree with the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) in his eulogy of the giants of the older days, with their wonderful political intelligence, and of course all of us who live in these degenerate days must look back with a great deal of reverence to the men of sixty years ago. At the same time, I would submit that we must work out our own problems in our own day and in our own way. And that is not to show any disrespect to those who have gone before us. As I said in my speech tonight, the men in that day differed from the others in that they were willing to take a chance in having some change from the conditions that had prevailed prior to their time; and we are most truly following in their footsteps when we undertake to make necessary changes in our day. So that, inasmuch as we are now confronted with a new set of circumstances, the only thing for us to do is to endeavour to bring about suitable modifications.

I would take exception again to the statement reiterated by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) that there was an agreement. I do not wish to attempt to cover the ground which I went over before, but it does seem to me that it is impossible for us, in view of the historical data we have available, to hold that there was any definite agreement as to the terms of the British North America Act. The hon. member is on much safer ground in the sentiments he expressed in the latter part of his short speech. We have come to the point where we can trust one another, and I think the hon. gentleman will recognize that a statement of that kind from him will cause the rest of us to feel not that we must take advantage of any opportunity to get even with him or to get the better of him, but would rather provoke in us a desire to be worthy of such trust.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I think the agreement was arrived at in this way. Sir Alexander Galt, in the name of the minority of Quebec, requested that certain rights should be granted to minorities, either Catholic or Protestant, in all the provinces. It was he who, in the name of the Protestant minority of Quebec, requested that agreement on resolutions from Quebec.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I quite recognize that certain agreements were made; we had a number of agreements. There were the original agreements of Quebec and London, and finally the British North America Act. Undoubtedly there were certain understandings. But my point is that we cannot hold to those in any hard and fast legal way. The British North America Act is not a contract in the sense of a legal contract. If I may use again the figure I ventured to use before, I would suggest that it is something in the nature of the marriage relationship. We have lived together, and the relationship has changed from a mere contract, so that we now entertain towards one another a certain degree of confidence and good fellowship, and affection if you like. The Dominion of Canada is more than a string of provinces: it is a family. In that sense we get away from the old difficulties as to whether Quebec and Ontario should be consulted, and they alone, since they were the old and original provinces, while the newer provinces are left out. Speaking personally, I may say that as a child I moved from the old province of Ontario to Manitoba. But I am just as much a Canadian as my cousins who remained in Ontario; and if there is to be any consultation I think I am just as much entitled to be consulted as those of my relatives who remained in this province. But that would not be the case if you held us to the old legal idea of Ontario as a distinct entity. Our grandfathers lived in different parts of the country and we may live also in different provinces, but we all live in Canada. The time has come when we should get away from the custom of thinking in purely legal terms. Let us think rather in terms of the actual conditions that prevail, and with a view to working out for the future a constitution which will really meet our needs as we see them to-day.

As my good friend the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan), whom I respect highly, was speaking, I could not but recall a resolution which I wrote out in a rather frivolous mood about a year ago, when the ex-Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was speaking so much about the British North America Act—we could not get anything done because of it, and so forth. And there was also a good deal of talk about the Kellogg pact and the idea of hanging it up in the schools. I know that irony is dangerous, but this is the resolution that occurred to me then as one which possibly might be suitable to place on the order paper:

> Whereas the tide of new and disturbing ideas is removing ancient landmarks, encroaching on hoary tradition, subverting archaic institutions, embarrassing routine administration and threatening established political equilibrium:
> Therefore resolved that in the opinion of this house the government, after having obtained the consent of each and all of the provinces, should consider the advisability of hanging a suitably-framed copy of the British North America Act in every schoolroom in Canada.

Cannot we get away from that old idea that we must always have respect for the letter of the past? Rather, we should seek to enter into the spirit of the fathers of confederation and to carry out their work along the new lines. I wish to express my own personal gratitude to the members of the house for the very thoughtful and considerate way in which they have received my resolution to-night, and with the consent of the house I beg leave to withdraw it.

Motion withdrawn.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, May 12, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS COMMITTEE

First report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Stinson.

PRIVATE BILL

MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OF PETITION

Mr. L. G. BELL (St. Antoine) moved:

> That the petition of Marie Rose Agnes Belanger Gauron, alias Caron, of Montreal, Quebec, praying for a bill of divorce from Delphis Gauron, alias Caron, which was presented to the house on the 11th instant, together with the report of the clerk of petitions thereon, be referred to the select standing committee on standing orders, for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing order 92 in relation thereto.

Mr. RINFRET: May I ask the hon. gentleman if this is not a new procedure? It is the first time that I have seen it initiated in this house.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): The petition was late in being presented, and we are now simply asking for leave of the house so that the select standing committee on standing orders may consider the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that the clerk of petitions reported that the application could not be received, and it is now proposed to refer the petition to the select standing committee on standing orders.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE—MR. YOUNG

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn)) I rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. In the Regina Daily Star of Friday, May 8, appears a despatch signed by Thomas H. Blacklock, a portion of which I will read to the house:

> Mr. Weir is of nervous temperament and his friends were anxious over his first effort to address parliament. For weeks he had been subjected to sniping and the most cowardly attacks from such members as Donnelly of Willow Bunch, Vallance of North Battleford, and Young of Weyburn, culminating in an offensive attack by Hon. W. R. Motherwell.

Whether the hon. minister is right or wrong in assuming that all shafts fired from this side of the house are aimed at him personally, this fact is true, that during the debate—

Mr. SPEAKER: What is the question of privilege?

Mr. YOUNG: I am stating the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It is this: Mr. Blacklock in this despatch states that I made a cowardly attack on the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). I say that during the debate in question I took no part whatever in the discussion. I will go further and say that in all the utterances that I have made to this house since the hon. minister has been a member of it I have never once, either directly or indirectly, made any reference to the Minister of Agriculture.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): I should like to inquire of the Acting Minister of National Revenue when I may expect to be brought down the return to an order of the house which was passed almost a month ago with reference to orders in council passed by that department.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Acting Minister of National Revenue): On Tuesday last, when the hon. gentleman mentioned it, I inquired of the officers of the department, and they said that the file was extensive but that they were making progress as rapidly as possible in transcribing the documents for presentation to the house. I will make further inquiries before to-morrow.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT

INQUIRY CONCERNING CONVENING OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): May I inquire from the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) when the special committee on the Copyright Act is likely to be convened?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): My hon. friend will find that a notice has already been given that the committee will meet on Friday at 10 o'clock.

SECOND NARROWS—RIPPLE ROCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILFRED HANBURY (Vancouver-Burrard): Before the orders of the day are called I would ask the Minister of Marine if he is in a position to tell the house when the Cote report dealing with the Second Narrows at Burrard Inlet will be tabled?

Hon. A. DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): We have decided to have the report printed, both in connection with the Second Narrows question and the Ripple rock question. It will take a few days before the printing is completed but upon completion it will be tabled.

ROYAL GRAIN COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): I am sorry the Prime Minister is not in his seat, but I hope some other hon. member of the government will draw his attention to the inquiry I am about to make. On May 5, last Tuesday, I directed a question to the Prime Minister asking when we might expect the report of the Stamp commission. The Prime Minister then promised that it would be presented probably within ten days, and he intimated that before the expiration of that time he would make a statement to the house. Seven days have elapsed and, in common with many of the farmers in the country, I would like to know when the Prime Minister is going to make the statement.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): I will see that the attention of the Prime Minister is called to the hon. member's question.

PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I would ask the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren) if at this session he proposes to bring down legislation amending the Pension Act or the War Veterans' Allowances Act?

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): I am not in a position to make a statement on that point to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. MacLAREN: I cannot make a statement to-day.

Mr. POWER: Will the minister make a statement in the near future?

SUPPLY

STATEMENT OF SIR GEORGE PERLEY CONCERNING VISIT TO SOUTH AMERICA

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Minister without Portfolio) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

He said: Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I think this would be a suitable time for me to say a few words about the cruise to South America in which I took part. In the first place I should like to explain how this cruise originated. A good many months ago the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, which we all know is a strong organization in this country and which has sponsored missions to other parts of the world on behalf of Canadian business, decided that it would be advisable to arrange a mission to various countries in South America, stopping at the West Indies en route. In this enterprise the Canadian Manufacturers' Association co-operated and eventually, through an arrangement with the Canadian National Steamship Company, it was decided to use the steamship Prince Robert for the purpose of the cruise. This steamship is one of the new boats of the Canadian National Steamship Company; it was built for service on the Pacific coast, and although not large was very suitable for the purpose. It turned out to be an excellent sea boat with good accommodation.

As arrangements for this mission proceeded it became evident that a great many representative Canadians were going to take part. After giving consideration to the request of those who were organizing the mission, the government decided to send one of its number with the mission to South America for the purpose of giving it a somewhat more official backing. Naturally our colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) would have been the proper person to go on the cruise, but he was unable to do so. May I express at this time the pleasure of hon. members on this side of the house, and I am sure those on the other side, that our friend who is one of the veteran members of the house has made such a complete recovery and is again with us. As the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not able to go at the time of the cruise it fell to my lot to take his place as best I could, and therefore it was my pleasure and duty on this mission to represent the Canadian government. At the same time the mission was in no sense of an official or governmental character. However, I did what I could to assist in achieving the object of the mission and to bring its purposes before all the countries we visited.

The original object of the mission was one of trade and good will. Some people have characterized it as a cruise of merchant adventurers to the southern seas. We went with the hope of increasing business with these various countries, but the sailing of the ship was arranged so that the delegation would be at Buenos Aires at the time of the opening of the British Empire exhibition by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The object of our trip was to strengthen our friendly relations with the peoples of the various countries we visited and to endeavour to increase our business and trade with them. As I understood it my duty was to assist in every possible way to bring about that objective. When I made official visits to the President of Cuba, Uruguay, Argentina and Brazil I took some of the members of the mission with me and explained the object of our cruise; at the same time strongly urging on those presidents and other officials that they should organize return visits to this country in order that their business men might come to Canada and by meeting with us afford us the opportunity of returning the courtesies which were extended to our representatives. I also took the opportunity on behalf of the government and the people of Canada to extend to each of the presidents personally, as well as to the peoples of the countries they represented, our most friendly greetings. I am happy to say that we received a warm welcome everywhere and our greetings were reciprocated heartily by the president of the republic in which we happened to be.

May I say in passing that press men and photographers were very much in evidence in the South American countries. I have had many years experience in London, and hon. members know how many pictures are taken by photographers. I think I am safe in saying, however, that there were more photographs taken per day in our South American trip than I had experienced before.

Mr. POWER: Undoubtedly that was due to the good looks of the delegation.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Certainly. I appreciate the remarks of the hon. gentleman, but I regard the interest of the press men and photographers as an evidence of confidence in and friendly feeling towards Canadians as a whole. We received an enthusiastic reception wherever we went. I cannot speak too highly of the welcome we received, and when they come here—we asked our South American friends to return our visit—I am sure we shall remember how well we were treated in their country and give them a warm welcome in return.

We stopped for a day at Montevideo, the capital of Uruguay. Several of the officials of the government and the city came on board to welcome us, and they had on the wharf a very fine band, which as we disembarked played O Canada and the Maple Leaf. That afternoon the President and the Minister of Foreign Affairs received the whole party and shook hands with each one. They extended most friendly greetings to the people of Canada. Unfortunately we were able to stay in Montevideo for only a few hours, our ship being late in reaching there on account of a severe storm. Montevideo is a delightful city, beautifully situated and well-kept, and we were very sorry not to be able to stay longer.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, our visit was so timed that we reached Buenos Aires on the day before the opening of the British Empire exhibition. We remained there for ten days —our longest stay anywhere during our trip. There again we were welcomed in most friendly manner, and a great many people were on the wharf to greet us. The city has a very good municipal band, and the mayor of the city—the intendente as they call him —who was very kind to us in many ways, sent the band to the wharf and we listened to the strains of The Maple Leaf and God Save The King.

Mr. POULIOT: That is very good, but what about new trade relations?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Wait a minute.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am coming to that if the hon. gentleman will allow me. It may be of interest to the house to know that we were met by one of the ministers of the Argentine cabinet, by a representative of the mayor, and also by Sir Herbert Gibson, the president of the British Empire exhibition. Next day, Saturday the 14th of March, the exhibition was opened. Everything was admirably arranged, the weather was favourable, and the surroundings were all that could be desired. I may add that the band of the Cameron Highlanders, which had been specially sent out from England, gave us some bagpipe selections at the opening ceremony. The president, Sir Herbert Gibson, made a few happy introductory remarks, and then His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, who spoke in both English and Spanish, declared the exhibition open. His Royal Highness always speaks well, but my feeling was that he excelled himself on that occasion. He was followed by the President of Argentina, a soldier, General Uriburu. I understand that these addresses were broadcast more widely than had ever been attempted before, and I hope many members heard them here in Ottawa.

I may add that after the formal opening of the exhibition I had the honour of escorting the two princes and the president through the Canadian buildings, and I am sure the house will be glad to learn that the building and the exhibits were in every way a credit to the Dominion. For this very satisfactory condition of affairs our exhibition commissioner, Mr. Turcotte, is to be highly commended. It was my observation that the fact of Canada taking part in a British Empire exhibition in a foreign country was a concrete example of inter-imperial co-operation, and although the Canadian building was praised by everyone, I feel that our exhibit produced a much greater impression as part of a British Empire exhibition than if Canada had been there alone. The princes and the president went through our building and expressed themselves as very much pleased with the exhibit. In this way the Prince of Wales again showed that he was representing not only Great Britain but every part of the empire. A sergeant and three Royal Canadian Mounted Policemen were sent down to Buenos Aires to look after our building, and they created a very favourable impression. On the opening day when the princes and the president came through they were on duty and tactfully and courteously controlled the crowds that always besiege the Prince of Wales wherever he goes.

Perhaps this may be no news to hon. members, but it is worth while mentioning that by arrangements made through the telephone companies I was able to hold a conversation with the Prime Minister twice during our stay in Buenos Aires, and our thanks are due to those companies for the excellent and satisfactory arrangement they made. On the day of our departure I also had a talk with the Canadian High Commissioner in London and I could understand him very well indeed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my impressions of Argentina and its people are very happy indeed. It is a fine country, the climate is delightful, and Buenos Aires, or B.A. as they call it down there, is a well-built, well-kept city, twice as large as Montreal—something that I never realized before I went there—and the people are very friendly and desirous of increasing their trade relations with us in every way possible. The Canadian mission received a hearty welcome from everyone, from the president down. The Argentine chamber of commerce made arrangements for us to see all the interesting places in the city and surrounding country, including one of their estancias, or very large ranches, which are typical of the country. Just to show that His Royal Highness was looking after Canadians as he looked after other Britishers, one morning the Prince of Wales received all the male members of our mission at the residence of the ambassador and shook hands with them and said a few words.

As I said before, I have suggested many times that this visit should be returned as soon as possible, and among other messages, I had a telegram asking me to invite delegates and visitors to attend the world's grain exhibition and conference at Regina in July, 1932. This I did, in speaking one evening at a dinner, and I am glad to have received today a circular from the world's grain exhibition at Regina saying that an official mission has been appointed by the government of Argentina to represent that country at that exhibition. I consider this very welcome news, and the fact that these people are coming from so far away certainly adds to the importance of our exhibition.

So that you may have some idea of the feeling of the people of Argentina towards Canada, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to a speech delivered by the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce on the day we left Buenos Aires. I gave a luncheon that day to all the men of our mission and to prominent residents of Buenos Aires. They favoured me with about two hundred guests, including three members of the Argentine government, the British ambassador and the president of the British Empire exhibition. I proposed the toast to our guests on that occasion, which was seconded by my friend Colonel Woods of Calgary, and after the British ambassador said a few words in reply, the Argentine Minister of Agriculture and Commerce spoke in Spanish. He was good enough to send me a translated copy of his address, of which I should like to read a portion:

[Sir George Perley.]

There are events of which actors are seldom fit to appreciate the importance of and consequences; but on this occasion the visit of the Canadian mission is of such importance that it is not possible to hide the consequences involved.

Our countries, being placed opposite one another on the American continent, reaching both the inhabited zones nearing the extreme poles, it seems as if the long distance separating them would be a great hindrance to their comprehension, but the mission presided over by such an eminent personality as our host and the qualified character of our visitors, is the most striking evidence of our resemblance in many moral and material respects which closely bind us in mutual links.

The race so vigorously arisen in Canada, having the fundamental pith of the French pioneers, followed by the magnificent effort of the Britons, who further enhance the progressive striving, convey to us grace, merriment, intelligence and truthfulness, in such a manner that we heartily seek to call you our great friends the Canadians.

Then we left Buenos Aires, and on our way back we stopped at Rio de Janeiro. Ever since I was a boy I have heard about the beauty of the city and harbour of Rio, but I must say the reality surpassed all my expectations. The city is built on the sides of hills and in the valleys between; there is a wonderful land-locked bay twenty-five miles or more in length, which can very well claim to be one of the most beautiful harbours in the world. There we received another warm welcome. The Brazilian government were gracious enough to send a representative from the foreign office to the ship, and they made my wife and myself and Right Hon. Chief Justice Anglin and Mrs. Anglin the guests of the nation on that occasion. I never had a more friendly reception than I received when we called on the Foreign Secretary. The government, together with the Rio de Janeiro chamber of commerce gave us a luncheon, at which the Minister of Commerce and Labour occupied the chair. He proposed our health in English, and in order to show the feeling in Brazil with regard to Canada I am going to take the liberty of reading a portion of his speech on that occasion:

Members of the Canadian mission, your visit is particularly agreeable to us. We know that alongside of outstanding figures in politics, there are with us at this moment the most representative persons in Canadian finance, commerce and industry. We feel certain that Brazil cannot but gain by being known, if only by means of such a rapid visit, by a group of such distinguished men, men of intelligence and action.

If it be true that the international politics of our days more and more tend to economic factors, and become increasingly subordinate to determinations in inter-commerce, it should be beyond doubt that infinite are the possibilities open for attachments between Canada and Brazil, geographically, two of the largest expressions of the New World, of completely diverse climate and production, and whose interests do not collide, but which really complement one another in all phases of world competition.

Commercial relations between Canada and Brazil are only in their beginning, the result so far only of private initiative. We can be, and we already are being, an excellent market for the placing of various manufactured products of your country. You have, besides this, wheat to bring to Brazil. In exchange we are in a position to furnish you with many products and raw materials essential to your economy. More than half the coffee which you consume is not yet supplied by Brazil. We have here, right now, a magnificent field for reciprocal benefits, capable of increasing the volume of our trade. Canadian rubber products already enjoy an excellent position in Brazilian markets. The facility which you could offer for the importation of our "Caoutchouc" appears of intuitive convenience and large are your possibilities to supply the consuming markets of Brazil with Canadian manufactured products.

The day before we left Rio de Janeiro we were all invited to pay the president a visit at his summer home at Petropolis, which is about forty-five miles from Rio and 2,500 feet above sea level. There the president and his wife received all the members of our mission and sent most friendly greetings to the government and the people of Canada.

On the way down we made a visit at Trinidad, and on the way back we stopped at Bermuda. They, like ourselves, form part of the British Empire, and needless to say they received us with open arms. I was sorry that we were unable to visit other British islands, but I may say that the sentiment in Trinidad and Bermuda is strongly favourable to Canada. They appreciate the fine service given them by the Canadian National steamships and the advantages which have accrued to them through the trade agreement entered into a few years ago. While I was there I was told that the West Indies and Bermuda were thinking of sending a trade commissioner to Canada to represent those islands. It seems to me this would be a very wise thing, and I hope it will be done in the near future.

In regard to the business part of this mission, as I said before, this was under the auspices of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, of which Colonel J. H. Woods, of Calgary, is president, and of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the president of which is Mr. Elmer Davis. They had a very efficient secretary in the person of Mr. Wendell Clarke. Wherever we stopped the representatives of the chambers of commerce, of the merchants and of the boards of trade came on board to welcome our mission, and in nearly every instance escorted the mission to a meeting specially convened for the purpose.

On the way south the mission held a meeting at which committees were appointed to make reports on various aspects of trade and business relations as they presented themselves on the trip. They gave a great deal of consideration to this matter, and on the way back, at a special meeting, they put in their reports, which were then referred to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. The reports have been sent out in printed form, along with an excellent condensed report signed by these two presidents, Colonel Woods and Mr. Davis.

I am not in any way responsible for these reports, and they are in no sense official. At the same time, however, they have been considered and approved by these two strong organizations, and they contain a good deal of useful information and many wise suggestions. I believe that members of the house have all received copies of the report made by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce with respect to the mission. I shall read a part of the general report, and if any hon. members are not in possession of copies I shall be glad to lay two or three of them on the table, so that they may study their contents. I quote the following:

> The delegation is convinced that both from the point of view of good will and practical business the mission, which it is believed is the most important one of its kind ever leaving the Dominion, has been a very outstanding success. The people of Cuba, Uruguay, of the Argentine, of Brazil, of Trinidad and Bermuda, gave ample evidence of their desire and even eagerness to increase their commercial relations with the Dominion of Canada. This desire was particularly manifest in the Argentine and was prompted, not only by the visit of the mission itself, but also by the very excellent exhibits of the products of the Dominion, displayed in the Canadian pavilion at the British Empire trade fair at Buenos Aires.
> The delegation was impressed with the very great hospitality and kindness of the peoples of the countries visited. The members of the party met the nationals in the different countries, for the most part as strangers, and said au revoir as friends. From presidents, ministers of state, governors, mayors, presidents of chambers of commerce and the business community generally, the mission received the most cordial of receptions and was welcomed in a fashion which left no doubt as to the depth and extent of the kindness and friendliness offered the Canadians.
> The delegation are of the opinion that out of the total import trade of Latin America, amounting to about two and a half billion dollars a year, Canada's contribution of thirty-nine million dollars can be substantially increased and that out of the three billion dollars which are exported from Latin America, Canada's purchases of some twenty-nine million can be profitably expanded.

The mission are further of the opinion that in the developing of Canada's trade with Latin America, emphasis should be laid, not only on our exports thereto, but also on our purchases therefrom. Even though some of the products of the Argentine, for instance, are in competition with those of Canada, much could be done to improve our present commercial situation with these countries by deflecting some of the trade direct to Canada on Canadian steamship lines, which now passes through American ports.

The mission have noted with gratification that already some fifteen definite agencies or representations have been established as a result of its visit.

The delegation cannot speak too highly of the splendid work which is being done for Canada by the Canadian banks established in the various countries to which the mission went. These great banking institutions of Canada are proving themselves veritable spearheads for Canadian commerce.

The delegation would also recognize the contribution which the trade commissioner service is making to the promotion of Canadian export trade.

The delegation are of the opinion that a knowledge of Spanish in particular should be more widely acquired by young men in our universities and export companies, and would therefore urge upon the educational authorities of the Dominion the desirability of emphasizing this study in their curricula. Just as Canadians prefer to do business in English, so the Argentines prefer to conduct correspondence and interviews in Spanish, and the Brazilians in Portuguese.

The desirability of Canadian producers combining and standardizing for export was clear to the mission, when such exporters, as individual companies, are not themselves in a position to establish on a satisfactory basis a strong selling and advertising organization in the Latin American countries.

The mission have noted with considerable interest that the British West Indies and Bermuda are giving immediate attention to the appointment of a trade commissioner to Canada, whose appointment is being hastened by the visit of the mission itself.

The mission was interested in noting that the government of the Argentine has approved in principle the plan to build during the next three years nine hundred grain elevators at six hundred points, the program to involve an expenditure of some twenty million dollars during the next three years, and that Canadian contractors are making a bid for this business.

The agricultural committee of the mission see many advantages to be gained by an exchange of breeding stock and cattle judges between the Argentine and Canada, and recommend that steps be taken immediately to bring about this desired objective. The agricultural committee further point out the demand in the Argentine for the better quality silver fox fur pelts of Canada; the opening for Canadian live poultry in the Argentine and Brazil; and the market in Trinidad for bee supplies from Canada. It may be noted that Trinidad proposes to exhibit its agricultural products at the Canadian National exhibition this year.

The foregoing, as I have said, is from the report of the mission. Now, I think I am safe in saying that we accomplished the object of our mission. We established friendly relations and got into personal touch not only with prominent people in these South American countries, but with the governments themselves.

We all realize how helpful it is to know people personally, and how much easier it is then to do business with them. It is true we found them all prepared to welcome the mission most heartily, as evidently they had already formed a good opinion of Canada. However, our trip enabled the mission and its members to get into personal contact with the officials and business men of the countries we visited, and I feel strongly that our manufacturers and merchants should be able to increase their business in South America by taking prompt advantage of the impression that has been created there by the mission.

Several of the members obtained orders and made contacts in the various places visited, and this should certainly be followed up not only by them but also by other business firms in Canada. We must always bear in mind, however—I cannot emphasize this too strongly—that there is keen competition for the South American market, and to obtain the best results the principals should go down there rather than send representatives. They should go themselves for the purpose of meeting these people personally, and I am sure that business would be much more likely to result from that course.

Our trade commissioners will be found helpful in every way, and it is a fact that the Canadian banks and insurance and light companies have by their business capacity and fair dealing created an atmosphere favourable to all Canadians. We had on this trip 150 Canadians. All on board were Canadians with the exception of our friend Mr. Pratt, who is president of the Newfoundland board of trade. We were happy to have him with us, and we got along as though we were all from the same country. This led me to hope that some day or other the desirable result might be brought about, of Newfoundland and Canada becoming one, as it seems to me they really ought to be.

These Canadians on board were a very representative lot: they were of both French and English extraction and they created a good impression wherever they went. We travelled for six or seven weeks on this ship and we got along very well together, and I believe the whole party came back to Halifax feeling that they had had a most interesting and useful trip. May I here express most grateful thanks to Colonel Woods, Mr. Davis, and Mr. Robb, the vice-president of the Canadian National Railways, and all the other members of the mission for their unfailing kindness and courtesy throughout the entire trip to Lady Perley and myself.

I was particularly impressed with three things during this mission. In the first place, I cannot speak strongly enough of the wonderful welcome received everywhere. The people of South America are very friendly to Canada and desire closer relations with us, and when they make a return visit, which I hope will be very soon, we must and will give them a very hearty welcome. Then it was brought home to me quite forcibly, that the British Empire should keep together as a commercial entity as well as from sentiment, and there is no doubt that the favourable impression created in the Argentine was increased by the fact that Canada was there at this exhibition alongside the mother country. Everyone felt that our building and exhibit was a marked success, but I do not think it would have been as successful if it had not been part of the British Empire exhibition. I was impressed also with the fact that we Canadians can do almost anything when we work well together. On this voyage we had representatives from all parts of this country, every race and every political party was represented, but no question of party affiliation or birth or creed was ever discussed. We pulled together and we accomplished what we went for and I believe we created a most satisfactory and favourable impression in South America.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that the remarks of the right hon. minister (Sir George Perley) call for any acknowledgment from this side of the house, but inasmuch as he has given such an interesting account of the mission on which he was the representative of the government, I may be permitted to say a word.

As the minister has mentioned, the trip to South America and the West Indies was in the nature of an unofficial mission. It was not a government mission. As, however, the government considered desirable the appointment of a representative thereon, it is fitting that this House of Commons should have from him some account of the journey, and its significant events and results. It is proper also that fitting acknowledgment should be made of the many courtesies extended to the mission by the different countries visited, and all hon. members will appreciate the words by which the right hon. minister has expressed on behalf of Canada his appreciation of the courtesies extended to those who accompanied him on this trip.

While we are dealing in pleasantries, may I say that this is the first opportunity I have had since my hon. friend returned, to extend to him from this side of the house congratulations upon his having been made an imperial privy councillor in recognition of his many years of public service to Canada and service to other parts of the British Empire as well. He is one of the oldest and most respected members of this house, and we on this side join very heartily with his friends opposite in congratulating him upon this high recognition of long and useful public service. We trust he may be spared many years to continue to enjoy that distinguished honour.

In listening to my right hon. friend, I was hoping that during the course of his remarks, he would indicate to us whether or not he had been able, as the representative of the government, to indicate to the various countries visited wherein the policies of the government of which he is a member might serve to encourage or facilitate trade between those countries and Canada, but I did not hear any reference to the trade policies of hon. gentlemen opposite. He did refer to the address by which His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales opened the British Empire Exhibition at Buenos Aires, and his mention of that speech with my recollection of it, caused me to send for a paper which contained the cabled account. I think I might read to my right hon. friend a paragraph from that address. It is contained in a Canadian Press despatch dated Buenos Aires, March 14, which appears in the papers of March 16, and reads as follows:

> "Failure to recognize trade as interchange; obstacles placed in the way of reciprocal trade, are perhaps the main causes of the world's present troubles," declared His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in his speech formally inaugurating the great British Empire trade exhibition here to-day.

That in a word was the burden of the thought contained in the very excellent address made by His Royal Highness in opening the exhibition. As I remember the address, it expressed from beginning to close a desire on the part of His Royal Highness that all nations should create an atmosphere of good will which would foster the interchange of goods between each other, and that the more there was in the way of interchange of commodities between nations the more quickly would the world's great problems of unemployment and the like be relieved. His Royal Highness went on to say that the atmosphere of good will which brought about an interchange of commodities, and which my right hon. friend has recognized as being so important, was best created by removing many of the obstacles to trade. The most significant and important of all such obstacles to trade are tariff barriers.

My right hon. friend represents an administration with a trade policy so-called "Canada First," by which is meant that nothing is to be admitted into this country from another country which can be manufactured or produced in Canada, if a tariff barrier can be placed sufficiently high to keep it out. If that is to remain the policy of the present administration, it might as well save its money when it comes to sending missions abroad, because a policy of that kind is diametrically opposed to that saner policy which the right hon. gentleman has alluded to so approvingly as having been enunciated by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. I commend to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) the reading of the opening address of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales at the British Empire Exhibition, and the application, as between the different nations with whom he hopes this country may do business in the future, of the policy therein laid down.

Mr. MANION: Is that why Great Britain is so prosperous just now?

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I at least can speak for myself in congratulating the right hon. gentleman (Sir George Perley) on the excellent description he has given of the very pleasant social time the mission had in South America. He seems to have remembered every band which greeted them on every wharf, and even the tunes played. It would be unfair on my part to criticize the mission because it did not offer to this country any hope of the development of trade relations outside of the fact that more friendly social relations have been established. However, I did notice in one of the documents from which the right hon. gentleman has quoted, that there was a proposal made to improve the trade between the Argentine and this country by the shipment of more manufactured goods to the Argentine while we were to take in return therefor—what would you imagine? Beef, hides, and casings, for the making, I presume, of sausages. That is the sort of thing that was suggested should be done in this publication from which the right hon. gentleman quoted. If I remember the last election correctly, and the campaign speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, they contended that we were importing far too much of these commodities now, and that we should cut down our importations. If the net result of a mission of this kind is to be that we are still further to increase our importations of animal products, importations which were protested against by the present administration during the last election, then I fail to see the value in the mission. However, I take it that this mission will have better effects than that.

In regard to the address just delivered to the house by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), may I submit that, while his remarks were very pertinent, they might more properly have come from this corner than from himself. May I suggest that if it be so desirable to improve trade relations on a basis of reciprocal trade agreements, then it is too bad that greater steps in that direction were not taken during the last nine years. I am sure that my right hon. friend the present leader of the opposition must have known that he was always certain of the support of this corner of the house in any effort that he ever made or might have made to improve trade relations with other countries.

Mr. YOUNG: What about butter?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, as regards butter, too, and anything else you like. I am afraid that my hon. friend will find that before this house gets through the butter will have turned a little rancid.

I do not think there is in this house a more courteous or more kindly man than the right hon. gentleman who has just delivered this travelogue to us (Sir George Perley). He is one of the pleasantest personalities in the house, and the house may well accept from him his representations in regard to the friendly relations that exist; but let us hope that he has come back imbued with the spirit of the words just quoted by the leader of the opposition, the words that came from the mouth of the Prince of Wales at the opening of that exhibition, and that the efforts of his administration, modified by his now maturer advice, will be in the direction of the abolition of trade barriers rather than in that of their continuation.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Tummon in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Copper Bounties Act, 1923, administration of, $1,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is the reason for the increase of $500 in this item?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): This item of $1,000 is to pay the salaries and expenses of two inspectors. Usually, in both cases, it is an official of the customs or excise branch. Their salaries and expenses amount to three or four hundred dollars each to make an inspection of the two plants which are producing the copper upon which the bounty is paid under the Copper Bounties Act of 1923.

Item agreed to.

The Hemp Bounties Act, 1923, administration of, $500.

Mr. VENIOT: What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. STEVENS: The same explanation virtually as I gave with regard to the previous item.

Mr. COOTE: Are there any bounties being paid under this act?

Mr. STEVENS: Only a comparatively small amount. The amount paid in 1930 was $3,483.

Mr. COOTE: Where is this hemp grown?

Mr. STEVENS: A certain amount in Manitoba and some in Ontario.

Mr. SPENCER: Has the minister given any consideration to giving a bounty on wheat?

Mr. STEVENS: We will take that into our consideration.

Mr. VENIOT: What is the quantity of hemp raised in Canada?

Mr. STEVENS: I have not that information here. It is raised in scattered and comparatively small quantities. The idea of the bounty under this act was to encourage its production.

Item agreed to.

An act to place Canadian coal used in the manufacture of iron or steel on a basis of equality with imported coal, administration of, $1,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. STEVENS: This is to pay the salary of a supervisor of payments in connection with the administration of this act.

Mr. VENIOT: Is that the act of 1930?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the total amount paid out under the act in the attempt to equalize the competition?

Mr. STEVENS: The total amount paid out in 1930-31 was $135,209.

Mr. POWER: How was that amount distributed by provinces?

Mr. STEVENS: It went to one province, Nova Scotia, and to one company.

Mr. NEILL: Upon what basis were the payments made?

Mr. STEVENS: On a basis of 49½ cents. The recipient was the Dominion Iron and Steel Company.

Mr. POWER: When did this act come into force?

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot say just when it came into force, but it was assented to on May 30, 1930.

Mr. VENIOT: The intention of this act was to place the Nova Scotia steel works on a parity with the steel works in upper Canada, which use bituminous coal imported from the United States, upon which they got a drawback. During the election I understand that the present Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition, brought this matter up at a meeting at Sydney, and if he did not give a direct promise, at least he left the impression that something further would be done to assist the miners in the Nova Scotia coal industry. Perhaps it might not be amiss to ask whether or not it is the intention of the government to go further in assisting the coal industry in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. STEVENS: At the moment I cannot give my hon. friend a direct answer. When the budget is brought down certain matters will be disclosed which will cover the policy of the government with regard to the coal mining industry. At this time it would not be proper for me even to intimate the nature of that policy.

Mr. VENIOT: I can readily understand the position taken by the minister. I know that perhaps it is not the duty of the minister to give a definite answer but it is rather unfair that we should be asked to deal with this item at the present time and to pass it without knowing something more about it. May I suggest that the item should be allowed to stand until such time as we learn the policy of the government concerning the coal industry of Nova Scotia.

Mr. STEVENS: I have no objection to that. It is a very small item but there is no objection if the hon. member wishes it to stand.

Mr. VENIOT: It is not the smallness of the item which attracts my attention. There is a greater principle at stake than the mere voting of a salary, and I would suggest that the matter stand for the present.

Item stands.

British and foreign news service, $32,000.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): To whom is this sum paid, and does the government think it will receive value for the expenditure?

Mr. STEVENS: The item is paid and has been paid for a great many years to Reuters. I think Reuters' service is recognized by all as a very excellent international news service. There is a definite arrangement in connection with this service which I shall read if it is the desire of the committee:

> The contractors agree to transmit from Canada by cable for distribution in the United Kingdom an average of 10,000 words monthly; and in addition to maintain its present cable service; to furnish the service of mail news calculated to maintain interest in Canada and Canadian activities, such news to be distributed by mail in the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, South America, West Indies and India. For the purpose of carrying out these services the company will maintain in Canada a special representative who will devote his whole time to the preparation and editing of special articles, interviews, etc.

This is a useful and valuable service to Canada. I presume there might be some criticism as to whether or not the amount is too large or too small. Generally speaking however it is considered that the service has been good. The list of trade and financial publications in Great Britain regularly receiving Reuters special trade items from Canada comprises nearly two sheets of foolscap containing about 75 names of publications in Great Britain alone. The extent of these publications would give an idea of the service in Great Britain, in addition to the services rendered in other countries. I have carefully investigated the matter, and my judgment is that the service is worth while and that Canada receives value for the services rendered by Reuters under the present item.

Mr. HANBURY: Is Reuters a Canadian company, and if not is there not a Canadian company which could render the same service?

Mr. STEVENS: With some hesitancy I would answer that I doubt whether there is a Canadian company equipped like Reuters to handle a similar service. The point is not that Canadians are not able to perform the task, but that the service of this great news corporation has grown for many years. It is world wide in character, and it would take a Canadian company a great many years to build a reputation equal to that enjoyed by Reuter. Therefore I would say that at the moment under these circumstances there is no Canadian concern which could give the service rendered by Reuters.

Mr. EULER: How many agencies have they in Canada?

Mr. STEVENS: I think my hon. friend will know from his experience that the method followed is this: Reuters maintain a head office in Ottawa, and have news agents or sources of news in every city throughout the country. I suppose they have agents in all centres of consequence so far as population or activity is concerned.

Mr. EULER: I am quite sure that the service is maintained only in the larger cities.

Mr. STEVENS: They have what I presume they call correspondents. For instance, newspaper men working in our cities on the staffs of the larger dailies or weekly papers, and the men in some smaller communities would receive a small fee for news supplied, according to the size and importance of the district represented. It is my understanding that they would receive a fee for acting as correspondents in the Reuters service.

Mr. EULER: Have they any relation whatever with the Canadian Press service?

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot answer that, in so far as their personal corporate relation with the Canadian Press is concerned.

Mr. EULER: I refer to business relations?

Mr. STEVENS: I understand the relations between the two services are most cordial.

Mr. VENIOT: There is cooperation and cordial relationship.

Mr. RINFRET: Is the whole amount paid to the same company?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Does the government exercise supervision over the character of the matter sent out by Reuters? I do not refer to censorship. I remember attacking this item when the late Mr. Robb was Minister of Finance. When the item was attacked he moved to strike out the vote, but by some means or other at a later stage in the session he moved to reinsert it, and accordingly the vote was reinserted. The ground I took at that time was that Reuters were sending out propaganda. I would like to know if this government—

Mr. EULER: They will send out different propaganda now.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would like to know if the government exercises any supervision over the matter sent out by Reuters?

Mr. STEVENS: I can assure my hon. friend that whatever might have happened in the past, no such propaganda would be sent out now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: We believe that the service is a good one. I might explain to my hon. friend that during the regime of the late Mr. Robb the item was reinstated because there was a contract with the company. For technical reasons reinstatement was made. While the government does not pretend to edit the despatches, yet through the officials of the department we keep in touch with the matter sent out, and there is a sort of general oversight. The work has been carried on to the satisfaction of the department. The service is much wider than that provided by this vote. The vote represents merely a subsidy.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is it done under contract?

Mr. STEVENS: I have before me a statement showing the work done by this organization from the years 1923 to 1931. This statement shows the number of items sent out which have been clipped from the press by our own service and despatched to the different departments affected. I will read only the totals so as to give an idea of the service rendered: In the years 1923 and 1924 there were, in round figures, 4,000; in the next year there were 12,000; in the next year 9,300; the next year, 14,000; in the next year, 13,500; in the next year, 10,000. In the two following years there were 10,000, and in the following year, 9,500. These figures show roughly the services rendered. Some despatches were short some were long, according to the importance of the items.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What are the terms of the contract with Reuters, and over what period does it extend?

Mr. STEVENS: I have here a synopsis of the contract.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I just want to know the facts.

Mr. STEVENS: The service rendered runs about 200,000 words during the year.

Mr. EULER: Under the contract, Reuters specially bind themselves as to the measure of the services to be given?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, the contract calls for 10,000 words of cable news monthly, but the actual service much exceeds that limit.

Mr. McINTOSH: Is that news service confined to the countries of the British Empire?

Mr. STEVENS: The contract specifies the British Empire, but the news frequently goes to other countries.

Mr. EULER: Must the news be of a character to promote business, or does it cover whatever happens in this country?

Mr. STEVENS: All of the news is calculated to benefit inter-empire relations in the way of trade.

Mr. EULER: Some is of very doubtful value in that connection.

Mr. POWER: Did the service include a synopsis of the Prime Minister's speeches during the last election?

Mr. STEVENS: No, I do not think they were sent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: A few years ago there was another news service included in this vote, and it had been carried on for fifteen years to my own personal knowledge, but a couple of years ago, owing to attacks made on it in this house, it was abandoned. I think it is pretty near time to abandon this one also.

An hon. MEMBER: Make a motion.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You people on the other side have supported this vote for so long that you have got tied up to the situation and consequently you are sitting tight. I have taken the same stand before on this item; I believe that it should be abandoned, and I am not afraid to say so now. I am not going to move any motion; it is up to you people opposite, if you want a motion, to move one. I am not afraid to attack the item, because I think it should be abandoned just for the same reason that the Associated Press service was abandoned. I do not believe that it is good business to continue this vote. If it is a matter of news, I think the people who want the news should pay for it and not the country.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Chairman, I take issue with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Chaplin). I think this is a very valuable service. If he would pay a little closer attention to the news that is sent from Canada throughout the empire, I am inclined to think he would consider the money was well spent. When the attack was made on the vote before Mr. Robb offered to withdraw it, but when we made investigations we found that we would suffer very considerably in trade and otherwise if the news service was abandoned. So far as I am concerned I am prepared to support the vote.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The question I was about to ask has been largely answered, but I would suggest that the minister, being comparatively new to his office, might look very carefully into the character of the news supplied, and ascertain that the news thus subsidized—because it is subsidized—gives an absolutely impartial and accurate view of the country as a whole, and does not reflect the departmental or governmental view of things as they would wish them to be. This is rather an important matter, but in view of the assurance of the minister that the only control the government exercises is to see that unbiased news is furnished, I have no objection to the vote; but I do have very strong objection to any form of subsidized news service which may convey a picture not of conditions and opportunities actually existing, but so coloured as to give any impression which the government may wish created in the minds of those who read such news. As a matter of fact we have received too much news that gave an absolutely inaccurate picture of actual conditions and opportunities in Canada for intending immigrants. I hope that the supervision exercised by the minister will be such that the news service furnished under this vote will give an accurate picture of Canadian conditions and events.

Mr. MARCIL: It is all very well to have governmental control, but I think there should be some way by which the house could be informed of the character and the nature of the news sent out; for instance, a statement might very well be laid on the table of the house; then members would be in a better position to grasp what is being done.

Mr. STEVENS: When my hon. friend rose I was about to suggest that we would lay on the table half a ton, if you like, of these clippings covering a certain period, and members could themselves look over them. May I add this—and it is prompted by the remark of my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Speakman)—that while we were in London at the Imperial conference last autumn I had an opportunity every day of seeing the items of news supplied by Reuters. These news items were supplied officially to the trade commissioner's office in London day by day; they were not specially designed for us. I found them exceedingly valuable and useful in giving me a picture of Canadian trade conditions. I am not speaking now of social news or anything of that character whatever. The news items had to do purely with financial and trade affairs, and they gave me as fine a picture of the Canadian situation as I ever have received at any time from any source. I would hesitate to agree that this service has not been well-handled. The official in charge at Ottawa, Mr. Grange, is a press correspondent of very wide knowledge and experience, with whom most of the members of the house are acquainted, and we are satisfied that the work has been properly carried out. May I also add that the department has the opportunity of examining these items, and throughout the years I question if there are any to which any serious exception could be taken.

Mr. VENIOT: When does the contract end?

Mr. STEVENS: The contract with Reuters is dated June 28, 1923. It was authorized by order in council of July 27, 1923, P.C. 1391. The service was for three years, terminating July 31, 1926. The contract was extended twice, the first time by order in council of July 28, 1926, P.C., 1181, and later by order in council of October, 1926, P.C. 1583. The latter extension was from October, 1926, to the end of the fiscal year. Then a new contract was entered into in 1927 for a three year period, and another contract has been entered into for a three year period from April, 1930, so it runs until April, 1933.

Mr. VENIOT: In view of that statement, while perhaps the discussion is all right to show some disapproval of the continuation of the contract, if we are to operate under the principle of the infallible justice of the crown laid down by the right hon. Prime Minister, how can we possibly cut down this amount?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We cannot do it; hon. members opposite have tied us up for three years more.

Mr. VENIOT: No, I think the hon. member is wrong. What was the date of the last renewal?

Mr. STEVENS: April, 1930.

Mr. VENIOT: Then the government of that day must have thought it was proper. They must have looked into the matter carefully, and I do not think the hon. member for York-Sunbury would want the present government to repudiate a contract made under the old government, no matter how extreme he may be in his political views. I am sure he is fair enough to admit that the contract having been assented to for three years more, the Minister of Trade and Commerce must have looked into the matter, and he has stated to this committee that he thinks it is a right and proper contract and that the service is good. I do not think it is possible to reduce the amount, although I should like to move that the amount be cut to $1 in order to give the hon. member for Lincoln a chance to vote against his own party and show his independence.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The hon. gentleman is very keen to have somebody else make a motion. Now he proposes to make a motion in order to give me a chance to vote. Let me tell him that this contract was made in April, 1930, while this house was in session. Why did not the then government give us a chance to speak about it in the house, without passing an order in council?

Mr. DONNELLY: I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if the contract was not renewed in July, 1926?

Mr. CHAPLIN: The contract was read just now by the minister; it was renewed in April, 1930.

Mr. DONNELLY: But I understood there was a contract renewed in July, 1926.

Mr. STEVENS: It was extended for two months in July, 1926.

Mr. DONNELLY: Who was the Minister of Trade and Commerce at that time?

Mr. STEVENS: I was not.

Mr. DONNELLY: I should like an answer, please; who was the Minister of Trade and Commerce then?

Mr. STEVENS: The Minister of Trade and Commerce was the hon. member for Lincoln, I think, and I want to say that he was undoubtedly a very efficient minister. The contract was extended at that time for two months.

Mr. VENIOT: I should like to ask, since the hon. member for Lincoln and I have crossed swords on this matter, why at that time he did not condemn it and why he renewed it by order in council. Why did he not give us an opportunity to fight it, since we were then in opposition? It is all very well for the hon. member for Lincoln now to say that we should have brought the matter up in the house, but he did not give us an opportunity to say anything about it. I can hardly find an expression to describe the attitude of the hon. gentleman at that time. Here he comes in and condemns the former government for having renewed the contract under order in council, when the first contract was made by his party years before. When the shadow government came in and he was the shadow Minister of Trade and Commerce, by order in council he renewed the contract. To-day he gets up and opposes the very work which he initiated or renewed at that time, and he is trying to throw the burden over on to us. This contract was initiated by the Conservative government.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The hon. gentleman is not quite right. This contract was never initiated by a Conservative government; it was initiated by the present right hon. leader of the opposition in 1923. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that there is quite a difference between renewing a contract for two months, a contract which had been in existence previously, and renewing it for a longer period when the house is in session. The hon. member for Lincoln, in the middle of an election, renewed an existing contract for a short time, to show that the matter was under consideration. He did take it under consideration. The Liberal government renewed this contract for three years at a time when this house was in session, and parliament was never consulted for a moment about it. That is the difference between the two positions.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Chairman, there is one thing sure; if in 1926, as has been stated, I renewed the contract, I did it for two months and the reason was plain enough. I was then just as much opposed to it as I am to-day, and I would not extend the contract beyond the possible life of the government. Had I been back in that office later on, the contract never would have been continued. I did the proper thing; I only made the extension for two months instead of for three years, as the late minister did.

Mr. EULER: There is not very much use in debating the question now if the contract has no clause providing for cancellation. I should like to ask the minister if there is any provision for cancellation. Before he answers that, I should like to say that I have very grave doubts as to the efficacy of the work which is done by Reuters. I question very much whether we get $32,000 worth of work out of the service. I may say to my hon. friend the minister that my experience of the value of the service rendered does not quite coincide with his idea. I had the opportunity of being in London not quite two years ago, and I also had rendered to me the typewritten service from Reuters' agency. It seemed to me a very meagre service indeed. It had some news, but none of very great importance, and while I say this with some hesitation, it seemed to me that very often the news was old and of no very great use to anyone. If the contract could be cancelled and anyone would make the motion, I would support it. In fact I would not hesitate very long to make the motion myself. I would move that it be cancelled, or the amount reduced to $1. I do not see much value in it.

Mr. STEVENS: I have not the contract here, but the memorandum I have before me indicates that it is a three-year contract. whether or not it has the usual provision for cancellation I am not able to say definitely.

Mr. DONNELLY: I should like to find out from the Minister of Trade and Commerce when, after July 28, 1926, the contract was renewed again, and what minister renewed it.

Mr. STEVENS: I gave these renewals a few moments ago. The renewal from July, 1926, was for two months. Then there was an order in council passed on October 12, 1926, extending the contract from October 1, 1926, to the end of the fiscal year. Then a new contract was entered into on April 1, 1927, for three years, and a third contract was entered into on April 1, 1930.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I should like to ask the minister if he knows whether the ex-Minister of Customs actually did protest against the renewal of the contract then.

Mr. RINFRET: Is Reuters' service distributed freely on the other side, or is that included in the general service which they distribute, provided one subscribes to it? The newspapers that have the right to the service in Canada have to pay quite an amount for it. It would seem that the agency is in the happy position of being paid to distribute news from this country, and is also paid abroad by those who receive the news—that is, if it is paid abroad. Is the service distributed gratuitously abroad?

Mr. STEVENS: Speaking from knowledge of the way in which these matters are handled generally, I should say that those who receive the service subscribe. This is in the nature of a subsidizing of that service, in addition to whatever fees they may secure from their subscribers overseas.

Mr. RINFRET: That means, then, that we are paying Reuters to distribute abroad news for which the people in other countries are willing to pay anyway. It either means that, or it means that Reuters add to their service something which is not of much use, and for the distribution of which we have to pay them as a sort of advertisement. I do not think, myself, that the arrangement is a very happy one. I am not concerned as to whether my good friend or someone else is responsible. We should never get anywhere if we stopped always to ascertain responsibility in the past. I am interested in the item before us to-day. From what has been urged on both sides of the house I am inclined to support any motion with reference to the matter. I will not offer a motion myself, but if one were submitted I would vote for it.

Mr. STEVENS: Before the item is condemned it ought to be examined carefully. I may say candidly that I have given it considerable thought and have examined the material, though perhaps not as completely as one would wish; the time has not permitted that. However, I have looked into it to the point of satisfying myself that the service is a good one, and there is no doubt that Reuters would not furnish the cable service to the extent they do were it not for this subsidy. It is a difference perhaps between a letter service and a cable service, and before taking steps to cancel it I think we ought to be very sure of the grounds upon which we do so. We ought to make sure that we are not doing Canada a disservice—that is, to the trade news of the Dominion, because that is the character of news which the service renders, as a perusal of the journals affected clearly demonstrates.

Mr. CHAPLIN: As a matter of trade news, I do not consider it worth a copper. I am perfectly willing to examine the case upon its merits. Let the minister lay on the table of the house a report of the services given. He says he has clippings. Let us examine the matter on that basis and then judge for ourselves. I have done this already and I know what it is; and, as I said before, I do not think it is worth a plugged nickel.

Mr. JACOBS: The point that concerns me at the moment in the discussion of this item is the responsibility, moral or otherwise, of this government with respect to the contract which has been alluded to here. After all, this government has been in power only eight or nine months, and if it gets abroad that they are beginning to repudiate their liabilities so early in their history, and if that is circulated by the Reuter agency, it may not do us much good. For that reason, if only to maintain the credit of the government I think we ought to allow the item to pass this time. I have a great deal of respect for the opinion of my hon. friend from Lincoln; as a rule he knows what he is talking about when it comes to trade matters. He was in the department, it appears, before the present minister, and when he speaks in the assertive way in which he does this afternoon I am sure he is aware of something which perhaps the house ought not diplomatically to know. I am against the principle—I do not know what my views were when my party was in power—of paying newspapers to circulate news. It at once becomes tainted when the public gets to know about it, and, to use the expressive words of my hon. friend from Lincoln, it is not worth a brass farthing or a plugged farthing—

An hon. MEMBER: A plugged nickel.

Mr. JACOBS: Plugged nickel, was it? We have in the city of Ottawa representatives of great news-gathering agencies on the other side. We have a representaive from the London Times, a representative from the Manchester Guardian, and representatives from other newspapers overseas. Are we paying those agencies anything for publishing the news they send abroad? I know they are being maintained here as well as or perhaps better than Reuters' representative. Surely if we can pay one agency we should pay the others. Any news published on the other side from the representative of the Manchester Guardian, of the London Times, of the Morning Post, or of any of those newspapers will have as wide a circulation as that disseminated by Reuters agency, and it is free from the suspicion that it is paid for. I am against the prinicple of paying some people to do work for us while others are doing the same thing for nothing. Either all or none ought to be paid. I trust, therefore, that when the contract expires—and, I was going to remark, when the Minister of Trade and Comerce now in office has to deal with the matter again, which God forbid—the fact will be taken into consideration that there was determined opposition in the house, not only from the hon. gentleman's predecessor but from others on this side, to the extending of the contract for any further term. After all, $32,000 a year is a tidy sum of money; we do not easily pick it up these days. If we want to borrow money just now we have to pay 5 per cent for it. Surely this is a case where we can take, so to speak, a newspaper holiday and discontinue this item until better times come. When the time is opportune we can consider it. In the meantime, however, I am not in favour of cancelling the contract, because we have a moral responsibility in the matter; though on principle I am against it.

Item agreed to.

The Canada Grain Act, including management, operation, maintenance and equipment of elevators, administration of, $2,681,000.

Mr. BROWN: Does the minister anticipate any amendments to the grain act this session?

Mr. STEVENS: No, I think not. There was a very complete revision of the act recently, and what we might call the new act has been in operation only since the close of the last crop year. It is therefore impossible as yet to determine whether the new provisions are going to work successfully or otherwise.

Mr. BROWN: There have been no reports in regard to the operation of the new act?

Mr. STEVENS: No. There cannot very well be any satisfactory reports until the end of the present crop year, which will be July 31.

Mr. LUCAS: Have there been any complaints with regard to the operation of the revised act?

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. VALLANCE: I notice a reduction in the item of $203,048. As I remember the revision to the grain act made during the last session of parliament, it seems to me that the operation of the new act should cost more if that supervision were given which those who sat in that agriculture committee expected would be given under the new act. How does the minister expect to make a saving of $203,000?

Mr. STEVENS: All the provisions of the new act are being administered satisfactorily and successfully. My hon. friend will recall that the crop preceding the last one was an exceedingly heavy one, and much of the expense of this particular branch is made up in the handling of the quantum of grain passing through the various inspection centres. This year, and we expect next year, these services will not be as heavy. During this past winter instead of disposing of the services of a large number of temporary help, we spread out the work on a part time basis and have had a larger number of men working on part time than otherwise would have been the case on full time. The expenses will be less because of these factors and also the pressure being brought to bear upon the grain commission to keep its expenditures down in these times as low as is reasonably possible consistent with proper administration.

Mr. VALLANCE: Is the administration of the grain act entirely taken care of by the payments made by the producers for the services rendered; is it self-supporting?

Mr. STEVENS: The administration of this particular branch of the public service has in the past shown a surplus, but there was a slight deficit last year and we expect another small deficit this coming year, due to the falling off in the quantity of grain handled. The revenues are derived from a per bushel charge for the handling of grain, therefore when the quantity of grain falls the revenues fall. In 1930-31 the receipts from grain inspections were in round figures $1,165,000 and the expenditures were $2,021,000, a deficit of $855,000. In the management, operation and maintenance of elevators the revenue was, in round figures, $713,000, the expenditures $394,000, leaving a surplus of $318,000. For the year 1930-31 there was a net deficit of $568,000. For the years 1928-29, 1927-28 and 1926-27 there were surpluses.

Mr. TOTZKE: How large was that surplus?

Mr. STEVENS: The figures for the five years are as follows:

1926-27	$400,080 89*
1927-28	569,130 09*
1928-29	684,227 71*
1929-30	224,020 36†
1930-31	568,348 47†

* Surplus. † Deficit.

Mr. McINTOSH: Would the five-year period balance up?

Mr. STEVENS: There would be a surplus.

Mr. TOTZKE: What becomes of that surplus?

Mr. STEVENS: It goes into the consolidated fund.

Mr. TOTZKE: Is any allowance made for rentals of buildings?

Mr. STEVENS: The figures I have given are purely operating, but the expenditures include rentals where rentals are paid.

Mr. DONNELLY: Has there been a surplus or deficit during the past years in the administration of the grain act?

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. STEVENS: I have just given the figures for the past five years.

Mr. DONNELLY: I mean since the act was first passed.

Mr. STEVENS: Would my hon. friend permit that question to rest a moment and I will endeavour to get that information.

Mr. SANDERSON: Does not the minister think this to be an opportune time to give the committee some information with regard to the negotiations being carried on with China for the sale of wheat? We have read in the public press of the great prospects of selling Canadian wheat in China, and if I remember correctly I think the minister has made one or two statements himself.

Mr. STEVENS: I would hesitate to discuss publicly all that has been done because after all any efforts made by the officers of the department under the instructions of the government are necessarily more or less confidential. I have not the figures with me as to the trade with China in connection with wheat, but I will give them from memory. During the past crop year and up to the present China has imported about 650,000 tons of wheat. Of this amount Canada supplied about 184,000 tons, Australia about 400,000 tons, the remainder being supplied from the United States and other sources. One of the reasons why Australia has been able to cut into this market so heavily this year is because of the discount in the Australian exchange.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think that is a subject for congratulation on the part of Australia or applause upon our part; I think it is a most unfortunate condition from which we hope, and have confidence, that Australia will be able to extricate herself within a reasonable time. This exchange discount allows Australia to place her grain in the Chinese market at a much lower price.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is rather an advantage.

Mr. STEVENS: Not to us.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): To Australia.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Not to anyone who has any money.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member from Bow River (Mr. Garland) states that that is an advantage to Australia, but I fear I must take issue with him in that because I believe Australia would rather have her exchange on a normal basis.

Mr. COOTE: How about the Australian farmer?

Mr. STEVENS: No, not even the farmer.

Mr. BROWN: Are we not wandering away from the subject under discussion, the administration of the grain act?

Mr. STEVENS: I am answering a query which perhaps is not out of order. Another factor that enters into the grain trade with China is the nature of the wheat itself. In the first place, under the existing conditions in China as to purchasing power, China can buy wheat abroad only when it is at a very low price, and it is the low world price of wheat to-day that is resulting in the comparatively large import of wheat to that country this year. Moreover, in the class of foodstuffs produced from wheat in China, soft wheat enters more largely than hard wheat, and there is therefore a certain attraction for Australian soft wheat. That is another factor that enters into the question, although if we can sell our wheat at a low enough figure China will buy. There is, however, some hope—and this is the point I wish to make—of improvement in this trade. The hope rests in some indications of an improved economic condition in China. There is in northern China to-day a more stable economic and governmental condition than there is in some other sections of that country, and that field is offering perhaps some attractions and some hope.

The consumption in China is very large. I think there has been some misapprehension of the capacity of China to absorb wheat and wheat flour. Some have argued that you could never get much wheat or wheat flour into China because they are a rice-consuming people; but the fact is that given normal economic conditions, and getting away from this very unusually low price of silver, rice is ordinarily at a higher price than wheat. Another point is this, that China itself produces upwards of 600,000,000 bushels of wheat a year, and is I believe likely to produce more as the great areas in northern China, in Manchuria, become more settled—that is in the way of order and governmental control. This is being brought about at a very rapid pace. But the likelihood of an increased production of wheat in China does not mean that China will produce all the foodstuffs she requires. My conviction is that there is a growing market in China, in northern China particularly, for products from this country, including wheat. I would not like to say that in the immediate future there is a prospect of our marketing large quantities. Indeed, some very good authorities differ entirely from my view, and contend that the export of wheat from Canada to China will never amount to very much. I personally do not believe that. But the situation is so disturbed, not only from a political standpoint, but the economic disturbance has been such in China, and indeed, in the orient generally, that the doing of business has been very difficult. I may say that we are making, and have made, and I intend to continue to make, every possible effort to enlarge our business with China in wheat and wheat flour.

Mr. SANDERSON: I should like to follow this discussion a little further with regard to finding a market for Canadian wheat in China. I understand that the Hon. Mr. Marler was sent to China to investigate the marketing of our wheat in that country. Is that correct?

Mr. STEVENS: I would prefer that the mission of Mr. Marler be discussed when the Prime Minister's estimates for External Affairs are up. I can say this, I think, that Mr. Marler did visit China, and saw the government at Nanking, and discussed with them the question of trade, including the marketing of wheat.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am willing to take the minister"s explanation in regard to that, and shall not press my question. The minister himself said something a moment ago about a probable market in China for Canadian wheat, and it therefore appears to me that the mission of Mr. Marler to China might properly come under this item. However, I am not going to press that. I have a very clear recollection of reading a speech made by the Prime Minister before a vast audience in the city of Regina—his speech was broadcast all over the Dominion—in which he stated that the Hon. Mr. Marler had left for China and expected to receive a large order from that country for Canadian wheat. Subsequent to that, the Minister of Trade and Commerce came out with a statement to the press that he himself thought there was a great opportunity of marketing Canadian wheat in China, but that we would first of all have to establish a credit for China, because they did not have any money, and therefore we would virtually have to lend them money with which to buy our wheat. I should like to ask the minister how far he has pursued that policy with regard to China, first as to finding the money for a credit for China with which to buy our wheat, and then as to sending our Canadian wheat over there.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Tummon): I would ask hon. members to confine themselves to the item under consideration?

Mr. POULIOT: Why don't we exchange their tea for our wheat?

Mr. DONNELLY: When we amended the grain act a year or two ago we were told that when mixing was done away with it would be necessary to hire at least five hundred, and possibly one thousand, supervisors for special bins, and that this supervision would cost from $600,000 to $1,000,000. Does the minister know whether these supervisors have been appointed, how many of them there are, and what it has cost to supervise this special binning? I see a reduction in this item, and I wonder how that could possibly be if it was going to cost so much more for this supervision that they said the country would not be able to afford it.

Mr. STEVENS: I am sure that my hon. friend will not think I am facetious when I ask him whom he means when he says "they" said so and so. I am sure that I never made any such statement.

Mr. DONNELLY: It was the grain trade, giving evidence before the committee.

Mr. STEVENS: Might I suggest to my hon. friend and other hon. gentlemen who are interested, and very properly interested, in the grain act and its administration, that it is hardly profitable for us here to go back to the evidence taken by the committee and ask now for an explanation with regard to what somebody may have said. I must say frankly that such was never my opinion, and I have been fairly familiar with this subject for many years. I believe that there were certain additional officials appointed to administer the grain act as amended, and there was a certain reorganization of the board, but on a comparatively small scale, I think, so far as numbers are concerned. There were certain additional officials, and I have no doubt if this year we had had a very large crop and a large quantity to handle we would have had to have a much larger vote and larger staff. However the new work was absorbed by the surplus temporary staff carried over from the previous year. My deputy has handed me a statement of the estimated additional cost in connection with the sampling of all cars at unloading points, and the preservation of samples for thirty days, and so on. This statement gives the number of elevators and probably I should read the substance of it. There were public elevators at Fort William, Vancouver, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Calgary and Edmonton. Eleven additional samplers were required at a monthly additional cost of $1,287. There were 33 semi-public elevators with 59 additional samplers, at an additional monthly cost of $6,669. There were 34 private elevators with 23 additional samplers at an additional monthly cost of $2,691. There were 11 mill elevators at no additional cost. That was a weighing point only and there was no inspection. There were private elevators at three other points not enumerated above, where there were five elevators with two additional samplers at an additional cost of $234, or a total additional cost caused by these changes in inspection of $10,881 per month.

Mr. DONNELLY: I do not see what the samplers have to do with it at all. I do not see any change in the grain act to provide for more samplers. We were told that we would have to have more men to supervise, and I remember our chief grain inspector, Mr. Fraser, stating that at least five hundred men would be needed at a cost of $1,200 to $1,500 each per year. In the committee at that time we all thought there would be a cost ranging between $600,000 and $1,000,000 for these supervisors, or policemen, to see that the provisions of the grain act were carried out. The sampler has to go to the cars and take samples, and I do not see why we should have more samplers.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is overlooking the samplers of grain going out of Fort William and other ports.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is the same.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. DONNELLY: We always had samplers before, and I do not see why there should be more now than there were then.

Mr. STEVENS: There is additional service called for under the new act.

Mr. VALLANCE: I think the minister will agree that the new service which was most necessary in the administration of the grain act was the supervision of those grades of grain which under the new act were not allowed to be mixed. As was stated by the member for Willow Bunch the chief grain inspector pointed out we had to take the first six straight grades, which we did not do. We took only the first three grades including No. 1 hard. What we are exercised about is that this year the minister is asking for a vote in which there is a decrease of about $203,000, and those of us who were responsible for the consolidation and revision of the act are rather suspicious that we will not have the supervision we desire. We do not see how additional service can be given with a vote reduced by about a quarter of a million dollars after being told in the committee that it was going to cost a tremendous amount of money. That was one of the arguments used against denying to the trade the privilege of mixing wheat.

While the minister is considering that question I have another question I would like to put to him. I do not know that there will be any more opportune time than the present to discuss the matter I have in mind. At the beginning of this session of parliament I asked for the production of certain papers, correspondence and so on. I have talked to the minister about the matter and I think we should clean it up and learn once and for all whether or not the suspicion of some farmers in western Canada is well founded. I am referring to the correspondence between the Prime Minister and Sir George Foster, when that hon. gentleman held the portfolio now held by the minister and formerly held by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin), and one by the name of Whiteside. I know there are hon. members on the government side also who have been in touch with Mr. Whiteside. He resides in a place called Birsay, in the province of Saskatchewan. He is an active chap, and operates in the interest of the grain producers of western Canada. It is his opinion that there is a surplus of money lying in the public treasury of Canada to the extent of several millions of dollars which was created because of the fact that the 1917 and 1918 crops were sold by the then government. In the correspondence which came down I found one letter was missing. I referred the matter to the minister, wrote him about it, and I am sorry to say I have not had a reply from him. Probably he has not had time.

Mr. STEVENS: It was laid on the table.

Mr. VALLANCE: Was it?

Mr. STEVENS: I called my hon. friend's attention to the fact when the information was laid on the table.

Mr. VALLANCE: I believe the crux of the matter is in that letter of April 27, 1920. It is a letter sent by Sir George Foster to Mr. Whiteside in which certain statements are made. Now that I am informed the letter is tabled may I ask the minister to allow this item to stand until eight o'clock so that I may have an opportunity to go into the correspondence?

Mr. STEVENS: Leaving out the letter from the original file was entirely an oversight.

Mr. VALLANCE: I realize that.

Mr. STEVENS: I had nothing to do with the matter at all; it was prepared by the department. When my hon. friend drew attention to the fact that the letter was missing I asked the department to make further search. It must be remembered that these letters passed about twelve or fourteen years ago. I may say that I glanced through the letter from Sir George Foster and thought it was a very excellent one. I am delighted to be in a position to hand it to my hon. friend because I think it gives a very satisfactory explanation of the whole business.

Mr. VALLANCE: In view of the minister's statement I would ask that the item stand until eight o'clock.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not object to that, but there are other hon. members who have other points to bring before the committee, and we might listen to them. I assure my hon. friend, however, that I will not ask for the approval of the item until he is fully satisfied.

Mr. POULIOT: As it is about five o'clock it would seem to be a most appropriate time to speak about tea. As the minister knows at the present time there is a famine in China. Those people need wheat, and they have no money to buy it. Would it be possible to find means of exchanging the wheat of Canada for the tea of China? I make the suggestion most seriously, and if something could be done in that respect help might be given to the Canadian wheat growers.

Mr. STEVENS: I am happy to assure my hon. friend that the department will be pleased indeed to facilitate the exchange of wheat for tea or any other articles that we can possibly take. Our trade commissioner in northern China has been bending his efforts to that result as far as he has been able to do so. It is easy to say, "Let us take a certain amount of tea and give a certain amount of our wheat in return," but it is rather more difficult to work out a method by which this can be done. All I can say is not only in regard to wheat, but in regard to every other product that Canada can take and China can supply—and there are many others—we are endeavouring to bring about an exchange.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I take it the minister has not in mind the setting up of a government agency for importation and distribution?

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then I do not know that anything more is being done now than has been done by trade agencies in the past by way of barter or exchange of goods between this country and others. In short I do not think there is any barter possible until the government itself undertakes to handle the commodity to be exchanged.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Tummon): May I remind hon. members that these questions should more properly come under the next item, No. 364.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is there provision for payment of interest on capital cost of the government elevators?

Mr. STEVENS: No there is an operating surplus only.

Mr. COOTE: I think the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) asked the minister whether there had been any increase in the number of inspectors in the elevators since the new provisions of the grain act with regard to prohibition of mixing of top grades was put into force. Has the minister that information?

Mr. STEVENS: I thought I answered that.

Mr. DONNELLY: No.

Mr. STEVENS: I think I can satisfy the two hon. gentlemen on that. I am not sure that we have the officers who are now operating under the new act and their duties segregated from the general operations. It must be borne in mind that when the act was revised last session certain duties that were performed under the old act would be carried into the new, and naturally part of those duties would be discharged by the same officers. I question if we have under our hand any information that would segregate one from the other; I do not think it would be possible.

Mr. COOTE: May I make the point a little clearer? The chief inspector and the inspector at Fort William were both very positive that if these new features were put into the act we would need an increased number of inspectors in the terminal elevators to act in the nature of policemen—I think that was the term they used. We are unable to understand how the grain commissioners can carry out the new act without the appointment of such men. If they can do it, of course we shall be very glad to know, but we should like to be assured that the act is being enforced and the proper. inspection carried out in the terminals.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Ramsay, the chairman of the Board of Grain Commissioners, tells me that as administrators they find the new act quite satisfactory. In other words they have no trouble in administering the new act.

An hon. MEMBER: With the same number of men?

Mr. STEVENS: There again I have to remind the committee that the number of employees must vary with the quantity of wheat that is handled, and there is such a huge difference between last year, for instance, and the year before in the amount of grain handled that quite a fewer number of employees were required. I may say that if we had been harsh we could have cut down the number of employees still further, but I took the ground during the past winter that we would not be too severe in that regard, and we adopted the principle which I mentioned a moment ago, that of carrying these employees along and working them, say, a week, and then laying them off a week—I think in some cases the interval was three days off and three days on—in order to spread the work available over a larger number of employees. So our records will show a larger number of men engaged than were actually required for the work had they been working full time. Now, to me that creates a very great difficulty in segregating the exact number of additional men required by the new act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I say to the minister that there must be some mistake in the information he has given the committee. I cannot conceive why there would be any necessity for additional samplers. The act calls for additional inspectors. The volume of grain was not so large, therefore you would not require additional samplers, but the act did provide for a considerable increase in the number of inspectors to take precautions against mixing of grain. That is what we are exercised about.

Mr. STEVENS: In the statement by the chief inspector, Mr. Fraser,—I have it here,—he says there were some improvements in the method and some expansion in the number of samples taken. Here is his statement. The first part is headed:

Additional Equipment Required

Fort William—
Alterations in the additional office space to be assumed by the board, estimated..	$ 750
50,000 sample tins..	9,000
10,000 sample bags..	600
300 canvas mail bags and padlocks..	1,000
Dockage testers, scales and sieves..	530
Shelving and table in sample room..	2,000
		$13,880

80 canvas mail bags and padlocks..	270
1,000 sample bags..	60
		1,830
		$15,710

Then he gives a statement of additional monthly expenditures as follows—these I have already given, I may say, in a slightly different form:

Fort William—
Samplers wages..	$6,786
Draying..	300
Rent—additional storage. . .	310
		$ 7,396

Mr. DONNELLY: These are additional?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Samplers wages..	702

Kenora—
Samplers wages..		117
		$12,010

Estimated additional yearly expenditure, 12 months at $12,010 per month, $144,120.

Then the chief inspector adds this note:

But as the work at all points is intermittent, reductions in staffs will be made at all points in the off seasons. I am therefore of the opinion that the services of these additional samplers will be required for from seven to eight months each year, making the annual additional cost for wages $78,000 to $89,000, with draying and rent, $10,740 for the twelve months, or a sum total of $88,000 to $99,000.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister points out that there will be an increase in the number of samplers. I cannot see the reason for that, because I understand automatic samplers have been installed, which should do away with a lot of those men.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is quite right, but they are not installed yet; they are being installed.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister pointed out that the grain act always has been able to carry itself, that is, over a period of five or ten years. Having that in mind, and because of the amendments which were brought in last year and which now are contained in the consolidated grain act, it seems to me we should be not reducing the vote but increasing it, because we must supervise these grades of grain that are not allowed to be mixed. If we do not do so I am afraid we will find ourselves back where we started.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): The explanation for which the hon. member for South Battleford is looking is contained in the act itself, it seems to me. I have not the act before me, but my understanding is that teeth have been placed in the Grain Act with regard to the very point my hon. friend has in mind, namely, the confiscation of the overages as between certain grades. I think that very largely does away with the necessity for what we have called policemen, and perhaps the minister has that in mind.

Mr. VALLANCE: I still maintain that the grading must be supervised. There is nothing easier than to take a carload of No. 3 wheat and put it into No. 1, if you like, and then take out some No. 1 and mix it with those grades which are still allowed to be mixed under the act. You still have to supervise those top four grades, including No. 1 hard.

Mr. STEVENS: As I understand it the new act overcomes the very difficulty which has been raised by the last two speakers. The practice which has grown up in past years of surreptitiously introducing a lower grade into a higher grade and turning out an average higher grade has been pretty well taken care of and it is believed it will be taken care of in the new act. The chairman advises me that the new act is working satisfactorily and achieving the objects which were set forth. I submit to my hon. friends that it is impossible for us to give data until the end of the present crop year, when the grain board will make its report. We are now in the middle of, or two-thirds of the way through the crop year, and until we get the report of the grain commission I cannot present any data to the house, because as yet it is not compiled. However, I have here a general statement by the chairman which I might read, since it might give some light on the subject. It does not and cannot present facts, figures and data to prove the success of the present act, but it might convey to my hon. friends the assurance which they very properly seek. This letter was written by Mr. Ramsay, chief commissioner of the Board of Grain Commissioners, under date of November 27 last, and is addressed to the deputy minister. It is headed:

Re: Reorganization of Grain Inspection Methods

The letter goes on to say:

Referring to the work undertaken by the board looking towards the safeguarding of the producers' interests in the inspection and grading of grain and the changes in the handling and transportation methods, it has become necessary to adjust the methods employed in the inspection department to meet this condition.

The chief difficulty found by the new board is in the sampling of grain for inspection purposes. Up to the present this has been done by means of a probe sample taken at inspection. The development of railway transportation, however, i.e., the use of large cars and the heavier weight carried in those cars and the fact that those cars are loaded so fully that as a result it is impossible for a sampler to carry on his work, requires forty per cent of the shipments now arriving at inspection points to be sampled at unload at the terminal.

There has also always been in the mind of the producer a rather grave suspicion of the manner in which the work of sampling of cars was carried out at the inspection point, and also the definite proof that the probe sample does not determine the proper dockage in the car sampled in a great many cases in view of the varying nature of this dockage. Also it is possible for a dishonest shipper to so load his car by what is known as "plugging" as to in some cases evade a proper determination of the contents of that car.

To overcome these and other difficulties the system of sampling at unload by automatic samplers has been devised. A machine has been approved which carries on this work mechanically with mathematical precision and which leaves the operation of the system practically free from human fault, and as a result above suspicion. This matter was very fully discussed with the Hon. James Malcolm, former Minister of Trade and Commerce, also with the Department of Trade and Commerce officials, and with the agricultural committee of the House of Commons. It has also been accepted by the producer at large as being a great protection to his interests. It is acceptable to terminal elevators and improves their position in so far as it is possible for them to have the correct dockage placed on each car with exactitude and relieves them in certain crop years without finding themselves with a shortage in grain and an overage in dockage, or vice versa.

The board therefore has completed plans and recommends to the minister that the system be adopted officially. However, to install it it is necessary that certain expenditures be approved. I enclose herewith the chief inspector's estimate in which he states that adding it to the present methods would involve an expenditure of from eighty-eight to ninety-nine thousand dollars per annum, mostly for wages. I may say it is the board's opinion that this is a very generous estimate of the cost and in compiling our estimates for submission to the minister this year the adjustment has been incorporated in those estimates without making any appreciable difference in the total amount asked for for the administration of the service as a whole. As a matter of fact it is the board's opinion that a very small additional expenditure for wages will be incurred in view of the fact that it will provide work for seasonable men who otherwise would be laid off for the balance of the crop year.

We require therefore and would ask that we be authorized to make an expenditure not exceeding $13,880 for additional office space and equipment at Fort William, $1,830 for additional equipment at Vancouver, and that authority be granted for such adjustments in our staffs at these points as may be necessary to bring the system into operation.

The board is of the opinion that the installation of the system will do away with ninety per cent of the friction which has been a growing quantity for many years between the western producer and the inspection department, and will re-act very favourably on the prestige between the service and the public with whom it deals.

The cost of providing machinery for sampling as under section 131 of the act has to be borne by the terminal elevators and apart from any opposition from them in regard to its installation, I may say that they are now all equipped with the necessary machinery and welcome the innovation.

You will notice that this letter covers the items I read a moment ago concerning the additional staff required to take care of this particular service. I should also like the committee to note that the cost of the installation of the sampling machinery is borne by the elevators. With regard to the request for authority, we authorized the board to proceed with the installation of this system.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Has the board reported any tendency to revert to mixing particularly with respect to tough or damp or dried wheat?

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. VALLANCE: I hasten to assure the minister that it is not from any want of confidence in the present grain commission that we have been prompted to raise this discussion this afternoon, because we have every confidence in them. We are afraid, however, that they might be handicapped by a lack of sufficient staff properly to provide for the taking in and putting out of the wheat.

Mr. STEVENS: I wish to make this abundantly clear: there is not the slightest disposition on the part of the government to place any handicaps on the Board of Grain Commissioners. I assure the committee I shall give the board loyal support in the administration of their difficult task, and the hon. member may rest assured that there will be nothing in the nature of any handicap.

Mr. McINTOSH: May I ask the minister, after the reading of that last report from Mr. Ramsay, the chairman of the board, whether he has had actual conferences with the head of the board with regard to the administration of the act. What I mean is this. The act has been revised; that statement of fact has been made this afternoon. We have an item, short by about a fifth of a million, for the administration of the act during the coming year, and although we have the utmost confidence in the chairman and members of the board in regard to the work of the board, the thought has just occurred to me that by getting closer and closer to the chairman, and, with him, going into all matters pertaining to his administration, perhaps the minister could come to a conclusion as to whether the act will, under a large or a small crop, be as efficiently administered as it should be.

Mr. STEVENS: I am glad my hon. friend has asked the question. I have had several brief conferences with the board. I met them in Winnipeg on two occasions and I have met members of the board here, and, as the hon. member knows, Dr. MacGibbon, one of the members, was overseas with us as expert adviser on grain matters. He was with me for two and a half months. I think, therefore, I am in a position to speak very definitely, and I would say this. The chairman and his board are quite confident that the act as amended can be administered satisfactorily. I must make this reservation, however, that neither they nor anyone else can say definitely what the results will be until they make their final report at the end of the first crop year. But we expect that that report will disclose that the administration of the new act, with the changes brought about, has been beneficial. That is as far, I think, as I am warranted in going.

Mr. McINTOSH: I thank the minister for his statement. I believe that, receiving report after report from the board, and keeping in contact with them closely in a personal way, if there is any difficulty, the combined efforts will soon remove it.

Mr. COOTE: Is the construction of the new elevator at Lethbridge being proceeded with, and is provision being made therein for the establishment of a seed-cleaning plant?

Mr. STEVENS: The construction of the elevator at Lethbridge is being proceeded with under contract as provided for. There is at present no provision for the establishment of a seed-cleaning plant at that elevator. The elevator has provision for cleaning apparatus—at least space for the installation of such apparatus. We are of the opinion, and I think the board agree with us, that it is better to keep these seed-cleaning plants—that is, plants for the cleaning of certified seed—separate from the ordinary elevator service.

Mr. COOTE: Is that new elevator under the board?

Mr. STEVENS: It is under the railway department.

Mr. COOTE: Has the board any inspectors at that elevator?

Mr. STEVENS: At present, I understand not. The question of inspection outward in the east is, I believe, being dealt with now by the Board of Grain Commissioners.

Mr. COOTE: They have some inspectors at Montreal?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: Have they any at Prescott?

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Do the assistant Commissioners appear to be performing a good service through personal contact—that is to say, instead of going direct to the board, having the interested parties submit their difficulties to the assistant?

Mr. STEVENS: The other day I received a memorandum or letter with reference to that question. I have not got it under my hand. It was not an official report, but as I recall it, it is satisfactory.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We hear no complaints now at all.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. COOTE: Is there an appropriation this year for continuing the work of the grain research laboratory?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes; it is included in this vote.

Mr. VALLANCE: I have here a voluminous and important letter which the minister has very courteously handed to me. I do not wish to read it to the house, but I should be glad, Mr. Chairman, if you would call it six o'clock so that I might have an opportunity to study the letter between now and eight o'clock, when I shall ask for permission to have it inserted in Hansard. It would do a service to the minister in clearing the matter up and would also be serviceable to a good many western members who are interested in the question.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

FORGING OF TRADE MARKS—SALE OF GOODS FALSELY MARKED

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto) moved the second reading of Bill No. 34, to amend the criminal code (trade marks).

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, this bill contains three sections and it is out of order in every one of them. This is the same point which I raised unsuccessfully the other evening, but since then I have had an opportunity to look into the matter and I am now fortified with data as to when and under what circumstances this rule was introduced. I am also buttressed by precedent and I am further emboldened by the fact that I have in print the considered opinions of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) and the former minister (Mr. Lapointe) in support of the point I now raise.

Subject to the indulgence of your honour and to the good nature of the house, I will not deal as fully with this matter as the strength of my case and the quantity of my authorities would justify, but will state briefly my views on this matter, and if necessary ask permission to say a few words later on. I claim that this bill is out of order under standing order No. 70, which reads:

> No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Under that standing order I find the following footnote:

> If the Speaker finds that the bill is in blank or in an imperfect shape, he will decline to put the question and will return the bill to the member who must take another opportunity of bringing it up in conformity with the rules.

That is what should have been done with this bill on the first reading, and I submit that it should be now returned and dropped from the order paper. I find that these rules were passed in 1923 by a joint committee of both the Senate and the House of Commons. The report of the chairman of that committee, Mr. G. H. Boivin, appears in Votes and Proceedings of June 14, 1923. I will refer only to the pertinent part of that report. The chairman stated that the committee was appointed, first, to consider the forms of bills and the best means of affording information and assistance in the consideration thereof at all stages of legislation in both houses of parliament. The committee made certain recommendations, number three of which is as follows:

> When a clause repeals an existing section, subsection or other minor division of a section, that section, subsection or division, or so much thereof as is essential, shall be printed opposite the clause.

Recommendation number four was to the effect that in addition an explanatory note should be put in by the draftsman of the bill. At page 4007 of Hansard of June 18, 1923, we find Mr. Boivin, the chairman, moving the concurrence of the report of this committee He said:

> The first matter referred to the committee was the form of bills and the best means of affording information and assistance in the consideration thereof at all stages of legislation in both houses of parliament.

And later on he said:

> The committee unanimously considered that, if it were possible to print on the opposite pages of the bill, the full section or subsection which it is desired to amend, showing in brackets or in italics the changes to be made, and also to print in a parallel column the section or subsection as amended, it would be a great time-saver and would avoid the necessity of many members asking the minister in charge of the bill: What is the present form of the section?—What is the nature of the change?—Why is the change being made?—and a great many questions which are very essential to a proper understanding of the bill, but which could be dispensed with if all this information were included in the bill when it was presented to the house.

That is the reason the committee made that recommendation. Further on, Mr. Boivin said:

> —the finding of the committee in all these respects was absolutely unanimous.

Then the motion was adopted unanimously by the house. At page 348 of Beauchesne there is repeated almost word for word and letter for letter the recommendation of this committee on the occasion to which I have alluded. It is natural to suppose that Mr. Beauchesne put the rules in just as he found them. This edition of Beauchesne was revised in 1927, so that brings us down to date. Rule 3 on this particular page of Beauchesne reads as follows:

When a clause repeals an existing section, subsection or other minor division of a section, that section, subsection or division, or so much thereof as is essential, shall be printed opposite the clause.

Sections 1 and 3 of the bill before us break that rule. Rule 1 on the same page of Beauchesne states that when a clause is amended it must not be amended by adding or taking out a few words, but that the whole section must be struck out and replaced with the new section, thus indicating clearly what the intention is. Section 3 of the bill before us breaks that rule. That leaves only the preamble and the title, to which I have no objection.

We come now to precedent, so beloved, and perhaps properly so, by this house. Since 1924 that rule has been adhered to rigidly on each and every occasion. I have before me some of the acts passed from year to year and I will indicate one or two. A bill was sponsored in 1924 by General Clark, a well known lawyer. The next bill I have before me was sponsored by the senior member for Ottawa, a well known and capable lawyer. Then going into the Senate, I find a bill sponsored by Senator White, and, by the way, that bill was an amendment to the criminal code just as the bill now before the house is, so there is an exact parallel. I find another sponsored by Mr. Ladner, a well known lawyer from the west. All these hon. members, able lawyers in their different spheres, found it advisable to comply with the rules.

The other day the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), addressing the Minister of Justice, said:

I desire to refer my hon. friend to the rule. It will be found at page 348 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. It was adopted on June 14, 1923.

That is the exact date to which I have alluded. He continued:

Not only should there be an explanatory note, but the whole section should be printed as amended by the bill which is being considered, and then the new words inserted must be put within brackets. This rule is peremptory, and it is a great help to members of the house in considering a bill.

That was the same language as employed by Mr. Boivin in introducing the report of the committee. Then the hon. Minister of Justice replied:

I was quite aware of the rule, Mr. Chairman. I noticed the omission but this proposed subsection 2 is all new.

Mr. Lapointe: But I think the printing of the whole section would have helped members to understand the change.

Mr. Guthrie: I am sorry for the omission and will bring it to the attention of the official in charge of these matters.

Both the present and former ministers of justice were in hearty accord with this method of procedure. In view of this brief summary of the rules and the law which governs this subject—I might say I am supported both by the law and by the prophets—I submit this bill should be dropped and the hon. member should introduce it again in the regular way.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) upon his research work, and, if I may be permitted, take up one by one the the points to which he has referred. Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, at page 348, subsection 1, reads as follows:

In the preparation of bills amending existing enactments the amendments shall not ordinarily be made by clauses which add or leave out words or substitute words for others, but by clauses which reenact the section, subsection or other minor division, as it is amended.

I submit that in regard to both section 1 and section 2 of this bill, that is exactly what has been done. The essential words of the second paragraph, on page 348, are as follows:

Opposite each clause, on the right hand page, the enactment amended thereby, or so much thereof as is essential, shall be printed with the proposed changes to be made therein similarly indicated.

I think that instead of that rule being mandatory, so far as your honour is concerned, it is entirely discretionary, and it is within the discretion of your honour to conclude that the explanatory notes sufficiently indicate the proposed changes to be made by sections 1 and 2 of the bill.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): I wish to support the contention made by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). This bill, although it amends the criminal code, happens to deal with trade marks, and that is perhaps my excuse for rising.

In connection with this bill I think that both the rules and the custom have been very strictly followed. We took occasion the other day to bring to the attention of the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) and later of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) the omission of notes in regard to certain bills introduced by the government; but then there were no notes at all, not the least trace of them, and I thought we were quite in order in doing so. But in this case, Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre has pointed out, in sections one and two of this bill the old sections are reprinted and the new words are underlined to show what is being added to the sections. The old sections, however, are right there in the bill and you can read them by omitting what is underlined. In section 3 of this bill the old section is reproduced in the explanatory notes. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, not only do I for once disagree with my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), but I wish to congratulate the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) upon having introduced his bill in perfect order. I think we should proceed with the second reading of the bill.

Mr. GEARY: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre and the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) with the ordinary common sense that characterizes them, have exactly placed the position before the house. I do not believe that were I to try ever so hard I could succeed in satisfying my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni. I must congratulate him on the assiduity with which he has sought for flaws in my unfortunate bill. I do not think there is anything I need add to what has been already said except that the case is amply covered by the rule. If one looks at standing order 70 one will see that it says that a bill may be introduced either in blank or in imperfect shape.

Mr. NEILL: It says that no bill may be introduced in that state.

Mr. GEARY: If my hon. friend were so anxious about the merits of the bill or anxious for some reason or other to get it out of the house, he should have been seized with the importance of his objections when the bill was being introduced. It has been introduced and has had its first reading, and the objection was not taken. Even that defect, if there be one, has been cured. Beauchesne, at page 348, says that when a clause repeals an existing section, the section repealed or so much of it as is essential shall be printed opposite the clause. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and to hon. members that the objection taken by my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni has no merit whatsoever. It is not one that I think should weigh with this house, not being desirous of proceeding upon the merest technicalities, but desirous of proceeding with the ordinary common sense interpretation of the rules which my hon. friends from Vancouver Centre and St. James have made. Their contention, I submit, are sufficient to dispose of the objections which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has made to this house.

Mr. NEILL: May I deal for a moment, Mr. Speaker, with the objections raised by my friends to my right? They take an entirely superficial view, such as they have gained by glancing at the bill while I was speaking, and without the slightest investigation into the rules and their implications. That is all that is wrong with them.

Mr. RINFRET: I cannot admit that. I wish to remind my hon. friend that as minister in the former government I was dealing with trade marks, and I gave all my attention to this bill. I again say that it has been so well prepared as to make it easy for any hon. member to understand what is meant by the bill. I cannot accept the statement of my hon. friend that I have taken but a superficial view of the bill. I have studied it and was ready to proceed to study it further in committee with its sponsor.

Mr. NEILL: I am sorry to hear that, Mr. Speaker, because it makes a sad reflection on my hon. friend's intelligence. This is what I want to point out.

Mr. GEARY: Since we are on points of order and technicalities, I feel obliged to take one mystelf, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has already spoken on the point of order, and he cannot speak again.

Mr. NEILL: Then I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre did not state the case correctly, and I place myself in the hands of the house that I did not take up much time before. I could have dealt with this for hours, but I saved the time of the house, and perhaps the house will now give me the privilege of rebutting this particular argument. I will not say a word about the hon. gentleman who introduced this bill.

Mr. GEARY: Say all you like.

Mr. NEILL: There is no need to say anything because he said nothing requiring an answer. This bill has three sections. Sections 1 and 2 are wrong in one regard, and section 3 is wrong in another regard, and my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre plays the two against each other. He points to section

3 and says, "There, it is right on that point." I admit that. Then he points to sections 1 and 2 and says, "They are right on that point." There were two points, Mr. Speaker, on which it was possible to go wrong, and the framer of the bill went wrong in sections 1 and 2 on one point, and went wrong in section 3 on the other point. Let me illustrate. If you will turn to section 3 of the bill you will see that it reads like this:

Section four hundred and eighty-nine of the said bill is amended by striking out the first seven lines thereof and substituting therefor the following:

That section is out of order because rule 1 on page 348 of Beauchesne says that amendments shall not be made by clauses which add or leave out words, but by clauses which re-enact the section. Section 3, does not re-enact the section. They have stricken out seven lines. How do I know what was contained in those seven lines? How does anyone know? Was it not the very purpose of the rule that the whole of the new section should be printed in order that a man might grasp what was intended? It is in that regard that section 3 transgresses the rule. It does not transgress rule 3 of page 348, which requires the section stricken out to be printed on the opposite page; but sections 1 and 2 do transgress that rule. They put the new section in but they do not put the old section in, and they are wrong in that respect, although they are not wrong as regards rule 3. It is all very well to talk about a common sense interpretation, but either the rules are going to be obeyed in this house or they are not, and this particular rule was framed with the full concurrence of the house in order to make it easier for hon. members to understand the different bills as they come up for consideration. If we are going to abrogate the rule, very well; let us have a new set of rules; but as long as these are the rules, they should be obeyed alike by the rich lawyer and the humblest member of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: With respect to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), on a recent occasion when Bill No. 35 was before the house he raised practically the same objection which he has raised to-night. I was of the opinion then that the objection was not sufficiently well-founded to prevent the house dealing with the bill, and it went off the order paper for another reason. If that bill is to be restored to the order paper, I would say now that the hon. member sponsoring it should confer with the law clerk of the house before reintroducing it. Although standing order 70 does not appear to apply at this time, yet rule No. 3 as it appears and has been quoted at page 348 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms has not been complied with in the preparation of the bill now before the house. Consideration of the bill would be more intelligible if the sections repealed were printed on the right hand page, as directed by rule No. 3. As the objection is seriously raised I am inclined to sustain it, and I would suggest to the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary), who has charge of the bill, that he would be well advised to allow it to stand and to confer with the law clerk before proceeding further with it.

Mr. GEARY: This bill has already been through the hands of the law clerk.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think it should be returned to him for more careful consideration.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Stand.

Motion stands.

DAIRY INDUSTRY ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE INCREASED PENALTIES FOR VIOLATION

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gobeil for the second reading of Bill No. 16, to amend the Dairy Industry Act.

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton): At nine o'clock the other night I was reading section 5 of the Dairy Industry Act, chapter 45 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927. For the information of the house may I say that I had finished the reading of section (c). At this time I shall repeat that section:

(c) melt, clarify, refine, rechurn, or otherwise treat butter to produce "process" or "renovated" butter;

(d) manufacture, import into Canada, or sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale, any milk or cream or substitute therefor which contains any fat or oil other than that of milk;

(e) have upon premises occupied by him where any dairy produce is treated, manipulated, manufactured, or reworked, any substance that might be used for the adulteration of any such product and the presence upon any such premises of any fat or oil capable of being used for such adulteration shall be prima facie proof of intent so to use it.

This bill does not change the law in any way. It is brought forward merely to increase the penalties. Some hon. members may ask: Why change it this year? My reason, Mr. Speaker, is that in the last couple of years the adulteration of butter has increased on a tremendous scale.

Mr. POWER: It will not pay to adulterate it now, will it?

Mr. GOBEIL: Yes, I am afraid it will. The other night I think I said that the particular kind of adulteration I had in mind when proposing the bill was the addition of cocoa-nut oil to the butter. My impression was that 20 per cent was the limit which could be mixed with butter. I have in my hand however a newspaper called Le Bulletin des Agriculteurs, wherein it is stated that as much as 40 per cent of cocoa-nut oil is added to butter and that chemists would be required to find the adulteration when the butter had been reworked. I do not believe any hon. member will seriously oppose the bill, for the reason that I seek only protection for the producer of butter. I seek to protect the quality of our dairy product, and also to protect the consumer.

To demonstrate to the house that this adulteration has been going on, may I point out that the Dairymen's Association of the Province of Quebec, composed of farmers, butter makers, cheese makers, cheese inspectors, butter inspectors and men in the dairy trade generally, at their last convention held at Mont Laurier on October 15, 1930, passed the following resolution:

> Moved by Mr. J.-N. Dumoulin,
> Seconded by Mr. F.-X.-O. Trudel.
> Resolved unanimously:—
> That the directors of the Dairymen's Association of the province of Quebec, at a general meeting of the congress of the association held at Mont Laurier, on October 15, 1930, beg to submit to the Honourable Robert Weir, Minister of Agriculture, at Ottawa, their humble petition as follows:
> Whereas the manufacture of adultered butter seems to spread throughout Canada, it would be expedient to amend the Dairy Industry Act of Canada so as to increase the penalty already provided by statute against the manufacturers of adultered butter, from $200 to $1,000 for the first offence; to $1,000 and the seizure of the implements used in that connection for the second offence; and to imprisonment for the third offence.
> That the directors hope that the Honourable Minister of Agriculture will kindly give this resolution, which is felt necessary, they believe, owing to the spread of trade in adultered butter, his most serious consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have anything more to add. This resolution, coming from a body such as the Dairymen's Association of the province of Quebec, will bear more weight than anything I could add.

Mr. CAYLEY: What amount of this adulteration is being done in Canada, and where is it being done? I understood the old act provided penalties for such an offence. Is the adulteration being done in creameries?

[Mr. Gobeil.]

Mr. GOBEIL: I am sorry, but I did not understand the hon. member's question.

Mr. CAYLEY: Have there been any convictions for this offence?

Mr. GOBEIL: Yes.

Mr. BOYES: I wish to make a few remarks—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GOBEIL: I believe the hon. member asked whether adulteration had been practised, and to what extent.

Mr. CAYLEY: Yes.

Mr. GOBEIL: I do not know in how many different places adulteration has been practised, but I know that it has occurred on a large scale in the city of Montreal. No one could guess to what extent the practice has been carried on.

Mr. CAYLEY: Is it being practised in the creameries where butter is manufactured?

Mr. GOBEIL: I do not think it is being done in the creameries at all. I do not know of any creamery operator who has been convicted.

Mr. CAYLEY: Perhaps it is—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The question before the house is a motion for the second reading of the bill. If there are to be questions and answers and a general discussion of the bill, why not go into committee and have such discussion at that time?

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not understand that the hon. member who had introduced the bill had finished his speech. I thought he had resumed his seat merely to allow a question.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He was questioned and requestioned.

Mr. OSCAR L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I do not with to oppose the second reading of this bill. I really think that the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) in moving this bill, was actuated by the very best intentions: that of improving the quality of butter produced by Canadian farmers and maintaining it on a high standard. I simply rise to point out to the hon. member for Compton a flaw in his bill which might prove dangerous. In principle, I do not approve fixing a minimum penalty and I note that in the measure under discussion, the minimum penalty is fixed at $500 for the first infraction to the act. My views are that we should allow more discretion to the magistrates who have charge of the application of the act. So many phases surround such an infraction that we should give more latitude to magistrates, especially as regards a first offence. I notice that the act considers as adulterated butter that which contains more than 16 per cent water. Take, for instance, the case of a farmer who brings to the market butter containing more than the proportion of water stipulated by the act. It might so happen that this farmer, in very good faith and with no intention whatsoever of deceiving the public or violating the law by adulterating his butter, places on the market a product containing more than 16 per cent water. This man is arrested for having sold one pound of adulterated butter, pursuant to the act. He is brought before a magistrate and for this first offence—one committed in good faith—the magistrate has no alternative but to impose a fine of $500 on this innocent farmer who is selling his butter at 20 cents a pound. Truly, I think that the hon. member should further consider the question and allow a certain discretion or latitude to the magistrate, at least when it is a matter of a first offence. As to the principle of the bill. I have no comments to make. My views agree with those of the hon. member and I think he is quite right in trying to improve the quality of butter and prevent adulteration. I am in favour of the principle of the bill, however I wish to point out that the minimum penalty is too drastic for a first infraction.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, I desire to support the stand taken by my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger). It appears to me that throughout our statutes we have been altogether too liberal in providing for very heavy pains and penalties for offences which may perhaps be somewhat serious, but which do not strike the average layman as being so serious as to warrant the fines and penalties that we are imposing.

Mr. GOBEIL: If I might say a word, I think it would clear up the question. The hon. member for Bellechasse, I thought—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member cannot make a speech now.

Mr. POWER: The point made by the hon. member for Bellechasse is that it is sought to impose a minimum fine of $500 for a first offence and $1,000 for a second offence—and after all what is the crime? The crime is that mentioned in paragraph 7 of the Dairy Industry Act:

> No person shall manufacture, import into Canada, sell, offer, or have in his possession for sale, any cheese which contains any fat or oil other than that of milk or cream.

There is another enumeration in paragraph 5 of the same statute. That is to say, a person found with cheese containing fat other than that of milk or cream renders himself liable to these penalties. I do not know much about the cheese industry, but it is quite conceivable that somebody might, by accident, import or have in his possession cheese which does not come up to these specifications, and if proceedings were taken against him the magistrate on conviction would have to impose a penalty of at least $500. It seems to me that this excessive penalty defeats the very object that the hon. member has in view in presenting the legislation. It has been found, I think, by those of us who have had any practice before the courts that it is difficult to secure a conviction for what appears to the judge to be a not very serious offence when conviction means the imposition of a heavy penalty. I submit to my hon. friend that he is not advancing the cause of which he is so distinguished an advocate by proposing these increased penalties.

Mr. FRANK BOYES (East Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I desire to support this bill. The dairy industry is engaged in to a great extent throughout Ontario and Quebec, and to some extent throughout the other provinces. In my opinion this industry should be encouraged in every way possible. Let me draw to the attention of the house certain convictions for violations of the Dairy Industry Act. I will not give the names of the convicted persons, but merely state the fines imposed. These convictions were for having in possession for sale or selling butter manufactured wholly or in part of fat other than that of milk or cream. In the first case the fines imposed were $200 in 1926, $200 in 1929 and $200 in 1930; in the second case, $400 in 1927, $500 in 1928, and on a third conviction in 1930 the culprit was imprisoned for one month at hard labour; in the third case the fines imposed were $200 in 1927, $200 in 1928, $500 in 1929, in each case with costs; in the fourth case, $200 in 1927, $200 in 1928, $200 on two occasions in 1929, and $200 in 1930; in the fifth case, $200 in 1930. These cases show that a fine of $200 if not a sufficient deterrent. I repeat, the dairy industry should have every encouragement possible, and therefore I am fully in accord with this amending legislation in that I believe that the heavier fines therein proposed would tend to discourage these repeated infractions of the law.

Mr. F. H. PICKEL (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I intend to support the bill. It is not the creamery man who has been guilty of this adulteration, it is the large factories. They import cocoanut and cottonseed oil at a cost of 10 or 12 cents a pound, and they are using about 40 per cent of it in adulterating their butter. I notice in the Montreal Gazette towards end of April that such a firm was fined $200 and costs for adulterating butter. What does that firm care for a fine of $200? They will make it up in one churning and go ahead and repeat the offence. The purpose of the law is to prevent adulteration, and to effect this purpose the penalties should be increased as proposed by the bill.

Mr. T. M. CAYLEY (South Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am quite aware of the benefit of this amendment to the dairy farmers of Canada, and I think they should have all the protection in this respect that we can possibly give. I have here the number of informations and convictions that have been obtained during the years 1928, 1929 and 1930. In 1928 there were 100; in 1929 there were 134 and in 1930 there were 122. By provinces, they were as follows:

	Informations laid	Convictions	Informations laid	Convictions	Informations laid	Convictions
	1928		1929		1930
P. E. Island	—	—	1	1	—	—
New Brunswick	—	—	1	1	—	—
Nova Scotia	—	—	1	1	—	—
Quebec	87	84	103	102	96	92
Ontario	11	10	27	27	26	26
Saskatchewan	—	—	1	1	—	—
British Columbia	1	1	1	1	—	—

In British Columbia in 1929 there was one individual who was unable to pay his fine and who was sent to prison in lieu thereof. It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that there are certain interests or certain individuals in this country who are interested in making money out of the farmers' product by adulteration, and therefore as representing the dairy interests of the county of Oxford I am heartily in accord with the spirit and the amendment of this bill.

Mr. ARTHUR DENIS (St. Denis) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil), for introducing this bill. For a number of years past, farmers have had to contend with an illegal competition as regards butter, not only in Quebec but throughout the country. A number of manufacturers and dealers adulterate this product so as to control the market price. The hon. member is further to be congratulated for his solicitude towards the farming classes because if there is a member on the government side who endeavours to help these people, it is certainly the member for Compton. Heretofore the government has made no move to assist the farmer.

The hon. member for Compton is quite right in wishing to increase the penalties against those who adulterate butter. It is of a daily occurrence in this country, and it must at all cost be stopped by increasing the penalties. I heartily support the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) and hope that his bill will receive the approval of this house.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I just wish to say a word in regard to this bill. I think all members are agreed as to the desirability of trying to effect what the mover of this bill has in mind in the measure he proposes. I also agree very heartily with the remarks of the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) in regard to the possible deleterious effect of the very high penalties imposed under the bill. It seems to me that the house as a whole has not had sufficient time to give full consideration to the facts concerning this measure. The motion before the house is that the bill be now read a second time, and in amendment thereto I beg to move that it be referred to the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization with instructions to investigate the bill and report back to the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: The amendment is not in order until after the second reading.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is of sufficient importance to be read a second time and referred to the committee, as proposed by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). There is a great deal to be considered in regard to this question. We realize we have two acts which apply to butter, milk, cheese and all foods. One is known as the Food and Drugs Act, while the other is known as the Dairy Industry Act, and sometimes it is rather a nice question to decide under which of these acts a prosecution should be launched. The penalties under the Food and Drugs Act are not nearly so severe as the penalties under the Dairy Industry Act, and I believe it has frequently happened that prosecutions which should have been taken under the Dairy Industry Act for some reason or other have been taken under the Food and Drugs Act, so that the penalty imposed in a great many cases has been only $20. I think the matter is of sufficient importance to be thoroughly discussed. If an anomaly exists by all means let us remedy it, or if the penalties are not sufficiently severe we can increase them. Therefore I should like to see the bill get second reading and be referred to the committee, as suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre.

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough): Before the bill gets second reading, it seems to me that as this is a very important matter affecting the public health, we should have some statement from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) with regard to the bill. As the minister in charge of agriculture he should be able to give us some information before we decide whether we should allow it to go to committee or kill it here instead.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Having regard to the importance of this bill, I would be in favour of seeing it go to the committee to be fully discussed.

Mr. GOBEIL: May I be permitted to offer a word of explanation?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has the right to reply.

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton): In answer to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger), and the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), while I am not a lawyer I consulted the law officers of the house and they told me that this does not apply at all to butter which contains over 16 per cent of water when it comes from the manufacturer. Subsection (a) of section 5 reads:

> No person shall manufacture, import into Canada, or offer, sell or have in his possession for sale, any oleomargarine, margarine, butterine, or other substitute for butter, manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than that of milk or cream.

Subsection (b) of section 5 is the important section:

> (b) No person shall mix with or incorporate with butter, by any process of heating, soaking, rechurning, reworking or otherwise, any cream, milk, skimmed-milk, buttermilk or water to cause such butter when so treated to contain over sixteen per centum of water or less than eighty per centum of milk fat.

Mr. BOURASSA: Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree to the second reading of the bill, because on its face—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member who moved the second reading of the bill having spoken in reply, and as it was obvious to the house that he was doing so, the debate must be considered closed.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. While the rules are in a degree new to me, I understand that when an hon. member moves a substantive motion he has the right to reply. Does that apply to a motion for the second reading of a bill? My impression is that it does not. If that is so, I submit, sir, that it was not permissible for the mover of the motion for second reading to address the house a second time. I submit that the debate is not concluded and therefore the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is in order in speaking.

Mr. BOURASSA: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the rule which you have just invoked applies to a substantive motion; but I have never known it to be applied in the case of the second reading of any bill.

Mr. STEVENS: Always.

Mr. BOURASSA: Technically there was no reply, for the hon. member who moved the second reading of the bill was not in order when he spoke the second time. That, I respectfully submit, was where the rule was broken.

Mr. COOTE: We certainly understood at this end of the chamber that the mover was speaking only on the sufferance of the house. According to the rule he had no right to speak a second time.

Mr. BOURASSA: There is no reply on the second reading of a bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: A motion that a bill be read the second time is, I take it, a substantive motion, which is open to amendment.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): With deference, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BOURASSA: Besides, there was an amendment before the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: There appears to be a general misunderstanding as to the mover having spoken in conclusion of the debate, and inasmuch as other hon. members evidently wish to speak, the house might, I think, consent to a further consideration of the matter.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that too frequently parliament enacts penalties which are altogether out of proportion to the offences which those penalties are designed to restrain. The objection made by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) is absolutely well taken, and I believe the object of the bill is in danger of being defeated. I would point out that the law as it stands is being violated daily in the city of Montreal, precisely for this very reason, that the existing penalties are considered too severe. May I give the house the benefit of an inquiry which I have myself conducted on a small scale. So far as my constituency is concerned, I am interested in the dairy industry; but I have at heart also the interests of the people who consume butter in the city. In conversation with one of the largest butter dealers in Montreal a few weeks ago I obtained a series of documents for my private consideration. I asked my informant whether I might produce them in the house, but he declined to give his permission on the ground that this might hurt his business; but, he said, if an inquiry were ordered by parliament, he was prepared to come and testify. He gave me certificates of analyses of butter sold in Montreal by thousands of pounds—analyses made by independent chemists, men high in their profession, chemists associated with some of the most important institutions in Montreal. He had also analyses made by the official analyst. One analysis would represent a particular lot of butter as absolutely pure, while another analysis would report it to contain from 10 to 12 per cent of foreign matter, probably cocoanut oil. I asked him what the effect of this was. He said it was simple. Cocoanut oil costs 7 cents per pound, and butter was then selling at 35 cents. If, therefore, 10 per cent of one commodity selling at 7 cents went to the production of an article sold at 35 cents, one could readily see what the profit would be. I asked him how such a state of things could exist, and he replied that it was done on such a large scale, that there were so many people interested in it, that it had become almost impossible to secure from government officials certificates which would disclose the truth. I was informed that private detectives had been hired to go as consumers to the government analyst and ask to have analyses made of butter, and the reply would be, "Is is absolutely pure. We know the dealers and they are quite respectable people." Now, are these analysts deceived by the shippers of the butter, or is fraud to be imputed to them? I do not know. I do know, however, that the practice prevails on a very large scale in Montreal to-day; and before we increase the penalties and make them such as neither magistrates nor government analysts will be very much inclined to see imposed, I think it will be far better for us to inquire into the present conditions of the retail butter trade in the large centres to ascertain whether the fraud is perpetrated at the point where the butter is produced or is perpetrated by the traders in Montreal and other places. Many frauds are perpetrated in the drug business and others, and, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) has pointed out, the penalties are in such cases less severe. Before we proceed to give the bill its second reading I would impress upon the house the danger of enacting legislation which imposes penalties that are not likely to be applied for the reason that they are altogether unreasonable. It would be far better to have a strict and thorough application of the laws that now exist than to enact more rigorous penalties which will only tend to perpetuate the present system, which is injurious to the public as well as to the trade.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I can corroborate the remarks of my deskmate (Mr. Bourassa) as regards the futility of unduly severe punishment. I have been a petty magistrate for a number of years and, knowing what human nature is, I am aware of the disposition of the magistrates to give an accused the benefit of a very slight doubt rather than subject him to a severe penalty which common sense and human nature alike condemn. I represent a great many dairymen and I have much sympathy with the idea of putting a stop to any illicit trade in oleomargarine; but I believe that this bill would defeat its own ends. I might give an illustration from recent experience in British Columbia. For many years there has been the practice there of pit lamping. A man goes out with a miner's lamp strapped to his forehead, and in the dark the eyes of animals show up conspicuously. The man fires between the eyes and kills, supposedly, a deer. As a matter of fact, he very often kills somebody else's stock. One man got into his neighbour's herd and killed five of them before he discovered they were not deer. The practice led to so much killing of stock in this way, that the government made up its mind to put a stop to it, pretty much in the way this bill proposes to deal with the matter now under consideration. They enacted a penalty of 30 days in gaol without the alternative of a fine, increasing the penalty for second and third offences. The result was that the magistrates winked at all kinds of breaches of the law rather than send decent men to gaol. Recently the government, after fourteen or fifteen years' experience of this law, have abandoned it and gone back to the old system, leaving it in the power of the magistrate to impose reasonably severe money penalties and not to send people to gaol for a first offence. While in sympathy with the bill, I believe that a penalty which is out of proportion to the offence will only defeat the object in view.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for consideration of public bills having expired the house will now revert to committee of supply.

PRINCE AND PRINCESS TAKAMATSU

VISIT OF THEIR IMPERIAL HIGHNESSES TO CANADA—MESSAGE OF APPRECIATION FROM THE EMPEROR OF JAPAN

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we have recently entertained their Imperial Highnesses the Prince and Princess Takamatsu, I think the chamber would be interested in knowing that His Excellency the Governor General has received from the Japanese minister at Ottawa a cablegram from the Japanese foreign minister, reading:

The Emperor is highly gratified with the hospitality shown to the Prince and Princess Takamatsu by Their Excellencies the Governor General and Lady Bessborough, and with the cordial reception accorded to Their Imperial Highnesses by the government and people of Canada. I am commanded to authorize you to convey to His Excellency His Majesty's personal appreciation.

There is also a despatch from the Japanese minister in this city, expressing on behalf of our recent guests their deep appreciation of the hospitality extended them by the Canadian people.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) in the chair.

The Canada Grain Act, including management, operation, maintenance and equipment of elevators, administration of, $2,681,000.

Mr. VALLANCE: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock I was asking permission to place on Hansard without the reading thereof two letters to which I had referred. I find it almost impossible to accept that privilege from the committee because there are, I believe, members on both sides of the house who are very much interested in these letters; indeed, I do not believe an intelligent discussion could be carried on without a knowledge of their contents. The first letter, written by Mr. Robert Whiteside, to the former Minister of Trade and Commerce, Sir George Foster, dated at Dunblane, Saskatchewan, January 19, 1920, reads as follows:

As your humble servant I desire to seek information which will explain fully the motive our federal government had in undertaking to take over and sell the wheat crop for the year 1919. We fully understand the motive for selling the crop in 1917 and 1918, but one thing we don't know nor have we ever had any report on the same and that was what was the price the government got for the wheat that was exported in the year 1918. We know the growers received $2.26½ f.o.b. Fort William but did our government sell it for export on this basis to appear to be good fellows when the price of American wheat was $2.40 to $2.60 or did some one pocket the margins? Wheat and wheat products were the only foodstuffs the government controlled. We feel justified in demanding a report of the wheat that was exported and to get at plain facts regarding the 1919 crop. Every farmer in western Canada is under the impression that our federal government premeditated and entered into an agreement to handle the wheat crop to make gains for themselves at our expense. Note I said federal government; it may have been only members of our government, at any rate it has been reported quite frequently and in bold statements that the time the grain exchange was opened our government did sell or offer for sale some 50 million bushels wheat to Great Britain at a price of $1.75 per bushel and not until the market was open did your government make any attempt to handle the wheat, and we all know the market was advancing and to take control of the wheat when it was at a price of $2.45 and attempt to offer to set a price of $1.75 or even $2.15 does not appear to the farmers as one of good faith, and for the Canadian wheat board to sell to our millers at $2.30 per bushel in the face of prices prevailing on all other products points out quite clearly that our federal government is out to do what it has always done and that is give the farmers second place. While I admit we were under military rule and the government had the authority to so act, the manner in which they acted does not show one of good faith, and if the report is really true that our government did sell or offer for sale a certain portion of our wheat any price in the minds of all well thinking men can only come to this conclusion that our government premeditated their action knowing they had power to control things to suit themselves. I further wish to say in all friendliness the farmers of western Canada are determined to demand a report and make an investigation to learn the facts. We intend to outline our plans, decide on some action at our convention in Saskatoon in February and in writing this communication to you I do not overlook or underestimate the honour or high position you hold as a worthy member of our government. Neither do I go about finding fault or abusing our government while I know mistakes have been made and many wronged I have every confidence that the good citizens of this fair country will right the wrongs, develop the nation and restore prosperity. But the very fact that such reports have been circulated, which I hope are false, should prove to be true at this time will so lower our standard of government in the eyes of other nations and so upset the faith of our own people that it will be hard to describe the result when it is brought to light. Now the questions I desire an answer to are:

What was the price our government sold the wheat crop of 1918 for that is the wheat that was exported. Next did our federal government or members of our government sell or offer to sell fifty or seventy-five millions of bushels of our wheat crop of 1919 to the British government at $1.75 before they had made the final arrangements to market the wheat? I trust you will favour me with this information and hope it will be possible to receive a reply before the date of our convention February 10.

Some definite questions were asked of the then Minister of Trade and Commerce. Between the hours of six and eight o'clock I have gone through the correspondence but have failed to find that an answer was made to these questions. There is a suspicion in the minds of the farmers of western Canada that there is hanging over from the 1917 and 1918 crop sales a large sum of money which has never been accounted for to the farmers of western Canada. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) crossed the floor of the chamber at eight o'clock and asked to be given an opportunity to look at the letters. As I said before, it would be almost impossible to discuss the question without a knowledge of these letters, and with the indulgence of the committee I will read the letter of Sir George Foster to Mr. Whiteside, dated January 27, 1920. It is as follows:

I have read your letter of the 19th. I am not, I suppose personally acquainted with you but take you to be an honest-minded, well-intentioned, intelligent man who seems to be troubled as to rumours and reports which reach him, from what sources I do not know, and which cause him doubts as to the actions and honesty of the federal government in this instance.

It would be a very long letter which would give you a full explanation of why the government in 1917 and 1919, took over the selling of the wheat crop. That, however, does not appear to cause you much trouble so far as the principle was concerned, but you have difficulty in understanding why a similar course was adopted in 1919.

[Mr. Vallance.]

The committee will note he is dealing with the 1917-18 crop, and makes no further reference to the disposition made of it or the price received for it. The letter continues:

In short the course adopted in 1919 was based upon the reasons which made government purchase necessary in 1917 and 1918. Although the war had stopped with the signing of the armistice, unfortunately the conditions caused by the war continued in an even more aggravated form. Under these conditions, as operating in foreign countries, the selling of our wheat crop for 1919 was rendered absolutely impossible owing to the financial and transport situation. Farmers, of whom I imagine you are one, should be pretty well satisfied as to the necessity for this inasmuch as it was demanded and has been consistently supported since the formation of the Canadian wheat board by the farmers of Canada as represented by the Canadian Council of Agriculture. As I stated above, to give you all the reasons would make my letter altogether too long and would probably not appeal to you in any stronger manner than the fact, which I have just mentioned to you, as to the opinion and wish of the associated farmers of Canada, themselves.

Now, as to the second part of your question, how much was received per bushel for the wheat sold, and did anyone pocket the money, and especially did the government or any of its members appropriate to themselves any part of the proceeds of the sale, from the tone of your letter I do not think you, yourself, really believe that that has been done, but you are disturbed by what other people say. I do not know whether or not you will take my word for it, but whether you do or not, I can assure you it would have been impossible for a member of the government or the government itself to have appropriated a single dollar of the proceeds of the wheat sales of 1917 and 1918 to their own purposes.

A board was established consisting of representatives of the different interests concerned—producing, milling, transport and the consuming interests. That board works without pay, being simply given a certain per diem allowance for expenses that they were called to meet in Winnipeg for consultation. The wheat was sold during the season of 1917 and 1918, as purchasers were found and, of course, for different prices owing to changes in the world's market price. As careful calculation as possible was made as to the expenses of storage, insurance and such necessary expenses which must be incurred in the storing, marketing and carrying of wheat. The government stood to lose any deficit in price received from that paid to the growers of the grain. In the end, after all expenses were paid, and the accounts closed a small surplus remained in the hands of the board of grain supervisors, the body that was established to conduct the buying and the selling of wheat. That surplus has been turned over to the consolidated revenues of Canada, on which no minister or anyone else can get his grip. It is safe in the banks to the credit of the Dominion of Canada and can only be chequed out for legal authorized expenditures. It was fortunate, during the course of these two years' operation that the government was able to give the farmers the price that was given and avoid any loss in the transaction. If the markets had turned a little different.

while the farmer would have received his price, the country as represented by the government would have had to pay the deficit. Now as to the year just passed, 1919, the Canadian Wheat Board was established with the same interests represented thereon. This board also is in the main giving its services to the country freely and without pay. Of course, clerks, etc., and managers have to be paid for the work they do but that has to be done whether the marketing is done by the government or private traders, as you quite well understand. The farmers receive a stated amount as a first payment upon their wheat. This, of course, they receive whether the market price goes up or goes down. As in the case of the two preceding years the government, if the price goes down, will be liable for the deficit. If the price maintains its level or advances, the government nor any member thereof receive nothing of that amount. After the expenses of marketing are paid. if there is any surplus—

Now, mark this:

—as I believe there will be, this is divided amongst the farmers who were the original sellers of the grain. That is, under the arrangement, the farmer gets all that the world's market price makes possible. He gets a first payment on his wheat on the basis of $2.15 No. 1 Northern and gets his proportion of the surplus which may be left at the end of the transaction.

I think this may explain to you the query raised in a part of your letter. You state that every farmer in western Canada is under the impression that our federal government premeditated and entered into an agreement to handle the wheat crop to make gains for themselves at your expense. Now, as a sensible man, do you really believe that? Note what I have stated to you as the recommendation and claim made by the Council of Agriculture representing the farmers of the Dominion. Therefore, "every farmer" is too strong, and you will certainly have to modify that, and I am not going to take up my time or yours in controverting a statement of that kind. I do not think you really believe it. It is impossible that such should be the case, and it is contrary, of course, to the fact.

You also make another statement as current, whether you pledge yourself to its belief or not, namely, that at the time the grain exchange was opened the government did sell or offer for sale fifty million bushels of wheat to Great Britain at $1.75 per bushel, to be paid to the farmers for their grain, and then took charge of the market when the price was at $2.40 or thereabouts with a view of appropriating to their own uses the difference between that price and the market price of wheat.

There is not a word of truth in that statement. The government did not sell a bushel of the farmers' grain in 1919. All has been sold by the wheat board under the conditions that I have explained above, and all that is in it will go to the farmers less the necessary expenses of the operation.

Now, I have spent a lot of my time and taken up a lot of yours in trying to answer quite frankly, because I take it to be the letter of an honest man and it is, to me, passing strange, in the first place, that such absurd rumours could find currency amongst intelligent people, and secondly, that there are good, honest, intelligent people to take so much stock in them as to be troubled thereby.

If you were listening carefully, Mr. Chairman, you must have noted that there was no mention made of the price that was received for the 1917 and 1918 crops. The government paid at that time $2.21½ as an initial payment. Wheat on the world's market went from $2.40 to $2.60, and we were under the impression that the government was at that time delivering to the allied nations wheat at the price they were paying to the farmer. We find now to the contrary; and we would therefore ask the minister, if he is not in a position to do it to-night because of lack of information, to make a statement to the house at some future time giving a detailed account of the receipts and sales of both the 1917 and the 1918 crops. That accounting, to the best of my knowledge, has never been given to the farmers.

Regarding the 1919 crop, it will be noted that Sir George Foster makes mention of the fact that after the 1919 crop was sold if there were any moneys left they would be disbursed among the farmers who had delivered the wheat. The Minister of Trade and Commerce knows well that that has never been done. While we are not positive as to the amount of money that was left over from the sale of the 1919 crop, we know that some of that money has been applied in the interests of agricultural research work, but to my knowledge not a further cent has gone to the primary producer. I would ask the minister, to-night if possible, to clear those two points up, to give to the house and the country a statement regarding the sales and receipts of the 1917 and 1918 crops, and what moneys were left over, if any; and the same information with regard to the 1919 crop.

I would suggest to the minister that as this question seems to be of such vital importance, it should be referred to the committee on agriculture where we can examine witnesses who may have any information to give. This is a matter that has been hanging over since 1919. Some day we shall have to have a showdown, and the sooner we do it the better pleased I think the farmers will be.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend (Mr Vallance) has opened up a question which really finds its basis in a series of letters which were written by a gentleman named Robert Whiteside from the province of Saskatchewan in the year 1920, and which were answered most painstakingly I think, by the then Minister of Trade and Commerce, Sir George Foster. The letters really might be summarized in this way:

Mr. Whiteside retails to the minister complaints that he hears and suspicions that he himself and others entertain to the effect that in the handling of the wheat crop during the years 1917, 1918 and 1919 full value was not returned to the farmers of western Canada. So far as I have been able to see, he does not in his letters support either with evidence or facts his suspicions or the rumours he alleges. In the last letter to which my hon. friend from South Battleford has referred, Mr. Whiteside asks certain questions, and my hon. friend indicated that he did not think that Sir George Foster completely answered them. I think that a little further examination of the latter part of Sir George Foster's letter will clear up that point. If not, I can supplement it with one or two observations.

Let me say at once that I am not at all criticizing the hon. member for South Battleford for bringing this matter forward, because I think it is highly desirable that it should be cleared up. Whether or not there are any grounds for the allegations made or suspicions entertained, it is a very disagreeable thing to have such rumours running loose in the country. Mr. Whiteside asks:

> What was the price our government sold the wheat crop of 1918 for?

And another question:

> Did our federal government or members of our government sell or offer to sell 50,000,000 or 75,000,000 bushels of our wheat crop of 1919?

In regard to the first question I would say that Sir George Foster was not at the time in a position to give the details as to just what price the wheat was sold for. It is quite well known and accepted I think by practically everyone throughout western Canada that the wheat board—

Mr. VALLANCE: The wheat supervisors?

Mr. STEVENS: The board of grain supervisors under Doctor Magill, which consisted of representatives of the producers, the millers, the dealers and the consumers, discharged their functions honestly and well. I think it is generally accepted that this body of citizens discharged a public service and a public duty. If in the present day the house were to demand an audit of the transactions which took place in the years 1917 and 1918 I might as well say they would be asking for something which would be very very difficult to carry out. The making of that statement should not in the slightest degree detract from my other statement, namely that the board of grain supervisors at that time discharged its duties to the entire satisfaction of everybody.

Mr. Whiteside's letter implies that members of the government of the day sold 50,000,000 or 75,000,000 bushels of wheat on the grain exchange in Winnipeg and made a profit. That is the suggestion. Well, in answer to that I would say, if I may be allowed to use a rather strong expression, that the statement is absurd. My reason for saying that is that no member of the government handled a single bushel of wheat—not a single bushel—nor did the government as a whole do so. That wheat was handled by the wheat board, a properly organized body. Why was the wheat board appointed? The British government had a controlled market; they bought their wheat under government direction an control; there was not an open market. Canadian dealers could sell wheat to the British government only through some organized body.

Mr. VALLANCE: Did the British board buy all exports into that country at a fixed price from all sources, the same as they did from Canada, or did they fix the price at all?

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot answer that question categorically, but I will give my friend my best recollection. I make my statement subject to correction, because these things happened many years ago and personally I did not have anything to do with them. From time to time the British government would make a bargain or an arrangement for the purchase of wheat from other sources. I refer to Canada, Australia, United States and other wheat producing countries. The prices would be fixed. The wheat board, however, guaranteed to the wheat producer an initial price, adopting a plan similar to that which the pools have since followed. In this instance I think the price was $2.21 per bushel, if I recollect aright. That was the intial price given. Then a participating certificate was given to each person who sold wheat. It is true that a number, small in comparison with the whole, of those receiving participating certificates thought the certificates were worthless and destroyed them. Those who retained the certificates and presented them afterwards received a small dividend.

An hon. MEMBER: Forty-eight cents.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, a very substantial dividend. I thank my hon. friend for giving the amount, as it had escaped my memory. At any rate through ignorance or carelessness a few people destroyed their certificates and as a result those certificates were never redeemed. The result was that there was left in the hands of the board a sum which amounted to $467,000. Again I speak subject to correction.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That was in 1919?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, 1919.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: A little over $500,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Probably my hon. friend is right. Out of that sum an expenditure was made subsequently for seed relief, leaving in the treasury to-day, or in the consolidated fund, a sum of about $173,000. These figures I have given from memory. I think however it is obvious to all hon. members that to have attempted a subdivision of this sum amongst all the vendors of wheat would have been a useless task, because the division would have resulted in a unit so small in each case as to make it unnecessary and quite useless. That, I think, is the whole story.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister is referring only to the 1919 crop. There has been no reckoning of the 1917-18 crop. We know about the 1919 crop, and we agree with the statement made by the minister in that regard.

Mr. STEVENS: The statements in regard to the 1917 and 1918 crop, were presented by the board of grain supervisors. With the exception of this one instance I think they have never been called in question. Even now they are not called in question by allegation backed by any substantial statement or evidence but merely because of suspicion or rumour. I think my hon. friend from Melville (Mr. Motherwell) and other hon. members of the house who come from western Canada and who were active at that time in the matter of handling the grain crop will bear testimony to the efficiency and fairness with which the board of grain supervisors discharged their duty. I confess that while I recall taking a very great interest in the matter myself I do not not remember a single complaint regarding the administration of that board. I make that statement with force because in 1920 on the floor of the house I opposed the continuance of the wheat board. I merely mention that fact to show that I was not an advocate of the system and I gave it a great deal of study at that time. I do not recall any complaint however, and as I say if the complaint made by Mr. Whiteside were fortified with something of a tangible nature which would warrant our reopening the whole question fourteen years afterwards, I would not hesitate to say, reopen it. I submit to the house however that to embark at this time upon an exploration of those activities would be very unwise. The chairman of the board has passed into the great beyond, and I have no doubt that other members have also passed on. The officers and the staff have disappeared. To make an investigation would be an impossible task.

Mr. VALLANCE: Surely the facts are on record. There must be a record.

Mr. STEVENS: Reports have been made. I do not know, but I assume that records may be found somewhere. But surely those who have had to do with the question of grain certificates and the innumerable documents involved would shudder at the task of reopening the matter and conducting at this time an audit of that business.

Mr. VALLANCE: There is money at stake, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DONNELLY: What has been brought out to-night, Mr. Chairman, is a most wonderful thing to me, and I do not know anything else that has disturbed the minds of western Canada just as much as this has. There has never been a thought concerning the 1919 crop; we realized that all that was left over on the sale of that crop was returned to the farmers. I want the government and the Minister of Trade and Commerce to keep the 1919 crop absolutely distinct and separate from the 1917 and 1918 crops. The latter are the two crops that we are dealing with right now. You say there was no question in the minds of the farmers of western Canada concerning the handling of the 1917 and 1918 crops. I grant you that, because there was never in the minds of the farmers of western Canada any question but what this wheat was being handed over to the allies in England at a price of $2.21. We thought this was being handled by the board of supervisors, and that it was being handed over by them to the British import purchasing board at that price of $2.21 Fort William. No one thought that there was anything left over. The farmers of western Canada said: "This is a patriotic gesture by the western provinces of the part they are taking in the war". They suffered for it. That was the only commodity on which the price was fixed. While we were being paid $2.21 for our wheat we saw the price in Chicago go up to $3. But to-night we get this letter, and I want to draw the minister's attention to these words:

> The wheat was sold during the season of 1917 and 1918 as purchasers were found, and of course for different prices owing to changes in world's market price.

Not for the $2.21; he does not say so; he says that it was sold at the market price. If we take the market price from day to day for those two years down in Chicago, which would be ours practically, we find that from $70,000,000 to $100,000,000 was taken out of the pockets of the farmers of western Canada, and we want an accounting.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, look it up. Take the quantity of our wheat sold in those years, and it can be distinctly shown that there was a difference of $70,000,000 to $100,000,000 between our price and the price that prevailed in Chicago. I think it is only right that we should ask for an accounting.

An hon. MEMBER: Why did you not bring it up in the last nine years?

Mr. DONNELLY: It was not thought of.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DONNELLY: I want to tell you right here that there was not a question of doubt ever raised in the mind of one farmer in western Canada, not one. They all believed that their wheat was sold at $2,21. I leave it to any of my hon. friends here from the west to say whether that is not so.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DONNELLY: If you had gone into the west and told them that their wheat had been sold at the market price they would not have believed it. It was not until this year that it was brought to their attention that this was the case. This man received a great deal of credit for having brought it to the attention of the farmers of western Canada. It is a serious thing. I think it is time we got an accounting. There must surely be returns for each of these years.

Mr. STEVENS: May I interrupt my hon. friend for one moment? Mr. Whiteside said that he interviewed Sir George Foster in January 1920. He continued:

We—

Using the plural.

—intend on some action at our convention in Saskatoon in February.

That would be February 1921. So the matter must have been fully discussed then.

Mr. DONNELLY: Excuse me, it never was brought up at any of our conventions until this year. Before this no one paid any attention to it whatever. I leave it to anybody who comes from the west to contradict that. They know very well that absolutely no one thought that this wheat was handed over at the market price. I did not believe it until this year.

[Mr. Donnelly.]

Mr. GOTT: You did not believe it for nine years?

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, and we were foolish enough to believe the government in power at that time was honest.

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Chairman, probably I can throw some light upon the matter of the sale of our wheat during the years mentioned by hon. gentlemen opposite. In 1917 I went to England with Sir Robert Borden and Sir Douglas Hazen to attend an Imperial conference and to look after other matters. The price of wheat went up to rather a high figure by reason of the fact that a large portion of the 1916 crop was damp.

Mr. STEVENS: Off grade.

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, off grade. Naturally this portion of the wheat was not very suitable for shipment. Then the matter came up in England about that particular crop. The story is too long to tell now and I will not delay the committee except to say that we considered the crop on the basis of No. 1 northern at $3 a bushel.

Mr. YOUNG: Was that f.o.b. Fort William?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The 1917 crop?

Mr. ROGERS: The 1916 crop. Mr. Lloyd George said it was very fine to have that settled, and the night following the arrangement he made a speech in the Guildhall and told the story of his having bought this large quantity of wheat, something like 100,000,000 bushels, and assured the people that there was plenty of food to carry on the war until next year. Then the question came up before the war cabinet as to what price they would have to pay the year following. They thought that $3 a bushel on the basis of No. 1 northern was a very high price; and so it was. I was asked by the then Prime Minister of Great Britain if I would not fix a price for our next wheat crop. I replied that we in Canada could not do that because the minute we fixed our price, say, at $2, the Americans would put up their price a good deal higher, and this would mean a lot of bootlegging of wheat across the border from the western provinces to the American side and would involve a great deal of trouble and difficulty for everybody. They saw the force of this objection and they said, "Well, will you fix a price for the wheat you grow in Canada?" I answered, of course, that I could undertake to do so only if they would find a way of getting the United States to agree to a price. At the same session of the war cabinet Mr. Balfour was selected to go to Washington to see if he could not make the necessary arrangements with the American government. I went the length of assuring him that whatever price the Americans would agree to take for their crop we would also take for ours. Mr. Balfour went to Washington and later came on to Ottawa. On the day following our return to Ottawa Mr. Balfour came to this city, and when he got off the train at the platform here and shook hands with a lot of people who were there to meet him, he came over to me and drew a small sheet of paper from his pocket, which he handed to me to read. That sheet contained the proposal of the United States, which was that they would be ready to sell their wheat at $2.21 per bushel provided Canada would agree to a similar proposal. While I read that Mr. Balfour was standing beside me. I handed the sheet of paper back to him and he said, "Well, what do you think about it?" I answered, "We will agree to that price also," so that price was fixed, and it lasted for two years. At that time I wired Winnipeg asking a number of the grain exchange men to come to Ottawa so that they would understand all the facts. They came down here and we had a meeting in Sir George Foster's office, where we went over the whole case, and they were entirely satisfied.

As for the 1917 and 1918 crops, they were sold on the basis of $2.21 per bushel, and the farmers of western Canada went to any elevator with their wheat, got their money and took it home with them. So there was nothing wrong, and there was no chance of anything being wrong in respect of those two years. Mr. Whiteside is entirely mistaken in his statement with regard to those years.

Mr. VALLANCE: May I ask a question? When you summoned the grain trade to Ottawa, did you summon only the grain trade or did you summon producers as well? Did you give any consideration to the producers and ask them whether the proposal was acceptable to them?

Mr. ROGERS: No, I did not summon anyone except those who were handling the grain of western Canada. I have never heard of any individual who was dissatisfied with the arrangements which were made for the sale of the crops of 1916, 1917 and 1918 at $2.21 per bushel. Those who seemed to be dissatisfied were some of the men in western Canada whom you would expect to be the last to have any such feelings.

I was explaining that I asked several people to come down from Winnipeg. I telegraphed the president of the grain exchange to send down six or seven of the best men to consider these proposals. They wired back that they could come the next day, and they did come. Then some friend of mine in Winnipeg wired me that they should have selected Mr. Crerar and Mr. Wood, who was then down in Winnipeg from Calgary, and someone else, whose name I forget. I immediately wired these men individually and invited them to come to Ottawa, and we postponed any discussion of the matter until their arrival, when we went into the whole matter.

Then there was no supervising body, and this is what happened: At our meeting in Sir George Foster's office we were discussing any difficulties which might arise, especially any difficulties as between New York and the grain centres of Canada. Mr. Thomas Carruthers, who was then alive, and who was a large grain man, suggested that we should have a committee of certain members of the grain exchange in Winnipeg in case anything went wrong. The idea was that this committee could settle it up quickly, and members of the grain exchange in Winnipeg had the advantage of a direct telephone connection over which they could talk as long as they pleased to New York. If any difficulty did arise, then Mr. Carruthers and Mr. A. P. Stewart, another large grain man in Montreal, would be able to get on the train at night and go to New York and settle up the matter the next morning, so there would be no unfavourable publicity with regard to any mistakes which might occur.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Mr. Crerar and Mr. Wood both came to Ottawa?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, and then I was asked to name a number of individuals who would see to it that any mistakes which might occur would be attended to immediately. I placed Mr. Wood, Mr. Crerar and someone else on that little committee which was to become active as soon as the grain began to move. When they held their first meeting on September 12, 1917, they called themselves the board of grain supervisors, but they were really a board designed to prevent any trouble or difficulties from arising, or to settle any difficulties which might arise so there would be no public fuss between the Americans and the Canadians in respect to the carrying out of this contract.

On September 12 these gentlemen met at Winnipeg in order to fix their plans and to determine how they would be called in if they were required, and so on, but they went further. Mr. Crerar moved that the price of No. 1 Manitoba northern be $2.18 per bushel. This motion was seconded by—

Mr. CAMPBELL: That is, $2.18 to the farmer?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, $2.18 to the farmer, and that motion was supported by Mr. Wood, president of the United Farmers of Alberta and at that time president of the Canadian Council of Agriculture. The motion was carried by a majority of the board, though it was strongly opposed by the chairman of the board and Mr. Rathwell. Because of this opposition the board reconsidered the motion and fixed the price of wheat at $2.21.

Mr. TOTZKE: What is my hon. friend reading from?

Mr. ROGERS: I am reading from the memorandum given me by Dr. Magill, who was the secretary and president of that board. This is his own document, given me for purposes of reference. So the fixed price, as arranged between the United States, Great Britain and Canada, was the price paid to the farmer for his wheat. England agreed to pay any price Mr. Balfour could get fixed in the United States and Canada, and I agreed that whatever price Mr. Balfour could get the United States to fix would be satisfactory to us. When he came here and it was all settled, he told me he was going home the happiest man who ever crossed the ocean. He said it was a great and successful trip for him, and that his people were entirely satisfied to pay the price of $2.21.

Mr. YOUNG: Did the United States stick to the agreement?

Mr. ROGERS: Absolutely.

Mr. VALLANCE: Then all wheat sold by the United States to the British government—

Mr. ROGERS: Every bushel was sold at $2.21.

Mr. SPENCER: On the basis of No. 1 northern?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. DONNELLY: My hon. friend said a portion of the 1916 crop was confiscated, and that $3 a bushel was paid for it.

Mr. ROGERS: No, it was sold at that price.

Mr. DONNELLY: To whom did you pay the $3 a bushel?

Mr. ROGERS: The people got it. Whoever had wheat in this country got every cent of it. They all got it. There was not one sixpence taken out of it in any shape or form.

Mr. BROWN: On Fort William basis?

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. ROGERS: Fort William basis, No. 1 northern.

Mr. DONNELLY: The farmers never got $3 a bushel for any wheat.

Mr. ROGERS: Remember there was a lot of tough wheat that year—nearly seventy or eighty million bushels of tough wheat.

Mr. YOUNG: That would not make it worth more.

Mr. ROGERS: No; a lot less. Those are the actual facts. They got more for their wheat that year than they did before or have done since. That is the explanation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) has made one valuable contribution to this debate; he has let us know what the price of wheat at Fort William was in 1916. The farmers know what it was in 1919; it was $2.63. Add the two together and your average is $2.80. Why guess any more about what we got in 1917 and 1918? There is approximately what we got—$2.80. But why should we have to guess when there are the records? My hon. friend's memory, I believe, is correct. But why should we take an hon. gentleman's memory as against the records? That is extraordinary. There were three boards successively in 1917, 1918 and 1919 and in each case there was a surplus. It was brought to the attention of the late government that there was about half a million of a surplus in 1919. Two or three deputations waited upon the government and the Minister of Finance at that time, claiming that such surplus was theirs, the farmers': but the late Mr. Robb had to be shown that it was. He would not pay the money until it was absolutely proven that it belonged to the farmers and not to the treasury. He knew that it had been put into the general revenue fund, but he would not pay any of it out to anyone until it was shown, as finally it was, that he was justified in doing so. There was distributed to the farmers some $400,000, leaving in the treasury $100,000 to take care of any possible participation certificates which, having been lost, might eventually turn up. But we are not discussing that at all. I merely wish to show what disposition was made of the surplus that went back to the farmers through their respective provincial governments in 1919. I have shown that. Now what disposition was made of the other two surpluses in 1917 and 1918? That is what my hon. friend from South Battleford wishes to know. The minister says it was a long time ago. But my hon. friend from South

Winnipeg is able to supply us information from memory. And Sir George Foster said there was a surplus which went into the treasury of Canada; it went into the general revenue fund. Why surround the matter with all this mystery and talk?

Mr. STEVENS: There is no mystery.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, there seems to be a desire to becloud the issue: No one disputes—

Mr. SHORT: You had nine years to pay it; why didn't you?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No one disputes the way it was conducted or the way the business was handled. All the boards were conducted exceedingly well. But we never knew until last fall that there was such a condition of things, and when the farmers came to the former government asking for the surplus of 1919 it was never suggested to the then government that there were surpluses for 1917 and 1918 also. I never knew it; I never heard about it until last fall. I see some hon. gentlemen grinning over there. If they think this is not right let them get up and prove that there is reason for that kind of incredulous smile. We are dealing now with the years 1917 and 1918. The minister knows that there were surpluses. He knows that Sir George Foster has admitted it. And the money went into the general revenue fund of Canada. Now, can we not find out how much it is? Can we not make the same disposition of it as was made of the overages of 1919? We did not get it easily in 1919; we had to prove our case. I suggest to the minister that the same practice be followed that was set up by the late government in regard to overages in 1919. Let us look into the matter; let us refer it to the committee on agriculture; let the officers of the department find out what the facts are as set out in the last report of the board of grain supervisors. I saw the 1919 report myself. There was a final report indicating the disposition of the moneys and there was a cheque covering the surplus. There must be the same sort of report for 1917 and 1918 respectively. Let us have those reports.

Mr. ROGERS: Have we any for 1917 and 1918?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is the report of the board of grain supervisors for 1917 and 1918? There must be one somewhere. What was the total revenue secured for wheat in those two years' what was the total disbursements, and how much went into the government's pockets—not the individuals. None of us ever conceived of a particle of wrongdoing in connection with the minister. They simply let it get abroad, as the hon. member for Willow Bunch said, that anything that was over went to the British purchasing commission. As a matter of fact it went into the Dominion treasury. Now, we are not making contributions of that kind to the Dominion treasury in addition to paying our regular taxes; and inasmuch as the west has not been able to get anything from the government in reply to the reasonable requests made this year, not only by ourselves here but by the farmers, the ministry might very well come across with what they owe us in the same way that the government led by my right hon. leader did in 1919. According to my calculations, if the price of wheat was $3 in 1916, on the basis of No. 1 northern, and $2.63, on the basis of No. 1 northern, in 1919, it is obvious that the price for 1917 and 1918 must be somewhere in between. So that, as I see it, the farmers have at least 50 cents a bushel coming to them yet for these two years. Mr. Whiteside was not so far wrong.

Mr. ROGERS: May I say to my good friend that the farmers went to the grain elevators and got $2.21 and went home with it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is right; and the government got the balance.

Mr. ROGERS: Where do you get the surplus?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Where do I get the surplus? The government was handling the wheat and Sir George Foster officially says surplus went into the federal treasury.

Mr. ROGERS: They didn't have a thing to do with it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Then refer to the record.

Mr. VALLANCE: Sir George Foster was Minister of Trade and Commerce, administering the grain act at that time, and the board of grain supervisors was under his control. He said:

> In the end, after all expenses were paid and the accounts closed, a small surplus remained in the hands of the board of grain supervisors, the body that was established to conduct the buying and selling of wheat.

An hon. MEMBER: That was for 1919.

Mr. VALLANCE: No, it was not. Let me finish the quotation:

> Now, as to the year just past, 1919—

Then he deals with that. Surely if there is even a small surplus it should be cleaned up. Let us decide it once for all, because I am rather suspicious, with all due respect to the minister and the officials. When I asked for the return these two letters were not there, but there was that letter of Sir George Foster. They failed to take that one off or we should not have had any record of this. There was a slip somewhere, and that makes us doubly suspicious, notwithstanding what the minister has said. I believe he is sincere, but we still believe there is money there. If not, we want to know.

As regards the question which an hon. member opposite has asked, as to why we did not clean it up nine years ago, this is not a political matter, and the administration at that time was not recognized in the country as a Tory government. It was the Union government. Why, therefore, should the hon. gentleman object to anything being raked up as to what they did? I see many hon. members sitting behind the government to-night who should be just as keen as we are to have the matter cleaned up, and I respectfully submit to the minister again that he refer the whole question to the committee on agriculture and allow this item to stand until it has been investigated.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Vallance) has referred to a letter written by Sir George Foster, the last letter in the series. I am sorry he has suggested there is some reason for leaving this letter out of the file, and I would again assure the committee, as I have done already, that I knew nothing whatever about it. This return was prepared by the officers of my department and I have every reason to believe that it was prepared in good faith. The correspondence is twelve or thirteen years old, and although this letter should not have been overlooked, it was not done intentionally. The answer to the question asked by my hon. friend is this: On April 19, 1921, Sir George Foster wrote to Mr. Whiteside, complainant in this case, as follows:

> Yours of April 4th has been duly received. You will have noticed that the membership of the commission to investigate the handling of grain has been completed and I hope will be at work in a short time.
> The amount turned into the consolidated revenue fund by the board of grain supervisors was $428,781.94.

An hon. MEMBER: That is 1919.

[Mr. Vallance.]

Mr. STEVENS: Just wait a moment, please. The letter continues:

> The wheat board has not yet completed its accounts but it is probable that there will be a small surplus to be gathered into the treasury when all accounts will have been adjusted.

If the committee will notice, Sir George Foster has differentiated between the two bodies, the board of grain supervisors, which had turned in $428,781.94, and the wheat board, which had not completed its transactions. As a matter of fact, the business of the wheat board dragged on for seven or eight years because these participating certificates kept turning up and were taken care of out of the remnants of the fund.

Mr. VALLANCE: You are referring to 1919.

Mr. STEVENS: I know I am, but if my hon. friend will content himself for a moment I will endeavour to explain. The board of grain supervisors, that is the 1917-18 board, turned in $428,781.94, according to the statement given ten years ago to Mr. Whiteside by Sir George Foster.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Which year was that?

Mr. STEVENS: That was for the year 1917-18.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Was it for both 1917 and 1918 or one of them?

Mr. STEVENS: He says, "The amount turned into the consolidated revenue fund by the board of grain supervisors was $428,781.-94."

Mr. McINTOSH: What was the final disposition?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): What date is that?

Mr. STEVENS: April 19, 1921.

Mr. McINTOSH: Was that the final disposition for 1917-18?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. Then he adds:

> The wheat board—

That is the board of 1919.

> —has not yet completed its accounts but it is probable that there will be a small surplus to be gathered into the treasury when all accounts will have been adjusted.

I sent to the library for the report of the wheat board but as yet I have not had time to look into it. We have had a full day on this matter; the questions raised are important, and I should like to have an opportunity of consulting with the officials of the department on the points which have been brought up. When this item is next before the committee I will endeavour to have as complete information as possible for the benefit of hon. members. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this item be allowed to stand for the time being.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Will the minister consider the proposal to refer this matter to the agriculture committee?

Mr. STEVENS: I will consider that and give an answer when this item is up again.

Mr. ROGERS: I would like to make it clear to the committee that in 1917 and 1918 the money was paid direct to the farmers when they brought in their wheat.

Mr. VALLANCE: Where did the surplus come from?

Mr. ROGERS: There was no surplus.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member for South Winnipeg has given to the committee to-night some information which is of value. But would he go a little further and give the details as to how the crop of 1917 and 1918 was handled, and if possible give some information as to what became of the surplus of over $400,000 referred to in Sir George Foster's letter?

Mr. DONNELLY: I would refer the hon. member for South Winnipeg to the statement in Sir George Foster's letter to the effect that during 1917 and 1918 the wheat was sold as purchasers were found and at different prices owing to changes in the world market price. But he does not say it was sold for $2.21.

Mr. ROGERS: During those two years every bushel was sold on the basis of $2.21.

Mr. VALLANCE: The hon. member made the statement that the farmer received $2.21, and from his manner in giving that information to the committee I assume he knew what the grain trade got for handling that wheat.

Mr. ROGERS: They did not get anything.

Mr. VALLANCE: How much was the grain trade paid for handling it?

Mr. ROGERS: They got their allowance for elevator charges, that is all.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yesterday I forwarded to the minister a file in connection with this matter and I would like him to read it before this item is considered again.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Civil government—Railways and Canals—salaries, $283,235; contingencies, $46,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Are there any increases in this item other than the usual statutory allowances?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): No, as a matter of fact there is a decrease of about $3,000. The number of employees remains the same as last year, namely, 119, but, because of some reclassifications of positions and some coming in at a lower classification, the amount required is less.

Mr. DUFF: I notice by the details that $10,000 is provided for "deputy minister and government director of Canadian National Railways." Does that $10,000 cover his remuneration as deputy minister and also as a director of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MANION: No. His salary as deputy minister is $10,000, and he receives $2,000 as a director. That has been the custom throughout.

Mr. DUFF: Then why should he be put down as deputy minister and government director if he gets a separate amount as director of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MANION: He is paid as a director by the Canadian National Railways, and he gets his salary as deputy minister from the department. The $2,000 which he receives as director comes in the estimates of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. DUFF: I can understand that. But the item as it reads is misleading. It should read: "deputy minister, $10,000." It reads now: "Deputy minister and government director of Canadian National Railways. $10,000". That would leave the impression with the public that he receives only $10,000 for the two positions.

Mr. MANION: That should not be there. I confess that until the hon. member drew my attention to it I had not noticed it. The director should be paid as a director. The $10,000, of course, is paid to him not as a director of the National Railways but as deputy minister of the department.

Mr. DUFF: May I ask the minister, if he occupies the same position next year, to see that these estimates are made up properly so that the public will understand them? If the Deputy Minister of Railways is deserving of this $2,000 which he receives as a director of the Canadian National Railways I have no objection, but I do not want the public to be misled by the way the item reads. I had occasion some time ago to object to the way the estimates are made up, and I am now raising this objection, so that the public may know exactly what the estimates mean. The estimate certainly is misleading as it reads, because it says that this official gets $10,000 for the two positions, whereas the minister has said that instead of getting $10,000 he receives $12,000 for the two positions.

Mr. MANION: I think it is wrong to read as it does, but I am informed by the officers that it has been done that way for many years; it was done that way under the late government. I quite agree with my hon. friend that "government director of Canadian National Railways" should not be there, and as far as I am concerned it will not be there next year. Of course it is about as difficult to change the form of an estimate as it is to change the laws of the Medes and Persians.

Mr. DUFF: I think I heard someone behind the minister interject, "Why did you not have it altered last year?" I am not interested in what happened last year.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DUFF: There was an election on July 28 as hon. gentlemen opposite know, and any sins of omission or commission on our part were then settled by the public, and well settled. We are not going to stand here now and every time we make a criticism have the question thrown across the floor, "Why didn't you do it last year?" We expect that this government, which went to the country with such glowing promises, should give good government and better government than ever before. I would ask the Minister of Railways to see that the wording of this item is changed next year. I have no objection to the deputy minister receiving $2,000 as a director of the National Railways, but I do ask that the item appear properly in the estimates.

Mr. MANION: I entirely agree with the hon. member that this government should give better government than last year's government did. I shall endeavour to have the wording of the item changed another year.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am afraid the minister is going too far. He should not make such rash promises; if he wants his deputy minister to get two salaries next year he will have to mention the title, "Government director of Canadian National Railways." I do not believe that there is any law of parliament authorizing a civil servant to get extra emolument unless his name or the position he occupies is mentioned in the estimates, and I think that is why the title "director of Canadian National Railways" is mentioned in the details. I think you have to leave that in, in order that he may be paid.

Mr. MANION: I do not think the hon. gentleman is correct in that, because the estimates we are dealing with are those of the Department of Railways and Canals, not of the Canadian National Railways. The national railways are permitted at the present time to appoint seventeen directors, who are paid $2,000 a year each.

Sir EUGENE FISET: That does not matter. I say that the Civil Service Act requires that a civil servant who is receiving any extra emolument must have his name mentioned in the estimates, and the very reason why this position as director of the Canadian National Railways is mentioned in the estimates is to enable the deputy minister to receive out of the income of the Canadian National Railways the emolument of $2,000 a year as director. I would point out to the minister that this house deals only with the capital expenditure of the Canadian National Railways, and nowhere in those capital expenditures do you see special mention made of $2,000 to be paid to the deputy minister as director of the Canadian National Railways. I think in fairness and justice to the deputy minister his name and position should be put in there.

Mr. MANION: The directors are paid by the Canadian National Railways.

Sir EUGENE FISET: They are not civil servants. This is the only civil servant that gets this extra emolument.

Mr. MANION: Oh no, he is not. There are other civil servants in different departments of this government who get extra emoluments.

Sir EUGENE FISET: But their names or positions have to be mentioned in the estimates, the same as this position is mentioned. I am trying to help the minister.

Mr. MANION: But they are paid by the government. However, I do not intend to make any changes without first knowing that they can legally be made. Personally I think that the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough is right in his protest because this $10,000 does not include the $2,000 which is payable to the deputy minister as a director of the National Railways. I do not think it should be there, but I have legal advisers in my department; I intend to find out as to the facts, and if the change can legally be made, we will do it. If not, it is a different matter.

Mr. SANDERSON: I notice that in 1930-31 there was an item of $4,080 for a private secretary to the minister. No amount appears to be included for that position for 1931-32. Has the minister dispensed with his private secretary?

Mr. MANION: At the present time the secretary to the minister is paid out of contingencies, the next item after salaries. The hon. member will notice that the vote is divided into two: salaries, $283,235, and contingencies, $46,000. Among those contingencies is the item which my hon. friend speaks of. "Contingencies" covers various items, and if there is a balance left over it may be used, as is done in this case, to pay the salary of the private secretary.

Mr. SANDERSON: Would the same explanation apply to the messenger to the minister, who received $1,600 in 1930-31, but for whom there does not appear to be any provision for 1931-32?

Mr. MANION: As far as I know that position is not filled at the present time, although there are messengers in the department; nor is it included in contingencies.

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister will have a lot of applicants if the position is advertised.

Mr. MANION: I have a lot of applicants anyway.

Sir EUGENE FISET: In the vote for contingencies there are three specific items—printing and stationery, sundries, and clerical assistance. Are the travelling expenses of the civil staff as well as of the minister included under "sundries"?

Mr. MANION: Travelling expenses are included in the contingency vote of $46,000. Probably I would save some time by explaining this item. There is the salary to the minister's private secretary, $3,600, and salary to the secretary of executive, $1,860, making a total of $5,460. Then there is office equipment, stationery, and supplies for the use of the department, amounting to $14,000; travelling expenses of officials of the department, $18,000; temporary emergent clerical assistants, $5,440; telephone, telegraph, express and postage, $3,400, making a total of approximately $46,000.

Sir EUGENE FISET: It does not include travelling expenses for the civil staff?

Mr. MANION: Yes, I read the item of $18,000 covering travelling expenses of officers of the department.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Does the minister say that one of the executive secretaries is paid out of contingencies?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Sir EUGENE FISET: That is usually paid out of civil government.

Mr. MANION: No. The secretary to a minister, and also the secretary of the executive, which actually is a secretary or stenographer to the secretary, are appointments of the minister himself, and when the minister goes out the secretary of the executive goes out with him. There is more or less a rule to look after the secretary but not the secretary to the executive.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Is the minister sure of that?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Sir EUGENE FISET: In my day the secretary to the executive was appointed through the Civil Service Commission and formed part of the staff of the department.

Mr. MANION: At the present time the secretary to the executive is appointed by the minister himself.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Would it not be better practice to have the amount of the salary set opposite the item in the estimates relating to the secretary to the minister? The impression one gets is that the position has been abolished instead of being covered by contingencies.

Mr. MANION: Probably there is something in the suggestion of my hon. friend. However, the estimates were handed to me in their present form, and I did not think of the matter in that way. I was informed that in cases where the contingency vote is more than required, the salary of the private secretary is taken out of that vote. I do not think there was any reason for it except that it was handed to me in that way.

Mr. VENIOT: Apparently the amount appeared under a separate heading in 1930-31 —"Private secretary to minister, $4,080."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to direct the attention of the minister to the last item in the details, "allowance to private secretary, $600." If the secretary receives $4,200 under contingencies and in addition an allowance of $600, he gets a total of $4,800. As against that the item last year amounted to only $4,080. There is a difference for which I think the minister ought to account.

Mr. MANION: The secretary I have now is the secretary I had in 1926.

Mr. STEWART Edmonton): Is he a civil servant?
